The Government has given no convincing explanation as to why the elected representatives of the people of Canada should have less opportunity to study this trade deal than the elected representatives of the people of the United States. Why is this Government refusing at the very least to let the External Affairs committee continue its hearings into the trade deal with the United States at least as long as the period available to the members of Congress of the United States? If this deal is as good as the Government says it is, what has it to fear? Surely, if it is a good deal for Canada, the more it is discussed through open parliamentary hearings the more it would become acceptable to Canadians.

We in the Liberal Party looking at the information that the Government has provided have concluded that this deal is a bad deal for Canada. It undermines our economy. It undermines our sovereignty. It is the very sell-out of everything that has been built up and about which we are proud in this country. I suspect that that is the reason the Government is trying to rush through these committee hearings. It does not want Canadians to get a full understanding of what this deal is all about by having committee hearings go on at least as long as the committee hearings in the U.S. Congress, hearings which would be based on the full text, the only thing that would have legal effect on the deal the Government has entered into with the United States on trade.

The Government, using its majority in the committee, has rammed through a motion limiting the hearings to the provincial and territorial capitals and insisting that they be completed by early December. I know that if there were a recorded vote here the same majority would come in to bring about the same unfortunate result with respect to the adoption of the motion before us.

I want to put on the record our opposition to the kind of travel, the limited travel, that the Conservative Government wants to allow the committee to be able to carry out to take evidence from Canadians across the country. We want to make clear our opposition to the way the Conservative majority, the Conservative Government, wants to limit the hearings of this committee overall to early December and not to allow the elected representatives of the Canadian people to have at least the same length of time to study this matter as the elected representatives of the American people.

Therefore, I want to put this opposition clearly on record. I want to say that when the Speaker puts the question Members opposite will hear us say, "On division", which is a clear parliamentary indication of our opposition to the way this Government is trying to choke off opportunities for Canadians to be heard in parliamentary hearings and the way this Government wants to prevent this committee from at least having the same opportunities as committees in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Government I want to reply to some of the statements that were made this afternoon and to explain what the standing committee will be doing in its hearings. I want to make it very clear from the outset that the Government is not trying in any way, shape or form to stifle debate in this country and do something quickly so that in fact Canadians do not have the facts. We are so confident in the positive aspects of this agreement that we want Canadians to understand it. When they do understand what this agreement does for Canada they will realize how good it will be for them.

So we are not trying to cover up or rush things through at all. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, let me just very briefly go through the chronology of what has been going on. In March, 1982, the Senate Standing Committee on Foreign Affairs issued the third volume of its report entitled, "Canada's trade relations with the United States". It had studied this issue since 1980. Its major recommendation was that Canada seek bilateral free trade with the U.S. in all sectors. The committee heard over 100 witnesses.

In November, 1982, the Hon. Donald Macdonald headed a royal commission on Canada's economy. He had a total of 1,513 representations: 496 individuals, 373 private sector interventions, 231 voluntary sector representations, and I could go on through the whole list of them. There were 40 local and regional government representations and 72 volumes of research studies. What was their bottom line? That Canada should undertake free trade negotiations with the United States.

Then what happened? I can tell Hon. Members that a committee from the Government of Canada went across the country and held hearings. Its recommendation was to carry on these negotiations with our largest trading partner, something which has taken place.

Now, the deal has been signed. The agreement has been signed and tabled in the House of Commons. The standing committee is working extremely hard right now. It is putting in longer hours, I would say, than most standing committees have put in. For Members opposite to say that there are just big companies coming to testify is not accurate. Margaret Atwood appeared before the committee the other night. She is a very fine Canadian and she was there the other night as a witness. There have been small and large business groups, Chambers of Commerce, and a very broad cross-section of the Canadian economy. This afternoon the National Farmer's Union was there. The committee is hearing many groups, and they will do this across Canada.

• (1650)

The other allegations that have been made by some of the speakers this afternoon points up the type of opposition that we are receiving to this agreement. The rhetoric is very high. Yet the facts that are being delivered are not substantiated. That is what we want to do with this committee. We want those facts substantiated across the country from coast to coast.

As the Hon. Member knows, the standing committee is the master of its own House. It made this decision, and the Hon. Member knows that. It was not a government decision. It was a decision by the standing committee, voted freely, and the fears and the concerns being expressed are completely unfounded.

I wish to remind the House of a couple of things. A trade agreement called the Auto Pact was signed 22 years ago. It was done in secrecy. There were no public hearings. It never came to the House of Commons. The then Prime Minister of Canada flew to a ranch in Texas to sign the agreement. The public had no opportunity for input whatsoever. As a matter of fact, at the time the Canadian public felt they had been had.

The Liberals are up today and the New Democratic Party, but more to the Liberals, talking about those hearings and how they will have to go into every town and nook and cranny in this country. They know that that is a phoney issue. A more recent policy that was brought in, the National Energy Program, let us talk about the hearings on that. Let us hear about the intervention in that type of thing. Did they have a referendum on that? No. Did they have a referendum on the Auto Pact? No.

What I am saying is this Government is going that extra mile to provide Canadians with input to an important trade agreement, one which will benefit Canada for years to come, in the same manner as the Auto Pact has benefited Canada and will continue to do so.

Therefore, we support this travel by the committee, because we think it is important that it gets out across this country. It will hold hearings morning, afternoon, and evening to ensure that Canadians are heard on this important issue. That committee is not going with blinkers on. It is going to hear evidence, unlike the Ontario committee which starts off every hearing by stating, "We are against it. It doesn't matter whether you agree or disagree, we are against it". Those are not the type of hearings that we are conducting. We are conducting fair, open hearings across the country. The Government is supporting that.

We hope that this afternoon a decision of this Parliament will permit it to travel in order that Canadians can express their opinion on one of the finest agreements that has ever been reached in Canada.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON MULTICULTURALISM

AUTHORIZATION FOR STANDING COMMITTEE TO TRAVEL

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties with respect to travel by the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism and I think you will find unanimous consent for the following motion to be put and voted upon immediately. Therefore, I move:

That the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism be authorized to travel to Toronto, Ontario, from December 6 to 9, 1987, inclusive for the purpose of holding public hearings on the committee's report, "Building the Canadian Mosaic" and that the necessary staff accompany the committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) have unanimous consent to move the motion?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the discussions between the NDP and Government House Leaders, one of the items not mentioned today concerning future business was that of Bill C-51, the anti-smoking legislation. Can the Government House Leader indicate whether or not the commitment that during the first week the House returns that Bill would be brought forward and dealt with, I believe at second reading, will be kept?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I indicated the order of business for Monday and a couple of stand-by Bills, and the fact we could have an Opposition Day. Of course we will take that into consideration and, as is customary, the order of business can change from time to time.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, is the Deputy Prime Minister indicating that, providing scheduling permits, during that first week Bill C-51 will be dealt with depending on the progress of the other legislation in combination with the Opposition Day?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, if that is a representation, we will certainly take it in that light. It really depends upon the success we have in dealing with other important pieces of legislation. If we do as well as we have done over the last couple of days, we might be able to accommodate the Hon. Member.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

CITIZENSHIP ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-254, an Act to amend the Citizenship Act (period of residence) as reported (with amendment) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North) moved the Bill, as amended, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Pennock moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to rise and speak in the third reading debate on my Private Members' Bill, C-254, which proposes to amend the Citizenship Act with respect to the period of residency.

This Bill, although not a contentious or partisan issue, is of national significance to Canadians from all parts of this country who at any given time are serving our nation abroad in the Public Service. It relaxes the residency requirement for a non-Canadian spouse who, in my opinion, equally serves Canada when accompanying his or her Canadian spouse on duty abroad.

However, when my Private Member's Bill received second reading and went to a legislative committee it became apparent to me, on advice from legal professionals, that it, too, had its shortcomings and needed to be amended. Accordingly, the committee, under the direction of the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle), unanimously decided to amend the Bill as follows:

> (1.1) Any day during which an applicant for Canadian citizenship resided with his or her spouse who at the time was a Canadian citizen and was employed outside of Canada in or with the Canadian Armed Forces or the Public Service of Canada or a province, otherwise than as a locally engaged person, shall be treated as equivalent to one day of residence in Canada for the purposes of paragraph (1)(b) and subsection 10(1).

The need for this amendment arose from an obscure point which, as I am not a lawyer, escaped my notice. If my original Bill had been allowed to stand it would, as an example, have permitted the spouse of someone hired to work for the Department of National Defence as a clerk to have that time frame counted toward their spouse's Canadian citizenship residency requirement. This was not the intention of my Private Member's Bill.

The difficulty encountered by spouses of Canadians trying to fulfil the first residency requirements is great given the rotating nature of foreign employment assignments. Spouses of these Canadians who serve overseas on an on-and-off basis are never in Canada for a period of time long enough to fulfil the three-consecutive-year residence requirement. Each day of less than three years in Canada is erased. Therefore, one cannot accumulate years of residency during successive stays in Canada and apply them toward residency requirements, even though they are as much a part of representing Canada abroad as their spouse. My Bill would end this inequity.

The Foreign Service Community Association has actively supported this Bill and has stated that the residency requirement of the Act, as it presently stands, is one of the primary irritants of employment with the foreign service of Canada. I am pleased to see that members of the Foreign Service Community Association are today in the Members' Gallery.

It cannot be stated enough that spouses of all Canadians who are in the employ of our Armed Forces, External Affairs, and Public Service abroad deserve better treatment. This inequity makes it difficult for us to keep some of our best and brightest people in these occupations to serve our country. Canada deserves better.

A blatant example of this hardship is illustrated by the circumstances surrounding the wife of former Canadian Ambassador to Iran, Mr. Ken Taylor. Mrs. Taylor was ineligible to receive the Order of Canada for her role in the American hostage episode because she was not a Canadian citizen and could not become one due to the residency requirements. It is the duty of Members of Parliament not to let the renowned quality of our professional people in these occupations decline because of this inherent problem in the present Act.

In closing, it is my sincere hope that Bill C-254 will be concurred in today and unanimously passed so that it may proceed to the Senate for consent and Royal Assent. This would ensure that consistency can be brought back to the Citizenship Act and fairness restored to the treatment of Canadians and their spouses who serve Canada so well abroad.

I am sure that most Canadians are not aware of how difficult it is for a Private Member's Bill to reach the stage which my Bill has reached today. It requires a lot of co-operation. Therefore, I would like to thank the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), the Secretary of State and Minister responsible for Multiculturalism (Mr. Crombie), and the Minister of State for the Treasury Board (Mr. Lewis) for their support and encouragement.

In addition, I would like to thank all my colleagues and in particular the Hon. Members for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr.

Riis), Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) and Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) for their guidance and co-operation.

This goes to show that if a private Member does have good legislation, with the co-operation such as I have received, it can go forward in the short time it has taken this Bill to be passed.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am quite pleased to have the honour to speak again on Bill C-254 at this third and final reading stage. I will make my comments very brief because the Bill must be dealt with before six o'clock if it is to be adopted this day. That, of course, is my wish.

I would like to congratulate the Member who proposed this Bill as I did at second reading stage. I would like to reiterate his comment that co-operation on a good idea can result in worth-while and productive legislation.

The Bill with which we are dealing may be considered by some to be very minor in that it does not affect as large a number of Canadians as does some other legislation. Nevertheless, it is an important Bill in that some Canadians who assist the Government so well by representing us overseas are receiving treatment which is less than fair under the present legislation. This Bill would correct some of these inequities by allowing the spouse of a Canadian citizen to accumulate the time necessary to become a Canadian citizen while out of the country for the purpose of representing our country with his or her spouse.

The Member raised the case of the wife of Ambassador Ken Taylor who was not able to receive well deserved recognition because she was the spouse of a diplomat who had not remained in Canada long enough to allow her to qualify to become a Canadian citizen under the existing rules.

The average time spent abroad by Canadian diplomats is almost four years. Sixty-eight per cent of spouses of Canadian citizens working in diplomatic and other foreign service postings have accumulated three or more years when time spent abroad is added to time spent in Canada. Nevertheless, under the current legislation, unless the time spent in Canada is consecutive, these people do not qualify.

The Bill as proposed does not qualify everyone who is the spouse of a Canadian citizen who has been working outside the country for three years or longer. It merely enables them to apply. The rest of the tests would remain in place.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, for myself, as Member of Parliament for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell and as the representative of a number of citizens in the National Capital region whose work could be negatively affected by the existing Citizenship Act, I am pleased to support this Bill to amend the Citizenship Act as it will benefit a great number of Canadians, and especially a great number of people who will be able to become Canadians once this Bill is passed.

Having said this, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take up more time because I would like other Members to be able to speak as I certainly hope that this House will agree unanimously to give passage to this Bill today.

• (1740)

[English]

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-254 is a triumph of common sense over bureaucracy and fusty thinking which I am afraid has prevailed for some time and has really been discriminatory against spouses of Canadian employees working abroad, particularly in CIDA and Canada's foreign service. Many of these spouses have ably and strongly represented Canada abroad, as diplomatic spouses must, despite the fact they could not, themselves, gain Canadian citizenship because they were not in the country long enough at any one time to meet the qualifications.

I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. Pennock) for his persistence, as well as congratulate the Foreign Service Community Association for their excellent work in lobbying, assisting, and supporting the Hon. Member.

Last night I was thinking that this was actually a time of good news in the world. The Soviet Union is changing its tune and contributing to the United Nations, China has accomplished a revolution as the veterans give way to new leadership, and Jerry Falwell is going back to religion, leaving politics behind. Perhaps we should have a newspaper like this, containing all the headlines of which we have dreamed but have not occurred. I think, in a small way, one of the back pages should reflect that we saw common sense with respect to foreign service spouses and other spouses of Canadian employees abroad.

The amendment which was agreed to in the legislative committee is useful. I believe it demonstrates that perhaps it made sense for some sober second thought on this particular measure. The amendment simply ensures that if a person is married to a non Canadian, who happens to be employed by the Government of Canada, and is posted or working abroad, they would not inadvertently be allowed in the door to gain Canadian citizenship possibly without ever having set foot in Canada.

Much of Canada's foreign service marries non Canadians. I, too, am married to a non Canadian, who has since become a Canadian citizen. The reason is that I spent six years in England, at about the time when people become interested in settling down. I met my wife with whom I have been for some 25 years now.

Obviously, the reason that half the foreign service are married to foreign born spouses is because foreign service officers spend half their time abroad at about the time they are getting engaged in these types of things. However, I will not interfere with biology and natural predilection, as I am afraid the law was doing until now.

It is interesting to note as was the case with Ken Taylor, our Canadian ambassador in Tehran, that many spouses of foreign service employees could not gain employment with the Government of Canada upon posting back to Canada because they were not Canadian citizens. That is real discrimination, considering the fact that they had no choice but to come to Ottawa where their spouses were being posted. In many cases, their training, education or skills quite possibly qualified them to work in different areas of the federal Government. However, they could not do so.

People who have been married to Canadians and working on behalf of Canada for up to 10 years could not take such jobs because they had not resided in Canada long enough to meet the requirements. Therefore, I am happy to support this Bill. I congratulate the members of the Foreign Service Community Association and I note their presence in the gallery. They have worked hard to see this occur. They have every right to be pleased and I am happy to join the House in what I believe will be unanimous consent on third reading of this Bill.

I trust that Government Members will ensure that proclamation and Royal Assent to the Bill will take place as soon as possible so that the spouses of foreign service personnel will have the Christmas present for which they have been waiting so long, and will be able to make their applications to become Canadian citizens.

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to rise once again, this time on third reading, to support the worthy initiative of my hon. friend, the Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. Pennock).

I believe that this Bill to amend the Citizenship Act is a good example of how well this House can work when we seek to redress an injustice in a rational, conscientious, and workmanlike manner. The Bill corrects a wrong that has persisted for much too long. It is apparent that the difficulties faced by the non Canadian spouses of our foreign service representatives present practical and personal problems for Canadians serving their country abroad.

I represent a constituency that has a number of Canada's foreign representatives, ranging from officers in the foreign service and their families to members of our Armed Forces. I am well aware of the importance that this Bill holds for them. It means that their spouses, once citizens, can look to employment with the Government of Canada to pursue their careers. It means that the awkward feeling that comes with uncertainty about citizenship will no longer be a regular feature of a foreign service career. It means that the possibility that some of the best people will leave the foreign service, because their spouse's eligibility for citizenship will be threatened, will disappear.

I am confident that we are not sending out the wrong signal to all Canadians or to the rest of the world. We are not giving preferential treatment to people who want to come to this country. I believe that Members from all Parties in the House will agree that what we are in fact doing is providing the Citizenship Act with fairness and consistency in an area which it previously lacked.

A survey of 160 spouses of foreign service personnel reveals that 108 have been married for over three years. Only 16 have met the present residency requirement of three consecutive years in Canada. It is safe to assume that the large majority which has not met this requirement would have done so if their spouses would have been posted at home.

This Bill directly affects only a relatively small number of people. However, that fact does not detract from its importance. As I said, the Bill is a good example of how the House, in a simple and straightforward way, can provide benefits to all Canadians.

For the foreign service personnel and their spouses, it means the end of frustration and uncertainty. For all Canadians, it means that we can remain confident that our foreign service will continue to attract the best representatives for Canada abroad.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—NICARAGUA—UNITED STATES FUNDING OF CONTRA ATTACKS/REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT URGE HONDURAS TO HONOUR ITS COMMITMENTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak to a question that I raised some time ago during Question Period. It is still unresolved and I hope to hear more from the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark).

It was almost a year ago when I asked a question in the House concerning events in Central America that are still current today. I asked, as reported at page 1402 of Hansard for November 21, 1986:

> Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will the Minister tell the House, when he meets with the U.S. Secretary of State, Mr. George Shultz, in what terms he plans to convey the repugnance that Canadians feel toward the continuing violation of the Charters of the United Nations and the Organization of American States by the U.S. continuing funding of terrorist Contra attacks from Honduras into Nicaragua?

With that, and a supplementary question, the answer I received from the Minister was that he would be talking to Mr. Shultz. Otherwise, he said, he would take my question under advisement and perhaps give me a more detailed answer on some other occasion. A year later, Mr. Speaker, I am still hoping for that occasion.

Since that time there has been one considerable development toward peace in Central America, and that is the plan put forward by President Arias and adopted by the other four presidents, with him together, in July at Esquipulas in Guatemala. There is some considerable hope that after many, many years of disappointment, there may be some greater peace in Central America.

Today, November 5, is meant to be a day for identifying the compliance of countries with certain basic requirements of the plan. There has been some discussion about whether certain countries are in compliance and the one which has been the most controversial in our media in Canada, of course, has been Nicaragua. There has been great pressure by the United States Government, and even by President Arias and some others, to have Nicaragua negotiate, enter into dialogue and conversations, with the leaders of the Contra. These leaders of the Contra are not in Nicaragua. They are not among those who are carrying on armed opposition to the Nicaraguan Government. They are sitting safely and comfortably in Miami. They are apparently being funded and fed by the American Government and they and the CIA direct the Contra from a thousand miles away.

The position of the Nicaraguan Government, quite reasonably, has been that it will not negotiate with those gentlemen in Miami because they are not representatives of Nicaraguan elements, they are representatives of the American Government, doing what an American Government tells them to do. In fact, the Arias plan does not require that Nicaragua negotiate with the armed opposition, anymore than it requires that President Duarte of El Salvador negotiate with an armed opposition. What the Arias plan requires is that governments will initiate a dialogue with all unarmed internal opposition groups and those who have availed themselves of the amnesty. The governments of these states commit themselves to undertake all the necessary steps for achieving a cease fire within the constitutional framework.

Nicaragua, I am happy to say, has undertaken those obligations and is carrying them out. It is the first regional government to establish a commission on national reconciliation and it has taken a bold step by appointing to that commission Cardinal Obando, the most famous and outspoken, unarmed, critic of the Nicaraguan Government. It also appointed the leader of the popular Social Christian Party who leads the largest opposition group in the Nicaraguan legislature. This reconciliation commission has been continuing work that has been done for a couple of years by churches and others within Nicaragua by arranging cease fires on a local basis, and it has had successes.

When I was there a year and a half ago and visited the east coast, I saw the results of some of those successes. They have in fact persuaded some of the groups to lay down their arms. The Sandinistas have also offered an amnesty to the Contras who gave up their arms. They have allowed radio Catolica back on the air and have allowed La Prensa to resume publishing. They have released some of the prisoners. On the other hand, the Contras have been kidnapping more prisoners. They have been carrying on attacks even on unarmed people, as is their custom, except in such cases as the local commission, headed by men such as Cardinal Obando, who have been able to persuade local Contra groups to cease fire.

Therefore, I urge the Canadian Government to support the Nicaraguan Government in its stand to deal with the people as the agreement says, unarmed internal opposition, and it should not be obliged to deal with the Contra leaders who are sitting in Miami.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Canada's stand in favour of a peaceful resolution of the crisis that afflicts Central America is well known. We do not support attempts to overthrow the Nicaraguan government by force, the objective the contras are seeking to achieve. We have also publicly regretted incursions into Honduras by the Sandinista army of Nicaragua in pursuit of contra forces. The Honduran government has shown great restraint in the difficult position in which the contras' presence places it, and has sought to keep its own forces out of the conflict whenever possible. There is no scope for Canada to apply special pressure on Honduras on the contra question. Our position opposing third party intervention and supporting the peace process has been made clear on numerous occasions already to all parties in the region.

The persistence of violent confrontation reinforces our belief that the underlying economic and social causes of tension need to be adressed by programmes such as those of Canada's development assistance efforts.

Canada's aid to Honduras is humanitarian in nature and is not given on the satisfaction of certain political conditions. Honduras is the second poorest country in the hemisphere after Haiti and the poorest in Central America. It is our only priority country for aid in the region, and has received just under $44 million in the 1982-86 period. These funds have gone to support humanitarian objectives: the development and conservation of renewable resources, the creation of employment in rural areas, and the improvement of nutrition and health in rural areas. Projects have been in the forestry, agriculture and health sectors.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) will be visiting all the countries of Central America later this month and will have an opportunity to discuss these matters with the Honduran government and to visit Canadian aid projects.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I would like to say that I learned today that the peace group set up in Central America to find a solution to this conflict did indeed reach its deadline today, but that it was given a sixty-day extension to find a solution to the conflict.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Pursuant to the order adopted earlier today, the House stands adjourned until Monday, November 16, 1987, at 11 a.m.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government response to 62 petitions bearing the following numbers: 332-3135, 332-3149 to 332-3190 inclusive, 332-3199, 332-3208, 332-3221, 332-3225, 332-3226, 332-3231, 332-3262, 332-3271, 332-3278, 332-3280, 332-3312, 332-3315, 332-3329 to 332-3334 inclusive and 332-3337.

OPPOSITION TO CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition which was collected from all across Ontario along with a great many other petitions on Friday. It deals with the trade deal with the United States.

Those who signed the petition feel that the trade agreement negotiated by this Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty. They feel as well that it would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future. They also feel that the trade agreement did not succeed in obtaining the secure access to the U.S. market which was the key objective—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows the rules and I think he is going a little beyond what is necessary to describe what is in the petition.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, it is just that this petition deals with such an explosive and important topic that I wish to outline everything in it.

In any event, those who have signed the petition come from all parts of my constituency, all parts of the City of Windsor itself, from La Salle, from Amherstburg and from a great many parts of Essex County.

I would note the last part of the petition which is that the petitioners call upon the Government to give the people of Canada a chance to speak out in a general election.

FERMI II NUCLEAR REACTOR—REVIEW PROCESS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): The second petition I have is a petition which frankly has been much longer in the collecting. It has a total of 4,000 signatures and deals with the question of Fermi II.

Fermi II is a nuclear reactor situated very close to Canada which has a terrible accident record. The people who have signed this petition make it very clear that their position and the position of the great majority—

Mr. Speaker: I again hesitate to interrupt the same Hon. Member, but everyone in the House knows the rule. Hon. Members are permitted to make a brief statement describing the petition but not to argue the issue to which the petition may well be addressed. The Hon. Member will complete his remarks.

Mr. Langdon: Yes, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I say, the petition is signed by 4,000 people of my constituency. It states strongly that there is a desire for people on the Canadian side to have a chance to review this nuclear reactor for its safety provisions before it is put to 100 per cent capacity.

• (1110)

The signatures on the petition come particularly from Amherstburg, Malden and La Salle. They also come from other parts of Essex County because they too would be severely affected by anything which happened to this nuclear reactor.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED TAX REFORM

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from constituents of mine in Thunder Bay—Nipigon and other residents of the City of Thunder Bay protesting the White Paper proposals for tax change. They are particularly unhappy that the tax reform proposals do not change the tax system already unfair to the average Canadian family while giving wealthy Canadians earning over $100,000 a year a tax cut. They also note that 60,000 profitable corporations do not have to pay any income tax at all.

The petitioners call upon the House of Commons to reject these proposed tax changes, to reject the tax on food, another of their concerns, and to restore full indexation to the personal tax system which would be of particular advantage to low-income Canadians.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions containing 500 signatures of Canadians in Nova Scotia, Saskatchewan, British Columbia and Alberta. These petitioners are concerned about the proposed tax changes in the White Paper.

They point out the unfairness of the existing tax system, that in the White Paper proposals of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) those earning over $100,000 a year will get most of the tax breaks and that 60,000 profitable corporations will continue to pay no income tax at all. The petitioners are also quite concerned about a tax levied on food and other essential items. They ask for the restoration of full indexation of personal income tax and for a fair tax system.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURN

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, if Questions Nos. 195 and 206 could be made Orders for Return, the returns would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that Questions Nos. 195 and 206 be deemed to have been made Orders for Return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

LOSS OF OFFICIAL GRADING STAMPS AT MEAT PACKING PLANTS

Question No. 195—Mr. Althouse:

1. In the past 15 years, have official grading stamps at meat packing plants been missing for several days and, if so, in each case (a) on how many occasions and for what period of time (b) to whom are such losses reported?

2. What are the security procedures inside and outside the plant when this occurs and, in particular, are transporters, wholesalers, reprocessors and exporters made aware of the missing number?

3. What precautions are taken to ensure that duplicates are not used after the lost stamp has been recovered?

4. Is a new stamp and number issued, in order to prevent usage of counterfeit stamps or to prevent the movement of illegally stamped products?

5. What arrangements are made for stamping meat at a plant while the stamp is missing?

Return tabled.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR—GRANTS TO METROPOLITAN TORONTO AREA

Question No. 206—Mr. Redway:

Since September 4, 1984, did the Department of Labour made grants and/or loans to persons or corporations, non-governmental organizations and governments within Metropolitan Toronto and, if so, in each case, in what amount and for what purpose?

Return tabled.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand?

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

EMERGENCIES ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence) moved that Bill C-77, an Act to authorize the taking of special temporary measures to ensure safety and security during national emergencies and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, for each of us there is a handful of public events that take place in our lifetime which leave an impression on us for the rest of our lives. The end of the Second World War, the death of President Kennedy or the footsteps of the first man on the moon are all examples of that.

However, for Canadians in October, 1970, there was another event which took place that I think all of us who were alive during that period will never forget. It happened in response to a crisis in the Province of Quebec. The Government invoked the War Measures Act in a time of peace and suspended the civil liberties of Canadians from one coast of this country to the other. I was a student at that time at the University of Western Ontario. I remember very well the address that was given in a national broadcast by Prime Minister Trudeau who commenced his remarks by saying:

> I am speaking to you at a moment of grave crisis, when violent and fanatical men are attempting to destroy the unity and freedom of Canada.

Mr. Trudeau then continued by explaining the Government's decision to invoke the War Measures Act, and he outlined some of the circumstances which led to the Government taking such an action. He explained as well that he was taking such measures, which he recognized were exceptionally extreme and would have a profound effect on civil liberties across the country, because it was essential he do so. In Mr. Trudeau's words:

> The War Measures Act gives sweeping powers to the Government. It also suspends the operation of the Canadian Bill of Rights. I can assure you that the Government is most reluctant to seek such powers, and did so only when it became crystal clear that the situation could not be controlled unless some extraordinary assistance was made available on an urgent basis.

These are strong powers and I find them as distasteful as I am sure you do. They are necessary, however, to permit the police to deal with persons who advocate or promote the violent overthrow of our democratic system. In short, I assure you that the Government recognizes its grave responsibilities in interfering in certain cases with civil liberties, and that it remains answerable to the people of Canada for its actions.

The Prime Minister of the day, Mr. Trudeau, concluded:

It is my firm intention to discuss then with the leaders of the Opposition parties the desirability of introducing legislation of a less comprehensive nature.

In this respect I earnestly solicit from the leaders and from all Hon. Members constructive suggestions for the amendment of the regulations. Such suggestions will be given careful consideration for possible inclusion in any new statute.

The justice Minister of that day is today the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). He will, of course, remember very well the circumstances which led to the decision to invoke the War Measures Act for the first and only time in a period of peace in Canada. He will remember as well, as will many Members of this House, the commitments made by all three political Parties to see legislation brought in, during a period of calm, to protect the civil liberties of Canadians better, while at the same time ensuring that the Government has the powers necessary to protect the needs and the safety of Canadians in cases of grave crisis.

What we are doing today is to act on that commitment made some 17 years ago. The time surely has come now where we in this House must keep faith with the people of Canada.

On June 26, I tabled in this House two Bills, Bill C-76 and Bill C-77, and announced that the federal Government was repealing the War Measures Act, withdrawing the emergency planning order of 1981 and introducing new federal emergencies legislation to replace them. The Bill I am presenting today complements Bill C-76, the Emergency Preparedness Act, which was given second reading on November 2 and referred to a legislative committee. Although the Bills are in a sense complementary, they are being considered separately.

Bill C-77, the Emergencies Act, will replace the old War Measures Act. It includes safeguarded and appropriately limited powers to deal with four types of national emergencies. It ensures that the exceptional powers granted by Parliament will be no more than are needed for the specific emergency at hand. It will ensure a graduated response, not an overwhelming one. In addition, the Emergencies Act will provide for compensation in the event of personal loss, injury or damage.

The Bill's preamble defines a national emergency as:

—an urgent and critical situation of a temporary nature that imperils the well-being of Canada as a whole or that is of such proportions or nature as to exceed the capacity or authority of a province to deal with it and thus can be effectively dealt with only by Parliament in the exercise of the powers conferred on it by the Constitution.

With passage of the Emergencies Act the Government will be able to act quickly during national emergencies to limit suffering through the use of means that, while extraordinary, will be limited to what is strictly required. The Emergencies Act will clearly constitute a vast improvement over the legislation which it replaces. It will provide a unified and coherent set of measures to respond to emergencies while incorporating maximum safeguards of fundamental rights and freedoms.

The Act will provide for parliamentary review of the use of emergency powers. It will require the executive to answer to Parliament for the use of its powers. The period during which the Act may apply will be limited and the nature of the emergency measures will be restricted to what is appropriate in the circumstances. In addition, the Government will have to return to Parliament for any continuation, amendment, renewal, or declaration of emergency.

Under the Act the provinces are to be consulted before the federal Government can declare a national emergency. In the event of a peacetime public welfare or public order emergency primarily affecting a single province, the province experiencing the direct effects of the emergency will have a veto over the Act's invocation. Under Parts III and IV, which cover areas of federal jurisdiction, there will still be consultation to the extent that it is appropriate and practical to do so.

The Act was designed so that each part may be invoked separately. In extreme situations, however, two or more parts of the Act may be invoked simultaneously.

Part IV of the Act is concerned with a war emergency. This part grants to the executive powers similar to those of the War Measures Act. However, they can be invoked only in time of war or of other real or imminent armed conflict and are subject to similar safeguards as are other parts of the Act. There is no reference to "insurrection" or "apprehended insurrection" in Part IV.

[Translation]

Some critics have tried to combine the old and the new laws in an attempt to make people believe that Part IV of the Emergencies Act is practically identical to the War Measures Act. They have also stated that there is not really any difference between the two legislative texts since the Charter applies to the War Measures Act. They go as far as to say that temptation to resort to the Emergencies Act will be stronger because, they claim, this legislation creates the impression that it offers more guarantees than the War Measures Act and that it will be easier to invoke it.

Such statements are completely unfounded.

Part IV of the Emergencies Act concerns "a war or other armed conflict, real or imminent". The War Measures Act applies to war, invasion or real or apprehended insurrection.

According to the new Bill, the declaration of an emergency must be justified and may be challenged. Under the present legislation, the declaration of a state of emergency is based on "conclusive evidence that war, invasion or insurrection, real or apprehended, exists".

In the proposed legislation, all orders and regulations will be subject to scrutiny by Parliament, which may decide to reconsider and revoke a declaration of a war emergency. No such provision exists at the present time.

The Emergencies Act will be subject to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The War Measures Act is not. The new legislation provides for expiration at the end of 360 days. The present legislation contains no such time limitation.

Provisions for compensating persons having suffered damage or injury as a result of the application of the Emergencies Act will be included in this legislation. The present legislation does not include such provisions. Finally, before the new legislation takes effect, the provinces will be consulted and their views reported to Parliament, which is also an innovative step.

When the Government invoked the War Measures Act in October 1970, it did so reluctantly, believing it had no other choice. This situation led Prime Minister Trudeau to say in the House on October 16, 1970 that "the absence of both adequate time to take other steps or alternative legislative authority dictated the use of the War Measures Act".

[English]

The War Measures Act is too broad and too sweeping. It makes no provision for dealing either moderately with peacetime disasters or for a measured and prudent response to international tension. For 17 years Canadians and politicians of all Parties have been advocating abolition of the War Measures Act saying that it was outmoded, dangerous, and too blunt an instrument for anything short of war.

The present Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, as Minister of Justice during the October Crisis, stated in the House on November 4, 1970:

> The government recognized and, from the beginning, expressed the opinion that the War Measures Act was "too blunt an instrument" —We recognized the need for a more definite but flexible statutory instrument—

Similarly on April 28 of this year the Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) moved that the Government should consider the advisability of repealing the War Measures Act which, to quote him, "authorizes unlimited and arbitrary exercise of power by the Government of Canada during periods of war or apprehended insurrection without providing any review mechanism for such actions nor any basis for redress of the victims of unjust actions" and then went on to say that he thought there were many Canadians who would support Parliament expressing itself in this particular long-standing piece of legislation. He said that he thought that this Draconian Measure, the War Measures Act, should be removed from the books, that what we needed were review mechanisms to ensure protection of individual rights and freedoms.

The same day, in response to motions by the New Democratic Party to abolish the War Measures Act, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), in recalling the last time the Act was invoked, exclaimed: "I regret only one thing and that is that we do not have more time to discuss a page in Canada's history which is certainly not one of the most glorious in the history of human rights in Quebec and Canada".

The Hon. Member went on to say: "Many of us who were young parliamentarians at the time were agonizing about this issue . . . There was a tough debate in the New Democratic Party at that time as to what to do. I agree many New Democrats voted against the Act, but they had a tough debate. I remember it only too well. My price for voting for the War Measures Act was that I be included as one of the speakers . . . I will say in English and in French that I will always regret having voted for the War Measures Act. I felt it was my duty as a Canadian with the kind of information that we had that I had to do so. I had no other choice", admitted the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis with admirable frankness.

[English]

One effort to examine the problem of legislation to deal with emergencies came from the Task Force on Canadian Unity. It recommended that the Government had the right to seek parliamentary approval within a specified time for any extraordinary powers. It also recommended that the Government state the reasons for its action and the duration of the emergency powers in its proclamation. The task force further recommended that provincial powers and individual rights be safeguarded to various degrees depending on whether the nation was at war or at peace.

I have read the recommendations of the Pépin-Robarts task force carefully and I can assure Members of the House that Bill C-77 adequately meets them. The legislation for second reading which I am proposing today will provide the necessary flexibility to respond to national crises without invoking the War Measures Act. It applies only to national emergencies and distinguishes between four types.

In broad terms they are these: First, situations affecting public welfare and caused by an accident such as a massive chemical spill or by natural disasters such as earthquakes, floods or tornadoes that are of such magnitude as to exceed the capacity of the affected province to respond and to require special powers for an effective federal response; second, public order disturbances that threaten the security of Canada and which are so serious as to be national emergencies; third, international emergencies requiring Canada to take special preparatory measures in concert with our allies; fourth, and finally, war itself.

Passage of this legislation will enable the federal Government to fulfil its constitutional responsibility to provide for the safety and security of Canadians during national emergencies. The Emergencies Act will enable the Government to discharge its responsibility for public order emergencies that become national emergencies, without having to resort to the War Measures Act, an archaic and dangerous piece of legislation completely out of tune with democratic Canadian life.

The Emergencies Act will be subject to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Canadian Bill of Rights. It will be consistent with the 1967 United Nations International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

The proposed legislation includes fully safeguarded and appropriately limited exceptional powers to deal with four types of national emergency. It ensures that the exceptional powers granted by Parliament will be no more than what is needed for a specific emergency. It provides for Parliament to review and, if necessary, revoke emergency powers introduced under the Act.

In addition, it contains provisions to ensure that individuals who suffer loss or injury as a result of application of the Act will be fairly compensated. It has been drafted in consultation with the provinces and contains appropriate recognition of provincial interests.

Several provinces have written to say that they are in general agreement with the Emergencies Act. Several have written expressing their approval and the view that the new legislation will bring Canada into line with other modern states which have had similar legislation for years.

The Minister Responsible for Alberta Public Safety Services, who recently experienced firsthand what can happen out of the blue to a community, had some suggestions for changes to the Act but went on to say:

> Nevertheless, one must feel that it is the most important legislation introduced on this activity in recent years and your Government's efforts are to be strongly commended in this regard. We also feel strongly that every effort must be made to ensure the best legislation possible and therefore hope that you will give every consideration to the suggestions we have made.

After the tabling, the Premier of Saskatchewan wrote me:

> I am encouraged by this initiative. The proposed pieces of legislation will more accurately reflect the way in which the federal and provincial Governments actually carry out their roles and responsibilities in this area . . . I wish you a successful and speedy passage of the legislation you have tabled, and I look forward to the continued co-operation of our respective governments in the area of emergency preparedness—

The previous New Brunswick Minister of Municipal Affairs said he was gratified to learn that I had tabled the Emergencies Bill and companion Emergencies Preparedness Bill. He said:

> The Bills address a long-standing need to contemporize emergency legislation in Canada and New Brunswick supports this new legislation without reservation.

The Minister responsible for the Manitoba Emergency Measures Organization wrote to me. My friend, the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), will be particularly interested in his view. He said:

> The Bills are indeed timely and a significant improvement over the existing Act. In particular, the protection of civil liberties is a critical component of your proposed new statute. I welcome the continuing opportunity, as provided in the new Acts, for consultation on matters of national emergency preparedness and response policy. You may be assured of our co-operation and support in this vital area.

He went on to say that:

> —certainly some of the existing programs established by Emergency Preparedness Canada are tangible evidence of federal-provincial co-operation and it is my hope that these will be enhanced by the new legislation.

If there were as close collaboration in all areas of government as there is in emergency preparedness, there would be few stresses and strains in our federal system.

When I tabled Bill C-77 on June 26, I deliberately did so before the summer recess to give Members of the House and Canadians at large adequate time to review its contents and to make suggestions if there were areas where they felt it could be improved. It is because I believe that the legislation has important implications for national security and because the civil liberties of Canadians should be considered in a period of calm that I felt that sufficient time should elapse before the Bill was moved at second reading.

I also indicated that I would listen seriously to suggestions for improvements to ensure that at the end of the day the best possible legislation would be passed.

After the initial tabling, I received many letters from private citizens and politicians congratulating me on finally moving to do away with the War Measures Act. A few people, among them some federal politicians, expressed concerns. In some instances these criticisms were reasonable and constructive. In others the negative comment stemmed perhaps from a superficial reading and misunderstanding of the legislation.

As I indicated earlier, some felt that Part IV of the Emergencies Act is virtually identical to the War Measures Act. They say that since the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms now applies to the War Measures Act, there is really no difference at all, except that there could be a greater temptation to use the Emergencies Act because it gives the illusion of being better safeguarded than the War Measures Act and could be more easily invoked. My earlier comments demonstrated that this is simply not true, and a careful reading will confirm this.

Others have said that the McDonald Commission did not think that the Government needed any additional emergency powers in peace time. I can assure Members of the House that Bill C-77 incorporates virtually all of the relevant recommendations of the 1979 McDonald Commission. From the outset we have been concerned that these recommendations should be respected as far as possible. There is one notable exception. The McDonald Commission did not recommend repealing the War Measures Act and replacing it with new emergencies legislation. Unlike members of the McDonald Commission, we believe, as all Parties in the House have stated in the past, that the War Measures Act is so inadequate and poses such a severe threat to the fundamental rights and freedoms of Canadians that we do not wish to live with this monster any longer.

As I have said, I have read through the recommendations relating to the emergencies legislation of the McDonald Commission and I note with pleasure that the vast majority of those recommendations have been incorporated in Bill C-77 in one form or other, particularly in regard to procedures for parliamentary oversight of emergency powers.

Part I of the Emergencies Act deals with public welfare emergencies and is designed to enable the federal Government to mobilize the resources of the nation in response to a public welfare emergency that is so serious as to be a national emergency. Provisions of the act enable the federal Government to organize the response to a provincial or territorial request for assistance. The act will ensure that the burden of responding to and recovering from such a national emergency is shared by the nation as a whole.

All provincial governments have enacted standing emergencies legislation to deal with public welfare emergencies. By and large, they have developed sufficient competence, resources and experience to cope with most public welfare emergencies either with or without the assistance of contiguous provinces or of the federal Government. However, in a national emergency the combined resources of the entire nation may have to be mobilized to deal with the emergency. A vast, co-ordinated and timely response of the sort which could be required could only be provided using the federal emergency power.

While provincial governments have the authority, through their various emergency acts, to requisition resources within the province for emergency use within the province, they do not, and constitutionally cannot have the authority to requisition resources in the province for use outside the province. Only the federal Government can do this.

In the interest of federalism, as well as the efficient mobilization of the nation's resources, we recognize that the provinces should have a role in the process leading to the declaration of a public welfare emergency. The Emergencies Act embodies this principle.

Although the federal Government would always consult with the provinces before declaring a national emergency, the recent trend toward improved federal-provincial consultation as well as several studies of constitutional reform, all lead to the conclusion that the provinces ought to have a stronger voice and a more formal role in the process leading to the declaration of an emergency. Part I of the Emergencies Act therefore includes appropriate procedures regarding provincial consultation.

It is the intention of the federal Government to work continuously with provincial governments through Emergency Preparedness Canada to develop detailed plans and procedures to facilitate effective consultation if the need to consider invocation of the act arose.

The Emergencies Act stipulates that Part I may not be invoked unless the province in which the direct effects of the emergency principally occur indicates that it cannot cope without federal authorities and assistance. In large emergencies affecting several provinces, all provinces affected must be consulted before a declaration can be made under the act. In addition, the act states that provincial jurisdiction over the police forces, including the RCMP—over which the province normally has jurisdiction—will not be altered.

With these safeguards, then, it will not be possible for the federal Government to use the legislation to intervene unilaterally in provincial or territorial emergencies that are within the capacities or authorities of the provinces or territories to cope with.

Some people have expressed doubts about the provision of Bill C-77 dealing with public welfare emergencies having serious implications for the right to strike. It is a point that certainly should be clarified. However, I would remind the House that I have stated publicly on previous occasions, that this act is not intended to be used to settle a legitimate dispute between an employer and employees.

I have already said that if there is uncertainty in the language of the Bill in this regard, it will be dealt with in committee to ensure that the original intent is respected. Indeed, we have seen very recently an instance where Parliament has been prepared to introduce special legislation which is well tuned to the specific exigencies of the circumstance, and that is the appropriate way to deal with it. If the federal Government believes it is necessary to intervene in the case of a strike, we will make it abundantly clear that this legislation is not intended to and could not be used to interfere in that way.

I personally have little difficulty with this point. I believe that the constraints of the definition of a national emergency in the preamble, when added to the further constraints of the definition of a public welfare emergency in Clause 3, effectively ensure that this Bill could never be used to terminate a strike and impose the settlement of a legitimate dispute between an employer and employees.

Likewise, it has been said that probably the most contentious clause in this Bill is the one that deals with public order emergencies. This is the type of situation which gave rise to the use of the War Measures Act in 1970. This clause takes its definition of threat from the Canadian Security and Intelligence Service Act. This fact alone should make us very cautious because of the difficulties already encountered with CSIS in determining what is subversion and what is legitimate dissent. That was one view of the legislation.

I would remind Members of this House that the definition of "threats to the security of Canada" received exhaustive scrutiny by Parliament in 1983 during deliberations on the CSIS Act. The language in this definition has, therefore, already received Parliament's blessing.

I would also remind the House that the definitions at the head of each of the four major parts of this Bill, including the definition of "threats to the security of Canada" do not stand alone. They must be read in conjuction with the definition of a national emergency in the preamble of the Bill and in conjuction with other restricting provisions. In other words, before the Government can declare a public order emergency under Part II, the emergency situation must correspond to the definition of a national emergency as stated in the preamble.

I am told that this double test, as it is called, will be used by the courts to assess the Government's compliance with the deliberate constraints and safeguards that have been built into the definitions of this Bill. For greater clarity, let me read again the definition of a a national emergency which appears in the preamble of the Bill. Since it seems to have been overlooked by some people, it bears repetition. A "national emergency" is defined as follows:

> —an urgent and critical situation of a temporary nature that imperils the well-being of Canada as a whole or that is of such proportions or nature as to exceed the capacity or authority of a province to deal with it and thus can be effectively dealt with only by Parliament in the exercise of the powers conferred on it by the Constitution.

I am sure all Members of this House will appreciate that the standard established in this definition is very stringent, indeed. Before the Government can declare an national emergency under this act, the emergency in question must affect the whole of Canada or be so great as to exceed the capacity of the provinces to cope with the emergency. When this definition is read against the definition of "threats to the security of Canada" in Clause 14, and in conjunction with provisions that the emergency must necessitate the taking of special temporary measures for dealing with it, and that the special measures must be reasonable, it is apparent that the benign and benevolent activities such as ministerial contacts with the African National Congress, would never amount to a national emergency, as someone suggested, requiring invocation of the Emergencies Act.

To the challenge that a public order emergency also gives Cabinet the right to prohibit public assembly, and that a Canadian could have difficulty in availing himself or herself of the right to protest peacefully the declaration of emergency powers, I would reply that there are absolutely no restrictions on the freedom of expression, thought, conscience or religion under this part of Bill C-77. Unlike the War Measures Act, Part II of Bill C-77 confers no new powers relating to search, seizure, arrest or detention. The provisions of the Criminal Code in these areas are considered adequate to ensure law and order. Restricting public assembly would be authorized only to protect lives and property during a serious national emergency.

Let me dwell on this for a moment because I think it is a very important point which the House should recognize. One of the grave threats to civil liberties that is contained in the War Measures Act, as it stands today, was shown very markedly in the regulations under the War Measures Act when it was invoked in October 1970. We found civil liberties across the country suspended in order to deal with the situation which was relatively isolated in terms of its implication. Even though the FLQ problems that existed were taking place in the Province of Quebec, people as far away as Vancouver, British Columbia, or Guelph in Wellington County in my area, found their civil liberties were suspended as well. This is a much more finely tuned piece of legislation.

In the Province of Quebec people found that there suddenly was a retroactive crime being created. This will not be possible under Bill C-77. This section of the Bill gives no new powers of arrest. We will not have under the powers of this Bill in Part II, the knock on the door in the middle of the night because of a crime being created retroactively. We will not have the situation that someone who once attended a meeting of an organization would have the burden of proof shifted onto him to prove he is not a member of that organization. How could any of us be expected to prove we do not belong to an organization? It may be easily possible to prove we do belong to some organization such as a church, political party or any other organization, but how can we prove conclusively that we do not belong to an organization if attendance at a meeting is deemed to be adequate proof that we do.

That is the problem today with the War Measures Act. That is how civil liberties were affected in October of 1970. That is the sort of abuse we are determined to correct. It is essential that we have legislation in a period of time that better protects civil liberties.

As for the notion that a legitimate protest against the emergency declaration could be suppressed and no one would find out, or that the Government could censor the media or simply forbid travel to the troubled area, and that it would be difficult for anyone to find out if the declaration of an emergency was justified if no one was allowed in or out of the area, I reply that there is no mention at all of censorship in this part of the Bill. In fact, censorship would be possible only during a war emergency under Part IV. Restrictions on travel would be limited to the area of the emergency and only reasonable restrictions on travel would be permitted, that is, restrictions which would prevent further loss of life by creating an evacuation zone, for instance.

Some have concerns about the clause dealing with international emergencies. They suggest that the definition of an international emergency is extremely broad and that the Bill speaks of a threat to any country in which the political, economic or security interests of Canada, or any of its allies, are involved. As in the case of the definitions in each of the other parts, this definition should be looked at within the context of the definition of a national emergency as stated in the preamble. There is no way that an incident such as an attack on the Stark, for example, would amount to a national emergency in Canada.

I would suggest that Members of this House read carefully through the definition of an national emergency in the preamble and to read it opposite the definition of an "international emergency" in Clause 25. It is clear that an international emergency must first be so serious as to constitute a national emergency in Canada before the Government can declare the emergency. In my view, only a global crisis of major proportions could ever meet the high double test established here.

I welcome the opportunity to deal with this issue in committee, and if wording can be found that will clarify the definition of "international emergency" without destroying our ability to act in appropriate cases, I would certainly consider incorporating it in the Bill.

I should like to address any concerns about the provisions in the Bill authorizing extraordinary powers of search and seizure during an international emergency. In light of representations I have received from civil liberties groups since the tabling of this legislation at the beginning of last summer, I would be prepared to look carefully at the wording of this power and the possibility of clarifying its intent. I should explain that its purpose is, for example, to enforce and monitor defence contracts, to prevent hoarding and overcharging for scarce commodities and to prevent black marketing in an international emergency. However, we shall certainly be looking very closely at this section and I would welcome input from Members of Parliament in that regard.

Some criticism has been leveled at Part IV of Bill C-77, that it is difficult to see any difference between this part and the current War Measures Act. Let me remind the House that there are indeed great differences, and permit me to summarize what I said earlier on this point in French.

The Emergencies Act, Part IV, is applicable to "war or other armed conflict, real or imminent", whereas the War Measures Act is applicable to "war, invasion or insurrection, real or apprehended".

Invocation of the Emergencies Act must be justified and can be contested, whereas a declaration of the War Measures Act is conclusive evidence of the existence of an emergency which cuts off all recourse to the courts.

• (1150)

Orders and regulations made under the Emergencies Act are subject to parliamentary review whereas under the War Measures Act there is no such provision.

Under the Emergencies Act, Parliament can initiate a motion to revoke a declaration. Under the War Measures Act there is no such provision.

The Canadian Bill of Rights applies to the Emergencies Act. It does not apply to the War Measures Act.

The Emergencies Act cannot be in effect for more than 360 days and any extension requires parliamentary approval. There is no time limit at all under the War Measures Act.

As a past Co-Chairman of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, I have joined with others in this House and in the Senate in pressing to have Governments include parliamentary scrutiny and control over delegated legislation. This Bill gives Parliament a virtually unprecedented degree of control over the use of the powers contained in it. One can only wish that there had been such parliamentary power when the War Measures Act was invoked in October of 1970.

We have bent over backwards in drafting this legislation to ensure the preservation of civil rights and liberties. By limiting the Emergencies Act to four carefully circumscribed categories of national emergency, Canadians will have assurances that the Act will not be used in a frivolous matter to deal with localized or relatively minor emergencies.

The Emergencies Act will enable the Government of Canada to respond to a major international crisis by gradually adopting appropriate preventive and preparatory measures, in concert with our allies, without having to take the provocative step of invoking the War Measures Act. It will eliminate the need to deal with national emergencies by hurriedly introducing excessive or flawed ad hoc legislation during the heated and confused situation that usually develops after a major emergency has occurred. It will help to stimulate, in co-operation and consultation with the provinces, an enhanced national standard of emergency preparedness. Passage of this Bill will ensure an appropriate response to emergencies while assuring that the fundamental rights of Canadians are fully protected in emergencies.

If this Act had been in place in World War II, Canadian citizens could not have been so cavalierly interned and their property confiscated. Likewise, in 1970, Part II of this legislation would have been used instead of the War Measures Act, and the abuses we saw under that Act would not have been possible—Quebecers would not have been arbitrarily arrested and detained simply because they were associated with a particular group.

I think it is important to re-emphasize that, unlike the War Measures Act, Part II of Bill C-77, confers no new powers relating to search, seizure, arrest or detention. The provisions of the Criminal Code in these areas are considered to be entirely adequate to deal with the instigators of public disorder, even under unusual and exceptional circumstances.

As I have said before, the need for this kind of legislation has been long recognized by all parties in Parliament. It is important that we have the mechanisms in place to deal with national disasters. But it is equally important that we are able to respond effectively to the more day-to-day occurrences. By putting in place adequate emergencies legislation, the federal Government will not only be in a better position to respond to the needs of Canadians in an increasingly complex environment, but Canada will be brought into line with other modern democratic states which have had comparable legislation for years.

This legislative package consisting of Bill C-77 and Bill C-76 fulfils the Government's election commitments in the field of emergency preparedness and does so with proper regard for the civil rights of individuals and for the federal nature of Canada.

To paraphrase the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), speaking in the House last April, if Members have suggestions to make . . . I would be delighted to hear them, because we could have legislation which is better, more in line with the spirit of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and more compatible with what we want to defend.

Revision of the emergencies legislation was part of this Government's election platform in 1984. In February of 1985, at a press conference, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) publicly committed the Government to an early review of the War Measures Act, when in answer to a journalist's question about when his Government was going to do away with the Act he said, "I don't think you are going to be able to ask me the question much longer. It is under review and we hope to have something for you at an early moment. We hope to bring something forward that will be more appropriate than what we have had in the past". We have kept our promise. I hope that we can move quickly through second reading of Bill C-77 with a view toward starting detailed review in a legislative committee as soon as possible.

Consideration of this legislation provides Parliament with its first opportunity for a full review and debate of emergency preparedness matters. It also provides an opportunity for the general public to become informed of and engaged in the issues involved.

Finally, passage of this Bill will provide effective machinery to deal with unforeseen and potentially disastrous events while fully safeguarding the rights of Canadians.

I am fully in accord with my friend, the Hon. Member for Brant, who said in the House:

> We should deliberate in an air of calm and reason . . . We have time to consider what we are setting in place for future generations. There is no war. There is no apprehended insurrection, no violence, no upheaval. Now is the time to give it straightforward, serious, cautious and deliberate consideration.

I am heartened that my hon. friend should say this. I agree with him entirely that, in his words, "now is the time for the parliamentary process to shine". I also totally agree that we will need testimony from both expert witnesses and ordinary Canadians to get this legislation right, for I know full well that it is an issue that touches the very lives and liberties of every Canadian. I urge the House to send the Bill to committee with the least possible delay so that the committee can get on with its work of inviting the public to be heard. I am confident that all Members of the House recognize the importance of this legislation. I believe that together we can work out, in a non-partisan way, the best legislation possible.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I think there is some understanding in the House that perhaps the Hon. Minister of State could be heard.

DISPOSITION OF PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)):) Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties. The Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan) is unable to be here this evening to proceed with consideration of his Private Member's Bill at 5 p.m. Therefore, the Parties have agreed to cancel this evening's Private Members' Business and Government Orders will continue until 6 p.m. at which time the normal adjournment proceedings would commence.

I would also advise that Parties have agreed that the Hon. Member's item will be dropped to the bottom of the list of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members have heard the terms of the suggestion by the Minster of State. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Beatty that Bill C-77, an Act to authorize the taking of special temporary measures to ensure safety and security during national emergencies and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) started off this debate today with a lengthy explanation of the Bill as he sees it and as he intends it.

This Bill before the House today is not to be taken lightly. Such measures are of extreme importance to any nation. This Bill deals with the basic theories and practices of the democratic process itself and fundamental rights and responsibilities of the people of the country.

Bill C-77 before us today, called the "Emergencies Act", replaces the War Measures Act, while Bill C-76, which is entitled the "Emergency Preparedness Act", is to replace the emergency measures organization which did not have a clear basis in legislation. That piece of legislation is important particularly to provincial and municipal governments because there seemingly was a lack of direction for the municipalities. They were sometimes confused and frustrated with that legislation.

Bill C-77 is a major piece of legislation. Let us make no bones about that. At a glance it makes one realize that it too is a very strong measure, taking nothing away from the War Measures Act. I will be looking at the court system for compensation later on in my speech, as I think that is an inadequate part of this legislation.

We must remember that the War Measures Act was initially passed by the Conservative Government of Sir Robert Borden. It was passed through this Parliament with limited debate and no dissent on August 21, 1914, only 15 days after the outbreak of the First World War. We must remember that Parliaments of the day had witnessed a long period of peace in the world. From 1815 to 1914, there were 99 years of virtual world peace, except for a few minor fracas such as the Crimean War from 1853 to 1856, the Boer War from 1899 to 1902, and the Russo-Japanese War from 1904 to 1905.

Therefore, we must remember when we are considering this legislation that Canadian parliamentarians had relatively little or no experience with such emergency measures legislation. Canada itself had virtually none, because it had never been a major player in international controversies.

I wish to refer back approximately 127 years to the 1860s and a statement by Abraham Lincoln. Under emergency powers, the political rationale underlying resort to emergency powers was summed up by him in the following manner:

> Every man thinks he has a right to live and every government thinks it has a right to live. Every man when driven to the wall by a murderous assailant will override all laws to protect himself and this is called the great right of self-defence.
> So every government when driven to the wall by a rebellion will trample down a constitution before it will allow itself to be destroyed. This may not be constitutional law but it is a fact.

This underlying rationale of self-defence, resting on the concept of necessity, is often expressed in the maxim of "the safety of the people is the highest law".

Emergencies, which may require extraordinary powers to overcome them, are of many types. A United Nations study of 36 constitutions in the early 1960s lists a wide range of threats to the well-being of the polity which those constitutions recognized as permitting the taking of emergency measures. That list includes international conflict, war, invasion, defence or security of the state or part thereof; civil war, rebellion, insurrection, subversion, or the harmful activities of counter-revolutionary elements; disturbance of the peace, public order or safety; danger to the constitutional authorities; natural or public calamity or disaster; danger to the economic life of the country or parts thereof; and the maintenance of essential supplies and services for the community.

On this basis, in terms of the United Kingdom, leaving aside armed conflict between states, one might identify as potential candidates for the use of emergency powers, at least in some circumstances, certainly, the activities of domestic nationalist terrorist groups, particularly of Republican and Loyalist paramilitaries.

In starting off this debate today we must remember when we go back 127 years that the feeling about such legislation was quite different than it is today. I would also submit that when the War Measures Act went through this Parliament, in August of 1914, the thinking in Canada was quite different than it is today when it comes to the subject of civil liberties and law and order.

The Minister has stated that this Bill must be looked at in the calm of the present state of peace in this country and in the world. That is very important. We must remember that the War Measures Act was passed when this country—in fact the world—was in a state of war. There was not time to do some serious thinking about such measures.

The War Measures Act was modelled after the English Defence of the Realm Act which was passed by the British Parliament on August 8, 1914, a few days before the War Measures Act became law in Canada. This would again indicate that the Government of the day, or the Parliament of Canada, lacked experience in those things, because it was basing this legislation on an Act of the British Parliament that had been passed only one week before the War Measures Act itself.

The one big difference between the two Acts was that the British Act was intended to operate only for the duration of the war; the Canadian Act was drafted in such a manner that it remained on the statute books to be invoked when deemed necessary to the executive, meaning the Cabinet.

The War Measures Act as passed in 1914 granted the Governor in Council extremely broad powers to pass regulations in time of war, invasion, or insurrection, real or apprehended. The simple issuance of a proclamation by the Cabinet represented conclusive evidence that war, invasion, or insurrection, real or apprehended, did in fact exist.

Once the proclamation was issued, the Cabinet was allowed to make orders and regulations deemed necessary or advisable for the security, defence, peace, and welfare of Canada.

Section 6 of the 1914 War Measures Act specifically included censorship of all means of communication, arrest and detention, control of harbours, territorial waters, and vessels, transportation of any type, trading, production, and manufacture, and appropriation and control of property. Besides all of this, the termination of the emergency situations in which the War Measures Act was to be proclaimed was also to be by executive or Cabinet proclamation.

This famous Act of 1914 amended the Royal Northwest Mounted Police Act by authorizing an increase in the size of the force. At the same time it amended the Immigration Act by preventing those who left Canada to help the enemy from landing, remaining in Canada except with the Minister's consent. It also gave retroactive statutory sanction to all measures that had been taken from August 4 until the Bill became law, including the declaration of war itself on August 4, 1914. All this took place in the crisis atmosphere of this Parliament in August of 1914. Is it not sensible and realistic to believe that another crisis in this Parliament could produce similar legislation?

Let us not forget that as we stand here debating this new legislation today—if I may use a pun—in the serenity of this Parliament, that it is incumbent upon us to produce sound legislation with a view to protecting, as far as possible, the rights and privileges of every Canadian, after we have taken into consideration the responsibilities of every citizen in times of crisis, and indeed the responsibility of the Government.

Let us look at some sections of the Emergencies Act before us today. Under Part IV of the War Emergency Part of Bill C-77, Clause 38 has an elastic clause. It states:

> 38. (1) While a declaration of a war emergency is in effect, the Governor in Council may make such orders or regulations as, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, are reasonably necessary or advisable for dealing with the emergency.

This gives the Government very broad powers indeed.

Let us look at the orders and regulations under Part III of the Bill dealing with an international emergency. Under orders and regulations Clause 28 states:

> 28. (1) While a declaration of an international emergency is in effect, the Governor in Council may make such orders or regulations with respect to the following matters as, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, are reasonably necessary for dealing with the emergency:
> (a) the control or regulation of any specified industry or service, including the use of equipment, facilities and inventory;

• (1210)

This is practically confiscating the services at hand. Subclause (b) reads:

> the appropriation, control, forfeiture, use and disposition of property or services;

The right to property is abrogated in this clause.

The next subclause is a very good comparison with the War Measures Act itself. Subclause (c) reads:

> the authorization of the entry and search of any dwelling-house, premises, conveyance or place, and the search of any person found therein, for any thing that may be evidence of a contravention or suspected contravention of any order or regulation made pursuant to this section, and the seizure and detention of any such thing;

Subclause (d) reads:

> the authorization and conduct of inquiries in relation to the administration or enforcement of orders or regulations made pursuant to this section, including the conferral of powers under the Inquiries Act on any person authorized to conduct such an inquiry;

There is no difference here from the War Measures Act which this Act really replaces. Subclause (e) reads:

> the authorization of or direction to any person, or any person of a class of persons, to render essential services of a type that that person, or a person of that class, is competent to provide;

Their services are seconded. Subclause (f) reads:

> the designation and securing of protected places;

That is common sense. Subclause (g) reads:

> the regulation or prohibition of travel outside Canada by Canadian citizens or permanent residents as defined in the Immigration Act, 1976 and of admission into Canada by other persons;

Subclause (h) reads:

> the removal from Canada of persons, other than Canadian citizens or permanent residents as defined in the Immigration Act, 1976;

Subclause (i) reads:

> the control or regulation of the international aspects of specified financial activities within Canada;

In the present trade discussions a lot is being discussed about the United States having the right to invest in the Canadian financial and commercial communities. What will be the relationship between that situation, if it ever comes about, and the fact that during wartime or during a crisis international aspects of specified financial activities within Canada will be regulated by the Government of Canada in a stronger manner?

Subclause (j) reads:

> the authorization of expenditures for dealing with an international emergency in excess of any limit set by an Act of Parliament and the setting of a limit on such expenditures;

Here we have the Government setting expenditures and setting compensation costs for Canadian citizens that will come up later.

If one does not abide by all these provisions in Bill C-77, replacing the War Measures Act, here is the penalty:

> the imposition, on summary conviction or indictment, of a fine not exceeding five thousand dollars or imprisonment not exceeding five years or both that fine and imprisonment for contravention of any order or regulation made under this section.

Section 4 of the War Measures Act also provides for a penalty which shall not exceed $5,000 or imprisonment for five years or both. It is exactly the same pattern.

The War Measures Act was amended in 1960 by the Canadian Bill of Rights. The 1960 amendment provided that anything done under the War Measures Act was to be deemed not to be an infringement, abrogation, or abridgment of any right or freedom recognized in the Canadian Bill of Rights.

This really means that the Diefenbaker Government passed its Bill of Rights in 1960, got a lot of publicity for having passed it, and then immediately thereafter said that the Bill of Rights did not apply to the War Measures Act. Through those years, right up until the Charter of Rights and Freedoms was finally passed in Parliament in 1982, there were no controls on the War Measures Act. While the Diefenbaker Government took a lot of credit for bringing in the Bill of Rights, it did not apply it to the War Measures Act. It also provided for the laying of a War Measures Act proclamation before Parliament after its issue and for the consideration of its abrogation by both the Senate and House of Commons.

Bill C-77 respecting the Emergencies Act has incorporated the practice of laying proclamations before Parliament within seven days of a declaration. That amendment also took place with the War Measures Act itself.

The essence of the War Measures Act is its perception as a last resort piece of legislation, to be used only in limited circumstances, and this limitation should be placed on any emergency legislation. As a consequence, the War Measures Act has been invoked only three times since its adoption in 1914—during and after World War I, during and after World War II, and during and after the October 1970 crisis.

One must not be led to believe that any one package of emergencies legislation is the be-all and end-all in the handling of a crisis. This is why it is very important that this piece of legislation be sent to a legislative committee. I gather from the speech delivered by the Minister this morning that he is probably in the mood to look at some constructive amendments to the Bill at that stage. I think this is a piece of legislation that must be looked at seriously and very constructively by all political Parties in the House.

The new emergencies legislation can be resorted to in many different situation, both in peacetime and otherwise. It can be invoked where there has been a natural disaster and where there has been a breakdown in the flow of essential goods, services, or resources—for example, a strike. The Minister mentioned that this morning by way of clarification. It is probably one section at which we will be looking for an amendment to include that clarification in the legislation.

It can also be invoked where there have been serious threats from within the country to the security of Canada. That is an important point that I do not think anyone can disagree with. Also it can be invoked in cases of real or apprehended acts of violence from another country toward Canada, or even in cases of apprehended acts of violence from another country toward an ally of Canada, and, finally, after a proclamation of a state of war itself.

I think it should be said at this point that legislation of this nature is not easy to come by. When we look at the War Measures Act and at World War I and World War II, we must be cognizant of the fact that those were very crucial years, not only for the people who passed the legislation but for those who administered it. As well, it was a very crucial period for every citizen of Canada and for every citizen of the free world.

For this reason we must appreciate the fact that, even though the War Measures Act was inadequate in some ways, it was the vehicle that brought the free world through two world wars and afterwards was dispensed with and life went on.

In each of the above cases the new emergencies legislation would authorize Cabinet to suspend certain civil liberties. The legislation will allow for the regulation or outright prohibition of travel within Canada and of public assembly. It will authorize the appropriation of property including public utilities and services and the rendering of essential service. These are particularly strong measures.

It would also allow for search and seizure without warrant, as I have mentioned; the removal of any non-Canadians from Canada; and the regulation of international financial activities in Canada. If, as some assert, the War Measures Act is overkill, then clearly the new emergencies legislation has a quality of that in many sections of it as well.

The procedures for citizens to receive compensation for losses under the War Measures Act and the new Emergencies Act is an interesting comparison. Section 7 of the War Measures Act of 1914 reads as follows:

> Whenever any property or the use thereof has been appropriated by Her Majesty under this Act, or any order in council, order or regulation made thereunder, and compensation is to be made therefor and has not been agreed upon, the claim shall be referred by the Minister of Justice to the Exchequer Court of Canada, or to a superior or county court of the province within which the claim arises, or to a judge of any such court.

The regulations in Clause 22.1 of Bill C-77, the Emergencies Act, on page 32, give the Governor in Council the right to prescribe the form and manner of making applications for compensation. I want to repeat that. The clause gives the Governor in Council the right to prescribe the form and manner of making applications for compensation. If one has been wronged, the Government decides whether or not he or she has a right to apply for compensation.

The clause gives the Cabinet the right to do the following. The Governor in Council may make regulations prescribing the form and manner of making applications for compensation under Section 22, the information and evidence to be submitted in connection therewith and the procedure to be followed in the consideration of applications for compensation. The Government is deciding to be its own court and master.

Second, the Governor in Council may make regulations prescribing the period within which applications for compensation must be made and prescribing the criteria to be used in determining the eligibility of any person for compensation. The Government is setting up its own court of law here.

The Governor in Council may also make regulations prescribing the methods and criteria to be used in assessing any deprivation of property for which compensation may be paid.

The legislation goes on to say in subclause (e) that the Cabinet has the right to prescribe the maximum amount of compensation that may be paid to any person either generally or with respect to any particular deprivation of property. If one has lost a great deal of property or has been wronged to a great extent financially, there is a limit to what one can get and the rest is simply lost.

The Cabinet also has the right to prescribe the terms and conditions for the payment of compensation. The Cabinet provides for the payment of compensation in lump sum or in periodic payments. The way claimants are to be paid is also laid on. That is not quite the way the business world works today. One does not draw up one's own conditions of payment.

The Government will provide for payments of compensation on a term basis, establishing priorities among persons applying for compensation on the basis of classes of persons or classes of deprivation of property or otherwise. When talking about classes of persons and who will qualify and who will not, one gets into a very dicey area. This becomes a very crucial piece of legislation. It has some very damaging effects on the individual who is trying to recoup losses.

Part 1, the Public Welfare Emergency Part, deals with fire, flood, drought, storm, earthquake or other natural phenomenon, disease in human beings, animals or plants, accident or pollution, the breakdown in the flow of essential goods, services or resources that results or may result in a danger to life or property or social disruption so serious as to be a national emergency. The declaration of emergency shall be laid before the House of Parliament within seven sitting days after the declaration is issued. The declaration of a public welfare emergency expires at the end of 90 days unless the declaration is previously revoked or continued in accordance with the Bill itself, but the Public Welfare Emergency part under Orders and Regulations lists a number of items in Clause 6, some of which have already been mentioned.

I think that the requisition, use or disposition of property in paragraph (c) affects property once again. The clause deals with the regulation of the distribution and availability of essential goods, services and resources and the authorization and making of emergency payments, the establishment of emergency shelters and hospitals, the assessment of damage to any works or undertakings and the repair, replacement or restoration thereof. It deals with a number of constructive things but still many things are to be seconded from people and industry for the purpose of dealing with an emergency.

Parliament may revoke a declaration of public welfare emergency in accordance with Clause 56 or Clause 57 of the Bill. There is a procedure for this outlined in the legislation. Clause 10(2) is important to the extension of such declarations under the public welfare section because it outlines further conditions for how these things can be handled.

Provincial jurisdiction and federal-provincial relations are given paramount consideration in the Bill. In cases of emergency, the Government may have to act before consulting a province and there is provision to do that. One wonders if in serious cases it will always be possible to consult the provinces ahead of time and get their feelings on these things, because some serious decision will have to be made in a hurry. That is what the legislation is there to do.

The Public Order Emergency Part of this legislation is a very key part of this Bill. A public order emergency means an emergency that arises from threats to the security of Canada and that is so serious as to be a national emergency. A public emergency order expires at the end of 60 days and it too can be revoked before that time or it can be continued thereafter. A motion for confirmation of the public order emergency must be laid before Parliament and if Parliament happens to be prorogued, it will have to be recalled.

What does a public order emergency declaration contain? That is set out in Clause 15 on page 8 and is a very crucial part of the legislation. Clause 15 contains a list of items and reads as follows:

> (1) When the Governor in Council is of the opinion that a public order emergency exists in Canada and necessitates the taking of special temporary measures for dealing with the emergency, the Governor in Council, after such consultation as is required by section 23, may, by proclamation, so declare.
> (2) A declaration of a public order emergency shall specify
> (a) concisely the state of affairs constituting the emergency;
> (b) the special temporary measures that the Governor in Council anticipates may be necessary for dealing with the emergency; and
> (c) if the effects of the emergency do not extend to the whole of Canada, the area of Canada to which the effects of the emergency extend.

The proclamation may be continued—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne)): Order, please. At this time I must interrupt the Hon. Member.

It being 12.30 o'clock, pursuant to order made Wednesday, November 4, 1987, the house will revert to presenting reports from committees for the purpose of enabling the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs to present the committee's report on tax reform.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

FINANCE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

PRESENTATION OF ELEVENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present the eleventh report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, in both official languages.

The report is rather extensive. Unfortunately, we do not have printed copies available as yet in the regular fashion because the House of Commons printing facilities have not been able to produce them, so for Members and others we have Xerox copies only. The copies for the tabling are here.

The extensive report, with 81 recommendations, essentially recommends that the White Paper on tax reform, including its base-broadening measures, its conversion to credits and tax rates for corporate and personal income tax, be implemented, subject to some very many suggestions.

I am very proud that the work of the committee has proceeded as it has and I think the House will want to accept the report.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Beatty that Bill C-77, an Act to authorize the taking of special temporary measures to ensure safety and security during national emergencies and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Madam Speaker, under the Public Order Emergency Part, which is Part II of Bill C-77, there are some very strong measures introduced to be put into practice. It is important that we are not conned into thinking that Part II, Public Order Emergency, is a light piece of legislation. It is very strong in its statements. It certainly infringes on civil liberties to a great extent. If we go on to the International Emergency Part, we find that the declaration outlines the state of affairs. It is very strong. Part III, Clause 25, reads:

> "international emergency" means an emergency involving Canada and one or more other countries that arises from acts of intimidation or coercion or the real or imminent use of serious force or violence and that directly threatens the sovereignty, security or territorial integrity of Canada or any of its allies or any other country in which the political, economic or security interests of Canada or any of its allies are involved.

While we have an alliance to which we belong, the legislative committee will have to look very carefully at this clause under "International Emergency" which can drag Canada into a conflict as a result of another country's activities or problems.

You will know that when the War Measures Act was invoked in 1970, Madam Speaker, it expressly overrode the Bill of Rights. Furthermore, we had no Charter at that time. We now have a Charter. Let me point out that if the Diefenbaker Government in 1960 had not specifically stated that the Bill of Rights did not override the War Measures Act we would have had those measures controlling the War Measures Act in 1970. It is, therefore, understandable that my Leader lamented having to use the Act, precisely because there was no check on the exercise of its powers. That situation no longer exists today and it will not exist under this legislation.

I want to quote a statement which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) made in the House on October 16, 1970. During the debate on the war measures legislation at that time he said:

> The rule of law is the essential condition not only for the existence of the state but for the existence of individual liberty within the state. Freedom is the precondition of liberty, and restraint is the beginning of freedom. The rule of law is the source and condition of that restraint, and through it the freedom and the liberty of the individual in society are maintained.
> Insurrection and violence are not only a total denial of the constituted authority of the state but are a denial of the liberty of the individual himself who depends upon the controlled organization of the state. This type of violence defies not only the total integrity of society as a people but the individual integrity of every person in that society.

An important part of this legislation is that Part II, Public Order Emergency, if strictly enforced, gives a cruel Government, a huge Government or a Government emotionally motivated rather than rationally motivated, maybe trying to get political points by a show of force, the basis for that Government to act. This particular section of the Bill is one that we will have to look at very carefully while scrutinizing the legislation in a legislative committee.

I want to say to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty)—and this is no reflection on him as a person in any way whatever, but from comments I have been getting, the populace would feel a little more relieved if the administration of Bill C-77 when it becomes legislation were under a Minister of the Government other than the Minister of National Defence. As I say, there is nothing personal read into that, but just an uneasiness that some people feel.

The fairness that must be built into this legislation is extremely important. While the War Measures Act was important to the free world during the crises of World War I and World War II, let us keep in mind those people we recently remembered at the cenotaphs across the country who fought and died by the tens of thousands to leave behind a Canada on which the rest of us could build. It is extremely important today that we remember them and the Canada which they wanted for the future.

We must consider what must be done in this Bill to accommodate the civil liberties, the property rights and the freedom of Canadians, whether it be during wartime or peacetime, so that under the part dealing with compensation those people be given the right to get compensation on an equal basis before the courts of Canada.

One writer discussing this Bill has stated:

> Those whose liberties—or property—were harmed would be given the right to compensation.
> The only worry here is that a section of the Bill provides a long list of regulations under which the Cabinet could define the ambit of compensation. A mean-spirited Government, or one intent on post facto justifications for its actions, could make compensation unnecessarily limited by restrictive regulations. Fortunately, a Federal Court judge would hear appeals from ministerial decisions, though he could not unilaterally increase the monetary compensation offered by the Government. Even with the Federal Court appeal, the Government has set itself up too much as judge and jury over compensation awards.

That was written by Jeffrey Simpson in The Globe and Mail. These are important things to consider at this time.

We should also be thinking very seriously of how we will maintain a fair balance between what is needed in times of war as emergency legislation and what is needed in peacetime. We certainly do not want this law to be put into full force during times of peace. I refer to Clause 1, as an example, which relates to property. That should only be implemented under very extreme conditions.

No legislation of this type is perfect and this Bill certainly is not. Part II bothers me a great deal. Clause 1 contains some very strong regulations and orders. Let us get this Bill into a legislative committee where it can be studied clause by clause and where the long-term results of it can be considered.

Another important point is that people must be allowed to appeal to the Federal Court, at which level assessors assess the terms of compensation for citizens who have been wronged. Citizens should have the right to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada as they do from any other court in Canada. Even the War Measures Act contains the right to begin at the county court level and continue through to the Supreme Court. This Bill should offer no less. If it does, it will appear to be stronger in some sections than the War Measures Act itself.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, this is the second time I have had the pleasure of standing up at second reading of Bill C-77 to present arguments and a speech. By way of clarification, on the afternoon of November 2 Bill C-76 went through the House like a white tornado and Bill C-77 immediately followed. At that time I was the only one in the House prepared to speak on Bill C-77. No one from the Liberal Party was available and the Minister, who obviously did not think the Bill would come forward on November 2, was out of town on government business I believe. Therefore, with all-Party agreement we have introduced the Bill all over again. I am, therefore, today presenting largely the same speech I presented on November 2, which speech I did not have a chance to complete at that time.

I, along with the Liberal spokesperson, was surprised when I learned that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) would be introducing this Bill. My criticism is not in any way personal. It does not in any way reflect on the integrity, honour, or intelligence of our Minister of National Defence It is only that I believe, as I am sure my Party does, that a Bill of this importance and magnitude dealing to a great extent with civil liberties should come under the control of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn). The implementation of it should be under the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher). In other words, it should be primarily a civilian matter, although not exclusively. The Government has put the defence Minister up front with all other Ministers being secondary to him.

I would like to thank the Minister who, in his remarks this morning, responded to some of the remarks I made on November 2 in the abortive introduction of this Bill at second reading. He said that he is willing to consider amendments which would somehow protect the right to strike, on a national basis in particular, but also on a provincial basis. He is also willing to consider amendments which would sharpen the very vague definition of an international emergency in this Bill. Upon reading the Bill one wonders to what extent Canada would be involved in international problems of another country in addition to those of Canada. The Minister also mentioned that he would be prepared to reconsider curbing the limits of search and seizure.

These are important concessions on the Minister's part. However, I wish to state at the outset that there are many other parts of Bill C-77, the so-called Emergencies Act which replaces the War Measures Act, which we think are flawed and deserve a lot of intensive scrutiny at the committee level. The Minister said this morning that he believes as well that this Bill should be given very intensive and critical scrutiny at committee stage.

I hope that all Parties will offer their general views on Bill C-77 at second reading and that we will be in no hurry at committee stage but will be free to listen at all reasonable length to listen to the very best authorities in the country, as well as ordinary Canadians who were entrapped by the War Measures Act in October, 1970, and all other interested persons and organizations, in order that when we finish with Bill C-77 this House will have passed an Act of which we can all be proud and that we will have no reasonable fear can be misinterpreted or misapplied.

Let me say at the outset that New Democrats are determined that the War Measures Act should never be used again. That is why we are pleased that the Minister has brought forward a proposal to replace the War Measures Act. It has been a long time coming and I congratulate him for finally bringing this debate to the floor of the House of Commons.

His Bill is not perfect by any stretch of the imagination, as far as we in the New Democratic Party are concerned. I will use this opportunity to explain in detail my very deep concerns relating to Bill C-77.

First, I want to say that I hope the parliamentary process, particularly in committee, will be allowed to work. We have heard many nice words from the Government about the spirit of parliamentary reform. In truth, we have made some progress in this Parliament, thanks to the work of the committee led by the former Member for St. John's East, the present Lieutenant Governor of Newfoundland.

Now it is time for the parliamentary process to shine. We will need many hearings and a great deal of testimony from both expert witnesses and ordinary Canadians, as I mentioned a few moments ago. This is an issue which touches the very lives and liberties of every Canadian. It involves an issue that cuts to the very heart of the Canadian consciousness. Is there anyone in this House who was not in some way touched by the events of October, 1970?

I recall, Madam Speaker, that I entered a by-election campaign only a few months after the October crisis. There was still a lot of very deep concern in my part of the country in the spring of 1971 with regard to the invocation of the dreaded War Measures Act by the Trudeau government.

Who could not be affected by the profoundly un-Canadian sight of Canadian troops in the streets to suppress the domestic troubles of their fellow citizens? That is why I am concerned with the paramountcy of the Minister of National Defence as opposed to the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General. Certainly not all, but most conceivable uses for this Act, when passed, would be of a civilian nature. Heaven help us if we ever go to war again. It would very possibly be the last war mankind would ever fight. Although I hope it never happens, we may at some time in the future have to deal with civilian unrest in the country during which our laws and the order of government would be severely tested. I still maintain that the Criminal Code, the police forces, the courts, the Crown prosecutors, defence lawyers, Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General should all be primarily involved in Clauses 1 and 2 of the Bill. Clauses 3 and 4 inevitably would lead to the involvement of the Department of National Defence.

I do not want to reopen old wounds. Instead, I hope this Bill as amended will complete the healing process. Together with the evolution of our Canadian Constitution, I hope that the replacement of the War Measures Act will close one chapter in our history and usher in a new era where the rights and freedoms of all Canadians are honoured and respected at all times and in all circumstances.

The roots of the War Measures Act are deep. It goes back much further than 1970. The original Act was born in August, 1914, when the First World War broke out. The government of the day found that it had virtually no laws to deal with the situation, so it rushed through the War Measures Act. It was modelled on foreign legislation and received little debate. It had virtually no consideration. In those days, what England did we more or less automatically followed. In effect, it gave the government a blank cheque. Parliament and the people of Canada surrendered all their rights.

The War Measures Act allowed censorship, arbitrary arrest, travel restrictions and government control of trade and property. There were no rights untouched. In effect, it provided for an authoritarian government to replace a democratic government. Perhaps we should not be surprised by the problems this caused later on. It was a recipe for disaster from the outset. The process was so poor, and there was so little thought, that a bad law was perhaps unavoidable.

Let us not repeat this fatal error. We need full debate and we must hear many views. We should deliberate in an air of calm reason. There is no emergency at this time. We have lots of time to consider what we are setting in place for future generations. It is the future about which we must be concerned, for if the War Measures Act shows us one thing it is that people suffer for past mistakes.

Following the Russian Revolution suspected dissidents were interned in Canada because of the extraordinary powers in the War Measures Act. The Communist Party was outlawed. Even Jehovah's Witnesses were suspect. The political and religious freedoms that we are bound to uphold in this place were denied to Canadians.

It is very serious when a democracy resorts to authoritarian methods in order to fight an authoritarian enemy or potential enemy. I know all Parties would agree that we cannot destroy our own democratic way of life or in any way diminish the democracy we have established in this country in our fight against subversion, insurrection or any other kind of threat to the national order. It is not easy to define law and regulations within those parameters, but it is something this Bill must do before it becomes law. It is the responsibility of the committee and the Minister to ensure that we achieve that balance between order and freedom and democracy.

During the Second World War, thousands of Canadians of Japanese origin were interned. Racism raised its ugly head. The bitter legacy of this tragic episode still haunts the government today, and Japanese Canadians are still waiting for redress and justice.

As I have already mentioned, many were arrested without warrants and held without bail in the October crisis of 1970. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) will remember that well because I believe he was Minister of Justice at the time. Many other Members will recall that sorry episode.

I know that New Democrats remember it well. We have our own reasons. The public approved of the measure and Parliament favoured the proclamation by a vote of 190 to 16. The 16 were ridiculed at the time, but they stood firm and history has vindicated them. That is one reason that the memory of Tommy Douglas is held in such high esteem throughout the country.

Later, of course, successive Liberal governments recognized their error and tried to reform the War Measures Act. However, nothing ever came of this in the House. That is why it is galling to listen to Liberal Members criticize this Bill. They were in government for 14 years after 1970 and did nothing to correct this problem.

One effort to at least examine the problem came from the Task Force on Canadian Unity. It recommended that the government should have to seek parliamentary approval within a specified time for extraordinary powers. It also recommended that the government state the reasons for its actions and the duration of the emergency powers in its proclamation.

The task force further recommended that provincial powers and individual rights be safeguarded to various degrees, depending on whether the nation was at war or peace. I am happy to see the bones of some of those recommendations in the Minister's proposals. We will try to improve upon them in our committee deliberations.

Of course, we will have help. I do not pretend to have all the answers in this debate. I do not think anyone has all the answers. I hope that experts from such groups as the Canadian Bar Association, Canadian Civil Liberties Association and others will give us their suggestions. I would strongly advise that some of those Canadians who suffered from the excesses of the War Measures Act come before our committee as well. I want to know if they would feel any safer with this proposed law on the books. If this Bill would not prevent such disastrous mistakes from happening again, then it is not worth considering.

We should also look forward to hearing from the Minister in committee. It will be interesting to know what thinking went into this Bill. For instance, the McDonald Commission did not believe that the Government needed any additional emergency powers in peace time. What has changed since then? The Mississauga train derailment required mass evacuation, but that was carried out without resorting to the War Measures Act. Why does the Government need such powers now? Obviously these are questions that will require a great deal of intensive examination of both the Minister and his officials as well as other interested witnesses.

I have other specific concerns about this Bill which I want to put on the record now. The part of the Bill dealing with public welfare emergencies speaks of an emergency as "a breakdown in the flow of essential goods, services or resources". This seems to have very serious implications for the right to strike. A recent Supreme Court decision stated that the right to strike is not protected by the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Therefore, the Minister's assurance about this Bill, being subject to the Charter, is of no comfort to the working people. However, this morning the Minister alluded to an undertaking he would make to look into this specific issue once again at the committee stage.

Another recent example shows that this power may not be necessary, and it is the recent rail strike. While it was an unfortunate incident, it illustrates the point that I am making this morning. During that strike the Government brought forward legislation that returned the rail workers to their jobs. The Government was not prevented from acting quickly and it did not use the War Measures Act. Why, then, does it seek new special powers in peace time?

In response to the Government's back-to-work legislation, there were protests on Parliament Hill and elsewhere. Peaceful protest is the right of those affected. They had the right to register their displeasure, but under this Bill such a process could have been forbidden. Does the Government need such powers? Should it have them?

I do not want to argue the point, but I believe we could add the three or four minutes taken by the Hon. Member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn) when he presented his report. However, if you want to call it one o'clock, that is fine with me.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure the Hon. Member would want to continue, as he has quite some time left, once we resume debate this afternoon.

WOMEN

FREE TRADE—FULL INTEGRATION OF WOMEN IN LABOUR MARKET

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, the history of claims and struggles of women in Canada shows they simply cannot rely on the free play of market forces to gain their fair place in the country's economic life. Indeed the Royal Commission on Equality in Employment—The Abella Commission—did make it crystal-clear: "If we do not act positively to remove barriers, we wait indefinitely for them to be removed".

In other words, women's equality still depends on interventions which will change the rules of the game in their favour. How then can anyone imagine that in the context of the free trade agreement Canadian employers will readily agree to implement programs for pay equity, justification for which happens to be provided under Charter section 11? How can anyone believe that companies will refrain from pointing to costs and the need to compete with American companies as an excuse to refuse to acknowledge the equivalence of women's work?

Nobody is being fooled, Mr. Speaker. As drafted, the Mulroney-Reagan Canada-U.S. agreement is one more obstacle to the full integration of women in the labour market, an additional obstacle they can very well do without.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REMEMBRANCE OF PAST AND PRESENT SERVICES

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I was given a pink rose, symbolic of peace. It culminated an emotional week for me which involved two memorial church services and six parades to cenotaphs. It provided me with the opportunity of spending time with war veterans and Legionnaires who gave so much for their country and who continue to give so much to fellow veterans and to their communities.

Everywhere I went I was touched by the enormous respect veterans have for the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) and the sensitivity his Department has for the concerns of veterans.

I was also delighted to learn that a new 56-bed hospital care centre is being planned for the greater Ottawa area to which veterans would have a special and primary access.

Our veterans, these men and women, have given so much to our country. They know what freedom is about. They know what it is to sacrifice. As we continue our session of Parliament, let it always be a priority for us to remember them.

HUMAN RIGHTS

CHILE—PROTECTION URGED FOR PRESIDENT OF ASSOCIATION OF THE RELATIVES OF THE DISAPPEARED

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I know all Canadians who care for human rights will join me in welcoming to Ottawa Mrs. Sola Sierra, President of Chile's Association of the Relatives of the Disappeared.

The practice of enforced disappearance is one of the most odious and repugnant violations of the rights of the person that history records, but it continues today not only under military dictatorships such as that of Pinochet in Chile but also in some supposedly democratic countries whose Governments, through weakness, complicity or connivance, allow kidnappers and murderers free reign.

Mrs. Sierra's own husband is numbered among the disappeared in Chile. By leading the Association of the Relatives of the Disappeared, and by coming to Canada to publicize the brutality of repression in Chile, she exposes herself to grave personal danger on her return.

Canada should not only salute and, as far as practical, protect this courageous woman, but it should also ensure that our voice and influence are used in every available international forum to work for the stamping out of the hideous practice of enforced disappearance.

TAX REFORM

CORPORATE TAXES—COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs I want to highlight three key recommendations regarding tax reform affecting the corporate sector which were tabled today. We recommend an alternative minimum margin tax on all major banks, trust companies and life insurers, commencing January 1, 1988. Such a tax will generate approximately $650 million a year in federal revenue.

We also recommend the implementation of a broadly based alternative tax on major real estate companies.

Finally, the use of after-tax financing devices such as preferred shares has been a source of significant loss of tax revenues. Therefore, we recommend that the attack on these after-tax financing instruments be broadened to prevent erosion of taxes.

In closing, I want to commend the chairman of our committee for his leadership in this difficult task, the research staff, and Members from all three Parties for their constructive contributions to this comprehensive report which contains 81 recommendations within its 319 pages.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I cannot take credit for this poem which is the kind of poem that has been pouring in from across the country. It was written by S. A. Gannon of Belleville, Ontario. It reads:

DON'T LET BRIAN MUL-RUIN-EY CANADA.

Tears moisten my eyes, and roll unchecked down my cheeks,
My heart's filled with sorrow, my emotions are raw,
I just can't believe today what I saw.
Our Maple Leaf flag was being lowered from masts, Gone is the symbol of freedom, from our Country's future and past.
"Look", I told my children, "they're folding it up and putting it away,
I want you boys to remember seeing it—one last time today.
Canada as we know it, will no longer be,
The home of the true, the strong and the free.
This is how Mulroney's Government Free Trade deal
Stole our country from you my children—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: It is always interesting to quote poetry in the Chamber, but perhaps there are some limits on it. The Hon. Member will know why I interrupted her.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF ONTARIO PREMIER

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, the opponents of the free trade pact, led by the wishy-washy Premier of Ontario, should stop and think clearly about Canada's role in the real world. These individuals are ignoring the spirit which built Canada and, as a result, have contradicted the very values which have made Canada a great nation.

The Premier boasts that Ontario can compete as a world-class province on the global economic stage. Yet, in the same breath, he preaches protectionism for Ontario's industries. The people are not fooled by this double-talk.

This past week I went door to door in my riding asking my constituents their feelings and thoughts on the free trade pact.

The reaction was astonishing, for my constituents overwhelmingly contradicted the opinion polls to date, with very positive and enthusiastic support for the agreement.

Time and time again I was told by individuals from every age group how this pact would ensure a more secure future for their families. One constituent put the free tade pact in perspective when he said: "I went through the depression of the Thirties which was caused by trade barriers, and I do not want my grandchildren to experience the same". The Premier should take note.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS—CALL FOR INTRODUCTIONO OF MINIMUM CORPORATE TAX

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has often said that he is willing to look at anything members of the Finance Committee suggest on tax reform. It now appears that that is anything but a minimum corporate tax on banks and other financial institutions. Apparently the Minister develops a temporary blindness when considering recommendations like that.

But what else should we have expected from a Finance Minister who, in the name of tax reform, allows 60,000 profitable corporations to pay no tax? He seems content with a tax system that ensures a bank teller will pay more in taxes than the bank he or she works for.

How in heaven's name can this Minister and the Government claim that fairness and equity have been restored to the tax system when thousands of profitable corporations continue to avoid paying a single cent in tax? A minimum corporate tax is needed now to ensure that large profitable banks, insurance and trust companies pay their fair share of the tax load.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—NATIONAL ISSUE

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): As a member of the standing committee studying the free trade agreement, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say we have spent over 160 hours listening to Canadian concerns. We will hear 20 more witnesses in the next few days, and soon we will be travelling across Canada for two weeks.

At the moment there are far too many emotional rhetorical statements being made portraying this issue as the PC Government against the rest of Canada. It is not. It is a national issue involving all Canadians. Quoting the latest poll results, 48 per cent of Liberals polled support free trade, while 41 per cent of New Democrats and 46 per cent of union members questioned favoured the concept of free trade.

Rather than arguing on partisan or ideological grounds is it not time we put on our Canadian hats in favour of maintaining Canadian independence, job creation, and a strong economy, which this economic agreement strives to accomplish?

To quote Mr. Donald Macdonald: "A move to greater protectionism is something that would only reduce the standard of living of Canadians, with very limited additional industrial benefit. The best prospect for improving the standard of living of Canadians is to become competitive internationally".

HOUSING

PLEA FOR THE HOMELESS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put on the record a letter that I received from the Windsor Coalition For Development. It is signed by Mr. Gerry Campeau. It reads:

> Congratulations on your forceful stand in helping the homeless, by your recent news release—
> How long will it be before the government realizes there is a serious problem with homelessness?
> As a non-profit housing agency, working basically with the poor, we are not being heard.
> I would like to see more M.P.'s speak out, as you have done.

The International Year of Shelter for the Homeless is coming to an end. The Government has yet to demonstrate its commitment to the plight of the homeless. In other words, it has done nothing yet.

I repeat the question of Mr. Campeau, "How long will it be before the government realizes there is a serious problem with homelessness?"

This Government knows that the homeless have no voice. That is why the Government is ignoring the problem. I call upon all Members of Parliament on both sides of the House to speak on behalf of the homeless. I urge them to pressure the Government into quick action.

THE LIBERALS AND THE SOCIALISTS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, politics makes strange bedfellows, at least temporarily. The Liberal Leader is campaigning with the socialist Leader against free trade. The Liberal Party's Quebec Lieutenant, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) turns his back on his long-standing solidarity with Bourassa, Macdonald, the Employers' Council, the bankers, and those who provide the jobs, to embrace the socialist lieutenant for the economy, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy)—a bizarre alliance with the Canadian Left, with compromises so astonishing that one wonders where their basic philosophy has gone!

The socialists paid by Bob White want to deprive Canadians of the advantages of free trade, amply proven since 1965 in the riding of Oshawa: $33 billion worth of auto parts and automobiles exported, 840,000 jobs and less than 3 percent unemployment.

The Liberals are so spineless that the country may well be split in two on the free trade issue. The Liberals didn't understand this country in 1982, and they still don't in 1987.

EFFECTS OF UNITED STATES-CANADA SALMON TREATY

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, when speaking in Seattle at the Pacific Northwest Conference on the Canada-U.S. Trade Deal, Canada's Trade Minister stated that the Pacific Salmon Commission is "the kind of partnership" that "has already brought considerable benefits to the Pacific northwest".

The commission allocates the salmon resource under the conditions of the U.S.-Canada Salmon Treaty. But both sports and commercial fishermen in British Columbia can question those "considerable benefits". Time and again their catch allocations have been reduced in the name of the treaty.

In my own riding, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans opened a fishery at the mouth of the San Juan River during the prime spawning period, thus sacrificing conservation measures. The reason given was that Canada needed to raise its catch in the San Juan area to discourage American claims for a greater share of future stocks.

The Yukon transboundary river was excluded from the 1985 treaty. Now the Americans have postponed November negotiations until next spring, further delaying any settlement.

The Americans take 90 per cent of the allowed salmon catch, but more than half of the American catch originates in Canadian waters. American stalling tactics are preventing growth in the Yukon's commercial fishery.

If the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) is using this as an example of what we can expect from the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal, it is no wonder Canadians are apprehensive.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF MANITOBA PREMIER

Mr. George Minaker (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, several weeks ago a United States Congressman introduced legislation to curb the flow of Canadian electricity exports to the United States. Although the Bill is not considered threatening at this time, it is another example of the harassment and protectionist measures that the U.S. is prepared to use against Canada without the free trade agreement. The agreement assures a secure market for Canadian energy free from tariff and non-tariff barriers.

Meanwhile, Premier Pawley not only goes cap in hand to the U.S. to try to sell Manitoba Hydro energy, he also pays a Washington lobbyist thousands of dollars to see that Manitoba Hydro receives fair access to U.S. markets. Yet Mr. Pawley will not support the free trade deal which will make his job easier. With such retromingent attitudes how can he possibly be representing the interests of Manitobans?

He has caved in to Bob White and Shirley Carr and is selling Manitoba's interests down the drain.

Manitobans can compete in the U.S. market and they want that opportunity. Manitobans are not afraid. Why isn't Premier Pawley standing up for the interests of Manitobans as he promised in the last election?

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF SASKATCHEWAN NDP LEADER

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, the free trade issue deserves more than rhetorical accolades or condemnation. It deserves honest, thought-provoking debate. If one Premier supports free trade and another does not, the Canadian public has the right to see these two perspectives challenged. Those in favour of free trade are willing to debate. Why are those against free trade hiding?

Provincial Premiers who oppose free trade do not have the political courage to debate the issue publicly. Saskatchewan Premier Grant Devine recently challenged Pawley, Ghiz, and Peterson to a debate on CBC's "Morningside" or CTV's "Question Period". Each in turn declined the challenge.

At his recent coronation Roy Romanow, Leader of the Saskatchewan New Democratic Party, challenged Premier Devine to a free trade debate. When the challenge was immediately accepted, Romanow changed his mind. He states that he is not ready and that he must seek more information. The real reason was in the November 15 issue of The Toronto Star where the recently crowned Leader of the Saskatchewan

New Democrats said that although he has so far opposed the Canada-U.S. free trade deal, he is ready to consider changing his mind. What a flip-flop!

Unfortunately for free trade the exchange of ideas and the serious debate that this important binational agreement deserves are not forthcoming. The Premiers of Manitoba, Ontario, and Prince Edward Island, as well as the Leader of the NDP in Saskatchewan, refuse to practise what they preach. They refuse to debate free trade with those Premiers who support the agreement, choosing instead to debate only with those who share their somewhat biased views.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I should like to pose a question to the Prime Minister. This weekend we saw another example of the efforts by the Prime Minister and the Government to pit one region against another. From a Prime Minister who used to talk about national reconciliation, we now have a Prime Minister talking about regional warfare.

I want to raise a question with the Prime Minister on a statement he made in his speech when he said "various studies indicate free trade can do the same for the West as it does for Ontario".

Last week, the deputy ambassador for trade, Mr. Ritchie, said before the Commons committee that there are no studies. The Government has not done any studies to show that. Why is it that the Prime Minister continues to make these kinds of claims which he cannot back up? We want to know where the studies are to which he keeps referring that prove the point that cannot be proven. Why is the Prime Minister continuing to make these false charges when he knows that there is not one whit of evidence to back those claims?

In other words, Mr. Prime Minister, where's the beef?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, reports have been written in this regard by the Macdonald Royal Commission on Canada's Economic Prospects and the Economic Council. The Fraser Institute has dealt with the matter of regional disparities. The C. D. Howe Institute has looked at it very carefully.

I just want to tell my hon. friend that quite contrary to the suggestions he has made in regard to "regional warfare", to use his term, we have insisted from the beginning that the free trade agreement will benefit all regions of Canada including western Canada, Newfoundland, and the others.

In Alberta I said: "I am delighted with the strength of this great industrial heartland that has emerged in Ontario, and I know that Ontarians are Canadians first. They want the same prosperity they have enjoyed to be enjoyed by other regions of Canada and promoted by other resources in Canada".

Surely that is an indication of national leadership which benefits all regions.

FINAL TEXT OF AGREEMENT—TREATMENT OF TRANSPORTATION SERVICES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. He says that he has various studies. It would be very fortunate if he shared them with the gentleman negotiating the trade agreement who said before the committee that there were no such studies to prove any of these points. It would seem to me that if the Prime Minister has access to such documents, he might want to share them with members of the team negotiating the agreement.

We want to raise a further point with the Prime Minister. It concerns the fact that we are now in the sixth week since the agreement was initialled and we have yet to see any final text of what is being proposed for Canadians. Yet, on October 29, the U.S. administration shared with the transportation industry a new annex dealing with transportation. It proposes that the United States industry will have full rights of ownership, control, investment and establishment of all forms of transportation services.

As the Prime Minister will know, transportation is one of the largest employers in western Canada. This will totally destroy the trucking industry of western Canada. Why is it that the Prime Minister is allowing a new negotiation to take place on an annex dealing with transportation that will wipe out the trucking industry of western Canada? Is that the way he is helping the West develop, by wiping out one of its major industries?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend has just contradicted the premise of his first question. He is now suggesting that this trade agreement will inflame regional hatreds and differences, totally destroying and wiping out the trucking industry in western Canada. It is an absolute inflammatory falsehood and my hon. friend knows it.

The trade agreement is designed to benefit all regions of Canada and consideration has been given to this by very eminent think tanks of various kinds across the country. They conclude almost unanimously that there will be a net increase in jobs in all sectors of the country.

In regard to concerns my hon. friend has about the text, surely there is nothing unreasonable in taking some time to translate into a legal text an important trade document. It is our expectation that the final text—

An Hon. Member: Come on.

Mr. Mulroney: What is strange about that? What is wrong with that? The final text could have in the neighbourhood of 20 chapters divided into seven parts, and together with annexes and tariff considerations it would run to 1,000 pages. Surely we will want to examine that very carefully before we sign off on it and submit it to my hon. friend for his consideration.

CONTENT OF FINAL TEXT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the answer we are trying to get from the Prime Minister is simple. We do not have a final text in front of us. We are told by the trade negotiators that it will have somewhere between 20 and 25 new annexes attached to it. The United States administration is sharing with American industries major new provisions, not legal drafting but major new provisions that will affect trucking, the Maritimes, and the garment industry. Those negotiations are going on but we cannot find out from the Prime Minister or the Government any information or details as to what is being added, subtracted, or changed in those negotiations.

I ask the Prime Minister once again, where are the studies he cites to show jobs and growth? Where are the studies to show what kind of changes will take place in these industries? Where is the final text of this agreement? Canadians want to know what they are buying into before they buy the pig in a poke that this Prime Minister is selling as part of his PTL Club rendezvous across the country.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take responsibility for a lot of things but PTL is not one of them.

The Hon. Member says that we do not have a final text in front of us. That is right. If that is the case, why is he so vehemently opposed to something that he has not seen?

Mr. Axworthy: Why are you in favour of it?

Mr. Mulroney: It may turn out that the Hon. Member from Winnipeg will be up here claiming paternity for the free trade agreement and saying that it is the best thing since bottled beer, forgive the expression.

In point of fact, the agreement was deposited in the House of Commons immediately after it was negotiated. The next day, the "elements of the Agreement" were filed. They are now being translated as they should be into a legal text. As soon as that legal text is available, as it should be very soon, this too will be filed and my hon. friend can take cognizance of it and give us his opinion on it. Perhaps he will change his mind and find it of value to the interests of western Canada, Ontario, Quebec, the Maritimes, and indeed good for all of Canada.

FINANCE COMMITTEE'S REPORT

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Today the Finance Committee tabled its report on tax reform, and what a report! It is a real vote of non-confidence in the Government. It consists of 355 pages, with 12 pages of recommendations.

• (1425)

Is the Minister prepared to go back to the drawing-board, rewrite his tax reform proposals which have been found by Canadians to be unfair, anti-family, anti-film development, anti-research and development, anti-farmer, and bring into this House real tax reform which will be accepted as a base for development in every region of the country?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): First, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the committee, of which the Hon. Member is a prominent member, for the very good and hard work it has done. As well I would like to thank those who have contributed to the consultation in the committee hearings on the tax reform White Paper.

Contrary to what the Hon. Member has just said, I have taken the committee's report as a vote of confidence. The committee has accepted the broad thrust of tax reform which proposes to get tax rates down and to broaden the tax base. The general impact of tax reform has been well received. Eight out of 10 Canadians and nine out of 10 senior citizens will benefit from tax reform. All of this is well intact as a result of the committee hearings.

I must say that I do not accept the premise of the Hon. Member's question nor do I think does the committee itself in the report that it has put forward today.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ACCEPT COMMITTEE'S RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the committee heard 174 witnesses and received over 500 briefs. All these people who appeared before the committee explained how unfair the tax reform proposals were to their specific sectors. The movie industry, for instance, and the mining industry that will have to give up its flow-through shares. There is also regional development and research and development.

Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Finance whether he is prepared to, at least, consider essential parts of this report which concern our financial institutions, the movie industry, and expenditures for self-employed workers, and which propose changes in family benefits. Is the Minister prepared to set aside his initial proposal and accept the majority of the recommendations that have been made, as well as those in the two minority reports appended to the committee's report?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the Hon. Member would draw attention to the minority reports. I think the minority reports themselves were somewhat contradictory within themselves, so I do not think that those particular reports stand up to much scrutiny.

The Hon. Member said that those who have come forward have had some criticisms of the tax reform White Paper. Certainly I would accept that individuals and groups have some particular concerns about this or that proposal. But invariably a majority of the people who came before the committee, certainly concerning the representations that I made, supported the direction of tax reform. They think that tax reform is going in the right direction and believe that the conclusions we drew in the tax reform White Paper are correct. Some people had a little change they wanted made which is the substance of some of the conclusions of the committee.

I want to take the time to study the recommendations of the committee, and my conclusions and the conclusions of the Government will be known when we table the Ways and Means motion some time before the end of this year.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF MINIMUM CORPORATE TAX

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. The Minister just referred to the committee's report talking about a little change in tax reform compared to what the Government was promising to do. The little change to which the Minister referred is a proposal by the committee that the Government commit itself to a minimum tax on the profits of banks, insurance companies, trust companies and the real estate industry.

Is the Government now prepared to accept this all-Party recommendation for a minimum corporate tax on companies in these sectors? The people of Canada will see the Government of Canada getting some $400 million in additional revenue which should be paid if we are going to have tax fairness in Canada.

• (1430)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Leader of the New Democratic Party would agree with me when I say that that is a proposal for very fundamental change. Certainly I would want to study that very carefully before commenting on it. I will go further than that and say that before any such change is made it should be the subject of consultation and discussion with the private sector and those affected.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has had consultations since the 1984 election. He knows that according to the so-called reforms which his Government produced there will be 60,000 profitable Canadian companies which will not have to pay a penny in income tax. That is tax reform Conservative style.

Will the Minister not agree that the time for consultation has passed and that companies which make profits ought to pay their share of taxes like anyone else? Will he now make a commitment to bring in a minimum corporate tax? Yes or no?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the point that I was making is that the committee has proposed a fundamental change. This proposal has not been made previously and before I would support such a change I would want to make sure that the people who are affected have a full opportunity to make their views known to the Government.

PROFITABLE CANADIAN CORPORATIONS—REQUEST FOR MINIMUM TAX GUARANTEE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Government intends to table a Bill in the House of Commons before Christmas. Since senior citizens and the average family pay a lot of taxes and many companies do not pay a cent, could the Minister guarantee he will table, before Christmas, a proposal for a mininum income tax for all profitable Canadian companies?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I have answered the basic thrust of that question. I am trying to think whether there is anything different contained in it than was in the first two questions he put forward today. I do not think there is anything new.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—PREPARATION OF FINAL TEXT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. His trade deal with the United States was signed at the beginning of October. In the document setting out the elements of the agreement at that time it said very clearly that we would have the final text within three weeks. Six weeks have gone by and we still do not have the final text.

Why is there so much delay? What is the problem? Is it because while these secret additional negotiations are going on the Government is ready to cave in and give up some more vital Canadian interests?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, Canada is not caving in on anything nor have we caved in on anything to date. Negotiations are not going on at the present time. What is going on is the drafting of a legal document. The Prime Minister mentioned the extent of that document earlier. We want to ensure that that document is correct and accurate and does reflect the agreement that we signed with the United States. That is what is going on. When it is done it will be tabled in this House and produced for the Canadian people.

[Translation]

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, if there was a final agreement at the beginning of October, why is it so hard to draft the final text?

DISTRIBUTION OF FILMS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Prime Minister. If the Government is not again caving in on our vital interests, where is the Government's policy on film distribution? Is the Government prepared to table this Bill right away? If not, this proves the Government is again caving in and giving up our vital interests.

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows the policy of the Government. We intend to introduce legislation which will meet the objectives which my colleague, the Minister of Communications, has set out on film distribution to make it clear that we have a distinct market here and that Canadian companies will participate in the benefits of that market.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS—MINIMUM TAX PROPOSAL

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and also deals with the question of a minimum tax on banks and financial institutions which was proposed by the Finance Committee. The committee came to that conclusion because it found that the White Paper proposals of the Minister would not ensure that banks and financial institutions paid their fair share of taxes.

Is the Minister prepared to ensure, through his Ways and Means Motion in December, that the banks and financial institutions will pay their fair share, or does his talk about further consultations simply mean that he is an apologist for the deplorable situation of banks paying next to nothing in terms of tax on their profits?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think it is quite clear that the White Paper on tax reform set out a broad range of ways to ensure that companies, be they financial institutions or other institutions, and high income individuals who are not paying their fair share of tax, would pay their fair share of tax. That was a thrust of the reform which we stand by.

In response to the Hon. Member's question on a particular proposal in the report, as I have said in response to previous questions, I want to ensure that I give the benefit of a full and comprehensive study to what I think the Hon. Member would agree is a broad report with some comprehensive implications. Rather than make comments on the first day the report is out, I would like to take the time to study it.

COMMITTEE FINDINGS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the committee has done its work. The question is whether the Minister is now prepared to do his work in evaluating the committee's work and incorporating it into the Ways and Means Motion in December.

Is the Minister satisfied with the tax system as it relates to the banks which, in 1983, resulted in a teller working for the Royal Bank paying more in taxes than did the entire bank which had profits of over $300 million? Is the Minister satisfied with the situation which the committee found in which banks and financial institutions pay from 1 to 6 per cent of their profits in tax and no more? If the Minister is not satisfied, is he prepared to act in December on the proposals of the committee for a minimum tax?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are clearly not satisfied with that situation. That is why, in a broad range of ways, we have attacked that specific problem in the White Paper. Presumably the Hon. Member is speaking on behalf of the committee which has found a different way of attacking the same problem. I said in my previous response to the Hon. Member that I want to take the time to review this and ensure that I study it properly.

I underscore the response that I gave to his colleague, the Member for Laval-des-Rapides, that I do not want to proceed in a precipitate way with this or other proposals of this nature which are fundamentally different from the tax reform paper without having the opportunity to consult and take into account the views of those who would be affected before making a decision.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF ALBERTA ASSOCIATE MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. Speaker: I would like to draw the attention of Members to the presence in the gallery of the Hon. Shirley Cripps, MLA for Drayton Valley, and Associate Minister of Agriculture for the Province of Alberta.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE—CROWN CORPORATION'S INVOLVEMENT

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In September, 1985, after prolonged debate in the House, the Prime Minister promised, as part of Canada's contribution to the prevention of nuclear war, that the Canadian Government would not become involved in any star wars project or any research leading to star wars.

Yet on Friday last we learned that a Crown corporation, an agent of the federal Government, the Canadian Commercial Corporation, has acted as the prime contractor for a $306,000 U.S. value contract with the Pentagon toward star wars research.

Are we in or out? What are the guidelines with respect to Crown corporations doing work on star wars? Is it yes or no?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member knows the answer to the question. The Canadian Commercial Corporation is required by law, which I assume was passed by a Liberal Government, and certainly before the introduction of the Strategic Defence Initiative, to act as an agent for Canadian companies that are involved in contracts with the United States Department of Defence. That is the exclusive and total nature of the role of the Canadian Commercial Corporation in this transaction. It is mandated by law, a law that predated the Strategic Defence Initiative.

It is entirely consistent with the policy of this Government that there will be no government-to-government involvement in the Strategic Defence Initiative.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, if that is the case, will the Minister give his word to the House that he will amend the law? He cannot have it both ways. He cannot wash his hands of these kinds of deals and then allow backdoor participation. Either a Crown corporation which is an agent of the federal Government will become involved in a peripheral or direct way, or it will not. It seems clear to me that it is in violation of the Prime Minister's commitment to the House that the Government of Canada, which I believe includes Crown corporations, should not be involved in star wars projects.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think this is the first time I have ever heard a Liberal speak against a Crown corporation. I thought they were in favour of them as a matter of blind trust.

Mr. Axworthy: Be serious.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I will be serious about the matter because it is serious.

Mr. Broadbent: I would like to hear you speak in favour of one.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I speak in favour of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation regularly, as one who never believes in reciprocity.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The policy with respect to the Strategic Defence Initiative is very clear. There will be no government-to-government involvement. There is no government-to-government involvement.

It was also made very clear in the decision by the Government of Canada at the time of the announcement of the U.S. program that we did not intend to use the fact that research or other activities that had previously been allowed between Canadian companies and American companies would be eliminated or prohibited simply because the Strategic Defence Initiative process was in place. We are dealing with an arrangement that predates the Strategic Defence Initiative, that uses the Canadian Commercial Corporation in its agency role exclusively, which is among the roles for which it was established.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON FILM DISTRIBUTION POLICY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I would like him to comment on news reports in The Globe and Mail this morning which state quite clearly that changes in film distribution policy will be put on hold in order to protect the free trade talks with the United States and the agreement that has been reached. Has the Government in fact decided to delay this important legislation to help film distribution here, which will be of such benefit to Canadian movie producers and the movie industry in this country?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not normally like to comment on a speculative story in The Globe and Mail—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is against the rules.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): My colleague tells me it is against the rules anyway. I take his guidance on this, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister cannot be pressed to comment on a story in any newspaper. However, the Hon. Minister cannot be stopped, if he wishes to do so.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I do not know whether I should take that as encouragement or not. I think I responded to that question. The Government has stated its policy and we are committed to that.

Mr. Langdon: In fact the previous question did not deal with this issue of delay.

FILM DISTRIBUTION LEGISLATION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister is handling this issue, can he make a commitment to the House, one which was contradicted by people from the Ministry of Communications, that in fact there is to be no weakening of this film distribution legislation as a result of the trade deal?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me say again, which is very similar to what my colleague, the Minister of Communications, has said, that we intend to create a separate market for film distributors in Canada and to provide the opportunity for Canadian film distributors to take full advantage of that market.

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY

ACCESS BY WOMEN TO JOB RE-ENTRY PROGRAMS

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. There have been numerous programs in Saskatoon operated by the YWCA and Immigrant Women of Saskatchewan, under the job re-entry program of the Canadian Jobs Strategy. These programs are aimed specifically at women's training.

The first programs were very beneficial and they wish to continue them. Will the Minister assure the House that the Government will continue to orient further programs and funding in such a way that women will have access to training and upgrading, and enhance their opportunity to join the labour force?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. I am sure the Opposition will agree with me that women must be an important part of the labour market. The Canadian Jobs Strategy has provided many places for women in different parts of this program. I can assure my hon. friend that we will continue to deal with this question of increasing and upgrading the skills of women in the labour force. Furthermore, some two weeks ago I requested the provinces to open more apprenticeship places to women in terms of the availability of those opportunities because we believe they are too restricted for women. In other words, there are not enough places and we must improve that situation.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT FOR WOMEN

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In a recent speech, the Premier of Ontario referred to an Ontario study which said that women in manufacturing industries would be particularly hard hit by the Canada-U.S. trade agreement, and that over 100,000 Ontario women could lose their jobs as a result of that deal. Since that analysis can be applied to other provinces as well, when will the Prime Minister start taking these concerns seriously? If he insists on proceeding with this bad deal, will he at least put on the table a special readjustment and retraining program for these many Canadians who will lose their jobs?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend refers to an Ontario study. That document was widely panned and stands as a very disgraceful contribution to the debate. It was misleading. It was self serving, and it did not in any way withstand the scrutiny that one ought to bring to bear on documents submitted by public officials.

It is quite clear that Premier Peterson is as ashamed of that document as he is ashamed of comments made by Minister Quinter in regard to this debate, neither of which in any way contribute to illuminating the national debate in this regard.

In terms of the very legitimate concerns raised by my hon. friend in regard to employment opportunities for women, I am happy to point out to him that since this Government was sworn in it has created 1.019 million new jobs, over 55 per cent of which have gone to women. That is the kind of contribution we are trying to improve upon both here and across the country.

A number of studies, including one by Katie Macmillan for the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women, conclude that free trade will offer women higher paying jobs with better employment prospects throughout the country. Surely that is a national objective to which my hon. friend can subscribe.

CONTENT OF AGREEMENT—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, once again the Prime Minister has not answered the question. If he has better studies on job loss and job gains, let him make them public and put them before us.

Most experts will agree that the free trade agreement will hurt Canada more than it will the United States, that it will hurt employees more than it will hurt employers. In these circumstances, why did the Prime Minister not insist, as many experts suggested, that a readjustment and retraining program be written right into the agreement so that Canadians would have assurance of new jobs if their present jobs were done away with? Why did he not do that?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have already indicated that, to the extent they are required, we and the provinces are ready to commit very important sums to assist workers in all areas to the extent this involves. We have already indicated that the studies available indicate net increases in just about every sector of employment and the economy. I think that is a very hopeful sign.

With regard to comments made, I would point out that on Saturday there was a report that Premier Peterson had a meeting with several American Congressmen, including the Chairman of the Small Business Committee of the House of Representatives, John Lafalce. He is very interested in free trade. He said, and I quote:

> As I read it so far, Canada came out ahead. There is a general feeling within the United States that the free trade agreement might be more favourable to Canada than to the United States.

I think Mr. Lafalce has made an important statement and my hon. friend, who often likes to quote the Americans, might want to quote that one.

THE ADMINISTRATION

GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS—REPORTED REQUEST FOR CONTRIBUTION TO P.C. CANADA FUND

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Canadians now speak about a sleaze fatigue factor in Canadian politics resulting from three years of kickbacks, influence peddling and conflicts of interest. In light of allegations from Jean Marie Chastenay that in 1985 he was asked to make a $2,500 contribution to the P.C. Canada Fund in return for two surveying contracts from the Department of Transport, will the Prime Minister tell us what he has done to ensure that this kind of toll-gating will never happen again in Canadian politics, and that the bidding system for government contracts will be open and honest, and that those who receive those contracts will not be subject to this kind of economic blackmail?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, first of all, the Hon. Member ought to know that an investigation is now under way and that the results bring out the truth about this matter. I may also remind the Hon. Member that most, if not all, advertising contracts were awarded on a very competitive basis and that there was never any compromise on the quality, price and delivery date agreed upon.

REQUEST FOR NEW ETHICS PACKAGE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Going back to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, I want to say this incident happened two years ago. We have to ask why it has taken so long to get any information.

Last February the Prime Minister promised he was going to introduce a new ethics package. Why has that not been tabled in the House of Commons so that the Canadian people will see that the Government is determined to clean up its act? How much longer are we going to have to put up with this kind of dishonesty in government contracts?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious charge that has been made. There is an allegation apparently made by a citizen. The unsubstantiated allegation has now been transformed into an accusation and a hanging by my hon. friend who clearly does not believe in any of the fundamentals of democracy, including fair and free trial inquiry. I think if the New Democratic Party wants to contribute to an ethics package, it can begin by not violating the fundamental ethic of Canadian democracy, which is the presumption of innocence.

REPORTED EXISTENCE OF TAPE RECORDED CONVERSATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns the same issue, that is, the toll-gating in the riding of Trois-Rivières where the campaign manager for Trois-Rivières is alleged to have pressured a Mr. Jean Marie Chastenay, a land surveyor, to give a 5 per cent commission of $2,500 in exchange for receiving a $50,000 government contract.

Given that Mr. Chastenay claims to have recorded on tape his conversation with the Tory campaign manager in question and passed it on to a Member of Parliament, and subsequently received a phone call from the Prime Minister's office, can the Prime Minister tell the House if his office received this tape, and if so, when? And what specific action did he or his office take in regard to the tape that was sent to his office?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that there is in fact an investigation under way by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police into this particular incident. As a result, there is nothing further I can say at this time until the investigation has been completed.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I was not asking about the investigation. I was asking about the tape.

I would like to ask a supplementary question.

AWARDING OF GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS—ALLEGED TOLL-GATING SYSTEM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, Pierre O'Neill, who writes for Le Devoir, mentioned in an article published on May 24, 1986, a system under which in return for Government contracts, five per cent was paid to the Conservative Party. Considering the Brodilaf case in Drummondville, the Wajax investigation, the Péloquin file, the Mirabel lands, Vincent Massey Place, the Met Life building, and of course Oerlikon and the Museum of Civilization, is the Prime Minister prepared to inform the House what he intends to do—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I think I should point out, first of all, that Question Period is not a place—and we have been through this before—where, even by the use of a preamble, a lot of charges are made at large. Second, there may be a problem in the question asked by the Hon. Member with respect to whether or not the actual question has anything to do with any ministerial responsibility. As I heard it, it seemed to refer to the P.C. Canada Fund. My task as Speaker is to be careful with respect to what is or what is not in order.

If the Hon. Member is asking the Government whether it has anything further to say with respect to that particular matter, and I take it that is the general thrust of his question, that would be a question which the Government can decide whether or not it wishes to answer. However, the Hon. Solicitor General has already made a comment in that regard.

Taking the question at its best, and most in order as I have put it, I invite the Government to respond if it wishes to do so.

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I have already advised, the matter is under investigation by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Mr. Boudria: That is not what I asked.

Mr. Kelleher: If there is a tape involved, I am sure that will be fully investigated. Surely to goodness the Hon. Member knows well that neither I, nor any other Member of this Government, should get involved in any way with an RCMP investigation. Next they will be accusing us of political interference. They cannot have it both ways. We have to stay out of it until their investigation has been completed.

Mr. Boudria: That is not what I asked.

RAILWAYS

PRAIRIE GRAIN TRANSPORTATION SYSTEM

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister who promised two weeks ago to look into the shortcomings of the prairie grain transportation system. The Minister will know that the Canadian National Railways system does not have the rolling stock required to keep Thunder Bay and the Seaway adequately supplied. Ships lie idly in our harbour and grain handlers are not called back to work. When does the Government expect to recognize its responsibility to ensure that CNR has the rolling stock it needs to move grain at capacity times? When are orders going to be placed for more hopper cars?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that even considering that last year Canadians exported a record amount of grain, grain movement to date is moving well ahead of the record that was set last year. Just to give the Hon. Member some figures, if he is interested, Canadian exports are up 23.2 per cent and farm deliveries are up over 60 per cent.

What the Hon. Member says is true—we would like to do better and we are doing better. Both CN and CP have made arrangements to lease cars and they are going to be adding to their fleet so we can move additional gain. However, the Hon. Member should bear in mind that we are moving grain at a record clip over last year which was in itself a record.

COSTS OF WINTER-RAIL MOVEMENT

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board who has just responded. He knows that farmers on the Prairies, particularly in Manitoba, are anxious that this will lead to winter-rail movement and that will mean higher costs which the farmers are afraid they will have to bear. Can the Minister assure us and them that the costs of winter-rail movement which will result from the inadequacies of the railways are not going to be carried by the producers, particularly his fellow Manitoba farmers?

• (1500)

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, we will cross that bridge when we come to it. I would ask the Hon. Member to bear in mind that this Government has very much supported the Canadian Wheat Board in its sales efforts. By the way, it is a very good Crown corporation. It has been doing a very good job.

We support other agencies that export grain and oilseeds on behalf of Canadian producers regardless of whether they are in western Canada or other parts of the country. Surely the Hon. Member should recognize that it is an over-all system. He should know, for instance, that the past two weekends were the first weekends in the current crop year that the elevator companies have unloaded cars in his own area which he represents. That is a part of the system that deserves to be congratulated as well. Surely he should get up to congratulate everybody connected with the industry to let people know that we are moving grain in record amounts.

Mr. Speaker: I want to advise Hon. Members that this will be the last question in Question Period.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

ELIGIBILITY FOR WELFARE AND UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. It is about the Government's quest to reduce the deficit at the expense of our social safety net. The latest episode in this area is a recent statement by the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. He said that those who draw welfare and unemployment insurance benefits will have to work to continue receiving their benefits.

Is it now the policy of the Government that people will have to work to get their welfare cheques, that they will have to work to get their unemployment insurance benefits, especially when we know that people who are drawing unemployment insurance are drawing it because they cannot find jobs? Is this the new policy of the Government?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I should think that the chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration has every right and authority to make the statements he likes, but it would be quite inappropriate for the Minister to comment on the views expressed by the chairman or the members of the committee.

The committee makes recommendations and the Government takes whatever action is deemed necessary. Once again, that comes within the committee's mandate.

QUERY WHETHER PERSONS WILL NEED A JOB AND WORK IN ORDER TO CONTINUE TO RECEIVE BENEFITS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, if I ask this question—and I note that the Minister did not contradict the statements of the Hon. Member for LaSalle who is the committee chairman, and we know it was not a coincidence that the Hon. Member for LaSalle was imposed as new committee chairman by the committee's Conservative majority—

I want to ask the Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Would the Hon. Member put his question, please?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I am getting to it. I want to ask the Minister if that is Government policy. Let him clearly say so. Again I ask him: Henceforth will people receiving social welfare or unemployment insurance benefits have to get a job and work if they want to continue to receive such benefits? Is that Government policy? Yes or no?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my colleague has asked the question and he knows the answer. It is not Government policy.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Beatty that Bill C-77, an Act to authorize the taking of special temporary measures to ensure safety and security during national emergencies and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at 1 p.m. the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) had the floor.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, just before we adjourned for lunch I was dealing with that part of Bill C-77 which I suggest to you may have some adverse impact on the right to strike, particularly strikes of a national nature or even of a provincial-wide nature. However, the Minister of National Defence in his remarks this morning said that he was, and I am paraphrasing him now, prepared to take a look at that part of the proposed legislation to see if it could be further clarified so that there would be no question that national strikes, peaceful strikes or legal strikes would in any way come under the constraints of this proposed legislation.

Probably the most contentious part of this Bill is that which deals with public order emergencies. This is the type of situation that gave rise to the use of the War Measures Act in October of 1970. This part takes its definition of a threat from the Canadian Security Intelligence Services Act. This fact alone should make us very cautious, because of the difficulties already encountered with CSIS in determining what is subversion and what is legitimate dissent. This was one thing, of course, that perpetually bothered or confused the RCM Police when it was in charge of intelligence or counter-intelligence, the internal security of this country, over many years.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that there is a very clear and definitive difference between subversion, which is clearly an illegal act, and legitimate dissent, which should not only be tolerated in a democracy but, indeed, should be encouraged. Again, the Minister assured us that the definitions of subversion and legitimate dissent would be clarified or at least explained more fully in committee. However, that does not obviate the necessity to call expert witnesses to help all members of the committee, indeed the ministerial officials as well, in clarifying those two terms.

It has been very difficult over the years to come to a clear and understandable interpretation of what is subversion and what is legitimate dissent in a democracy. For example, the CSIS Act cites activities, and I quote, "in support of the threat or use of acts of serious violence against persons or property for the purpose of achieving a political objective within Canada or a foreign state".

I would remind the Minister that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) recently met with Oliver Tambo of the African National Congress. The ANC has not renounced violence in its fight against apartheid. I hope the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State did not promise to support the ANC, otherwise they might have to have themselves arrested. I said that in my speech of two or three weeks ago during the so-called abortive attempt to get Bill C-77 introduced at second reading. I did not do so in a frivolous way. If one looks at this proposed legislation, it is possible for lawyers, or people with legal training, to interpret the proposed Bill in that way. That is, of course, obviously ridiculous.

Others on the government benches have had contact with the Reagan administration which supports the efforts of the Contras in Nicaragua where they have used violence. President Reagan spoke of their cause in this very Chamber. Should that be illegal in Canada? Again, that is not a frivolous statement because within the parameters of this proposed legislation it is quite possible that someone could argue that point.

A public order emergency also gives Cabinet the right to prohibit public assembly. But how could a Canadian avail himself of the right to peacefully protest the declaration of the emergency powers? His right to disagree with Government policy would be severely limited. Again, that would be inhibiting or diminishing a person's right to dissent, in a country such as ours which is a democracy and which prides itself in being a liberal democracy.

Similarly, a legitimate process against the emergency declaration could be suppressed and no one would find out. The Government could censor the media or simply forbid travel to the troubled area. How could anyone find out if the declaration of an emergency was justified, if no one was allowed in or out of the area? How could parliamentarians rally public support against an unjust proclamation if the public were being kept in the dark? I suggest that those are all legitimate questions and concerns that all of us on both sides of the House should have at this time in the proceedings with respect to Bill C-77.

I also have concerns about the clause dealing with international emergencies. The definition of an international emergency is extremely broad. The Bill speaks of a threat to "any other country in which the political, economic or security interests of Canada or any of its allies are involved". That pretty well covers the global waterfront.

Our allies include the United States and western Europe, which have very extensive trade interests around the world. In fact, it is difficult to think of any country on earth where Canada, the United States, or western Europe does not have some type of political or economic interest.

At the present time there is a perfect example in the Persian Gulf. The United States is escorting tankers through one of the most militarily dangerous stretches of water in the world. Other European nations are also involved because they have an economic interest in oil from that region. What would happen if another Stark incident blew up into a major confrontation? Canada could become involved under the terms of this legislation.

There would probably be a great debate as to whether Canada's vital interests were involved, but the Government would have the clear right to mobilize first and answer those questions later. I would not want to wake up one morning to read that the Government had declared an international emergency and have to wait for the matter to come before Parliament at some future date.

One of the reasons I would not be comfortable in that situation is because of the other extraordinary powers that the Government could assume during a perceived international emergency. For example, Cabinet could authorize search and seizure without reference to the courts. Why does it need to bypass the justice system? Are the courts not to be trusted in an emergency? Have judges in this country ever shown themselves to be less than vigilant in their devotion to national security? It is their job to balance the interests and rights of the state and those of the individuals. Yet the Government wants the right to enter into any home without reference to the courts at any level.

Finally, Parliament must consider the total discretion granted to Cabinet under the terms of the Emergencies Act. It is difficult to see any difference between this clause and the current War Measures Act. I wonder why some powers could not be set out in the Bill. Canada has been in two world wars. Does the Government not have any idea of the powers it needs to mobilize the Armed Forces? Could they not be added to the powers listed in the other clauses of the Bill?

The clause on parliamentary supervision also needs to be debated. This is the real heart of the Bill where all the restraints on Cabinet authority will be tested. It is good that the Government must refer the matter to Parliament, set out the powers that it has assumed, and justify its actions by stating the nature of the emergency.

As I look across the House and see the huge government majority, I have to ask myself whether any majority government would see its powers checked by its own members. Somehow I doubt it. It did not happen when the Liberals were in power in October of 1970. We have just seen a Bill on refugees passed by the Conservative majority which many Canadians feel may violate their rights. Yet the Bill passed overwhelmingly. One has to wonder if such governments are to be trusted with the absolute powers set out in the Bill we are presently debating.

Senate reform is also an issue in this Bill. The Conservative Government likes to rant and rave about the irresponsible Liberal Senators holding up a Bill to grant a monopoly to multinational drug companies. The Prime Minister blusters about abolishing the Senate, while he appoints his friends to that place. Here is the very same Conservative Government conferring new powers on that other place, the Senate.

This Bill proposes that a government declaration would have to be supported by both Houses. A body that is responsible to no one could block the actions of an elected Government. Similarly and more importantly, the Senate would have to concur in any motion of this House to revoke powers of the Government. I look forward to hearing constitutional advice on this matter. I also look forward to hearing the Government argue the case for giving more power to its political enemies in the most irresponsible chamber in existence today in the democratic world. In fact, I cannot conceive of any other democracy, as we practice democracy in the world today, that would tolerate an institution such as the Senate here in Canada. It is not elected and virtually is not responsible directly to any constituency in the country. Senators are appointed for life or until age 75.

I also have some difficulty with the provisions of the Bill that govern the parliamentary review committee. This body would be sworn to secrecy and review secret orders and regulations from the Cabinet. If getting the powers of a majority Government revoked in open Parliament is difficult, then getting them rolled back in a closed committee would be next to impossible. How could any parliamentarian raise public outcry against an unjust regulation if he or she were gagged by an oath of secrecy? That provision will have to be examined very closely.

If the provisions for scrutiny are doubtful, then the suggestions for compensation are virtually impossible. The Minister is setting himself up as judge and jury. He would set up all the rules governing compensation for damages. He could limit the Government's liability because he would have the right to put an absolute ceiling on all claims. He would not have to answer to anyone. The Bill does not even guarantee the right to appeal. It only states that the Minister may appoint an assessor. Even if the assessor were to overturn the decision of the Minister, he or she could not exceed the limits set by Cabinet. The person seeking damages would have no recourse to the courts if he or she were unsatisfied. This obviously must change.

We only have to look at the dispute between the Government and the Japanese Canadian community to see where trouble could arise and no doubt would arise unless this clause of the Bill were deleted or rewritten. We owe the Japanese Canadians something. I am talking not only about an apology or compensation; we owe them more than that. We must show those Canadians who have suffered that we have learned from the abuses of the past. We must show them our determination that such abuses will never happen again in this country. We must restore their faith in this country and its democratic, political, and judicial processes.

We can show Canadians that this country has grown and developed into a more fair, just, and honest society, and they can take heart in that growth. I would urge all Canadians to help us construct a new and better law to replace the War Measures Act. I would urge all Members of this House to listen to Canadians, hear their concerns, and put their ideas into this Bill.

My fear is that Bill C-77 if unamended or unchanged will simply and perhaps irrevocably enshrine already existing Orders in Council processes in statute law. I suggest that somehow the Government feels that that transition would cleanse it or make it respectable. When a Government takes arbitrary or indeed authoritarian measures, regardless of what the issue may be, that Government must be extremely careful that it does not do substantive or irreparable damage to the democratic processes in that country. Of course, we are here today discussing our own country, Canada.

As I stated this morning before the luncheon adjournment, we in this country have a tremendous responsibility that, in the struggle against obvious legal subversion, we do not in fact subvert the democratic processes along the way. That is a very delicate and difficult balance. Therefore, this Bill must be amended to make certain that we do not in any way impinge upon those basic freedoms that we cherish so dearly in this country, and which all Parties support.

I feel that it will take more discussion, and more intensive investigation and questioning of witnesses before this proposed legislation comes up to those minimum standards of maintaining the democratic processes in Canada during times of stress, during times of emergency, and even during times of war, although I concede that in an outright war, even in a democracy such as ours, there may from time to time have to be certain measures taken to reduce, diminish, or at least bring into focus and control some of those democratic processes. However, certainly in peacetime in regard to internal unrest or internal problems, I do not see any reason that any Government of any political stripe should have to lessen or diminish the democratic rights of Canadians.

In conclusion, once again I want to list the basic concerns which my fellow New Democrats and I have in respect of the Bill. I want to make very clear that we intend to put up many speakers at second reading so that we will have an opportunity to put across various points of view, all of which are related to the Bill.

My personal concerns are the following ones. Does public welfare emergency infringe on the right to strike? This morning the Minister said that he would look into that more thoroughly at committee stage.

In terms of public welfare emergency and of CSIS's definition of a threat, there is a difficulty in discerning subversion from dissent. For example, raising funds for the ANC or the Contras could be illegal.

How could people protest public order proclamations if the right to assembly were denied or suspended?

How could the press report on abuses if it were restricted by travel constraints in the Bill and/or its news items were censored, which is provided for in Bill C-77?

The international emergency definition is very broad. Where do allies like the United States not have interests? Where do our European allies not have interests? Where do we not have interests? We virtually have economic and, at times, political interests world-wide.

International emergency removes search and seizure authority from the courts. I think this is extremely important. Why do we not establish faith in our judicial system which is separate from the political or independent of the political? I cannot think of a more objective and non-political route to go than to allow the right of search and seizure to remain with the courts or to entrench that right with the courts, with the judicial system. I have much more faith in the judicial system than I have in perhaps some future Minister of National Defence, Prime Minister, or Minister of Justice of whatever political stripe who may wish to abuse his rights, privileges, and powers. I have far more faith in the judicial system than I have in individual cabinet Ministers if they were tempted in any way to usurp power beyond the powers already provided for in the Bill.

War emergency, for example, is another problem because it gives total discretion to Cabinet. It is only after the fact that Parliament itself, the legislative branch of the House, would be apprised of the details.

I am worried about the new powers being conferred on the Senate. These days we talk about Senate reform, but we do not know which way Senate reform will go. In fact—and I am speaking personally here, not on behalf of my Party—I abhor even the thought, or I shudder at the thought of an elected Senate. I honestly do.

People tell me every day in my own constituency—and no doubt Hon. Members hear it in their constituencies—that we are already over governed. We have municipal Governments, regional Governments, provincial Governments, and a federal Government. Now we have First Ministers' Conferences with tremendous clout and influence to bring to bear regional concerns on the Government in Ottawa, and we want an elected Senate. Obviously, if we have an elected Senate, it will demand a lot of powers that we have in this Chamber. The Government may complain today that it takes so long to pass Bills, for example, the pharmaceuticals Bill. Does anyone in the Chamber have any idea how long it would take to get a Bill like that passed if we had an elected Senate?

All one has to do is cast one's eyes to the South, to the United States. They envy our system up here, particularly the administration in Washington, because relatively speaking we get things accomplished much faster in our system than they do in the United States. However, we have people talking about an elected Senate. If there were a choice, obviously I would advocate the abolition of the other place. Quite frankly, I do not think it does any good on balance. If we must have a Senate, for Heaven's sake leave it the way it is.

Mr. Crofton: I thought we were talking about Bill C-77.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I am talking about Bill C-77. Bill C-77 gives the Senate equal powers with the House of Commons, and it is not directly accountable to any constituency in the country. That is what is so deplorable about it. Maybe this is sort of a backhanded way of pushing us toward an elected Senate. That is the point I was getting at. If that is the intent, then Heaven help us if we have one more elected branch of our legislative process.

Finally, how could Members of Parliament protest orders if they were gagged by secrecy oaths taken upon entering or accepting a position on the committee?

That is all I have to say for the time being at second reading. There will be many other speakers from the New Democratic Party who will enter the debate at this stage. We look forward to pushing forth some substantive changes at the committee hearings. I hope the committee hearings will not be rushed. I hope we will proceed with them slowly, in a reasonable way, and over a lengthy period of time so that everyone who wishes has a right to be heard.

Mr. Hopkins: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) made a statement at the beginning of his speech which was inaccurate. I am sure he would not want to leave it on the record as such.

He said that on November 2 there was no Liberal in the House of Commons to speak on this Bill when it came up on that date. If that were the case, then why did the Hon. Member for Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) appear as the first speaker on Bill C-77?

The Hon. Member for Brant knows full well that the procedures on that day were such that they were erased from the record. He knows that bad procedure was used on the particular day.

The reason for this is that debate on the previous finance Bill which was before the House dropped because NDP Members who were intending to debate it all day failed to put up a speaker. All of a sudden we were faced with the next order of business in the House, Bill C-76. The Hon. Member for Brant could not have been here then because his name does not appear. Nobody's name appears for Bill C-76 because no one was expecting it to come up.

However, by common courtesy in the House, it is normal that official critics or spokesmen for political Parties are given some warning so that they can get into the House from other duties to speak.

In all fairness, the proceedings with regard to Bill C-77 on that day were erased from the record. In fact, on November 4, the following appeared in Votes and Proceedings:

> By unanimous consent, it was ordered,—That, notwithstanding any Standing Order of this House, the proceedings on Bill C-77 an Act to authorize the taking of special temporary measures to ensure safety and security during national emergencies and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, which took place in the House on Monday, November 2, 1987, be nullified, and that, the entry on the Order Paper and Notices under "Government Bills (Commons)" be changed to indicate that the motion for second reading and reference to a legislative committee of the Bill had not been duly moved, seconded and proposed.

As a result Bill C-77 was listed again as an order of business on the Order Paper for November 5.

Finally, I was in my place in the House when the Hon. Member rose to speak that day. The only reason he was recognized ahead of me was that the Hon. Member for Vanier had spoken first. He knows that. I am sure he would not want to leave that inaccuracy on the record, saying that there was no one in the House or that he was the only one in the House when the Bill was introduced that day.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, I thank my friend for raising this point of order. I apologize to him. I did not see him in his place, but I want to clarify one point, if I may. It relates to the same point of order.

The Hon. Member refers to the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) as having made an intervention with respect to Bill C-77. We all know what happened. The Hon. Member stood up and asked a question. He said, "What's the Bill about?" If that is an intervention, an intelligent intervention on a Bill, then I would like to know what a real intervention is in debate. That is why the Hon. Member who just spoke did not have a chance to get up. His Whip pre-empted him by asking, "What's it all about?" Had he not got up, then the Hon. Member would have been recognized and he could have spoken. That is the explanation.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate.

Mr. Hopkins: Madam Speaker, on the same point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member will understand that that is not really a point of order. The Hon. Member has had a chance to give his version of the events that day. The Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) gave his version. Now that the Bill is before the House to be debated today, we should proceed with the debate.

Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine).

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Madam Speaker, I am pleased today to speak on this emergency measure legislation which is to replace the War Measures Act. With this Bill Parliament will have the authority to phase in preventive and preparatory measures to deal with potential national disasters.

The War Weasures Act is considered too sweeping and too drastic a legislation for peace time crisis or emergency situations. Quite extensive powers were thereby granted to the governor in council which could proclaim the existence of an emergency situation, then make such orders or regulations which it deemed necessary or advisable for the security, defence, peace, order, as well as welfare of Canada.

The purpose of the new bill which the Government has introduced is to eliminate the need to react to national emergencies by adopting hastily drawn special legislation which are excessive or improperly drafted because of the commotion and confusion surrounding any crisis.

The Emergency Act will apply only to national emergencies. A national emergency is defined as an urgent and critical situation of a temporary nature that imperils the well-being of Canada as a whole or that is of such proportions or nature as to exceed the capacity or authority of a province to deal with it and thus can be effectively dealt with only by Parliament in the exercise of the powers conferred on it by the Constitution.

Madam Speaker, what are the major areas of application of this legislation? I will mention four. First, public welfare emergencies, including natural catastrophies and serious accidents which affect the welfare of the people, which exceed the capacity or authority of the provinces to deal with them. Public order emergencies: those are emergencies which arise from threats to the security of Canada and that are so serious as to be national emergencies which exceed the capacity or authority of any province to deal with them. International emergencies: they are emergencies involving Canada which arise from acts of intimidation or coercion or the real or imminent use of serious force or violence and that directly threaten the sovereignty, security or territorial integrity of Canada or any of its allies. War emergencies: they are armed conflicts, real or imminent, involving Canada or any of its allies.

The legislation contains several safeguards which make it an obligation for the Government to answer to Parliament for its use of these emergency powers. Parliament shall be convened within seven sitting days after a declaration of emergency is issued. It shall be given a concise explanation of the reasons for issuing the declaration; and opportunity to debate the question and to adopt or reject a motion for confirmation of a declaration of emergency; further details on specific measures the Government intends to take to deal with the situation; and a opportunity to revoke the declaration of emergency, with its orders and regulations.

Where the emergency situation applies to only one province, the federal Government may not declare a state of emergency until the province concerned has indicated it is unable to cope with the situation. The Government has an obligation to consult the province before declaring a state of emergency.

Madam Speaker, we have heard representations by the Liberal Opposition and socialist Members. Members of the Liberal Opposition should make it clear to Canadians that our Bill is quite different from the 1970 legislation which the Liberals used to give themselves the authority to enter our homes without an invitation.

The House will recall that the legislation was particularly hard on Quebecers. This legislation opened people's purses and broke into their homes and private lives. This legislation was abused by the very same people who today are against changes, by the people who were there in 1970, some of whom are still here today which is, unfortunate for this country.

Our Liberal colleagues are opposed to replacing the War Measures Act they themselves used with unfortunate results, creating divisions between Canadians. Madam Speaker, that seems to be a specialty of Hon. Members opposite. Liberals seem to specialize in trying to split Canada in two. We saw what they did in 1970. We saw what they did in 1982, in Victoria, and today, we see this shameful association with the socialists, again to divide this country, and I am thinking of the free trade issue which is so important to Canadians. One wonders whether they really want a country, a Canada from sea to sea, or prefer a country that is split in two.

The Liberals wonder whether, despite the unprecedented guarantees offered in this new legislation, it might not be subject to abuse. Where were their scruples when, for instance, they were about to apply the War Measures Act in 1970? The Liberals are trying to amalgamate the existing legislation with the new Bill. They would have us believe that Part IV of the Emergencies Act is practically identical to the War Measures Act. They have also said that since the Charter applies to the War Measures Act, there is really no difference between the two texts. They even believe that the temptation to resort to the Emergencies Act will be greater since according to them, this legislation gives the impression of providing more guarantees than the War Measures Act and would be easier to invoke.

Such statements are totally unfounded. Emergencies Act Part IV has to do with, and I quote:

"War or other armed conflict, real or imminent".

The War Measures Act has to do with, and I quote:

"War, invasion or insurrection, real or apprehended".

Pursuant to the new measure, enforcement of the law may require justification and may be contested. Under the existing legislation the declaration of a state of emergency is contingent upon, and I quote:

"Conclusive evidence that war, invasion or insurrection, real or apprehended, exists".

According to the Government proposal, decrees and regulations will be subject to parliamentary scrutiny, and Parliament will be free to reconsider and cancel a declaration of a state of war. There is no such provision in the existing legislation.

The Emergencies Act will be subject to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms; not so for the War Measures Act. The provisions of the new legislation will be limited to 360 days; there is no such time limit on the implementation of the existing law.

The new measure includes provisions concerning compensation for victims of damage or injury resulting from the implementation of the Emergencies Act. There is no such provision in the existing legislation. Finally, before the new act is implemented, the provinces will be consulted and their views will have to be endorsed by Parliament, which is also a first. As to the remarks made by the socialists—so very few of them are in the House today to debate this legislation—they seem to have been inspired by the presence of the Moscow Circus in our region. Madam Speaker, it is probably a matter of affinity between socialism and Moscow's system. Indeed who can ask why they support everything likely to weaken Canada and criticize what strengthens our country?

They have the same attitude about disarmament. They are for it on the condition that it be carried out unilaterally by the Western countries. You rarely hear, for instance, the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) speak about what he thinks of the Warsaw Pact. However, you hear him speak about NATO, which is equivalent to speaking against the international credibility of Canada. On the other hand, strangely enough, their former External Affairs critic, who has been replaced, the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett), is for arming certain countries, not Canada of course, when such countries want to interfere in the affairs of other countries in a war like and aggressive fashion, and I am thinking about south Africa. Indeed, this is why the leader of the socialist Party replaced his former critic for External Affairs by someone a little less bellicose.

The NDP is agressive when it suits the purposes of the socialist system. They quite approve of having the pacifists in the West and the rockets in the East. This is also the position of the Hon. Member for Brant, Madam Speaker. This reminds me of the very ironic words of a famous socialist, the President of the French Republic. And what does the NDP say about the testing of our own defence system, about the Cruise missiles, for instance?

Having said all this, it is normal for them to oppose legislation which will provide better protection for the Canadian population in case of a serious national emergency? They should honestly recognize, as should our colleagues of the Official Opposition, that there is no cause for concern about the Emergencies Bill, quite the opposite!

This Bill provides a maximum of safeguards. In addition to being subject to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Canadian Bill of Rights and to being in compliance with the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Emergencies Act will be governed by other mechanisms to prevent abuses. All that we want, Madam Speaker, is that the arbitrary detentions which we witnessed in October 1970, especially in Quebec, a province about which the socialists know very little, a province which they have never understood and where they do not have and will never have any roots, will never happen again, and that is why this Bill should unite us instead of dividing us. The abrogation of the War Measures Act and the adoption of the Emergencies Act should mark a time of peace, in French, Le temps d'une paix, to use the words of an author from Charlevoix.

Madam Speaker, I hope that the members of the Opposition, including the socialists, will help us and stop trying to postpone passage of this Bill.

• (1540)

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, no one would question the right and necessity of a government in a democratic country to have the power, when there is a real threat to the welfare of the people and the democratic system, to deal with the problem through legislation.

I want to remind the Hon. Member that in October, 1970, the then Liberal Government invoked the War Measures Act and used its power under the provisions of that Act to put 250 Quebecers in jail because there was, supposedly, a threat to the Government of Quebec. They were held incommunicado. They were not permitted to consult with their lawyers. Eventually, after days or weeks, they were released. Not a single one of those individuals was ever charged, tried, or found guilty. It is obvious that the Government over-reacted at that time.

I am not an expert on Quebec, but I am told and have read that many of the people who were locked up at that time were nationalists but had not been supporters of independence for Quebec. Yet, to a large extent as a result of that very sad experience, they later became very active, some of them becoming leaders, in the independence movement in Quebec.

Is the Hon. Member saying that if this Bill, which changes the War Measures Act which we have had since World War I, is enacted the actions which the Liberal Government took in 1970 would not be permitted, that the rights of the citizens in Quebec or in any other province in a similar situation would be protected, that they would have the right which all Canadians should have of being in contact, almost immediately, with their lawyers, et cetera? Is that what the Member is saying? That is not the way we read this Bill and that is not what the Canadian Civil Liberties Association has said.

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: Madam Speaker, I am grateful to the socialist Member for Winnipeg-North (Mr. Orlikow) for this opportunity to illustrate once again the difference between this legislation and the one that was enacted by the Liberals in 1970, which made it possible for atrocities to be committed in 270 cases, which made it possible for the police under instructions from the Liberals here to enter the homes of Canadians, with no charges being laid later under that Act, as mentioned by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-North . . . No one was convicted, but it gave the Liberals an opportunity to enter the homes of Quebecers. The same Liberals who in 1982 ignored six million Canadians in Victoria when they had an agreement signed to which Quebec was not a party. They were the same people. I am very grateful to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-North for this opportunity to remind Canadians of the atrocities with which those Liberals were involved in the 1970's under a Liberal administration, the former Prime Minister's Government.

Our legislation is designed to prevent the repetition of such atrocities, and I would be very much surprised if the NDP Members were against our legislative process getting more democratic.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, I would like the Hon. Member to answer the question which I put to him a few moments ago. In his view would the passage of this Bill prohibit, or at least limit, the type of activities which took place in Quebec in 1970 or which took place with respect to Japanese Canadians in the 1940s?

The Member has mentioned again, as have many, the comments supposedly made by my colleague, the Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett), about South Africa. South Africa does not have a democratic system of society such as we and many other countries have. The great majority of people living in South Africa who are black do not have the right to vote and have very little right to carry on legitimate opposition to the apartheid laws administered there.

I am not saying for a moment that I advocate violence or armed insurrection. If there are not the changes that I hope all Members of the House would like to see, what other ways are there besides violence and armed conflict, which is one of the ways some of the groups opposing the present system in South Africa are using? It is easy to say that we are opposed to the use of violence and force, but what other methods exist except those if the kind of change we all believe should take place in South Africa is to be achieved?

Mr. Fontaine: Madam Speaker, I will then try to answer the two questions asked by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-North (Mr. Orlikow). His first question dealt with the purpose of this legislation. Indeed, the purpose of this legislation is to limit and prevent the abuse that led to the atrocities that were committed under the previous Liberal Government's legislation in 1970. And when the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-North talks about South Africa, he certainly has in mind the position taken by his colleague formaly responsible for External Affairs, the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett), who had proposed aggressive, armed intervention in South Africa, and in this respect credit must be given to the Socialists that their leader found such an attitude would not be supported by the electorate. He decided to muzzle his Member. I hope this will answer his question.

[English]

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, I want to make one comment with respect to violence and oppression. I want to remind the Hon. Member and others who question the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett), our former external affairs critic, that at the outset of World War II, when the Nazi hordes overran Holland, Belgium, France, Denmark, Norway and other countries, they took away liberty, freedom and democracy in countries where democracy flourished and the rule of law had been strong and vibrant. During that occupation formerly law-abiding citizens who were Members of Parliament and members of trade unions went underground. In their fight and struggle to restore democracy and gain liberty they had to resort to violence. That is what we are talking about. Sometimes there is no other way.

That is the situation facing blacks in South Africa today. As they see it, there is virtually no other way to gain freedom, equality and liberty. Let us not cast the first stone. Our European brothers and sisters did the same damn thing in World War II and I applaud them for it.

Mr. Fontaine: Madam Speaker, I would like to make a very brief comment. When I hear the Hon. Member for Brant, (Mr. Blackburn) comment my own interventions in this House, I feel like asking him whether he is a Member of Parliament in Canada or in South Africa, Europe or Guatemala. Does he represent Canadians in this House or did he receive his mandate from a socialist regime or from some other country?

As Members of Parliament, we should represent the interests of Canadians. What are the socialists doing? They refer to all sorts of countries. I understand that these countries have problems, but we have departments that take care of such matters, we have international organizations and we have an excellent reputation as defenders of world peace. What are the NDP Members think they are doing in this House when they speak for various socialist countries?

[English]

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Madam Speaker, I want to begin by calling on Members to assert some discipline in the debate. It is difficult enough to decide when the rights and liberties of our fellow Canadians should be taken away, which is the subject of this Bill, and when the Government should be given such extraordinary powers. In my opinion, to discuss events in other countries and to discuss history is a lack of respect for the subject before us, if I may say so.

The use of the War Measures Act in 1970 has been challenged. I was a member of the Party that introduced it, and subsequently a member of the Government that defended it. I defend it today.

However, I do not want to be distracted. I believe there is a lot to learn from history. We ought to be attempting to improve the Bill and provide a proper piece of legislation in this field. However, I regret very much the debate being used to rehash the use of the War Measures Act in 1970.

I want to make a point about that. Members of the Government and members of the New Democratic Party have taken the occasion to criticize the former Government for not repairing the defective War Measures Act during the time we were in office. What we have just witnessed shows at least one of the serious difficulties that the Government had in considering and scheduling a replacement for the War Measures Act. Time after time, past Parliaments used occasions like this to hammer the Government for something that happened in 1970, rather than to address any attempt which the Government might have made to have a modern, contemporary new War Measures Act or replacement for it. I believe that one thing the change of government has permitted is an Opposition which is cooler about emergencies and wants to look at this legislation being brought forward in cold blood, which is the way I propose to view it and the way our critic, the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins), has looked at it.

This debate should not be used as a vehicle for attacking the Government, attacking the Opposition or rewriting history. I am fed up with that type of debate. It is one of the features of past Parliaments that prevented the Government from dealing with the issue.

Our criticisms of the Bill are considerable and profound. In fact, I suggest that we would prefer the War Measures Act to this piece of legislation if it is not amended, as I will explain in a moment. However, we are not accusing the Government, as the Opposition was constantly accusing us when we were government, of wanting some special or emergency power to declare an emergency and suspend the rights and freedoms of Canadians at that moment. That was the atmosphere of past Parliaments when emergencies were discussed.

I recall being hammered day after day in the House to reveal to Members of Parliament where I, as Solicitor General, was building my civilian concentration camps and what budget allocation was being made to them. The absurd suggestions made by the Opposition in the past coloured every effort that could have been made by the Government to replace the War Measures Act. Now that we are about to see a replacement, I hope we will replace it without using this debate to try to hammer Mr. Trudeau, who does not deserve it, for bringing in the War Measures Act when some Members of Parliament feel it was not necessary.

I would like to say that I welcome an effort to introduce a properly nuanced War Measures Act replacement. I approve of the idea that there should be a set of circumstances defined in the law of graduated seriousness and dangerousness, each of which permits the Government to call upon a corresponding set of powers that are needed and will be used and can be used to counter the emergency situation.

What I would like to say about the Bill which has been introduced is that the descriptions of the series of circumstances are so vague and the powers that are correspondingly awarded to the Government are so large that the War Measures Act is better. At least, with the War Measures Act—and I do not mean to approve of it—the Government knows it is taking a very serious step when it invokes those powers.

The way emergencies are described in this Bill under all four categories—and I am not accusing the Government of anything—one could presently find a trigger for invoking the powers the Bill would give. I remember that when the Bill was introduced there was a postal strike. I am not accusing the Government of bringing in the Bill in order to declare an emergency in relation to the postal strike. But it could have done so because it fit right within the definition of the public welfare emergency, the lowest category of emergency definitions. Surely a draftsman can do better. Surely in committee we will do better.

On the other extreme, with respect to the war emergency, in the week the Government brought forward the Bill, the tiny country of Kuwait had asked our closest ally, the United States, to protect its vessels in an area of danger in the Persian Gulf where its vessels were being shot at. That fits the definition of the most serious emergency for which the largest powers, exactly equal to the powers under the War Measures Act, could have been arrogated by the Government to itself.

I do not stand here suggesting, as I know members of the Opposition in the old days would do, that this is our secret reason for bringing the legislation forward, that we want to declare an emergency. I am not suggesting that. What I am suggesting is that the Government could declare an emergency out of these serious events. Yes, a postal strike is serious. The shooting of a vessel carrying energy to North America is serious and prejudicial to us. However, surely the Government can do better.

I would like to suggest some particular ways in which the Government can do better and I would like to say that unless it does do better, I will vote for the War Measures Act. I want to take a moment to commend the Civil Liberties Association for the first rate brief it submitted to the Government. That organization should be our first witness when the committee is formed. I hope that association will come and flesh out and even add to the suggestions it made for amendment. I think it is worth quoting from the brief, and I read the following from page 2:

> —Bill C-77 contains vague definitions, overbroad powers, and inadequate safeguards. There is too little effort to link the powers it would create with the perils for which they are designed. There is too little effort to achieve proportionality between available powers and anticipated perils.

In a nutshell, that is what is wrong with this Bill. That is why the War Measures Act is better.

[Translation]

When I hear the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) defend not only the initiative of the Government in going forward with this Bill, but also the position of the Government by saying that they are satisfied and happy with this Bill in its present form, in spite of the questions raised by the Opposition, it gives me serious cause for concern. I hope that we will get a better reaction from the Minister and that the Government will eventually consider and accept suggestions not only to clarify the various emergencies, but also to define the powers of the Government in each case.

[English]

The Charter of Rights and Freedoms applies to this legislation. That is very welcome because when a former Conservative Government introduced the Bill of Rights under the leadership of John Diefenbaker, in those days it specifically decided that the War Measures Act would take priority over the Bill of Rights. Those were different times and one always has to welcome a change of heart in a political Party. The fact that the Conservatives recognize now that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms should apply and prevail over this new legislation is a welcome step. One has to add, though, that when the Charter of Rights and Freedoms was brought forward by the same Mr. Trudeau who was so criticized a moment ago by members of the Government, the Charter was specifically made to prevail over the War Measures Act. Therefore, already, in the bringing of the Charter and the patriation of the Constitution, we clearly did put an important safeguard on the War Measures Act.

When I say I prefer the War Measures Act to this Bill, I am taking account of the fact that the War Measures Act does not give the Government the unrestricted, unlimited power it once had under that very piece of legislation, but that it is constrained and limited and to be interpreted in the light of our Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I welcome the continuation of that safeguard by the Government.

I want to ask a big question that has not been addressed by the Minister in his statements about the Bill and of which I do not believe the Bill takes adequate account. We need to know in a very clear way what powers are available to deal with each of the emergencies that are already defined in this Bill. Under existing law—and I do not mean under existing emergency law, but under existing normal law—why should the Government ask us for special powers to do things in emergencies when, in many cases, those powers are there under ordinary existing law? If in committee when we study the Bill we discover that there is a perfectly good power in the existing law to achieve the necessary result, I think we ought to go for the existing power and hope that the Government, when an emergency arises, will not need to declare the legislation.

Let me give an example one way and an example the other way. I remember worrying during the Mississauga crisis that we might need the War Measures Act because there was a spill of dangerous and explosive chemicals and gases in a highly populated area in Toronto. If there had been an explosion, which, thank God, there was not, with the kind of legislation we have to protect the rights of Canadians at present, we might have needed to declare an emergency in order to give the Government special power to deal with the situation. There was no disaster, but if there had been an explosion and hundreds of people needed to be taken to the hospital and buildings needed to be conscripted to be used for that purpose, the Government under the present law could not just walk into someone's building and declare that that building is now a hospital. It would need to have a special emergency power to do so, unless the owner of the building here willing to go along. However, if the owner insisted upon his rights, and what we are talking about here are rights and the rule of law, that right would have to be respected and the Government would have to declare some kind of emergency power. In a case like that, the Government would have needed some special power.

Looking through the Bill, however, at a sample of things for which the Government is asking for special powers, I have to ask myself, why does it need a special power to do this? For example, in Clause 17(1)(a)(i) of the Bill the Government has asked for the power in a certain emergency situation to suspend the right of assembly. If Parliament is being asked to take away from our fellow Canadians the right of assembly, it needs a pretty good reason. I would like to hear from the Government why, in the kinds of circumstances it has described, it wants to suspend or otherwise constrain the right of assembly. But I want it to do it in a very special context, that is to say, what is wrong with the present police powers that exist for dealing with assemblies? The police have quite a lot of power to deal with an assembly when it gets dangerous, when it gets violent, if participants in it threaten to go out to cause property damage or injury to individuals, or if someone begins to plan at the assembly the commission of a serious crime.

Whatever happened to the riot Act? We have a riot Act in this country. There are all kinds of ways in which the Government can deal with assemblies. I would like to hear from the Minister when the time comes why the right to suspend an assembly in any circumstance, given the existing powers that the police have, should be awarded to the state in such circumstances.

Another provision under another kind of emergency is contained in Clause 28(1)(d). Under this clause the Government would have have the right to establish special inquiry procedures for conducting inquiries. As it happens I know a little, as do some other Members here, about the powers that the Government has under the Inquiries Act which are not triggered by an emergency. They are just plain, ordinary powers existing now under a regular statute of this Parliament in which the Government can set up an inquiry. What is wrong with that provision? What is wrong with the type of inquiry that the present law permits in circumstances in which the Government decides that it wants an inquiry? I would like the answer to that question.

One of the things that worries me is that in the present Inquiries Act if a finding is to be made against an individual then that individual has to be given a hearing. That is contained in Section 13 of the Inquiries Act. Does the Government want to suspend that very fundamental right in some circumstances, and in what circumstances? What other reasons and what other limitations does the Government want to place on the kinds of inquiries that can be held?

I use these two examples with respect to the inquiry and the assembly to illustrate that Parliament has already given a great deal of power to the police, to Ministers, government Departments and individuals under existing law. If one is going to have a proper discussion about this legislation, then we will need to know why extra powers are needed. We will have to know why the ones we have now are not good enough, as well as why the emergencies to which they apply are alleged to justify them. So the Government has a great deal of explaining to do. I think it also has a great deal of amending to do as well as tightening up of some of the definitions.

I want to turn to a couple of other definitions. By the way, emergency itself is not defined. It should be because it is a key concept in the legislation. It has been left undefined. What is limiting in the Bill on the present characterization of an emergency is that all one needs is that "in the opinion of the Governor in Council this emergency exists". I am a member of the Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. I am the Chairman of it, and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty), who has brought this legislation forward, is a former Chairman of that committee. He knows that when a statute contains the expression "of the opinion that" or "in the opinion of" it is a very hard decision to review. I think that something as key and critical as whether the emergency exists ought to be reviewed. It ought to be judiciously reviewed.

We have statutes, for example, that state, "when, in the opinion of the Minister, the carrot crop is ready for harvesting . . . " Our committee now, as well as at the time when the present Minister of National Defence was Chairman of it, has always taken the position that "in the opinion of" should be removed from a statute such as that because either the carrots are ready for harvest and are being harvested or they are not. If the Minister wants to take the power to determine that in his own opinion, it makes one wonder whether it will be applied when the carrots are ready for harvest—

Mr. Frith: Or when tuna is ready to go out in cans.

Mr. Kaplan: Or will it be used as a way of giving power to the Government when the actual circumstances do not justify them, when a court would find that the actual circumstances do not justify them? I think that the words "in the opinion of" or "of the opinion that" should be removed. I hope that the Government will be amenable to a suggestion that they be removed.

In the moment I have left I also want to turn to the compensation provision. There is a page or two on compensation, but compensation is not required. Compensation is allowed to be provided. I want to urge the Government to make the right to compensation a right and not simply something that the Government can allow and set up if it chooses to do so.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Are there questions or comments?

Mr. Orlikow: I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question, Madam Speaker. He knows, as I know, that on the use of the War Measures Act by the Liberal Government in 1970 there were very sharp divisions of opinion which cut across Party lines to a large extent. It is no secret that Frank Scott, a giant in the legal community in Canada in the last 50 years, one of the most prominent defenders of civil liberties, one of the strongest opponents of Premier Duplessis of Quebec and his authoritarian regime, supported the Liberal Government in its imposition of the War Measures Act. I ask the Member this. This Bill, at least in part, is an amendment of the War Measures Act which has been in place since World War I. The provisions of it were used to evacuate forcibly thousands of Japanese from British Columbia. It was used again in 1970 and, as I indicated a few moments ago, led to the incarceration for several days or several weeks of over 250 people who were not permitted to consult with their lawyers.

I understand it is a provision in the present Charter of Rights that every Canadian has the right to consult with his or her lawyer. The incarcerated were then released. Not one of them was ever charged, prosecuted, tried or found guilty of any violation. A former Minister in the Liberal Government, Mr. Marchand, talked at the time of thousands and thousands of supporters of the FLQ, about which we learned later there were never thousands—in fact there were probably never hundreds.

Given the fact that the Government used the War Measures Act at that time in ways in which I think most people now realize was a mistake, surely we have to discuss the history and how the War Measures Act was used on other occasions if we are going to discuss in a realistic way what should be in a Bill which, in at least part, replaces the War Measures Act.

Does the Hon. Member really think that we can discuss this Bill seriously and adequately in some kind of vacuum as if we had no history of ways and times in which the rights of many Canadians to express their views in speech or in writing were in fact violated?

Mr. Kaplan: No, of course I do not. It is only a question of what is made of history. It is important to make use of history to be sure that past shortcomings of the legislation are covered in the drafts that are before us. Where the law was found to be defective, where rights were compromised, they might not have been with more careful, more detailed legislation, and that we learn from that. Certainly, that is true.

What I found in the exchange that took place between two members of the former Opposition, one in the NDP and one in the Conservative Party, was that Mr. Trudeau was hammered and an attempt was made to identify the Liberal Party as the bad guys who are against civil liberties, against the rights of Quebec, and for the atrocities of signing and patriating the Constitution without Quebec being a participant. I felt it was unconstructive to make those allegations, and some Liberal Members of the House may feel obliged to stand up and rehash the record about rights and wrongs. That is what I regretted about the exchange.

I agree that it is important for us to look at the victims of inadequate legislation in the past, and try to make certain that for our time we improve the legislation. My very great fear is that the legislation before us is not an improvement, but that it could give way to a situation in which we can always be found, by a Government that wishes to do so, to be in an emergency situation. Therefore, a package of powers not available in normal times can be arrogated by the Government to itself to do the job.

I made the point that the compensation provisions which did not exist in the prior War Measures Act give the impression of providing compensation, but there is no assurance that compensation will be available. If the Government chooses to do so, it gives the Government the machinery for establishing compensation.

One of the appalling features of the provision, apart from its total voluntary nature on the part of the Government, is the provision that the Government has the unfettered discretion under the Bill to describe classes of people who will not receive compensation at all. I cannot understand that. I cannot see why the Government would want so much power, and what the justification is, especially considering that the whole provision for compensation is only window-dressing if it is not a guaranteed right of people to receive it.

Mr. Frith: I wish to ask the Hon. Member a question relating to his last comments concerning the issue of compensation. I agree with the Hon. Member that there is an exclusion in the Bill of certain groups seeking compensation. It is my understanding that it is only at the whim of the Government whether or not to allow a compensation case to arise. If that does proceed, it proceeds under the jurisdiction of the Federal Court of Canada.

The Hon. Member has had expertise in previous government positions in years past, and I wish to ask what recommendations he would make to augment or strengthen those clauses of the Bill to allow victims the right to have their case heard? There will be victims whether they are victims of the War Measures Act or of this new Bill C-77 before us. I am sure that at some point in the future, there will be some misalignment as a result of those emergencies. What would the Hon. Member recommend?

Mr. Kaplan: There are many models for us to take to be certain that the rights of compensation are provided. One of the shortcomings in that area is that in the essential services suspension agenda where there is the lowest grade of emergency taking place, the Government has the authority to order people to provide the service. To take the example of the postal workers, the Government could declare the emergency and order the postal workers to start delivering the mail for free, if it wished. There is nothing in the Bill that states that the postal workers have to be paid anything for doing that work. They can be compelled to do it by the police. This is in the lowest grade of emergency provided in the legislation.

Surely, in a situation like that, we are entitled to know and have it entrenched in the legislation that people who are ordered to provide their services will not have to provide those services for free, and that they will be entitled to compensation. The Canadian Civil Liberties Association states that the legislation should provide for a labour adjudicator to come in and give some fair compensation, or continue the wages that they were formerly receiving.

I wish to illustrate how very arrogant this legislation is in its present form from the point of view of the Government. It is important that for the people who are victimized first of all by the emergency and then by the legislation, because the legislation can take away more from them than the emergency, we do everything that we can to try to put them in a fair position and ensure that they will be given fair treatment. That is the function of Parliament. We do not want the Government, in situations where the rule of law is inadequate, to deal with the problem. That is true. That is why we have emergency legislation. Therefore, even in an emergency there is a rule of law and people have rights.

We are not serving our nation if we bring forward legislation that turns the rule of law into a licence for the Government to do whatever it wants, whether or not it is necessary, with no thought at all for the consequences for ordinary Canadians.

That is the purpose that the Liberals will have in this debate. As the legislation goes to committee we will be seeking to achieve a rule of law that is more than a tissue of legitimacy for the exercise of arbitrary power by the Government, that is a real study and a balance of rights that are needed in fairness to the citizens who are affected by losing their rights in order to permit the emergency to be dealt with.

PROCEEDINGS ON AJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is my duty, persuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr Epp)—Railways— Delay in grain deliveries to Thunder Bay—Need for more hopper cars—Dominion Marine Association's request for action; the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan)—Auditor General's Report—Grant made to Edmonton Amusement Park Project—Order in Council query; the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly)—External Affairs—Visits by nuclear powered vessels to Esquimalt—Results of government inquiry.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Beatty that Bill C-77, an Act to authorize the taking of special temporary measures to ensure safety and security during national emergencies and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to join in this very important debate. We can use the word "historic" too easily, but I feel that perhaps it is not an abuse of the term to talk about an historic debate on Bill C-77 this afternoon. I am pleased that a couple of weeks ago the Leaders of the various Parties in the House decided to begin it afresh and to do it properly on this day. I particularly appreciate the opportunity to speak at this early point in the debate.

In speaking to the Bill this morning, the Minister was kind enough to refer to the debate which I precipitated in Private Members' Hour last spring when I put forward a motion for the repeal of the War Measures Act. He quoted at some length from my comments at the time, and then noted what had been stated by some other people in that same debate.

I used that occasion to focus particularly on the shortcomings of the War Measures Act legislation that allowed arbitrary and dangerous action, dangerous to the rights of Canadian citizens. I used that occasion last spring primarily to focus on that. For that reason, in part, I will not say very much in retrospect about the War Measures Act of 1914 and the manner in which it has been used over the years, because I have already had my say on that matter.

This afternoon I wish to focus more particularly on the merits and the dangers of Bill C-77 which the Government brought forward for second reading debate this morning, afternoon, and I am sure for some time following that.

When I proposed the Private Member's Motion for debate last spring, I focused my attention exclusively on the shortcomings of the legislation and called for a repeal of that particular Act, recognizing the abuses that had occurred, which, in my opinion, could be debated. The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) did debate the motion that day.

This afternoon I wish to respect the spirit of debate that he has called for, and which he largely exemplified in his own comments in speaking to the shortcomings of Bill C-77. At that time I called simply for repeal. Part of his unhappiness with my observations that day—they reflected on earlier Liberal Governments—related to the fact that the Hon. Member thought that I should be making suggestions for the type of legislation that might replace the War Measures Act, if I wished it repealed.

I think it is a perfectly respectable position for a Private Member to have in that one simply wants to get rid of abominable legislation. One hesitates to make suggestions for a replacement recognizing the very great dangers that exist in whatever is put forward. Bill C-77 exemplifies some of those dangers. It certainly justifies that kind of concern. What in England is known as the Defence of the Realm Act can be very, very dangerous legislation no matter when it is passed.

The most important thing that the Minister said this morning, in speaking to the Bill, in putting it forward for debate, and in calling on us to give it second reading so that it could go to committee for detailed consideration, was his statement that he was open to proposals for amendments of this particular Bill. I suppose he was prepared in principle, without shouting the point from the roof-top, to admit that there might be shortcomings in the Bill which we would want to have improved. He recognizes and respects the committee system which is basic to that kind of detailed consideration.

We have already had from various speakers—certainly from friend, the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn)—a number of criticisms. The Hon. Member for York Centre who has just spoken pointed to some of the weaknesses in the Bill which call for action. Similarly, I want to devote my comments almost exclusively to the Bill we have before us and to the dangers which could flow from the way it has been drafted.

I also want to urge the Minister to remain faithful to the position he took this morning that there will be opportunity to deal with the Bill critically and carefully to ensure that the particular Bill, when it finally comes back to the House for third reading, has achieved the kind of shape it should have achieved and to ensure that Canadians are not worried that their liberties are in danger from the abuse by Government if there is poorly drafted law, or the abuse by Government if it has been given in statute the kinds of unlimited powers which are sought in some of these areas.

I want to note at an early point—and I will make some further reference to it—that the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, which has an honourable standing in these matters that I think all Hon. Members of the House would respect, has provided something in the way of a detailed critique. I have some reason to think that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) has received that brief. I would urge him to look very carefully at it.

I note from the brief an extensive discussion of the question of what might precipitate the invoking of this Act once it has been passed, or what would allow the Government to take action in one situation or another that it regards as an emergency.

If I may look back for just a moment to October 1970, an apprehended insurrection was declared by Government. The War Measures Act was invoked and a large number of regulations were published, some of them with a retroactivity feature which has already been commented upon. However, let me just note as a reality that the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, in addressing this particular problem, pointed out—and I think it is one of its most important observations—that there should be a definition of an emergency. We should not be dependent on the preamble which, as the Minister noted, says something about a national emergency. I should like to quote the following from the second paragraph of the preamble:

> —that is to say, an urgent and critical situation of a temporary nature that imperils the well-being of Canada as a whole or that is of such proportions or nature as to exceed the capacity or authority of a province to deal with it—

The suggestion that something imperils the well-being of Canada as a whole would appear, from the preamble, to be the basis for regarding something as an emergency.

I take against that a suggestion from the Canadian Civil Liberties Association in its 1979 brief to the McDonald Commission considering wrongdoing by members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. It suggested that the Government should have the power to invoke the emergency power "at the point where it could reasonably anticipate the outbreak of illegal violence so intense, so widespread, and so continuous that the Government itself would be overthrown or it would be powerless to govern". In the politics of 1970, that was the assertion of the Government to justify an action.

Leaving aside public welfare and the international and war emergency possibilities for a moment, we have a definition of emergency in the Bill. It is a definition, not simply a description in the preamble of what might be regarded as an emergency. In any case, it is much broader and it must be something that threatens the well-being of the country. However, it does not raise the possibility, which would be obvious to all except perhaps those somehow involved in perpetrating the matter, that Government itself might be destroyed or rendered powerless. Such a definition of emergency in this case is a very strong one. Surely it would be a useful addition to the Bill at an early point to discourage Governments from looking to this in cases where matters could be dealt with otherwise and where the infringement upon the liberties of Canadians should not become a football in the political arena to be used against the political enemies of the Government. Surely there was some of that taking place 17 years ago. This is one of the vital points to be considered.

I note incidentally on this matter that we have quite a substantial Bill. It is a great improvement on the War Measures Act of 1914, which was so brief but so sweeping in its assertion of the powers given to the Government. I notice in a way that drafters will do—and it strikes one as a little odd—that subclause 2(2) reads as follows:

> For greater certainty, nothing in this Act derogates from the authority of the Government of Canada to deal with emergencies on any property, territory or area in respect of which the Parliament of Canada has jurisdiction.

It is odd that there should be this residual dealing with emergencies power when we are told that we must have this in the public welfare area, as well as in international and war emergencies areas, in order to have the Government properly empowered. Of course this suggests to me that the Bill has been drafted over whatever period of time by people who were in the patent attorney business. One puts in an application which might just about cover anything that vaguely resembles the invention that someone has put forward. Then the patent office begins considering it very carefully to refine it down to what the person has actually come up with, so that when the patent is finally put on it, it is really that development and not all sorts of other things. Of course this arouses one's concern.

When the Bill began to lay out the various kinds of emergencies which might face us, a much more careful attempt was made to relate the regulations that might be published to the kinds of emergencies that could exist. Some of that has already been recognized.

The nuances include various lengths of time that a declaration would regularly take effect. In the case of a public welfare emergency we are looking at 90 days' effectiveness. In the case of a public order one, it is actually 60 days that it would be in effect. The international emergency would be expected to be 120 days. Of course when we have a war emergency, the first declaration would have a regular effectiveness for 360 days.

It is interesting to have these numbers which smack of the old Babylonian system rather than the Arabic one in some of the units that have been given to us as numbers. I trust that we do not have any of the spirit of the old Babylonian laws which the Old Testament at one or two points carries over. It is just to avoid that kind of danger of broad and sweeping power that we want to confine this matter.

In noting some of the particulars, I note, for example, Clause 17 which deals with a public order emergency and the kinds of regulations that might be published there. It has already been noted that not only does the Government have the right to regulate public assembly but the Bill includes "or prohibit" public assembly. There is an obvious case of a change that the committee might consider. The committee should propose the deletion of those two words so that there is not in this Bill any possibility of the Government having that kind of blanket authority to prevent all public assemblies in an area where there are dangers. Let an assembly that gets out of hand be controlled. Let us have provisions to control it. That is what "regulate" means.

At one time we saw freedom-loving Canadians, presumably, the mayor of Vancouver and others, thinking that here was an opportunity as soon as the War Measures Act had been invoked to clamp down on undesirable elements in society. I would have thought that in 1970 there was some appreciation of freedom after an era that had been tarnished by neo-conservatism in one western country after another. But what if in 1970 we had had that kind of reaction by the authorities if they had that simple right to prohibit public assemblies?

In the area of international emergency, dealt with in Clause 28, I noticed that the Minister this morning suggested that there is no danger of censorship in this Bill. It is up to us all to read carefully—and I do not mean to reflect on the Minister when I say that—but in Clause 28 we find:

> The control or regulation of any specified industry or service, including the use of equipment, facilities and inventory.

I am not a lawyer. I have not had the obligation of applying law in Government, but it does not take much imagination to realize that the media, be it the newspapers or the electronic media, would be regarded immediately as an industry or a service. If the Government had the power to control or regulate there would be every possibility under that provision to put controls on the press. It seems to me that the Minister and government members of the committee will need to be sensitive to these points.

Then we come to the war emergency section which, you will pardon my saying, Madam Speaker, I take a particular interest in given my desire to have the War Measures Act repealed. I found that it took a little while to read the provisions of the 1914 Act to my history class, but it does not take very long to read Clause 38. Let me do so now. It reads:

> While a declaration of a war emergency is in effect, the Governor in Council may make such orders or regulations as, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, are reasonably necessary or advisable for dealing with the emergency.

In one paragraph it says you have carte blanche to do anything. When emergencies have not been defined and when there are apparent residual powers to deal with emergencies, this is pretty frightening when you consider what might be done under this legislation. What kind of balance do we have for it? A provision for review by a parliamentary committee is one of the safeguards, but what does this review involve? The members must swear an oath of secrecy. A schedule attached to the Bill includes that oath. I will not read it, but all of the review committee's meetings are to be held in secret. How can a parliamentary review committee, the members of which have sworn not to release anything they have said without authority, carry out its review if it is hemmed in that way and has to do all its work in secret? That is an infamous section. That is no review.

What about the possibility of debate? We could have 15 Members of Parliament convinced of the advisability of reconsidering the decision, but what are we given? We shall have debate without interruption and, at the end of the third sitting day, the question shall be put. Debate without interruption, I take it, means throughout the night, not bound by the usual sitting hours. I asked my good friend, the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), how he would interpret that. Does it mean without interruption all the way through? His observation was, "It is fast", an appropriate observation to make. Sure, it is fast but what kind of a climate does one have in the House if the House is sitting around the clock for two and a half days and then the question is put? That is not the way to deal with these matters. Why limit it to the third sitting day if there is to be serious consideration? These are not safeguards.

There is a possibility under the Bill now for the Government to open the door to compensation, but that probably has always been in existence. It would not have been impossible to have a regulation in 1970 under the declaration to allow people to apply for, and so on. This provision, with no real opportunity for appeal from the actions of the assessors or judges of the Federal Court of Canada will simply not do.

It was clear from government Private Members speaking last spring that we would work to repeal the War Measures Act and we would have something that would have far-reaching powers given to Government. In fact, in various nuances of this Bill there are even more threats to the liberties of Canadians.

The committee has an enormously important job to do, assuming that government Members will carry this at second reading and send the Bill to committee. I call on the Minister, here in spirit I know, to stand true to what he said. He wants to give us legislation in which Conservatives in opposition one of these years, sooner than they like to think, will not find the basis for attacks on a Government of another colour. The Government wants to be very certain that when this Bill comes back for third reading it has been cleaned up the way it should be. After all, the war emergency Bill of 1914 still exists 73 years later. Let us make sure that what we do in 1987-1988 is a Bill that we can live with indefinitely.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments? Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse).

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Madam Speaker, I rise this afternoon to speak in support of Bill C-77 and draw the attention of the House to the title of the Bill, an Act to authorize the taking of special temporary measures to ensure safety and security during national emergencies, first, temporary; second, safety and security; and third, emergencies. They are the key words. I would like to group my remarks around those key words.

First, I will speak about temporary emergencies. The intent of this legislation is to prescribe special measures and powers for Government when there is an emergency on a temporary basis. All democracies must provide, on the one hand, for the rights of their individual citizens but, on the other, for the safety and integrity of the state during a time of emergency when the state is threatened. That has been true since ancient times. We have found in our own century more than once the need for this kind of special legislation. The Government should be able to take firm and speedy action that will be adequate to meet the needs of the hour, but to the extent that the special powers infringe upon the normal rights and freedoms of its people, it is important that the exercise and the enjoyment of these special powers be temporary.

This Bill is before us in order that particular emphasis can be given to the temporary nature of the legislation. This Bill provides, for example, that in the instance of a public welfare emergency there will be an endurance of only 90 days of the special powers that the Government will enjoy, in the instance of a public order emergency, 60 days; of a national emergency, 120 days; and of a war emergency, 320 days. There is no way by which the Government could use this legislation to do what an opposition speaker suggested today, namely, take over the direction of the country under this legislation and run it by fiat.

Not only is the authority of the Government limited by the periods which I have reported, the Bill also provides that Parliament itself will have a direct voice in the implementation of the special temporary measures, their review, and, if necessary, their termination, for the Bill provides that if Parliament is not sitting when an emergency takes place and the Government wishes to invoke the emergency legislation, Parliament is to sit within seven days and address itself immediately to the emergency at hand.

Second, this Bill provides for the initiation by Parliament of the revocation of the special emergency authority of the Government. Third, there will be a review process through which Members of the House of Commons and the Senate can participate actively in assessing whether the continuation of these measures is required.

It should be evident to us all that any Government, regardless of Party, facing the type of crisis which can confront this country and has confronted it within this century, will need authority of this kind on a temporary basis. In 1914, the Hon. C. J. Doherty, then Minister of Justice, within the very first month of World War I introduced the War Measures Act, to which frequent reference has been made today. The reason he gave for introducing it was that the law provided the Government with no clear legal authority to undertake the steps and measures that were required by the emergency at the time.

If we move ahead a generation we find that in 1939 the Liberal Mackenzie King Government announced that it would invoke the War Measures Act and that if it did not possess such legislation it would move to introduce it in the House of Commons because when a country is at war it must give priority to the salvation of the state and take those measures that are required to protect the security and integrity of the nation.

Frequent reference has been made today to the FLQ-inspired October crisis of 1970. I recall that at that time the invocation of the War Measures Act, with the support of the majority of Members of Parliament, was justified by the Prime Minister of the day, Mr. Trudeau, by pointing to the fact that public officials had been kidnapped and killed, that large supplies of dynamite had been reported as taken by agents of the FLQ, and that the Governments of Quebec and Montreal were seriously concerned about a possible insurrection in that province.

I do not think it was difficult for fair-minded and reasonable citizens, on the basis of the information given them by the Government of the day, to believe that such temporary measures had to be invoked. We are concerned that there now exists legislation which specifically constricts the exercise of such measures to a limited period of time and ensures that the exercise of those special powers be under the direction and with the approval of Parliament.

The first thing in favour of this legislation is that it authorizes the Government to take the necessary special measures and authority on a temporary basis only. There is not the slightest hazard of this Government or any of its successors abusing and misusing this authority to supersede Parliament and normal democratic processes.

Let us now turn to the second part of the title of the Bill, "An Act to authorize the taking of special temporary measures to ensure safety and security". The War Measures Act was passed in 1914 and exercised throughout World Wars I and II to authorize the Government to impose censorship, arrest, detention, exclusion, and deportation, and to control harbours, territorial waters, transportation, trading, and expropriation. When he introduced the Bill of Rights in 1960, the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker said—in my judgment quite rightly—that the Bill of Rights which he was introducing that day would protect and defend the rights of Canadian citizens except as they might have to be pre-empted in a time of war.

As Mr. Diefenbaker reminded the House of Commons, when the state is threatened by conflict it is necessary for all of us to put the nation and the state ahead of any right or interest of the individual. There can be no reasonable challenge to that. Whatever flights of rhetoric enable us to soar, the reality in a time of war, in a time when the state is threatened as many of us in this Chamber have seen it threatened, will demand that the Government of the day be prepared to take those measures needed to protect it.

That is why there is a provision in the Bill before us that in a war emergency the Government will be authorized to take whatever measures are reasonably required to deal with the emergency. In a time of war, in a time of invasion, there is a need for action that will defend the state, that will defend the interests of the Canadian people as a whole, action that the Canadian people would expect their Government to take and which it would be judged for not taking.

Let us put this Bill into the context of Canada in 1987, not 1914, in the context which the preamble to Bill C-77 recognizes, namely, that since 1982 we have had not only a Bill of Rights which has the authority of any other Act of Parliament, but as well a Constitution which includes within it the Charter of Rights and Freedoms as well as the Canadian Bill of Rights. This Charter and this Bill have the standing, authority, and integrity of the Constitution.

It is said specifically in the preamble of this Bill that the Governor in Council in taking such special temporary measures would be subject to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Canadian Bill of Rights and must have regard to the international covenant on civil and political rights, particularly with respect to those fundamental rights that are not to be limited or abridged even in a national emergency.

We are recognizing in this Bill, therefore, that imperative as is action to defend the state in a time of war, a time of conflict, possible invasion, threatened defeat, the rights guaranteed by the Constitution will not be pre-empted. Consequently, we must recognize the sweeping powers which this Bill apparently gives to the Government in a time of a war crisis. Nonetheless, those powers must be related to the limitations imposed on the Government by our Constitution.

We have here special powers given to the Government in a time of emergency to enable it to deal with the emergency at hand. In dealing with Bill C-77, I would ask all Members of the House to review the powers that are given and recognize that in the four instances, the powers are appropriate to the kind of emergency with which the Government must deal in that time. They do not exceed the demands of the emergency.

For example, the powers with respect to the special kind of public welfare emergency are explicit. They are appropriate to the kind of emergency being dealt with. In a public welfare emergency, the Government would have the authority to regulate or prohibit travel to, from or within any specified area. While that may interfere with the rights of Canadians to travel from one part of the country to another when there is no emergency, it is surely a reasonable authority for a Government to exercise in a time of real emergency and real threat to the safety of people in that area. This is normal in any civilization.

I was in a country that was attacked by a hurricane. When one is threatened by a hurricane, one is quite pleased that the Government has the authority to take action to ensure the safety of people in that region. In the particular place where I was, we first received the advice of the Government to move. I must say that I did not need to be advised again, but within two hours that advice was translated into an order. The police came to every residence and required people to move. They had the authority to seize vehicles and to take any kind of measure they required to deal with that emergency.

Bill C-77 deals with the kind of authority which would be given to the Government in a public welfare emergency that is appropriate to deal with that kind of crisis, as with the other types of emergencies that are included in the Bill.

I suggest that we look upon this Bill as appropriating to the Government authority that does not go beyond the demands of the emergencies that are under consideration.

There are other limitations which this Bill imposes on the Government. With respect to expropriation, there is provision in the Bill for the Governor in Council to provide for compensation of any person whose property, equipment or other assets are seized by the Government. The citizen in question may apply for that compensation and, if not satisfied with what is offered by the Government, can appeal to an assessor who has been appointed by the Governor in Council and who is from the federal court.

The cost for that appeal may be awarded to the Crown or against the Crown. Therefore, there is serious respect paid to the right of the individual who has lost assets or the value of assets to have due compensation. I submit that it is great progress to protect individuals in a time of emergency against their property being seized with no just compensation to them. The rights of individuals are not ignored even though the pre-eminence of the state is respected in a time of emergency.

The four kinds of national emergencies described in this Bill are public welfare, public order, international emergency and war. Public welfare emergencies are those dealing with natural disasters or with other disruptions to the normal, civilized, necessary, routine direction of life within this country. Public order emergencies are threats to the security of Canada that are so serious as to be a national emergency. In both the instances of public welfare crises and public order crises, it has to be established that not only is there a disturbance or disruption, but that it is so serious as to be a national emergency.

The Hon. Jean Marchand, speaking in this House about the FLQ crisis of 1970, said that proclaiming the War Measures Act was like bringing up a canon to kill a fly. That is how he described it 11 years later. If this legislation becomes law, it will be necessary in the future that the Government, in each instance, be able to establish that the disruption is so serious as to be a national emergency threatening the nation as a whole. Under these conditions, I hope the House is prepared to accept the principle of this Bill, for that is what we are debating at second reading.

The Minister has already indicated that he is prepared to consider seriously reasonable and constructive amendments to the Bill dealing with particular flaws or inadequacies, for no document is ever perfect. Every draft of legislation invites amendment, and that is the purpose of the committee process. The Minister has quite reasonably and properly recognized that.

However, in this debate we are primarily concerned with the principle and the intent of the legislation. I believe it meets two needs that cannot be ignored by any responsible Government or Parliament. One is to provide the Government with sufficient authority to deal with a crisis that cannot be foreseen, for which there cannot be planning to prevent, and which must be dealt with immediately. The second is to recognize the pre-eminence of the Constitution which protects the rights of people. This Bill brings these two needs together in a way that I hope will be found acceptable to the House as I am confident it is acceptable to the people of Canada.

Mr. Orlikow: I would like to direct a couple of questions to the Hon. Member. I do not think there is a single Member of this Parliament who would not agree that the War Measures Act, which has been statute on the laws of Canada since World War I, has outlived its usefulness and goes far too far in the power and authority it gives to the Government. In a brief, the Canadian Civil Liberties Association said in part that it:

> —appreciates the initiative which the Government has taken to replace the War Measures Act. No conceivable emergency, including bloody war, could justify such unfettered powers and inadequate safeguards.

However, it continues:

> Unfortunately, Bill C-77 contains vague definitions, overbroad powers and inadequate safeguards. There is too little effort to link the powers it would create with the perils for which they are designed.

It goes on to make 23 recommendations as to how the Bill could and should be improved. I would like to read a couple of those recommendations into the record and ask the Hon. Member if he agrees with these suggestions. First, the CCLA recommends:

> A definition for the word "emergency" which, in all the circumstances contemplated by the Bill, would require imminent and serious perils to the lives, limbs and health of widespread numbers of people.

The CCLA would like that spelled out. Second, it recommends:

> A requirement that emergency proclamations explain why, in the circumstances, it was necessary to avoid the enactment of a special statute.

It further suggests:

> A re-definition of public order emergencies so as to eliminate the reference to the CSIS Act and to require that the Government reasonably anticipate the outbreak of illegal violence, so intense, so widespread, and so continuous that the Government itself would be overthrown or it would be powerless to govern.

And finally:

> The elimination of the power to prohibit and regulate public assemblies during public order emergencies.

I wonder if the Hon. Member would be prepared to comment on just a few of the recommendations made by the Canadian Civil Liberties Association?

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's inquiry and invitation, I would like, first, to remark that no Member of this House would want to see the War Measures Act continued, although I have heard one member of the Liberal Party say that he thinks the War Measures Act is much better than this legislation and, ipso facto, he would want it to continue. I do not believe that the move to rid ourselves of the War Measures Act has yet universal approval, although it may gain that before long.

With regard to the recommendations of the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, I would say, first, that the committee is the proper place to review each of those recommendations. I hope the committee will give them serious consideration and implement such recommendations for amendment as it deems advisable after that review. However, I would point out that the definition of public welfare emergency contained in the legislation is one that surely commends itself to the House of Commons even though it may well be improved in committee. The definition of public welfare emergency in Part I, Clause 3 of the Bill reads:

> "Public welfare emergency" means an emergency that is caused by a real or imminent
> (a) fire, flood, drought, storm, earthquake or other natural phenomenon,—

There is nothing vague or misleading there. It goes on:

> (b) disease in human beings, animals or plants,
> (c) accident or pollution, or
> (d) breakdown in the flow of essential goods, services or resources and that results or may result in a danger to life or property, or social disruption, so serious as to be a national emergency.

A possible flaw in this has already been pointed out in debate today, and the Minister has indicated he is prepared to review and consider an amendment which would improve the clause. However, it seems to me that a very impressive beginning, at least, on a definition of a public welfare emergency has been made. It is a great improvement in the interests of the people of Canada to have this kind of legislation available to become the law of the land and to authorize this Government and succeeding Governments to deal with such emergencies.

With regard to public order emergencies, I take it there is some objection to the reference of declaring an emergency against an action that might overthrow the Government. I am sure that no one has in mind the democratic process, which is a way of replacing one Government with another. Basic to civilization is the right ordering of Government and a changing of Government by due process of law and not by violence or rebellion, and any duly elected and constituted Government must have the authority to deal with any violent threat against its integrity and its ability to carry on the Government which has been entrusted to it by the law of the land.

Mr. Frith: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member opposite a question, and I do so because I respect his opinion. I have sat on committees with him and it disturbs me to take from his response to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) that, in his opinion, "emergency" is properly defined. He went on to list under Part I, public welfare emergency, the definitions for emergency. I think anyone who has been in Parliament for any number of years respects the viewpoint of the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, and that association indicates that the greatest weakness of the Bill, in its opinion, is its failure to define "emergency". It went on to state that the provision that allows for the declaration of an emergency, when it is considered to exist "in the opinion of" the Governor in Council, is what it determines to be one of the major flaws in the legislation.

I want to indicate to the Hon. Member opposite that that ought to be one of the first things the legislative committee asks of the Canadian Civil Liberties Association. It should give its ideas on what ought to be a definition of "emergency". None of us on this side of the House are arguing that to some extent this Bill does not improve the War Measures Act. The Hon. Member took, I believe, the wrong idea from the justice critic of the Liberal Party when he said that he believed the War Measures Act is a better law than the one being proposed. What he was indicating was that without amendments, it might be better for Parliament to leave the existing legislation in place until the amendments are dealt with, and I will allude to this in my speech later on. I just caution the Hon. Member opposite that he ought to take into consideration these kinds of concerns by such eminently qualified people and groups as the Canadian Civil Liberties Association.

Mr. Stackhouse: Madam Speaker, I thought I had done that by saying that the recommendations of that association should be studied carefully by the committee which will review this legislation, and where that committee believes the Bill can be improved, its recommendations should be adopted. I believe my remarks would have to indicate that I would want the representations to be considered very seriously. However, I am sure that the Hon. Member is not arguing just on the basis of an appeal to an authority. We are dealing with the legislation itself.

I hope that the Hon. Member would recognize, as I have already mentioned, that a very impressive beginning, at least the beginning of the definition of what a public welfare emergency is has been made in this legislation. It has been spelled out explicitly and with particularization. If that can be improved in committee, then that should be something that all Members of this House, myself included, would welcome.

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Madam Speaker, let me preface my remarks this afternoon by indicating to the House that I believe that the Canadian Civil Liberties Association should be commended for the brief it has developed for the House of Commons. In the past, I have had the greatest of respect for its opinion and that is why, in my question to the Hon. Member opposite, I attached such import to the issues raised by the Canadian Civil Liberties Association. Clearly, the repeal of the War Measures Act is a response to an abuse of the law that threatened the civil liberties of Canadians when it was applied during wartime and during peacetime. For that reason, if we are going to replace the War Measures Act, we ought to ensure that the viewpoint of the association that best represents the civil rights of Canadians should be of paramount importance when we deliberate on this particular Bill in the legislative committee.

I think the words of the justice critic of the Liberal Party of Canada ought to be well received in committee because he is a former Minister of the Crown. He dealt with the particular aspect of the Bill and is aware of the harshness of the existing War Measures Act and the fact that it is a very Draconian piece of legislation. When one has that type of legislation available, it is very important that the Minister of the Crown who chooses to exercise that particular right, do so with full awareness of what he is about to do. Because most people recognize the fact that the War Measures Act is a very Draconian, harsh use of the legislative body, Governments in the past have been reticent to use it. It has been pointed out here this afternoon in debate that the War Measures Act has only been applied once in peacetime and three or four times in other periods in which we have had a threat to national security.

The reason that it has been only used in such limited times in the past is the fact that it is a harsh and very Draconian type of legislation. Any Government would be very wary and would only use the legislation if it believed that an insurrection existed. However, the point that the justice critic was making is the following. When we bring forward legislation in the House the very first question we have to ask ourselves is why the legislation we are about to enact is being tabled in the House of Commons and what it will change. When one asks oneself what it is we are changing about the War Measures Act, then that is when we have to take into account all of the views of the various groups in our society about changing from an existing law to another.

I think that there are areas about which there is common agreement in this country, whether among Liberals, New Democrats, Conservative Members of the House, or members of various associations across the country. The Bill is welcomed in the sense that it does replace the War Measures Act. I think most of us agree that that Act is an antiquated Act that gives too much power to the Government. Because it does give too much power to the Government, when we change it we must ask ourselves if it will be used in a different way and to what extent we will safeguard civil liberties as a result of changing it.

Let me just give some of the points of view that I think we all agree upon. I think we agree that this legislation is an improvement, that the Charter of Rights takes precedence over the measures that are being applied in Bill C-77. By and large, it has been generally well received. It contains safeguards in terms of the type of emergency. I will come back to that in a moment because there are four definitions of the type of emergency, as you have heard from previous speakers, Mr. Speaker. But there are still flaws in the definition of emergency within the type of emergency that is being contemplated by the Government's Bill.

Over-all, there is a welcome acceptance of the fact that it does contain safeguards on the type of emergency. It then goes on to define the length of time that the emergency can exist. It gives Parliament the right of review. I think that is an improvement that is generally acknowledged. It also allows and defines geographic boundaries. So all of those items indicate to me that, yes, there is an acceptance of the need for a change from the War Measures Act, which has existed since 1914, to this new Bill, Bill C-77. But unless all of the issues that are of great concern to a number of individuals and associations in this country are addressed, it may become a more dangerous Bill as a result of too loose a definition within the framework of the law of Bill C-77.

Let me explain that. I think that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) was dead on in his assessment of where the Canadian Civil Liberties Association feels the major weaknesses or flaws in the legislation exist. It bothers me when such an eminently qualified association states that in its opinion the powers are too broad, the triggering circumstances are too vague, and the safeguards are too weak. I think that when that type of association, along with the Canadian Bar Association, signals that that is a major flaw in the legislation, then all Members of the House should take that into account when the Bill goes before the legislative committee which will deal with it.

In addition, the Canadian Civil Liberties Association stated that during a public order emergency the Government would acquire power to regulate or prohibit public assemblies. It went on to say that this is a particularly dangerous power. In so many ways the right of peaceable assembly serves as a prerequisite to the existence of other freedoms. I think that is an area of the legislation which should preoccupy the committee when it deals with this matter.

As I said earlier, this Bill is an improvement. I think most Canadians recognize that the War Measures Act had such wide, harsh, Draconian powers that it would be better to have legislation come forward with a better definition. That has been accomplished to some extent in dividing the types of emergencies into four categories. I am not going to go into those again since they have been alluded to by previous speakers.

As I pointed out to the Hon. Member from Scarborough, the greatest weakness in the Bill is its failure to define emergency, not the type of emergency. I think we all agree on that. Frankly, one ought to realize that when we are debating this Bill it is not that we do not have other Acts of Parliament to deal with other types of emergencies. We just had a catastrophic occurrence of a tornado this past year in Edmonton. Lives were lost. I think that the work of the City of Edmonton and the fact that the Mayor and his emergency team did such a tremendous job in such a short period of time in dealing with that type of emergency shows the Canadian public that the existing laws that allow that kind of power to be given to the civil authority is in place today. It is not as if no laws pertaining to emergencies, civil, provincial or municipal, existed. In fact, they do exist. They have been used in the past to deal successfully with emergencies such as I mentioned in Edmonton, or with the train derailment in Mississauga and in other areas over the last 73 years. So it is not that we are without legislative powers to deal with emergencies.

Therefore, let us not proceed hastily on the basis that we have no laws to deal with emergencies. In fact, we do have such laws. However, when the Government brings forward a Bill that fails to define emergency and, in particular, brings forward a provision that allows the declaration of an emergency when it is considered to exist in the opinion of the Governor in Council, then that is a dangerous flaw. I would argue, as I believe various Members of the House from all three political Parties who have served on the standing committee which deals with regulations have argued, that "in the opinion of" is a phrase in law that connotes tremendous power. I would urge that when this matter goes to legislative committee that particular section be dealt with in depth.

In the area that deals with power under the war emergency the Bill states that it is an emergency in Canada when an ally is threatened. Even in the legislation it does not go on to define what is an ally. Under that war emergency it states that "the Government is allowed to acquire the power to do what in its opinion . . . " Again, that is a very loose legalistic phrase that allows the Government the use of wide measures. I say that that can be an infringement of liberty when a Government allows the Governor in Council to use that kind of phrase to justify all kinds of acts. That to me is very dangerous. In the legislation under war emergency it states that the Government has the right to do what in its opinion would be reasonably necessary. Let me ask you this, Mr. Speaker, and you are a lawyer, I believe. In a court of law that would allow a lawyer total sanction to do as he wished. It goes on to state that that can be done with no judicial review. I think that it is a very dangerous precedent to establish in Canada, and it is another area that I would hope the legislative committee would look at in some detail.

With my colleague from Brant, I wish to ensure that when it goes to the legislative committee it is given the proper review by those parliamentarians. In the last three years too often we have witnessed the use or abuse of the majority of members in those committees not to listen carefully to the viewpoints put forward. This afternoon I am not advocating that we filibuster the Bill. But with all sincerity and conviction I caution my fellow colleagues from the Conservative Party that when this Bill is referred to the legislative committee the first witness that they ask to come before that committee ought to be a representative of the Canadian Civil Liberties Association. I think that they should listen with care to whatever recommendations that association makes to improve the Bill.

The justice critic for the Liberal Party has indicated that he has concerns with those areas of definition of emergency. I share those concerns. He has indicated that he has concerns in the area of compensation, the fact that classes of people are excluded from the right to appeal to a higher court to receive compensation for the abuse of powers given to a Government under this proposed new legislation.

I hope that the legislative committee will deal with this Bill in depth. I believe that my colleague from Brant has spoken on this issue before the Standing Committee on National Defence where he said that the committee should not give only a brief or cursory examination to this legislation as it is such an important Bill. Good heavens, Mr. Speaker, we have had the War Measures Act in place since 1914 and it has taken 73 years to put forward a draft Bill. I think all Members of the House are aware of the difficulties of previous Governments in the use of the War Measures Act, and the problems that were created by the imposition of the War Measures Act in 1970. Because the law was so Draconian and harsh, and the Governments of the day were very wary of enacting a War Measures Act, it is still no reason for us to deal quickly with Bill C-77, even though we agree that the War Measures Act is in need of repeal.

Certainly, the committee has to tighten up the definitions and install a stronger review and check on the powers of the Government in that legislation. There should be a more cognizant view of the need for the judiciary in this country to review government decisions, particularly where they relate to civil liberties. When there is such loose phraseology and definitions in the law, it is open to abuse by Government.

Surely, above all, all of us as parliamentarians seek to ensure that in all Acts that we pass through the House of Commons the liberties and freedoms of individual Canadians are ensured. When dealing with the law that deals with civil liberties in this country, we should take the time that is necessary to ensure that all of the considerations of our citizens are complied with, listened to, and dealt with by amendments.

That is why I hope that the majority of the members of the committee, which will be on the government side, take into consideration some very well though out and constructive criticism not only from members of the Opposition, but from members of the Canadian Bar Association and the Canadian Civil Liberties Association who, in the past, have dealt in a very effective and constructive way with all issues relating to civil liberties in this country.

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to deal with Bill C-77 and, like all my honourable colleagues in this House, I am here to serve the Canadian people better. As a Quebecer, I feel it is our common duty to repeal the War Measures Act, a legislation whose damaging effects are still vivid in the memory of a great many Quebec men and women. The old legislation which was much too sweeping and drastic in scope provided the Government with overwhelming powers without protecting the rights of the individual. We here are in a good position to know whether the implementation of that law is unfair, particularly the Right Hon. the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) who was Minister of Justice in the Liberal Government and who decided to invoke the War Measures Act in Quebec in October 1970.

I should like to repeat some of the comments made earlier this morning by the Minister. Some critics have tried to combine the old act and the new act in an attempt to make people believe that Part IV of the Emergencies Act is practically identical to the War Measures Act. They have also stated that since the Charter applies to the War Measures Act there is really no difference between the two legislative texts. They go as far as to say that temptation to resort to the Emergencies Act will be stronger because, they say, it gives the impression that it offers more guarantees than the War Measures Act and that it will be easier to invoke it.

Such statements are totally unfounded.

Emergencies Act Part IV has to do with war or other armed conflict, real or imminent. War Measures Act provisions deal with war, invasion or insurrection, real or apprehended.

The War Measures Act was adopted for the first time in August 1914 when Canada declared war. The federal government then needed legislation to pass all regulations required to prepare the country for war and take measures against the enemy. Lacking time to decide what specific powers might be needed, Prime Minister Borden chose to introduce in Parliament a piece of legislation giving unlimited powers to Cabinet which would define the powers to be used as the need for them became apparent with the passage of time.

Parliament readily endorsed the measure, but the fact remains that it gave Cabinet full powers in this country. Even the British Government did not have all the powers the Canadian Cabinet obtained as a result of this legislation. Furthermore, the British legislation limited the time during which it could be in effect, while the Canadian legislation did not, so that the Government was able to keep those powers as long as it felt was necessary, and subsequently leave the legislation on the books, although its application was suspended.

The War Measures Act was proclaimed again in 1939. The Government could have adopted new legislation that would give it sweeping powers. However, it preferred to use the legislation that was used during World War I and was still on the books. It is these sweeping powers that, unfortunately, were used to justify the internment of Japanese-born Canadians after Japan entered the war at the end of 1941.

At the end of the war in 1945, the War Measures Act was suspended but never revoked, and thus remained on the books. In 1960 it was amended in case it was used again. The last time the legislation was applied, as Quebecers especially will remember, was in 1970 during the October crisis.

The War Measures Act was proclaimed at 4 a.m. on October 16. Under the Act, regulations concerning public order were announced, giving the police special powers to search and make arrests without a warrant. According to the regulations, the FLQ was declared an unlawful organization, members of that organization could be arrested, and furthermore, and this is very serious, people suspected of being members or supporting the organization's cause could also be arrested. The police then proceeded to arrest more than 500 people, many of whom had no connection at all with the organization. Some were arrested simply because they were nationalists.

That morning on October 16, 1970, a motion asking the House to approve the proclamation of the War Measures Act was passed, although the Minister of Justice at the time admitted there was a great deal of uncertainty about the magnitude of the threat.

Canadians have often told us, and they did so again quite recently, that they are concerned about the impact of the civil rights legislation. Both Claude Ryan, former Leader of the Liberal Party, when he was editor of the newspaper Le Devoir, and the late René Lévesque, former Leader of the Parti Québécois, who was then a reporter, expressed their concern about how the Government was dealing with this problem, and opposed the application of this legislation.

After the situation had relaxed, the public, the press and Members of Parliament questioned the statements that had been made about the seriousness of the problem and the fear of an insurrection. However, the damage had already been done and many innocent people had been arrested.

In this very House, representatives of all political parties expressed the same wish. To refresh our memories, I can quote the words of a Liberal Minister, the Hon. Mitchell Sharp, who said on October 29, 1975 that the Government intended to present legislation to replace the War Measures Act.

The intentions were good, but this legislation did not materialize. As for our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), he promised during the election campaign to abolish the War Measures Act and to provide adequate emergencies legislation for Canada.

The difference is that our Prime Minister is keeping his word and will assume his constitutional responsibilities by guaranteeing the safety of Canadians.

Abrogation of the existing Act and its replacement by an appropriate piece of legislation meet the wishes expressed by Canadians as a whole. Indeed, it is a paradox for Canada, which has an enviable worldwild reputation as concerns human rights, to be the only democratic country not to have legislation to deal with national emergencies.

The War Measures Act still scares people seventeen years after it was last applied. It haunts the dreams of too many Quebecers. It still has the power to harm, and this power will disappear only once this Act is abrogated.

There are cases where the search for the common good and our national interests require that we go beyond party politics. Abolition of the War Measures Act is such a case.

I am not naive to the extent of believing that the bills we are debating today will be unanimously endorsed, but I am sure they will elicit favourable comments and constructive criticism from the Opposition benches. This is how we will succeed in putting the finishing touches to the Emergencies Act which is already far ahead of the War Measures Act.

Undeniably, whenever circumstances so dictates, Emergencies Act provisions will sometimes be as biting as a scalpel. Unfortunately interventions do become necessary, so better use a surgeon's knife rather than a chain saw, as the War Measures Act would have us do.

More specifically, Madam Speaker, the Emergencies Act will enable the Government to take action in times of national crises, with exceptional means which are nonetheless limited with respect to space, time and field of application. The War Measures Act did not have any such safety catches.

The various guarantees featured in the Emergencies Act are likely to reassure the most skeptical and most difficult people to convince when it comes to respect for human rights, and I count myself among them.

My statement is borne out by the fact that the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Canadian Bill of Rights will take precedence over the new legislation, and that the provisions of the Emergencies Act will be in keeping with the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

Parliament—all of us here—will have a say on the use of emergency powers. The Government will be accountable to Parliament for the use it will make of those powers. Such guarantees do not exist in the present legislation.

The other Bill, the Emergency Preparedness Act, has had an initial beneficial impact since it has led to the revocation of the Emergency Planning Order of 1981, almost as heavily criticized as the War Measures Act because of its legal basis and ambiguous wording—a highly controversial document.

Once passed, the Emergency Preparedness Act, as mentioned by the Minister responsible and some of my colleagues, will enhance the Government's capacity to prepare for coping with emergencies. It will clarify the respective responsibilities of the federal Government and the provincial governments with a view to achieving closer co-operation, and will improve the coordination of emergency measures and emergency preparations by departments and federal agencies. It will not require new resources.

Madam Speaker, this Bill, like the Emergencies Bill, is a credit to this Government and to all Hon. Members, and I therefore hope that all Members of this House will vote in favour of the Bill.

• (1740)

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Hon. Member. She knows that this Bill is part of a package of Bills to replace the War Measures Act which was first enacted by Parliament in 1914. In other words, it is a Bill which has been in existence for over 60 years, and we now realize that it is a Bill which has been misused at times of perceived emergency.

I should like to refer to just two examples. The first would be the evacuation or forcible removal of thousands of Japanese from the West Coast of British Columbia during World War II despite the fact that we now know there was not a single Japanese spy in British Columbia. The other example would be the one to which the Hon. Member referred, namely, the use of the War Measures Act in Quebec in 1970 which led to the apprehension and incarceration for some days and weeks of more than 200 Quebecers, some of whom may have been nationalists, some of whom may indeed have been separatists, but none of whom was in fact a terrorist, since not a single one of them was ever charged, tried, or convicted.

I am sure every Member of Parliament would agree with the Hon. Member's statement that we ought to get rid of the War Measures Act. However, does the Hon. Member really believe that the Bill we are being asked to endorse in principle will do away with the legitimate concerns of many people about the way in which the present War Measures Act could be used?

Would she give some consideration to just a few of the more than 20 recommendations for amendments and improvements made by the Canadian Civil Liberties Association?

I will put on record just a few of them. First, the inclusion of limits on the nature and duration of the duties that can be ordered pursuant to emergency powers. In other words, no Government should be permitted to invoke the new Bill and to use its provisions for an indefinite period of time. Second, the inclusion of danger to life, limb, or health as a defence to the refusal or failure to perform duties that have been ordered pursuant to emergency powers. Third, a requirement to indemnify those who inflict injury on others as a consequence of performing duties that have been ordered pursuant to emergency powers.

I go back to the War Measures Act. Surely the Hon. Member knows that the Japanese people living on the West Coast of British Columbia were not only evacuated. Their property, including homes, cars, businesses, was confiscated and sold off with no attempt to ensure that the owners who had been forcibly removed would get the actual value or anything near the value of the property which had been taken away.

What about the elimination of the provision enabling the Government to create entry and search powers during international emergencies? We know now the kind of search powers that the Government has. Just last week—and I will not discuss this in detail now—we learned that the RCMP, and I presume its successor, the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, has monitored the activities of a citizen of Winnipeg, Nick Ternette, for 14 years. Those of us who live in Winnipeg know Nick Ternette very well. We know he has views that are not supported by many people. He is a member of my Party but most of his ideas are rejected by members of our Party. Surely, though, he has a right to his opinions. There is not the slightest bit of evidence that anything he has done could be termed subversive. Yet here is one case of a person kept under surveillance for 14 years. I hate to think of the time, the effort and the cost of that surveillance which, as far as anybody can tell, was completely useless and unnecessary.

I say to the Member that it is not enough to say that we are getting rid of the War Measures Act and bringing in something else. We want to make sure its replacement will achieve the objectives which we think need to be achieved.

[Translation]

Mrs. Duplessis: Madam Speaker, I am delighted to see that the Hon. Member of Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) is also very sensitive to the problems experienced by the Japanese during the last war and more recently by the people of Quebec during the October crisis. I want to give the Hon. Member the assurance, once again, that the Bill before the House today will be subject to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the Canadian Bill of Rights and the International Convention on Civil and Political Rights. This guarantee, as the Minister assured us this morning, is included in the Bill, which the Hon. Member should find reassuring.

As for the particular case to which he was referring, Madam Speaker, I am not in a position to reply.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Any further questions or comments? Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I want to begin by giving the Government credit for attempting an action which the former Liberal Government promised on many occasions after the difficulties we experienced in 1970, namely, to bring in legislation which would remove the War Measures Act, which was first enacted in 1914, from the statutes of Canada and replace it with an Act or Acts more able to protect the people of Canada in times of emergency without giving any Government which might be in office the kind of blanket authority to do almost anything that Governments have been able to do under the present War Measures Act.

Having said that, I have to agree with the Canadian Civil Liberties Association which, in its submission in dealing with this Bill, first commended the Government for bringing forward a Bill but then went on to list in some considerable detail the deficiencies in the Bill. The association finally made over 20 recommendations to improve the Bill.

I believe, as the Canadian Civil Liberties Association does, that Bill C-77 still contains far too many arbitrary powers which a Government could use for a country such as Canada, a democratic country. After all, we cannot, as the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), the former Solicitor General in the Liberal Government, tried, to deal with this Bill in a vacuum and in a very theoretical way. We are debating a Bill to remove the War Measures Act and replace it with another Act because our history and experience tell us that the War Measures Act has been misused, and if it continues to be on the statute books of Canada it may again be misused.

Given an emergency or a perceived emergency, any Government may make a decision which infringes on the democratic rights of the people in ways which are much more restrictive than need to be because it is difficult for any Government, regardless of which political Party forms a Government, to deal with the situation in an emergency. The time to give approval and dispassionate, rational thought to what a Bill should contain is when there is no emergency.

I remind Members that the former Prime Minister of Canada, Mr. Trudeau, before he was a Member of Parliament was one of the strongest, most powerful critics for all the right reasons of the very authoritarian, dictatorial Government of Quebec headed by Premier Duplessis. He was the same strong defender of civil liberties, the same opponent of the oppressive regime of Premier Duplessis, who when he was the Prime Minister, when he perceived there was a threat and a danger to democratic society in Quebec, used the War Measures Act.

I do not want today to redebate whether that was a necessary or an unnecessary action to take, I simply use that as an illustration of my belief that now when there is no emergency is the time to discuss a Bill which is to replace the War Measures Act.

The War Measures Act was passed in 1914, 15 days after World War I began. It was modeled on an Act passed by the British Parliament, also in 1914, called the Defence of the Realm Act.

• (1800)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is with regret that I must interrupt the Hon. Member.

RAILWAYS—DELAY IN GRAIN DELIVERIES TO THUNDER BAY—NEED FOR MORE HOPPER CARS/DOMINION MARINE ASSOCIATION'S REQUEST FOR ACTION

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to take a few moments this evening to consider further questions which I directed to the Government on November 2. I will quote from my question at that time to make it quite clear what we are dealing with. Speaking to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) in the absence of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) I said:

> He is undoubtedly aware that for more than a month the railways have failed to deliver enough grain to the Port of Thunder Bay to meet commitments there. Ships have been lying idle in the harbour and workers on lay-off when they would like to be at work moving grain into the ships.

I then asked:

> When does the Government intend to recognize the need for more hopper cars on the Prairies in order to move grain? In particular, when does it plan to ensure that the CNR is up to the challenge it faces in keeping our grain moving?

Those are the questions, Madam Speaker, which become more and more important. The focus here is specifically on the situation in Thunder Bay but I fear the problem will become worse as the grain transportation system we operate in western Canada faces increasing demands on it. I want to be very sure that we do not have to discriminate in any direction in dealing with this particular challenge.

We want to be sure that the railways have the rolling stock to get the product there when it needs to flow to market. We want to be sure that no markets are lost. We want to be sure that farmers have the satisfaction of knowing that their produce is moving. We do not want to see the wastage of ships lying idle in harbours. Certainly in Thunder Bay we would like to see as many grain handlers as possible working in the elevators.

I am concerned, as a Member of Parliament from Thunder Bay, about this issue. We must solve it in a way which will recognize the needs of people on the Prairies, the concerns of the producers, the desire of grain farmers to get their produce to market. We must do that in a way which will save us from having to discriminate against the Seaway in favour of the West Coast or, conceivably, for us in Thunder Bay to be arguing for a slow-down on the West Coast, which has a year round operation, in order that we can get it in before the frost comes. I do not want to be forced to make that kind of argument.

I recognize, of course, that we are in a situation, at least briefly, of large sales. How could I be anything but very happy about that on behalf of the farmers and everyone involved in transporting the product? I would like to think that the present situation is likely to continue in the future and that we are going beyond the slow times which we have known in the last couple of years. Let this be the new reality. Assuming that it will be, we face a very real challenge.

In Thunder Bay this fall the Wheat Board was calling for movement which would require as much as 6,000 cars a week. In fact, by the end of October we really needed 7,000 cars weekly at the elevator in Thunder Bay in order to meet the demand. We did not get those. We rarely topped 4,000 cars per week during September and October. As a result, the people of Thunder Bay began to see ships lying idle in the harbour again.

From one perspective there was a happy feature to that. We had been told at the beginning of July that Thunder Bay was going to be residual in the grain movement system. We began to worry. A lot of concern was expressed in Thunder Bay during July that all the emphasis was on the West Coast. We were concerned about where that would leave the Seaway. It was, therefore, nice to know that there was so much demand from the Atlantic markets through the Seaway that we could not meet it.

However, we do not want to be content with that. We want to be sure that we are up to the demand. When the CNR closed Churchill it released 3,000 cars and, as the media reported, it may be capable of bringing us 1,500 a week in Thunder Bay. If we had hit 4,200—and I pick that number because it is over 4,000, although I am not sure we would actually hit 4,200 in one of those weeks—and if we add 1,500 rather smaller boxcars to it, we are still at only 5,700 or so. If the need by the beginning of November was for 7,000 cars weekly, the railways were clearly not up to it. CP Rail apparently did better at this particular challenge by turning to U.S. railways to lease the hopper cars or whatever rolling stock was required. It managed to keep up. CNR clearly did not.

The Minister spoke of records, but I am not sure if those records extend back over all the years of terrific movement. However, we are doing very well on a daily or weekly basis. Let us be ready for that and not have to depend on American railways being able to release rolling stock to us.

Let us also recognize that old boxcars are being taken out of service. There is clearly a need for the Government to recognize this not only as a challenge but as an opportunity. Rolling stock could be produced in factories in this country. It is a marvellous opportunity to put the Trenton Works to use. I am not arguing for CanCar in Thunder Bay because it is busy with subway cars and so on. Let us provide the work in a place in Atlantic Canada where the Government also wants to see more people employed. People on the Prairies and the Maritimes can be satisfied at the same time. That is all Canadian.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, through the middle of September, sales projections for October/November at Thunder Bay stood at 2.2 million tonnes, and the railways had planned accordingly.

Also, my friend is aware of the very sophisticated process that generally works very well for predicting the cars, allocating them and moving grain to the ports. That system works very well as a result of several hundred people working very closely together and with a high level of goodwill and co-operation.

As my colleague, the Hon. Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer), stated earlier today, Canadian exports are up some 18 per cent over last year's and last year in itself was a record year. I suppose these are the problems we would like to have. If we could solve the price problem we could have the country hitting on all cylinders as compared to now when we are experiencing some problems in the West. Indeed, I believe that Canada's market share is up to 24 per cent from 17 per cent in spite of the enormous battle between the EEC and the United States. That is good news for Canada, subject to price.

CP has some 3,000 leased cars and is bringing its total fleet to approximately 14,000 cars, approximately 7,000 of which are in service to Thunder Bay. CN's total grain fleet is 14,700 cars with the 3,000 boxcars from Churchill, about 6,000 in service now in Thunder Bay. A very tight North American lease market for hopper cars has limited attempts to add further to the fleets.

One must consider whether the railways should be staffing for these peaks that were unpredictable. Of course, we should be making changes for the future and I would be interested to hear my friend's view as to where that money should be obtained, whether in the public domain or by the railways. How does one then justify the carrying costs of the cars if shipments should decline? These are problems that are being addressed by the system.

The Grain Transportation Agency is currently undertaking an extensive review of the system car capacity to determine current and future car needs. At present, a fuil review is being undertaken by the Minister through the Grain Transportation Agency and he is monitoring the situation carefully.

I am sure this can be resolved. I believe some 6,200 cars were unloaded last week and 6,500 are expected this week. Hopefully that will help to alleviate the problem.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT—GRANT MADE TO EDMONTON AMUSEMENT PARK PROJECT/ORDER IN COUNCIL QUERY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Madam Speaker, on November 3, I asked the Government about the $4.5 million contribution which had been made to Fantasyland in the West Edmonton Mall. I asked the question because I had studied the legal background of the Government's authority to make the grant and I had read the Auditor General's Report. I came to the conclusion that as far as I was concerned there was no legal basis for making that grant.

This morning I received a letter from someone who lives in Edmonton accusing me of being anti-west and arguing that I had no business attacking something that was so important to Edmonton and so valuable to the people there. It was a basis for tourism and so on. What happened today is that I am already beginning to harvest the poisonous crops the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) sowed about this issue when he accused people who criticized that grant of being anti-western.

My enthusiasm about western Canada I think is pretty well known. I have been to the West Edmonton Mall, I like it, and I am appalled that I have to write a letter to those people defending my belief that western Canada should have its aspirations supported by the Government. This is what I was talking about. It is just this simple. The Auditor General of Canada, whom I do not think even the Prime Minister accuses of being anti-western, analysed the contribution and found it was made in violation of the regulations.

The Industrial and Regional Development Act authorizes the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret) to make a grant or contribution to a commercial operation in respect of a project carried out or to be carried out for a purpose set out in any of paragraphs 4(1)(a) to (d) of the Act. I am reading from an anti-western tract. As per Section 2 of the Act, a commercial operation is a commercial operation as defined by the regulations. To qualify, if it is a service industry, it has to be designated by order of the Minister pursuant to subsection 7(2) of the Act. Well, there is no order designated pursuant to subsection 7(2) of the Act.

As a member of the Standing Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, I have easy access to the list of all the orders and all the publications and it does not appear. What that means, in my examination of the law, is that this contribution cannot stand and, as the Act says, when a contribution is made in violation of the Act without authorization under the Act, it has to be treated as a loan. The recipient has to give it back. That was the question I asked.

What is appalling is that when a Member of Parliament stands up to ask a question like this based on what the Auditor General says about the law, and on the fact that the Province of Alberta felt that this project did not need any money from the Government—and the Province of Alberta is not anti-western—and the fact that the former Government refused it because it did not think it came within the terms of the Act, it is said that that member is anti-western. The officials of the Government told the Minister that he did not have the authority under the regulations to make that grant. The Minister failed to pass the order, to have it published in the Canada Gazette, which could have validated it.

There was another illustration over the weekend of a Prime Minister and a Government which is determined to have their way, dividing this country by going out west and telling westerners that the reason Ontario is against free trade is because it does not want to see the west prosper.

That type of approach is so damaging to our country that I think again and again Members of the House have to stand up and criticize the Government for doing this. If it cannot defend its policies on the basis of national reconciliation, which is the platform the Government ran on and promised to deliver, if it cannot find ways of strengthening national unity, it seems the only way it can sell its act is on the basis of pitting one part of Canada against the other when there is no foundation for doing so.

This is a country made up of diverse regions. Very often issues arise. When we have an extra dollar in the till of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to spend, it has to be decided what region is going to get it, where will the CF-18s be built. It is tough enough when something like that comes along, but to go around inventing them gratuitously to try to get westerners feeling that the Hon. Member for York Centre and the people of Ontario are against them realizing their aspirations just because we want to be the only ones in Ontario who are well off is a form of regional racism. To see a Government go ahead and make arguments like that is so unworthy that one can only hope that members of that caucus at their regular meeting on Wednesday will read the riot act to the Prime Minister and ask him to get his act together and stop making false accusations that amount to a form of regional racism.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, the distinguished Member's argument is sophisticated. He is trying to do by one means that which he could not do by another. That is to say, justify the grounds for his question to the Government of the other day. The former Minister has suggested that he has researched the law. The fact of the matter is that he has not researched the case at all. I say that with some deference to the hon. gentleman.

The response I wish to give to the Hon. Member is precisely that which I gave in the late show on November 2. If the hon. gentleman is particularly interested he can refer to page 10658 of Hansard. I will quote from the position put forward by DRIE. Let me just say as a preface that the application in 1983, when it was received, was clearly eligible as a tourism operation under the regulations that were in effect at that time and continued to be eligible for consideration after the November, 1984 amendments, since no rejection was ever communicated to the applicant. Accordingly, no order in council was required. The hon. gentleman is a learned scholar of the law. I suggest he either overlooked that or found it convenient not to complete it.

The position of DRIE at the time, a position which continues to the best of my knowledge, is as follows, and I quote from Hansard:

> —the application for assistance for this project was received on December 7, 1983 and while tourism was dropped from IRDP on November 9, 1984 the application was protected under the grandfather provisions. It is clear from file documentation that the necessary permits, construction contracts and actual construction on this project was/were not entered into prior to December 7, 1983 and therefore the project was not prior committed within the terms of Section 29(1) of the pre-November 9, 1984 regulations to the IRDP. DRIE's position remains that the project continued to be eligible for assistance consideration under IRDP, notwithstanding the fact that the construction was well advanced in August, 1985 when the DRIE Minister made the actual decision to assist... The IRDP contribution facilitated the company in arranging the additional financing and consequently ensured that the project was completed within the originally proposed scope and timing. If DRIE had not offered the assistance at that time, it is highly probable that construction would have been delayed and the significant contributions that have accrued to Canada's economy over the past two years from this tourism facility would have been substantially lessened.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—VISITS BY NUCLEAR POWERED VESSELS TO ESQUIMALT/RESULTS OF GOVERNMENT INQUIRY

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, on November 5, I asked the Government for its response to a study done by Professor Jackson Davis of the University of California at Santa Cruz on the possible effects of a nuclear accident involving a nuclear-powered and/or a nuclear-armed submarine happening to visit Esquimalt, British Columbia. The possible effects of that as outlined by Professor Davis are absolutely horrendous.

He predicts two scenarios. The first deals with the incineration of a single nuclear warhead on a shipboard fire. The second deals with a hypothetical nuclear reactor accident. I would like to read about the possibility of an accident involving a nuclear warhead. The report states:

> Such an accident would produce a radioactive cloud containing plutonium-239, which would be carried toward the northeast, directly over Esquimalt/Victoria, by the most probable prevailing winds. The plutonium concentration in the cloud would exceed U.S. federal (NRC) limits for air contamination (10 CFR 20) by up to ten thousand times. Ground contamination from fallout would exceed U.S. federal (NRC) limits for unrestricted public use by up to one million times. Radiation exposure from inhalation of the plutonium would exceed U.S. federal limits for "routine" releases by up to one hundred thousand times.
> Prompt fatalities have not been considered here; instead casualties calculated here would take the form of latent cancers fatalities and genetic defects. Latent cancer fatalities incurred during the accident would range from 15 to 3,413 depending on thermal lofting, atmospheric stability and the radiation risk factor used, with an equal number of additional fatalities from severe genetic defects. The greatest contamination would occur nearest the accident site, although both air and ground contamination would remain well above the NRC limits up to 50 km from the accident site and beyond... Under unfavourable meteorological conditions the effects of such an accident could be experienced as far away as Vancouver.

Jackson Davis points out the excessive costs that would be involved in any attempt to clean up after an accident of this type. He also points out that we are completely lacking in any type of public program to deal with that type of emergency.

Last week in Victoria some 2,000 school children were involved in an emergency preparation involving the possibility of an earthquake. There has not been a major earthquake in Victoria of the type that they are considering within the recorded historical period, but it is a possibility and it had to be considered with children being involved.

For any accident involving nuclear vessels in Canadian ports, the emergency procedures are not made public so that the public does not know what is expected of them or what is to be done. Any worth-while emergency procedure has to be made public.

In view of the findings of Professor Davis' study, I raised three recommendations. The first was that the Government should discard its plans to purchase nuclear submarines for Canada. This is not only an expensive boondoggling exercise that will not contribute to Canadian security, but it also poses a real danger and threat to Canadian ports. Second, we should cease to honour the United States refusal to confirm or deny the presence of nuclear weapons on board vessels visiting Canadian ports. Third, we should review the entire policy of allowing nuclear powered vessels to visit Canadian harbours. The visit of foreign warships to the harbours of another country is an old established practice, and no doubt it had some value as a gesture of friendship in earlier times.

But today when we are talking about nuclear vessels that are powered with nuclear reactors, it is the same as siting a nuclear reactor within a densely populated urban area. Admittedly, the probability of an accident is low, but there has been Three Mile Island, and there have been accidents aboard nuclear powered submarines in the past.

Countries such as New Zealand and Iceland have taken a stand against allowing nuclear armed vessels to visit their harbours. Australia prohibits nuclear powered vessels from visiting the large Port of Sydney. There are only three ports in Canada which allow nuclear powered submarines to visit, namely, Esquimalt, Nanoose, and Halifax, which is right next to the riding of the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

If the Government decided that it was to allow these visits to continue, it should very seriously consider the recommendations of Doctor Jackson Davis when he said:

> Evacuation plans should be established, co-ordinated and rehearsed periodically . . . Decontamination plans in the event of an accident should likewise be formulated—The data needed to ascertain empirically the probability of nuclear accidents should be obtained from the U.S. military so that the risk to the Canadian public can be estimated as closely as possible . . . Detailed liability and indemnity regimes in the event of an accident should be negotiated in advance . . . Existing emergency response institutions, procedures and documents should be evaluated in light of accident analyses such as the present one.

In response to an early concern about this, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) said that Canada had done its own study and assured me that Canadians were protected. I would ask that the Government release the study to Canadians so that they can determine for themselves how well they are protected.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, first of all let me point out to the Hon. Member that nuclear propulsion is not new technology. Second, there has been no nuclear accident in the 34-year history of the allied nuclear naval program. Nuclear powered warships have steamed over 100 million kilometres and have accumulated over 3,200 reactor-years of operating experience. In that connection, I do not think that these ships or vessels or submarines carry anywhere near the size of the nuclear plant facility as was suggested by the Hon. Member.

The study recently released by Greenpeace on port safety is less a description of reality than a hypothetical model and, as such, can be manipulated to demonstrate any point that a speaker or author might want to make. Given the preconditions, assumptions, and pure guesses of what might happen, or what might influence conditions if an accident occurred, most of the resulting conclusions are necessarily speculative.

The model presented in the Greenpeace study does not support the need for an inquiry. What it does support is the need to make proper provision for safety co-ordination. Although the model suggests that, in a worst case scenario, thousands of Canadians could be put at risk, even the study recognizes the extremely low probability of such an accident. Finally, it should be borne in mind that accidents which have occurred to nuclear propelled and armed submarines have not resulted in radioactive pollutants being released into the environment.

Let me also assure you, Madam Speaker, that the Canadian Government is committed to keeping the Canadian public well informed on all safety related aspects of such naval visits and its own program to acquire nuclear propelled submarines. As a start in this process, general information briefing sessions have been initiated by DND. Two, one in Ottawa and the other in Esquimalt, have already taken place.

Furthermore, these media and background briefings will continue to take place until the final decision on the country of origin of the submarine is made. After that time the briefings and information dissemination will concentrate on explaining safety elements peculiar to the selected type. It should be noted that both of the submarines now being evaluated have impressive safety records and, security questions aside, a considerable amount of information supporting the safety of nuclear propelled submarines is already in the public domain.

The Government does not underestimate the need for detailed consideration of all safety aspects of nuclear propelled submarines and the elaboration of the highest standards for their safe operation. The Government is already actively engaged in an in-depth evaluation and planning process that is being carried out by specialized units at DND, ACEL, and AECB. The Hon. Member will be made aware of these detailed plans as they proceed.

STARRED QUESTION

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister Responsible for Multiculturalism): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call starred question No. 204?

SECTION 37(4) OF THE PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYMENT ACT

Question No. 204—Mr. Gauthier:

During 1985, 1986 and 1987 to date, did any person having been employed as Executive Assistant, Special Assistant or Private Secretary to a Minister, or in any of those capacities successively, take advantage of the provisions of section 37(4) of the Public Service Employment Act which provide for appointments without competition and, if so (a) how many (b) how many have been so appointed (c) in which departments have the positions been filled?

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister Responsible for Multiculturalism: Mr. Speaker, I have been given the following information by the Public Service Commission:

During 1985, 49 persons having been employed as Executive Assistant, Special Assistant or Private Secretary to a Minister, were entitled to take advantage of the provisions of section 37(4) of the Public Service Employment Act. During 1986 and 1987 to date, no person with such a position has been entitled to take advantage of the provisions of section 37(4) of the Public Service Employment Act and, therefore, no appointment flowing from that section of the Act has been made.

b) Among the 49 persons employed in 1985, 10 have been appointed under the provisions of section 37(4). It is to be noted that all of the 49 persons concerned acquired the priority entitlement conferred by section 37(4) of the Public Service Employment Act as a result of the change of Government in September 1984.

c) The ten (10) persons who were appointed under section 37(4) in 1985 were appointed to the following departments:

.Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission : 1

.Department of Communications : 1

.Employment and Immigration Canada : 4

.Fisheries and Oceans : 1

.Revenue Canada—Taxation : 1

.Transport Canada : 1

.Treasury Board Secretariat : 1

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 29

GATT RULING RESPECTING THE EXPORT OF WEST COAST SALMON AND HERRING

Mr. Speaker: I wish to bring to the attention of the House that I have an application for an emergency debate and I will hear the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly).

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I apply under Standing Order 29 for permission to debate an emergency.

Yesterday evening it was learned that a preliminary ruling by a panel of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade has come down against Canada with respect to our laws governing the export of West Coast salmon and herring. I suggest that this is a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration. If the ruling is confirmed later this month it will jeopardize the jobs of some 6,000 to 8,000 shore workers in a Canadian industry.

Women and small coastal communities in British Columbia are vulnerable. A woman working in the fishing industry is most likely to be a plant worker. In a number of West Coast communities, the processing plant is the major employer. Communities such as Prince Rupert, Port Hardy and Alert Bay depend on the income brought by these enterprises.

All British Columbians know that this is a serious threat to the fish processing industry in our home province, but it is much more than just a regional issue. While this ruling only applies to the export of West Coast salmon and herring, similar export restrictions on the East Coast make it ripe for further American challenges.

In the recently concluded trade deal with the United States, Canadian negotiators agreed not to maintain or to introduce import or export restrictions except in accordance with the GATT. If this ruling is confirmed the Canadian Government has lost its right to manage its own resources. Canada's sovereignty and its independence to set our own resource policy will have been surrendered.

This debate that I urge you, Mr. Speaker, to grant is not about a simple regional issue, nor solely confined to fisheries. It is a present and urgent threat to Canadian independence. I know you will agree that this is an urgent issue and that it should be debated in the House now. I look forward to your favourable ruling.

Mr. Speaker: Earlier this morning I received the application of the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands with respect to this matter and, obviously, given my own interest in my own province, I certainly agree with the Hon. Member that it is a very important matter. However, I do not think it is appropriate at this time to go into an emergency debate. There are other opportunities for the Hon. Member to raise the matter.

Having said that, it is not to be construed by anyone in this House and certainly not by the public who are watching and listening that this is not a matter of very grave concern to the Province of British Columbia and, as the Hon. Member pointed out, it may well be a concern to our fellow Canadians on the Atlantic Coast. However, at the moment I do not find that it is appropriate to have an emergency debate.

The House resumed from Monday, November 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Beatty that Bill C-77, an Act to authorize the taking of special temporary measures to ensure safety and security during national emergencies and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the War Measures Act, which was passed by the Canadian Parliament in 1914, has become Canada's all-purpose emergency legislation. Using this Act, it was possible to intern thousands of Canadians during World War I and to outlaw organizations such as the Communist Party and Jehovah's Witnesses. The War Measures Act made it possible for the internment of thousands of Japanese during World War II and the displacement of some 20,000 Japanese from their homes and properties which were subsequently sold. It was possible, using the provisions of this Act, to forcibly detain hundreds of Canadians during the FLQ kidnappings of October 1970. It was also possible at that time to use the legislation to authorize police raids on students and peace activists in Manitoba and Ontario.

Once the Act had been invoked and the powers given, Governments were very slow to remove them. The Act invoked in 1914 was in force until January 1920. The War Measures Act was invoked during World War II and was in force until 1951. Following the invocation of the Act in 1970, it was kept in force until April of 1971.

It has obviously been very easy for a Government of Canada to invoke a crisis atmosphere. In 1970, it was done very quickly and easily and, in the minds of many people, often for the wrong reasons. It was not because the Government feared an insurrection or an apprehended insurrection, but that it wanted to choke off legitimate democratic dissent in Quebec. It tried to permanently stop the growth of the independence movement in that province and, as some people said, to put Quebec in its place.

We know, Mr. Speaker, that it did not stop the growth of the independence movement. In fact, I would maintain, and many people would agree with me, that it was the incarceration of more than 200 people, none of whom were terrorists or revolutionists, but obviously nationalists, which led, to a large extent, to the rapid growth of the Parti Québécois and to its winning of an election using democratic means. Those were political aims and were not security matters at all.

Of course, as I indicated in my earlier remarks, it is very difficult to deal fairly, objectively and cooly with an issue when there is what the public perceives to be a very dangerous situation. It is very difficult for a government or parliament to deal with that. I know because when I, and most of my colleagues who were Members of Parliament at the time, voted against the War Measures Act, our constituents thought we were doing wrong. Nearly all the provincial Governments supported the then Government. We were alone. But later, the then Leader of the Official Opposition, the Progressive Conservative Party, the Right Hon. Robert Stanfield, praised our Party. He did not do that when we voted against the measure, he did it much later.

It is obvious to me and to others that the position we took was to a large extent vindicated and proven correct by subsequent events. I say that because, despite the claims made by the then Minister in the Liberal Government, Mr. Marchand, that there were thousands of members in the FLQ organization, the fact is that there were only a handful of people and there was no danger or threat of a revolution. It was the present Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), the then Minister of Justice, who promised that the reasons the Government imposed the War Measures Act would be explained at a suitable time. That suitable time never came. We still have never had from him or from the former Solicitor General any explanation as to why the War Measures Act was imposed at the time.

As I have already indicated, even the political aim of smashing the separatist movement failed. In fact, the action was counter-productive because it was responsible to a large extent for the election of a PQ Government in 1976. It is perhaps easy to be right with hindsight but, in this case, members of the New Democratic Party were right at the time. Some of us paid for it politically.

Having had that experience, I would want the successor legislation which we are discussing at the present time to be far better than what we had. In this way the kind of misuse of the Act and the way in which people have been mistreated, for example, the Japanese, the Jehovah's Witnesses and the people in Quebec who were mistreated and lost their democratic rights, would not happen again. We are not satisfied that the Bill we are discussing today will accomplish those aims or see that the excesses which were permitted on using the War Measures Act will not be used again.

Let me point out some of the difficulties we see with the present Bill. The public welfare emergency which is dealt with in Clauses 3 and 6 of the Bill directly affect the provision of goods and services in Canada during an emergency. As such, it is seen as legislation which can be used to end legitimate labour stoppages. The Canadian Civil Liberties Association stated in its submission to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) on October 5 of this year the following:

> Despite the economic disruptions which may be inflicted by strikes in the post office, the railways, or even the auto industry, we would be loath to see them become ready targets for emergency powers.
> While there may be some circumstances in which some strikes have to be terminated in the public interest, we believe it is preferable that such action be taken in the context of well-balanced labour legislation or by specific statutes narrowly addressed to specific circumstances.

I point out to Hon. Members that that is precisely what we have done with regard to the Post Office and the railways and what we might very well do in respect of the current airline dispute at Air Canada. We do not need that type of provision in this Bill.

Public order emergency is defined in Clause 14 of the Bill as "threats to the security of Canada" based on the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act. How can we be sure that the distinction between subversion and dissent will be respected? CSIS is having great difficulty in doing so.

As I pointed out earlier, we have as an example of that the surveillance performed by the RCMP and CSIS of poor Nick Turnette in Winnipeg. Many things can be said of him, but he has certainly never said or done anything no one who knows anything about Winnipeg or Nick Turnette would suggest it for a moment—that could be classified as subversive. It would be ludicrous and laughable if it were not so sad to see how the activities of CSIS are being misused.

International emergency is defined as a threat to any country in which the political, economic or security interests of Canada or any of its allies are involved. That is contained in Clause 25 of the Bill. It is far too broad a power. Who would want to threaten someone with sanctions for simply carrying out normal business practices that could be construed as against the interests of Canada or its allies? The Canadian Civil Liberties Association points out that there are few places in the world in which Canada or its allies do not have political, economic or security interests.

War emergencies in this Bill are virtually unchanged from the provisions of the War Measures Act. Is this really good enough for a country which has seen such rapid development in human rights legislation and organization over the past 20 years?

In conclusion, I want to say that the Minister was quite critical of the excesses of the War Measures Act in his remarks, and quite properly so. A body which acted against the War Measures Act in 1970 is the Canadian Civil Liberties Association. If the Minister is sincere about wanting to remove the excesses of the War Measures Act he should listen carefully to the association. It certainly does not support the Bill as he has drafted it.

In its submission to the Minister the association has asked time and time again for more precise drafting and specific definitions of the powers being granted to the Government under the provisions of this Bill. In the end, it makes 23 recommendations to improve the Bill. The recommendations are as basic as wanting a simple definition of the word

"emergency" so that the law can only be invoked when there is imminent and serious peril to the lives and health of many people. It also asks for an independent adjudicator appointed by the Canadian Labour Relations Board to award compensation for those ordered to perform duties in connection with the use of emergency powers. It also asks that the Government accept the duty to provide compensation for those injured by the exercise of emergency powers. Surely, if the experience with the Japanese Canadians is to mean anything, then there must be a clear-cut responsibility to negotiate compensation—not just the power to do so but the duty to do so. After all, the Japanese have been waiting 45 years, and they still have not received compensation for the injustices perpetrated upon them.

Finally, the association makes a request to limit the Government's power to prohibit and regulate assemblies during public order emergencies. As the association states, the right of assembly is fundamental to a democratic society, and perhaps it is the key right to achieve the goals of democracy. In the words of the association:

> In so many ways, the right of peaceable assembly serves as a prerequisite to the existence of other freedoms. It represents one of the most potent ways that citizens can challenge excesses of government power. Indeed, one of our concerns is that this power might be used to prevent legitimate critics from effectively calling into question the very declaration of a public order emergency.

In the end, democracy must hold sway, if our form of government is to mean anything at all. If a government limits or even threatens to limit the power of assembly we have the very real possibility that force will be substituted for democratic principles. I remind Hon. Members that that is precisely what the Government of South Africa does in order to maintain the power of the white minority over the huge black majority in that country. We do not wish that situation to even be possibly used in Canada.

We ask, do we not have confidence in our democratic ways? In this legislation can we not say that the democratic rights of Canadians come first and limitations on them must always be tightly drafted to cover specific situations in order that the climate of repression and fear, which has too often been used by Governments in the past, will be replaced by confidence in our people and in their inherent democratic sense?

For the reasons that I have outlined, we will not vote for this Bill, certainly not in the form in which it is drafted at the present time.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I listened with interest to the Hon. Member's speech on Bill C-77. Would the Hon. Member care to comment or expand upon an issue that I raised yesterday in my speech when I questioned whether this type of legislation should come in under the auspices of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) rather than the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

My feeling then was that this legislation would be used mainly in peacetime; it would deal with disorder and disruption within the country when we were not at war. War is certainly the most unusual and most unlikely type of situation in which this legislation would be used. In stating that, I do not in any way cast negative aspersions on the integrity, honesty, or ability of the Minister of National Defence. I meant it more in an academic manner.

I wish to ask the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) if he agrees that legislation like this should be in the civilian domain as opposed to the military.

Mr. Orlikow: I certainly agree with the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn). I can only speculate and guess as to why it was the Minister of National Defence who brought in this Bill. I suppose the reason is that once the Bill is imposed it is the Armed Forces that carry out its provisions.

I certainly agree with the Hon. Member for Brant, both in principle and in fact, that this is a matter which deals with the whole question of justice, controls, and a reduction of the democratic rights of the people that are involved in the use of this Act. Therefore, I believe that this Bill should have been brought in and a decision to implement it should be made by the Cabinet on the recommendation of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) rather than the Minister of National Defence.

My view has nothing to do with how I feel about the present Minister of National Defence, the Minister of Justice, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher), or any other Minister. It is pretty obvious to me that this Bill should have been dealt with as a matter of our whole system of justice and how it affects the democratic rights and freedoms of the people of Canada.

Mr. Hopkins: I wish to ask the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) if he believes that the clauses dealing with international conflict and war are strong enough or too strong, and if he agrees that strong measures are needed for direction under those particular circumstances?

The second question I wish to pose deals with the compensation part of the Bill where, under Part V, a Federal Court judge becomes the assessor to assess cases when complaints come requiring compensation for citizens of Canada. First, they decide whether the citizen has a case in point, and whether he or she deserves compensation. They have the authority to make that decision under this Bill. After the case is heard, and if the citizen is not satisfied with the decision, the only manner in which the case can be appealed is back to the Federal Court where the decision came from in the first place. The Federal Court assessor or judge will then make a recommendation to the Government.

The one thing that the assessor cannot do is increase the amount of money as far as the Government is concerned, because it has already put a ceiling on what it will pay by way of compensation. Clause 50(3) states in part:

(3) The decision of the Assessor on any appeal under this Part is final and conclusive and is not subject to appeal to or review by any court, except in accordance with Section 28 of the Federal Court Act.

That latter part simply means that there is no appeal as long as the court follows the due process of law and the rules of natural justice. If the court does not base its decision on a mistake of fact or law, or interpretation thereof, in essence what it means is there shall be no appeal.

Does the Hon. Member feel that in this particular clause the Government is in fact setting up its own legal system to manage this Bill? Indeed, is it being its own decision maker in the end? It is the one that will decide whether or not a Canadian citizen deserves compensation.

It is interesting to note that under the War Measures Act a Canadian citizen had the right to take a case to a county or district court and from there they could automatically go to the Supreme Court of Canada. We know that that is a long route, but a citizen did have that option. Is it fair that a Canadian citizen should stop at the Federal Court of Canada and not have access to the due process of law throughout the legal system of Canada from the bottom up to the Supreme Court of Canada?

Mr. Orlikow: I am not a lawyer, and obviously I am not an expert. I am hesitant to give answers to the somewhat technical questions asked by my hon. friend. However, let me state that I am very doubtful that I would wish to support any legislation which states that there can be no appeal from a decision made by any judge. I certainly have reservations about that question.

In respect to the question on involvement in international matters, I wish to put on the record the view of the Canadian Civil Liberties Association in one of its recommendations for changes in this Bill. It states:

A re-definition of international and war emergencies so as to avoid situations made possible by the current Bill in which emergency powers could be invoked in Canada in response to innumerable and various circumstances elsewhere in the world that only remotely, if at all, affect Canadian interests.

In their brief they use an illustration that Canada has some business and commercial involvement with companies in Indonesia. They say that if there were some kind of emergency or revolution in Indonesia our involvement there, which would be very tenuous, might be used under the provisions of this law to invoke the Emergencies Act in Canada.

I do not feel I could give a more specific answer than that. It points out my feelings and the feelings of the Canadian Civil Liberties Association and the Canadian Bar Association, that before the Bill is passed a great deal of very careful consideration must be given to it clause by clause.

Mr. Charles-Eugène Marin (Gaspé): Madam Speaker, the second reading of the Emergencies Bill has helped to put some distance between us and the memories of the War Measures Act that still come back to haunt us.

When the Emergencies Bill and the Emergency Preparedness Bill were tabled on June 26 this year, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) laid bare the fundamental defects of the present legislation.

"Experience has shown", he said, "that the War Measures Act does not provide for the desired moderate response to national emergencies in peace time. History's painful lesson has been that the Act gives the Government sweeping powers without any guarantees for the fundamental rights of Canadians".

The time has come, not to rewrite history but to prevent a tragic repetition. By adopting this new legislation, we will also bring Canada's laws in line with this country's international reputation. The Summit meeting of heads of state and heads of government from Francophone countries held recently in Quebec City demonstrated the prestige Canada enjoys among both rich and poor nations. Canada owes its reputation to the hospitality, the readiness to share and the respect for the differences of others that is customary among Canadians.

In this context, the War Measures Act is shockingly out of place. It is surprising, to say the least, that Canada is practically the only democratic country—unlike its provinces and territories—that does not have appropriate legislation to deal with emergencies.

The Emergencies Act will correct this anomaly so that the Government will be able to respond to national emergencies through the use of means that, while extraordinary, will be limited to what is strictly required. The Government will be in a position to deal with four main types of national emergencies: public welfare emergencies, public order emergencies, international emergencies and war emergencies.

The Emergencies Act will provide for parliamentary review of the use of emergency powers and their revocation. It will oblige the Government to return to Parliament for any renewal or amendment of a declaration of emergency and to answer to Parliament for the use of these powers. The legislation will limit where and when emergency powers are used and will make it possible to respond appropriately to each type of emergency. Finally, it will enable the Government to act quickly, thus limiting physical injury or material damage.

The Emergency Preparedness Act will also reflect the federal Government's desire to be able to respond more appropriately to the needs of Canadians in a state of emergency. It is in this perspective that the legislation will define the role, responsibilities and mandate of Emergency Preparedness Canada.

Furthermore, with the tabling of this Bill, the 1981 Emergency Planning Order has been repealed. The Order was criticized because of its wording, which was very open to misinterpretation, and its legal basis. In fact, it was based on a royal prerogative, not a statute, and has now been replaced by a Cabinet directive until orders arising from the new legislation can be drafted.

There are times when the subject matter of certain Bills is so important that unanimity should prevail over partisan concerns.

The legislation we are considering on second reading today fits this category.

Madam Speaker, the abolition of the War Measures Act and replacing it with new legislation means the end of a nightmare for those of us who are from Quebec and comes in response to a requests made by Members of all Parties represented here, requests that still echo between the walls of this House.

Madam Speaker, as a Quebecer and a Canadian, I am proud that I and, with me, all Members of this House are being asked to turn a stormy page in our history and write another, more peaceful chapter.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly).

[English]

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to make a few remarks on Bill C-77 respecting the Emergencies Act. We should begin by recognizing that all Members of the House and most members of Canadian society would agree on certain basic principles. I think it is helpful if we begin from a recognition of those principles.

If we take the most minimal definition of government, we would agree that it exists to provide for the good order and security of our society. We would agree that a government must have adequate power to protect society from threats to good order and security. We would also agree that in granting such adequate power to government Parliament must build in adequate protection for the rights and liberties of groups and individuals.

There is a recognition that emergency powers themselves can create a threat to the good order of society if those emergency powers are abused. Indeed, the Canadian Civil Liberties Association suggests that the abuse of the War Measures Act in 1970 was a contributing factor to the subsequent abuse of human rights by the RCMP. It quoted the testimony which RCMP Sergeant Robert Potvin gave to the McDonald Commission. When referring to the War Measures Act, he said:

> And so, in our minds, while the Act had been revoked, the situation had not changed, and that to some extent many of the same measures that had been used at that time seemed to us to be still necessary. And so there was a kind of attitude, if you will, that prevailed among those of us that were doing the work.

It is absolutely essential that adequate power for government to protect against threats to society must be balanced by adequate protection for groups and individuals so that these powers are not abused.

We all know the saying of Lord Acton: "Power tends to corrupt; absolute power corrupts absolutely". It is a fact that in a time of crisis a panic atmosphere often develops which allows the Government and the authorities to take action which would not be allowed in a time of more sober reflection.

This measure gives the Government much wider latitude to deal with situations than Canadian people would wish, in a time of reflection. Individual rights would be ignored or trampled upon. Right now we are in a time of comparative calm when we should be able to look at Bill C-77, the Emergencies Act, in a spirit of reason, looking at both sides of the question.

In general, while maintaining the balance between the requirements of the state and the need to protect the rights of individuals, Members of the Opposition might be expected to champion the rights and liberties of individuals and to oppose strongly the increase of government bills at the expense of those rights. Conversely, government Members might be expected to insist on broad enough government powers to deal with any conceivable emergency. These are the traditional roles that the Government and the Opposition have tended to play in Parliament when dealing with this kind of emergency legislation. Perhaps this might be a very good time to have this kind of a debate. We are not that far away from an election when it is very likely that we will be changing which side of the House we sit on. It is a good time for us to be thinking about the arguments of the other side.

New Democrats, as we contemplate the possibility of being in Government, will want to ensure that government will have adequate authority to deal with emergencies even as we continue to be concerned about the need to protect individual rights and liberties. I am sure that government Members will want to be thinking of the time not too far distant when they will be sitting in opposition. They will not want the Government to have undue powers. I urge government Members to have that medium term point of view—not a long term point of view but a medium viewpoint, instead of an exceedingly short term one.

We can look at the way in which the old War Measures Act has been abused. I think all Members here recognize that fact, and feel it is long overdue for the scrap heap of history. When we look at the old War Measures Act we see a couple of very shameful incidents in Canadian history, perhaps the foremost of which is the deportation from British Columbia and the internment of the Japanese during World War II. This is something that cannot be considered by intelligent Canadians without a sense of shame.

I said that we should be conducting this debate this morning in an atmosphere of a spirit of reason. At the same time we have to bring a certain degree of commitment and emotion to this debate. When we look at the way we treated the rights of Japanese citizens in Canada during the Second World War we cannot feel anything but shame. These people were forcibly evicted from their homes, their homes were seized, their businesses and properties were expropriated, they faced restrictions on travel and their families were separated. Ken Adachi in his book The Enemy That Never Was points out that no Japanese was ever convicted of espionage and yet we treated the Japanese as being enemies of Canada solely on the basis of race, a most shameful example of the way in which we trampled upon the rights and liberties of Canadians. The native born nisei and the naturalized issei, that is the Japanese who had been born in Japan and had come over here and taken up Canadian citizenship, were treated worse than the issei aliens, that is the Japanese who had come over here and had never taken out Canadian citizenship, because the issei who had never been naturalized were under the protection of the International Red Cross and the Spanish embassy. We treated our own citizens more shamefully than the aliens who were still citizens of Japan, a country with whom we were at war at the time. That was a shameful incident in Canadian history.

We could look at the false emergency of 1970 when the War Measures Act was proclaimed, and yet the reasons for the proclamation of that War Measures Act have never been justified. We have heard many times what the then Minister of Justice who is today the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) said, that it was his hope that someday the full details of the intelligence upon which the Government acted can be made public because until that day comes the people of Canada will not be able to appreciate fully the course of action which has been taken by the Government.

Certainly the Members of our Party, the majority of whom voted against the imposition of the War Measures Act at that time, would very much like to have the details of that shameful situation made public. From everything that can be determined right now there was absolutely no justification for that Draconian law being applied at that time. Four hundred and ninety-seven people were interned, in most cases for no other crime than the crime of believing in Quebec nationalism, having exercised their democratic right to speak and organize in favour of Quebec nationalism. Fewer than 20 of that 497 were convicted, mostly on minor charges to which they pled guilty. Indeed, René Lévesque pointed out that we cannot help thinking and saying that this degradation of Quebec was intended quite deliberately. He says that "the half Government", referring to the Bourassa Government, "we had until now has been swept away by the first hard blow". He added that:

> the Québécois are witnessing an operation aimed solely at 'disorganizing and dislocating, or at least trying to compromise and demoralize as much as possible, most of the groups and organizations that give a democratic expression to the Québécois' most legitimate aspirations and collective needs".

That is the way in which René Lévesque saw the imposition of the War Measures Act at that time when he was working for what he considered to be the best future of Quebec, a person who the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) spoke of as being perhaps the greatest democrat that Canada has ever seen. Perhaps that is the typical hyperbole of the Prime Minister but certainly René Lévesque had a great commitment to democracy. Yet he saw the imposition of the War Measures Act as a deliberate attempt to trample the rights of the Québécois into the ground.

It is this completely unjustified use of power under the War Measures Act that we objected to at the time. Finally the then Leader of the Opposition, Robert Stanfield, admitted that he had been wrong in supporting the War Measures Act when it was imposed in 1970. It is well past the time when it should be disposed of. It should no longer be in the statute books of Canada. If for no other reason, I welcome the introduction of Bill C-77 for the statement in one of its clauses that the War Measures Act is hereby repealed.

We have, however, a lot of problems with Bill C-77 itself. As the Canadian Civil Liberties Association points out, it in turn gives very sweeping powers to the Government in times of emergency. It defines four different kinds of emergency. It talks about public welfare emergencies, times of civil disorder, international emergencies and war emergencies.

Clause 38 gives the Government complete carte blanche in terms of war emergencies. Let me read Clause 38:

> While a declaration of a war emergency is in effect, the Governor in Council may make such orders or regulations as, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, are reasonably necessary or advisable for dealing with the emergency.

The preamble says this Act has to be subject to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Canadian Bill of Rights. We can ask whether Clause 38 does not give the Government such complete power that the Charter would have very little effect. Indeed, it is questionable whether this does not give the Government the kind of power which would have allowed it to treat the Japanese in the shameful way in which they were treated in World War II had this been the law of the land at that time.

The Civil Liberties Association points out that the powers that are granted to the Government under this legislation tend to be too broad and too sweeping for the crises with which they are supposed to deal. In turn, the emergencies are too vaguely defined. The Civil Liberties Association suggests that there should be a much tighter requirement for the Government to justify its need for this kind of legislation, to point out to the Canadian people, Parliament, and the courts why the existing legislation is not adequate to deal with individual crises as they arise. Instead, it is only necessary that the Government declare that such an emergency exists in the opinion of the Governor in Council.

One of the provisions of this Act which may be forward-looking is the provision for compensation, Clause 46. Unfortunately, when we look at Clause 46 we see:

> (3) Any sum recovered by the Crown pursuant to an action under subsection (2) shall be applied

(a) first, to payment of the costs actually incurred in the action and in levying execution, and

(b) second, to reimbursement of the Crown for the compensation paid to the person whose rights were subrogated, and the balance, if any, shall be paid to that person.

We are talking about a great new right of compensation for individuals who suffer from the imposition of this Act, yet when it comes to them receiving any financial compensation they are last in line. The Government looks after the recovery of funds for itself first.

In Part VII, Consequential and Related Provisions, there are some amendments to the Energy Supplies Emergency Act, 1979. The Energy Supplies Emergency Act gives the Government powers to deal with our energy supplies in the event of an emergency. I hope I will learn in committee how that Energy Supplies Emergency Act will be affected by the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal which says that in the event of any kind of energy shortage the United States will have access to Canadian energy supplies in the same proportion as they have in the past. How will that impact upon the Canadian Government's power to control energy supplies in the event of a national emergency? I suggest that that power is being very seriously compromised.

The Canadian Civil Liberties Association has made a number of very positive suggestions that should be considered very seriously by the committee. Perhaps the most basic is that the Government should create and circulate a working paper for Members of Parliament and the public. The paper should link the kind of anticipated emergencies that provoked this Bill with the kinds of powers with which the Government seeks to address those emergencies. In other words, the Government should be much more specific.

All sides of the House have agreed that we want to move away from the Draconian legislation that we had under the old War Measures Act. We are looking for a new regime, a new provision that will give the Government sufficient power to act in the event of emergencies. We are all agreed on that, but we must find some way to ensure that the rights and liberties of groups and individual Canadians are protected. We are very concerned that Bill C-77 does not do that.

The Canadian Civil Liberties Association calls upon the Government to produce a working paper so that we can see specifically what the Government is trying to do and how it is trying to do it. Then we can study Bill C-77 in committee in an effort to produce legislation which will do that which Members on all sides of the House want to have done.

Unfortunately, the Bill in its present form does not give the protection for the individual rights and liberties which we feel are essential for Canada to remain a strong democracy. On that basis we are not able to support this Bill. If the Government insists on pushing it through, we look forward to having changes made in committee which will make it more acceptable to the Canadian people.

Mr. Ferland: Madam Speaker, I have a question for my colleague. He said the law was very strict. Of course, he referred to the problems experienced by the Japanese during World War II, and I should think that all Hon. Members deplore such incidents. However clause 37 provides that the act remains effective for only one year; in other words, from the moment the war measures are implemented the legislation has to be brought back before Parliament after 365 days, unless it has been repealed before. I should like to know how my colleague feels about clause 37 of the legislation in particular, and about clause 36 as well.

[English]

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, obviously the limitation of one year is helpful, but Clause 41 provides that the Act can be continued for a further period of 360 days and that it can be repeatedly continued. Therefore, the limitation of 360 days means that there will be a review at the end of one year and that it may then be continued. I do not believe that that will in any way safeguard the rights of people who are being impacted upon. As we all know, in 1970 the War Measures Act did not need to be in effect for a whole year in order to affect very seriously the rights of the people of Quebec.

[Translation]

Mr. Ferland: Madam Speaker, my colleague is referring to clause 41, so I should like to quote it for the record:

At anytime before a declaration of a war emergency would otherwise expire, the Governor in Council, after such consultation as is required—may, by proclamation—

With respect to consultation, the Lieutenant Governor of each province must be consulted. So this has to be a guarantee provided under the provisions of clause 41, and I would urge my colleague to read them over again.

[English]

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, we certainly welcome all the additional guarantees in terms of consultations, having to come before Parliament, and so on. However, the fact remains that Clause 38 gives the Government carte blanche to make such orders and regulations which, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, are reasonably necessary or advisable for dealing with the emergency. It has those powers for a period of 360 days, which is a very long period in which to take a great many actions. There can then be reviews.

• (1210)

If we look at the kind of climate which existed in Canada towards Japan during the Second World War, and the kind of cumulative racism which was directed towards Canadians of Japanese ancestry, even with the provision requiring a yearly review it would have meant that it probably would have passed the House of Commons.

Indeed, even in 1946, after the war was over, a very respected Conservative Member for whom I have a lot of respect, Howard Green, was still making some very negative comments about the Japanese, saying they should not be allowed to return to British Columbia, and so on. Therefore, the kind of hysteria and panic which builds up in a situation of crisis seems to validate Governments taking this kind of sweeping action against the rights of individuals. What we are saying in this time of comparative calm, is that we should build into this Act the kind of protection that will not be swept away in a time of panic.

Mr. Hopkins: Madam Speaker, I want to ask the Hon. Member a question about civil liberties, which becomes paramount in a Bill such as this. Perhaps I should ask him if he thinks it is really possible for any government to bring in a Bill of this nature that does not in some way affect civil liberties? I think that is the greatest challenge any political party could possibly have under the circumstances.

The Hon. Member stated that Bill C-77 should be worded in such a way that it did not affect civil liberties. May I ask the Hon. Member what amendments he would look to in order to prevent this from happening?

Secondly, with regard to the review committee process, what if we had 30 Members of the Senate signing a request that the declaration be tabled, or the continuation of a declaration be tabled in the House and be debated; or there could be a request from 15 Members of Parliament for a similar debate, a signed statement and the review committee would go through this. Does the Hon. Member think that, given a massive majority Government, for example, it is possible for that committee to really make an impact? It sounds good—we are going back to the parliamentary process, but does the Hon. Member see a weakness? Could the review committee really make an impact at a time when that committee is obviously going to have a massive majority of Members from the Government benches? Does that not really indicate that regardless of this Bill or any other Bill, the final essence of the administration of the Bill, its fairness, is going to rest with the attitude of the government of the day?

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the series of very important questions. First, with regard to whether it is possible for the Government to bring in any kind of legislation dealing with national emergencies which does not affect civil liberties, I will say, no, I think civil liberties will always be affected. However, I would draw attention to a statement made by the Canadian Civil Liberties Association. It said the idea is to make the invocation of emergency powers as politically vulnerable an exercise as we can make it. In other words, the Government should have to be very wary about exercising the powers it would have under any such legislation. That means that we have to build in safeguards.

The kind of amendments I would be looking for would follow the sort of suggestions made in the summary of recommendations of the Canadian Civil Liberties Association. I hope the committee will look at those very seriously and consider them point by point, and in turn that the Government will consider these amendments so that we can provide the maximum protection.

I do not think it is possible to have law that does not in some way impact upon civil liberties, and if I said it was, I really did not intend to do so.

With regard to the review process, I think the Hon. Member has it twisted. I think 15 Members of the Senate and 30 Members of the House of Commons are able to institute the review process rather than the other way around. Certainly, when a government has a large majority, I think it is very difficult sometimes to expect that there will be sufficient people in the Government to stand up and speak out against abuses. However, I still think it is important to have that kind of review process. Even if no corrective action is taken, the very fact that there is a public review process is a helpful stage. Not all governments have large majorities. I would expect that after the next election we will not have a Government with quite such a large majority. In fact, we might even have a minority Government that will be much more sensitive to the rights of individuals.

[Translation]

Mr. Marc Ferland (Portneuf): Madam Speaker, it is amazing to see just how anxious NDP mambers are to take office in Canada. But they would have to improve their position in Quebec where, according to a poll taken last weekend, they had only 8 per cent of popular support.

Having said that, Madam Speaker, I suggest that Part IV of Bill C-77 is somewhat confusing. We often get the impression that members of the opposition do not quite understand what this Bill is all about. Part IV of the Emergencies Act concerns "a war or other armed conflict, real or imminent". Part IV of the War Measures Act applied only to war, invasion or real or apprehended insurrection.

According to Part IV of Bill C-77, the declaration of an emergency must be justified and may be challenged. It is important to emphasize that point. Under the present legislation, the declaration of a state of emergency is based on "conclusive evidence that war, invasion or insurrection, real or apprehended, existed". In the proposed legislation, all orders and regulations would be subject to scrutiny by Parliament. No such provision exists at the present time.

Under Part IV of Bill C-77, Parliament might decide to reconsider or revoke a declaration of a war emergency. Such is not the case under the War Measures Act.

Part IV of Bill C-77 will be subject to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The War Measures Act is not.

Part IV of Bill C-77 provides for expiration at the end of 360 days. Continuation of a declaration requires the approval of Parliament. The current legislation provides for no expiry date. In Bill C-77, there are provisions for compensating persons having suffered damage or injury as a result of the application of the Emergencies Act. The present legislation does not include such provisions.

Finally, before the new legislation takes effect, the provinces shall be consulted and their views reported to Parliament. This is a new provision.

In my opinion, Madam Speaker, Bill C-77 which has been introduced in this House by the Minister of National Defence reflects and meets the expectations of Canadians.

Some may ask why the Minister of Defence is sponsoring this Bill rather than the Minister of Justice. I believe that it is time that Canadians realize, first, what role our army plays in peace time, and second, that emergency measures in Canada come under the jurisdiction of the Minister of National Defence. It is therefore important for the Minister of National Defence to be able to table such Bills and to defend them in this House.

A number of questions have been raised by many Canadians and by Members of the Opposition. I should point out that this does not surprise me on the part of the Opposition as they are often a bit confused. In fact, why is the Government introducing this Bill? The main purpose of the Government is to abrogate the War Measures Act and to replace it by a modern piece of legislation, better adjusted to the reality of the 1990's and the year 2000. Have no fear, Members of the Opposition, we shall still be in power in the year 2000.

How does the Emergencies Act differ from the War Measures Act? The Emergencies Act, which applies to all sorts of emergencies, provides for mechanisms and guarantees which are absent from the War Measures Act. In addition, it provides for compensation in the case of losses, damages and corporal or material injury and preserves the legitimate interests of the provinces. Of course, this Parliament is not used to a Government which consults the provinces and takes their aspirations into account. We now have one and I must say that the provinces are very happy about it. And this will certainly continue for a long time.

The other questions people are asking are: Which guarantees are offered by the Emergencies Act? What are the procedures to follow? How will the legislation protect fundamental rights and freedoms in an emergency? First, the Act is subject to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Canadian Bill of Rights. It is also in compliance with the 1967 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights of the United Nations in relation with the inviolable nature of certain fundamental rights, even during national emergencies. What would be considered an emergency and what are these rights? These rights include the right to life, the right to be protected from torture, inhuman punishment and slavery, the right to protection from the retroactive application of sanctions and the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion. In fact, other guarantees give Parliament the right to examine the use of emergency powers. Thus, the Government will have to give Parliament a concise explanation of the reasons why it has invoked the Emergencies Act, the opportunity to debate the issue and details of the special measures it is considering to deal with the situation.

Other guarantees which do not exist in the War Measures Act restrict the use of special emergency powers by the Government. These major restrictions have to do with a time limit, a geographical restriction to resort to emergency powers, the obligation to secure parliamentary authority to cancel the declaration of a crisis situation, the obligation to consult the provinces before implementing the act, and in the case of an emergency situation in only one province, the obligation to wait for the province to make a formal application before declaring a state of emergency. What a change from what we witnessed in the past!

In fact other Canadians are wondering why the Government now introduces this legislation. Indeed, we are honouring an election promise. Members of the Opposition are always taken aback when they see the Government living up to its election promises. I must say that right now most of our promises have been honoured, and it will not be long before we fulfill all our 1984 promises.

Recent catastrophic incidents in other countries—I have in mind the tragic accidents at Bhopal and Chernobyl, tornadoes in central Ontario, earthquakes in Mexico, and increasing international terrorism—are example of events which have made Canadians fully aware of the ever present and growing threat of a major crisis.

The October 1970 crisis underscored the gap between ordinary legal mechanisms provided under such legislation as the Criminal Code and the National Defence Act on one hand, and the extraordinary powers available under the War Measures Act on the other hand. Those who were in Quebec during the 1970s will remember the situation in which Quebecers were living at the time.

What is actually missing from our federal legislation in order to address an emergency? The laws of this country that deal with emergencies and grant special powers have many flaws. First, the War Measures Act is commonly viewed as being too vague and too drastic for public welfare emergencies and public order emergencies in times of peace. The few other provisions in other federal laws that can be used in emergencies have many loopholes. They are little more than a piecemeal mixture with little safeguards. The passing of emergency bills that might be put together in the hustle and bustle of an emergency could give rise to hasty actions frought with passions or excesses. Moreover, their passing would be delayed if the Government was not sitting and would become impossible if Parliament happened to have been dissolved at the time of an emergency.

The question often arises as to why the legislation is divided into four parts. Well, each definition is designed to limit the scope of each part of the Act to a specific, carefully delineated type of emergency. The powers available in each part are scaled to the type of emergency covered by each. In the majority of cases, one part only would be invoked, but under exceptional circumstances it would be possible to simultaneously invoke several parts of the Act.

We are asked by Canadians what types of situations the Bill will cover. We say that the Emergencies Act will only apply to national crises. The emergencies that could give rise to a national crisis have been divided into four groups: public welfare emergencies, public order emergencies, international emergencies and war emergencies.

What is a public welfare emergency? A public welfare emergency results from a natural disaster or accident so serious as to be a national emergency. The provisions dealing with emergencies are designed to allow the federal Government to mobilize the resources of the nation as a whole in order to meet a very serious disaster. All provincial and territorial governments have enacted emergency legislation to meet public welfare emergencies within their jurisdictions. Provinces and territories have acquired sufficient ability, resources and experience to meet most public welfare emergencies, by themselves or with the help of the Canadian Government, provinces or neighbouring territories. However, in a national emergency, the vast mobilization and coordination operation which might become necessary could only be organized by the federal Government.

When the direct effects of an emergency are felt mainly in a single province, the Emergencies Act provides that a public welfare emergency can be declared only if the province indicates that the emergency exceeds its own capacity or authority to deal with it. In serious emergencies which affect several provinces, all the provinces involved have to be consulted before the Act is invoked. In addition, the Act provides that the control or direction of a province over any police force over which it normally has control or direction, including the RCMP, will not be affected.

Canadians can therefore be assured that the Act will not be used lightly to deal with minor or localized emergencies.

What is a public order emergency and why does the Act apply to such emergencies? These are other questions asked by Canadians.

The Emergencies Act defines a public order emergency as an emergency that arises from threats to the security of Canada and that is so serious as to be a national emergency. The threats to the security of Canada are defined in the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act and concern mostly spying, sabotage, subversion, terrorism and attempts to overthrow the established Government. Legitimate dissidence is explicitly excluded.

The purpose of Part II of the Bill is to establish measures of limited application providing fully satisfactory guarantees to face such threats when they constitute a national emergency and when ordinary provisions prove inadequate. If the effects of the emergency are limited to a single province, this province must indicate that it is unable to deal with the emergency by itself before the emergency can be declared under the terms of Part II of the Act. In all cases, the Government will be obliged to consult the provinces affected by the emergency before invoking Part II of the Bill. The provisions of the Criminal Code will continue to be used to deal with emergencies of a less serious nature caused by instigators of public disorder.

People are wondering what the purpose is of Part III and why it is essential to the Bill. Part III of the Emergencies Bill deals with international emergencies. It gives the Government fully safeguarded and appropriately limited exceptional powers to act quickly in case of a serious international emergency, without having to resort to the draconian and controversial powers it is given under the War Measures Act. Before proclaiming a state of emergency under this part of the Bill, the Governor in Council must consult all the provinces to the extent that, in his opinion, it is appropriate and practicable to do so.

Part III enables the Government to take and implement, in co-operation with our allies, preventive and preparatory measures of a civil, military, economic and diplomatic nature to deal with the emergency and reduce tension. At the same time, it enables the Government, if necessary, to put the country in a state of preliminary preparedness for war, to start the process of mobilizing civilians and to take steps for emergency preparedness. Consequently, it acts as a deterrent against acts of aggression that are contrary to the interests of Canada or those of our allies.

What does Part IV say? Part IV of the Emergencies Bill deals with war emergencies and provides additional, fully safeguarded and appropriately limited powers to deal with such emergencies, powers that would not be provided under Part III. Part IV would apply only to a real or imminent conflict involving Canada or its allies.

So what is the purpose, Madam Speaker, of the War Measures Act and what are its shortcomings? The War Measures Act was passed by Parliament on August 21, 1914. Not many Members in the House today were present or even born at the time this Act was passed.

When World War I broke out, the Act was passed without dissent after only one-half hour of debate. It contains very few guarantees for protection of provincial interests, parliamentary review or civil rights. In any case, it will not be said that Bill C-77 was passed in half an hour. We will take the time to consider this Bill, and we want to make sure all Members of this House fully understand its implications.

The War Measures Act was quite similar to the Defence of the Realm Act which the United Kingdom passed on August 8, 1914. I am not sure, but there must have been similarities. This legislation was adopted quite hastily. Very extensive powers were thereby granted to the Governor in Council who could proclaim the existence of a state of emergency, then enact such orders or regulations which were deemed necessary or advisable for the security, defence, peace, order, and welfare of Canada. Under the Act, a state of emergency might be decreed by proclamation and, until it is revoked, this proclamation is conclusive evidence that a state of war, invasion or real or apprehended insurrection exists.

Such a definition does not make it possible for Parliament or the courts to question the assessment made by the Government of an emergency or the need to use the legislation. The British legislation expired a little after World War I while the Canadian legislation has never been revoked. If the Progressive Conservative Party had been in power for longer periods since 1914, it might have had an opportunity to revoke this legislation. But as you can see, Madam Speaker, we are not missing any opportunity; while we are here, we are bringing in major changes.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I doubt that!

Mr. Ferland: My honorable friend would have liked to be on the Government's side, but he has chosen to sit in the opposition.

It is generally felt that it is incumbent on the provinces to act to cope with peace time emergencies. In this case, how could one justify the provisions of the Emergencies Act dealing with public welfare emergencies? It may be that a peace time crisis could exceed the capacity or authority of a province to deal with it. In this case, the province or provinces involved could decide to seek the federal Government's assistance.

If a public order emergency occurred, it might be necessary to pool all the resources of the nation to cope with a crisis. Such a major operation could only be undertaken by the federal Government, because it alone has the power to requisition resources and move them from one province to another to meet an emergency situation. The provisions of the Act will make it possible for the federal Government to respond quickly to a province seeking an emergency declaration, pool the resources of the nation to meet the crisis, send help and divide in a fair way the burden of an intervention or the means to remedy the situation.

Where the direct impact of a public welfare emergency is mainly limited to a province, the Government could only declare that a public welfare emergency exists if requested to do so by the province directly involved.

In the case of serious emergencies affecting more than one province, each of the provinces involved shall be consulted before an emergency can be declared to exist.

There are rumors at large, mention is made of civilian internment camps. As you know, there are rumormongers everywhere. I have still a minute left, Madam speaker, so I will conclude on this. This Government has no plans for setting up civilian internment camps. The enactment of the Emergencies Act and the Canada civil protection legislation have nothing to do with that. People should not try to suggest that Bill C-77 will open the door to the establishment of camps for detaining Canadians behind barbed wire. No, this is not in the Bill. Bill C-77 is a bill that was thought out thoroughly and prepared in agreement with the provinces, after numerous consultations. It is a modern piece of legislation that meets the aspirations of Canadians of year 2000.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I have a couple of questions I would like to put to my hon. friend and fellow member of the Standing Committee on National Defence. One has to do with a very old legal tenet in British and Canadian law, that is, the right to sue for redress. In this case I am speaking of civil law.

Apparently this Bill would prevent that recourse to the courts. Instead, compensation would come from the Minister, a politician, and not from the courts. If a citizen is not satisfied with the amount of compensation, he or she could not appeal to the courts but only to an assessor who is named by Order in Council, in other words, by that Minister.

I do not wish to put my hon. friend at a disadvantage. I do not know if he has a legal background. I do not have a legal background. But it seems to me that this is contrary to the basic legal right that all Canadians should have, that is, the right to take a grievance, in this case a civil grievance, before the court and have the court, which is outside of the political domain, outside of partisanship, decide on the merit of the case before it, and not go to someone—and I will not call him a flunky—who has been appointed by the Minister to act as an assessor. Would my hon. friend comment on that?

Mr. Ferland: Madam Speaker, of course, just like my colleague who sits on the Standing Committee on National Defence, I have no legal qualifications and I am not a lawyer myself.

For the first time however, the measure now before us, Bill C-77, is the first emergencies legislation in Canada recognizing that if Canada or the Government unfairly hurts its citizens by its actions, the latter can hope for compensation.

Unfortunately, Madam Speaker, I lack the legal competence to answer his questions, but I am sure that the committee, when the Bill is referred to it, he and I will call upon legal experts who can reassure both of us.

Mr. Parry: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Portneuf (Mr. Ferland) knows full well that Bill C-77 creates a new category in Canadian jurisprudence, international emergencies. Clearly then the Government has an idea of the kind of crises that would be declared international emergencies.

For this reason, I would like to ask the Hon. Member whether he could give us some examples of the kind of crisis that will be declared under Bill C-77 as being an international emergency.

Mr. Ferland: Madam Speaker, I must say that I am not a jurist and that semantic exercises are always possible, but when we are speaking about an international emergency, we are all aware of the problems caused by sabotage, bombs, and so on. We only have to watch the evening news on television to realize that international terrorism has become a major problem. I believe that this legislation could eventually allow Canada to come to an agreement with a number of other countries on common measures to fight this international problem. This could therefore be considered as an international emergency and Canada could join with other countries to try to deal with this scourge.

[English]

Mr. Hopkins: Madam Speaker, I want to ask my hon. friend a question about the Bill of Rights. He mentioned at the beginning of his speech that the Bill of Rights did not apply to the War Measures Act. He will understand that when the Bill of Rights was passed in 1960 the Diefenbaker Government got a lot of publicity for bringing it forward and passing it. However, that Government made another declaration that the Bill of Rights would not apply to the War Measures Act.

In retrospect, does the Hon. Member feel that the Diefenbaker Government of the day should have let the Bill of Rights take precedence over the War Measures Act, so that some of the things he has been talking about would not have happened?

Also, the Hon. Member will know that the Premier of the Province of Quebec and the Mayor of Montreal requested in writing in 1970 that emergency measures be brought in. Does he feel that the Government of the day did the right thing by acceding to that request, or does he think that that Government should have ignored it? I think this question is very important, because we have heard many comments about the bringing in of the War Measures Act in 1970. However, it must be clearly understood that it was specifically requested by the Premier of Quebec and the Mayor of Montreal.

Did the Government of the day do the right thing or the wrong thing? That is what I am asking my hon. friend.

Mr. Ferland: Madam Speaker, naturally, we cannot expect anything but a loaded question from our Liberal friends.

We should perhaps reflect on the situation which existed in Quebec in 1970. Naturally, there had been a request by the Mayor of Montreal and the Quebec Government for the Canadian Government to take action. Did this necessarily mean that the Canadian Government had to invoke the War Measures Act? The Hon. Member is perhaps in a better position to answer because he was in the House then as a member of the Government which was in favour of imposing the War Measures Act in Quebec in 1970.

I believe that the Government could have used other measures and other methods than those provided by the War Measures Act. The Canadian Government used a cannon rather than a fly swatter to kill a mosquito. In my opinion, the Government used an act which was too strong and provided much too extensive powers to deal with the situation.

I then lived in Quebec City, not too far from the Quebec Parliament, and I must say that all Quebecers were surprised one fine morning to find armed soldiers at all the doors and around all Government buildings. There was something of a panic. We must also remember that the physicians were on strike in Quebec at the time. Things were really going well in 1970 in Quebec!

What we have to remember, Madam Speaker, is that if Bill C-77 had existed in 1970, Quebecers would never have suffered what a number of them did suffer. I believe that the Canadian Parliament invoked a much too strict and too strong legislation to deal with the situation at the time. I believe that at the time, the police had the resources to conduct investigations and keep the situation under control. They may have needed additional manpower, but there was certainly no reason to ask the army to act as though Quebec were at war with Canada or one of the provinces. I think the War Measures Act, as it was applied in Quebec, went far beyond what the situation warranted.

I may add that, at the time, I was a private citizen and did not have access to certain information. However, on the basis of what I read in the newspapers and what I was able to find out, I believe that the people who were here in the House at the time and who on the basis of the information they had were capable of voting in favour of proclaiming the War Measures Act in Quebec—I believe those people should have been far more critical and should have realized that this legislation went far beyond what the situation warranted.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The period provided for questions and comments has now expired. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

[English]

Mr. Althouse: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time for questions and comments has now expired. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) on debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity today to take part in the debate on Bill C-77. I listened very carefully to the speeches we have heard in this Chamber, as you have, Madam Speaker, and one thing is pretty clear, and that is that certain Members of other political parties insist that the decision by the Government in 1970 to proclaim the War Measures Act was unwarranted.

[English]

As a matter of fact, the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) asked a specific and important question of a member of the Conservative Party, the Hon. Member for Portneuf (Mr. Ferland). He asked whether in fact in 1970 the Government of Canada did the right thing, or whether the Government of Canada at that time should have refused the request made by the Attorney General of a province and a mayor of the largest city in the land. Of course, he did not get an answer to that question. The only answer, albeit inadequate, was that perhaps there was a need for a few more policemen or something like that and that the measures used were far too great—

Mr. Della Noce: Excessive.

Mr. Boudria: Excessive is the word. I thank the Member opposite. The Member has reminded me for a very good reason. He wants to let Canadians believe that the measures were excessive to the requests made. Let me remind you, Madam Speaker, of the request made at that time. I read from the letter:

> Under the circumstances, on behalf of the Government of Quebec, I request that emergency powers be provided as soon as possible so that more effective steps may be taken. I request particularly that such powers encompass the authority to apprehend and keep in custody individuals who, the Attorney General of Quebec has valid reasons to believe, are determined to overthrow the Government through violence and illegal means. According to the information we have and which is available to you, we are facing a concerted effort to intimidate and overthrow the Government and the democratic institutions of this province through planned and systematic illegal action, including insurrection. It is obvious that those participating in this concerted effort completely reject the principle of freedom under the rule of law.

That is the truth, and that was the request made by the Government of Quebec at that time. The request was not to send in six more policemen to patrol some place. Far from it. You have listened very attentively, Madam Speaker, to the statement I have just read from the Attorney General of the Province of Quebec at that time. For Members to stand in this House, either the Conservative Member who has just spoken—incidentally his Party supported the imposition of the War Measures Act at that time—or New Democratic Party Members, pretending that nothing happened, saying that someone in this House in 1970 cooked up this whole thing is just a little less than total honesty.

I read further from a letter sent by the Mayor of Montreal at the time. He said:

> The chief of the Montreal Police has informed us that the means available to him are proving inadequate and that the assistance of higher levels of Government has become essential for the protection of society against the seditious plot and the apprehended insurrection in which the recent kidnappings were the first step.

It is obvious the request made at that time was, indeed, very serious. I am not saying that the War Measures Act was not a blunt instrument. I will agree that it is too blunt an instrument, but you have to remember what was asked for was asked by a duly elected Government of a province in this country and the mayor of the largest city in Canada. Given those two facts, and given the instrument available at the time, it is a little less than honest for some people to claim, in hindsight, some 16 or 17 years later that the wrong thing was done.

Members of Parliament at the time stated, and have stated since, that we needed a new Bill because the War Measures Act was too blunt an instrument. I want to congratulate my colleagues in the Liberal Party for their foresight and objectivity in the way they have dealt with this topic.

When the Liberal Government in the past attempted to reform this law, the only thing we heard was partisan rhetoric from the Conservative Party, which Party refused to let this kind of legislation proceed, claiming that it was a diabolical plot on the part of the evil people in Government who wanted a new War Measures Act so they could use it again at every whim, or some nonsense like that. The present Party in Official Opposition is far more reasonable. We understand there is a need to modify the law. I think Members of this House on the opposition benches should be credited for that. It is my duty to bring it to your intention, Madam Speaker, as I know you would want me to do.

The Bill Before us is a very serious piece of legislation. It should not be taken lightly by the Government or any Member of this House. The Bill with which we are dealing can have, could have and would have an impact on the fundamental freedoms of the citizens of Canada if and when it was used, and hopefully it never will be. Notwithstanding, one needs to be prepared and one needs to have legislation to ensure that our country can be protected while at the same time adhering to a delicate balance so that the rights of Canadians are not trampled upon unnecessarily.

In 1970, like most Members of this House, I was not a parliamentarian. A few Members here have had the honour and privilege of serving here for a number of years, but most of us were doing other things. I was on staff in Parliament here travelling around the corridors of this building seeing people in military gear, battle dress as a matter of fact, carrying guns. Those were indeed very sad things to see. Hopefully we will never again see a day in Canada that would necessitate any kind of similar action.

No one wants this new Bill to be used. It is like buying life insurance. One does not buy life insurance with the intention of reaping the benefits, because obviously that does not happen. The present War Measures Act is a piece of legislation that has been in existence for a long time and is in serious need of amendment. We know, for instance, it was initiated by the then Conservative Prime Minister, Sir Robert Borden. It was passed through Parliament in very little time because our country was at war, or just on the brink of War World War I. Since then the legislation has been used only twice. The second time was during the Second World War and finally during the October crisis of 1970.

Madam Speaker, we in the Liberal Party have no intention of drawing out the debate in this House as a matter of course.

What we want is a thorough discussion in the committee that will be responsible for considering the Bill. Subsequently, there are certain proposals, certain concerns and grievances we will want to bring before the House, and we hope that the Government will then make the requisite changes to improve the Bill.

Madam Speaker, I see it is almost lunch time. I will continue my comments later today.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

TAX REFORM

FAMILIES—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ACCEPT CERTAIN RECOMMENDATIONS IN COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs tabled a report yesterday containing recommendations on tax reform which show beyond the shadow of a doubt that the Conservative Government and interest groups indicated before the committee report was even drafted that tax reform is unfair to Canadian families.

All Canadians remember the supposedly heart-felt promises of the Prime Minister to the effect that the Canadian family is the corner stone of our society, yet it was this Conservative Government which partially deindexed family allowances, it was this Conservative Government which reduced the maximum amount of the child tax credit.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all Members of the House to put pressure on the Conservative Government and force it to eliminate injustices towards families by endorsing the report recommendations aimed at doubling from $65 to $130 the benefit for the family's third child, raising the maximum income ceiling before reducing the child tax credit, and providing an amount of $130 for children over age 18.

DANGEROUS PRODUCTS

REQUEST THAT PRESSURE BE EXERTED TO FORBID WAREHOUSING OF NUCLEAR WASTE IN ABITIBI AND NOUVEAU-QUÉBEC

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, according to Mr. Hatcher of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, there are no radioactive waste disposal sites in Quebec, but such provincial institutions as Sherbrooke and McGill Universities as well as the École polytechnique actively participate in the various phases of the program.

In addition, according to a statement made in Ottawa last February 2 by Mr. Ladanyi of the technical advisory committee concerned with the radioactive waste management program, a group of geologists consider that there are a number of potential sites in northern Quebec, particularly south of the 50th parallel.

Mr. Speaker, we all know that these groups work in secret, and today I urge the Inuit, Naskapi and Cree people as well as the residents of Abitibi and New Quebec to put pressure on the Governments of Ottawa and Quebec so that their region not be turned into Canada's garbage dump where highly radioactive waste will be stored and buried.

ACID RAIN

REDUCTION OF TOXIC EMISSIONS—URGENT NEED FOR GOVERNMENT TO ENCOURAGE ADEQUATE STANDARDS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, 35 countries are now meeting in Geneva to discuss measures to reduce acid rain producing toxic emissions. Unfortunately, from the rumours which have reached us about the in camera meetings, it seems that Canada is objecting to strict standards.

At the same time, the Minister of the Environment, (Mr. McMillan) is congratulating himself for the measures being considered and the leadership shown by Canada. What leadership is he talking about? How strange it is to congratulate oneself for maintaining at the present level our emissions of nitrous oxides!

Since these emissions are a major cause of acid rain throughout the world, we should immediately reduce substantially the level of these harmful emissions and eliminate them in the long run. It is time to disassociate ourselves from the unecological acid rain policy of the United States. The Minister of the Environment should stop congratulating himself. It is time for him to insist that his delegation take a firmer stand and support adequate reduction standards.

THE CONSTITUTION

MEECH LAKE ACCORD—EFFECT ON NORTHERNERS—CALL FOR INFORMED DEBATE

Mr. Thomas Suluk (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, I spent the last two weeks in my riding and was concerned to hear many negative comments from northerners regarding the Meech Lake Accord. Not only is the former Leader of the territorial Government contesting the Accord in court, but many Members of the Legislative Assembly are telling northerners they are second-class citizens. I, for one, Mr. Speaker, do not believe that anyone in this country has the right to tell a group of people they are second-class citizens.

As well, it is being promoted on the public airwaves that the Accord enables the provinces to extend their boundaries into the Territories. The only discussion of this nature of which I am aware involves the Inuit of northern Quebec and their cousins in the Territories with regard to the islands off the coast of Hudson Bay which are presently within territorial jurisdiction.

I think it is time that informed debate and intelligent facts be presented to northerners to replace the fear and resentment that are now being promoted.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION—LEVEL OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I and the members of my Party continue to be perplexed and dismayed by the Government's cutbacks to Indian post-secondary education. We are fundamentally opposed to the recent changes which have been made by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) to the Indian post-secondary education assistance program.

These changes are denying Indian students access to post-secondary institutions. Hundreds of Indian students who have been accepted into these institutions are having the doors shut on them because of the Minister's lack of support.

How can the Minister, on the one hand, advocate Indian self-government and economic self-sufficiency and, on the other hand, put a cap on the number of Indian students who may receive post-secondary education assistance? Does the Minister not see the inconsistency here? He should be aware that many Canadians students and educators, Indians and non-Indians, do see the inconsistency. If he does not revoke these regressive measures himself, a new Liberal Government will certainly do so.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—SUPPORT EXPRESSED BY CANADIAN CATTLEMEN'S ASSOCIATION

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, there is an illusion, a dangerous illusion, that those who favour free trade are somehow less Canadian than those who oppose it. We are seen as prepared to sacrifice our culture and our sovereignty to the interests of material gain. We are even portrayed—as disposed to political union, all because we state that we are prepared to trade and compete openly with our neighbours. This is ironic, for the survival of Canada, as a sovereign and cultural country, depends greatly upon our prosperity. The weak are more readily absorbed than the strong, the timid more easily than the confident.

These words were spoken by representatives of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association on behalf of more than 100,000 members at this morning's meeting of the Committee on External Affairs and International Trade. I believe they are worthy of the consideration of all Members of Parliament.

Alberta cattlemen, who produce 40 per cent of Canadian beef cattle, support their colleagues from coast to coast and are in favour of free trade with the United States. Their history is Canada's history and what is good for cattlemen is good for Canada.

DEFERRED TAXES OWED BY CORPORATIONS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, for years NDP Members of Parliament have argued that our tax system makes poor and middle-income Canadians pay too much and less wealthy individuals and large corporations pay too little, indeed, often no taxes at all.

Now the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs of this House, which is comprised of a majority of Conservatives, has confirmed the truth of our analysis. It calls for taxing the banks and large corporations more and closing the loopholes in our tax laws which have permitted them legally to avoid paying their fair share of taxes.

One of the favourite methods used by these corporations is the provision for deferred corporation taxes. Some corporations will never pay these taxes. Consolidated Bathurst, MacMillan Bloedel, Stelco, Bell Canada and Imperial Oil have availed themselves of this right. There is now more than $30 billion owing to the Government in deferred taxes.

I suggest that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) change the law so that the companies which benefit from these interest-free loans be required to pay interest on loans.

Eric Kierans once suggested that the interest rate be set at 1 per cent over prime. If the Government adopted that proposal it would collect several billion dollars which could be used to finance programs which are needed, or to reduce the deficit which the Government seems so concerned about dealing with.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

IMPORTANCE OF BILL C-22 FOR CANADA

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the Liberals will hold their weekly caucus meeting tomorrow. They will certainly discuss the patent legislation, Bill C-22.

As he did two weeks ago, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) will try to convince his Leader and the Liberal senators of the importance of Bill C-22 for Canada, Quebec and Montreal, as this would mean 1,300 jobs in Montreal and $700 million in investments.

At this Liberal caucus meeting, the Quebec lieutenant, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), should assert his provincial leadership, and the caucus chairman, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), whom I consider to be very respectful of the House of Commons, should defend the authority of this institution.

It is the moment of truth for the Liberal Members of Parliament. No one will understand it if they are unable to face up to the unelected Liberal members of the Senate, unless the Liberals, especially those from Quebec, have been forced to sign a pact of obedience to the Liberal Government of Ontario. We will know the answer to this question when we see what happens to Bill C-22!

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, Canadians no longer use the term "sell-out" when they discuss the Mulroney-Reagan trade fiasco. They now see it as a giveaway.

Canada has given the United States free access to our energy and other natural resources. Canada has lost its right to control its own destiny.

We will now have to go cap in hand to U.S. Congressmen and Senators to seek approval to help our poor regions in times of crisis; our farmers, our fishermen and our plant workers. So it is no wonder President Reagan is now singing a new version of the U.S. National Anthem:

Oh say can you see,

Mulroney has given Canada to me.

Oh how proudly Americans stand,

On what used to be some poor Canadian farmers' land

And of course from sea to sea,

Canada's fishing industry is now ours for free.

America is truly the home of the brave

And Canada now will be the home of the slave.

PRIVATIZATION

DE HAVILLAND AIRCRAFT—SUCCESS OF PRIVATIZATION

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, the privatization of de Havilland Aircraft has been an outstanding success, vindicating the Government's action.

Since January 1, 1986, when the sale became official, the workforce has increased by 1,000. Research and development has also increased.

Recently, Boeing has proposed an anti-submarine version of the de Havilland Dash 8. The aircraft will incorporate the latest electronic technology, making this one of the world's most advanced systems, as well as having a purchase price of less than half of that of a large anti-submarine warfare aircraft.

In addition, there will be lower operating costs, for it will consume one-third less fuel than the competing four engine turbo-prop.

The aircraft will be available for both advanced and developing nations. Such an aircraft would be a major addition to Canada's Armed Forces where it would be used to ensure our sovereignty, and the product will be built in Canada.

Canada will benefit further, for it will receive new technology which will strengthen our aerospace industry. Furthermore, it shows that private industry is the vehicle which will ensure Canada's economic success.

It is very funny that Bob White and his union, who opposed the deal, are very quiet now.

Oral Questions

WINTER OLYMPIC GAMES

ARRIVAL OF OLYMPIC FLAME IN CANADA

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, today in St. John's the Olympic Flame began its long journey across Canada, to arrive in Calgary next February to signal the opening of the Calgary Winter Olympics.

This journey through Canada's cities, towns and villages will give all Canadians a chance to participate in this great event. While our hopes and our support will be riding with our elite Olympic athletes as they train and ultimately compete against the world's best, this torch relay will give ordinary Canadians—whether they are athletes themselves or, just like the rest of us, proud Canadians—an opportunity to share the spotlight.

I want to take this opportunity to congratulate the organizers of this event, and especially to congratulate the thousands of participants and volunteers whose efforts in this relay will truly make the Olympics the kind of success that all Canadians want.

To our Olympic athletes, let me say that our best wishes are with you as you go into your final months of training. We know we will be proud of you.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF OPPOSITION

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval): Mr. Speaker, the Free Trade Agreement covers an innovative range of disciplines such as telecommunications, computer science, tourism, architecture and engineering, which provide a wide range of services.

Canada and Quebec are net importers of services, especially in engineering. Lavalin in Montreal, for instance, is known the world over for its specialized engineering projects.

However, opening up markets for services is not enough. There must be free trade in services.

Today, communications and management consulting firms in Quebec are asked by companies to coordinate their product planning, production and distribution.

The two Opposition Parties claim that the Free Trade Agreement is worthless and should be scrapped.

Why are they denying professionals in Quebec a chance to take advantage of an additional market of 250 million customers? Why are they denying Quebecers a slice of the same pie Ontario is eating? Isn't Quebec part of Canada too?

EDUCATION

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION—CREATION OF NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL ADVOCATED

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, this morning this caucus met with the Canadian Federation of Students. A top priority of the Canadian Federation of Students in its policy area is the creation of a national advisory council on post-secondary education.

This is supported also by the Universities Association, by the Community Colleges Association, by the Canadian Teachers Federation, and by a wide variety of the business community. Indeed, it was a clarion call from the post-secondary education conference in Saskatoon.

In view of the clear body of opinion across the country, is it not possible for the Government to create an ongoing vehicle for the consideration of post-secondary education, preserving provincial jurisdiction but also recognizing the Canadian challenge and the Canadian need?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

BANKS' RECOMMENDATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday, following the tabling of the report of the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, the Minister stated that before any changes were made in the White Paper on Tax Reform, the banks would have to be consulted. Mr. MacIntosh, President of the Canadian Banking Association, announced yesterday that he would ignore the recommendation by the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. So the Minister has his answer.

Will the Minister endorse the position taken by the banks or will he defend the interests of Canadians and ensure that the private sector pays its fair share of the tax burden?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think it is quite clear that the objective and the direction of the White Paper is to increase the taxes that are paid by the banks, the insurance companies, and by the trust companies. The White Paper points out that they are not paying their fair share. I believe the effective tax rate is about 14.8 per cent federally, relative to the average of approximately 18.6 per cent or 19 per cent. The White Paper proposals are to get that average tax rate up into the 21 per cent range. That is the clear direction of the White Paper. I think the Hon. Member should rephrase his question before he draws a conclusion.

Mr. Axworthy: I would ask the Minister of Finance to rephrase his answer and simply indicate to the House whether in fact he intends to respond to the unanimous recommendation of the committee, made by members of all Parties, that a minimum tax be applied, as the only way to regain the fairness.

TAXES PAID BY FAMILIES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, what does the Minister define as fairness? How can he reconcile the fact that according to the Finance Committee's report the banks pay an average of less than 1 per cent of their Canadian profits while the Government itself has imposed new taxes that will cost the middle class family with two kids $447 additional taxes in the coming year? Is that his definition of fairness? Is there one definition for the banks and another definition of unfairness for families with kids?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has asked a couple of questions. Let me say to him that I propose to respond to all aspects of the proposals of the Finance Committee report. That will be done next month, when I put down a Ways and Means Motion.

Let me draw to the attention of the Hon. Member that a family earning $30,000, with one earner and two children under age 18, pays $4,150 in taxes. A single person under age 65, also earning $30,000, pays $6,485. In other words, under tax reform the family pays quite a bit less tax than the single individual.

I should point out that there is a significant drop in the amount of taxes that families pay as a result of tax reform.

• (1420)

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I would say to the Minister of Finance that while he may cite those tables, what he does not cite is that the Government has already raised taxes for families in the middle income level by over $2,000 in the past three years. All he is giving back is what he has already taken away.

FARM INCOME—ACCRUAL ACCOUNTING SYSTEM

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, let me just come to a final question about the committee's report. It says that the proposed changes in the White Paper may affect farmers more than any other group. In particular, it points out that changing the treatment of cash, income and losses, is going to have a devastating effect on many farmers.

Is the Minister of Finance prepared to say today that he will get rid of the punitive new accrual accounting method, which no one understands, anyway—what we do understand is it is going to cost the farmers a lot of money—that he will follow the recommendations of the committee, so that the farmers can get on with what they do best, which is farming, rather than fighting the tax bureaucracy of the Conservative Government in Ottawa?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member made reference to the fact of a tax change over the past three years since we took office. Let me also draw his attention to the fact that there have been other changes, too. The average mortgage on a $50,000 house today is $1,200 a year less than it was back in 1984. That is considerably more than any tax increase on that same family.

Let me also point out that well over a million jobs have been created in that time so that there are many more Canadians paying tax because they have a job. Those are the advances we have seen under this Government.

The Hon. Member just made reference to the proposal for a change in the accounting system for farmers. What he has said quite clearly is that he does not understand it because he said it was going to be devastating, that it was going to cost the farmers a lot of money. He does not understand that the key reason for this is to save the cash accounting system for the legitimate farmer, and to avoid the problems that will arise as a result of the ability of farmers, part-time farmers and other farmers who are not legitimate farmers, to write-off farm losses against other income. We are trying to save the cash accounting system for legitimate farmers.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON FISHING COMMUNITIES

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. On October 19, when the Minister was asked whether or not the current export regulations protecting our Pacific processing plants would remain in effect under the Prime Minister's free trade deal, she replied as reported at page 10135 of Hansard:

> There is no change in the situation. Those rights are protected under the free trade agreement.

Today we learn that thousands of jobs in British Columbia, and more in Atlantic Canada, are now at stake. What is the Minister now going to do to protect our fishing communities?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is confused. The point he is making I do believe refers to a GATT panel decision which has been leaked and has nothing to do with the free trade agreement we negotiated with the United States.

Oral Questions

PROTECTION OF FISHING INDUSTRY

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, this grievance was initiated by the United States through GATT, but when we asked the Minister and the Government on several occasions about how free trade protected the fishery, the Minister always replied: "Yes, free trade does protect the fishery". Will the Minister now admit that the Government has not secured any protection whatsoever for our fishing industry against either present or future American laws, when the Government negotiated the free trade deal with the United States? Will she now admit that she and her Government took the Yankee bait, hook, line and sinker?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, my previous answer still stands. I believe the Hon. Member is referring to a GATT panel and it is interesting to note that that opposition Party has always placed all its eggs in the GATT process, and has always maintained that Canada would be better off relying solely on the GATT than on a negotiated agreement with the United States. I again say he is dealing with a GATT decision and it has nothing to do with the free trade agreement negotiated between Canada and the U.S.

ENERGY—PRICING POWERS OF PROVINCES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to direct to the same Minister. My Party has pointed out that as a result of this agreement, Canada as a nation, and our provinces, are going to experience a significant reduction in powers. Specifically, on October 8 I indicated to the Minister that the provinces' rights, in terms of pricing decisions on energy, have been substantially altered and reduced as a result of this agreement. The Minister on that occasion said that was wrong.

Considering that today the former Premier of Alberta, Mr. Lougheed, has publicly stated there has been a reduction in the rights of the provinces in terms of pricing decisions, does the Minister stand by what she said on October 8, or is she now saying the former Premier of Alberta is wrong, as well as myself?

Mr. Shields: Well, you are sure wrong, Ed.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Socialist Party always asks the same questions, so he will get the same answers. The rights of the provinces are set forth in the Canadian Constitution, not in the Free Trade Agreement with United States. The negotiations that took place between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States were not about the Canadian Constitution but about free trade between Canada and United States. In this Agreement, Mr. Speaker, the energy sector and especially the Western provinces will find things they have been wanting for years.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows very well why, in his own briefing notes, the so-called sensitive issue was going to be left to the Prime Minister. It is because the Government knows, and the Prime Minister knows, that this Government is impinging upon the traditional constitutional rights of the provinces to control their own resources—and Mr. Lougheed has pointed that out.

PROCESSING OF FISH—GATT RULING

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question, this time on the related issue of the lack of Canadian Government control over a policy option. My question for the Minister pertains to a preliminary ruling in the GATT decision which says that Canada, if it is subsequently confirmed by a full committee of GATT, will no longer have the right to set regulations about the processing of fish in our own country as a precondition for export.

It states in the agreement:

> Both parties have agreed they will not maintain or introduce import or export restrictions except in accordance with the GATT, or as modified by the agreement.

Does this proposed agreement with the United States not lock us into accepting a GATT decision? I want to know the answer to that, yes or no?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think I should point out to the Hon. Member that Canada has been a member of the GATT for 40 years.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): He is against it.

Miss Carney: If he seriously suggests that the free trade agreement in any way affects our obligations under the GATT, I think he had better rethink his position on that.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the Minister that just for once she should read the agreement because she was wrong with Peter Lougheed, she has been wrong with me in the past, and she is wrong again today. Will she listen to the question and read the agreement?

TERMS OF CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I want to ask the Minister if it is or is not the case, according to this agreement, that in a subsequent decision reached by the GATT, Canada will no longer have the right, if it pertains to trade between Canada and the United States, to say no to the GATT decision? Will the Minister answer that, yes or no?

• (1430)

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, may I please point out to the Hon. Member that I was right in my original answer. I was right in the free trade agreement. I am right in saying that he does not have the faintest idea with respect to what he is talking about.

PROCESSING OF FISH—GATT DECISION

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, speaking about the free trade agreement, and as the finishing touches are being put to the economic marriage between Canada and the United States, we find that the Government's fiancé to the south is now charging us with unfair trade practices in exporting salmon and herring. What caused this prenuptial nastiness on the part of the United States? We have already given away too much in the dowry to the United States. Is it possible that we now have to give away the right to process our own fish?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, may I point out that this is a decision of the GATT which has been leaked during a period of consultation. We have received the report. We are very conscious of the number of jobs involved in this industry on both our coasts. We are looking at what options are available to us in consultation with the unions involved, the industries involved, and the provinces involved.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, this rule to which the United States is now objecting was made in 1905—some 82 years ago. The fact of the matter is that the Government does not have the political will to protect Canada's position before the GATT and that the United States sees this weakness as an open sesame to seize control over our natural resources.

Will the Minister not admit, realize and agree that it is absolutely necessary for the East Coast fishery and the West Coast fishery to have absolute control over the procedure of actually being able to decide how fish will be processed? If the Government does not rebuff this American attack it will have disastrous effects on the future of the fishery in Canada right from Newfoundland to British Columbia.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is only fair to point out that this attack on the GATT by the Liberal Party is in direct violation of the Leader of the Party who upholds the GATT as the only way in which we should settle these international disputes. Why do members of that Party not get their act together with respect to their position on the GATT?

GATT RULING—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. Since the jobs of between 6,000 and 8,000 Canadian shore workers have been placed in jeopardy by the preliminary GATT ruling against Canada's prohibition on the export of unprocessed salmon or herring, and since the trade agreement with the United States very clearly states that "both parties have agreed that they will not maintain or introduce import or export restrictions except in accordance with the GATT or as modified by the agreement", will the Minister tell us why the Government has bargained away Canada's option to accept or to reject the GATT ruling and with it the right of Canada to control its own resources in the best interests of the Canadian people?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I do not understand why the NDP, those great upholders of the GATT, those great upholders of the international global system, who, as long as it is protectionist are in favour of it—

Mr. Broadbent: Answer the question!

Miss Carney: —are taking a stand in terms of a GATT panel which concludes that we are totally guilty as charged. It does not allow any option for us to defend ourselves, to negotiate a settlement, to seek solutions, and to find an acceptable option which we can follow. They do not want to do that. They want us to say that we are guilty. They want us to just give away the fishing industry.

TERMS OF CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister this. If that clause does not mean anything then why did the United States insist on putting it in and why did Canada accept it? I would like the Minister to confirm that this agreement will allow the processing of Canadian fish in plants in Bellingham or Seattle by American workers and that Canadian workers will be sitting on a dock in the bay whistling "The Free Trade Blues".

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I should point out to Hon. Members that should they choose to read the "Elements of the Agreement" they will find that from the very beginning and throughout the entire document we are promising on both sides as partners to this agreement to operate within the spirit of the GATT. In fact the free trade agreement itself is provided for under Section 24 of the GATT. Why they would expect us to deny our GATT obligations is beyond all reason.

In respect to this fishing dispute, I have indicated that we are concerned about the impact on the workers. We are seeking solutions—

Mr. Broadbent: Oh, boy!

Miss Carney: "Oh, boy" says the Leader of the NDP. They do not care about the effect on workers. That is why they are against the free trade agreement.

Oral Questions

RELIGIOUS PERSECUTION

IRAN—IMPRISONMENT OF BAHA'I LEADERS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I want to say that the Baha'i community of Canada is aware of the consistent support which the Government has rendered to the international efforts to halt the persecution of the Baha'i community in Iran. Indeed, we just co-sponsored a resolution condemning the violation of human rights in that country.

In view of the deteriorating and life-threatening situation in Iran and the continuing arrests of many of the leaders of the Baha'i community, what additional steps can the Government take regarding the 17 specifically named individuals of the Baha'i community who are imprisoned and whose lives are in imminent danger?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I know that his interest in the Baha'i generally and in the 17 individuals in particular is shared by other Members of the House. We have made and will continue to be making representations as strongly as we can in Iran.

In addition, we have, as the Hon. Member has mentioned, co-sponsored a resolution in the United Nations which will be coming to a vote very shortly with respect to Iran and which we hope will have some effect upon its attitude toward the 17 individuals the Hon. Member mentions.

COMMITTEE'S RECOMMENDATIONS—SOCIAL JUSTICE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In its report, the Finance and Economic Affairs Committee confirmed what several groups had stated about the Conservative Government's tax reform and three budgets to the effect that they are unfair to Canadian families, especially large families.

Could the Minister give Canadian families the assurance that he will correct these inequities before the Holiday season by awarding the third child twice the amount of the child tax credit, that is $130 instead of $65, and that this money will be converted into a refundable tax credit for the poorest families in Canada? Could the Minister give Canadian families the assurance that these changes will be made before the Holiday season?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is aware of the changes that we have made during the course of the lifetime of this Government, such as increasing the Child Tax Credit, accelerating the payment of the Child Tax Credit, introducing the refundable Sales Tax Credit. These measures help people with large families.

I indicated yesterday that I was not prepared to comment specifically on a number of recommendations in what I thought was a very good report on the part of the Finance Committee. I take his statements today as further representations.

CHILD TAX CREDIT AND YOUTH OLDER THAN 18 YEARS OF AGE—INQUIRY WHETHER ADDITIONAL FUNDS WILL BE PROVIDED

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Yesterday, in reply to the hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides concerning a minimum margin tax on all major banks, the Minister was not quite clear whether this would be acceptable to big business. I should like to ask the Minister why he would have no hesitation in indexing family allowances or in reducing the incomes of our poorest families while being afraid to tax the corporate sector. Could the Minister answer that immediately? The people are sick and tired of waiting. After three years, could the Minister indicate whether he will put forward the additional money for child tax credit purposes as well as for children over 18 years of age?

• (1440)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is the same as my answer to the first question.

If I could, let me comment on some of the elements of the Hon. Member's preamble. If he wishes to look carefully at what has been proposed in the White Paper on Tax Reform, he will see on page 67 that there are a number of proposals to increase the taxes that are paid by financial institutions, including banks and insurance companies. If the Hon. Member adds them all up he will find that they are in combination the most significant part of the increase in taxation of the corporate sector.

Clearly the objective of the Government is to ensure that the financial institutions do pay their fair share of tax, and do see their effective tax rate increase quite substantially over what it has been in recent years. I agree with what the Hon. Member and other Members have stated that this has been too low a level of taxation; but that has been the objective, so our objectives are shared. We now have to discuss the means of achieving that objective, and that is what we will be studying between now and the tabling of the Ways and Means Motion.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I also wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

Yesterday the Minister claimed that the recommendations made by the Finance Committee were just little changes over his White Paper proposal. However, I wish to inform the Minister that a number of those so-called "little" changes, if adopted, will have a dramatic effect on the way farmers do their business.

I wish to ask the Minister through you, Mr. Speaker, if he is now prepared to accept the committee's recommendation and abandon his unfair and costly proposal for a modified accrual accounting system.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am going to give the Hon. Member the same answer as I have given to other questioners.

The Finance Committee, of which he is a member, has spent a good deal of time reviewing the White Paper and coming up with a series of recommendations that have benefited from consultation with a wide number of people in the country.

I think it would be quite inappropriate for me to comment individually on each question on a specific item as they come up, but rather to provide the House with a blanket response at the time that the Ways and Means Motion is tabled in December.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out to the Minister that many farmers are experiencing a tremendous amount of insecurity. The Minister's proposals found in the White Paper created further insecurity and confusion.

I urge the Minister to correct this uncertainty and confusion that exist out there in order that farmers can start planning their activities for next year, come clean and clear to them and announce as soon as possible that he will not proceed with those silly proposals that came out of the Department of Finance that make no sense at all to the farmers of our country.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that all I can say is that I take what the Hon. Member has said as a representation in support of the proposals in the committee report. I have stated that I will be making my response in December.

AGRICULTURE

NEW BRUNSWICK POTATO GROWERS—REQUEST FOR STABILIZATION PAYMENT

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture.

In the House on August 14 I asked the Minister what progress had been made on the issue of an equalization payment for the 1985 potato crop. At that time the Minister assured me that he would likely be in a position in the near future to make a positive announcement.

The near future has come and gone, and the New Brunswick potato farmers are still waiting for action from the Government. What positive news can the Minister deliver to potato farmers today?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate the continuing efforts and representations made on behalf of the potato producers of this country by my colleague from Fundy—Royal.

I ask the Hon. Member to appreciate the fact that, because of the income situation of Canadian farmers, it has been necessary for the Government to increase its funding to my Department and to the farmers of Canada by 350 or 400 per cent.

It is not always possible to have all the money when it is wanted. But I do wish to assure the Hon. Member and the potato farmers of Canada that it is still a priority on my mind, and I hope to be in a position at some reasonable point in the future to respond, and to respond positively.

PROPOSED NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL ON POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State.

This morning the Canadian Federation of Students told us that a top priority with them was the establishment of a national advisory council on post-secondary education. This issue is supported by the Canadian university teachers, the Canadian Teachers' Federation, the Association of Universities & Colleges and it has widespread support from the business community. Indeed, I would say that a majority of the Ministers of Education in the country support the idea.

I wish to ask the Minister, will he move beyond the spirit of Saskatoon, will he now call together the partners, give us a ray of hope from Saskatoon, and create a national advisory council as the Canadian Federation of Students has requested?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, allow me to first of all thank the Hon. Member for his question, and to congratulate him for the motion which he now has before the House with respect to the establishment of that council.

In response to the Hon. Member's question, I would simply like to say that yesterday the Chairman of the National Forum on Post-Secondary Education, Dr. Brian Segal, appeared before the standing committee of Parliament and asked us specifically to move in a way which was consistent with the co-operation from the provinces. In doing so, we will be able to build upon that for the future programs with respect to post-secondary education.

Within the spirit of the National Forum in Saskatoon, and also at the request of the Chairman of the National Forum, Dr. Brian Segal, I would hope that the Hon. Member would refer his Bill to the parliamentary committee so it would have the appropriate action, which I know that the Hon. Member is looking for.

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that there was a clear call coming out of Saskatoon for action on a national basis, recognizing provincial jurisdiction, but also recognizing national need.

My question is the following. If the provinces, the students, the teachers, and the federal Government came together in Saskatoon for three days, why can they not come together again? Why should it stop in Saskatoon? Why can we not have it for three years or thirty years? Will the Minister move in that direction and establish a national advisory council on post-secondary education?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, with great consideration to my hon. friend, it is not national unless people agree to it. The provinces have indicated that in their meeting in February they will be willing to consider all such matters.

I say to the Hon. Member that if he is really interested in building something national instead of something only federal, then he would please accede to the wishes of many people who wish to see us move beyond where we have been on post-secondary education.

The only way that we can do so is with co-operation in this country, and not single-minded propositions from one side of the fence. That is why I implore the Hon. Member, please do not divide this issue, come together with the provinces and those people who want to co-operate on post-secondary education.

PASSAGE OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Secretary of State who has asked my colleague to present his Bill to the Secretary of State's committee.

My question to the Secretary of State is very simple. If he wishes that Bill to go to committee, will his Government support the Bill on second reading so that it will go to committee?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, first, it is not my committee, it is the House's committee. It is the standing committee of the House of Commons to which the Bill in question would be sent.

Second, I would say to the Hon. Member that the important thing is to have the subject matter before the committee. By the way, that is the request of the chairman of the forum in Saskatoon. Dr. Brian Segal, the President of Ryerson, speaking on behalf of the spirit of Saskatoon, has asked that that be done. I would suggest that the Hon. Member quit playing politics with it and accede to that request.

• (1450)

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I find that to be an extraordinary, unusual rebuttal from the Secretary of State. It is completely out of character and somewhat more political than I would have thought him capable of.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT SUPPORT PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, let me put the question to him in a straightforward manner. By the way, I was at the committee meeting yesterday and I do not need to be advised about what Mr. Segal said. The Canadian Federation of Students, the AUCC, and just about everybody concerned about post-secondary education have supported an advisory council.

My question to the Minister is a simple one. Will his side of the House support the Bill? That support in principle would be a signal to the whole community that the Bill go to committee as he would suggest.

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, of course the character of my response was dictated by the spirit of Saskatoon, which is why I spoke with that kind of heat.

I want to say to the Hon. Member and to his colleague in the other Party that of course everybody wants the same thing. The difference is this: if we want to accomplish it in order to build for the future, I implore the other two Parties to work with me and the provinces and we will do something. If we simply want to sail off on our own to win the day, that will not be of benefit to post-secondary students. I ask them to please do what the forum asks, and I can assure the Hon. Member that that will be to the benefit of post-secondary students across the country and into the future.

REQUEST FOR IMPROVED STUDENT LOANS PROGRAM

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Secretary of State. As the Minister knows, university students are now graduating from university with almost impossible debt loads. According to his own figures, nearly 20 per cent of students are graduating with debts of over $10,000.

Since education and skill training are supposed to be a national priority, when will the Minister take steps to give us an improved student loans program and new financial assistance programs for students? Will he make a commitment on that today so that students can start planning for the next semester?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, last February for the first time in the country I established an intergovernmental committee with the provinces to make policy recommendations in respect to the future of student aid.

In September we established an advisory committee of all users, from student organizations and part-time student organizations, to handicapped student organizations and so on, in order to make recommendations to the federal Government and to the provinces, which will come forward in February, 1988.

The intergovernmental committee is meeting in January. The advisory committee is meeting in December. They will make their recommendations known, so that we can come forward with recommendations following the meeting in February, 1988.

Mr. Allmand: We look forward to those reports and the action to be taken by the Government on them.

STUDENT SUMMER EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Will the Minister take steps to improve our student summer employment programs so that more students can earn sufficient moneys in the summer and will not get into these debt situations?

Instead of cutting back these programs, as has been done over the last two years, will the Minister give a higher priority to student summer employment so that they will avoid the debts to which we have referred?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure where the Hon. Member has been for the last three years. That is exactly what we have done. We have produced a better student summer program called Challenge '88, which provided for the best summer ever for all students last summer.

COMMITTEE'S RECOMMENDATIONS CONCERNING FAMILIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa-Centre): Mr Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who apparently has decided to ignore the report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs concerning his tax reform proposal.

Now that the Minister has rejected the Committee's recommendations for a minimum tax on financial institutions, could he tell us what his position is on the Committee's recommendations in support of Canadian families? Will those recommendations be accepted or will the White Paper's inequities to families be perpetuated, in view of the fact the Minister will not collect adequate taxes from the banks?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is possible for me to ignore the recommendations of the Finance Committee. Knowing as well as I do the chairman of that committee, it would be quite impossible for me to ignore it.

Let me give the Hon. Member the same answer as the one I have given to previous questioners. I appreciate the comments and the statements which he made about certain aspects of the White Paper. However, I am sure he would understand that if I responded to each one as they came up, in response to questions in the House, it would be inappropriate. I would be clearly indicating that I was not giving the degree of consideration that he would want me to give to the recommendations.

On that basis I would have to say to him that he will have to wait until the Ways and Means Motion comes down in December, at which time I will make a statement.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister not aware that he has already given a clear signal about his approach to the committee's work, that is, that the committee might as well have taken the summer off rather than worked as hard as it did to come up with a concrete and coherent set of proposals in respect of tax reform?

First the Minister says no to the minimum tax, then he says to questioners from the two opposition Parties that he is not prepared to budge in terms of an accrual system of accounting for farmers in relation to tax, and then he says it is inappropriate to reply specifically.

Is this not a clear signal that the Minister is not prepared to listen to anybody except his friends on Bay Street and St. James Street?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the committee has made a number of recommendations. I have not commented specifically, one way or the other, on any of the recommendations. I do not propose to make any statements or any specific comments one way or the other.

The Hon. Member may have drawn some conclusions. I would suggest to him that he may have drawn some improper conclusions from the comments I have made. I will be quite clear, though, sometime in December when the Ways and Means Motion is tabled.

GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS—ALLEGED TOLL-GATING

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the allegations of toll-gating in the riding of Trois-Rivières. Yesterday I asked the Prime Minister when the Prime Minister's office received the tape of the Chastenay-Levasseur conversation, and the Government refused to answer.

Did the Office of the Prime Minister telephone or otherwise contact Mr. Chastenay after receiving the tape recording and, if it made such a phone call, what was the purpose of the communication?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I advised the House yesterday and as the Hon. Member well knows, this matter is under active investigation by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and it would be quite improper for us to comment on any facets or matters involving this investigation.

Mr. Boudria: I do not know if I heard correctly but I was asking about a phone call. Surely the Minister is not telling us that the Prime Minister's phone calls are under criminal investigation. I want to ask a question of the Deputy Prime Minister.

QUERY WHEN GOVERNMENT WILL TABLE TEXT OF NEW CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister who is responsible for public morality, always in connection with the allegations of kickbacks in the constituency of Trois-Rivières . . . In view of the difficulties, and even the scandals surrounding the Government, when does the Deputy Prime Minister intend to table in this House the new guidelines on conflicts of interest that were promised in the last Throne speech? In addition, will he tell us what other steps he intends to take in order to clean up this Conservative Government's act?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if there are any changes, they will be announced in the usual manner.

TAX ON LUMBER EXPORTS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade who will know that Canada's lumber producers are again being victimized by American competition. In an exact reversal of the situation that her 15 per cent export tax was intended to correct, American producers are now taking Canadian sales in Canadian markets because they have been able to reduce their unit costs by increasing production.

Since this is de facto dumping and obviously contrary to the spirit of the free trade agreement, what will the Minister do to attempt to ensure that her tax is not costing Canadian lumber producers Canadian markets?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think it is a very timely question considering that the Member is from a Party which said that the softwood lumber industry would be facing doom and gloom with the imposition of an export tax designed to keep the money in Canada and out of Washington.

I can point out to the Hon. Member that Canadian softwood lumber production throughout the country has set new records throughout 1987 and that many of the firms are having a record profit year. In British Columbia, the forest products industry is on its way to a record breaking profit year. The allegations the Member has made about the loss of markets in Canada cannot be substantiated by our figures.

IMPORTS OF UNITED STATES LUMBER

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question which I will address to the Minister who appears willing deliberately to confuse price and volume—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Parry: —I would like to point out that industry spokesmen have said that this market loss is taking place because American producers are now able to sell into Canada at $20 per thousand board feet less than Canadian producers can. Since we have given up the possibility of maintaining our share of the American market, what is the Government prepared to do to ensure we have our share of the Canadian market?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I want to point out to the Hon. Member that we are selling record amounts of lumber to the domestic market. We have record production and we are selling record amounts to the Canadian domestic market. I think that is a record about which we can be pretty proud.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to advise Hon. Members that this will be the last question for Question Period. The Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent.

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Six months have already passed since the Atlantic Opportunities Agency was announced, and this agency according to the Prime Minister was to receive new funds, new moneys—$200 million a year—which were to be applied to regional development. Six months have now gone by. No money is forthcoming. So what is going on? Where is the money? People in the Atlantic area are concerned and we are wondering whether we are not being taken for a ride, as happened on the issue of the CN Shops, concerning which this Minister promised there would be no massive layouts ever. So what is the Government doing with that agency? Where is the money?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm to the Hon. Member, and I wish to assure him, that the money being allocated under the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency has in fact been allocated. It is new money and it is in addition to the other programs that are in place.

There has been some delay in the setting up of the approval process and the advisory board, but I can assure the Hon. Member that the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is open for business and we hope that the enterprising spirit of Atlantic Canada will prevail. The Government will be there to help and to facilitate things in every way possible.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member, a short question.

APPARENT CONTRADICTION BETWEEN MINISTERS AND CONSERVATIVE MEMBERS OF ATLANTIC CAUCUS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, on the one hand the Minister is telling us this is new money, the Prime Minister is also telling us this is new money, but on the other hand we hear Conservative Party Atlantic caucus Members say they are still fighting to make sure this is indeed new money. So how come this contradiction between Ministers and Members of the Atlantic Conservative caucus?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think the contradiction is in the mind of the Hon. Member whom I respect very much.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED INTERCEPTION OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION—MR. SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: I bring to the attention of Hon. Members that I am now ready to give my ruling on a matter raised by the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) on Monday, October 26. I wish to thank both him and Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) for their co-operation in assisting the Chair in arriving at a decision.

Hon. Members who were able to hear the argument will recognize that the facts are as follows. The office of the Member for York South—Weston received a phone call from a constituent whose husband was an inmate at the time in the Joyceville Medium Security Penitentiary. She indicated her husband, head of the inmates' committee, wished to speak to the Hon. Member and to his assistant, a certain Mr. Pratt. The Member's assistant contacted the inmate and reported to the Hon. Member. Mr. Pratt received further instructions and again contacted the inmate who, in turn, according to the Hon. Member for York South—Weston "relayed a list of concerns with regard to the situation at Joyceville".

The Hon. Member then told the House: "As a result of this conversation the inmate was transferred to the maximum security penitentiary at Millhaven and put in segregation."

[English]

At no time did the Hon. Member for York South—Weston meet or speak directly with the inmate.

The Solicitor General is in basic agreement with the statement of facts outlined by the Hon. Member for York South—Weston, but added that the phone and room used by the inmate in Joyceville had the following sign clearly displayed:

All activities, including conversations and telephone communications in this area, are subject to monitoring and may be recorded.

The Solicitor General also told the House that a Correctional Services officer was in the room with the inmate. Upon overhearing what the inmate said to Mr. Pratt, the officer reported to the warden of Joyceville and he, in turn, reported to his superiors. The inmate was subsequently transferred to another institution, Millhaven.

[Translation]

The grievance expressed by the Hon. Member for York South (Mr. Nunziata) was ably supported by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), and the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray); the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) and the Minister of State also helped the Chair. I thank all Hon. Members for their very useful contributions.

The request of the Hon. Member that the matter be ruled to be a prima facie breach of privilege raises several points. I will now consider them one by one.

[English]

Members will have heard the definition of parliamentary privilege before but it bears repetition. May's 20th Edition, at page 70, sets out the classic definition. Beauchesne's Fifth Edition repeats that definition at page 11 in Citation 16:

Parliamentary privilege is the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament, and by Members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions and which exceed those possessed by other bodies or individuals. Thus, privilege, though part of the law of the land, is to a certain extent an exemption from the ordinary law.

The distinctive mark of a privilege is its ancillary character. The privileges of Parliament are rights which are "absolutely necessary for the due execution of its powers". They are enjoyed by individual Members, because the House cannot perform its functions without unimpeded use of the services of its Members; and by each House for the protection of its Members and the vindication of its own authority and dignity.

Maingot, in Parliamentary Privilege in Canada, at page 12, gives further but similar definitions. I should add that Canadian Speakers have put such definitions on the record many times.

[Translation]

Apart from the definitions, we must consider the fact that the House cannot create new privileges. On this point I would refer Hon. Members to page 75 of May's 20th edition. Similar views can be found in all authoritative parliamentary texts. On April 29, 1971, Mr. Speaker Lamoureux said in that respect:

[English]

Privilege is that which sets Hon. Members apart from other citizens giving them rights which the public do not possess. I suggest we should be careful in construing any particular circumstance which might add to the privileges which have been recognized over the years and perhaps over the centuries as belonging to Members of the House of Commons. In my view, parliamentary privilege does not go much beyond the right of free speech in the House of Commons and the right of a Member to discharge his duties in the House as a Member of the House of Commons.

On February 20, 1975, Speaker Jerome cited that ruling with approval stating that "—improvement upon it is impossible and—unnecessary". Speaker Jerome continued and made the following comment:

The consequences of extending that definition (of Mr. Speaker Lamoureaux) to innumerable areas outside this Chamber into which the work of an MP might carry him, and particularly to the great number of grievances he might encounter in the course of that work, would run contrary to the basic concept of privilege.

The Chair was unable to find in these various definitions and quotations anything which would extend parliamentary privilege to the actions of a member of the staff of an Hon. Member of this House.

That being said, I am sure Hon. Members will appreciate that this matter does not fall within the restricted scope of the concept of parliamentary privilege.

[English]

Indeed, I can go further and state that even without the direct involvement of the staff person and with the direct involvement of the Member himself, I could not find that a prima facie case of privilege exists. Let me explain by quoting Speaker Jerome again.

In 1975, in ruling on an alleged warning given by the National Harbours Board to its staff against communicating with Members of Parliament, Mr. Speaker Jerome clearly stated:

—the classic definition of a question of privilege does not fit circumstances in which a Member in his duties outside this House finds that his scope is being restricted or attempts are being made to restrict his scope of intervention and effective work on behalf of not only his own constituents but his point of view as a member of the federal Parliament.

He continued:

—I feel absolutely certain that the classic definition of a question of privilege as we know it does not fit because it does not affect the right of speech of the Hon. Member in this House. Indeed, his right of speech in this House to complain and to raise this grievance is unquestioned.

That statement of Speaker Jerome is very clear indeed.

As to the assertion made by several Hon. Members that an opposition critic has some special privileges, the short answer is obviously that while they certainly have some extra responsibilities and obligations, they do not have any special privileges. Critics receive, and certainly should receive, every courtesy to assist them in their duties, but they have no privileges above those of any other Member.

Mr. Speaker Lamoureaux made a ruling on April 29, 1971, which may be helpful to honourable Members in this connection and I commend it to them.

I want to assure all Members that the Chair recognizes the importance of this matter and the seriousness of the situation brought to our attention by the Hon. Member for York

South—Weston, but I regret that under the circumstances it should not and cannot be dealt with as a question of privilege.

I can only say that I hope that having given the Hon. Member a chance to raise this serious matter in this Chamber may have assisted the Hon. Member and others to find some satisfactory resolution to the situation which the Hon. Member has brought to the attention of the House. I thank the Hon. Member for his intervention and for bringing this matter to our attention.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Beatty that Bill C-77, an Act to authorize the taking of special temporary measures to ensure safety and security during national emergencies and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Madam Speaker, it is my privilege today to rise to speak on behalf of the constituents of Kenora—Rainy River about the replacement of the infamous War Measures Act.

With Bill C-77, the House of Commons is finally considering replacing the War Measures Act, seventeen years after the last time it was invoked. In discussing this Bill, I would like to recall some of my own experiences at the time when the War Measures Act was last used in Canada.

I came to Montreal in July 1970 and the War Measures Act was invoked the following October. I therefore have intimate knowledge about the effects of this piece of legislation.

Madam Speaker, if I may say so, it was one of my most instructive experiences as a new immigrant to Canada. This was finally one of the factors which led me to the New Democratic Party because, at my arrival in Canada, I had had the impression that the Liberal Party was a progressive party, the party of renewal, the socialist party, as I then saw it, which Canada needed. However, finally, it was the position taken by the then leader of the New Democratic Party, Mr. Douglas, that convinced me that there were other factors to consider in choosing my party in the context of a democratic federal system.

Madam Speaker, I remember well the sad day of the funeral of Mr. Pierre Laporte. My office at the Bank of Montreal headquarters were directly opposite the Notre-Dame church in Montreal. I also remember quite clearly seeing soldiers in the streets of Montreal and the often very emotional interaction between the citizens and these soldiers, most of whom were unilingual anglophones. My experience in Montreal at the time, when the War Measures Act was invoked, convinced me that it would eventually be necessary to replace it.

I am grateful that it is the Conservative Government which has finally introduced this replacement legislation in the House of Commons, even though the Liberals were in power for nearly 14 years and could have introduced their own piece of legislation. We had to wait for a change of Government to set a new Act.

We have to admit, Madam Speaker, that this Bill is clearly an improvement over the Act it replaces, but as members of the Opposition, it is our duty to see the defects in the legislation proposed by the Government.

[English]

In general terms, Bill C-77 sets out the general obligations of the Government for the safety and security of individuals, for the protection of the values of our society, and for the preservation of the orderly democratic function of the Canadian federal state. It says that there may be situations, although it does not adequately define or describe them, in which those functions of Government may be threatened by a form of national emergency which would imperil our collective well-being, either right across the country or in parts of the country, and might be beyond the power of the Government or, indeed, governments of the provinces, to address without additional powers provided for in this law.

While it would be easy for me to spend a considerable length of time reviewing the functions of a state, the philosophical and ideological underpinnings for the governments which we have at the municipal, provincial, and federal levels, I think I will content myself with a brief historical conspectus, simply to set the context for Bill C-77.

The theory of the state, of course, arose in Greece and was developed somewhat in Rome. The theory and practice of the city-state—for such the original states of Greece were—gave rise to the development of a philosophy of politics. Indeed, of course, the word does come from the Greek. In this philosophy of politics it was recognized that because the state was a collective value and supposedly served all members of the state, it owed not only itself but also the citizens a duty to preserve itself as the state it was.

We have progressed beyond the Greek models, but I think it is instructive to observe that for many centuries, indeed, perhaps almost two millennia, the question of the reserve powers of a state when faced with either an internal or external threat was rarely discussed. The powers were virtually taken for granted. After all, it was an era when fundamental political debate had fallen out of fashion. Indeed, the development of the theory of what the state was saw little progress between the time of the coming of Christ and the writings of Machiavelli.

With the development of rational and modernist philosophy into the eighteenth century, the nature of the state began again to be called into question. There was one stream of thought that tended to the development of anarchism. There was also another stream of thought which tended toward a critical examination of the nature of the state and the powers that the state should hold.

Of course, this debate has extended into our own age and continues today. It may not be in as abstract or intellectual a form, because there exists of course much more opportunity in today's society for the very existence of a state to be challenged. However, we live today in a society that is highly technologized and highly independent. Therefore, the nature of possible disruptions of the functions of government and the functions of the state has expanded exponentially. I believe it would be fair to say that while we have the education, the communications, and the legal and even coercive instruments to completely outclass any other age in human history, nevertheless by the nature and the way in which society functions today, in many cases the state can be as vulnerable as it ever was.

It is in that context of vulnerability that I cannot let some features of this law pass, because it seems to me that in one aspect, at least, the law is inviting the sort of vulnerability that we would like to see it in fact address. Of course, that is the conferring of additional powers on the Senate through Bill C-77.

Presently, the Senate is acting in direct defiance of a democratically elected government. While it is a government that I happen to oppose and disagree with in broad terms, and even passionately in respect of some legislation that has been rejected by the Senate, it is nevertheless being subjected to conduct by the unelected Senate that really is capable of provoking an emergency, if we are to accept the very undefined nature of those emergencies that the law is supposed to address. Indeed, the present conduct of the unelected Canadian Senate could virtually be condemned as being treasonous to the philosophy and practice of democracy. Yet Bill C-77 has the potential for the Senate to act independent of the House of Commons.

While I appreciate that the Government has to produce legislation which is capable of passing in the Senate, given the present obstructive mood of the Senate, it seems to me that if one accepts the premises of the act on the nature of potential public order emergencies, there is a real potential for the Senate itself to provoke a public welfare emergency by some form of obstruction.

Whenever any government in this place, whether it be Conservative, New Democratic or Liberal, presents its borrowing bills, it seems to me that the very capacity for the Senate to abuse its power by excessive delay has the potential to provoke one of the types of emergencies that this Bill is indeed addressing. That may be cause for the Government to address directly with the Senate what its powers would be. I would simply enjoin the Government to ensure that the powers conferred upon the Canadian Senate in this Bill are the absolute minimum, to ensure that the Bill is able to function as a piece of legislation.

There is a real challenge in the framing of emergency powers legislation within the context of a federal state, and within the context of a federal state as large as Canada. The fact is that we have regional interests within Canada that in many ways are apparently opposed to the interests of other regions. Let us be very careful about what we seek to define as the national interest within the context of a federal state and within the context of very different and very diverse regions.

For example, are we to say that the existence of a separatist party in one province or one region of the country is in some way itself an indication of a potential emergency that might have to be addressed under this law? I hope that we never have to make that sort of qualification or judgment because I believe that the separatist parties that this country has seen have generally conducted themselves responsibly in the context of a federal state and within the context of a Canadian Confederation.

However, let us also not forget that one woman's or one man's unity is another person's bondage. In particular, those who are close to the centres of powers and influence, the centres of economic production, are very prone to adopt unrealistic and profoundly unfair assumptions about the lives, the opinions and the attitudes of those who are living on the periphery of those centres of power.

Let us examine what this could mean in practical terms. When two Members of the Progressive Conservative Party of the Province of Saskatchewan defected to set up a party dedicated to the union of western Canada with the United States, was that an example of something that could have turned into a public order emergency? I would not think so, on the face of it. Of course, we did not see any form of public support for that sort of motive, but we must be careful in the framing of emergency powers legislation to acknowledge that there is a possibility for this sort of movement to adopt positions that could be inimical to what the rest of the country would perceive as the national interest. Therefore, the necessity exists and must be recognized for the maintenance of a very careful and sensitive, indeed, very understanding balance of what is seen as the national interest and what is recognized as legitimate interests of various parts of this country.

Another defect of the legislation I should point out is the way in which it generally does not contemplate a role for the court system. The court system has its own problems. It moves at a speed which has been subject to a lot of condemnation. Yet the court system certainly has some strengths within Canada. We see in the brief of the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, for example, recommendations that the court system be better integrated in the administration of emergency powers legislation, that there be provisions for court review of such legislation, and that there be more provisions for the appeal of certain parts of the legislation, certain orders under the legislation, to the court system. This is certainly something I would commend to the legislative committee as well as to the Government for study.

The recommendation for the indemnification of agents and servants of the Government for individual responsibility is that the Government should assume all individual responsibilities as part of its collective responsibility when its agents, servants or officers are charged with the carrying out of certain functions under emergency powers legislation.

Finally, let me refer to the proposals on the definition of international emergencies. I can understand the difficulty in which the Government must have found itself in framing this part of the legislation. It is something of a strange hybrid in a country as large as ours that an international emergency other than a war emergency, involving a direct threat of organized military force against the country, should be contemplated. Indeed, the provision for the consultation of provinces, while it is, of course very Canadian, and I think would be widely supported throughout the country, is one that within the context of international emergency should at least give cause for thought. Over-all, as I mentioned earlier, there can be no doubt that Bill C-77 is an improvement over the Bill it is intended to replace.

Parliamentary oversight and review of the invocation of emergencies legislation will be much greater under this Bill than under its predecessor. Both pieces of legislation have provision for the parliamentary revocation of a declaration of emergency, but on any comparative analysis, it could be seen that under Bill C-77 it would come much sooner.

Finally, another strength of this particular Bill is that the provisions for compensation and redress of damages are much more comprehensive than those in the War Measures Act. Over-all, we have a piece of legislation that, from the most complimentary assessment, is a good first-cut in improving on the old War Measures Act. I would commend to the Government the task of further improving it.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, I have one question I would like to put to my colleague. It is listed as one of the recommendations of the Canadian Civil Liberties Association in its brief to the Minister. It is an excellent brief, I might add, one which I hope the Government will look at very closely. I know the Minister will. I think it is certainly worthy of very close scrutiny, and I would hope that the Canadian Civil Liberties Association would be one of the first witnesses to come before the legislative committee. The thirteenth recommendation of the association reads as follows:

> The elimination of the power to prohibit and regulate public assemblies during public order emergencies.

A public order emergency, of course, would be a similar situation to the October crisis of 1970. This is the section of the Bill which gives, I would think, the most problems at this point because we would not be at war, there would be no international crisis. It would be a domestic issue here at home. I would like to ask the Hon. Member if he not only agrees with this recommendation, but to what extent does he consider the prohibition and regulation of public assemblies during an internal disorder in the country? It seems to me that it is the very essence of denying our freedom of assembly and freedom of speech, even though there may be an internal disorder, to prohibit or to regulate the free association of citizens during that kind of crisis.

Mr. Parry: Madam Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague for that question. Indeed, he brings to light, as does the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, perhaps the single most repugnant aspect of this legislation, the ability to prohibit and regulate public assembly during public order emergencies.

I think that in today's society it is really quite an unnecessary power and one, I believe, most Canadians would find to be quite repugnant. The purpose, of course, of forbidding freedom of assembly has historically been to prevent the contagion of ideas and information spreading throughout the populace, though in fact the only form of contagion that I think could be adequately prevented would be some form of plague situation.

I believe, first, that the power is unnecessary in an age when the dissemination of information through a literate populace is so easy. I am not sure what could possibly be accomplished in terms of preventing information from spreading. In so far as the other purpose of assembly is concerned, which, obviously, is to discuss and to generate sentiment for some form of action, I would question under what circumstances that would ever be a legitimate objective of the Government.

My belief is that the common law system over the centuries has proven to be an instrument of great effectiveness and flexibility in addressing those situations which are seen as a threat to society or to the state. History records that the Riot Act of the United Kingdom was introduced in response to assemblies of Chartists who were basically working-class democrats seeking a reordering of British society. If memory serves me correctly, at least until recently, there was a Canadian equivalent of the Riot Act on the books. One of the things that gave me great amusement when I was Mayor of Sioux Lookout was the thought that someday I might have to read the Riot Act to a populace which had presumably become dissatisfied with some activity of the municipal Government.

It seems to me that the common law and the Criminal Code of Canada adequately control the sort of actions which might flow from any form of assembly. If an assembly takes it into its head to damage property, the sanctions of the Criminal Code apply. If an assembly takes it into its head to pursue, harass or attack individuals, the common law provides a remedy for that. Therefore, I am not really apprised of what legitimate Canadian purpose the Government would hope to accomplish by the inclusion in Bill C-77 of that power to prohibit and regulate public assemblies during public order emergencies.

Public assembly is another interesting concept, one that should be looked at. For example, when the Government assembles people for a meeting, can that be seen as a public assembly? Indeed, could the Government find that it was violating its own orders and then be subjected to some sanction through the court system?

One of the favourite arenas of protest now in Iran, which has one of the most horrendously oppressive and anti-human rights regimes in the entire world, is the soccer match. In that country a soccer match is not seen to be a public assembly. Those who are discontented with the regime's terrible oppression of people of different faiths or different political beliefs frequently congregate at soccer matches and take on from the soccer match to protest against some particularly repugnant act of that Government.

Would worship be defined as a public assembly? Could members of a church gathering on a Sunday morning, in ignorance of something having happened on the Saturday night, assembling for an outdoor service find themselves subjected to some form of control? By meeting outdoors they could be considered a public assembly. Even by meeting indoors they could be considered a public assembly. I believe that the Government would serve the public interest and its own interests better by discarding that provision.

Mr. Hopkins: Madam Speaker, I want to ask the Hon. Member who just spoke a question, one which I put to the Conservative Member who spoke last and who did not answer the question. As the Hon. Member knows, in 1960 the Diefenbaker Government brought in its Bill of Rights. After glorying in the publicity surrounding the Bill of Rights it then decided that it would not apply to the War Measures Act. If the Bill of Rights had applied to the War Measures Act over the years there would have been that very definite restraint built into the legislation.

Would the Hon. Member comment as to why the Diefenbaker Government would think of removing the War Measures Act as a piece of legislation that was affected by the Bill of Rights? Why would it not let the Bill of Rights take its way if, indeed, it was to be a meaningful Bill of Rights for the country?

Mr. Parry: Madam Speaker, I can understand the previous recipient of the question not answering it. Indeed, the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) may find after I have responded that he would like to ask the question of another.

Of course, I cannot speak for the Diefenbaker Government. I can only say that every Government since the Diefenbaker Government of 1960 surely bears equal responsibility for the continued non-application of the Canadian Bill of Rights to the War Measures Act. Therefore, I would assume that it was not only the Diefenbaker Government in introducing the Bill of Rights which said it did not apply to the War Measures Act but every subsequent Government that did not make the Bill of Rights apply to it. Those Governments are equally responsible for the decision since, of course, not to decide is to decide.

EMERGENCIES ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Beatty that Bill C-77, an Act to authorize the taking of special temporary measures to ensure safety and security during national emergencies and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, first, I would like to commend the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) on his reasoned approach to this Bill. He pointed out that this Bill far surpasses the War Measures Act in its approach to civil rights and in keeping a balance between emergencies, national disasters, wars or international occasions, and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the Bill of Rights, and the 1967 International Code enacted by the United Nations with respect to political and civil rights. Therefore, I expect the Hon. Member to support this Bill when it comes to a vote.

I am delighted to have this opportunity to speak to a Bill from a rather long record, good or bad, of local government administration where planning and preparedness with respect to any kind of an emergency was an absolute necessity. We all went through the hurricane Hazel of 1967, the year of the snow white-out in the Niagara Peninsula. At that time children were in schools for as long as three days. We had to mobilize the ham radio people and people with snowmobiles to provide emergency services so that those persons might continue to live.

I feel that the Government has taken a strong, bold step forward in the area of planning and preparedness for a wide range of emergencies. The Government made a commitment and, as the preamble to the Bill states, it is a commitment to ensure safety and security during national emergencies—any kind of emergency. The Bill is divided in parts to cover that wide range of emergencies and what kinds of declarations would have to accompany each.

This commitment was fulfilled with the introduction of the Emergency Preparedness Act. We know that Bill C-77 is a complementary Bill to Bill C-76 which Bill provided for the revocation of the Emergency Planning Order passed in 1981. This order was criticized by practically all Parties in the House as a source of numerous misunderstandings and for its legal basis. It is based inappropriately and on a Crown prerogative rather than on statute law of the land. This means that to date the role, the responsibilities and the mandate of emergency preparedness in Canada has not yet been defined by statute or by an Act of Parliament. The proposal then to make Emergency Preparedness Canada an independent agency with a mandate to co-ordinate emergency planning at the federal level is viewed favourably by provincial Governments. In fact, they encourage the passage of such legislation.

This initiative is also an indication of the federal Government's desire to be ready and able to respond appropriately to such an emergency when it should arise in the protection and the security of Canadians and in a global environment that is becoming increasingly complex.

The establishment of Emergency Preparedness Canada as an independent agency with a mandate defined by statute is intended, first, to increase the Government's ability to prepare for and deal with emergencies. Second, it is to clarify the respective responsibilities of the federal and provincial Governments with a view to closer co-operation, co-ordination and preparedness for action. Third, it is to improve the co-ordination of the emergency measures and the emergency preparedness of both federal Departments and agencies.

This change in the status of Emergency Preparedness Canada will not affect its primary role or its mandate as the co-ordinator of federal emergency preparedness. The responsibilities of the various Ministers for emergency planning within their respective sectors of statutory responsibility remain unchanged. The transformation of Emergency Preparedness Canada into a independent agency will not require the commitment of any additional human or financial resources. The proposal will make it possible for Parliament to control the normal procedures—

Mr. Hopkins: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hesitate to interrupt my hon. friend opposite, but we are debating Bill C-77 and Emergency Preparedness Canada is Bill C-76. I think that the Hon. Member is delivering the wrong speech. He should be on Bill C-77, emergency measures.

Mr. Reid: Madam Speaker, as I indicated, Bill C-76 is complementary; it is a sister Bill to Bill C-77. Emergency Preparedness Canada is an integral part of the operation of Bill C-77. That is why I am putting it before this House, in order that Members on both sides of the House will be able to look at the whole approach by the Government to emergency measures. I ask the Hon. Member opposite to keep in mind the purpose and the existence of Emergency Preparedness Canada.

The transformation of Emergency Preparedness Canada into this independent agency with a statutory background of approval will not require the commitment of any additional human and financial resources. The proposal will make it possible for Parliament to control, through normal procedures, the operation of a government agency that has existed and operated for a number of years without a mandate from Parliament.

Emergency Preparedness Canada will benefit greatly from its new status; its ability to prepare to respond to emergencies will no longer be linked to fluctuations in the interest of the public or of the Government. The advantages of those two Bills proposed for second reading are self-evident.

What is proposed is the repeal of an unjust, inhuman, obsolete statute, and of an ambiguous order, and replacement by two Acts that provide for coherent measured preparedness as a response to various types of emergencies. In addition, two Acts will offer a single, integrated federal approach to emergency preparedness.

Of course, all Acts can be improved upon. That is what my hon. friend from Kenora—Rainy River was referring to. While he indicated that this two-Act approach was a great improvement over the existing War Measures Act, there may be further improvements, but we must pass this improvement now.

However, they have been prepared with the interest of the general community of Canada in mind, with the aim of safeguarding their freedoms and civil rights to the maximum extent possible. This proposed legislation includes an extensive set of specific safeguards that would probably be neglected in the event of ad hoc legislation brought forth by a Government under the pressure of a time of crisis.

The interests of the provinces will also be protected effectively in emergencies, because there has been that consultation and co-operation in the approach to the legislation. The consultative mechanisms provided for in the Bills are without precedent in Canadian constitutional history. They guarantee to the provinces an important role before any declaration of an emergency has been or will be made.

The legislation about to be enacted will protect all Canadians more effectively in the future. The establishment of Emergency Preparedness Canada as an independent agency, at no additional expense, will have that effect.

For this reason, I support the Bill and urge all Members to hasten its passage by giving it their support as a bold step forward in the protection of civil liberties and civil rights in time of emergency.

Mr. Althouse: I wonder if the Hon. Member would explain if there is any change between Bill C-77 and the current War Measures Act? When I look at Clause 4 of the Bill it states, "When the Governor in Council is of the opinion that—" and it goes on to permit it to declare an emergency after consultation with the provinces, and so on.

Being aware that a similar process did occur in the October crisis in 1970 when the Government of the day, in consultation with the Province of Quebec, and apparently also the City of Montreal, which would not be necessary in this Bill, was of the opinion that an emergency was imminent. What would be different in this Bill as opposed to the old War Measures Act which permitted the same things to happen?

Is not the crucial part of this Bill and the existing War Measures Act the key phrase "the opinion of the Government"? Does the Hon. Member not think that there should be some strengthening of the wording in order that the Government's opinions be more restricted and guided by certain events having unfolded, or at least proof that certain events were in fact imminent, and that those reasons be given for implementing the emergency powers rather than to leave it as open as this Bill does? We feel that it is a criticism of the previous Act. I am sure that the Hon. Member went through the 1970 emergency and had those same criticisms of the existing War Measures Act.

Mr. Reid: I am delighted to have the opportunity to respond again for the purpose of enlightening my colleague. Bill C-77, as the Hon. Member knows, is in four separate parts. It deals with emergencies of different types and natures, the last two of which are international crises. The last one to which he refers, Part IV, deals with times of war.

The Hon. Member will know that the encroachment on civil rights and liberties will vary as one type of emergency moves into another. The Hon. Member will also know that whereas the War Measures Act was introduced in a time of war for war purposes, not for a critical situation as existed in 1970 to be adopted holus-bolus for application all across the country where it was a regional matter, this Bill provides for an application enacted and supported by a Parliament to deal with the situation and the emergency as it exists and of the type and nature that does exist. That is the difference, the statute background and statute application.

Mr. Althouse: I wished to make it clear to the Hon. Member that I was speaking of Clause 4 of this Bill which is under Part I. I was quoting from the clause relating to "Declaration of a public welfare emergency". It seems to be quite dependent upon the opinion of the federal Government of the day, the Governor in Council, and a shared opinion between the federal Government of whatever stripe, and a particular province. As long as there is agreement between the province and the existing federal Government, and they are of the opinion that such an emergency exists, it would be called.

I am wondering if the Hon. Member, being a lawyer, might not agree with the Civil Liberties Association. It indicated that there are ways of tightening up that wording so that government, meaning the federal Government and the provincial Governments in this case, would not have quite so much discretion to use the powers of the Act to create a situation where it would appear that something was happening in the rest of the country which was not in fact the case. History has shown that that is what went on with the stronger powers of the War Measures Act being used in the Province of Quebec.

• (1600)

Mr. Reid: Madam Speaker, I apologize if I misunderstood the Hon. Member in the first instance.

Mr. Althouse: I should have said it better.

Mr. Reid: If he is talking about Clause 4, it applies to a public welfare emergency. This make it even less comparable with the War Measures Act to which he compared it.

The Bill itself describes what is a public welfare emergency. It talks about fire, flood, drought, storm, and earthquake. There is nothing there about an international crisis nor about a war situation.

In this instance the application of Clause 4 would give to the Governor in Council the right of immediate and quick action to remedy a situation where the people of a particular area, probably an isolated area, need quick action. That possibility will be there.

Mr. Hopkins: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) said that nothing was done by succeeding Governments after 1960. I would point out to him that in 1982 the Charter of Rights was brought in to take precedence over the War Measures Act. I think that should go on record because he said that nothing was done by succeeding Governments.

I would like to ask a question of the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) for whom I have the greatest respect. Does he feel that the compensation part, Part V of the Bill, is fair in that there is really no appeal beyond the Federal Court level and that the Government has the right to set levels of compensation? Even if persons are not satisfied and feel that they have been injured, or not properly paid for damages done to them, there is really no appeal for them to go beyond that and get what they feel is a just decision. I think it is the final paragraph which simply states that there shall be no appeal except through Section 28 of the Federal Court Act.

Does the Hon. Member not feel that there should be an appeal to the senior courts of the land? Since we are dealing with Canadian citizens, should they not have the right to the court system as it exists in Canada as opposed to the Government of the day setting what standards of court procedures will be used to handle legitimate complaints by Canadian citizens?

I know the Hon. Member is very fair, and I think he will have an answer.

Mr. Reid: Madam Speaker, I had the advantage of being present while the Hon. Member opposite asked that question earlier. I do not agree with him when he says that there is no right of appeal. Compensation varies according to circumstances, the nature of the emergency, and the nature of the liability. His objection is really that there is no right of appeal to the courts. I think that is what he is talking about now.

There is a right of appeal in the legislation to a Federal Court judge, one of the senior judges of the land appointed to hear an appeal and to make an assessment. That person has the right to disallow, add to, or whatever, just as an arbitrator would do under similar circumstances.

If I might, I heard the Hon. Member say earlier that he did not have any legal training so this was rather strange to him. However, there is a trend or a movement away from the high cost court system to arbitration courts. Real estate or the expropriation of properties would be one example. They move to someone not necessarily cloaked in the great rigidness of a court room but into an informal setting where evidence can be heard in a more casual way and where they get down to the nitty-gritty of the situation much more readily and at less expense.

However, the nitty-gritty of the situation is that we have a judicially trained person to hear the appeal, and I am satisfied that we will come up with the right result.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, the legislation currently before the House, Bill C-77, deals with issues that are of profound concern in a country which values democracy and civil liberties. Indeed, it is for that reason that my colleagues and I intend to debate in all seriousness and at the length that this legislation requires the important issues which arise from Bill C-77.

Certainly it is long, long overdue that Parliament address itself to the repeal of the War Measures Act. This repugnant piece of legislation has been the vehicle of terrible abuses of civil liberties in Canada from the date that it was first passed with a minimum of debate in 1914. I believe it was about half an hour of debate.

In fact, two of the most fundamental and Draconian instances of the abuse of the civil liberties of Canadians occurred under the provisions and under the authority of the War Measures Act. I say without hesitation that we welcome the long overdue repeal of the Act.

In speaking of the two very serious abuses, I refer to the internment of Canadians of Japanese origin and the confiscation of their property in the 1940s. Because of the limitation on time I will not dwell at length on the terrible violation which occurred at that time. However, it was in February, 1942 that Japanese Canadians were divested of all human rights and freedoms and were effectively branded as enemy aliens by the Government of Canada. During the seven years which followed, from 1942 to 1949, the Canadian Government forced 21,000 people of Japanese origin from their homes; confined most of them in detention camps, many in the interior of my own Province of British Columbia; sold off all their real and personal property; and forced them to scatter across Canada or, in some cases, to be shipped to Japan. Of those 21,000 Canadians over 17,000 were citizens of the country. They were claimed to be a threat to the security of our land. We know, of course, that that was false and that that treatment was motivated by political opportunism and racism.

Some 40 years later, Japanese Canadians, victims of this terrible abuse of their rights, are still seeking redress. They are still seeking not only an apology from the Government, from the Parliament of Canada, but they seek as well a recognition that they are entitled to individual compensation. It is not possible to quantify in all cases a wrong of this magnitude. Nevertheless, certainly the principle of individual compensation to those Canadians who are so abused, so victimized, whose dignity was assaulted in such a way, is long overdue.

I remember the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney), then the Leader of the Official Opposition, standing in his place on this side of the House asking former Prime Minister Trudeau why he would not accept that principle of the right of Canadians of Japanese origin to be compensated individually. Three years later that same Prime Minister and that same Government have refused to implement that principle. This is interesting, particularly in light of the recent decision of the United States Congress to provide not only for an apology but for individual compensation in the amount of $25,000 U.S. to those who were victims. But we see a Canadian Minister saying with respect to this compensation that the people will not get it. It is right to apologize but the wrong cannot be bought by an amount of cash. "We are not talking money".

In the context of legislation that would repeal the War Measures Act, surely the Government should reconsider that decision and recognize its obligation to those who are victims of that same legislation which is now being repealed and provide for that long overdue compensation. Similarly—

Madam Speaker, there were other victims of the War Measures Act, and I am referring now to the 469 Canadian men and women living in Quebec who were sent to prison and stayed there during the October 1970 crisis. Again, it was under the War Measures Act that 435 persons were jailed, 234 of them without warrants. Only 5 of these Quebec men and women were sentenced following their incarcerations.

Madam Speaker, it was under former Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau, and his Minister of Justice that the War Measures Act was first proclaimed in time of peace. We are referring today to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) who was Minister of Justice at the time and who tried to justify this massive violation of the rights of Canadian men and women living both in Quebec and elsewhere. So far, Madam Speaker, this former Minister of Justice and present Leader of the Liberal Party has refused to admit that this was a fundamental error. Even yesterday, we heard the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), the Justice critic for the Liberal Party, declare in the House:

"The use of the War Measures Act in 1970 has been challenged. I was a member of the Party that introduced it, and subsequently a member of the Government that defended it." And the spokesman for the Liberal Party is saying today: "I defend it today".

Madam Speaker, that is the position of the Liberal Party. Today still it continues to defend the proclamation of the War Measures Act in 1970. It is unbelievable! It is shameful! I see the Hon. Member is now entering the House, perhaps he might try to clear up that point.

On October 19, 1976, only 16 Members voted against the proclamation of the War Measures Act. Among these 16 Members were the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), now leader of the NDP, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) who is still a Member of the House, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) who is still a Member of the House, and the then leader of the NDP, Mr. Tommy Douglas; this had to be one of the proudest moments for all New Democrats in Canada. Madam Speaker, I hope that men and women in Quebec did not forget that it was the NDP and the NDP alone—not the Conservative Party, not the Liberal Party—which was prepared to say no, which was prepared to say that, even though 88 per cent of Canadians had supported the proclamation of the War Measures Act, it was unacceptable. And, Madam Speaker, it is unacceptable today that such bad legislation should remain in our statute books.

[English]

Those were two of the gravest abuses of the War Measures Act, the problem of Canadians of Japanese origin and la Proclamation en 1970, but there have been many others. I know my colleague, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), will be speaking of some of the other abuses that have occurred under the War Measures Act.

Indeed, the Conservative Government, the Diefenbaker Government of 1960, in bringing forward the Canadian Bill of Rights decided to allow the War Measures Act explicitly to override the fundamental protections inherent in the Bill of Rights. Certainly that was a decision that we differed with fundamentally in 1960 and we differ with today.

What is the position today with respect to the provisions of the War Measures Act, Madam Speaker? In 1982, Parliament adopted a Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It is true that the War Measures Act and all other federal Acts are subject to challenge under the provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Despite that safeguard which we recognize, despite our knowledge that some of the worst abuses of the War Measures Act in 1970 and in the 1940s would very likely no longer be possible today because of the right to appeal to the judiciary under the provisions of the Charter, nevertheless, we welcome as long, long overdue the repeal of this odious statute from our law books. But in saying that, and in recognizing the accomplishment of the Government in moving at least to repeal this repugnant statute once and for all from our statute books, we must examine with care the Bill which is presented to this House to replace the War Measures Act.

As the Canadian Civil Liberties Association has clearly and persuasively documented, Bill C-77 contains vague definitions, over broad powers and inadequate safeguards. It goes on to state that there is too little effort to link the powers it would create with the perils for which they are designed, that there is too little effort to achieve proportionality between available powers and anticipated perils. The Civil Liberties Association suggests that before we proceed any further with this legislation the Government should clarify to Canadians and to Parliament exactly what kind of emergencies the legislation seeks to address, precisely which powers the Government seeks to deal with those emergencies, and why the current legislation on the statute books cannot deal with those concerns.

I note that legislation providing for these sweeping powers in times of peace does not exist in the United States of America or in the United Kingdom. Indeed, the McDonald Commission, in making recommendations to the Government on this subject, stated that it opposed the granting of special powers in a Bill of this nature. The commission suggested that the Government should seek the approval of Parliament for special legislation to deal with the particular concerns at hand.

What are some of the major weaknesses of the new legislation? My colleagues, and in particular my colleague the Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), have set out very clearly and forcefully our major concerns with respect to this legislation. I will touch on only two or three of them in the few minutes that remain.

The reference to public welfare emergency in Clause 3 of the legislation gives rise to serious concern. What is a public welfare emergency? Indeed, what is an emergency for that matter? Nowhere in this legislation is there a very clear definition of "emergency".

With regard to a public welfare emergency there is reference to a breakdown in the flow of essential goods, services or resources. As my colleague from Brant has pointed out, this legislation could be invoked to interfere in a dispute between management and labour. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) who is responsible for this legislation said yesterday that we should not worry, that there is no problem, that this will not in fact be used. However, his words should be read with care because he stated that this Act is not intended to be used to settle a legitimate dispute between an employer and employees.

What does that mean? Does it mean that if the Government believes that there is an illegitimate dispute, an illegal work stoppage for example, it can use the provisions of this legislation? This is no safeguard whatsoever. For the Minister to come before the House and suggest that an amendment of that nature constitutes a safeguard is rejected by the New Democratic Party.

Similarly, there are concerns raised by other provisions. The fact that the Supreme Court of Canada has ruled that the right to strike is not protected by the Charter is another reason for making it very clear in this legislation that it should not apply to any withdrawal of labour, be that legitimate or, in the eyes of the Government, illegitimate.

Concerns have also been raised with respect to the definition in Clause 3(b) of a public welfare emergency with respect to "disease in human beings, animals or plants". This instrument, in the wrong hands, could be used to bring forward Draconian provisions to deal with AIDS in Canada. Indeed, we have seen proposals for quarantine legislation in the Province of British Columbia from the ideological soul mates of this Government at the provincial level in British Columbia. We should be very careful before according similar powers to the federal Government.

Similarly, the definition of public order emergency incorporates the definition of threats to the security of Canada from Section 2 of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act. We know that that definition is far too broad and far too sweeping. We know that under the guise of investigating threats to the security of Canada the security service itself is a profound threat to the security of Canada. Under the guise of that definition it has investigated the labour movement, the peace movement, and legal political Parties in Canada. This Government would incorporate that definition in a way which would allow it to prohibit public assembly in Canada. That constitutes a shocking potential abuse of civil liberties.

In response to that the Minister says:

> I would remind Members of the House that the definition of "threats to the security of Canada" received exhaustive scrutiny by Parliament in 1983 .... The language—has, therefore, already received Parliament's blessing.

The Minister has a rather selective memory. It was the Conservative Party that joined with the New Democratic Party in condemning that very definition and suggesting that that definition constituted a grave threat to the civil liberties of Canada. Now, four years later, a Minister from that Party is saying that as Parliament adopted that definition there is nothing wrong with it and the Government is going to use it as a basis for its emergency legislation. Obviously that is totally unacceptable.

It is also unacceptable because, as I understand, the special committee struck by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) under Gordon Osbaldeston will be telling the Government that that definition is in fact far too broad and should be narrowed substantially.

Finally, we have serious concerns about the definition of international emergency. It is far too sweeping to say, "Any threat to the economic well-being of any ally of Canada". In conclusion, I would like to draw to the attention of the House perhaps the most dangerous provision of all, that being the provision in Clause 38 with respect to war emergencies, which states:

> While a declaration of a war emergency is in effect, the Governor in Council may make such orders or regulations as, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, are reasonably necessary or advisable for dealing with the emergency.

That is the War Measures Act all over again, Madam Speaker. It provides for no control and total government discretion. I call upon the Government to recognize that while the time has come to repeal the War Measures Act, this Draconian piece of legislation, which continues to constitute a massive assault on the civil liberties and rights of Canadians, must be firmly rejected by this Parliament. It should go back to the drawing board.

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, I am very grateful to the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) for laying out so many of the important aspects of this Bill and the problems which it presents. He seems to be of the opinion that in some ways this Bill may even be worse than its predecessor.

Without going into that, Madam Speaker, I would be interested to hear the Hon. Member explain a little more clearly the point he made in connection with the concept of a public order emergency and the threat to the security of Canada. He said that at that time the then Conservative opposition caucus agreed with the NDP caucus that the definition contained in the CSIS Act was unsatisfactory. He pointed out that they have now flip-flopped and said that it is satisfactory.

I know that the Hon. Member gave that matter very careful attention at the time. I would be interested to hear him remind us what the unsatisfactory aspects of the definition were considered to be at that time. If he can recall, what were the points upon which the Conservative caucus expressed its agreement with the criticism made by the NDP which the Member put forward as our critic? It is important that the public be reminded of the positions which the present Ministers and other members of the Government held four years ago on this matter in order that the public can evaluate their reliability when they make promises now, when they say that they would not use this legislation against a legitimate strike.

How changeable are they? Would it be four years before they reversed themselves again, or might they reverse themselves in one year? I think the public needs a chance to compare what they said four years ago with what they are saying now. Could the Hon. Member for Burnaby give us some examples?

Mr. Robinson: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Spadina for that question. It gives me an opportunity to elaborate on what was the position of the Conservative Party in 1983 and 1984. I might say that I recall well the exceptional work and contribution made by the Member for Spadina during the debate on that particular legislation creating CSIS.

At the time this legislation was before the House, the Conservative Party was in opposition and it raised vigorous objections to the Liberal Government's proposed definition of threats to the security of Canada. Conservative Members voted against the definition and supported amendments which I proposed. Indeed, they proposed amendments themselves that would narrow the definition.

There are a number of examples, including subsection (c) of the definition in the CSIS Act which states: "Activities within or relating to Canada, directed toward or in support of the threat or use of acts of serious violence against persons or property for the purpose of achieving a political objective within Canada or a foreign state".

It was pointed out, for example, that a church group which wanted to support the African National Congress or a liberation movement in Central America by holding a rummage sale to send funds to that particular group would be deemed under this definition to be a threat to the security of Canada. Clearly that is a dangerous definition and one which gives far too much power to CSIS.

As well, there is the whole question of "foreign influenced activities within or relating to Canada that are detrimental to the interests of Canada". That provision has been used by CSIS to attack the peace movement in Canada.

The Conservatives spoke in the House and spoke in committee, saying this definition must be changed because it is a threat to the civil liberties of Canadians. They also said that we need a safeguard in the Bill, and parliamentary oversight of CSIS, with a parliamentary committee similar to the congressional committees in the United States. They called for that parliamentary oversight.

The Conservatives have been in Government for over three years. We now see the sorry spectacle of a Conservative Minister standing up and defending that Liberal legislation, which the same Minister was attacking when he was an opposition Member. That is a sorry spectacle and one of which I think Canadians should be well aware as they evaluate this legislation.

The Conservatives are effectively asking Canadians to trust them. They are asking Canadians to trust that these powers will not be abused. I do not believe that their record warrants that kind of trust. On the contrary, the labour movement in Canada, for example, has every reason for profound mistrust of the record of the Government when it comes to intervention in a heavy-handed and undemocratic manner.

I want to close my response by referring to the report of the Security Intelligence Review Committee on this question. The committee has stated that CSIS too readily accepts the foreign policy objectives of the United States as our own and it neglects Canadian policy. It states that CSIS is expanding money and effort on too many counter subversion targets and intruding on the lives and activities of too many Canadians in this area.

Instead of bringing forward legislation that would grant even more powers to deny civil liberties, as this legislation would do, I suggest that the Government should be moving forward to limit the sweeping mandate of CSIS, to ensure that law abiding Canadians are not subject to the abuse of their rights and civil liberties as they are today by this agency of the Conservative Government.

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, I was interested in the Hon. Member's reference to the shameful internment of the Japanese and the expropriation of their property. He pointed out that this was motivated on the one hand by political expediency and by racism on the other. Ken Adachi in his book entitled The Enemy That Never Was provides some very vivid testimony from Mackenzie King's diaries as to both those points. He points out that at the time of Pearl Harbour Mackenzie King wrote in his diary that the Government had considered at some length the fact that it believed the Japanese nationals and Canadian born Japanese were loyal and did not constitute a threat. That was the belief of the Government at that time. It subsequently acted in a very expedient way, giving way to the kind of hysteria that prevailed in some parts of Canada later on.

As far as the racism is concerned, later on in Mackenzie King's diary he expressed his gratitude that the atomic bomb was dropped on the Japanese rather than on the white races of Europe. That shameful part of Canadian history is something that all Members of this House want to repudiate.

Given the wide powers that we have in Clause 38 of the Bill, is it possible that if it were in place in the 1940s, even with the reference to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, that kind of shameful event would have taken place in Canadian history?

Mr. Robinson: Madam Speaker, unfortunately, the answer to that question is yes, it is possible that that kind of abuse could occur. Indeed, the issue of compensation is another element of the legislation that raises very serious questions. In effect, the compensation will be determined by the federal Government. There is no appeal process other than to an assessor who is a judge of the Federal Court. The assessor cannot in effect exceed the limits which are established by the Minister.

I come back to the fundamental principle. The legislation as it is presently worded would in fact permit much of the same abuses that occurred in the 1940s to Canadians of Japanese origin——to occur in 1970 in Quebec.

[English]

I come back to the fundamental point with respect to compensation. In May, 1984, the Prime Minister said: "I feel very strongly that Canadian citizens whose rights were abused and violated and trampled upon should be compensated". We have waited three years. How much longer must we wait before the Prime Minister fulfils the solemn undertaking he made to Canadians in 1984?

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have the honour to be able to speak against this emergencies Bill. I believe that if this Bill goes through and becomes law in anything like its present form, Canadians in the future will regret it greatly.

I stand on the side of those who point out that while it is a good thing to repeal the War Measures Act, there are some ways in which this present Bill may even be worse. If there are some ways in which it is better, they are at least closely balanced by ways in which it is worse.

It is true that many people now have very little way of knowing what the War Measures Act was about, except those who were in Quebec at the time of the 1970 crisis or those whose liberties were interfered with in other parts of Canada, on the excuse of the 1970 crisis which was focused on Montreal. Many Canadians at that time were not directly touched by the extraordinary action of the police, and many Canadians now of voting age, of course, do not remember 1970, but it is good to have some recollection of what was done.

I recently had the opportunity to read a study by an academic at the University of York, Mr. Reg Whitaker in the magazine Labour/le Travail, a learned journal. His article is "The Official Repression of Communism During World War II". He points out that as the war began, and we were fighting a fascist power, the Canadian Government took the occasion to act more strongly against communists than against fascists in Canada on the pretext, of course, that the Soviet Union and Germany had established a non-aggression pact. That did not explain why it was more harsh against communists than against fascists. There were other reasons behind that. However, even that pretext became rather ridiculous when Germany invaded the Soviet Union and when Britain and the United States found themselves in the position of declaring an alliance with the Soviet Union against Germany, and Canada of course followed suit. Yet, throughout the war and for several years after the war, Canada maintained that the Communist Party of Canada was an illegal Party. Britain and the United States did not do that, but Canada decided to be more repressive than either our mentor Britain or our neighbour the United States.

In fact, as Mr. Whitaker points out, "Canada was the only allied nation to maintain a ban on its local Communist Party throughout the course of its wartime alliance with the U.S.S.R." That is the kind of silly position we were put into by the then Liberal Government.

This repression of communism did not stop with communists. It was also directed against unions, and not necessarily against unions which had communist officers or leaders. There was, of course, the attempt to destroy the Canadian Seamen's Union in its infancy, which failed. However, it grew because it had a democratic structure and the support of a great many of the seamen. There were other attempts. For example, Mr. Whitaker records, and it is written elsewhere as well, that:

> —Charles Murray, organizer for the Canadian Fishermen and Food Handlers Union of Nova Scotia . . . received a letter from the Nova Scotia Minister of Labour informing him that: "we have stood about all we intend to stand from troublemakers like you—and I am warning you now that we will tolerate it no longer . . . Your conduct will from now on be very carefully watched and examined and if I find that you do not quit this sort of business, then it will certainly be the worse for you".

This is how a Minister of Labour talked to a labour organizer. The article continues:

> In fall of 1940, Murray was seized by the RCMP on a Sunday just as he was about to rush his pregnant wife to the hospital. While his wife was left to her devices, Murray was interned for two years.

Mr. Whitaker gives many other examples of how trade unionists were harassed, arrested, charged and sometimes imprisoned or interned, not for any political activity or any anti-war activity but simply for doing what before then and since then has been regarded as the legal work of trade unionists. But it was the War Measures Act to which the Government appealed to do those things.

We certainly need to get rid of the War Measures Act. However, as I have said, this Bill is in some ways worse than the War Measures Act. My reason for saying that is, first, this Bill is much more easily triggered. It has been suggested by the previous Conservative speaker, the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid), that it is a good thing that it can be used more widely than the War Measures Act. But when one considers the powers given in its wide use, and I will come to that later, it is not at all clear that it is a good thing to use it so widely.

The powers to be given, furthermore, are, in the opinion of many people, including the respected Canadian Civil Liberties Association, dangerously wide. The powers of compensation for error which are a useful and just addition to what the War Measures Act provided or did not provide, do not go far enough to satisfy ordinary Canadian standards of law.

Finally, there is something that is quite surprising, and that is, the gratuitous donation to the Senate of an increase in its power. This was not asked for by those who wanted a repeal of the War Measures Act. In fact, it comes as quite a surprise, given the Prime Minister's occasional rages against the Senate when it interferes with what he wants to do. To have him give this Christmas present to the Senate is really quite a surprise.

I want to go into the matter of triggering, the circumstances which might trigger the use of the War Measures Act. The problem lies chiefly in the vagueness of the word "emergency" and the fact that the Act fails to define it. We are told that it is there in the preamble and that we therefore should not worry. We are also given good advice by civil liberties experts that defining it in the preamble of the Act does not necessarily protect us because what the Act says is, "When in the opinion of a Governor in Council there is an emergency". It does not really bind the Government or limit it any further than that. If it says it is an emergency, it is an emergency.

We may well find that the courts will declare that they cannot go behind the decision of the Governor in Council as to what constitutes an emergency. Usually, when the Governor in Council acts in cases like that, they tell the public: "We cannot give you all the facts. There are secret things. If you knew about them, you would agree with us, so just trust us". We have had enough of this business of "just trust us". In fact, what this seems to be is a kind of legislating of rule by Order in Council.

The Conservative Party six years ago in this House was very angry at the then Liberal Government for establishing an Order in Council that would provide for government powers in an emergency. The Conservatives said it should be legislated. Now they have legislated, but what they have done is to legislate the power of the Government to do almost anything it wants in the case of war, and not anything it wants but far more than it has to justify, in smaller emergencies.

There ought to be a definition in the law which shows what it is that is happening that goes beyond the ordinary means of the Government to control. We have the criminal law. We have other laws empowering the Government to take action for the public welfare. To suggest that we should have the power to conscript labour for a plague emergency or a flood emergency, really is rather bizarre. Yet that is what we have here. It would give the Government the power to direct any person to perform an essential service. It does not say what is essential. Whatever the Government thinks is essential, apparently would be essential.

We are told to trust the Government because it may bring in some amendments or it may permit some amendments which would remove the danger of this being used simply as a union busting or strike busting tool. However, the attraction for this Government of having a thing put into action without having to debate it in Parliament is very dangerous. The Government would not at all be adverse to deciding that a cessation of services was a cessation of an essential service and, therefore, order people to provide those services. I think that would not only be very damaging where it was applied, but very damaging as a threat to the labour movement of Canada.

What is being urged by the Canadian Civil Liberties Association is that there should be much more limited powers prescribed in the emergencies Bill and that other emergencies should be dealt with by Parliament at the time, that is, by Parliament being requested to adopt a specific piece of legislation. If the Government believes that it cannot wait for Parliament to do that, then it should be obliged, and this Bill should oblige it, to show why it cannot wait. What is it that would require an action by the Government without legislation by Parliament? Why can the Government not handle this so-called emergency by appealing to Parliament? It should be required to do that.

My colleague from Burnaby has spoken about the danger and the folly of using the very vague definition that CSIS gave us in regard to "threat to public order". Certainly, the conduct of CSIS throughout the course of this year in sending disrupters into unions, and in sending spies into the peace movement makes it very clear that it does not understand well enough the difference between legitimate public criticism and subversion. It spends the public's money trying to disrupt criticism and at times it appears not to be alert enough to stop a serious matter such as the bombing of an aircraft.

A public order emergency, or for that matter an international emergency, ought to be defined. As the Civil Liberties Association suggests, "the Government could invoke emergency power at the point at which it could reasonably anticipate the outbreak of illegal violence so intense, so widespread and so continuous that the Government itself would be overthrown or be rendered powerless to govern".

What I am concerned about is that under some of these emergencies the Government takes onto itself not only the power to conscript labour with or without payment but to take away a person's right to say yes or no to work. I do not believe the Government will conscript doctors or lawyers. It does not do that now. Now it conscripts trade unionists with back-to-work laws, even laws that threaten to tell union members that their officers will have to be subject to approval by the Government under certain circumstances.

As has been mentioned, there is also the threat to prohibit public assembly. Public assembly is often regarded as the foundation of liberty in our kind of democracy. Yet the Government is likely willing to take it away. However, the most ridiculous part of this Bill is the concept of an international emergency. I refer to Clause 25 of the Bill. If somebody from the public or if the Government had put forward such a statement in a White Paper, which it was urged to do, it would have been laughed out of court. However, we now have it proposed as law with a straight face. I quote:

"international emergency" means an emergency involving Canada and one or more other countries that arises from acts of intimidation or coercion or the real or imminent use of serious force or violence—

That is pretty wide. If someone thinks that there is a threat of violence then they can invoke this measure. The clause continues, "—and that directly threatens the sovereignty, securityor territorial integrity of Canada—". There is no problem there. We have to act if Canada is threatened. But the clause goes on:

—or any of its allies or any other country in which the political, economic or security interests of Canada or any of its allies are involved.

I do not think that there is a country in the word in which some ally of Canada does not have economic, political or security interests. This means that at any time that there is a disturbance anywhere in the world the Canadian Government might use this law as the basis for declaring an international emergency. If President Reagan wakes up in the middle of the night tonight and says, "The Sandinistas are going to raid Texas," he will phone and ask us to declare an emergency. Fortunately, the law has not been passed. At the moment it would not be quite legal to do that. I hope that the Government will not try to do that.

This is what might happen if President Reagan decided that his country's economic interests were being threatened in the huge nation of Nicaragua, a nation of 2.5 million people. The Government could appropriate, control or forfeit the use and disposition of property or services. It could control or regulate any specified industry or service, including its equipment, facilities and inventory. It could authorize or direct any person or any class of persons to render essential services of a type that that person or person of that class is competent to provide. It could regulate or prohibit travel outside Canada by Canadian citizens or by permanent residents. It could remove from Canada persons other than Canadian citizens or permanent residents. There are about ten more powers that are given.

What I am saying is that it is far too wide in the scope in which it can be used. It is far too wide in the powers that can be used. Unfortunately, there is inadequate legislation to provide for compensation of people who are unjustly harmed by the action of the Bill. It gives the Senate a new power that even the Meech Lake Accord did not give it, or which the Constitution does not give it. It gives the Senate the power under certain circumstances to insist on the continuation of a state of emergency. If there is a debate in the House of Commons on a motion to revoke a state of emergency and if it is passed by the House but defeated by the Senate then the state of emergency will continue. It is very unfortunate that that power should be given to the Senate.

What this provision does is to damage very much the rule of law in Canada. We are told that the Charter of Rights applies, as does the Bill of Rights and so on. But it sometimes takes years to bring a matter before the Supreme Court to seek relief under the Charter of Rights or the Bill of Rights. Therefore, it is not wise, fair or reasonable to give powers to the Government which can only be corrected or may be corrected years after through an action in the Supreme Court. These powers must be restricted much more than they are or else this Bill ought to be defeated.

SUGGESTED MARITIME EXEMPTION FROM DUTY ON SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORTS

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of enacting the provisions of Section 15(1) and (2) of Bill C-37, an Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products, of the Second Session of the Thirty-third Parliament, to allow for the incorporation of a Maritime regional exemption from the 15 per cent export duty on softwood lumber exports destined for the United States.

He said: Madam Speaker, I have taken this opportunity to move this motion in an effort to motivate the Government to take action to initiate those provisions of Bill C-37 which would grant an exemption from the softwood export tax to all Maritime softwood lumber producers.

Canada has had the right and ability to seek an exemption since the Memorandum of Understanding was signed last December. That memorandum clearly states that the Government of Canada may reduce or eliminate the export charge on the basis of increased stumpage or other charges by provinces on softwood lumber production. The Government of Canada and the Government of the United States will consult semi-annually and otherwise at the request of either Government regarding any matter concerning this understanding.

I am pleased to have been made aware that the Government has made some effort to incorporate Clause 15(1) and (2) of Bill C-37, and that there have been negotiations and talks going on in Washington with reference to this matter. However, I think it is extremely critical and important, particularly now that apparently the housing market is off, housing starts are down, and it is obvious that there will be some considerable changes in the market-place for Maritime and other softwood lumber producers in the country. Indeed, now we should be moving to correct the anomalies that do exist in the agreement, and recognize that there are certain sectors and regions of this country that should be excluded and exempted from the 15 per cent tax.

As I mentioned, a similar provision was provided for under Clause 15. That was an Act that came into effect last year respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood products. It states that the Government may:

> (a) conditionally or unconditionally, and either generally or in respect of a particular transaction, exempt any softwood lumber products from the charge imposed thereon under this Act or exempt any person from the requirement to pay such a charge;
> (b) conditionally or unconditionally, and either generally or in respect of a particular trade level or transaction or in respect of a particular province or any area thereof, remove or reduce any charge imposed on softwood lumber products under this Act;

Clause 15(2) provides for a retroactive effect from January 7, 1987. Quite clearly the Memorandum of Understanding and Bill C-37 provide the opportunity for the Government to negotiate a regional exemption.

I wish to state from the outset that the Maritime softwood producers, and myself along with other colleagues in the House, are not the only ones who have called for a regional exemption. I refer to the House of Commons legislative committee of March 24, 1987 which was studying this Bill, at which time they stated in their conclusions that the committee direct the Chairman to convey to the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) its desire to have several items dealt with in its negotiations with the United States as soon as possible. Item two of those items was "that those corporations which meet the criteria originally set out be added to the exempt list". There is no question or doubt that the Maritime softwood lumber producers meet this criteria for exemption.

On May 5, 1987, the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce wrote in its conclusions and recommendations that the Memorandum of Understanding of December 30, 1986, contains serious deficiencies which must be addressed. The committee specifically noted that negotiators must continue to press for a negotiated regional exclusion for the Maritime producers. That is two bodies of this Parliament, aside from the House of Commons, that have called for the Government to take action to ensure that the Maritime softwood lumber producers are exempted.

As the softwood lumber industry in the Maritimes has acted in accordance with the provisions of the Memorandum of Understanding, and respected the provisions of the law which up to this point had been acting to their detriment, I believe that the Government should initiate and take the course of action that it apparently has taken in the past few days to implement a fairer agreement that reflects the issue of the stumpage realities.

The amount of Maritime lumber exported to the United States affected by this tax is not a great deal of product within the national scope, but within the regional picture of the maritime provinces it certainly has its impact. The decision to impose a national export duty crippled the competitive position of many Maritime producers, as they are now required to pay not only the 15 per cent export tax, but also the highest stumpage rates in Canada. I would suggest that this is a classic example of the old double whammy. It is a fact that when the Memorandum of Understanding was concluded, even at that time stumpage rates in the Maritimes were the highest in Canada. Since that Memorandum of Understanding has been signed, stumpage rates in New Brunswick have been increased 27 per cent, and stumpage rates in Nova Scotia have been increased by 10 per cent. To give a comparison, at the time that the Memorandum of Understanding was signed, stumpage rates extended from $1.05 to $15 in British Columbia, and to $8 in Quebec. As I mentioned, at the time New Brunswick and Nova Scotia had the highest stumpage rates of any province in the country. In New Brunswick it is currently at $57, and in Nova Scotia it is $46. What that amounts to is that stumpage rates in the Maritimes were six to eight times higher than in the four provinces that were specifically mentioned by the American producers to be of concern to the American softwood lumber producers.

Maritime softwood lumber producers rightly feel that this is not fair, and it certainly eliminates their competitive position. They are being penalized by a decision that was reached to rectify a problem that they did not participate in, nor did they aggravate. The U.S. countervail action specifically stated, "that provincial softwood stumpage programs in Ontario, Quebec, British Columbia, and Alberta are subsidies". At no time during the countervailing duty proceedings were the Maritime stumpage fees regarded as a problem or a concern by either the U.S. wood producers or the U.S. Commerce Department.

It is the general feeling among Maritime softwood producers that indeed at that time the Americans would have been agreeable to exclude Maritime softwood under the countervailing duty action. As most people are aware, what happened as a result of that was that five Maritime producers were among a number of Canadian producers that were included in the group that made application to the U.S. and were exempted.

It is generally feared that the inclusion of all Maritime lumber producers with the exception of those five could have a considerable negative effect on the Maritime lumber industry. To date, that has been minimal because of the strength of the market. However, as I mentioned at the outset, there is good reason to believe that this strength will not last.

During the debate on the softwood export tax, much was made of the fact that there were five New Brunswick companies that were included in the exclusion, and that indeed of the wood that is shipped from New Brunswick to the U.S., these five producers account for some 92 per cent. While this is beneficial to the industry, I cannot help but believe that the impact of both high stumpage rates and the 15 per cent tax will in the long run have some very detrimental effects on the industry in the Maritimes should it not be addressed.

The lumber industry in the Maritimes is certainly an integral and vigorous part of our industrial base. It is one that is pervasive throughout our entire economic and social structure. There are 123 mills in Nova Scotia and 93 mills in

New Brunswick. Of that total, 40 mills are the only major industries in their communities. If the record were checked, I believe it would show that none of the 40 mills were among the five exempted from the tax. They certainly comprise some of the largest employers in the area.

There are 22,000 jobs in the lumber industry in the Maritimes. Some 6,000 of them are in New Brunswick and directly depend upon a healthy and competitive industry. The jobs in spin-off businesses and related industries are undetermined. However, there is certainly no question—and I say that with assurance—that they would be subject to the domino theory and that there would be substantial economic consequences if indeed there were serious implications on the future of the lumber industry.

It is imperative that the policies and initiatives which we put into place as a Government—and indeed it has been the track record of the Government—do not result in job loss or the loss of a competitive position, particularly in the Atlantic region. The result would be continued and deepened regional disparity, if that were to take to place. Economic security can certainly be assisted and would be greatly boosted if regional exemptions for all softwood producers were negotiated successfully by the Government.

Industry predictions indicate that if the Maritimes softwood lumber industry is not provided a blanket exemption, more than 4,000 jobs could be adversely affected and indeed lost to a region which is already suffering from chronic unemployment. In a region which is struggling to create jobs and to build a strong economic base this primary sector should be and must be assisted by policies that encourage, not discourage, risk-taking and expansion.

The Maritimes softwood lumber industry indicates that the export tax could have several long-term debilitating effects on the sector. Obviously unexempted softwood producers will lose the American market when the market becomes soft, which it inevitably will, because the tax will render their product uncompetitive.

There is also a great concern among producers in the Maritimes that producers west of the Maritimes, that is, from Quebec westward, could flood the market with their products in an effort to avoid the 15 per cent tax and when markets south of the border start to dry up. This could reasonably result in the loss of local markets for producers in the Maritimes as they are swamped by lumber from western producers.

Apparently that is taking place in Ontario at this time in that it is cheaper to bring in product through British Columbia from the United States to Ontario than it is to import directly from British Columbia forests. This is because the implications of the tax have caused American producers to gear up and to produce more lumber now. Their markets are drying up, so they are shipping lumber north of the border. As a result, we are seeing a negative impact.

We also recognize that European producers are agitating for a similar situation.

I believe, as do many others, that producers in the Maritimes are entitled to a regional exemption for the following reasons. First, they are already paying higher stumpage rates than those required in a negotiated settlement. Second, New Brunswick has raised its Crown stumpage fees by 27 per cent and Nova Scotia by 10 per cent since the countervailing duty assessment came into effect. Third, as a matter of law, the Maritimes can claim exclusion from the export tax based on the conditions of the Memorandum of Understanding.

In recent days, representations from Quebec and British Columbia have been made to the federal Government on the basis that those provinces have now increased their stumpage fees. They feel that they should now be exempted under the Memorandum of Understanding in subclauses 15(1) and 15(2) of Bill C-37 from the 15 per cent. Indeed, they probably should be exempted. The federal Government has recognized this and has responded positively in so much as it has agreed to take the matter to Washington to have it decided.

Why, in all the hype and talk which have been going on, has the situation as far as Maritimes softwood lumber producers are concerned not been addressed? Why is the following not recognized? We were not only paying high stumpage rates to begin with and were not part of the problem, but since that time we have increased stumpage rates to the point that we will be paying rates above those about which the Provinces of Quebec and British Columbia have been talking.

We should now be talking positively at the federal government level about lumber producers in the Maritimes as well as those in our sister provinces of Quebec and British Columbia.

I brought this issue to the attention of the House of Commons a number of months ago. I believe the Government is committed to eliminating regional disparity and has taken a perceptive look at what initiatives are needed to help Maritimers to help themselves. Initiatives such as the Atlantic Opportunities Program directed by Atlantic Canadians for the success of Atlantic Canada are great. We applaud them. Economic progress fostered by those who live and work in the region is welcome. We want a fair and equal opportunity for economic growth. We are not looking for hand-outs or for charity. We want to be able to survive. The failure to achieve a regional exemption under the memorandum is difficult for those individuals in communities penalized by this punitive tax to understand.

When I raised the issues a few months ago, we heard great accolades from members of the New Democratic Party and members of the Official Opposition. They asked where we had been and why we had not talked about it before. They attacked me personally because it was the first time I had raised it in the House. There is no doubt that there will be a response from them today, so I ask where on earth they have been all this time. They give all kinds of lip service to the type of things we should be doing, but they have had every opportunity, as we have had on this side of the House, to raise the matter.

We have brought the matter to the attention of the Government time and time again. I just hope that we have some positive input rather than carping about what the Government has not done or what the Government should be doing and Members trying to credit themselves with creating the initiatives which we have taken as regional representatives and as members of the Progressive Conservative Party.

A wonderful thing about our Party is that we can rise as Members in our places and bring these matters to the attention of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Corbett: A provision in Bill C-37 would allow the Government of Canada to rectify an inequity which, in my opinion, should never have been installed in the agreement to begin with. A great many producers, and those whose livelihoods depend on a thriving softwood industry, strongly urge the Government to take action to implement Clause 15 of Bill C-37 and to negotiate a regional exemption for the Maritimes.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Madam Speaker, I want to begin by assuring the Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal (Mr. Corbett) that I have no intention of attacking what he has done today in bringing the motion before the House of Commons. On the contrary, I wish to commend him most heartily for what he has done.

He is to be commended, although I am sure that in bringing this motion to the attention of the House for a second time he is something of a burr on the saddles of the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew), the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), and the Government in general. I think the Hon. Member exemplifies something that ought to occur more frequently in this House. There ought to be more alliances on important regional sectoral issues. For example, in the House at this very moment there is the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry), the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall) and myself from northern Ontario. Each of us knows, although we represent three different political Parties, that the 15 per cent export tax on softwood lumber has been counterproductive for our region. In my own constituency a number of sawmills have closed down and jobs have been lost. It is quite true, as the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines said in a committee meeting not so long ago, that those operations tended to be marginal. They were not big money makers. That is true, they were not, but the export tax was just enough to put them under. Jobs have been lost and they are not very easily recovered. When you come from a resource region, there is great difficulty and enormous capital costs to create a few jobs. When jobs are lost, you cannot find replacements very quickly or easily.

The Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal indicates that the maritime producers of softwood lumber had not been fairly dealt with in the Memorandum of Understanding. They ought not, he argues, to have been subjected to the 15 per cent export tax. His argument is a very compelling one to which he has brought important facts calling for an exemption.

I want to remind the House again, in case there are Hon. Members who have forgotten or did not know why we got this export tax in the first place on our exports of softwood lumber to the United States—

Mr. St. Germain: It would not have happened if we had had a free trade agreement.

Mr. Penner: We got it because we were circumventing the threat of countervail action from the United States Department of Commerce, an action that had been launched by the coalition for fair lumber trade in the United States of America. I must repeat once again—I cannot let this opportunity go by—that I believe a serious error was made in imposing on ourselves an export tax on our products going into the U.S. What was the alternative? Clearly it was to fight the action through the International Trade Commission and the International Trade Administration as we had done before. We had won on the previous occasion. I remember the action very well because a distinguished constituent of mine, now a Minister in the new Government in Ontario, was at that time head of the Ontario Lumber Manufacturers' Association. He played a key role, along with legal counsel, in Washington in fighting that action. It was expensive for the Ontario producers and for the other producers across the country. It was time consuming but we won and the U.S. Commerce Department declared at that time in its decision that there was no substantial evidence of subsidization.

This time the Government decided not to join the industry and to fight with it. Instead we put a tax on our own exports. The argument made by important spokesmen in the Government like the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and others was that we were at least keeping the money in the country. By imposing a tax on ourselves we were not allowing the United States to collect the countervail duty, which money would go into the U.S. Treasury. We now have this tax and we are stuck with it. The tax imposed on us by way of a Memorandum of Understanding signed with the Americans and then translated into Bill C-37 passed by this House is now with us. It is part of the new Canada-U.S. trade agreement that is likely to go into effect in the near future, although with strong misgivings from myself and many others. That tax can be revoked under Clause 15(1) and (2) of Bill C-37 provided certain other actions take place, that is, if stumpage fees are raised sufficiently high that the Americans agree the tax is no longer required. But there must be that American agreement.

Those discussions and negotiations are presently going on. They are going on with respect to British Columbia and with respect to Quebec. The Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal is becoming impatient. He is dissatisfied, as are the producers in the maritime region, that their particular situation is not being looked at but is being delayed. I suppose more emphasis has been given to the British Columbia situation. British Columbia has paid an enormous amount in that export tax. It has paid some $220 million already. That is what is getting priority. You must be aware, Madam Speaker, that in order to move to revoke the tax there has to be a meeting of minds. The American and Canadian negotiators must agree to sit down. They have to have a timetable that is mutually acceptable.

I started to say something earlier about the situation in northern Ontario. Although we are talking about the maritime region, we are talking about the same tax. The coalition of American lumber producers, in their strong desire to see some kind of countervail action or export tax, constantly forget that in a region like northern Ontario the costs of harvesting wood, of getting the trees out to a place where you can add value to them either by making lumber and then taking the chips to a pulp and paper mill or getting the wood from the bush to the mill or to the plant, are extremely high. The costs are extraordinarily high. It may be that the stumpage fees are not equal to what they are in the maritime provinces, certainly not equal to what they are at the present time in British Columbia, but they are sufficiently high, and when you couple that with the costs of extraction, you are looking at very expensive wood costs.

There are distances to take into consideration as well. Those who harvest wood are having to go farther and farther all the time to get it. Sometimes the wood is harvested in very difficult terrain. In the spring of the year when there is break-up you cannot get into areas and there is a delay in getting the wood out. There are other seasons of the year, for instance, the dry season when you have forest fires and much of the harvesting operation has to be set aside. During the winter we can have extremely adverse weather conditions, and that adds to the cost as well.

The Member from Fundy—Royal in talking about his region mentioned a point that ought not to escape our attention. In the preliminary affirmative countervailing duty determination, which is the full title for the action of the U.S. Commerce Department, the maritime provinces were not mentioned at all. Ontario, Alberta, Quebec and B.C. were mentioned. New Brunswick and Nova Scotia were not included because they already had stumpage fees that are sufficiently high. They have since been raised; the Member mentioned figures of 27 per cent in New Brunswick, another 10 per cent in Nova Scotia, and that is true. The maritime provinces really ought to have been left out at that time. I raised that matter with the Minister of International Trade and she said:

> I can assure you that, during the negotiations leading up to the Memorandum of Understanding, we pressed for additional exclusions, by company, product, and region. This did not prove to be negotiable and we could expect the U.S. to insist on a quid pro quo were we to reopen the agreement at this time with the objective of excluding the province's remaining exports.

I mention that because I want to tell you, Madam Speaker, and the House that at that moment the Americans had us in a very vulnerable position. They pressed their case, and as a result we have an additional regional disparity for the reasons given by the Member for Fundy—Royal. I would argue that there are also reasons why this adds to the disparity of a region such as northern Ontario.

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to speak to the motion of my colleague, the Member for Fundy—Royal (Mr. Corbett), with regard to the softwood lumber surtax. Last year I had the opportunity to be a member of the legislative committee and listened to the numerous groups from across the country which came before it.

I come from northern Ontario and have been involved with the forestry industry there for many years. Seventy per cent of employment in the forestry sector in the Province of Ontario is in the North. The total value of forest product shipments from northern Ontario in 1980 was $7.3 billion. Eighty per cent of the lumber produced in northern Ontario is exported to the United States. Sixty-five per cent of the pulp and paper produced in northern Ontario is exported to the United States. Seventeen of the 22 pulp mills in the province are in northern Ontario, as are 40 of the 53 largest sawmills, 12 of the 13 particle board and wafer board mills, and 12 of the 20 veneer plants.

Bill C-37 certainly was important to northern Ontario. We had a choice to make, that being whether the tax to be paid should go into the American Treasury or into ours. In the Province of Ontario, $22.345 million of revenue was collected under the 15 per cent surtax from January to September, 1987. Will those revenues which are now in the provincial coffers be put back into reforestation and infrastructure for the sawmills and pulp and paper mills in northern Ontario? These questions have not been answered by the province and I, as a Member for northern Ontario, would be very interested in knowing what will happen in the upcoming weeks with regard to that money.

The Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) said that there has been doom and gloom in the sawmill industry in northern Ontario. The last eight months have been one of the greatest periods in the sawmill industry in northern Ontario with regard to construction. Over 220,000 homes have been built in the last year. Exports have been moving on a regular basis.

It is interesting that the Hon. Member would have preferred the Americans to make a ruling last October which would have been against northern Ontario, which would not have enabled us to collect the revenue from the surtax which the Government has ensured will be spent in northern Ontario and other parts of the country.

There are negotiations going on under Clause 15. I hope that northern Ontario is part of those negotiations. Another round of negotiations began last week between our federal government representatives and industry representatives and the U.S. Department of Commerce to address the issue of replacement measures with regard to the 15 per cent surtax. These negotiations will continue this week and early next week and it is hoped that we will see a positive resolution of this problem.

I would like to go over a few of the strong points of the Atlantic lumber industry in the past eight months. The Atlantic region is experiencing the same up-beat market as is the rest of the country. Although non-excluded companies in the Maritimes are not shipping as much lumber to the U.S. as in the past years, the strength of the local market has more than offset the effects of the 15 per cent tax.

The offshore market has also been very strong. According to the Maritime Lumber Bureau report of August, 1987, "inquiries from offshore exceeded supply and the European agents are surprised that more Maritime shippers are not taking advantage of a firm demand".

It is also worthwhile to point out that Maritime fears of lumber from other provinces flooding the Maritimes have not been fulfilled. This was also a concern of Ontario with regard to shipments from the West and was brought up during the hearings on Bill C-37. This has not occurred either. It is not likely to occur as the major producers, the Provinces of Quebec and British Columbia, have raised their stumpage rates significantly as compared to the rates prior to Bill C-37. For the maritime producers this is good news as it is for other provinces as well. The region has participated in the Canadian housing boom of close to 202,000 units.

One of our greatest concerns, which the Government has been addressing, is to have the borders opened. My colleagues must realize that free trade is the only way in which regions such as northern Ontario will have the opportunity for growth. I say that because we are very reliant upon resource base. It is very easy for the Leader of the NDP to say that we really do not need trade. He comes from Oshawa where General Motors is located which has the greatest trade between two countries and has an unemployment rate of zero per cent. He does not understand the concerns of regions such as northern Ontario.

My colleague from Cochrane—Superior and other Members from northern Ontario should be joining together to ensure the future of northern Ontario with regard to trading dollars. It is unfortunate that sometimes political beliefs come before the stability and the future of the regions.

I believe that the presentation made earlier this year by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) will enhance the future of northern Ontario. It will enhance the future of our children, our grandchildren, and our great grandchildren. We will have an opportunity to build on the softwood lumber sector, the mining sector, tourism and agriculture. I call on each Member from northern Ontario to stand firm to ensure that this trade agreement gives us strength for the future. That is why it is important to ensure that this trade agreement is ratified. Hopefully this will have positive results for my colleague, the Member for Fundy—Royal.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to speak on the motion of the Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal (Mr. Corbett). Indeed, let me begin by extending my thanks to him. I feel that any opportunity we have in the House to debate the present state and the future of Canada's largest industry is one that should be seized upon. Indeed, I am glad to see that we have a relatively large attendance for Private Members' Hour. I am grateful to all my colleagues for their interest.

I also want to thank the Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal for his detailed and I believe highly informed exposition of the nature of things in the regional forest products industry in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick particularly. In extending that compliment, I also have to caution him that the forest products industry and the forest industry in this country are of such diversity and variation between provinces and even within provinces that we should never assume, in examining the management, the taxation, the fee, and processing regimes from province to province and even region to region, that what is sauce for the New Brunswick goose is necessarily good for the gander of northern Ontario.

Indeed, stumpage rates are a case in point. The stumpage rates were already high in the two principal maritime producing provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia and indeed have been increased since. However, the stumpage rate that is applicable in a province the size of New Brunswick, which is somewhat smaller than my constituency, may not be the stumpage rate that would be appropriate to another province.

The management regimes, the ownership of lands from which wood is harvested, varies very radically from province to province. For example, there is a very active and I believe progressive federation of woodlot owners in New Brunswick, which has no real parallel in northern Ontario where almost all wood is cut upon Crown lands under licence from the Ministry of Natural Resources or under forest management agreements. The situation that pertains in New Brunswick is different again.

The Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior made reference to the length of some log hauls in northern Ontario. I would point out to the Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal that some log haul distances in northern Ontario would be the same as the distance covered by a log being taken from the New Brunswick coast, clear across the province, through Maine and into Quebec.

We know that there are sound reasons for varying stumpage rates even within the province. For example, there is legislation in the Province of Quebec where rates are increasingly being set by a type of forest management agreement, and which also depend on the use made of the particular log and the value added that the log will undergo in its transformation to a final product for sale.

The Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal made a very persuasive case for the exemption of the maritime provinces from this 15 per cent softwood lumber export tax. It is a persuasive case but one that I regret to say is impractical. The key word the Hon. Member used, and which all of us must remember in debating this particular topic, is the word "negotiate". The Hon. Member himself referred to the fact that there never was a case within the United States for the imposition of the softwood lumber export tax on the maritime provinces based on the stumpage rates that pertained then and certainly not on those that pertain now.

The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) was quoted as saying that it was not practical to move the maritime producers off the negotiating table. It is that key negotiation phase on which, unfortunately, the Hon. Member's motion appears to be doomed to failure.

The Hon. Member made the arguments for the New Democratic Party very well. He mentioned that the American transportation routes are now being used to ship British Columbia lumber into Ontario markets. I was not at all surprised to hear the Hon. Member taking rhetorical swipes at the Opposition. For example, he asked where we were all summer when his caucus has been on top of this issue. I was not at all surprised to hear those rhetorical swipes because I think the Hon. Member realized how thoroughly and effectively he had demolished the Government's case for this over-all 15 per cent lumber tax and that he had better retrieve his position with his own caucus.

As he said, the Maritimes should never have been included in the agreement. I am sure it comes as no surprise to the Hon. Member that no Ministers are here to hear him excoriate the agreement in those terms.

We know that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) held out the promise of the repeal of the 15 per cent softwood lumber tax under a free trade agreement. We hope and expect the Government to be successful in achieving that, and we look to it to make it happen.

I believe it is worth repeating some comments made by informed professionals and analysts within the industry. It was said that we were taken to the cleaners. In an article in the Ottawa Citizen on January 10, an expert was quoted as saying:

> If I were an American producer, my position would be that we've softened up the Canadians. If Canada felt it was necessary to rush in and negotiate in this case, it's possible they could file a petition in another industry and hope we would do the same thing.

Softwood Lumber Exports

In an article in the Ottawa Citizen on November 7, detailed examples were given by the President of the Green Forest Lumber Corporation of the ways in which this 15 per cent tax is having invidious effects upon the Canadian industry.

I disagree with the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall)—whose riding in northern Ontario is closer to New Brunswick than it is to my riding of Kenora—Rainy River—when he said that the industry is not suffering in northern Ontario. Indeed, it is.

The Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior did not list those mills in his riding that have closed, so I will mention them. They include the Terrace Bay mill, the Longlac mill, Kimberley- Clark at Nakina. Surely the Hon. Member for Timiskaming should be aware of the wafer board operation at Smooth Rock Falls having closed down as well. There was the recent but fortunately short shut-down of the Hudson Mill in my riding.

In effect, this 15 per cent softwood lumber export tax has facilitated the dumping of American product into the Canadian market, with no possible means of redress because it is Canadian measures that are making it possible. The imposition of the 15 per cent softwood lumber export tax essentially limited Canadian access to the U.S. market by raising the price of the Canadian product—be it British Columbia, Ontario or a maritime province product—in the U.S. market. Of course, this reduced the demand for Canadian lumber and a good year in residential construction in the United States increased the output of American mills. The Americans have lowered their unit costs and now have lumber that is surplus to their own requirements. Naturally, they are looking for a market and are able to sell with impunity into the Canadian market, undercut Canadian producers and thus essentially use our softwood lumber export tax to which the federal Government agreed, not only to deprive us of access to the American market but to deprive us of access to our own market. That is why the tax should be repealed, not only for the Maritimes but, indeed, for the whole of the industry in this country.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton—Charlotte): Madam Speaker,first, I would like to draw to the attention of the House that contrary to the remarks made by opposition speakers to this moment in time, recognizing the difficulty which it faced and the inequity of the proposed application by all of those who were lobbying in the United States to get a much, much higher level of duty than that presently imposed as tax in Canada, the Maritime Lumber Bureau was very satisfied that the Government of Canada had in fact driven the best deal it possibly could for the maritime lumber industry. Probably it would have been much worse had the only impact upon that duty been the declaration of the rate of duty by the American Department of Trade and Commerce as influenced by the lobbyists in the United States. Anyone who feels on experience of application of former such duties that this was a bad deal, had better examine some of the other deals.

I will very briefly discuss another subject matter with which I am very familiar. They made equally strong representations on behalf of duty on potatoes shipped from Canada to the United States, and when the duty was levied, it was levied on individual shippers. Unfortunately, the American Department of Trade and Commerce has neither the manpower nor the time or capability to determine what duty should be charged on individual shippers on the basis of their law.

In the case of two particular people, both of whom are personal friends of mine and I am very familiar with their business, one person in the potato industry was subject to no duty for shipment of potatoes to the United States and the other, identical, I repeat, in the modus operandi of the business, was levied at 40 per cent. One has to have some knowledge of how these things work when they are imposed by the United States.

I submit that the last two speakers, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) and the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry), do not have the personal familiarity with the system and how it works and how very prejudicial it can be. I repeat again that the lumber bureau was pleased that it got a deal, which is only a 15 per cent deal, and it has never said anything else before the committee of the House of Commons or in public. Therefore, I think we have to start from there. I support the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall) when he says that lumber costs in New Brunswick are very high. The amount of wood is small. The expense of product from the sawmill is very high. The final finished product, as a result of the size of the timbers we have to use, puts us in a position of disadvantage with almost any other lumbering area of Canada. I submit that both on the basis of the cost of the operation in New Brunswick and on the basis of the cost of stumpage, as was so very well outlined by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal (Mr. Corbett), we are in every way qualified for exemption from that tax, which was the ultimate decision of international negotiations.

I would also like to point out that it has been said today that in the markets which exist, the industry has been able to survive and to profit in spite of the tax. I agree with that. But normal markets will be down the road and this was not a normal demand. It was not a normal market. It happened to be at the peak of the cycle. Those people who were shipping lumber under those circumstances did in fact find they could survive and prosper to a limited degree, limited by the amount of the tax, of course. Yes, they have not been put out of business as we initially feared they might be. No, there has not been the abnormal trans-shipment of lumber to different areas of Canada as a result of a restriction of flow from Atlantic Canada to the United States market. Nevertheless, we do need to be relieved of that tax at the earliest possible date.

I am very pleased to know that the Government of Canada is in fact putting the issue forward. It is not correct to say that it was never put forward in the negotiations because it was. It is not correct to say that negotiations have not been taking place in the period of time since the introduction of the Bill which opposed the tax. They have been and are promoting to get rid of that tax as far as Atlantic Canada is concerned. I think the Government has acted in an extremely responsible way.

I compliment the Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal for his motion, for the research he did and the presentation he made in his usual dedicated fashion on behalf of Atlantic Canada. He should be commended for that presentation. But let us not spread false rumour around this country that this was not a good piece of legislation, that it was not a good deal for the lumber industry. We found ourselves in a cycle of market in which we survived in spite of it. All the negotiations which can possibly take place should be encouraged by virtue of this motion and by virtue of the interest of the lumber industry of Canada to negotiate our way out of it. But we got off as a result of very astute, careful and deliberate negotiations with much, much less duty than otherwise would have been imposed had we not had the influence we had and had we not been treated in the good faith with which we were treated in Washington. Had the lobbyists had their way in a clear field, the duty they would have imposed would have crippled us. We did negotiate ourselves into a sustainable position on an economic basis for the lumber industry of Canada, including Atlantic Canada, but we do need to negotiate our way out of it. That is what this motion is intended to encourage.

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Madam Speaker, I realize I only have about three minutes, but I would like to commend the Hon. Member for Carleton—Charlotte (Mr. McCain) who brought to the attention of this House quite clearly that not only the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) but the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) really have it all wrong. If we go back to the very creation of the lumber dispute with which the Hon. Member opposite is very familiar, it was the present Liberal Premier of Ontario who in fact said that the problem clearly was that stumpage was not adequate in Quebec and in fact in British Columbia. He admitted there was clearly a problem and it should be addressed.

The Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior suggested we should have let it fall through the normal trade negotiations and dispute mechanisms we presently have. Does he realize that the countervailing duty on hogs by the United States went through the normal channels, through the Commerce Department of the United States, and we are living with it today? Having a free trade agreement rather than having to go to some other foreign mechanism to settle this dispute, which we would clearly like to negotiate back to a normal situation we had, is really what the exercise is about.

My hon colleague, the Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal, brings an important point to the debate by indicating that stumpage in the Maritimes was always high, perhaps almost on a level playing field with the American stumpage charges in different parts of the United States. However, as a country, and as a national program, it was looked at. Even today, the Hon. Member for Carleton—Charlotte indicated that if we look at the Memorandum of Understanding, it explicitly provides for the reduction or elimination of export charges on the basis of increased stumpage or other charges by provinces in softwood lumber production. I do not think that we have a tremendous problem, but clearly Canada is heading in the right direction to bring about an end to this charge.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 is deemed to have been moved.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY—FUNDING OF RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT/CONSORTIUM'S APPLICATION FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, last June I asked the then Minister of State for Science and Technology why, when the Conservative Party had been in opposition it had promised to double support for scientific research and development, we now find that the expenditures for scientific research and development are running at only 1.35 per cent of Gross National Product. The Minister replied that spending has increased significantly but that it took time to reorganize the apparatus of government in line with the Government's plans.

I point out that Canada is the only major industrialized country with trade deficits in all the major high technology groups, including aerospace, data processing, machines, drugs and electronic equipment. One of the major reasons for this low level of sales is because there is a very low level of research and development undertaken in Canada. To deal with the problem the Government has adopted an approach to scientific research and development under which government funding will not increase. In fact, funding for research in government laboratories and universities might decrease. Programs and institutions such as the National Research Council have already been eliminated or scaled down.

The Government expected that the increased effort and expenditures for scientific research and development would come from the private sector. This raises important and serious questions which have not even been considered let alone answered by the Government.

For example, will the private sector increase its efforts and expenditures by the very large amounts needed if we are ever to reach the goal of 2.5 per cent of GNP devoted to scientific research and development, a figure at which most other industrialized countries aim? Or will the private sector invest in the kinds of basic research which have been done in government laboratories and in our universities which, according to most scientists is absolutely essential, as has been emphasized so clearly by both our Nobel prize scientists, Dr. Herzberg and Dr. Polanyi? Or will its efforts be directed at its particular interests in the development part of scientific research and development for its specific benefits?

My second question to the Minister was why had the Government which looked to the private sector not approved the proposal for start-up assistance made by Pre-Carn Associates, a consortium of 31 member companies including Inco, Stelco, Hydro Québec and Ontario Hydro, to mention just a few. Dr. McNabb, the former head of NSERC, plays a leading role in this organization.

It was last June that I asked these questions. We checked again today and were told the following. Some 31 member companies have identified areas of research that they would like to pursue. The technical advisory committee has met a number of times. In the new year it will be putting out a call for proposals on research projects. It has not heard a single word from the federal Government with regard to its application for financial assistance to start up its organization. It understands that the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) is preparing a memo for Cabinet.

It seems obvious to us that the Department has been terribly slow in responding. Yet, it splashed grants around this summer for numerous high tech companies. We have to ask ourselves why a government which puts so much store in the private sector, a government which believes that the private sector can do most things and certainly do scientific research and development better than government laboratories and universities, has been so slow to fund this organization. Why can it not do something for basic research, which this organization proposes to foster, and come through with the grants for this organization which is dedicated to working on basic research in co-operation and conjunction with some of the major industrial companies in this country?

I call upon the Government to deal with this application quickly, and to deal with the whole question of scientific research and development in a serious manner, which it has not done up until now.

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity I am given this evening to respond to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), the science and technology critic for the New Democratic Party. I can inform the Hon. Member that first of all, our gross expenditures on research and development have increased by an annual 4.1 percent in 1985-1986 and an estimated 4 percent in 1986-1987. At a time when the pressure on both corporate and government budgets is tremendous, these figures demonstrate the emphasis placed by government and the private sector on research and development as instruments of economic growth.

Granted, gross domestic spending on research and development as a percentage of GNP went down in 1986. However, the actual figure is not important, statistically speaking. What is important is that economic growth has been enhanced by our policies, and that the Government has managed to rein in inflation, lower interest rates, reduce the massive deficit we inherited from our predecessors and increase spending on research and development. To me this proves that our emphasis on research and development as instruments of economic growth is justified.

I may remind the Hon. Member that gross domestic expenditures on research and development as a percentage of GNP are merely statistics and should be interpreted only as performance indicators. We cannot use these performance indicators to compare directly our R and D performance with other OECD countries. No other OECD member, except perhaps Australia, has a combination of primary and secondary industries similar to ours, with a substantial percentage of its industrial capacity belonging to foreign interests and a relatively low commitment to military research and development.

Nevertheless, we do engage in world-class research. By restructuring and concentrating our resources, we will make it possible for our researchers to emulate the achievements of Dr. Polanyi, Bell Northern, Mitel and all those who helped to develop the Canadarm. We have a national science and technology policy that has been accepted by all the provinces, a carefully selected group of science and technology advisers and a national advisory council on science and technology. We also have a space program and a micro-electronics program under which $90 million is available to participating industries. We supported the Canadian Institute for Advanced Research.

Finally, we launched InnovAction, a program that will help all Canadians realize the importance of science and technology in their lives. As the Economic Council of Canada stated in its report "Making Technology Work", published last June, all Canadians must openly embrace the new technologies and realize there is no alternative. Our Government has made science and technology its priority and will continue to do so.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—EL SALVADOR—DISCOVERY OF HEADLESS BODY OF AGRICULTURAL WORKERS' REPRESENTATIVE/CANADIAN AID TO EL SALVADOR

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, on May 29 I asked the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) a question regarding El Salvador. In part, my question was, "Will the Minister indicate to the President—" that is, of El Salvador, "that Canada's decision to extend that aid was based on an expectation that the President would be willing and able to control human rights violations of this sort—" and I was referring to the recent murder of another trade union leader by the death squads in El Salvador, "—and that the continuation of the aid is conditional on progress in that matter?"

• (1810)

The Minister said:

> I do not want to make any general comment that might make that delicate situation more difficult. However, I will certainly look into the information which the Member has provided and will take whatever action is appropriate.

The Minister made no protest to the Government of El Salvador about its continuing murders of trade unionists, which is what I had asked in my first question. He gave me no answer as he promised to my second question after he looked into it. The only action he took was to signal earlier this year the renewal in the next phase of bilateral aid to the Duarte Government.

We have in a story in The Globe and Mail the description of the futility of aid controlled by a Government which is itself controlled by a murderous or Fascist army. An article in the October 27 edition of The Globe and Mail written on the murder of Herbert Anaya, the President of the Salvadoran Human Rights Commission, in front of his family as he prepared to take two of his six children to school, reads in part:

> The killing appears to be part of a recent increase in death-squad murders and disappearances apparently linked, analysts say, to the rise in anti-Government and anti-army protests.

It refers to the gruesome amnesty offered by the Government to those killers, that is, the death squad murderers. Also, referring to the amnesty, it indicates:

> It pardons all political crimes, including more than 50,000 political killings during the past seven years. Most of those were clearly committed by death squads linked to the military and security forces.

The Minister was quite mistaken to declare El Salvador democratic in any sense when it is controlled by such a Fascist army, when the army even ignores the cease-fire order of the President of El Salvador. They laugh at him.

He was equally mistaken to give aid to the Duarte Government. The Minister claims that he gives aid not to the Government but to poor people, but that is not true. The Duarte Government controls the distribution of Canadian aid money through the Minister of Planning. This was told to me by the Vice-Minister of Planning who explained that the list should be vetted ahead of time before it is shown to the Minister, so that there might be no embarrassment of a name on there that the Minister might not wish to see.

What we have is what The Globe and Mail aptly calls "dirty wars" in El Salvador and "dirty wars", in Guatemala. For example, its October 28 editorial reads:

> The situation is no different in Guatemala, where tens of thousands of Indians have been killed in the past decade for a presumed association with the country's guerrillas, and where human rights crimes continue under the civilian government of President Vinicio Cerezo Arevalo.

In today's edition of The Toronto Star we have the same. People have noticed that disappearances have continued since Guatemala returned to civilian rule, and some have noticed that death squad activity is on the rise again. The American Embassy in the spring indicated that death squads this year had doubled the rate of the death squads last year under the same President.

The Minister is also mistaken to call Guatemala a democratic country when that Government is also controlled by the army, by a Fascistic murderous army. The Minister has no basis for saying as quoted in today's The Citizen:

> The election of Vinicio Cerezo as president of the country has resulted in the beginning of a democratic process.

He has no basis for saying:

> Consequently, and in keeping with our conviction that the root causes for instability and violence in Central America are economic and social in nature, we have decided to renew Canada's bilateral aid relationship with Guatemala. We believe that with care and imagination it will be possible to organize a program that benefits the poor.

That is simply not based on the real facts. The Minister has never given me his reasons for the decisions he has been considering for over a year and which he has now announced.

Human rights violations go unpunished. Whether they were a little less last year or a little more this year makes no difference in El Salvador or in Guatemala. When I visited Guatemala a year and a half ago I saw Canadian aid in the form of corn given through Canadian NGOs to Guatemalan NGOs. I saw the corn being distributed by a member of the civil patrols. In other words, Canada's money was going to help confirm the dictatorial power of the Guatemalan army.

• (1815)

I commend the Hon. Minister for his plan to visit Central America. I believe it will be a useful thing for him to do. I hope he will visit Central America and visit it more than once to learn at first hand what is going on. I hope he will reconsider his decision to aid Guatemala and not make the same mistake he made in El Salvador, and that he will not fund the army that controls Guatemala.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I have always felt the House of Commons was a tremendous forum, however one should exercize caution when making accusations. Clearly there has to be some facts behind the Hon. Member's comments, but they must be viewed within the general outlook and the general policy of the Government.

Human rights violations must be punished. I think that generally speaking, Madam Speaker, this may be said in this House but there is a lag between saying it and implementing it, and that lag indeed the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) is attempting by every available diplomatic means to make sure that human rights are respected. We as a Government have very close links with all the agencies which deplore those facts and we are closely monitoring them. Our assistance program, Madam Speaker, are designed to reduce disparities. And it is my view that if we base our assistance program on human rights violations only, we might very well make mistakes that would prevent us from meeting that first goal of reducing inequalities.

That violations should be punished is a principle that can be stated but implementing it is a different story. Our programs are aimed at reducing those inequalities, and very soon, indeed next week, the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be touring those Central American countries to verify and I may say to verify and discuss with the authorities. This may be a way of doing things with which the Hon. Member may not entirely agree, but it is my view that in light of his visit, and it will be my privilege to also take part in that tour and discussions, but I think that in light of that visit and especially of those discussions with the Secretary of State, some points will be clearly established.

I have already attended similar meetings and on that I can state that there is a full range of means available. Rising in this House to violently condemn is one way. It solves nothing in San Salvador, Nicaragua or other countries. Ours is a very special forum that can be used sometimes, but I think there are other ways and we should not reduce our assistance on those grounds. Quite the opposite, our assistance is aimed at reducing inequalities. Examples such as those given by the Hon. Member may be true. There are examples in every country, including Canada, where people will attempt to abuse the system by every means. That is true. But for making diplomatic charges, voicing statements in this House with the sole purpose of stating that, we prefer solutions that are much more effective.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT—REGION OF MONTREAL—REQUEST FOR $25 MILLION GRANT—GOVERNMENT POSITION—AID—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Madam Speaker, my intervention this evening follows a question I addressed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret), who is supposedly responsible for economic development in the Montreal region. I should remind the House that, two years ago, after the announcement of the closing of Bombardier, Canadian Steel Wheel, Laforge, Daoust, La Parisette and Vickers, I established along with provincial and municipal political representatives, as well as the citizens and unions, a survival committee to avoid the loss of 5,000 jobs in East Montreal.

At the time, as this House will also recall, the Conservative Government had responded to our representations, and to the closing of the Gulf Refinery in East Montreal by annoncing the creation of two committees, in addition to the Picard committee. There were therefore three committees: the Ministerial Committee, presided by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, the Picard Committee for the Montreal Region and the East Montreal Economic Recovery Committee presided by Mr. Pichette.

At the time, the Conservative Government did nothing to help the economy of East Montreal and to avoid the loss of thousands of jobs. Fortunately, the provincial Government led by Mr. Bourassa was able to save three quarters of the Gulf Refinery and three quarters of its employees. Bombardier was able to get contracts with the assistance of the provincial Government and to avoid closing down immediately. However, six months ago, the Picard Committee made public its 86 recommendations for the development of Greater Montreal, including the development of Montreal Harbour, the Space Agency, the International Banking Centre and so on, and for six months, the minister of Regional Industrial Expansion has been saying: "Yes, I shall announce decisions in due time." But nothing is being done. The Government keeps dragging its feet.

Two months ago, the East Montreal Development Committee, presided by Mr. Pichette, whose members include representatives of business, labour, the social-economic sector, Montreal, as well as federal and provincial representatives, unanimously recognized that, as pointed out in the study before me, while there has been economic recovery in Quebec, in Greater Montreal and throughout Canada, it had not yet happened in East Montreal. In fact, businesses were closing down, and at the time the report was published, early in September, Montreal East had 22,000 unemployed workers, 9,400 people on welfare, and if nothing was done, 3,000 jobs would be lost in the shipbuilding and rail transportation industries and at Angus.

Some of the recommendations were addressed to the authorities of the City of Montreal, and I must say that two weeks later, city authorities reacted quickly—they had taken part in the consultations with Mr. Pichette—and announced concrete measures to revitalize Montreal East and ensure there was a development plan for establishing new industries and providing the requisite infrastructure to attract new industry to Montreal East. Unfortunately, the federal Government is once again dragging its feet. There were five recommendations that were important for the development of Montreal East and were supported by the unions, including the metal workers. There was the question of a national procurement policy for the rail transportation industry. We all know that Bombardier, Angus, Canadian Steel Wheel and Laforge depend enormously on railway contracts, and as far as Vickers, the shipyards are concerned, they favoured preferential procurement in Canada for the shipbuilding industry, which would have been excellent both for Vickers in Montreal East as well as for the Sorel and Lauzon shipyards near Quebec City.

Madam Speaker, an important point was that that everyone agreed that contracts for refitting ferries and ships should be given to the Vickers yards and that Montreal East should be designated under the adjustment program for older workers, so that these people who lost their jobs at the age of 55 or 57 and had worked 25 or 27 years in these sectors . . . unfortunately, the Conservative Government and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) abolished the existing program, the adjustment program linked to unemployment insurance, before providing for a replacement.

So the people want the East end of Montreal to be a designated area for all the workers to become eligible.

Therefore the Federal Government was invited to inject $25 million, together with the Quebec Government, into the setting up of a bureau to help with the restructurisation and upgrading of large businesses and also to create a special fund for manpower training and retraining. It is clear that welders working on huge ships in marine shipbuilding yards need highly technical training; that is why a manpower training and retraining programme, together with a manpower skill updating programme for senior citizens as well as a development fund to attract industries to the East end of Montreal, would help solve the short-term problems there, so that the East end of Montreal could progress at the same pace as Greater Montreal.

Madam Speaker, two weeks ago marine shipyard workers—people now living on unemployment insurance benefits—had to organize a demonstration here in Ottawa simply to ask the federal Government to provide them with jobs by finding ships for them to repair. Neither the provincial nor the municipal governments are responsible for building or repairing ships, and it would be important for the federal Government . . .

I dare hope that the Parliamentary Secretary who will respond will be able to meet the expectations of the men and women living in the East end of Montreal, an area which is not only represented by Liberal Members, but also by three or four Conservative Members. The industries in dire straits are all located in ridings represented by Conservative Members. The welfare of these people would require a positive answer.

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Madam Speaker, first, I would like to correct something my honourable friend said about the POWA Program, or Program for Older Worker Adjustment. We are all aware that, in 1984, before we came to power, the Liberal Government had said that this program would be abolished and that, when our own Government came to power, it maintained this program for another year.

For the information of the Hon. Member and of older workers, I would like to point out that we are actively negotiating the terms of a new program with the Quebec Government.

As for the assistance that the federal Government could, should or did bring to East Montreal, I believe that it is important to point out to the Hon. Member and to the people of Montreal, especially East Montreal, that the federal Government, through its Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret), did not hesitate one second to deal with these issues. As proof of this, we find that 73 business development projects were approved by the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion and that they have provided investments of nearly $200 million and the creation of 2 500 jobs, and another 2 000 jobs have also been saved.

Madam Speaker, what we must understand is that the federal Government, with the provincial Government, the city of Montreal and the businesses themselves, is now trying to find ways to improve the quality of life of workers. This is exactly what we are doing as evidenced by the fact that the rate of unemployment in the Montreal region has gone down from 10.6 to 9.6 per cent.

If we forget any political ideology or philosophy, whether it be red,blue or green, we realize one thing: In real terms, the city of Montreal and the population of East Montreal have received positive assistance for the workers from the federal Government, and this is what we shall continue to work for in coming months and years in the hope that Bill C-22, which has been long awaited by the people and the workers of Montreal, will be supported and promoted by my colleague for Montreal—Sainte-Marie so that the Montreal region and the city of Montreal will finally receive their fair share of jobs and investments.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.30 p.m.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

GOVERNMENT AID FOR DEVELOPMENT AND RENOVATION OF OLD PORT OF MONTREAL

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): In Montreal last week, Mr. Speaker, Mayor Jean Doré told the Quebec media that the City of Montreal and the municipal administration will not accept unfair treatment with respect to Montreal Old Port development and renovation.

Mr. Doré recalled that Toronto and Vancouver had received $140 million to help develop their old ports, and the mayor of Montreal stated that he would accept nothing less.

Current rumour has it that the federal Government will earmark only $39 million for the development of Montreal's Old Port. I would therefore urge the Conservative Members of the Montreal metropolitan area to bring pressure to bear on the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion so that Montreal may get its fair share, $140 million.

WORLD ENERGY CONFERENCE

RECOGNITION OF CANADIAN ROLE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the World Energy Conference was founded in 1924 to study energy problems in both national and global contexts. It has 80 member countries. The world organization is headquartered in London and the active Canadian branch has its head office here in Ottawa.

It is an honour to Canada that the incoming Chairman of the International Executive Council is Mr. John Foster, former President of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. Also, Canada's position in the forefront of world energy developments has been recognized in the choice of Montreal as the site of the fourteenth congress of the World Energy Conference to be held in September, 1989, when the theme will be "Energy for Tomorrow".

Blessed with abundant reserves of hydrocarbons, coal, uranium, and hydro, Canada is well placed to reap future energy benefits.

ENERGY

ETHANOL BLENDED FUEL

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources' discussion paper on oxygenated fuels confirms that 10 per cent ethanol blends are equivalent or even superior to gasoline, and that this fuel is environmentally safe and clean.

Ethanol, if properly promoted, will provide a market for surplus Canadian grains and forest wastes. Saskatchewan, British Columbia and Manitoba now have incentive programs in place for this fuel and we must ask what action we can expect from the federal Government to promote the development of this fuel in Canada.

In the meantime, why has Petro-Canada joined with other major oil companies in denouncing fuel ethanol when studies, including the Minister's own, have shown otherwise? Should not Canada's national liquid energy company be supporting ethanol development, particularly when it is using ethanol to fuel the torches in its Olympic torch relay?

CHILD TAX CREDIT—SOCIAL JUSTICE

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, in Le Devoir, a taxpayer described how unfairly she was treated by our tax system. This woman, separated since 1983, is fully responsible for and has custody of her daughter. Her estranged spouse has custody of their second child and is financially responsible for that child. This seems to be a sensible couple, where both parties have agreed to share their parental responsibilities equally. And how are they being treated under our tax system?

This woman always gives the father the family allowance payment she receives for her son. She does not claim any deductions for this child because she is not financially responsible for that child. And now Revenue Canada is asking her to pay $1,089. Why? Because her file was reviewed and the tax credit granted for the child not in her custody has to go to her since she receives the family allowance cheques.

Mr. Speaker, this tax credit is granted on the basis of family income. Revenue Canada reviewed this woman's income tax returns while also taking into account her estranged husband's income, an income that is not hers—in fact she didn't even know how much it was. It is incredible that this taxpayer should be forced to avail herself of a right that costs her more than $1,000. What did the tax reform do for those who take their parental responsibilities seriously? This is an anachronism in a society where divorce and separation are common and where it is essential that fathers shoulder their share of the responsibility for their children.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CLOSURE OF RURAL POST OFFICES—PROVISION OF ALTERNATE SERVICE

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Bloomfield Station post office closed its doors for the last time on October 31.

Bloomfield Station is a small community of some 50 households in my riding. When the acting post mistress resigned, Canada Post took the opportunity to implement changes according to its 1986 corporate plan.

I have no quarrel with progressive change, especially when it will save millions of tax dollars, but Canada Post could not and did not fulfil all of its obligations to this community.

The residents must now make a 30-kilometre round trip to get retail counter service. I do not feel this is right. Canada Post should not close rural post offices unless it can ensure that the residents will have retail service at their disposal.

If rural post offices are to be closed, then the postal corporation should be obligated to provide some type of alternate retail service within the community.

Closing rural post offices without providing alternate retail service is unfair to rural Canadians.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

CONCERNS EXPRESSED BY INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF GREAT LAKES PORTS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, this week the International Association of Great Lakes Ports is holding meetings here in Ottawa. This association, which comprises representatives from all of the ports situated in and around the Great Lakes, on both sides of the border, is a dynamic and influential group doing everything it can to make both the Canadian and U.S. Governments understand the desperate situation of the maritime industry along North America's fifth sea-coast.

Led by Jim Hill of the Port of Thunder Bay and Davis Helberg of the Port of Duluth, they are trying to point out that the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Seaway system is facing a great many obstacles to its continued viability. While some of these obstacles are the result of changing international economic conditions, and are not ultimately within our control, many others are the direct result of Canadian government policies implemented both by the present Government and the previous Liberal Government. They are policies which are, quite frankly, pricing the Seaway system out of existence. I am speaking of such things as elements of the Western Grain Transportation Act, inequitable distribution of grain by the Wheat Board, tolls, fees and pilotage charges, marketing of the system, and the list goes on.

I want to encourage all Members of the House to listen very closely to the voices of the IAGLP which is raising matters which are of the greatest concern not just to eastern Canada and the shipping industry but to our country and our whole economy.

HISTORIC EVENTS

LATVIA—ANNIVERSARY OF PROCLAMATION OF INDEPENDENCE

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, today marks the 69th anniversary of the Proclamation of Independence by the nation of Latvia. On November 18, 1918, after years of occupation by Tsarist Russia, Latvians united to create a sovereign and democratic republic. That treasured status perished when the Soviet Union invaded and occupied this Baltic country in 1940.

In commemorating this event, Latvians around the world are paying tribute to the brave and independent spirit of their nation. In spite of Soviet threats of reprisal, Latvians in Riga are rallying at the Latvian Statue of Liberty, and a sympathetic demonstration is scheduled at the former Latvian Legation in Moscow.

I have just received reports that three Latvian demonstrators have been arrested. Telephone lines used by the foreign press have been cut off and the CBC has been refused permission to travel to Riga.

Today the Latvian community in Canada invites all Canadians to join with them in commemorating the spirit of independence, and in demonstrating their desire for liberty and justice in their homeland.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON POLYESTER YARN MILL

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I received a letter in the mail which really confirms just how lousy the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) free trade deal is. It reads as follows:

> This letter is written objecting to the planned agreement on free trade with the U.S.A.
> You are familiar with our operation on Cameron Street in Hawkesbury at which we produce textured polyester yarn in a modern plant with excellent high-speed equipment. Should total free trade with the U.S.A. be placed in effect, we beyond doubt will have to close our plant in Hawkesbury.
> We could not possibly compete with firms in the U.S.A., one of which presently produces in excess of five million pounds weekly. Our production in Hawkesbury is approximately 200,000 pounds weekly.

This letter was sent to me by the Texturon Mill in Hawkesbury. Less than 50 miles from Parliament Hill, plants will be shut down as a result of this lousy free trade deal. The Prime Minister should be ashamed of his deal. He should be ashamed to ruin the livelihood of my constituents.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

NITROGEN OXIDE EMISSIONS

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, Canada is leading the fight against acid rain. The Government has implemented a series of programs that will drastically reduce nitrogen oxide emissions from the largest Canadian sources by up to 45 per cent by the year 2000. In regard to protocol, it is the Government's belief that all countries should immediately freeze their nitrogen oxide emissions.

Second, decisions should be reached quickly on the level of nitrogen oxide that cause environmental damage in each region. Once those target levels or "critical loads" are identified, each country should ensure that nitrogen oxide emissions do not exceed those levels.

Our Government has implemented one of the strongest nitrogen oxide control programs in the world. For mobile sources, the elements of the program include, amongst others, anti-tampering and misfueling programs for vehicles in Ontario, Quebec and Newfoundland, and virtual elimination of leaded gas by 1992. All 1988 cars and light trucks will be subject to three times stricter emission control than before.

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) has been relentless in his efforts to convince everyone of the dangers of acid rain. For that, and the strict standards he has implemented, he is to be congratulated.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CALL FOR NEW PROGRAM TO HELP OLDER WORKERS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I was most pleased to read this morning in the paper that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has finally lived up to his promise and set up a pension plan for workers in his former riding of Central Nova. At the same time I would like to ask the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) what happened to their promise for older workers in the financial statement of November, 1985.

There is a woman in my riding who, under the previous Liberal administration, would have been eligible for a pension when a clothing factory ceased to operate. She lived up to all the requirements of the Labour Adjustments Benefits Program. However, because the Government cut the program she does not receive a penny.

The Government promised it was going to replace the program with a new program for older workers. What is good for the older workers in Central Nova should be good for the older workers across Canada. I ask the Prime Minister to live up to his promise to every older worker, not just the workers in his former riding.

NECESSITY TO MAKE POPULATION WELL INFORMED

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with Hon. Members a most gratifying experience. After an agreement in principle on free trade was signed by Canada and United States, I decided to explain the facts of the matter to my constituents, using the information material prepared for the House of Commons. I set up a temporary office in a mobile booth that goes to the three main shopping centres in my riding. This gives me a chance to meet with my constituents and discuss free trade and any other questions they care to bring up.

People's reactions have been very positive. In fact, I am especially pleased to have a chance to correct the false allegations being made by the Opposition with respect to free trade. When the issues are properly explained, people quickly understand the advantages of this free trade agreement. Mr. Speaker, I hope my colleagues will do likewise and that the Opposition will finally stop its political rhetoric and tell the truth about this historic project we have undertaken here in Canada.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, today I stand to defend those elected officials and other individuals who are being attacked by the Government. In its desperate attempt to sell the Conservative trade deal the Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) have been attacking their opponents and fanning regional animosities.

In 1984 the Prime Minister came to power preaching national reconciliation. We now see him fueling the flames of regional hatred. The Prime Minister has accused those who are against his trade deal of being against the economic well-being of the less fortunate economic regions of the country.

When questions were raised in the House of Commons about the Auditor General's Report and regional development grants being issued to the West Edmonton Mall, the questioners were accused of being against the economic interests of western Canada.

Accusations such as this made by the Prime Minister and by his cohorts are entirely unfounded. The Prime Minister speaks out against people from Ontario. His Ministers attack personally the Premiers of those provinces which oppose his deal. Where is the civility that we used to hear about? Where has national reconciliation disappeared?

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF NDP LEADER

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, as the debate on free trade continues I believe many Canadians must find it passing strange that the gurus of doom and gloom, people such as the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) and Bob White, have an atrocious record of forecasting job losses or new job creation.

They were against the Auto Pact when it was signed. The Auto Pact has brought unprecedented wealth and job creation to Ontario. It has created jobs in other regions.

The NDP Leader was against the privatization of de Havilland whose prospects have never looked better. Over 1,000 jobs have been added since its sale.

When the Finance Minister announced his new directions for Canada in November of 1984 the Leader of the NDP predicted the loss of thousands of jobs.

You know, Mr. Speaker, over almost 1 million jobs have been created.

A recent quote from an article stated this:

> Oshawa drops right off the unemployment map. The healthy job situation in Oshawa may prove somewhat embarrassing to the federal NDP Leader Ed Broadbent who represents the city. The present situation makes it tough for him to persuade his constituents that Prime Minister Brian Mulroney didn't live up to his "jobs, jobs, jobs" election promise.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE DISPUTE—ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON—REPORTED DEVELOPMENT OF FRENCH NAVAL VESSELS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. The news service Agence France Presse has reported that France has decided for the first time in history to deploy full-time French naval vessels on patrol off the Islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon to "establish a military presence in French waters".

According to the report the French naval vessel La Centaure will be the first to patrol the waters off St. Pierre and Miquelon from December 3 to January 13. This vessel will be followed by additional vessels of the French navy after it returns to France.

• (1420)

In light of the breakdown of the Canada-France fish talks, and in light of the Minister of Transport's commitment in this House on October 29 when he stated:

> —if they go fishing one iota, one jot, one tittle outside the disputed zone, we will arrest their vessels just as we arrest the vessels of other countries.

In light of those facts, does the Government now consider the deployment of the French naval vessel La Centaure as an act of provocation? If so, what is the Government going to do about it?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, France has a perfect right, as the Hon. Member should know, to send patrol vessels out to patrol the disputed waters in 3PS, or to accompany its fishing fleet. There is nothing strange or startling about that. We certainly do not regard it as a provocation; the same as there is no provocation when Canada sends its own vessels out to accompany our own fishing vessels, or to perform whatever services they perform. There is no provocation here, nor is any provocation meant, nor do we take it to be a provocation.

Ms. Copps: We don't believe you one jot.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE DISPUTE—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

Last month the Prime Minister of France, Jacques Chirac, announced that French fishermen will now illegally take at least 36,000 tonnes of fish in Canadian waters, and that French fishermen will operate, to use his words, "under the best possible security conditions".

When asked about it by the Leader of the Opposition, the Minister of Transport stated, with respect to Prime Minister Chirac, that there has been no threat from the Prime Minister of France.

In light of the news today that a French naval vessel for the first time in history will permanently be deployed off the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon, in light of the French Prime Minister's statement that France will take 36,000 tonnes of fish illegally under the best possible security conditions, when will the Minister of Transport wake up and realize that Canada is being turned into an international wimp? Will he wait until his home in St. John's West has been claimed by France as part of St. Pierre and Miquelon's 200-mile limit, or will he act now?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, where is the Member for Gander—Twillingate when he is needed? I regret very much that he is not here today to make something out of this piece of froth and puffery that the hon. gentleman is huffing and puffing about.

Ms. Copps: Some sovereignty.

Mr. Crosbie: I might point out that at no time has the French Prime Minister stated that France will take 36,000 tonnes of fish or cod in the disputed zone this year. He has never stated that. The Hon. Member opposite cannot show that having been stated by the Prime Minister. It is a figment of his imagination, or a piece of conjuring by him.

The Hon. Member's Government, when he was a member here of the previous Government, entered into an agreement with France where we both agreed that in the disputed waters—

Ms. Copps: Not one tittle, not one jot.

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. lady can squeal as much as she likes, but it will not change the situation vis-à-vis France. It is not frightened by her interjections, and neither am I.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. gentleman's Government entered into an agreement with France wherein we both agreed that we would not interfere with the vessels of the other in the disputed waters, or board those vessels, or otherwise accost them. That agreement is still in effect.

I do not know where this appellation of wimp comes in, Mr. Speaker. We did not call them wimps. We had a better description of them, which I cannot use here out of politeness.

EFFECT OF REPORT ON CANADA-FRANCE DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member for St. John's West paid as much attention to the French Prime Minister as he does to the Hon. Member for Hamilton East, then Newfoundlanders might begin to expect that this Minister would put aside his body by Fisher and tongue by Gillette and take this matter seriously in the House of Commons.

Ms. Copps: Right on.

Mr. Tobin: France has been illegally fishing Canadian waters and denying Canadian fishermen their livelihood.

• (1425)

They threatened to catch 36,000 metric tonnes of fish illegally. They promised the best possible security conditions. They have now established, for the first time in history, a French naval presence off the East Coast of Canada, and this Minister says that he has no concern. This Minister should be fired from Cabinet.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether he will be in touch with the Government of France, specifically the French Prime Minister, Mr. Chirac, and tell him that this kind of provocative action in the face of a breakdown of fish talks will not result in a positive conclusion of these talks and is unacceptable to Canada. Will he do that?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to get into the "good cops-bad cops" game with the hon. gentleman from Newfoundland; suffice it to say that one of the problems with the country is that there are too many policemen in the country, in some people's view.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: That will get you a two out of ten.

Mr. Crosbie: I do not want Members of the House to become alarmed. There has been no change in the relationship between this country and France. There have been negotiations which took place just a week or so ago on the compromis. We are hoping that we will have a more positive response from the French Government in the next several weeks.

There has been no change. The French have been sending out patrol vessels to Newfoundland and Canadian waters now for some 400 years. There is no dramatic change.

It ill behooves the hon. gentleman to be crying wolf in the House when it is totally unnecessary.

EXPORT CONTROL POLICY—ALLEGED USE OF CANADIAN-MADE HELICOPTER PARTS BY IRAN

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. A year ago I raised in the House of Commons the issue of Iranian helicopters powered by Canadian-made motors. I would like to quote the answer of the Deputy Prime Minister at that time. As reported in the November 17, 1986 edition of Hansard, he said:

> Where there is a clear case of spare parts being used for military purposes, the export permit requests are turned down.

Now we know, a full year after this statement, that Iranian helicopters are still being deployed in the Persian Gulf. They are still in need of and they are still receiving made-in-Canada spare parts.

Why did the Government turn a blind eye to the shipments of Canadian-made parts that are being used militarily in one of the hottest conflict spots on the face of the earth? Why, at the same time in so doing, did the Government give Canadians their own brand of Irangate?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the short answer to that is that we did not.

I have noted, as have other members of the Ministry, the report on Radio-Canada and CBC last night. To my knowledge all that has changed from last year to this year is that there has been a news report of an old story. Certainly there is no evidence in my possession—and if the Hon. Member has any, I would welcome receiving it—that there has been any shipping of Canadian parts for military purposes to Iran.

When the matter was raised last year I was in touch directly with officials at Pratt & Whitney. I think the House will join me in recognizing that Pratt & Whitney, although not obligated to do so by the law, took decisions to stop shipments to Iran from Canada for peaceful purposes that might be permitted under the law but that also might be subject to diversion to military purposes.

To my knowledge there is no shipment from Canada now. If the Hon. Member has evidence to the contrary, I would ask him to put it before us.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Certainly the Minister knows that these helicopters need Canadian parts to remain operational, and that is the problem.

ALLEGED EXPORT OF PARTS TO IRAN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I wish the Minister would confirm that the Department of External Affairs has investigated these spare parts shipments that are getting to Iran. I wish the Minister would confirm that the Government refused to publish the report on this investigation, despite a request by the CBC under the Access to Information Act. I want to ask the Minister why the Government is refusing to publish this report. Why is the Government trying to cover up the report's conclusions? Why is the Government passing up this opportunity to take the kind of action that would save lives and reduce hostilities in the Persian Gulf?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I asked the Hon. Member for proof and I did not get any. He asked me for confirmation. I can confirm several things. First, I can confirm that our Government changed the legislation on exports to make the system far stricter than it was under the previous Liberal Government. That is one change we made. Second, I can confirm that I have no indication that Canadian goods are being delivered directly to Iran from Canada. Today, however, I have asked our ambassadors in countries where there may be diversion of Canadian commodities to seek information on how Canadian commodities are handled once they are outside Canada's jurisdiction. As far as what goes on within Canada's jurisdiction, I have no proof to support the charges made last night and again today by the Hon. Member. If he has any evidence, I hope he will realize he has a duty to disclose it.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

PRELIMINARY DECISION ON CANADIAN FISH EXPORTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Yesterday in response to a preliminary GATT ruling, the Minister then in British Columbia responded to the potential devastating effects of this decision on the fish processing industry by saying that he offered his assurances that "those jobs are not going to be jeopardized in any way".

I would like to ask the Minister, who uttered these encouraging words, does that mean if the final GATT decision is consistent with the preliminary decision that Canada will ignore it?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be unwise to speculate to that extent at this point. I can assure the Hon. Member that the provisions of Canada's participation in GATT allow for export controls for the purpose of preserving security of supply, for ensuring adequacy of supply to plants and for the conservation of the resource. Many member nations of GATT take advantage of such export restrictions.

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will know that the security of supply and security of resource are one kind of argument but a lawyer could perhaps make short shrift of that if the ultimate purpose is actually to have processing jobs in Canada, something which is totally defensible.

Will the Minister clarify once again what he said? Having gone to GATT to defend our position, as the Government has indicated it is going to do, and if we lose that decision, will the Minister live up to his commitment to make sure those jobs are protected by not agreeing with the final decision if it goes against us?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, there are many ways of dealing with the question in due time, but I can assure the Hon. Member and all who are concerned about this issue that a Government which spends over $100 million a year to manage and enhance the West Coast salmon and herring industry will not allow jobs, historically established, to be threatened by any such initiative.

IMPLEMENTATION OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will know that it is one thing to say before a group of Canadian workers in their region that their jobs will be protected, but it is quite another thing to repeat that with equal assurance here in the House of Commons.

Therefore, I would like to ask the Minister for the third time, in order to live up to his commitment, will he make it very clear to the public of Canada, the Parliament of Canada, and not just to people in British Columbia to whom he was speaking yesterday, that he will implement his policy and not abide by that GATT decision if it goes against us?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I think it is unfortunate that the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party is so skeptical at this point. I have given my assurance that both within our obligations under GATT and the free trade agreement with the United States there are provisions to ensure that adequate supply for reasons of production and conservation are reflected and quite appropriate for a nation, and we will take such measures.

AMERICAN COMPLAINT AGAINST CANADIAN FISH EXPORT REGULATIONS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. During two full years of negotiations, the Government has had numerous opportunities to get the Americans to withdraw their complaint against our fish export regulations.

Why did the Minister ignore this American complaint during the negotiations? Why did she fail to protect those thousands of jobs in our fish processing plants, not only in British Columbia but also in Atlantic Canada? Was the Minister so stuck on appeasing Washington that she turned a blind eye to what was going on in Geneva?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as I have already explained at some length to the House, the proceeding in front of the GATT panel has nothing to do with the free trade agreement. I just wish that the Hon. Member could accept that.

Mr. Henderson: That is the problem with this free trade agreement they talk so much about. It has no protection for the fishery whatsoever, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Crosbie: What nonsense.

MINISTERIAL ACTION

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I would like to come back to the Minister of Fisheries and the question asked by the Leader of the New Democratic Party. The Minister seemed to be wimping out in his answer, saying one thing in British Columbia and another thing here in Ottawa.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is absolutely false.

Mr. Henderson: I would like the Minister to answer very concisely just what action he intends to take. He had the glowing words that he said in British Columbia about what he is going to do and the power he has, but specifically will he tell the Canadian fish plant workers what action he will take if this ruling is upheld?

Mr. Speaker: I have listened diligently to questions both by the Hon. Member for Oshawa and the Hon. Member for Egmont. I would point out though that the questions are not only bordering on hypothetical but probably are. The Minister, of course, can answer if he wishes.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): O ye of little faith, Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Siddon: O he of little faith, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Siddon: Nothing that I have said in this House is inconsistent with what I or other members of this Government have said either in British Columbia or elsewhere in Canada in recent days.

Many members of GATT use export controls to ensure adequate supply of raw material for their own domestic industries. I would even speculate that representatives of nations who sat on that GATT panel use such export controls. What we have here is a panel recommendation which will, in all likelihood, be overturned by the GATT council of which we are a member, and we will be opposing that recommendation when it reaches the GATT council.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's assurances sound suspiciously like the assurances we kept hearing in the softwood lumber deal, and we saw what happened as a result of that. All the time that the Canada-U.S. trade talks were taking place—

Mr. Crosbie: Do you support GATT or not?

Mr. Manly: —the Americans were staking a larger and larger claim to our resources by appealing to GATT against our export restrictions.

Why wasn't the U.S. appeal to GATT part of the trade negotiations while they were taking place? Why did we not get that question solved when we were dealing face to face with the Americans?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Get out of NATO; get out of NORAD; get out of GATT!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): When are you leaving for Central America?

Mr. Shields: Elect Shirley Carr. That is who you need.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Minister's colleagues to give her the courtesy of some silence so she may answer the question.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, in order to deal with the Hon. Member's anxieties about softwood lumber, may I remind the House that that industry has enjoyed record production and record profits this year at a time when the provinces owing the resource have experienced the refund of money to them. I can assure the Hon. Member that he does not have a problem on that front.

• (1440)

I again point out to the House that the proceedings before the GATT on this and other issues have nothing to do with the free trade agreement. For instance, in the same period in which the U.S. took this action against Canada we took action against the U.S. on their customs users' fees. That, again, is an action separate from the free trade agreement.

You will recall clearly, Mr. Speaker, that the opposition Parties have put great faith in the GATT process. They have told us over and over again to forget about bilateral agreements and deal only in the GATT. Now they do not like the result.

EFFECT OF POSSIBLE GATT RULING ON CANADIAN JOBS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. We have had vague assurances from the Minister, from which he is backing down all the time, that no jobs would be lost. In the meantime thousands of fisheries workers are being left in the dark. There is a GATT ruling the details of which they have not seen. No one in Canada has seen the final text of the trade agreement with the United States.

Can the Minister tell us precisely what he is going to do to ensure that those jobs will not be lost, rather than only a vague commitment?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I would prefer to illustrate by example. If the precision with which we have created over one million new jobs in Canada—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Siddon: —including over 100,000 new jobs in British Columbia, is any example, then I can ask the Hon. Member to be somewhat patient. Our objective is to create additional employment, not by being hewers of wood or drawers of water, but by adding value to all of our resources. That is in the nature of our commitment in this matter.

TRADE

EXPORT CONTROL POLICY—IRAN—ALLEGED USE OF CANADIAN-MADE HELICOPTER ENGINES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is supplementary to the very serious matter raised by my colleague with regard to the use of Pratt & Whitney engines in war helicopters in Iran.

Mr. Crosbie: A very serious matter indeed.

Mr. Axworthy: It is a serious matter. Perhaps the Minister of Transport does not take anything seriously, but this is a serious matter.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs asked for some proof. He must be aware of the fact that last summer the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute named Canada as one of the major suppliers of war materials to Iran. I know that the Minister is fully aware of that international organization and knows that it has a good reputation. It has named Canada.

At that time the Canadian Government made no response to that particular proof which was provided by that institute. At the same time the Minister promised in this House that the Department of External Affairs would undertake an investigation into the use of Pratt & Whitney engines in military helicopters in Iran. We have not received a report from the Minister on the results of that investigation.

The onus of proof is really on the Minister. What were the results of the investigation which he promised to undertake?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have three quick things to say. First, the export control law of Canada is much tighter now because we made it tighter than the loose law that existed under the Liberal Government of which the Member who placed the question was a nominal member.

Second, he exaggerates, as he knows, the SIPRI report.

Mr. Axworthy: I never lost a convention though.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): He has not lost a convention but he is planning to and, by golly, when it happens he will.

Mr. Axworthy: That must be the voice of experience talking.

Mr. Crosbie: Go down to Harvard, Lloyd. Join your brother down in Harvard, buddy. Where is Tom when he's needed?

Mr. Axworthy: Tell us about losing conventions.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The right hon. gentleman will complete his answer. I would ask Hon. Members beside him to refrain from expressing their opinions unless they have the floor. The right hon. gentleman.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The third point I want to make is that we have no proof. The Hon. Member has no proof that there is a shipment of Canadian parts to Iran. If I have proof, and if I have means to stop that kind of shipment, I will stop it.

We have already secured the agreement of Pratt & Whitney with regard to direct shipments from this country to Iran. I assume that it is now being alleged that there is a diversion in third countries. I have already indicated, in answer to one of his colleagues, that I have instructed ambassadors of Canada to those countries in which a diversion might occur to seek all the information which may be available in those third countries in an effort, first, to find the facts.

Second, if the facts are as alleged, we will determine whether we can, by influence, change practices outside our jurisdiction which we do not have the legal power to change because they are outside our jurisdiction.

EXPORT CONTROL LOOPHOLES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Government promised to do that a year ago and it is now doing it all over again. The fact is that the so-called export controls which he says are so tight have major loopholes in them. One of the loopholes is that there is no provision for an end use certificate which would require trans-shipments to be recorded by the industrial supplier.

Why does the Minister not simply change the rules and regulations as he committed himself to do before the committee on external affairs a year ago? At that time he promised to look at that provision and come back with proposed changes. The Minister is simply not doing his job and is being caught out red-faced and red-handed on this issue.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of things to say about that. The Member referred a moment ago to a request by the CBC for information from my Department under the Access to Information Act. He did not say that the request was for all material since 1980. That is a very large request and it was submitted only ten days ago. He did not bring those facts to the attention of the House of Commons.

Second, he makes reference to end use requirements. If he is paying any attention to the facts, he will know the situation with regard to the voluntary assumption of end use requirements in the case of Pratt & Whitney.

Third, he referred to loopholes in the law. There are fewer loopholes in the law now than there were when he was a Minister of the Crown because the Government has tightened that law.

Mr. Axworthy: They didn't use engines when we were in government.

FREE TRADE

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PUBLISH 98 PER CENT OF FINAL WRITTEN AGREEMENT BEFORE FIRST MINISTERS' MEETING

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister for International Trade.

Can the Minister comment on reports in today's papers that the final text of the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States will not be released until November 30?

What is the current situation? How much longer the wait? And can the Minister assure us that, if the full text is not drafted, 98 per cent of the text which is now complete will be made public before next week's First Ministers' conference?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the chief negotiators have assured us that they are working as rapidly as possible on the final text and that it will be made available as soon as it can possibly be ready.

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION PRIOR TO MEETING OF FIRST MINISTERS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, there is now a chance that we may not even see the text before it is submitted to Congress on January 3 at the rate the Minister is going.

According to press reports, we are talking about an eight-week delay between the October 4 signing and the possible November 30 publication of the text. Why can Canadians not know what is in the text of this accord? Why should Canadians be dragged into a free trade accord without knowing the details of it? Will the Minister assure us that the 95 per cent or 98 per cent which has apparently been signed is made public before the First Ministers meet to talk about the economy next week?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we have just had a very disturbing example of the kind of misinformation which the opposition Parties are spreading about the free trade agreement. The suggestion being made by the Hon. Member is quite simply wrong. By advancing the suggestion repeatedly, as he is doing, he is again doing what the Opposition is always doing on this issue—giving Canadians misinformation. I have said that the text is being worked on now and will be ready as soon as possible.

FLOW-THROUGH SHARES

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It looks like the Government has decided to sacrifice regional development on the twin altars of the U.S. trade agreement and the marketplace.

Some Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Garneau: Which is further evidence—

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, could you ask people on the other side to refrain from holding private conversations? Look at the polls and then—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I can call for order, but the Hon. Member is entering into a preamble which is very argumentative. That does sometimes create a reaction. I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Garneau: If I can have the floor for a moment, I will repeat that the Government seems to have abandoned the regions. This is evidenced by another decision of the Government—to abandon earned depletion on flow-through shares.

Will the Government change its White Paper and reintroduce the earned depletion allowance on flow-through shares so that mining regions such as the Abitibi, northern Ontario, northern Manitoba, western Canada and even the Maritimes, will be assisted in exploration for new mines?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows very well that the Government has not abandoned its commitment to regional economic development. As a matter of fact a number of specific programs have been designed to overcome regional economic difficulties that are being experienced in some areas of the country.

If the Hon. Member is really interested in overcoming regional economic disparities, particularly in the Montreal region, he will join with his colleague, the Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie, in petitioning the Senate to move Bill C-22 along.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: As far as the Hon. Member's reference to flow-through shares is concerned, the Minister of Finance has pointed out in the House on a number of occasions since the report of the standing committee was brought down that he will study the report very carefully and will respond to the recommendations when he tables a Ways and Means Motion.

FLOW-THROUGH SHARES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the finance committee report does not radically change the White Paper proposition. Since I cannot get a response from the Deputy Prime Minister, I will direct my question to the Minister of State (Forestry and Mines). What does he intend to do to convince his colleague the Minister of Finance to maintain the earned depletion allowance on flow-through shares so that such regions as Abitibi—Témiscamingue, northern Ontario, northern Manitoba, in fact a major part of western Canada, and even the Maritimes may continue to benefit from this tax incentive which creates many jobs and promotes regional development throughout the country?

[English]

Hon. Gerald. S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines): Mr. Speaker, we share the view that the flow-through share mechanism has been very useful. In fact there has been an increase of some 30-fold in mining exploration in terms of what has been spent. A great deal of that money has come through the flow-through share mechanism.

The Hon. Member knows full well that the tax reform program left the flow-through share mechanism in place. It is in place this year, and it will be in place next year and the years following.

TRADE

UNITED STATES GRAIN EXPORTS—USE OF EXPORT ENHANCEMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds. The discussions some weeks ago between the Secretary of State for External Affairs and Mr. Schultz do not appear to be inhibiting the U.S. from continuing its use of the Export Enhancement Program in Canada's traditional grain markets.

Since the United States is now offering to sell China one million tonnes of subsidized wheat and has added Bulgaria to its list, is the Government doing anything to convince the U.S. that it should switch tactics and attack the problem at its source, which is price? Has the Government asked the United States to raise its loan rate and to revert to its old policy since its new one has been so harmful to all world grain markets?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that we regularly advise the Americans of our concern in this matter and let them know that we do not think it is helping at all as far as price is concerned. He will also know that our sales continue to increase, in spite of what the Americans are doing.

If the Hon. Member wanted to be fair about it, he would also do as the Government has been doing, which is to complain to the Europeans who are in many ways more guilty than the Americans in seeing the problems develop in the international grain markets.

The Hon. Member talks about Bulgaria. That is not a major market for Canada. While we do not like what the Americans are doing in Bulgaria, we have only sold wheat to Bulgaria two out of the last nine years. We do not feel it is a major market for Canadian grain.

REQUEST FOR PROGRAM TO INCREASE GRAIN INCOMES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, since it appears that all the Government's initiatives thus far have not corrected the grain pricing problem, and there is a great shortfall since the implementation of the U.S. Farm Bill, will the Government announce now that it will put into place a $2.6 billion program to bring grain incomes close to what they were before the implementation of the U.S. Farm Bill?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, I have three comments in response to the Hon. Member. First, we are preparing to announce shortly a record amount of money available to western farmers under the Western Grain Stabilization Act. We have been holding discussions with the Minister of Agriculture and the farm leaders about the possibility of having another direct financial assistance package available for all Canadian farmers this fall.

Third, if the Hon. Member wants to do something, he should deal with his cohorts in Manitoba. Agriculture is a joint responsibility. The Province of Manitoba is doing virtually nothing on behalf of farmers. This year the federal Government will spend $600 million in the Province of Manitoba while the province itself will probably spend about one-tenth of that. There is a great responsibility on behalf of the province, and his NDP friends in Manitoba are letting the Manitoba farmers down.

SENIOR CITIZENS

PROGRAM TO MEET NEEDS OF SENIORS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Senior Citizens. May I say in passing that it is my experience from travelling with the Human Rights Committee that the seniors of this country are very confident that the Minister will apply the same dedication and sensitivity to them as he has given to veterans.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Attewell: Approximately 10 per cent to 12 per cent of the population of Canada is now over 65. By the year 2020, that group will jump to almost 25 per cent.

It is time that we made some long range plans for these demographic changes, not just in health care but in the whole question of improving self worth and living meaningful lives.

Does the Minister agree that there is a sense of urgency to this issue? Is he taking steps to develop plans to meet the needs of seniors?

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs and Minister of State (Senior Citizens)): Mr. Speaker, I have been conferring extensively with seniors and seniors' organizations to find out their ideas regarding useful measures which could best be included in a program for seniors. I expect to be announcing such a program in the very near future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES—ESTIMATED COSTS

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Associate Defence Minister. I preface it by stating that the Liberal Party remains opposed to the acquisition of nuclear powered submarines for many reasons other than purely economics. However, with respect to economics, will the Minister explain to the House the discrepancy between the estimates his Department gave in June of this year of $5 billion for the acquisition of submarines and the report by the Centre for Arms Control which states in their opinion that these costs are at least in the neighbourhood of $10 billion?

The Minister's own Department has changed the original $5 billion numbers upward to what is now estimated to be between $7.5 billion and $8 billion. Consultants to the British Navy estimate the cost of the program at $11.25 billion. Would the Minister explain the discrepancies between all of the numbers, and which numbers is the Department now using?

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to try to explain to the House and to the hon. gentleman. If he followed the democratic procedures followed in this country and in the United Kingdom, he would find that in the estimates of defence expenditures put before the British Parliament is listed the cost of the Trafalgar Class submarine. We used those same figures last December, this June, and again recently when the discussion came up.

The difference, translated into Canadian dollars, has been the exchange rate differences as the dollar has been going down and the pound has been going up. That is the only difference that has been going on.

There is an additional expenditure of which we estimated about $2 billion for the infrastructure. We have been consistent on that all the way through.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DEPARTMENTAL ESTIMATES

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, they have been using different sets of numbers, and I think they are attempting to confuse the Canadian public's mind. The numbers the Minister is using do not include the cost of training, setting up facilities on both coasts, Pacific and Atlantic, nor the cost of the recycling of the fuel which will be used in a nuclear powered reactor. Would the Minister table in the House of Commons the estimates that the Department is now using to acquire 10 to 12 nuclear powered submarines, the same estimates which are now being used as the Government debates the five year capital project plan within the Cabinet committee system?

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that we are using the same figures in debating the annual review at the Cabinet level as we have been using publicly because those are the accurate figures for the construction and implementation of a submarine program. The fact that seven years later we may happen to recycle some fuel hardly is a cost which can be applied to the construction program. That is seven years later.

Mr. Speaker: I want to advise the House that there will be a question from the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill, followed by a single question from the Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal, and that will close off Question Period.

GUATEMALA—RESUMPTION OF CANADIAN AID

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns his impending visit to Central America. The Minister will know that many Canadians welcome the fact that the Minister has chosen to go to Central America, and we wish him well on that visit.

Many of the same people who welcome that visit are also concerned that the Minister chose, prior to his visit, to make a decision to resume aid to Guatemala, given the fact that they feel the situation there has not improved to the degree which would warrant such a resumption. Why did the Minister feel he should take this kind of action prior to his fact finding mission? Would it not have been better to have waited to visit Central America and to have arrived at a judgment after his visit rather than prejudging the situation and making that decision last week?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are two reasons. First, it is our view that there has been an improvement in the human rights situation there, not the improvement we would like to see but an improvement nonetheless. Second, I think the Hon. Member will agree with me, and has agreed in the past, as his Party has with the analysis of the Government of Canada that the fundamental problems in Central America are problems of poverty and inequality. They are not problems of ideology.

If the fundamental problems are problems of poverty and economic development, then it makes sense for countries like Canada to follow aid and development programs which will lead to the resolution of those basic problems. It is a demonstration of Canada acting as we speak, which is something we on this side of the House try to do.

MINISTER'S IMPENDING VISIT TO CENTRAL AMERICA

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Minister would also agree that questions of poverty and inequality cannot be separated in many cases from the quality of the regimes which are in place in these various countries, and from the responsibility of countries like Canada to put pressure on such Governments. So I repeat the question, to a degree, and further ask the Minister whether or not he intends upon his return to make a statement in Parliament so that we might have an opportunity to hear his views and to respond to whatever the Minister has decided as a result of his visit to Central America?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that it has been my practice quite regularly to make statements to the House. In fact my predecessors in the Liberal Government, to my knowledge, in four years made no statements to Parliament on foreign policy. I have made several because it is the belief of this Government that it is important to try to involve the whole of Parliament and, indeed, the whole of the country in foreign policy matters. So I will report either directly to the House or to the standing committee.

CLOSURE OF RURAL POST OFFICES—PROVISION OF ALTERNATE SERVICES

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. Across the country there have recently been a number of rural post office closures. In some cases, such as Bloomfield Station in my constituency and Head of St. Margarets Bay in Halifax West, Canada Post has closed the post office without providing alternate retail service to the community.

In view of the unfairness of this policy, would the Minister consider meeting with Canada Post officials in an effort to restructure the rural services policy to prevent closures from occurring before alternate retail service outlets are found?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member is, I am sure, aware, the policy Canada Post has been following has been that when there is a retirement, resignation or some other event, where a postmaster or postmistress is leaving their post, it examines whether it is appropriate to continue the same kind of service which existed before. If not, because of changing demographics and so on, it would seek to make changes. It is supposed to do that with full consultation with the community, Members of Parliament and so on. However, I hear the Hon. Member's representation and I will certainly take it to the Crown corporation.

Mr. Speaker: I want to say to the Hon. Member for Regina West that I have his notice of a point of order or a question of privilege and I will hear him shortly. However, I have some matters I have to take up with the House before that.

ALLEGED UNPARLIAMENTARY CONDUCT—MR. SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: I want to deal now with a matter that arose on Thursday, October 29, which is of some importance to the House. On that day the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) and the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) asked the Chair to review the statement of the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made during Question Period on Wednesday, October 28. I refer to Hansard at page 10482. The Right Hon. Prime Minister in response to a question said the following:

> I know that my hon. friends in the Liberal and New Democratic Parties are opposed to the interests of western Canada. That becomes clearer every day.

That is the exact quote of the latter part of the answer of the right hon. gentleman.

During the procedural debate, the Chair was asked to carefully review that statement in the context of citation 316 of Beauchesnes' Fifth Edition which states that it is not proper to "impute bad motives or motives different from those acknowledged to a Member".

I have also had the opportunity to review our practice and precedents as well as the whole of the discussion that took place on that difficult afternoon of Thursday, October 29, 1987.

What the Prime Minister said was targeted at Parties in opposition, in a generic sense, and was not directed as a reflection on a specific Member. Some Hon. Members may feel that this is a fine line. As your Speaker, I can say with some experience that Hon. Members often come too close to the fine line in both questions and answers during Question Period. No one Party has the monopoly on walking the fine line from time to time. There is not an Hon. Member here with any experience who does not realize that that fine line can be breached either in the preambles to questions or in remarks made in answers. While it may not be unparliamentary, the experience of this place is that it makes it more difficult to maintain order. Ultimately, of course, in this place what causes disorder eventually will be ruled by someone as being unparliamentary.

However, in keeping with the decisions of my predecessors, I must rule that the statement of the Right Hon. Prime Minister did not violate our rules. There is no doubt that the statement of the Right Hon. Prime Minister was met with considerable emotional responses from both opposition Parties. Indeed, it led to the uttering of some unparliamentary language by some Hon. Members. It was clear that some Hon. Members were clearly offended by the statement of the right hon. gentleman.

In the first case with respect to the statement of the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), the Chair adjourned dealing with that matter for one hour, after which the Hon. Member for Oshawa returned to the Chamber and corrected his own statement out of respect for the Chair and for the dignity of this House. He did so in the finest tradition of this place.

In the latter case, that of the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), the Hon. Member for Skeena expressed his unwillingness to withdraw the unparliamentary expression he had used in view of the Right Hon. Prime Minister's statement and in view of the way he took that particular statement.

The Chair then invited the Hon. Member for Skeena again on Friday, October 30, to reflect upon his position and to reflect upon the duty of the Chair and of all Hon. Members elected to this House. The House of Commons can only function properly when Hon. Members respect and abide by the rules they themselves have set down.

I know perhaps better than many Members in this place that the Hon. Member for Skeena is an effective Member of Parliament and has made a considerable contribution to British Columbia, my own province, and has represented his constituents very well indeed. I understand that the Hon. Member may have a statement to make to the House. The Hon. Member for Skeena.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I accept your interpretation of the Prime Minister's words. While Your Honour has ruled that they are not unparliamentary, you have recognized that they did deeply offend Hon. Members.

I have spent the past ten days in western Canada and have found that westerners were similarly offended by the Prime Minister's attack. The Prime Minister's remarks certainly offended me because they were intended to question the devotion and patriotism which I as a westerner and other members of my Party from throughout Canada serve western Canada. As I stated some days ago, I am a westerner, and a third generation westerner. I love and am honoured to serve Canada. But the west is my home and no Prime Minister should impute motive to those who have long and honourably served the West.

You will understand, Mr. Speaker, why I reacted with such anger to the Prime Minister's remarks. I had hoped for these past two weeks that he would apologize but he has not seen fit to do so. However, I hold this House in great respect and I support the Speaker. Therefore, I withdraw the unparliamentary words which I used.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Before leaving this matter I want to thank the Hon. Member for Skeena for making the statement that he has made.

I want to say one other thing to all Hon. Members. I wish that all Hon. Members on both sides of the House would watch the fine line. There are occasions when the preamble invites an intemperate response. There are occasions when, of course, the answer does the same. There is a fine line and I would ask Hon. Members to make every effort to try to keep it in mind.

PRIVILEGE

ELECTION OF CHAIRMAN TO LABOUR, EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION COMMITTEE—MEMBER FOR LASALLE—MOTION FOR REFERENCE TO ELECTIONS, PRIVILEGES AND PROCEDURE COMMITTEE

Mr. Speaker: On November 3, 1987 the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) raised a question of privilege with regard to the conduct of the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) at the meeting of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, which was held on October 7, 1987 for the purpose of electing a Chairman of the committee pursuant to Standing Orders 91 and 92.

I had indicated that I might come back to the House to hear further comments, but when looking at Hansard for that day, I found everything I needed to make a ruling on the matter today. I wish to thank the Hon. Members who took part in this procedural debate for their interventions.

[English]

The Hon. Member for La Prairie maintains that the Hon. Member for LaSalle misled the committee by stating that he had relinquished the position of Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works on the day of his election, namely, October 7, 1987, when he offered his candidacy as Chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. He furthered claimed that the Hon. Member for LaSalle was being paid an additional amount of salary awarded to Parliamentary Secretaries as shown in the Public Accounts of 1986-1987 on page 12.9 for the period covering October 15, 1986 to October 16, 1987. The Hon. Member for La Prairie seems to imply that this somehow made the Hon. Member for LaSalle ineligible for that chairmanship.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member for LaSalle replied that he had told the Minister of Public Works and other people about his resignation from the position of Parliamentary Secretary at a meeting on October 6, 1987, and that, that same day, he had written a letter of resignation to the Prime Minister indicating his intention to seek the chairmanship of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. He also pointed out that, as he was Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works and not to the Minister of Labour or the Minister of Employment and Immigration, even if he had kept his position of Parliamentary Secretary, there would clearly have been no conflict in his seeking the chairmanship of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. However, he formally stated that he had resigned and gave as evidence of this fact his letter to the Prime Minister.

[English]

The receipt of the additional amounts of money as Parliamentary Secretary did not cause concern to the Hon. Member for LaSalle because, he argued, adjustments will be made as soon as the change in his status affecting his salary is made known to the appropriate authorities.

I wish to underline to all Hon. Members the role of the Speaker with respect to a question of privilege raised by any Member of the House. The Speaker simply determines whether a prima facie case of breach of privilege has occurred. If he so finds, the motion moved by the Hon. Member raising the matter is immediately proposed to the House by the Chair and thus all other business is set aside until that motion is disposed of by the House. It is for the House to decide the matter and not the Speaker.

After examining the reports carefully, for several reasons, I cannot find a prima facie case of privilege.

[English]

As to the issue of the Hon. Member for LaSalle being a Parliamentary Secretary and whether or not he was eligible to be the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, Standing Order 89(2) has a note which was adopted by the House in June of this year. That note reads:

> For the purpose of this Standing Order, a Parliamentary Secretary shall not be a member of a standing committee which has in its mandate the review of a department to which the said Parliamentary Secretary is attached.

This note should be sufficient to settle the matter as the Hon. Member for LaSalle was Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works and not to the Minister of Labour or the Minister of Employment and Immigration. There was therefore no objection to his being elected chairman of the Committee.

[English]

Further, the Hon. Member for LaSalle has told the House that he had in any case resigned his parliamentary secretaryship. We have so much tradition in this area that I do not need or intend to cite the authorities about accepting the word of an Hon. Member.

I note on page 10687 of Hansard for November 3, 1987, that the Hon. Member for La Prairie moved the following motion:

> That the question of the behaviour of the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) be referred to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure, and in the meantime I would ask you to invite the Hon. Member for LaSalle to relinquish the chairmanship.

● (1520)

[English]

May I point out that it is not sufficient to make a charge in general terms with regard to the conduct of another Member. Such charges should contain specific accusations. I would like to remind all Members of the long established traditions of the House, and its committees, that an inquiry with respect to the conduct of a Member can only take place provided that he has been charged with a specific offence or offences.

I think that it is especially important to remind all Hon. Members of the comments made by Speaker Michener in his often-quoted ruling on the Pallett case on June 19, 1949. These comments can be found on page 584 of the Journals:

[English]

> In my view simple justice requires that no Hon. Member should have to submit to investigation of his conduct by the House or a committee until he has been charged with an offence.

Such a procedure or requirement is the only means of ensuring fairness, and Speaker Michener was clear that Members are as entitled to such protection as is every ordinary Canadian citizen.

Therefore, I must rule that there is no prima facie case of privilege in this matter.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED RESTRICTION OF RIGHTS OF MEMBERS OF STANDING COMMITTEE—MR. SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: I have another ruling with respect to a matter raised on October 13 by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), who raised a question of privilege alleging improper restrictions on the rights of the members of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. Supported by several other Members, the Hon. Member objected specifically to the adoption by the committee of the following motion:

> That during the course of the evaluation of the Committee's researchers and research needs, no Member of the Committee engage any of the researchers without the consent of the Chairman.

Just before the motion at issue, it had been agred to proceed to an evaluation of the committee's research needs.

[English]

On October 13, I told the House that I did not think that the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt had a question of privilege. I said that perhaps he had a complaint. After studying the precedents and the authorities I can now confirm that my first view of the matter was indeed correct. There is no prima facie question of privilege to be found in the issue raised by the Hon. Member.

Previous rulings and parliamentary custom are quite clear. Committees are definitely in control of their own procedures. In this respect, I may refer Hon. Members to Beauchesne's, Fifth Edition, Citation 569(3), which reads as follows:

[English]

> The Speaker has ruled on many occasions that it is not competent for him to exercise procedural control over the committees. Committees are and must remain masters of their own procedure.

On May 3, 1972, Mr. Speaker Lamoureux had the following to say about a problem in a committee that was raised in the House:

> I think it is long-established practice that difficulties in discussions and debates in a committee should be settled by the committee itself, and that if there are difficulties which are to be considered by the House this should be done at the time the report of the committee is before the House for debate and consideration by the members of the House.
> In addition to these points there is in my mind a question of the propriety and practicality of having the proceedings of one committee investigated by another committee of the House. I can foresee all sorts of difficulties if this were allowed and became a practice of the House.

That is a quote from the judgment of Mr. Speaker Lamoureux on May 3, 1972.

[Translation]

> According to established custom, the proceedings of committees may not be considered or debated in the House except in the form of a committee report. If a point of order or question of privilege is raised in a committee, the matter should be dealt with in committee rather than being raised in the House.
> Traditionally, the conduct of a Member may not be submitted for scrutiny to the House by way of a question of privilege.

[English]

The Speaker went on in the same ruling to say that he had:

> —always had serious doubts of the advisability of having proceedings of a committee investigated by another committee of the House.

I would also cite Mr. Speaker Jerome on May 26, 1975, when he stated:

> First, both Members at one time or another suggested that the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections ought to have these questions referred to it, which to me would seem to establish a precedent and initiate or encourage a practice wherein the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections would become some kind of court of appeal on the proceedings of other standing committees. It seems to me that nothing could be more unacceptable as a practice which ought to be more directly discouraged.

I can refer Hon. Members to many rulings that are similar and make the same point.

I thus feel that our precedents are clear and repeat, with regret, that I cannot find that the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt has made out a prima facie question of privilege.

I should also add that, perhaps appropriately, the Chair has been lenient in hearing complaints that may have come forward as a question of privilege or point of order from committees. I have done so because the committees have new powers and are finding their way. Perhaps by hearing some of those matters, it has assisted all Hon. Members to make the committee system work more satisfactorily.

I would ask Hon. Members to keep in mind that the leniency of the Chair for a while ought not to be pressed too far, and especially because of that I have taken a few minutes to put some of the procedural law, which is our tradition, before the House. I would ask Hon. Members to strive mightily to resolve their problems in committee before they feel it necessary to come to the Chair on those matters.

POINTS OF ORDER

TRANSLATION OF REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON TRANSPORT

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) has given me notice of perhaps a point of order or question of privilege. Perhaps the Hon. Member could advise the Chair.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I am not certain which it is, and I will leave that to you to judge, Sir.

I have two points. The first one concerns the welfare and good order of the operations of this House, and most particularly the operations of the standing committees.

Almost three weeks ago a report of the Standing Committee on Transport was sent over to the translation division. There was a meeting scheduled for last Tuesday which had to be cancelled because the report had not been translated. We had a meeting scheduled for tomorrow morning which has now been cancelled because the translation has still not been received.

I am informed, Mr. Speaker, that the translation division took off all last week when the House was adjourned. It was my impression that the House of Commons was adjourned, meaning the MPs. I did not understand that the people who are supposed to be working here on a full-time basis also adjourn.

I think that is a handicap. We have had a chronic number of times, including occasions when cabinet Ministers have had to rise in the House and state that they are waiting for the translation. If the division is understaffed, something should be done about that. If they are goofing off, something should be done about that. If it is both, something should be done about both things.

PARKING ON THE HILL—ALLOCATION OF SPACE NOS. TO MPS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): My second point is an entirely different subject. For the fourth time in the past three weeks I have driven up behind the Centre Block of the House of Commons and found that all the parking places were taken. I would like you, Sir, to inquire as to how many staff people of MPs or cabinet Ministers are using parking places, or whether Members of Parliament who have a parking place around the Confederation Building are bringing their car up here.

Would you consider, Sir, allocating a parking place number to each Member of the House of Commons in order that this does not occur. My car is presently illegally parked, and if I get a ticket, Sir, I will be giving it to you.

Mr. Speaker: I think that both of the Hon. Member's points are points of order. I can advise the Hon. Member that neither of them are points of privilege.

Let me deal first with the question of the translation services. This is a very serious matter indeed, and the Chair takes it as serious. Except for the press of other things, I was about to deliver this afternoon a reply to exactly the same problem which was raised some weeks ago by colleagues of the Hon. Member. I will attempt to do that tomorrow. The Hon. Member will see then that the Chair does think that the matter is not only of interest to this place, but it is a serious matter. Somehow we must find a resolution to it.

• (1530)

On the other question the Hon. Member has raised, I will take notice of it. I will ensure that at the appropriate time someone gets back to the Hon. Member and, hopefully, the matter can be resolved. In the meantime, of course, he can send his tickets to the Speaker's chambers.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

FIRST MEETING OF COMMONWEALTH COMMITTEE OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS MINISTERS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, all Parties in this House have supported the actions taken by the Prime Minister and Government of Canada to hasten a peaceful end to apartheid. A central element of our policy has been to recognize and enlarge the important role of the Commonwealth in encouraging peaceful change in Southern Africa. Members of the House shared the Prime Minister's determination that the meeting he chaired in Vancouver of the Commonwealth Heads of Government should maintain the pressure upon South Africa to end apartheid.

Four of the Front Line States are members of the Commonwealth. So are Lesotho, Swaziland and Malawi; so was South Africa, until her adherence to apartheid cast her out. These "family connections" of the Commonwealth impart a unique capacity to help end the evil of apartheid, and help promote secure and endurable economic development. Other nations have more economic influence in southern Africa; but no other organization has the potential political influence of the Commonwealth. That was demonstrated most clearly by the work of the Eminent Persons Group, whose authority rested upon the combined credentials of the individuals involved and the Commonwealth which sponsored them. The negotiating concept formed by the Eminent Persons Group remains the best prospect of ending apartheid, and was obviously the most enduring result of their work. But the Eminent Persons Group was also important as proof that the world's abhorrence of apartheid was not passing and would not wane.

Part of the challenge facing serious opponents of apartheid is to maintain and increase the steady pressure upon Pretoria. That becomes even more important as the Government of South Africa increases its repression and censorship at home, and intensifies its propaganda abroad. Commonwealth Heads of Government, in Vancouver, noted, and I quote:

> The unfolding—but often unseen—tragedy of South Africa impels us to ensure that the world continues to focus its attention on apartheid until we meet again in full session.

In that spirit, all member countries except Britain accepted a Canadian proposal that a Committee of Foreign Ministers be established to meet periodically between now and the next Heads of Government meeting in Kuala Lumpur in 1989. The mandate of that committee is broad—"to provide high level impetus and guidance in furthering the objectives agreed upon" by Heads of Government in what has become their Okanagan Statement.

I have the honour, on behalf of Canada, to chair that Committee, whose other members include the Foreign Ministers of Australia, India, Guyana, Nigeria, Tanzania, Zambia, and Zimbabwe.

I have been in touch with my colleagues on the Committee, and with the Commonwealth Secretariat, and am advising Parliament today that the Commonwealth Committee of Foreign Ministers will hold our first meeting in southern Africa itself, in Lusaka, Zambia, at the beginning of February. We are using the weeks before that meeting to take up directly some of the initiatives in the Okanagan Statement, and to work with the Commonwealth Secretariat on others.

The Vancouver Conference focused on three major areas—sanctions, aid to the Front Line States, and reaching into South Africa to aid the victims and opponents of apartheid, and generally promote dialogue. The Committee of Foreign Ministers, and the Secretariat, will look into means to widen and intensify the program of economic measures already in place, including an examination of the way sanctions have been frustrated and studies on the impact of sanctions and on South Africa's financial relations.

The Committee will also give priority to encouraging and assisting the opponents of apartheid within South Africa, and to counteracting the effects of censorship and propaganda. Real progress against apartheid requires genuine dialogue between the South African Government and authentic black leaders. Unfortunately, as I learned for myself during a visit to Southern Africa in August, the short term prospects of reaching that goal are not great. But we believe the Commonwealth can contribute to the possibility of internal talks by increasing our contacts with South Africans of different view points.

At Vancouver, heads of Government were unanimous in their resolve to strengthen the capacity of South Africa's neighbours to resist Pretoria's policy of destabilization and destruction. Mozambique is particularly important to the landlocked Front Line States; so the Commonwealth established a special technical assistance fund for Mozambique, and is committed to establishing secure infrastructure, including the rehabilitation of transportation routes, and measures to protect them against attack. Each country will decide how it can best contribute, and Canada has pledged $20 million to rebuilding the vital Limpopo railway line.

The mandate of the Committee of Foreign Ministers is far-reaching. It will keep the pressure on South Africa. It will give encouragement to the opponents of apartheid. It will reinforce the Commonwealth's role in promoting change and dialogue. Canada will contribute to the committee's work in every possible way. Everyone in this House believes apartheid must be ended. The Government also believes apartheid can be ended, and a better system put in place. That of course, requires countries like Canada to continue the kind of leadership the Prime Minister provided in Vancouver. South Africa should be in no doubt that, if other measures fail, all of Canada's economic and diplomatic contacts with be ended. That would be a last resort, when our other influence has ended. Both the Government of South Africa, and the opponents of apartheid, should also know that Canada intends to continue to mobilize our resources and our influence to maintain steady pressure and leadership against apartheid and the violence it engenders.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that the Government has gone a long way in its policy on South Africa. Many of its initiatives have been good. In this respect I think a good deal of credit should go to the Minister personally.

Unfortunately, however, these actions taken by Canada and other countries have only had minimal success. Apartheid, which is institutionalized racism, remains intact in South Africa and is still a way of life in that country. The state of emergency is still in place. Thousands of political prisoners, including children, are incarcerated for opposing apartheid. There is heavy censorship, and there is increasing unrest, violence, and repression.

The Minister's statement today in respect of the Commonwealth Committee of Foreign Ministers is another step in the right direction, but one wonders if it will be enough. If we look at the statement, the commitment by the Minister and the committee to look into means to widen and intensify the program of economic measures already in place is a worthwhile pursuit, and we wish them success. The committee also intends to examine the whole problem of why the sanctions have been frustrated; a worthwhile pursuit that must be encouraged. Concerning the assisting of opponents of apartheid within South Africa, again we think that must be supported and we encourage the committee. Finally, again we support the initiatives to strengthen the capacity of South Africa's neighbours to resist the policy of destabilization and destruction.

The Commonwealth Committee of Foreign Ministers, made up of a number of countries is good; they have a lot to offer. Unfortunately, Britain is not a member. We all know that Britain would have more economic clout in getting results with respect to the goals we all pursue than many other countries. I must say that the response by the big hitters; the United Kingdom, the U.S. and West Germany, has been disappointing concerning these problems. The U.S. Government has put in place a strong economic embargo against little Nicaragua but fails to do the same with respect to South Africa.

What further can be done, Mr. Speaker? At the Commonwealth Conference in Vancouver all countries, except the United Kingdom, called for wider, tighter and more intensified sanctions. These were not announced today, but let us hope they come out of the Lusaka meeting in February. I hope, and it is not made clear in the statement by the Minister, that we will not have to wait until the meeting in Kuala Lumpur for the committee to report before further action is taken. If I understand the Minister correctly, following Lusaka some further action might be taken with respect to these matters.

The Government has said before, and it has said again today, that if there is no progress in ending apartheid Canada is prepared to invoke total sanctions and may have to sever relations. We still hold the Government to that commitment. Sweden and Denmark have already severed diplomatic ties.

In September, the leader of the Liberal Party took the following position and I quote from his speech to Liberal International "We must see concrete action by the end of this year. The message must be direct. If clear progress is not made by the end of the year to end apartheid, our Government should impose complete economic sanctions and withdraw diplomatics relations from that country".

Today, we in the Liberal Party would like to say that a minimum indication of clear progress, as referred to by the Right Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner) in September, would be the unconditional release from prison of Nelson Mandela before the end of this year and the commencement of discussions between the South African Government and authentic black leaders opposed to apartheid, including Mandela, to prepare for the dismantlement of apartheid and to establish a non-racial representative government. That is the minimum we would expect, and we hope that the Minister will put this proposal on the table at Lusaka. When Alan Boesak and Tambo M'beki were in Canada earlier this year they praised Canada's efforts to fight apartheid but said that measures the Canadian Government had taken so far, at that time, were too weak to be regarded seriously. They said that far tougher sanctions are needed if apartheid is going to be dismantled.

As I said earlier, we support many of the efforts and initiatives taken by the Government. However the situation is degenerating in South Africa and more will have to be done. We will look closely for greater progress as a result of today's announcement and the meetings that take place in Lusaka.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, of course my Party welcomes the statement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) today which announces the holding of the first meeting of the committee of foreign ministers delegated by the Commonwealth Conference held in Vancouver recently to examine the effectiveness of sanctions, to ensure their application and effectiveness and to pursue other measures.

I think it is fair to congratulate the Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for having reflected the attitude of the Canadian people with respect to apartheid. We have as a nation assumed leadership in the Commonwealth, assumed the leadership abdicated by Great Britain in a way which I think is serious with respect to the Commonwealth. If there was any significant characteristic of the Commonwealth that gains respect for it, it is that it is a multi-racial, multi-ethnic, multi-religious and multi-national collectivity. It falls far short of the necessary characteristics which must bind it together if it refuses, or any nation within it refuses—particularly if the motherland refuses—to understand that the most fundamental enemy of the Commonwealth and what it stands for is, in fact, apartheid in South Africa.

Our Party has been, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs knows, supportive of the leadership that Canada and the Government have provided for much of its term. Indeed, the New Democratic Party is truer to the statements on the issue by the Prime Minister than is the Government itself. This I think is very nearly the second annual occasion on which the Government has indicated that if there is no progress with respect to dismantlement of apartheid Canada would sever all diplomatic and economic relations with South Africa. There is, therefore, a difference between my Party and the Government Party, more recently less difference between us and the Liberal Party as it has identified where it stands.

With respect to a particular approach and strategy, we feel that Canada must exercise another kind of leadership than that heretofore expressed. If we are going to encourage others to follow our lead, then we must, of course, live up to our promises and impose the strongest possible sanctions available to us. I have stood in this House many times without contradiction and said that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has indicated to us that he has the approval of Cabinet for the imposition of yet further sanctions. What we have out of the foreign ministers committee is commitment to ensure that the present sanctions are effectively applied.

Many of the sanctions that we have applied are not being effectively imposed. Indeed, to give just one example, Madam Speaker, we find recently that there is no compulsory imposition of an embargo on a shipment of oil and petroleum products to South Africa, irrespective of the fact that that is supposed to be a mandatory sanction out of the United Nations. Furthermore, we find that the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) (Mr. Jelinek) has refused to react to many complaints about the failure of Canada to impose the sanctions under the Gleneagles Agreement. Further, Canada has not acceded to the United Nations Convention on the imposition of yet further sanctions in the area of sport upon South Africa.

In spite of the manifest leadership of Canada and its Government concerning the battle against apartheid, we too are deficient and we ourselves have a requirement to tie up a considerable number of loose ends. Even that, as I have said, is not enough. If we are to express the kind of leadership which this Party feels we should be expressing, and if we are going to show others what should be done, then Canada should proceed to live up to the promises of the Prime Minister and act accordingly.

Far from being dismantled, apartheid, and the Government which supports and implements it in South Africa, seems to have been in a measure unleashed. There never has been since the issue arose such an effective propaganda campaign in Canada. Supporters of the Conservative Party are leading activities designed to discredit the battle against apartheid. More than that, Madam Speaker, we find that South Africa is imposing censorship so that we know not what goes on there and that South Africa continues to oppress, jail, and treat brutally those who are not members of the Africaans or other white races of South Africa.

South Africa continues, with some collusion by Canada through the contact group in Namibia, to act in complete contradiction to world opinion and actions of the United Nations in the occupation of Namibia. Canada has kept its voice silent with regard to what is happening there and with regard to the collusion of the United States of America with South Africa in the attacks on Angola most recently taking place over the last week or so. It has been stated that 30,000 South African troops are arming and supporting UNITA as surrogates for the United States in the overthrow of the Angolan Government, which is one of the Front Line States.

The battle is not being won. If the battle is to be won it will have to be won with far more commitment than the western nations have so far shown. Although I express my appreciation to the Government for the leadership it provides as a reflection of the view of the Canadian people, we have yet more to do.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND INTERNATIONAL TRADE

AUTHORIZATION OF EXTENSION OF STANDING COMMITTEE TRAVEL TIME

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Madam Speaker, the House will remember that prior to the break we passed an order on consent which set out the days on which the Committee on External Affairs and International Trade would travel in Canada. At the request of the committee we have extended that from December 5 to December 7. There have been discussions among the Parties and it has been agreed that this would be appropriate. I think you would find consent for the following motion to be moved and passed:

> That, further to the order of this House adopted on November 5, 1987, authorizing the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade to travel within Canada for the purpose of holding hearings on the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States be amended by deleting the words "December 5, 1987" and substituting the following therefore "December 7, 1987".

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Does the Hon. Minister have unanimous consent to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

REQUEST FOR CESSATION OF BILATERAL AID TO EL SALVADOR

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition forwarded to me by Mr. David D. Brown of Dundas, Ontario, on behalf of a number of Canadians who are concerned about the "disappearance" of Luis Armando Lemus Urrutia and Miguel Rivas Hernandez along with the murder of Eduardo Garcia Cuellar in El Salvador. The petitioners pray that the Government stops bilateral aid to El Salvador until arbitrary arrests, murders, disappearances, and torture are practised no longer by the security forces of that country.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Madam Speaker, I ask that all questions on the Order Paper be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Madam Speaker, I ask that all notices of motion for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Shall all notices of motion for the production of papers be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement Government Orders will be extended by 21 minutes.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

The House resumed from Tuesday, November 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Beatty that Bill C-77, an Act to authorize the taking of special temporary measures to ensure safety and security during national emergencies and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Hopkins: Madam Speaker, I have a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) had finished his intervention when the House rose last night. There would normally be a period for questions and comments. As Hon. Members will be aware, we cannot proceed with that right now. I am in a very difficult situation in that I do not like to say that a Member is or is not in the House. However, we are in the position that we cannot proceed with questions and comments.

Mr. Hopkins: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. It is normal that after Members deliver a speech they are in the House for questioning. The Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) started off this debate by saying that he was the only one in the House to debate while I was on my feet when he was recognized.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Haven't you got over that yet?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. I believe the Hon. Member will agree with me that we have gone over this point of order on a previous day with regard to who was in the House and ready to debate this Bill. The Hon. Member for Spadina is not in the House to answer questions or hear comments on his speech. I believe that we should proceed with this debate.

Mr. Hopkins: I rise on a question of privilege, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) on a question of privilege.

Mr. Hopkins: I simply want to put on the record, Madam Speaker, that it is a question of privilege that Members of this House are able to question other Members. The fact that the Hon. Member is not here inhibits debate in this House because he did make statements that should be answered. If they are not answered here, we will have to find other means of having them answered.

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I raised the same grievance several weeks ago after the Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) spoke. He spoke one evening and the period for questions and comments did not conclude that evening. I rose the next day to ask him questions but he had left the House. I rose on a question of privilege because I could not harass the Member from Kamloops. I thought that was terribly unfair and unjust. Nevertheless, I lost the question of privilege because there is plenty of precedent to establish that the Member does not have to be here. It is too bad that the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) is not here, but that is the way it is.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I believe that this point of order has been discussed thoroughly. We can all agree that the Hon. Member is not in his seat to answer questions. I believe that in the interests of the House we should go on with debate on the Bill before us at this time.

• (1600)

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, it is with some pleasure and sadness that I rise to speak on this Bill. Before beginning my remarks let me say that I read the speech made by the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), and I thought it was good.

In the 120-year history of this country, Parliaments and governments have taken actions that we have later regretted. We must ensure that any legislation to replace the War Measures Act will not allow any government of any political stripe to repeat the errors of omission or commission that were committed before. There must be safeguards in the law to prevent a government or, for that matter, a Parliament from taking actions in a moment of panic or hysteria that we will all regret later.

We must ensure that there are safeguards in the Bill to prevent a repeat of what happened to Japanese Canadians, who are still awaiting redress and an apology, or of what was done during the Winnipeg general strike in 1919, when there was a hue and cry to get rid of what was called the foreign element in this country.

There must be safeguards in the law so that our police and security forces will not be able to carry on as they did between 1920 and 1950, following people who were not attempting a violent overthrow of the Government, but trying, through dissent and debate, to bring about a fundamental change in this nation and the purpose of our society.

We must have a law that will not allow the kind of discrimination that took place against Chinese immigrants, who are the only people on whom we levied a head tax. I still believe that tax can and should be refunded, because the records are still within the Department of Immigration. We owe the Chinese Canadians that money and an apology.

During the so-called October crisis of 1970, over 400 people were arrested, none of whom were ever charged and convicted. I believe those people deserve some kind of redress and apology. I believe it is proper for a government or a parliament to provide redress to correct a historical error because, not only does it correct a mistake that was committed many years before, it shows a sign of national maturity and allows the nation as a whole to display an element of conscience.

We must keep these events in mind as we debate this Bill, when we hear evidence in the committee and decide upon amendments before passing the legislation in its final form.

I believe this legislation should go to the appropriate standing committee rather than a legislative committee, unless the House is prepared to provide the authority for the legislative committee to travel. Otherwise, we will only hear form those who can afford to come to Ottawa. We should hear from others throughout the country who, either themselves, or their parents or grandparents, have been affected by the implementation of the War Measures Act or other discriminatory and uncivilized measures of a parliament or government.

I was a Member of Parliament in 1970 when every Member of the House went through a great deal of agony during the so-called October crisis. One of my very few regrets, which I will carry with me all my days, is that I missed the vote on the War Measures Act. I would have voted against the implementation of that Act if I had been here. My leader, the Hon. T. C. Douglas, was to speak at an NDP nominating convention in southern Manitoba on the day of the vote. Naturally, I thought it was more important for my leader to be here. Therefore, I took his place to speak to that nominating convention in southern Manitoba and missed the vote. There were two unfortunate consequences on that day. First, I missed the vote, and second, that overflow crowd in the hall in southern Manitoba came to hear Tommy Douglas but got me instead.

During that October crisis some of the over 400 Quebecers who were never charged or convicted spent from 24 hours to 96 hours in jail before being released. One humourous incident during those bitter days took place when one of those put in jail had the same name as a person on the RCMP list. That person turned out to be a Liberal organizer who ended up in jail in Hull. Many said at the time that he was more deserving of jail than an FLQ member.

The lengths to which the government went during that moment of hysteria and panic, generated primarily by the premier of one province, is illustrated by the fact that an 18-year old soldier carrying a loaded automatic rifle was assigned to follow my leader. It did not seem very suitable for a soldier to be following a clergyman, even to the washroom and to his home; my leader never did collect the bill for room and board.

The implementation of that Act not only put the civil liberties of people in Quebec into jeopardy but the rights of people from coast to coast. Everyone was subject to arbitrary arrest, search without warrant, and being jailed without communication with anyone.

When we consider the lengths to which Parliament went in that moment of hysteria, surely it is incumbent upon this Parliament to ensure that there are safeguards in any legislation that replaces the War Measures Act.

The War Measures Act came into being in this country at a time when one can hardly say there was a great degree of tolerance, understanding and compassion among the population and our rulers of that day. We now have a great improvement in the attitudes of the the public and of the Government.

There is one section of the Bill to which I take particular exception, that is the section entitled "Public Welfare Emergency". Should there be another national railway or postal strike, or a strike by the airlines, grain handlers or the St. Lawrence Seaway, the Government will not have to bring in back-to-work legislation and let Parliament decide each case on its own merits. It has only to invoke that clause of the Bill, which means that a fundamental right to strike or, for that matter, the fundamental right of an employer to lock out, is denied in advance and for all time. And this applies to anything the Government considers to be an essential public service.

Those kinds of circumstances must be decided individually as and when they occur. The Bill allows Government to bypass Parliament in such cases for 90 days and it must confirm it by motion within seven days. Thirty Members of Parliament can sign a motion for revocation. If it is passed, it can then be revoked, but many days, weeks or months will have gone by and great harm can be done to many people directly affected.

Part I of the Bill, Public Welfare Emergency, covers a breakdown in the flow of essential goods and services or resources as a result of a strike or lockout. I submit that that must deleted from the Bill and should not be covered in any way, shape or form in this legislation. I recommend to the committee that Clause 3(d) of the Bill should be deleted.

Public welfare emergencies should be in the Bill and I think the rest of Part I is legitimate. Clause 3(a)(b) and (c) provides that public welfare emergency means fire, flood, drought, storm, earthquake or other natural phenomenon, an epidemic of disease among human beings, animals or plants, or some horrendous accident or pollution, such as Chernobyl, for example. It seems to me it is legitimate for a province and the national Government to have the powers to declare an emergency within a matter of hours and act upon it. Therefore, I have no particular objection to that definition of public welfare emergency.

However, I would hope that the committee would take a good strong look at it in the sense of is it really needed in this Bill? Probably the same thing could be accomplished by a strengthening of legislation on emergency measures both by the national Parliament and by the provinces and territories so that the ability to act quickly and call upon all sectors of the community to assist is there in place at all times.

It does not matter whether the Government leaves the part of the Bill in place regarding natural disasters or strengthens the emergency measures legislation, the fact is that we as a country are still not equipped to deal with an emergency, anyway. I hope the debate on this legislation and the discussion in committee will help to persuade the national Government and the provincial Governments to further enhance and strengthen the resources they have to deal with in emergencies of this kind. That includes, I submit, additional training for our Armed Forces so that they not only know how to handle guns, tanks, planes and ships, but will know how to put a city back together, be it to fix the sewer and water systems or establish a hospital. They should be prepared to deal with the electrical power distribution system, the direction of traffic and looking after refugees, the homeless. We, would always have that kind of training, resources and equipment to help in case of some disaster in our own country, and what makes it so worthwhile is that should we be called upon to assist in the event of another earthquake in Nicaragua, or Mexico, Yugoslavia or anywhere else in the world, we could send people there who had the equipment and know how to be of even better help than they are at the moment.

It is not enough just to have a law that allows a national Government to declare an emergency of a public welfare nature. Unless we have facilities and resources in which to carry out the requirements of the law and the regulations that will come thereafter, all we are doing is making symbolic gestures. This will cost a lot of money, but it seems to me it would be money well spent. That part of the Bill which the Government can invoke in the event of a national strike of something that is considered an essential public service should be deleted.

There is also the heading of "Public Order Emergency"; I think not only of the Winnipeg general strike of 1919 but of the Estevan strike and the Regina riot. People who were peacefully dissenting were victimized by a government which I can only say over-reacted in a paranoid fashion. If there is one thing we must guard against in this legislation it is that kind of paranoia; looking under the bed all the time for a Commie, a Bolshevik or whatever is uppermost in the minds of those who happen to be governing at the moment.

There are some measures in the Bill which I like. I have spent my time on the items in it that I do not like. I hope that the committee and the Government will address them and correct them as I have outlined.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, I am not sure I will take an active part in the debate this afternoon, but I would like to make a few comments. As a Member who experienced those tragic events that affected our lives as Canadians, Quebecers and residents of Montreal, I read and especially listened very carefully to yesterday afternoon's proceedings. Yesterday and the day before, I had the privilege of attending festivities in honour of a visit to Canada by the Armenian Katholikos from Soviet Armenia, who received an enthusiastic welcome in Montreal. He was suppose to visit Parliament, but unfortunately, he was not well enough to come to Ottawa. So I was in Montreal, and this is just by way of explaining to my constituents why I was not in Ottawa. I attended the festivities, Monday night and last night until three o'clock this morning, but in my office I could not help watching what was going on in the House of Commons, and I heard a few speeches which quite frankly astonished me.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Glued to your television set!

Mr. Prud'homme: Yes indeed, but you may have something else to say when I finish.

I was particularly interested in some speeches by Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party, and especially some of their statements in French.

Madam Speaker, it is always easy to judge history with today's hindsight. After the fact we can do no wrong, we are perfect, we can make sweeping moral judgments and we are always right. This is more or less what our NDP friends wanted to do with a message that was obviously directed to the people of Quebec—that is why I will make my statement in French. What they said was more or less that the New Democratic Party knew what it was all about in 1970. And this despite the fact that 88 percent of Canadians—it's true — were asking the Government to do something, and despite the impact these events had on me personally—anyone who is interested can read my speech—and the impact on our Quebec caucus. It also had an impact on our national caucus. We were divided on what should be done, and in the light of the information we had—that is the important point: Did we have all the information? That is another chapter I hope we will be able to write someday. However, in the light of the information we had at the time, we thought it was our duty, unfortunately, to vote in favour of a measure we found abhorrent. I found it abhorrent to have to vote in favour of the War Measures Act. I more or less said so in my speech at the time. And I think that trying to woo Quebecers by saying that a certain political party had virtue on its side from the word go is stretching the truth somewhat. It is a tarted-up version of the facts, because I have a clear memory of those important events. In fact, they say I still have an excellent memory for the important things in life. I remember that the party that today is trying to woo Quebecers was divided as well and that four Members of the New Democratic Party, and that is what Hon. Members forgot to tell us yesterday, four Members, including one as illustrious as the Members in the House today, and I am referring to Dr. Saltsman. Everybody always liked Dr. Saltsman. He was a distinguished, and a great parliamentarian.

Yet, he voted against it. Who does not remember—with your indulgence, Madam Speaker, I shall conclude by giving these four names—who does not remember the great parliamentarian, Mr. Winch? This member of the New Democratic Party and former member of the CCF also voted for the War Measures Act. He probably found this as repugnant as I did, but he still voted for the War Measures Act. I also recall that Barry Mather, a distinguished Member from Western Canada, also voted for it. I also recall one of our colleagues, who is now a member of a National Asembly, I believe, Frank Howard—

I do not know if Frank is still a Member in the provincial House in British Columbia or not.

Mr. Howard still sits in a legislature, but he now sits in the provincial legislature of British Columbia. He also voted for the War Measures Act. Even when you want to score political points and attract votes, you should still have to tell all the facts. I am not saying that my colleagues lied, but they would have done better to give the whole picture instead of giving us only part of it by suggesting as they did yesterday to Quebec, and it is to this that I object, that all NDP members opposed the War Measures Act when the fact is that they were very much divided. They remained divided up to the end since four of them voted for the War Measures Act, which was a repugnant gesture for which we shall one day have to offer reparation and excuses to those who were stupidly arrested by the police. All this will be said during the third reading debate, but I still wanted to state the facts, and I thank you for your patience, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I simply wish to point out to the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) that I certainly did not want to show any sign of impatience. I simply wanted, in the spirit of parliamentary reform, to remind the Hon. Member that the period for questions and comments is normally restricted to short exchanges to allow everyone to take part and to make the debate and exchanges as animated as possible. I am certain that the Hon. Member will want to get back to this issue during his own intervention. This is why I indicated that he should speed up his comments.

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, as an experienced parliamentarian, I immediately accept your suggestion. Instead of going on, I shall ask the previous speaker whether he remembers—

[English]

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You have had eight minutes out of ten. Sit down and let him answer.

Mr. Benjamin: Order, order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time will of course be added to the Hon. Member's response.

Mr. Benjamin: I thought bootlegging was illegal, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Hopkins: You should have been here yesterday.

Mr. Benjamin: My hon. friend makes a bootlegger look like an honest man. If he wants to get up to give a diatribe against the NDP and what we did in 1970, then let him get up and make a 20-minute speech at second reading and not use up my time.

Mr. Prud'homme: It is not your time. I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Benjamin: There he goes again, Madam Speaker. He can get up right after me and make a 20-minute speech if he wants.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker—

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: What is he up for now? He has had his turn on questions and comments.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member has risen on a point of order.

Mr. Benjamin: Another bootleg.

• (1630)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I will listen and rule afterwards.

Mr. Prud'homme: I assure you, Madam Speaker, that it is a point of order.

Madam Speaker, you know my respect for the Chair and the rules. I was not taking time away from the Hon. Member since he had finished his speech. According to the new rules, I am using the second part. Therefore, I was not bootlegging. I know that it was said in good spirits and was meant well, so I will not pursue the matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Regina West.

Mr. Benjamin: The hon. gentleman sitting beside my colleague rose a little while ago and complained that the Hon. Member who had just finished his speech was not present for questions and comments. Then this hon. gentleman rose and proceeded to direct comments, and I presume that they were comments to me. The Hon. Member did not need to use up the whole 10 minutes. He can make his own 20-minute speech.

I wish to respond to the remarks of my hon. friend who stated that the NDP always posed as the great moralists who are always right. Like everyone else, I hate people who say, "I told you so". I cannot stand them. Therefore, I will not say it. It is not something that we are saying now in hindsight; we are not curling behind the glass. This is not hindsight, it is what we stated in October, 1970. Of course our caucus was divided. I believe there were two members of the Conservative caucus who also voted against the War Measures Act. We all knew that there were many members of the Liberal caucus who were very unhappy with the invocation of the War Measures Act. We tried to encourage them to have more courage of their convictions.

In any event, all I can say on that matter is that we felt then deeply, and just as easily we could have been wrong as we turned out to be right. I am not denying that. You have a position, you take it, and you take your chances. History will judge.

To the everlasting credit of a former Hon. Member of this place, whom I considered to be one of the finest human beings to ever grace this Chamber, one of God's gentlemen and a real humanitarian, the former Leader of the Conservative Party, Robert Stanfield, who, even though he was unhappy about the desires of the overwhelming majority of his caucus, acceded to their wishes. But within a year or two of no longer being a Member of this place he had the grace and the humanity to say that of all the things that occurred during his tenure as Leader of the Official Opposition, he wished that he had done as Tommy Douglas did in October, 1970, and I will leave it at that, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, I too wish to participate in this very important debate. Unfortunately, this debate has not received much press, public attention, or very much attention in the House. We have debated it for a while, but it certainly does not seem to be on top of people's agendas. Yet it is extremely important legislation, because surely in some ways how we are judged as a country is reflected by it.

First, I wish to congratulate the Government for bringing in a piece of legislation that will replace the War Measures Act. The War Measures Act was introduced at the beginning of World War I. It was found to be quite unacceptable to most Canadians, yet the ability and the opportunity to change or amend it never came forward. Despite former Prime Minister Trudeau having stated publicly on several occasions that the War Measures Act had to be replaced, that it was wrong for such tremendous powers to be placed in the hands of any Government, he failed in his long tenure as a Prime Minister to indeed bring forth the needed changes.

I do wish to commend the Government for taking this important step and fulfilling an important promise that it had made.

With a piece of legislation that gives tremendous emergency powers to a Government, great care must be taken with the type of powers that a Government is given over its citizens in times of emergencies. First, we must be concerned that the term "emergency" itself is properly defined; that the legislation has a very clear definition of what is meant by an emergency. We must be concerned that the powers that the Government takes upon itself and therefore takes away from its citizens are not abusive and will not be abused.

When we give this type of power to a Government, the nation and our civilization stands on the edge of falling into the abyss of a dictatorship with the very emergency powers that are called upon to attempt to protect us. There must be great consideration given that in the name of defending democracy we do not destroy it; that in the process of defending civil liberties and the rule of law we do not destroy them. That is why legislators are called upon to exercise great wisdom and care in drafting legislation that is needed in times of emergencies.

I underline the word "needed" because certainly there will be instances when emergency powers are needed by Government. We know that living in this day and age, not only will natural phenomena occur, for instance, tremendous storms, dust or drought, and various other natural disasters, but with modern technology there are man-made disasters.

There was the pesticide chemical plant in India and the melt-down in the nuclear plant in the Ukraine. Given modern technology and its power, a disaster can occur that would endanger the lives and well-being of thousands of citizens. In fact, when we talked about nuclear energy as the melt-down started in the Ukraine, we know that the radiation emitted from that plant was endangering the well-being of the globe. Because of modern technology, we do face those crises that endanger our global village.

In those circumstances, it is necessary for Governments to be able to act decisively and with speed; to be able to move and direct people and bring forth manpower without proper appropriation from Parliament and, at times perhaps, without care for due process because the well-being of the community at large, whether it is a village, a city, a province, a nation or the globe, is at risk.

I wish to warn again that, in drafting the type of legislation that gives that emergency power, great care and wisdom must be exercised. As various of my colleagues have pointed out, we have found the legislation brought in by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty), Bill C-77, to be wanting. We have major concerns, for example, that the reference that once the Government assumes any emergency powers, those powers shall be referred to Parliament within a certain period of time and passed by Parliament. This also means that it must be passed by the Senate. Is the Government serious in giving this extra power to the Senate, an unelected body? I urge the Government to rethink this provision and to consider seriously amendments in committee.

Four basic classes of emergency are described in the Bill. Each one is more severe than the previous one. The first one is an emergency based on public welfare—natural disasters, the outbreak of contagious diseases, man-made disasters, et cetera. The Government will be given the power to order persons. In other words, part of the possible interpretation of the emergencies power under public welfare is that an interruption in the flow of central services can be considered an emergency. This can be interpreted as giving the Government the power to break a legal strike or to use the legislation against strike-breakers.

I was encouraged to hear the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) state that that was not the intention of the Government. He indicated that the Government would seriously consider amendments to this section to ensure that the Act would not be used against a legal strike. I take the Minister at his word and I hope, when the legislation comes back from committee, that this section will be properly corrected.

The second level of emergency is public order. This would be similar to what was used in the October crisis of 1970. The Government would assume emergency powers at the appearance of an outbreak of civil unrest or civil disorder.

We also have some problems with this section. In part, the "threat to the security of Canada" definition comes from the Act which created CSIS. In terms of the record of CSIS, we know that it has some difficulty from time to time being able to differentiate between legitimate and illegitimate protests. We are also concerned that the public order emergency provision might be used against legitimate protests or legitimate opposition to government.

Another concern is that the Act, taking the section from CSIS, would allow action on the part of the Government in a situation where there might be economic or political unrest in some area of the globe that it deems to be of vital interest not only to Canada but to a major ally of Canada. In such a situation the Government could use its emergency powers under the section dealing with public order emergencies to impose the Emergencies Act.

We could interpret that in such a way that indeed it would open the door to the Government imposing the Act at any time. I remember debating this point when the previous Liberal Government established CSIS. We in this Party—and I believe it was the case with members of the Conservative Party at that time—found this section wanting. We are facing a major global challenge with the outbreak of hostilities between Iran and Iraq. These potential hostilities certainly threaten the economic well-being of the United States, a major ally of Canada. In that event would the Government, under this section, impose these emergency powers? It does not seem to make much sense.

Another area of concern that we find unacceptable is that persons affiliated with a group which advocates the use of violence in another country could conceivably have their basic liberties and freedoms removed under this Act. As some of my colleagues have pointed out, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) have met with representatives of the African National Congress. The National African Congress certainly advocates the use of violence to overthrow the racist regime in South Africa. We could think in terms of the President of the United States who addressed us and attempted to justify his support of the Contras. Certainly the Contras are involved in the use of violence to overthrow a legitimate regime, a legitimate Government. Perhaps, had this Act been in power, the President of the United States might have been arrested when he came to Canada.

Of course the President of the United States will not be arrested and our Prime Minister will not be censured for meeting with members of the ANC. It is ridiculous to assume that they would be. However, the point we are trying to make is that the Act would allow for that interpretation. We are asking the Government to tighten the interpretation so that major powers would not be used in an illegitimate way.

We have other concerns. The greatest level of power will be given to the Government under the section dealing with war emergencies. In essence, Cabinet will have carte blanche to do anything it wants to do. It is no different from the War Measures Act.

These are some of the concerns of my Party. I am happy to hear that the Minister of National Defence has expressed interest in our concerns and has sounded as though he would accept some of our amendments.

I hope the Minister would also give serious consideration to the area of compensating people who might have lost property, their civic liberties, or income during an imposition of the Emergencies Act. We are concerned that in this area where expropriation can occur it will be up to Cabinet to set the limits of compensation. It will be up to Cabinet to determine arbitrarily whether there will be any compensation whatsoever. As well, there will be no appeals to the courts, just an appeal to a person appointed by Cabinet as an assessor.

I think history has taught us that this is wrong in terms of the Japanese Canadians who were wrongfully treated under the War Measures Act at the outbreak of World War II. They lost property and economic opportunity. Under the War Measures Act they did not have legal opportunity to obtain compensation for this wrongful act. I think everyone in the country now recognizes that it was a wrongful act. Let us make certain that these wrongful acts will not happen in the future. Let us make certain, if they are applied in a wrongful way, that those people will have a chance of getting compensation for the wrongs committed to them.

When one thinks of the history of Canada one thinks of the Japanese Canadians and the October crisis of 1970 which should surely have taught us all some lessons. It is so easy in the name of national emergency to trample on the individual freedoms and rights of people. It is my belief that a country that cherishes its democratic tradition, freedoms and individual civil liberties would take great care to ensure that in the defence of those freedoms and liberties it does not destroy the freedoms and liberties of its citizens and others. That is why again I repeat that a great amount of wisdom is needed. In times of national emergencies there is a tremendous groundswell of public opinion by the majority wanting quick, decisive action. It is a wise government and wise legislators who are able to say no, that the preservation of individual rights and freedoms must be fully considered.

We heard earlier today from the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) stating that during the October crisis 80 per cent of the population wanted action. That must have been very difficult for legislators in this House to deal with. After all we are political animals. We do read our mail, and when 80 per cent of our constituents tell us to put this violence that was occurring in Quebec down and to put it down fast by giving consent to the War Measures Act, it was very difficult to stand up for one's own feelings and one's own sense of what is right.

Mr. Benjamin: In the face of hysteria.

Mr. de Jong: As my hon. colleague from Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) has stated, in the face of hysteria.

In addressing Bill C-77 today I wish to pay tribute to Members of this House. I understand that there were members of the Conservative Party who had misgivings. I understand that the Leader of the Opposition at that time had grave misgivings and there were numerous government Members who had grave misgivings about the measure. A large number of my colleagues from the New Democratic Party were able, in the face of that hysteria, to stand up and do a very non-political thing in expressing opposition to the measures being taken. I hope all of us as legislators in the future, if ever situations like that occur again, will have the courage to exercise our wisdom.

I urge the Government to consider amendments to the proposed legislation so that when this legislation is passed by the House it will have the support of all Members.

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of attention to my esteemed colleague who has just spoken. It is always very difficult to talk about a subject that dates back so far. I agree with the Hon. Member that it took a lot of courage to vote against the measure. I agree that when hysteria hits the fan it is always difficult to make a decision. But I have to remind him that what was happening was happening in the Province of Quebec so the people in Quebec were right in the middle of the turmoil. This turmoil did not happen overnight. I am pleased to be still here today because it was an unbelievable debate, I admit that, and it was a terrible decision to take.

I have not looked at the speech I made in 1970 since then but I think I could repeat it today. I was not part of student life at that time. I was a leader in a way at many universities. I had in mind Kent University. My colleague is well aware of that. Kent University had a youth rebellion, a rightful one. I was a protector of American deserters and draft dodgers. It is written in many books in the United States what I did then, so I have no lesson to learn from anybody for having taken a tough decision then.

I do not know if the Hon. Members know the Van Doos in Quebec, but that regiment was given the task. I was afraid that if a student from my province had jumped on the military in Quebec, someone could have been shot. I repeat again that the agony I personally and others went through was terrible. I had a choice to make, being an elected person. My duty was to stop something that may take place, never knowing if the event would take place. If one does nothing and something happens one is forever sorry for not having acted. That was the agony many Members had to go through then. We will never know in our conscience if we were right. In our conscience some of us, as repugnant as it was, voted for the War Measures Act because we thought we were stopping something from taking place.

I just want to tell Hon. Members something before I sit down. Someone from my own family attended the meeting of the youth at l'aréna Paul Sauvé. They were being warmed up to go out in the streets. My relative called and said that they were about to go out in the streets. She was convinced that terrible events would take place. So I voted for the measure.

The Member was very kind in saying that it was repugnant for some, but I noticed that all people from Quebec then voted for the measure.

Mr. de Jong: Could I have one minute before we recognize it being 5 o'clock, Madam Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Regina East.

Mr. de Jong: I thank my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis, for his comments. I understand the internal turmoil and difficulty that he faced and which many faced at that time. I also remember the October crisis in 1970. I was in Vancouver working with a youth agency. We had a mayor called Tom Campbell who wanted to impose the War Measures Act against the Georgia Strait, against the organization I was working for called Kool-Aid as well as against a number of other people. Had people of the ilks of Tom Campbell had the power of the War Measures Act within their hands they would have thrown into jail hundreds of young people who were involved in legitimate, democratic organizations. That showed me how power in the wrong hands could have done tremendous harm to the democracy, the freedom and the rights of ordinary Canadians.

Mr. Prud'homme: The Hon. Member is right.

Mr. de Jong: Living in the late 1960s and early 1970s was a period of tremendous social upheaval and unrest. I predict in this day and age that there will continue to be periods of tremendous unrest. We are living in tremendous social, economic, cultural and psychological changes. Pieces of society do not fit in as nicely as they did before. The social glue that has held communities, families, and societies together is dissolving in many ways. I am afraid that it will be an easy cop-out to use the Draconian powers of a War Measures Act to impose order while what is needed is the freedom and wisdom to allow for organic changes and searches for solutions to the problems which society faces today.

• (1700)

The constant fear I have is that as we are thrown into tumultuous changes in our lifetime the forces which fear progress, the future, and change, will use these powers to impose a political order that will be unacceptable and, of course, anti-democratic. They will do it all, of course, in the name of preserving democracy. That, unfortunately, is the greatest fear I have for this legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say no.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Beatty) which was agreed to on the following division:

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (C), 1987-88

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEES

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 83, I move:

That the Supplementary Estimates (C) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1988, laid upon the table earlier this day, be referred to the several standing committees of the House as follows:

Since the list is naturally rather lengthy, being a detailed allocation of the Supplementary Estimates to the committees, in keeping with current practice, if it is agreeable to the House, I would ask that the list be printed in Hansard at this point as if it had been read.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion of the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis). Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

FISHERIES AND OCEANS

CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I believe you will find there is unanimous consent for the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly) to move the Motion standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) with respect to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: By consent, the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly) for the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) will move the motion.

Mr. Ray Skelly (for Mr. Manly) moved:

That the second report of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans, presented to the House on Friday, June 19, be concurred in.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to speak to an issue as important as the small craft harbour issue. The subject, of course, of the debate today revolves around concurrence in a report by the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans with respect to an inquiry into the small craft harbour situation in Canada.

The Government, of course, manages a large number of harbours across Canada. There are some 1,415 commercial harbours and something in the order of 840 recreational harbours. In the management of that program there have been many serious concerns about the operations. In response to those concerns, the Government, when it first came to power, began with a policy that would be judged by many Canadians as less than desirable.

The Government in a very rigorous attempt to cut back federal spending, and to cut back on the number of people involved in the public service, essentially froze activity in this important area. In the freezing of this activity the Government made the statement that it was all the fault of the previous Government that the small craft harbour arrangements were in chaos, and that the previous Government had assigned resources to small craft harbours in Canada on a political basis and had created far more harbours than Canada needed and certainly far more than the Government of Canada was able to maintain.

The Government used this as a justification to shut down many small craft harbours, but said it would do it on a priorization basis. Those harbours which were now deemed to be under utilized and in a very degraded state of disrepair would be simply barricaded off and closed. Other harbours not important in the minds of the Government would not undergo extensive repairs to bring them up to the standard required by fishing communities across Canada. The Government had a further category of harbours that would in fact undergo regular maintenance and repair and be considered for later upgrading of facilities. Then, of course, there is the need for new facilities.

This was essentially a continuation of the restraint program that involved the cutting of staff and budgets as per the overall policy of this particular Government. This policy caused an enormous amount distress. This distress was reflected back to Members of Parliament and in turn to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans and, of course, to the Minister.

The political pressure rose to the point where the standing committee felt it absolutely had to do something in terms of an inquiry into the impact of the Government's restraint position, the cutting of staff and budgets; that came about because government Members in the Conservative Party were under such tremendous flack in their own areas. Their own constituencies were rising up against them and threatening to defeat them in the next election if this issue was not addressed. There was pressure on the Minister, pressure on the Government and pressure on sitting Members in the Conservative Party. As a result, they then were prepared to undertake an examination of this matter through the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans.

When the examination was complete, the findings were that the program was inadequate. The Government also found there was enormous pressure, and it put in place a new program which was announced in June of this year in the small craft harbour area.

It is interesting to note that the Government now deemed that there was a substantial need for small craft harbours. It seems to have forgotten the old sins of the previous Government in creating too many harbours and the need to shut them all down. It now finds there is an need for safe accessible harbours. The Government also said there was a very strong need to emphasize repair and improvement to ensure there was safety in those harbours, that someone did not drive a forklift out on the wharf in a small craft harbour in winter time and fall through it with the forklift; to determine that there was not such rot and decay in those harbours that one could not work on the harbour facility.

The Government said another need was to ensure that there was not disruption in the commercial fishing activity. There are communities like Port Hardy with a very limited number of berths available in the small craft harbour area. Because of this poor management by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, if a storm suddenly came roaring in, there could be up to 900 major commercial fishing vessels trying to tie up in a community where there was no moorage facilities, or very few, and creating a grave danger to the fishing vessels. The beach and the very small harbour facilities are then littered with garbage, vessels are tied to each other for mooring security, and the disruption to the commercial fishing service is incredibly apparent. Small Craft Harbours and the Government of Canada have seen a need to build facilities to ensure that there is not a disruption in service.

Many, harbours in Atlantic Canada have received extensive damage from storms. The Government was told of this time and time again. Those harbours need to be dredged and to have the storm damage repaired. Communities were paralyzed because the people could not get out to fish. They could not get out to earn a living. They could not safely moor their vessels, the tools which they use to earn their livings.

Surprise of surprises; the Government has now discovered that the dredging and the storm damage repair in Atlantic Canada can be done with the very paltry amount of $5 million, a figure which certainly understates the case. I think this represents the Government's failure to come to grips with the needed level of improvement in those Atlantic Canadian communities.

There must be an enhancement of that improvement. There must be a steady and ongoing allocation of resources to ensure that the damages are repaired in a quick and timely manner and that the dredging goes on on a regular basis. Those harbours in Atlantic Canada must be maintained so that people can continue to earn their livings safely without disruption.

As stated in the government program, the needs are correct. But what is required, something which is lacking, is the repair of the storm damage and the implementation of the dredging programs in a timely manner so that further disruptions do not occur.

In the Great Lakes region the Government recognizes that high waters in those lakes have damaged a substantial number of harbours. It is being proposed that the damage level is at around $10 million. The harbours must be repaired in order to ensure the integrity of local economies. Because the damage was not repaired as it occurred it has cost the taxpayers a great deal more money. That is unfortunate. The dislocation which has occurred to local economies because of the failure of the Government to keep in place its infrastructure, which structure maintains and supports the local economy, has not only cost the taxpayers of Canada more money in terms of federal dollars but has also created major dislocations in the tourism and recreational sectors of those economies.

These measures must be carried out without causing the enormous disruptions we saw with the three-year program of the Government that turned a blind eye on these facilities under the guise of instituting savings. These are false savings and in the long run the taxpayers will pay a lot more.

One advantage the Government feels may accrue to it is, that if it suddenly stops spending money on small craft harbours, the damage which occurs can be repaired during an election period. What has happened on those occasions is that the Government has attempted to put itself forward as recognizing the needs of people and as attempting to buy votes during an election period. This is the manner in which the activity we are faced with today has occurred. Instead of regular and thoughtful priorized activity to fix storm damage, to repair facilities and to ensure federal support for communities both in Atlantic Canada and in the Great Lakes region, we have the situation of simply stopping all progress to try to make false savings. Then during an election period the Government opens the purse strings and tries to spend money effectively and as rapidly as possible in the hopes of buying a few votes.

That does not work. It creates a very poor contracting, repair and building regime. Often the contracts are let with the next Government trying to put them in place. The process is done in a very unplanned and generally unacceptable manner.

One of the things the Government says is wrong with the previous approach is the imprecise targeting of the upkeep program on these harbours. That is absolutely true. What we see is a situation in which the loudest voices receive the treatment. There is no effective priorization. Therefore, someone who happens to come along with the same party card as the Government in power will say, "We want our wharf fixed". When that happens, and when moderate problems in an area with very low utilization caused by major damage or major need for infrastructure are ignored, then instead of winding up where it should, the money goes to serve the needs of citizens. This seems to be politically expedient, and then the program has to start.

At least the Government has moved a fraction of an inch forward in recognizing that there has been, as the Government puts it very euphemistically, an imprecise targeting of the upkeep program. Resources are very thinly spread. That is quite a statement. The results of it fall on the previous Government which used these harbours as political plums wherever it could. Yet it did not provide the maintenance budget to ensure that those harbours were kept functional for the communities which depend on them. Indeed, they do depend on them. There was a complete under-budgeting for maintenance of important federal assets, the small craft harbours system. As a result, it is being damaged even further because the necessary repairs to maintain the integrity of those facilities was not done.

Stating that the resources were spread too thin and that the targeting was imprecise is an admission of the Government's negligence in its trusteeship of important Canadian resources. The need, the Government claims, is for expanded funding for small craft harbours, improved maintenance and project improvements. There is no doubt about that. There needs to be a substantial increase in facilities.

The nature of fishing is changing on the West Coast, for example. On the West Coast we have a large and active commercial fleet. We have two types of action that require servicing by the federal Government in small craft harbours. We need fishing ports in the fishing grounds so that vessels can moor during times when the fishing season is closed. They need places where they can moor in order to unload at processing facilities. They need places to moor and to seek security during storms when fishing cannot continue.

I point to the example of Port Hardy where we have had 900 vessels tied up at one time, with nowhere near that number of berths. During periods of storm such berthing causes damage to vessels. There is not proper garbage facilities or servicing facilities in the harbour environment and garbage is thrown overboard. There is tremendous environmental degradation. What has happened as a result of the actions of management regimes, and in this case in the Johnstone Strait fisheries, Fisheries and Harbours, through their Small Craft Harbour arm, have not kept pace with the need for additional harbour facilities.

The Government of Canada and, indeed, the Government of British Columbia have actively encouraged the development of aquaculture which is part of the fishing industry. There are many people who are absolutely appalled at the completely unplanned approach of both governments to aquaculture. They are appalled at the fact that foreign investors are allowed almost more priority than Canadian entrepreneurs in the industry. They are appalled that upland owners of property adjacent to fish farms and those with fish licences are given no say in the location of those particular facilities. Nevertheless, that industry is in place and growing rapidly.

The Government of Canada is making no movement to service that industry. This is definitely a function of Small Craft Harbours. In many areas, especially on the northern and central coasts where licences and fish farms are selling rapidly, places away from major centres, the only movement of goods and people back and forth to those facilities is through Government of Canada wharves and small craft harbours.

Of course, the Government of Canada is doing nothing to develop those facilities. There needs to be a definite facility at Sultry Bay on the Sunshine Coast in the area of Powell River. What the Government of Canada is saying is that it has two agencies, the Small Craft Harbour agency under the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, and the coast guard facility under the Coast Guard, which handles wharves and piers for the purposes of moving goods and people.

Small Craft Harbours says that its mandate is exclusively related to the tying up of fishing vessels. Therefore aquaculture is falling between the two, because Transport Canada says that it concerns fishing and Small Craft Harbours says that it concerns the movement of goods and people. What they are both saying is that neither one is responsible.

What is happening is that there is no planning for the federal Government to service the aquaculture industry and to ensure that these infrastructure resources come onstream in a time that is useful to the industry and to facilitate its growth. There is no provision for the safe movement of goods and people back and forth to the sites where the work is going on. Nor is there a method for moving the product in such a way that it will come ashore in top quality condition for the market to which it is destined. This is a serious failing. Communities like Port McNeill have appealed to the federal Government to examine the sites and develop them in order that the aquaculture industry developing on the northern end of Vancouver Island and along the central coast can develop in an orderly and effective manner. To this point, the Government has no plans on the drawing board to service that industry.

In the area of Jervis Inlet, an appeal has been made by the Powell River Regional District, by the Municipality of Powell River, and the aquaculture industry in the area to get moving on an acceptable dock where goods and people can move freely. Again the Government is stating that it is the other Department's responsibility, and it is falling right through the crack. The long-term losers are the communities that hope to benefit from that industry and, of course, the industry itself that does not have an effective area to move its goods and people back and forth safely, quickly, and effectively with no degradation of the product involved.

It is important, because for those areas that do have aquaculture potential, one of the major things is the federal Government infrastructure. This is absolutely imperative for communities on the west coast of Vancouver Island that have a large number of licences put into place. People are stating that those licences and the aquaculture sites cannot be developed until there is some assurance that there will be infrastructure; a small craft harbour, or a pier with loading and unloading facilities.

The people who run the programs in the regional offices are completely unwilling, or have been in the past, to go into those communities and talk to the people about development. They have been very unreceptive to suggestions that plans should be put on the drawing board for those communities to service that industry in addition to the commercial fishing industry, and to service the small processing plants that tend to develop around those areas to handle that product quickly and effectively in order that the benefits from the product are maximized, and it can move quickly from the area where it is grown or taken into the markets.

Not only is the Government ignoring this, but in cases that I have specifically dealt with regional managers are stating that they do not even wish to talk to those people or listen to their story, that their minds are made up. They state that there is enough harbour facility, there is not the economic justification, or there is too much processing. They have no vision of the needs of the community or the industry, and the potential of the area. It is a tragedy that I feel can be rectified by the Government ordering people to move quickly in this matter.

I see that I am drawing rapidly to the end of my limited time here, and I have 20 more pages of very thoughtful material for the House to consider.

In summary, the important aspect of the small craft harbours issue is that in the past the Government has completely failed to put an orderly process in place. If I were to give a single recommendation to the House, it would be to move the whole business of priorizing the small craft harbour activities away from departmental officials to an advisory body. That body would represent the organizations by election and nomination of those organizations to sit on an advisory body. It would then provide advice to the Government on what harbour facilities are needed and where they should be developed.

Mr. St. Julien: Madam Speaker, I can appreciate the concerns of the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly) over small craft harbours.

In a region such as ours, Abitibi, a number of localities really deserve to be included in this program. Strangely enough, we have been hearing about eastern and western Canada, but this is the first time ever a government has been listening to the residents of a vast region like Abitibi. I have two examples which might interest the Hon. Member: Belcourt, a small village close to Senneterre, and Louvicourt, the gateway to Abitibi. Department officials came to see the people and for the first time ever they discussed access to lakes which people considered important. We did get some funding recently, this was last month, and discussions are continuing.

I should like to ask the Hon. Member whether remote regions like ours—Abitibi—are entitled to their share. Do you think it is important? Nobody says it has to be by the ocean-side. But I am saying that we have our share, we will continue, and it is important for a region like ours to have programs and funds for small craft harbours.

[English]

Mr. Skelly: The Hon. Member for Abitibi (Mr. St. Julien) has raised an interesting question. To develop it a little further, the question is in relation to where the federal jurisdiction lies. This Government has been giving a mixed message. When it started out it stated that it wanted nothing to do with anything except established commercial fishing harbours. The problem is that commercial fishing goes on all over. There is a great freshwater fishery.

Another area in which the Government became involved years ago was with recreational harbours and the developing of major recreational facilities. Then this Government stated it did not wish to become involved in recreational facilities. That is something that Abitibi certainly could be interested in, whether it is moving hunters, people who travel in the lake regions, or the commercial fishing that goes on in the lakes. Indeed, there are two main areas, recreation and tourism, and the commercial fishing fleet.

Essentially now the Government is coming back and stating that it made a mistake, it is interested in the recreational tourist aspect. In that regard, it certainly could be looking at freshwater commercial fisheries in an area such as Abitibi, and other areas of the country. If in fact the freshwater commercial fishery is felt to be an important part of the local economy, the Government has to quit going both ways on this issue. It has to stand up and say that it will take responsibility for that infrastructure and get rolling in Abitibi and other areas of the country where the freshwater fishery is important. The harbour facilities are needed there for safety, moorage, and as infrastructure to aid the local economy.

Tourism and recreation is another area; sports fishing, hunting, people who wish to enjoy the wilderness in a water environment, and it is an area especially important for native communities attempting to develop these facilities. Is this indeed a federal responsibility? At one time the Government said that it was not, but in some areas it has stated that it is.

We need to answer the question of the Hon. Member for Abitibi and other Canadians who want to know where they stand and why another community can receive the support of several millions dollars for a recreational and tourist harbour, yet a community with the same type of needs is told by the Government that it does not get involved in that.

One has to ask, is it because of the political affiliation of the Member who represents that area, or is it the size of the donations that have been contributed by those communities to the political Party? It is difficult to say. At the beginning of this Parliament the Government stated it was no longer interested in participating in areas that were not exclusively within its mandate. Its definition of the mandate appeared to be managing existing harbours, and managing only those harbours where commercial fishing was under way.

Mr. Murphy: I was pleased that a representative of our caucus moved this motion, and I was happy to second the motion. In my own riding of Churchill and in ridings adjacent to it, such as the Interlake riding and the Provencher riding, the whole issue of small craft harbours is of major concern to fishermen. We are talking about people involved in freshwater fishing. For too long they have been ignored by the federal Government. Many of the harbours in their areas come under this legislation.

• (1140)

In the past the federal Government, in a very slow method, has built up harbours in communities in areas which needed harbours for the livelihood of fishermen. Over the last couple of months I have had a chance to tour many of those areas. I have found that maintenance over the last number of years—and I am not only blaming the present Conservative Government—has been completely deplorable. We have harbours which are unsafe, and we have harbours which are a threat not only to the livelihood of the people involved in the fisheries but to their lives.

I would like the Hon. Member who introduced the motion to speak, as he did so eloquently for the West Coast, as one of our representatives on the fisheries committee about our concern for the people involved in freshwater fishing. I would like him to assure me, the House, and people across the land, that our policies would be for all Canadians and would ensure that we have a solid and safe harbours policy in Canada.

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to examine another aspect of the matter, which only shows what an enormously large and diverse area is covered by the small craft harbour infrastructure of federal government.

The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) indicated the need for proper harbour facilities for the freshwater fishery in Manitoba. Of course we would work vigorously toward providing safe and necessary harbours. We would also be looking at that in terms of the major lakes and freshwater fisheries in the Northwest Territories. The federal Government is a partner in exploiting these resources, in assisting communities which depend upon them, and in making their economies viable.

It is almost impossible for freshwater fisheries harbours, such as the ones in Manitoba, in the Northwest Territories, and in other areas like the Great Lakes, to achieve the full benefit of the resource.

My Party is firmly committed to developing and securing those harbours through regular improvements. Additionally, on the decision in terms of where harbours should go, as I mentioned before this should be the responsibility of an advisory group which represents the communities and the users of harbours. Whether it be freshwater fisheries regions, Atlantic Canada, the St. Lawrence or, indeed, the area around James Bay, there should be advisory committees which examine the small craft harbours situation, decide how the budget will be allocated and used for repairs, and decide where the budget will be used to enhance new facilities.

This would remove the whole matter from the political game. Small craft harbours people would be able to lay information before those who are dependent on them and before users' groups. They would give advice to small craft harbours people and the Minister on the allocation of resources. The Minister would not hand them out on the basis of political affiliation or the membership of a particular Member from an area. The tragic history of small craft harbours is that they have been given out as political patronage rather than under a rational, consistent system.

Mr. Suluk: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time for questions and comments has expired. The Hon. Member for South West Nova (Mr. Comeau).

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Madam Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to participate in the debate today. I listened to the previous speaker who in the past has shown interest in fisheries related issues. It was quite interesting to note that he was extremely cynical about Small Craft Harbours officials who in the past were only looking for good leadership and plans. He used a very cynical approach when he talked about those fine officials.

The previous speaker also talked about the need for a new small craft harbours management plan, as did the committee. The committee met over a number of months. It received representations and conducted many discussions on small craft harbours. On June 19, it submitted a report to the House outlining our concerns about small craft harbours.

On June 29, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) announced a program. In that very short period of time from June 19 to June 29 he did an absolutely superb job. I will go into further details in that regard later this morning.

The previous speaker should be extremely happy about what was announced on June 29, but he did not go into very much detail on some of the specific items. He preferred to dwell upon past management plans and so on. If he had read the document he might have been very surprised and extremely happy with the way in which the Government has responded.

The fishing industry in Canada is a far cry from what it was a number of years ago. Vessels are now big, efficient, modern, and expensive. Some vessels are worth hundreds of thousands of dollars. A vessel cannot afford to wait in harbour for high tide any longer in order to go fishing. That is what was the situation in the old days. Fishing vessels now need to be able to get out there to fish, not wait for tides.

I will deal with the situation in Atlantic Canada because it is the area which I know better. It has something over 30,000 fishing vessels and over 59,000 fishermen. The landed value is over $1 billion. Activity in the fishing industry will increase with time, over coming years. The effect of free trade alone will increase the need for more wharfs and more facilities because the value-added aspect will be greater in our communities. We will not need to send unprocessed fish to the United States to be used in TV dinners, foods, and so on. The value-added aspect will occur right here in Canada, which will increase the need for safer and better harbours all that much more.

We have valuable fishing grounds in Atlantic Canada, such as Georges Bank, the Scotian Shelf, the Gulf of St. Lawrence, the Grand Banks, and so on. These areas will become veritable gold-mines for the citizens of Canada.

Yesterday morning I was able to take advantage of the new Small Craft Harbours program. I was able to visit some of the important fishing communities in my riding and to announce very much needed improvement programs for small craft harbours at Dennis Point in West Pubnico, Lower East Pubnico, and Camp Cove in Argyle. A couple of months ago I was finally able to announce improvements for the Saulnierville wharf in Saulnierville, Nova Scotia. Over 20 years ago the wharf had been built and suffered damage in a storm but had never been repaired. I might add that this wharf was ranked third in landings in the whole Scotia-Fundy region of Canada.

For the benefit of the novice, the Scotia-Fundy region of Atlantic Canada is the largest fishing area in the world. After 20 years we now have a program to start doing repairs which are very much needed.

Under the program, in my own riding alone I have been able to announce projects in Little River in Digby County, Little River in Yarmouth County, Cape St. Mary, East Ferry, and Delap's Cove. These communities needed good, safe, and efficient harbours.

Returning to the committee, as I noted earlier it met over a number of months. It pointed out some problems. The first was inadequate funding. It also pointed out our concern for the safety of fishermen and their materials and equipment which, as I noted a moment ago, can be worth hundreds of thousands of dollars. Storms over the years had caused damage on wharfs which had never been repaired.

The committee came up with the following recommendation:

> Your Committee therefore recommends that budgetary and corresponding program actions be taken to assure access to harbour users and their property, and to ensure the economical and timely upkeep of the harbours and the extension of their useful lives. The budgetary or program actions should be consistent with and appropriate for a program involving valuable long-term capital assets.

• (1150)

On June 29, the Minister did announce a program which met all the requirements of the request we had put forward. To respond to the very cynical comment made by the previous speaker to the effect that officials had not wanted to do this, that was not so. It was because, up until this time, we had not had the leadership that would allow us to respond to those requirements.

The program announced by the Minister calls for a management plan for fishing in recreational harbours maintained under Small Craft Harbours. The new management strategy responds extremely positively to our recommendations.

As I have already noted, the question of safety, both for fishermen and their vessels, came first. As well, there has been disruption caused by unsafe harbours, harbours which had not been dredged and harbours which were simply not adequate to respond to the needs of the industry. On the Atlantic coast of Canada alone, $5 million worth of damage had been caused by storms. High water levels on Lakes Superior, Huron and Erie had caused damage estimated at $10 million. These were problems that needed to be addressed.

Over the years there had been an imprecise targeting, as mentioned by the previous speaker. Many wharfs were repaired based on political considerations. This had to be stopped. We must respond to the fishermen and their needs rather than to political needs. That is what this program addresses.

Resources were spread too thinly, and I will note the figures later on. There were simply not enough dollars going into the program. When talking about harbours across Canada, we are talking about billions of dollars worth of harbours with which we needed to deal.

The expansion of funding for small craft harbour maintenance and improvement budgets responds much more fully now to the needs of harbour users and is particularly targeted at those involved in commercial fishing. Priorities have been aimed at safety and the elimination of disruption, and in the process, in order to get proper input, there will be more involvement at the local level of the users themselves. Those people who wish to become more involved in the planning of programs for harbours will receive first and better consideration.

The program is comprised of measures dealing with four main areas. First, there will be more effective management of existing small craft harbours. Structures at harbours which have had to be barricaded because they have become hazardous will be reopened. There is nothing that upsets a fisherman more than to see a barricade placed over a harbour which in the past the fisherman was able to use. There is nothing either that is more upsetting to people like me.

As I noted earlier, repairs of storm damage in Atlantic Canada and the upper Great Lakes will be carried out and there will be new infrastructure projects, services and facilities at certain harbours where improvements are needed to meet the expanding demands of both the tourism and the fishing industries.

The following specific measures have been taken. There will be an increase from $48.5 million to $70 million. This is a 44 per cent increase to the ongoing level of funding assistance for the federal Small Craft Harbours program under which the federal Government manages some 1,415 commercial fishing and 840 recreational boat harbours throughout Canada. This 44 per cent increase will be in what is called the operating level or the A-Base budget.

The launching of a special three-year infrastructure revitalization program with additional funding of $85 million over three years is aimed at reducing the large backlog of accumulated damage and deterioration to harbours essential to commercial fishermen, recreational boaters and the communities which rely on them. This will bring our harbours up to a level at which they can again be used.

The use of funds for emergency repairs had risen from 40 per cent to 90 per cent of regular maintenance budgets since 1982. As Hon. Members will recall, the maintenance budget had been at the level of about $46 million. It was simply not adequate to repair harbours over the years. Emergency repairs were taking up most of the budgets. Last year alone, it was necessary to place safety barricades at 50 different locations. If these trends had been allowed to continue, 150 harbours would have closed over the next five years.

Under the new program there will be room for more community input. The users themselves—the fishermen—will be able to advise us on how to do improvements and where to put new harbours, as well as what kind of programs there should be for individual harbours. It will give fishermen and other users a more direct role in the management and operation of their harbours. At the same time, there will be important benefits to cost effectiveness. Under this approach, the federal Government will assist in the formation of harbour authorities appointed by the fishermen themselves and in some cases by local governments. In all cases, funding will be sufficient to keep all harbours up to standards of safety prescribed by the federal Small Craft Harbours program.

It is expected that some 500 harbours, which account for 80 per cent of the fish caught in Atlantic Canada, will opt for this local input process. Maintenance projects are far too costly and complex for small harbour authorities to assume on their own, so these will be assumed by the federal Government. Local fishermen will do small maintenance projects which they will be able to do quickly. They will not need to wait months and months for small craft harbours officials to go to the region to carry out these projects.

The establishment of a grassroots user-management system will allow the Government to match programs more precisely to local needs and priorities while reaping the cost-saving benefits of local tendering and procurement. The fishermen themselves will be able to do repairs locally through local contractors under this new program.

The Government has come up with a program which was required for small craft harbours across Canada. As I noted earlier in my remarks, free trade will be coming onstream within the next couple of years. We will need these small craft harbours in order to accommodate the very expanded activity which will be going on in the fishing communities throughout Canada. I for one look forward to the benefits this program will have for my community.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) noted in the Throne Speech that we needed to place more emphasis on the safety of both fishermen and equipment. This new program has responded to that.

On behalf of the fishermen in my community, I wish to thank the Government for having come up with this program. It has been extremely well received in my community. The announcements I have been able to make over the past few months have been very well received. The fishermen are looking forward to working in closer co-operation with Small Craft Harbour officials. I see this as being a very positive approach on the part of the Government and I congratulate Small Craft Harbours officials for the way they have met with local communities and fishermen and for the way the program is coming into place.

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, I too would leap for joy if I had found that $6 million had been spent in my riding since the inception and announcement of the program in June of this year. There is no doubt that spending in Canada is profoundly skewed. I would point to the fact that the Hon. Member did receive $6 million. I would not ask that one penny less be spent in that riding, indeed, in Atlantic Canada, or in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. There are still facilities there that need further repairs. However, I want equal treatment for the West Coast. There should be a more thoughtful allocation of resources by the Government. The Hon. Member might want to give us some indication of when the important needs of other regions of the country might be attended to.

The Hon. Member said I was cynical. I am not. It was the committee that he chaired which said that the operation of small craft harbours was a disaster. The committee was most critical of the fact that the Conservative Government was prepared to do nothing about it. Does he stand by that?

The third item is that of independent harbour authorities and the fact that if you do not form a harbour authority, it does not matter whether you have need or not, you are not on the priority list. Some communities cannot afford to take on the responsibility of a harbour authority. This is a move towards privatization of government infrastructure. This is total nonsense. The Government has already started giving away harbours that the people of Canada built and they, through the Government, should take responsibility for them.

These harbours should not be privatized, throwing the burden of maintaining the infrastructure on those who cannot handle it. The advisory committee should be a general regional committee which establishes regional priorities. Not a small group who will assume ownership under the Government's privatization regime, but a legitimate public mechanism.

I want to point out again that I am not cynical. Indeed, I am one of the optimists in here.

Mr. Comeau: Madam Speaker, I am rather surprised that the NDP spokesman denies that the wharf in Saulnierville is very badly needed. Of course, in the next election campaign I will point out what the NDP thinks.

Mr. Skelly: Point of order, Madam Speaker. The Hon. Member cannot be allowed to distort the truth. I said I advocated more money be spent there.

Some Hon. Members: Debate!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Both Hon. Members are engaged in friendly debate and I am sure the Hon. Member will allow the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Mr. Comeau) to answer.

Mr. Comeau: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member had his chance to say his piece and I would like to have mine.

Would he deny a wharf to the people of Saulnierville? They waited 20 years for it. That wharf is ranked third in its landing of fish in the Scotia-Fundy area. That is the largest fishing area in the world. My riding alone has the highest landed value of fish in all of Canada. Yet that Hon. Member would deny the need for repairs to that harbour. As I said earlier, the people of South West Nova will be very surprised to hear the Hon. Member's comments.

The Hon. Member would also deny the fishermen of our communities the right to form harbour authorities in order to take a more direct role in the management of their harbours. That is what the harbour authority is all about. Those areas that do not have enough fishermen to form a harbour authority will be given special consideration. Those areas that do have the numbers will be given the right, which they did not have in the past, to form an authority where they can set their own priorities.

The Hon. Member distorts the facts and will not look at the truth. We want to help the fishermen help themselves. Of course, the Hon. Member has never really been known to stress the truth all that much, so we will leave him be on that point.

Mr. Robichaud: Madam Speaker, I also have a question for the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Mr. Comeau). Like him, I welcome the efforts of a government that has finally realized that new money should be spent on repairing harbours from coast to coast.

In his response to the report on small craft harbours, there is nevertheless one item that worries me a great deal. It is a subject that was mentioned just now, and I am referring to the harbour authorities. Now this reminds me of the fight we had to put up during the debate on Bill C-75, and I think you will recall, Madam Speaker, that the Hon. Member for Humber—Port-au-Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) spoke for nearly seven hours to block this Bill, especially Clause 4 which provided fees for users of Canada's ports, which meant that fishermen using various harbour facilities would be charged a fee. In fact, it says on page 3, item 3, that consideration is being given to introducing a user fee mechanism.

My question is as follows: Does the Hon. Member for South West Nova agree with this policy—a policy the Government is now trying to sneak in through the back door—of charging user fees, especially to fishermen?

Mr. Comeau: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member pointed out that we now have a mechanism to collect user fees. However, he forgets that user fees were collected for years, even by his own government. This has been going on for ages, and at the time, it was the Government that collected these fees. From now on, the fishermen will collect these funds.

Isn't it better to have the fishermen collecting the funds instead of the Government? Perhaps the Hon. Member should consider this aspect.

Personally, I prefer to leave it up to the fishermen.

[English]

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Madam Speaker, I am delighted to participate in the debate on this concurrence motion, moved by the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly), I assume because the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) was unable to be here today.

Over the last year and a half the committee worked very hard and spent many long hours trying to obtain funding for the Small Craft Harbours Program. I remember when our committee travelled to British Columbia and Atlantic Canada, hearing witnesses from those areas which are of great importance to the fishery. I guess, in every area that we travelled to, in British Columbia, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland and Quebec, one of the main irritants we found with fishermen was the lack of funding for small craft harbours. This is understandable because harbours and wharves are the heart and soul of the fishing communities. They are their home base, their infrastructure. They form a very integral part of the fishing community. The primary base of a fishing enterprise is the vessels, nets, gear and, of course, the stocks which they go to sea to fish.

Fishing is a very hazardous industry. Fishermen continue to fight the elements, not only at sea but in the ports themselves, especially in Atlantic Canada where we have a lot of winter storms and a lot of ice. The elements are very hard on wharves, breakwaters and haul-out slips.

There are over 2,300 harbours across the country. The Department of Fisheries and Oceans is responsible for the maintenance of wharves and breakwaters. The figure of 2,300 includes 750 harbours which are used mainly for recreational purposes but are still included in the budget of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. I have always maintained that recreational harbours should be funded by another source such as tourism. In the last number of years the budget for the maintenance of harbours has been between $41 million and $48 million. That hardly covers the most basic maintenance of wharves and breakwaters and leaves nothing for dredging.

Another problem we have in Atlantic Canada is in respect to dredging. Harbours which have good water depth this fall may, as a result of storms, be totally sanded in during the spring when the fishermen are trying to go fishing. This is especially true in Prince Edward Island although there are areas in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia that find themselves in the same situation with drifting sand. The fishermen do not know what the water depth is in the harbour until the ice leaves. The situation then, of course, can become an emergency. On top of all other problems we have a tremendous problem with dredging and getting dredging machinery when it is needed.

In my riding there are two seasons for lobster fishing, one on the northeast side and one on the west side of the Northumberland Strait. The season on the east side operates from May 1 until the end of June. It is imperative that the fishermen who fish in that district are able to set their traps by May 1 when the season opens. We all know that in the lobster fishery the first two or three weeks are generally the best weeks.

In my riding, the most important industry, in terms of employment, is the fishery. I was very fortunate this year. After much prodding of the Minister by the standing committee for improved funding for small craft harbours, there was an announcement made. I stress the word "announcement" because the work has not yet taken place and a number of announcements have been made in the past with no follow through. After a lot of debate and fighting, the Government announced that $500,000 would be available for the improvement of the breakwater at Fishing Cove, a very important harbour in my area. Of that, $25,000 is to be spent in this fiscal year on design with the remainder to be used for actual construction next year.

Alberton Harbour is another very important harbour in my area. The Government announced $400,000 for projects there. Of that, $200,000 is supposed to be spent this year with the remainder to be spent next year.

When the Government changed in 1984, tenders had already been called for Alberton. When the Government changed, it cut off the tendering process. Had that work been done at that time, as it should have, that would have saved the Government $150,000. This situation is happening right across the country. It is happening in British Columbia, the Northwest Territories, the Great Lakes area, Manitoba, and Atlantic Canada.

We were able to persuade the Government to announce $800,000 for West Point in my riding. Apparently $25,000 will be spent for breakwater reconstruction this year with the remainder to be used in a number of stages over the next year and a half. This work has been a priority of the port committee for the last number of years. A lot of work has been done there since 1974, but the completion of the work which was scheduled in 1984 for completion in 1984-86 was deferred, basically due to lack of funding.

With 2,300 harbours and wharves across the country it is only natural that a budget of less than $50 million will not be sufficient to do the necessary work. I understand that there are priorities across the country. Therefore, I was very pleased, after a lot of prodding of the Minister by the standing committee, that those projects were announced. However, I repeat that they are only announcements. I will continue to keep after the Government to fulfil the promises it made.

My colleague, the Member for South West Nova (Mr. Comeau), tried to make the point that no politics were being played. Let us not kid ourselves. We are in a political forum. I do not get to make the announcements, of course, because I am a Liberal MP. However, that does not affect me. As long as I get the work done I do not care who announces it, and nor do the fishermen. They all know who fought for them. I have brought the issue up in the House and in committee many times. As a politician I make sure my people understand who is fighting for them in Ottawa.

Having said that, I am the first one to congratulate the Government for announcing these projects. It is proper, and I would fight for the people of South West Nova to get more funding. There was a headline in the Charlottetown Guardian on Tuesday, March 3, entitled: "Fisheries wish list carries $1 billion price tag". That is the amount of money they could spend if they had it. I would not be so naive to think they could spend it all in one year because they cannot gear up for it that quickly, but that is the amount of money that is necessary.

I would like to read from the article which states:

> Piled on the corner of Mike Godin's desk at Fisheries Department headquarters here is a wish list half a metre high, with a $1 billion price tag.

It goes on to state where all this money is needed, and that is actually a fact. My colleague, the Hon. Member for South West Nova mentioned that there was something like $85 million announced for the harbour revitalization program. The figures I received from the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, naturally the A-base, continues at $48.5 million, and the harbour revitalization program for 1987-88 is $41.5 million, making a total this year of $90 million.

That is not what we asked for. We asked for a lot more than that. However, I suppose we should be happy receiving at least that much. I was brought up in the school which believes that a half a loaf of bread is better than no bread. But I want to give warning to the Minister and to members of the Government that I will continue to fight. I am sure that when I say that I have a lot of support from Conservative backbenchers, certainly those who represent ridings which have fishing and recreational harbours within their boundaries.

In 1988-89 the A-base, of course, is still $48.5 million, but the harbour revitalization program is now $61.5 million, which gives us a total next year of $110 million. There is obviously a breakdown somewhere, because if I add up the figures of the revitalization program I come to $150 million. I guess there was some money put into the A-base for a short period of time. I imagine that is the explanation. In 1989-90 the A-base, once again, will be $48.5 million and the revitalization program will be $46.5, for a total of $95 million. That gives us a peak, if you will, next year. I never accuse anyone of anything in the House of Commons, but one could say that perhaps we could expect an election next year because there is a peak. This year, 1987-88, it is $90 million. In 1988-89 it is $110 million, but 1989-90, the A-base, including revitalization, will be $95 million. That is a total for revitalization of $150 million over three years. However, I stand corrected in that because the announcement was for $85 million for revitalization and I am told the A-base has not been increased. So somewhere along the line there is some other money going somewhere.

I know there was a lot of money spent on the St. John's East by-election for purposes we all understand. It was not too fruitful, of course, to the Government. I think that points out to politicians and governments that they cannot fool the people. They cannot have those little booms and busts. They cannot spend money a year or so before an election, and then after the election cut it off and freeze the capital.

In 1979 it was quite obvious that everything to do with small craft harbours was frozen under the former Conservative Government. I am not making any accusations because I am happy with the kind of money that has been committed thus far. We need more money in my riding. I need work done in Howard's Cove, paving and dredging. We need about another $350,000 for Miminegash. Tignish, one of the major ports in my riding needs an awful lot of work. We made strides in the 1970s and early 1980s, but we had three years of virtually nothing done at our ports and harbours in Atlantic Canada and, indeed, in British Columbia. The A-base was just enough to barely cover operations and maintenance. In fact, that is why we have seen so many barricades. We need a program. The wish list of $1 billion is perhaps a little high, but I presume it is being projected over a long period of time. I have said for many, many years that the A-base for small craft harbours should be $150 million. Everyone knows with escalating costs, looking at 1981 dollars, that is only about $100 million in 1987-88, so we need at the very least $150 billion in A-base. If there are a few political crumbs coming during election time from small craft harbours, every Member who represents a fishing riding, will accept them. Let us not kid ourselves. There has always been a problem with underfinancing of this very, important infrastructure.

There is one other area in my riding for which I was able to obtain $164,000 for dredging, and that dredging has been completed at Milligan's Wharf. That was badly needed because we really did not have enough water for our boats to come in with even half a load of fish. Under the emergency program we were able to have it done this year. Those are the things about which I am speaking. I am sure every Member who represents fishermen in this House of Commons understands exactly what I am saying. There is tremendous problem when an infrastructure is subjected to the elements. If it is in salt water we have the added problem of salt corrosion. I would suggest as honestly as I can that we need better inspection on our wharves and harbours when contracts are given out.

The Minister made an announcement in committee for the operation of this new program. The Hon. Member for South West Nova mentioned parts of it, but I would like to look at paragraph 3. That paragraph deals with the new management approach.

I have no problem with fishermen determining their own destinies. Indeed, in my riding, and I think in most ridings, we have port chairmen and port committees elected by the fishermen. They were not political elections. I was here from 1980 to 1984 and I never made a recommendation with respect to the appointment of a port chairman. It was strange that out of my 18 wharves and harbours a number of these chairmen were relieved of their duties after the election. Mind you, very few were relieved of their duties; the ones who were known to be Liberals were relieve. The majority stayed on, which proves that I never got involved in that matter. Anyone who gets involved in playing politics at that level will never succeed.

I know that my time is almost up. I want to thank you, Madam Speaker, and Members of the House for you attention, and thank the mover of the motion for bringing forward this very timely subject. I also wish to tell my colleagues, and I hope that they will support me in this, that while this is a small step in the right direction, let us work together to get some more money so that all the ridings can share in the same sort of revitalization that is so needed and necessary.

Mr. Suluk: Madam Speaker, I merely wish to make a brief comment regarding this subject. Every single arctic community in my riding is located on the arctic coast, the Sea of Hudson Bay or along Baffin Island. In fact, Baker Lake, which is supposed to be an inland community, is connected by waterway to Churchill from where that community receives its supplies.

I should say at the outset that I do not have to worry about user fees because we do not have harbours to begin with. Nor do we have to worry about highways. We have a Highways Department in the Government of the Northwest Territories, but all the highways are located in the west. There are absolutely none located in the east. The new government leader who is from Iqaluit, a major centre on south Baffin Island, was very concerned about getting Iqaluit a wharf. I think that if at least some movement could be made toward the creation of harbours, then I would be able to participate in issues such as this.

The final point I wish to make is that the Hon. Member talks about fishing as a way of life. Hunting, which is also a way of life, is very similar. It involves the gathering of not just fish but other land mammals and birds. There is fishing and hunting done in every single place in my riding. But in the north when we want a place to beach our canoes and even larger boats we have to manhandle the boats on the beaches ourselves with our bare hands—just to get a place to beach our canoes.

I can say that I agree with the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) regarding his request that the Government spend more on small craft harbours in Canada.

Mr. Henderson: Madam Speaker, I will make just a brief reply to the comment by the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk). I totally agree with the Hon. Member. I am not as familiar, of course, as is he with his riding, but I have made a number of trips to the eastern Arctic. I want to tell the Hon. Member that I certainly understand the plight of the fishermen and, indeed, the hunters in that part of this great country of ours. The Hon. Member is absolutely correct when he says that it is very difficult to find a wharf up there. A lot of canoes and small vessels are hauled up onto shore by hand. This does present a great dilemma. I understand fully what hunting and fishing means to the people of the north.

I also want to mention to the Hon. Member from the eastern Arctic that there is some connection between my riding and his inasmuch as a number of fishing boats that are used by fishermen in Frobisher Bay and up in the northern Arctic were built at Hutt Brothers, which is located in Alberton in my riding. In fact, two went up there this spring. I have met a number of people from the Hon. Member's riding. I have had the opportunity to talk with them and try to understand their concerns and their problems. I think that I do understand them.

Labrador is another area with a vast coastline. The proper infrastructure necessary to accommodate the fishermen who make their livelihoods from fishing is just not in place.

Mr. Rompkey: Madam Speaker, I just want to ask my colleague if he does not see this as part of a pattern. The fact is that money has been reduced for small craft harbours. Also, the fact is that fishing vessel insurance has diminished, as have fishing vessel subsidies. This is in view of the fact, however, that inshore fish landings, according to statistics of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans over the past six years, have consistently gone down. At the same time the Government is talking about giving away more fish to foreign countries; that is, to France.

Does the Hon. Member not see this as part of a pattern? Are we only talking about small craft harbours? I know that the Hon. Member understands this point better than I because of his long experience with provincial fisheries as well as with federal fisheries. I ask him to bear in mind that in these communities we are not talking only about fishing; we are talking about a way of life. We are talking about villages and a culture. Are we not talking here more than just small craft harbours, more than just wharves? Are we not talking about individuals who are facing not simply a crisis but extinction? Is that not the reality?

Mr. Henderson: Madam Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey), I wish to say that I am in complete agreement with him. There is a pattern emerging with respect to the small craft harbours about which we are talking today. If we look at expenditures for 1979-80 we see that during that period the Government spent only $28 million. As the Hon. Member knows, those matters are budgeted ahead for some time. In 1981-82, the expenditures totalled $49 million. In 1982-83, they totalled $46 million. In addition, with the Special Initiatives Program which was announced, a great deal of that money went into small craft harbours. Thus, in 1983-84, expenditures rose to $108 million. In 1984-85, the figure was $121 million. It then dropped back down. I do not take any solace in those figures.

What I have tried to say here today is that with respect to the A-base we have to get rid of those fluctuations in small craft harbours before elections. We have to have an A-base of $150 million at the very least. If we can obtain those election goodies, then we will accept them on top of that. But, yes, the Hon. Member is absolutely correct. We have seen the vessel insurance diminish. There has been a drop in funding for small craft harbours. There has not been proper funding for sure. The vessels subsidies program also went out the window. We have seen a number of programs that were very important, especially to the inshore fishermen, that have been curtailed or slashed by the Government. Only now, if we look at it, enough money has been saved by discontinuing those programs to put this little blurp in, before an election, obviously.

But that is what we all have to fight against. Members of the Government, members of the opposition Parties, the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party, have to fight to get rid of this once and for all and give the fishermen and the communities of this country something that they can understand and plan for in the future, not just before an election.

Mr. Binns: I have a question for the Hon. Member. I appreciate the remarks by the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) in terms of how important is this new program that the Government has announced. Perhaps where we disagree a little is when he suggests that this increase in funding is a small step. I see it as a very major step in terms of increasing funding. We had an A-base of $48.5 million which has now been increased to $70 million. Another $30 million can be added on for the new program. That program is approximately $100 million per year. That is more than double the amount of money in the program up until this point. Whenever one sees a program double its funding, that is a very major step and not a minor step at all.

I do not think that there is any program in the whole of Government where that type of an increase in the budget has been made in one given year. I am sure that the Hon. Member would agree with me that this is a major step and an important undertaking.

I appreciate the support of the Opposition, because indeed they have supported it. Even the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) would have to agree that there is no decrease, that this is a major increase. It is a commitment, and it is not an election gimmick as we have seen so often in the past.

Mr. Rompkey: Let the record show that you are only putting back what you took away previously.

Mr. Binns: It is a real increase which has allowed funding for some 1,500 harbours. If we did not have this, 150 harbours would be closed in the next five years across Canada.

Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to make that correction.

Mr. Henderson: Where the Hon. Member and I differ is in our terms of a major step and a very minor step. This would be a tremendous major step for the Government but, after all the cut-backs that it made over the years, there have been two steps back and one step ahead.

Looking at the total figures for the total harbour revitalization program and the A-base, it is $90 million this year, $110 million in 1988-89, but I cannot understand why it falls back to $95 million in 1989-90. All the articles that I read and all the information that I receive from staff tell me that we need far more money than that. We could use a $1 billion budget to look after this small craft harbours problem in the country.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I rise to participate in this debate with some hesitation, representing a very insignificant part of the country in terms of the budget for Fisheries and Oceans.

I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson). Certainly, he came out loud and clear in wanting more money. He was also 100 per cent correct when he stated that Members on the government side of the House are just as interested and have been working very hard.

In my particular area, which is a great tourist area with a considerable number of small craft harbours, we certainly need improvements just to keep our harbours the way they are. With all due respect to the Hon. Member for Egmont and my colleague who asked him a question, it was with some interest and envy over the past year that I looked at the budget for Fisheries and Oceans in the Province of Ontario and compared it with other parts and other provinces. I have every respect for fabulous Prince Edward Island, which I had the privilege of visiting a couple of years ago, and visiting the Hon. Member's home town of Alberton where I have a long-standing personal friend. But up until this year the Province of Prince Edward Island had a higher budget than the Province of Ontario. That did not sit too well with many of us in Ontario with 9.25 million people and, give or take or few, 450 small craft harbours, and a very important tourist industry.

The previous speakers have all stressed the importance of the tourist industry. I am also well aware of the importance of the fishery industry. I am not sure who mentioned the figure of $1 billion for the fishery industry, but the tourist industry generates $20 billion. In the Province of Ontario alone, sport fishing is estimated at approximately $1 billion. So the tourist industry is the second most important industry in the entire economy of Canada. It generates approximately one million jobs when the other industries that tie in with it are taken into consideration. This is important.

I also tell the House and the Members who have spoken that I have gone on my hands and knees to the powers that be in the Cabinet, from the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) first—I give him every credit for attempting to get additional money for us—to the Treasury bench. Overcoming my usual bashfulness and shyness, I went to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) where I received promises and promises. Finally, I thought, if one is attempting to really get something, rather than talk to the disciples one should talk to the lord himself. So I certainly had a few words with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). I think it worked, because the Ontario members of the caucus have been pressuring for some money for the small craft harbours here.

In recent years, our budget has been approximately $3.5 million. I am quite sure that the Hon. Member for Egmont will nod his head and say that Prince Edward Island received more than $3.5 million. That beautiful province is not much larger than the riding of Parry Sound—Muskoka. There is no doubt about it; one has to put pressure on the Government, but every Canadian wants the Government to reduce its deficit. There is no question about that. We all wish to see it reduced at the expense of someone else. I guess that is human nature. I am delighted to know that this year, through pressure, we were able to receive $8.9 million in capital funding for the Province of Ontario, which certainly was a great improvement and for which we are thankful.

The Hon. Member mentioned a figure of $1 billion as what is required to bring all harbours up to what they should be, both small and large harbours. He is probably quite correct. He will certainly receive no criticism from this side of the House, especially from those of us who have small craft harbours or other types of harbours.

I wish to point out to the House that we are certainly with him, 100 per cent. It is up to us to sell the Treasury bench, the Cabinet, on the importance of the tourist industry. I know that Members who represent coastal areas both on the East and West Coast sometimes think that Ontario is an inland province—which, of course, it is—and the fishing industry means little or nothing. There is some small commercial fishing in Ontario; it runs into a considerable amount.

An Hon. Member: It is not small.

Mr. Darling: No, it is not small. My colleague here represents an area in which there is commercial fishing. However, we must remember that small craft harbours are important to the tourism industry. This is the thing I have been preaching down through the years, and I have had the privilege of being a Member for 15 years; at least that is what it was two weeks ago.

I would point out that in my riding of Parry Sound—Muskoka the tourism industry is all important. Parry Sound—Muskoka is within one day's driving distance of 100 million Americans. A lot of them are potential tourists. Just imagine what that means to the economy of Canada, Madam Speaker.

The Minister of Finance should take note—and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) would probably back it up—that literally millions of dollars are collected by the federal Government and provincial Governments on the sale of pleasure craft, as well as gasoline taxes. They are astronomical figures.

It is a very important industry. The federal Government should look at it on the basis of the fact that a great deal of revenue comes in from the industry. I agree that more money should be allotted to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. I know very well that he is doing his best to get more, but the pie is only so large. Of course each Department is pressuring Treasury Board to get as much as it can. I hope there will be more funds. According to the forecasts for next year, there will be a slightly higher amount for capital expenditures for the Province of Ontario. I think it will be some $9 million. I have looked at recent amounts allotted to the Province of Ontario, and there are many of us who take a rather jaundiced view of them. They were allotted on the basis that Ontario does not have many harbours. However, I am quite sure that Ontario has more small craft harbours than any other province.

I know very well that the tourist industry in Ontario generates more dollars than in any other province. I am not trying to be argumentative; it is just a fact of life with 9.25 million people and many outstanding tourist attractions in the Province of Ontario. The population of the riding of Parry Sound—Muskoka doubles or trebles in the summer season because of the great influx of tourists. A great many of them are from the United States.

I was able to obtain approval of certain commitments and expenditures in my area this year. The major one was for $1.4 million in the Town of Parry Sound which is celebrating its centennial, its one hundredth anniversary. It was a pretty nice present from the federal Government. Two or three other smaller areas are getting improvements to their docks, and certainly there are many more which require them.

I am sure every Hon. Member, no matter on what side of the House, will be pressuring the Government for additional funds for this very important industry. I know other Hon. Members wish to make comments, so I will take my seat.

Mr. Caldwell: Madam Speaker, I will be very brief. When the Hon. Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka (Mr. Darling) said that he went to bat for all Members of the House for more money for small craft, certainly he was correct. He did so in no uncertain terms.

I should like to remind the Hon. Member that although he did mention fishing, fishing is a big industry in my riding. In Wheatley, Ontario, we have the biggest freshwater inland fishery in the world. I was very pleased that because of high water we were able to get that harbour back into tip top shape, as well as the one at Erieau which had been neglected by the previous Government for the past 10 years. It was almost falling into the lake. We have made some progress in that particular area.

The Hon. Member mentioned recreational harbours. I have one major, and three smaller ones in my area which are getting improvements under the new program. The tourist industry in my particular area is of utmost importance, as it is in his. I thank the Hon. Member for his significant efforts and contribution.

Mr. Henderson: Madam Speaker, I want to make a brief comment and to put a small question. I thank the Hon. Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka (Mr. Darling) for his excellent speech. I know that he has worked very hard with a number of us to try to get money for small craft harbours.

I have a suggestion to make. We always have a conflict between recreational harbours, which are beneficial to tourism, and commercial fishing harbours. I have often thought that perhaps they should be separated to the point where tourism should be putting in some dollars to maintain or upkeep harbours which have a direct relationship to tourism. It might take away some of the animosity which we sometimes find between commercial fishermen and tourist operators and give us a few more dollars. Would the Hon. Member care to comment on that? They may not have to be separated, but the tourism department should recognize the benefits of harbours and wharfs to tourism. Funds should be either transferred into the Department of Fisheries and Oceans or indeed separated so that recreation and tourism get a package which would go a long way toward meeting their requirements. We would then also be able to spend more dollars for commercial fishermen.

I think there is a shortfall of money in this regard. I understand full well the difficulty in trying to get money from Treasury Board and Cabinet. All too often, we make requests but the funds are all too few. I have often noticed that the real power on the government benches does not basically come from fishing ridings. Usually the hands which hold the purse strings belong to someone who comes from Bay Street in Toronto, if I can be so rude as to say that, who probably does not have as full an understanding as that Hon. Member and some of us about the importance of the commercial and recreational fisheries.

Mr. Darling: Madam Speaker, I appreciate what the Hon. member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) has stated. I will be frank and say that this matter has been talked about. There is no question that small craft harbours are oriented to the tourism industry.

There was some talk that perhaps they should be transferred to the jurisdiction of the Ministry of State for Tourism. Many of us looked at that and said that it was all very well and good, but we wondered, with the limited tourism budget, who would pay the shot. As the hon. member rightly pointed out, it could come under the Ministry of State for Tourism but that Ministry would have to have substantial funds. At least there are funds in the Department of Fisheries and Oceans.

In many cases there is joint use of harbours by the tourist industry and fishermen. That in itself may create another problem, aside from lack of money.

It does not matter which Department will administer it. The important thing is that there must be substantial funds. If small craft harbours were sloughed off to Tourism with no funds, we would be a heck of a lot worse off than we are now with Fisheries and Oceans.

Mr. Binns: Madam Speaker, I would like to touch briefly on the creation of harbour authorities, because I think it follows the discussion we are having at the moment. Everyone here is concerned about how we spend the money, but the intention behind harbour authorities is that they would be incorporated bodies to which the Government would give a block of funds—let us say $2,000 or $3,000—to take care of emergency repairs or minor maintenance. Of course minor maintenance problems become major maintenance problems if they are not taken care of quickly.

The present system is awkward in that regard. For example, if a few planks come off a slipway, the fishermen must first get in touch with the authorities in the capital of the province. Next, the Small Craft Harbours people take a trip out to look at the slipway. They go back and get in touch with the Department of Public Works, which sends out officials to look at it. They there get in touch with some contractors and get a few bids. The first thing we know, major damage has occurred because the matter was not taken care of quickly.

These harbour authorities, with money in their pockets, will be able to take care of these problems right off the bat. They probably have a carpenter living next door or down the road who could take care of the little problem so that it does not become a major one. The Government would save money. It would be more efficient, and the fishing community would be able to respond. In that way we would have an opportunity to do more for both fishing and recreational harbours.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

YORK WEST YOUNG LIBERALS' CHRISTMAS FOOD DRIVE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the desperation faced by Toronto's hungry has reached new levels as recent reports indicate that food banks in the city have handed out over $6 million worth of goods this year, an increase of 300 per cent over last year's amount.

The problems faced by the hungry are further aggravated by unaffordable housing costs and low wages. It is incomprehensible that, in the most prosperous city in Canada, many families must be humiliated by lining up for their daily meal at food banks, churches and community agencies.

In an effort to combat this seemingly never-ending dilemma, the York West Young Liberals will launch their second Christmas food drive next Monday, November 23, with the hope of raising 1,000 pounds of food donations. Their campaign against hunger will accept non-perishable food or financial contributions in my constituency office located at 2397 Finch Avenue West.

I urge the residents of my community, the riding of York West, and indeed the Toronto area to help those in need, especially during the holiday season so we can all enjoy this Christmas together and bring a smile to an otherwise dismal situation.

EFFECTS OF RURAL POST OFFICE CLOSURES

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I want to address the problem of Canada Post and rural postal services.

Every Member of the House of Commons respects the value of the rural lifestyle to Canada. We must also recognize that the postal service is an important element in that lifestyle. Adverse changes in postal services do diminish rural dignity.

All Canadians recognize the need for change in Canada's postal service. The $600 million deficits of the past must be eliminated and labour-management relations must be improved. But does that justify an attack on rural post offices? The answer is clearly no. And that is why a parliamentary committee imposed restrictions on changes, including a 90-day consultation period with customers of Canada Post.

In the case of the Head of St. Margaret's Bay in Halifax West, Canada Post violated the spirit of the common sense arrangement. Canada Post failed to consult, even to consider alternatives, and simply enforced its own decision, prematurely and against all better judgment.

The fate of rural post offices cannot be left in the hands of Canada Post. Canada Post is to blame for errors of the past and cannot be trusted in the future. The Government must act to protect rural Canadians who deserve and demand equality in postal services.

INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANIZATION

INDIGENOUS AND TRIBAL POPULATIONS CONVENTION—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada this month forwarded to the ILO, a United Nations agency based in Geneva, a disturbingly weak position regarding the revisions of the Indigenous and Tribal Populations Convention, known as Article 107.

Sadly, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) failed to consult with the broadly represented indigenous working groups here in Canada. The Conservative response spells out a view of aboriginal rights that is assimilationist at best. There is no reference to self-determination or self-government. There is no move to provide for revision to the preamble to reflect the fostering of indigenous self-reliance and protection of the fundamental rights of indigenous and tribal peoples.

Canada is sadly sending a message to the world that the survival of indigenous and tribal people as distinct and viable societies throughout the world is not a Canadian priority.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Party view is not broadly held in Canada. Indigenous people in this country are, however, feeling the bite of these narrow-minded policies. Cuts to test case funding, resource development impacts, economic development, housing, education and medical care, combined with no action on self-government and constitutional evolution, comprehensive or specific claims, or even the creation of new reserves, have brought home clearly the intention of the Government to implement the Buffalo Jump of the 1980s—cultural genocide and assimilation.

LITHUANIA—SIX HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF CHRISTIANITY

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, this year, 1987, the Lithuanian community in Canada and around the world began celebrations in honour of the six hundredth anniversary of Christianity in Lithuania. The joyousness of this historic occasion has been constrained only by the grim reminders of the severe Soviet repressions directed against the church in Lithuania.

In a country of over two million Catholics, it is against the law for priests to teach catechism. All religious orders and organizations are banned, and half of the churches have been closed or secularized by government order. Yet Christianity lives on. It is estimated that at least 90 per cent of the population of Lithuania are baptized Roman Catholics. Such faith in the face of adversity is an inspiration to Christians of all nations.

Canadians of Lithuanian heritage invite all Canadians to join with them in celebration of the six hundredth anniversary of Christianity in Lithuania and in paying tribute to the brave spirit which keeps Christianity alive despite the cost.

SHIPBUILDING

NEED FOR GOVERNMENT TO ENSURE WORK IN ALL CANADIAN SHIPYARDS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, although it will soon be Christmas, Mr. Speaker, Quebecers are being royally shafted, if you will pardon the expression, with respect to the frigates program.

Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Maritimes and I am glad New Brunswick got the contract to build the frigates.

Mr. Speaker, I would, however, urge the Conservative Government to follow the example set by the previous Liberal Government which made sure there were jobs in all Canada's shipyards. Quebecers will not tolerate what the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Côté) is trying to do. Jobs on the frigate contract must be shared by Quebec's three shipyards in Lauzon, Sorel and Montreal. Today, 3,000 workers in Quebec's shipyards are out of work: 800 in Montreal, 1,000 at the yards in Sorel and 1,300 in Lauzon.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the Conservative Government will be generous to all shipyards in Quebec and elsewhere in Canada.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SUPPORT FOR USE OF VICTIM-IMPACT STATEMENTS

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Government has introduced Bill C-89, an Act to amend the Criminal Code as it relates to victims of crime. This is an encouraging first step in what I hope will be a major movement toward bringing victims of criminal activity into the judicial system where for far too long they have been ignored.

The Bill allows for the use of victim-impact statements which detail the pain and loss suffered by victims of crime. These statements will be included as evidence during criminal trials and will presumably lead to fairer court decisions.

On a pilot project over the past two years, victim-impact statements were successfully used in four Canadian communities, including my community of The Battlefords. So far, this program has been well received by the courts, the police forces involved and the general public.

Bill C-89 will also strengthen the legal importance and priority of restitution to be paid by offenders. Victims of crime need to know that the Canadian judicial system is sensitive to their plight. Victims deserve the support and understanding of our courts. It is my view that Bill C-89 is the first measure toward achieving this.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF FORMER ALBERTA PREMIER

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, yesterday during committee hearings on the trade agreement we had the opportunity to hear from the former Premier of Alberta, Peter Lougheed. Mr. Lougheed was very open and honest with the committee. He was much more forthcoming about what he saw as the effects of this agreement than any of his colleagues in the federal Cabinet have ever been.

One of the things Mr. Lougheed was very forthcoming about was the fact that, in his view, this agreement would prevent a made-in-Canada oil policy and it would also prevent a made-in-Alberta oil price. Mr. Lougheed was very open about the fact that if this agreement comes into effect, the provinces will no longer have the power to set prices for their energy resources. Mr. Lougheed said that that is something that Alberta wants, and it may be the case that that is what Alberta Tories want. However, it is also the case that it is something about which Canadians should be very concerned.

Under cover of this agreement, the power of both the federal Government and the provincial Government to set prices for energy will be taken away. It will not be taken away on a temporary basis, it will be taken away for a long, long time.

Mr. Lougheed also indicated his opposition to the former Government's National Energy Program. I asked him what he would have thought if the former Government had tried to entrench the National Energy Program beyond the reach of future Governments, like this Government is trying to put its program beyond the reach of future Governments. I am sure all would join me in finding that kind of action on the part of any Government unacceptable.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONTRACT TO BUILD SIX FRIGATES—CONTEXT IN WHICH RECOMMENDATIONS MUST BE MADE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): The Department of National Defence is negotiating with a principal contractor for the construction of six new frigates. The principal contractor has informed the Government that if he has to share the order with other Canadian yards, it will cost $79 million more per frigate. The contractor is taking advantage of his position to embarrass the federal Government and engage in outright intimidation.

I challenge this contractor to prove what he said about the extra $79 million per frigate, and I may remind the House that his credibility is not that good, since he was twelve months behind schedule on the first frigate and, although the price agreed on for the first frigate is already close to the maximum, he is negotiating additional payments with the federal Government.

I fail to understand why the federal Government is putting all its eggs in one basket and relying on a single source of expertise. It means we may well see prices escalate as soon as the contract is signed, and there are, of course, dangers inherent in having all the expertise concentrated in one part of the country.

Mr. Speaker, the Department of National Defence should bear all of this in mind when making its recommendations to this House.

NEED FOR QUICK DECISION ON CONSTRUCTION OF SIX FRIGATES

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, last week the Minister of State (Forestry) stated that the decision to build the frigates had been made and that the contract would be awarded in New Brunswick. That same week the Minister of Regional Development told us that no decision had been made. Last night the Minister of National Defence said that no decision has been made. And now we read in today's papers that the Minister of Regional Development . . . that the decision has been made and that the frigates will be built in New Brunswick.

If a decision has been made, the people of New Brunswick are still not aware of it, that is Saint John Shipbuilding and the Premier of New Brunswick.

This decision must be made at the earliest opportunity so that these ships can be built at the lowest cost possible to Canadians. And even if the decision were to build the six frigates in New Brunswick, it would mean that only 50 per cent of the money would stay in New Brunswick, 50 per cent of this contract award would also go elsewhere in Canada, namely Quebec, Ontario, and the other provinces.

And those who claim that the Government would be putting all its eggs in the same basket by having all six frigates built in New Brunswick are badly mistaken. All people know that at least half of this work will be subcontracted elsewhere in Canada.

NEED FOR CANADIANS TO BE WELL INFORMED

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, the issue of free trade has given rise to a host of comments, both during negotiations and now that we have the text of the agreement.

Poll results show that 81 per cent of Canadians are not adequately informed on this subject.

Since the end of October, the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade has been hearing witnesses. And even witnesses as famous as Margaret Atwood and Mordecai Richler admitted they had not taken the trouble to read the concise, 35-page document, preferring to rely on newspaper articles in the Toronto Star or the The Globe and Mail.

Starting Monday, the Committee will travel across Canada to hear as many intervenors as possible.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that this exercise, with the media coverage, will shed more light on an issue that is of vital importance to Canadians.

SPORTS

CONDEMNATION OF HOCKEY VIOLENCE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, hockey in Canada is a tough sport. To be successful, you have to get in the corners, take the hits, and be able to dish out the body checks. Nobody wants to change this because it defines the kind of hockey we play, and the kind most fans enjoy. However, there is no place in Canadian hockey for the kind of wanton violence we have witnessed for far too long.

It is very gratifying to see that, finally, some of our hockey officials are beginning to get serious about getting rid of this blight on our national sport. The Ontario Hockey Association, for example, recently handed out life suspensions to players who attacked others in a particularly vicious way. The Nova Scotia Hockey Association recently developed a strong program to stamp out violence in its jurisdiction, and I wish it well.

However, if we are to be truly successful in eliminating violence from hockey, we must get the co-operation of the National Hockey League. The Globe and Mail said recently that, "If you stare long enough at the crime statistics of the NHL, it begins to look like the South Bronx of North American sport." Yet this same NHL is the model for all our young, developing players. It sets the tone, and unless it is prepared to take strong action to get violence out of the game once and for all, all other efforts will meet with only partial success.

Sooner or later this violence is going to result in people being critically injured, or worse. If the NHL continues its refusal to clean up its act, then perhaps the only recourse is legal action.

UNITED NATIONS

ORGANIZATIONS' EXPENDITURES—STRICTER ACCOUNTABILITY

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the United Nations, more particularly certain of its agencies such as the UN Food and Agricultural Organization, and the UN Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, do not always work in the way intended. To put it mildly, the degree of professionalism in their operation and management is not what we would expect, for instance, in the Public Service of Canada.

• (1415)

Canada is correct in demanding accountability for the funds being spent, if for no other reason than that we are a major financial contributor, and Canadian taxpayers have the right to know, for instance, how wisely their $40 million donation to the FAO is being spent.

The assistance of Canadian financial experts in straightening out the books of the United Nations will be appreciated by those countries which, like ourselves, insist that public funds be properly used and properly accounted for.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—PROVINCIAL POWERS TO SET ENERGY PRICES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Last evening the former Premier of Alberta, now one of the most strident and strong advocates of the proposed trade arrangement with the Americans, said unequivocally that one of the consequences of the proposed agreement will be that the provinces will lose their responsibility and right to determine prices for consumers and industry.

How can the Government go ahead with an agreement which so substantially erodes the powers of the provinces and the rights of Canadian consumers, without any consultation or agreement with the provinces? How can the Government take such a major stand which changes the jurisdiction of the country without any agreement from the parties involved?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that the free trade agreement in no way alters the constitutional authority of the provinces in the field of natural resources.

The Hon. Member talks about the lack of consultation. I point out that the Premier of Alberta was present at seven or eight First Ministers Conferences where this subject was discussed at length. In addition, the former Premier of Alberta said that the free trade agreement was a "win, win" situation for all of Canada and would create jobs and investment for all regions of the country.

POSITION OF FORMER ALBERTA PREMIER

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I was not quoting my own words but the very clear and unmistakable statement made by that former Premier which the Tory benches have just applauded. He said that, based upon his consultations with the Government and his reading of the agreement, the powers of the provinces are now totally limited. They will no longer have the power to set prices and will no longer have the power to give their consumers or industries any preferential advantage.

Is the Minister for International Trade contradicting the former Premier of Alberta who says that he knows something about energy? Is that what she is doing?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Of course not, Mr. Speaker. The provinces, as I have said, have full rights to deal with their resources within the Constitution. They have full rights to set royalties, to regulate, to conserve, and to manage their resources. It has not been the practice of provinces to set consumer prices rather than royalties.

Mr. Axworthy: Oh, really?

Miss Carney: There has not normally been a need for a province to do that unless it has been faced with programs such as the National Energy Program established by the Member's Government, which forced Alberta to sell below market prices, at great loss to the Province and the people of Alberta.

FORTHCOMING MEETING OF FIRST MINISTERS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, it is going to come as a great surprise to the Provinces of Alberta, Quebec, Ontario, and Manitoba, which have all used preferential prices to provide comparative advantage to establish industry for economic development purposes and which have provided special pricing for consumers, that the Minister for International Trade does not even know that those practices have been put in place. That is an example of just how ignorant the Minister is of provincial rights.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: How can we go ahead and hold a First Ministers meeting next week at which a very fundamental right of the provinces will be eliminated when the provinces will not even have access to the final draft? They will not know what is in the text and they have a Minister who does not know what she is talking about.

• (1420)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: What a lousy leadership speech that was.

Mr. Masse: We want Turner back.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): If they can find him, Mr. Speaker.

The point the former Premier of Alberta was making was that, of course, our action in removing the tariffs which kept Alberta products out of its big market means you do not have to have preferential prices because the petrochemicals can now move into the big U.S. market.

Mr. Axworthy: Oh God!

Miss Carney: That was the goal that Alberta sought for years and years.

HYDRO-ELECTRICITY PRICES FOR QUEBECERS AND AMERICANS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister for International Trade and concerns the trade agreement signed with the United States.

I would like to refer to a statement made by the former Premier of Alberta, whom I intend to quote. The former Premier said:

[English]

"the only thing that is basically going to be taken from the authority of governments will be the authority to establish a price below market value".

I would like to ask the Minister whether this means, whether the correct interpretation is that a province like Quebec will no longer be able to sell its electric power to its Quebec corporate customers at cheaper rates than it sells to its corporate customers in the United States?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the agreement we intend to sign with the United States does not take away any constitutional powers from any province whatsoever, since the purpose of these negotiations is not to negotiate sections of the Canadian Constitution but to negotiate free trade between Canada and the United States, based on the principle of access to the U.S. market at U.S. market prices.

That is why the Premier of Quebec supports the Government's proposal, since it will give Hydro-Quebec, for instance, access to the North American market. And that is what the Quebec Government is seeking.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER PROVIDE ASSURANCES

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister, since he rose to answer the first one which, in fact, he failed to answer. I am not talking about the Constitution! I am asking the Minister whether this means that the whole debate that took place in Quebec when we said "Maîtres chez nous!" and nationalized the power companies, that this is history and that Quebec will no longer be able to sell power to the United States at higher rates than it does to Quebec companies.

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's position is based on rhetoric and ignorance. There is nothing in the text we intend to sign with the United States that calls in to question a simple right exercised by the Government of Quebec in its commercial dealings.

RIGHTS OF PROVINCES TO SET ENERGY PRICES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a straightforward question to direct to the Minister. As the Minister knows, up to the present recently both the Province of Alberta and the Province of Ontario have had differential pricing structures giving advantages to their own citizens. In the case of Alberta, to encourage the development of the petrochemical industry the Government of Alberta has established prices lower for firms in its own province than for firms in the United States to buy gas. In the case of Ontario, Ontario residents have had a hydro rate in the past of some 7 per cent lower than would have been the case because it was able to charge the Americans more for hydro exports.

Will these traditional rights, exercised by these two provinces in the past, be able to continue under this proposed agreement?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the Hon. Member understands what we did when we deregulated energy prices. The reason that Alberta had to have a price system was because its product could not flow into the U.S. market because it had a 15 per cent to 18 per cent tariff barrier. We are removing the tariff barrier. Therefore, the product from Alberta will have access to that market and will get market prices. In return, with respect to Ontario, I can point out that we supported and put in place a policy which ensured that we cannot sell power, or we cannot sell energy to the Americans, at a price below that which Canadians pay in the neighbouring regions, and that is unchanged in this agreement.

• (1425)

PROVINCIAL RIGHTS—EFFECT OF TRADE AGREEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I noticed that the Minister did not deny or answer the question that I asked. She knows that if she did she would have to acknowledge what former Premier Lougheed has said is absolutely right, this agreement is nullifying a power traditionally exercised by the provinces. The Conservatives, who used to stand up for provincial rights, have sold them completely down the drain in this deal.

For once, will the Minister give a straight answer on this matter? Will the Province of Ontario, the Province of Alberta, the Province of Quebec, or any other province which sells energy resources, have the rights they now have after this agreement is signed between Canada and the United States? Or will their rights in terms of pricing policies be substantially altered, yes or no?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the provinces will have the same rights after this agreement as before. May I point out to the House that the Province of Alberta begged for the Western Accord. It begged for our Party's energy policy. It begged for deregulation. It worked very hard with us to establish the energy policy, the deregulation and the collapse of the National Energy Program that we put in place. Peter Lougheed was the biggest fan of that policy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, it may indeed be the case that Peter Lougheed is the greatest fan, but at least he has the honesty today to say that the powers of the provinces have been reduced as a result of getting what he wanted. I wish the Government would be at least that honest.

I want to ask a question of either this Minister or—

—Minister responsible for the Energy Sector.

CONTROL OF COSTS BY PROVINCIAL AUTHORITIES—
GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, is he pleased that the provinces of Quebec, Alberta, Ontario and Manitoba will no longer be able to let their citizens run their industries more cheaply than in the United States? Is he pleased with a result that will be responsible for destroying much of Canada's future potential?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that the Premier of Quebec is very pleased, that thousands of Quebecers are very pleased, and that the people at Hydro-Quebec are pleased as well. And if you go to Quebec and say that the Government of Quebec is not satisfied with the Government's proposals as far as Quebec's hyro-electric and energy sectors are concerned, they will turn you out. The Liberal Member was talking about Maîtres chez nous!, in referring to hydro-electric power, and it means above all that we are in a position to use it, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Yesterday I indicated that the Liberal Party is opposed to the acquisition of nuclear powered submarines while the Conservative Party is interested in acquiring them. Because the British nuclear submarines contain U.S. technology, in order for Canada to purchase the British submarine system U.S. congressional approval will be required. Yesterday, at a Financial Post conference, I was very surprised to hear the U.S. naval attaché to Canada indicate that the price-tag that Canada will have to pay in order to have that technology transferred will be to agree to a joint U.S.-Canada navy strategy.

What is it that we are getting into in terms of these negotiations? What role will Canada have to play as a result of these negotiations and the U.S. forward maritime strategy which everyone knows is an attack strategy which destabilizes the system and is totally contradictory to Canada's defence policy?

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member did not check to find out that today at noon the United States Embassy issued a release saying that Captain Hoffard expressed his own personal views and did not—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dick: I do not know why Members opposite are laughing. Perhaps they would like to have some facts rather than keeping their heads in the sand.

The release states that he did not reflect the views of the American Embassy or the United States Government. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that there have been no discussions between the Canadian Armed Forces or the Canadian Government and the American Government or the American Armed Forces about joint use of any of our maritime naval craft. I can further say that we have never had a request from the United States about that matter.

• (1430)

TRANSFER OF TECHNOLOGY FROM UNITED STATES

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, today he may have issued a clarification, but yesterday he astounded everyone at that conference by the other comments that he made.

I wish to ask the Minister to what extent has the Minister of National Defence, or the Associate Minister of National Defence, entered into negotiations with the U.S. in order to transfer that technology? What will be the price tag demanded by the United States administration in order to transfer the technology?

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is not our responsibility to talk to the United States about transferring that technology. It is the responsibility of the British Government to see if it can get agreement from the United States in order to transfer that technology.

The fact is that we also have another option which does not depend on the United States at all, which is a very active option, that is, looking at the nuclear powered submarines made by France.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT BUY CONVENTIONAL POWERED SUBMARINES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Associate Minister of National Defence.

In view of the fact that the price tag for those nuclear powered submarines is escalating all the time and could conceivably come in at $10 billion to $12 billion, and in view of the fact that if the Government insists upon going ahead with those high priced toys, other sectors of the Canadian Armed Forces will suffer, such as the surface fleet, Mobile Command, and Air Command, would the Associate Minister reconsider that policy and buy conventional powered submarines in order that our sovereignty would not be held up to ransom by the United States, the United Kingdom, or, for that matter, by France?

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am very surprised to hear the Hon. Member mention that those submarines are toys. I think that he should be a little more factual. They are a very important type of equipment which we in Canada can use to enhance our own sovereignty and security.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dick: I further wish to advise the Hon. Member that decisions made about the Canadian Armed Forces will be made in Canada, not in the United States, Britain, or France, but will be made only in consultation with our allies in NATO—from which the NDP wishes to withdraw but with which the Government wishes to stay—they will be made for our own first purposes.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

LOGIC OF DEFENCE POLICY

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister.

I wish to know if the Minister could explain where the logic lies in a defence program where we have virtually to beg for a transfer of technology from the United States through the United Kingdom to Canada, in order to protect the very sovereignty in our Arctic that the United States objects to and refuses to accept?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I thought that the defence critic for the New Democratic Party was aware that part of our commitment to NATO is to have surveillance on the submarines of other countries which are in our quadrant. We can hardly do that if we have a submarine that moves a lot slower than theirs.

The reason that we must have a submarine of equal capability is to maintain our commitments to NATO and to assure our own security and sovereignty.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENERGY

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR DETAILS ON ELECTRICITY RATES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, I will direct my question to the Prime Minister, and it has to do with the slogan Maîtres chez nous! and the nationalization of electricity. I am aware that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has always belonged to political Parties which, in Quebec, had no use for the Maîtres chez nous! slogan. He was against nationalizing electricity in Quebec.

Right now, Mr. Speaker, Quebecers pay lower Quebec Hydro rates than the Americans. According to the statement made by Mr. Tarant, an advisor at the American embassy, the consequence of this agreement is that American consumers would have guaranteed access to Canadian energy surpluses at the same price as that paid by Canadians.

On the basis of the interpretation of Mr. Peter Lougheed and American embassy spokesmen to the effect that U.S. consumers might indeed pay the same prices, would the Minister not agree that if their interpretation is correct we may as well forget the Maîtres chez nous! slogan with respect to hydro energy in Quebec?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I like it better when the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie follows his political instinct and speaks up against his Party concerning Bill C-22 than when he supports his finance critic as he does now. If the Hon. Member wants interprertations, I can tell him that I prefer the interpretation of the Premier of Quebec and that of Quebec Hydro management. They support the free trade agreement because they are convinced it is in the economic and social interests of the Government of Quebec. What the Hon. Member is talking about is controlled by the National Energy Board, and nothing in that respect will be changed.

The criteria referred to by the Hon. Member will be covered in the agreement.

ELECTRICITY PRICES IN QUEBEC AND IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the reply of the Minister means that the spokesman of the American Embassy and Mr. Lougheed have misled the population. This morning, Mr. Racicot of the Fédération nationale des associations de consommateurs du Québec said before a parliamentary committee that this Agreement could mean a 10 to 15 per cent increase in electricity rates, or a couple of $100 more, for Quebec consumers.

Can the Minister give a straightforward and honest answer to this question: Will Mrs. Lebrun in the Frontenac riding still be able to pay less for her electricity than Mrs. Brown in the United States? Will the Quebec Government be able to make its own decision, as provided by the Constitution, about the residential rates for electricity?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the problem is that the Hon. Member does not or will not understand the situation. I repeat that, first, nothing in the Agreement affects the constitutional powers of any province, including Quebec. Second, nothing in the Agreement can prevent Hydro-Quebec from negotiating contracts according to market prices. In that sense, the Agreement, by giving Hydro-Quebec access to the North American market, will favour Mrs. Lebrun in the Frontenac riding because electricity rates will be lower thanks to a larger market.

PANEL DECISION ON CANADIAN FISH EXPORT REGULATIONS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. As the Minister knows, Canada can alone, or with other GATT members, oppose and thereby kill the recent and erroneous GATT panel report on Canadian fishery regulations at the meeting on December 1.

I wish to ask the Minister if he would assure the House, and the fishing industry, that the Government will do two things: one, immediately contact the senior government officials in the other 95 GATT countries and seek their support in opposing this erroneous panel decision; and, second, assure the House that at the December 1 meeting Canada will oppose the panel decision.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, Members should understand that, at this stage in the GATT proceeding, the option of taking it public is not before us right now, because it is at a stage where the parties are studying it and negotiating it.

I can assure the Hon. Member that we have obligations to the workers in the fishery which we will honour; and we have obligations under the GATT which we will honour. We will seek solutions that allow us to do both.

Mr. Benjamin: And allow us to do it both ways.

Miss Carney: The Hon. Member says "and allow us to do it both ways". That is precisely what the GATT allows us to do. It allows us to maintain those jobs. It allows us to look after our resources. All GATT asks us to do is to ensure that our solutions are compatible with the international trading system, and that is what we are seeking to do.

CANADIAN RESPONSE TO DECISION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is again directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, because this falls clearly within his area.

This panel report goes to the 95 GATT members tomorrow. The GATT panel ruling is contrary to the international Law of the Sea. It is contrary to the Canada-U.S. salmon treaty. I wish to ask the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans a very specific question.

If he cannot get the support of the Minister for International Trade—which he clearly does not have on this issue—by December 1, will the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans serve notice on the United States of our intent to withdraw from the Canada-U.S. salmon treaty, because this panel decision takes away one-half of the value to Canada of the Canada-U.S. salmon treaty, and strikes at the very foundation of the international Law of the Sea and the Canada-U.S. salmon treaty?

• (1440)

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated that Canada's response to this GATT ruling will be a response which meets our obligations to the workers in the fishery and meets our obligations to the GATT.

It is interesting to note that the New Democratic Party, which has wrapped itself in the multinational flag of the GATT, is busily unwrapping itself and trying to ditch the international trading system.

CHILD CARE

INTRODUCTION OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Once again the Prime Minister has broken his promise and dropped children from the national agenda by reducing child care discussions at the First Ministers Conference. Instead, the Government is engaging in policy by strip-tease by refusing to unveil its child care policy until December.

Today we heard the Government liken this secret policy to medicare, but isn't that a farce? Our sources tell us that this new policy will encourage private, not non-profit, day care, and will leave children at risk with no plan for a national child care standard.

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as you know, the Minister of National Health and Welfare is out of the House today. However, I think it is fair for me to say that the Government—certainly the Minister of Health—from time to time has emphasized its commitment to child care.

I think there will be meetings on December 2 and 3 in respect of the provinces. Thereafter there will be announcements made, and I think the Hon. Member will be pleased with those announcements.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I asked my question of the Prime Minister because it was he who made the promises during the infamous women's debate almost three and a half years ago.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. We know that the Government is already making plans for a Ways and Means Motion which will abolish child deductions for child care replacement, with a measly $200 credit targeted toward families who are not working and also parents who have their children in unlicensed day care.

I realize this is an issue which is so petty the Prime Minister cannot listen to it and must review his notes. However, I would like to ask the Prime Minister why he has broken his Government's promise to establish a national child care policy which will ensure that every child is safe. Why, instead, is he replacing it with a short-term, miniscule cash payment which is nothing but a pre-election grab?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think anyone who has been following the debate on this matter knows that there has been an historic approach. That approach will be of benefit to a great number of Canadians.

I think the Hon. Member should find it in her heart to begin to support that initiative.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

SALE OF CANADIAN COMPANY TO AMERICAN CORPORATION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): My question is directed to the Minister of State (Science and Technology).

Perhaps the most effective way of supporting industrial research and development and creating jobs in Canada is throught the National Research Council's Industrial Research Assistance Program.

How does the Government respond to the fact that Cimtech, which received nearly $2 million from IRAP to develop a unique technology for shoe design, will be sold with its technology and the jobs that technology can generate to an American company, Microdynamic in Dallas?

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member makes reference to a small high-tech firm in Ontario which has, over time, received some assistance through a research assistance program managed by the National Research Council.

Firms in receipt of such grants make certain contractual undertakings in connection with the transfer of such technology. It is the intention of the National Research Council and myself to make sure that these undertakings are honoured.

TRANSFER OF TECHNOLOGY

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of State for Science and Technology agree that, with the new ownership and American investment rules attached to the trade deal, we may be faced with further significant instances of technology—and perhaps technology government funded—which is presently being transferred, as well as the jobs such technologies produce, to the United States at a cost to the Canadian economy?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, quite the opposite is true. There is no one who is more enthusiastic about the free trade deal than the high-tech sectors. In fact the transfer of technology is one of the most important and salient reasons for which we have entered into this agreement.

We produce roughly 2 per cent of the new ideas generated in the world and desperately need access to the other 98 per cent. This agreement will provide us with that access.

If the Hon. Member checks he will find that the high-tech industry is euphoric about the agreement.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—ENERGY PRICES—PROVINCIAL POWERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. Last night former Premier Peter Lougheed said that under the terms of the Canada-U.S. trade deal provinces would not be able to give lower power prices to their own citizens than they give to U.S. customers.

For instance, Ontario Hydro would not be able to give a lower price to industrial users in northern Ontario to promote industrial development than they give to Michigan or New York. Could the Minister say why she has given away this power of the provincial Governments to set their own regional development policies?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we have made every attempt to indicate that what the Hon. Member has said is simply not true.

I suggest to him one way that he may be able to establish this. Why does he not go out to Alberta and ask whether or not they would like to have the regulated prices that were necessary under the Liberal Government, whether they would like the 15 per cent to 18 per cent tariff barriers that were necessary under the Liberal Government which never bothered to negotiate them away, and whether the people of Ontario, who are so dependent upon hydro electric resources, would like to see their markets disrupted in the U.S.? I think that would be a very good test of the former Government's policy.

CONSULTATIONS WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the trade deal requires that the federal Government is responsible to see that provincial Governments, and even municipal Governments, carry out the terms of the agreement.

Why did the Minister not consult with the Ontario Government and other provincial Governments which have power exports to the United States before she signed this deal?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, in terms of consultation, we had about seven or eight First Ministers' meetings with the Premier of Ontario and the other Premiers. We had something like 20 meetings of the officials on these issues. We had about 200 meetings of private sector groups on this issue.

The only people who refused to consult with the Government on the free trade deal were the opposition Parties themselves who were offered a chance to do so by this Government.

IMMIGRATION

SIKH REFUGEE CLAIMANTS—WORK PERMITS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As the Minister knows, in a recent—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Heap: —Globe and Mail report, 26—

Some Hon. Members: Go ahead.

Mr. Heap: As the Minister knows—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Spit it out, Dan.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, could we have some order, please?

Mr. McDermid: Don't pay any attention, Dan; just keep going.

Mr. Speaker: I know that Hon. Members would want to exercise the appropriate courtesies to the Hon. Member who has been given the floor by the Speaker to ask a question. The Hon. Member for Spadina has the floor.

Mr. Heap: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

As the Minister knows, 26 Sikh refugee claimants were recently given their examinations under oath but told that they must now wait at least a month before getting permission to work.

Is he now reneging on the policy he announced on February 20, when he said that under the revised approach all refugee claimants would be given permission to work when they had their inquiry and their examination under oath?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I don't know exactly which cases the Hon. Member has in mind. However, we have no intention of diverging from the policy we put into place. However, if we are both thinking about the same people, the permit was not granted because they failed to meet all the criteria.

• (1450)

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that the regulations state very clearly that when they have had their examination, in accordance with the Department's regulations, they do not need a further examination. The Minister also knows that these people had their examinations when they were admitted into this country.

The 26 Sikhs are being told, in violation of that regulation, that they have to have a further medical examination. Is this something the Minister does for all refugee claimants or only for Sikhs?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Government's policies apply to everyone, and I repeat, as I said before, that the people or cases to which he is referring failed to meet the criteria, otherwise they would have had a work permit. Of course, I can and will make some additional checks, but I am confident that the Department's officers were simply carrying out government policy.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE DISPUTE—ROLE OF FRENCH TUGBOAT

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland—Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Could the Minister advise the House what the Government has learned about the deployment of the French naval vessel La Centure which the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe yesterday described as a act of provocation?

Has France, indeed, established for the first time in history a French naval presence off the East Coast, or did the Hon. Member know what he was talking about?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the latter part of that question was certainly the correct part.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: We have checked into this matter and we have discovered what the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe was trying to alarm the House with yesterday. He suggested that there was an act of provocation by the Government of France in establishing, for the first time in history, a naval presence off the East Coast of Canada, but La Centure is, in fact, a deepsea tug.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: He had his mug in a tug, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: She is one of a series of four naval tugs that support fishing vessels or vessels generally in the Atlantic. She has been coming out for the last 10 years, so the Member is 10 years behind.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: She is armed with one machine gun.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I have consulted our defence specialists and they say that they do not feel threatened by this particular vessel.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: This is a case of pure irresponsibility in not checking the facts. I think we will have to call the hon. gentleman from now on "Tugboat Tobin".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: He is certainly not only crying wolf, Mr. Speaker, he has become a pussy-cat.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—CHURCHILL FALLS HYDRO CONTRACT

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, on a different subject!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, French language newspaper accounts yesterday quoted a source in the Prime Minister's office as saying:

> The Premier of Newfoundland will support the U.S.-Canada free trade agreement if the federal Government intervenes to reopen the Churchill Falls hydro contract.

That is the 40-year, 1969, contract under which Hydro Quebec buys electricity from Newfoundland for $8 million a year and sells it for $800 million a year.

Does the Prime Minister still believe what he so firmly declared in 1983 when he wrote: "The inequality and absence of fair play in the contract in question is obvious. Simple decency and the most elementary spirit of justice demand its immediate renegotiation". That is from the Prime Minister's book Where I Stand.

Does he stand by those words today, Mr. Speaker?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do indeed, and I thank my hon. friend for quoting from what is an outstanding best seller in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Just before Christmas.

Mr. Mulroney: And I mention that just before the Christmas season, if anyone is listening.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: It is now, I am informed, on the preferred reading list of all Canadian colleges, universities and high schools.

Mr. Axworthy: As history.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I thank my hon. friend for quoting one part of an eloquent and impressive chapter dealing with the development of hydro-electric resources.

Yes, indeed, Mr. Speaker, I stand entirely by what I said.

POSITION OF NEWFOUNDLAND PREMIER

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister demanded an immediate renegotiation of the contract that costs Newfoundland $800 million a year, an immediate renegotiation. It is obvious that the Prime Minister's definition of immediacy has changed to that of expediency.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister where then is the so-called simple decency and the most elementary spirit of justice when the Premier of a province is forced into a position where he says: "Yes, I will support the free trade deal with the United States, about which I have already objected several times on many occasions in Newfoundland, if you will only renegotiate the Churchill Falls agreement".

Where is the decency in that, Mr. Speaker?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no decency in it because there is no truth in that statement. There is no truth in that statement whatsoever. Premier Peckford never said to me or to any member of my Government: "Yes, I will support the free trade with the United States if the contract is renegotiated". I must tell my hon. friend that that is an absolute misleading statement—

Ms. Copps: It is from your office.

Mr. Mulroney: —by my hon. friend. In point of fact, those who follow federal-provincial conferences and international trading matters will know that from the very beginning Premier Peckford has been one of the most enthusiastic supporters of the concept of free trade over the years.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Mulroney: Indeed, he has been, and he remains very much convinced, as I understand it—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): That was yesterday.

Mr. Mulroney: —that free trade is key to the economic well-being of the future of Newfoundland and Labrador.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Ask him today.

Mr. Mulroney: This does not change the fact, although there has been no hinging of the two, that Premier Peckford and his predecessors have fought long and hard to have a contract changed that is in my judgment, as I indicated in my book, fundamentally unfair to one of the participants. But he did not make it a condition precedent of his support for the trade agreement, any kind of a change in that contract, although the federal Government has in the past, and I repeat it again today, offered the Province of Quebec and the Province of Newfoundland our good services to be of assistance to them in trying to resolve an extremely difficult matter.

SHIPBUILDING

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF CONTRACT TO BUILD SIX FRIGATES

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Canada's Department of National Defence will soon be awarding a major contract for six frigates worth $3.5 billion. This contract provides a spectacular and unique opportunity for developing expertise. Does the Minister feel that the Department of National Defence should put all its eggs in one basket in this particular case?

[English]

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his question and for his interest in the matter which I think is of general concern in the country.

Let me emphasize that no decision has been finalized at this stage. I can assure the Hon. Member that, consistent with this Government's approach to remodernizing and revitalizing our Armed Forces, the total defence infrastructure throughout Canada will be taken into consideration in the decision.

Mr. Speaker: I want to advise the House that there will be two more questions, the Hon. Member for Churchill followed by the Hon. Member for Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

LEVEL OF FUNDING FOR NATIVE HOUSING

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

With the deplorable situation that we have for housing on our reserves throughout the country, with children growing up in shacks with rotten floors and walls falling down, and with the cold winter coming, could he explain why there is no extra money for native housing in the Supplementary Estimates that came down today?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Member, I am sure, is aware that the expenditures for 1987-1988 for housing for individuals under Bill C-31 alone totalled over $10 million. The housing expenditure projected for next year under the same proposal is $17 million. The estimate that was made on the passing of Bill C-31 called for budgetary expenditures and dollars to be set aside to address the returnees and the demand that will be put on the Department. That assessment was not accurate and we are now reviewing the way to draw down the dollars that have been identified for future years.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows full well that the money for Bill C-31 returnees as he calls them is not even a pittance compared to what is required. I ask my question also on behalf of those people who have been living on reserves all their lives. Why did the Government not have the decency to provide money for decent housing for native people?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member is familiar with the housing program of the Department of Indian Affairs. There is also a responsibility on behalf of Indian people and Indian government in providing this. We provide subsidies and, as the Hon. Member knows, the Government of Canada, through the taxpayers of Canada, provides subsidies for housing units on reserves. Naturally, there can be more need identified than there are dollars available, but I want the Hon. Member to take a moment and reflect on the fact that in each of the last several years 2,500 new units have been built, and over 3,000 renovations have been done on Indian reserves including in 1986 and 1987.

The Hon. Member keeps muttering to his Leader. I recognize that there is not adequate money for every housing need, but there is a recognition on the part of the Government that we will do everything we can to assist. There is a responsibility on the part of Indian leadership to assist as well in providing housing on reserves.

HOUSING

CO-OPERATIVE RENTAL LEVELS—GOVERNMENT AID

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for housing. Last week, in Montreal, a number of co-operative housing organizations advised us that several managers of projects being built in Montreal and its suburbs cannot find tenants because the rents are much too high. What is the Minister planning to do to help these co-operative groups?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I met with the groups in question a couple of months ago. They raised some problems. I have directed officials of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation in the area to try to work out a formula and they have been holding a succession of meetings on an ongoing basis. It is not an easy problem to solve. Some of the rents are too high. We are trying to concentrate our efforts and our money on those most in need. I hope that a resolution will be forthcoming quickly.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REDUCE CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING RENTS BY 15 PER CENT

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, the Minister must be aware that the problem is unique to Montreal and its suburbs—quite unique—because the rents in these co-operative housing projects are higher than those in the market place, even if co-op members share in the maintenance of rental accommodation. Is the Minister prepared to reduce by 15 p. cent these co-operative rental levels?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member understands that we have two main thrusts in our housing program. One is directed at non-profit organizations and those most in need. The co-op program is geared to market rental income for people who can afford to pay rents relevant to co-ops. They are two different programs and there is sometimes confusion between the two.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the deputy government House Leader to give us a statement of the business the Government intends to put before the House for the coming week.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Madam Speaker, today we will commence second reading of Bill C-89, the Bill respecting victims of crime. I understand that this Bill may possibly pass second reading stage today. It would not be the intention of the Government to call any further government business after that time, and we would suggest that you may find there is agreement to move private Members' business forward immediately, and to go to the adjournment debate immediately after the one hour of private Members' business.

Tomorrow will be an allotted day and on Monday we will commence the second reading debate on Bill C-51, a Bill respecting tobacco products. Thereafter, we do have other business in mind but we have not decided which business we will call. There will also be an opposition day next week.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I am certainly in agreement with the government House Leader's position that after the debate on the Bill has taken place we should move immediately to private Members' business, and we certainly give our consent to that. We would appreciate it if the Government did know what business it would call next week. It would be especially important to the many MPs who have other duties and committee commitments or who would like to go to their ridings to know what will happen in the House next week.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I appreciate my colleague's point and it is well taken. Part of our difficulty in deciding exactly what to call surrounds exactly that, in that we want to try to make it convenient for opposition Party critics to be present to debate the Bills we will bring forward.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved that Bill C-89, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (victims of crime), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to rise today to address the concerns of those Canadians who are often the forgotten persons in our criminal justice system, the victims of crime. We have a responsibility to respond to these concerns.

This is a high priority of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), of the Government and of me as Minister of Justice to address this issue in an effective manner. Victims of crime have become a focal point of concern and priority in our criminal justice system. We have been involved in extensive federal-provincial consultations to address the special needs and circumstances of crime victims and I believe that the legislative proposals which are now before the House represent concrete measures sought by and on behalf of victims of crime.

The legislation I will address today is only one part of the Government's comprehensive proposal for victims. Equally important is the commitment made to the funding of programs in Canada. I have offered to more than double the federal contribution to provincial criminal injury compensation schemes and to fund a new victims' assistance fund. This commitment will involve $27.2 million over three years. This is a near tripling of federal money in this area.

Turning to the Bill itself, the major effect of the proposed legislation is to enhance the capacity of the criminal justice system to respond to the special circumstances of the victims of crime in a fair and sensitive manner.

[Translation]

This bill, to amend the Criminal Code, introduces procedures which will ease the burden which our criminal justice system imposes on the victims of criminal acts. It will also make it an obligation for the accused to compensate the victims for the damages they have suffured.

I am pleased to introduce these measures which will increase the capacity of the criminal justice system to meet the needs of criminal act victims without compromising its basic objectives.

• (1510)

[English]

The proposals now before this House will, first, create a victim fine surcharge to be imposed on those convicted or discharged of offences under the Criminal Code, Part III or Part IV of the Food and Drugs Act, and the Narcotic Control Act. Second, they will allow input by the victim through the use of victim impact statements at the time of sentencing. Third, they will allow the use of photographs and affidavit evidence to provide for the early and prompt return of recovered property to the victim, and remove the need for the victim to testify as to ownership and value of property. Fourth, they will require the courts to consider restitution in all cases involving damage, loss or destruction of property, and bodily harm, thereby removing the need for the victim to apply for restitution. Fifth, they will extend the discretionary and mandatory ban on the publication of the identity of victims and witnesses of sexual and extortion offences.

Let me now expand on each of these proposals. The victim fine surcharge is one of the most important features of this Bill. This proposal further recognizes the entitlement of victims of crime to reparation, and the need for offenders to make amends for the wrongs suffered by their victims. The purpose of the victim fine surcharge is to require the offender to provide redress not only for the harm done to the victim but to the community at large. The surcharge will assist offenders in the process of accepting responsibility for their crimes by requiring them to contribute to victim services within each province as part of the debt they owe to society.

The victim fine surcharge will generate revenue to be applied by the provinces for the purpose of providing assistance to victims of crime. The work of the Task Force and the Working group on Justice for Victims of Crime, the federal-provincial consultation process, and various research projects, have all highlighted the need for a stable source of funding for victim services.

The proposed amendment would require the court to impose a victim fine surcharge on those offenders convicted or discharged of offences under the Criminal Code, Part III or Part IV of the Food and Drugs Act, and the Narcotic Control Act. The surcharge would be ordered in addition to any other punishment imposed. The only time where a victim fine surcharge would not be imposed is where the offender could establish to the satisfaction of the court that undue hardship to the offender or the offender's dependants would result. In such a case, the court would be required to provide written reasons for waiving the surcharge. Here once again the needs and circumstances of offenders have been recognized.

The proposed amendment provides maximum limits for the imposition of the victim surcharge; 15 per cent of any fine imposed upon the offender for the offence or, where no fine is imposed, a maximum amount of $10,000, or such lesser amount as may be prescribed by regulation.

With respect to default of payment, failure to pay the victim fine surcharge would be enforceable in the same manner as failure to pay a fine under Section 646 of the Criminal Code. The court would have the discretion to impose a term of imprisonment in default of payment.

With respect to victim crime impact statements, one of the needs often expressed by victims of crime is the desire to be heard, to feel their viewpoint has been taken into consideration. With respect to the criminal justice process this translates into a need to have the impact of the crime upon the victim considered by the court at the time of sentencing.

[Translation]

Even though the courts may allow the victim to produce a declaration, this has not become current practice. As a Government we participated in projects aimed at promoting the use of such declarations. We recognize the need for the victim to be heard and that is why Bill C-89 provides for a procedure that makes official and encourages the production of a victim statement at the time of sentencing.

The proposed amendment allows the victim of an offence to describe the harm done to that person or the damages that person suffered from the commission of the offence, whether financially, socially, psychologically or physically. It does not allow the victim, however, to express any opinion on the sentence that should be imposed on the accused.

[English]

The introduction of a victim impact statement would not preclude the court from hearing the victim, if so required. The court would not be restricted from considering any other evidence concerning any victim of the offence for the purpose of determining the sentence of the offender. The proposal outlines the procedure for preparation of the victim impact statement. It provides that the statement would be prepared in writing in the form and in accordance with the procedures established by a program designated by the Lieutenant Governor in Council in each province. This provision is intended to allow the preparation and form of the victim impact statements to be left to local practice.

The victim impact statement would be admissible at the sentencing hearing. It is expected that the ordinary rules of evidence applicable to sentencing hearings would apply. If the accused cannot challenge the victim impact statement, as with pre-sentence reports, the contents of the statement could be accepted by the court and taken into consideration for the purpose of assessing the effect of the crime upon the victim. If, however, there was any dispute as to the facts, the ordinary legal principles governing criminal proceedings would apply. Any facts relied upon by the Crown and challenged by the accused would have to be established on the criminal standard of proof beyond a reasonable doubt.

I would like to turn now to the provisions with respect to photographic evidence. The procedures proposed in this Bill concerning photographic evidence, proof of ownership, and value of property, are intended to ensure early and prompt return of property to the victim. The victims of property offences such as theft or breaking and entering have often referred to the further victimization they have suffered at the hands of the criminal justice process for the financial and emotional burden they must bear while their stolen property, although recovered, remains out of their control.

The proposed amendments concerning photographic evidence and proof of ownership and value of property further addresses this issue by authorizing the replacement of the actual property by a photograph. Therefore nothing will preclude the early return of the property to the victim, resulting in less inconvenience to the victim before and during any court proceedings. It would also remove the need for the victim or additional witnesses to appear at the trial. The affidavit or solemn declaration that must be filed by the person or peace officer who seized and detained the property until the photograph was taken is intended to remove the need to call additional witnesses, by establishing the continuity of the exhibit until the time the photograph was taken. Attendance in court may often result in considerable financial and personal costs to the victim or witness.

The proposed amendment providing for the use of an affidavit or solemn declaration to establish proof of ownership and value of property would avoid the need for the personal attendance in court of the victim to testify as to the ownership and value of the property of which the person has been deprived as a result of the particular offence.

The right of an accused person to have the Crown prove all of its case against him has been recognized in the various notice provisions contained in the proposed amendments concerning photograph evidence and proof of ownership and value of property. Reasonable notice of intention to produce a photograph, certificate, affidavit, or solemn declaration in evidence must be given by the prosecutor to the accused in order for it to be received in evidence, unless the court orders to the contrary. The accused can then challenge these certificates or affidavits and require the Crown to prove its case in the ordinary way.

[Translation]

The right of the accused to dispute any fact contained in a certificate, solemn declaration or affidavit produced in court has been recognized in the proposed amendments that give the court the power to order that the person whose name appears on the certificate, solemn declaration or affidavit be examined or cross-examined on the content of the document he or she signed.

The court may also order the production of the goods recovered when it is convinced it is necessary in the interest of justice.

[English]

I would now like to return to the provisions in the Bill with respect to restitution. One of the key concerns often expressed by victims of crime is the need to increase the opportunities for a victim to receive financial reparation for the losses resulting from the criminal activity. This has led to the increased emphasis in this Bill on the payment of restitution by the offender.

The proposals in this Bill enhance and strengthen the current restitution provisions in the Criminal Code. By requiring the court to consider ordering restitution in all cases where such an order might be appropriate the onus on the victim to apply for a restitution order at the time of sentencing is removed. The responsibility is now upon the criminal justice system to consider the victim.

In addition, the concept of victim's rights is expanded under this section. The definition of victim includes those who assist in the arrest or attempted arrest of the offender, thereby enabling the court to make the offender accountable for all harm caused during the commission of the offence.

In an effort to avoid further victimization, restitution would also be available to a person who has purchased a property in good faith and without notice not knowing it to be the object of an offence. This would include cases where the offender may have offered stolen property as security for financial transactions. Restitution would thereby be available for persons who innocently lend money on the security of such property. Restitution would not only be ordered for loss or damage to property, but also for pecuniary damages incurred as a result of bodily injury.

The proposed amendments do not call upon the court to make an involved assessment of the damages incurred to person or property. The proposals specifically limit the availability of restitution to damages to property or as a result of bodily injury in cases where the amounts are "readily ascertainable". These include such matters as medical bills, property damage, loss of salary, and other expenses.

Once the judge has decided that there are some readily ascertainable damages that could be the object of a restitution order, he would then be required to determine whether he should make the order in the particular case. He would then direct his mind to the question of how to ascertain whether a restitution order would be satisfied and to lessen any likelihood of default on the part of the offender.

This Bill contains various provisions which respond to this question. The judge would be able to consider the future ability of the offender to pay at some time within the next three years. He could also determine the existence of any assets in the name of the offender. The Bill contains a procedure which provides for execution against such assets. In addition, all or any part of the moneys found in the offender's possession at the time of the arrest could be taken to satisfy the restitution order.

Bill C-89 also contains a provision which would direct the court to give priority to orders of restitution over orders of forfeiture and fines. This provision reflects the commitment of the criminal justice system to be responsive to the needs of victims of crime. It clearly states that the victims are not to be deprived of their right to receive restitution and such rights should prevail over forfeiture or payment of fines.

I would like to deal now with the provisions with respect to bans on publication of identity. I think Members of the House would agree that victims of sexual offences and victims of extortion are particularly vulnerable to public disclosure of their identity. Protecting their identity where necessary will help in obtaining their co-operation in testifying and encourage increased reporting of these types of offences.

Under the current provisions of the Code, the judge can order, for some sexual offences, that the hearings be held in camera or that the identity of the complainant not be disclosed. You will recall, Madam Speaker, as will other Members of the House, that with the amendments to the Criminal Code adopted by this House which received Royal Assent this past June, protection has been granted to victims of sexual offences. The protection granted to victims of sexual offences was extended by allowing them to testify outside the presence of the accused. The Bill also extended the protection against disclosure of identity to witnesses under the age of 18 years.

This Bill further expands that protection. First, the protection against disclosure of identity is extended to all witnesses regardless of their age. In the case of adult witnesses the ban on publication of identity is discretionary. In the case where application is made by any victim or witness under the age of 18 years, the publication ban is mandatory.

Second, these rules are made applicable to extortion and loansharking offences where threats are likely to be made to victims and witnesses. Extending the ban on publication to include victims of extortion threats and loan sharking should encourage victims of these offences to bring information to the attention of law enforcement agencies with respect to this type of crime under the Code.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, as I indicated at the beginning of my remarks, our criminal justice system forgets the victims of criminal acts. These amendments in my view demonstrate this Government's will to promote social justice for the victims of crime. With these proposals, judicial proceedings and the penalty award process will be better adapted to the victims' particular needs. Those changes will enable us to compensate victims in a fair and sensitive way for the physical, emotional and economic damage they suffer.

[English]

The support which this Bill has already received from victims' groups, the Canadian public and Members of Parliament indicates just how important it is. We all recognize the need to provide protection and assistance to victims of crime. To that end, I am asking for the support of all Members in this House in order that this legislation may be dealt with without delay.

I will conclude with one further remark with respect to this initiative. I want to underline the fact that we on the federal side are moving as a national Government with respect to areas which, in many instances, are under provincial jurisdiction. It has been necessary for the federal Government, in the best sense of federal-provincial co-operation, to seek and obtain the assistance of the provinces in this initiative.

I want to pay tribute to my provincial colleagues who have worked with me in an open and very helpful spirit. I do not think I am telling any secrets out of school if I say that in the course of our discussions we have been talking about a statement of principles for the entire country, national standards with respect to programs for victims of crime in Canada. I propose to continue those discussions with my provincial colleagues and, hopefully, in the not too distant future, we will be able to come to an agreement as to the content and scope of that statement.

Notwithstanding the fact that we have not succeeded in that one respect, this initiative on the part of the federal Government is an initiative which comes at a time in the history of our country which I think is appropriate and which is a progressive move on the part of our Government and this Parliament. As I indicated at the beginning of my remarks, it reflects a very widely felt sentiment in our country. People who are victimized as a result of criminal activity are entitled to some reasonable consideration in the criminal justice system. It is with great pride, therefore, that I bring forward this initiative. I am asking, as I indicated in my remarks, for the co-operation of Members of the House, and I understand that it will be forthcoming. I appreciate the assistance of the opposition Parties in this initiative. I hope we can soon go to the committee to examine this matter and pass it into law so that at last victims in Canada will feel that parliamentarians in Ottawa are on their side.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster)—Trade—United States export enhancement program—Reported sale of wheat to Algeria/Position of United States administration; The Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher)—Immigration—Amnesty for refugee claimants—Government position/Statement attributed to Chairman—Designate of Refugee Board; The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson)—Canadian Security Intelligence Service—Alleged infiltration of labour unions/Allegation of interference in legal prosecution.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-89, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (victims of crime), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise today on behalf of my colleague, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), the justice critic for the Official Opposition, and respond to the Minister's statements with respect to Bill C-89. I will say quickly at the outset that we in this Party are particularly encouraged by the Minister's closing remarks when he indicated to the House that he has worked over the last period of time, and intends to continue to work in the months ahead, to establish national standards in consultation and discussion with Ministers of Justice right across the land. The Minister talked about the mood and desire in this country, and indeed that is something that Canadians right across Canada would want to see happen and happen as quickly as possible.

I should say at the outset that we in the Liberal Party believe that a truly just society must do more than simply ensure that the punishment handed out to criminals matches the severity of a particular crime. If the people who are seriously injured, the victims of crime, are ignored in the process, they are in fact victimized twice. We believe the clauses contained in Bill C-89 begin the process of addressing the rights and needs of the victim. We believe that victims have been the forgotten persons in the legal system. Therefore, we welcome all those parts of the Bill that seek to emphasize the position of the victims.

As I said, we welcome the Bill. Indeed, it shall have our support. However, the public and indeed the Government should regard Bill C-89 as only a first step in finding a solution to the problems of victims. I think the Minister would himself acknowledge that the Bill is largely a symbolic move on the part of the Government. The public should be aware that even when this Bill is enacted, and it will be in its present form, there are many gaps remaining in the area of compensation for victims. This Bill will not assist the vast majority of victims whose attackers are never caught, and I want to repeat that. This Bill cannot compensate or assist those victims whose attackers are never caught and convicted.

Professor Irvin Waller, a University of Ottawa criminologist, tells us that in some nine out of 10 cases the victim never finds out who did it, and in the tenth case, where the perpetrator is caught, even in that instance there is not a 100 per cent rate of prosecutions. Therefore, the only people who can be assisted under the provisions outlined by the Minister in this Bill are those people who are lucky enough to have a day in court where they see the person who committed the crime being convicted. That is in one out of 10 cases. The other catch is that judges are only instructed or compelled to impose a surcharge on a convicted criminal if it is shown that that criminal has the financial resources to pay a fine. As the Minister pointed out the fine that can be levied by a judge is up to $10,000. But in the case of the one person in 10 who gets his day in court, who sees a conviction, if the perpetrator of that crime does not have the financial resources to pay compensation, then the judge under the clauses contained in this Bill has the right to waive any penalty.

While this is a step in the right direction, while it is a step we endorse and for which we applaud the Minister, the reality is that Canadians should not get too carried away with the notion that every victim of crime is going to be compensated under the clauses of this Bill. In fact, it is probably fair to say that somewhat fewer than one victim out of 10 will be compensated. I know the Minister will agree with that.

Most crime victims will still have to resort to provincial compensation boards to which the Minister alluded in his comments. As the Minister knows, these boards have small budgets and do not always honour the various claims. In early November, 1987, the Ontario criminal injuries compensation board refused to pay any compensation to the widow of a Toronto area police officer who was killed in the line of duty. The board's reasoning was that the widow had already received life insurance money as a result of her husband's murder. The board, therefore, came to the conclusion that no compensation under the provincial compensation scheme would be paid to the widow in question. The provincial boards, as the Minister has said, use different standards to adjudicate claims. We in this Party are asking the question: since the federal Government has now announced increased funding of these boards, why did it not attempt at the same time to have national standards set for victim compensation?

The Minister, and I applaud him for it, indicated at the end of his speech that he wanted to continue the process of seeking to establish national standards. However, those standards are not in place today. In fact, in my own Province of Newfoundland, the level of compensation available to victims of crime is the lowest in Canada. It is the very lowest in Canada. I use this opportunity to suggest to the Premier of Newfoundland and his Minister of Justice that now is a good time in light of this symbolic gesture today in Parliament to have a look at that compensation system.

Here is another problem. A Canadian who is a victim of crime in one province may be eligible for compensation on the basis of being victimized even though a conviction or successful prosecution is not realized, while in another province the only way compensation can be paid is if the offender in question is caught and convicted. The standards are very uneven across the country.

With respect to Bill C-89, we are saying today that it is a step in the right direction. It is one which we support. It is one that begins to respond to the feeling the Minister described out there on the part of Canadians who want to see some recognition of the needs and of the position of victims of crime. Canadians, those who are interested in this area, ought not to rest on their laurels, and members of the Opposition will not do that, because this Bill does not go far enough.

Last night with respect to this Bill we saw on the CBC program The Journal a timely piece on break and enters. It was a piece approximately 20 minutes long. We saw that in the vast majority of cases, almost 99 per cent of the time, no one is ever caught. None of those people would be eligible for assistance under this Bill. What we really saw is that more than just loss of property is involved in a break and enter.

Last night we saw the face of terrorism on our television sets. We saw an actual recorded event of a young lady at home alone in her apartment talking on the telephone quite hysterically, obviously terrified, telling the police that someone was trying to come into her apartment. The price she paid because of that attempted break and enter was not the loss of material goods. What she lost was the sense of security in her own home. What she suffered was terrorism at its worse, fear for one's property—indeed, fear for one's life.

While this Bill is not designed specifically to deal with that reality for many victims, this is an appropriate time to raise again the report of the Canadian federal-provincial task force on justice for victims of crime. It is stated in that report that beyond compensation the services which would appear to be the most widely needed by victims are those which help them in coping with the effects of victimization, for example, the work of transition houses, rape crisis centres, the provision of crisis intervention services, the training of workers in the system to recognize and respond to the needs of victims, and helping the victims financially where loss and suffering has been incurred.

I take advantage of this opportunity to say a few words about Bill C-89 and again to call upon my colleagues on all sides of the House and, indeed, members of the Cabinet and members of the Government, in this time of financial restraint and cut-backs to be aware of the very necessary and important role that is played by so many governmental and non-governmental agencies, many of which exist on federal subsidies and other financial assistance in assisting victims of crime. It would be a shame that on the one hand we would take an important symbolic step to recognize the needs of victims while on the other, because of constraints, we would see some of the dollars available to non-governmental agencies such as rape crisis centres and so on disappear. This, too, is important for victims of crime.

With those remarks, Madam Speaker, I offer the support of the justice critic of the Liberal Party and, indeed, of the Official Opposition with respect to Bill C-89.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, some 2,005 years ago the great Athenian legislator Solon said that there can be no justice until those of us who are unaffected by crime become as indignant as those who are. I think those words should echo today in the House as we consider the legislation which the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has put before the House at second reading today, Bill C-89.

I want to say that my colleagues and I in the New Democratic Party strongly support the principle of this legislation and, indeed, believe that it is long overdue. As the spokesperson on justice for the New Democratic Party I have called for many years now for effective steps to be taken to ease the trauma that victims of crime and the families of victims of crime too often suffer at the hands of the criminal justice system. Too often victims of crime are doubly victimized, once by the perpetrator of the crime, and subsequently by the criminal justice system which is too often callous and indifferent to their concerns.

It is because of the fundamental concern that victims have been forgotten by those in the criminal justice system for far too long, too often stripped of their dignity and respect, that we believe that this legislation is long overdue. We support it in principle.

The statistics are staggering. Each year in Canada some 700 families are victimized by murder, some, 2500 more lose someone to a drunk driver, and over 100,000 Canadians suffer, enduring emotional trauma and scars as a result of crime. Many, many more lose their property or are victims of breaking and entering. In fact, one in six Canadian households will be the victim of a crime in Canada today. However, only a tiny fraction of these victims receive any kind of recognition or compensation.

Effectively, while crimes can have different impacts on different victims, there are four general ways in which victims suffer. Some victims of crime suffer physical injury or lasting disability. Some victims suffer emotional trauma and distress. Of course, here as well one must speak of the emotional trauma and the devastation suffered by those who are the families of victims, particularly the families of those who have been murdered. Other victims lose money or personal possessions. Finally, there are victims who suffer additionally, as I mentioned, due to the insensitive treatment they receive from the police or the courts, the denial of dignity which really goes to the core of their treatment.

In Canada last year there were over 400,000 break and enters. I might say that we in this House, I suspect, are not immune to that phenomenon. I myself have been a victim of a break and enter at my own home. I have suffered arriving at my home to find the house having been broken into and things scattered everywhere. Too many Canadians have suffered similarly. Unfortunately, the poorest of those Canadians do not even have insurance to cover the cost of that crime. It is very important indeed that we recognize that they must not be additionally victimized by the criminal justice system.

Too often victims of crime suffer from a lack of assistance, support and delay in the return of their property. In this regard I welcome the provision in the legislation with respect to photographing evidence and then returning it to those who have been victimized. That is an important step forward. They often suffer from a lack of basic information about what is going on with the crime. They have been shut out from receiving information. Sometimes there is total indifference when they get to the court room. The case may have been adjourned and they do not know anything about it. They have not been informed.

In one particularly difficult case, one of my constituents, a very brave woman named Doreen Helm, whose daughter was brutally murdered, was in court during the proceedings on the jury trial. The jury had recessed to consider its verdict. She and her family were not even informed that the jury had returned and were delivering the verdict. That type of callous indifference to the concerns of victims must end. Those steps which the Government is taking in this legislation are important first steps in that regard.

In Canada today approximately one in fifty victims of violence receives any form of compensation from the Government. Only one Canadian community in one hundred has any type of practical assistance organized through the RCMP or through non-profit agencies for victims of common crimes. I am very pleased that in my own community of Burnaby there is an excellent victim assistance program which has been established by the Burnaby attachment of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. It is a new program that began in January of this year. It currently has a complement of dedicated volunteers who provide a variety of services to victims of crime in Burnaby. They file up-to-date information and they explain basic police and court procedures. They accompany people and families to court. They refer to social services and community agencies. They get involved in making people aware of criminal injuries compensation programs, witness appreciation letters, and condolence letters.

I wish to take this opportunity to commend those who are involved in this program, in particular Constable Earla-Kim McColl and Constable Nancy Wilson for the outstanding job that they have done in this important victim assistance program, and to encourage other communities to embark upon similar programs.

I also wish to mention the fact that only one community in twenty-five has a sexual assault crisis centre or a shelter for victims of violence within the home. When we speak of the importance of assisting victims of crime in our society, we must recognize that, to a significant extent, women in our society are still more victimized than men as a result of violent crime. As a society we have to recognize our responsibility to assist those women. Instead, Governments, both the federal Conservative Government and provincial Governments, have cut back on programs to assist women who are victims of violence. For example, I am speaking here of women who have to leave their homes as a result of domestic violence. It is essential that those women have access to emergency and short-term physical shelters for themselves and their children, that they have access to immediate personal counselling, and that they have access to advice.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), represents a rural constituency. He has done an outstanding job in bringing to the attention not only of his colleagues in the New Democratic caucus but to Parliament, the particular concerns of women in rural communities. Those women in rural communities are particularly hard hit by the absence of basic support services for situations in which they are victims of family violence.

There is also the concern about those who are victims of sexual assault. Here again the federal Government has cut back on funding for rape crisis centres and sexual assault centres. Instead, funding should be increased for those services to assist women who have suffered the trauma of sexual assault.

We should also be provided funding to assist adults who have been victims of sexual abuse as children. There are a number of groups in Canada pressing the Government to move forward with respect to aid for adult survivors of sexual and other forms of abuse. Yet the Government has turned a deaf ear to their requests.

There have been many reports and studies done on the plight of victims in Canada. As a New Democrat, I am proud that it was the Province of Manitoba, an NDP Government under the leadership of then Attorney General Roland Penner, that moved forward and blazed the trail in Canada for programs for victims of crime. It was the NDP Government in Manitoba that introduced legislation in 1986, a Bill entitled justice for victims of crime that placed Manitoba among the world leaders in assisting victims of crime. In referring to Manitoba as a world leader, I am quoting from an article that was written by Professor Irvin Waller who has done an outstanding job in pressing for programs to assist victims of crime.

As a Parliament we should acknowledge the contribution that he has made not only nationally but internationally in a variety of forums, including the United Nations in pursuing aggressively the rights of victims of crime. Indeed, it was as a result of his work, and the work of other dedicated individuals that, in 1985, the United Nations General Assembly unanimously adopted a detailed declaration on victims rights calling upon all member countries to do far more to prevent crime and provide for programs to assist victims of crime.

In a few moments I wish to talk about the importance of prevention of crime as well as assisting victims of crime. One of the most effective ways of dealing with concerns about victims of crime is to take the steps as a society to reduce the number of victims of crime. There are a variety of steps that can and should be taken.

The legislation before us, Bill C-89, while it does represent an important step forward, there is still a great deal of work left to be done. For example, I suggest that the federal Government could be showing the way with respect to policing. After all, in many cases, the first contact the victims have is with the police. With respect to policing, the RCMP could establish guidelines for members of the force to give the victim information on services and remedies that are available, as well as the manner in which the victim might be informed while the investigation continues.

The Bill before the House should be amended. I intend to propose an amendment that would require police officers to inform victims of crime at the earliest possible opportunity of their right to possible compensation under provincial legislation, and possibly also restitution if the aggressor is caught and convicted, and also of their right to make a victim impact statement to the court. Rights without awareness of those rights are hollow. Who better to ensure that victims of crime are made aware of those rights than the person with whom they first come in contact? I speak here of the police. I suggest that this is an important amendment.

I mentioned the possibility of restitution. This Bill does indeed provide for the possibility of restitution. We have to be realistic in examining this proposal and recognize that it is not likely in real terms that many victims of crime or their families will in practice be able to receive restitution from the perpetrator of the crime.

• (1600)

In 90 per cent of all crimes the victim does not know who committed the crime, which reduces significantly the possibility of restitution. If one does not know who committed the crime, of course one cannot demand restitution. In the other 10 per cent of cases suspects may not be charged; if they are charged, they may not be convicted; and if they are convicted, in the vast majority of cases they do not have the money to make restitution in any event. While it is important in principle to recognize that obligation, let us not lose sight of the reality that the principle of restitution will not make a practical difference to many Canadians.

[Translation]

As was said for instance by Mr. Robert Ménard from Montreal, the founder of a new association of victims of criminal acts, the Bill will even induce John to rob Peter. He has been a policeman in Montreal for 29 years. He was himself the victim of a criminal act. He was seriously wounded in a shoot-out in front of a bank in La Salle. Mr. Ménard feels that small-time robbers will make the maximum number of victims. He states for instance that gangsters do not hoard money, they sell their stolen goods immediately to buy drugs or other fast kicks. Even if they have to compensate their victims, if and when they are convicted they do not have one cent to their names. Still, Mr. Ménard admits that the Bill is a first step forward. I met personally with Mr. Ménard here in Ottawa and I congratulate him for the work he has already been doing for the victims of crime in Quebec and elsewhere in Canada.

[English]

Another group of victims of crime has been bitterly disappointed at the actions of the Conservative Government. They are the victims of violent crime who need some form of counselling—psychiatric or psychological assistance. The same Government which preaches concern for victims of crime through the Minister of Justice has, on the other hand, just cancelled callously the funding which has been made available until now to mental health programs for victims of violent crime.

The group Victims of Violence, based in Edmonton, with which the Minister of Justice is familiar, is headed by Gary and Sharon Rosenfeldt, the parents of a young man who was murdered by Clifford Olson. The Rosenfeldts have said that they are horrified to learn that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has cancelled all efforts at improving the mental health response to violent crime victims.

What has been going on here? We have a Conservative Minister of Justice standing up and talking about how important it is that we assist the victims of crime in Canada, and we have a Conservative Minister of National Health and Welfare in the same Government brutally and callously cutting off funding for victims of violent crime in the area of mental health. Surely that kind of hypocrisy and indifference to the concerns of victims of violent crime who need counselling or some assistance is not acceptable to Canadians and should not be acceptable to the House. I call upon the Government to reverse this decision, to restore funding as victims of violence have requested, and to ensure that this amount of money is in fact available.

It is not a provincial matter. It is a matter which should be of concern to all Canadians. It is about time the Conservative Government recognized it and restored this important funding.

Another concern has been raised in respect of the question of restitution. In the event of inability to pay, it is suggested in the Bill that the criminal would go to jail, would do more time. Our prisons are already overcrowded. I suggest that we should approach with great caution the suggestion that if one is too poor to be able to make restitution, if one is unable to make that restitution, or if one does not make that restitution, one goes to jail. Indeed that could lead to even further crowding.

An Hon. Member: And to debtors' prisons.

Mr. Robinson: Yes, as my colleague has just pointed out, the old debtors' prisons. There is new money going into victims' assistance programs from the federal Government. However, I very much hope that we do not in fact take away at the provincial level funding which is being granted at the federal level. I hope the Minister of Justice, in his consultations with the provinces, will make it very clear to them that he expects that the money being granted to the provinces will be put into new programs to assist the provinces in dealing with the victims of crime.

This brings me to another very important area, one which has been touched upon by my colleague in the Official Opposition, that is, the question of minimal national standards for compensation. Not only is it important that there be a statement of the fundamental objectives of this legislation similar to that found in the United Nations Declaration and the Manitoba legislation, but also that minimum national standards be established. At the present time we have a patchwork of programs in Canada. If one loses a family member in Newfoundland, one gets $9,000. If one loses a family member in New Brunswick, one gets $5,000. If one loses a family member in another province, one gets $15,000. If one loses a family member in Ontario, one gets $25,000. How on earth can we justify this patchwork approach to the concerns of victims of crimes and their families? If one is assaulted in the Province of Quebec and one's clothes are ripped, one gets compensation for the clothes, but across the border, in the Province of Ontario, one does not get compensation for clothes. On and on it goes.

It is about time that the Government showed some leadership and imposed some minimal national standards, something which it is quite able to do under the federal-provincial agreement. They provide funding and, even after Meech Lake, they can still ensure that minimum national standards and objectives are met.

One existing standard is that provinces should publicize their provincial programs for compensation. One great concern is that that is not happening, and far too many Canadians are not aware of these programs for compensation.

I have a couple of other points to make before concluding my remarks. The legislation deals with the whole question of victim impact statements. Once again this program was pioneered by the Province of Manitoba. I believe there have been some pilot projects in a number of jurisdictions. However, on the question of victim impact statements, given appropriate safeguards and that on balance this represents an improvement in the criminal justice system, concerns have been expressed, in particular by defence counsel, that there could be abuse and that sentences could in fact be lengthened. As a committee we will want to study with care the arguments on the question of victim impact statements.

A Crown Attorney in the City of Toronto, Paul Culver, has said that in his view there is no doubt that sentences are longer as a result of the use of victim impact statements in the courts. If that is the case, we want to examine whether it is a desirable consequence.

Morris Manning has pointed out the following:

> But if you go back to sentencing based on impact, you get into retribution, an eye for an eye concept. That is not appropriate in modern society.

• (1610)

Even the former president of the group Victims of Violence, Don Sullivan, said this:

> The fear now is that the pendulum may swing too far and we become a vengeance seeking society. Rights for victims should not be achieved by denying rights to others.

—meaning the accused. On balance, the proposals for victim impact statements are worthy of support. For too long victims have been shut out of the process. As well, it is important that the accused, the individuals convicted of crime, confront directly the victims of their crime and hear personally face to face the impact the crime has had. Obviously it is essential that the judge in no way lengthen sentence or in no way include in his or her sentence the element of revenge as a result of the hearing of that statement. But I believe it is important that the victim be given the opportunity to make that statement.

It is also important, in dealing with the whole question of victims of crime, that we recognize the terrible inadequacies of the legal aid system. That is the subject of another speech at another time, but I do want to highlight that as one of the serious concerns in the criminal justice system today, namely, the very grave underfunding of the legal aid system both criminal and civil in Canada. Just this morning we heard in the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General from Gerald Ruygrok, the father of Celia Ruygrok, the 21 year old woman who was brutally murdered at Kirkpatrick House. He pointed out at the coroner's inquest that there were seven or eight lawyers representing everybody under the sun, but he himself, the father of the victim, was denied the right to legal representation.

When we talk about victims of violent crime, surely we should recognize that our legal aid system should be expanded. A Tory Member opposite says he disagrees.

An Hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Robinson: I hope that all Conservative Members would recognize the importance of the greater involvement of victims of violent crime in expanding the criteria for legal aid.

Finally, I want to note that the definition of victims of crime is far too narrow. I suggest that we examine the nature of victimization in our society today. When we do that examination, we will see that there are many victims who are left uncompensated by this Bill. What are some of the examples of that, Madam Speaker? The victims of corporate crime and white collar crime are not compensated by this legislation. The victims of a corporation that pollutes and destroys the environment, that poisons a lake or river and victimizes people in a community, receive no assistance from this legislation. The victims of a corporation which in its greed for profit produces unsafe and hazardous goods resulting in injury or death receive no compensation whatsoever. A corporation or a mine, which is not prepared to take the basic steps to protect the health and safety of men and women who work in a mine who, as a result, experience injury or death, will not be required to pay any restitution under the terms of this legislation. The crimes of multinational corporations in the Third World and elsewhere are not dealt with by this legislation. Racially motivated crimes and other organizational crime is left untouched. I hope the Government will recognize that there are victims in this area as well.

The last point is the one I alluded to earlier concerning the prevention of crime, reducing the number of victims of crime in our society. We know what has to be done. The Government is well aware of the steps that could and should be taken to prevent crime. Yet it has done little or nothing to carry out these important objectives. What about neighborhood watch programs, community and urban planning to ensure a sense of community responsibility to cut down on crime, funding for alcohol and drug programs, funding for those who are mentally ill and for those with learning disabilities? What about attacking poverty, homelessness and unemployment in our society, assisting victims of physical and sexual abuse and dealing with the question of violence in the media and elsewhere?

What about gun controls, including, I might say, an examination of the abuse of firearms by those who are enforcing a law in Canada? Recently in Montreal—

[Translation]

Recently in Montreal people saw a policeman use his service revolver to shoot an innocent Black youth. There are too many victims of armed policemen in Canada. So here again if we want to cut down on the number of victims we must do everything possible to reduce such abuses, such unacceptable crimes.

[English]

We support this legislation in principle. We say that its steps to assist the victims of crime are long overdue in Canadian society. Certainly we look forward to studying this legislation in committee, to bringing forward the necessary improvements in some of the areas that I have outlined with respect to national standards and to informing victims and their families of what they are entitled to. At the end of the day, after having passed this legislation, there remains a great deal of work to be done if true justice for victims in Canada is to become a reality.

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, it is an honour for me today as Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister to comment on Bill C-89, and particularly on each one of us because for a while now the Opposition Parties have been referring to victims at the third person. So I think each one of us can easily identify with the problem of victims of crime generally. Who among us can be assured that he or she will not be the victim of a criminal act in the future?

Madam Speaker, who indeed can claim to be safe from such acts as car theft, break in and a number of other infractions? I would not want to scare anybody but I think it is important to acknowledge that anyone of us can of course be a victim one of these days.

[English]

I would like to thank the opposition critics who have agreed to get on very quickly with second reading of this very important Bill C-89. I hope that we will still have their co-operation as quickly as possible to make this legislation law.

[Translation]

Some of you may have been victims in the past. In spite of the fact that each Canadian is a potential victim of a criminal offence, paradoxically, today, in 1987, the victims are still considered as the casualties of the criminal process. Is it not a paradox which is totally out of place in today society? Surveys show that two thirds of Canadians consider that the rights of victims should be protected as well as those of the accused in the name of justice.

Is it not absurd, Madam Speaker, that most victims complain that they were victimized not only by the offender but also by our judicial system? We have all heard a victim saying that after her T.V. set was found by the police she had to wait for several months or even several years to get it back? We all know a victim who was kept waiting for hours in the corridors of a court of justice only to be told, after several hours of anxiety and several visits to the court, that her evidence was not required anymore.

Madam Speaker, many victims will also tell you that if they had known better, they would not have hesitated to ask for restitution from the offender. How many people would have made themselves known and asked for the help of the judicial system if they had been given the assurance that their identity would be withheld in order to ensure their safety?

Madam Speaker, among other needs, the victim must be able to explain what he or she suffered, and yet, we frequently hear victims complain that no one is listening to them, not even the justice system.

Therefore, I am pleased today to join with the Government which showed its interest for the fate of victims and did not hesitate to take necessary steps to meet in a fair, adequate and energetic way the pressing needs of victims.

In fact, since it came to power, this Government examined the fate of victims of offences involving property. In 1985, this House passed Bill C-18 which provided for the prompt return to victims of belongings that had been stolen or otherwise and were no longer required as evidence.

More recently, in order to assist and protect children who are victims of sexual assault, the Government introduced Bill C-15 and other major amendments to the Criminal Code and the Evidence Act.

As you all know, the provisions contained in both bills were designed to meet the needs of specific groups of victims. The provisions of Bill C-18 are more general as they apply to all classes of victims of crime. A first set of measures is aimed at minimizing hardship likely to be suffered by victims as a result of the criminal justice system.

Those measures can be summarized as follows: First, the use of photographs as evidence to provide for the prompt and early return of recovered property to victims. Second, the use of an affidavit or a solemn declaration to establish the ownership and value of property will remove once again the need for the victim to testify as to those facts. Third, the victim will no longer be required to apply for restitution: in appropriate cases, the court will automatically consider the opportunity of issuing a restitution order. Fourth, the identity of victims and witnesses of sexual and extortion offences will not be published.

Finally, if a declaration is filed, there will be no need for the victim to give evidence on sentencing.

However, Madam Speaker, it must be emphasized that these amendments in no way reduce or violate the basic rights of the accused. Indeed, the presumption of innocence and the right to a full defence are both recognized in Bill C-89.

I have no intention of discussing in detail the effects of these various provisions or the technical aspects of their application. Others have done so before me.

However, there is another provision which I would like to discuss further, namely, the provision related to restitution. Certain provisions to force the offender to make restitution to his victim will now apply to someone who is found guilty by a judge or a jury of the offence with which he or she had been charged. Madam Speaker, I believe that it is important to take a few minutes to explain the difference between compensation and restitution.

Compensation refers to a contribution or payment made by the state to the victim under a compensation program for victims of crime. These programs are subsidized partly by the federal Government, but administered by the provinces or territories.

As the Minister of Justice pointed out, the federal Government has made an offer to the provinces which would more than double the amount they now receive. In passing, Madam Speaker, I must say that Bill C-89 has been very well-received by the provinces, particularly Quebec. The Quebec Minister of Justice, Mr. Herbert Marx, is very satisfied with the negotiations and with Bill C-89, which is the result of these negotiations.

Now with respect to restitution, Madam Speaker, it is a factor which must be taken under advisement by the court when sentence is handed out, if such an order is deemed appropriate. Unlike compensation which comes from the state, restitution is made to the victim by the offender. You will agree with me that one of the first consideration for the person who has incurred material losses or sustained physical injuries is to return to the situation as it was before the crime was committed. In other words, whenever possible it means securing material compensation for damage sustained.

Madam Speaker, this is why the federal-provincial task force on justice for victims of criminal acts published a report in 1983 and recommended changes to the Criminal Code provisions concerning restitution so that, in appropriate cases, the judge would have to consider the advisability of issuing a restitution order. The task force recommended as well that victims be given an opportunity to appear before the court concerning such losses as might be ascertainable.

More recently, in a report released last February the Canadian Sentencing Commission recommended that restitution orders take the following elements into account: first, property damage resulting from the commission of the offence and calculated on the basis of the actual cost of repairing or replacing such property; hospital and medical care expenditures incurred by the victim as a result of the commission of a crime; losses of income resulting from the commission of such crime, including those due to the victim's hospitalization or participation in the investigation or trial.

Madam Speaker, I am convinced that all Members in the House today will agree that the amendments introduced in Bill C-89 adequately respond to these recommendations.

But what exactly is meant by damage whose amount can be easily ascertainable? These could, for instance, include medical bills, property damage or loss of income. It should be understood that only damages where the amount is readily ascertainable may be the subject of a restitution order in respect of an offence under the Criminal Code. Other damages whose amount is not readily ascertainable, pain and suffering for instance, will continue to be the subject of claims in civil proceedings.

I mentioned earlier that the onus was no longer on the victim to seek a restitution order. In fact, the proposed amendment requires the judge to consider whether a restitution order would be appropriate. This means the victim will no longer have to worry about exercising this right, since in all cases, the judge will do so on the victim's behalf. A restitution order is not restricted to property damage alone. For instance, damages incurred as a result of bodily injury, provided the amount is readily ascertainable, may also be covered by a restitution order.

The proposed amendments expand our concept of "victim" to cover persons who arrested or tried to arrest the offender. However, the Bill does not propose a definition of the word "victim". As a result, the courts will have the flexibility to respond to the particular circumstances of each case. However, it is not enough to require the courts to consider whether the restitution order is appropriate. The court must also be satisfied that the offender will be able to comply with the order.

I shall now describe the procedures available to the Court to decide whether the offender will be able to comply with the order. First, the judge will be able to inquire into the offender's present or future ability to pay. He may also consider his financial status. In this respect, the judge may subpoena the offender to provide the requisite information on his assets. This means that subsequently, the victim may, if necessary, file for execution of the restitution order against the assets thus identified.

Another important detail, Madam Speaker, is that the judge may order that any money found on the offender at the time of his arrest be taken to satisfy the restitution order. Finally, in every case the judge must give priority to the restitution order.

Unfortunately, in some cases the offender will be either unable or will simply refuse to comply with the restitution order. The order must therefore be readily enforceable.

The Bill provides that the order is enforceable as a judgment of a superior court, either in civil or criminal proceedings. The offender may of course be able to provide a reasonable excuse for his default, and the judge may then extend the term of the restitution order.

Madam Speaker, the Government's proposals have been warmly welcomed by victims groups because they respond to a real need. I would like to quote the author to which the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) referred earlier, Mr. Robert Ménard, founder of a new association of victims of criminal offences, who also said, and I quote:

> Nevertheless, I believe the new Bill before the House is a first step towards improving the status of victims.

Madam Speaker, once again, I wish to stress the importance of this Bill and say that we in the House and in this Government should set aside political considerations and look at this Bill as objectively as we can. We all know that every day, people become victims of criminal acts.

Each day we defer the enforcement of the Bill, we prevent victims of crime from enjoying some direct results. Of course, crime will always be with us and they will still be victims, Madam Speaker, but at least this may help them to obtain some sort of compensation in certain areas. As long as there is no wonder solution which would allow totally and definitely to eradicate crime, we should applaud the steps taken in Bill C-89.

[English]

Once again, this Bill is extremely important for victims of crime in Canada. I hope that my friends in the opposition Parties agree and will work with this Government not on a partisan basis but with a Government representing the people of Canada. We have to deal with this Bill as quickly as possible because it does not address a specific part of the country or a specific group. It addresses the entire population of Canada because everyone, in one way or another, is a victim of crime.

I also want to express again my thanks to the Liberal and NDP critics who supported this Bill on second reading today.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, as I pointed out at the beginning of my remarks, everyone of us, though we do not wish it, could eventually become a victim. It is therefore reassuring and encouraging that finally a government is looking after us and not after someone else.

Mr. Robinson: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) on a point of order.

Mr. Robinson: Madam Speaker, the Member has spoken today as acting Parliamentary Secretary, and since I do not know exactly what his status is, I would like to ask the Chair or the Hon. Member what is now going on. There has been no Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice for a long time and I suggest, Madam Speaker, that the Parliamentary Secretary for today should perhaps provide some information on that really unacceptable situation about such an important matter. Why do we not yet have a Parliamentary Secretary?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I think the Hon. Member will agree with the Chair that this is not a point of order but a question which the Hon. Member could ask the Prime Minister some other time.

[English]

Mr. Robinson: Madam Speaker, I see the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) entering the Chamber. Perhaps he might explain why he has not yet had a Parliamentary Secretary appointed to himself as Minister.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair really does not see how that is a point of order. Are there any questions and comments?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have come into the House just when a point of order was being raised by my good friend, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). Modesty prevents me from indicating that this is such a popular position that the applicants are lined up and are all being considered. I am sure that before too long the vacancy will be filled.

This also gives me an opportunity to compliment the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Grisé) who has just spoken on this very important initiative. I owe a debt of gratitude to him for his work and the assistance he has given to me in fulfilment of my responsibility as Minister of Justice in this initiative. He has been particularly helpful in that he has brought a perspective from his own region and province to this initiative. I know that there is enthusiasm in the Province of Quebec. I want to preface my question to him by acknowledging his contribution in this legislation.

• (1640)

Has he had an opportunity to gauge the response in the Province of Quebec on this legislation? Has the Minister of Justice of the Province of Quebec indicated any position with respect to this legislation?

Mr. Grisé: Madam Speaker, first, I would like to thank the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) for his kind words.

As concerns the interest for Bill C-89 in Quebec, I have to emphasize the importance of the coordination and cooperation between the federal Minister of Justice and the Quebec Minister, Mr. Marx, in preparing this Bill, which cooperation the Minister may have underplayed in his own comments earlier. I believe that it is extremely important to emphasize the interest there is in this Bill in Quebec.

I recently had the opportunity to meet Mr. Marx. He asked me when this Bill would be introduced in second reading in the House and when it would come into effect. This is extremely important for Quebec. It is essential for the victims of crime that this Bill come into effect as soon as possible, and this is why, Madam Speaker, at the end of my comments—

[English]

—I was expressing my hope that opposition Parties will work with the Government to make this Bill law and help ensure that it is implemented very shortly thereafter in the provinces because it falls under provincial jurisdiction.

This is a very important measure in the Province of Quebec.

[Translation]

—Mr. Marx strongly emphasized the fact that, as there has been a federal-provincial agreement, the two Governments should do their best to have this Bill come into effect as quickly as possible.

[English]

Mr. Robinson: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understood that during the period for questions and comments there was alternation between government and Opposition Members. There has not yet been an opportunity for a question or comment from the Opposition. I would like, at some point, to have that opportunity.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I think it is unfortunate that the Hon. Member would make such a remark at this time. There is still time for questions and comments and I can assure the Hon. Member that when the time comes he will be recognized.

Mr. Fennell: Madam Speaker, I wanted to take this opportunity to mention that I got involved in Victims of Violence with Don Sullivan with whom the Hon. Member was also involved. That was way back in the early 1980s when we worked to make people aware. I just want to commend Don Sullivan for the work he did and for his dedication in helping many families of victims. He himself was the father of a child who was killed. A book was written about him by Jerry Amernic which brought his case to the attention of many people. I thought this would be a good opportunity to mention the good work done by the people who originally created Victims of Violence in Canada.

Mr. Robinson: Madam Speaker, I want to agree with the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) and note as well the work that he has done. We have worked together for many years on the issue of aid for victims of crime. Indeed, the Hon. Member for Ontario introduced a Private Members' Bill on this subject some time ago. I want to acknowledge, in addition to the contribution made by Don Sullivan, the contribution made by the Hon. Member. He has played a role in the development of this legislation.

My question to the Acting Parliamentary Secretary is with regard to a point which I raised during the course of my remarks on this legislation, that is, the great concern which was expressed by the national group, Victims of Violence—the group which was founded by Don Sullivan—with regard to the cancellation of all federal programs in Canada aimed at improving the mental health response to violent crime victims.

Why has the Government cancelled funding to these programs to assist victims of violent crimes in Canada? These people have, in some cases, been emotionally and psychologically traumatized by crime. On the one hand the Government suggests that it supports the concerns of victims of crime. Yet, the same Government has callously cut off all funding. To quote the words of Gary Rosenfeldt, the President of Victims of Violence:

> We were horrified to learn that your Ministry has cancelled all efforts at improving the mental health response to violent crime victims in this country . . . .We ask that you reconsider this issue and that efforts be made to re-establish programs to educate mental health professionals on the needs of violent crime victims.

Will the Acting Parliamentary Secretary agree to urge his Cabinet colleagues to reconsider the cancellation of this very important program and to restore funding for victims of violent crime? Will he at least agree to make the appropriate and necessary representations on this important matter?

[Translation]

Mr. Grisé: Madam Speaker, I should like to repeat again to my friend the hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) that, under Bill C-89, the Federal Government will contribute $27.2 million to provincial and territorial criminal injury compensation schemes over the next three years. Of this amount, $16.2 million will be earmarked for the crime victim compensation programm irrespective of the type of crime. But for all victims of crime, $16.2 million and a additional $8 million will be made available to the provinces and territories under a victims' assistance fund to meet the needs of all categories of victims and enhance the services and programs available.

When he rose to speak in this House, Madam Speaker, the hon. Member for Burnaby indicated that he had been the victim of a crime. I should like to say that the hon. Member for Burnaby is not alone in this House to have been victimized by a criminal act. Unfortunately, I must admit that I was myself victimized on several occasions while the owner of a business through breaking and entering.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, with this Bill which of course is not perfect, our Government is essentially trying to help the victims of criminal acts, and this is only the beginning. We shall go forward in this direction.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

• (1650)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

CANADIAN POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION COUNCIL ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador) moved that Bill C-228, an Act to provide for a Canadian Post-Secondary Education Council, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Madam Speaker, I would like to begin by recognizing the presence in the gallery of a large and encouraging delegation from the Canadian Federation of Students who are here this week in Ottawa conducting what I consider to be a very effective lobby. At the beginning of my remarks, I want to say thank you to this delegation, not only for its interest but for the very effective way in which it has conducted itself on this topic and on other topics dealing with education this week. Those students know better than anyone else the situation about which we are speaking today. Their presence here is more eloquent than any words. What they are saying by their presence is that there is a situation in this country that must be addressed. Those of us who are politicians, whether federal or provincial, had better wake up and listen. We had better look at the situation and decide what we are going to do about it. That is what we are talking about today.

These students know that across this country today only the rich will be able to get into our colleges and universities. If you are disabled and rich, you can go to university. If you are native and rich you can go to university. If you are a woman and rich you can go to university. But there are far too many people who are kept out because tuition fees are high, and federal and provincial money for post-secondary institutions is going down. Professors are escaping to the United States. Students are coming out of college with a B.A. and a debt load of $20,000. That situation is not acceptable. That is what the students are saying by their presence here today. That is the background against which we have to look at the idea we are discussing here today.

The idea is not new. The idea is to create a national advisory council on post-secondary education. It is an idea that was put forward by the AUCC, the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada. It was an idea put forward by the CAUT, the Canadian Association of University Teachers, and it was an idea supported by the Canadian Community Colleges Association and by the Canadian Federation of Students. It is an idea supported by the Canadian Teachers Federation, and it is supported by many Ministers of Education. I would like to read what Lorne Hepworth said at the national forum on post-secondary education in Saskatoon. He said he would welcome an increased role for the federal Government in post-secondary education. I quote the following from the Leader Post in Saskatchewan:

> Speaking at the National Forum on Post-Secondary Education, Hepworth endorsed what a number of groups present at the forum had earlier said they supported—the development of a national post-secondary education strategy.

There are Ministers of Education who believe in what we are speaking about today. There are businessmen who believe. The Canadian Manufacturers Association in its latest brief said that "No step is more critical in keeping Canada competitive than improving our post-secondary educational system. Canada will succeed in today's competitive world markets only if Canadians make full use of our most valuable natural resource, that is, our people. Realizing our country's full potential demands we must strengthen our universities and community colleges". In Part I of its brief it "urges that Canada establish a national strategy", not a federal or provincial strategy, for "post-secondary education", and the Canadian Manufacturers Association expresses the wishes of a lot of large and small businessmen all across this country.

It was an idea which came up at the national forum on post-secondary education in Saskatoon recently. Dr. Ronald Watts, both in his speech at the beginning and in his summary, pressed for a national strategy on post-secondary education. He urged Canada to join nations such as Japan and West Germany in treating post-secondary education as an investment in the nation's adaptability and competitiveness, not a burden on the public purse. From this perspective, the cost of supporting education in colleges and universities is not so much a problem as it is an essential part of the solution.

This idea has widespread support in the country. It is an idea whose time has come. As we move as a country into the information society, it is essential that we move on this issue. Without education we are not going to be able to compete. There is no question about that.

Our competitors are doing exactly what we are talking about today. Japan not only has an industrial strategy and economic strategy, it has an education strategy. West Germany, which is a federal state much like our own, has an economic strategy, an industrial strategy and also an education strategy. There is a commission in West Germany which involves the equivalent of the provinces in this country and the national Government in a joint effort as partners in attacking what they know is a crucial problem if they are going to compete in the world today.

There are many people who will say: "Yes, but in 1867, provincial responsibility was given to education". That is true. No one is saying that that jurisdiction should be taken away from the provinces. What we are saying, I believe, is that in numbers there is strength. If two heads are better than one, twelve or fourteen or sixteen heads are better than two. Everyone wants to preserve provincial jurisdiction. I know, coming as I do from my province, that we guard that jurisdiction jealously. In fact, in my province, not only do we have provincial jurisdiction in education but the churches still have a historic right entrenched in the Constitution. No one wants to change that. All we are saying is that the players in the game, a very important game, should come together around the table as they did in Saskatoon, and collectively come up with a national strategy for post-secondary education.

The reality, of course, is that while education is a provincial responsibility, 70 per cent of all the funds which support that education in Canada come from the federal Government. Why should it not then be at the table when national education policy is discussed? Why should teachers and students and college administrators not be at the table when national post-secondary education is discussed? That is what we are talking about here today.

I think that it is all the more necessary today that we involve business and industry in that dialogue. More and more there is a necessity to increase the association between the world of work and the world of learning. Never before was that linkage so important. As we move into the information society, it is extremely important that we have the people who are giving the jobs and the people who are doing the teaching talking together about what kind of education we need to do the jobs which are going to be available. That is what CMA is talking about. That is what the Canadian Advanced Technology Association had a conference about in Toronto recently. It called for a national education strategy and a closer dialogue between the world of work and the world of learning.

Businessmen are realizing that if they are going to have employees, they want them well educated, or we will not be able to compete. We talk about free trade, tax reform and supporting high technology. But if we do not have a labour force that is educated, not just once but continuously throughout the life of the labourer, then we will not have a competitive society. Thus the linkage between the world of work and the world of learning is far more important today than it ever was before. That is what Canada has to wake up to. That is what Canada has to do something about.

What we are saying is that all of those groups should come together. The people who are doing the hiring and the teaching, the students, the teachers, the administrators and the two levels of Government should come together. Why can they not? They did it in Saskatoon. They came together for three days. Is three days all we get? How long do we talk about economic policy? How long do we talk about industrial policy? What do we get for education? Three days. Is that what this nation will contribute to the discussion on education? If we can come together for three days, why can we not come together for three months, three years or 30 years? It is possible. That is what we are asking. That is what we are saying has to happen.

It should not stop in Saskatoon. The spirit of Saskatoon has to be kept alive. I wish to point out to my colleagues that we have advisory councils in Canada on the following topics. We have a National Advisory Council on Health. We have a National Advisory Council on Welfare. We have a National Advisory Council on Economics. We have a National Advisory Council on Small Business. We have a National Advisory Council on Mining. I could go on. The list is interminable.

Recently, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) set up his own National Advisory Council on Science and Technology. I give him full marks for that. He is a man of vision. That is something that should be done. He should call those people together. They should tell him what the policy should be in terms of science and technology. But how can one talk about a national policy on science and technology without talking about a national policy on education? How could it be done? It cannot be done. One of the essential things people are saying is that what we have to give attention to in Canada today is the teaching of science and technology. That is an essential ingredient that we have to include and give emphasis and priority to in the national curriculum. How can there be a National Advisory Council on Science and Technology, recognizing the importance of that, and there not be a national advisory council on education? It is unthinkable.

Is education any less important than mining, small business, women, economics or industrial strategy? Is it any less important than those matters? If we have national advisory councils without in any way injuring or detracting from provincial jurisdiction, why can we not have a national advisory council on post-secondary education? I do not understand that. It seems to me that that is of paramount importance.

The OECD said this to Canada. It said that the lack of educational policies for the future is striking. It pointed out that there is a need to define goals for education to fit a vision of national interest. There is an array of exceptionally active programs derived from no explicitly stated over-all national conception of the country's interests. Decisions have to be taken now concerning the destination of the Canadian school system within an ordered view of the Canadian nation.

In effect, the OECD is saying to Canada, "Get your act together. If you are going to be one of the top seven, if you are going to compete with Japan, Korea, the United States and West Germany, get your act together and do something about it". That is what this Bill calls for. It simply calls for a dialogue. It is not a threatening Bill. It does not involve child abuse or environmental deterioration. It does not deal in any way with heinous crimes. It calls for a national advisory council on post-secondary education. It does not say, "We will take over the systems". It does not say, "We will throw out the provinces". It does not say, "We will fire the Ministers of Education". It simply says, "We want to give some advice". We are not talking about a massive bureaucracy that will suddenly take over policy.

The Bill calls for a 16-member committee made up of the two levels of Government that would advise both levels of Government and that would encourage research and study education questions in Canada. None of these issues are threatening. The 500 or 600 people who came together in Saskatoon recently very clearly said, "Yes, that is a good idea.

Preserve provincial jurisdiction but let us get our act together nationally and let us consolidate our efforts". This Bill is not perfect, not by any means. It should be amended. I had hoped that we could do that in committee. The Canadian Federation of Students is saying, "We believe that there should be students on this national advisory committee". I agree with that. But the students are saying that they think there should be two students out of the 16. It need not be a 16-member committee. We could create a 20-member committee, if that is what is wanted. There is some flexibility here. There is the possibility of amendment. Yes, there should be students on the committee.

The Canadian Association of University Teachers is saying that it feels that teachers should be represented on the national advisory committee. I agree with that. I think that such a provision should be made in the Bill for that.

The Association of Universities and Colleges and the community colleges will want to have representation on the national advisory committee, and so they should. Such amendments can be put forward. What I did was to draw up a Bill which recognized the two levels of Government and provincial jurisdiction. I drew up provisions for a 16-member council that preserved provincial jurisdiction since it would give the majority of members on the national advisory committee to the provinces. They have a majority, as they should, because education is their responsibility. But there are amendments that can be made, and should be made. I hope that if we ever get the Bill to committee they will be made. These things can be done.

I see that my time is coming to a close. I simply want to say again that I believe this is an extremely important idea. I believe it is something that must be done. It is an idea whose time has come. If we are going to call Canada a democracy and if we are going to be representatives within that democracy, we have to listen to the people, to the outstanding people who came together in Saskatoon recently. I give the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) credit for doing just that. It was an initiative that I say quite candidly was not taken by my Government. However, it was taken by the Government in power.

The Secretary of State did what no other Secretary of State was able to do. He was able to call together people of stature in Canada to discuss an issue of national importance. I give him full marks for that. I would give him even more marks if we could go further than that and if we could listen to the very clear voice that came out of Saskatoon from 500 or 600 eminent people who said that it is time in Canada now to have a national focus and a national strategy for post-secondary education. That was the message. That was the call. That was the challenge coming out of Saskatoon. Any politician in Canada today worth his salt would listen to that and would have to take some action on it.

Thus I call on the Government and on my colleagues in the House to recognize the importance of this issue. Let us send this Bill to committee where we can examine it and where we can let people from all across the country say what is good and what is bad about it. Let them say what changes should be made and what kind of structure we should have. We cannot go from where we are now to where we want to be unless we have a vehicle.

There are those who say, "Let us go at these problems one by one". But which are the most important and which are the least important? Which will be put on the front-burner and which will be put on the back? I submit we can do none of those things unless we have a national vehicle. That is what we want to create here today.

I know that I have tested your patience, Madam Speaker, and I know that I have been long. Let me just conclude by saying this. We are resource-rich in Canada, but the greatest resource of all is our people, especially our young people. Are we to be one of the top five countries in the world with growing influence? Are we coming of age internationally and discovering what we are, who we are, and throwing off our sense of inferiority and competing head to head with world leaders? If we are, then it is time to make education a number one priority. We have to aim at a national strategy. I think that that is the greatest challenge facing Canada. If we fail to deal with it, it seems to me that we will be putting this nation at risk.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) made a very convincing argument, and I commend him on an excellent address to the House on a most important subject. I am glad to have the opportunity to speak on the subject of the Hon. Member's Bill. I wish to commence by giving three reasons for my address.

I am sorry that, unlike the Hon. Member, I was unable to attend the conference in Saskatoon on post-secondary education. I know that some of our Members were able to attend that conference, and I believe that they will be speaking on this Bill. I do care deeply about the future of our universities and colleges. Therefore, I welcome the opportunity to bring to the attention of Canadians some important matters that were raised at that conference. I sympathize fully with the sentiments which are underlined by the Bill. Like most who are interested in post-secondary education, I believe that it has a crucial national dimension that we must find better ways to express here in the national House because we do contribute significantly to post-secondary education. As was stated by the Hon. Member, I understand that this view was echoed by those who were in attendance at the forum, including the Hon. Roland Penner who is Chairman of the Council of Ministers of Education for Canada. Consequently, I understand why the many organizations, as well as the Members of this House have called for some type of national council on post-secondary education.

I am pleased to speak today on this motion because there is something very important to be said about the reason for which the House should sincerely consider whether now is the time to move on the Bill that the Hon. Member has presented, no matter how sympathetic we may be to its intentions.

Let me explain my concern by first commenting on the significance of the national forum and the opportunity that it has given us. This opportunity must not be allowed to slip away. For anyone who is aware of the recent history of federal-provincial relations in the area of higher education, the Government's announcement last fall of its proposal for a national forum must have seemed to have been doomed. I know that when the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) proposed such a meeting in Saskatoon, he felt that it was probably a "mission impossible". For the federal Government to suggest such a conference in this delicate field of obvious provincial jurisdiction would have been daring, but to feel or even hope that the provinces would co-sponsor it seemed to be quite out of the question.

Yet the forum happened. The Council of Ministers of Education did co-sponsor it. The Secretary of State and the provincial Ministers were able to look beyond past disagreements and find common purpose in exploring the challenges and the opportunities confronting higher education in Canada today. Moreover, they were able to agree at this forum that, if it were to make a genuine contribution to our national sense of direction for post-secondary education, it could not be dominated by Governments.

The Hon. Member made the point regarding others who should be involved in this discussion. Rather, it would have to bring together people with all types of interest and point of view on a large dimension. Together the Governments created the national forum committee and gave it their trust and support. Through the leadership of Brian Segal, President of Ryerson Polytechnic, the committee proved equal to the task and organized what was by all accounts a remarkable, effective event which confronted all the major issues in this complex field.

Earlier this week when Brian Segal spoke to the Standing Committee on Secretary of State, he stated that the first achievement of the forum was to demonstrate that federal and provincial Governments can work together in partnership on an issue of such national importance.

The challenge now facing the Secretary of State and the Council of Ministers of Education is to build on the spirit of co-operation and turn it into concrete action that will benefit higher education in a tangible manner. The Ministers will meet early in 1988 to tackle the challenge. We in this House should assist them in any way that we can for their success is crucial to Canada's future.

One way in which we can help them is by refraining from imposing our will on the federal-provincial relationship. We should not impose mechanisms which may not be appropriate or helpful at this time. That does not mean that this one would not be helpful, and I am referring to the national council which is proposed. While I have already stated that it is admirable in its intentions, this may not be the time for the House to endorse it. Other Members may also wish to give advice on this. It may complicate sensitive discussions that we were very pleased got off the ground.

To return for a moment to the achievements of the forum, the event clearly made a major contribution to raising public awareness and interest in the key issues of post-secondary education in this country. Through the Standing Committee on Secretary of State the House has begun to review this field and it is listening to Dr. Segal. His view of the situation was that creating a new structure at this time would do nothing to achieve the necessary federal-provincial partnership. On the contrary, he suggested that it is important to proceed step by step in developing co-operation.

It would be an entirely appropriate positive step were the standing committee to consider some of the issues raised by this Bill today. We need full public discussion on all aspects of higher education. We in the House can help to emphasize that national perspective. Indeed, it might be appropriate for the committee to hear provincial views on some of those matters. I do not think it would be helpful to federal-provincial relations, or to post-secondary education, for us to endorse this Bill immediately, no matter how well intentioned I believe it to be.

I thank you, Madam Speaker, for this chance to comment on the future of post-secondary education in this country. This level of education becomes increasingly important if Canada is to be fully competitive in the world and realize its potential for social, cultural, and scientific development. We owe it to our country to give every possible support to developments which can encourage the two orders of Government to co-operate more closely, an achievement that the Government has fostered a great deal in the last few years.

In the Throne Speech last fall the Government committed itself to promoting with the provinces and the territories a system of post-secondary education based on the principles of excellence and equality of opportunity. The national forum has taken an important step toward that laudable goal, but it is only a beginning. All of us must help to maintain the momentum which was established at the Saskatoon Conference.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, you will recognize that this afternoon we are dealing with a topic which you and I had an opportunity to discuss in the past. It is an issue that was raised in the New Democratic task force on youth. In that forum it was a reflection of the considered view of students, faculty, administrators, and universities that there should be some kind of structure to establish policies and goals for post-secondary education.

It is because I am so favourably disposed toward the Bill that I want to congratulate my colleague for having brought it before the House. I congratulate him as well for the excellent way in which he has presented his case. He should have been convincing to all Members of the House. His arguments were to the point, his arguments reflected the reality, and his arguments should have determined an action on the part of the Government to respond in a positive way.

Yesterday I was somewhat saddened, when I asked the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) whether the Government would support this Bill to find that there was a good deal of equivocation. Ultimately we find that the Government, it appears, will oppose this Private Member's Bill. I hope it will reconsider.

In addition to congratulations for Hon. Members from both sides of the House, there has been a good deal of self-congratulation over the accomplishments of the national post-secondary forum held in Saskatoon. I must confess that I was not one of those who considered it the best way to approach the issue of post-secondary education. At the time when the Secretary of State made his announcement, I predicted that this forum would treat nothing that had not already been treated before and would not treat anything about which there had not already arisen a consensus, not only in the universities but among all those who have had an opportunity to consider the problems in post-secondary education in Canada and the need to have some national policy direction in respect of it.

I would have to admit in retrospect, as one of those who attended the conference, that it was an exciting event as forums go. It was well organized and generated a degree of focus for the public in respect of post-secondary education and the contribution of colleges and universities to Canada, socially, economically, and otherwise.

One interesting thing about the forum is that there was, as I had predicted, a strong consensus on any number of issues and how those issues should be addressed. Perhaps the most important of these issues, on which virtually unanimous agreement was reached, which was expressed by the rapporteurs from all the workshops, was the need for some kind of national structure to advise Governments on policies and goals for post-secondary education. Therefore, it was a considerable shock to me to find the Chairman of the forum subsequently summarizing the results of those deliberations by equivocating about, if not rejecting, the notion of a national advisory council on post-secondary education.

Subsequently in a press conference the Secretary of State and the Chairman of the conference both seemed quite unequivocally at that time to reject the notion. We heard pretty much then, as we are hearing now, some proposal that we would take the variety of problems which exist and have been identified in post-secondary education and treat them one by one through the Council of Ministers of Education.

In that respect I share the point of view of the author of this legislation that that is insufficient, just as does everyone else. As was suggested earlier, it was not just a question of those involved in Canada having identified that there is something wrong. The OECD identified that something was wrong quite some time ago. If Canadians do not recognize that there is something wrong by now, then they have their eyes closed. Most Canadians who have looked at the problem know how it must be addressed. Indeed, the Government seems to be moving more closely to an appropriate response to the great plea across the country that something be done.

I am sure that no one who supports the proposal in principle for a national advisory council on post-secondary education would consider the Bill before us as adequate in any respect. However, it addresses the principle. The author has identified a number of groups that I would have assumed would have been included in any recommendations on who should serve on such a national advisory council. Of course all the provinces should be represented, but certainly it is also clear that those who serve the colleges and universities, and those who benefit from those institutions, should be represented in respect of the nature and quality of education. As well, as was mentioned earlier, there is a great deal of significance in the mission of the university in respect of research and development and industrial growth. It is elementary that students should be represented, that faculty should be represented, that the Government should be represented, that labour should be represented, and that business and industry should be represented somehow.

It was kind of interesting that in the committee meeting the other day we were told that the forum was so effective that we might have another forum a year and a half from now. My God, it was imagined that we might have a forum practically every month. I began to recognize that what was coming out of these utterances by Mr. Segal was not an avoidance but a merging with the proposal before us. If a forum every year or every half a year is appropriate and can bring all these people together, surely it is possible to have something less episodic and something more permanent and more useful—a group which would consist of people who are better informed. It would be better to have something like an advisory council—people of the same representative group as exists in the forum—than to have repeated forums.

We can talk all we want about jurisdictional disputes, but we can no longer have the post-secondary system, which is to benefit the country and is necessary for our destiny, being laid aside forever on the basis of the excuse that nothing can be done because we are in a quarrel with the provinces or because the provinces are jealous of their jurisdiction. It has nothing to do with jurisdiction. We should use our imagination and come up with something that would accomplish what needs to be accomplished.

If the President of the United States can have a commission which has led to considerable reform of post-secondary education in that country without entering into the area of jurisdictional disputes, then Canada ought to be able to do it as well, and we should do it now.

There is no difference in my mind between voting on second reading of this Bill, allowing it to go to committee, and defeating it, and having the same matter come before the committee in another fashion.

It is necessary for the Government to show a commitment to this great necessity and to do it now, before it is too late. We can no longer compromise the future of the country, of our students, of our industry, and of our destiny by failing to address the needs of post-secondary education.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Rompkey that Bill C-228, an Act to provide for a Canadian Post-Secondary Education Council, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): If the Hon. Member would allow me, with no hard feelings, I would like to alternate as usual and recognize his colleague from the Opposition. The Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins).

[English]

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Madam Speaker, I want to rise today to speak on this Bill which provides for a Canadian post-secondary educational council. I want to congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey), for introducing this Bill. He has a good background in educational experience himself and he did present this Bill very effectively to the House. He is addressing an issue that is all important to the future of Canada today.

I want to say to the others who have spoken that I appreciate the tone of this debate. They have taken the time to compliment the Member in bringing his Bill forward and put forth their own cases most effectively. As a person who had the opportunity in my earlier years to teach all grades from Grade 1 to Grade 13 with several years spent both at the elementary and secondary level, I think that the time is long overdue when some leadership should take place in a field such as this at the national level.

As we all know, education is very much a provincial matter. It is in the interest of all Canadians, no matter where they live in Canada, that education be tackled both on behalf of the young but also on behalf of those who are upwards to middle age and are still wage earners in the families of this country. Modern science, technology and developments are such that people not only have to be trained when they are young but also as time goes on. That is why it is very important to have an educational council such as the one recommended in this Bill.

If we set up such a council it is important that we have serving on that council people with vision, foresight and some good basic intelligence who are interested in the future of Canada and its people. It cannot become a board for hangers-on wanting political plums. I note that my hon. colleague from Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador has looked after that part very early in the stages of this Bill. I note too that there is no remuneration for the people who sit on the council. In setting up a council such as the one proposed, you will get the kind of dedication, foresight and in-depth interest required to tackle a problem that is really a human oriented one and an economic one.

Given the structure of our Canadian Constitution, Madam Speaker, it is extremely important that you have both regional, provincial and territorial representation on that council as well as representation at the national level in this country. The Hon. Member in his Bill has provided for 10 appointees from the provinces of Canada and appointees from the federal Government. I would suggest to him—I know he is well inclined to these things—that that might even be brought a little further to include the territories specifically in Canada.

I think the nuts and bolts of this whole thing are well laid out in the suggestion that a national forum on education be created to establish national goals and objectives for education as a resource of the nation—note, as a resource of the nation—to oversee the development of policy and mechanisms, to implement these goals and objectives and to consult and co-operate with provincial jurisdictions in order to seek to achieve the following objectives: (a) participation of the community at large, including Government, business, labour and the academic community; (b) curriculum development.

If there is anything more crucial that this council would deal with, I would think it would be the making of recommendations and curriculum development at the youth level and right across the spectrum when you are retraining people later in life. It has to include the definition of entrepreneurial and technological understanding, the necessity of excellence, and the requirement for continuing education, which I have mentioned a couple of times thus far. Then it has to have structures for delivery, commencing with teacher training and retraining.

You can have the greatest policies on earth and the greatest plans and recommendations—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please.

• (1740)

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, the Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne) with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

[Translation]

And being returned:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I have the honour to inform the House that when the House went up to the Senate Chamber, the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following Bills:

> Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation therto—Chapter No. 41.
> Bill C-53, an Act to amend the Supreme Court Act and to amend various other Acts in consequence thereof—Chapter No. 41.
> Bill S-10, an Act to revive Yellowknife Electric Ltd. and to provide for its continuance under the Canada Business Corporations Act.

Mr. Malépart: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) on a point of order.

Mr. Malépart: Madam Speaker, could we know which bills have received Royal Assent? To reassure people, I would like to know whether Bill C-22 is among them.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): As I told the House when the message was received, Bill C-22 and C-53 have received Royal Assent.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

TRADE—UNITED STATES EXPORT ENHANCEMENT PROGRAM—REPORTED SALE OF WHEAT TO ALGERIA/ POSITION OF UNITED STATES ADMINISTRATION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, on November 2, I put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) concerning the Government's position with regard to the United States export enhancement program. You will recall that program provides one bushel of wheat out of government stockpiles for every three bushels sold through private sales to consumer countries around the world. This program has had a devastating impact on Canadian producers in that it has driven down the international price of wheat and other grains. All this comes on top of the U.S. Farm Bill which also affects the world price of wheat. Those two programs have had a devastating impact on the Canadian grain industry and that is why we hope the Government of Canada will provide a special grain program this year worth at least $1.6 billion. The damage to Canadian farmers is worse than that and more is needed, but that is another subject.

• (1750)

The free trade agreement initialled by our Government on October 3 said that the U.S. would take Canada's needs and concerns into account when using its Export Enhancement Program and other farm commodity export subsidy programs. Clearly the U.S. is abrogating that part of the treaty. The Minister acknowledged that in this House on several occasions. He said he would take up the matter with Secretary Shultz. He did so apparently in late October. Obviously Mr. Shultz paid no attention whatsoever because the Minister hardly even commented on what Mr. Shultz had to say.

Even worse than that, at just about the same time a Reuters report of October 20 indicated that the U.S. Secretary of Agriculture said that the U.S. will continue its policy of subsidizing farm exports in order to regain lost markets until there is a global agreement to end such subsidies. Clearly this statement, almost three weeks after the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement was initialled, indicates that the U.S. is not backing off and will continue to use this program against us in violation of the agreement. Obviously the U.S. is not treating Canada with any consideration at all. This is very harmful and makes people question whether the free trade agreement is worth the paper it is written on.

In addition, the continued use by the U.S. of its Export Enhancement Program with customers like Algeria, Saudi Arabia, Russia, China, India, and others, is not only driving down the price of grain for our producers, it is stealing away valuable Canadian markets and it should be stopped. If the Americans really believe in that free trade agreement, then it should stop this harassment of Canadian grain producers in our traditional grain markets and stop hurting Canadian cash crop producers.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for his question as it allows the Government of Canada to clear up a number of misconceptions which, quite frankly, have been created by Members opposite.

I should like to make two points in particular. First, the Export Enhancement Program is not new. Second, while we are dead set against the Americans using this program, it is not a violation of the free trade agreement signed between Canada and the U.S.

The Export Enhancement Program, or EEP, has, through its predecessor, the Bonus Incentive Commodity Export Program, or BICEP, been a part of American agriculture policy since it was first introduced in May of 1985. Under the program, the U.S. targets a market it intends to sell into and offers quantities of a commodity at cut rate prices. In this case we are talking 300,000 tonnes of durum wheat being offered to Algeria under the EEP.

Canada is against this provision of the U.S. Farm Bill. We have been voicing our opposition to it since it was first introduced as BICEP. We have not been dissuaded from voicing our opposition to and distaste of a measure which inflames trade distortions in grains and oilseeds. We have complained against the EEP in the same way we have complained about similar policies of the European community. However, our complaining will not stop this practice. Consensus at GATT to do away with such trade distorting measures is where real change will occur. We are confident that this consensus is growing and change will occur.

I should also like to point out that, in the face of the EEP and other such policies of other countries, Canada has still increased sales and market share. For example, according to the International Wheat Council, Canada has shown the largest increase in market share of all the major wheat exporters. The IWC reported earlier this year that the largest net increase among wheat exporters over the last seven years was recorded by Canada, whose share rose from 18.1 per cent to 23.9 per cent.

When it comes to the free trade agreement signed between Canada and the U.S. just recently, our two nations are showing to the world just how barriers to trade can be lowered, if not reduced entirely. When the two countries which are responsible for the largest flow of two-way trade in the world can work out a deal of this magnitude, think of the example we have provided and the impetus we have given to the other signatories to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade to accomplish the same thing on a multilateral basis.

The Americans have placed the EEP on the table at GATT. Other nations have placed similar trade distorting programs on the table, too. A consensus is forming that all nations must break down the barriers and adhere to fairer trading rules. Canada will not rest until such policies as the Export Enhancement Program are done away with.

IMMIGRATION—AMNESTY FOR REFUGEE CLAIMANTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION/STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO CHAIRMAN-DESIGNATE OF REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Madam Speaker, a few weeks ago I asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) if a statement made by the chairman designate of the new immigration and refugee board in a national paper was true. That statement, as seen on the front page, was that the Government had every intention of granting amnesty to the 40,000 backlogged refugee cases already in Canada. The Minister's reply clearly pointed out that there is "absolutely no question of giving amnesty to anybody". It is my belief that we must be able to maintain control of our borders.

The reason I requested an opportunity to speak further is that the topic of abuse of our refugee policy has been a major issue in my riding of Fraser Valley East and in other areas of Canada throughout the year. Canadians are well known internationally for their humanitarian manner, but even our patience has been tried by obvious abuses of this quality.

When the boatload of Sikhs landed in Nova Scotia late in July, I received several hundred phone calls and many petitions telling the Government to tighten our laws. When this article came out in the paper in October, the same people were asking themselves why the Government would tighten the laws while at the same time giving amnesty to all those already here. I have spoken to the Ministers responsible for immigration several times and knew that there could not be any truth to the allegations we were reading in the papers.

Bills C-55 and C-84 have been passed by this House. Bill C-55 was passed on October 21 and C-84 earlier, on September 14. These two pieces of legislation will guarantee that bogus refugees, or those people who try to make money from smuggling human cargo by offering passage to Canada, will be dealt with by law.

As I have already said, we want to make sure that we maintain control of our borders and do not just throw open the doors for every person claiming refugee status. Many of the supposed refugee claimants come to Canada strictly for economic reasons and should not be considered bona fide refugees. When they abuse the system, fewer genuine claimants can come here.

The Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) recently tabled the immigration levels for 1988. Government assisted refugees will be up 1,000 to 13,000 and this will target refugees from Latin America, up by 200; eastern Europe, up by 300; and West Asia/the Middle East, up by 900. As well, there is an estimate of 6,000 privately sponsored refugees but there is not a limit for this group and we encourage the voluntary sector to sponsor such refugees.

The Government has, I believe, been working very responsibly to get a handle on the entire scheme of immigration, but particularly on refugees. Earlier this year the media was reporting that we were granting amnesty to refugees. This was all so misleading because an administrative, case-by-case review of each of the backlog claims was being done.

Changes that have been made throughout the year by the Government, including introducing and passing Bills C-55 and C-84, have increased Canada's ability to help genuine refugees and will continue to help deter the abuses of our system. I urge the other House to get on with the passage of these two Bills.

It is unfortunate that statements such as that made by the chairman designate of the review board led Canadians to false assumptions, but as the Minister said in reply to my supplementary question, this board will be independent and is, therefore, entitled to make its own responses separate from the Government.

In closing, I would like to thank the Minister for his forthright reply to my question and to reiterate what he said on October 29 that "there is absolutely no question of giving amnesty to anybody". The Government is aware that we must be able to maintain the control at our borders.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to expand upon the reply of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) to the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher) on October 29 of this year. I would like to commend the Member for Fraser Valley East for his interest in the subject of immigration.

The Minister has clearly stated that there will be no amnesty for refugee claimants caught up in the current backlog. I am pleased to hear from the Member tonight that he has expressed that position also.

The idea of periodic amnesty destroys the very concept of an orderly immigration program. We are not saying to the world's would-be migrants, including refugees, that Canada does not take its own law seriously. We are not saying to these people that if they reach these shores, they will automatically be accepted as residents after spending a year or so in a processing backlog. Quite the contrary, we are saying that order and fairness will be applied to all persons seeking admission to this country. We are saying that refugee claimants, and anyone else for that matter, will have their cases determined on their merits, and that there will be no advantage granted to any person who misrepresents their true intentions.

The Government's intentions have already been expressed in Bill C-55 and Bill C-84 which have recently been passed in this House. At the moment we are continuing to process the refugee claimants case-loads efficiently and effectively. By early October 1987, the Refugee Status Advisory Committee had dealt with nearly 6,700 claims and the Immigration Appeal Board had dealt with nearly 900 claimants. Efforts to improve productivity are ongoing and commission officials expect to increase the number of final refugee claim decisions.

Furthermore, Hon. Members should recall that Bill C-55 contained transitional provisions by which the remaining case load under the old process could be dealt with upon proclamation of the new law. There may continue to be speculation about the manner in which immigration matters should be resolved but the Government's intentions are already recorded in the two Bills which have passed this Parliament.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE—ALLEGED INFILTRATION OF LABOUR UNIONS/ALLEGATION OF INTERFERENCE IN LEGAL PROSECUTION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, on September 24 last I addressed a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) concerning very serious allegations about the abuse of the sweeping powers of Canada's security service, CSIS. The allegations with respect to abuse of those powers which were granted by Parliament in 1984, following a very vigorous debate, are very serious indeed. There is clear evidence that CSIS in its fundamental inability to distinguish between subversion and dissent has in fact massively violated the fundamental civil liberties and privacy of many, many Canadians.

Indeed, I have produced documentary evidence in this House demonstrating clearly that CSIS had penetrated, and infiltrated democratic organizations in Canada including the labour movement, the peace movement and legal political parties. Canadians remember all too well the litany of horrors of illegality and violations of civil liberties by the RCMP security service, particularly in the 1970s, as revealed by the Macdonald Commission, and the institutional contempt for the law which it displayed at that time. It was precisely because of that that Parliament decided to create a new civilian security service. At the time we in the New Democratic Party warned that the mandate of the new service was so sweeping, so dangerously broad, as to permit very grave abuses of the civil liberties of Canadians. The Conservative Party when it was in opposition in 1984, joined in those criticisms. I remember well at the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs and in the House Conservative after Conservative standing and attacking the CSIS legislation as being far too broad and dangerous. They joined in my call for parliamentary oversight of the actions of CSIS.

• (1810)

But, Madam Speaker, things have changed. The Conservatives have now been the Government for three years. Even if, when in opposition, they vividly condemned the CSIS, since they came to power they did nothing to change this dangerous legislation, they did not instruct the Canadian Security Intelligence Agency not to target the union movement in Quebec for example. We know very well that the CSIS infiltrated the CSN as well as the CEQ. We know full well that a delator, an informer, Mr. Marc Boivin, encouraged other members of the CSN to commit illegal acts, violent acts against property.

[English]

We have seen the abuses. Yet, the Conservative Government stands idly by while CSIS attacks the fundamental civil liberties of Canadians, Canadians who are active in the peace movement and the labour movement. It attacks those who have chosen to join a political party which may not be popular and which may be small but which, nevertheless, is legal. Surely, the test of our commitment to civil liberties is our commitment not to harass, to intimidate and to infiltrate those small unpopular political parties, such as the Communist Party of Canada, le Parti communiste du Québec, the Communist Party of Canada, Marxist-Leninist.

We have a security service which is out of control, which in itself constitutes a serious threat to the security of Canadians. I call upon the Minister to make public the report of the Osbaldeston committee which he has appointed. I call on the Minister to assure the House that CSIS will stop its targeting of legal dissent and stop its sweeping investigations of the Sikh community, tarring the name of a community which is by and large law-abiding and upstanding.

I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary in responding today will make a commitment to the House and to Canadians to a public report by the Osbaldeston committee to bring forward at a very early date amendments to the CSIS legislation to finally bringing under control a security agency which is clearly dangerously out of control.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, it has been alleged in the House and the media that the Canadian Security Intelligence Service has infiltrated labour organizations. I want to assure the House that labour unions are not investigated by the service simply because they are labour unions.

Hon. Members should appreciate that organizations or individuals may be the subject of an investigation by the service only if they are suspected on reasonable grounds of being involved in activities constituting a threat to the security of Canada under Section 2 of the CSIS Act. Specifically, in this regard the service can investigate to the extent strictly necessary, and I quote:

> Espionage or sabotage that is against Canada or is detrimental to the interests of Canada or activities directed toward or in support of this espionage or sabotage;
> Foreign influenced activities within or relating to Canada that are detrimental to the interests of Canada and, are clandestine or deceptive or involve a threat to any person;
> Activities within or relating to Canada directed toward or in support of the threat or use of acts of serious violence against persons or property for the purpose of achieving a political objective within Canada or a foreign state; and
> Activities directed toward undermining by covert unlawful acts or directed toward or intended ultimately to lead to the destruction or overthrow by violence of, the constitutionally established system of Government in Canada.

• (1815)

Activities that constitute lawful advocacy, protest or dissent may not be investigated unless those activities are carried on in conjunction with the activities that I have mentioned.

Members should note that the definition of "threats to the security of Canada" does not include labour unions or the legitimate activities of the labour movement.

Members can be confident that any investigation initiated by CSIS has not only been examined to ensure that it falls within the mandate established by this House, but has been subject to careful scrutiny to determine the appropriate level of investigation that appears to be required.

Members should also note that there are a number of review mechanisms established by the CSIS Act which are external to the service. Within the ministry of the Solicitor General there is the Office of the Inspector General. Part of his responsibility is to monitor the compliance by the service with the Act, its operational policies, and to review the operational activities of the service. This is being done on a continuous basis and nothing in the way of information held by the service in relation to its duties and functions can be withheld from the Inspector General save confidences of the Queen's Privy Council of Canada.

At this point I would like to add that the Solicitor General has asked the Inspector General to look into the allegations relative to the labour unions. The Security Intelligence Review Committee has also requested that the Inspector General undertake a similar investigation on its behalf.

I am sure that Members are aware that the CSIS Act established an independent Security Intelligence Review Committee made up of Privy Councillors. Its responsibilities are to review the operational activities of CSIS, and to ensure that the service is carrying out its duties and functions according to law and in compliance with all directions issued by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher). It reports annually to Parliament.

Members should also note that the review committee has authority under Section 41 of the CSIS Act to investigate complaints made by individuals with respect to any "act or thing done by the service". Therefore, union officials have a specific channel provided by the legislation to raise the types of concerns that have been raised recently.

In summary, I would like to remind the House that there are extensive safeguards in place under the Act to detect abuses of the type Members are concerned about and to ensure that they are brought to light. I would encourage Members to take confidence in these provisions and to let the Act work in the manner that it was intended.

Mr. Robinson: Same Liberal hogwash.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 10 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.18 p.m.

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—FISHERIES—ALLEGED GOVERNMENT MISMANAGEMENT

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont) moved:

That this House condemn the Government for its inept management of Canada's fisheries in Atlantic Canada and its lack of political will to assert Canada's rights in the Canada-France dispute and for its willingness to allow Americans to exploit its weaknesses in order to gain control over processing in the fishing industry.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to present this motion to the House pursuant to Standing Order 82(12).

This Government has been a major disappointment to our fishermen, especially, of course, inshore fishermen. Since 1984, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans has ignored the needs of our fishermen. Time and time again this Government has tried to pinch every last dollar from our fisheries programs.

Let us review this Government's record. The budget estimates give us the big picture. In 1984-85 the Department's budget was about $690 million. In the first full year under this Government, 1985-86 the budget was slashed to $620 million. In 1986-87 it was cut even further to $550 million. This, of course, is roughly the budget for the current year.

Using the 1984-85 budget as a yard stick, this Government has accumulated nearly $350 million worth of cut-backs in this Department alone. Obviously, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) does not have any fishermen in his riding. In his November 1984 Economic Statement, the Minister of Finance announced that the Government would, among other things, privatize the Fishing Vessel Insurance Plan. Had this been carried out, many fishermen in our outlying communities would not have been able to insure their boats. Little wonder our fishermen were outraged and the Government had to change its mind. Indeed, the plan was kept, but the Government has now increased the premiums so high that fishermen can get cheaper rates from private companies. The Fishing Vessel Insurance Plan is now of little benefit to our fishermen.

In February 1986 the current Minister slashed the Fishing Vessel Assistance Program which was introduced in 1942. This program helped fishermen to purchase new vessels or upgrade the quality of those they already had. The program recognized that fishermen sometimes had problems setting aside enough savings for a large investment. The Minister, of course, may argue that the provincial loan boards already provide enough assistance for fishermen, but it should not be forgotten that provincial approvals often hinge on federal assistance.

By cancelling this program, the federal Government also caved in to the United States International Trade Commission. In its tariff ruling against our fish exports, the commission ruled that the Fishing Vessel Assistance Program provided a subsidy to our fishermen and was therefore countervailable. The Minister even admitted that the American ruling was an important factor in his decision to cut this program. We know that the American commission was under heavy pressure by a New England fish lobby to kick our fishing industry out of their market. But to have our own Fisheries Minister swallow this American argument hook, line and sinker is absolutely ridiculous.

The real reason for the American protectionism is the fact that our fish stocks are in better shape than theirs. The American belief in a free-for-all fishery has led to the depletion of their stocks.

The Government seems to have two ways to deal with programs for our fishermen, either eliminate them altogether, such as was done with the Fishing Vessel Assistance Program, or weaken them enough to make them practically worthless, such as was done with the Fishing Vessel Insurance Program.

Yesterday, we discussed the Government's record on the Small Craft Harbours Program. We can hardly mention the subject of fisheries without noting the tuna incident of 1985 and Dr. Art May, the former Deputy Minister of Fisheries, who became the fall guy for that controversy. Dr. May, a great Newfoundlander, was one of the key players in establishing Canada's fisheries management system, generally recognized now as the best in the world. He is a world class scientist who was able to talk to our fishermen. It is little wonder the morale of the Department has sunk so low.

Then there was the bail-out of Bayshore Tuna when the Minister rejected the advice of his own Atlantic Bluefin Tuna Advisory Committee and gave a quota of 401 tuna to Bayshore Tuna which then sold it to Japanese vessels. Bayshore Tuna received middleman profits for doing absolutely nothing. We learned later that the lawyer for Bayshore Tuna was Mr. John Grant, a director of the Progressive Conservative Party's national executive and a Tory appointee on the Canadian Development Investment Corporation.

Then, to make matters worse, in January of this year we had the Canada-France agreement on quotas and boundaries. In order to get France to sit down to discuss the possibility of sending the St. Pierre and Miquelon boundary dispute to international arbitration, Canada agreed to give France future considerations for quotas of northern cod. The deal was hatched in the Office of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Even the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) may not have been consulted before the deal was signed. Of course, the Province of Newfoundland was completely ignored in the final negotiation. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), the regional Minister for Newfoundland was ignored. But the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans rose in the House to try to defend the indefensible. He could not.

The Minister of Transport, after forcing the Prime Minister to sign his letter of ultimatum, then became the federal Minister of Fisheries for Newfoundland and Labrador. Then the first thing the Minister of Transport did was make a video featuring himself, including a cameo appearance by the other Minister of Fisheries. The Province of Newfoundland was covered with pamphlets.

On March 5 the Minister of Transport told CBC Radio that his propaganda project would only cost $40,000. However, the newspaper reported that the video and pamphlets cost the Canadian taxpayers about $200,000. We know the Minister of Transport does not like his present job and that he would rather be in Finance, but he has ruined his chances with his splurge on these videos. He came in five times over budget. This is typical of Tory hyprocrisy. It cuts back on fishermen and spends freely on videos. To add insult to injury, the other Minister of Fisheries had to pick up half the cost of the Minister of Transport's publicity campaign.

It is hard to know who in the Conservative Government is standing up for the interests of our fishermen. Is it the Prime Minister's Office, External Affairs, the Minister of Fisheries or the Minister of Transport? Who in Cabinet is standing up for the interests of the fishermen? I do not believe we do not have anyone standing up for them.

I now want to turn to free trade in the fishery. The Prime Minister has hailed this trade deal as a cure for regional disparity. I would ask Hon. Members to remember that this is the same Prime Minister who, in 1984, said that he was not afraid to inflict prosperity on Newfoundland. The people of Atlantic Canada know differently. This Government has a poor record in keeping its promises.

The people of Prince Edward Island were very concerned about the federal Government's intention to sign a free trade deal with the United States. Their fears are now well justified. The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) went to Prince Edward Island several weeks ago where she had a disastrous road trip. She insulted the United Church of Canada and the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops. On a radio show she declared, "It is not an appropriate thing for the church to do. There is a lot of danger in a church group lining up with the Opposition Parties on economic issues". Just because some groups make independent appraisals of free trade that may coincide with that of the Opposition Parties against free trade, it does not say that they are lining up. They have the right to make their decisions on their own and should not be criticized for that. There is a great deal of danger, of course, as the Minister said, in these church groups lining up with Opposition Parties on economic issues. The Minister for International Trade does not like the message so she tries to shoot the messenger. I can tell her that it will not work in Prince Edward Island.

The Prime Minister and his Ministers have said that a free trade deal will guarantee secure access for our fish in the American market. The U.S. market is our most important market, especially for our producers in Atlantic Canada. They have been extremely worried with the growing protectionism among American industries. The threat of countervail action is a very real concern, especially for our fishing industry which has fought two countervail actions in the past three years.

In January of 1985, the American Department of Commerce slapped a 24 per cent duty on our export of dried salt codfish. The then Acting Minister of Fisheries, the Hon. Member for St. John's West, was asked if the Government was going to protect our access to that market. As reported at page 1823 of Hansard for January 30, 1985, in response to a question asked by myself, the Minister said:

> At the appropriate time, if and when it becomes necessary for influence to be exerted, the Prime Minister, because of his relationship with the President of the United States, will be able to be very effective.

Not only did this duty remain in place but, as my colleagues have pointed out, many times since then there have been many more American countervail actions. The list even includes our fresh groundfish exports and a duty of 5.8 per cent was laid on them in March of 1986. There is no doubt that the Americans consider the seasonal UI benefits for fishermen as an unfair subsidy. Under current American trade law, which was also in place for the groundfish case, the UI benefits were not defined as an unfair subsidy to our fishermen because they were available to the general public, subject to certain criteria.

Against this experience it is hardly surprising that our fishing industry wanted protection from those countervail actions. They are very expensive, time consuming and disruptive.

Has the free trade deal kept the Prime Minister's promise of secured access? Will our fishing industry be protected from future harassment? The answer is no. Even Simon Reisman has now admitted that the free trade deal does not protect us from American countervail actions.

To make matters worse, the free trade deal does not protect our fishing industry from the provisions of the omnibus trade Bill presently before the U.S. Congress. We know that the Prime Minister calls the binational review panel a great achievement. But the panel can only decide if trade laws have been fairly applied. But what if the trade law is unfair to begin with?

Let us look at one provision of the U.S. trade bill which defines an unfair subsidy. It defines it as "any advantage that would not exist but for government action". Under this definition our UI program could be interpreted as an unfair subsidy. The American fishing lobby could even launch more actions against our export. This legislation could be approved before the trade agreement takes effect on January 1, 1989.

The Minister for International Trade must have forgotten comments she made about this Bill during the free trade debate on March 16 of this year when she said, as reported at page 4178 of Hansard:

> There are hundreds of protectionist Bills awaiting action in the Congress. That mood should convince even the most skeptical Canadians that our trading relationship with the Americans is under attack. The new trade Bill would resume that attack if we are unsuccessful in our trade negotiations.

• (1020)

The Minister for International Trade obviously knew about all those protectionist bills that were in the U.S. Congress. I, like most Canadian fishermen and most Canadians, would have thought that this would have been one of the most important items to be addressed in the free trade negotiations. Those should have been negotiated before any trade deal was signed. When we know that something is taking effect in the United States that will harm our industry, whether it is fishing, agriculture, or anything else, and we are dealing with that country, obviously that would have been one of the things that should have been negotiated and covered under a trade deal. The Minister has flunked her own test.

Other Ministers should also swallow their words. On July 2 the Minister of Transport told the St. John's Board of Trade, as reported in the Evening Telegram of July 2, 1987:

> Unless we get out from under the threat of countervail and other U.S. trade remedy laws and unless there is an effective dispute resolution mechanism to bind the Americans to their commitments, a free trade agreement with the United States would not be a good deal for Canada.

That was stated by the Minister of Transport.

As mentioned earlier, Simon Reisman has admitted that the threat of countervail and other American trade remedies is still around. What has the fishing industry said about this so-called dispute settlement mechanism?

When he was commenting on the free trade, Ron Bulmer, the President of the Fisheries Council of Canada stated on the CBC radio fishermen's broadcast program:

> Our disappointment of course, is in the binding dispute mechanism. We had hoped that there would be some real progress in that area . . . we're not going to save a dime, we're not going to prevent being hassled so we didn't get what we wanted in the binding dispute mechanism?

The Minister of Transport should now realize that this is a bad deal. Of course, the Minister will argue that the removal of tariffs on higher processed fish products will create thousands of jobs in the fishing industry. I wonder if the Minister seriously thinks that Fisheries Products International will close its plants in Massachusetts to expand its plants in Newfoundland. That, Mr. Speaker, seems very unlikely. The Prime Minister is trying to pull the wool over the eyes of Canadians, and I believe that he will not succeed.

Inshore fishermen, particularly those in northeastern Newfoundland have had four poor seasons in a row. In some communities, catches have dropped by as much as 75 per cent. The fishery is the only source of income.

While the large companies with the large offshore trawlers have done extremely well, the inshore fishery has been a dismal failure. The Minister of Transport says that the price of fish has increased; the value of landings are up. He ignores the problems of the inshore fishery. Since 1984, in zone 2J3KL, the inshore catches have dropped from 96,000 tonnes to 71,000 tonnes. In 1987, the Government even cut the total allowable catch by 10,000 tonnes. But things have only become worse. The Government has set up a task force, but it must show a real commitment to the inshore fishery.

Another issue is foreign overfishing off Canada's East Coast. Since the imposition of the 200-mile limit in 1977, the foreign fishing effort in Canada's waters has been gradually replaced by our domestic vessels. For instance, the total allocations to foreigners of Canadian managed stocks have declined from approximately 600,000 tonnes in 1977 to 280,000 tonnes in 1985.

Those allocations are intended to prevent overfishing of transboundary stocks which straddle the 200-mile limit. The Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Organization (NAFO), composed of 12 countries including Canada, allocates those stocks to its member countries. However, the quotas set by NAFO depend entirely on voluntarily compliance of its member nations. Given the increasing value of fish products, those countries have been severely overfishing.

The Department of Fisheries and Oceans estimate that NAFO members, excluding Canada, have caught twice the allowable catch, 68,690 tonnes, set by NAFO. I wish to point out that, for every 1,000 tonnes of groundfish overfishing by foreign vessels, it is estimated that more than $1 million worth of landings is lost to Canadian fishermen. Once processed, that amount of fish equates to full-time, year-round employment for approximately 100 plant workers on shore.

This problem is compounded by the fact that several countries, for example, the United States, Mexico, and South Korea, are fishing those transboundary stocks, but they are not members of NAFO. Of particular concern is transboundary stocks in the area known as the nose and tail of the Grand Banks, located just outside the 200-mile limit. This is very serious, because those stocks cross those boundaries, and while they are sometimes outside the 200-mile zone, they also come into the Canadian waters. Any overfishing outside the 200-mile zone is very serious, especially in the nose and tail of the Grand Banks. The Minister knows this, and I know that he understands this fully and well.

In this case, I think that we have all tried to get those countries to manage the stocks outside the 200-mile zone within the FO.1. This has also fallen on deaf ears, and I think that action must be taken either through negotiation or by unilaterally declaring that the nose and tail of the Grand Banks should fall within Canada's management jurisdiction. This measure would have the unanimous support of the entire fishing industry.

I know that you are signalling to me, Mr. Speaker, that I only have a minute left. I have many things that I would like to cover. One of the issues that is very important is the sealing problem in Atlantic Canada. I brought this up myself not too long ago with several members of the Canada-European Parliamentary Conference in Banff. France wants more fish, and the European Economic Community wants more fish. They are very ones that bowed to the pressures and curtailed the seal hunt. I know that the Minister and most of us on this side of the House agree that something must be done, but today I would have to call upon the Government to do something constructive, certainly with a grey seal cull.

The proliferation of grey seals has become one of the major problems in our Atlantic fishery. The increasing population has been confirmed by scientific surveys. The grey seals are consuming more fish and damaging more gear. They also cause widespread sealworm infestation in certain groundfish species. For fish processors, this entails substantial costs because of lower valued products and the additional outlays for more personnel and equipment. The entire fishing industry has called for control measures. For instance, an annual cull conducted during the breeding season in the major breeding sites, such as Sable Island.

We heard this when the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans went to Atlantic Canada. Many people came before us and expressed their total dismay at what was taking place. Yet, we are still waiting. I know that we have had the Malouf report, but there has been no great action on that. Given the international aspect, this issue must be handled carefully. A cull of the grey seals has unanimous support of the entire fishing industry.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I notice that the Member has not completed. Since it is the Hon. Member's motion, would the House be agreeable to giving him two more minutes to complete?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Henderson: Of course, action on the East Coast would create an expectation to deal with the problem of harbour seals on the Pacific coast. With respect to the latter, the Minister has delayed any decision pending further research. He has decided that wider public support would be necessary before any action is taken.

I know that my time has expired, Mr. Speaker. I did not get an opportunity to discuss some of the issues that are very inflammatory today and a great problem to our fishing industry, certainly on the protectionist side and the Canada-France agreement. I know that other Members will be commenting on that later today.

In closing, I believe that more action and thought has to go into our fishery. It is one of the most important industries to Atlantic Canada and to British Columbia. We certainly need all the support that we can receive. We need clear direction from the Minister and from the Government. I find that this direction is not taking place.

Mr. Comeau: Mr. Speaker, in his concluding comments the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) was asking for direction. During the course of his speech he heaped quite a bit of praise on the former Deputy Minister, Dr. Art May.

I recall hearing Dr. Art May some months ago noting on national television that the Government could no longer treat the inshore fishery as a social fishery, that the future of the traditional inshore fishery was gone, and that there was simply no way that we could continue supporting it. Obviously his solution might have been what was brought forth in 1983, that is, going the way of large offshore companies.

Does the Hon. Member support Dr. Art May's opinion of the future of the inshore fishery and, if so, would it also be the opinion of the Liberal Party of Canada?

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to comment on the Hon. Member's question. I did not hear the remarks of Dr. May as quoted by the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Mr. Comeau). However, Dr. May has certainly been one of the leading scientists when it comes to putting fisheries management tools in place. As I said in my speech, Canada is recognized as having one of the best managed fisheries probably in the world.

Having said that, I would be pleased to outline the position of the Liberal Party on the inshore fishery. The inshore fishery, with proper management, is certainly a very profitable fishery. If it is maintained, and if management principles are maintained, we all know that it is cheaper cost-wise to allow fish to swim close to shore to be caught near shore than it is to go long distances in vessels to catch them.

It is a matter of allowing the stocks to rebuild. This was one area of fisheries management in which the former Government, under Dr. May's advice, had been very strict. I am sure there are certain areas that we have to support in the inshore fishery.

I mentioned the northwestern coast of Newfoundland and fishing zone 2J3KL where stocks have not recovered to the point where they are economically feasible to catch and fishermen are not getting their fair share of the inshore fishcatches. I personally believe that these stocks should be allowed to rebuild and that there should not be any future allocations to the offshore until the inshore is fully protected.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the Hon. Member because I know that he is one of the greatest experts we have in the House on at least saltwater fishing matters. When it comes to freshwater fishing, he is a little off base, but I will stay away from that today.

Looking not at immediate fishing problems but 50 years ahead, what does the Hon. Member foresee as the make-up of our fishing industry then? Does he think that the inshore fishery will have disappeared by that time one way or another, or does he think it will still be with us? Will we still be hunting fish at all? Will not fish farming and aquaculture have taken over by then as a much more efficient and effective way of acquiring fish?

What policies should we be pursuing as Canadians, not necessarily for today, tomorrow, or five years down the road, but for 50 years down the road?

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) for posing his question because it is very important.

I do not have a crystal ball; I guess none of us in the House have a crystal ball to project 50 years down the road. However, I maintain that we will still have an inshore fishery provided that we manage it properly. We cannot allow larger and larger vessel allocations to the offshore at the expense of the inshore.

It is interesting that the Hon. Member raised aquaculture, a very important subject. Our committee travelled to Norway and to Scotland, and I think the whole committee would agree that there have been some tremendous advancements in fish farming in Norway and in Scotland, on the Shetland Islands. This is not only in salmon and trout, the salmonid species, but also in cod fish and halibut. Those advances are taking place; there is no question about that.

I believe that we should certainly look at aquaculture in a positive way. I think we can benefit because the consumption of fish for the last number of years has been on the increase. People have been looking more to fish as a better source of protein than they used to do. I believe that aquaculture and the commercial fishery can work hand in hand. I still believe that in the long term, nature will provide a cheaper resource, if properly managed, than fish farming. However, the caveat is always there, that we have strict management controls and strict enforcement. We cannot allow the rape of our fish stocks that has gone on for many years by foreigners. We cannot catch fish twice; any fisherman will tell us that. If we can instill in the minds of our fish managers and of the general public, including fishermen themselves, that it is very important to manage our fish stocks, we will always have an inshore fishery—I certainly believe that we will always have an offshore fishery. That can work in conjunction and in harmony with fish farming as well.

It is a little different in Norway. The Atlantic salmon stocks, the wild stocks in Norway, have been seriously depleted out and virtually wiped out. It just does not have a wild Atlantic salmon fishery any more, so it does not have any problem with its technology affecting the natural stocks. This must be a concern when we pursue aquaculture, especially on the West Coast where we have a very lucrative natural fishery. When we start to farm fish in enclosed areas, we must be very careful that we do not develop some disease which would affect the natural stocks. However, I still believe that with proper management both in wild stocks and in aquaculture we can work in harmony and develop a tremendous fishing industry in the country. We must make up our minds to do it and to do it ourselves.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a very short question, the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud).

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, in the course of his speech the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) spoke briefly about the free trade deal. He also talked about the fish resources or the stocks we have. We know that in Atlantic Canada some stocks are controlled by companies in that they have quotas.

What provisions are there in the trade deal to prevent foreign interests or American interests from acquiring Canadian companies and thereby acquiring a certain control of our fish stocks? Is there any protection against that?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) on a short answer.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, as I see the free trade agreement, we can have foreign investment of up to $50 million which will be really uncontrolled or unregulated. There is no question that under the free trade deal at least 48 per cent or 49 per cent of the shares of National Sea Products or Fisheries Products International could be purchased by foreign investors. Probably all the shares could be purchased.

If the Minister is to speak to my motion today, hopefully he will address the subject of whether or not enterprise allocations—because it is actually government policy or it has been in the past as there is no legislation of which I am aware—must remain majority controlled in Canadian hands. I believe that is correct. That would mean that at least 51 per cent would have to remain under that allocation. I can see other problems created with free trade as far as our processing industry is concerned in the buying of and losing control over our Canadian processing industry.

• (1040)

As far as protection through free trade as far as the omnibus trade bills now before Congress is concerned, we have no protection. The dispute settlement mechanism, as I mentioned, can only apply to existing or future Canadian or American laws. Obviously under the free trade deal we are bound by GATT decisions, as I understand it.

In closing, let me quote from an article quoting what Mr. Bruce Buchanan said.

> According to B.C. fisheries council chairman, Bruce Buchanan, the free trade deal limits Canada's options to fight the lifting of restrictions by GATT.
> He said the agreement forbids Canada from refusing to follow a GATT ruling.

He is looking at that on page 4 of the free trade agreement document which says that all existing quantitative restrictions will be eliminated immediately or by an agreed timetable. Both parties have agreed they will not maintain or introduce import or export restrictions except in accordance with GATT or as modified by the agreement.

Under that, we have no protection against any American trade law. We are not exempt from anything. We have the same problems now as we had before the trade deal, but with further restrictions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon).

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am especially pleased to have an opportunity to respond to this motion today. This week is the second anniversary of my appointment, which I consider to be a great privilege, as Minister of Fisheries and Oceans for Canada.

I am extremely proud of my record in the two years as Minister of Fisheries and the record of the Government since the Speaker of the House in his former capacity first became Minister of Fisheries and Oceans in September 1984. We are proud of the leadership which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the focus and importance he has attached to many issues relating to the fishery which have brought untold and unequalled prosperity, at any time in Canada's history, to all sectors of our Canadian fishery—Atlantic, Pacific, in the north and in the freshwater areas as well.

This is why I find it somewhat peculiar that the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) would sponsor such a motion as the one before us, which is totally offbase and totally exaggerated in its implication. In fact, it is totally contrary to the record.

The record will show that in the past three year period the wealth of the fishery and the benefit to each and every fisherman and his family inshore, offshore has virtually doubled. While the Member has engaged in some nitpicking criticism, he has not focused on the central reality that Canadian fishermen in his province in Atlantic Canada and in all parts of Canada are far better off today, far more likely to be employed throughout the year. There will virtually be no fishermen on welfare in the winter of 1987 because of the policies of our Government, which the Member condemned.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Siddon: I intend to deal with the four elements of the motion briefly, but my colleagues will elaborate on each of these questions relating to our management of the fisheries generally, relating to the inshore fishery, relating to the question of our negotiations with France and the great benefit they will bring to the fishermen of Atlantic Canada, and relating to the question of free trade and all of the importance it represents for the future of our industry.

The landed value of our fishery has virtually doubled with the result that we will process in excess of $3 billion worth of fish products in 1987, which will bring, on a per capita basis, some $25,000 nominal value to every person engaged in the fishery, inshore, offshore, and plant workers alike. This is $25,000 of average income to all of those fishermen as a result of the new prosperity the Government has brought to the fishing industry.

I want to point out that of that $25,000 value per capita, a full 80 per cent of it depends on exports to the United States market, exports which have the potential to be enlarged and enhanced in Canada, all of which will lead to a stronger fishing industry in Canada's future.

I want to compliment my colleagues in the caucus because if we have succeeded in improving the management of the fishery in all of its sectors, it is because of the weekly input and guidance that I receive, which no previous Minister of Fisheries has ever received, from Members of Parliament elected from the fishing regions of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, everybody knows that on a national scale again this year Canada is the world's leader in terms of the export value of fish and fish products: commercial fishing amounts to almost 1.5 million metric tonnes worth $1.5 billion. Roughly 60 per cent of landings took place on the Atlantic coast.

[English]

We have a great story to tell. I would like to tell the Members of this House that I place a very high priority on the future of the inshore fishery. I have seen the myriad of coastal communities. I have had the privilege to fly and visit them by sea. I have stood on the wharfs touring the fish plants in all of our coastal regions of Canada. This is a social reality. It is the people of Canada engaged in fishing enterprises as they have been for centuries, and a sector of the industry, the inshore fishery, which we have made a significant commitment toward protecting, enhancing and ensuring year round stability in this sector.

I have seen first hand the problems faced by inshore fishermen. This year inshore fishermen will have higher overall incomes than ever before. This is the result of new resourcefulness, a spirit of enterprise and enthusiasm and the fact that we have relieved some of the burdens of bureaucratic overregulation and waste and put a new focus on good science, enhanced science and better enforcement. We have pared the fat out of the department which had grown far too inefficient and unwieldy. I am proud of that because the benefits are being realized by the fishermen who should be the beneficiaries of good government.

I have taken a special interest in the problems of our inshore fishery, particularly the problem of decline in landings in the coastal areas of Newfoundland and Labrador, especially on the Avalon Peninsula. That is why a year ago I mounted a scientific assessment on an emergency basis of this problem. In the first three months of 1987 we placed observers on all offshore vessels and held the line on the quota increase. We increased our scientific knowledge and brought in regulations to eliminate the wasteful discarding of undersized fish by the offshore fleets.

When I learned earlier this summer that that was not enough, I established a special task force on the future of the Newfoundland inshore fishery, a task force headed up by Dr. Alverson and a group of eminent international scientists who just reported to me yesterday and produced information which I will be sharing shortly with the House and the country to help us better manage and enhance the inshore fishery for the benefit of Canadians.

We have taken numerous initiatives to help the inshore fishery. We have secured the transfer of uncaught fish from offshore to inshore. Over 12,500 tonnes in my first year as Minister in southwestern Nova Scotia were transferred to the inshore sector because that fish would otherwise have remained uncaught. Again this year with the co-operation of the offshore companies, 11 tonnes of fish are being transferred. We have taken steps to spread the fishery out by introducing trip limits and we are looking at future innovations to create some means of more effectively administering the larger inshore vessels, particularly in the Scotia-Fundy region, to ensure more equity. The smaller, true inshore fishermen, who do not have mobility and cannot afford a multimillion dollar enterprise, can have their fair share of this resource.

We have established a scallop plan for the Scotia-Fundy region which has brought untold prosperity to the scallop fishermen in that area and the Georges Bank as well. We have allowed the inshore fishermen to participate in an experimental offshore tuna fishery. We have increased licences and enhanced opportunities in the northern shrimp fishery. I have created an offshore clam fishery which will create unparalleled employment in the Cape Breton region of Nova Scotia. We have encouraged the domestic utilization of a bountiful resource known as silver hake, and are encouraging a number of ventures to turn that resource into new jobs and new economic opportunity for our fishermen.

We have done many things to improve the inshore fishery. We have stabilized the management of the gulf herring roe resource. We have eliminated the lawlessness and confrontation between our officials and fishermen which prevailed in that fishery for many years. We have taken many initiatives in the riding of the Hon. Member who moved this motion. For example, we provided for the first time in history 30 inshore crab licences. That initiative was started by my predecessor, now the Speaker of the House. Those licences are bringing new landings and new prosperity to the people of the Hon. Member's province.

For the first time we have created an Atlantic policy advisory group, and an Atlantic licence appeal board to which fishermen can turn to have their legitimate licensing grievances addressed. This is something the Liberals never did and never would have done.

As to managing the fishery, we have increased surveillance and enforcement. Last December in this House we increased fines as much as fivefold, in some cases to an amount in excess of $500,000 for a single offence, for foreign vessels that fish illegally in our waters. We are providing full observer coverage, at the expense of the foreign country concerned, when fishing for surplus stocks within our zones. We are eliminating all foreign fishing efforts on non-surplus stocks in those zones. That is an initiative the Liberals would never have taken. It allows us to turn those resources to the benefit of our fishermen.

This year we terminated a 15-year arrangement with France wherein they were able to harvest 17,000 tonnes of groundfish, largely cod, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. That arrangement was entered into by the Liberal Government and we are getting out of it in order to make that resource available to Canadian fishermen.

This year we are ending the long-term agreement with the European Economic Community, also arranged by the Liberals, which gave that community in the last year 9,500 tonnes of quota. For the last 10 years, 15 since the extension of jurisdiction, the Government of which the Hon. Member was a part gave fish away to foreigners when it was really needed by our own fishermen. We have ended that.

We have taken many initiatives to work co-operatively with the provinces in light of their role in the fishery. I have had 12 federal-provincial conferences since I was appointed Minister two years ago this week. We produced a report which was requested by the Prime Minister and the First Ministers two years ago this week which dealt with challenges and opportunities facing the fishery. That report was submitted in Vancouver one year ago. It had the unanimous support of all provincial fisheries Ministers, and included their support for a free trade arrangement with the U.S. That report received accolades and glowing commendation from the provinces and fishermen, indeed everyone who has taken the time to read it. It deals not merely with maintaining the status quo, not merely in continuing to over-regulate our fishery and give away whatever could be given away to foreigners. It deals with the future into the next century. It deals with the question raised by the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) about what is to be the future of our fishermen in the year 2050.

The report deals with aquaculture opportunities, enhancing the recreational fishery, and deals with habitat questions, adding value, income stability, and the effective patrol and management of our offshore fishery. All of those things are reflected in the policies of this Government and the benefits already flowing to the fishermen in all regions where the fishery is important.

In the last 12 months we released a new habitat policy for Canada, a new oceans policy for Canada, a new recreational fisheries policy for Canada, a new aquaculture policy for Canada, none of which were ever even contemplated, let alone developed, by previous Governments.

With respect to services to fishermen, one year ago this past October, in the Throne Speech initiating this session, we announced we would take major initiatives to improve the support and services available to our fishermen through our small craft harbours. We have brought forward those initiatives. They were debated in this House only yesterday and commended by all sides as a major step forward in recognizing the fact that fishermen need good ports and services onshore as much as most Canadians need good highways. We are committed to ensuring that that is the case. That is why this year, in tough economic times, we raised the maintenance and operating budget for our harbours from $48 million to $70 million. That was done in one year and that is significant.

Over and above that, we created a new small craft harbour revitalization program, an additional $85 million available for development and upgrading of our harbours.

I have had the privilege of travelling from one end of this country to the other, from Prince Rupert to Black Tickle in Labrador, from Saulnierville, Nova Scotia, to Lameque, New Brunswick, to announce new harbour ventures which are long overdue; to communities like Flat Rock, Newfoundland, and Bauline, where fishermen have hauled their fish out of water with buckets and cables because the Liberal Government never took the time to give them the services to which they were entitled.

We have over 180 new small craft harbour projects under way totalling $98 million of commitment. More than 200 projects are yet to come. Over the next few weeks we will see contracts for 50 new harbour locations and more than $50 million of additional expenditure.

In conclusion, I want to remind the Hon. Member that I have announced already four harbour projects in his own riding: Alberton, $400,000; West Point, $850,000; Fishing Cove, $500,000; Milligan's Shore, $164,000. I will also be announcing Miminegash, $350,000, all in his riding. What has he got to complain about—over $2 million in new harbour improvements in his riding alone.

Some Hon. Members: Smile, George!

Mr. Siddon: Other Hon. Members will be speaking of the Canada-France issue, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) in particular, and of the free trade agreement. However, I want to say that that agreement finally allows Canada to end her dependence on natural resources. We will no longer be referred to as hewers of wood and drawers of water, because this agreement will eliminate all tariffs on value-added products and give us secure access to the American market to offset the countervailing and anti-dumping duties and other kinds of harassment which were erected by our largest market, a market on which our fishery depends.

I am surprised that the Hon. Member and the Premier of his province would oppose this deal because it offers the greatest opportunity in history for Prince Edward Island. His own seafood processors have commented about this. The Tignish Co-op Manager, Glenn MacRae, said: "We in the seafood industry definitely need the United States." Mr. Archibald of the P.E.I. Seafood Processor's Association says his organization has supported free trade from the beginning. He said that Canada cannot absorb existing Island product and without the United States our industry at its present level would not exist.

• (1100)

I say "shame" to the Opposition for bringing forward such a despicable motion. I say "shame" that the Premier of Prince Edward Island does not realize, as his fishermen and processors do, what a great and important initiative this Canada-U.S. trade agreement will be for those people whom he represents.

SHIPBUILDING

QUEBEC 'S NEED TO OBTAIN CONTRACTS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, we have learned today that Quebecers have not been taken for a ride, they have just missed the boat, the six frigates are gone!

Sure enough, Industry Minister Johnson has confirmed that New Brunswick's Saint John Shipbuilding has landed the contract to build the six frigates, no bids asked! In exchange, I have the impression that the Minister of State (Transport) (Mrs. Vézina) led Mr. Johnson to believe that Quebec just might be awarded the main contract to build the submarines.

Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that I am speaking on behalf of Quebec's 5,000 shipyard workers. We are glad that New Brunswick got the contract, but what we want is work orders for these 5,000 employees. People in Quebec City, Montreal and Sorel want to work, they want to make their contribution, and they urge the Conservative Government and the Conservative Members to see to it that shipyard workers in Sorel, Montreal and Quebec City are given work, some of the contracts to build the frigates, that Montreal be chosen under the TRUMP project to build the two remaining ships, the Tracy and the Bernier. They must have something to do, the 15,000 Canadian shipyard workers must be on the job as soon as possible.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORT ON MEMBER'S VISIT TO ZIMBABWE AND TANZANIA

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I recently had the privilege on behalf of my constituents and my Government to represent the Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Landry) in southern and east Africa.

As you know, I spent many memorable years working there for CUSO and CIDA and had not been back for 11 years. The sounds, sights, and smells were all too familiar. My pride in representing Canada as I signed three aid agreements with the Government of Zimbabwe was well witnessed by our hard-working, competent External Affairs and aid officers: Don McMaster, Robert Lee, Ross Noble, Hunter McGill, Adair Heuchan, Jocelyn Lepage and Sarah Dowswell.

I revisited Tanzania and reviewed the very successful Canadian assistance to the Tanzania Harbours Authority in Dar Es Salaam, the Tanzania Railways Corporation locomotive repair workshop in Morogoro, and the Tanzanian-Canada Wheat Program in Arusha. I also spoke to the assembled students at the College of African Wildlife Management where I used to work on a CIDA assignment.

Rod Haney, Martin Soutter, Monique Angers, Yves Morneau, Reg Smith and Alex McKeague from our Tanzanian programs are also officers of whom we can all be proud.

The Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) leadership within the Commonwealth, especially concerning African affairs, paved the way for a very successful mission.

LABOUR RELATIONS

RAILWAY WORKERS' DISPUTE—DELAY IN REACHING SETTLEMENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to the attention of the House some of the concerns which railway workers in my riding and across the country have had in the last few weeks. They have been particularly irritated by the extension of the period for the arbitrator pursuant to the legislation which ended the railway strike. They had hoped the matter would be settled much sooner, but the deadline has been extended until March.

In the meantime there are no increases for them while there are increases for the President of CN Rail. Mr. Lawless has received an $81,000 bonus while railway workers must wait another three months before they find out whether they get anything at all. That type of thing seems obscene and is cause for legitimate outrage on the part of railway workers in Canada. They are also outraged, as am I, by the fact that the railway is now claiming that it does not have enough boxcars to meet all its commitments with respect to the shipment of grain, as we have seen in recent days. Yet these are the same railways which claimed a number of years ago that they had more than enough box cars, when we were trying to have them produced more quickly with the box car rehabilitation program in Transcona, for instance.

It is another example of short-term stupidity for long-term damage to our economic infrastructure and ability to export.

The railways ought to be called to task, as should the Government for that matter, for making the railways operate on such short-term considerations that the long-term ability to do the job is put in jeopardy.

HUMAN RIGHTS

ISRAEL—DETENTION OF MORDECHAI VANUNU

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday at noon, Mr. Vanunu, brother of imprisoned Israeli nuclear technician, Mordechai Vanunu, addressed the Middle East discussion group here on Parliament Hill.

Mr. Meir Vanunu described the plight of his brother since his kidnapping by the Israeli Secret Service in Rome on September 30, 1986. He spoke about Mordechai Vanunu's detention incommunicado in jail and the flagrant violation of all his human rights.

Mordechai Vanunu has done immense service to the international community by alerting it to the fact that Israel has become a military nuclear power.

Canada has the obligation to press the State of Israel to sign the International Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty and respect the Convention on Human Rights so that Mordechai Vanunu has a fair hearing in the courts of Israel.

CONTRACT TO BUILD SIX FRIGATES—NEW BRUNSWICK'S OFFER

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, today the frigates are in the news again. It seems a decision has been made to build the six frigates in New Brunswick, but on the other hand, people are saying a decision has yet to be made. Why the hesitation on the part of the Government? It has had all the figures for some time. It knows that New Brunswick is offering a better package: six frigates at the best possible price. No one can build them for less.

This hesitation on the part of the Government is creating serious tension between New Brunswick and Quebec. The Government's way of souring relations between regions in this country cannot be tolerated and it is unhealthy. Canadians want the Government to make a decision. Canadians want the frigates built for the best possible price. Canadians want the frigates build in New Brunswick. Canadians also want the Government to reach a decision on the TRUMP program so work can be given to other Canadian shipyards.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

CENTREPOINTE DEVELOPMENT PROJECT IN NEPEAN

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): In the early 1970s the federal Government purchased a 400-acre site in the city of Nepean, which is now known as Centrepointe. At the time it was the most prestigious land development site available in the national capital area.

It was to be used by the federal Government to demonstrate how Governments could develop a modern urban community. I recall ten years ago, while being a member of the Regional Council of Ottawa-Carleton, examining the plans for Centrepointe with some enthusiasm and excitement. However, over the years these plans vapourized because they were bogged down in government bureaucracy.

Yesterday I was pleased to be present with the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes) at a ceremony in which phase three of this development at Centrepointe was handed over to eight small private sector companies to develop the land.

Yesterday we witnessed a modern community developing under the aegis of the private sector. New homes are being built and occupied. A modern municipal complex is under development and will house municipal offices, a modern library, modern theatre, and an outdoor artificial rink. Beside it there will be new facilities for health care and seniors.

This is a dramatic example of how government in other years failed by not recognizing the importance of the private sector in housing development. Today, I take my hat off to the City of Nepean, Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the Minister of Public Works and the Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton for moving forward so dramatically and collectively with the private sector to build this modern urban community.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—REFUSAL TO AIR SASKATCHEWAN PREMIER'S ADVERTISEMENT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity this morning to commend the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) for her strong guidance to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Her corporate guidelines have contributed to interjecting fairness into the free trade debate in Saskatchewan. The CBC has refused to air a blatantly partisan advertisement submitted by Premier Grant Devine.

The Minister's policy guidelines regarding controversial materials state in part as follows:

> The principle of this policy is that the airwaves must not come under the control of any individual or group who because of wealth, special position, etc., might be better able to influence listener or viewer attitudes on a contentious issue.

The policy guidelines go on to state:

> Social, economic or political comment or opinion that is contentious may not be used in commercials regardless of the advertiser submitting the material. Under this policy paid political advertising is unacceptable on CBC facilities except as provided for under the Canada Elections Act.

If the Premier wishes to use the public broadcasting system for his partisan use, perhaps he should call an election.

FREE TRADE

WOMEN—OUTLOOK FOR FUTURE

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, for some weeks, various groups have been trying to influence public opinion by claiming that free trade may cause irreparable harm to the future of Canadian women. Yesterday, the Committee responsible for examining these issues had the privilege of receiving public testimony from an eminent Canadian economist. Katie MacMillan, who submitted her report as a private citizen, has prepared similar studies for the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women, the Canada West Foundation and the C.D. Howe Institute.

She came to shed some light on what the future would hold for women as a result of free trade with the United States. She painted a very positive picture of that future, stressing the fact that 80 percent of women work in services, a sector that is not affected by the Agreement. In fact, 12 percent of women work in industries that are not affected. This means that less than 10 percent of women may be affected by the Agreement. Ms. MacMillan said that as far as this group was concerned, there was no cause for alarm since women have always been more mobile than men, adapting more easily to new jobs. In fact, she sees free trade as a very interesting challenge for Canadian women.

Mr. Speaker, we have always demonstrated our concern for the status of women, and we have maintained that concern throughout the free trade talks.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

SOCIAL WELFARE CHEQUES—POLICY PROPOSAL

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, recently I received a letter from Mr. Philippe Champagne, who lives in my riding in Montreal. He asked me to find out from the Minister responsible for Canada Post why, at the beginning of September, welfare recipients like him had to wait more than eight days for their welfare cheques.

Incidently, Mr. Champagne's letter arrived several weeks late, which in itself is scarcely justifiable, but delays in the delivery of welfare cheques is something we cannot tolerate.

It seems to me Canada Post should give priority treatment to welfare cheques and have some way of identifying this priority mail in post offices across the country.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

GREAT LAKES POLLUTION—CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, Canada is serious about cleaning up the Great Lakes. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) recently signed an agreement with the United States to deal directly with all sources of Great Lakes pollution. This new agreement is the result of a comprehensive review of all former agreements. The two countries will study pollution entering the Great Lakes from the atmosphere as well as pollution associated with contaminated sediments.

Canada will identify heavily polluted sites around the Lakes and prepare plans to rectify the problems in each area. The agreement also calls for specific abatement plans for a variety of non-point urban and rural land drainage pollution sources. As well, the Government will identify and control sources of contaminated ground water.

This new accord reinforces the responsibility of the Government not only for the safety but for the health of its citizens. Let us hope that a similar agreement can be signed soon in regard to the acid rain problem. This demonstrates to all Canadians the unyielding attention the Minister of the Environment has given to this very grave problem.

WINTER OLYMPIC GAMES

REPORTED HARASSMENT OF BUSINESSES WITH OLYMPIC CORPORATE NAMES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, why is it that the Canadian Olympic Organizing Committee seems incapable of staying out of trouble? Does it not have enough to do? Does it not have any direction?

I find it absolutely outrageous that it has decided to go around the country terrorizing small businesses which use the word "olympic" or "olympia" in their name. Perhaps it has secured the rights to use the words for marketing purposes but what possible purpose could be served by dragging the Olympic Tuck Shop, a tiny Ottawa confectionery, through the courts for using the name it has had since long before the folks from Calgary even thought about the Olympics?

What benefit could be derived to the Olympic Games, the organizing committee, or to Canada by threatening the Olympic Dry Wall Company or the Olympic Drilling Company?

I have more than a passing interest in this matter because I am the official Olympic spokesperson for the New Democratic Party. I wait in fear by my telephone every day wondering if I, too, will be sued by the valiant protectors of the Olympic name. But it is not just a name.

The Olympic officials also claim rights to the number 88. Does that mean that the Oldsmobile 88 is under threat as well? It also claims the rights to "stickmen" figures. Does that make the New Democratic Party's official logo illegal? Is it going to sue us, too? What will it go after next, Mr. Speaker, the official rights to snow?

Oral Questions

REFUSAL TO ACCEPT SASKATCHEWAN GOVERNMENT'S ADVERTISEMENT ON CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, can you imagine my surprise this morning when a reporter telephoned me asking what I thought about the Province of Saskatchewan having banned the publication of advertisements about free trade? I had never heard of this development and I was sure it was not true.

However, the truth is that the CBC has refused to allow pro-free trade advertisements sponsored by the Province of Saskatchewan, or anyone else, to be aired over the CBC. In spite of the hogwash we just heard from the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), this is a publicly owned facility that allows critical editorials by anyone who will speak against free trade. It allows a biased chairman to chair a debate on free trade and make a summary of only the opposition side of the debate.

Premier Grant Devine was at a meeting in Prince Albert of over 500 people who were enthusiastic about the benefits to Saskatchewan when he heard the decision of the CBC. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, he was not pleased. Thank God, we have a private radio and television station which will carry this important message to the people of Saskatchewan who will benefit so greatly from this initiative of this Government.

This is another reason to privatize the CBC.

PORNOGRAPHY

DEFINITION OF EROTICA

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, Lady Chatterley, that lady of fiction, who, because of her fall from grace, spent the rest of her days being debated in the courts, is with us again.

In the Government's Bill on pornography which deals, as it should, with violence against women and children, there is a very poorly defined section on erotica in which the same old Victorian attitude which haunted the readers of D. H. Lawrence all those years ago reappears.

We are again going to ask our law enforcers to pore over Canadian films and literature and to comb the art galleries to decide what is erotica and what is not. There is still no real guidance or definition to go by, but this time there is one big difference. If this Bill becomes legislation, it will be up to the accused to prove that he or she is portraying erotica and not that forbidden activity, s-e-x.

This is not the legislation called for by the various groups who have worked so hard to bring the brutal treatment and exploitation of women and children to the attention of the Government. The question is if the Government is really serious in addressing the real need for protection for women and children, the most vulnerable in our society. If so, why has it mixed its message?

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT'S RECORD—POSITION OF OPPOSITION PARTIES

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, it is the traditional duty of the opposition Parties to bring to the attention of Canadians the record of the Government on matters of economic and fiscal policy. Given that convention, one cannot help but wonder why the Opposition shies away from this important issue.

• (1120)

Could the reason be that since the Government took office three years ago over one million jobs have been created?

Could it be that since the election the prime interest rate has dropped by 3.75 percentage points?

Could it be that Canada's economy has expanded by 13 per cent since September of 1984 and now leads the OECD nations in terms of economic growth?

Perhaps the opposition Parties are not eager to focus on the highest level of housing starts in eight years, or on the fact that while retail sales have increased by 31 per cent inflation has been held to around 4 per cent.

It is small wonder that the opposition Parties continue to avoid the issue of the Government's economic policy. I want to join with the 1,019,000 additional Canadians who are at work today in congratulating the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Government on an outstanding record of job creation.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—MARINE TRANSPORTATION INDUSTRY

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Transport had the honesty to admit that the new trade deal with the U.S. is bad news for the Canadian transport industry. We gave up our trucking industry through deregulation. We sold our railways through competitive line rates as a result of Bill C-18. Now the Minister himself admits that we have nothing for the Canadian maritime industry.

Why did the Minister wait so long before introducing Bill C-52 when he knew full well what the intention of the Government was in relation to a trade deal with the U.S.? Why has he put on hold the work of the Legislative Committee that is dealing with Bill C-52? Why has he given orders to stop proceeding with this legislation? Is this another sell-out to the Americans?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is another in the pattern of increasing braggadocio and bushwah that comes from the Official Opposition.

Mr. McDermid: I wonder what the translators will do with that.

Mr. Crosbie: I will spell that for the translators later.

The critic for transportation in the Official Opposition said that I had the honesty to admit something. I know that it is shocking to him when he comes across honesty.

Mr. Foster: Especially from this Government.

Mr. Crosbie: I certainly did not admit any such thing yesterday. I said that it is a disappointment to us that we could not persuade the U.S. to agree to change the protective provisions of the Jones Act.

The Jones Act, which restricts shipping from one U.S. port to another to American vessels only, has been in place for 200 years. The Party that the hon. gentleman represents in this House has been in power most of those 200 years, and it has done shag all about the Jones Act. So is it surprising that we have not been able to do anything about the Jones Act either?

DELAY ALLEGED IN PROCEEDING WITH LEGISLATION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, whatever way the Minister wants to answer he is confirming what he said yesterday, that is, he got nothing in relation to the maritime industry in Canada.

The Minister should know, and I am asking him if he does, that in fact any new amendments to current legislation, or for that matter any new legislation dealing with transportation will have to give to American companies national treatment if it is passed after ratification of the free trade agreement. Therefore, I ask again why the Minister has waited for so long. Why has his Government procrastinated for three years before going ahead with legislation on the maritime transport industry which would have protected it, when he knew full well that his Government was going to make a sweet deal with the Americans?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I hate to see the Question Period degenerate into this kind of cheap rhetoric, and I have no choice but to answer in the same vein. There has been more legislation in the field of transportation introduced and passed by this House in the last three years than in the previous 30. It has been done despite the consistent opposition, squeals, howls and stonewalling of the hon. gentleman opposite.

With respect to Bill C-52, it has already been given second reading in the House. I could go into the National Transportation Act and the Freedom to Move policy of the Deputy Prime Minister that we have implemented. There is a whole host of transportation legislation which we have passed.

With respect to the U.S.-Canada negotiations, the U.S. refused to budge in certain areas. One of those was in the area of marine transportation. The status quo will continue to exist in that area.

We refused to budge in the area of culture. We refused to budge in the areas that affect sovereignty. We refused to budge in the areas that affect farm marketing boards. That is the way a negotiation is. Unfortunately, we have not been able to persuade the Americans to change their cabotage rules. That is something we simply have to accept.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER NOT SIGN TRANSPORTATION ANNEX TO AGREEMENT

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, quite clearly the Minister is talking about the legislation that his Government has introduced. Bill C-18 is giving away the Canadian railways to the Americans. Bill C-19 is giving away the trucking industry. Bill C-52, which at least could have been legislation to protect the maritime industry in Canada, is not going to have any effect at all because the Jones Act still applies in the U.S. The Minister, after giving away the trucking industry and the railway industry, was hoping to get something from the Americans with respect to the maritime industry. He has failed miserably, and he has told us that.

Will he at least give us the assurance that he will not sign a transportation annex that will undermine Canada's ability to legislate and to regulate our own transportation industry in our own interests? Can he at least give us this little assurance today?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the hearty applause from the Opposition. I can certainly confirm that we will not sign any transportation annex that will undermine Canada's ability to protect and advance Canada's interests. Any document we sign will be one that will enhance Canada's interest in trade with the United States and will strengthen the Canadian economy and the Canadian transportation system.

At the very worst, the status quo would still be in effect. But the status quo would certainly not be undermined by anything that we would enter into. There are some advantages, otherwise we would not be signing at all. In the area of aviation, for example, bilateral air agreement arrangements are being left as they are. They will be untouched by the transportation annex, but of course, whether there is an annex or not, or what is in it, will not be known until the final document is ready for signature.

RAILWAY TRANSPORTATION

ACCESS TO AMERICAN MARKET—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I am astonished at the Minister's statement that in order to obtain concessions in certain areas, he sacrificed the transportation industry, lock stock and barrel.

The Minister knows that the provision on competitive line rates in Bill C-18 gives American railway companies access to Canadian markets. He also knows that Canadian companies do not have similar access to U.S. markets. My question is as follows, Mr. Speaker: Why didn't the Minister try, during the talks, to obtain the same right of access for Canadians to U.S. Markets? Why did the Minister give away the store before the talks, without even demanding protection for the thousands of jobs that will be lost here in Canada?

• (1130)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that the hon. gentleman is thoroughly confused.

The whole import of Bill C-18, the new National Transportation Act, and Bill C-19, the Motor Vehicle Transport Act, is to increase the capacity of Canadian truckers and railways to be competitive, compete more effectively, put Canadian shippers in a position to be more competitive, achieve better economies and efficiencies, and get lower rates. It is to sharpen up Canada for the competitive struggle that looms ahead for any country that wishes to increase its standard of living and to progress in the future.

The hon. gentlemen opposite are afraid of the future. They are confined. They only want to look to the little, narrow Canadian market like the hon. gentlemen in the NDP. The 25 million people here in Canada are all supposed to take in one another's washing rather than try to expand our trade with the United States and the rest of the world.

We are visionaries. We are looking outside Canada. We know that we can compete. We are prepared to compete. That is what the National Transportation Act does. It puts Canada in a position to compete with the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Foster: We have seen enough of your dirty laundry already, John.

Mr. Ouellet: That is not what you said yesterday.

[Translation]

FREE TRADE—INQUIRY WHY MINISTER DID NOT PARTICIPATE IN NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I think the confusion is in the Minister's brain, and I think all the hot air the Minister is producing is affecting his thinking processes.

We know that through Bill C-18, the Americans are getting access to Canadian markets. So why didn't the Minister take part in the free trade talks? And why did he rely on the Minister for International Trade, who gave away the store to the Americans? Why wasn't he at the negotiating table as well?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would be quite happy to leave anything whatsoever in the hands of the Minister for International Trade, who is capable of handling absolutely anything that is handed to her.

The position is that the Department of Transport has been fully involved. One of our top officials has been involved with the trade negotiations office from the beginning.

Mr. Ouellet: And they lost everything.

Mr. Crosbie: I wish to point out that 90 per cent of all exports from Ontario go to the United States. I suppose 100 per cent of all the exports from Oshawa go to the United States, and one has to wonder at the views of the Leader of the New Democratic Party, who does not wish to extend the same benefits to the rest of Canada that the people of Oshawa now have.

Sixty-four per cent of all the exports of Atlantic Canada go to the United States. The hon. gentleman should be leading the battle in New Brunswick for the free trade arrangement between Canada and the United States.

GRAPE GROWERS' REQUEST FOR MEETING WITH MINISTER

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have just returned from a visit—

Mr. Crosbie: Shame!

An Hon. Member: On holiday again?

Mr. Lewis: Move to your second question.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Members' welcome has drowned out the question. The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, in this case it is not Windsor, but the Okanagan Valley from which I have returned.

Mr. Crosbie: Out tasting the wine.

Mr. Langdon: I found a great many fruit, vegetable, grape growers, and wine producers deeply worried about this trade agreement.

I wish to ask the Deputy Prime Minister why it is that those people, especially the grape growers, in requesting a meeting with the Minister for International Trade and/or with Mr. Reisman, have been turned down? Why is the Minister not prepared to meet with those victims of this trade deal?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Hon. Member has his facts in error. It is my understanding that, naturally, they are represented on the SAGIT committee, and there have been numerous meetings of the SAGIT committee on this particular matter.

My understanding is that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade has met the industry people.

A week or ten days ago, I issued a press release inviting provincial and industry representatives from all regions of the country producing grapes, to come to Ottawa and sit around the table with me. I believe that the meeting is scheduled for December 2 or 3.

POSITION OF OKANAGAN VALLEY GRAPE GROWERS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, is it too much to ask the Government to actually go and meet the people who are being hit hard by this type of crash which is devastating the grape growing prospects of the Okanagan Valley?

Is it too much to ask that there be a direct meeting between Ministers who come from British Columbia, like the Minister for International Trade, and this incredibly hard hit group of Canadians? Is it too much to ask for that type of common decency?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that Ministers and Parliamentary Secretaries, and members of caucus are meeting with various groups each and every day of the week. Last year I attended some 190 events outside Ottawa. I meet agriculture groups each and every day of the week, including Saturdays and Sundays. In fact this morning was no exception; I met with three groups.

If the Hon. Member could figure out some way we could work 48-hour days, then it would allow us twice as much time to meet more people.

Mr. Skelly: What about the jobs and the investment of those people?

Mr. McCurdy: Are you saying that you do not have time to meet with them?

Mr. Wise: We are a Government that has been more available than any other Government in the history of this country. I can assure Hon. Members of that.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I have a list of dozens of propaganda meetings that Ministers are holding across the country this week. Yet they are not prepared to make this type of trip to talk to victims of the trade deal directly and to give some hope for the future.

Mr. McCurdy: Shame on you!

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT FINAL TEXT OF AGREEMENT BE MADE READILY AVAILABLE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. It concerns the delay in presenting the final text of the Agreement, announced this morning. How will Canadians be able to give this Agreement the time and attention required to consider the major changes that will take place in this country?

[English]

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, first I wish to make it very clear to the Hon. Member that in his preamble to his question he is dead wrong.

The Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen, and other Members from British Columbia requested that I go to Vancouver and meet with the grape growers and the wine producers. I did that. We had a very good meeting.

The Hon. Member should not go around saying that we are not meeting with those people, because we are, and we are working very closely with them.

Mr. Langdon: The Minister has refused to do so.

Mr. McDermid: To answer the other question, I wish to tell the Hon. Member that the Canadian people will have the opportunity to study this agreement, but I think that the Canadian people also want to assure themselves that the agreement that we signed on October 1 is translated into legal language that is proper and which spells out the agreement we negotiated with the United States during the last 18 months.

Mr. McCurdy: Sight unseen.

Mr. McDermid: We want to get that done correctly, and we are going to get it done correctly. It will be available in the not too distant future.

Mr. McCurdy: What are you saying? Trust us?

TRUCKING INDUSTRY—ACCESS TO AMERICAN MARKET

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

The Minister knows that deregulation combined with the Tory trade deal allows complete access of American trucking interests into Canada, while 43 heavily regulated American states, including border states, ensure that Canadian truckers do not share the same advantages.

• (1140)

Will the Minister tell the House and the tens of thousands of Canadian truckers why, during the free trade negotiations, he did not at least get similar access for Canadian trucking interests and why he jeopardized Canada's trucking industry?

Why did he give so much to the Americans while getting nothing for Canadian workers?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members in the Liberal caucus are certainly confused, not only about the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement but about the legislation which the House passed several months ago.

The situation is that Canadian truckers have had more advantages to operate in the U.S. than U.S. truckers have had to operate in Canada.

The second point is that the present free trade arrangement will not discriminate against Canadian truckers in any way. It is too bad that certain interests are passing around misleading information. American truckers will not be able to come up and operate intraprovincially in Ontario, for example. There are restrictions and customs legislation and so on which still prevent that.

Canadian truckers will be able to compete very effectively with U.S. truckers as they already have. I believe there are over 600 Canadian trucking firms that operate in the U.S.

As I understand it—the Deputy Prime Minister is a greater expert even than I am in this area, and that is saying something—Canadian truckers can carry goods from one U.S. point to another at the present time, so the question being asked by the Hon. Member is simply incorrect.

Mrs. Finestone: I suggest that he tells that to the truckers who are trying to get into Pennsylvania, Michigan, and New York states.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Minister should know that the Canadian trucking industry is saying that it was sacrificed during the free trade talks and that the U.S. trucking industry is laughing all the way to the bank while our workers are worrying about feeding their families.

What was the Minister doing when this happened? Why was he not there to defend the tens or hundreds of thousands of jobs, actually, in the trucking industry?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I realize—

An Hon. Member: Ask the Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Crosbie: —that this is not the Hon. Member's area.

Ms. Copps: Don't be so chauvinistic.

Mr. Crosbie: If Canadian truckers wish to drive down to the United States, all they have to do is get into their trucks and drive down there. They can go trucking on down—

Mr. Ouellet: What about a permit, a work permit?

Mr. Crosbie: Up to the present time they have had advantages compared with U.S. truckers—

Mr. Ouellet: You don't know what you are talking about. Sit down.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, if I do not know anything, and if I am to be shouted down, why ask me a question?

Mr. Ouellet: That is your best answer today, John.

AGRICULTURE

SPECIAL CANADIAN GRAINS PROGRAM—AMOUNT OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. When I examined the Supplementary Estimates tabled yesterday in the House, I did not see any mention of funds earmarked for the Special Canadian Grains Program. Since Canadian producers are expecting at least a $2.6 billion pay-out, and since it is approaching 14 months since the last announcement of a pay-out was made, how will the money be allocated in this fiscal year, or has the Government decided against such a program for this fiscal year?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member might take some comfort in the fact that the Government has not decided against a payment for the coming year. He will realize that we continue to consult with farm leaders to put the finishing touches on a program.

The method of payment as far as the Government is concerned, I expect, would follow pretty much the procedure as followed last year. If there are not sufficient funds to provide for a payment, then of course parliamentary approval would be sought again this year as it was sought last year, rather than an entry in the Supplementary Estimates.

FARMERS' DEBTS OWED TO FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, since the Government has decided not to make any funds available in the foreseeable future to alleviate the debt load farmers will be carrying through the winter, and since in Saskatchewan alone 40 per cent of its farmers are deemed by the FCC to be in serious financial difficulty, will the Minister now permit FCC, under the Farm Credit Corporation Act, to write down some of the interest and principal on those debts so that we can keep existing farm families on their farms until such time as the Government makes up its mind what to do about providing financial assistance?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member poses a half dozen questions in his supplementary.

It is false to say that the Government is sending a signal that there is not to be financial assistance to farmers.

The Hon. Member knows that my colleague, the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds, announced some time ago the largest interim payment under the Western Grain Stabilization Fund.

Mr. Althouse: He has to do that under the legislation.

Mr. Wise: The Hon. Member should also know that I would suspect that sometime during the next few hours or so the Minister of State will be announcing a very substantial amount of money that will be going in direct cash into the hands of Canadian farmers under the final payment.

Of course we would be more than likely considering an interim payment under a program which might well be called the Special Canadian Grains Program No. 2.

SHIPBUILDING

CANADIAN SHIPBUILDING INDUSTRY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I believe I agree with what he just said. He has every right to be disappointed in a constitutional agreement that, as far as the transportation and shipbuilding industry is concerned, gives everything to the Americans and nothing to Canadians. The Minister knows perfectly well that the Jones Act is a protectionist measure that is aimed at protecting the shipbuilding industry of the United States and as a result closes the U.S. market to Canada's shipbuilding industry. The Minister is aware of the problems in our shipyards.

Could the Minister give 10,000 workers in Canadian shipyards an honest explanation for the fact that he allowed his Government to let American shipyard workers bid and work on Canadian ships, while they refuse to let Quebec and Canadian workers bid and work on U.S. ships? Why did the Government allow this kind of discrimination against Canadian shipyard workers?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it gets more and more confusing. The Hon. Member does not point his finger at any particular action taken by the Government which permits discrimination against Canadian shipyard workers. The Hon. Member mentioned along the way the Jones Act which was enacted in the United States of America some 200 years ago. We plead not guilty to having done that 200 years ago. We didn't do it and we haven't done it. As a matter of fact, we attempted to persuade the Americans to change the Jones Act, to revise their rules on cabotage, and to permit Canadian ships to participate in American coastal shipping, but they refused to do that.

They have certain bottom lines which they will not go beyond in certain areas, just as we have bottom lines with respect to Canadian sovereignty, Canadian culture and institutions, Canadian farm marketing boards, and the like.

Canadian shipyard workers are being helped mightily by the Government which has placed, for example, contracts for the building of a ferry. Caribou II was built in a Quebec shipyard. The Joseph and Clara Smallwood, named after a Father of Confederation and his wife, is under construction at the present time in a Quebec shipyard. We have just given contracts to the Marystown shipyard, to the Halifax shipyard, and to shipyards in Vancouver. Right across the country we are helping Canadian shipyard workers; that is what we are doing.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Transport should wake up to the fact that the Conservative Government, in a Blue Paper . . . Free trade is supposed to give Canadian industries access to a market of 250 million, and now he is blaming the Liberals! He says we want a small market and we are afraid of competition. How could the Minister of Transport let the U.S. shipyards with a market of 250 million protect themselves against a shipbuilding industry with a market of 25 million? Is the Minister going to rise in the House to defend the workers in Canada's shipyards, yes or no?

• (1150)

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is indeed a forceful and intimidating presence as we saw when he intimidated the Liberal Members of the Senate yesterday and brought them crashing to their knees, having putting his position firmly to them.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I suggest he continue his work in the Liberal caucus to make the Liberal Senators act in the best interests of Canada. If he does that, I will continue to do the same on the outside.

WINTER OLYMPIC GAMES

REPORTED HARASSMENT OF COMPANIES WITH OLYMPIC IN CORPORATE NAMES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport.

As the Minister knows, the Calgary Olympic Committee has been sending its name police around the country harassing all those small businesses which use the word Olympic or Olympia as part of the name of their business.

Will the Government immediately intervene with OCO and tell it to concentrate on running the Olympics and to leave small businesses alone?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Minister responsible for Fitness and Amateur Sport is out of the House today. I will take the question from the Hon. Member and advise the Minister when he returns to the House.

I think I can say, particularly with the story in the paper this morning, that I know the Minister's office is concerned about the matter. His office is trying to find out specific information. When that is available I will ask the Minister to make it available to the Hon. Member.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister who just responded to my first question. It is appropriate that he responds because as he knows, most of the small businesses which use Olympic or Olympia are owned by individual Canadians who came from the country of Greece and were using the words to honour that country.

Rather than just report to the Minister, will he encourage the Minister to do something to stop this crazy attack on our small businesses just because they happen to have the name Olympic or Olympia in their titles? These words have been used for years and years well before Calgary ever got the Olympics.

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I clearly understand the point of view of the Hon. Member. All I can do is tell him, and I think he knows, that I will bring his view to the attention of the responsible Minister when he returns to the House.

Meanwhile, I know his Department is trying to find out exactly what happened as reported in this particular story in the paper. I appreciate the Hon. Member's interest and I can assure him that the Minister will act with dispatch on the matter.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—FOOD PROCESSING INDUSTRY

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday the Grocery Products Manufacturers of Canada stated very clearly that thousands of jobs would be lost in Canada in the food processing industry as a result of the free trade agreement with the United States because Canadian food processors would be obliged to buy their raw food materials at managed regulated prices and would not be able to compete with the United States companies.

This association represents 150 companies which do a business of $40 billion in goods each year and hire 230,000 Canadians. What is the Government going to do to keep these jobs and these firms operating in Canada?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the interpretation which the Hon. Member puts on a testimony given to the standing committee is somewhat blown out of proportion. The Food Producers Association, which has played a very important part in the sectoral advisory committee on the negotiations, has a couple of concerns. They would like—I think if the truth were known—the marketing boards to disappear. They would love to see the marketing boards disappear. They would then have low cost input into their food production. I want the Hon. Member to stand up and tell this House that he and his Party are in favour of doing away with the marketing boards. Will he stand up and tell us that?

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I was at the meeting yesterday at which representatives of the Grocery Products Manufacturers appeared. I heard the brief and I participated in the questioning and answering and I know what was said.

Here we have a respectable Canadian business association saying thousands of jobs could be lost in food processing unless changes are made, while the Government is ignoring their concerns. They said the products that could be affected were, and I quote "bread, pasta, ice cream, yoghurt, breakfast cereals, cake mixes, cookies, crackers, baked goods, frozen entrees, meat pies, soups, canned fruits, vegetables" and others. This is the Government's deal and it has to solve the problems caused by it.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I will grant that the Hon. Member was at the committee hearings but he left early before all the testimony was heard.

Mr. Allmand: That is wrong. That is not true. You were not there yourself. What kind of nonsense is that?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

QUERY WHY GOVERNMENT AUTHORIZED CANADIAN COMPANY TO BECOME MAIN SUPPLIER TO IRANIAN ARTILLERY

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Since Expro, a company in Valleyfield, Quebec, is going to ship 1,250 tons of explosive powder, a very considerable quantity, to a Portuguese company over six months, and considering that the CBC says it has found a link between the Portuguese company and the Iranian government, why did the Government authorize the Canadian company to become the principal supplier to Iran's artillery?

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to answer this question on behalf of the Minister. I realize that Hon. Members have the right to ask questions in the House, but they should also do their homework in order to avoid making needless accusations.

Exporting gun powder or munitions from Canada takes two permits: a permit for the exporting country, which has been issued, and a permit for the importing country, which has also been issued. We have no control over any re-exporting that may occur subsequently, and that is exactly what is happening.

The RCMP is investigating to determine whether there is any possibility of illegal diversion, and when I say illegal, I mean according to our statutes and our principles in these matters. The RCMP is trying to determine whether there may have been illegal diversion of goods from the legal destination apparent from the contracts signed by the parties concerned.

[English]

GOVERNMENT EXPORT CONTROLS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I am somewhat disappointed to get a technical explanation for something that could be a question of life and death.

I would like to have the Government's commitment that not only will our ambassador in Lisbon be instructed to attempt to identify whether that explosive is being re-exported, but also what will the Government do to introduce controls to ensure that Canadian munitions do not end up on the battlefields of Iran and Iraq?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member does not want to know about the technical details, maybe he is not interested in finding out the facts. The fact is that two export permits are necessary, and both permits are absolutely essential. We have met our commitments and we have complied with the regulations that exist today and have always been enforced here in Canada. If there are people who subsequently re-export those goods, the receiving country has a responsibility, and that is what should be investigated.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—FOOD PROCESSING INDUSTRY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday the Grocery Products Manufacturers group pointed out the impossible position it has been placed in by the free trade agreement with the United States, including a flood of cheap surplus U.S. food which will come into Canada under this agreement.

How does the Minister plan to maintain the employment in this industry while at the same time maintaining our supply management and marketing system in Canada, which is one of the best systems in the world—

Mr. Mazankowski: You are against marketing boards.

Mr. Foster: —which every other country in western Europe and the United States want to emulate?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, this Government made the commitment at the outset of the negotiations that the marketing boards and their underpinnings would stay in place. This has been accomplished in this agreement.

Mr. Allmand: No, it hasn't.

Mr. McDermid: The Americans cannot dump into our country. Our trade laws, our anti-dumping laws, are still in place.

Mr. Foster: It is not dumping.

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member said it is not dumping. He just said the Americans were dumping cheap low cost food into Canada. That is just not accurate. The same marketing boards, the same quotas will be in place after the agreement as were before.

Mr. Allmand: Not true.

Mr. McDermid: The allegation of the Hon. Member of low cost food pouring into Canada, dumping into Canada as he put it, is entirely wrong.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Parliamentary Secretary. The Minister knows that the United States has been trying to get rid of our supply management and our marketing board system. The U.S. has made that statement many times. He knows that this agreement chips away at all aspects of that system.

• (1200)

Will the Minister admit right now that the free trade agreement is the first step in getting rid of our supply management and marketing systems, and that the next step is the proposal that Canada has tabled with GATT whereby supply management and marketing systems are being put on the table? The United States and most of the Cairns group have agreed to get rid of Section 11 of the GATT agreement which provides for marketing boards and supply management.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, members of the Opposition are taking an interesting tack. I am rather enjoying this. They spread fear throughout the country that marketing boards would be wiped out with the free trade agreement. We made the commitment that they would not. We made the commitment that those underpinnings would stay in place and they have. Now what are opposition Members trying to do? They are saying: "Well, this agreement is okay, but in the next agreement they will be wiped out". What poppycock. Members of the Canadian public are not that gullible. They will not buy that.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

SHOE MANUFACTURING TECHNOLOGY—ACQUISITION OF CANADIAN COMPANY BY AMERICAN CORPORATION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology who would agree, I am sure, that programs such as IRAP that provided $1.7 million to Cimtech for the design of technology for shoe manufacturers are designed primarily to produce jobs ultimately in Canada. I would like the Minister to clarify the answer to the question I posed to him yesterday.

Is it not true that the result of the acquisition of Cimtech by Microdynamics Inc. is that, while the research facility will stay in Canada, the essential production jobs will ultimately go to Dallas and in fact the agreement does not prevent that from taking place?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): First, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that such a deal has been made and consummated. Second, if it were, as I said to the Hon. Member, I have assured that any of the undertakings that must be made by recipients of the kind of research support grants the Government makes will be honoured. It is my understanding that the proposition that has been advanced would keep the company in place in Trenton and research would continue there, as would the production of software that is being marketed throughout the world. I do not see what the Hon. Member's concern would be.

EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the question is a very simple one. Money is being provided to a company to produce technology, to produce research and to produce a product, and it is the production of the shoes in this instance which will produce the jobs. The Minister said that the research and the software production will occur in Canada. Is the answer to the question not clearly that the shoes will be produced in Dallas? Is it not about time that the Government recognized that it is rather senseless and will be increasingly senseless, because of new investment rules under free trade, to invest in research and job production in Canada when the jobs will be shipped to the United States?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, I am puzzled. Members of the Opposition cannot have it both ways. They lament the fact that American and foreign companies come to Canada with investment, bringing technology with them, creating jobs in Canada, and that is supposed to be bad. It is also supposed to be bad when we market our own technology in other parts of the world. They cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question in Question Period. Given the hour, I would ask the Hon. Member for Hamilton East to make her question short.

HEALTH

AIDS DISEASE—CONDOM ADVERTISING

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question will be very short. Can the Deputy Prime Minister explain why, in light of the AIDS epidemic that has hit the whole world, the Government has the ridiculous policy that it is illegal in Canada to advertise that condoms can help prevent the transmission of AIDS?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the Minister of National Health and Welfare is out of the House until Monday. I will bring that question to his attention.

I might say to the Hon. Member that the program the Minister adopted a year ago, a $39-million commitment over five years, has been very successful in a number of areas. It always needs improvement like all programs do, but I think the Hon. Member in honesty would agree that the Minister's project has been a very impressive one.

[Translation]

OPPORTUNITY TO ADVERTISE CONDOMS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, on June 19, the federal Government issued a press release stating that ...

[English]

—"latex condoms are effective barriers to the transmission of the AIDS virus". According to the Government's food and drug regulations which were confirmed at a meeting last week, this statement made by the Department of National Health and Welfare is against the law because it is illegal in Canada to say that condoms can help prevent the transmission of AIDS. Why does the Government not bring its policy into the 20th century, throw out this ridiculous law and bring in a comprehensive AIDS policy, instead of making cabinet findings behind closed doors which are not dealing with the problem of AIDS transmission?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned before, the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare will be back on Monday. The Hon. Member can raise that with him at that time. I will take her question under advisement and so advise him.

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to petitions Nos. 332-3210, 332-3223, 332-3239, 332-3267 to 332-3269 inclusive, 332-3283 to 332-3289 inclusive, 332-3295 to 332-3311 inclusive and 332-3317 to 332-3320 inclusive.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-90, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-272, an Act to amend the Food and Drugs Act (food irradiation).

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment to the Food and Drugs Act is to prohibit food irradiation, the importation of irradiated food and the exporting of equipment or materials likely to be used for food irradiation until such time as the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has undertaken studies and research on the effect of food irradiation on human health and environment and made a report to Parliament. The House of Commons would refer the report to a committee or a joint committee and the Governor in Council could not, under this proposed Act, proclaim the expiration of the Act until such time as the committee had tabled its report.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED TAX REFORM

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have here a group of petitions signed by 975 constituents of the great riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in this petition my constituents ask and urge the Government of Canada to amend the tax reform that would have the effect of creating a disaster situation for many Canadian senior citizens, and which would also be disastrous for families, the unemployed, taxpayers on low and modest incomes and young people.

Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to table this petition, and I hope the Government will realize what it has to do and will help my constituents.

EQUALITY RIGHTS—DISCRIMINATION ON THE BASIS OF SEX

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a number of petitions signed by hundreds of people from Vancouver Island. They point out that in February of 1985 the Government ordered the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to prepare a report on equality rights. That committee recommended there be a prohibition of discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation in all areas under federal jurisdiction. The petition requests that the Government move expeditiously to remove this form of discrimination as soon as possible.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—FISHERIES—ALLEGED GOVERNMENT MISMANAGEMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Henderson:

That this House condemn the government for its inept management of Canada's fisheries in Atlantic Canada and its lack of political will to assert Canada's rights in the Canada-France dispute and for its willingness to allow Americans to exploit its weaknesses in order to gain control over processing in the fishing industry.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When debate was interrupted, we were at the question and comment stage on the speech of the Hon. Minister.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, my time had expired but there were a couple of minor points with which I would like to have concluded. However, if it is your judgment that we continue with questions and comments, that is fine.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This morning the House was very gracious in giving a couple of minutes more to the mover of the motion. I am sure it would be the same for the Hon. Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Siddon: I shall be brief, Mr. Speaker.

The question of the Canada-France dispute was raised in the motion of the Hon. Member. I would like to point out that in January we embarked on an important initiative to resolve two outstanding problems, both of which were caused by negligence, we believe, on the part of the Government of the day.

In 1972 the Liberal Government of that time entered into a treaty with France which gave the French fleet unquantified fishing rights within Canadian waters in anticipation of the extension of jurisdiction to the 200-mile limit. Then, when that jurisdiction was extended, the Liberal Government of the day failed to secure from France an arrangement under which the boundaries around St. Pierre and Miquelon would be clearly described and defined, even though, as I understand it, France offered to accept a much smaller boundary than the area of some 180 miles south into the outer mouth of the Gulf of St. Lawrence which France now claims.

We have attempted over this last year to take a firm position with France to end the overfishing and resolve the uncertainties surrounding a vast area of our waters claimed by France so we can turn those resources over to the benefit of our fishermen. After taking many measures through the year, and having witnessed France withdraw from the negotiating table twice, I can assure this House that Canada's position is being well advanced by this Government. Indeed, we will not extend quotas in Canadian waters to French vessels in the 1988 fishing year in the absence of an agreement to refer the St. Pierre and Miquelon boundary issue to a form of international arbitration. I wanted that to be clearly entered on the record.

[Translation]

Second, with respect to free trade with the United States, this Agreement represents a substantial improvement in terms of market access for exporters of Canadian fish. The Agreement gives exporters of Canadian fish a substantial competitive edge over other competitors on the American market.

[English]

The fishing industry of Atlantic Canada relies on access to the U.S. market for 80 per cent of its income. In 1986 that amounted to $1.4 billion worth of exports. This year it will probably exceed $2 billion. Anything that reduces tariffs and allows us to add value to our raw materials in Canada, and at the same time secures access and prevents harassment by unfair countervailing and anti-dumping actions, means dollars in the pockets of our fishermen, our process workers, and every person in Atlantic Canada, and Pacific Canada as well, I might add.

In conclusion, entry into a free trade agreement, spurred by the vision of the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney), is a show of national confidence and the beginning of a future of immense opportunity for all fishermen of Canada. I wanted that to be clearly stated.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Minister's speech with great care as he tried to take all the credit for all the good things happening in the fishery.

Some Hon. Members: Why not?

Mr. Henderson: I think it shows his naiveté as Minister and indicates his understanding of the fishery. We asked the Minister how many years it took to raise codfish, for instance, to maturity. He obviously knows it is at least seven years, sometimes as much as 12. How many years does it take to bring lobsters to the legal size? Seven or eight. How many years for oysters? How many years for mackerel? How many years for herring and other forms of groundfish?

The success of the industry which we are seeing today has nothing to do with the Government or the Minister. It is because of the good management practices and regime implemented back in the late 1970s and early 1980s after we obtained our 200-mile limit. Mind you, we had to put regulations into place and they were not very palatable. Many fishermen would like to catch whatever they can and forget about tomorrow. However, over the years, through education and a sound management regime, fishermen have grown to understand the importance of good management. Therefore, all of the fish going to the market today have nothing to do with the Government.

The other major factor, of course, given the increased value of landings, is the American dollar. The value of that dollar in relation to ours has been very attractive to the Canadian fishing industry in its efforts to compete in the American market.

I just wanted to mention those two things. I also want to thank the Minister once again, as I did yesterday, for the harbour work he announced. I say "announced" because it has not yet started. I hope it will be followed through and I will be after the Minister daily to make sure it is. As the Minister knows, I have made numerous requests for work in my riding. I was also glad to hear his announcement regarding Miminegash. We are very pleased with that. However, where is Tignish and Milligan's Wharf and the work I have asked to be done there? We have not yet had an announcement.

As well, is the Minister going to make the 30 crab licences, he referred to, permanent licences rather than the 14 which are now permits? Crab fishermen in my area want to know right away. He also mentioned that we had no habitat management policy in the previous Government. He said that in fact none would have been implemented. However, I can tell the Hon. Minister that the habitat policy was started. This is the discussion paper that was presented on August 2, 1983.

The Minister spoke about GATT and all the spin-offs from processing and value-added. Certainly I agree we should proceed in this way, but when I directed a question about this to the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) on November 17, she said that I was confused. She said that, I am referring of course to the GATT panel decision which has been leaked, it had nothing to do with the free trade agreement negotiated with the United States.

An article by Christopher Waddell in The Globe and Mail today states very clearly that Canada also wants the final text to indicate that it retains the right to ensure that fish caught in Canadian waters are processed in the country. He went on to say that issue had gained more importance since this week's GATT preliminary decision supporting the U.S. claim that Canadian restrictions on export of unprocessed west coast fish, herring and salmon, violated international trade rules.

The Minister knows that under the free trade agreement we have absolutely no protection against GATT. We have no protection whatsoever against the omnibus trade bills that are before Congress at this time.

Finally, the Minister was taking all the credit for getting out of the Canada-EEC agreement this year. The agreement which we signed in 1983 was a five-year agreement, which automatically expires at the end of this year.

The 200-mile zone was a negotiated settlement. We were seeking access to fish in the European markets. This agreement was made at that time to achieve market access and to gain support for fisheries management inside and outside the 200-mile zone. That was solid, sound negotiations about which this Government unfortunately knows nothing about.

The Government and the Minister operate with the spines of jelly fish when dealing with other countries. I want the Minister to respond to some of those comments.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, while the rules generally require that I answer only one question, I have a long list of answers which could take the rest of the time available. However, I am glad that the Hon. Member has asked these questions.

Let me first deal with the question of the EEC agreement. It was this Government, myself as Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) who decided not to renew the EEC long-term agreement. The Hon. Member's Government had renewed it twice previously because it did not have the guts to tell the French and the Europeans that those fish were there for our fishermen. It is not unlike the way they sold out our interests by giving the French unquantified rights to fish in our waters, and the way they failed to address the question of the boundary when there was a much more modest proposal from France as to what the boundary should be.

The Hon. Member says there is no protection against GATT. It was a Liberal Government which arranged for Canada to become a member of GATT back in 1947, and it was Liberal Governments which consistently supported, as we do, our undertaking to live up to our obligations to the GATT. Furthermore, which Leader of which Party suggested that we should not negotiate a bilateral trade agreement with the United States, but should take comfort in the GATT and live up to and abide by the decisions of the GATT? This hypocrisy cannot continue.

Under this agreement, the Government is securing specialized access to the United States market for fisheries products, access that does not exist in the absence of this agreement. It provides a privileged relationship for our Canadian fishing industry in the largest market available to us, that other nations do not enjoy.

Let me turn to the question of good management. I am pleased that the Hon. Member acknowledges that many good things are happening in the industry. I admit that the quota management system has evolved to a point where it has allowed for a certain stability and predictability in the fishery.

The Hon. Member points out that it takes several years for various fish species, whether it is lobster or cod, to reach maturity. The fact is that there have been quota declines in the last two years, largely because the Government of which he was a member set higher than acceptable quotas in some years. As a result of ignoring scientific advice, they caused a decline in the landings.

The reason this fishery is so healthy is because of the entrepreneurial instinct and the open approach to investment and trade that we have cultivated while ensuring that the ownership of the right to harvest in Canadian waters remains in Canadian hands. That is clearly spelled out in the Canada-U.S. trade agreement.

We are seeing the evidence of a much more dynamic, competition-driven and optimistic group of fishermen and entrepreneurs who are becoming involved in more diversified kinds of processing and harvesting. I mentioned the examples of silver hake, northern shrimp, offshore clam and offshore tuna. That additional strength is helping the core industry to succeed the way it is.

Finally, let me deal with the question of the harbour work. I want the Hon. Member to know that with the additional project I announced today at Miminegash, over $2 million of harbour improvements in that Hon. Member's riding, it represents over one-third of all of the projects I announced for the Province of P.E.I.

My Parliamentary Secretary meets with me regularly to ensure that we look after the interests of fishermen of Atlantic Canada, including those in his own province. He has ensured that these priorities are met, notwithstanding the lack of attention that the Government of which the Hon. Member for Egmont was a part gave to these necessities for all those years since the end of the Second World War.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister said that he was painting us a great picture. That is not the case.

For example, there are the advisory committees on both coasts. I will deal with the one on the West Coast because I am more familiar with it.

The Minister and his Government have politicized the advisory process by putting into the advisory capacity on the over-all management of the industry some of the most partisan politicians one can find in British Columbia. In many cases, those individuals are driven by self-interest and do not represent groups.

Unfortunately, this has led to the loss of credibility not only in the advisory committee but in the Minister himself. While I do not suggest that the Minister is without credibility, because I know how he works in the House of Commons and recognize his concerns about the industry, British Columbians will have that perception.

It is also unfortunate that there will be no continuity in the committee because those people will be replaced immediately after the next election.

Unfortunately, the politicizing of the advisory process will only gain momentum. I urge the Minister to immediately cease this policy and appoint those who are duly representative and accountable to their organizations, because the present situation is destructive for the industry and the Government.

• (1230)

Secondly, I am deeply disturbed that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) appointed another Minister to respond to questions. I do not care if he is in Alberta, on the trip of the Queen Charlotte Islands or in Newfoundland, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) should have that authority and accountability to answer those questions. I do not think anyone in this House appreciates the move of the Prime Minister placing another Minister in charge of that responsibility. I do not say this with criticism of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. I simply say that if the Prime Minister feels he is not doing the job, get rid of him. If he is doing the job, back him so that there is accountability and some confidence in the business of Canada, which really does not now exist.

My third comment is about free trade, and then I will sit down. The Minister is now contradicting himself. He promised there would not be one single job lost in British Columbia because of the GATT decision. He knows that is absolutely wrong. He heard it from the fisheries industries on the coast of British Columbia. He has now heard it from the Pacific trollers who want to take their product across the line unprocessed because they will get higher prices. If the Government does not fight that decision and win, millions of dollars of product will go across the line and we will lose massive processing aspects in salmon and herring. We absolutely must win.

The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans must band together and turn this decision of GATT around at the committee level. We must not be faced with the prospect of our product leaving British Columbia in unprocessed form. I know the Minister supports that belief and I hope he will be able to convince the Government that that is the correct course to take.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate those three questions. First, on the question of the advisory process, some very serious allegations have been made. What we did initially under the leadership of the Speaker of the House when he was Minister of Fisheries and Oceans was to create a policy advisory group on the Atlantic Coast called the Atlantic Regional Council or ARC. I can assure the Hon. Member that on that council sit people who carry, for the most part, no political affiliation, and those who might, carry affiliations of all three political parties.

We had a problem with the equivalent of PARC, which was not a policy group, but more a management advisory group. Eighteen of the 20 positions were held by representatives of the commercial fishery, that is, fishermen. However, the native sector had abandoned the organization as did, in the latter stages, the recreational fishing representation. It was then totally inappropriate to give proper representation to all of the the important policy issues on which I, as Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, required advice.

We created a PARC on the West Coast, not a national PARC although we commend that decision as well, but a Pacific Area Regional Council, the equivalent of ARC, which consists of 12 members and a chairperson, thirteen in total, appointed to be my principle source of advice on policy issues, and appointed to represent people who are respected for their eminent stature and knowledge in various parts of the fishery, commercial, native, recreational and general interest, as well as the business aspect. Those selections were based on advice to me from many organizations, notwithstanding the fact that the United Fishery and Allied Workers Union refused to offer a nominee, and notwithstanding the fact that the large seine boat sector declined an invitation. Those are matters I expect to adjust in future.

On my Pacific Area Regional Council, again there would not be very many of those 13 individuals who would have a political affiliation, but of those who do would be representative of all three political parties. I could not live with a council where the members were changing and always had to report back to their organizations to call a special meeting to obtain the organization's consent, and to have a system of voting where some groups who could not have it their way had to leave because their views were always vetoed. I have a created a consensus group of advisory people, much as the federal Cabinet or a political caucus operates. They do not advise me when they do not come to me with consensus. That is what I seek and that is why this new advisory structure is so important to the future of the Pacific coast fishery.

In regard to the point the Hon. Member implies about the Prime Minister appointing a Minister, I was appointed two years ago this week as Minister of Fisheries and Oceans for Canada. I give my undivided attention and devotion to these duties and have the full support of the Prime Minister to that effect. No one has been appointed to speak for me, notwithstanding the fact that from time to time in the House Acting Ministers are designated when Ministers cannot be in the House. I do not even know what the Hon. Member is implying. It seems to be something mischievous or scurrilous. I fully carry out all of my duties as the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans for all Canada.

Finally, I can assure the Hon. Member that the objective of the Canada—U.S. trade agreement is to find means, by the reduction and elimination of tariffs and the unbiased application of U.S. trade remedy laws, to gain more added value, more investment and employment opportunities in the fishery of Canada. Anything that operates to the detriment of that will be opposed by this Government and is clearly protected against in the Canada-U.S. trade agreement, notwithstanding the GATT panel recommendation to which the Hon. Member referred.

My colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade, who will speak later, will elaborate on this. Many GATT countries use measures which are accepted under the GATT and consistent with the obligations of those countries under the GATT to ensure that supply of raw materials, in this case fish, is available on a priority basis to serve the needs of established plants and industries in their countries. We expect to enjoy the same privilege all the other members of GATT have in that respect.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): The matter before us is extremely serious. Before I commence my remarks I would like to deal with some of the comments made by the Minister. He suggested, and I think perhaps somewhat over hastily, that the remarks were intended as scurrilous and mischievous. When we dealt with the matter of the Canada-France issue, the Hon. Member from St. John's was designated as the speaker on that particular issue, the individual to respond to questions—

Mr. Siddon: By whom? When? How?

Mr. Skelly: —and I think, without offering any offence to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, or anyone else, people in this House were concerned about that. There was not a clear explanation of why that was done and I think a lot of us would rather have dealt with the individual who was responsible for the fishing industry and who was responsible under law—

Mr. Siddon: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. That point is absolutely incorrect. The Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and I have been designated to jointly respond to questions relating to that issue. It depends whether it is a question of boundaries, international law, regional interests or fisheries. I have never failed to respond to a question directed to me by any member of the Opposition on this question.

Mr. Skelly: I certainly do appreciate the clarification, Mr. Speaker, but the comment still stands. Hopefully, when we are dealing with fisheries issues in this House the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans will in fact be the person who responds and who is in fact held accountable for that extremely important area. With his assurance, I will carefully watch in the future how this matter unfolds.

I would like to follow on with some of the unfortunate aspects of the Minister's speech. With respect to the nature of the partisanship in this Government, to which I had alluded, in the appointment of the Pacific Area Regional Council, we have now seen a politicization of the advice process. The previous Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, the individual who has distinguished himself as a very competent and respected Speaker in the House of Commons, was in fact a very respected Minister of Fisheries. The Minister was open, very knowledgeable and concerned about environmental matters. He was concerned with all matters and aspects of the fishery. Had that Minister continued in the role of appointing the advisory committee we may have seen the direction continue in that the advice and the advisory committee itself would not be politicized. The individuals who have to live with the results of that advice and the management plans that are put into place would not feel that they had been exploited politically and that the management plan had come about as a result of partisan advice.

I do not say that with malicious intent. It is my hope that it will be recognized and that the difficulties that are being created in the fishing community as a result of people's feelings in that direction can be rectified as the advisory committee grows and develops. I hope that it will not be stunted as it is today. I hope that criticisms against it will be examined and that improvements will be made to it so that there can be growing confidence with respect to the types of decisions that come out of it.

It is also my hope that as of the day after the next election every member of the advisory committee will not be fired and a whole new partisan group of individuals appointed to give political advice on management programs. Personally, I see that as a very dangerous trend. I know that many people in the west coast fisheries also see that as a very serious trend. I think it can be rectified quickly.

The Minister also alluded to the two approaches to an advisory committee. Of course, the dilemma is that to bring about some kind of consensus, or at least widespread support for management programs, is something which will never be. Dissension will always be there because of the underlying principle involved, that there are not enough fish and it is the fault of the Tories. Prior to 1984 there were not enough fish and it was the fault of the Liberals. Those fish were always being misallocated. One group was always getting a better deal than the other. Even when the NDP forms the Government those problems will not leave us.

What I think has to happen in this particular situation is that the advisory groups must represent the major players in the fisheries. If a major player group is involved in the fisheries and has no say on that committee, or at least no effective say, then it will not be content with the management results that come from it. When major players are eliminated the entire Government and the Parliament of Canada will be a target for constant and ongoing criticism with respect to what is going on. That is not in the interest of anyone. The people who are on the committee must enjoy the confidence of the group they represent.

The other option is the one which has been chosen by the Minister. The previous Government chose this approach as well, although it was a bit more careful to ensure broader representation. It had the wise person approach to the committee. What is done is that individuals who are not accountable to organizations but who have broad knowledge of the industry and certain aspects of it are selected. Or, perhaps, they have broad knowledge of the economy of the west coast fishery, let us say. I have been told that a wise Tory is a contradiction in terms. But giving the benefit of the doubt in this particular case, there are a number of wise individuals who have been appointed to this committee.

Unfortunately, in selecting individuals who are not accountable to organizations we end up with a situation in which people think that they were selected on the basis of their political affiliation and their partisan view. I see that the Minister is shaking his head. It is possible that I might be incorrect. I live a very sheltered life on the coast of British Columbia. I am not widely known as a partisan individual. I do not become involved in this type of thing regularly. But there are those cynics out there who believe that the organization has now turned into one which is very political and partisan. I urge the Minister to recognize those criticisms and the kind of dissension that is created by them.

I suggest that he move toward developing a more mature committee. In my humble opinion the committee should move toward credible representation of the major organizations which there are on the coast of British Columbia. If they can win the support of their organizations for management plans, then there will be much broader agreement in the community.

The Minister also mentioned that he was very concerned about native issues. He said he wanted native representation on the committee. It has been noted that this has caused a very major problem. What we have to see is a very responsive move by the federal Government with respect to the issue of land claims. In British Columbia, many fishermen are suggesting that the federal Government is driving a wedge between the native people and the fishermen to provoke conflict. It has been suggested that in the political management of the fisheries it is in the Government's interest to have various sectors of the industry fighting with each other. What happens is that the federal Government correctly begins to negotiate with the native people on the coast of British Columbia about their access and rights to fishing. Then it actively supports the defence leagues against the Indian fishery to become involved in advertising programs and, basically, to inflame this discussion, thus moving it to an almost racial conflict.

What has happened is that we do have a full-blown conflict between native people and a number of fishermen on the coast of British Columbia. Other voices are saying that what is at fault here, and what has created problems in the fishing industry, is the Government in its desire to divide and rule. It is dividing those who are natural allies, those who should be working together in the industry. It is doing so in a provocative and, in my opinion, dangerous manner.

What should be happening is that the Government should be moving on a broad based settlement of native land claims. Fishermen are asking that that happen. They do not want to see fish as the only currency of settlement of claim, or as the interim settlement of claim. They want to see a fair deal for the native people. They do not want to see what happened on Lyell Island happen again. Nor do they want to see what happened on Meares Island or in the Stein Valley of British Columbia happen again. It is being said that the Social Credit Government in Victoria and, indeed, the federal Government in Ottawa in working together are actually driving wedges between native people and loggers, native people and fishermen, in order to start community conflicts instead of getting people to work together. In the fishing industry it is critical. There is clear evidence that the federal Government has been supporting both sides of the issue. It can only be doing that in the same way as the classic 20th century arms merchant who makes money by selling guns to both sides in a war. This is totally unacceptable.

With respect to the management of the fisheries, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) should be demanding of the Government in the proper management of that portfolio that native people be given a broad range of economic opportunities to which they are entitled under the settlement to aboriginal claim. It is absolutely imperative. So when the Minister mentions fisheries and the rights of aboriginal peoples, these are the kinds of matters we are expecting to hear from him. We want to hear that consensus and unity will occur.

We do not want to hear about the divide and conquer technique that has been used by the Ministry of Fisheries and Oceans for years and years. We do not want to hear about the politicization of advisory committees with partisan political individuals with one point of view on that committee, but about representatives of organizations attempting to strive for consensus in the committee and consensus between the major groups and players on the coast.

The Minister spent a great deal of time on the Small Craft Harbours Program. I agree with the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) when he states that he is very pleased to see this program come forward. There is no one in the House or the country who is not pleased to see the beginning of spending funds on this very necessary infrastructure.

I am not partisan or political, and well known for that fact—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Skelly: I do not have any cynical view of what the Government has done. I see that my colleague from Mount Royal completely agrees with me. We view this in a very positive manner. We do not think that the Conservatives are coming to an election. We do not believe that. The absolute neglect in the last three years of the Small Craft Harbours Program has been atrocious. Small craft harbours were in such a weakened state that they were in danger of destruction from the elements. Disruption of the fisheries were occurring. A fork-lift could not be driven across many areas. I have heard of winches coming off the wharf. Wharfs have burned down, and nothing has been done about it.

We were told that it was the Liberals—the filthy organization from the past, the ogre that ran the Government for millions of years—only for political reasons had built harbours. They had never added enough maintenance budget. Therefore, it was the responsibility of the Conservative Government to cut down on the number of harbours. It was going to close x number and reduce the capacity of others. It was going to privatize some and put the rest under harbour commissions. It was going to cut staff and budgets. This was having to be done because of this filthy, nefarious organization called the Liberal Government of previous years.

The Conservatives had a big dog and pony show with beautiful slides and overheads. When I saw the show, I was completely convinced about the evil nature of the previous Liberal Government, that staff needed to be eliminated, budgets had to be cut, and the harbours had to be cut down. When I returned to my own riding, my eyes were opened and I saw that the stories were false. The harbours were falling apart, there was disruption in the fishing industry, and there was a desperate need for infrastructure and facilities to service the new aquaculture industry. The Government was saying, "Sorry, we cannot do this because the Liberals have shafted the country. They have cut the budget. They have cut the staff". There was a desperate need to get those facilities in place.

I wish to congratulate the Government for making a three-year leap from the 19th century to the 20th century in the Small Craft Harbours Program. I congratulate the Minister for taking the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Mazankowski) and rapping them between the eyes and attempting to get them into the 20th century where the role of Government is to assist in the development of exciting new projects to ensure that people can continue to work.

As I mentioned, the unfortunate thing for the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Mr. Comeau) is that there is still an enormous amount of damage in his riding and an enormous amount of work that has to be done. The Hon. Member is satisfied to sit here and state that that is enough, the Government has done enough in his riding and he does not want any more. He stated that yesterday. I am appalled at that type of contempt—

Mr. Comeau: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wish to correct the record or the impression made by the Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly). He stated that there have been enough wharf repairs in my riding. By no means have there been enough repairs. I want much more. I appreciate that the Hon. Member wishes to assist in getting more wharf repairs, and that I will be receiving my wharf repairs by the time that I am done.

Mr. Skelly: To see another Conservative Member rise from the back of the cave, wake up and defend his constituents after being prodded by a new Democrat is an encouraging sign. I will continue to do this with the Hon. Member for South West Nova. I am sure that because of our efforts his constituency will be better served.

I hope that my constituency can receive as much money as the Hon. Member's constituency. To my knowledge, the coast of British Columbia has not received as much money as the Hon. Member's constituency and it should also be fairly treated.

I would ask that the Hon. Member stand up in his place and chew the hide off the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and tell him to make it an equitable program so that those harbours are not fixed to the amount that is in place, but that they are repaired to the full extent necessary to make the fishing industry effective, and that the coast of British Columbia is also treated with equity. I look forward to the Hon. Member's statements to the Minister of Fisheries.

Mr. Holtmann: First, I wish to say it is the first time since I have been elected that I have spoken from this side of the House and faced the Opposition head on. It is a wonderful feeling not to look into their ears but to look into their eyes.

Having heard the comments of the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly), I think he unfairly criticized the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon), in his deliverance, about the work done by the Minister and previous Ministers for small craft harbours. I can advise the Hon. Member that on no fewer than 20 occasions I have announced improvements to small craft harbours since I was elected in 1984. Last year $1.8 million was spent on a major harbour repair. If the Hon. Member feels that that is doing little, or something at the last moment, I would advise that much foresight and planning went into that. He should recognize that there are probably as many harbours inland in the heart of the Province of Manitoba as there are on the coast of British Columbia. Many people do not realize that. There is a large fishing industry which is growing, and clearly we are very capable of looking after it and addressing the problems it faces.

My hon. colleague also observed that the job is not completed. I think that the important point is that the Hon. Member should know this Government did not go out in some reckless fashion, like the former administration was used to, and spend money on different activities with regard to Fisheries and Oceans such as a harbour or yacht club which were not needed. If the record is checked, it will be seen that the money of Canadians was foolishly spent in areas that clearly never asked for something—perhaps only for patronage sake.

This Government has made some major changes in the manner it has spent money. It brought down a Budget that is starting to reduce the deficit. It is unfair to criticize the Government because there are still some harbours that are not completed or repaired. It has been clearly illustrated, even by Members in the Opposition who represent those areas, that there is still work to be done. I do not think the Government can be criticized for not looking at this in a more prudent manner than was the case before.

I would like the Hon. Member to stand in his place and tell the House, with that criticism he directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, how much more money would he spend if he was the Government? The NDP has great aspirations of becoming the Government. It has a great way of solving the harbours problem in Canada. What will it do? Will it immediately triple the budget and repair every broken harbour? Is that what it will do?

To criticize the Minister for the way that he has handled the problems is clearly not totally without foundation. We will have to see what the NDP is going to do. It will be going to go to the people when the Government goes to the people, and I am sure the NDP will have a policy. What is the policy of the NDP? What is it going to be?

Mr. Skelly: I think the previous speaker completely justified my presentation and destroyed his own argument when he stated that my attack on the Minister was not without foundation, that in fact the harbours had been trashed in Canada. Of course, I would agree with him absolutely.

• (1300)

As a representative of my Party in the House today, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member on his move across the Chamber. We recognize that that was not without some serious concern for safety on the Government's part because of random attacks by the Member on people on his own side of the House. We are hoping that he will move forward. In the far reaches of the back-benches of the Conservative Government we recognize that there is not enough oxygen and that the quality of presentation sometimes is not as good as it should be, so we would hope that that Hon. Member would indeed move farther down into the lower altitude and be provided with more oxygen before he speaks.

However, I would like to deal with the immediate problems in the Selkirk—Interlake riding and along the lakes of Manitoba where there is a very important fishery. We support the spending of money in that Hon. Member's riding because it has important harbours which were left to deteriorate over that three-year period. It was not a matter of careful planning; small craft harbours people in the regional office have planned their brains out. They know where the damage is. They know where harbour infrastructure is required. They have known it for years. They were even so bold as to go to the Department of Public Works and say, "Draw us up some proposals for these repairs, figure out what the dredging will cost, and show us the infrastructure cost to get these things in action and keep them repaired". Public Works officials came back with it all. They also talked with contractors about providing support services like water, electricity, highway access, and hydro—the whole works. All that was in place.

The Minister did not need to plan it. The people have been screaming for it for a decade in many cases. We had a situation where the brakes were put on. It was not by the Minister. The Minister is an excellent fellow. I commend him. Of Ministers in any Government in Canada he has done an excellent job. However, the Government and the previous Hon. Member for Yukon put on the brakes and drove this economy to a stop. It suddenly realized that that cannot be done in harbours areas, because the more damage created in that period the more it cost the taxpayers. A completely "up to speed" harbour quite often defends itself and deteriorates much more slowly in terms of damage from the elements.

If the Tory Government had moved forward more quickly, and had Treasury Board been more receptive to common sense, we would not have had to jump in suddenly, prior to the federal election about which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has been hinting and fooling around in the last couple of weeks. Indeed, if that money had not been spent now, many Conservatives would not only have been defeated, as they will be, on free trade, but they would have been defeated on the small craft harbours issue. We heard that time after time as we travelled throughout Atlantic Canada.

At any rate, once again I congratulate the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) on his lofty promotion to the back bench on the Conservative Government side of the House. I will certainly write a letter to the Prime Minister to urge that he be moved forward into the lower benches.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I have a very brief comment which I want to make to the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly). At the beginning of his speech he made an unfortunate intervention which begs to be corrected.

He said that he was of the opinion that there was no fishing going on in the constituency of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. I must correct that because Glengarry—Prescott—Russell is the home of the famous, and I should say internationally acclaimed, Lancaster perch from Lancaster, Ontario. Granted, it does not employ several thousands of people as does the fishing industry in other constituencies, nevertheless it is an important livelihood for a number of my constituents. I thought it was my duty to bring it to the attention of the House.

Perhaps I should utilize this occasion to remind Hon. Members on all sides of the House that in the unlikely event that some Hon. Member might not have had the pleasure of partaking in Lancaster perch, they are quite welcome to tend to this matter urgently. They should come to Lancaster, Ontario in the riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell where there are actually roadside stands similar to chip or French fry stands which sell Lancaster perch. It is a delicacy in our area, and I would want all Hon. Members to be aware of it, in the unlikely event that perhaps some may not have had the pleasure of tasting Lancaster perch.

I am sure the Hon. Member himself must have tasted it because he is an authority on fish and no one who is an authority on fish could be so, without having tasted the great Lancaster perch. I thought I would bring it to the attention of the Hon. Member, to your attention, Mr. Speaker, and to the attention of all Canadians who may not have had the pleasure of tasting Lancaster perch.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for any misunderstanding. I knew that Glengarry—Prescott—Russell was the scene of a great perch fishery. Indeed, that had been brought to my attention by the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake the other day who was on his way into the area to do some fishing and had a case of dynamite.

I am glad the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) had the opportunity to bring this matter to the attention of the House, and I thank him for it.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments about the excellent motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson), or we might say the Hon. Member for Prince Edward Island.

The Hon. Member has attacked the Government on various fronts, and rightfully so, for its neglect of the inshore fishery, for its absolute and total disregard for the interests of Canadian fishermen in the France-Canada dispute, and for its lack of political will, as he put it, in what happened concerning the GATT ruling in which the United States is saying that Canada no longer has the right to process its own fish and to create its own jobs.

In other words, the Hon. Member for Prince Edward Island has put on record for all times what the fishermen of Canada think of the Government of Canada.

Earlier I listened very carefully to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon). I must admit that he appeared to be somebody who was greatly concerned about fishermen and the fishery and who wanted to present the best possible picture of what the Government of Canada was doing for the people of Canada, for the fishermen of Canada, for jobs in Canada, and for the entire future of Atlantic Canada, the West Coast of Canada, and everywhere else that we have thousands, thousands, and thousands of families who depend upon the fishery. We have them all along the coastline of the Province of Quebec. We have them all along the coastline of the Province of New Brunswick. We have them all around Prince Edward Island, all down the Nova Scotia coast, all around Newfoundland, and right up and down the coastline of British Columbia.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans stood in the House and said, "Look what we have done in the Canada-France dispute". Just imagine this, Mr. Speaker. We have a number of small islands off the south coast of Newfoundland or the east coast of Canada. Those islands are about 13 nautical miles off the coast, about 16 miles off the coast, or about 24 kilometres off the coast of Newfoundland. The two populated centres of St. Pierre and Miquelon have a population of about 6,000 people, give or take 50. There are 5,400 people in St. Pierre and about 600 in Miquelon. Their unemployment rate is 10 per cent. Their only resource, apart from a few sheep, cows, goats, and a little agriculture, is the fishery; their entire resource is the fishery.

Let me refer to what they caught last year in Canadian waters, and this is the great dispute. The Minister of Fisheries stands and says, "We don't know where Canadian waters are". We are here to tell him today that we know where Canadian waters are. Canadian waters are around Canada. How dare the Minister of Fisheries stand up in the Chamber and say, "We don't know where Canadian waters are" or "we don't know who owns the waters off the coast of Canada"!

• (1310)

Just imagine that, Mr. Speaker. It has been said a dozen times in this Chamber by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), by the Minister of Fisheries, and by the Acting Minister of Fisheries, External Affairs, Transport—everything under the sun—I am referring to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie). We do not know who owns those waters off the coast of Canada so we cannot send in our fisheries patrol vessels to arrest those people who are breaking the law 200 miles off the coast of Canada. The Government of Canada says, "We don't know who owns these waters and, therefore, we cannot go out there and board a vessel to arrest somebody who is breaking the law. But we can if that somebody", says the Government of Canada, "is a Newfoundlander. Yes, we can arrest that person if he is a Nova Scotian or if he is from Prince Edward Island—if he is a spud islander as they call them sometimes—Yes, we can arrest him if he is a Quebecer or if he has come all the way around Canada and North America from British Columbia to get there". We can arrest him, and, Mr. Speaker, we do. The Government of Canada, that great strong Government of Canada, which stands up for the rights of Canadian fishermen, arrests people regularly if they break the law. If they are in excess of the quota allocation, the Government can arrest them.

We have had cases under this Government where a boat has been arrested for being 64 feet 10 inches long when it should have been 65 feet long in the disputed zone. We have had cases where Canadian boats have gone out and fished alongside American boats, Spanish boats, Portuguese boats and boats from China. The Canadian was arrested because the quota was gone for Canadians, but the quota was not gone for the foreign boats.

That sort of thing takes place right on the nose and the tail of the Grand Banks. They called them once upon a time the Grand Banks of Newfoundland. But the nose and tail of the Banks off the coast of Canada belong today, under this administration, to every foreign country that can send a boat there to fish. Canadians are not allowed to fish there because of a decree and a Cabinet decision by this Government, and they are not allowed to fish there because the Government says that for conservation reasons we will put a freeze on and we are hoping all the other countries will agree. If they do not agree, we can't arrest them but we will certainly arrest our own Canadian boats.

Getting back to St. Pierre and Miquelon—

Mr. Crosbie: It is about time you got back there.

Mr. Baker: St. Pierre and Miquelon with 6,000 population—

Mr. Crosbie: Get back to Gander.

Mr. Baker: Get back to Gander. Let us go to Fogo, just north of that. It is 18 miles off the coast. St. Pierre and Miquelon is 16 miles off the coast. Fogo Island and St. Pierre and Miquelon have roughly the same population. Now let us look at how much fish they caught last year. Fogo Island caught 24 million pounds and St. Pierre and Miquelon caught about 22 million pounds. There is a very low unemployment rate on both islands. One would assume that each of the populations on those islands would have equal rights and that the needs of Fogo Island off the north coast of Newfoundland would have the same rights as St. Pierre and Miquelon off the south coast of Newfoundland. Equal industries, equal people, equal distance from the mainland, that is from the mainland of Newfoundland. But what do we see, Mr. Speaker? We see that Canadian fishermen, Canadian people who work on the Canadian island are subject to Canadian law on quotas. We see that whoever comes and fishes under the guise of being registered in St. Pierre and Miquelon, of being under the French registry carrying a French licence, can fish all they want without being touched. We are not allowed to board the boats and have a look at what they have on board because the Canadian Government under this administration says, "We don't know who owns these waters".

The solution to St. Pierre and Miquelon is quite simple. The solution lies in what happened back in 1967 when France was objecting to a group of islands off its coast. The circumstances are similar. The islands belong to Britain. France said, "You only deserve eight miles, seven miles".

Mr. Price: Six miles.

Mr. Baker: Six miles.

Mr. Crosbie: Try for five, George.

Mr. Baker: The matter went to arbitration and the international court ruled, like any other international court would rule, like every other court had ruled, like every other case that has ever been reported under international law ruled. That country off the coast of France, when France argued less than eight miles, was given an eight to nine mile territorial sea to fish in and control over that area—I am talking about the Channel Islands. That was not too long ago, Mr. Speaker. Now the shoe is on the other foot and France has a small group of islands off the coast of Canada and France demands 200 miles. What does Canada do? Canada does not say no.

Mr. Price: Twelve.

Mr. Baker: Canada says, "All right, we will declare it a disputed zone". The Minister of Fisheries said a moment ago in this Chamber, "They are not allowed to fish in Canadian waters". That is what he said. That is what the Prime Minister said and what the Minister of Transport said, "not allowed to fish in Canadian waters". I can tell you this, Mr. Speaker, yes, they are. Just forget the disputed zone off the south coast of Canada for a moment. We have a zone going out 200 miles that feeds thousands upon thousands upon thousands of Canadian families. It allows them to have money for their children. That zone takes care of Canadians, some of whom have now been kicked out of the fishery. They have 50 foot brand new boats and loans from the fisheries loans board. They had their licences cancelled this past year in this area called 3PS off the south coast of Newfoundland, and the federal Government said, "We will have to give you permits from now on month by month". Why? Because France is overfishing. Just imagine, France is overfishing.

This particular zone, which runs all along the south coast of Newfoundland, today is almost a disaster area in the Canadian fishery.

As I was saying, there is no fishing in Canadian waters. This year the French for the first time in Canadian history are allowed to go up off the Labrador coast and fish in zones 2G and 2H.

Mr. Price: Wrong.

Mr. Baker: "Wrong", says the Hon. Member across the way.

Mr. Price: Not for the first time.

Mr. Baker: For the first time in Canadian history, they have an allocation to themselves in 2G and 2H off the coast of Labrador. I have heard the Minister of Fisheries and I have heard the Prime Minister in this Chamber say, "Well, you know, we are going to give them that fish up there as an interim measure to get them back to the bargaining table because Canadians don't want it because the ground is too rotten at the bottom of the ocean. You cannot haul a seine through it. You cannot haul a trawl through it because the ground is too rotten". That is utter nonsense. That is the spawning ground for the entire northern fishery, the entire stock that we call the northern cod stock. The northern cod stock is located in the riding of the Minister of Transport. The northern cod stock is in the riding of the Hon. Member for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception (Mr. Johnson). The northern cod stock is in Gander—Twillingate. The northern cod stock is in Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador.

• (1320)

When people hear on radio or television reference to the northern cod stock or when they hear some Hon. Members talk about the northern cod stock, they think that that is codfish that is way up North somewhere where no one lives except for a few Newfoundlanders who hunt seals. That is wrong. The northern cod stock goes right from the Avalon Peninsula down around St. John's and right along the coastline of Newfoundland in every single bay and inlet.

If a person wanted to catch a codfish from the northern cod stock, he would get on a plane, go to St. John's, Newfoundland, get off at the airport, go out through Belle Isle to Torbay or somewhere, put a line over the side of the wharf and hook a codfish. He would then have a codfish from the northern cod stock.

There is this misconception that the northern cod stock is way up North somewhere. It is not. It is right around the coastline of Newfoundland and Labrador.

I am not now talking about the French who live in St. Pierre and Miquelon. I am talking about the French from France.

Has anyone ever argued against allowing the people of St. Pierre and Miquelon enough fish to harvest for themselves, thus allowing them to employ themselves? No, no one has ever argued against that. One would have to be crazy to say that the people of St. Pierre and Miquelon do not have a right to live. Of course they do, they have an historic right to exist off that resource which lies off the coast of Canada.

These great big ships called the Metropolitan Fleet with their fancy equipment, their fancy gear, their on-board freezing facilities and all of their modern technology come over and scoop up millions and millions of pounds of fish. That is what we are talking about now. That is the fleet that the people in St. Pierre and Miquelon detest. That is the fleet over which they call public meetings. They say that they must do something against the Government of France because the Government of Canada lacks the political will, as the Hon. Member who presented this motion said, to do anything about it.

Add to that the new horizons of the French Government, not of the people of St. Pierre and Miquelon but of the French Government. This year in St. Malo alone, where the Minister of External Affairs sent a letter guaranteeing jobs for years to come, 2,500 people worked in the fish plants from the fish they gathered off the coast of Newfoundland.

This year, the French fleet is fishing on 2G and 2H. This year there is an interim fishery. Granted, there is no interim fishery for 1988, that is true. The Minister of Transport made that quite clear. He drew that distinction, but the Minister of Fisheries did not a few moments ago.

On top of that, we have that poor, unfortunate Tory Government of Newfoundland. Amid all of this frustration felt by the inshore fishermen of Newfoundland, the Government of Newfoundland went to work and applied for licences for what is called the middle-distance fleet, another bunch of new ships to be launched in order to take away the fishing resource that we do not have off the coast of Newfoundland.

In conclusion, I must congratulate the Hon. Member for Egmont for putting forward such a sensible resolution. I do hope that all Hon. Members and even members of the Progressive Conservative Parties will vote totally in favour of the motion.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment or two to make and even a question or two to ask the honourable toothsome gentleman. I must say, however, that I am afraid that he did not cook up very much in his remarks. There is not much we can get our teeth into. As a matter of fact, what he had to say was as toothless as a tomcod.

The hon. gentleman never made one sensible point. I would like him to deal with some of these other questions. I did not hear one offer of an answer or a solution from him.

The Hon. Member mentioned the arbitration between England and France in connection with the Channel Islands dispute. That case went to arbitration because the United Kingdom and France agreed that it would go to arbitration. Surely the hon. gentleman must realize that for some years now, both the Government he was elected to represent and the present Government have been attempting to convince France that it should go to arbitration about the territorial boundaries surrounding St. Pierre and Miquelon, but France refused to do so.

Would the hon. gentleman enlighten us on how he will force France to go to arbitration if France says that it does not wish to go to arbitration? There can only be arbitration if both parties agree to that arbitration. What is his solution to that?

If he had a solution to that problem, why did he not produce it when the Trudeau administration was in power through all of the years between 1968 and 1984? If he did offer that solution then, he might explain to the House why that Government did not act upon it.

While the hon. gentleman is dealing with that question and while we are on the subject of Canada and France, would he explain to the House why his Liberal Government in 1972 entered into the 1972 treaty between Canada and France that gave the French the right to fish in Canadian waters? He says that he knows where Canadian waters are. The Liberals must have known where Canadian waters were then if they know where Canadian waters are now. Of course, they had their water cut off in 1984 so I do not know how they could know where Canadian waters are, but if they know now, they should have known then.

The Liberals entered into a treaty with France that gave France the right to fish in Canadian waters, into the Gulf of St. Lawrence and into 2J3KL and all of the Canadian waters they could claim to have a right to fish in. Perhaps the hon. gentleman might explain to the House why his Party and Government did that.

The hon. gentleman might also explain to the House why his bench-mate, the Hon. Member for Humber—Port Au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin), rose in the House on Wednesday and made a perfect fool of himself. He was the leading questioner of the day for the Official Opposition. He pretended that there had been some great change and that we were now threatened by France and that for the first time in history, a French navy vessel would be permanently deployed off the Islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon. He went on and on and said that this was the first time in history that there would be French navy presence off the East Coast of Canada because the vessel La Centure was patrolling the waters off St. Pierre and Miquelon. It turned out that poor Tugboat Tobin had his mug in a tug and all this was was a naval tug that has been coming to Canada for 10 years. Four tugs come here and spell one another off. That was the leading question of the day.

Where was the Leader of the Liberal Party at that time? Was he out on a tug, or perhaps he was flying over the tug, getting his mug over the tug? The hon. gentleman might explain to us why his seat-mate from Newfoundland asked that question.

By the way, I want to pass this on to the hon. gentleman. I came across Ambrose Bierce's definition of "positive" the other day. The Hon. Member is very positive. According to Ambrose Bierce, positive means that you are mistaken at the top of your voice. Certainly the hon. gentleman made a very positive speech. He was mistaken at the top of his voice.

Would the hon. gentleman get hold of Tugboat Tobin and ask Tugboat Tobin why in 1972 his Party signed this treaty, Article 7 of which says that the French patrol vessel which usually accompanies the French fishing fleet may continue to exercise its function of assistance in the Gulf of St. Lawrence? His Party agreed to a French patrol vessel which usually accompanies the French fishing fleet going not only into Canadian waters in the North Atlantic but into the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Where was the Hon. Member for Humber—Bumptious—St. Barbe when this 1972 treaty was entered into? When will he apologize to the House for rising as the leading questioner and making a fool of himself, shaming his own province by fussing about a French naval tug with a machine gun, and guess where the machine gun was? It was on the stern of the vessel. It could not even fire forward! It could only fire aft. Of course, that is where you find that crowd, always to the aft. In the raft at the aft. That is where you find that crew. I guess they were in danger from that machine gun. I hope he will pass on to his Hon. seat-mate, the Hon. Member who has so shamed his Province of Newfoundland with his ignorance because of his lack of checking the facts, the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—"St. Blab" as they are going to call him from now on. Why did he not check Article 7 of the treaty? It allows a French patrol vessel, not a French naval tug, to go right into the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

Oh, Mr. Speaker, I could go on a bit longer but I am going to have another 20 minutes and I am dying to get to it.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I know you are only going to give me two minutes but I want to answer the Minister because this is very important.

Why in goodness' name would the French want to go to arbitration when, as long as they do not, they are allowed to fish all they want in Canadian waters?

Mr. Crosbie: Why did you give them the treaty?

Mr. Baker: Why would you want to go to arbitration if you could fish all you wanted without fear of being arrested?

Mr. Crosbie: Without fear of contradiction.

Mr. Baker: You can drill for oil off the Canadian coast legally because the Government has proclaimed that it cannot interfere at all.

The other thing is, if they ever go to arbitration the Government had better watch them because the chief French negotiator, as you know, has been appointed to the World Court.

Mr. Crosbie: He will not be on the case.

Mr. Baker: The Minister says he is not going to be on the case. He is a judge, with 14 or 15 other judges. He will not be on the case? If he is not on it directly, he will be on it indirectly.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: The Minister read the 1972 agreement, or part of it. He neglected to say this, however. That 1972 agreement that gave France the right to fish in Canadian waters recognizes, "the right of French nationals to fish in these waters".

Mr. Siddon: Why did you do that, George?

Mr. Baker: Let me read it again for the Minister. It recognizes "the right of French nationals to fish in these waters". It is in the 1972 agreement.

Mr. Crosbie: Right.

Mr. Siddon: Why did you do it?

Mr. Baker: The Minister says: "Why did you do it, George?"

Some Hon. Members: Why?

Mr. Baker: I will tell you why we did it. Because there is no period after "waters".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: There is no colon after "waters". There is no semi-colon after "waters". There is no dash after "waters". There is no comma after "waters". There is no bracket after "waters". What is after "waters"?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): You are all wet, George.

Mr. Baker: I will read it all to you. It recognizes "the right of French nationals to fish in these waters—" here it comes, "—subject to conservation measures, including quotas".

Mr. Siddon: You gave them quotas.

Mr. Baker: Subject to conservation measures, including quotas. End of quotation right from the agreement. The copy of the agreement that the Minister has must have been lacking somewhere. Maybe the person printing it forgot to put in the last part of that sentence. However, I can assure him that this is what is there. If he looks at it, that is what is in the agreement. That is why we signed the 1972 agreement. It was copperfast.

Mr. Siddon: Still does not make sense.

Mr. Baker: We had them, because we said it was subject to conservation measures, subject to quotas.

Apart from that, let me tell the Minister that under international law, unless you legislate something in your country, it really has no standing in international law.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie).

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is verily one of the weakest and silliest resolutions ever brought before this honourable House.

Mr. Boudria: Shame!

Mr. Crosbie: Just listen to me and I will explain to you why that is. Before I get into it I might say to the hon. gentleman who moved the motion that his Right Hon. Leader has not been here for several days. I am not criticizing him. He is probably out on great public business somewhere. He is a man that has no enemies, of course. However, as Oscar Wilde once said about Bernard Shaw, he has no enemies but he is intensely disliked by his friends. I would like the Hon. Member to pass along that little warning to his Leader about where he can look for support.

To get back to the motion, which must have the approval of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), like Gaul, it is divided into four parts. Anyone who moved it certainly had a lot of gall.

I will deal with all four points quickly because I want to concentrate on the Canada-France issue and on the last part.

It blames the Government for inept management of Canada's fisheries. In the last several years, in the present Minister—and I do not want to hurt the feelings of anyone else who has been the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, including those who occupy chairs in this House—we have had the greatest Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) I believe of this century.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: There has been the complete opposite of inept management. There has been "ept" management. One would think that Jake was in the Minister's position. Let me give one or two examples of "ept" management.

We are getting effective enforcement of the 200-mile limit that went into effect in 1977. That "ept" and effective management began with this Minister who has improved in every direction the enforcement of the 200-mile limit. He has placed observers on all foreign trawlers who fish within those limits. He has placed observers on domestic trawlers who fish in 2J3KL for the first three months of each year. Even our domestic trawlers have observers. Why? To help protect inshore fishermen.

That brings me to another part of this silly resolution. It alleges a lack of support for the inshore fishery in Atlantic Canada. I have just given one example of support. We also had the increasing of fines for illegal fishing in the 200-mile limit. I do not know how much they have increased. They have quadrupled or quintupled up to $500,000 an offence. The Minister says tenfold. Our patrol vessels have been armed. They are no longer afraid to meet naval tugs like the La Centure which has a machine gun on her stern. The French will find our patrol vessels now have a machine gun on their front end. This is because of the Minister.

The Minister has acquired a dual-engine helicopter for surveillance purposes. He has hired or contracted with Atlantic Airways for a new radar patrol facility for the 200-mile limit.

This resolution talks about inept management of Canada's fisheries. I am not even going to touch on the West Coast or central Canada or Lake Winnipegosis or any of those other lakes. I am not going to touch on the North. I am only going to touch on the east. This is the most "ept" management Canada has ever had in the fishery on the East Coast of Canada in the person of our friend here from British Columbia, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

I will not go into other aspects of management because we do not have all that much time. The motion refers to lack of support for the inshore fishery. I gave one example of how the Minister is ensuring that stocks of fish are available for the inshore fishermen. All Members will know that over the last three or four years there has been some difficulty because the fish are not coming inshore in as great a number as in the past. In 1986, inshore fish landings in Newfoundland and Labrador amounted to 281.655 million tonnes, with a landed value of $135.365 million. That is for the inshore fishery alone.

This year, to the end of September, inshore landings have totalled 195.616 thousand tonnes, and the landed value of $149.248 million is already greater than the whole landed value of last year.

While the catch appears to be down, the year is not yet over, the value of the catch is up considerably. It does leave some problems of course for the fishermen who were not lucky enough to get any fish or very little. If necessary, programs will be introduced to help them, just as the Minister introduced a special program for inshore fishermen in the last three years who were in a bad position with respect to unemployment insurance.

Let me make one other point with respect to the inshore fishery. I want to mention the Minister's Small Craft Harbours Revitalization Program. That is a three-year $150 million inshore fishery program for major repairs and infrastructure over and above the ongoing A-base spending of the Minister's Department for operation and maintenance of $48.5 million a year. It is a tremendous program.

We were criticized for making announcements about this program during a by-election. Apparently, one is not supposed to announce anything during a by-election or an election, but must keep all the good news quiet. That is tommyrot, tripe, typical NDP softheadedness in suggesting that we should do nothing good in St. John's East during the by-election. The Member opposite, who was elected temporarily to this House, is now coming to me to make sure that the projects are completed. I tell him not to worry, the projects will be completed. They will be done in Flat Rock, despite the flat heads in the NDP and despite their criticism. They will be done in Processor's Rock in my district. There will be $6 million put in St. John's, Newfoundland, so that we will have for the first time in our history proper fishing facilities for the some 200 inshore fishermen of St. John's. These are projects implemented by this Minister, yet this resolution criticizes how he is looking after the inshore fishery in Atlantic Canada. That is absolute bunkum.

I hope the Hon. Member will withdraw this motion in shame when I sit down.

When I was goaded by a foolish question from the NDP one day, I let the cat out of the bag about the work that was being done in St. Bride's. This Minister is the patron saint of St. Bride's, St. Siddon.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The Minister appointed a special committee, comprised of experts from outside Canada, who are studying the fishery resource off our East Coast in order to advise him as to why in the last three or four years the cod are not coming inshore in the quantities they have previously. That committee will report to him during November or early December so that he can use the information and advice when he decides on the total allowable catch at the end of December of this year.

This is the most "ept", adequate and best management of the East Coast fishery we have had in this century, bar none. Even if I had been Minister of Fisheries I would have to say the same thing.

As a matter of fact, I was Minister of Fisheries in Newfoundland for a year and a half. Therefore, the House is not listening to some neophyte, some know-nothing, to somebody who knows nothing about this issue. The House is listening to someone who has thousands of fishermen in his district. Every rural community in St. John's West is a fishing district and they all love me.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: With the exception of two communities where they had the temerity to vote continually for the Liberals. However, they are swinging around now.

The third criticism raised by the Hon. Member is the lack of political will to assert Canada's rights in the Canada-France dispute. That is absolutely contrary to the facts. Since last February particularly, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) and I, under the direction of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) have handled this dispute firmly and I believe capably. While we always had good negotiators, we now have a first-class outside negotiator in the person of Mr. Fortier.

I do not have time to go into all the details of what we have done, but at the moment there is an impasse. We had meetings with France which ended on October 9. As an example of how firm we have been, in February we closed Canadian ports to French fishing vessels to show the French that we were not satisfied with their attitude and with their over-fishing in the disputed zone of 3PS. In March, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans closed Burgeo Banks so that the fishermen of St. Pierre and Miquelon cannot fish in Burgeo Banks.

In August, the Minister closed all other areas of 3PS, including the western gullies which are outside the disputed zone, to French fishing vessels.

We have placed reasonable offers before the French because we are worried about over-fishing in the disputed zone of 3PS and what effect that will have on Canadian and Newfoundland fishermen, particularly on the south coast of Newfoundland. On October 9, when the French broke off negotiations and asked us to go to arbitration, quoting us under Article 10 of the infamous Liberal treaty of 1972, we said that we are not going to arbitration on fishery quotas under the treaty. We said we would not go to arbitration on quotas at all, but only consider giving quotas if the French reduce their fishing in disputed area 3PS, and agree to go to arbitration on the boundaries of St. Pierre and Miquelon. We told France that they will receive no quotas in Canadian waters in 1988 under this undesirable and unsatisfactory treaty of 1972 unless they begin to bargain with us in a sensible and reasonable manner. We said there will be no quotas for France in Canadian waters in 1988 despite the treaty, which French actions have made unworkable. The lack of reasonableness of the Government of France in this negotiation has made this treaty unworkable. Since the French have made it unworkable, we do not intend to go to arbitration and allow anyone outside Canada to decide what quotas might be in Canadian waters, despite the wording of this infamous Liberal treaty of 1972. That is our position.

The French have agreed to resume negotiations on the compromise with respect to the boundary dispute. There was a meeting on November 6, dealing with these technical legal matters, and I believe another meeting will be held at the end of November.

We witnessed a disgusting spectacle from the NDP ranks last January and February. The Leader of the New Democratic Party called for Canada to go into battle and use the Navy to clear the French ships off the sea. We saw Rambo Jewett, Battleship Broadbent and Hotspur Harris—the former lambs of peace. They are all for peace in the NDP. Their motto normally is: "peace at any price", except in the Canada-France matter. They wanted to let slip the dogs of war.

We believe Winston Churchill when he said that it is better to jaw jaw than it is to war war. We do not believe in the use of force. We will avoid the use of force in this dispute, unless, of course, we are given no alternative. That was the sensible policy of our predecessors in the Liberals. Apparently an NDP Government would resort to force. The Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) was going to send out the Navy, but first he had to find it, of course. Tug Boat Tobin, that tame tabby, crying wolf across the House is now a little pussy cat and we will not hear, I do not imagine, too much more from him. That is point number 3. I do not know how much time I have left. That is the trouble with speaking on one of these debates, one does not have sufficient time.

I come to the final point of this resolution, criticism of the Government for our willingness to allow Americans to exploit weaknesses in order to gain control over processing in the fishing industry. What a pernicious load of piffle. What have the Americans done? They made a complaint. I have five minutes. That is great. I can handle this adequately, then.

The Americans made a complaint under the GATT. The GATT should be a magical name to the members of the Official Opposition and members of the New Democratic Party because they have been harkening about the GATT ever since we started discussing free trade arrangements with the United States, since the U.S.-Canada free trade discussions began. They said: "Oh, we would go multilateral". The Leader of the New Democratic Party is a multilateralist. He does not want anything to do with the United States where, unfortunately, 75 per cent or 78 per cent of all Canada's exports go. Mr. Broadbent does not want anything to do with the U.S. That is unimportant. He is a great multilateralist. He is sitting on a $2 billion investment from General Motors in Oshawa and he is so darned selfish that he does not want to share the benefits of that kind of thing with anyone else in Canada. That is Mr. Broadbent for you.

But they all believe in the GATT. The Leader of the Official Opposition, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra, believes in the multilateral. Now, he is against free trade in connection with our agreement. He is for free trade, he is against this agreement, or he is against this agreement and he is for free trade. Anyway, he is for free trade but he is also against free trade. He is on both sides of the free trade issue, he is for and against everything. His mug is on one side, his wump is on the other, and he has not even been around all week anyway. That is where he is on free trade.

What is the alternative of the Official Opposition to our negotiations with the U.S. on free trade? It has no alternative except to mention GATT. Unfortunately, there was a GATT panel ruling the other day in connection with certain restrictions pertaining to the sale of unprocessed salmon and herring in British Columbia. We want that fish processed in Canada, naturally. There is a regulation which says it has to be processed in Canada. The U.S. challenged that, as is its right—the right of any member of GATT to challenge anything they think is protective—and it managed to get a panel to agree with it. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) are battling that all the way. We do not know what the final outcome will be. But did you notice, Mr. Speaker, that as soon as there was a decision contrary to what we conceived to be our interests in the GATT, the lack of enthusiasm for GATT on the Liberal and New Democratic Party opposition side and the criticism we received from Mr. GATT Broadbent? GATT Broadbent got up and: "GATT, GATT, GATT, GATT, gittle". Do you remember Danny Kaye, Mr. Speaker? He used to go: gittle, gittle, gittle"? That was the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

He no longer likes GATT. He does not like the United States. What does he like? What are we going to do, give up all our exports? Will a quarter of our GNP disappear because the Leader of the New Democratic Party, if he gets into power, will have nothing to do with the United States and nothing to do with GATT? Is that not an inconsistency? I mean, if we are going to be members of the international world trading community, do we not have to observe the rules? If some panel says we violated the rules, do we not have to go through the process? Can we turn our backs on it? We, the country in this world most dependent on trade, are we going to be taking in one another's washing, 25 million of us: "I will give you my socks to do, you give me your dirty underwear to do, and we will pay one another"? Do you think, Mr. Speaker, that is the way to have prosperity in Canada? What nonsense. Do the opposition Members think we have our present standard of living because we did that? Not at all. It is because 25 per cent of our GNP comes from trade. That is why we have our present standard of living.

These people are inward looking. They are midget-minded. They are mean spirited. They do not have the guts to take a risk. They are afraid of the outside world. They think they can fool the Canadian people, and now this resolution comes along and adds this piece of nonsense. We have no willingness to allow Americans to exploit any weaknesses of ours, or anyone's, to gain control over processing of the fishing industry. We are fighting the case just as any Government here in Canada would fight the case. We have a similar problem on the east coast of Newfoundland, one that is not as bad because I do not think the Americans are anxious to buy, or try to buy, our raw fish down there. They oppose the sale to the United States of raw fish. It is a question of conflicting interests between processors and fishermen and so on, in any event.

We have a resolution here that is completely nonsensical and completely inconsistent. I do not blame the Hon. Member from Prince Edward Island for leaving the House. How could one stay in the House and have exposed to view the nakedness of this nitwit, neutered resolution? I only appeal to Hon. Members opposite to ask him to withdraw this so we can adjourn a bit earlier, get up to our offices and do something worth-while. This is a disgrace of a resolution. The Party that moved it, the further it gets from power, the more irresponsible it becomes, the louder it shouts, the more it roars, the sillier its questions get in the House. It has disgraced this country with its behaviour during Question Period. We see it day after day. There is no sense of rationality, no sense of responsibility, no sense of reasonablness, and no connection with its past. When it was a Government, it did have to try to be at least responsible from time to time. This resolution is a further confirmation of the lack of thought and the lack of alternative that the Official Opposition provides to this country.

The NDP does provide an alternative. It provides Canadians with the alternative of committing suicide, of committing hara-kiri, the alternative of all of us getting together and marching off the wharf like a group of lemmings, right over the side of the wharf.

Mr. Skelly: I rise on a point of order. Forty-seven per cent of the people in British Columbia would rather commit suicide than go any further with this particular group, according to the recent Gallup polls.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On questions and comments, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Crosbie: Am I finished?

Mr. Skelly: May we seek unanimous consent for additional time to enable us to listen to the stand-up comic in the House of Commons? He has spent 20 minutes making us laugh. I wonder if he would like another 20 minutes.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There not being unanimous consent, I recognize the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell on questions or comments.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, most Canadians who have just witnessed what we heard will now know why unanimous consent was not granted. If someone could not make any sense in 20 minutes, one really has to wonder why additional time is required under the circumstances.

Mr. McDermid: I have a question for the Chair, Mr. Speaker, are these comments now in question period or are we in debate?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On questions and comments.

Mr. Boudria: Perhaps we should repeat those things slowly for the Hon. Member opposite so he would not have to ask these ridiculous questions from time to time.

I was just about to say that every now and then I do stand in for the Whip of my Party, as I am doing today, which means I had to sit through this debate and listen to the entirety of the remarks of the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie). I now know that what constitutes cruel and unusual punishment is having to listen to the comments we have just heard from the Hon. Minister. They were nonsensical, first, and, second, and probably even more importantly, totally inaccurate. Sir Winston Churchill described those kinds of remarks once by saying, "The Hon. Member could not have stated the opposite to the truth with greater accuracy". That describes the comments we just heard from the Minister.

• (1400)

It is interesting to note that on the one hand the Minister wanted to speak longer while on the other he asked if we would adjourn the debate so that he could return to his office. This is typical not only of this Minister but of the Government of which he is a member.

The Minister was critical of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) for not being here in the House. Not only is it improper to refer to the absence of Members at any time, as you well know, Mr. Speaker—and I am sure you wanted to bring that to the attention of the Minister if he had stopped for more than half a second to catch his breath—but there is another unwritten rule of the House. It is that when an Hon. Member is ill and when it is known by everyone, such as happened with the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) at one point in the past, one does not question the motivation for the absence of that Member, particularly when it is written across the front pages of most newspapers of the country. I suggest that those kinds of comments are inappropriate.

I want to ask the Minister this question. He referred to the protest against the free trade agreement made by the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) who obviously is not of my Party. Nevertheless, he is a Member of the House. He said that the Hon. Member for Oshawa was glad to have foreign investment in his own constituency but did not want to share that kind of wealth with the rest of the country. That is not the first time that we have heard members of the Government saying that Ontario is populated by fat cats or that another part of the country is wealthy and they want this and that part of the country to be as wealthy or as well off as another part.

Does the Minister not feel that those kind of divisive words are, first, a sign of desperation of a Government that is engaged in a futile attempt to continue to sell a free trade deal which is obviously not selling, not only in Ontario but in terms of a large number of Canadians everywhere? Second, does he not think that there is a certain moral ethic that dictates that one does not in such a manner divide Canadians, or attempt to divide Canadians one against the other, in order to sell a free trade deal which should never have been signed in the first place?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member almost brings tears to my eyes with his moral protestations. Where was the hon. gentleman I wonder when his Government was engaged in the battle with Newfoundland and Labrador over offshore mineral resources? For four or five years it attempted to starve the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador in the struggle over who would control the ownership and management of the offshore resources. He has the gall to get up to suggest that we are taking some type of discriminatory steps against Ontario. Some 90 per cent of all of the exports of Ontario go to the United States of America. Of them a tremendous quantity move under the Auto Pact.

I am simply suggesting, and I will keep suggesting, and I will suggest it from one end of the country to the other in every community in Canada in which I speak, that if the sauce is good for the goose it is good for the gander. If a free trade auto pact arrangement is good for Ontario, then a free trade auto pact arrangement is good for the rest of Canada, and we are entitled to have it in the rest of Canada. That is what we will say. It is what we will keep saying. There is nothing discriminatory about that.

Where was the Hon. Member when his Party was discriminating against the West by placing a cap on what price it would be paid for its resources at a time when the resources were rising in value and when doing this was being done for the benefit of other parts of Canada? That is all part of being Canada. Sometimes one's area has to make a sacrifice for another area. So the Hon. Member should not wave his honourable finger at us saying that we should not use arguments about what part of Canada is benefiting from what.

We know that Ontario benefits from the Auto Pact. Can anyone deny that? I know that Newfoundland and Labrador do not derive any benefit whatsoever from the Auto Pact. But I know that Newfoundland and Labrador will derive a great deal of benefit from the free trade arrangement. Why? Because Newfoundland's exports are primarily resource-based.

The Hon. Member might be interested in this. The most important example of this in Newfoundland is the U.S. tariff structure for fish. The duty on processed seafood, including breaded, battered or value-added products averages 12 per cent. That is why in the past we have not been able to produce in Canada the higher value-added products. We have had to build plants behind the U.S. tariff wall in Boston and Gloucester to make fish fingers and all the breaded, battered and other value-added products. After the free trade arrangement goes into effect we will be able to do all of that value-added work here in Canada. The President of Fisheries Products International, Vic Young, said, "It means that our fish products—like the value-added products we produce at Burin, we would be able to put into the U.S. market without the existing tariff. We could thereby increase the amount of exports from the Newfoundland fishing industry. This would increase the number of jobs for Newfoundlanders. So what is good in terms of the Auto Pact is good in terms of the fishing industry. If there can be jobs in Ontario then we want to be in a position to have increased jobs in Newfoundland. We will not apologize for that.

The free trade agreement will ensure that there will be no new barriers to trade resulting from the abuse of technical standards. Our exports of fish through packaging requirements and through inspection regulations will not be able to be stopped. Our right to control foreign investment in the fishing industry will be maintained. All customs user fees on Canadian exports to the U.S., including fish, will be eliminated. The fishing industry will benefit from the dispute settlement mechanisms. I quote from Gordon Cummings of National Sea Products Ltd. who said:

> The most important aspect to us was the dispute settlement mechanism and we got that. It's a hell of a gain for Canada . . . As it stands now we cannot get fair treatment in the United States. The bi-national trade panel will bring a more sane approach from the United States. This is a straight win situation for us.

He also predicted that National Sea would expand its workforce by 400 as exports to the U.S. increase. And the Hon. Member says he is against this free trade agreement. The Official Opposition says that it is against jobs and expanded jobs in the fishing industry of Canada. Members of the NDP say the same thing.

Finally, I just want to quote Carlyle. When someone wanted to introduce him to the poet Swinburne he said, "I have no desire to meet a person who if he sat in a sewer would add to it". That applies to some other people I could name.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, one rarely gets a chance in the House to enjoy a speech such as the one given by the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). Most of the day of a Member of Parliament is spent struggling with the complex problems of Canada and working into the late hours of the night. Rarely does one get the quality of stand-up comic that we have just been witness to in the House of Commons this afternoon. This hon. gentleman could stand and speak for hour after hour making humour and flashing cracks as quickly as he pleases with absolutely no content or relevance to the problem before us. It has been one of the most enjoyable and refreshing afternoons that I myself and many other people in the House have experienced in a long, long time. I now hope we can get back to business.

There is one matter about which I would like to ask the Hon. Member for St. John's West who is a former Minister of Justice. He had the responsibility of protecting the morals of Canadians. Perhaps he could explain this to the House. I understand that the residents of Dildo Hill have put the Minister of Fisheries through the beatification process and allowed sainthood to fall upon him. Is he taking any responsibility for stamping out the satanic cults that would have done that? That is the first question I would like to put to him since in this country the Minister is certainly viewed in many quarters as a representative of the forces of evil and the Conservative Government.

• (1410)

In the free trade situation again the conflicts between the two individuals are astounding. The Minister of Transport

(Mr. Crosbie), a prominent member of the Conservative Government is overriding the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) from British Columbia and saying that the free trade arrangement in fisheries is good, that the export of our raw, unprocessed salmon and herring on the West Coast, which will also undoubtedly happen on the East Coast, will be an excellent thing. The GATT ruling is protected in the free trade agreement—or the Mulroney free trade agreement, and there is nothing free about this. We will pay through the nose until hell freezes over.

The Minister of Transport is actually advocating that as a valuable thing that has been protected under the trade agreement with the United States. On the other hand, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans states that it is absolutely wrong, British Columbians will not lose one job.

The second question here is, who is in charge? The Minister of Transport speaking on fisheries today, attempting to give this country a snow job on free trade, or the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans standing up and advocating that that GATT arrangement should not go through, that it should not be honoured and that the raw product in British Columbia and Atlantic Canada should be processed in this country?

The third point on which I would like a response is the desperation technique of attempting to fan the fire of regional racism in this country. I am not sure whether he did this in his usual exercise of an incredible sense of humour, or whether he put this before the House through his lack of intellect, but the Minister knows that the auto trade is a managed trade agreement in a specific sector. It was carefully thought out and worked out. There were bugs in it when it came through, and people pointed out those bugs, but it was a managed trade agreement in a sector that was worked out very thoroughly before it went into place, and it has derived benefits for Canadians. What the Government did was to put forward an agreement, a proposal to sell this country out. That is not a free trade agreement, and the Minister of Transport knows it. This country will lose its sovereignty. It will pay through the nose forever, if this agreement goes through.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, that is about the weakest, most insipid, and most dishonest series of remarks that I have heard in the House in a long time.

I just finished explaining how the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the Minister for International Trade were taking this GATT panel decision to which we are subject because we are members of GATT, and because we have to trade to live, therefore, we have to be members of GATT which is an organization that both opposition Parties support, and those Ministers were going to appeal it and do everything that is possible to resolve the issue in our favour, or to see that processing of unprocessed fish still continues to be processed in Canada. That is what I said. Then we have this weak-minded attempt to get up and say that I said exactly the opposite. I will leave it to Hansard to reveal exactly what I did and did not say.

The hon. gentleman ended up talking about sovereignty. That sovereignty argument is not going to wash.

The European common market and the countries that make it up have gone far further than a free trade arrangement. Yet, is anyone suggesting that any one of those countries has lost its sovereignty? They have not lost their sovereignty. They have entered into a whole common market. The labour movements in those countries opposed it. They had the same short-sighted approach. You are the most reactionary body in society today. You oppose everything that is a change in the status quo. You are just selfish and want to hold on to what you conceive are your own gains; small-minded and inward looking.

By entering the European common market has England lost its sovereignty? Has Mrs. Thatcher lost her sovereignty? Has she lost the power to control her destiny? Has France lost its sovereignty? Has a small country like Belgium lost its sovereignty? Has Luxembourg lost its sovereignty? Of course they have not lost their sovereignty. They have not even lost their what-do-you-call-it—virginity. Somebody says that they have not even lost their virginity.

Yet we are supposed to accept this as a serious argument against a free trade arrangement that Canada is losing its sovereignty. The only way that we can retain our sovereignty is if we retain our capacity to grow and increase our economic strength. That is what gives a country sovereignty. What good is sovereignty to Canada if we have a shrinking market and a declining standard of living?

A month or two ago Doug Fisher pointed out in his column that in the 1960s Mr. Pearson's Government looked at the question of what we could do if we took the protectionist role and got out of our international GATT obligations or ceased any attempt to co-operate with the U.S. How would we survive on our own? The conclusion of the study was that there would be a decline of our standard of living of 25 per cent. The Government wisely concluded that no one in Canada would take that route and willingly forgo 25 per cent of their standard of living to follow the route that is now advocated by the so-called Canadian nationalists.

We know, of course, that the Leader of the Opposition would not take that route either because he is for free trade, and he is against free trade, but he is more for free trade than against free trade. Although he is not for this free trade agreement, he is for some other free trade agreement that he thinks that he could get that nobody else could get. Well, it is no wonder that he did not get anything when he was in for two or three months. He was too busy appointing people to the livestock feed board where they are still feeding away.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for recognizing me. I must say that there will not be as much wind in the House as when the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) had the floor because I will try to deal with this fisheries issue in a little more serious and less facetious manner than has been the case so far.

I am pleased, therefore, to support the motion moved by my colleague the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) which reads:

> That this House condemn the government for its inept management of Canada's fisheries in Atlantic Canada and its lack of political will to assert Canada's rights in the Canada-France dispute and for its willingness to allow Americans to exploit its weaknesses in order to gain control over processing in the fishing industry.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, this motion says a lot. As far as condemning the Government for its inept management, we need only look into the expenditures of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans to realize what has happened since the Conservative Party came to power.

In 1984-85, the Department's budget was about $690 million. The first full year, 1985-86, under this Government, the budget was slashed to $620 million. In 1986-87, it was cut even further to $550 million. Using the 1984-85 budget as a yard stick, this Government has accumulated nearly $350 million worth of cut-backs in this Department alone.

Mr. Boudria: Irrespective of inflation?

Mr. Robichaud: Of course, irrespective of inflation, as suggested by my colleague the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), which means that the Department of Fisheries and Oceans is now operating with a lot less money than in 1984 and 1985. This simply does not make sense.

Mr. Speaker, we could review the way the Department of Fisheries and Oceans has tried—and now I am using their own words—to improve a number of programs especially designed for fishermen. I am referring here to the Fishing Vessel Insurance Plan which was tailored to the needs of fishermen and made it possible for them to obtain lower insurance premium rates.

Because of certain changes which were made to improve this program, the rates are now much higher and the fishermen no longer find the program attractive. They are forced to get their insurance elsewhere because the Government has decided that it would no longer help them with their insurance. Some will say: "Well, why not?" A program was developed and implemented by and for the fishermen. What reasons could there be to say that the program was not worth much and could simply be cancelled? Yet, this is exactly what happened. Conditions were brought in which the fishermen found unacceptable and the program is no longer attractive.

Then, there is the boat-building subsidy program. Mr. Speaker, in the regions of this country where there are fishermen, you only have to mention the boat subsidy program and everyone will know what you are talking about. Fishermen could have a $50,000, $60,000 or $100,000 boat built for inshore fishing, or a bigger boat costing much more money, but in my region, it was mostly $50,000 to $60,000, and they could obtain a subsidy to help them build it. Fishermen finally could afford the boats which they needed and which had the safety features necessary to give them peace of mind. What happened to that program? Mr. Speaker, this is a very good example of how this Government has given in to the Americans. The Americans said: "Your boat-building program subsidizes the fishing industry and we shall therefore apply countervailing duties." When the minister heard what the Americans were planning, he said: "No, do not do that, we shall simply remove the program completely."

This is exactly what he did. The fishermen can no longer benefit from this program which helped them build their boats for so many years. The Government simply and remorselessly cancelled the program. This is how the Government reacted to the threatened intervention by the Americans, by simply giving in.

There is a lot of talk about free trade. Ministers are travelling throughout Canada saying that free trade—we should perhaps call it the Mulroney treaty with the United States—is the magical solution and what the fishing industry had been waiting for. Now, we have no more reason to worry about our fishing industry. All the problems have been solved. However, when we ask how this industry will benefit from the agreement, we find it difficult to get answers.

• (1420)

[English]

We hear from the fishermen's association that they are somehow happy with the free trade deal, but when we ask them why, we get the answer that we have enhanced status quo.

[Translation]

What is the meaning of enhanced status quo?

Mr. Boudria: That is just like the Progressive Conservatives.

Mr. Robichaud: There you are. My colleague had the answer.

Mr. Speaker, it means that this agreement, this Mulroney treaty, does not mean anything at all in terms of fisheries, it simply has no positive impact in the fishing sector. And when we are told about the agreement provisions concerning trade dispute settlement, and we are told that this mechanism will solve all our problems, we look at the fine print of these provisions and come to the conclusion that this mechanism does not entail any kind of power. In cases where countervailing duties have been imposed, they will quite simply examine the situation to find out whether the duties were imposed pursuant to American legislation, whether they are in accordance with American laws. And if they are, Mr. Speaker, nothing will change as was the case with respect to soft lumber, potash, and shingles. There is no way this mechanism will serve Canadian interests.

And yet they keep telling people, fishermen particularly, that the provisions of the agreement are just what they wanted. That settles all problems. We are also told that we are gaining access to the American market. Of course we have access to the American market. We have always sold to the Americans, especially in the Atlantic regions. So what more do we get out of this? Well, absolutely nothing. We quite simply have the same access. Someone might have asked what kind of protection the fishing industry could have under the agreement. Well, we can see now that there is absolutely no protection for fishermen or for all interested parties in the fishing sector. There is nothing to prevent the Americans from taking over our first processing companies and plants and, by the same token, from monopolizing some of the fish stocks we want to keep for ourselves. And there is no protection in the Agreement against this kind of takeover.

We could go on discussing the Free Trade Agreement and the Mulroney—U.S. deal at infinitum. However, I would rather talk about the Small Craft Harbours Program that was discussed with considerable verve yesterday morning. We were told that at last we had a program that would solve all the problems of our fishermen. There would be harbours for small boats, wharves would be repaired, channels would be dredged, and all other problems related to fisheries would be taken care of. Of course everyone welcomed the funds that had been allocated. I did so myself. However, Mr. Speaker, in recent years, we saw a reduction in fund, for repairing small craft harbours. Wharves could no longer be repaired and in some cases had to be barricaded. People were advised not to go to certain areas because it was dangerous to do so. Access channels to the wharves could no longer be dredged. In some cases, fishermen had trouble leaving the wharf to go fishing and had to watch the tides.

And this despite the fact that where I come from, fishing vessels don't draw that much water, not more than one meter or three or four feet. And even there, fishermen were having trouble going out.

Mr. Speaker, you must realize that in my part of the country, along the Northumberland Strait, we have some very specific problems owing to the fact that storms cause the sand that is carried by the currents to shift and fill up the access channels to the wharves, and these channels have to be dredged every year, or at least often enough to make sure they are open.

As I was saying, the funds to carry out this work had been reduced, and now all of a sudden, they seem to have found the money to do it. Of course they had to find the money, because if they had let the situation continue, some of our wharves would have been lost altogether.

It was high time money was found, and I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the same funding will continue, so that our harbour facilities will meet the needs of our fisheries.

The creation of harbour authorities was also discussed. These would be set up along the coast and, in fact, would be committees that would take care of the facilities, make sure someone looks after the lights on the wharves, does minor repairs, and watches the buildings where the bait is stored. Of course we have to have people to do these odd jobs.

But in addition to managing the facilities, they also want to make these authorities responsible for imposing certain fees on users. All I can say, Mr. Speaker, is that if the Department of Fisheries and Oceans tries to impose user fees on our fishermen, something is going to give!

I would really like to stand at the end of the dock when the person in charge of collecting these charges will ask the fishermen to pay up. I would really like to be there!

If possible, Mr. Speaker, I would like the Minister of Fisheries to ask the Minister of Transport himself to go to the end of the docks to collect these charges from the fishermen. That would be amusing, much more amusing than what we saw this afternoon because our fishermen will simply not accept these user charges.

The Government is trying to do by the back door what it was unable to do by the front door in Bill C-75. We debated that Bill at length, to such an extent that the Hon. Member for Humber—Port-au-Port—Sainte-Barbe (Mr. Tobin) spoke for nearly seven hours to block it. Section 4 of the Bill would have applied the user pay principle.

The Bill did not receive passage, but the Department of Fisheries now has a plan to impose user charges anyway. I really do not see how the Department can collect these charges.

• (1430)

I would like to take this opportunity to speak about a major project which will probably go forward because this is not the first time we hear about it. I am talking about the fixed or dry link between New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

If a bridge, or even a tunnel is built, because it might be one or the other, it will have to go through some of the best fishing grounds in New Brunswick. In the Northumberland Strait between Cape Tormentine and Borden on Prince Edward Island, you go through a fishing zone which produces a rich lobster harvest. Indeed, these last few years, this has been the highest yielding sector for lobster fishermen.

Mr. Speaker, the fishermen were told that they would be consulted and that all the studies on the environmental impact and the effects on fishing would be made available. A few meetings were held in New Brunswick. The first steps were taken, but after the studies were completed, Public Works officials did not go back to consult the fishermen.

Now I mention this, Mr. Speaker, because I want to make sure that the Minister of Fisheries will accept responsibility for defending the interests of Northumberland Strait fishermen, because if this bridge or tunnel project were to have a negative impact on fishing, that might prove to be a disaster for all people in my riding. Indeed, not only fishermen depend on fishing, but so do all lobster processing plant workers.

We heard recently that the project would have no impact on fishing. Well, Mr. Speaker, I fail to see how anyone can make that kind of statement. If they are going to build a bridge to cross over to Prince Edward Island, it certainly will not be a suspension bridge spanning the full width of the strait. They will have to build foundations, piers resting on the bottom of the strait, they will have to dig, they will have to dredge. And if they disturb the bottom, they will certainly disturb the habitat of the lobster and that of scallops, for there are also lots of scallops in that region.

I mention this this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, because I want to make sure that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) will assume responsibility for seeing to it that this project will not have a negative impact on fishing. And should the project indeed have such a negative impact, either during or after the construction phase, the Minister will have to set up a mechanism at the earliest opportunity, that is before work begins, a mechanism to provide compensation for fishermen who will be affected by the bridge or tunnel construction project.

[English]

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I have a question and a comment. I want to thank the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud) for a very good speech. He is an excellent Member of the House of Commons and he certainly represents his riding and the interests of the people in Westmorland—Kent and New Brunswick very well.

It was refreshing to hear a sincere and honest speech in the House today on this most important motion put forward by myself and seconded by the Hon. Member compared to the outburst, if you will, by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) who tried to liken this Mulroney-Reagan trade fiasco to the European Economic Community and the trade deal within the EEC. The Minister drew the analogy that we could not live within our own borders. He said that we could not live simply within our own borders. No one disagrees with that. Members of the Opposition are not saying that we should only trade within our own country. Our Party has always stood for multilateral trade, trade with all different countries, and for trade that is enhanced in every way. However, we are now talking about a deal that left far too much out.

The Minister of Transport tried to give the House the impression that we stood only for trade within our own borders. Obviously this is the story government Members are carrying across the country. It is simply not true.

The Minister said: "You wash my socks and I will wash your shirts". That analogy is incorrect because one cannot liken Canada and the United States to the European Economic Community. There are many millions of people in the European Economic Community. We in Canada live alongside a giant. There are 260 million people in the United States, whereas there are 25 million people in Canada.

Under this deal, which offers no protection whatsoever for most of our natural resource industries, we will be pressing the pants of the people in Washington. As well, we will be washing their dirty underwear. That is the analogy I would draw.

I would like to deal with a few of the issues mentioned by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent. One such issue was the harbour authorities which are being put in place by the Government. Yesterday, we dealt for a couple of hours with concurrence on a motion for increased funding for small craft harbours. We all agree with that, but does the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent believe that the harbour authorities that are now being appointed are simply a back-door approach to collecting more revenues at harbours and ports? In other words, is the Government trying to get the fishermen themselves to levy user fees on themselves rather than following through with the Government's original intent which was to have the Government itself do it?

I would also like to comment on the P.E.I. crossing. The Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent and I agree in general principle with a fixed crossing bridge or tunnel to Prince Edward Island. My concern and the concern of the Hon. Member, on which he may comment, surrounds the environmental aspects of the project. It is very important that there be no adverse environmental effects if such a structure is to be built across the Northumberland Strait.

If the fishery is adversely affected in any way, there must be a mechanism put in place before construction of such a crossing or facility is begun. The fishermen should know right from the start that if there are to be adverse effects, some meaningful compensation would be paid to them for the duration of the construction of the structure if it happened to be a bridge. If a bridge were to be built, the pilings and foundation work would obviously disrupt somewhat the lobster and scallop grounds in those areas during construction, and that would take away some of the income of the fishermen. Perhaps the Hon. Member could comment on that issue as well. Perhaps he could tell us whether or not he agrees with me that we are in agreement with the general principle of this, provided that those two important items are looked after along with a number of other items.

[Translation]

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I also thank my colleague the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) for his comments and questions. I should like to mention here the contribution of my colleague on the Fisheries and Oceans Committee who, throughout the Committee proceedings, has forced the Minister to look into the harbour facility situation and make sure that enough money would be available to carry out the necessary repair work. I commend him, therefore, for his efforts which seem to have been successful.

As to the port authorities, I do believe that, afraid to go directly to the fishermen and ask for users' fees, the Government will try to do it through a committee. I feel it is not quite right for the Minister to tell fishermen to get together and devise development plans for the facilities, in order to be the first to get the funds appropriated for small craft harbour repairs.

Fishermen will then be faced with a dilemma: on the one hand, if they refuse to get organized, they will not be able to get Government's funds to repair their facilities; if, on the other hand, they get organized, they will be the first to obtain part of this money. I suggest it is not quite straightforward to operate in that way.

Concerning a fixed link, either a bridge or a tunnel, I agree with my colleague the Hon. Member for Egmont who lives on Prince Edward Island that such a structure should be built provided it has no adverse effect on the fisheries in my area. The Hon. Member also mentioned a compensation mechanism. A precedent exists already. Before the Miramichi River was dredged in the early 1980s, a mechanism had been put in place to compensate the affected fishermen, and I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that this way to operate was quite successful in the sense that a number of fishermen were appointed to sit on this committee, together with representatives of Public Works Canada and the contractor doing the work. Mr. Speaker, I should like such a mechanism to be put in place before construction work starts either on a bridge or a tunnel.

[English]

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have the greatest of respect for and, I believe, friendship with the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson). We have got along well over the last eight years. I am very disappointed in the motion he brought forward today. It will not impinge upon our friendship or upon my respect for the gentleman, but it does put into question his judgment and his knowledge of the industry we are discussing today.

I had a great 20-minute speech planned but I only have 10 minutes left. Therefore, with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak for a moment before I deal with the GATT panel about what the free trade agreement will do for the fisheries. We have heard a lot of scare tactics, so I would like to put on the record of the House of Commons the facts regarding the free trade agreement and fishermen.

The free trade agreement which has been negotiated between the United States and Canada is a tremendous deal for the fishermen and for the fish processors. It is going to bring down tariff barriers to our exports. It is going to protect our fish products from vexatious countervail and anti-dumping actions, and reduce technical barriers which have hampered our exports. Those technical barriers are better known as non-tariff barriers.

Canada's export of fish products to the U.S. totalled almost $1.5 billion in 1986, almost one-third of which were subject to duty. Elimination of those tariffs will particularly benefit processors of fresh and frozen groundfish fillets, prepared fish products such as fish sticks, which are currently facing a U.S. tariff of from 10 per cent to 17.5 per cent. That tariff will disappear with the free trade agreement. Do they mean to say that will not help our fishermen? It will not help our fish processors? How can they stand up here all day long and say it will not help?

Those products I mentioned, including crab meat, represent over 90 per cent of dutiable Canadian fish trade with the U.S. The tariffs on fresh frozen fish, fish-meal, and anchovies—which, I must say, I am not a fan of, even though I know the Minister is—will be lifted as soon as the agreement goes into effect. Reductions will begin on all other tariff items. By January 1, 1994, U.S. tariffs will have been eliminated on fish fillets, salmon, mackerel, clams and, guess what, lobster.

To give an indication of what this means in concrete terms, exports in 1986 to the U.S of lobster from New Brunswick totalled $84 million. From Nova Scotia it was $97 million. Newfoundland's export of fresh and frozen fillets to the U.S. were valued at $331 million last year. British Columbia exported $50 million worth of salmon and salmon products. All other fish products, including tuna, fish sticks, prepared meals, herring, crab, and others will be duty-free by January 1, 1989. These products will gain market share through elimination of tariff barriers. Growing and more secure markets will lead to more processing taking place in Canada and more jobs for Canadians.

Industry spokesmen, the people who put their money on the line to create the plants and hire the people, all say this will be good for their industry. We hear opposition politicians running around this country like Chicken Little saying the sky is falling. Yet Canadian entrepreneurs, the people who take the risk, are saying this is great.

I watched the great debate the CBC had on trade last night between the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) and the Hon. Minister of State for Privatization and Regulatory Affairs (Mrs. McDougall). Do you know who the most excited people were? The young people. They love it. One of them was from Windsor and he said, "You mean I can't compete with those guys across the border in Detroit? You're crazy. I can compete with them." The young people are excited about this deal.

Then we have Ron Bulmer, President of the Fisheries Council of Canada, who said that we will be getting better access to a market of 250 million people for our processed products. These are the guys who can make it happen. They are not afraid of it. They are looking forward to it. They want it. As a matter of fact, they are the ones who encouraged us to get into these negotiations. It was industry-driven. We are not afraid of this. The industry is not afraid of this. It is that little red rump over there who want to be isolationist. Stop the world, I want to get off, that is the way they like to operate. That is what they are trying to do when they go through the country scaring people. It is totally unfounded.

I could go on and on and on about the fishery, quoting chapter and verse of what those people involved in the industry are saying about this. It is a great deal for fishermen and fish processors. For my friend to come along and say we have sold out to the Americans, that is just poppycock. Those big bad Americans are going to come up here, oh, dear, and take us over. Canadians are not that gullible. They have not taken us over since this country came into existence and they are not going to do it now.

We are proud Canadians. We are Canadian nationalists. We believe strongly in Canada. For this Captain Canada, Mel Hurtig, to run around the country saying he is a better Canadian than I am or a better Canadian than the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is fraud. He is a fraud. What total and absolute nonsense. Tariffs have been coming down from an average of 40 per cent to an average of 9 per cent over the last number of years. Have we lost out to the Americans because of it? No, we have gained strength. In that period we have had prosperity, except for that time during the early 1980s when the Liberals were in power. That was a disaster. Do you know why? Because they hog-tied every industry in this country, especially the energy industry, and we do not want to see that happen again ever.

Mr. Nowlan: And Captain Canada supported them.

Mr. McDermid: That is right. He sure did.

I want to cover briefly the matter of the GATT panel because there have been so many inaccuracies coming out about that. This is the genesis of the issue and this should be understood by Canadians. This action was primarily brought by Alaskan processors. They wanted the same deal for American processors as Canadians had for their processors. In other words, they wanted to make sure that American-caught fish was sold to American processing plants. Our processing plants were buying raw fish from Alaska. The Americans just said they wanted to be treated the same way. The GATT panel kind of twisted this thing around. Instead of saying that American processors should be treated the same way, they said that this was an unfair trade practice. We understand the problems. The Americans understand the problems. We have GATT procedures which we are following and will continue to follow.

The only thing I have time to say is to assure the workers in the industry—the fishermen have a different attitude towards this GATT panel then do the processors—that we are working diligently with the B.C. Government, the unions and the industry to ensure that the results will be beneficial to all concerned. Canada will maintain its reputation as a fair trader and it will continue to be great for the economy of this country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being three o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that, pursuant to Standing Order 82(12), the proceedings on the motion have expired.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to 16 petitions Nos. 332-3213, 332-3229, 332-3230, 332-3232, 332-3233, 332-3236, 332-3237, 332-3240, 332-3243, 332-3270, 332-3272 to 332-3274 and 332-3275 to 332-3277.

CANADA POST—OPPOSITION TO CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and pleasure of tabling several hundred signatures from residents of New Brunswick. Your petitioners humbly inform the House that Canada Post's new corporate plan has created two classes of citizens by permanently installing its super boxes in urban and rural areas; that closing rural post offices deprives Canadians of a unique federal presence and reduces postal services that are vital to rural areas; and that rate increases, especially for second class mail, jeopardize the distribution by mail of many newspapers, weeklies, regional papers, magazines and religious publications; Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray that Parliament reject Canada Post's plan and urge the Corporation to deliver the mail to all Canadian taxpayers, without exception.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 197, 198, 200, and 212.

[Text]

DND—REPLACEMENT OF SHIPS

Question No. 197—Mr. Howie:

In 1987, does the Department of National Defence plan to place orders for the replacement of ships or the acquisition of new ones and, if so, how many?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): As stated in the White Paper, the Department of National Defence plans to replace six more of its existing frigates through Phase II of the Ship Replacement Program (SRP II).

DND—NUMBER OF DESTROYERS

Question No. 198—Mr. Howie:

1. How many destroyers are currently on strength in the Canadian Armed Forces?

2. Of this number, how many are (a) under repair (b) otherwise incapable of going to sea?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): 1. Twenty-three.

2. (a) One. (b) Nil.

PERSONNEL AT CFB GAGETOWN

Question No. 200—Mr. Howie:

1. For the latest date for which figures are available, at CFB Gagetown, Oromocto, N.B., how many (a) permanent civilian personnel (b) temporary or 'term' civilian personnel (c) regular force military personnel (d) militia personnel on callout were on strength?

2. Of those military personnel who were employed at CFB Gagetown, how many were (a) in combat trades (b) in non-combat and support trades?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): 1. (a) 656; (b) 192; (c) 3,254; (d) 12.

2. (a) (i) Regular Force 1,787; (ii) Militia 5. (b) (i) Regular Force 1,467; (ii) Militia 7.

BANK OF CANADA—GOLD LOANS

Question No. 212—Mr. Nickerson:

With respect to each gold loan made by the Bank of Canada currently outstanding (a) to whom is the gold being lent (b) how much gold is being lent (c) what is the term of the loan (d) what rate of interest is being charged?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Gold loans are made from the holdings of the Exchange Fund (a special account of the Minister of Finance which serves as the main repository of Canada's official international reserves). Gold loans have been made to the Royal Canadian Mint in connection with its gold coin programs and to financial institutions and precious metal dealers who are active in the gold market. The loans are made on commercial terms for maturities up to six months. As of October 31, 1987, total loans outstanding amounted to 601 thousand ounces. It would prejudice the Account's competitive position to reveal the details of individual transactions.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

TOBACCO PRODUCTS CONTROL ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill C-5l, an Act to prohibit the advertising and promotion and respecting the labelling and monitoring of tobacco products, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-51 now before the House addresses the issue of current tobacco marketing practices. Its effect would be to ban the advertising of tobacco products available for sale in Canada. It would also ban tobacco product promotion and regulate labelling and the reporting of technical information.

The federal Government has taken an active role in addressing the issue of cigarette smoking. It is important for people to understand why smoking, which was thought of as merely a personal habit, has become a legitimate public concern. There is overwhelming evidence that tobacco smoke is the largest preventable cause of illness, disability and premature death in Canada. Moreover, it has also become evident that Canadians who are consistently exposed to smoke in the environment may suffer from adverse health effects. Not surprisingly, the public is increasingly asking for an environment that protects non-smokers from tobacco smoke.

• (1110)

As Minister of National Health and Welfare, my primary concern is the health of Canadians. Therefore, I must do all that I can to protect their health by discouraging the advertising and promotion of tobacco, and by increasing public health knowledge of the health hazards of smoking.

This is not a moral crusade. It is not a case of some overzealous individuals attempting to force their life-style on others. It is responsible government action in reaction to overwhelming evidence that tobacco, despite its widespread use by a third of the adult population, is actually responsible for nearly 100 deaths a day in Canada.

The health risks of tobacco were realized long after it had become an established industry and millions of Canadians had become dependent. If tobacco were discovered tomorrow, no government would permit its sale, let alone its advertising. No one is immune, since scientific studies have revealed that non-smokers can be harmed in a smoke polluted environment.

Each year tobacco prematurely kills Canadians. On average, one Canadian dies of smoke related illness every 17 minutes of every day. I ask the rhetorical question, do Canadians, and those who may have some hesitation about this form of legislation, not have a right to expect that a Minister of health and a Parliament has a duty to face those facts? Victims are obviously mostly smokers, but some are non-smokers, and they are Canadians of all ages.

At least 500,000 Canadians have died prematurely of tobacco related illnesses since 1964. I choose that year because it was in that year that the Surgeon General of the United States first published the link between cigarette smoking and death. About one-quarter of deaths among people aged 35 to 84 in 1985 could be attributed to smoking. Today, smoking continues to be the leading cause of preventable death in Canada.

Tobacco is not a consumer product like any other widely advertised product on the market. Tobacco, a toxic and addictive substance, is the only consumer product that is dangerous when used exactly as intended. There simply is no level of safe smoking.

Of 23 known human carcinogens, 6 are components of tobacco smoke. Tobacco smoke also contains dozens of other chemicals that are toxic to humans. Tobacco is such a highly addictive substance that the vast majority of individuals who smoke are unable to limit their intake, even if they are aware of the health risks and would like to quit. Only 30 per cent of tobacco users manage to break their addiction, although polls show that more than 80 per cent would like to do so.

Some killer connections, like lung cancer and emphysema, are reasonably well known. However, many Canadians, especially the many teenagers who smoke, do not realize that heart disease is actually the leading cause of death among smokers. Almost no one knows that gangrene and amputations result from some tobacco caused peripheral vascular diseases.

Few know that in terms of over-all mortality and death rates, low tar, low nicotine cigarettes appear to be only slightly less hazardous than high tar, high nicotine brands.

In 1969, an all-Party committee of the House of Commons concluded that there was no longer any scientific controversy regarding the risk created by cigarette smoking. But it stated that the tobacco industry, by refusing to accept the established medical evidence, was directly responsible for causing confusion and delays. That was stated in 1969 by an all-Party committee of this House, and I would suggest that the same remains today.

Action is long overdue. A Private Member's Bill, Bill C-204, is further action in this House in respect to this legislation. We do not need more studies. We do not need more dead and disabled bodies. We need immediate action, including preventive educational campaigns and concrete efforts to strip tobacco of its alluring image.

Accordingly, on April 30, I tabled in the House of Commons Bill C-51, the Tobacco Products Control Act, and today it is here for second reading. The main provisions contained in the Bill are the following. First, with respect to advertising promotion of tobacco products, a ban on the advertising of tobacco products sold in Canada; a prohibition of the use of the brand name of a tobacco product or its trade mark, in any promotion of tobacco companies sponsorship or other support for any activity event, publication or broadcast; the prohibition of any free distribution of tobacco products; the prohibition of any gifts or cash rebates or the right to participate in contests, lotteries, or games related to the proof of purchase of a tobacco product; and prohibition of the use of a tobacco product brand name or trade mark on any non-tobacco goods that may be used to promote the sale of the product.

Second, with respect to labelling of tobacco products, a requirement that tobacco product packages display, on a rotating basis, a series of new, stronger, more visible health warnings; a requirement that packages also display a listing of toxic constituents found in tobacco products or tobacco smoke, including levels of tar, nicotine, and carbon monoxide; and a restriction on the use of writing on tobacco product packages to the name, brand name, and any trade marks of the tobacco product and information specifically required by this and any other relevant legislation.

I do not know, Mr. Speaker, and I know that it does not include you, whether Members of the House have recently looked at a tobacco product and read the warning. The warning is totally inconsequential. Keep in mind that it is on a tobacco package. What the Minister of National Health and Welfare is warning the purchaser and the user to do, when he or she uses the product, is to avoid inhaling. That is how weak the message is today.

Third, with respect to reporting of tobacco related information to the Government, a requirement that constituents specified by regulations and their quantities, in the tobacco product itself or the smoke produced from it, be reported; and a requirement that tobacco product production, import and sales information also be provided.

In the Bill there are also effective dates. I know that implementation of those dates will need adjustment, and that will be an examination to which the legislative committee will have to give close consideration.

My decision to introduce those strong and comprehensive legislative measures to control tobacco products came following much thoughtful consideration. After examining the evidence that has accumulated on the effects of tobacco and tobacco smoke, I came to the conclusion that continued advertising and promotion of a product which is so clearly hazardous and addictive poses a significant threat to public health that is no longer acceptable. Tobacco use has become a national public health problem of pressing and substantial concern.

The effects of direct exposure to tobacco have been clearly demonstrated over the past decades. Approximately 35,000 Canadians die prematurely each year from smoke-related diseases. Smoking contributes to some 30 per cent of cancer deaths, 30 per cent of heart disease deaths, and 85 per cent of chronic obstructive lung disease deaths.

Moreover, we have become increasingly concerned that smoking is a health hazard to non-smokers. Those who share indoor space with smokers can be placed at health risk, particularly when they are exposed for long periods of time.

• (1120)

A report of the U.S. Surgeon General recently concluded that involuntary smoking "is a cause of disease including lung cancer in healthy non-smokers". I am pleased today to add that an expert committee here in Canada, which convened at the request of my Department, has also completed a review of the world-wide evidence on this matter. In its report entitled "Involuntary Exposure to Tobacco Smoke", it concluded that the chronic inhalation of environmental tobacco smoke by non-smokers is associated with increased risk of various diseases including lung cancer. The expert committee also reported that all available scientific evidence on passive smoking is consistent with policies which eliminate all involuntary exposure.

These statistics on smoking in Canada indicate the existence of a serious health problem and suggest certain disturbing trends. Currently Canada ranks as one of the top 10 countries in the world in per capita consumption of cigarettes. A Gallup poll conducted in May of 1985 showed that 34 per cent of Canadians 18 years of age and over smoke cigarettes. While the proportion of smokers in Canada has been slowly decreasing, the number of young Canadian women smoking continues to increase. Among Canadian women in their twenties the proportion of daily smokers increased from 36 per cent in 1983 to 45 per cent in 1986. While we see the trends in general going down, among Canadian women we see the trend going up.

Obviously we are concerned about various cancers, especially young women and breast cancer. Today the rate of lung cancer among Canadian women is almost equal to that of breast cancer. I ask Canadians in a very straightforward manner whether they expect their Minister of Health, their Government, and their Parliament to be silent in the face of that type of evidence.

I would suggest that Parliament is trying to catch up with public opinion on the issue. Moreover, smoking rates remain high for young people, many of whom start to smoke even before reaching their teenage years. The onset of regular smoking often takes place as early as age 12. By age 18 to 19, 37 per cent of young people are smoking daily. The facts that so many teenagers continue to smoke daily and that young women are now smoking more suggest that the recent over-all decline in cigarette sales may be offset in the near future by increases brought about by a new generation of smokers.

The decision to start smoking is not an informed choice. It is a decision precipitated by what young people perceive to be the social acceptability and desirability of tobacco use. Sophisticated and well-targeted tobacco advertising has much to do with creating powerful and appealing images of the lifestyle of a smoker. To minimize any potential health concerns young people may have, ads have been cleverly designed to show healthy looking, physically active smokers enjoying their workout in the gym, taking to the ski slopes, bicycling in the clean outdoors, and in general staying trim and keeping fit. These ads are not designed to impart factual information about tobacco products or the consequence of their use.

Just recently in the British Journal of Addictions there are some interesting statistics to indicate that children at a very early age are able to identify brand names with advertising. I will not go into those statistics today, but we find indications that children under the age of 10 years can already identify brand names with the ads.

I wish to make another point which I stated to some ad executives the other day. Is the advertising industry of Canada, in spending $75 million on tobacco ads, so inefficient that that $75 million does not convince one Canadian to try the product? Yet, they turn around and argue "give us your account and we will sell your product". Why does it work with every product except tobacco?

The public has certainly become more concerned about tobacco advertising and promotion since the sponsorship of the R. J. R. Macdonald Tobacco company of the Canadian Ski Association in 1983, ad campaigns which were directed toward recruiting new smokers among Canadian youth. The manufacturers claim that their sole purpose in advertising is to promote brand switching among current smokers. However, in view of the fact that smoking habits are generally established by age 20, it is not surprising that there is the temptation to engage in tobacco marketing activities targeted at youth.

Currently the Canadian Tobacco Manufacturers Council has a code to regulate voluntarily the advertising and promotion practices of member companies. While the code is partially restricted to tobacco advertising, the rules are weak and many of them have been violated.

In response to the concerns regarding tobacco advertising and promotion, I have on a number of occasions met with representatives of the Canadian Tobacco Manufacturers Council over the past few years. On the whole these discussions have failed to persuade me that a voluntary self-regulating approach to advertising is workable.

The purpose of tobacco advertising is to encourage over-all tobacco use. The advertiser hopes that it will also encourage the use of his particular brand. Alternatively it is the policy of the Government to discourage tobacco use. Since these objectives are mutually incompatible, the Government has concluded that legislation banning all tobacco product advertising is the only acceptable option.

There is a strong national consensus calling for action. Public opinion polls indicate that a majority of Canadians favour measures similar to those proposed here. In 1987, 67 per cent of those expressing an opinion supported the proposal of the federal Government to ban tobacco advertising, which was an increase from 62 per cent in 1986. In 1979, 80 per cent favoured federal legislation for health warnings and toxic substances reporting on packages. This consensus in favour of action supports the national movement toward non-smoking, which is getting stronger.

I say to my colleagues in the House that health is not a partisan issue. While the Government is generally supportive of health regulation, this is not the case where products have serious health consequences. The challenge facing us is to regulate in such a manner as to protect public health and safety while imposing the fewest restrictions possible on individual freedoms.

Let me say a few words about freedom of speech, a freedom treasured by all of us in the House. Freedom of speech must be accompanied by the responsible exercise of that freedom. Freedom and responsibility are like two sides of the same coin; they are inseparable. Many Canadians believe that the responsible exercise of freedom of speech does not include the freedom to advertise addictive products. The responsible exercise of freedom of speech does not include the freedom to portray a lethal product as glamorous and socially acceptable. It does not include the freedom to advertise and promote addictive lethal products which can be easily obtained by teenagers and even younger children.

I submit that tobacco advertising conducted in exactly these ways represents the exercise of freedom without responsibility. One-sided coins are being spread around the community purporting to represent freedom of speech. There is a tail side of alleged free speech, but the coins have no head side of social responsibility. This coinage is worthless; it is without value.

Prohibiting the sale of a social drug like tobacco is not feasible, but prohibiting the advertising and promotion of this toxic substance is both feasible and desirable. The Charter of Rights and Freedoms provides for reasonable limits on our freedoms including freedom of speech. Since the evidence shows tobacco use to be a public health problem of pressing and national concern, a complete ban on tobacco promotion is consistent with a responsible health policy under our Constitution. By outlawing tobacco advertising, the federal Government is conveying a clear, unequivocal message—tobacco is a dangerous substance.

The advertising ban is but only a part, although a key part, of a long term comprehensive health oriented policy on tobacco and smoking. The long term objective is to bring about a significant decline in smoking and tobacco consumption. An essential tool for meeting this objective is the national program to reduce tobacco use, a joint effort of provincial, territorial and the federal Governments plus major health organizations. In the short term, the Government's objectives are to strengthen the existing trend against the social acceptability of smoking and to enhance the credibility of the health message.

I am speaking today not only to parliamentarians but to the country and to those who are parents, relatives and close friends of children and young adults whose actions can now determine the quality and duration of their later life. To replace smokers who quit or die prematurely, the tobacco industry annually must attract many new smokers. Virtually all of these replacement smokers are children or adolescents. Tobacco purchases by children and adolescents exceed $250 million every year. While older Canadians are quitting the tobacco habit in record numbers, smoking among teenagers has not decreased.

Voluntary controls on tobacco advertising have been tried without success in Canada, and more than 15 years of experience with the Canadian Tobacco Manufacturers Council voluntary code, including well documented breaches of both the spirit and the letter of its provisions, have resulted in a loss of public confidence in this approach.

Violations of virtually every rule of the voluntary code have been reported. Rule 11 prohibiting outdoor cigarette advertising adjacent to schools has been frequently flaunted. Cigarette brands have been launched with blatant appeals to youth. Health warnings which are supposed to be permanently displayed are often virtually invisible on billboards and in print ads, so we have stepped up our efforts to communicate health concerns about tobacco to Canadians, especially through increased support of the national program to reduce tobacco use.

The presence of massive amounts of tobacco product promotions, however, simply dwarfs efforts to communicate the health hazards of smoking. Simply stated, many people just do not take health warnings seriously when they are bombarded at every turn of the head with soothing tobacco company ads promoting their product as normal, good and glamorous.

I would suggest the young are particularly vulnerable to such appeal. Young people are also good hypocrisy detectors. Tobacco ads prominently displayed at every corner store make government health warnings ring hollow. As long as glossy advertising campaigns lure young persons into thinking that smoking is okay, our society will continue to pay an unconscionable price in premature deaths and disabilities. Tobacco advertising fosters social acceptability of a dangerous product. The ability of the tobacco industry to stay healthy while its customers get sick is, according to a recent report in a business magazine cover story, "One of the most amazing marketing feats of all times".

I also want to assure Members of the House and all Canadians that the measures we are discussing are not intended to prohibit smoking in Canada. That is another argument that opponents to this legislation have said it provides for. Cigarettes have been used in Canada since the turn of the century and other tobacco products for a lot longer than that. Tobacco use has been legal too long to consider such measures. It is my intention and my hope that the Bill will continue to reduce smoking.

As well when Bill C-51 was made public other anti-smoking measures were announced, intended to strike a balance between legislative and program initiatives. By combining legislation, education, restrictions on smoking in indoor environments and transitional assistance to tobacco growers, the Government has developed a comprehensive and balanced policy to reduce the tragic consequences of smoking on our society.

For my part, Mr. Speaker, you will recall that on April 22 I announced my commitment to strengthen significantly my Department's participation in the national program to reduce tobacco smoking. This national program, launched in 1985, was established to unite provincial, territorial and federal Governments and national health organizations in co-ordinated action toward a common purpose, that of developing effective and comprehensive initiatives to reduce the use of tobacco in Canada.

We have three goals: one, to protect the health and rights of non-smokers; two, to help non-smokers stay smoke free; and three, to encourage and help those who want to quit smoking. The initial focus of the national program through the "Break Free for a New Generation of Non-Smokers" campaign has been directed at youth at the vulnerable ages of 12 to 17. In support of the national effort, the Department of National Health and Welfare has developed and is now promoting the implementation of a school based smoking prevention program for Grade 6. We are also completing work on two other educational resources, a guide book of project ideas for community youth groups such as YM-YWCA's boys and girls clubs and a smoke-free educational kit for children aged three to six for use in day care settings and kindergarten classes. Provinces and health agencies have also tied some of their own activities into the national program, including, for example, New Brunswick's "Business for Kids" projects and Alberta's publication on women and smoking called "Break Free—Leaving the Pack Behind."

Other concerns to be addressed through the program include promoting the benefits of a smoke free life among our youth and helping them to deal with peer and other social pressures to smoke; reversing the increasing trend in smoking among young women; increasing the accessibility of effective cessation programs; supporting the initiatives of community groups responding to local needs, and ensuring that all Canadians have the opportunity to grow up, live and work in healthy smoke free environments.

Several federal departments have restricted smoking on the job. These include my own department, the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, the Auditor General's Office, the National Research Council, the Public Service Commission, Statistics Canada and others. On April 22, my colleague, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) announced new measures, both short and long term, to restrict smoking in workplaces subject to federal jurisdiction. In the short term, the Minister of Labour is requesting employers to restrict smoking in their workplaces to designated areas by the end of 1987. Also on the same day, the then President of the Treasury Board, now the Minister of State (Science and Technology) (Mr. Oberle), announced the Government's intention to ban smoking in all public service workplaces by January 1, 1989. In August, we reaffirmed our intention by announcing that for a 15 month period beginning October 1, 1987, smoking throughout the public service was to be restricted to specifically designated areas. I know this is not ideal, but I think it is a very big step forward.

As well, Mr. Speaker, you will recall that I recently wrote to you outlining my concerns about the health hazards of involuntary smoking and the need to control exposure to tobacco smoke within the precincts of the Parliament of Canada. Similar letters were sent to the Speaker of the Senate and the parliamentary librarian. I am happy to report to this House that both Speakers and the parliamentary librarian responded quickly and positively to my concerns. At their request, a committee of officials of both Houses of Parliament and the Parliamentary Library have been meeting to draw up alternative strategies for the control of tobacco use that would apply to all locations occupied by the Parliament of Canada. It is my hope that the policy adopted will be comparable to the approach taken elsewhere in federal jurisdiction.

The House will recall also that last November the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) proposed a new air regulation to ban smoking in Canadian aircraft for domestic and trans border flight segments of less than two hours. If Members of Parliament look back at what people have been telling them as they have been flying to and from their ridings, they will agree that comments from the public have been overwhelmingly favourable. Accordingly, these new regulations will be fully implemented by Canadian airlines before the end of this year.

I recognize as well that with these changes, difficulties can occur for those in the industry. Recognizing the serious difficulties faced by tobacco farmers as demand for their products declines, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) announced the establishment of an alternative enterprise-initiated program to assist diversification in the tobacco growing regions of Canada. On April 23, in conjuction with the Ontario Agriculture and Food Minister, details of a $30 million program to assist Ontario farmers who cease tobacco production was announced, the funding of which will be shared equally by the two orders of Government.

The legislation the House is now debating has been misinterpreted in many areas. Tobacco has not been singled out for legislation; nor is it a precendent-setting exercise. Intervention to regulate dangerous or potentially dangerous products and to reduce or prevent problems is considered an appropriate role of Government in Canada. Prescription drugs, for instance, may not be advertised to the general public. Alcohol which is harmful if used in excess is already regulated both provincially and federally. If it is legally and socially acceptable to prohibit some forms of advertising, I believe we should have no qualms about prohibiting any form of advertising for the nation's leading cause of preventable death.

It is not true, as the tobacco industry claims, that ad bans in other countries have been unsuccessful. In counties where tobacco advertising has been effectively banned, consumption has remained stable and at lower levels than in Canada. Bans have been in effect since the mid 1970s in Norway and Finland. Per person consumption rates in those two countries are 50 per cent lower than in Canada. In the five years following the tobacco advertising ban in Norway, cigarette sales declined by 15 per cent with the largest component of the decline being among children and particularly girls.

If that is not sufficient evidence, we only need note what the Government of China announced last week. China is a society that is heavily into the practice of smoking. It is very interesting to see a country like China taking the lead from the World Health Organization and taking the steps that are beginning to be taken in respect to the use of this product.

Education and legislation are both important. By pursuing these complementary approaches and by working together, I am confident that we can achieve the mutually beneficial goal of a smoke-free society. In a world where private gain ranks supreme, we must not lose sight of the need to work for the indivisible social benefits that come from the pursuit of public health objectives.

If this Bill passes this stage, it will go to the legislative committee. There members of the committee will have the responsibility to decide whether the specific provisions of this Bill are reasonable and effective. They will have to look at the issue in light of the evidence that I have presented today. I look forward to seeing the judgment of the legislative committee.

I believe that a smoke-free environment is as essential to human health as pasteurized milk and chlorinated water. Sooner or later, every country will ban tobacco advertising and promotion in an effort to combat the greatest man-made epidemic of modern times. Canada has the opportunity to set an important example for the rest of the world in the effective control of this critical public health problem. The decision rests with each one of us as to whether we are willing to take an active, pro-health stand or whether we are willing to defend the indefensible in the face of the evidence I have produced today.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to point out that I believe that all of us in the House of Commons today are guilty of a bit of hypocrisy in introducing this particular piece of legislation. The laudable objective of this legislation is to cut down on the consumption of cigarette and other kinds of tobacco in Canada. We all know, and we have heard the statistics from the Minister, that a cigarette is an instrument of death. However, I do not see any political party actually calling for a ban on cigarettes.

We are saying that tobacco is a hazardous product, a product responsible for thousands of preventable deaths in Canada. We are saying that it is a product which costs the health care system millions. Yet if we were to carry that argument to its ultimate conclusion, we as parliamentarians would actually vote on a Bill to ban the sale of tobacco products in Canada. However, no political party has the courage to do that.

We realize that tobacco has been a part of our culture for many hundreds of years. We realize that the negative health effects of tobacco have become evident only in the last number of years. Yet frankly, from a strict political point of view, I do not think any political party would want to go into the next election trumpeting itself as the party which will introduce prohibition on tobacco. That is a fact.

If we are stopping short of actually banning the sale of this hazardous product, what steps are we prepared to take to cut down on its use over the next number of years? Certainly, a ban on tobacco advertising is one strategy which is supportable in the move to cut down on the consumption of tobacco. However, I think there is a more fundamental principle which unfortunately the Minister did not address.

Just a few moments ago I had delivered to my desk from the legislative assistant to the Minister a summary of the expert committee report on involuntary exposure to tobacco smoke. This particular report indicates that chronic inhalation of environmental tobacco smoke, other people's smoke, is associated with an increased risk of lung cancer and that ETS probably causes lung cancer. An expert committee has made an analysis which shows that those who do not smoke but work in a place where they are exposed to environmental smoke may have an increased risk of lung cancer.

While the Minister has introduced legislation specifically designed to deal with advertising, he has not dealt with the more fundamental right of Canadians to live and work in a smoke-free environment. The Minister has mentioned that certain initiatives will be undertaken by regulations which relate to federal Government employees, and that is to be lauded. However, there are literally millions of Canadians who live and work in places which are not covered by regulations that apply only to civil servants.

The Government is saying that it believes civil servants should have the right to work in a smoke-free environment, but what about the thousands of other employees working under federal jurisdiction who will not necessarily see any benefit arising from this legislation because there are no fines or ways of enforcing companies under federal jurisdiction which do not live up to the requirement to provide a smoke-free workplace? The employees of banks, trucking companies and other companies involved in interprovincial transport will see no respite from second-hand smoke as a result of this legislation.

More important are the millions of Canadians who work at the provincial level and are covered by provincial legislation. This Bill does nothing to provide a smoke-free work environment for the millions of Canadians who should have the right to work in a smoke-free environment.

In a small way, this legislation touches upon the future tobacco consumption pattern of teenagers and young people. Representatives from the Canadian Cancer Society who are here in the gallery today certainly see this as being a step in the right direction. It is a step in the direction of cutting down on the increasing numbers of young people who are seduced into the world of smoking as the result of things like kiddy packs, which are still legal, and advertisements which show that those who smoke are part of the gang, part of the attractive culture of young people who are in style.

Certainly this measure will deal with that in a small way. However, even if one accepts that this Bill does not address a major flaw, which means millions of Canadians will continue to have to breathe second-hand smoke for at least eight hours a day, which by the Minister's own study released today could cause them to contract cancer, we should take a few moments to look at the Bill as it relates to advertising and point out just how flawed it really is.

Many of us have been involved in the debate in this Chamber over the last number of weeks concerning the Mulroney trade deal. I submit that as a result of that deal, this legislation will do nothing to prevent the advertising of tobacco products in Canada. I will tell you why. It is quite simple.

One item on the table under the heading "Services" is printing. We know that if and when the final deal is signed, it will be possible for Canadian companies to go to the U.S. and have their material printed there. Let us take, for example, tobacco advertisements which have been a rather significant portion of revenue for Canadian magazine publishing companies. All those companies have to do to get around this law is to have their magazines printed in the U.S. and then sold back in Canada. If it is published in the U.S. it is not a Canadian magazine and therefore not subject to Canadian regulations governing advertising.

If the Minister really wants to bring in legislation to ban all tobacco advertising in Canada, he has to recognize that the ban should be applied equally to magazines and other reading material coming from outside the country. I do not think he wants to inadvertently introduce legislation to encourage Canadian magazines to go south of the border to be printed, so amendments have to be made. There is no point in spending a lot of time discussing this issue in this House if as soon as the trade deal is completed the Canadian publisher just turns around and has his magazine printed in the United States in order to be exempt from Canadian laws on tobacco advertising.

There is another major flaw dealing with trade marks. The Minister has stated that if a company wants to sponsor, for example, a sporting or cultural event, it can use only its corporate name. It cannot use the brand name of a cigarette or even chewing tobacco, which we know has not been addressed in this legislation. All the company has to do in order to get around this provision is to register all its brand names as corporate names.

For example, if you want to have a du Maurier Special or Player's International Tournament, for a few hundred dollars you can put together a corporation under those names and get around this law. The law does not prohibit tobacco companies from sponsoring—

Mr. Stewart: You do not know what you are talking about.

Ms. Copps: I am not sure of his riding but the Hon. Member asks, "What is the Member talking about?". He made a comment about the U.S.S.R. during the Minister's remarks and I thought that was rather interesting. However, if he has read the legislation—

Mr. Stewart: I know a hell of a lot more about it than you do.

Ms. Copps: Then he should be aware of Clause 5(1) under "Promotion":

> —no person shall employ the brand name or a trade mark of a tobacco product in any representation made to the public for the purpose of acknowledging financial or other support provided by a manufacturer—

I suppose the Hon. Member has not read this far, but Clause 5(2) states quite categorically:

> Notwithstanding section 3, the name of a manufacturer or importer of tobacco products may be used in a representation referred to in subsection (1)—

Quite clearly, if a company wants to advertise the Player's International, all it would have to do is incorporate a Player's International company. That would permit it to continue to advertise. The Minister knows that is true. When I was lobbied by the tobacco company, I pointed to this flaw. You know what the tobacco company said? We want to live within the spirit of the law. They also said they will live within the law as it is written. Knowing their record for not moving on voluntary bans or restrictions on advertising, they will use every loophole at their disposal to get their message out. Those loopholes include incorporating new companies and having their material printed south of the border. Unless we move amendments to address these concerns, the tobacco companies will continue to advertise in some way, shape or form in Canada.

There is another major flaw in this legislation. The Minister was right when he pointed out the disturbing consumption patterns among young people, in particular young women, as they relate to tobacco advertising. We know it is illegal for children under the age of 16 to purchase tobacco products. We also know from testimony with respect to Bill C-204 that the average age a person begins smoking is 12. How are they getting their cigarettes? They may be getting them through stores. We have had evidence to show that nine times out of 10 they can buy them directly from the corner store even though it is illegal. However, there is another way to get them with absolutely no prohibition, and that is through vending machines.

In his legislation the Minister addresses vending machines, but not to make them illegal, which seems to me to be the logical consequence of the statement that young people are smoking at a greater rate in greater numbers and earlier than ever before. Why has the Minister not introduced a ban on vending machines? What he has done is set out regulations on advertising on vending machines. How can the Minister justify his intention to allow the continued growth of vending machines when he knows they are one sure fire way for children to get cigarettes? When a six-year old puts, I guess, three "Loons" in a vending machine he or she gets a package of cigarettes in the same way a 60-year old does. Quite clearly if the Minister is committed to reducing consumption among juveniles, one way of doing that is through a ban on vending machines, which is not contained in this legislation.

Mr. Oostrom: Tell your buddy Peterson.

Ms. Copps: Pardon me?

Mr. Oostrom: Tell your buddy, Peterson.

• (1200)

Ms. Copps: The Member for Willowdale (Mr. Oostrom) says, "Tell your buddy, Peterson". That is interesting, Madam Speaker. I just happen to have a letter from that Member for Willowdale who says, "Tell your buddy Peterson". I can understand why Members on the government side of the House are a little edgy with regard to this Bill. I would like to read into the record a letter which was sent out by the Member for Willowdale. He calls this piece of legislation a form of censorship which has no place in our free market society. He sent this letter to the President of Ted Bates Advertising Inc. It reads:

> The thrust of Bill C-51 is to curb the social acceptability of smoking—
> The total ban on tobacco however, is a form of censorship which has no place in our free-market society.
> It is not the role of the government to selectively decide what commercial messages may be heard by the population. The cornerstone of our democracy is freedom of speech and expression, and this may be inconsistent with our charter of rights and freedoms. Further, the proposed ban does not prevent foreign magazines from carrying tobacco ads.

The letter goes on:

> I will be approaching the Minister to reconsider his proposed legislation on banning all tobacco advertising, for I sincerely felt that this action represents an intervention in the marketplace which threatens individuals and commercial freedoms.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Ms. Copps: Obviously the Member has support from some other Members on the government side.

Mr. Stewart: He sure does.

Ms. Copps: The letter concludes:

> I believe that a solution can be worked out which will address both sides on the issue.
> Once again, thank you for taking the time to inform me of your opinion on this subject. Best wishes and warm regards.

I would not have read this letter into the record had the Member for Willowdale not somehow suggested to me that the solution to this problem lies with the provincial Government of Ontario when he has promised the advertisers that he personally will go to the Minister of Health and will personally move to stop this Bill.

Yet, we have been threatened by the Government that if we put up too many speakers on this legislation the Government will drop the Bill and will blame it on the Opposition. That is because the government Minister involved does not want to let his Members loose to speak their minds about this piece of legislation. He wants a cosy little deal and I can understand why.

I have other letters. If the Member would like I will read some letters which other members of the Conservative Party sent out in out in opposition to this Bill.

I have tried to point out what I consider to be a number of flaws in the Bill which I believe will neuter the Bill and render it impotent in what I consider to be the main objectives, that of providing a smoke-free environment for Canadians. The first is guaranteeing a smoke-free workplace and the second is cutting down on consumption by strategies including a ban on advertising.

I think that a ban on advertising is completely defensible. I agree with the Minister that there are many other instances where, as a part of public policy, we have introduced restrictions. I think, for example, of the restrictions which have been introduced with regard to the advertising of pharmaceutical products. I think of the voluntary ban on the advertising of distilled spirits which was entered into under the threat of legislation. There are certainly many instances where the Government has deemed, whether as a result of a voluntary ban or public policy, that certain messages are not good to be transmitted through the media.

I also admit that in the support of this legislation we in this House are all guilty of hypocrisy because we are not prepared to take the full step of a total ban. However, from the point of view of societal norms I do not believe that that is a possibility at this time.

The Member on the government side likened this piece of legislation to measures in the U.S.S.R. I think he did so because he has concerns about some of his constituents. When the first legislation on this issue was introduced last April we did not hear very much about alternative funding for the tobacco farmers who are being driven out of business as a result of decreasing consumption of tobacco and will certainly be further affected by this legislation. I was happy to hear the Minister make some mention in his speech today to some transitional funding for them which we have to consider.

We must also consider the role of the Government in offering transitional funding for sports and cultural organizations which could be adversely affected by corporate requirements to move away from their sponsorship. I believe that the Government must address that issue in tandem with this legislation.

Madam Speaker, I think that as far as the smoking problem is concerned, what we as Members of this House have to decide today is whether we want to adopt strategies that will lead to a reduction in the consumption of tobacco in Canada. If we wanted to be really thorough about this, and I think all Parties would agree, we would have to ban the sale of tobacco products in Canada, but we know that is not possible. It is impossible because smoking has been part of our culture for thousands of years.

Ms. McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): No, no, no!

Ms. Copps: I knew I would be corrected by my hon. colleague who knows far more about the subject than I do. I am looking forward to her comments.

In any case, smoking has been ingrained in our society for quite some time, and not one political party would have the courage today to make banning the sale of tobacco in Canada part of its political platform in the next election. That would be hardly likely.

What we must do as Members is, first of all, give Canadians a working environment where they will not be exposed to smoke produced by others. According to a report released today by the Minister's office, people who work in environments where there is a great deal of smoke are more likely to get cancer. I think the primary purpose of any Bill of this kind should be to guarantee Canadians a smoke-free environment at work. That we do not find in this document, and we do not find it because the Minister prefers to proceed by regulating federal employees. That is fine for federal workers, but many people working in the private sector or even the federal level will not be entitled to a smoke-free environment because the regulations do not even impose fines on companies that refuse to provide such an environment for their employees.

If I happen to work in a small transport company or bank and I want to claim the right to work in a smoke-free environment, I can't because there is not even a mechanism to apply the regulations. And that is one of the flaws in this Bill.

Another flaw in this legislation is one that will have to be examined very closely in committee, and I am referring to the consequences of the Mulroney Free Trade Agreement, because . . .

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order please. The Hon. Member is aware she should refer to the Hon. Member for Manicouagan as the Right Hon. Prime Minister and not by his name. The Prime Minister is treated the same as all other Members.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, I was referring to the Mulroney-Reagan free trade deal.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The deal to which the Hon. Member is referring is between two countries and does not bear the name of any Hon. Member. In this case, the Hon. Member should have referred to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Ms. Copps: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The House is aware that under this Canada-US deal, printing is defined as a service, which creates a situation in view of the fact that this Bill refers specifically to magazines which are published by Canadians in Canada. Since magazines such as Maclean's or Chatelaine may be printed in the United States, as a result of the Canada—US deal and then be imported into Canada, they could therefore still contain tobacco advertising. In this case, if we are really serious about prohibiting the advertising and promotion of tobacco products in Canada, we should propose amendments to this Bill to really cover all magazines sold in Canada, whether imported or printed here, failing which, Madam Speaker, when the provisions of the Canada—US deal authorize accross-the-border printing within the next two years, tobacco manufactures will be able to pressure Canadian publishers into having their magazines sold here but printed in the United States, thereby avoiding the regulations which will result from this Bill.

On the other hand, since this Bill will only prohibit the trade mark use of a product with sports events, for instance, they will be able to refer to the Imperial Tobacco Races or the Imperial Competition; they would not be able to refer to the Players Competition, because Players now is the trade mark of a product. To bypass the provisions of Bill C-51, companies need only introduce such names as Players Inc. or DuMaurier Inc. It is a well known fact that for a few hundred dollars, a company may be incorporated in Canada under another name and thus not fall within the scope of this Bill.

It has other deficiencies. The minister himself emphasized that the purpose of this Bill was to reduce tobacco consumption among children and teenagers, for adults have come to realize the detrimental effects of tobacco and there has been a marked decline in tobacco use among them. But among teenagers, partly because of advertising and partly because of peer pressure, there has been an abnormal increase in tobacco consumption, especially among young women; if the minister really wants to prevent an increase of tobacco use among teenagers, I suggest the Bill should also prohibit all cigarette vending machines in Canada. As you know, Madam Speaker, it is already illegal to sell cigarettes to young people under 16 years of age; while some stores will sell them cigarettes, others will not. But if there is a cigarette vending machine, and if I am seven years old with three quarters in my pockets—nowadays it is more like three dollars—but that was the case quite a long time ago.

A seven-year old with three dollars' worth of change can get cigarettes the same as a sixty-year-old. I think the Minister also should have banned vending machine sales, to make sure that the young will not be able to obtain cigarettes outside convenience stores and that the latter are more strictly regulated with respect to the sale of tobacco to minors.

It is common knowledge, and we were told by witnesses appearing before the committee considering Bill C-204, that there were convenience stores—I believe the figure mentioned was twenty—where young teenagers could obtain tobacco. They were able to purchase tobacco in 19 out of 20 convenience stores, even young teenagers, even though it was illegal, so it is clear everyone is selling tobacco indiscriminately. That is why I think we should have stricter regulations to deal with this and with vending machine sales, which should be banned. There is nothing to that effect in the Bill before the House today.

We know there are many flaws in this legislation, though its purpose is a laudable and admirable one, which is to reduce tobacco consumption step by step. What we also knew, and we heard many comments in this respect . . . Madam Speaker, if you had seen the slides presented by the Canadian Medical Association! They were quite extraordinary for people like me who have never had a close look at the deadly effects smoking can have. There was a lot of testimony to support the statement that cigarettes could be lethal, not just to those who smoke them but also to those who are exposed to ambient smoke.

Since the purpose of this legislation is to reduce consumption of a product that is bad for Canadians—I was a smoker once, I smoked for a long time before I gave it up—I think the purpose is admirable, and that is why we intend to support this Bill, but I think we will table a number of amendments to clarify the impact of the Mulroney-Reagan Agreement—the Canada U.S. Agreement. We intend to propose a number of amendments to clear up the problem about company names. We will also try to table amendments that will include what I consider to be our most important goal, which is to guarantee all Canadians the right to work in a smoke-free environment.

As I explained earlier, it is very odd that the federal Government has adopted regulations concerning federal employees, while, as we all know, Parliament remains sacrosanct, so that regulations that would prohibit federal employees from smoking as of 1989 would not apply to Parliament. This means that we, the Members of this House who will vote today on the second reading stage of this Bill and who will soon be voting on the third reading stage, that we are about to adopt regulations that would ban smoking by federal employees while we are not prepared to have the same regulations apply to our own employees.

So that is one more loophole in the regulations presented by the Minister with his colleague, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Mazankowski), a loophole that should be closed by amendments that will be proposed by the Liberal Party.

• (1220)

[English]

There are so many loopholes in the legislation that I think one could probably drive a Mack truck through them. In the course of discussions that will follow second reading of this legislation we will be introducing some amendments to it. We will try to improve the Bill. In particular, we will try to guarantee what we consider to be the primordial role of the federal Government, which is, at the very least, to protect working men and women who are exposed to second-hand smoke on a daily basis in the workplace.

We are not satisfied with the regulations the Government has introduced which deal with federal civil servants and which, in fact, exempt Parliament and thus our own employees. We are not satisfied with that approach. We will be introducing some amendments. On the whole we will come out with a better Bill.

For the Minister to achieve the objectives he is seeking, and I believe he is intent on achieving them, the Bill has to be strengthened. The Bill has to be more precise. The loopholes must be closed. Above all, the Bill has to protect people in the workplace. It cannot deal only with the issue of advertising. Unfortunately, Bill C-51 simply deals with the advertising issue. A curb on advertising will assist in reducing consumption in a long-term strategy. It will not provide people with the protection in the short term that they need to be free from exposure to smoke in the workplace.

The study that the office of the Minister released today on second-hand smoke is damning enough evidence that Canadians should have the right to work in a smoke-free workplace, whether or not they happen to be federal government employees, working in Parliament or in the private sector on the federal or provincial scene. Those are the areas which we intend to explore in our further discussions on Bill C-51.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I congratulate the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) for finally bringing in Bill C-51 for debate today. It is an important step forward for protecting the health of Canadians. I am glad to see the strong stand that the Liberal critic for health has taken in her demand for a comprehensive approach to this question of the very serious numbers of deaths and diseases that are caused by tobacco smoking. The statistics are painful enough.

More than 35,000 Canadians who are smokers die every year from tobacco related diseases. Some 300 to 500 non-smokers who are involuntary smokers die from tobacco-related diseases, for example, lung cancer and probably other diseases. A number of still births and perinatal defects occur as a result of tobacco-smoking on the part of the mother and, indeed, even from secondary smoke that affects the pregnant mother. These deaths are numbered in the hundreds. Fires are caused by the misuse of cigarettes. The deaths caused by fire are in the area of 200 to 400. This is indeed a very serious problem and I am happy to see this legislation before us today.

Bill C-51 would ban advertising of tobacco, cigarettes and sponsorships. However, there are a couple of loopholes. I also welcome the parts of the Bill that deal with labelling which are very important. They are a good step forward in dealing with this question and a matter not dealt with in my own Bill, Bill C-204. We are indeed breaking new ground.

I want to call to the attention of the Minister the need to plug a couple of loopholes with respect to advertising and sponsorship. The first loophole in the Bill is with respect to the point of sale advertising, for example, in local stores. This is where young children are purchasing their cigarettes. Local stores are bribed by the tobacco companies to have advertisements in their stores. Point of sale advertising must be completely banned and not left merely to regulation.

The other loophole is with respect to the partial ban on sponsorships. A brand name cannot be used but a company name can be used for sponsorships under this legislation. This is something which would not be permitted if Bill C-204 were enacted. It takes but a bit of imagination to consider that the tobacco companies could be incorporating new companies to make a company out of a brand name and thus escape the spirit and the letter of this law. We would like to see those loopholes plugged. We know why the tobacco companies have to advertise. It is because some 35,000 Canadians a year are dying. They are smokers, the customers of these companies. Some 350,000 smokers, largely intelligent adult men, are quitting smoking. The tobacco companies have to replace their customers. They are doing this by looking for new markets. We know that they are going after children. That has been all too well documented. We also know that they are going after women. I am sorry to say that they have been enormously successful in their advertising directed at women. The women's movement is speaking up and talking back to the tobacco companies on that point. The symbols of emancipation are being used. Glamour, success and peer acceptance are being used to attract people to smoking.

One of the sneakier methods that has been attempted by a tobacco company to attract women smokers is worth citing here. I refer to a plan which, fortunately, has been scotched. Benson & Hedges wanted to put out a book on political women. My understanding is that this book would be sent to all the schools in Canada. It was a very clever idea. I was asked if I would give my permission to be included in this book. Other Hon. Members who are women were also asked to be included in the book. I am sorry to say that some of them fell for it. A woman member of the public was concerned about this matter and she sent a letter to the President of Benson & Hedges to protest. She wrote as follows:

> I am very disturbed by your plan to publish a book on women in politics. I am convinced that this will have the effect of identifying successful women, women who are role models for other women—mainly younger women—with smoking, since I am well aware that the tobacco industry in North America has capitalized on the movement for women's liberation in an attempt to persuade feminists that smoking is the necessary corollary of success in the male-dominated world of politics, business and sport.

That was a very reasonable protest. In fact, it was very timely. Benson & Hedges replied to this public-spirited citizen in a letter which stated:

> I am in receipt of your letter—
> First, let me say that I consider it rather presumptuous on your part to complain about something which is based, at best, on second or third hand information.
> Inasmuch as you appear to have a Ph. D., I would have thought that irrespective of the discipline in which it was obtained, you would check your facts before committing yourself to paper.

Check the facts indeed. I have some of the facts here with me. One is a letter to myself inviting me to be one of these successful role models and to be included in a book on political women. The Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) was probably one of these women. Her name and face would go out to those young teenagers to encourage them.

We want to encourage young women to enter politics—of course we do. But do we want to sell them cigarettes at the same time? This is shameful. It is a good example of the tactics of this industry. It is going after young women in order to replace the intelligent older men who are quitting smoking. Fortunately, there was enough bad publicity on this matter that the company apparently produced the book but did not distribute it.

Advertisers want to tell us that advertising of cigarettes does not work and that they are only interested in maintaining their brand name quota within the system. They have quoted some phoney statistics. They have tried to say in Norway, Finland and Singapore in full-page advertisements in newspapers this summer that ad bans in other countries have not been successful and that it would be counterproductive for us to go for an ad ban. The Canadian Cancer Society subsequently checked out all these so-called facts only to find that the situation was quite the opposite.

For example, in Norway, and the Minister has referred to this example, since the ban on advertising there has been a 15 per cent decline in the number of smokers. Yet exactly the opposite was claimed by the tobacco companies and the advertisers. It is very shameful that Canadians are being misled. They may not be too misled on this, because it is a little preposterous for the advertisers themselves. They have been coming to committee on my Bill C-204 and stating that advertising does not work, undermining their own industry. I think that advertising does work, and it should be part of the solution. We should have a counter-advertising program in order to encourage young people not to start, and to encourage those people who have already started to quit.

There has been a very dishonest use of so-called data. In the case of Norway, the clever trick was that it did not use ordinary tobacco made for roll-your-own cigarettes, and they included only one form of cigarette use which had gone up since the ban. But the total use had gone down. It also did not take into account the fact that there had been a population increase. It was not done per capita. So there was a very dishonest use of statistics in order to make their point.

The advertisers also tell us that it is not advertising that makes young people smoke, it is peer pressure. They actually did a study and asked children, "Are you influenced by advertising?" Human nature tell us that none of us likes to admit that we are influenced in a decision by advertising. We like to think that we made up our own mind. Quite naturally, most children stated that they had not been influenced by advertising, but some stated that they had been.

Even if it is a very small number, I suggest that one person dying from a tobacco related disease, from a habit that he or she would not otherwise have taken up, is too many. Thirty-five thousand Canadians die a year, and if only 5 per cent of those people started as a result of advertising, that is a sizable number. Even if it is only 1 per cent, that is 350 people. If it is 2 per cent, it is 700 people, and that is almost the murder toll in Canada. If anyone could find some brilliant way to reduce murder by 700 people a year, we would be very grateful to bring those numbers down.

Even if it is only 2 per cent and the advertisers are correct, and I do not think they are—but even if we accept their statistics, we should be pleased at the prospect that we could save 700 lives a year. I feel we will be able to save far more than 700. I feel there will be thousands and thousands saved, as this Bill and other measures undertaken begin to attack the consumption of tobacco.

We have been told by various people who oppose this Bill, and who oppose my Bill, that there are other measures that can be taken. Instead of legislation there should be a voluntary code. A voluntary code has been in operation for tobacco manufacturers. As the Minister himself pointed out, virtually every rule has been ignored and violated, time after time. I wish to cite a few concrete examples of how the tobacco industry violates its own code that is presently in operation. How could we have any confidence that they will reform and be different in the future?

The first rule states that there will be no cigarette or cigarette tobacco advertising on radio or television, nor will such media be used for the promotion of sponsorships of sports or other popular events. We all know that the tobacco companies buy advertising at sports events that are televised, so that their names and logos will appear. We know that they sponsor teams and require that their logos are on the sporting equipment and uniforms so that when the event is televised their name will get around, in this way getting around the fact that they cannot advertise directly on television. This is a very flagrant example of the abuse of their own code.

The second rule states that the industry will limit total cigarette and cigarette tobacco advertising, promotion and sponsorship expenditures for any year to 1971 levels, and that they will be increased only to compensate for cost increases or decreases—in short, the cost of living. Have they kept their word on this? We do not know exactly, because they will not release the data. I am a little suspicious on this one. If they had kept their word, why would they not release the data to prove it?

The sixth rule states that all advertising will be in conformity with the Canadian code of advertising standards as issued by the Advertising Standards Council. If this rule were obeyed, we would not have any advertising at all. The rule states that advertisements shall not display a disregard for public safety, or depict situations which might encourage inappropriate, unsafe, or dangerous practices. What could be more unsafe or dangerous than smoking itself? Thirty-five thousand Canadians are dying from it. This is far worse that any of the other types of activities.

I raised this at committee with advertisers. They stated that what they had in mind was boating accidents; we do not wish a boat shown in a billboard and not have the person wearing a life-jacket because that would encourage people to run out and get into a boat without a life-jacket and have a boating accident. These are the people who tell us that their advertisements for cigarettes never encourage anyone to smoke, but somehow a boating commercial which showed someone doing something unsafe would suddenly encourage Canadians by the thousands to go out and have boating accidents. What nonsense.

The seventh rule states that cigarette or cigarette tobacco advertising will be addressed to adults 18 years of age or over, and will be directed solely to the increase of cigarette brand shares. I have never seen an advertisement that said, "We discourage you from smoking because it is very unhealthy, but if you are continuing to smoke anyway, try our brand". It does not happen that way. It is supposed to be addressed to adults 18 years or over.

It is very difficult to see a grocery or confectionery store without tobacco advertising that is located in an ordinary neighbourhood where there are families living and children going to those stores. There are bill boards all over. There are lots of bill boards on the Gardiner Expressway. They are lighted up and one cannot even read the health warning on those bill boards. They are all over the place. Canada's Wonderland has tobacco advertising. That is a place for children. Children thumb through magazines, although they may not be the subscribers, and they see tobacco advertisements there. The main drag in my riding, down Fourth Avenue, is a commercial street. Children use commercial streets. They go to stores. Fifty feet away from the street itself is a residential area. Yet there are massive bill boards advertising to children living in those neighbourhoods.

The eighth states that no advertising will state or imply that smoking the brand advertised promotes physical health, or that smoking a particular brand is better for health than smoking any other, or is essential to romance, prominent success, or personal advancement. This is the so-called "life-style" advertising. Tobacco advertisements are largely of this nature. Of course, there were the famous tropical fish advertisements that suggested that smoking is very good for tropical fish. Otherwise, they try to convince us that smoking is good for white water canoeing, kayaking, hang-gliding, exercising, dancing, and doing all those types of things. The example I just mentioned of Benson & Hedges wishing to associate cigarette smoking with successful woman in politics is absolutely contrary to their own code of advertising. It is a voluntary, useless code.

The thirteenth rule states that the warning will be prominently displayed. Of course, the warning on cigarette advertising is not prominently displayed. One can hardly read it, and it is a weak warning at that.

The tobacco manufacturers and advertisers tell us that we cannot ban advertising because it is a legal product. Advertising is limited for many legal products. Tobacco would not have been a legal product if we had had any idea of the harmful consequences when tobacco smoking began to become popular in Canada some years ago. It simply would not have happened. If we buy this argument, what it says is that once a mistake is made and a product becomes a legal product then you cannot get rid of it. If it is a legal product or if it is an addictive product, it is not realistic to ban a product that is used by 6 million or 7 million Canadians.

Its use can be discouraged, and people who do not wish to smoke can be protected from being involuntary smokers. There are many things that can be done. The price can be raised to make it more difficult for kids to buy cigarettes. That should be done. Measures can be encouraged for farmers to get out of tobacco crops and to get into healthy, wholesome crops. That should be done. We should help farmers and their communities make the adjustments. There are many things that we can do. But to say that we cannot undo a mistake of the past is foolish, immoral, and there is no legal basis for doing that. We have a responsibility to act in respect to Canada's number one preventable health problem.

Another thing stated by the advertisers and tobacco companies is that if sports and arts sponsorships are banned, arts and sports will suffer. They make themselves out to be major contributors to this very important sector of national life. I want to spend a little time on this, because it is one of the more shameless misinformation campaigns we have seen. I want to deal particularly with sponsorship of the arts.

How much is it, for one thing? The companies would like us to believe that millions and millions of dollars are going into the arts, that they are the Canada council of the arts. Far from it; they are not remotely close to the CBC or the Canada Council in the amount of money they give to the arts. We are not even sure how much it is.

A couple of weeks ago, at a public meeting in Toronto, a representative of tobacco companies said that $20 million went to arts and sports. Nonsense, it is not $20 million. The Council on Business and the Arts indicated that it was $10 million to the arts alone. It is not $10 million to the arts alone. The full-page ads taken out by tobacco companies last summer indicated that $10 million went to culture and sports together.

Let us examine that $10 million figure. For one thing it is tax deductible money, and tobacco companies are paying tax at the rate of 35 per cent. Thus, 35 per cent of that money is our money. If it is $10 million, then $3.5 million of it is our tax money because we forgave it or reduced their tax bill. They are spending $3.5 million of our money.

How are they spending it in sports and the arts? Imperial Tobacco is the largest donor to the arts. It claims that for last year it spent $1.54 million on the arts. If we reduce that by the 35 per cent which was our money and not the company's, we are getting the sum down. If we look at how it is spent, the money goes down further. According to the Council on Business and the Arts, roughly half the money which goes to the arts is in the form of a gift, meaning that a ballet company can buy music, can pay choreographers, or can pay dancers. Half the money is not a gift at all; they do not even see the money. It goes for so-called services.

What are the services? They are not ballet slippers, music, or choreography. They are receptions at which the tobacco company's name is advertised. They are advertisements in newspapers of the ballet company with the logo of the tobacco company. It is a chance for the tobacco company to advertise its name without even the farce of that mild health warning. It is a chance to advertise cigarettes.

They have launched a campaign to convince people that they are spending a lot of money. I had a piece of work done through the Library of Parliament research services to try to find out exactly how much money they were spending on the arts or how much they were giving, and how much was involved in deals where they get advertising for it, in both cases tax deductible. So far these questions have not been answered. We are still awaiting precise information. However, it is very clear that it is not $20 million or $10 million. We are getting the numbers down in the case of the arts. It is well under $1 million for the arts. We are getting down to about $500,000 in contributions to the arts.

If they did not have this tax deduction, and if we did not allow this advertising and sponsorship, the Government would be collecting this money. It could be given to the Canada Council or to the arts directly or, in the case of sports, to sports organizations. That would be a far better use. I suggest very seriously that by permitting advertising and sponsorship in the arts and sports we are actually depriving these communities of better support. We should be giving them real money with which they can do what they want, instead of forcing them into providing services which effectively advertise tobacco companies far more than they help them in their own activities.

In order to convince people that tobacco companies are great patrons of the arts and promoters of sports, the companies undertook a massive campaign last summer. There were full-page ads everywhere at an estimated cost of $4 million, incidentally $4 million which was tax deductible. We are paying some of this money. We paid for more than $1 million of it. The irony is that taxpayers' money has been used more to try to convince Canadians that tobacco companies are promoters of arts and sports than in health promotion campaigns. That amount of money is more than the Minister of National Health and Welfare is paying for programs to discourage people from smoking. It is our money. Our taxpayers' money is being used to try to convince Canadians that we need arts and sports sponsorships when we surely do not need them and do not get value for our money.

I am pleased to see that the sports community is fighting back. I am pleased to see the leadership of athletes and of Physicians for a Smoke-free Canada, and the initiative taken by that group and others to have a smoke-free Olympics this year is a breakthrough. It is important and most desirable.

I was also very pleased to see that artists would not fall for this baloney on the part of tobacco companies, that they were the great patrons of the arts. Artists themselves, in co-operation with the Non-Smokers' Rights Association, have taken out ads saying that they want a ban on advertising and sponsorship because they believe that children need a chance. They do not want to see children encouraged of to take up this dangerous product. I am glad to see that responsible attitude being taken by our friends in the arts and our friends in sports.

It has been suggested that if we ban this advertising it will only apply to Canada in that we get much of our advertising from the United States. It has also been suggested that Canadians will simply switch to the American brands advertised in American magazines. It is true, if the Americans do not ban that advertising this will happen in the case of magazine advertising. However, I suggest that there is no tobacco advertising on television or radio either in the States or in Canada, and that billboard advertising is only relevant for our country. Therefore the only area in which this is a problem is magazine advertising.

It so happens that roughly 60 per cent of tobacco advertising in magazines is of American cigarettes right now, but American cigarettes only account for about 1 per cent of the market. It is strange, is it not, that Canadians do not seem to want to smoke American cigarettes? We do not have any real reason to fear that there will be a massive switch to American cigarettes if we take the correct step and ban tobacco advertising and the Americans are slow.

Incidentally many Americans want their country to take this step as well. There are people in Congress who are working for ad bans. The United States is ahead of us in terms of a smoke-free workplace. They are ahead of us in some measures. Let us not give up on the Americans. Instead, let us lobby them to bring in parallel legislation which would be in the interests of all people who read magazines.

Members of the House have been subjected to quite a clever campaign on the part of the tobacco industry to convince them to vote against Bill C-51, and I guess indirectly against my Bill C-204. All Hon. Members will have received a large number of letters supposedly from constituents expressing their concerns—and perhaps Hon. Members have received some very genuine letters from constituents—which they should be aware were part of a strategy. It has been estimated that it cost $30 to get each letter to us.

What happened is that the public relations company managing the campaign sent out information to people it thought might respond. I am glad to say that only 10 per cent of them responded and that 90 per cent did not. They were given three follow-up telephone calls to encourage them to send in their letters.

I will read a sample letter which was addressed to me: "You have succeeded in finding a symptom but have completely missed the issue". Then it talks about not wanting it to be illegal to advertise. These letters never mentioned health. They talked about freedom of speech. They were very high-minded about the Charter of Rights.

However, it is most interesting to look at the fine print. These are phoney letters, and people must understand that. How do we identify between a phoney letter and a genuine letter from a constituent? How do we distinguish the ones which came in from this campaign? They were all typewritten because the public relations company prepared the letters and the persons to which they were sent only had to sign them. There was no letterhead and they were not on their own stationery. Many of them were from small business people who have stationery. The same thing holds for the envelopes. They were matching envelopes, and different coloured stationery was used. It has the individual's name, the MP's name. It is Dear Mr. so and so or Dear Madam so and so. The letters are here but they are not on the letterhead of the company. Of course not. It was not the people in the company who wrote the letters, it was a public relations company that wrote letters to you, Hon. Members and to you, Madam Speaker. Hon. Members on both sides of the House have been flooded with phony letters purporting to be genuine letters of concern from constituents. Instead, this is a well heeled campaign on the part of the tobacco industry.

In case you are not sure about it, Madam Speaker, some of the letters are on white paper, some are on beige paper, some are on cream paper and some are on turquoise paper. None of them mention health, death, emphysema, heart disease, hospitalization or any of these assorted effects of tobacco use. Another hint that the letters are phony, beyond the fact that there is no letterhead, they are blocked to the left. Most Canadians when writing letters indent each paragraph. Some people do not, but it is very common. If you have 100 letters in your office with no letterhead, a matching envelope, the address typed out and blocked to the left, you can be very sure you have been a victim of a big hoax.

Some people who received these letters, that is your constituents and mine, have written back with little comments. They sent the letter back and signed it. One constituent says "I am completely opposed to this letter and urge you to support the ban on tobacco advertising". I am pleased to see that. I have another one from a constituent who has written across it "nonsense". The individual added a P.S. It says "Ms. McDonald, I support the banning of cigarette advertising even though I derive some benefit from it via my work in the theatre". Here is a public spirited person who can distinguish from his own benefit and the need to have controls. He also enclosed the letter he had received from the Canadian Tobacco Manufacturers Council, the perpetrator of this hoax.

The letter is to him and it says "In the postalgram we advised that you would receive a comprehensive information kit on this critical issue. You now have the kit in your hands. As you will note, it contains a letter and a stamped pre-addressed envelope directed to your Member of Parliament. We urge you to sign and send the letter right away. Remember this damaging legislation could be passed into law soon.

Damaging, absolutely". It goes on and on in a tirade against the legislation.

But here we have a public spirited constituent who exposed this phoney hoax for what it is, as I am pleased to see a lot of people have done. Apparently 90 per cent of the people who were approached refused to go along with it. We should not be surprised about that, because we know that a strong majority of Canadians support a ban on advertising, and who support the other important measures which the House has considered and let us hope will continue to consider.

So much for the hoax and letters and envelopes. These are not genuine letters of concern from your constituents, Madam Speaker.

The measure before us now to ban advertising and sponsorship is important, but it has to be part of a comprehensive package. It alone will not really make a dent in tobacco smoking. We cannot have a proper education program for children so long as we allow advertising. Children do not believe the education program. They go into the classroom and the teacher tells them something about smoking, and then they go to the corner store to buy candy and there is a big cigarette ad. Children themselves say that if advertising is allowed, the Government must think it is all right. The fact that advertising is allowed says to people that it is not so serious that it should be banned. It is absolutely vital in order to have an education program that cigarette advertising be banned. That alone though will not do everything that we want to have done.

Recommendations have been made by many organizations. Let me cite one of the best, from the Non-Smokers' Rights Associations, list of measures that we ought to be considering as complementary to the ban on advertising and promotion. Amendments to Bill C-51 are recommended as follows. The Bill must terminate tobacco marketing to minors, a very large market of which we are aware. Features from Bill C-204 must be added to Bill C-51 to protect non-smokers from environmental tobacco smoke exposure in federally regulated workplaces and transportation. I will address a few words to that. Under existing Canadian tort law, tobacco manufacturers are required to give their customers detailed warnings with respect to the nature and extent of the risks. Some further points along that. There must be an immediate ban on spitting tobacco, so-called smokeless tobacco, an important measure that could be easily handled. It should be handled now before this habit becomes more prevalent and before we are in the same situation as we are with tobacco because it is hard to ban something that is widespread. The ban on the promotion of tobacco must include the industry practice of providing payments to retailers to feature tobacco products at the check-out counters.

That is why I think my Bill C-204 is a bit stronger in this respect. It is very clear that there should be no advertising whatsoever. It does not allow the loophole of point of sale advertising. We need measures at the workplace.

Treasury Board has by regulation introduced a number of measures, and we are pleased to see them. I look forward to the House of Commons, the Senate and the Library bringing in no smoking measures as well, but we do not have them yet, only partial measures.

Before a committee on Bill C-204, Labour Canada made it very clear that there would be exceptions to the no smoking rule. In places, for example, where federal employees share office space with the private sector, a provincial body, or somebody else, there would be no requirement for a smoke free workplace. Labour Canada did not know how many people would be exempted from the regulation but we suspect it is a very large number.

It is quite clear that the regulations the Government has introduced do not include the Armed Forces, the RCMP or Crown corporations. Several Ministers have said that they hope these other bodies will bring in regulations, but so far they have not. They have brought in only partial measures.

We need much clearer measures and full protection for the public as well as for employees. Regulation may not be adequate. We asked for legal opinions on that at committee. Is the Government sure that legislation will not be needed and that regulation will be adequate? We just do not know at this point.

It would be important in my view to meld Bill C-204 and C-51 so that we can deal with all of these aspects, the labelling which is contained only in Bill C-51, the smoke-free workplace, which is contained only in Bill C-204 and the advertising which is in both. We need to bring these measures together and come back with two Bills which cover the subject as adequately as possible. Let us hope the Minister will bring in other Bills and the related measures to which I have referred.

[Translation]

Addiction to smoking has taken epidemic proportions and we need a comprehensive program to fight it, to fight the mortality rate, to fight increasing tobacco use by youths, teenagers and even children. A total ban on sales to minors and children is what we need. We now have this legislation. Sanctions must be stricter, and this legislation which in practice has not been enforced must be effectively applied. Smokeless tobacco must be banned. We must have higher taxes as a means to discourage children, youngsters and teenagers from smoking. We need measures to encourage tobacco growers to switch to other health-promoting agricultural products. We must protect the workplace, we must protect the public.

Madam Speaker, we need a whole series of measures to fight smoking addiction in Canada.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

OPPOSITION TO NEW BUSINESS PLAN

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, it has now been a year since Canada Post management set up their new corporate plan. The minute this plan was launched several hundreds of thousands of Canadians demonstrated against the installation of superboxes which, as we all recall, could not be closed and would open by themselves.

On a number of occasions several hundred municipalities passed resolutions urging Canada Post not to implement the new action plan. Even the Canadian Federation of Municipalities adopted a resolution asking Canada Post officials not to close rural post offices.

Mr. Speaker, last week a Montreal court did forbid Canada Post to install these famous superboxes on city property. How many more Canadians and how many more institutions must speak out against this ill-conceived corporate plan, Mr. Speaker? How much more time will it take this Government to realize that this plan is not good for Canadians and that priority ought to be given to restoring home mail delivery, providing equitable postal services, and keeping small rural post offices open because they are important to Canadian society?

SHIPBUILDING

AWARDING OF CONTRACT TO BUILD FRIGATES—NEED FOR GOVERNMENT TO CONTROL COSTS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the Department of National Defence will soon award a contract for the last six of a twelve frigate construction program. Billions of dollars are at stake. Simple logic should prevail when awarding this contract. The Department of National Defence should make sure that frigate construction expertise is developped in several locations of this great country. It should take advantage of the competition between two shipbuilding contractors in order to better control costs. Any monopoly situation would result in a price escalation much too costly to Canadian taxpayers.

The Department of National Defence should also question very seriously the representations made by the Saint John Shipbuilding Company to the effect that a frigate built outside of its own shipyards would cost an additional $79 million. That is sheer nonsense, Mr. Speaker, for the cost of a frigate expressed in 1985 dollars is $110 million. It is unthinkable that a responsible company should say this cost of $110 million would go up by $79 million as a result of a simple transfer from one shipyard to another.

CFPR PRINCE RUPERT—PROTEST AGAINST BUDGET CUTS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, residents of northwestern British Columbia are not amused by the Conservative-inspired proposal to slash the existing CBC station at Prince Rupert from 14 persons to 2. This station opened during World War II and has provided a vital cultural and information system to the far-flung coastal and internal communities for almost half of this century.

The slashing of CBC's operational and capital budget by $85 million has sent the corporation in search of ways to meet growing demands from Prince George, Kelowna, Kamloops, Vancouver and Victoria. No doubt these areas deserve more and better CBC service. However, where are those silent B.C. Conservative MPs when it comes to providing new funds to the CBC? They are silent, that is where they are. The Treasury Board has directed that CBC not enter into any extensions of service, including to British Columbia.

The CBC plan would slash $700,000 from CFPR. That is less than one-half the cost of the Stevens inquiry, a mere 1 per cent of the cost of the penitentiary in the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) riding and less than three days worth of interest on the $1 billion the Conservatives gave away to the Reichmann brothers on the oil deal.

The priorities of the Government are backward. It is time to push big business back from the trough. Taxpayers in the Northwest want service for the tax dollars they pay, and that means maintaining local CBC radio. Save CFPR!

DISASTERS

EXPRESSION OF SYMPATHY TO FAMILIES OF VICTIMS OF FISHING VESSEL ACCIDENTS

Mr. Darryl L. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my sincere condolences to the families and loved ones of the eight victims of the two tragic accidents which occurred at sea this weekend, one in the Magdalen Islands and one in Nova Scotia.

[Translation]

Saturday afternoon, in the Magdalene Islands, a thirty-one foot boat with five people on board was shipwrecked while crossing from Cap-aux-Meules to l'Île de l'Entrée. All lives on board were lost.

[English]

In Nova Scotia, the vessel lost was from West Dover near Peggy's Cove. It was 27 feet long and had three occupants. It left port Saturday morning to check fishing nets set nearby. At 2 p.m. it was reported overdue and a search began. Winds were strong at the time. At 3 p.m. Sunday, November 22, wreckage was brought ashore and identified as being from the missing craft. The search is continuing under favourable weather conditions.

These tragic incidents serve as a grim reminder that the sea can be cruel and unforgiving. A recently released Coast Guard study into fishing vessel safety made 41 recommendations on improvements. These tragic incidents underline the need for fishermen and for all those who make use of small vessels to take the report and its recommendations very seriously and to ensure that their vessel operations are carried out in as safe a manner as possible.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN WATER POLICY—CALL FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, as Hon. Members know, closed beaches because of pollution are a common experience for Canadians every summer. The causes of water pollution are known and we have the technology to take remedial action. We even know the cost—about $15 billion at last count. What is missing is the political will here in Ottawa to share the costs with the provinces and municipalities.

We had hoped to find an effective approach to sewage and water in the federal water policy just tabled. Instead, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) commits himself to more research and development. By substituting study for action he takes a page from President Reagan's acid rain policy book.

• (1405)

In contrast, we in the Liberal Party are committed to providing the federal share required to build sewer and water systems to protect our health and environment. If the Government is, as it claims, strapped for cash, instead of planning to spend billions of dollars on nuclear submarines it could provide such funds to ensure good drinking water for Canadians and prevent the closing of beaches every summer for many years to come.

COMMUNICATIONS

SLOWNESS IN APPLYING TECHNOLOGY—CHALLENGE FOR CANADA

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, "the future lies in knowledge-intensive industries and new technological applications . . . . We must compete with our brains, our ingenuity, and our creativity." These true words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) are reflected in the discussion paper entitled "Communications for the Twenty-first Century" recently published by the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald).

While pointing out that Canada has great strength in information technology and has, for 100 years, been a world leader in communications, the paper lays out the challenges of the future. These include database and software underdevelopment, slow technology application rates, and a need for expanded research. In addition, we have a fragmented and outdated regulatory system.

I recommend this excellent paper for ardent study by parliamentarians and all those with an interest in Canada's technological development.

LITERACY

IMMIGRANT CHILDREN—NEED FOR SPECIALIZED TRAINING IN ENGLISH

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, later today the House of Commons will be debating a motion to study literacy standards and targets for Canada. I wish to draw attention, therefore, to a crisis situation now developing in schools in our metropolitan areas.

In Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver, as well as other cities, many immigrants, both adults and young people, particularly refugee children, desperately require English as a second language if they are to have any chance in our society at all. Yet both the Toronto and North York school boards are reporting that they are being swamped by immigrant children who require specialized training in English which they cannot provide because of a shortage of funds.

Yet these immigrants are entering Canada fully in compliance with Canadian law, and will pay Canadian taxes and make their contribution to Canada if they are given sufficient opportunity.

It does no good for the federal Government to say they are the responsibility of the provinces because education is a provincial responsibility, when the Department of Employment and Immigration and the Department of the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) have literacy programs to help other Canadians in their workplace and in their culture.

If the federal Government takes its responsibility for immigration seriously, it will assist immigrants and refugees to upgrade their language skills by helping in the funding so they will become Canadians in name and substance as soon as possible.

EDUCATION

OPENING OF COLLEGE WEEK '87

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform the House that today marks the opening of College Week '87. The nation's colleges and technical institutes have again joined forces to launch their second annual Canada-wide public awareness campaign which goes through to November 29.

[Translation]

This week was organized by the Association of Canadian Community Colleges which, with its 125 affiliated members, is the only organization which makes it possible for colleges to agree on the major social, economic and cutural issues. Since it was established in 1972, through its constant co-ordinating efforts, the Association has helped Canadian colleges organize into a real network.

[English]

Canada's colleges and technical institutes are a national resource of the highest significance. The clear conclusion that emerged from the recent forum in Saskatoon is that all the key players in higher education, including federal and provincial Governments, must work closely together if we are to survive in a world of increasing competition. I know the colleges are fully prepared to do their share to meet the many challenges ahead.

McGILL REDMEN WIN VANIER CUP—TRIBUTE TO UNDERDOG VICTORS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I know that this will not please you, nor will it please my Leader (Mr. Turner), but I would like to congratulate the McGill Redmen for their great victory on Saturday in winning the Vanier Cup, the national championship for Canadian university football.

This greatest victory in Vanier Cup history was against a UBC team which was undefeated in two years, and against heavy odds quoted against them. During the game McGill established nine records and their great fullback, Mike Soles, won the most valuable player award. He was not alone, Mr. Speaker. He was ably supported by their aggressive offensive line, the Crazy Dogs, and their outstanding defence, the Montcalm Maulers.

In a year when Montreal lost its professional football team we are particularly proud of this fighting McGill team. It is now evident that McGill is not only number one in academics but also number one in sport.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

FINAL CROP YEAR PAYMENT TO FARMERS

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, the announcement in Regina this past week by the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer) was good news for western Canadian farmers who are suffering from low commodity prices and very tight quotas.

Over 85 per cent of Prairie grain farmers participate in the Western Grain Stabilization Program which they fund jointly with the federal Government. The 131,000 cheques will be in the mail by early December. This will bring the total payout for the 1986-87 crop year to $1.398 billion.

The Minister noted that on completion of the 1986-87 final payout the stabilization fund will show a $1.5 billion deficit. This means that all of the 1986-87 payout was made under provisions of the Act which allow the fund to borrow money from the federal Government.

The federal Government recognizes the value of the protection provided to grain and oilseeds producers under the Western Grain Stabilization Program and is currently considering amendments to the Act which would improve funding and make future operations even more beneficial to farmers.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—EFFECT ON NORTHERN SASKATCHEWAN LAKES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, lakes in the Canadian Shield in northern Saskatchewan and Alberta, like those in Ontario, are very susceptible to acid rain because of the composition of much of the rock around those lakes and the lack of buffering materials on the bottom of them.

The increase in the processing of tar sands in northern Alberta at Fort McMurray and the Cold Lake area has meant a considerable increase in the amount of acid rain and snow being deposited across the northern part of that province and northern Saskatchewan.

Professor Hammer of the University of Saskatchewan warned us in 1980 about the short and long-term effects of this increased activity. Monitoring has shown that some lakes are already below the accepted PH level.

The Governments of Canada, Alberta, and Saskatchewan must take note of the fragility of the northern ecology and ensure that air quality standards are rigidly enforced so that sulphur and nitrogen emissions will not continue to acidify and eventually kill our northern lakes.

The time for action is now, not after the environment has been made unsuitable for much of our fish population.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the NDP and the Liberals have a blurred vision of Canada, if indeed they have any vision at all. These negative individuals seem to think that Canada is an island, that we can live all by ourselves without trading partners and be happy ever after.

Well, I have news for them and the leaders of some of our unions who have the same blurred eyesight. Canada is not an island. Canada is a nation, and unless we have trading partners we will wither and die.

Under an NDP program we will share each other's poverty, but under the Tories we will share an expanding prosperity.

The Tory Party believes in Canada. We believe Canadians can compete successfully with the peoples of any other part of the world. We have confidence in our people. We are not afraid that the Americans will outplay us. Rather, we will meet the challenges that free trade will open up to us and we will welcome the vast opportunities that will bring buoyancy and new jobs to our people.

The agreement for free trade with our American neighbours can be the catalyst that will give Canada its greatest period of prosperity ever. So on with free trade!

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

NOVA SCOTIA—RICHMOND COUNTY DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION—END OF FUNDING

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the decision to terminate funding for the Richmond County Development Corporation by the Department of Employment and Immigration is a decision that is both irresponsible and grossly negligent. I cannot understand why a Government would be so insensitive to the needs of the communities in Richmond County which are desperately struggling to find viable business opportunities to enhance their own livelihood.

• (1415)

It should be noted that community development corporations take a considerable period of time adjusting and educating the people whom they intend to serve. No community development organization is a great success on the first day. This is true of the Richmond County Development Corporation. Over the years it has been struggling to come afloat, and as of recent date it is doing extremely well.

From November 15, 1986, to August 15, 1987, the number of investments made by the Richmond County Development Corporation totalled 18, and the funds it has made available are approximately $327,700; owners' equity equals $553,000; and third party participation is over $1 million for a total project investment of $1.885 million.

I am appalled that the Government, which preached jobs, jobs, jobs in the last election, has treated this particular issue with such insensitivity.

What community development corporation will now want to go to Richmond County in order to assist individuals in that community after the way in which Richmond Community Development Corporation has been treated by the Government of Canada? The federal Government must change this regressive decision, because it is bad for the people who really count, the people of Richmond County in Nova Scotia.

TRANSPORTATION POLICIES—APPARENT DISADVANTAGES FOR CANADIANS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Transport and the Minister of State (Transport).

[English]

In response to a question on Friday, the Minister of Transport said, as reported at page 11009 of Hansard:

> I can certainly confirm that we will not sign any transportation annex that will undermine Canada's ability to protect and advance Canada's interests.

He also said:

> —it is a disappointment to us that we could not persuade the U.S. to agree to change the protective provisions of the Jones Act.

Does this mean that negotiations on the maritime issues are over, or will the Government stand up and fight for our coasting industry? Will the Minister assure the House that Canada's coasting trade as laid out in Bill C-52 will be protected? Will he reintroduce this legislation before the trade agreement is signed?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my friend opposite has asked a number of very complex questions. I want to take note of them and we will get back to him with those details as quickly as possible.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT PROVISIONS CONCERNING RAILWAY TRANSPORTATION BE WITHDRAWN

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of State (Transport) and concerns railway transportation.

In his testimony before the Standing Committee on Transport, the executive vice-president of CP Rail, Mr. Ritchie, said:

—"We sincerely believe that the more extreme measures, especially competitive line rates, should be postponed—they practically boil down to setting up a unilateral free trade system with United States." The measure would clearly benefit Americans at the expense of Canadian interests.

Considering that 57 percent of the total volume of railway transportation is exported, will the Minister do what is necessary to withdraw a measure that goes against Canada's interests?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, as a member of this Government, I can give the Hon. Member the assurance that when we started the free trade talks, it was always with the interests of this country in mind. Everything that will be signed, and this includes the transportation sector, will contain safeguards for Canadian interests, and that is how we intend to proceed for the transportation sector as well.

REQUEST FOR DETAILS ON COMPETITIVE LINE RATES

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister confirm that the measures I just mentioned, namely the competitive line rates, will be either postponed or withdrawn, since they definitely give Americans the kind of access to our transportation system that Canadians are not getting in the United States? Can the Minister give the House the assurance the measure will be withdrawn?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, all measures that will become effective will always be aimed at protecting the interests and the economic situation of the people we are working for.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES—HALIFAX HARBOUR PARTY

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in Halifax today the Government of France is putting on a $1 million party for the Minister of National Defence and his entourage from Ottawa in an effort to sell a submarine. Picture if you will, Mr. Speaker, a fleet of white limousines, 25 bilingual guides, a portable movie theatre, and a 24-hour buffet with sumptuous food and drink—all you want free for 24 hours.

Does the Government not realize that today the fishermen of eastern Canada find it extremely difficult to believe that the Government has their best interests at heart when it takes part in such a Parée soirée in Halifax harbour put on by a Government whose very desire is to take away our right to fish in our own waters?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I share the Hon. Member's frustration at not being invited to the party.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: Both the British and the French were invited to Halifax to put their submarines on display. I am told that the number of visitors who will actually visit the submarines stays the same, although the British submarine which is a little larger takes more visitors at any one time.

As to the menu, I am informed by the Department of National Defence:

> The menu of the meals served on board these vessels is the responsibility of the Captain of each vessel. Keeping in mind the two nationalities involved, it is not surprising that the menus are different.

I am sure that when a final decision is taken by officials here in Ottawa and by the Government it will be made on the basis of the technical capabilities of the submarine, and not the quality of the cuisine.

CAPABILITY OF FRENCH SUBMARINE TO OPERATE IN ARCTIC

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in the middle of this 24-hour buffet table that seats over 90 people is a lard sculpture to scale of the submarine. I did not say "large", although that it is. I said lard sculpture, lard as in fat. In talking about being fat for the slaughter, this particular submarine being promoted by the French cannot even operate in ice.

What is the Government of Canada doing looking at a submarine that is not ice-strengthened, that cannot operate in the north and that is not even designed to use the very torpedoes for which we have already contracted? Has the Government's judgment been submerged in French largesse? We would be better off buying the lard model. At least then we could melt it down and have fish and chips while there are enough fish to fry.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think that the fish and chips are on the British submarine. The French submarine has Beaujolais nouveau.

Before either submarine would be purchased by the Canadian Armed Forces it would have to meet the specifications provided by the Canadian Armed Forces. They would both have to be modified to enable them to come up through Arctic ice and to operate in the Arctic environment. Both are within the technical capabilities of current design. The fact that those submarines that France now has and that are on display here are not designed for the Arctic is simply a result of the fact that France is not an Arctic power, and Canada is.

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

SYSTEM OF MAKING APPOINTMENTS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

A couple of weeks ago in Halifax the Prime Minister acknowledged that one of the reasons for the Government's unpopularity has been persistence in patronage appointees to a whole variety of government boards and institutions.

At that time the Prime Minister stated that Canadians wanted the Government to do better. In fact, he stated that they wanted him "to chuck the whole system out".

Considering that we now know that a substantial majority of the members of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency have direct connections with the Conservative Party, and that on the weekend it was confirmed that seven of the eight members of the Northern Ontario Development Agency have direct connections with the Conservative Party, and in fact the eighth is a known supporter and financial contributor, is this what the Government means by doing better?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no. As my hon. friend knows, among other things we have almost doubled the number of women and ethnocultural representatives appointed to boards, commissions, and agencies of the Government of Canada. We have proceeded with high quality appointments of representatives of other political Parties and, I think, historic numbers of partisans of other political Parties to important jobs in the decision-making process of the Government of Canada.

But most of all we never suggested that political support ought necessarily to disqualify anyone from appointment. I hope that that is not the suggestion that my hon. friend is making. That is why we, under parliamentary reform, appointed or allowed the appointment of parliamentary committees to scrutinize very carefully, and allow parliamentarians to examine the credentials of people, be they NDP, Liberal or Conservative.

The parliamentary committee system is in place, and to my regret, I must tell the Hon. Leader of the NDP, that he and his colleagues have failed to use it. If they use it and examine political appointees under the GIC system, and if there is anyone who is disqualified for reasons of competence, we will be happy to bump him or her off the list. Until that time, the parliamentary system that is in place should be used to make sure that qualified Canadians can serve Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NORTHERN ONTARIO DEVELOPMENT AGENCY—APPOINTMENTS TO BOARD

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, first, as one of my colleagues stated, we have constantly challenged appointees, where appropriate, and the appropriate committee can deal with it. The Prime Minister knows that appointing eight Conservatives on an eight-member board is nothing but total partisanship, and he understands that.

Mr. McDermid: Where do you get your information from, Ed?

Mr. Broadbent: I wish the Prime Minister would at least cut out the hypocrisy; going down to Halifax and preaching one thing and then coming back to Ottawa and doing a completely different thing.

Considering that the members of this Northern Ontario Development Agency on their own authority can make decisions on grants up to $250,000, does the Prime Minister not understand that by having eight of eight Conservative appointees on such a board is precisely why there are accusations of unfair decisions, and that is precisely why there is real conflict of interest and apparent conflict of interest? When will the Government smarten up?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): My friend mentions the appointment of eight members to an eight-member board. My understanding is that it is a 15-member board and contains representatives from all walks of life.

Mr. Broadbent: It is eight.

Mr. Mulroney: I stand to be corrected on that. We can check it out mutually.

Mr. Broadbent: It is eight.

Mr. Mulroney: My understanding is that the board is larger than that.

It regard to this, I suppose that apart from the fact that it is true that Leo Bernier has served Ontario and Ontario's north well as a cabinet Minister for many years—

Mr. McDermid: Nobody is more qualified.

Mr. Mulroney: I think that most Ontarians would agree that Leo Bernier is extremely well qualified, and there is no one more qualified to head up that particular organization.

Mr. Waddell: He is a breathing Tory.

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend states that he is a "breathing Tory". All Tories breathe.

I think that Leo Bernier is someone whom my hon. friend would wish to support. If you do not care to support him, do not go to northern Ontario.

In regard to the second appointment of Mr. Elgie, by way of illustration, he was President and General Manager of Searchmont Valley Ski Resorts Limited, he served as president of a board of the local family YMCA, as well as the board of trustees of the United Way, and he is heading the 1987 campaign for funds for the Intermediate Corporations Group of the United Way. He serves on the board of directors of the Northern Ontario Development Corporation.

• (1430)

The next one, Mr. Pope, is a member of the Institute of Chartered Accountants and has been a member of the vestry of St. Matthew's Cathedral and the executive of the Anglican Diocese.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Mulroney: I will acknowledge that some of them are Conservatives.

Mr. Broadbent: Not some, all.

Mr. Mulroney: Many of them to be appointed are not. Surely my hon. friend will acknowledge that there are NDPers whom we appointed to great positions, such as Ian Deans, such as Stephen Lewis, such as Dennis McDermott, such as Sylvia Gold to the presidency of the National Advisory Committee on the Status of Women, to name but four or five in very powerful positions.

My hon. friend would not disqualify outstanding people like Stephen Lewis or like Ian Deans for high government appointments. Why does he insist upon disqualifying Leo Bernier?

REQUEST FOR REPLACEMENT OF APPOINTEES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has said that because he has appointed one out of a hundred thousand from another Party that makes the system fair.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: That is an exaggeration.

Mr. Broadbent: I tell him that the people of Canada understand the reality which is, in spite of getting a promise to put an end to patronage, that they have had the worst level of patronage probably in modern history from this Government—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Masse: What are you looking for? This is a crazy approach you have.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member will put his preamble as facts upon which the question is based, and not just argument.

[Translation]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister promised repeatedly that he would clean up the patronage system. Will he begin immediately by replacing this partisan list with one which is truly representative of the Northern Ontario community?

[English]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend has just indicated how difficult it is for the Government to deal in a serious manner with a serious problem which he raises when he prefaces his question with the observation—and this is a quote—that the Government has made one NDP appointment out of a hundred thousand.

That is a falsehood. It is a grotesque destruction of the truth, and it is difficult to dialogue with my hon. friend when he should be the first to acknowledge that this Government has appointed more people of NDP and Liberal persuasion, active partisans, to key roles than any other Government in history. I think that is a tribute.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Second, we have in place an important series of committees of the House of Commons whose responsibility it is to pass upon the competence of the individuals.

I invite my hon. friend to instruct his Members of Parliament to convene that committee to deal with these and any others that we propose and, if they can be rejected on reasons of incompetence, then reject them, but stay away from the exaggeration and partisan sniping which my hon. friend has been indulging in today.

PRIME MINISTER'S APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and it also concerns the issue of ethics in government.

This weekend Canadians were made aware of the fact that all appointees to the FEDNOR DRIE agency in northern Ontario were well-known political Tories.

Can the Prime Minister tell the House if it is just a happy coincidence that Leo Bernier is a former Tory member of the Ontario Legislature, that Reginald Pope is the father of a Tory MPP, that Shawne Emery is the wife of a former Tory riding association president, that Gaston Demers is a Tory member of the Legislature, and so on?

Does the Prime Minister still believe what he said in 1983 when he uttered, "There will be jobs for Liberals and NDPers too once I have been in power for 15 years and I can't find a living, breathing Tory left to appoint"? Is he running short of Tories now? Does he have any left to appoint?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I just give you an indication, inasmuch as my hon. friend raises it, of some important appointments that have been made.

The Hon. Donald Johnston was appointed a Queen's Counsel.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: The Hon. Lloyd Francis was appointed Ambassador to Portugal. Pierre Genest, a very active, partisan Liberal, was appointed a director of de Havilland. Ted Johnston, a former executive assistant to Mr. Trudeau, was appointed a director of de Havilland. There was Marcel Belanger. The Hon. Jean-Jacques Blais was appointed as a member of the Security Intelligence Review Committee. Harrison McCain was appointed as a director of Petro-Canada. There was Francis Fox, and so on. They were very important and prominent Liberals.

May I just conclude, by way of illustration, that I was honoured myself to appoint Rita Prud'homme, the sister of the Liberal Member for Saint-Denis, as a citizenship court judge. I was honoured because she was a person of quality, and I would be happy to do it again.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the Prime Minister that he certainly had the option. He could have said "no" to those old Tory ways.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will confine his preamble to the facts necessary to ask the question and leave off the argument.

QUERY WHEN GOVERNMENT WILL PRESENT PUBLIC MORALITY CODE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, in the light of all the recent controversies and scandals surrounding this Government, I would like to ask the Prime Minister when he intends to table in this House his new information kit on a public morality code which he promised in the 1986 trone speech. In addition, can he tell us whether, when he introduces this new kit on public ethics, it will contain guidelines to prevent the Prime Minister himself and the rest of the Conservatives from abusing their privileges in the future as they have been doing since forming the Government three years ago?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the federal Government makes a great many appointments. These appointments include people from all walks of life and an impressive number of influent representatives of all political parties in Canada. Moreover, thanks to parliamentary reform, the Members of this House can now criticize and review appointments, and even, if they have solid evidence, question the competence of the individual proposed for an appointment. This is quite new and part of our parliamentary reform. If there are valid reasons to reject a candidate, this House will do so.

If the only reason for the Hon. Member to raise this issue is some link between an appointee and the NDP, the Parti Québécois or the Quebec Liberal Party, I can tell him that it is not enough, because all citizens are entitled to play an active role in the political party of their choice without being penalized in such a democracy as ours.

[English]

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE SCRUTINY

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister who will know that the history of the FEDNOR agency so far is that of being consistently behind the schedule suggested in responses in the House by the Deputy Prime Minister.

First, in view of the fact that the Vice-Chairman of the Board is quoted in The Globe and Mail of Toronto as saying "we really haven't got our act together", is the Prime Minister willing to submit these appointments to the appropriate committee of Parliament? Second, would he consider, over and above the eight members of the board, creating a further seven positions for non-partisan appointments?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I find the question passing strange. All GIC appointments under the new rules are subject to committee approval, and these will be as all others.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): What committee?

Mr. Broadbent: They are not.

Mr. de Cotret: Yes, they are.

Mr. Broadbent: Can the committee turn them down?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Can the committee say "no"? No way.

Mr. de Cotret: The committee can look into all the GIC appointments that we have been making.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): We can say "no", but you don't have to do anything.

Mr. Waddell: When we join the States we will have a better committee.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Mr. de Cotret: My hon. colleague could certainly benefit from a careful reading of the rules. All the appointments are submitted to committee. The committee does not have to look at each one. The committee decides on its own which appointments it wants to look at.

Mr. Orlikow: Can they turn it down?

Mr. de Cotret: In terms of FEDNOR, the Government did not hesitate to move in a very distinctive way to set up an agency to help a very unfavoured region of the country. They are getting their act together to reduce unemployment and economic disparities in northern Ontario, and I am very proud of them.

• (1440)

REQUEST FOR NATIVE REPRESENTATION ON BOARD

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the President of the Treasury Board. How will his commitment made on October 2 in this House for native representation on the Board be met? In view of the Prime Minister's impression that there are 15 vacancies on that Board, what about appointing another seven on a non-partisan basis to represent the whole of northern Ontario?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Very simply, Mr. Speaker, I advised the Prime Minister that there were possibly 15 members on the board. I have checked. There are 12 members on the board. There are still four vacancies to be filled.

If the Hon. Member looks at the composition of the board, we have been very careful to have a balanced representation of all the interest groups from northern Ontario. In filling the last four vacancies, we will ensure that we complete that composition so that it truly reflects the social, ethnic and cultural realities of northern Ontario.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

COMMISSION ON PUBLIC COMPLAINTS, INTERNAL GRIEVANCES AND DISCIPLINE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. First, the Prime Minister has talked about the appointment of the Hon. J. J. Blais. Is it not true the law requires that a person representing the Official Opposition be appointed on the recommendation of the Leader of the Opposition? I do not know how the Prime Minister takes credit for that.

A year ago, in March, 1986, Parliament passed a law establishing a Commission on Public Complaints, Internal Grievances and Discipline regarding the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I am told as of early this morning that nobody has been appointed to this commission and that it is non-operational.

I give the Prime Minister a chance now to show some type of deathbed repentance with respect to appointments and to inform the House when the appointments will be made. Will he assure us that these people will be representative of the community of this country at large and will not be the kinds of appointments made to the FEDNOR group?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is right in regard to Mr. Blais, and we proceeded as well, under the same statute, I believe it was, to appoint to the Privy Council as a member of this important CSIS review group, Mr. Saul Cherniak, former, I think, NDP Finance Minister from Manitoba.

My hon. friend would want me then to point out—we did not have to, if that is his argument—the appointment of Chaviva Hosek as a member of the Economic Council of Canada, who is now the Minister of Housing in the Government of Ontario, and dozens of other similar partisans. My hon. friend will acknowledge that we have done this in dozens of cases.

I hope when he has criticisms to make, as I am sure he will, that he will bear in mind the large number of appointments of active partisans of all political Parties, PQ, NDP, Liberals and Conservatives. Surely he is not trying to make the case that Miss Hosek ought to be disqualified from public service because she was appointed by a Conservative Government to the Economic Council of Canada.

Ms. Copps: She was the President of NAC.

Mr. Mulroney: We may even look at the Member for Hamilton East in regard to the substance raised.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor West.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER APPOINT COMMISSION MEMBERS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister again why has more than a year has gone by since Parliament established the Commission on Public Complaints, Internal Grievances and Discipline regarding the RCMP without any members of that commission being appointed to it as yet? Surely the public interest is not being served by having this commission inoperative.

Surely it should be possible to ask the Prime Minister to make appointments of people who, on their merits, are worthy of appointment. Will he give an explanation for this unacceptable omission on his part?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Indeed, the Solicitor General is moving to appoint to this sensitive position a person of impeccable credentials, Mr. Speaker.

In regard to the sensitivity and to the notion raised, this Government has had two appointments made to the Supreme Court of Canada. I do not think that the Member will find that either of those two important appointments had any association of any kind with the Conservative Party, and yet that matter received little attention. But, if one appoints an unemployment insurance commissioner in North Bay, that is good for an eight column headline.

I think my hon. friend will agree, which is why I hope the committee will sit and carefully examine these appointments, that people of great competence have been appointed, in so called political patronage appointments by the Government, from all walks of life, and when the requirement was for sensitivity, the Government responded with that. When the requirement was very much for non-partisanship of any kind in an appointment, the Government has been responsive to that, as we shall in this kind of sensitive appointment raised by my hon. friend.

TRADE

QUERY WHETHER ALL FINALIZED PARTS OF CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT WILL BE PUBLISHED BEFORE FIRST MINISTERS MEET

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and concerns the resumption of negotiations this week to prepare the text of the Free Trade Agreement with the United States. Will this text be made public before the First Minister's meeting which will begin in Toronto in a few days? If not, can the Prime Minister assure us that at least all parts of the Agreement which have been finalized will be made available to the public and to the First Ministers before the beginning of the meeting this Thursday?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the comprehensive text will be published in due time after the work which has now begun is concluded.

[English]

REQUEST FOR 60-DAY EXAMINATION OF AGREEMENT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister aware of the growing anger among Canadians at being deprived of any knowledge of the details of the free trade agreement? There are 2,000 pages of text which people have not seen yet that will have a vital effect on many industries. Is the Prime Minister aware of the anger in Vancouver where the hearings began today that only eight groups from all of British Columbia can appear before the Commons Trade Committee?

How long will Canadians actually have to look at this text? Will the Prime Minister at least guarantee that if the Congress of the United States gets 60 working days to look at the free trade agreement, the Canadian people will get 60 working days to look at the free trade agreement before it is signed and sealed by the Mulroney Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend refers to the growing anger. I can point to the growing satisfaction of Canadians across the country who see the free trade agreement as a tremendous opportunity for growth and prosperity.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I can tell my hon. friend that I have just come from Calgary, from St. John's, Newfoundland, from Arichat, Cape Breton, from Central Nova and from Manicouagan, and in all those places across the country there has been strong and growing support for free trade as an instrument of economic growth and prosperity.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Let me tell my hon. friend that if he thinks there are some deficiencies in the procedures we have adopted, in terms of arriving in the House the moment after the deal was negotiated, inviting all Members of the House to begin a debate on it, referring the matter to a parliamentary committee, having hearings across the country—

Mr. Cassidy: No text yet.

Mr. Mulroney: —if my hon. friend thinks that this is a deficient procedure—and perhaps it is—I invite him to compare that with what took place when the previous Government negotiated the Auto Pact. It was passed without parliamentary hearings or reference to Parliament of any kind. That is the difference between a Government that genuinely believes in Parliament and in listening to Canadians, as opposed to one that did not care.

WINTER OLYMPIC GAMES

END TO HARASSMENT OF SMALL BUSINESSES WITH OLYMPIC IN CORPORATE NAMES

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. What is our Government doing to protect small businesses in Canada? I am, of course, speaking of those businesses which use Olympic or Olympia symbols in their names and are currently being investigated by the Canadian Olympic Association.

In London there are at least six companies that use Olympic in their names. Many of these Canadians have been in business for many years but they do not have the resources to fight the Canadian Olympic Association in court. Can the Minister assure the House that the super sleuths of the COA will, in future, be less zealous in "going for the gold" in their attempts to protect Olympic symbols?

• (1450)

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I have discussed this very serious matter with Olympic authorities over the weekend and this morning. Although I understand the need for legitimate protection of trademarks, I made known to those officials in no uncertain terms the concerns the Government has in that regard.

I expressed and requested of the Olympic Trust on behalf of Olympic authorities that a more reasonable system be put in place and that they not be as over-zealous in areas where it is not likely there will be a conflict. I am happy to report to the House and to Canadians that I have received the following assurances today.

The Olympic Trust on behalf of Olympic authorities will be concerned only with those abuses that threaten legitimate conflict with Olympic and sport related matters, not small restaurants and tuck shops, and they will not be concerned with anyone using names or trademarks prior to 1980 unless it is in direct conflict with the Olympics. No further letters, threats or lawsuits will be issued without the personal approval of the president and the legal staff, something which has not been the case up until today.

As of today, Canadians from coast to coast can begin to prepare, as the Olympic torch travels across the country, to enjoy the most successful winter games in the history of the Olympic movement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Because of the importance of the content of the exchange, the Chair exercised particular latitude. However, there is an item under Routine Proceedings whereby Ministers who wish to make statements can make statements. Then, of course, opposition Members can respond. The Hon. Member for Papineau.

FREE TRADE

REQUEST THAT PROVISIONS OF AGREEMENT DEALING WITH RAILWAY TRANSPORTATION BE AMENDED

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question to the Minister of State (Transport) as she did not reply to the very simple questions asked earlier by my colleague for Westmorland—Kent.

I would like to give her an opportunity to prove that she is worthy of her pay and that she knows something about her new department.

Is she aware that a Canadian transport company cannot transport goods from one American state to another without using an American driver? Why did her Government not try to have this injustice corrected during the free trade negociations?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I have no need to justify myself or to prove that I am worthy of my pay. I was elected to the House of Commons and I believe that I do my job as well as I can.

A while ago, I told the Hon. Member opposite that the Minister of Transport had taken a position last week as concerns the agreements negotiated for the transport industry. These agreements are in the interests of Canadians, and as a responsible Government turned to the future, we have made a commitment to negotiate conditions which will provide economic advantages for all sectors of our economy, including that mentioned by the Hon. Member.

UNITED STATES SUBSIDIARIES OPERATING INTRAPROVINCIALLY IN CANADA

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, for the third time today the Minister has failed to give us an answer to a very specific question. She is answering in a very broad context without answering at all the specific question that has been asked of her.

I will ask the Minister the specific question for the fourth time. I hope she knows the answer this time. Does the Minister of State know that any U.S. trucking operation that has set up a subsidiary in deregulated province here in Canada will now have the right to operate intraprovincially, while 43 U.S. states including New York, Michigan, Texas, Pennsylvania, the major one, will not allow Canadians to have the same rights?

Will the Canadian provinces be able to refuse licence applications made by U.S. truckers based in states that do not give Canadians a fair deal? It is a very specific question, yes or no.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I maintain that the commitment made by this Government is quite good enough. I shall certainly reply by yes or no to any question concerning transport. The agreement is a good one.

HEALTH

ACID RAIN—HEALTH HAZARD QUERY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed the Minister of National Health and Welfare who should know from studies in his own Department that there are health consequences to acid rain quite apart from any consequences to the natural environment, farms, forests and lakes. Would the Minister tell us what responsibility he feels he has, given the studies that show respiratory disease in children as a result of acid rain, for example? What responsibility does the Minister have to investigate and to respond to acid rain as a health problem for Canadians?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would think that the Hon. Member is referring to a study that was done by the University of California Medical School. At least I take it she is referring to that study which claimed such a link.

I have not received from my officials any report of such linkage. I am neither substantiating nor denying the point she has made in her question.

We also know, as the Hon. Member will know, that acid rain as referred to in her question has various factors that we might not be able to isolate. I am not trying to dismiss the question in any way. Quite frankly, I need more evidence to be able to give a categorical answer to the very specific question she has asked.

REQUEST FOR STRICTER POLLUTION EMISSION STANDARDS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, apart from the California studies to which the Minister has referred, studies dealing with cancer and long-term effects of acid rain, there are also short-term effects including respiratory diseases in children. I wonder if the Minister would undertake to respond to both the long-term and the short-term concerns and to reassure the House that the question of standards of emissions will be looked at from the point of view health, not just from the point of view of the natural environment. Perhaps we need tougher standards if we are to protect the health of Canadians as well as address the question of the effect on our lakes, farms and forests.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, what the Hon. Member asks is reasonable in the sense that it is incumbent upon the Department, and specifically the Health Protection Branch, to have an official position on those two points. I will take them back to the Department.

I do not have in my hand today from the Department or from Canadian officials a linkage, either short term or long term, which I can make available to her and to the public. Obviously her request is legitimate and I will take it back to the Department. However, I emphasize very strongly the position I took in the first half of my answer.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—FOOD PROCESSING INDUSTRY AND FARM MARKETING BOARDS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In Canada at the present time we have both a large and viable food processing industry and an effective system of farm marketing boards. With the Government's free trade agreement, one will have to go. Unless changes are made, one will be eliminated.

Why is the Government forcing this destructive dilemma on Canadians? We now have both marketing boards and food processing companies, so why should one be eliminated as a result of this bad, hasty deal?

Mr. Rossi: There's the butler.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend from Montreal says, "There's the butler". I would much rather be the butler for this Government than the doormat for the Opposition, I can tell the Hon. Member that. That's for sure.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: In reply to the Hon. Member's question, we disagree with that premise. The changes that are made under the free trade agreement will help the food processing industry and will also maintain our system of marketing here in Canada. The changes will allow the food processors and grocery products manufacturers to continue on the way they have been going. As a matter of fact, some of the changes that are coming in will give them many more advantages. For example, there is an increase in the quotas for chicken, eggs and so on, negotiated under this agreement, something which makes abundant sense for the food processors.

• (1500)

REQUEST FOR CHANGES TO AGREEMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, these concerns are not being raised only by me, but by farmers and food processors. This morning an article written by the president of Quaker Oats raised the same points I am raising here.

Food processing is a $40 billion industry employing 230,000 people. Will the Government make changes in this deal to assure the survival of both the food processing companies and marketing boards? It is your deal, make it work for both sides and not eliminate one.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the bottom line for the group that the Hon. Member is referring to is to abolish marketing boards. He knows that. If the Hon. Member is in favour of abolishing marketing boards, let him stand up and say so. That would be new Liberal policy and I would like to hear the Hon. Member state it.

The Hon. Member talks about the food processing industry. Ask the meat processors, the Schneiders and so on, if they are happy with this agreement. They are ecstatic about it because they can compete with the U.S. very well.

AIRPORTS

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION CONCERNING DORVAL AND MIRABEL AIRPORTS

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State (Transport). Some time ago the Auditor General released his report indicating that again this year Dorval and Mirabel airports are in the red. A few years earlier the then-Minister had tabled a recovery project for both airports and was considering striking a committee to operate and control both facilities. I should like to know whether the Minister has anything new to say about this. If not, does the Minister intend to keep working along the same lines? In addition, when will we have a positive report on both Dorval and Mirabel airports?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question, for it enables me to bring the House up to date on this case which has been progressing at the normal rate, regardless of what some may say or write about it. After an exchange of letters with the mayor of Montreal we were able to clarify the airport council status, so I proposed that the council be run independently from Transport Canada. I am pleased to announce that the Montreal airport concertation committee has accepted my proposition. We are also about to hire or appoint a director for the airport and, next Monday, I will be meeting with the Quebec Minister to discuss the status of autoroute 13. The matter has been progressing as expected and we intend to honour the commitments we have made.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question of Question Period. With the co-operation of Hon. Members, I will try to move a little faster tomorrow.

AGRICULTURE

TOBACCO GROWERS—ONTARIO REDUX PROGRAM

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Agriculture. Tobacco consumption, hence production, are being reduced due to much higher taxes imposed by the Government, manufacturers importing product, and health concerns among consumers. Given that this trend is likely to continue, what has the Minister done to make the Ontario REDUX program more responsive to growers' needs? Has he initiated discussions for a Prince Edward Island type of program such as the Minister of Agriculture promised in his answer to my question on September 18? What results, if any, have been achieved thus far?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of State (Agriculture)): If my hon. friend has taken the time to have a look at the supplementary estimates which were tabled last week, Mr. Speaker, he is certainly aware that out of this $6.5 million allocated to the retraining of tobacco growers, a large amount will go to Ontario. In view of the fact that tobacco growers are via difficult situation, Mr. Speaker, we are making sure that this new program will meet their needs as adequately as possible. We are confronted with a difficult problem and I think that by injecting the amount indicated last week we are taking a step in the right direction and we will continue to get the support of the farming community in this regard.

[English]

CREATION OF TOBACCO MARKETING AGENCY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, that particular program does nothing to assist producers to leave the industry, it simply retrains those who have already made that decision.

Can the Minister tell us what the Government's policy is regarding the creation of a national marketing agency? That was one of the first items of business that the Government embarked upon three years ago, yet nothing has come of it because it was stalled in the courts by the manufacturers. Has the Government decided to intervene in that situation, or are some of the suspicions which exist in the farming community true, namely, that no more marketing boards will be created because of the trade agreement signed with the U.S?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is well aware that even while negotiating the free trade deal, the Government has taken the necessary steps to keep the existing farm product marketing boards and to create new ones as the need arises. We are now considering this option for the potato industry . . . and as my hon. friend knows, the matter is progressing very well. We are expecting a report within the next few days.

As to the tobacco industry, I think my hon. friend referred to some matters which are currently before the courts, so that it would not be proper for me to comment any further.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED DISPARAGING COMMENT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a question of privilege about some comments found at page 10964 of Hansard of November 19, 1987. You are aware that it is a violation of the Standing Orders to refer to the presence or absence of any Member. Yet, contrary to that Standing Order, the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), because she could not find an appropriate response to a question concerning the Mulroney trade deal, made a disparaging comment—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member may very well have a question of privilege, but she is going to be taken up on a point of order if she is not very careful.

Ms. Copps: I will be careful.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member.

Ms. Copps: In responding to the absence of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) who, as the Speaker will know, has been absent and in bed with an ear infection for a number of days, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) commented:

> We want Turner back.

The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) then said:

> If they can find him, Mr. Speaker.

That was a disparaging comment about the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition who, unlike the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), when he is ill and away, is prepared to say what he is suffering from.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is of course completely correct. It is not proper to refer to the presence and certainly not the absence of anyone from this place. The rule is long standing and is there for the good reason that Hon. Members have much to do outside of this Chamber. I have repeated this on many occasions because it is not only important that Hon. Members understand it, but important also that the watching and listening public understand it. We have had a rule for many years that it is not appropriate to do that. I will very carefully examine Hansard, and if an inappropriate comment has been made I am sure whoever made it will want to rise and withdraw it.

On the latter part of the Hon. Member's point, it would seem to me that the comments, whatever they were, were in the form of light banter. In any event, I will certainly look into the matter and report back to the Hon. Member.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. First, I wish to advise the House that tomorrow will be an allotted day. Second, there have been discussions among the Parties with respect to the Bill presently before the House for debate, and I think you will find that there is consent among the Parties for the following motion to be put immediately:

> That, notwithstanding the provisions of Standing Order 113(2), Bill C-51, an Act to prohibit the advertising and promotion and respecting the labelling and monitoring of tobacco products, be referred, following second reading, to the legislative committee now considering Bill C-204, Non-Smokers Health Act.

• (1510)

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) could comment on behalf of her Party.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my Party, I certainly support referral of this Bill to the committee which is studying Bill C-204. I made that offer when Bill C-204 was passed. It has been understood that the same committee will study the two Bills. We have indeed organized our work to do that. This is a most appropriate motion.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) could assist the Chair.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Absolutely, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stewart: I would like to speak on that Bill.

Mr. Speaker: I heard an Hon. Member say that he wishes to speak. The acceptance of the motion of the Hon. Minister of State will not in any way close off debate on the Bill.

The House has heard the terms of the motion proposed by the Hon. Minister of State. Is there agreement for that motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

TOBACCO PRODUCTS CONTROL ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Epp (Provencher) that Bill C-51, an Act to prohibit the advertising and promotion and respecting the labelling and monitoring of tobacco products, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock p.m. the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) had the floor. I recognize the Hon. Member.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, earlier in my speech on Bill C-51 I exposed the hoax of the write-in campaign. The tobacco industry is spending more money to try to convince Members of Parliament and the Canadian public that they are great promoters of the arts than they actually give to the arts for artistic purposes. This is a terrific hoax and I urge Hon. Members not to be fooled by it.

In the time I have remaining I would like to refer to the economic consequences of this Bill. All kinds of scare tactics have been raised in committee on my Bill, C-204, and generally about the economic consequences of this Bill. Let us understand clearly that when people quit smoking—and let us hope that many Canadians will quit smoking—they do not burn the money they thereby save. They spend that money on other goods and services such as entertainment, trips, food, clothes and movies. Other economic opportunities are developed by the change in taste.

The health concerns of Canadians do not mean that people will lose jobs. They mean that new jobs will be created in different industries. We should welcome this change. It would not, in any event, be justified to oppose a health measure to save the lives of in excess of 35,000 Canadians every year on the grounds that any number of jobs would be lost if we save these lives. Certainly we cannot trade dollars for lives. I hope no one would seriously suggest that. However, we do not even have to make that comparison or trade-off. There will be new jobs as people change their habits to new and, let us hope, healthier practices.

In conclusion, I very much welcome this debate on Bill C-51. I fully support the matter going to committee. I can assure the Minister of the support of the New Democratic caucus, not only for this Bill but for a host of measures which will deal with the problem. We need a strong combination of Bills C-51 and C-204 which will deal with all the issues of advertising, sponsorship, labelling, and smoke-free workplaces and transportation. Let us make this good, strong health legislation for Canadians which we will be pleased to pass at third reading stage.

Mr. Ron Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I rise as a very disappointed Conservative today due to this proposed legislation, Bill C-51. I hope that when it gets to committee and the Minister looks at it a little more closely there will be a change of heart.

I must say that I stand here as a biased person because in the real world my occupation is a wholesale distributor. In that distribution business some 68 per cent of sales are of tobacco products.

I would like to begin by giving a bit of background on this issue. It is not purely and simply a health question. We are really discussing a severe economic problem. Nearly 3,000 farm families in Ontario grow almost 90 per cent of Canada's tobacco crop. What will happen to them as a result of the Draconian measures in Bill C-51, and the worse measures in Bill C-204? Over 30,000 transient workers are employed in that industry, an additional 6,800 people work for the manufacturers, and thousands upon thousands of people work for the wholesalers and retailers.

The independent wholesale trade services some 50,000 small stores. I defy the Minister or anyone else to dispute that over 50 per cent of their sales are of tobacco and confectionery products. That is to say nothing of the advertising industry which derives 20 per cent of its revenue from the advertising of tobacco, the purpose of which is nothing more than to switch brand loyalty. We have heard all kinds of talk about what advertising does to young people.

I have in my hand the Tobacco Advertising Bans and Consumption in 16 Countries with introduction and editing by Professor J. J. Boddewyn, Baruch College, City University of New York. This was done for the International Advertising Association in 1986 and its findings are in direct opposition to that which has been stated in this House.

Let us look at the growth in per capita cigarette consumption from 1970 to 1984 in some centrally planned economies. I do not think that there would be one word of advertising in these countries. In the U.S.S.R. there was an increase of 10 per cent, in Poland there was an increase of 14 per cent, and in Hungary there was an increase of 15 per cent. I could go on and on. However, the net increase in these countries was 16 per cent without any tobacco advertising.

More important, let us look at the annual compounded growth rate in per capita cigarette consumption since the introduction of advertising bans to 1984 in free-market economies. In Sweden there was a decrease of .7 per cent and in Norway there actually was a decrease of .5 per cent. In those countries they pay 75 per cent income tax and I do not think we want that in Canada. However, in Iceland there was an increase of .8 per cent, in Singapore there was an increase of .9 per cent, and in Finland there was an increase of 1.8 per cent. That is in direct opposition to figures which have been stated. In Thailand there was an increase of 3 per cent, in Italy there was an increase of 3 per cent, and in Taiwan there was an increase of 4 per cent.

Advertising is done strictly to change a pattern of brand loyalties. That is well documented in the industry.

Let us take a look at how hypocritical this is. The Government would like to have a market which buys the product and contributes over $4 billion in taxes to federal and provincial coffers, but does not smoke it. That is how hypocritical this whole thing is. The Government wants money but it does not want you to smoke.

Between January 1, 1980 and April 15, 1987 federal taxes increased 179 per cent. There is now 64 per cent taxation on a package of cigarettes. Ontario's taxes went up 200 per cent. The federal Government now gets 92 cents of tax from every $3 pack of 25 cigarettes. As I said, the total taxes received last year were over $4 billion.

With regard to the economic impact on the industry, in 1986 Canadians spent an estimated $6.4 billion on tobacco products. Wages and salaries in the industry totalled $267.7 million. Capital expenditures by manufacturers totalled $65.9 million. Property income taxes were $112.7 million, and transportation costs were $30.1 million.

The proposed Bill is almost a death blow to the tobacco industry. It is an insidious encroachment on freedom of thought, belief, opinion, and expression, including freedom of the press and other media communications as guaranteed by the Charter of Rights. I did not think I would live to see the day that a Conservative Government would ever even suggest such a thing.

Statistics indicate that smoking has dropped in Canada since 1977 by 17 per cent among men and 10 per cent among women. That is not because of advertising or health reasons but because of over-taxation. Furthermore, it will continue. Within a few years we in the industry know that it will gradually disappear. However, it should never disappear as a result of removing the rights and freedoms of Canadians to make a free choice.

Any legal product for sale in this country should be free to be advertised. Canadians who are concerned about free speech should ask themselves what prompts the Government to infringe on fundamental freedoms when there are so many other solutions to the issue. Laws threatening our fundamental freedoms are unjust.

I am not suggesting that concern about smoking is not an important issue—far from it. We all realize that it is a concern, but laws must reflect tolerance and concern for justice and equity. Bill C-51 is inconsistent with these principles and Bill C-204 is worse.

Bill C-51 is also inconsistent with the Government's commitment to less government interference in our lives and is contrary to fair trade practices. In addition, it is censorship, and that is what happens in totalitarian states.

This Bill is the tip of the iceberg. What will be next, alcohol? Will we ban advertising on cars because they kill people? This is an insidious infringement on rights, and it is only the tip of the iceberg. It should be stopped now.

This legislation will affect farmers, manufacturers, retailers, advertising agencies, newspapers, magazines, outdoor advertisers and their employees. Sporting events, theatre and other artistic events sponsored by tobacco companies will be deprived of funds. For example, our Canadian Open will disappear.

Research and development will be curtailed because manufacturers will not be able to inform their consumers about improvements in product. The du Maurier clock will be gone from the shelves and the signs will be taken from the buildings. This is one of the most unjust measures I have seen.

A total ban on advertising will bring serious economic and social penalties, nothing else. People who wish to smoke will continue to do so and manufacturers will continue to produce tobacco products. I am willing to bet my next year's salary that 20 years from now there will be just as many people on the death rolls who were supposedly affected by tobacco smoking.

I want to read a couple of letters to give an idea of what the public really think. More than 50 per cent of people in the riding of Mississauga South, in answer to that Member's householder, said they were opposed to this Bill. The following letter to The Toronto Sun states:

> I am a veteran who got into some heavy fighting in the western desert, particularly around Alamein and Tobruk. I don't need November 11 to remember those days or the buddies who didn't come home with me.
> Yet on Remembrance Day I do stop and pay respect and remember why we were there, which was to fight for our country and our way of life—to protect the freedom of my generation and future generations.
> However, this year I sat and thought not of my own buddies, but what we were fighting for and what they would think if they knew what was happening to the society they gave their lives for.
> Most of the freedoms are slowly being taken away by minority groups that are always looking for one cause or another.
> I am now retired, having worked hard for 50 years to make a good life for my five sons and a daughter How many freedoms they will have when they reach my age, I'm not sure. They are losing their freedom of choice with all these anti groups: Military, abortion, animal rights and many others.
> This recent bill Toronto Council is trying to ram down our throats regarding smokers is going too far. Our ozone is slowly being destroyed by massive pollution. Our waters are being ruined by chemicals and toxic waste. We have thousands of tons of garbage we don't know what to do with and overworked and faulty sewage treatment plants. Diesel and gasoline fuels are spewed out daily downtown. Maybe they should spend as much time facing these major issues.
> I consider myself a good citizen, a good provider and a good father. I am not a drunk, or a criminal. Yet I feel like a second-class citizen. Why? Because I smoke and will stop when and if I want to, not because a bunch of do-gooders think I should.

I have another letter to my local paper, written by Diane Kwasniak of Scotland, Ontario. She states:

> I would like to state my opinions on tobacco advertising and the tobacco issue.
> There are two sides to every coin. Has it ever been proven that smoking causes cancer or any other illness? No, it has not.
> Informed, fair-minded scientists admit that the mechanism of cancer is still unknown. Does Health and Welfare Canada agree with the findings of the International Cancer Conference? Information obtained concurred that over 90 per cent of smokers never develop lung cancer. As well, it was found by a consensus of scientists that a relationship between health and passive smoking cannot yet be determined. How can medical science be exact enough to state that 30,000 deaths each year are smoking-related? It is very obvious to me that scientific opinions differ on this question.
> More importantly, one might ask why persons and institutions that the public expects to receive unbiased judgments from have so readily accepted such claims.
> Radical groups have done their job well, both politically and through the media. In my opinion, 'the scare tactics' being used by these groups are ridiculous.
> Has complete social change come about as suggested by Mr. Epp or is it being forced upon us? I think it is being forced upon us. The majority of Canadians are non-smokers. That does not mean that they do not accept what smokers claim, the right to choose to smoke with respect for others. Let us use good judgment and common sense in the tobacco issue.
> What of tobacco farmers and related businesses who are being deliberately and gradually legislated out of business? All tobacco farmers have taken the direct impact of government legislation.
> The pressures forced upon them have been devastating to many. Will they receive fair compensation for their losses?
> Remember, tobacco is only one on a long list of suspected cancer—causing agents. Should it be singled out? Will red meat be next?
> Now, the big question. Is tobacco a legal product or an illegal product? Tobacco is a legal product and therefore must be treated as such. Do we have the right to advertise legal product or do we not have the right to advertise a legal product? This is one of our basic rights. Let us not now be swayed by those claiming to be working for the good of us all.
> Does our government realize that by banning tobacco advertising they are creating a dangerous precedent?
> Radical groups claim this to be a 'major initiative', a first step. Is this what we, the people, actually want? I urge you to give careful thought to this issue. And, finally, I ask each of you, where do we draw the line on these issues and when do we take a stand? I say let it be now.

This Party stands for free trade and I fully support the concept of free trade. Canadians can compete with anybody. However, one cannot compete with all the international advertisers coming into this country through periodicals. Sixty-six per cent of the advertising in the tobacco industry in this country is for foreign products.

We do not see American cigarettes on the stands in the grocery stores of this nation, but Canadian cigarettes like Matinee, Export A and Rothman's. Those products are advertised well, and legally.

If cigarettes become the same price as a result of free trade we will see Marlboro country here. Cigarettes will continue to sell, regardless of the health issue. We will see the total destruction of a purely Canadian industry, aided and abetted by free trade. Do we want to destroy a Canadian industry? That is what will happen with this legislation.

The Fraser forum urges restraint. It discusses the hypocrisy of the taxation and the fact that the Government has no business acting paternalistically.

It goes on to make the same arguments that I have made.

A letter from the International Advertising Agency, which includes members from all over the world, states that this type of Draconian measure to prevent advertising does not happen in free countries.

It was pointed out in committee that 13 small outdoor advertisers will immediately go bankrupt if this legislation is put into effect.

In conclusion, I want to quote from Hansard of May 26, 1986, when the Minister said the following in response to a question by the Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald):

● (1530)

> I am saying to her very directly that if she is an expert in this field at all, and if she has looked at the effect that the banning of advertising has on reducing the number of smokers, then she will know that it is painfully few.

Those were the words of the Minister of Health on May 26, 1986, who said that the effect of a ban on advertising would be practically nil. He was right then. What made him change his mind in one year? I think it is those do-gooders about whom I spoke, a minority group, which exerted pressure without looking at the economic realities of what we are about to do who caused this action to be taken.

The article by Stan Buda goes on to ask, "What has prompted him to produce a law that is an insidious encroachment of our freedom of thought, belief and opinion . . . ?" He points out the fact, as I have pointed it out, that the number of smokers has dropped. His arguments are the same. He is a man in marketing who knows what this matter is all about. This is an encroachment on everyone's rights, particularly the 7 million smokers. I hope that the committee and the Minister, when he thinks about this matter again, will withdraw this nonsensical Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Are there questions or comments?

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has just delivered a very forceful speech on this subject. Can he elaborate on what action he personally is intending to take if in fact the Minister does not share and see his view?

Mr. Stewart: Madam Speaker, that is the simplest question in the world to answer, and I will not make any disparaging remarks. Obviously, the Government has a huge majority. Obviously, if this Bill comes in and is not changed, it will pass. There is nothing that I as one person can do about it. All I can do is to stand on my feet, as I have, to point out the idiocy in terms of economics as opposed to health that this Bill represents. The matter does not deal with just a health question. If it were just a simple question of health, I would not be standing here. What we will be faced with is the economic reality of what will happen in Canada if Bill C-204 and Bill C-51 are passed.

I am saying that this will have an effect not only from the advertising standpoint but from the standpoint of the manufacturer and the farmer. Why are we not out selling one of the greatest tobacco products in the world to China and other countries which sell a great deal of tobacco? Instead, we throw money at the problem. We pay farmers not to grow tobacco on land that is good for nothing else.

If the Bill comes back to the House and members of the committee decide in their wisdom that they will pass this craziness, then there is nothing more I can do about it. I will tell the Hon. Member one thing. I was not about to sit in my place and see an industry destroyed by a lot of do-gooders without trying to instil a little bit of sanity in those who support this measure.

Mr. Marchi: Madam Speaker, I too listened to the passionate words of my colleague. Why does he label these individuals as do-gooders and categorize them as a small minority when he spoke about 7 million smokers as opposed to almost 20 million people who do not smoke? Why does the Hon. Member have to belittle those individuals when he is looking for respect for some of his views? I can understand some of the emotions he has expressed on the floor of the House of Commons since they may rightly or wrongly express the sentiments of a great many Canadians. We will not move the debate ahead if we refer to a portion of Canadian society that objects to smoking for their legitimate reasons as do-gooders and a small minority when they happen to be very conscientious Canadians on the majority side of the issue.

Mr. Stewart: Madam Speaker, if I left that impression perhaps I should not have. The do-gooder expression came from a letter written by a person who referred to these people as do-gooders. I do not think it is really relevant whether or not I agree with that point of view. I respect the position of those who are against smoking, of course. I respect the opinion of the 7 million who smoke. The Hon. Member must remember that the majority of non-smokers are not the ones making the noise. They are not. I am a non-smoker but I am very tolerant of the rights of smokers. But if any smoker does something that is obnoxious to the non-smoker, then I have no sympathy for that person. But Hon. Members will find that most smokers by and large respect the rights of non-smokers.

The fact that there are more people who do not smoke than those who do does not say that those people support this Bill, as my colleague who is sitting to my left will attest to in a moment.

I am not approaching this issue on the basis of medical grounds alone. The fact is that because there has been no proven cause of cancer does not mean that I would stand here saying that smoking is good for one. This is a matter of choice. Drinking is not good for one, nor is the overeating of any amount of sugar. Driving fast on the highway is not good for a person. The 10 per cent of medical doctors who take drugs know full well the repercussions are not doing something that is good for them. But it is their right if that is what they want to do.

When we start infringing on the rights of people in a place like this, then I must ask what we are here for. We are here to protect the rights of Canadians, not to take them away.

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, I have two short questions. The first is on the issue of the infringement of rights. Does the Hon. Member believe that we should be allowed to advertise, for example, sexual aids on television and in newspapers? I presume that his freedom of speech argument would allow carte blanche to the advertising of sexual aids and anything else.

My second question is this. Specifically, what steps has the Hon. Member taken, and I believe he has taken some constructive steps, with respect to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise)? For example, the Hon. Member said that the soil in the Simcoe area is not good for any other product but tobacco. I believe that there are alternate crops in the process of being developed. I am not prepared to write off Simcoe area soil as being useless for anything other than tobacco.

Could the Hon. Member enlighten us with respect to what steps he has taken concerning encouraging the Minister of Agriculture to make cash payments specifically to farmers as well as cash payments in recognition of the financial losses that these farmers will incur as a result of this legislation?

Mr. Stewart: Madam Speaker, tobacco farms are small acreage farms. The farms have a tremendous investment in them. We could not pay them enough money to make up for what their losses will be on those farms. The Hon. Member does not have to take my word for it. She can ask the tobacco farmers. She can ask the Minister. In committee we have been through this matter time and time again. If the truth were known, I think that the Minister does not support this measure. I think that anyway.

As far as tobacco itself and the acreages of farms are concerned, peanuts and other crops have been grown, but they do not work because the acreages are too small. I do not understand why we are not encouraging the export of our great Canadian tobacco and spending the money in that area instead of trying to pay off the tobacco farmer.

What about the thousands of workers in the manufacturing industry? Will they receive compensation? Will the small wholesaler receive compensation? What will be done for each small cornerstore at which a minimum of 50 per cent of their sales depend on tobacco? What will we do for them?

All we are talking about here is one small element of this matter, the farmer. I have read to Hon. Members the figures with respect to what this industry represents. This Bill involves the destruction of an industry. The Hon. Member had better have some amendments to fix this Bill up or else pull it for the good of Canada.

Mr. Althouse: Madam Speaker, could the Hon. Member give us a quick review of the economic effects of the tax increases that have occurred over the last three years? My understanding is that the industry was very nearly devastated by those increased taxes which resulted in a reduction in usage and which created extreme cut-backs to the amount of acreage seeded. The number of people employed both on farms and in the processing and distribution industries were reduced. Did that not have a much more destructive effect than the potential slow decline in the industry that everyone seems to predict will happen with the inception of a ban on advertising? In fact, there have been some people who have concluded that there may in fact be an increase in the short term in consumption until four or five years from now when young people are no longer exposed to cigarette advertising. Only then, if at all, will consumption begin to decline.

Could the Hon. Member perhaps explain to us why he did not seem to be quite so concerned about what was a very great disruption in the tobacco industry caused by high taxation, as compared to the future outlook created by no advertising?

Mr. Stewart: Yes, Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has put his finger right on it. He is absolutely correct. It is the increase in taxation that has made the tobacco market go down. Purely and simply those taxes have been raised, and smoking has gone down in Canada as much as 17 per cent over the last five years. Although acreage has gone down and there is a decrease in sales, the taxes have gone up. Those taxes have kept the government coffers full while destroying the industry, and that is absolutely true.

It is not the health matters, it is not advertising that has depressed the consumption of tobacco in Canada, it is purely and simply the price. The price is taxation. I absolutely agree with the Hon. Member.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Madam Speaker, I wish to declare my interest with respect to this Bill. I do not smoke. I have never smoked. I am allergic to tobacco, and I hate tobacco smoke. That is my interest, and I am putting it on the table right away.

I must say that I am not one of those virtuous persons who smoked for years and then gave it up. Today there are many people who did smoke and took the bull by the horns and stopped smoking. I congratulate those people. They have shown great wisdom and virtue. I am not one of those.

But I think that I have made it clear that I hate people blowing poison and dirt in my face. I think that I have the right to work and live in a smoke-free environment. Unfortunately, this Bill does not legislate a smoke-free work environment for companies and firms under federal jurisdiction. I would like to see a Bill that would do that. Unfortunately, this Bill does not. If I understood correctly, the Minister will attempt to encourage firms to put in measures which will result in a smoke-free environment, but it is not done by legislation in this Bill.

I respect those people who are addicted to smoking. Even though it is harmful to their health, I suppose that they have a right to smoke. But they have a right to smoke in their own rooms, houses, cars, backyards, and fields. I do not believe that they have a right to smoke in public places where individuals must go to work, or for other types of business or public affairs. They do not have a right to poison the atmosphere that some of us have to breathe when we earn our living.

To me it is simply a question of common courtesy, good manners, and of respect one for the other. If people wish to do something that is harmful to other people, they should do it apart somewhere, where it will not hurt those who do not smoke or do not like smoke. On that point, I must register my disappointment with this Bill. I support the Bill, but I am disappointed that it did not legislate a smoke-free work environment for firms under federal jurisdiction.

With respect to the ban on advertising in the Bill, I have questions in my mind whether this legislation will be successful. I suppose we have to start somewhere, and perhaps this is a start. But when we live in a country that is spread out along the United States border and we are overwhelmed with American magazines, publications, and newspapers which are filled with tobacco and cigarette advertising, I have a feeling that although we ban advertising of tobacco products in Canada, the young people for whom we are concerned will still be subject to cigarette and tobacco promotions from across the border. When all is said and done, I am not sure how many, or if fewer people will be smoking.

In any event, people say that we have to start somewhere, and I suppose that Canada will be showing a good example by banning advertising. Hopefully, it will have some impact, but that remains to be seen. In my opinion, more progress could have been taken on this important subject more directly than in this manner.

For all of those reasons, Madam Speaker, I believe that this Bill requires much examination in committee. We are prepared to vote in favour of it as soon as possible and have it sent to committee where witnesses representing the different interests can appear and put on the record the facts with respect to health, economics, the agricultural side, be cross-examined and questioned by Members of Parliament, and then perhaps there will be amendments to the Bill. If the Bill is lacking in some respect in dealing with the evil of smoking, perhaps it can be strengthened in order that we end up with less smoking and damage to our health than we have at the present time.

I simply wished to intervene to make clear my position with respect to those things. For years I could never understand how people who would object and be upset if, for example, I dumped all my snow on their walk, but they would sit in a car with me and blow their cigarette smoke in my face. For years there has been a double standard.

I was listening to my hon. friend across the way when he almost suggested, and I do not know if he meant to do so, that to smoke and to promote cigarette smoking was a basic right. We have the right to drive automobiles, but we are not allowed to drive on any side of the street. We are not allowed to endanger the rights or the health of other people. Under certain circumstances, we are allowed to use firearms—too much, in my opinion—but not in a manner that is harmful to other people. We are allowed to do a good many things, but not in a manner that is harmful to other people. Until recently, that has not been so with cigarettes. Until recently, one could enter a committee room in this Parliament and sometimes the chairman could hardly been seen for the smoke that was in the air.

Things are changing. The message is getting through to some people that this is killing them in large numbers; it is distasteful, uncomfortable, and nauseating. Let us pass this Bill, send it to committee, and come out with a better Bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity this afternoon to speak on second reading of Bill C-51, a Bill the House has been waiting for a long time. The Bill had its first reading quite some time ago. In fact, I have here a press release dated April 22, 1987, in which the Minister announced that he intended to table this Bill in the House of Commons.

Madam Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to prohibit the advertising of tobacco products. It also proposes to prohibit the use of brand names in advertising by sponsors of events involving sports, cultural or other activities, except in cases where the name of the company and the name of the tobacco product are identical.

In my opinion, we have here an element of unfairness because, for instance, a company whose name happens to be the same as that of its tobacco product will have an advantage over other companies, such as Imasco or Imperial Tobacco which have no products or merchandise bearing their names, and so some companies will have an advantage over others.

I have a problem with this particular point, and I hope that in committee, Government Members and, in fact, Members on both sides of the House will find a mechanism to make this part of the Bill more equitable than it is now.

Another point was raised by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), namely that tobacco products advertised in American magazines would be coming into the country anyway, so that we would still have tobacco advertising.

I don't know what steps the Government intends to take to ensure this doesn't happen, because after all, Madam Speaker, if it is bad for Canadians to read Canadian advertising that encourages smoking, I believe it would be just as bad for Canadians to read American brochures or magazines containing similar information.

I hope the Government will find a way, such as income tax deductions for advertising placed outside the country or something like that, to discourage Canadian businesses from inserting this kind of advertising in American magazines, when they will no longer be allowed to do so in Canada.

If nothing is done about this, the Canadian periodicals industry will suffer as the U.S. takes up the slack and I think there is a way to strike a balance so that everyone is treated fairly.

This Bill will also prohibit the use of premiums, Madam Speaker, and it's about time. Imagine that tobacco manufacturing companies, cigarette manufaturers mainly, were giving away—I don't know if they are still doing it but they used to—small coupons which people can collect and which entitle them later to order almost anything, such as an electric kettle or whatever—I think as part of a scheme to encourage people to continue smoking. They even offered gifts which appealed to young people. For instance, when a company offered something like a bicycle, if that was not a scheme to encourage young people to smoke, I wonder what it was. I am pleased, therefore, to see this practice banned.

In my opinion, most Canadians, whether they are for or against Bill C-51, are at least in favour of eliminating this sort of premiums.

As most of Hon. Members, Madam Speaker, I received a great many letters on this issue. I have even brought some of them with me here. Many of these letters sent to Members of the House indicate their opposition to Bill C-51.

Madam Speaker, I find it rather strange that all these letters look alike. They were not only similar in appearance, but identical. We could therefore assume that they might have been prepared by some people for the signature of others, and I wonder if these people are not those involved in the tobacco industry through their travelling salesmen who go and sell in all convenience stores and commercial establishments in the various electoral ridings in Canada.

The constituency which I represent has some 42 different communities. I find it more than passing strange that the letters of protest against Bill C-51 were relatively similar if not exactly the same. They were sent by store owners in every part of my constituency. I am led to conclude that such was done in co-operation and at the urging of tobacco industry representatives.

What we are discussing today is not whether or not tobacco farmers, particularly those in Ontario, have a right to survive or a right to continue production. Of course I understand that there is also tobacco production in the Province of Quebec, in an area with which the present occupant of the chair is quite familiar. Obviously tobacco farmers have a right to continue to have profitable farming establishments and to survive. Of course we all want that as Members of the House, but let me indicate that our efforts must be directed in such a way as to find alternate crops for tobacco farmers and to find sufficient financial means to assist those same farming entities in producing something else.

I know it has been stated by others before, but let me ask this, what would be the reaction if someone were to walk into the Chamber today and present the following proposition to us as parliamentarians—they have a great new idea which will produce a product that causes cancer of the lungs and an assortment of other diseases, that creates smoke all over the place and a horrible smell, that ruins clothing and everything else, that pollutes the environment and wastes many resources, and that generally results in considerable health care costs for people who would suffer as a result of consuming the product? Would we accept the marketing of a product with those characteristics?

I think we already know the answer to that question. If someone wanted to introduce such a product, we as parliamentarians would not accept it. Society as a whole would want us to reject a product with those characteristics.

However, it was a number of years ago that tobacco was discovered and, unfortunately, marketed. It is now widely available. We are not discussing whether or not we can place the product on the market. As I said, that is an unfortunate reality, and I say that as a reformed smoker, one who partook in the weed some years ago but gave it up in approximately 1970.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): How young were you when you started?

Mr. Boudria: Since then I have perhaps smoked once or twice in the mid-1970s. I hear a member of the New Democratic Party asking me just how young I was when I started smoking. I thank the Hon. Member for that inherent compliment, and I accept it.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You owe me one.

Mr. Boudria: The Hon. Member is quite correct. I owe him one for that generous remark which indicated how young I still am.

However, that being said, I want to indicate to the House that I support the Bill. I would like it to proceed. I hope that it gets full and thorough consideration at committee, complete with the contributions of parties on both sides of the issue. I hope we will hear from people in the advertising industry and anyone who may be adversely affected. Notwithstanding that, I want to indicate that my purpose in requesting the input of the tobacco industry, the advertising industry and so on is not to change the mind of this House nor its Members as to the benefits of having the legislation, but rather to ensure that the legislation is fair when it is passed. In so doing, not only will it be more equitable but the law will be more beneficial to all Canadians when applied in a just and fair manner.

• (1600)

The tobacco industry started this and assisted many people in this campaign to defeat Bill C-51, an exercise in futility on its part but one on which it spent considerable dollars. The irony is that the dollars spent are, in large measure, tax deductible because they are seen by the authorities as being a legitimate business expense. On the other hand, volunteer organizations have been fighting this Bill with little or no resources of their own other than small contributions which they have received from individual Canadians.

It is sad when indirectly the taxpayers dollars can be used to promote a campaign which is ultimately to the detriment of the lives and health of many Canadians. However, that is another matter which we can discuss at the time we review the Estimates of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) or in some other format, but I wanted to raise that concern of the deductibility of expenses as it pertains to the promotion of a campaign against Bill C-51.

A parallel campaign was started by some groups in Canada in response to one started by the tobacco industry. I want to congratulate those people, particularly the volunteers who worked very hard in starting that parallel campaign, particularly those affiliated with the Canadian Cancer Society. Last Thursday I received a letter in my office signed by Mr. David Hill of the Canadian Cancer Society in which he informed me that 135 of my constituents died last year as a result of tobacco smoking. That was a statistic which I did not know about before. We all know about the evils of tobacco. But let me tell you, Madam Speaker, more than anything else, hearing that 135 of my constituents had died was enough to convince me, had I not been convinced already, that we must do everything within our power to cut down on the use of tobacco.

There are deficiencies in the Bill. We all know what they are. Others have recited them today. Federally regulated agencies and corporations will not be subject to the smoke free environment provisions even though the federal Government itself is. I am told that Parliament is not bound by the Bill. We should be an example as an institution to other agencies whether or not they are federally regulated in providing within Parliament itself a means to ensure that there is on Parliament Hill a smoke-free environment.

Members of the House will know that I supported the initiative placed before us some time ago by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) who brought forth a private Member's Bill on curtailing the use of tobacco in the federally regulated workplace. I want to take this opportunity to congratulate the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood for the fervour and zeal with which she defends the point of view in which she strongly believes. I am not sure that I would always have the kind of fortitude that she has when speaking on the issue and when insisting on having a smoke-free environment in groups and meetings, but I admire her for that. I wish her every success with her own Private Members' Bill.

I do not want to delay this process unduly in the House today. I want to end simply by reminding Canadians that some 35,000 people die every year from the effects of tobacco smoking. It is high time that we as a society came to grips with that. I will not even mention the millions and millions of dollars wasted in health care for a totally preventable disease nor the human suffering and so on that is associated with it.

We should adopt this Bill, perhaps with modifications and improvements at the committee stage. But we must spend more money on educating the Canadian public. One aspect particularly alarms me. Young people have vast knowledge on the evils of smoking, but a large number of them still smoke. Let me mention young women who smoke. Why do I single out young women? It seems to me that the relative percentages of young women smoking are increasing while in every other group those percentages are decreasing proportionately. Given that we know of the effects of smoking on women of child-bearing age as well as all the other facts we have spoken about today, there is a definite concern in that regard. I hope the young women of Canada will seize the opportunity of availing themselves of better information, learning of those evil side effects and hopefully will "butt out", as the expression is, as soon as possible.

It is my hope that there will be a parallel campaign by our Government to discourage young people from smoking. That can only be done with a proper educational program. Hopefully the federal Government can work together with the provinces in order to provide material to schools and provide statistics, some of them gruesome, for instance, that 135 of my constituents died from the effects of smoking, that 35,000 Canadians die every year. What about the countless numbers who are sick as a result? Our young people will be better informed so they at least will not make the same mistakes as others have before them.

[Translation]

Having said that, Madam Speaker, I thank you for the opportunity to take part in this debate this afternoon, and I dare hope that without further delay the Parliamentary Committee will make the necessary improvements to this Bill and that the House will pass it shortly, since if is long overdue.

[English]

Mr. Kindy: Madam Speaker, what is the Hon. Member's feeling about alcohol? Would he prohibit advertisements of alcohol as well? I understand alcohol is much more dangerous than tobacco. It kills many people and creates many social problems. Would he ban advertisements of alcohol?

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, that is an interesting question. There is no such legislation before the House at the present time. However, if the Member's Government wants to propose such legislation, I will be willing to deal with it and give that my support as well in terms of advertising alcoholic beverages. The Member will know that there are certain restrictions on that right now. I do not know if some of those restrictions are still there, but for instance, there are provisions prohibiting lifestyle advertising. In other words, companies cannot promote the sale of alcoholic beverages by portraying a fast-lane lifestyle, something that had been depicted upon occasion. Alcoholic beverage companies, particularly beer manufacturers, were told to cut that out. There is still too much of it going on, however. The "Spuds MacKenzie, real party animal" advertisements are the kind of advertisements that I find totally disgusting.

The evils and side effects of alcoholism are also very serious, things with which we as a society must contend. Many other things are very serious as well, as some Hon. Members have mentioned. It is not simply a question of, since we are now banning tobacco advertising, should we not ban something else at the same time. That is not the question before us. The question before us is a very serious one and it deals with curtailing the use of tobacco by means of discouraging certain forms of advertising.

Some prohibitions like this already exist in the area of liquor advertising, but this particular legislation will go even further. Later, if the Government wishes to do so, perhaps we could deal with the same provisions for alcohol. There are differences though because the constitutional authority for the advertising and distribution of alcohol, depending on where it is, does not always lie at the federal government level, as the Hon. Member will probably know.

TOBACCO PRODUCTS CONTROL ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Epp (Provencher) that Bill C-51, an Act to prohibit the advertising and promotion and respecting the labelling and monitoring of tobacco products, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I am a very strong believer in a Member representing the wishes of the majority of his or her constituents to the greatest possible degree. Throughout my legislative life, I have followed that principle.

I cannot follow the thinking of Hon. Members who think that once they are elected, they have more brains than they had before and they suddenly have the ability to tell the people what is good for them. I do not follow that thinking at all.

I was most disturbed when, during a vote taken in the House a few weeks ago, so many Members said that although their constituents wanted them to support the reinstatement of capital punishment, they did not agree. In my view, that is not democratic. Our democracy has been set up in such a way that the Member represents to the greatest possible degree the thinking of the people who sent him or her here. Whether or not I agree with the thinking of my constituents is a matter on which I have to satisfy myself.

If I have taken a definite stand against a certain issue before an election, I do not think my constituents have the right to ask me to go against that view because I was elected on that particular premise. For instance, I am strongly opposed to abortion. Every year in Canada, 50,000 babies are murdered in the womb, and I oppose that. I do not think it is right and I do not think it is moral. When I stood for election, I made it very clear to my people that if elected, I would endeavour to prevent the abortion of human babies, human beings. People who would now ask me to vote in favour of abortion do not have the right to do so because I was elected with their knowledge that I would not support abortion.

I also made it very well known that I would work toward the reinstatement of capital punishment, the execution of those who deliberately plan and kill other human beings. If people ask me to support the abolition of capital punishment, I cannot do so. That is the premise upon which I was elected and that is what I believe.

If I have not made clear to my people my stand on certain items, then I believe it is my duty to represent the thinking of the people who sent me here to the greatest possible degree. That is the policy I will follow in connection with this Bill, even though there are many aspects of it with which I do not agree.

Of all the letters I have received on this Bill, probably three to one are in favour of it. What about the minority? I think their rights should be outlined, but I do not think that I should support the minority as long as the majority of my people want me to support the Bill. Therefore, I would like to deal with the principle of the Bill in that context.

First, Bill C-51 does not stop people from smoking. I believe we must make that clear. Those who argue that people should not smoke should realize that this Bill does not provide for that. The Bill does not stop anyone from smoking nor does it stop anyone from growing tobacco.

What does the Bill do? The Bill prohibits the advertising and promotion of tobacco products. That is the first part of the Bill but I think we must stop there and look at that.

Are we to prohibit the advertising of everything that Members of this House or members of the Government do not like? Let us look at the statistics we have heard. I accept the statistics given by the Minister and other Hon. Members because I have no way to prove otherwise. However, when they tell me that so many thousand people have died from smoking, the immediate thought that comes to my mind is, what did those people do with the rest of their time? Did they drink, did they carouse, did they stay up all hours of the night? Did they dance from late at night until early morning? Did they drink wine to excess, did they eat to excess?

One lady in my constituency said to me one day: "I hear you are going to stop me from smoking". I said, "No, the Government will not stop you from smoking. The Bill says that there should be no advertising of it". She said: "Everything I like is either fattening, immoral or illegal". I said "Well, that is too bad. You must like the wrong things".

She said "I like Boston cream pie. Is that wrong?" I said "No, but if you eat Boston cream pie four or five times a day, that is wrong, but that is up to you to decide. If you want to ruin your body with sugar, fats and sweets, that is your business".

She said: "I like banana splits". Well, I like banana splits too but I do not eat them very often. I eat them perhaps once a month or once every five months because I have to make the House of Commons hockey team and I would never make it if I had banana splits every day.

How many of those people who died from smoking used drugs? I find it amazing when I hear all the talk against tobacco and then find that those who talk against tobacco—I am not talking about Members of the House, I do not know whether or not they use drugs although I hope not—are great marijuana supporters or supporters of drugs that are even heavier and worse than marijuana.

How many of those who died from smoking did heavy work? Some of the coal miners in my constituency who smoked died because they were so anxious to be the top loaders in their mines that they worked in the smoke. They loaded coal in the smoke and they got smoke in their lungs. They got what is called in the mining industry black lung, and many of them died from black lung. They got it not because they smoke, but because they worked in the smoke created by the dynamite used in the mine.

I wish those who produce these statistics would tell me something about the other habits of the people who died from smoking. I accept the figures, but I cannot help but wonder if they also drank to excess. Did they overeat? Did they use drugs? Did they carouse to all hours of the day and night? These things have an effect on health, too.

I do not think we want to argue the point that smoking is good for you. I would not argue that for anyone, anywhere. I do not think it is. However, I have no right to say to my neighbour or friend or the person sitting beside me in an airplane that they have no right to smoke. If they want to smoke, fine. Many people say that people have died because of other people smoking. I take that with a grain of salt. I have been a non-smoker all my life. As I said before, I smoked only one cigarette in my life. That was the same day I kissed a girl for the first time. I never smoked a cigarette after that.

I have lived with smoking. I have been in rooms in schools where three-quarters of the teachers, particularly the women, were smoking. A Member said that more women smoke than men. I went to a drama school in Banff one year, the Banff School of Fine Arts, and out of 30 men and about 60 women, five men smoked and 45 women. As we sat in the room the atmosphere was sometimes full of smoke. I have attended legislative committees, provincially more so than federally, where three-quarters of the people were smoking. I have not died yet from that second-hand smoke. I may not like it, but I do not think it is killing me. It might if I caroused all night or drank or some of these other things too much. It could have an effect. However, I think we over-emphasize second-hand smoke.

The Bill prohibits advertising. It does not say you cannot smoke. I want to say on the record that I strongly support that part of the Bill which deals with labelling. I think every possible opportunity should be taken to let people know what smoking will do to them. Even though Churchill lived to be over 80 and smoked a cigar almost continuously, I do not think we can say that smoking cigars is good for you. I heard one man say his grandfather died from smoking at the age of 96. I do not think we can draw conclusions from that type of example.

We have a responsibility, particularly to the young, to tell people that smoking is dangerous. It is not good for them. They will not be the best athlete they could be. They will not be the best person they can be if they smoke. I am not going to say it is going to affect their brain or they will not do well in school. Many of our scientists and geniuses are smokers. We have to recognize that smoking is one item and only one item affecting a person's health.

I support every possible way of labelling tobacco products to indicate what the danger is. That is the program followed by the U.S. Whenever anyone takes out a cigarette, they see on the package, not in little tiny letters but in large letters, what it might do to their health. I support that because I think it is excellent.

The Bill also deals with monitoring. I do not know just how we are going to monitor this. When I look up the meaning of the word in the dictionary one reference is that it is supposed to give you a warning of the approach of crocodiles. I do not know whether or not that has anything to do with smoking, but I do not know exactly how the monitoring is going to take place. If it means going into our schools and telling boys and girls of the danger to health from excessive smoking, then I am all for it.

I believe the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has a responsibility to keep people healthy. I would be most disappointed if our excellent Minister did not take a stand against smoking just as he takes a stand against drinking, certainly excessive drinking, or excessive eating, or excessive carousing. I have not heard him speak of those things, but I know he lives a very exemplary life and I appreciate that very much. He has a duty to make sure that this legislation tries to keep people healthy.

When we come down to it, I would like to see smoking curtailed. I have never opposed increasing taxes on tobacco products for that very reason. It has had the effect of making many people quit smoking. A young man said to me just a few weeks ago that he smoked until the price became so excessive that he just gave it up. He made himself give it up because he could not afford it. It was not fair to his wife or young child, so he gave it up. That is one way of doing it. However, prohibiting advertising sticks in my gullet. That bothers me. There are so many other factors that lead to death, so many other things that are not good for your health, which we do not prohibit from being advertised.

I think advertising is somewhat of a right. It is not a total right. I remember that in the provincial legislature a few years ago I made a statement that it was wrong for the tobacco companies to show an athlete being cheered by the crowd and then lighting up a cigarette. What stood out most conspicuously was his smoking the cigarette. In the same way I opposed the kind of advertising that shows a great pilot of an aircraft getting off the plane and drinking a glass of beer or whiskey. That is not what made him great. That is wrong advertising.

I do not take a stand for total abolition of advertising. Some advertising is okay. I cannot see anything wrong with a grocery store saying it sells cigarettes and cigars. That is not going to make anyone go in and buy, and I cannot see anything wrong with it. That is part of business. In the same way I do not like people to say you have to advertise in one language. I do not agree with that. Advertising can be in any language that the vendor wants to use if it is legal in that country. I have no objection to people in my constituency advertising in Ukrainian, Russian or Lebanese. That is their right. However, this other type of advertising is questionable because it tries to make people think that you become great because you smoke or drink. That is wrong.

I congratulate the Minister if that is what he has in mind. However, I hope we do not go to the extent of telling small stores that they cannot advertise cigarettes. There are so many other things which are wrong which are allowed to be sold in grocery stores, drug stores, and cornerstores.

We are at second reading stage on this Bill. We are dealing with it in principle, and this is the time to say what we think is right and what we think is wrong with it. From here it will go to a committee. I hope that the committee gives careful thought to everything that is said during this debate. The members of that committee have the authority to change anything in this Bill that they think is not right. I believe that there are some aspects of the advertising of tobacco products that should be corrected.

I believe in the parliamentary system. We can speak for or against legislation and make suggestions. A committee of our peers will decide what is best for Canadians as a whole, what is most in the interests of a healthy and virile Canadian people.

I look forward to having the members of that committee deal with this subject in light of all the facts so that we can be fair to those who smoke as well as to those who do not smoke and so that we do not take away rights which people of this country properly enjoy.

We have prohibited advertising in part many times and that is fine. We should prohibit advertising which makes a hero of those who smoke or drink. However, let us not try to stop the little storekeeper from saying that he sells cigarettes.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I listened attentively to the remarks of the Hon. Member. He indicated that he is in favour of labelling tobacco products with information on the ill effects of smoking. I agree with him on that point.

The Member indicated that a number of people have smoked and lived to a ripe old age. He referred to Sir Winston Churchill and another gentleman who was in his 90s when he died after having smoked for many years. We can, of course, easily remember people who live for a very long time. However, using the same logic, we would not remember very well those who died at the age of 40 of the effects of tobacco smoking. There are many people who would have had brilliant careers and whom we would have remembered had they not died prematurely as a result of smoking.

The Member says that he is against lifestyle advertising, which is one expression to describe it. He says that smoking should not be associated with an athlete or other such person. In that same vein, I am quite upset with certain lifestyle advertising which pertains to young women. We do not often see advertisements for cigarettes featuring someone with a bloated face and red eyes who is 150 pounds overweight. Young women in advertisements are always very slim and shapely. This contributes to a belief by some people that smoking helps to keep you slim. There is, therefore, a reluctance by young women to kick the smoking habit based on the erroneous, in my view, belief that it contributes to a more slender figure.

That has nothing to do with athletics or any such thing, but I consider that kind of advertising as offensive as that to which the Hon. Member has referred. The message in that advertising may be even more insidious because it is not up front but it is there. I am sure that the people involved in tobacco advertising are aiming their product at that market. It has obviously crossed their minds that some people would refrain from kicking the habit based on the hypothesis which I just brought forward.

The Member said that an advertisement in front of a store indicating that the store sells cigarettes does not make people buy a product. If it does not make people buy a product, what is its purpose? That is obviously a rhetorical question. We all know that the purpose of advertising is to make people buy a product. Whether the advertising is on the front of a store indicating that it sells a particular brand or whether arts and culture is subsidized by a particular brand announcing a golf tournament, the ultimate benefit for the tobacco company is an increase in their sales.

I have some difficulty in believing that tobacco companies will continue to fund those organizations, using their names in big letters, with the expectation that no one will buy their product in return. That is a little hard to swallow.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, of course advertising is done to make products better known and to get more people to buy them. However, it also has another purpose, that is, to tell what is sold in a store.

If I am going to buy cigarettes I do not want to have to go to half a dozen stores to find one that sells them. If you have no intention of buying cigarettes, a sign in a store saying that it sells cigarettes will not encourage you to smoke. In my view, that is not at all the same as picturing someone whom we consider to be a hero, such as an aircraft pilot, smoking a cigarette. In my view that is entirely different. It is suggesting that that man is a pilot because he smokes.

I believe that there is a difference between lifestyle advertising and simply an indication that something is sold in a store. It may well encourage people who want to buy cigarettes to enter the store, but I do not think it will encourage someone who wants to buy a chocolate bar to buy a package of cigarettes instead.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I have an observation rather than a question. The Minister's office has sent me a number of brochures relating to the Government's effective campaign for educating our young population through the schools. I want to thank the officials of the Minister's office who kindly sent that material to me in the last minutes.

There should be wider use of this kind of information. In addition to sending it to MPs there should be co-operation with school boards across the country. Rather than receiving one of these on my desk I would like my children and all children to receive this information at school. There is no doubt that my children will have this package of information tonight, but I would like all young people to receive the same kind of encouragement, not only to quit smoking for those who do, but not to start for those who have not yet had the unfortunate experience of partaking in the weed.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, I fully agree with the Hon. Member. I believe we should begin education at the earliest possible grade.

I recall teaching eleven grades at Churchill school just outside Drumheller. We had a health period three times a week. To my knowledge, not one student in that class smoked. I recall one of my students suggesting a way to show that it may be wrong to smoke. This student suggested that the class be shown a picture of the lungs of a non smoker, then depict what the lungs look like after smoking for a year, and what they look like after 50 years of smoking.

I thought this was an excellent idea and said that I would obtain a picture of the lungs for the class project. I asked this student why he wanted to do this project. He told me that his father had been smoking for 50 years. His father said that it never hurt him, but his mother said that it does affect him. He wanted to show his father what it was doing to his lungs because he wanted him to live for a long time.

The pictures that this student drew were so realistic that I do not believe any youngster in that school ever smoked after seeing them. The majority of students I have met since that time do not smoke and most of them say it is due to the class project which showed the effect of smoking on lungs after 50 years. I believe it is important to provide such education in the school to the greatest possible degree. I believe that is where we will obtain the greatest results.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Chartrand (Verdun—Saint-Paul): Madam Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to give you some of my personal impressions on Bill C-51. I think we all tend to applaud virtue and discourage vice. Now is smoking a vice, a way to relax or a habit? I think only the user knows for sure.

I am not so sure I agree with the ban on advertising, and I have my own personal opinion in this respect. When people say that advertising is dangerous for young people, for adults and for anyone who might want to start smoking or who already smokes, I am not so sure people are being realistic, if we look at how young people react. I am thinking of my own experience, in fact, I have been going through this almost daily, every week.

Every time I give my assistant's little boy a ride in my car, all hell breaks loose. I smoke and he doesn't. He rolls down the window, and we have a big argument. Sometimes I get to the point where I stop the car and tell him: I have a right to smoke. If you don't like it, you can get out. And this kid is exposed to all kinds of advertising, in magazines, in newspapers and cigarette commercials. Nowadays, kids are being educated to realize that smoking may be dangerous and that smoking is bad for them. We don't even have to tell them. We don't have to explain. It is part of growing up today, and kids are being taught, and they learn very quickly, that cigarettes may be harmful.

I fail to see why we should make it even more complicated. Tobacco companies and cigarette manufactures know perfectly well that some day, measures will be taken to prevent as many people as possible from smoking, or at least enable non-smokers to live a better life than smokers.

They are prepared to co-operate, and I know about this from Imperial Tobacco. They came to see me and said they had presented a brief to the Minister about ways of controlling their own industry. I looked at their suggestions, and I felt they were very sensible. They were imposing very strict self-censorship, but instead of that, we get this Bill, and personally, I never heard anyone say that we absolutely needed this legislation to prevent advertising and to prevent people from smoking. As you know, cigarette companies and tobacco companies, whatever they happen to sell, are major participants in regional and local economies. They invest huge sums of money in golf tournaments, cultural events and sports activities. People say that if they advertise, they must want to sell more. However, they know as well as we do, that you can show a non-smoker any cigarette brand you want, but it won't make him want to smoke.

Advertising is specifically targeted at the user. Whether you are using one brand of cigarettes or another, it will try to convince you to switch. Sometimes, the same company which manufactures different brands of cigarettes will push one to compete with another. Personally, I think this is allright. I do not see why we should stop these companies from investing in advertising campaigns to encourage people to try their different brands. I can say that I never smoked a cigarette until I was 29 years old; it was not because of advertising in magazines or on TV—it seems to me that there were no longer any TV ads then—it was not because people forced me, but simply that one day, as an adult, I decided that I wanted to try. I liked it, and I continued.

It is a fact that today, as a consumer, I am interested in advertising; they try to convince us, in a thousand ways—colour of packaging, stronger or weaker cigarettes—that one brand is superior to another. I am affected to a certain extent, but I do not feel bad about it, for as a smoker, I should be tempted to watch the ad and learn more about the product, which is not always the case.

What worries me is the kind of money that will be lost. I am concerned about this Bill because of the money which will be lost and which would have been invested in a great many community projects. For instance, when I was young, I was involved in bicycle competitions. We were in need of funds for cycling which, as a European sport, was not very well known here. We needed funds to travel to places where we could practice our sport. A funny thing is that the government of Quebec asked a cigarette manufacturing company to pay for our travel to Europe to practice our sport without having any trade name on our T-shirt, without being told that we had to promote everywhere that such and such company was sponsoring us and making it possible for us to take part in an event. At the time, there were 16 of us, all under 16 years of age, who benefited not from an advertising campaign, but at least from a service to the community.

I cannot understand why the government insists on imposing such a legislation. It is a fact that in my Verdun—Saint-Paul riding, Imperial Tobacco employees are very nervous. They are worried about losing their jobs if there is a ban on advertising. However, that is not really the problem, because the number of smokers is decreasing. On the other hand, we have to provide enough time for these companies to find a new market and for these workers to find another job instead of scaring them by simply saying that there will be no more advertising or selling of cigarettes and that there is a ban on smoking. In my region, the industry represents 800 people, or three or four people in each family, which means 2,500 people will be directly affected, and this does not include the advertising companies.

What most concerns me is that we might be a bit too drastic in making our decisions. I smoke myself and I am not ashamed of it. At times, I find that the non-smoker is much more bothersome than the smoker because you are treated like a monster if you take out a cigarette in public places. We seem to have virtually lost the right to smoke. There is no need to ban advertising to show us that we are doing something wrong. We have only to look in the eyes of the non-smokers to realize that we are no longer wanted. For my part, I believe that we have to give a chance to the people and the companies. Canada is a free country. These people have rights, and I personally have a lot of difficulty in supporting the Bill because every company is entitled to advertise and have its presence felt on the market, whether it is a tobacco company or some other business. We could say that most people die in their own beds.

Are we going to ban beds? There are a thousand such examples. What I would ask the committee to which this Bill will be referred to do, is not to say that there will be a ban on advertising. Why should we not provide a bit more time for the workers, the advertising companies and the members of the industry to adjust? I believe that people would be much happier if they were not being told that they cannot do such or such a thing, but if they were simply given advice to follow if they want, because if people tell us that smoking will kill us, it remains our own choice. Banning cigarettes or cigarette advertising will not make me change my mind about smoking.

Mr. Kindy: Madam Speaker, I have a few comments to make about the speech of the Hon. Member. I believe that he raised a very important point when he spoke about advertising. We can ask ourselves whether advertising makes people smoke more. There is no advertising for marijuana. There is no advertising for cocaine or heroin, yet a lot of people, especially young people, use these drugs. This seems to show that advertising has no direct relation with consumption. There is perhaps some link, but no direct relationship. I believe that what we need is information. Today, our young people smoke more than before and women smoke more than they used to because of the stress of modern life and emancipation. Women want to be equal to men and young people want to appear older than they are. I think this is why our young people smoke. It is not because someone told them that smoking is popular.

The point I wish to raise concerns the freedom of expression. Would we restrict the freedom of expression by banning advertising? I believe that this is the threat inherent in this Bill. The only thing to do is to ensure freedom of expression. It is essential in a democratic society. What I wonder is whether this Bill does not restrict freedom of expression. A self-respecting democratic society should not be afraid of freedom of expression. For instance, if people drink or eat too much, it can certainly be as harmful as smoking. We all know that obesity causes certain problems. Overeating causes obesity and obesity causes high blood pressure, which is certainly dangerous. The only answer is to inform the public that all abuses are dangerous.

The same is true for tobacco. If the public is told that abuses are dangerous, we shall realize that most people are reasonable. We can see it right now. Many people do not smoke because they are well-informed. People also watch what they eat because they know that it is dangerous to overeat. They also know that it is bad to drink too much. Everything must be done in moderation. On the other hand, I believe that we are certainly restricting freedom of thought by passing a Bill to ban advertising. And, as I said, freedom of expression is an essential element in a democratic society.

Indeed the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) had raised that point and said that freedom must be respected in a democratic society.

As a physician I would surely have seen the harmful effects of abuses—eating abuses, drinking abuses, or smoking abuses—and what people need is to lead a healthful life, exercise regularly, refrain from eating and smoking too much, sleep normal hours, and all this is bound to have an effect on our health.

Simply saying that advertising will be banned does not mean that abuses will be curbed. As I said before, some people take drugs—as a physician, for example, I saw people who reach for a cigarette when they feel nervous, but if a cigarette is not handy they will take drugs. Is it better to take drugs or to smoke? That is the question I am asking myself.

For this reason I am against the Bill as drafted because it does restrict advertising as well as individual freedom of expression, and I would suggest that what we need is information. Information can only come from one source: education, and that has to begin on school benches, as the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) put it: School is the source of information. If youngsters are told that too much smoking, eating or drinking is not good for them and that they must have healthy habits, then we will have a healthy society. That is certainly not the kind of thing the state can impose. The state can tell people smoking is harmful, have warnings printed on packages of cigarettes to the effect that it is a health hazard—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is my duty to remind the Hon. Member that he sought the floor on questions and comments, not on debate. We have hardly two minutes left. Perhaps he might allow the Hon. Member who spoke before him to have at least one minute to respond to comments?

Mr. Kindy: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As it happens we are talking about freedom of expression and I am trying to make my point by saying that it is so essential to have a debate in a democratic society.

Perhaps I should direct a question to the Hon. Member who spoke and who has a cigarette manufacturing plant in his riding, Macdonald. He told the House that roughly 800 people would be out of a job if the Bill were adopted. Naturally his personal interest is that this Bill does not become law, but he was also very eloquent when he pointed out that people in his riding support his position.

So I wonder whether he will explain to the House why this bill should not become law.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being five o'clock, I must seek the unanimous consent of the House to allow the Hon. Member to respond.

Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Chartrand: Thirty seconds simply to say that 800 workers—in fact, they are scared of losing their jobs. But this is really because of a lack of information. If the Government had taken a little more time and had not dished out this harsh Bill, I think it would have had the opportunity to plan and explain to these people that someday, whether they liked it or not, they would have to retrain for something else, because the tobacco industry is losing ground. But it should have given these people time to think things over. That is what the tobacco companies were prepared to do, but they were given no choice. For this reason, they cannot behave as good corporate citizens and must react as companies faced with a serious problem. How are they going to solve it following the adoption of Bill C-51? That is what we will see!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I was under the impression, when unanimous consent was given to proceed with a response to some of the statements that were made by the Hon. Member for Calgary East (Mr. Kindy), that there would also be ample opportunity for others Members to respond to some of the outrageous comments that he made, allegedly in the name of the medical profession. Given the time—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The period for questions and comments following the comments of the Hon. Member for Verdun—Saint-Paul (Mr. Chartrand) had expired. Nobody else had risen when the Hon. Member for Calgary East rose to ask a question. I allowed the Hon. Member to continue on.

I thought it would only be normal for the Hon. Member to have an opportunity to answer. The time for questions or comments is over. We should be going into Private Members' Business. I did ask for the House to give me advice on whether the House was ready for the question. Is there unanimous consent for the question to be put at this time?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): There is not unanimous consent.

It being five o'clock p.m.—the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, in order to expedite matters, I would be very happy to seek unanimous consent of the House to continue the debate. That was the point that I was making with respect to the Hon. Member for Calgary East. Certainly, he made a few statements with respect to the smoking issue that are absolutely outrageous, wrong, and erroneous. I do not see why we should cut off debate just because the Hon. Member for Calgary East has had his say.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order.

I wonder if there would be unanimous consent of the House to allow my colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), to make a comment to which there could be a reply, and at that point to not see the clock and allow my colleague to make a comment, which I think is appropriate, and call the question after that comment.

If there would be unanimous consent for that, I think that the wishes of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East and the wishes of the House would be met, that the Bill be sent to committee, because, after all, the committee studying Bill C-204 is considering this matter. It is hearing witnesses who would be appropriate to hear on both Bills.

I think that you might find that there is unanimous consent from the government side for my hon. colleague to make a comment and then to call the vote.

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, I would certainly agree, and I am sure that my Party would agree to a brief comment being made in order that we can get to the vote. I agree that there were preposterous statements made, and we would like to see replies to them. However, it is more important that we get the Bill to committee.

Mr. Boudria: On behalf of our Party, I wish to indicate our consent to what has just been offered by the Deputy Government House Leader, and then to proceed in the manner that has been suggested.

Mr. Kindy: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have some difficulty in accepting unanimous consent on this issue as it is past five o'clock. There was ample time during the debate. If there is to be more debate, then I think that we should call it five o'clock and resume the debate tomorrow.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Before the Hon. Member for Calgary East (Mr. Kindy) rose, there seemed to be unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) a short comment and then proceed to the question without seeing the clock, and then giving the normal time for Private Members' Business. Do I still have unanimous consent on that?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I do not have unanimous consent.

Nevertheless, I will allow the Hon. Member for Hamilton East the possibility to make a comment while the Hon. Member for Verdun—Saint-Paul (Mr. Chartrand) is here, otherwise when we do return if the Hon. Member who has made the speech is not in the House, the possibility of making a comment would then be forfeited.

While the Hon. Member is still in the House, I will allow a short comment from the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, given that there have been certain statements made in this House in the question and answer period in response to my hon. friend from Verdun which deal with the question of how the medical profession views this whole question, I wonder if the Member could advise us as to whether he is aware of the position that has been taken by the Canadian Medical Association on this issue?

Does he agree with his colleague that, if people are denied the right to smoke, which is not the intention of this Bill, they would turn to drugs? Does he agree with that assessment of the situation?

[Translation]

Mr. Chartrand: Madam Speaker, I know about the representatives of the medical profession. These people have done a lot of lobbying and exerted a lot of pressure on me, if not on all Hon. Members. I met them as often as possible, whether in my riding office or here, in Ottawa, where they tried to explain that it was the best and only way to convince people not to smoke. I stick to my position about this just the same. That smokers are bound to take other drugs or do something else is not, I think, at issue here. I never had any discussions concerning this. I do not think that anybody can force people and say: Because you are smoking, you are going to use other types of drugs. Personally, I do not believe it. On the other hand, I believe that this is dangerous, because the medical profession said so. For instance, my father has stopped smoking. He was told that if he continued, he would be dead in three years. It did not stop me from smoking and I continue to smoke even today.

Physicians are qualified to tell us that it is a dangerous habit. They repeat that every day, and they are doing their job. We are doing our job, and I think that Bill C-51 deals with advertising. It does not deal with the medical fact that smoking may be dangerous or not. It deals with advertising through magazines and in public places. I suggest that it is depriving a corporation of the right to advertise which any other industry enjoys.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being five o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

EDUCATION

ADVISABILITY OF ESTABLISHING NATIONAL OBJECTIVES

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York—Sunbury) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of establishing, through joint negotiations with the provinces, national objectives in education including, but without limiting the generality of the foregoing, quantitative medium and long-term targets for a reduction in the rate of illiteracy on both a national and a provincial basis;

That the government examine the benefits of establishing a national council on education to promote the jointly negotiated and agreed upon national objectives; and

That within the general framework of a national interest in education, the provinces be free to act as they see fit to meet these national objectives and to achieve the targeted reductions in illiteracy.

He said: Madam Speaker, the purpose of this resolution is to acknowledge, at one and the same time, the constitutional priority of the provinces and the vital responsibilities of the federal Government in the education of our adult population.

The urgent challenges which both levels of government must confront range across the entire spectrum. At one extreme, recent studies have revealed an alarmingly high rate of adult illiteracy, a handicap which condemns its victims to a helpless existence on the margins of Canadian economic life. Both the personal suffering of such individuals and the cost they represent to society demand that Governments act quickly and decisively against the problem.

At the opposite end of the spectrum, our universities have clearly arrived at a crisis in terms of their ability to produce the quality of researchers and research necessary to maintain Canada's competitiveness in the world economy. With or without freer trade with the United States, our ability to match brains with the rest of the industrialized world will ultimately determine whether we can achieve the goals of social justice and humanity which all of us want.

In between these extremes we have a system of public school, community college, and university education which, if not teetering on the brink of collapse, finds it increasingly difficult to meet our many expectations. We expect it to provide students with a bewildering array of advanced technical and social knowledge and skills. We expect it to provide equal access and a reasonable chance of success to members of traditionally disadvantaged groups. We expect it to adapt quickly to changes in the workplace and to respond to new social priorities. We expect it to do these things, however, in a context of increasing class size and deteriorating buildings, equipment, and libraries.

Although the national importance of education has been recognized at least since the end of the Second World War, the history of federal-provincial co-operation is not one in which either level of government should take pride. There is little to be gained at this stage by assessing blame. It must be recognized, however, that there remains a legacy of mutual suspicion which must be overcome if we are to meet the contemporary challenge. We in this federal Parliament have no business lecturing the provinces about their responsibilities or attempting to dictate the form of future co-operation.

However, we can and should commit our Parliament and Government of Canada to principles such as the following: moral and material support for common approaches taken with the provinces, either individually or collectively through the Council of Ministers of Education, to national problems such as adult illiteracy and the access of traditionally disadvantaged groups to post-secondary education; substantially increased support for the research capacity and activity of our universities, provided in a manner which respects the priorities of the institutions and the provinces; and creation, upon consultation and agreement with all provinces, of a permanent mechanism or mechanisms to determine national objectives and ensure the co-ordination of federal and provincial efforts in post-secondary education.

The motion I have presented to the House stresses the issue of illiteracy for a number of reasons. First, in a society as affluent and well educated as ours, the current magnitude of the problem is a national disgrace. Second, since adult illiteracy is not a subject to which either level of government has traditionally paid much attention, there are no jurisdictional jealousies or vested interests. The way is clear for immediate, co-operative action.

However, I would not hide the fact that the intent of the motion is much broader. Successful action on this first front must serve as a model and inspiration for broader initiatives. Participants at the national forum on post-secondary education in Saskatoon achieved a remarkable degree of consensus on the proper goals and priorities of the educational system. Whether the "spirit of Saskatoon" survives the difficult and intricate process of finding the right means depends in large measure on the quality and sincerity of our political leadership. The intent of the motion is for the House to begin showing the way.

In concluding I should like to mention some positive measures which I feel have been taken in the right direction. In October 1986, for the first time in history, illiteracy received mention in the Speech from the Throne. Last year the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) declared war on illiteracy in our prisons, and in the past few months the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) has introduced significant new measures, including the establishment of a national literacy secretariat, the appointment of a national literacy council, increased funding of community programs, and an extension of federal-provincial co-operation in literacy initiatives.

The national forum on post-secondary education, which was an excellent success, was held after my motion was introduced, and the subject is now being studied by the Standing Committee on Secretary of State. This necessitates a technical change in my motion, so I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Carleton—Charlotte (Mr. McCain):

> That the word "government" be deleted in paragraphs 1 and 2 and be replaced by: "Standing Committee on Secretary of State"

I seek unanimous consent of the House to make this change.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member for York—Sunbury (Mr. Howie) to move such an amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): There being unanimous consent, debate will continue on the amendment. Does the Hon. Member for York—Sunbury wish to speak to the amendment?

Mr. Howie: No, Mr. Speaker. The amendment was really only a technical one, as I explained. I think you might continue debate with other Hon. Members who are interested.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In view of the fact that debate on Bill C-51 went on until 5.10 p.m., I wonder whether this debate could continue until 6.10 p.m. so that we get the extra 10 minutes which was robbed from us at the top of the hour at 5 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I reassure the Hon. Member for Hamilton—Wentworth (Mr. Scott) that I have no intention of cutting short the debate. Earlier, when I gave the floor to the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), I said that I would not see the clock and that the House would consider Private Members' Business for a full hour.

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to take part in the debate. I compliment the Hon. Member for York—Sunbury (Mr. Howie) on bringing forward this motion.

It is either feast or famine in the House. For a while there was no talk of education, but suddenly within the past two weeks there has been a great deal of it. I had a Bill debated on Friday, as the Hon. Member for York—Sunbury may know. It seems to me that the Hon. Member's motion complements that nicely. Indeed it supports the general idea that we have national problems in Canada which call for national solutions.

He is quite right that although education is a provincial responsibility—and we all recognize that; nobody would want to take away that responsibility—we have too many serious national problems which can only be addressed by a national consensus.

It is my feeling that in unity there is strength and that, instead of having to go it alone, the provinces can go it co-operatively with their sister provinces, with the Government of Canada, and possibly with other members of the educational constituency—students, teachers, and administrators who are interested in it.

The motion of the Hon. Member focuses particularly on literacy. I think it is commendable because it is a serious blot on the national face. There is no question that illiteracy is a serious problem all across the country ranging from British Columbia to Newfoundland. Illiteracy in the population goes anywhere from just below 20 per cent, as I recall the figures in British Columbia, to a high of over 40 per cent in the Province of Newfoundland. In between, in Ontario and Quebec, we have percentages in the twenties.

Whether illiteracy is 18 per cent or 44 per cent of the population, it is completely unacceptable from a moral point and an economic point of view. I understand there will very soon be a study being done on the question of illiteracy which will show that not only is this a human problem creating a tragic difficulty for individuals but it is costing our country hundreds of millions of dollars. I have not even dealt with the safety aspect of the person who cannot read signs on the job. There are hundreds of thousands of Canadians who cannot participate fully in Canadian life because they cannot read and write and are not functional. It costs businesses hundreds of millions of dollars. I suggest that those businesses have to take a look at this as must the Government.

I feel that the Government has not made the kind of commitment it should. A million dollars to solve the problem of illiteracy is almost an insult. It is little better than that. It will need many more dollars before we can say that we have made an adequate contribution to the problem of illiteracy.

I agree with the Hon. Member for York—Sunbury that these things should be done jointly. But it should not be just a federal and provincial effort. We must go beyond that. The Member went beyond that by suggesting that we need, I think the words he used to describe it are, a national council on education. In part his motion reads:

> That the Government examine the benefits of establishing a national council on education to promote the jointly negotiated and agreed upon national objectives—

He goes beyond the motion of Friday which dealt with post-secondary education. The Canadian Teachers' Federation, for example, has had for quite some time a policy asking for exactly what the Hon. Member proposes in his motion.

I believe with the Hon. Member that it is time now not to look at things as we always have historically. When the country was put together in 1867 there were certain realities in Canada. It seems to me that we are still living with the structures put in place in 1867, but this is 1987. Perhaps we need a new, fresh vision of what it is to be Canadian and how we can get people to participate in national life fully. I agree with the general thrust of what the Hon. Member is saying. There is in Canada now a national need.

He is quite right in saying that not only is illiteracy a problem but that the problem ranges all the way to post-secondary education. The post-secondary education system in Canada has been described as being in crisis. I do not think that is an understatement. There is the question of underfunding, the question of limited assets, the question of teachers and professors who are leaving for the United States, and the question of professors who are not being replaced. The 40 or 50 year old professor is not being replaced because many people are not entering the field of university teaching. Salaries are low.

In my own Province of Newfoundland if you walk through the tunnels between the buildings at Memorial University you will find drips all the way through from the plant pipes. Normal maintenance has not been done. Our university buildings and facilities are falling into disrepair. This is a serious problem. It cannot be the responsibility of the provinces alone. In the Province of Newfoundland, if I can take that example again, there is not the financial adequacy within the budget to deal with these problems, particularly if federal funding is being cut back. The provinces which this motion and approach would help are the less well off provinces in Canada. Ontario can probably well survive on its own and deal with this problem. It is doing so, as is Quebec. I have to say quite candidly in this Chamber that most of the outstanding initiatives in Canada that have taken place within the recent past have come out of the Province of Quebec.

From a financial point, strategy and policy point of view, Ontario and Quebec are handling their problems, I think, in an imaginative way. That is not true for the provinces not in the same financial position. It seems to me that a co-ordinated co-operative national approach would help. We need a national vision to help the disadvantaged particularly. Whether we are talking about disadvantaged people or disadvantaged regions, we need to band together to create not a federal or provincial body but a national body to deal with the very powerful, important, tragic and imminent national need.

I have a great deal of pleasure in supporting the motion of the Member from York—Sunbury, and I compliment the Hon. Member for bringing it forward. He has mentioned a couple of other things that I have not because of time constraints. He is quite right that there must be adequate funds for research. He mentioned that illiteracy is the most urgent problem and that there should be broader initiatives later on.

I support this motion and I believe my Party as a whole will support it. It is something that should not be dropped. It should be kept very much alive. I hope there will be an opportunity within the House and within the committee of the Secretary of State to examine this fundamental problem from the ground up, ranging from illiteracy to post-secondary education. We cannot put it aside. We must deal with it, and I hope the House will see in its wisdom that that is the case and support the motion of the Hon. Member.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I rise to support the motion of the Hon. Member for York—Sunbury (Mr. Howie). It is very similar to a motion I submitted which has not been called for debate. My motion reads as follows:

> That a special committee of the House should be established to consider Canada's serious and growing illiteracy problem and recommend ways that the Government, in conjunction with the provinces and territories, can join the United Nations attack on illiteracy.

It is frightening, to say the least, that a country as industrially developed as Canada finds that almost a quarter of its people are functionally illiterate. An in-depth series on the problem and the scope of it was reported in a number of articles that appeared in Southam newspapers within the last year describing the dimensions of the problem. A study indicated that 24 per cent of Canadians are functionally illiterate. That are five million people and 13 per cent of these are recent high school graduates. In a study done for the Canadian Association of Adult Education in June 1985, it was reported that in the Provinces of Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, and Quebec more than one in four adults have less than a Grade 8 education. Almost 40 per cent of Canadian women and almost 35 per cent of Canadian men with less than a Grade 8 education live in Quebec. One-third of the educationally disadvantaged adults are employed. Seven per cent are unemployed, and the unemployment rate is 15 per cent. Three-fifths are not in the labour force; that is, are not actively seeking work.

This is a problem which has tremendous and profound implications for all Canadians. Like most other countries in the world, we are moving to an era in which education and knowledge are an absolute necessity if our citizens are to find the kind of jobs which will be available. Increasingly, these jobs will call for a much better level of education than most of us have, and particularly for a better education than those who are functionally illiterate have.

One of the problems is that we have never really faced up to asking who are the functionally illiterate. If we did ask that question, we would find that the groups from which the illiterate come vary from province to province and from city to city. In most larger cities, there are new immigrants who came from countries in which the languages spoken were neither

English nor French. In some cities such as Winnipeg or Regina, there are native people who have moved in recent years from the reserves where education was, by any standard that can be set, deficient to say the least. There are people who grew up and lived in rural areas where until very recently the educational standards were very low.

It is good news that the federal Conservative Government has recognized the problem publicly and has allocated $1 million to fight illiteracy. However, looking at the scope of the problem, we realize that the amount allocated is a mere a drop in the bucket. As I see it, it is merely a public relations exercise.

Ian Morrison, the Director of the Canadian Association for Adult Education, has estimated that it would take $100 million to substantially improve literacy in Canada. It is pretty clear that without major efforts on the part of Governments, both federal and provincial, in co-operation with the groups in various parts of Canada which have worked on the problem and learned how to help people who are illiterate, real progress will not be made.

Organizations such as Frontier College, the Regina Public Library and unions in my city such as the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, all have programs ongoing. These programs are small but these organizations have learned a great deal about how to begin to cope with the problem. However, $1 million will not do very much. We cannot expect the provinces or the cities to do the job which is required if for no other reason than that they simply do not have the money.

Just last week, there was a small article in the Toronto Star reporting that school districts in Toronto and North York are having tremendous problems. There has been a tremendous influx of immigrant students who need education in English as a second language. These school boards do not have the financial ability to deal with those problems.

We need a new approach, we need a serious approach. Some months ago, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) announced a program to help those in penitentiaries who are illiterate to get an education. I welcome that program, but I ask why it is restricted only to people who are in penitentiaries.

The Department of Employment and Immigration under the former Liberal Government and under the present Government has cut back on programs which can be described as adult basic education. Those are the programs which could help a great many illiterate people. However, the Departments have not been very sympathetic to this idea. They have been cutting back on those programs because no quick results are shown. People do not get jobs if they only have this basic educational training funded by the Department of Employment and Immigration. The Department wants to show that people who participate in its programs move quickly into jobs.

The reality is that people who are functionally illiterate are almost always either unemployed or have low-paying unskilled jobs from which they will never be able to move. It is clear that a major effort must be made in this regard.

It is true that this federal Government, like the former Liberal Government, takes the attitude that education under our Constitution is a provincial responsibility and therefore the federal Government very frequently refuses to get involved and to put up money. People who are illiterate are doomed to failure in the future. That failure will be felt by those people first but it will be felt by all Canadians as well.

We in Canada have one of the worst records of any of the industrialized countries in the world. It seems to me that we need a decision made by the federal Government to co-operate with the provinces and the voluntary agencies which have experience in this area to assess the dimensions of the problem and calculate the costs of improving the situation. There has been no real improvement in the situation in the last 25 years. The percentage of the functionally illiterate has hovered at between 20 per cent and 25 per cent and is not getting lower despite all the supposed efforts made by the federal Government, by the provinces and by the voluntary agencies. All of these efforts together have been less than successful.

We need a commitment from the federal Government to co-operate with the provinces in calculating the methods that can be used to reduce the number of functionally illiterate and the costs of this. The federal Government must agree to participate in the battle. That means that it must participate in the funding of a major effort.

While I welcome this resolution, I am not too hopeful that the federal Government, given its concentration on the need to control or reduce the deficit, is likely to do what is necessary. To the extent that this resolution helps highlight the dimensions of the problem, I support it.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton—Charlotte): Madam Speaker, whether or not this should be a political issue is a question which I do not wish to discuss. I do not believe that the first two speakers approached the political aspects in any way and I do not think we should do so in this debate.

Perhaps if the Government of Canada has made mistakes throughout Confederation, it may very well be that we have made too many political decisions without considering the practicality of them. I believe this is one decision that should now be and should stay above the rank of politics or its consideration as a political matter.

We do have a federal provincial confederation system of government. That system has delineated certain responsibilities to certain levels of government. I believe that if the federal Government has a level of responsibility, it is in influence and not in participation or interference. That is our responsibility.

• (1740)

I want to speak on this subject from the perspective of my experience as a student and teacher. I believe that if we are to exert influence, it may be along the lines of putting more emphasis on the three r's, reading, 'riting and 'rithmetic. Arithmetic, of course, is not a matter of literacy but it is very important.

When we speak about the incapacity of the illiterate, that incapacity is a handicap as real as a physical handicap in today's world. It has always been a handicap, but today it is a major handicap. I believe we have to come back to a much greater emphasis in our schools on reading and writing to the point that the first objective of education is competence in those two areas.

Over the years we have overlooked this as we accepted the representations of many people who had what they thought were compassionate ideas for teaching. Some of those ideas were that we should perhaps not have examinations or competition, but we should allow students to learn at the rate at which they wish to learn rather than at the rate at which they are capable of learning. I believe that some of the standards we have established for advancement from grade to grade have been such that students find themselves in a very handicapped position. We have ignored reading and writing to that point.

Not very long ago I talked to a student who graduated from high school at the honours level only to find that she had taken courses which in no way prepared her for college. Yet college had been her declared goal for years. The practice of her school was to emphasize subjects other than those which provide a broad base of information and knowledge to put you in a position to be competent in college. That is where we have to provide some leadership and influence. However, we should not take action which will interfere in any way with a sphere of provincial jurisdiction as important as this one is.

I had the experience of becoming a teacher at the same high school I attended. By that time a curriculum was in place different from that which I experienced as a student. When I was a student I had to write essays, create stories and write letters, which were in turn examined and graded by the teacher. When I became a parent no such practice was followed with my children.

I have employed people in my office who graduated from high school or business college and could not spell. I mean they could not spell in a very rudimentary way. Yet they had graduated and become secretaries.

When I began teaching in Grade 9 I found that I now had a student body which could not read or understand high school textbooks because there had been a major change in the vocabulary requirement in the first eight grades of school.

If we have a responsibility here it is to provide leadership. We must restore to the school system competence in reading and writing as a necessary basis for promotion from class to class. Let us not have poor spellers coming out of high school and business colleges seeking employment. No, they are not illiterate but the education system has obviously been negligent in extending to those students the skills so necessary for the occupation they have chosen.

I understand that the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) was a teacher. I do not know what experience he might have had but he spoke as one with a sincere interest in education, as have other speakers.

I congratulate the Hon. Member for York—Sunbury (Mr. Howie) for putting this motion before the House and I congratulate those who have participated in the debate. I hope that we give this subject consideration which is completely unprejudiced and unpolitical.

If this motion goes to committee we will not be pestered by special interest groups. Our consideration will be dedicated to the best interests of all Canadians with respect to our education system. Let us hope that we elevate that system to the point that when one leaves high school one can listen to media commentary or read The Globe and Mail or The Telegraph-Journal with understanding and comprehension.

There are degrees of illiteracy. There are those who cannot read or write at all. However, the degree of literacy we must achieve is that which will allow the young people of this nation to move into whatever career they choose with the ability to use their skills in the best possible way. Without that capability, those people are handicapped. It must be costing us not millions but billions in lost productivity.

The best educated people in the world today, presumably, are the Japanese and they are leading the way. It used to be that the United States had the highest number of high school graduates, college graduates and technical school graduates. I do not believe that applies any longer. Therefore, let us step up the level of advice from Government so there will no longer be illiterates and our graduate students at whatever level will be more competent in developing both our society and their own future than they are today.

[Translation]

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Madam Speaker, first, I would like to say that I really appreciate the Private Member's motion introduced by the hon. Member for York—Sunbury (Mr. Howie). I believe that it is very important. It is unacceptable that we should have such a high rate of illiteracy in our society.

[English]

I would like to tell the Hon. Member for York—Sunbury (Mr. Howie) as well as the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) that the level of illiteracy in our society is totally unacceptable. The figures run from one in five to one in four, so you can imagine what the total effect must be on the social, economic, political and moral interests of all Canadians. This is a national disgrace and needs very serious attention.

• (1750)

I appreciate the suggestion made by the Member to move for a national council on education to promote jointly negotiated and agreed upon national objectives. However, it will take a great deal of time to arrive at such a federal-provincial initiative. We must consider some creative and innovative solutions in the interim. Notwithstanding the fact that I totally support any initiative, we need some other mechanisms until we are able to address this problem fully.

As a director of youth protection in the Province of Quebec I noted with a great deal of sadness the discomfort, embarrassment, and unwillingness of parents to acknowledge their illiteracy. They could not read contracts which were written for their children who had performed criminal acts and were in the first stage of becoming non-productive members of our society. These parents were incapable of understanding the contents of written contracts. These people love their children and want to help them, yet are unable to do so in acute situations. What must happen on a daily basis when they want to lend a hand in the general education of their children?

The level of illiteracy is a reflection of the level of immigration to this country and the fact that we have not done a good job of integration with new immigrants who are the backbone of the building of this country. If we want new immigrants to become well established and able to make the contributions which they need to make to society we must make a commitment from the first day that they come to this land.

The first commitment is to ensure that every man, woman, and child who comes here is at least able to read, write and know the fundamentals of our language in order that they can do their banking and shopping and understand a contract with a landlord. It is absolutely crucial from a social perspective that these people be able to understand our society. If they become ill they must be able to follow medical instructions and read labels on medication. The implications are very serious because these people are incapacitated and handicapped. If we looked at it in that way we would be able to move in a number of areas other than only through the Department of Immigration.

I am not trying to politicize this debate, but I believe that the $1 million which the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) has seen fit to allocate right now is only a small drop in the bucket. I tend to agree with the Adult Education Association of Canada that we need hundreds of millions of dollars.

I would like to suggest one creative stop-gap measure which has been researched and has proven very effective. It is with relation to open captioning on television. That little square box in our home has a very important impact on our lives. Everyone who watches this box can learn effectively. By watching the lettering at the bottom of the screen people learn by associating the word with the image.

The hearing impaired have complained that less than 50 per cent of the programs which they would like to watch are close-captioned and that their rights are abridged under the Constitution. They believe they should be able to watch all programs. I suggest that, as a start, all news programs should be close captioned because we become good citizens by understanding what is going on in our society. By running open captioning we could render a service to the hearing impaired and the illiterate at the same time. We would be accomplishing at least one step toward the multitude of action plans which will be required. We need creative, innovative, and imaginative ideas.

People are ashamed and embarrassed to acknowledge that they have been in this wonderful county for many years but have not been able to master either English or French. They may not be illiterate in their own language, but in Canada they are illiterate with regard to the economic, social, and political impact on their lives and on our country.

I make that suggestion as one window of opportunity on the national objective. I believe that we should look more closely at the handling of immigrants and their integration into our society. I refer not only to the working men and women and their children, but also to the husband or wife who chooses to work at home. That is very important.

I am sure that no Member of this House is proud of the fact that some 20 to 25 per cent of our society is in those circumstances. This is a cumulative problem and we must begin now to push the project ahead. I congratulate the Hon. Member on the project and let us accomplish some other things at the same time.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Madam Speaker, as Chairperson of the House of Commons Standing Committee on the Secretary of State I am extremely pleased at the prospect of our committee taking on the subject matter of the motion of the Hon. Member for York—Sunbury (Mr. Howie). I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for raising issues which affect literally millions of Canadians from all walks of life, all age groups, and all sectors of our society. I hope that within the next few minutes there will be unanimous consent to refer this matter to the Standing Committee on Secretary of State.

It is very clear that the Government fully supports the spirit of the motion. Through the Department of the Secretary of State, and especially the Minister, the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), the Government has worked hard to put education issues on the national agenda. I want to pay tribute at this time to the Secretary of State who showed imagination and courage in mounting the national forum in post-secondary education in Saskatoon. I will have a few more words to say about that in a moment.

[Translation]

I am glad to see that the motion recognizes the constitutional jurisdiction of the provinces for education. We all know that the educational system comes under provincial jurisdiction, and all federal initiatives in this area must take this fact into account.

Members of this House are well aware that federal contributions are mostly for post-secondary education. Leaving aside the urgent problem of illiteracy, the Government has given priority to many problems which require an immediate attention.

• (1800)

These concerns were discussed, as I was saying earlier, at the historic three-day national forum on post-secondary education held in Saskatoon from October 25 to October 27. It was historic because that was the first time that the federal and provincial Governments have co-sponsored such a national educational event. It was historic because it brought together not only both federal and provincial Governments, but academics and people from all walks of life who care about higher education.

The forum provided a chance for the first truly national exploration of the challenges and opportunities of higher education in Canada. A gathering of more than 600 people represented the richness and diversity not only of Canada's colleges and universities, but also of Canadian society itself.

[Translation]

One of the major objectives of the Forum was to achieve a new national consensus on the importance of post-secondary education in Canada. The participants agreed that one of the major issues in that area was access for people of all ages and all cultural and linguistic groups.

Among the other concerns raised during the Forum to which the Government is giving its full attention, I would mention assistance to students through the Canadian Student Loans Program, the new incentive provisions for foreign students and university research.

The Secretary of State has asked for a full review of the Canadian Student Loans Program. This includes the creation of an ongoing intergovernmental advisory committee for student assistance and of a public advisory group, which will provide guidance on the future of federal programs in that area.

[English]

In addition, the Government has made known that it intends to make it easier and fairer for students to repay their loans, to improve assistance offered to part-time students, and to respond to the needs of the working poor, single parents and others with special needs.

In terms of increased accessibility, foreign students must also be included. Institutions as well as federal and provincial Governments recognize such students as assets and an investment in international good will. The Government has therefore recently announced the creation of 1,000 new scholarships for foreign students from developing countries, bringing the total to 7,000, no imposition of a student visa fee, and an easing of the rules about foreign students working in Canada.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, university research is another area where the Government has already shown a strong political will. Several weeks ago, the Government injected an additional $11 million into this year's budget for university research subsidy councils, as well as an additional $7 million for microelectronics research in universities.

Federal Government support to these councils now amounts to $600 million a year. The Government also developed recently a matching subsidy policy to promote Canadian private sector support.

However, a tragic problem still remains, that of illiteracy. Those who can neither read nor write sufficiently to accomplish the basic exchanges of daily life are truly disadvantaged in many ways. Innumerable communications means are closed to them and they are subject to constant humiliations.

• (1805)

[English]

The Secretary of State, who has been designated as the lead Minister responsible for the federal Government's literacy initiatives, issued a statement on September 8 to mark World Literacy Day. In his statement he outlined various initiatives which the federal Government is taking to give effect to the commitment made in the Throne Speech concerning literacy. The Minister emphasized a partnership approach with the provinces and with groups in the public and private sectors which are involved with this crucial problem.

I see that we are approaching the end of Private Members' Hour, Madam Speaker. In view of the sense in the Chamber on the part of all Parties that the motion of the Hon. Member for York—Sunbury be referred to the Standing Committee on Secretary of State, which committee I have the honour to chair, I request that the question now be put.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Howie) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Shall the main motion as amended carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the motion carried.

Motion as amended agreed to.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

Mr. Thacker: Madam Speaker, I note that the Hon. Member for London—Middlesex (Mr. Clifford) is out of the Chamber temporarily. Perhaps we could proceed to the next question on the adjournment debate and deal with the Hon. Member's question at the end of the late show.

TRADE—FILM DISTRIBUTION INDUSTRY—FILM IMPORT LICENSING/BOOK PUBLISHING INDUSTRY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I am rising to continue discussion on a question regarding film distribution and free trade which I raised in the House a short while ago. Members of the House may recall that there was a task force on film distribution. We have a situation in which most Canadians, when they go to the cinema, watch American films. Some 97 per cent of the profit of film distribution goes outside the country to the United States and is reinvested in film production. Canadian films are not being shown. The money from film distribution that you and I pay when we go to the movies is not going into Canadian film producing, hiring Canadian writers, directors, actors, and technical people, but is going to the United States, to Hollywood, and providing jobs there.

• (1810)

Those facts have been known for a very long time, and as a result of this the Liberal Government preceding this Government was afraid to do anything about this. This Government had a task force on the subject, and the Raymond-Roth report came out a couple of years ago recommending a system of Canadian ownership of film distribution.

The Government was not quite prepared to go as far as Canadian ownership in film distribution. It preferred to think that the task force had not even recommended that. However, it did agree to bring in a Bill on film distribution that would make it a little easier for Canadians to get into the industry and have more control over film distribution in Canada. Mainly this would be done by a system of licences for film importing.

A Bill to that effect has been prepared. It is in the Department of Communications. I have seen a copy of it. It has been circulated, not properly, but it is around. We know that the work has been done, a Bill has been drafted, yet it has not been introduced. Why not? It so happens that in discussions on free trade this is a very touchy matter.

The President of the United States is a former actor, and he has been defending his friends in the film industry who would like to continue to milk Canadians of all their profits from film distribution and have them go to Hollywood instead of Toronto, Vancouver, Montreal, Winnipeg, or any other places that produce films.

We would like to see more production in Canada. But it seems that film distribution has been a sacrificial lamb for the free trade discussions. If the Government had kept its word on culture and free trade, there would be no section on culture in the free trade agreement at all. In fact, there is a section, it is not a very long section, but there is one. It seems that the Bill on film distribution has been sacrificed to get some accommodation from the Americans on free trade and culture.

I remind you, Madam Speaker, that culture was on the bargaining table, and there were give-aways; there were give-aways in periodical publications, and there were assurances that Canada would not take further so-called protectionist measures to add to the list of trade irritants. What seems to be protectionism for the United States is for us absolutely vital in order to have independent cultural industries at all, because we do not have the same market size as the Americans do to appeal to. We must have our own particular measures to ensure that our industries are fostered, and Canadian artistic and creative people get jobs in Canada.

It is with some dismay that I learned that the Minister is still saying that the Bill will come in. In documents that have come out from the United States there have been comments that, in the free trade arrangements and the negotiations, the Canadians agreed to solve the problem of Jack Valenti of the American majors. His problem is that he wishes to keep that 97 per cent of profits from Canada and keep us down to 3 per cent, instead of having us increase and coming more and more to manage our own Canadian film industry, and have the money from movie-goers go to provide more jobs for Canadian creative people.

If the free trade agreement had excluded culture completely, we would not have had this in the synopsis. The United States recognizes the importance to Canada of maintaining its cultural identity. However, at the same time the United States wants to ensure that Canadian cultural policies do not constitute a discriminatory and unnecessary barrier to U.S. trade. They call it discrimination. Our promoting Canadian culture to them is discrimination, and Canada agreed to that. Recognizing Canadian sensitivities, the United States has agreed that certain cultural areas are not subject to specific provisions of the agreement. However, others are. Printing is, and we have seen measures in book publishing to have printing done in Canada, for example, in the case of Ontario, where books cannot be bought for school boards that are not authored and printed in Canada. This kind of arrangement would now be illegal under the free trade agreement. It would certainly mean a loss of jobs in the printing industry.

• (1815)

The agreement continues:

> For its part, Canada has agreed that cultural measures it takes will not impair the benefits the United States would otherwise expect from the provisions of the agreement.

There is a provision for compensation if Canada should do that. In short, Canada has agreed, in the cultural negotiations as part of the free trade agreement, to give up certain rights in cultural areas and that if the Government takes action in the future—and we would want it to take action—we would have to expect retaliation. In other words, we would be agreeing in advance that the United States had a case for retaliation against us, which is unacceptable. I have raised the matter before, and I will continue to raise it.

We want to see whether the Government, in good faith, is sticking to its guns on film distribution. It should bring in a Bill without delay and should make very clear to the Americans that culture is not something to be bargained away, that compensation is not appropriate, that indeed printing is a cultural industry like many other cultural industries, and that we want to safeguard our culture in Canada by using all methods at our disposal.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, as the Minister indicated in the House, the Government has stated all along that our cultural industries would be protected in any trade deal. From the outset the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) have said that our cultural industries would be exempt from the agreement, and indeed we have done just that.

As well, the Minister told the House on October 5 that the Government had indicated that it was prepared to create a separate market for film distribution rights and to ensure that Canadian independent distributors would have access to those rights. This intention still stands and has not been altered as part of the trade agreement. There is nothing in the free trade deal which prevents us from meeting this objective.

The Government has shown strong commitment to foster comprehensively the development of a healthy Canadian film industry, and we will continue to do so.

One problem facing our distribution sector has always been the lack of a distinct national market. The policy the Minister proposed last February will ensure that Canada is treated as a separate market.

Another problem has been the lack of adequate financing. We are very aware of the critical role distributors play in a healthy, well-balanced film industry, and we want to ensure that Canadian distributors have access to a fair share of the Canadian film market so that they can rechannel funds back into the film industry.

The Government is examining additional measures which will be of benefit to the Canadian distribution sector, and we are doing so by consulting with the film industry.

Also the Hon. Member raised a question with regard to the Baie Comeau policy on foreign investment in the publishing industry. I must repeat to the Hon. Member that cultural industries are excluded from the investment chapter of the trade agreement. Therefore, the Baie Comeau policy remains in effect.

The Minister said in the House on October 5 that not only has the Government succeeded in maintaining the application of the Baie Comeau policy to indirect acquisitions, but we have also negotiated an agreement on indirect acquisitions in the cultural industries generally. To quote from the agreement, it reads:

> Canada undertakes that in the event that it requires the divestiture to Canadians of a U.S. controlled business in a cultural industry, as part of the review of an indirect acquisition of such a business, Canada will offer to purchase the business at fair, open market value as determined by an independent, impartial assessment.

The Canadian Government will then resell these industries to a Canadian purchaser. That is a big step forward.

On September 26, 1985 the Prime Minister said the following when the Government formally undertook the free trade initiative:

> Our political sovereignty, our system of social programs, our commitment to fight regional disparities, our unique cultural identity, our special linguistic character—these are the essence of Canada. They are not at issue in these negotiations.

Canada has scored a great victory in its trade agreement with the United States which will be of benefit to the entire country. We have done so without undermining our cultural identity. In fact, we have protected our cultural policies and programs in the free trade agreement, and the Hon. Member should indeed be congratulating us.

TRADE—CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—MARINE TRANSPORTATION INDUSTRY/DELAY ALLEGED IN PROCEEDING WITH LEGISLATION/REQUEST THAT MINISTER NOT SIGN TRANSPORTATION ANNEX TO AGREEMENT

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Madam Speaker, I should recall that when reserving the right to review the provisions of the Canada-United States Free-Trade Agreement, on the matter of Marine transportation the United States Senate caught the Canadian Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) with his pants down.

Indeed, on September 23, 1987, the Standing Committee on Regulations approved an amendment to the fast review rule requiring that the American Senate should approve or reject the agreement without any amendments. This means the US Senate now be empowered to amend the provisions of the agreement dealing with marine transportation. Given the current situation the 56 US Senators and 233 Congressmen who have signed resolutions requesting that any provisions that might harm US shipping be deleted from the Canada-US Agreement, expect to convince the American administration that it should delete the provisions concerning marine transportation, for fear of seeing the whole agreement fall flat.

Judging by the second draft schedule received last week, the Reagan administration is taking that threat very seriously, much more so than our Canadian Minister of Transport who last Friday had to recognize he was powerless. Indeed, the last transportation draft provisions show Canadian shipping would be excluded from any new maritime transportation program such as the US Government supplies and goods preference.

The Canadian marine industry had planned to challenge the US merchant marine legislation, the 1920 Jones Act, a bill that has been there, not for 200 years as the Minister of Transport indicated Friday but since 1920, and that applies to all components of the American maritime industry. Now Canadian shipping companies are disappointed that the free trade agreement did not result as they had hoped in the drafting of a North American Jones Act which, according to Mr. Fred Pitre, Vice President of Canada Steamship Lines, would have combined the open character and flexibility of the Canada Shipping Act with the national security safeguards contained in the Jones Act.

Speaking on behalf of the Dominion Marine Association, its Chairman Mr. Norman Hall is asking that short of an overall free trade agreement on shipping, Canadian negotiators should at least look at the matter of discriminatory investment rules in the United States. At the present time an Americam shipping company can invest up to 100 per cent in a Canadian company and use a foreign-built vessel to transport goods from one port to another in Canada. Conversely a Canadian investor can acquire only 25 per cent of an American shipping company and must use nothing but ships built in the United States. Competition therefore is unfair and definitely not favourable to Canada's economy. So much for a flagrant disparity which will be set in concrete under the Reagan-Mulroney agreement.

On the other hand Canadian shipyards and their employees have every interest to ensure that Canadian shipping services be given the same protection as the American merchant marine under the Jones Act. Shipbuilding and Ship Repairing Association President Clarke is afraid that any softening of the protection provisions might give foreign-built vessels access to Canada, and he wants Canadian legislation to provide the same protection as the American law. Finally, the labour unions—Seafarers International Union and Merchant Service Guild—which represent 5,000-odd Canadian sailors share this point of view.

Both unions are deeply concerned that Canadian shipping activities might come under strong attack from renamed vessels operated by American equipment and crews.

While the American shipping industry was making very strong representations to prevent our merchant marine from gaining access to the American domestic market, the Government introduced Bill C-52 whose purpose was to ensure that shipping operations in Canadian waters would be the exclusive reserve of Canadian vessels.

On the other hand, when we discussed the legislation we emphasized the fact that allowing foreign shipping to become involved in marine transportation within or without Canada's inshore waters, for lack of available Canadian ships, was in fact a dangerous surrendering of marine transportation operation to foreign companies, especially American ones. On the other hand, it was perhaps still more proper to state as we did that the time was ill-chosen for this Conservative Government to introduce amendments to the Shipping Act, and that they should have done that much earlier in their term of office, that is in 1985 or even 1986. A few weeks later, the Minister of Transport indicated our view when he called for the suspension of the Legislative Committee hearings on Bill C-52 until the conclusion of the free trade agreement.

The problem now is very serious. In line with the American shipping companies' suggestions that any new act or any amendment to existing acts should provide national treatment to the other country, Canada should now, if Bill C-52 is passed, once the free trade agreement is ratified, grant national treatment to American shipping companies.

That is the problem we are facing, which means that this Conservative Government's negligence has endangered the possibility of a shipping act reform along the lines of national prerogatives, and is now running the risk of having American companies invade our marine industry because of the delays already incurred.

Last Friday the Minister, in answer to my questions, said the United States had refused to yield on some items. One of those items was marine transportation. In the worst case, the status quo would be maintained. But the status quo is unacceptable in the circumstances. All this points to the total failure of the Minister of Transport, who in the circumstances is seen as the worst Minister of Transport in Canada's history. He is famous for his jokes, but surely the Canadian transport industry is not laughing: it is shocked at this Minister's incompetence.

• (1825)

[English]

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the Government has been incorrectly accused of selling out the Canadian transportation industry for the sake of a free trade agreement with the United States. Let me assure Hon. Members that this is absolutely not the case.

I find it hard to believe that preserving the status quo can be misconstrued by Hon. Members opposite as a sell-out. We are not giving anything away. We argued for the easing up of restrictions on both sides of the border. We proposed cabotage in all modes of transport. Because the U.S. would not agree, there will be no roll-backs by either country.

We are anticipating that the agreement will result in a larger volume and a value of goods, services and people travelling in both directions. This should stimulate Canadian firms involved in transborder transport activity.

Canadian transportation firms are already competitive and they will be even more competitive under the new National Transportation Act and the new Motor Vehicle Transport Act. For several years now, Canadian trucking firms have enjoyed access to the U.S. market-place. These firms were quick to capitalize on the opportunity provided by U.S. deregulation and have successfully established themselves in the U.S. market.

In future, American carriers wishing to operate domestically in Canada will still be required to establish a Canadian subsidiary, to employ Canadians, to pay Canadian taxes and so on. It will be easier for them to obtain a licence, that is true, but in every other respect, customs and immigration laws apply as they do in the other way. In short, the same situation which has applied to Canadians in the U.S. market since 1980 will apply.

It is true that each state will be able to continue to regulate trucking within its borders. However, trucking associations which have been critical of the FTA have yet to cite even a single instance of a Canadian trucker being refused entry by a U.S. state. Not one example of this has been brought to our attention, and I would like to see one. I can only conclude from that that the problem is not as bad as they say it is.

Accusations have also been made that Bill C-18 has given American railway companies access to Canadian markets while the free trade agreement did not secure reciprocal access. Competitive line rates provisions of the National Transport Act were instituted to assist Canadian shippers captive to one railway, not to allow U.S. railways to access the Canadian market. These competitive line rates provisions can be suspended if Canadian railways suffer significant economic losses. In summary, the free trade agreement will be good for Canadians and good for the Canadian transportation industry.

• (1830)

VIA RAIL—SERVICE IN WINDSOR-LONDON-TORONTO CORRIDOR

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Madam Speaker, I certainly appreciate your consideration on this very hectic day.

On May 28, 1987, I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) how ordinary Canadians could have input on decisions being made by VIA Rail. Both the Minister and VIA Rail agreed that greater consultation between the corporation and the people it serves was needed.

Shortly after, on June 11, a new VIA consultative committee was established and its inaugural meeting was held in London to discuss scheduling, service, marketing, equipment allocation, and other topics of interest to both VIA Rail and the municipalities it serves. The committee felt that VIA had a real problem with on-time performance and the resulting negative public perception of VIA. VIA reacted to those concerns in a positive way which is a good example of how, by working together, good things can be accomplished. Let me give you some examples.

In the first five months of 1986, the over-all average on-time performance of trains through London was 69 per cent. In the same five-month period in 1987 the average was 76 per cent. Then the on-time performance commitment program by VIA was put in place and even greater improvements were made. For May 1 to September 30, 1987, some 75 per cent of the trains travelling from Toronto to Windsor through London were on time. For trains from Toronto through London to Sarnia it was 83 per cent. It is interesting to note that 90 per cent of the trains from Toronto to London were on time. Clearly, the consultative committees and VIA working together produced a good result.

Given that, I wonder why the program was discontinued at the end of October. Perhaps even greater gains could have been realized had this program been maintained by VIA.

Another problem that the committee recognized was frequency of service. Both lines north and south of London have asked for a late train from Toronto. To date neither request has had a positive result. We cannot even get a late night train for weekend travel from Toronto to London and cities beyond. The committee has experienced some frustration there.

A new first-class service, VIA-1, was introduced in October and it has received very positive response in our community, particularly on the morning train. We have also realized very positive passenger trends recently. In southwestern Ontario passenger use is up 5.8 per cent over all this year, and on the Toronto-London-Windsor corridor it is up 11.7 per cent. It is very encouraging to see that VIA is listening to these communities and getting things done.

The most travelled corridor in Canada is the Windsor-Quebec City corridor. The City of London representative asked why the new equipment which VIA was able to get as a result of the actions of the Government would go to unprofitable runs, namely the transcontinental runs, rather than to the most travelled corridor in Canada where the prospects for profit were brightest. Why were we shut out? The London committee was quite concerned about VIA's action in this area.

• (1835)

More LRC equipment is not available because an LRC updating program is in progress. They are fixing locomotives which are relatively new. Some of the locomotives on our run are 30 and 40 years old. The newest ones are all in a major repair program and we are still waiting for the equipment which we were promised. Therefore, the committee is very disappointed in the equipment allocation to the most travelled run. If we are ever going to make money on trains it will be in this corridor.

We are encouraged to hear from VIA that new state-of-the-art F-40 locomotives built at General Motors Diesel in London, Ontario—which is one of the jewels in London—Middlesex—are hopefully going to be added to this line in 1989. This will, no doubt, improve on-time performance.

The senior citizens of Canada are concerned as well. They have told me that they want to travel by train. They live in London and have a family in Toronto, for instance, or they just want to take in the sights. However, no one wants to confront the stairs at Union Station. The stairs are a worrisome obstacle, not only for older people but for parents with baby carriages and for practically anyone with luggage. I hope VIA Rail will install, with the urging of the consultative committee, an escalator in Union Station to make it a little easier to take the train.

The same problem exists for the disabled. They are finding it difficult to use the trains. More people would take the train if the services existed and were advertised.

The consultative committee is encouraged by the improved marketing through joint tourism promotions and advertising which should benefit both the municipality and VIA Rail. However, before the committee gets too involved with increasing ridership, it should understand that they are losing some of their potential customers. It is very important to advertise.

VIA has done this by designating London as the "National Getaway Centre". VIA's computerized reservation system will contain pertinent information on the events taking place in London as well as on hotels, et cetera. VIA reservation clerks and agents will be able to access this information in the computer. This program will be of great benefit to Canadian and American tourists. The City of London is looking forward to the exposure.

If the committees can continue their work and the Minister monitors their reports, we will be able to work together to get a train system which works. The infamous Mussolini made a train system which worked in his country and surely we can do that in Canada.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, with respect to the question raised by the Hon. Member for London—Middlesex (Mr. Clifford) concerning rail passenger services in southwestern Ontario, I wish to point out first that, as the Minister indicated to the Hon. Member last May, a new consultative committee has been set up by VIA for the London area. It has met and is meeting again this Friday.

I understand that the Hon. Member is part of the committee as well as a member of the North Mainline Route Committee which concerns itself with rail passenger service between Toronto and London through Stratford. If he performs on that committee as he does on the standing committee, I can assure you that he gives the people of that area first-class representation.

I further understand that VIA's fall schedule changes, which are to go into effect on November 29, were the subject of extensive discussions with committee members. As a result of representations from the committees VIA agreed to shift the departure time of the last train on the Toronto-Stratford-London route from 1915 to 1810 to accommodate the needs of most of the users.

A subcommittee of the Northern Mainline Route Committee has been struck to consider marketing, frequency, and further schedule changes. It will report back to the full committee at its next regularly scheduled meeting.

I would like to take this opportunity to comment on the success of new marketing and customer service initiatives that VIA has put in place. A new upgraded VIA-1 first-class service, which was introduced on September 8 throughout the Quebec-Windsor corridor, has met with rave reviews. In mid-August VIA introduced student fares throughout the VIA system after a successful trial.

Because of the renewed commitment to VIA Rail services which the Government announced in May of this year, VIA is able to undertake an extensive program to refurbish VIA's existing equipment which represents a tripling of its budget for such work. This is in addition to the capital investment approved for equipment in terms of the train car modernization program and the acquisition of more new locomotives.

As to the latter, VIA has finished taking delivery for the first order of 30 locomotives at a cost of $75 million. The locomotives were built by General Motors Diesel Division in the city the Hon. Member represents. Contracts for the second order of 26 locomotives are expected to be awarded shortly and GM is one of the firms which will get the contract. VIA is still reviewing its plans for the deployment of the locomotives.

All of these initiatives in respect of equipment, together with the new maintenance facilities, should greatly enhance the reliability and attractiveness of VIA's services.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain) moved:

That this House condemn the government for its signing of a trade agreement with the United States that, amongst other things:

(a) fails to consider the disproportionate effect on women, and especially the loss of jobs in the service sector where women are concentrated;

(b) will give up provincial control over energy resources in a continental energy market; and

(c) fails to allow for adequate consultation with Canadians in all provinces and territories before committing us to profound changes not only in our economy, but our political sovereignty, cultural distinctiveness and generally, our ability to run our own affairs.

She said: Mr. Speaker, it is not with very much pleasure that I rise to speak to this motion this morning. As a matter of fact, it is with lament and concern about what is the future of my country.

When we talk about any type of economic strategy for Canada, we must talk about an economic strategy for women. Sixty per cent of the jobs in textiles, shoes, and leather are held by women. We recognize that this will take massive readjustment.

The whole debate that has taken place on the accord is something that is of great concern because of the direction that it has taken. Often we say that this is a great new way for Canada to open up its doors, but what we are really looking at is a massive change in direction socially, economically, and politically in our country. I do not think that this Government has the mandate to do that without any discussion with the Canadian people.

The whole episode of the hearings yesterday in Vancouver demonstrated that a province as large as British Columbia, with as many resources as Vancouver, was treated as if it did not count. It was calculated that one group received 10 seconds to be heard. That is not the way that we have conducted business in this country. It is not the way that Canadians wish to be heard. We do not like our participation being treated as an insult to our intelligence, that we cannot understand it and are not capable of participating for more than 10 seconds.

One thing at which we must look very seriously is that we have always displayed a great deal of participation when it comes to some kind of new direction. When we talk about participation—and we do not even have the final text in front of us—we know that hundreds of thousands of women's jobs are threatened. At the same time we do not even have time to critique it in detail, because the Government refuses to give us that detail.

It is very interesting that the Macdonald Commission travelled across the country and spent many years and hundreds of thousands of dollars looking in depth at what would be the future economy of the country. It heard repeatedly that the main issue in Canada was employment. It wanted to know that jobs were possible, that employment was possible. The Government chose to ignore it, and the Macdonald Commission came out with a recommendation to go for some kind of an agreement with the United States which would tie us more heavily to the direction the United States was taking. This morning I would like to look particularly this morning at what are the implications of the studies which have been done and, more importantly, the studies which have not been done, on the effects of the whole agreement. We feel very strongly about an agreement in the service sector. I think it is important to recognize that there has never been any kind of free trade agreement in the service sector with any other country.

Mr. McDermid: You are absolutely right.

Ms. Dewar: Of course I am right. When the Economic Council of Canada did its study, it did not take the service sector into account, because it said that there was no way that that would be a component of it.

Mr. McDermid: It has it on its agenda.

Ms. Dewar: Yes, it has it on its agenda because the Government put it on the agenda. We know what are the implications of that.

I am always very interested to hear members of the Government talking about the service sector. They say that hairdressers or schoolteachers are not going to move from one country to another.

Mr. McDermid: Who said that?

Ms. Dewar: I have heard many members of the Conservative Party say that.

Mr. McDermid: Name one.

Ms. Dewar: As a matter of fact, the very same thing was said at the committee last week. Perhaps members of the Government do not understand what is the service sector. It includes data processing, data collection, and banking. Some of the things at which we look in the service sector not only implicate a lot of jobs for women, but they also implicate a lot of jobs and flow of information in Canadian security.

We must recognize that as early as 1976 the Canadian Government was beginning to sense that the free flow of information across borders could be a threat to our sovereignty. We also know that under the Bank Act we have insisted that that information be collected on Canadian grounds. It is very important from a privacy of information point of view, as well as the need of our own economy, to have some kind of dependence. It has been well established that free flow of information increases dependence on another country instead of increasing our interdependence, and there is a big difference in those two approaches.

[Translation]

It is very important, when considering the outcome of free trade, that we should review the impact free trade will have on women. We already know that the industries where jobs are most threatened are those which employ mostly women. In such industries as textile, clothing, leathergoods and footwear, where jobs are held mostly by women a massive job loss is to be expected.

According to a study carried out in Ontario, this province alone will lose over 100,000 jobs now held by women. But it is quite clear that this phenomenon will not be limited to Ontario. In the province of Quebec, the textile industry is a major employer of women. By signing the free trade agreement now before the House, the Conservative Government is depriving these women of their means of existence and permanently reducing their standard of living.

These women will not be easily retrained and returned to the labour market. Most of the women working in manufacturing industries are older women. What will the Conservative Government say to these Canadian women who, unfortunately, do not have the flexibility expected of them? Does the Government seriously think that these women, having worked for many years in a plant and acquired only the skills connected with their jobs, will gladly accept to lose their jobs as a show of support for this free trade deal!

What will the Government say to all the immigrant women working in industries which are being threatened by the Reagan-Mulroney Agreement? These women are often at a disavantage because of linguistic problems which will have a negative effect on their retraining. Because of their generally lower level of education they will not have access to many fields of activity in the labour market. These women have families to support; they cannot afford to remain unemployed for very long. Up against such insurmontable odds how will they be able to get into a retraining program?

This Government must consider the retraining issue as irrelevant, because it has failed to include in the agreement any guarantees for women who are likely to lose their jobs. We are still waiting for retraining programs which are supposed to help the Canadian men and women who will be the losers as a result of the Reagan-Mulroney Agreement. How long will these women have to wait before they can again support their families?

[English]

It really is quite a shock when they talk about readjustment programs and when I have heard Mr. Lipsey say that of course there will be higher paid jobs and ask why women are worried about lower paid ones.

Single parents are looking at the future implications on their families. Some are using all their energies today to survive. They recognize that with just some signatures and a lot of fanfare suddenly their ability to earn a living, to feed their children, and to live in their communities with some dignity, is gone. That is the kind of thing the Government is doing to the people of Canada.

More than that, we are talking about something which is very ethical—the ethics of participation in terms of allowing the people of Canada to know what is their future. It is all very well for members of the Government to say that there has never been a free trade agreement in the service industry. However, they have not bothered to study it. Nor have they bothered to say what are the implications for the people in that industry.

The flow of information going from Canada to the United States is higher than that flowing from the United States into Canada. We also know that American corporations made a decision last year to do all their production scheduling and evaluations out of their American headquarters. We also know that in one little office in Brantford the jobs were reduced from 23 to 5. That is the implication for company after company. Those are the kinds of things which need to be looked at, but government Members do not talk about them.

I am a little tired of hearing about the effects of the free trade agreement on Ontario. I cannot believe that government Members really do not understand what is the Auto Pact. The Auto Pact involves protection for equal partners in an agreement. There is no suggestion that that kind of fairness will take place in the service industry. There is no suggestion that the jobs and lives of women implicated in this regard will have any kind of protection; nor have they bothered to study it. That in itself is unethical and wrong. It really says that they do not count.

If we listen closely to the debate, we hear them saying that the market forces will be the ones to direct it. We all know what the market forces can do and how vulnerable people become in that regard. However, what worries me more than that is that when we talk about market forces and supply and demand, we are really talking about people's lives and their futures as commodities, and that if they do not fit into it we will just dispense with them.

What do we come to, Madam Speaker? We come to the survival of the fittest. It means that competitiveness is the first priority. Then you dispose of any human being who does not fit into that category. It means profit only for multinationals. That is basically what we are talking about, but that is not the character or the direction of the country.

In the 120 years of our history we have said very clearly that there is a potential for us to do something different. We are smaller than our neighbours south of the border. We want to be good friends with them but we want to do things our way with our ethic and value system. Because we want to do it our way with our own ethic and value system, it helps the Americans to be different from us and it helps us to be different from them. With that we are both strengthened.

This new foolish, foolish agreement before us—at least what we have of it because all we have is a "no-review", and we have no detail—is saying that the only way Canadians will survive economically is to tie ourselves firmly and strongly in one direction and that is south of the border.

Just think for a minute or two about data flow, information flow. If that starts to flow back and forth north and south with no regulation, and that seems to be the implication here, it means that data processing and computer people will be setting up their offices in the United States to serve companies in Canada. If that is not foolish, Madam Speaker, I do not know what is.

It seems to me that that kind of thing has not been looked at very closely. We seem to be hearing that that will be dealt with later. We have to think what transfer of information means today and what data flow is all about. It is communication across the country which has been built with a lot of subsidies and a lot of people saying "Yes, we want to build a country". We did it with the railway. We have done it with the airlines. We can do it with information flow with the technology of the 20th and 21st centuries but not if we give it all away which is what can happen with this agreement.

I heard that the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) had spoken to Conservative women a year ago saying that she wanted women to get involved in data processing and the new technology so that in 20 years from now they will be able to contribute as equal partners in the economic society. They will not be able to do that if we lose all our high technology data processing, a threat that is very real.

Before we implement this kind of an agreement, studies better be done. Will we lose control over our own information? We have so often allowed that to happen in the past. We allowed the Americans to go through our waters and we had to put up a Canadian flag to let them know that they belonged to us. Will we be in that kind of a situation when we transfer all our data flow and information north to south instead of east to west?

This morning I said that it was with great concern and lament that I rose to speak. My lament is that we are debating this matter in the House of Commons when Canada is looking at who it is and what its identity is. Abruptly we hear, "You better hurry up, Canada, if you want to retain that identity and you better get involved because the Government will not let you". The Government will give 10 seconds to people to present briefs. What about the final text, if it ever comes out while the hearings are on? We hear that it is delayed again.

How can any Government of this country treat its citizens with such condescension and such lack of respect? We have a history of saying that people are important, that we respect the dignity of individuals and groups, but we are no longer saying that. We are saying that the only thing important is multinational profits.

When you look at the briefs coming into the committee, Madam Speaker, and you see the kinds of people supporting free trade, it is clear that this Tory Reagan agreement will help the multinationals. There will be no respect for the dignity of the worker, the culture and the social futures of our country.

The things that we care about and that we have been able to build collectively have been very precious to us. When we criticize the agreement we also have to say what are we going to do. Some people have asked whether we are going to stay with the status quo. I do not think anyone has said that the status quo is what we want. If you look at the great free market, what happens is ad hoc short-term business decisions. There is no ability for long-term planning. We have seen what France and Sweden have been able to do. Canada itself can get into some-long term planning with diversification of trade. Canada will never do that if we tie ourselves to only one goal and only one trading partner, that of the U.S.

It seems to me that we are on the edge of some great opportunity. Let us not blow it. Let us go ahead with the kind of vision and future of our country that our 120 years history has given us. Let us not change direction now.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, I will be taking part in the debate later on and will refute a number of assertions which the Hon. Member has made in her speech. I want to congratulate her and thank her for bringing this motion to the floor of the House of Commons. We are finding that the more the facts are laid on the table, presented and explained to the people, the more they understand and support the agreement. We thank the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) very much for the opportunity given us today in the House of Commons.

In 1945 the average tariff rates were 45 per cent. The average tariff rates today are 9 per cent. There has been a liberalized trade movement going on for quite some time. In that period of time, have we become less Canadian or have we become more Canadian? Have we become a weaker country or have we become more proud of our country and stronger because of that? Has prosperity followed the reduction of tariffs or has poverty set in with the result that our country is going to hell in a hand basket as some of the socialists would have us believe? I ask that of the Hon. Member because the trade agreement is following a pattern that has been going on for years.

Mr. Rodriguez: Not so.

Ms. Mitchell: You don't know your own Bill.

Mr. McDermid: In the last 40 years that these tariffs have been coming down, what is the Member's vision of Canada in that period of time? Why is she so afraid of the future?

Ms. Dewar: Madam Speaker, I thank the Member for the question. It is very important that we clarify the information coming out.

Certainly tariff rates have been reduced. We have had a better country for it and we have had better exchange for it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gustafson: You are a free trader.

Ms. Dewar: Therefore, I think we would like to continue doing that instead of what is in this very foolish agreement. We have said that we will allow the countervails to continue and allow the non-tariff barriers to be there. We also say that we want the U.S. to decide with its laws how we will trade with them. That makes us much less Canadian.

We need to start looking at what we do well, plan and take a direction that is positive that can make Canada second to none in the world. I have great confidence in Canada and in Canadian workers. We do not have to give our country away to trade with others. The Hon. Member will recognize that the reduction of the tariffs has been something with which GATT has agreed, as well as the United States and Canada. We know the fishing complaint against Canada was lodged by the United States. The decision against our fish processing came out in the last week and that is something that was caused by the Americans complaining about Canada, because we were able to compete so well.

• (1130)

This agreement has not changed anything. The countervails can still exist. There is no dispute mechanism. There is a phoney five-person board set up to advise—

Mr. McDermid: Be honest.

Ms. Dewar: I am being honest and I am really upset that the Government would even put before the Canadian people the claim that that is a dispute settlement mechanism. There is no dispute settlement mechanism in the agreement. We have really just asked the Americans what they want. We have said, "Uncle Ronnie, I guess what you really want is all our energy, so come and get it. Maybe you would like to buy a little more than you have been able to buy in the past so come on in and buy it all".

Mr. McDermid: Be sensible, Marion. You are being absolutely untruthful.

Ms. Dewar: I am not, I am being very honest. That is not untrue. The Hon. Member would know that if he read the overview I read. I like handing it out to people in my office because the Conservative package is the best propaganda package for people to read. When people read it, they say, "They wouldn't dare do that to us," and I say, "Yes, they did it to you. They are trying very hard to do it to you".

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, I would like to address one of the areas of the motion that I believe is a statement in which all Canadians believe. We heard government Members saying that they want a full debate and all kinds of consultation. We know that in fact they are ramming this thing through by travelling only to provincial capitals.

I know the Hon. Member also represents Hamilton and I am sure she would agree with me that in Canada's industrial heartland, in Red Deer and in Estevan, the people deserve to have a say. I would like to see the trade committee come to Hamilton to hear firsthand what happened to the workers at Firestone.

The Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) has been railing and ranting. The fact is that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is setting his timetable and the Canadian agenda because he wants to have his picture taken with the President of the United States on January 2.

Does the Hon. Member not think that it is outrageous that the Canadian people who live in places other than capitals of provinces will not have a chance to participate in this debate? I am not referring only to the effect of the trade agreement on women or to the continental energy plan. In particular, if the Government really wants a debate, why is it trying to ram it through before January 2 just so that the Prime Minister can have his picture taken with the President?

Ms. Dewar: Madam Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for her question. It is so true that the area of the country we represent is a highly industrialized area. If one reads only what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and government Members have been saying, one would think that the people there all support the agreement. There have been all sorts of recommendations made to stop this agreement quickly because the workers are feeling—

Mr. McDermid: How about the steelworkers' union?

Ms. Dewar: The steelworkers are saying that they do not want to be a part of this. The Firestone workers know what it is like to have decisions made outside Canada when 1,300 jobs are involved.

Government Members are talking about participation in a major new direction for Canada. However, what is really happening is that government Members are dropping off for a day here and day there waving the Tory flag and saying: "You have just participated, now I will take this down to Washington and plant it there". It seems as though government Members are terrified to hear from the Canadian people because they know that our roots are deep, our culture is strong and we are sick and tired of getting sold out.

I hear that the committee even has to travel on an inefficient aeroplane. The Government does not think it is even worth it to give committee members decent transportation. Government Members want to say that the committee flew across the country, listened to certain groups for 10 seconds and that is the end of it. That makes a real farce of citizen participation. It makes a real farce of them saying that they have any sense of what is happening and of how Canadians feel.

Mr. St. Germain: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) began her speech by speaking of the Macdonald Commission. She praised the Macdonald Commission and said that it advocated jobs for Canadians. That is correct, it did advocate jobs for Canadians, but it also advocated very strongly a free trade initiative with the Americans.

Donald Macdonald who headed the commission is one of the greatest proponents and supporters of this initiative. He knows what is going on in Canada. He went across Canada and studied the situation and established the needs of Canadians.

That remark of the Hon. Member is in itself contradictory. The Hon. Member comes from the central part of Canada. We westerners have faced unfair tariffs because we have not had an agreement that would deal with things like the shakes and shingles situation. Those very Members with whom the Hon. Member is sitting waved goodbye when we ran into the problem of an unfair tariff on shakes and shingles. It was NDP and Liberal Members who said that we could not resolve the problem.

When the agreement was signed, the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) dealt with this very issue in a way that is satisfactory to the industry. If an agreement had been in place to deal with this situation, there would not have been that unfair tariff on shakes and shingles. This has been clearly stated by the industry.

Would the Hon. Member tear up the agreement if she was put into a position by her Party to do so?

Ms. Dewar: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. Obviously he does not know that the countervail on shakes and shingles still exists. Countervails can be put against any other industry as well. This agreement does not protect us from that.

I did not compliment the Macdonald Commission. I stated for a fact that the Macdonald Commission spent $10 million travelling across the country looking at the economy and consistently heard that the first priority was jobs. It commissioned 72 research papers and not one of those papers dealt with the service industry.

The Hon. Member should do his homework if he wants to ask those kinds of questions. This issue is too deep for us to be superficial about it. I think it is important that we get a sense of it.

Mr. McDermid: Would you tear it up?

Ms. Dewar: No, we have not seen it. Could I tear up the air? The final—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I must interrupt the Hon. Member. The time for questions and comments has now expired. Resuming debate with the Hon. Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall).

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Madam Speaker, in keeping with this debate, I am also the Minister responsible for the status of women.

Let me begin by saying that I am very interested in the fact that the Hon. Member made a 20-minute speech and did not refer to women very much. She spoke a lot about consultation. Let us just put this to bed. There was no consultation on the Auto Pact, there was no consultation on the Tokyo Round, there was no consultation on the Kennedy Round whatsoever. The Macdonald Commission did a lot of work on free trade which is part of—

Ms. Mitchell: What are women saying about it?

Mrs. McDougall: I will get to that because it is really important. I will talk about women and I will talk about opportunities for all Canadian men and women. This Party and the women of Canada believe in opportunity. That is something in which the NDP does not believe.

This agreement is designed to prepare Canada for the next century, to ensure that our industries can grow from their Canadian base, to encourage new investment in world-scale Canadian enterprise, including Canadian investment as well as foreign, to create a framework for co-operative relations between Canada and our most important trading partner and to set up a bilateral precedent for further multilateral trade negotiations. That is good for women.

[Translation]

Recognition of the fact that trade between Canada and the U.S. should be governed by a set of regulations, not by politics, is the cornerstone of this Agreement. A joint Canada-U.S. committee that will act as a compulsory court of appeal in settling trade disputes, and a commitment to negotiating new trade legislation over the next five years should provide adequate assurances for investors and business people in both countries until the end of this century and throughout the next.

Although the Agreement acknowledges a certain form of economic interdependance, it respects our social and political differences. From the outset, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) defined a set of important principles as guidelines for the agreement. Our political sovereignty, our network of social programs, our efforts to deal with regional disparity, our distinct cultural identity and our specific linguistic character, which together make up the very essence of this country, would not be negotiable.

Those commitments were made by the Prime Minister before the talks started, and they were met. The conclusions of the Agreement show that despite the unfounded fears of some of its opponents who maintained that free trade would be a threat to institutions and programs that help define our Canadian identity, none of these programs was ever on the table for discussion or changes prior to reaching an agreement on free trade.

Since the agreement was signed the Opposition has subjected Canadians to all sorts of conflicting myths concerning what the agreement is all about. It is only 11:40 a.m. and we have heard all sorts of that this morning. We have been hearing alarmist talk about the devastating impact on ordinary Canadians, women in particular. That is absolute nonsense and I am going to set the record straight.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: Canada is a trading nation, has been since before it was founded, and fully 80 per cent of all our exports go to our neighbour to the south. Part of this growth in trade with the Americans took place while the Party opposite was trying to expand our multilateral trade. With not much success, I might add. We are continuing to pursue that option.

Hundreds of thousands of women's jobs directly or indirectly depend upon our access to the U.S. market. Secure and permanent access will mean increased opportunity for economic growth in Canada and additional jobs. That is what we talk about. Jobs for Canadian women as well as men. Our productivity will rise because of increased economies of scale since we will have unimpeded access to a market of 270 million people. Wages should also rise under that scenario. It has always happened when there has been an expansion of trading opportunities, and women will benefit from increased earnings.

Let me go into one particular myth coming from the Province of Ontario. That Government released a study entitled "The Free Trade Agreement and Women". A day before that study was released one of the Toronto dailies ran a front-page story saying that the Ontario report predicted 100,000 women would lose their jobs because of free trade. That is pretty scary stuff, I agree. It is also incorrect. One should take the time to look at what that report says and how the conclusion was reached. We have examined it pretty closely and the study does not support the conclusion. Remember when you took high school geometry and you had to have a conclusion. This report goes from hypothesis to conclusion with nothing in between.

The report did not say that 100,000 women would lose their jobs because of free trade. It said 100,000 women were employed in Ontario manufacturing industries which are sensitive to a reduction in tariff barriers. The study focuses on footwear, textiles and clothing because they have high tariff protection. Right! What it does not say is that tariffs are not being dropped against low-wage countries which are the main source of import competition for Canadian firms. That is very important because our competition comes from offshore suppliers rather than the U.S.

It does not state, vis-à-vis the U.S., that Canadian producers have been holding their own, expanding sales in the U.S., and are looking for more opportunities to do so. It does not say that the Ontario study was based on a one-time rather than phased-in removal of tariff barriers.

[Translation]

No mention is made of the fact that another report, prepared at that time for the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women by Katie Macmillan of the C.D. Howe Institute, reached conclusions that were the exact opposite: Female workers, especially in the services industries, will see a major increase in job opportunities as result of free trade—the kinds of manufacturing jobs that are threatened by free trade are those that have been known for some time as offering the lowest salaries, difficult working conditions and very limited career opportunities.

[English]

The Ontario study also does not say that the textile industry, those who make the investment and employ these people, is very confident in its ability to compete given the phase-in period.

Let me just say that women tend to feel disadvantaged in labour markets. Not just in Canada but in most places. They are very concerned with possible adjustments arising from free trade. However, there are two kinds of adjustment. Let us deal with the first, because our Government takes women and their concerns very seriously and we have a record second to none in that respect.

Unlike the former Government, which did put labour adjustment in the Auto Pact and there is no question about that, although it had nothing else, we already have programs in place to help workers make the necessary adjustment, whether it be through language training, skills upgrading, or whatever. There is a transitional period of 10 years in many industries to allow businesses and workers to make the necessary adjustment.

The second kind of adjustment is opportunity, and that is a major outcome of free trade and something the NDP never mentions. Most women who may be affected will likely move to equivalent or better jobs in those industries which will be expanding because of free trade. Free trade will provide new opportunities for women rather than locking them into low-paying work ghettos.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: The Opposition never thought these jobs were so great before. They used to talk about the same kind of thing, the low-paying job ghettos. I am concerned that trying to preserve the status quo in certain industries will merely preserve those low-paying work ghetto jobs. It is short-sighted and serves to shield women from the potential benefits of economic growth by burying them in occupations where their incomes will continue to lag behind those of men. The best thing that can happen to women is prosperity, growth and opportunity. What they are talking about over there is not my idea of equality and progress.

Many critics of the agreement have failed to recognize that there will be strong growth in the service sector. The Hon. Member gave us her whole misery piece on the service sector. Let me just tell her what some people in the service industry are saying. These are not big multinational corporations, these are local Canadian businesses. Chris Gee, President of the Canadian Association of Management Consultant said, "I'm very, very excited. With our world class expertise and our Canadian structures, I think it can have a blockbuster impact on our clients and our profession."

Sandra Besserer, Vice-President—that is a woman, by the way—of the Machinery and Equipment Manufacturers Association of Canada said, "Our members were complaining—" these are her words, not mine, "—like hell about the problem of service people crossing the border." That will be corrected with free trade.

[Translation]

Raymond Lafontaine, President of LGS, a computer and office automation consulting firm, said: "The Agreement in principle on free trade is a positive one. It will make it easier for Canadians in the services industry to work in United States . . .

[English]

Forget about all us politicians in the little hothouse we run here in Ottawa. Canadian men and women out there doing the work see this as the key to the future of their industry and their employees, many of whom are women.

The service sector has been the most rapidly-growing sector in the Canadian economy, creating eight of 10 new jobs over the past 10 years. This sector will continue to create opportunity for the employment of women in a wide range of jobs demanding a variety of skills. Many women are now employed not only in the retail and personal services industry but also in telecommunications, health, computer services, and financial services.

• (1150)

In 1986 Canada's service sector accounted for 76 per cent of all employment. That is a phenomenal increase. At the end of World War II it was 40 per cent. This is an exciting opportunity for Canada and Canadians because all indicators point to the continued growth of this sector in Canada as in other developed and developing countries. However, Canada has a good lead.

Services growth, particularly commercial, tradable services, are expected to outpace growth in the goods-producing sector. A free trade agreement is expected to accentuate the service sector growth thus increasing job opportunities, particularly for women who make up more than half the labour force in that industry.

[Translation]

Flexible working conditions in teaching, retail sales and the health industry are particularly attractive to women who are re-entering the labour marker or who are trying to strike the right balance between a career and their family commitments.

The number of women on the labour market has increased 42 percent between 1976 and 1984, while most of the new jobs created were in the service sector. Women now make up 43 percent of Canada's labour force. Their labour market entry rate is one of the highest in the world, and there is every indication this trend will continue.

[English]

The average salary for women in the services industry is higher than it is in the manufacturing industry. Therefore, those jobs will be good for women. Do not forget either that women now own one-third of Canada's small businesses. They could not do that under an NDP government. This figure represents a 100 per cent increase over the past 10 years. Not only are the numbers increasing, but the success rate of women, as could only be expected, is almost twice that of men.

Simply put, women are half the talent and half the human resources of this country. It makes economic sense for them to be able to utilize their economic capacity and to have choices and opportunities. When women do not receive a fair return on their labour they do not participate equally in all sectors of society and all of us, men as well as women, are losers. There is no room for that in the Canada which we envisage for the future.

Yes, we do need training to take advantage of those opportunities. We need education and training systems and we are providing them to expand the occupation and career options of women. The Canadian Job Strategy is the first program which provides non-traditional help and skill enhancement to ensure that women have not only keyboard skills for the service industry but have accounting and management training so that they can turn those keyboard skills into something else. There are, of course, women in low paying jobs. The Government will ensure, as it has from the beginning, that they are looked after.

All Canadians, men and women, are ready to face the 1990s and the new century. Every time a key is turned in the door of a new home or in a factory that confidence is shown. Every time a kid passes an exam, goes into a post-graduate course, or takes an apprenticeship course, and every time a young couple gets married, Canada is helped and we become more confident in our future and reflect that confidence. Every time a new family chooses Canada as its home that confidence grows.

As a country our future is what we make it. We want to create the opportunities, co-operation, and regional development that is so important to us as a nation. It makes me so angry that the two opposition Parties always treat women as though they are down-trodden and victims. Women are contributors to this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: They are participants and contributors and must have an equal opportunity to contribute to our future development as well as to share in our prosperity. It is to Canada's benefit that they succeed. I respect their ability to do so and I will help those who cannot.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, in her remarks the Minister accused the Opposition of putting on the floor in this debate conflicting myths. I believe that is the term she used. I would like her to explain some of the conflicting myths put forward by Ministers and government Members in this debate.

On October 5, in a speech to the Export Association of Canada, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that we would have massive retraining programs because of the job losses resulting from this agreement. The next day in the House the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) said that there would be no new retraining programs as a result of this deal.

The following day the Minister of Employment and Immigration said outside the House that there was a potential loss of 500,000 jobs as a result of this agreement. That was recorded by the press but when he came into the House the next day he refused to explain his remarks made outside the House. As a matter of fact, he said there would be no job losses as a result of this agreement and that we could wait until January 1, 1989 to do anything about it.

In fact, in this debate Ministers have said all kinds of things with regard to job losses and job gains. They have been all over the lot. I would like the Minister to explain that conflicting testimony and evidence put forward to the Canadian people and to this House on this subject. Who is right?

The Minister has dismissed out of hand studies raised by the Opposition. Rather she is asking us to take a leap of faith in favour of this agreement, or to engage in wishful thinking of the jobs that will be created, what impact studies does the Minister have which she can put on the table for everyone to see to show that there will be job increases and in what sectors?

She does not have such a study. No one has produced it so far. The Government is proposing the agreement and the burden is on the Government to bring such a study forward but it has not done so.

Mrs. McDougall: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that there would be massive adjustments if necessary, but no one expects there to be a need for massive adjustments. Let us get the facts on the table.

We have in place right now programs such as the Canadian Jobs Strategy which will provide adjustment, regardless of what the source of the need for adjustment may be. In this country there have always been series of economic changes which our economy has absorbed very well. That was shown in the Royal Bank study which came out only this week.

The Hon. Member asks for studies. I quoted from the Katie Macmillan report which talks about women. All the third-party, independent studies which have been done by people in the business community who deal with this kind of thing all the time have all talked about an increase in jobs in Canada as a result of this agreement. That is what we are basing our certainty on.

All the trade agreements which have been signed in modern society have led to an increase in jobs. Countries have ended up better off as a result of trading agreements. Agreements have been reached between groups in Africa, South and Central America, and between New Zealand and Australia. They are better off as a result of trade. I am not saying that they will be perfectly even over time, but if you compare where they started and where they are today you will see that they are better off now.

With regard to the European Economic Community, someone pointed out the other day that they have had more economic problems in the last couple of years than have we. It is partly because this Government has created a good economic environment in Canada. If one considers that agreement back in the 1960s and 1970s, they have done extraordinary well.

It does not mean that free trade is a panacea, but it does mean that there will be opportunities and growth in the future as a result of this agreement. It will be beneficial to people in this country, particularly women.

Mr. Harris: Madam Speaker, will the Minister comment on the current debate in the United States as expressed in the newspaper U.S.A. Today? On November 5, that paper devoted a full editorial page to the debate in the United States as to whether there ought to be compulsory unpaid maternity leave granted to companies with 15 employees or more. The great opposition to this comes from the United States Chamber of Commerce, which is the most vocal opponent to the family and medical leave bill being proposed in the United States House of Representatives. The bill would only require firms of 15 or more employees to give new parents up to 18 weeks unpaid leave with the guarantee of a job on return.

The Chamber of Commerce predicted economic catastrophe if the bill is passed. They also expressed their view in this paper that maternity leave is only one of a number of many different alternative types of benefits that could be offered to employees, including pension coverage, dental benefits, flex time, health insurance and so on. They went on to discuss how companies could face competition in the domestic or international field.

I raise this question because we are talking about the Government's suggestion that we should really integrate our economies. In view of the Neanderthal attitudes that exist in the United States with respect to these issues, and our approach in Canada toward legal protection and programs to protect women and other workers, does the Minister of State not recognize that the atmosphere created by this agreement will result in intense pressure on this country against advancing the rights of women in the workplace?

Mrs. McDougall: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member's statement about integrating our economies absolutely takes my breath away. The fact is that no other trade agreement in the history of the entire universe has integrated economies. Let us get it straight. This is a trade agreement, it is not an economic union or a political union.

Two years ago Members opposite said that our social programs were on the table and would be eliminated. We have an agreement and our social programs are not eliminated. It is certainly not our credibility that is at stake in predicting the future because we made a commitment to our social programs today and our ability to have social programs in the future.

The Opposition seems to frequently overlook the fact that in order to have the type of social and regional programs, in which, I am sure, the Hon. Member has some interest, we need additional prosperity. We must look ahead in order to determine how we will grow, not only in order to afford the kind of programs we have now but the kind of programs we would like to have in the future. That will only occur in a growing Canada that is creating jobs and wealth, and spreading that wealth a little better than we have in the past, which is another major objective of the Government.

This agreement will not only help women in southern Ontario, it will help women across Canada, including those in the Hon. Member's riding in Newfoundland.

Those are the very important considerations for us: First, that we create more jobs; second, that we create more capital; and third, that we invest that capital into more job creation in Canada and the kinds of social programs that this country has come to expect of this Government.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grace—Lachine East): Madam Speaker, the resolution before the House asks us to consider three aspects of this free trade agreement, the first being the impact of this particular free trade agreement on jobs, particularly jobs held by women. Second, we are asked to consider the impact of the agreement on our energy resources and our ability to control our own energy resources. Third, the resolution states that the process by which we are dealing with this free trade agreement fails to allow for adequate consultation with Canadians in all provinces and territories before committing us to profound changes, not only in our economy but in our political sovereignty, cultural distinctiveness and, generally, our ability to run our own affairs.

I want to deal with the third part of the resolution first. In all the 22 years I have spent in this Parliament I have never seen a measure so important as this dealt with in such a summary, cavalier or inadequate way. This free trade agreement will impact not only on every part of our economic life, including resources, agriculture, the Auto Pact, service industries, the food processing industries and so on, but will also impact on our social and political life.

The Hon. Minister who just spoke said that there is nothing in the agreement relating to social programs. That is correct. However, she does not say that because of this agreement there will be increasing pressure to harmonize social programs in Canada with social programs in the United States. Businessmen will say that they will not be able to compete with U.S. industries if we continue to have our unemployment insurance at a higher level than that in the United States. They will say that they are unable to compete with the United States because of our marketing boards, which give a fair deal to Canadian farmers. Canadian businessmen will continue to say that they will not be able to compete if we have a rich medicare program such as we have, and will probably propose user fees and such things.

It is true that social programs are not in the agreement. But the agreement has been set up in such a way that it develops pressure to harmonize and eliminate the social programs we already have.

Let us consider the example we have had in the House in the last couple of months. The pharmaceutical industries in this country were telling us that we either pass Bill C-22 or they would not increase their investment in Canada, do research and development in Canada or increase jobs in Canada. If such industries are trying to apply that pressure now, without the free trade agreement, how much stronger will that pressure be with the free trade deal?

When we propose measures that are in the interests of Canadians socially and politically, they will make the argument that if this has any cost they will not be able to compete with American companies that have free access to Canadian markets. There will be this pressure to harmonize these programs.

Let us consider the process to which I referred at the beginning of my remarks. We are being asked to deal with a measure that will impact on every part of our economic, social and political life. The agreement was signed on October 5 and we are being asked to dispose of it by December 18, when the House adjourns for Christmas. A committee has been set up to hold hearings in only one city of every Canadian province, with only eight witnesses a day.

Yesterday, in Vancouver when the Opposition made a motion to permit additional time to hear individuals who were in the room and wanted to raise their concerns, Government Members voted that down. They only want eight witnesses per day per province on this most important deal, and in only one city. In British Columbia it is just in Vancouver. We are not going into the interior, or to Vancouver Island. In Quebec the committee will just go to Montreal. There will be eight witnesses for all of the Province of Quebec. We are not going to Quebec City, or to Abitibi, to the Gaspé Peninsula or Lac-Saint-Jean where there are very strong interests and concerns about this agreement.

The process is a farce. The committee on unemployment insurance spent more than six months on that legislation. I remember we spent over a year on the proposed changes to the Crow's Nest Agreement. In the committee on freedom of information I spent nearly a year. Although those matters are important, they are not nearly as important as this proposed agreement, yet we are asked to deal with it in this very summary and quick fashion.

It is probably true that Government representatives will say that "before October 5 we had consultations for over a year with various people". Yes, they did that but it was mostly with business and mostly in secret. By the way, Madam Speaker, at that time the discussions were with respect to a free trade agreement in principle. We did not have any specific agreement before us and the negotiations which were carried on were carried on in secret. Perhaps that is necessary, but the fact is that the Canadian public was not involved in the debate.

Government representatives, when they stand up to answer, will probably say that this debate will not end on December 15, that in the new year, as a result of the signing of this agreement, there will be all sorts of legislation that will have to come before Parliament dealing with this matter and we will have a chance to debate that legislation. That is correct, there will be Bills to amend our Customs Tariff Act, our agricultural legislation, our transportation legislation, even the Post Office Act. There will be all kinds of Bills to amend legislation resulting from this free trade agreement, not only at the federal level but at the provincial level. The point is that it will be too late then to turn this whole matter back. I should not say it will be too late, but it will be very, very difficult to turn this around once they sign the agreement on January 2.

There will be Bills in the provincial legislatures and many Bills here in the federal Parliament. I suppose they will be dealt with in various committees, with one committee not quite sure what the other is doing, as is usual around here. One committee comes out with a report sometimes that is contrary to a report coming out of another committee, both prepared in good faith.

The point is that we should have more time to deal with this agreement right now before it is signed by the Prime Minister

(Mr. Mulroney). He is trying to meet a timetable laid down by the American authorities, its fast-track system. He is trying to meet that timetable when the impact of this agreement will be much higher in Canada than in the United States. Some estimates I have read indicate that only 10 per cent of American foreign trade is in Canada. Of our foreign trade, 60 per cent of it is with the United States.

The impact in this country will be much greater than in the United States, yet we will not even have the same amount of time in our Parliament and parliamentary committees to examine this deal as will the American Congress. For example, the American Congress will have 90 days to examine the agreement after the signing by the President and the Prime Minister on January 2. It will have 90 days, until April 1, yet our Government is asking us to complete our examination of this matter by December 15, after two weeks of committee hearings in Ottawa and two weeks of committee hearings on the road, with one day in each province.

We do not even have the legal text. All we have at this time is a 35 page text which is called "Elements of the Agreement". We are told that this 35 page "Elements of Agreement" text will grow to anywhere between 900 to 1,200 pages of legal text. The Government is asking Canadian unions, Canadian businesses, Canadian academics, experts and Parliamentarians, to examine these elements and make a decision without ever seeing the fine print, the legal terminology. That is completely unacceptable. That is not the sort of thing that is usually done in this country. It is not our tradition.

As a member of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade, in the short time we have dealt with this matter, each day with a new witness, I find that new insights are presented to us with respect to this agreement. Things no one has raised before are being raised by witnesses when they appear before us. That is what happens when we have a good debate. The more one looks at an agreement or a Bill, the more one understands it and sees implications one did not see before. When I read something for the second, third and fourth time, I see things I did not see before. Unfortunately, we are being cut off, not being allowed to give attention to this matter as we should, particularly since we do not have the legal text.

When the Prime Minister tabled these "Elements of Agreement"—35 pages—on October 5, he told us, and it also states right in the accord, that the legal text would be before us in three weeks. It has now been seven weeks and we still do not have the legal text. The Premiers of the provinces are meeting this week. They do not have the legal text either. I guess we will be left with one week or two weeks to look at a 1,200 or 1,000 page legal text and have to come up with a yes or no answer on whether it is a good or bad thing, even though it will touch on every aspect of our lives.

Some of the things being raised in a serious way are how the competition policy of the two countries will impact or be affected by this agreement, including the anti-trust policy and policies relating to monopolistic practices. With this agreement more emphasis is placed on the so-called free market-place, but there are many experts who dispute whether the market is really a free one due to concentration, monopolistic practices, predatory pricing and all of those things. We have one type of competition law in the United States and another type of competition law in Canada, and one wonders whether we will have the ability to amend that competition law to prevent takeovers, concentration and actions by businesses to restrain trade, and not have fair prices. One wonders about all these things which have not been looked at at all.

I spoke about the process because I think the process is terrible. This is a complex, complicated matter. It has raised many concerns with Canadians. We do not have enough time to deal with it in a serious way.

I want to move now to the question of jobs, especially jobs that are held by women. As I tried to point out in my question to the Minister when she was in the House, we have had all kinds of estimates, studies and speculation on the jobs that might be lost or gained as a result of this agreement. The Economic Council first said there was a possible gain of 350,000 jobs, but that study was done before this agreement was made public. It was based on an assumed increase in productivity of 5 per cent per year as well as total access to the American market, including access to defence contracts. In the last few days we have had reports that the estimate of the Economic Council was way out of whack, especially when we look at this particular agreement.

There was a study done by Infometrica, released this week, which said the latest predictions contained in analysis prepared this week contradict previous forecasts of the Economic Council of Canada in a controversial study released in September.

Mr. McDermid: How many jobs does it say will be created now?

Mr. Allmand: It says 110,000, more or less. The point is that there have been studies on all sides of this question. There was a study done by the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion which said that 228,000 jobs could be lost in 17 industries. There was a previous study done by Infometrica which said that 300,000 jobs could be lost. The auto parts industry has said it could lose 20,000 jobs. The wine industry has said it could lose 10,000 jobs. A study done by the City of Montreal said that 100,000 jobs could be lost in Montreal.

The fact is that because of these conflicting studies and no real serious impact study done by the Government, Canadians have very serious concerns. A Canadian who has a job now, and who has had a good job for 20 years, is concerned whether his job is in jeopardy. He is not satisfied by the rhetoric of the Government that there will be all kinds of new jobs. He does not know whether he will be able to adapt to a new job. If he or she is a person of 45 years or 50 years of age, will there be massive retraining programs? Will the individuals have to move from the place where they lose their job to a place where the new job is located? There is no information on this.

• (1220)

I put it to the Government that it has the burden of proof. If it wishes to sell this deal it should have the studies and the specific information assuring Canadians that those new jobs will be there, what type of jobs there will be, and that there will be retraining and readjustment programs to relocate and readjust those people from the old jobs that they lose into the new jobs that might be there. The Government has not done that, so the concern of Canadians is justifiable.

Women are particularly vulnerable, because a very high percentage work in industries which are principally threatened by this deal, for example, textiles, footwear, clerical industry, service industry, food processing. When I speak about the service industries I mean telecommunications, travel, transportation, and so on, which can be done from the United States rather than Canada with deregulation and privatization.

To a very high degree, women work in those industries which are most threatened. In the textile and clothing industry 80 per cent of the employees are women. That industry is seriously threatened. For the first time in 15 years, last year the wage gap between men and women started to widen. It had been closing for 15 consecutive years, and now it is starting to widen again.

The Minister referred to the great Canadian Jobs Strategy. I wish to point out that, under the Canadian Jobs Strategy, women are unrepresented in the retraining programs right now. They have far from 50 per cent of the seats. They have a very low percentage of the seats.

The Canadian Jobs Strategy has been cut back in funding since 1984. In that year we were spending $2.2 billion on retraining and job creation. As of this year, that has been cut by 32 per cent from $2.2 billion to $1.6 billion. Yet the Government states that that type of program will be adequate if there is a massive loss of jobs as a result of free trade.

The other day the Minister and the Prime Minister pooh-poohed the study from Ontario which reported that 100,000 jobs in Ontario held by women were vulnerable or at risk as a result of this agreement. The report did not state that those jobs would be lost, but that they were at risk. That raises concern. The Minister's answer to that was that they are at risk, but they should have faith and believe in the Government. Why should they believe in the Government? Only 23 per cent of Canadians believe in the Government. The faith of Canadians in the Government has plummeted from 50 per cent in 1984 to 23 per cent across this country. The people do not have faith in the Government. It is up to the Government to put specific measures on the table to show that those jobs will not be lost. But, as I pointed out yesterday, if the jobs are lost the agreement should be changed with respect to food processing.

In the two minutes that I have remaining I wish to state that this debate is like everything else connected to the free trade deal. It is being rushed through without touching on many matters. I am sure that tomorrow I will receive calls asking why I did not deal with the impact of free trade on agriculture, the food industries, cultural industries, national sovereignty, the dispute mechanism, or on the Auto Pact. The reason is that we do not have time because it is being rushed through.

Mr. McDermid: You have the same time as we had.

Mr. Allmand: You had a lot more time. Look back at the record. That is nonsense what you are talking about.

This is the most important economic, social, and political deal affecting Canada since the Second World War. It is being rushed through in an obscene manner.

This agreement gives the United States assured access to Canadian energy resources. I could quote the text, but the wording is contained in the "Elements of Agreement". More or less it will end the ability of any government to have any type of national energy policy in the future.

Mr. McDermid: Wrong.

Mr. Allmand: I know that the Government is quite pleased with the fact that it ended the National Energy Program. I can understand that some people would be opposed to that type of National Energy Program. But this deal will end any type of National Energy Program.

Mr. McDermid: Wrong.

Mr. Allmand: Even the type that Mr. Diefenbaker started back in the 1960s. The other day I attended a meeting with Mr. Lougheed, the former Premier of Alberta. He felt that that was true, but it was worthwhile, because his opinion was that the agreement gave more than it lost for Canada. But it also ends the ability for provinces to have two-price systems in energy; a lower price for the citizens in their own province, and perhaps a lower price to stimulate energy in their province.

In the Province of Quebec the aluminum industry was started with special low priced energy deals. In the future that will not be possible. According to the vague and simplistic wording in the "Elements of Agreement" it will not. We do not know what the legal text will state, but there is enough there now to raise serious concern.

One wonders if we cannot have any type of national energy policy where provinces will be able to sell all their energy south of the border because there is a good deal to be had down there and leave out their neighbours, for example, not sell to Prince Edward Island or to New Brunswick, or wherever—

Mr. McDermid: That is not true.

Mr. Allmand: I have the signal, Madam Speaker.

I wish to state that this is a bad deal for women. It is a bad deal for all Canadians. The process under which it is being handled is unacceptable and a farce.

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member and I have been through many consultations and trips. I know his blustering style. Much of what he states is not factually correct. I wish that I had time to go through the points.

One area I wish to concentrate on is our social programs. For some reason, the Hon. Member states that they will become unfair trade practices because of this deal. If our social programs are unfair trade practices, then I ask the Hon. Member why have they not been countervailed already? The agreement with the United States does not change that one iota. So if it is an unfair trade practice after the agreement, why is it not an unfair trade practice before the agreement? Because it is not an unfair trade practice. Those social programs will not be touched.

As a matter of fact, I would submit to the House that with an improved economy our social safety net will improve. But it has to be paid for. It is not like the NDP suggests where, like magic, we pull money out of the sky. People have to pay taxes, and we have to pay for those social programs. If our economy is doing well, we will pay for them. But I cannot understand the Hon. Member's argument that after this agreement our social policies and programs become countervailable, while before they were not. Perhaps the Hon. Member could explain that one to me, please.

Mr. Allmand: I do not think that my hon. friend was listening to me closely. At no time in my speech did I state that our social programs would be considered unfair practices and, therefore, countervailable. I said with this agreement that our social programs will be at risk because there would be pressure to harmonize in Canada. I did not say that they would be considered as unfair trade practices. I said there would be pressure as a result of this agreement to harmonize. I tried to explain it in the following manner.

Since American companies will have free access to the Canadian market, Canadian companies will say that they have to compete with those American firms, they have to pay a higher minimum wage in Canada, and this makes it difficult for them to compete. Check-offs have to be paid for medicare and other social programs, and this makes it difficult to compete. In some provinces there are tougher environmental programs, and this makes it tougher to compete. What I am saying is that even though environmental programs, social programs, and marketing boards are not in the agreement, it is written in such a manner that it puts pressure on Canadian businesses to get rid of those programs in order that they will have the same basic costs as the American competitor who will come into the Canadian market. That is the problem.

Mr. McDermid: Why do they not do that now?

Mr. Allmand: Now we have a certain amount of protection. That is why it is not happening now. Unfortunately the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has not had the benefit of sitting in on the committee hearings as I have had and of listening to the testimony on both sides. I think it was wrong. I think he should come to the meetings and he would be able to participate more meaningfully in the debate.

• (1230)

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, I have a short supplementary question. I just want the record to be clear that I have been at some of the meetings, albeit not the meetings the Hon. Member was at.

I have a list of a number of people to which I would like to refer. Stan Sager, President of Satexil, a Montreal woollen manufacturer, made the following comments:

> I'm pleased that free trade is being considered, I'm happy but I would like to see an acceleration of the tariff reduction. I don't know if we can survive in this market. I hope that free trade opens opportunities fast enough.

Those were the comments of a textile manufacturer in Montreal.

I could go on to quote Andrew Hughes, Vice-President Finance of Monterey Textiles; Sandy Archibald, Chairman of the Textiles, Footwear and Leather SAGIT; Bernard Cowan, a Toronto-based apparel manufacturer; Gary Steiman of Gemini Fashions, Winnipeg; Louis Eisman, President of Mr. Jax Fashions; Betty Jones, a manufacturer's agent for Canadian designers; and the Canadian Textiles Institute.

Ms. Copps: Table the document.

Mr. McDermid: I could quote a number from the textiles industry who are supporting it.

Ms. Copps: On a point of order, Madam Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary may want to use this material when he enters into the debate. However, he was recognized on what he himself called "a short supplementary question".

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. You will note that the Minister was quoting from a document—

An Hon. Member: He is not a Minister.

Ms. Copps: He is a Parliamentary Secretary; he is just an aspiring Minister. According to the Standing Orders, of course he is required to table the document. I wonder whether Your Honour could make that request of him.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) knows that the Hon. Member is not a Minister and that he does not have to table the document from which he was quoting.

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary quoted a list of textile companies that are in favour of the agreement.

A number of textile companies are in favour of the agreement. For the most part they are companies dealing with higher cost textile products or specialized textile products. I would say that half the witnesses who appeared before the committee were in favour of the agreement and another half were against it. Perhaps there was an odd number who were neither for nor against it but wanted more information.

I should like to tell the Parliamentary Secretary that, in general, entrepreneurs and employers favour the agreement because they are looking to new markets and they are better able to withstand shocks as a result of the agreement. The people who have less control over their economic lives are the workers, the unemployed, the old people, and so on. They are the people who are coming to the committee and opposing the agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: We are now hearing from a group of people who did not attend the committee meetings. What I am saying is that on balance employers and businessmen favour the agreement, whereas the employees in those industries are opposed to it.

Mr. Friesen: What about the steelworkers in Hamilton?

Ms. Copps: They are opposed.

Mr. Allmand: We could give examples here and there on both sides. By the way, there is a steel company out west which opposes the agreement. The point is that the Government is rushing it through too quickly, and it gave away too much.

In concluding I want to say that we in this Party favour freer trade with the United States. When we were in power, tariffs were lowered over a 20-year to 30-year period. We are not in favour of an agreement which gives too much to the United States and too little to Canada.

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member was complaining that there has not been enough parliamentary involvement to this point. I would like to ask him to make a comparison between the amount of parliamentary scrutiny there has been on this agreement and what was done by his Government on the Auto Pact.

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, I came here in 1965 and the Auto Pact was already passed. I cannot really answer his question. I do not know how much parliamentary time was given to it.

All I can tell the Hon. Member is that today there is universal support in the House for the Auto Pact. I do not know of any Party which would like to do away with it, although I think that what the Government is doing will in fact weaken it.

However, let me say that since I have been here—and that is 22 years—I have never seen an important measure of this nature given such short and summary treatment.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker—

Mr. McDermid: Wait a minute.

Mr. Friesen: Who is next?

Ms. Copps: He got up and nobody else got up, so that is your problem.

Mr. McDermid: On a point of order—

Mr. Friesen: Quick Draw McGraw.

Ms. Copps: I was up.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, in the ordinary rotation of speakers I believe it is now the Government's turn to speak. We have heard from one government speaker and from two opposition speakers already. I believe that it is the Government's turn to speak.

Ms. Copps: No way.

Mr. McDermid: I was up on debate at the time Your Honour called for debate.

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As the government Member realizes, when the Chair calls for debate it is whoever stands up who is recognized, and in fact the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) was recognized. Unfortunately, whether or not there may have been an error, the Speaker recognized the Hon. Member for Spadina and the Hon. Member for Spadina should now be heard. I was also standing.

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I actually hesitated because I assumed that somebody from the government side would stand up.

Mr. McDermid: I was on my feet.

Mr. Heap: I looked directly across, and I do not know where the Member's mind was but his body was in his seat. Therefore I stood up and was recognized.

Mr. McDermid: On the same point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair saw the Hon. Parliamentary to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. McDermid). Nevertheless I made a very normal mistake in thinking that he was still rising on questions or comments and not on debate.

With the permission of the Hon. Member for Spadina, I would like to go back to the normal rotation, if the Hon.

Member for Spadina will allow me. He will be recognized next. I would like to recognize the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary if I have the Hon. Member's approval.

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, I understand that the Government is in great difficulty to explain itself and I think that it should be given its full opportunity, so I thank you; let him proceed, please.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I thank the Hon. Member for forgiving my mistake. In the normal rotation, the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Madam Speaker, I appreciate that and I want to thank the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). I was on my feet on debate, but I must admit that I have been asking a number of questions today and I can understand that Your Honour thought that I was still asking questions.

I am very pleased to participate in the debate today. Once again I want to thank the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) for bringing this motion forward, because it gives the Government yet another opportunity to present the facts regarding the agreement which has been reached between Canada and the United States that I most genuinely believe will be very good for Canada, for all regions of Canada. It will make us a stronger, more confident, more vibrant country than we are today.

We have heard many scare tactics today. It was kind of interesting to listen to the two opposition Members who spoke today. Neither of them offered an alternative to the status quo. They think the status quo is fine.

The first point which should be made is that there is no such thing as the status quo in trade today. Trade is changing rapidly. Protectionist moods are growing throughout the world. We must seize the opportunity presented to us to negotiate such a very important agreement.

I want to touch on a couple of things and then I will talk about consultation and the type of dialogue that has gone on regarding this agreement over the last number of years. I want to make one thing very clear. The Hon. Member said that the agreement will contain between 1,000 and 1,200 pages, but 800 of those pages are tariff schedules. They are not the text of the agreement per se. These tariff schedules must be appended to the agreement. Although it sounds awesome when you hear of an agreement made up of 1,000 to 1,200 pages, one must realize that 800 of those are tariff schedules.

The Hon. Member talked about how his Government consulted, negotiated and passed things. Let me quote him. I think the quote is accurate. "I came to the House in 1965 and the Auto Pact was already passed". The Auto Pact never passed anything. It was negotiated entirely in secret. It was announced that it had been signed and it was a fait accompli. There was no motion in the House and no referral to a committee. There was not one thing. There was not one bit of consultation with Canadians on the matter at all.

I might point out that the people who opposed the Auto Pact in 1965, my friends in the New Democratic Party, were extremely vocal at that time, and their arguments used 22 years ago are the same arguments they are using today about the present trade agreement. Today the New Democrats are protecting the Auto Pact with their lives. They were wrong 22 years ago and I believe they are wrong today. Twenty years from now, if they are still around, they will be standing up defending this agreement as one of the most progressive and forward looking agreements that has ever been negotiated on behalf of Canada and Canadians. The New Democrats will be defending this agreement 20 years from now just like they defend the Auto Pact.

The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) talked about his Government reducing tariffs over a number of years from 1945 to 1984. That is correct. Tariffs did come down. They came down from some 40 per cent to 9 per cent over that period of time through GATT negotiations, the Kennedy Round, the Tokyo Round and so on. As the tariffs have dropped, prosperity followed. When trade barriers drop, prosperity follows. We have seen it time and time again; for example, in the European Economic Community. I am not afraid of tariff reductions and I do not think Canadians should be afraid either because prosperity follows.

I want to ask the Hon. Member from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East—although I do not expect an answer—where did the debates take place in the Kennedy Round when the Liberals reduced tariffs and signed the agreements with GATT? Did the Liberals bring those matters to the House, refer them to a standing committee to travel across the country and get opinions from Canadians? Did the Liberals do it with the Kennedy Round and the Tokyo Round? No, Madam Speaker, they did not. This is the first time there has been such extensive consultation on a trade agreement. History will prove me exactly right to this point. I will go through the consultative process that has taken place concerning this trade agreement.

The motion in part reads: "fails to allow for adequate consultation with Canadians". Let us examine the facts. First, the previous Liberal Government put together a Royal Commission on the economy. Its job was to look to the future—not just tomorrow, not just to the next election—and determine what direction Canada should be taking to ensure prosperity, increase job opportunities for our young people and to ensure that we maintain our standard and quality of life. One of the major recommendations of that commission was a free trade agreement with our largest trading partner, the United States. I think everyone in this House will admit that there were very capable and prominent people represented from all walks of life on that commission. They spent a tremendous amount of time and the taxpayers' dollars consulting with Canadians for three years, I believe. That was the recommendation from that commission.

Following that there was the Special Joint Committee on Canada's External Relations that travelled across the country. I must say it was co-chaired by my hon. friend, the now Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin). Its recommendation at that time was to enter into a comprehensive free trade agreement with the United States. There were dissenting opinions. The NDP did not agree with it, naturally, but the New Democrats do not agree with anything the Government does. The Liberals said that they would like to talk about it and that it might not be a bad idea. The Senate committee looked into this matter and made recommendations. That committee spent time consulting with Canadians recommending that we enter into a free trade agreement. Independent studies from the C. D. Howe Institute, the Economic Council of Canada, the Fraser Institute and so on all recommended that we enter into negotiations.

When we got that kind of input from Canadians over a three year period, our Government decided to look into the matter and enter negotiations. The United States and Canada agreed to enter negotiations under the fast-track provisions of the U.S. trade legislation. That schedule has been known for two and a half years now. So it is no surprise, but the Opposition makes it sound as though it is something new and different.

What did our Government do? We set up an unprecedented program of consultation with the people of Canada. I can assure you, had the Liberals set up a consultation program with the people of Canada on the National Energy Program alone, and had they listened to Canadians, the National Energy Program may never have been created, but the Liberals did not consult Canadians. The NEP was a the brainchild of a few bureaucrats, Mr. Lalonde and a few others, without consultation.

Our Government wanted to make sure that Canadians participated in the trade negotiations. From the beginning we have had a two-way dialogue with business, labour, consumers and the provinces. The core of the consultation system has been the International Trade Advisory Committee which has provided a two-way flow of information between the Government and the private sector.

Under the distinguished chairmanship of a very old friend of mine, Walter Light, former chairman and chief executive officer of Northern Telecom—a large portion of which is in my community—the Government brought together more than 40 leaders from business, labour, consumer groups and academia. ITAC, the International Trade Advisory Committee, concerned itself with broad matters relating to international trade access and marketing. It has made valuable recommendations regarding the free trade association negotiating process. Under the ITAC umbrella we had 15 sectoral advisory groups on international trade, SAGITS. SAGITS represent a broad cross-section of the Canadian economy.

I want to read into the record today, with your permission, Madam Speaker, the sectors represented because it is most important that Canadians understand the consultative process which is being attacked by the New Democratic Party in its motion today. The list includes agriculture, food and beverage, fish and fish products, minerals and metals, energy products and services, chemicals and petrochemicals, forest products, industrial, marine and rail equipment, automotive and aerospace, textiles, footwear and leather, apparel and fur, consumer and household products, communications, computer equipment and services, financial services, general services and arts and cultural industries.

All these sectoral advisory committees were selected in close co-operation and consultation with the various national trade groups, provincial Governments and labour. Both the ITAC and SAGITs provided invaluable support to the trade negotiation team. They were used as a sounding board as the negotiations took place. The negotiating team asked what certain negotiations would do to certain industries, what it could do and if the industries could compete. This process went on throughout and the SAGITs were kept informed while informing the Canadian Government.

As a matter of fact, 150 meetings of the SAGITs and their working groups were held over the last 18 months. We asked for advice, we got it and we listened to it.

Over and above the formal SAGIT consultations, there have been dozens of briefings and consultations by officials from the trade negotiations office with all segments of the private sector and with individuals interested in the negotiations.

Apart from consultations with the private sector, the Government undertook to work closely and co-operatively with the provinces. First Ministers were briefed and consulted regularly as the negotiations progressed. They received briefings with slide presentations on every detail of the agreement.

Typifying the co-operative spirit which this Government has fostered through the Meech Lake Accord and other federal-provincial co-operative endeavours, First Ministers were kept fully apprised of what was going on, both at First Ministers' meetings and through a detailed network of contacts at the senior official level.

In fact, since the negotiations began, there have been eight First Ministers' meetings at which the free trade agreement was the single agenda item, two First Ministers' conferences at which free trade was extensively discussed, 19 full-day meetings of the senior officials' forum, the continuing committee on trade negotiations and scores of working-group meetings on every subject of the free trade agreement.

No previous Government has involved the provinces so extensively in such a comprehensive process of consultation and information sharing. Even Premier Peterson has admitted publicly many times that he greatly appreciates the consultative process this Government has put into place, not only on this subject but on all other subjects for which federal-provincial co-operation is so very important to ensuring that Canada continues to grow and prosper.

It is not just the private sector and the First Ministers who have debated this issue. We have had a number of debates in the House on free trade. I believe this is the fifth or sixth debate we have had on this matter. Of course, on March 16 there was a major debate on a motion and since then a number of opposition Party motions have been brought before the House. We have had a very thorough and, I believe, a very extensive debate on this matter.

Opposition Parties have a number of allotted days left. They can bring this issue forward each time. As a matter of fact, I welcome the opportunity to discuss this subject on the floor of the House of Commons as often as opposition Members wish. We really appreciate the opportunity to put the facts about the negotiations on the table.

Hon. Members have spoken of the standing committee which has held extensive hearings. It has worked very hard in Ottawa. Its work schedule is probably three times harder than that of a normal standing committee which is holding hearings. It has worked tremendously hard over more than two weeks, not only being briefed but listening to all kinds of representations from people from all walks of life. I think that representation has been very fair. It has not leaned toward the supporters of the agreement or toward those who oppose the agreement.

Committee members are now crossing Canada. They are going from one coast to the other meeting those who are interested in appearing before the committee to let their feelings be known. A committee on a free trade agreement has never before done this in the history of Canada.

For Hon. Members opposite, particularly those from the former governing Party, the Grits, to criticize us for our consultative process and to criticize the committee's timing is something I find to be absolutely amazing and somewhat hypocritical.

I am very excited about this agreement. I am excited about the opportunities it will provide. I am travelling around the country making speeches and holding question and answer periods. Last night I was in Brockville. On Sunday I was in Whitby, and I will be speaking to the textile association and the Canadian Automobile Association tomorrow. The more the people understand and learn about free trade and the more I talk to them about it, the more excited they get.

What I find to be the most fun is that it is the young people who are grabbing this opportunity and telling us how much they look forward to it. The other night on television I saw a young man who is going to university here in Ottawa, but is from Windsor. He took offence to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) saying that he could not compete with the Americans. He said: "You are telling me that I cannot compete with those fellows across the border in Detroit? I am a lot better than they are, I can compete with them, no problem at all". Those are the ones who are excited, are grabbing this opportunity and are running with it.

Looking at the attitudes of some of the provinces toward this agreement, I am saddened that the premier of my province is opposing this agreement. The philosophy of the Liberal Party in Ontario was made obvious when Monte Kwinter said what is good for Ontario is good for Canada. That disappointed me because past Premiers of the Province of Ontario like Frost, Robarts and Davis had the attitude that what is good for Canada is good for Ontario. That was their philosophy. However, the David Peterson Government of Ontario says that what is good for Ontario is good for the rest of the country. That is not the way confederation works. That is not the way I want to see confederation working.

This agreement with the United States will offer untold opportunities. On Friday, we debated the fisheries and talked about the opportunities it will give to the fisheries. I see that my hon. friend from Egmont is here today. He brought that particular motion forward, and again I thank him for doing so. It allowed us to put the facts on the table. I plead with members of both opposition Parties to keep bringing these motions forward when oppositions days come along. We love debating them. We love putting the facts about the trade agreement before the House.

I could cite this agreement chapter and verse, as I am sure Hon. Members could appreciate, but with the limited time available to me I must stop now. I do wish to encourage opposition Members to maintain their tenacity and to continue to bring these motions forward so that we can discuss the facts and so that the Canadian public can be well and properly advised. The fearmongering of the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party will be found not to be based on fact, and this will be proven here and around Canada in the days to come.

Mrs. Duplessis: Excellent speech! Excellent!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The period for questions and comments following the speech by the parliamentary secretary will be provided after Oral Question Period.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

LUBICON LAKE INDIAN BAND—RECOGNITION OF STRUGGLE FOR SOCIAL JUSTICE

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, the Interreligious Foundation for Community Organization in the United States is an ecumenical foundation committed exclusively to the support of community organizing. For 20 years its members have been fighting for peace and justice. In that time they have contributed over $15 million to politically progressive organizing projects in the U.S., Africa, the Caribbean and Central America. In early December their twentieth anniversary program will be held in New York City. Among those participating are Mr. Ramsey Clark, former U.S. Attorney-General; Bishop Desmond Tutu, Reverend Jessie Jackson, and Mr. Harry Belafonte.

At their awards banquet to honour 10 of the most outstanding organizations in the struggle for social justice the honourees will include the U.S. Farm Labor Organizing Committee, the National Union of South African Mine Workers, the Nicaragua Baptist Convention, and, Sir, the Lubicon Lake Indian Band from northern Alberta. The unresolved land claim of the Lubicon Band is one of the great shames of this country and will continue to attract the attention of the world until the Government of Canada and the Government of Alberta make a fair settlement of this claim a priority.

INCREASE IN AVERAGE FAMILY INCOME

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, once again there is good economic news for the Mulroney Government from Statistics Canada. The rate of family income has risen and poverty has declined for the second year in a row. Some 525,000 Canadians have risen above the poverty line. Since 1984 we have seen a substantial drop in the number of Canadians living under the poverty line. Average family income increased in real terms in 1986 for the second consecutive year. After adjustment for inflation, we are $471 or 1.9 per cent higher than in 1985, and 4.2 per cent higher than 1984.

When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) brought out his economic statement, the Opposition cried that over 100,000 Canadians would be out of work. Instead, more than 1 million Canadians now have jobs who did not have them before, and over 525,000 are better paid and above the poverty line.

The free trade agreement will further reduce the number of Canadians living below the poverty line by increasing the number of jobs, increasing real incomes, and reducing consumer prices.

TRANSPORTATION INDUSTRY

CLOSURE OF ROUTE CANADA TRUCKING TERMINALS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, last year the federal Government, through CN, sold Route Canada, formally known as CN Express, to private interests in Toronto. Federal guarantees of former employees' wages, pensions and severance pay recently expired.

On November 5 Route Canada suddenly announced it was closing its terminals in Sydney and Stellarton, Nova Scotia, and Bathurst, New Brunswick. The employees in those terminals, who have worked most of their lives for CN, are eligible only for the legal minimum in severance pay despite anywhere from 15 to 46 years' seniority with that Crown corporation.

Families in these three hard-hit communities are paying the price of the Prime Minister's privatization policy. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) should pay the price if he thinks privatization is such a good idea for Canada. Fair compensation from the federal Government is the least Route Canada's employees deserve after the sudden and unjustified shut-down of these terminals.

The increasing number of lay-offs in the trucking industry clearly shows that privatization and deregulation are costing us jobs now. More jobs will be lost in the trucking industry if the unpopular Tory Government has its way and forces our Prime Minister's and Ronald Reagan's trade scam through Parliament.

SPORTS

McGILL REDMEN'S VANIER CUP VICTORY—TRIBUTE TO PLAYERS AND COACH

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, McGill University has earned a reputation for academic excellence not only across Canada and North America but right around the world. Its graduates have assumed leadership roles and responsibility in all spheres of endeavour. It continues to attract students simply for the opportunity to learn and develop.

However, this week the McGill undergraduates and graduates are celebrating the excellence and team-work of their athletes. Last Saturday's victory in Toronto in the Vanier Cup game, emblematic of the championship of Canada, for the first time ever by a university in Quebec, demonstrated that a total commitment by players and coaches with the will to win assures success. My congratulations go to Michael Soles, Bryan Fuller, Coach Baillie, "the Crazy Dogs", and all their team-mates for a great achievement and for adding athletic excellence to McGill's great traditions.

"What's the matter with old McGill?", we all used to chant. Nothing, Mr. Speaker, nothing!

FISHERIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA HERRING FISHERY—SEINE LICENCE FEES

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the roe herring fishery in British Columbia needs some leadership from the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon). At present there are approximately 250 seine licences and over 1,300 gillnet licences in this fishery. In recent years the fishery has become a nightmare for many fishermen.

It is generally recognized that fish companies now own a considerable number of seine licences and the companies have advertised in newspapers to purchase or lease other licences held by people who no longer want to use them. The annual fee for a seine licence is $2,000. Bona fide fishermen who want to fish are forced into a bidding war for these licences. Last year a seine licence was priced at $50,000 and upwards. Some boat owners have leased several seine licences, in effect slashing the number of jobs in the fishery.

The United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union estimates that 400 jobs were lost last year and that up to 300 jobs may be lost this year. In March of this year the Minister said, as reported in the Vancouver Sun: "Those who benefit should be those who are directly involved in the industry, not the people who sit in a chair somewhere".

The Minister has now sat in his chair for nearly a year and the patience of concerned fishermen is running out. I urge the Minister to take corrective measures now.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT PERFORMANCE

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, thanks to the sound economic policies introduced by this Government and a renewed confidence in our Canadian economy, poverty has gone down in this country for the second consecutive year, while the average family income has increased. In 1986, the number of Canadians living below the poverty line dropped by 262,000, while the average family income rose by $741. In 1986, 3,689,000 Canadians were living below the poverty line, which is 525,000 less than in 1984.

Family income increased in 1986 for the second consecutive year. After inflation, family income increased by $741, nearly 2 percent more than in 1985. The average family income increased by more than $ 636 in 1986, 4.2 percent more than in 1984.

In Quebec, we know that the percentage of families and single persons living below the poverty line dropped substantially.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding I would like to say I am confident that the steps taken by our Government to promote free trade with the United States will help reduce poverty in this country even further, by creating more jobs, increasing income and reducing the price of consumer goods.

PETRO-CANADA

FUTURE OF PORT MOODY REFINERY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, Petro-Canada proposes to stop the initial processing of crude oil which has been done with great efficiency at its five-star refinery in Port Moody, British Columbia. There are only two refineries in North America which have the safety and efficiency to get the five-star rating and Port Moody is one of them.

Mr. St. Germain: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: My hon. friend will be happy to know that.

Edmonton will ship a tailored special stream of naptha distillate fractions of crude oil via the transmountain pipeline to Port Moody. This will mean the shutting down of part of the Port Moody refinery and the loss of jobs and money to the local community. It could be the beginning of the end of Petro-Canada's refineries in Port Moody and Fort St. John, British Columbia.

I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the recent tornado in Edmonton came within a block of refinery row. A natural or man-made disaster could have disastrous effects on the Lower Mainland of British Columbia if Petro-Canada concentrates all its refining in Edmonton. That would hurt our economy.

I therefore ask Petro-Canada to reconsider its decision with respect to the Port Moody refinery. If it cannot do that, can it at least give the workers and people of Port Moody a commitment that Petro-Canada will not close the refinery and will treat the workers fairly as it has in the past?

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

NORTHERN ONTARIO—GOVERNMENT'S COMMITMENT

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, as a Progressive Conservative Member representing northern Ontario I am disturbed and disgusted by the criticism I heard in the House yesterday from the opposition benches of the FEDNOR. My colleagues and myself in the northern Ontario caucus have worked hard to put together an economic program which will meet the challenges of the resource-based economy; a program which would allow for the special needs of the region, a program which would allow local input, a program which would draw from the strengths of the communities and individuals of northern Ontario.

I am proud to say that we have delivered an economic program. The Government recognizes northern Ontario as a unique region of the country with unique needs of each and every individual. Northern Ontario Members are proud of the Government's performance and commitment to northern Ontario.

The opposition Members who criticize should consider their own record. Who has helped the region of northern Ontario more than have we? The socialist Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) said that they did not believe in flow-through shares which would benefit the resource industries of northern Ontario.

As for the Liberal Members, not once in the over 16 years of their Governments have they assisted the region of northern Ontario.

I repeat that I am shocked and dismayed by the criticism by the Opposition of FEDNOR, a program which will allow northern Ontarians the opportunities they deserve.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

OPPOSITION TO NEW PLAN

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, Mrs. Marguerite Rondeau of Joseph-Renaud Boulevard in Ville d'Anjou recently got a postcard telling her where to go to pick up a registered letter. When she got there, there was no sign indicating there was a post office, and much to her surprise, when she entered the store—it was a convenience store—she found a young man who was weighing bananas, and when she showed him her card, the young man handed her the registered letter. Mrs. Rondeau was understandably surprised that her registered letter was in the same location as the bananas!

It has come to a pretty pass, Mr. Speaker, when we start mixing mail with bananas.

Many more Canadians are going through the same experience at premises that are not even identified as post offices. Even business people are starting to cancel their contracts with Canada Post because it does not pay. Customers are so upset about poor service that the Post Office is losing customers instead of getting more.

Mr. Speaker, every day I am asked: Why doesn't the Minister responsible for Canada Post scrap this poorly designed plan that fails to serve Canadians?

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

SIZE OF PAYMENT TO SASKATCHEWAN FARMERS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the Western Grain Stabilization Program assists producers when net income from grain and oilseed seeds falls below the average of the past five years. The Act was amended in February, 1985, to allow for interim payments so that farmers could have cash in their hands prior to spring seeding. A record interim payment of $705 million was made in April of this year.

Last Friday, the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer) announced a further final payment of $693 million under the WGSA for 1986-87. This brings the total WGSA benefit paid out to $1.4 billion, including $759 million to Saskatchewan, the largest pay-out ever issued and 63 per cent higher than last year.

As the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool President, Garf Stevenson, said: "It is a very substantial payment and it is very much needed. The payment demonstrates the commitment by the Government to support agriculture".

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—AGRICULTURAL INDUSTRY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the Government's trade deal with the United States continues to unravel. Yesterday the Government of Ontario stated that it will not agree to the terms negotiated for its wine industry.

On Sunday the General Council of the Quebec Liberal Party refused to approve the agricultural terms of the deal. The council members know that the deal is so unpopular with rural Quebecers that supporting it is like "throwing oil on a fire".

Similarly, western Canadian farmers know full well that their marketing boards and supply management systems are at risk as processed food is imported, bypassing locally grown chickens, turkeys and eggs, for example.

They also see no stop to the continued U.S. drive for bigger shares in the international grain market despite this costing ever more in grain subsidies and ill will from countries such as Canada, which have much lower subsidy programs.

Does the Government really believe that statements such as "marketing boards remain in place' will mollify farmers as they see their markets swept away by heavily subsidized U.S. production? Guess again. Farmers do not like what they have been handed by the Government and they are making their objections heard.

SHIPBUILDING

AWARDING OF FRIGATE CONSTRUCTION CONTRACT

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Saint John Shipyard has assembled a world class naval construction team that is in place and producing first-class frigates. The yard's performance record is highly commendable. These two components alone are reason enough for the next six frigates to be built in Saint John, New Brunswick.

I am calling upon my colleagues in Cabinet to recognize the potential in high tech development and long term job creation that the awarding of the next six frigates would mean to the economy of Saint John, of New Brunswick, and of the Maritime Provinces.

Today in Saint John is the foundation of economic renewal for which all Maritimers are looking. The Government of Canada must recognize that another six frigates to the region will mean enduring skill diversification, economic prosperity, and affirming the renewal that the Government is committed to achieving.

I strongly urge the Government to award the frigate contract to a yard that is showing the world it can excel in frigate construction. If the key considerations in federal government contracting are cost, schedule, performance and industrial benefits, then the Saint John yard is the proper choice.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—GRAIN PRICES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) free trade deal is a fraud, a deceit and a sham. According to the Canadian Wheat Board, the Americans are depressing grain prices and robbing Canada of its international grain sales. During the negotiating process, the United States adopted its controversial Farm Bill specifically designed to lower grain prices. Since then the prices of agricultural commodities have been in a free fall.

After the Prime Minister's preliminary trade deal was signed, the U.S. still utilized its Export Enhancement Program on at least three separate occasions with Russia, China, and Algeria. If that was not enough, we now learn that the United States is at it again, this time auctioning off 22 million tonnes of wheat to be sold at rock-bottom prices, creating further damage to Canadian agriculture.

It should be quite obvious to the Prime Minister and to the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) that this trade deal is not worth the paper it is written on. The Minister for International Trade would have been better off forgetting about eating chicken that day because the deal is awful.

POLITICAL PARTIES

SOCIALISTS' NEW FUND-RAISING SYSTEM

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the socialists have decided to resort to a new financing system: they will hold a draw for tickets, but the tickerts will be free. I am not surprised. Who would spend money for the socialists except for labour unions, and it is not even their money, it is the money of the workers.

For this draw, the socialists will mail householders. I can hardly wait to see who will pay for the stamps, Mr. Speaker. The idea behind the draw is to urge people to write to the socialists because this adds names to their mailing lists, at least in Canada, because in Quebec things are different.

They will not have their small lottery in Quebec because they have not had time to understand the law in Quebec. This is why they have no roots in Quebec. As to other Canadians, if you want to go and see your distant cousins in Australia or New Zealand, do not hesitate, fill in the forms the socialists will be mailing to you. This way you will have an opportunity to dance along with other minor fringe socialists who can afford to live in this capitalist system which has the money to support you.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Throughout the trade discussions, the Prime Minister insisted that medicare and social programs were not on the table. However, that is not what Canadians are saying. Last week we heard from the National Anti-Poverty Organization which says that existing and future social programs are threatened by this deal. Yesterday we heard the president of the British Columbia Business Council, a supporter of the deal, saying medicare could be eroded. How could the Prime Minister sign a deal which even his own supporters say could threaten medicare?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the Hon. Member's question, of course, is that the Prime Minister did no such thing. There is nothing in the free trade agreement that involves social programs, as we have consistently told this House. I think what are being expressed are the fears which are being aroused by the Opposition by claiming something is in the free trade agreement which is not.

[Translation]

QUERY WHY SOCIAL PROGRAM GUARANTEE NOT WRITTEN INTO CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, although the Minister has given some explanations on this matter to the Canadian people, she has failed to mention any written safeguards to guarantee the future of Medicare, the Old Age Security pensions, as well as our social and daycare programs. Why did the Prime Minister sign an agreement which does not give any assurances in writing that these programs will not be included in any future agreement between Canada and the United States? Why did the government not get written guarantees in this agreement to protect these programs?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the answer is the same as I gave to the first question. Social programs are not in the free trade agreement in any way at all. It is only because of the Opposition's attempts to confuse Canadians by insisting that social programs are in the agreement that people are being misled.

• (1420)

The allegations are coming from the Opposition. The allegations are wrong, and the Opposition will have to account to Canadians for their fearmongering.

FUTURE OF SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would like an answer from the Prime Minister if he feels—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East has the floor.

Ms. Copps: I believe that the health care of Canadians is an issue that should be of concern to the Prime Minister.

I wish to ask the Prime Minister specifically why there is absolutely nothing in these very glossy blue documents that are being sent out by his Party to guarantee the future of medicare in this country, the future of child care, the future of pregnancy leave, and the future of pay equity.

Why were senior citizens' pensions not protected by a specific written guarantee that they would never be subject to U.S. anti-dumping or U.S. countervail in the future?

Why did the Government not get written guarantees to help Canadians?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the reason that those programs are not in the free trade agreement is that the Prime Minister stated from day one that social programs would not be involved in any way in discussions over free trade.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caccia: That is not what the Medical Association is saying.

Miss Carney: In terms of the social concerns, may I point out that today the new statistics from Stats Canada show that there has been a further drop in the number of Canadians living below the poverty line. Since the Government came to power half a million Canadians have now been moved off the poverty line rolls, and the numbers in the senior citizen category are the lowest percentage ever on record.

That is the social performance of this Government.

SALES OF UNITED STATES SUBSIDIZED WHEAT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns a group in our society who have increasing numbers on the poverty line, and I am speaking of the farmers of Canada.

For the third time since the Prime Minister's trade deal was signed on October 4, Canadians have witnessed actions by the United States Government designed to steal our customers and to lower wheat prices in Canada.

According to the Wheat Board, the United States is now in the process of auctioning at a loss, subsidized by the taxpayers of the United States, some 22 million tonnes of wheat. What specific action has the Prime Minister taken, or does he intend to take in order to protest this breach of his own trade deal?

Is this not proof that his trade deal is not worth the paper that it is written on?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that this is not a new program. It is something that the United States has been doing on an ongoing basis for the past two and a half years. It is one that we do not approve of, and one that we object to very strongly. All Members should know that this morning our Ambassador in Washington registered those objections with the U.S. Secretary of Agriculture.

If he is interested, the Hon. Member should also know that last week the European Community released approximately 1 million tonnes of intervention wheat for sale to the Soviet Union. We object strongly to that. We think that the subsidy associated with that sale was something like $200 a tonne. We do not like it, and we are doing everything we can to protest, to let both the Europeans and the Americans know that we think it is counter-productive.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, that is most reassuring, and the farmers will be quite pleased. That will bring them a lot more money today or tomorrow.

[Translation]

QUERY WHY GOVERNMENT DOES NOT TERMINATE AGREEMENT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address again the Prime Minister to whom I directed my previous question. Considering that, as stated on page 36 of the Agreement, the Parties must be careful not to undermine the spirit of the Free Trade Agreement in the period prior to its entry into force; that the Americans have demonstrated on many occasions their unwillingness to respect the preliminary agreement, why should we believe that they intend to respect the final agreement and why does the Prime Minister not put an end to this farce as soon as possible by tearing up this agreement?

• (1425)

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, possibly the Hon. Member would care to refer to the "Elements of the Agreement" and point out that it is the first time, in any trade agreement, that the two parties have agreed between themselves that there shall be no export subsidies in this area. That is a very important move forward in advancing agricultural trade reform.

REQUEST THAT DEADLINE FOR SIGNING BE EXTENDED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister for International Trade. It has now been confirmed that the Canadian and American officials will not meet for one final time, presumably, until November 30, to get conclusive wording on the agreement.

Considering that this virtually guarantees that the committees of the House and the House itself will not have adequate time to consider this important document, which the Prime Minister has described as being the most significant deal in the history of the planet, if not the universe, will the Minister undertake to do the serious work that ought to be done in the circumstances and appeal directly to the United States for a minimum two-month extension in the deadline?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the negotiators have broken to honour the American Thanksgiving weekend. They will be back for the final cleaning up of the few remaining details at the beginning of the week, and we expect the report to be released shortly.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Americans have a lot to be thankful for from this Government under the circumstances. No one is questioning the appropriateness of the Americans having their Thanksgiving and that being a reason for the delay of the wording; that is totally understandable. However, what the people of Canada want—what British Columbians demonstrated for yesterday and what people in other provinces want—is the opportunity to study the agreement seriously. That is what ought to be done.

In that context I want to ask a question of the Minister. Given the importance that she has attached to this, and that the whole Government has attached to it, why is it unreasonable to ask for a minimum two-month extension so that the committee can do its job, so that Members of Parliament can do their job, and so that Canadians can understand what is involved?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we feel that there is ample time in the parliamentary process to continue the kind of debate that was started in the Macdonald Commission, with a $20 million, two-year discussion of the issue; in the Senate commissions; in consultation with the SAGITs; in all the consultative mechanisms which have been established and which will take place in the future.

May I add that Canadians have a lot to be thankful for from this Government, including the best performing economy in the entire western world.

If we do not get the benefits of a free trade agreement, it will be no thanks to those people on the other side of the House.

REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF AGREED PORTIONS OF TEXT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): The Minister is her usual charming self. Mr. Speaker, we understand that something like 80 per cent to 90 per cent of the wording has been agreed upon, and that the Premiers will be meeting elsewhere in Canada this week and would like to have a look at what has been prepared. Will the Government at least show them the courtesy of taking the wording, which has been agreed upon on both sides, to that meeting so that they can have a look at it, and release it simultaneously to the committee so that other Canadians can at least have a look at what has been agreed upon? Will she do that?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has been scrupulous in bringing all information before the First Ministers. Through seven or eight meetings for seven or eight hours a time he has presented state of the art reports on these negotiations, and he will be doing that at this First Ministers' meeting.

If I could just comment on the personal remark made by the Leader of the New Democratic Party, I can say that charm isn't everything, and I cite as evidence the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

NORTHERN ONTARIO DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

FILLING OF ADVISORY BOARD VACANCIES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is for my hon. friend, the Deputy Prime Minister. It arises out of an answer given in the House yesterday concerning the Northern Ontario Regional Development Program called FEDNOR.

According to the Minister's reply yesterday, there are still four more appointments to be made to the FEDNOR advisory board.

• (1430)

An Hon. Member: None of your friends will make it.

Mr. Penner: None of my friends will make it, says the Hon. Member. That is what I want to ask about exactly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Friends in high places.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Penner: I want to know whether among those four remaining positions there will be representatives on the board from the native community of northern Ontario, from organized labour and, if I may be so bold, will there be anybody at all from the constituency of Cochrane—Superior?

When the Minister answers, will he tell the House in order to be considered for one of these appointments is it absolutely necessary to be a card carrying PC? If that is so, it will be a very short list.

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, that question was answered yesterday by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. He said:

> In filling the last four vacancies, we will ensure that we complete that composition so that it truly reflects the social, ethnic and cultural realities of northern Ontario.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, if that question had been answered yesterday, I would not have asked it again today. We did not get an answer yesterday. The answer we got was very vague and uncertain and that is why I ask the question again today.

PROGRAM APPLICANTS—POLITICAL AFFILIATION QUERY

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Let me ask another question on the same theme, Mr. Speaker. Many people who are considering applying for this regional development program are asking the question: is it necessary that they belong to the Progressive Conservative Party in order to be considered by an advisory board made up almost exclusively of Tories?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, I guess for anyone who cares to look at the facts he or she will see what the Hon. Member's preoccupation is. He talks about native economic development. In the Ontario region we have approved 49 projects worth $60 million. That was done under this Government under the Native Economic Development Program.

If the Member cares to check with those who have applied, he will find that none of them were asked about their political affiliation.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—COMMITTEE HEARINGS IN VANCOUVER

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade who will know that hearings were held in Vancouver yesterday for a province representing three million people. By definition the people on Vancouver Island were shut out of the hearings. The people of northern British Columbia, central British Columbia, the Kootenay region and, indeed, the upper Fraser Valley were all shut out.

As a Member representing British Columbia, does the Minister feel that in a province of three million people, very diverse in its economy, that hearing a handful of representatives in one city is doing justice to the process of democracy?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I understand that there was an all-Party agreement on the representation of the people who appeared before the committee. I am told that they agreed to divide the time available evenly between the Government and the opposition Parties. Should the Member find this arrangement unsatisfactory, presumably he should take it up with his own people who did the organizing.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS IN ALBERTA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. We want the Minister to know that this process is a sham and we opposed it from the very beginning. Each day as it progresses we are more convinced of that being the case.

My supplementary question is with regard to the hearings today in the Province of Alberta. At noon today we found out that a number of groups, including three women's groups, were told that they were not able to make presentations, that their views on the free trade deal would not be heard during the hearings in Alberta.

Considering the fact that the Government of Canada felt it was appropriate to take up to four weeks to hold hearings on the changes to the Crow rate, does the Minister not feel that on an important trade deal, which the Prime Minister has said is the most important trade deal in Canadian history, the Government should continue to take more than two weeks to hold hearings?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): I am really surprised, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member would consider four weeks as too much time to devote to the Crow rate when it was so important to the interests of western Canada. I just fail to understand why the Member does not understand the importance of this process to Canadians in general.

I have already said that there has been a lot of opportunity for Canadians to participate. There will be a lot of opportunity for Canadians to participate. The actual program that has been evolved for the committee hearings was arranged in consultation and in agreement with his own Party.

FISHERIES

NEWFOUNDLAND INSHORE FISHERY—TASK FORCE REPORT—REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Task Force on Ground Fish for the Newfoundland Inshore Fishery, otherwise known as TGNIF, has presented its report to the Minister of Fisheries. It covers the cod stock in 2J3KL which is all the northern cod stock all along the coast of Newfoundland and the coastline of Labrador, a portion of which stock a consortium from the Prime Minister's riding stretching right down into northern New Brunswick wants, along with the Government of France.

Everybody wants to know what is in this report. Since the Deputy Ministers are meeting on the twenty-seventh of this month and the Atlantic Ground Fish Advisory Committee is meeting on the thirtieth of this month to make decisions based on this report, where is the report? Why is it so late? When will a copy be given to the Government of Newfoundland?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will be very pleased to know that on or about November 19, I believe it was, the Minister of Fisheries had presented to him a summary of the findings of that report from Dr. Alverson, chairman of the task force, and two of the other four members attended on the Minister of Fisheries to give him a summary. There are well over 100 pages of technical writing. It is being translated into French on an aussitôt que possible basis. For the Hon. Member's benefit I will translate. It means on "as fast as possible basis". I do not think the Hon. Member is as fluent as I am.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: In which language?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I do not think he is fluent at all, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Alverson is going to present a summary of the task group's findings to a special meeting of the AGAC—one certainly has to know one's initials to be in this business—on November 30.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I believe the Deputy Ministers are meeting and they will be given a verbal report. I believe that the Minister of Fisheries himself will probably bump into the Minister of Fisheries from Newfoundland during the First Ministers' Conference, and during that bumping occasion he will advise the Minister of Fisheries for Newfoundland in substance what is in the report. But the hon. gentleman will have to wait a few more days because, as I say, aussitôt que possible.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, where is the Minister of Fisheries when this Government deserves to be fried?

TRANSLATION OF REPORT—PROTECTION OF COD STOCK

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, TGNIF does not just mean the Task Force on Ground Fish for the Newfoundland Inshore Fishery—

An Hon. Member: What does it mean?

Mr. Baker: It also stands for "Thank God it is not in French".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: Now they can stall it some more to cook up a translation, but they cannot cook up the facts.

Will the Minister verify that in this report it says that there should be no further catching effort of northern cod stock and that, furthermore, the projections of the scientists that have been used in setting the quotas were overly optimistic, over estimated and, in most cases, erroneous? Will the Minister now say "no" to these people who want to exploit the northern cod further, and "yes" to the inshore fishermen who have known all along that this stock needs to be protected?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, certainly Marlon Brando will not be missed while the hon. gentleman is around.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: My response to the Member's statement about Translation is incroyable. It is incredible.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: It is incredible that any Member of this House today, particularly a Member of the Liberal Party, would say "Thank God it is not in French".

I say on this side of the House that we are not going to present any report to any province or to this Parliament, or to any Member of Parliament, that is not in both official languages.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ouellet: He is talking about the French from France.

Mr. Crosbie: We say thank God, merci mon Dieu, it will be in both languages, English and French.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FREE TRADE

POSSIBILITY FOR QUEBECERS TO EXPRESS THEMSELVES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Does he really believe that by allowing the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade to hear eight witnesses six and a half million Quebec men and women, from Rouyn-Noranda, Rimouski, and the Saguenay will have ample opportunity to voice their views on the most important trade deal in the history of the world? Is he not making a mockery of the democratic process?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Quebec men and women are already voicing their views on the free trade issue thanks to the Parliamentary Commissions set up by the Quebec and Federal Government, and they will continue to do so. The Hon. Member is certainly aware that Quebecers, from Mr. Bourassa to Mr. Parizeau, have made it known that they are in favour of free trade as an indispensable tool for the future development of Quebec. If my Hon. friend wants to be heard, either in Ontario or in Quebec, he will have every opportunity to do so before. TIME SPENT ON CONSIDERATION OF AGREEMENT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I think even the Prime Minister would agree that having the Premiers and Members of Parliament talk about what is supposed to be the greatest trade deal in the history of the world is quite different—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCurdy: If it is so great, history will tell. If it is so great, why fear the ordinary people? Does the Prime Minister want to have it recorded in the history books that the Canadian people and their representatives were allowed to spend less time than the average family spends determining whether or not to buy a car or even a pair of Guccis?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, may I point out that the time allocated for committee hearings, in conjunction with consultations that have gone on, including the many First Ministers' conferences, is infinitely more time than was ever made available by the previous Government for trade treaties such as the Auto Pact.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT DIVISION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Industrial Development, I turn to the Prime Minister. The Government of Canada has recently terminated funding for the Richmond County Development Corporation in Nova Scotia, and now in industrial Cape Breton a decision is pending on the future of the industrial development division of the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

Will the Prime Minister end the uncertainty and anguish and give a clear and unequivocal undertaking to the people of Cape Breton that the mandate of the industrial development division of Devco will be enlarged and not reduced, and that sufficient monies will be put in place to implement needed and useful programs so that area of Canada will have an economic base upon which to grow and thrive?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister I will take notice of the very specific question the Hon. Member has asked and I shall arrange for an answer to his question. I would like to point out, however, that in Cape Breton in the last three years there has been a drop in unemployment of a full 5 points. That means that many jobs have been created there.

The measures taken including the Cape Breton development plan, tax measures, and the Atlantic Opportunities Agency are all initiatives that have benefited the Cape Breton area immensely. I am sure the Hon. Member will acknowledge that.

QUERY CONCERNING CONSULTATIONS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Regional Industrial Development has said publicly that a decision will be made before the end of January on the future of the industrial development division. One would assume that a consultation process would have been put in place. Will the Minister now place on the record the names of the individuals that Minister has consulted, the names of the groups he has consulted and the names of the groups and organizations he intends to consult in the future?

Will he also tell us whether any private sector consulting firm has been retained in order to do an assessment of the industrial development division of Devco? In essence, the people of Cape Breton wish to know who the sources of information are and the kinds of information that are going to the Minister on a vital part of their economy, namely, the industrial development division of Devco.

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, I take note of the many, many questions the Hon. Member has asked. We shall provide him with an answer as soon as the Minister returns.

IMMIGRATION

NICARAGUA—POSSIBLE ADMISSION OF MEMBERS OF CONTRA FORCES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Immigration. In view of the recent announcements, and considering the possibility of accepting Contras from Central America as refugees in Canada as part of the peace settlement in Central America, will the Government make a clear distinction between those Nicaraguans who simply oppose their Government on the one hand and, on the other hand, those who virtually have war criminal records? Will the Government ensure that the latter are not admitted to Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, the comment made by my hon. colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, was purely hypothetical and in no way committed the Government. I would like to give the Hon. Member the assurance that our policy with regard to refugees is quite clear. We have never admitted terrorists or persons guilty of war crimes, and that policy will not change.

APPLICATION OF IMMIGRATION GUIDELINES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary for her reply—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Heap: I beg your pardon, Mr. Speaker. I thank the Hon. Minister of State for her reply, but I would like to ask a further question.

In view of the fact that events are moving very quickly in Central America and that what is hypothetical may shortly become actual, will the Minister assure the House that before decisions are made to bring any of the Contras to Canada, the Minister will report to the House the guidelines and methods the Minister and the Immigration Commission will use to ensure that no former Contras who have committed war crimes such as the willful murder of non-combatant men, women and children, will be brought to Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I may add for the benefit of the Hon. Member that the Secretary of State for External Affairs will certainly be advising Canadians when he returns about any arrangements that could be made in this kind of situation.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—REFUSAL OF SASKATCHEWAN GOVERNMENT'S ADVERTISEMENT

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. I would like to know what is being done about the decision of the CBC to refuse to run ads sponsored by the Saskatchewan Government regarding free trade. Will the CBC ban all statements about free trade on all CBC stations in Canada in order to be fair?

Miss Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the advertising standards of the CBC are determined by its board of directors, including the rules governing controversial broadcasting and controversial advertising. In fact those rules do not permit advertisers to buy time for the broadcast of controversial material.

I would explain that controversial advertising is defined as "a matter of public interest about which there is significant difference of opinion and which is or is likely to be the subject of public debate". I am informed that the ads in question were reviewed according to CBC's controversial advertising policy and they were found to be unacceptable.

NICARAGUA—MINISTER'S VISIT—UNITED STATES SUPPORT FOR CONTRA FORCES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Yesterday in Nicaragua our foreign Minister visited a Canadian aid project which has been attacked by the U.S. backed Contras three times in recent years, which attacks resulted in 11 deaths. However, the Minister failed once again to ask the American Government to stop funding military attacks on civilian aid projects. When will the Government publicly state its opposition to this ill-conceived American policy, or is it afraid it might upset the U.S. and thereby lose the free trade agreement?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I believe that on his visit to Central America, the Secretary of State for External Affairs gave a clear demonstration of the Canadian Government's policy which is to try and find a way to bring peace to this region. I am convinced that the Secretary of State will do everything in his power to try and contribute to this peace operation.

AMOUNT OF CANADIAN AID TO HONDURAS AND NICARAGUA

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not answer my question but I will try another one.

Yesterday the Minister announced a $1 million aid program for Nicaragua. We are told that on Thursday he will announce an $18 million aid program for Honduras. Since Canada is already giving more to Honduras and that country is dragging its feet on the peace plan, why did Canada not give at least the same amount to Nicaragua which has greater need due to the Contra war and the American blockade?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that I do not have readily available the exact amount that the Canadian Government has provided to Nicaragua. That country is one of the largest recipients of Canadian aid in that area. It is something in the neighbourhood of $40 million over the last number of years. Some $4.5 million over and above that has gone to Nicaragua via NGOs. However, I would be happy to provide my hon. friend with specific information on such an important question.

Regarding the initiatives of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I am sure my hon. friend will agree that this is an extremely difficult area and extremely complex climate. The Minister, because of his promotion of an increased aid policy over a number of years and a clear assertion that we espouse an approach to Central America different from some of our allies, and the very helpful initiatives he is taking in Central America this very day, I think deserves the congratulations of all Members of the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

OLYMPIC GAMES

TELEVISING OF CALGARY WINTER GAMES IN FRENCH

Mr. Léo Duguay (Saint-Boniface): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. The Minister is aware that I have been trying for a long time to get the Winter Games televised in French on the same basis as they will be in English. Could the Minister inform the House whether she has been able to conclude an agreement and so correct a situation that is unacceptable to Francophones outside Quebec?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, in addition to measures we have already taken, I am happy to inform you that the French network of the CBC will broadcast coverage of the opening and closing ceremonies, as well as a daily one-hour summary. This was made possible thanks to the financial assistance of the CBC, the Olympic Committee and the Department of Communications, and the co-operation of TVA, CANCOM and CRTC.

I would like to give special thanks to all members of the Joint Committee on Official Languages for their suggestions in this regard.

STATUS OF WOMEN

COURT CHALLENGE TO LANGUAGE TRAINING POLICY

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the status of women. This weekend 35 organizations endorsed a court challenge to the federal Government's discriminatory language policy. That challenge is based on the fact that many immigrant women are denied language training and this in turn increases their isolation and confines them to low-paying jobs that do not require communication skills.

In view of this court challenge, will the Minister see that the eligibility criteria are changed so that the language training necessary for women and their full integration into the economy is available, and thereby save us all these expensive legal costs?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the language program is designed to help new immigrants regardless of gender. Under the Canadian Jobs Strategy over $60 million is provided for labour training for those wishing to enter the labour force. Some 85 per cent of that was used by new immigrants in 1986 and 1987. Over the past five years we have provided language training for more than 90,000 new arrivals in the labour market.

The Secretary of State provides funding for language training for citizenship purposes. Immigrant non-working spouses not destined for the labour force can take advantage of these programs.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I think this House deserves more respect than just having the Minister read an answer. There is a court challenge to the discrimination against women in language training. Is the Minister willing or not to allow these people to become part of our daily workforce?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, quite simply, the language training under the Canadian Jobs Strategy is intended for those being prepared for the labour market. Employment and Immigration Canada has implemented a program called Settlement Language Training which has been very helpful to those not being prepared for the labour market, and we will continue that program across Canada again this year.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—IMPRISONMENT OF CANADIAN CITIZEN WITHOUT BEING CHARGED

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. A Canadian citizen, Mr. Balkar Singh, has been imprisoned in India for the last month although he has not been charged with any offence. Will the Minister tell the House what steps the Government is taking to ensure that Mr. Singh is either released, if there is no evidence against him, or given a fair and quick trial?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, our High Commission in New Delhi did advise us that Indian foreign affairs representatives had confirmed that Mr. Singh has been arrested and is being kept in jail. Of course we—I mean departmental officials—have so advised the family members and they are being kept aware of the latest developments.

Our High Commissioner told us today that consular access has been authorized and that probably tomorrow a High Commission agent will be allowed to see Mr. Singh in jail.

I can assure my colleague that I will be pleased to keep her informed of new developments as we receive more information from our High Commission.

REQUEST THAT FAMILY BE INFORMED OF DEVELOPMENTS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for that answer. May I also ask her if she will ensure that Mr. Singh's family is kept fully informed of developments? He has a wife and three young children in Toronto who were expecting him back from a visit to a sick relative.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I should like to reassure my colleague and tell her that so far the family has been made aware of new developments by agents of the Department of External Affairs, and I personally will see to it that the agents continue to bring any new development to the attention of the family.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

FUND IN DEFICIT—REQUEST FOR AMENDMENTS TO LEGISLATION

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds, whose announcement last Friday of the $693 million final payment under the Western Grain Stabilization Program was well received. The problem is that the fund is now something in the order of $1.5 billion in deficit. It is obvious that the present levies will not even pay the interest on that amount.

What are the Minister's plans relative to a possible increase in levies? Is he considering amending the legislation in order to allow those 15 per cent of producers who are not in the plan to get in? Is he also considering any extension of the plan to cover crops other than those presently covered?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, yes, we are considering amendments to the legislation to encourage producers who are not now members to join. We are also looking at amendments to include some of the smaller crops, pulse crops, especially those not now part of the plan.

We are looking at two or three ways to get additional funding for the plan. We will be considering raising the levy. We will be considering the possibility of a government write-down. We will also be looking to the provinces to see if they are interested in participating in fulfilling their responsibility under the Constitution which names agriculture as a joint responsibility.

AGRICULTURE

WORLD WHEAT PRICES—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds. He has already been asked a question with regard to the offering to the market by the United States Government of their surplus wheat through auction. The Wheat Board has been warning that this will have a negative effect on the price of wheat in particular.

Can the Minister tell us what impact these sales will have on world wheat prices? Can he give us figures on what will happen to wheat prices?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, I cannot. That is a very difficult question. The Hon. Member is a farmer and should know that all kinds of factors go into determining international wheat prices and that they are very difficult to predict. I think it is safe to say, however, that any effect it does have will be a negative effect on the market.

That is unfortunate because there is a reduction of over-all stocks of wheat in the world. We believe, that without the foolishness which is going on between the European Community and the Americans, there would be a chance for at least the start of a recovery in over-all international wheat prices.

INTERNATIONAL TALKS—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, since the Mulroney-Reagan bilateral agreement has failed to stop this kind of action by the United States, what action is the Government proposing in talks with international groups to eliminate these practices? What sort of penalties is the Government proposing in these cases?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, the Minister for International Trade will be attending a GATT meeting on the weekend. We intend to let both the Europeans and the Americans know, in very strong words, of our displeasure with this. In the meantime the federal Government is very strongly supporting sales by the Canadian Wheat Board and other sales agencies. The Minister for International Trade will be pursuing some issues internationally.

With the leadership of the Prime Minister the Government has provided a record amount of financial assistance to Canadian grain and oilseeds producers during a very difficult time. An indication of that is the record final payment under the Western Grain Stabilization Act which was announced last week. I am sure that the Member and his neighbours, who are farmers, are very well pleased with the size of that payment.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question in Question Period. The Hon. Member for Papineau.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON CANADIAN MARINE TRANSPORTATION INDUSTRY

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport who told me on Friday that he was disappointed that he could not persuade the U.S. to agree to change the protective provisions of the Jones Act. He said that the Government would not sign the transportation annex if it will undermine Canada's ability to protect and advance Canada's interests.

Can the Minister tell me if the negotiations are completed with regard to the maritime issue? If that is the case, what advances in Canada's interest does he foresee being contained in the transportation annex?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the House knows, the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement is not yet complete and ready for signature. That includes, of course, any annex there might be on transportation matters. If transportation matters are included they will certainly be in the interests of Canada.

As I have already explained to the House, the issue of air transportation will not be included. It will be dealt with through bilateral agreements.

We attempted to persuade the Americans to change their protective cabotage approach in their own coasting trade. They would not do that. We would not change our position on culture. We would not change our position on farm marketing agreements. We would not change our position on regional development subsidization, and the Americans would not change their position on cabotage under the Jones Act. That is the position.

REQUEST FOR SPEEDY PASSAGE OF BILL C-52

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is repeating what he said the other day.

Mr. Crosbie: Your question is the same.

Mr. Ouellet: The Minister indicated clearly that we have no advantage because the airline industry has been excluded. Therefore, we will not win anything in this area. He is now telling us that we will get no advantage in the marine sector either because he has not done his job properly.

Since the final transportation annex will contain a section reserved for exceptions and exemptions, can the Minister assure the House that Canada's coasting trade, as laid out in Bill C-52, will in fact be exempted? Can he at least try to ensure this? If he cannot ensure this, is he now prepared to move quickly with Bill C-52 and have the proper amendments made immediately to protect this sector of our economy before the trade deal is signed with the Americans?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member and so many of his Party get up every day and ask the same questions and then are amazed when they get the same answers. They get the same answers because the answers we give are the correct and solidly factual answers. Therefore, as long as he continues to ask me the same question I will continue to give him la même chose.

Bill C-52 has received second reading and has been referred to a legislative committee. We will certainly proceed with that Bill. That Bill contains further protection, if any is needed, for the Canadian coasting trade. We certainly intend to proceed with it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On a point of order, the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism and Minister of State for Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Valcourt).

Mr. Valcourt: Madam Speaker, I provided some information during question period and I would not want to mislead the House.

When referring to the native people economic development program for the Ontario region, I quoted the wrong figures. In fact, under this program in the Ontario region, 67 projects have been approved for a total value of $22,268,006.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I thank the Minister for his correction to Hansard.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. Dewar:

> That this House condemn the government for its signing of a trade agreement with the United States that, amongst other things:
> (a) fails to consider the disproportionate effect on women, and especially the loss of jobs in the service sector where women are concentrated;
> (b) will give up provincial control over energy resources in a continental energy market; and
> (c) fails to allow for adequate consultation with Canadians in all provinces and territories before committing us to profound changes not only in our economy, but our political sovereignty, cultural distinctiveness and generally, our ability to run our own affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When the House took recess at one o'clock the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) had completed his remarks.

[English]

I will now recognize Members who wish to question the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) or comment on his speech.

Mr. Caldwell: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. The Liberal Party seems to have something against supply management marketing boards and sides with the processors who say that they will not be able to exist under the free trade agreement. Could the Hon. Member explain why they should not worry about that under this agreement? Why do the Liberals wish to protect the processors rather than the farmers of Canada?

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, a commitment was made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) at the outset of these negotiations that the marketing systems and their underpinnings which were in place in this country would not be in jeopardy in the free trade agreement. That is another commitment made by the Prime Minister which has been kept. Our supply management system remains intact.

We have helped the processors in this agreement as well by removing tariffs on products exported to the United States so that they can expand their production here. We are continually working with the food processors under their sectoral advisory committee which I discussed in my speech. We will continue to work very closely with them. There is a move toward one-price wheat with compensation for the farmers. When that is accomplished it will also help our food processors.

Everyone wins under this agreement. I met with a milk producer the other night who asked me what good the milk marketing board and his quota for milk are when milk can flow freely across the border from the United States. I explained to him that that cannot happen. The quota systems and other underpinnings of the supply management system are still in place. As a matter of fact, under the agreement we have reserved the right, if it is the desire of the industries, to establish new marketing programs.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. It is most difficult at this time for the Chair to hear the Hon. Member. I wonder how other Members can hear him. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary may conclude his remarks.

• (1510)

Mr. Marchi: Do we have to listen?

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, people in the Opposition do not want to hear it anyway because they cannot stand to hear the truth, or the facts.

I have essentially concluded my remarks to the Hon. Member on the supply management question. I simply want to assure him that it is in place in this country.

Mr. Caldwell: I thank the Parliamentary Secretary for clearing up that matter. I am sure the people of Canada feel much better that at least our Party is standing up for the supply management marketing boards and marketing boards in general.

However, I noticed in a newspaper clipping last week that the Hon. Member who proposed this motion was at a meeting where they were talking about the Auto Pact. I am not sure that she completely understands how the Auto Pact will work under the free trade agreement because she did not point out at the meeting that the Canadian content remains at 60 per cent with the big three. She seemed to indicate to the audience that it would be 50 per cent North American for the big three as well. Will the Parliamentary Secretary clarify that?

Mr. McDermid: I thank the Hon. Member for his question because I know he comes from an area that is deeply concerned about the auto industry, as is my community of Brampton.

First, only the big three will belong to the Auto Pact, according to this agreement. Second, we maintain the safeguards which demand that for every car they sell in Canada they must build a car in Canada. Let me point out that at this time they are 186 per cent over that requirement.

The requirement of 60 per cent Canadian content under the Auto Pact remains in place. As a matter of fact, the Canadian content in automobiles being manufactured here under the Auto Pact is at 70 per cent or 71 per cent.

In addition, we have said that if those automobile companies from offshore that are manufacturing either in the United States or Canada want duty-free access across the board between our two countries, they must have 50 per cent North American content in automobiles. That 50 per cent North American requirement pertains to labour and materials. The 60 per cent Canadian content under the Auto Pact not only refers to that, but also to advertising costs and many other things to make up the 60 per cent Canadian content. On the other hand, the foreign auto manufacturers here and in the United States have a true 50 per cent North American content requirement.

Our auto parts manufacturers in Canada can compete and have proven that. They have increased their share of auto parts in North America from 9 per cent to 14 per cent. They will be able to compete even more in the North American market with the duty removed. We believe that will expand jobs in the auto parts industry.

I know that the auto parts companies with whom I have discussed this in my particular community heartily support the agreement and look forward to selling parts, not only to the big three but to those manufacturers from other countries that are assembling and building cars here.

Mr. Caldwell: Madam Speaker, again I thank the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary for that answer. Could he explain why the American parts manufacturers seem to be opposing this deal?

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, it is interesting to observe the various groups in the United States that are opposing the free trade agreement that has been reached between Canada and the United States. One of them is the auto parts manufacturers in the United States who are petitioning Congress not to pass the agreement because they believe Canada got the better of the deal. When I see that, together with the coalition of energy companies in the United States that are opposing the agreement because Canada got the better deal, I know that we are on the right track. I am absolutely positive of that when I see that the AFL and CIO said at their meeting in Miami that Canada got the better of the deal and will oppose the agreement in the United States.

It is interesting to note who is opposing this particular agreement and who is saying that Canada got the better of the deal. I believe we both got a good deal because it is a win-win situation. It will be important for both countries, but especially for Canada where it will create jobs and assure a better way of life in Canada by making stronger, more proud and more efficient Canadians.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity to take part in this debate on some aspects of the arrangement between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States, which some people misrepresent as a free trade deal.

The motion by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) states:

> That this House condemn the Government for its signing of a trade agreement with the United States that, amongst other things:
> (a) fails to consider the disproportionate effect on women, and especially the loss of jobs in the service sector where women are concentrated;
> (b) will give up provincial control over energy resources in a continental energy market; and
> (c) fails to allow for adequate consultation with Canadians in all provinces and territories before committing us to profound changes not only in our economy, but our political sovereignty, cultural distinctiveness and generally, our ability to run our own affairs.

Since it is a very large subject, I wish to comment particularly on two aspects of it which have been referred to earlier today, especially by some Hon. Members opposite.

I represent Spadina, which has a vigorous apparel industry, sometimes referred to as the garment, clothing or fashion industry. I want to comment on some things that have been happening there, as well as on some thoughts that have occurred not only to the trade unionists but also to the manufacturers.

Previously, it appeared that this was one of the sectors that strongly supported what was supposed to be the deal worked out between Canada and the United States. However, I found last week and the week before that now that the facts are beginning to come out, the Government is losing some of its supporters. The most notable one is the very chairman of the Sectoral Advisory Group for International Trade for the garment industry, Mr. Peter Nygard. Mr. Nygard is one of the larger manufacturers of clothing in Canada and understandably chaired that SAGIT. He is furious with the results.

He has been quoted both privately and publicly as saying that when the preliminary trade deal was unveiled last month a provision for quotas on imported fabrics blatantly discriminates against Canadian apparel manufacturers. He makes the point that Canadian manufacturers will get a ceiling of 50 million square yards of cotton and synthetic material in finished apparel going to the United States, and imports of woollen goods will be restricted to six million square yards, about three million garments.

The point is that the Canadian garment industry has been successfully selling about $100 million worth of exports to the United States, based on the expertise worked out in places like Montreal, Toronto, Guelph, Winnipeg and Vancouver.

• (1520)

There are only about 10 effective Canadian textile mills. There are about 250 American textile mills. Many good fabrics come from offshore. The Canadian industry has been able to sell to the United States a combination of imported and North American fabrics with Canadian design and workmanship. The same fabrics are available to the American industry but, nevertheless, Canada has been able to compete successfully. The effect of the free trade deal has been to face Canadian industrialists, the employers, with restrictions.

Mr. Nygard perceives that the Canadian manufacturers will lose 40 per cent to 50 per cent of the $100 million worth of garments now exported to the United States.

Mr. McDermid: Nonsense.

Mr. Heap: I hear the Hon. Member opposite saying it is nonsense. I am not surprised he says that because apparently there was an attempt to muzzle Mr. Nygard. He is reported as saying that he and Mr. Oscar Rajsky of the Forsyth Trading Company were urged by federal officials to back off criticisms of the pact. He said: "We were told it was not in our best interest to go public. They, the feds, held out hope that they could negotiate around a very awkward situation".

Mr. McDermid: Read the quote by Rajsky where he denied that. Be honest.

Mr. Heap: I have what the Sun provided. I do not answer for the quality of the Sun's reportage. I have the article and it does not quote Reisman.

It is not only Peter Nygard who is very dissatisfied, but Mr. Chris Kuzik the executive director of the Toronto Dress and Sports Wear Manufacturers' Guild, both in private conversation and his brief last week to the Ontario Government, has indicated he is very dissatisfied with the deal between our Prime Minister and the President of the United States.

For example, on page 2 of his brief to the Ontario Government he points out that wages and benefits of the employees within the guild are 40 per cent higher than they are in the southern United States. In the past, as has been pointed out, the main threat of imports to our industry has come from very low wage countries outside North America. This Government followed the pattern of the previous Government in allowing such a large amount of imports that the Canadian share of the market was reduced from about 70 per cent to about 50 per cent in a few years. However, the effect of this deal, according to Mr. Kuzik, would be to reduce the Canadian share further. He agrees with Mr. Nygard that 50 per cent of Canadian production will be affected or restricted by the deal which has been negotiated.

Mr. Kuzik particularly points out that, yes, the SAGIT was consulted. Mr. Nygard and his associates were consulted. They gave their recommendations. But he says:

> Through our SAGIT the industry recommended to the Canadian negotiators that given our relative small size and other difficulties, an asymmetric tariff phase out be negotiated. This calls for: the phase out of tariffs in textiles before apparel; the phase out of U.S. apparel tariffs before Canadian tariffs. This was not accomplished.

This is a very serious problem and what is expected, according to Mr. Kuzik in conversation, is that a good many of the small plants in small towns across the country will lose out as well as some of the new, young and imaginative designers in Toronto. He is also concerned about problems of labour adjustment. He knows his workers. There are about a dozen thousand workers in the industry and, as usual, about four-fifths of them are women. He points out that they are generally of a higher than average age for industrial work, with limited formal education and usually a lack of proficiency in any of Canada's official languages. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) referred to the defect in our language training programs as it regards housewives and many others who come in originally as spouses, even if they later enter the labour force.

Mr. Kuzik also adds that unfortunately there does not exist any general retraining capability in Ontario to assist the employees who will be affected. The federal Department of Manpower stopped supporting on-the-job training within companies and industry-wide training or retraining years ago. A major retraining school along Spadina Avenue in Toronto is long overdue. He further points out that in his observation, the adjustment is going to hurt a great many of the workers in the industry, and I quote:

> The reality I deal with is that with a plant closure, most higher wage workers have to take reductions to secure alternative employment. Through personal experiences involving hundreds of workers over many years, trade adjustment means to me lower wages for higher wage unionized workers, the opposite of what economists promise with free trade.

He refers to the training program again:

> In 1982, it was expanded to the Labour Adjustment Program, which last year helped about 5,700 clothing and textile workers generally over the age of 54 having a minimum of 10 years industry service. These workers, mostly women, were permitted to receive the equivalent of U.I.C. benefits until they reached age 65. This was a compassionate program—

He then points out that the program was cancelled August 17, 1986.

This brings me to points which have been made by one of the well known ethical teachers in our country, Bishop Remi De Roo. Several years ago he lead a group of Bishops of the Roman Catholic Church who made an important statement criticizing economic systems that generate unemployment, that is that they were going far beyond the "hand out" philosophy which some people imagined was the Christian approach to unemployment. He makes five specific ethical criticisms, that is, criticisms on the basis of the ethical teaching of the Roman Catholic Church. In conclusion he makes this point:

> In the final analysis, what is required is an intensive national search for alternative economic strategies.

This morning we heard someone call for alternative ideas. That is what Bishop Remi De Roo is proposing. He continues:

> To be certain, the world we live in today has become highly competitive. Yet, the options before us are not simply free trade or increased protectionism or trade wars. As an alternative, I believe we need to mount a more self-reliant, less export dependent economy, with planned and diversified trade initiatives, not only with the United States, but particularly with certain Third World countries who are striving to reorganize their own economies to serve the basic needs of their people.

The point that Bishop De Roo has made repeatedly is that the first concern of our economy and the first concern of the economies of those Third World countries should be to serve the people of the country rather than being, as he calls it, export driven. The submission further states:

> For Canada, this involves a national economic strategy that puts priority on achieving full employment, new investment priorities and incentives, revitalized universal programs, new forms of community ownership of industries, a revitalized public sector, and a progressive tax system.

• (1530)

In the few moments remaining, I wish to mention a few of the particulars which Bishop De Roo raised in his brief to the committee on free trade. One of the points that he has asked for is what he calls the recognition of the proper status of human labour. This applies specifically to the Roman Catholic Church but it is also agreed to by other churches. The submission states:

> The Church's social teachings emphasize the value and dignity in God's plan for Creation—Human labour, therefore, should not be treated as a commodity to be bought and sold in the market place . . . It is through the activity of work that people are able to exercise their creative spirit, utilize their human dignity and participate in the development of their society—human labour and the basic rights of working people should take priority over the maximization of profits and the accumulation of capital.

Bishop De Roo points out that this is the "priority of labour" principle.

What we are getting in the free trade deal is too narrow an emphasis on the operation only of the employers and the salesmen; too narrow an emphasis that tends to underestimate the problems that will be faced by workers in the transitions that may be forced by the trade deal.

Bishop De Roo reminds us that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) offered the prediction that half a million or more Canadians could lose their jobs. He also points out that in Quebec a study shows that 30,000 people in the textile industry alone are faced with potential job losses. Yet the federal Government's job creation program does not seem to be gearing up to take this into account.

As has been pointed out, not only by workers but also by manufacturers in Spadina, the Canadian Jobs Strategy does not take account of this type of restructuring. Too many of its programs are open only to someone who has been unemployed for six months or more.

The women and men who work in the garment industry are not wealthy enough to take a six-month holiday while they wait for retraining. From the Government's point of view, if they make the mistake of taking a job in between, then they disqualify themselves for the retraining program because they have broken their period of unemployment which the Government wishes them to maintain.

There are also certain industries in Canada which are likely to be extremely vulnerable. It is not only a few out-of-date buggy-whipped industries. For example, the Bishop suggests that forestry, textiles, clothing, leather and shoes, furniture, electrical products, food processing, automobiles, and services such as health care, day care, and services for the elderly are vulnerable to the changes that will flow from the proposed trade deal.

We have already had some suggestions of these events. The trade deal does not so much convert a situation from absolutely one thing to another, as to speed up certain tendencies. We have already seen tendencies, for example, American corporations taking over services such as child care, hospital services, and applying standards that are very different from the standards that have been built up by Canadians; standards of service and protection of the client whether it be the children in the day care or the patients in the hospitals; standards of services that are seen as a restriction on the profits of those corporations that come in to take over a hospital or a day care system in certain parts of the country.

We know that if we maintain or advance legislation that restricts the profit by protecting the standard of service to the service receiver, we stand in danger of being told that that is an unfair restriction on trade because it prevents the United States, or the American corporations, from making as much profit as they would expect to make in Canadian industry.

Therefore, the Bishop is also very much concerned with the question of social equality. The U.S. corporations generally consider that many of Canada's social programs such as medicare and unemployment insurance are a burden on the industry. In previous negotiations they have called them "unfair subsidies". We can expect that attitude to resurge and grow more aggressive under the free trade deal.

There is also the matter of regional development subsidies to one region. One American Government showed 55 Canadian Government programs, not all federal, which it considered unfair subsidies, which we considered appropriate regional assistance. There is probably only one type of regional assistance which the American corporations would approve of, and that would be the manufacture of military equipment. It may be suggested that the solution for unemployment in many parts of Canada will be to become part of the branch plant system for the American war industry. That is not acceptable to the majority of Canadians.

We also have the problems that have been previously referred to in agriculture, and perhaps it could even threaten the resolution of native land claims.

Those are only a few of the points that have been made both by industrialists in Toronto concerning the industry that they know intimately, and by Bishop Remi De Roo, one of the leading Bishops of the Roman Catholic Church in Canada. I hope that Hon. Members opposite will take warning from the information that those people have brought to us.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, I can say very seriously that a great deal of what the Hon. Member has stated today is totally unfounded and, in some instances, is totally unfair. I especially wish to mention the Peter Nygard situation.

If the Hon. Member were honest and fair, he would have mentioned that there was an accusation made in that particular newspaper article from which he quoted that people were pressured not to appear before the committee. Mr. Nygard was not available for comment because at the time he was in Barbados. The other gentleman mentioned in that article stated that there was absolutely no pressure from the Government at any time. That is contained in that same article. If the Hon. Member were fair in his presentation, he would have read that quote into Hansard.

We must understand why Mr. Nygard is upset with the agreement. The agreement states that garment makers in Canada cannot bring in material from offshore, make it into clothes, and then ship it into the United States. There is a limit as to how much can be brought in from offshore, manufactured into garments, and shipped into the United States.

What we are doing here is helping the Canadian textile companies. If the Hon. Member is saying that what should happen in this agreement is that there should be unfettered access by the textile manufacturing companies around the world to Canada to manufacture clothes and then ship them to the United States duty free, and forget our textile manufacturers in Canada, then let him stand up and say so.

I might also remind the Hon. Member that the same holds true the other way. There are limits on American companies producing garments out of Third World material or fabric coming from other than the United States. It is a quid pro quo. The free trade agreement is not designed to be channeling things in from offshore, doing something with them, and then sending them down to the United States. That is not what it is about. I understand Mr. Nygard's concern. He would love to have unfettered availability of fabric from offshore; I understand that.

• (1540)

Once he understands what Mr. Nygard is concerned about, I think the Hon. Member, in all fairness, would have to admit that in the agreement we have protected textile purchasers in Canada and have allowed them to expand their operations, because they can compete very well with American textile operations.

Mr. Boudria: They cannot.

Mr. McDermid: Many people in the textile industry say that they can. The Hon. Member was in the House this morning when I quoted all the people in the textile industry who say that they can compete. In any event, that is one point upon which I would like the Hon. Member to comment.

Also the Hon. Member keeps quoting Bishop Remi De Roo as a great tsar with knowledge of everything. He is the same bishop who said, in 1984 when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) brought in the economic direction of the Government of Canada, that hundreds of thousands of jobs would be lost.

He was the same one who said that the economic direction of the Government of Canada would lead us to disaster.

As everyone knows, over 1,000 jobs have been created per day since the Progressive Conservative Government was elected in 1984. Well over one million jobs have been created and over 570,000 people have been taken off the poverty roll. We admit that that is still not good enough, and we are working to get more off the poverty roll.

Bishop De Roo was wrong on that one, and Bishop De Roo is wrong on this one as well.

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, I wish to comment on the remarks that the Hon. Member made. I was referring to Nygard's statement as recorded in The Star. I was also referring to the fact that he had made an earlier public statement in objection to the free trade deal with the United States. I was not referring to the question of whether they were appearing before the committee.

I agree with the Hon. Member that Mr. Rajsky says in his story that his decision not to appear before the committee did not have to do with that pressure. I am referring to previous statements in the general public sector, that are in public knowledge and that were referred to, particularly statements by Mr. Nygard printed in the daily papers.

As to Mr. Nygard's reasons and the possible argument that the Hon. Member has used to set his reasons aside, that is the sort of thing that ought to be brought out for public decision or public examination before things are settled rather than after things are settled and signed. There are many things to be said on that, and it is not reasonable to choose to accommodate certain American industrialists and perhaps certain Canadian industrialists, the much smaller number or the tiny fraction of Canadian industrialists that might benefit, without public examination and consultation.

As for the Hon. Member's dissatisfaction with Bishop Remi De Roo, Bishop De Roo is held in high regard in many parts of Canada. He does not happen to be from central Canada. Perhaps that is why the Hon. Member from Brampton does not like him. He happens to be from the West and in many matters he reflects the point of view of the West.

Mr. McDermid: I didn't say I didn't like him.

Mr. Heap: I am sure the Hon. Member does not dislike him personally. He just dislikes what he knows of him, that is all. It is interesting that it is a voice from the West that the Hon. Member from Brampton is trying to put down in this manner.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I want to add a comment to the speech which was made by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). Earlier today in the House it has been said—and it was not by the Hon. Member for Spadina but I invite him to comment on it—that Canadian textile mills were just as able to compete with mills elsewhere.

I would like to put the following information before the Hon. Member for Spadina. Recently I received a letter from a mill in my constituency which employs 72 people, most of whom are women, and pays an average salary of $11 per hour. They may not be very high wages, but in the case of the textile industry they are relatively high compared with what some other employees are making as salaries working in that industry. All things being equal, the wages are not as low as they are in other textile mills. Nevertheless, the letter is from the Texturon mill, a smaller textile mill, and it reads as follows:

> This letter is written objecting to the planned agreement on free trade with the U.S.A.
> You are familiar with our operation on Cameron Street in Hawkesbury at which we produce textured polyester yarn in a modern plant with excellent high-speed equipment. Should total free trade with the U.S.A. be placed in effect, we beyond doubt will have to close our plant in Hawkesbury.
> We could not possibly compete with firms in the U.S.A., one of which presently produces in excess of five million pounds weekly. Our production in Hawkesbury is approximately 200,000 pounds weekly.

The situation is that the plant in my riding produces a small amount compared with some very large U.S. plants. Indeed, some U.S. plants have so much excess capacity that by eliminating one coffee break they could probably produce more than the whole plant in my riding could produce in one day.

Does the Hon. Member agree with me when I say that the effect of free trade on situations like the one I have described in my constituency is indeed disastrous, and that it is not quite true to state, as has been stated earlier, that we can compete with textile mills in the United States?

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for raising a point on the basis of very pertinent fact. I could only say, from the facts he has presented, that I think he has made his case very strongly. I would add that I think the management and owners of Dominion Textiles agree with him in a sense, since over several years they have been shutting down their plants in Canada and opening plants in the southern United States in order to get at the low-wage area in those anti-union states. Therefore it is clear, wherever the ownership of Dominion Textiles is, that they will prefer to shut down Canadian plants and to open American plants.

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madame Speaker, the Opposition motion on the Free Trade Agreement was negative and reactionary. One of the first defenders of free trade, Sir Wilfrid Laurier—a Liberal—would have added that it was no more and no less, and I quote:

> —then a direct and unworthy appeal to passion and prejudice.

[English]

No aspect of the free trade debate better reveals the differences between the Progressive Conservative Party and the Liberal-New Democratic alliance than the debate over the energy aspects of the free trade agreement. It is in energy that the benefits we have achieved foreshadow the benefits we can expect from the broader trade agreement. It is in energy that I will recall that our record of success and co-operation stands in such stark relief to the bitter failures of previous Liberal-NDP policies. It is in energy policy that our different visions of Canada stand in clear contrast.

[Translation]

Since September 1984, we have rectified the previous Government's policies that had such a disastrous impact on the energy sector. We started by deregulating oil exports and went on to revamp the regulations on gas exports, and we are now looking at the changes that should be made in regulations for exporting electric power. Previously, we eliminated a number of arbitrary measures that were giving Canada a reputation for being against investment. And finally, we have improved our access to export markets.

Madam Speaker, did you know that as a result of the Conservative Government's policies, today more Canadians than ever before benefit from a wider range of energy products, thanks to a more competitive market? These same policies have made it possible to weather the ups and downs of oil prices by giving us access to an expanded North American market. We aimed for bigger markets and reinvested the resulting profits in exploration and development instead of leaving our resources untapped.

We have been working together with the provincial governments, making excellent progress in this respect, to analyze and understand the vital role of energy in Canada's economy, the importance of trade and especially the importance of energy security.

Most of these gains were possible as a result of changes in administrative policies and procedures on both sides of the border. The Free Trade Agreement will officially sanction these arrangements and provide additional assurances for exporters and importers, both in Canada and the United States.

The text of the motion before the House today condemns the Government for giving up "provincial control over energy resources in a continental energy market". This allegation, this accusation, unfounded though it is, is just a new way of formulating the same old alarmist clichés the Opposition has been mouthing since the beginning of this debate. I will list them one by one, concluding with the text of the motion itself.

• (1550)

[English]

The Opposition has said that we have undermined our sovereignty in reaching a free trade agreement with the United States. This is untrue, Madam Speaker. It also shows a misunderstanding of sovereignty. Sovereignty is the ability of each nation to formulate its own laws and develop its own policies. Entering a free trade agreement involves accepting some constraint on our behaviour. We have both agreed to reduce, and eventually eliminate, tariffs, for example. We have both agreed to refer disputes to binding arbitration where applicable. Without these types of restrictions, an agreement will be meaningless for both our countries. It would not achieve freer trade.

[Translation]

In the Free Trade Agreement we have not relinquished our ability to formulate or implement an energy policy that benefits Canadians nor our responsibility for doing so. The provinces will continue to set and collect royalties. We will design tax systems and provide incentives that will ensure resource development that is commensurate with the needs of Canadians. We will continue to set criteria for protecting the environment. We will also go on reviewing proposed takeovers in the downstream sector of the oil and gas industry. Madam Speaker, thanks to the mechanism for settling disputes, we have expanded the framework of our sovereignty by establishing rules to protect both countries from arbitrary actions on the part of either country. Our energy market will be North America, but our energy policy will be Canadian. Yes, we will have an expanded energy market, not a continental energy policy. That is the fundamental distinction the Opposition fails to make in its motion.

[English]

Our energy market will be North America, but our energy policies will be Canadian. We will have a broadened energy market but not a continental energy policy. The Opposition seems incapable of making this simple distinction.

On the issue of investment, I am pleased the Opposition has already recognized that a free trade agreement will improve the investment climate in Canada.

Mr. Prud'homme: The Hon. Member is very good in English.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Masse: With the additional assurance of access to U.S. markets, investors from Canada and many other countries will find Canada a more attractive place to do business. This is a necessity in a world where the international flow of investment increasingly ignores international boundaries. However, we have not changed our policy of reviewing proposed acquisitions. We do continue to reject proposals to acquire control of healthy Canadian oil and gas companies. In this way, we have maintained the careful balance we have achieved over the past three years between improving the investment climate and protecting the Canadian character of the upstream oil and gas sector.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, the Opposition claims that the Free Trade Agreement does not provide adequate protection against U.S. restrictive trade laws. That is false. Canada as well as the United States has safeguarded its rights, its ability to take action against unfair trade practices. The Agreement guarantees appropriate and impartial settlement of disputes, in accordance with the laws of each country, and contains a commitment to harmonize legislation governing bilateral trade over a period of five years. Furthermore, and this is just as important for the energy sector, both parties have agreed on a consultation process to examine regulatory measures that might have an impact on trade in energy products.

The Opposition also claimed that the Agreement was not balanced because it required excessive and unacceptable concessions by Canada and we woud get hardly anything in return. A cursory glance at the Agreement and at what has transpired in the last three years tells us that the opposite is true. Canada is benefiting already and will benefit even more from free trade, especially in the energy sector.

Since September 1984, we have broadly deregulated our energy exports, and we have done so in our own interests, not as a favour to our clients. We deregulated because we learned a lesson from the economic disaster we inherited from the previous Liberal Government. We realized that the energy sector would have to be developed through decisions by the private sector, on a more open and more competitive international market, and not through intervention by a Government that would turn a blind eye to economic reality.

[English]

Let us not forget the extent to which Canada's welfare programs depend on our energy exports to the United States. In 1986, despite low prices, they accounted for 11 per cent of all our merchandise exports, putting $9.9 billion in the pockets of Canadians. These exports are at the core of regional economies from coast to coast, whether oil and gas in the West, electricity in British Columbia, Manitoba, Quebec and New Brunswick, or uranium from Saskatchewan and northern Ontario.

The free trade agreement eliminates existing tariff and non-tariff barriers to this trade and will prevent new barriers in the future. For example, our petro-chemical industry is highly competitive by world standards. Its current exports are $1.77 billion a year, of which 57 per cent is exported to the United States. These producers now face tariffs ranging from about 12 per cent to 18 per cent on exports into the U.S., the world's largest petro-chemical market. Under the free trade agreement these tariffs will be phased out and petro-chemical producers have enthusiastically welcomed the agreement. In some other areas, our exports face significant potential threats. It is no secret that many U.S legislators are strong advocates of an oil-import levy of $5 or $10 per barrel. Should the U.S. ever adopt such a levy, Canada will have the right to be excluded from the levy and thus benefit from a huge windfall in higher prices for our oil exports.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, the free trade agreement makes official the changes we had undertaken on this side of the border and in our own interest. In exchange we get guaranteed access to the American market, unfettered by tariff or non-tariff barriers, and a dispute settlement mechanism.

We have agreed not to impose measures unfavourable to our American clients, while they agreed not to be unfair to Canadian suppliers, or vice versa.

Madam Speaker, may I add that American protectionist pressures are also very strong with respect to hydro power. The American coal industry lobby is generously financed by an association called the Ad Hoc Coalition on International Energy Trade. This association is leading an unrelenting campaign against Canadian hydro power exports and fully intends to torpedo the free trade agreement. Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the leader of the socialist party (Mr. Broadbent) might be interested in joining the coalition? Be that as it may, the agreement will shelter us from this kind of threats and secure our exports of electricity.

All this seems perfectly logical and reasonable to me. We gain ready access to the American market. For its part, the United States wants to be treated equitably like any good customer who relies on a long-term supplier.

But the distorsions and demagogy of the Opposition show that they simply want to confuse the issue, discredit a reasonable trade deal, and make it sound like a threat against our security and sovereignty, while in fact it is the other way around.

• (1600)

[English]

The problem with the Opposition is its view of energy security which remains rooted in the disastrous and discredited National Energy Program which sought independence from world oil markets through oil self-sufficiency by 1990 and with it the ability to pretend that the price of Canada's energy resources could be made in Canada. This proved to be a costly illusion in every way, in lost economic opportunities, in unnecessary divisiveness between regions, and in a tarnished reputation as a trading partner and as a good place to invest.

Energy security under the free trade agreement is an important concern of many Canadians. Let me reassure Canadians that the agreement will not imperil energy security. In fact, it will increase it.

First, let us recall the undertakings entered into under previous Liberal and NDP policies. Even former Liberal Governments showed some recognition that any energy security was an international problem that could not be resolved by retreat from reality. Even former Liberal Governments realized that we had some obligations to our allies and our trading partners.

In 1974, along with 15 other original members of the International Energy Agency, Canada signed the agreement on an international energy program which committed us "to take common, effective measures to meet oil-supply emergency by . . . allocating available oil among their countries on an equitable basis". This remains an important obligation for Canada. Because we are one of the few IEA countries which is a significant oil producer, our international obligation could actually compel us to increase our oil exports in an emergency. The free trade agreement, by contrast, merely protects the United States' proportional share of our supply so that it would permit a decrease in exports in an emergency.

Let it be absolutely, unequivocally clear that Canada's IEA commitment entered into by a Liberal Government would be far more onerous in an oil emergency than the much more modest commitments in the free trade agreement. The Government remains committed to the international energy program because we recognize that Canada is a trading nation and our energy security is ultimately linked to the economic security of our trading partners.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, let me add another sensible note to this debate. Thanks to the changes already made by this Government, including deregulation, Canadian energy products can now compete for a larger part of the American market. The Free Trade Agreement will make this official without radically changing the existing situation.

The changes related to the Canadian share of the American market with their advantages and disadvantages will take place gradually and occur when the economic conditions allow. We also have to remember that the Opposition has an outdated notion of energy security. It hides behind a rather dark past which goes back to a time when energy security meant Canadian prices for Canadian energy resources. Saying that this "Made in Canada" pricing policy failed miserably would be quite an understatement. The fact is that it cost Canadian taxpayers billions of dollars, alienated Western Canada, resulted in exhaustive bilateral trade regulations and cost billions of dollars in lost opportunities.

What the opposition fails to understand is that our supplies were not threatened in the past and that our markets have never been as well served as they are now. Our production and management capabilities are of international level. What we need is access to the market and this is what the Free Trade Agreement will provide.

[English]

It would run counter to everything this Government stands for to bring, with the free trade treaty, prosperity to Canada at the expense of provincial rights. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) put national reconciliation on our national agenda. This Government is the first to have signed a constitutional agreement with the full support of all provinces. I therefore find amusing the concern of the Hon. Member from the opposition Party that, through the free trade agreement, we could somehow have eroded the power of the provinces under the Constitution. Moreover, this agreement is about trade, not about jurisdictions or constitutional arrangements.

[Translation]

I have said many times that the rights and prerogatives of the provinces under the Constitution now are and will remain unchanged by the Free Trade Agreement. You will soon have an opportunity to read for yourself the final text of this Agreement and you will find that the fears of the Opposition are completely unfounded.

To conclude, Madam Speaker, I can say that free trade will not mean that Canada has to give up its energy future. On the contrary, it will assure this future. Every barrel of oil, every cubic foot of gas, every kilowatt-hour of electricity will be sold by the producers at the best price on the market. Whether or not this produces increased profits for Canadians will depend largely on the capability and attitudes of Canadian producers and distributors. I sincerely believe in their talents, their dynamism and their success.

Madam Speaker, contrary to the Opposition parties, the Progressive Conservative Party believes in the Canadian people. While the Liberals and the socialists would like to restrict our liberties and to hide behind the apocalyptic vision of a future market influenced by external contingencies, the Conservative Party puts its confidence in the people of this country.

[English]

Mr. Henderson: Madam Speaker, I listened to the Minister's speech with great care—

Mr. Boudria: Although it was hard.

Mr. Henderson: Yes, it was quite difficult to listen to it. However, I do have a couple of questions.

The Minister knows that I come from the Province of Prince Edward Island, the province which has the highest electricity costs in the country. He is well aware of that. He has visited the province on several occasions and has talked to the Prince Edward Island Minister of Energy and, I believe, to the Premier of Prince Edward Island when they were trying to get help from the federal Government to equalize energy costs. He knows what kind of problem that presents to our primary industries which are heavy users of energy. He knows that we rely on the processing industry, the potato plants, the chip plants and fish plants, for job creation. We have a great problem in competing simply because of our high energy costs.

• (1610)

The Minister explained to the House what a great thing this trade deal was because it gives us access to the American energy market. I want to ask the Minister about provincial control over energy and I will use his own province as an example. Hydro Quebec is a provincial Crown corporation. As I understand it, and I would ask the Minister to correct me if I am wrong, our access to the U.S. market for energy is at the going price. What if Quebec wanted to attract a new industry, say a food processor, and the going price of electricity was, to use a figure, 10 cents a kilowatt; can Quebec subsidize a new industry and charge it a price of, say, 8 cents a kilowatt?

A second question concerns whether my province will be able to buy electricity at the same price as, say, Vermont, Maine or New Hampshire buys it from the Province of Quebec? I realize that the consumer has to pay wheeling charges. They are recoverable from the Americans and equally recoverable from my Province of Prince Edward Island.

What I am asking is if we will be able to get energy from Hydro Quebec, or for that matter from the New Brunswick Power Commission, at 10 cents a kilowatt if that is what they are charging the Americans?

Mr. Masse: Madam Speaker, I want to be very sure whether my colleague is asking me if Quebec or New Brunswick will subsidize electricity rates in Prince Edward Island. Is that the question?

Mr. Henderson: Madam Speaker, what I am saying is that if the state of Maine orders x amount of electricity from Quebec or New Brunswick, is there a provision that Prince Edward Island—or Nova Scotia, for that matter, which has the second highest energy cost in Canada—will be able to enjoy the same kind of deal? Would they be charged the same price?

Mr. Masse: Madam Speaker, it is really clear that the electricity is for sale and it is for sale to everybody. If Hydro Quebec has some surplus or if Prince Edward Island wants a long-term contract with Hydro Quebec, it will have to negotiate with that corporation. If the price is right, Hydro Quebec will be interested in signing a contract with the province. Nothing in the free trade agreement will prevent Canadian utilities from signing contracts with any province. The question is—

Mr. Henderson: Price.

Mr. Masse: Price? The price of electricity is always based on the cost of producing it. That is why you have different prices. The cost depends upon the distance from your market and things like that. You do not have a single price like, say, the price of a barrel of oil which has a so-called international price for a certain number of days or months. Electricity is not at all like that. It is sold either on a long-term contract or as surplus. If it is surplus, then it is a question of market price. The interest of the utility is to have the highest price possible. However, if it is electricity based on a new dam or new Candu reactor or new coal generator, the utilities have no interest in putting that on sale at other than the real price. Otherwise the utilities would be subsidizing someone. The basic rules are not changed in that sense. We should never forget that the electricity market is more complicated than that of gas and oil.

I am very sympathetic to the problems of Prince Edward Island. I would have to have been the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources for years normally in order to make so many trips to the province. I have been there I do not know how many times in the year and a half I have been the Minister. I met my provincial colleague many times here in Ottawa or in Charlottetown. I have visited different sites in the province with that Minister. I have a real interest in P.E.I. However, the province's problems will not be solved by one single decision in Ottawa. I can assure you that we will pursue our discussions and the actions we have taken. We have already invested millions of dollars in a conservation agreement dealing with alternate energy with his province. The Hon. Member can be sure this question will not slip my mind because it is part of my desire to make sure that the province is very fairly treated.

Ms. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister a question which applies in particular to the people of Alberta. I was there last weekend and I think there is a growing concern among people looking at this deal in greater detail and its implications down the line. As I understand it, this deal will bring in a continental energy policy to replace a Canadian or Albertan energy policy. It means Albertans will not be able to use their very abundant energy resources to establish a provincial energy reserve. If at some future time they should want or need to favour their own consumers, they will be unable to do so. They will be unable to promote the use of Alberta oil and gas for Alberta industries at reduced prices, for example, in the petrochemical industry. They are really losing flexibility in diversifying their economy which is so important to resource-based economies.

It seems to me that this is not only a continental energy policy that we need to be concerned about, but it is pretty obvious that this is the first step towards Canada losing its sovereignty.

[Translation]

Mr. Masse: Madam Speaker, if we want to have a reasoned debate on the free trade issue I believe we would be well advised to define once and for all, in legal terms so recognized on the international scene, just what is a continental energy policy. The day we do that we will then be in a position to know whether or not it is a continetal policy. No matter what he calls it, I would suggest we must define what is meant by a continental energy policy. There is no continental energy policy in the sense that the two governments have a common policy. If we had a continental energy policy we would have a common policy, we would have common tariff rates applicable to third parties, we would have only one tax system, we would have only one environment protection system, and so on and so forth, and this is quite false. Such is not reality. What we do have is access to a larger market. Canada will define its energy policies, just as it has done in the past. Nothing in the agreement throws environmental protection issues in doubt. Nothing in the agreement involves tax matters, regulatory decisions we want to impose, calculations we would seek to impose with respect to our surpluses. Nothing in the agreement puts a question mark on these issues. What the agreement does is to open an additionasl market for energy producers. The agreement provides that both parties agree not to tax exports or raise that kind of barriers. What the agreement gives Canada is one additional market.

Madam Speaker, I should think that our colleague will admit there is a difference between a continantal market, if you want to put it that way, and a continental policy. It is not a continental policy. It is an additional market which Canadians are opening for themselves.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal (Mr. Corbett)—Shipbuilding—Frigate construction program—Awarding of contract; the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet)—Free trade—Request that provisions of agreement dealing with railway transportation be amended/United States subsidiaries operating intraprovincially in Canada; the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall)—Financial institutions—Principal Savings and Trust bankruptcy/Reported transfer of funds.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. Dewar:

> That this House condemn the government for its signing of a trade agreement with the United States that, amongst other things:
> (a) fails to consider the disproportionate effect on women, and especially the loss of jobs in the service sector where women are concentrated;
> (b) will give up provincial control over energy resources in a continental energy market; and
> (c) fails to allow for adequate consultation with Canadians in all provinces and territories before committing us to profound changes not only in our economy, but our political sovereignty, cultural distinctiveness and generally, our ability to run our own affairs.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to take part in the debate this afternoon. I would like to tell you that I rejoice over the contents of the free trade agreement, but I cannot do so because the agreement is very bad, not only for the riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, and it is, but also for Canadians generally, and if there were an NDP Member in the House I would commend the Party for its motion, but since none of them is here I will have to wait.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) has just taken the floor, he has been speaking for not even thirty seconds and already I see he is making comments about the presence or absence of his colleagues. I am sure he knows he is out of order and I would ask him to abide by the rules of the House.

The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I would never have named anybody, knowing that it is against the Standing Orders and I respect—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member will allow me to repeat his own words and say that he has named, the way he said it, all Members one after another. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: First of all, Madam Speaker, I want to say that I have much respect for the rulings of the Chair, but I would not want a principle or precedent to be set. Precedents are always dangerous in the British parliamentary system. As far as I can remember, Madam Speaker, we are allowed to say: I notice that there is nobody in the House, but that we are not allowed to say: I notice that such and such Hon. Member is not present in the House. But I suggest that our Standing Orders allow us to mention that a group of people, for instance a whole political party as is the case now, is absent from the House. If I emphasize this point, however, it is in case something similar happens in the future with more important subjects. I would not want a precedent to be established today which could be referred to later on, and you would be right to remember the precedent of today. I would not want a precedent to be established without indicating that I do not agree with the fact that we may mention that a whole political group is absent from the House, while we may not mention that such and such Hon. Member is absent from House, something of which you would be perfectly right to remind us.

[English]

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, now that we have that settled I would like to continue with my remarks. I want particularly to address one element of the motion that was moved by the New Democratic Party which deals with the effect of the Prime Minister's trade deal on employment opportunities for women.

As I am sure you know, Madam Speaker, my constituency is largely dependent on the textile industry. There are some 3,000 jobs in the textile industry and approximately 500 jobs in the footwear industry in my riding. A good number of those jobs are located around the Town of Hawkesbury, a very beautiful community which I invite you, Madam Speaker, and all other Hon. Members of this House to visit. When you go there you will notice all the textile factories that we have there.

These textile factories are threatened by the Prime Minister and his free trade deal. They are threatened by the agreement before us. Earlier today the Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) stated that Canadian textile mills are able to compete with their U.S. counterparts. That is easy to say, especially when it is not your job that is at stake.

However, the reality is that some of the plants in our country are much smaller than American plants. Many American plants are already working under capacity. If they want to increase their production they do not have to build new structures or spend new capital, all they need to do is to add a shift or a portion of a shift, and they can take away a lot of our business.

I would like to read a letter from which I read a few sentences earlier today. This letter is dated November 3, 1987, and is from Texturon Inc., a small factory in my riding. It has 72 employees, most of whom are women, and the salaries paid to workers there are in the order of $11 per hour. For a textile mill it is not bad. It is a lot better than some other textile mills which pay lesser salaries. However, many Canadians earn much higher salaries than that.

The letter is addressed to me and reads:

> This letter is written objecting to the planned agreement on Free Trade with the U.S.A.
> You are familiar with our operation on Cameron Street in Hawkesbury at which we produce textured polyester yarn in a modern plant with excellent high speed equipment. Should total Free Trade with the U.S.A. be placed in effect, we beyond doubt will have to close our plant in Hawkesbury. We could not possibly compete with firms in the U.S.A., one of which presently produces in excess of 5,000,000 pounds weekly. Our production in Hawkesbury is approximately 200,000 pounds weekly.
> Many firms seemingly are taking the tactic of just going along with this Free Trade approach without seriously considering the consequences. Economists certainly predict a great gain for Canada over the long term but few are thinking about the businesses such as ours which will be forced to close.

The letter continues, saying that they have informed the union and their plant manager of a shutdown in the event that the Prime Minister's trade deal goes through.

This is a tangible example 50 miles from Parliament Hill, almost on our doorstep, of factories that will be shutting down as a result of the Prime Minister's ill-conceived, ill-though-out free trade deal.

In 1983, at a meeting in Sherbrooke, I believe, the person who is now our Prime Minister said to the people of Canada: "Don't talk to me about free trade. That issue was decided in 1911. Free trade is a danger to Canadian sovereignty. You will hear none of it from me at election time or at any other time". Of course, that person is now the Member for Manicouagan, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). That is what he told Canadians. This conversion by the Prime Minister was provoked by a meeting he had with the President of the United States in Quebec City on March 17, 1985. Things have never been the same since that duet in Quebec City. I do not think the country has recovered.

The Prime Minister tells us that we need this trade deal for two reasons. First, we need a binding dispute settlement mechanism because, in his view, the Americans are using every tool in the book to prevent Canadians from shipping to the United States and selling our products there. He says that we need a binding dispute settlement mechanism so that in the future we will have a tailor-made mechanism to sort out the problem. That sounds good and I almost liked it.

The second reason that we need a free trade deal, according to the Prime Minister, is that we must guarantee our access to the United States. Therefore, we have guaranteed access and a binding dispute settlement mechanism.

The Premier of Ontario, the Hon. David Peterson, employed the services of a law firm, Blake, Cassels and Graydon, to do a study of the Prime Minister's free trade deal, particularly of the dispute settlement mechanism. The law firm studied four criteria of this dispute settlement mechanism and analysed how well it would work. The conclusion was that an application of these four criteria shows that the dispute settlement mechanism contained in the agreement is flawed in ways that are likely to result in a significant denial of Canadian access to the U.S. market.

In other words, according to this law firm's study, it will not work. Since the two main objectives of the Prime Minister have not been met, why do we have a free trade deal? The Prime Minister will have to answer that because we do not know.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, I mentioned a while ago the number of jobs in the textile industry which exist in my riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. As you know, most employees in the textile industry are women. As a matter of fact, between 60 and 65 per cent of the workers employed in this industry are women and, as was mentioned earlier, the wages there are not very high. Some may say: If they are not really good jobs, why do you insist so much on keeping them? Madam Speaker, you are certainly aware that in a riding such as mine, where the unemployment rate can be as high as 10, 11, or even 12 per cent, such as in the Hawkesbury area, a low paying job is better than no job at all. Many of the women in these industries are single mothers and a great number of them hold positions which would make it difficult for them to be retrained for other jobs, if other jobs were available. As I have already said, there are still many unemployed in the region I represent.

I have here a Statistics Canada study based on the 1981 census. In this study published by the Ontario Women's Directorate, we find that the textile workers have yet another problem. The study mentions the level of education of the workers in the textile industry and in other industries which will be adversely affected by free trade. For instance, 25 per cent of leather and tannery workers did not reach grade 9.35 per cent have between nine and thirteen years of schooling without having graduated from high school and 12.3 per cent have an Ontario grade 13 diploma.

In the textile industry, 14 per cent of the workers have under nine years of schooling. In the clothing industry, 23.1 per cent of the workers did not reach the ninth grade. Free trade will therefore have a special impact on those who work in the clothing industry, and even in the textile industry as a whole. As I have just shown, Madam Speaker, this Free Trade Agreement will have particularly harmful effects on the workers of some of these industries, especially the textile industry.

[English]

There is a further problem with the textile industry. A number of the plants are in fact branch plants of U.S. corporations. The removal of tariffs will result in the export of jobs to the United States.

Mr. Gustafson: NDP line.

Mr. Boudria: The Hon. Member can call it what he likes. I say to him that there is a plant in my riding which has been on strike for months now and the management has not met with the representatives of the employees at all. I suspect the reason for that is that it is a branch plant, with a head office located in the southern United States where employees who go on strike are simply replaced by others who fill their jobs. There is a different attitude about labour and management relations in some of the southern states of the United States. Perhaps those are the kind of labour conditions the Hon. Member opposite would like to have in this country. Perhaps that is the policy of his Party, but I do not think much of that kind of proposition. I do not think much of paying people $3 or $4 an hour and not giving them any kind of benefits at all.

• (1640)

There is a further pressure because these plants are located in a country that has a different outlook on social benefits for employees. I am not saying that the benefit package offered to employees in the textile industry in Canada is great, but usually it is better than what is offered to people in similar industries in the United States and elsewhere. The second thing that will happen is that because of competition from the United States, some of our industries will have to further rationalize and change their operations and put more people out of work.

With all this evidence, one would think that the parliamentary committee would be travelling everywhere in this country to find out from the average Canadian just how he or she feels about this. But we will not have the benefit of that kind of process. The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) think that the applause they hear from the cheering trained seals in the background in the Conservative benches means that the people of Canada approve of this trade deal. They do not. The Prime Minister cannot equate the cheering applause of Tory backbenchers with the consent and support of the people of Canada.

The committee travelled out West yesterday but spent only one day in the Province of British Columbia. That is most inadequate. The same committee will be spending one day in Montreal and everyone interested is supposed to participate. The committee will be one day in each province of our country. That is all the time afforded to this deal. There are many, many pieces of legislation brought before this House which have had a more thorough hearing than that. The Prime Minister has called this a momentous deal, the most important trade deal ever signed.

Mr. Gustafson: Hear, hear!

Mr. St. Germain: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: That is the kind of utter nonsense for which we hear applause from the trained seals opposite. Even if I were to believe the Prime Minister for one moment—which, of course, I do not—if it is that great and important, surely it deserves to be viewed by the people of Canada.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, I read today an article in the Ottawa daily newspaper Le Droit with the following title: "Our love of Canada will protect us, says Wilson." The Minister of Finance is telling us to have confidence, and that this will save us and bring out the best in our economy and our country.

Madam Speaker, if the Minister of Finance and his Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) believe that that is all it takes to succeed in this country, I can tell you that they are neglecting their work and their duties as Ministers of the Crown. It is their duty to protect the interests of the Canadian people. It is the role of the Government. They received a mandate to do so. They were given a very large majority—unfortunately some would say, myself included—in the last elections. They were given the mandate of acting in the best interests of the Canadian people. They did not get a mandate to negociate a Free Trade Agreement. The Prime Minister could have received that mandate if he had so wished. But he did not want such a mandate. He told the Canadian people one year before the elections that he did not even want to hear about it. I quoted his words a short while ago.

As the Prime Minister did not want a mandate to negotiate such an agreement, I suggest that he now has no right to do so.

Two Prime Ministers before him have wanted a Free Trade Agreement, Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mackenzie King. As I recall, Madam Speaker, both were defeated on this issue. I therefore invite the Prime Minister to also have the courage to go before the Canadian people with his agreement and to say: Here is what I have negotiated, do you want it or not?

For my part, Madam Speaker, I shall conclude by saying that the Canadian people will say no.

[English]

Mr. St. Germain: Madam Speaker, what we as politicians say, I am sure, has a high degree of credibility in the country. However, on an issue like this, where opposing views are carried forward as they are, I believe that those who have studied the issue and those who have gone into it in great depth, are much more credible, and I refer to the report of the royal commission which was chaired by the Honourable Donald Macdonald. He says he stands behind the support for the dispute settlement mechanisms which will no longer be subject to arbitrary U.S. actions. Had this procedure been in place, the outcome of softwood lumber would have been completely opposite.

In May of 1986, when the shakes and shingles unfair tariff arose, the Opposition waved goodbye to this side of the House instead of looking for a solution with our largest trading partner. I would like the Hon. Member's comment on the position taken by this known Liberal supporter in the past, and I say "in the past" because I am sure the hon. gentleman, given the arguments made by the Liberal Party at this time, would certainly have to make a reassessment. I would like the Hon. Member's opinion of the position taken by this gentleman after a $20 million study which was commissioned by the Hon. Member's Party. I would like the Hon. Member's comment as to how he can take such an opposing position without giving consideration to Mr. Macdonald's statement? Taking into consideration that the area the Hon. Member represents has not been affected by unfair tariffs such as the tariffs on potash, softwood lumber, shakes and shingles, just to name a few, I would like his reason for taking such an adamant position and, really, what I feel is an irresponsible position.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, that is barely worth responding to, but let me try. First, the Hon. Member opposite says my riding has not been affected by some of the United States' unfair trade practices of the past. Need I remind the Hon. Member that the unfair countervailing duty placed against Canadian pork products affected the constituency I represent? The U.S. Farm Bill, with some $70 billion worth of subsidies designed to displace Canadian markets, I raised today in Question Period, and there has been a protest sent to the Americans via our Ambassador. That has affected the constituency that I represent. It has depressed the price of corn, for instance, in the province I represent and in the very riding I represent here in the House of Commons. So my riding has been affected by the unfair trade practices of the United States.

It is certainly not true to say that the constituency of Glengarry—Prescott-Russell does not know what it is to have to negotiate with Americans and lose out on the deal because our Government is so weak-kneed. That point is totally wrong and I thought I should bring it to the Hon. Member's attention.

Second, the Hon. Member says that Donald Macdonald is in favour of free trade and therefore I should like it. That is interesting coming from the Hon. Member opposite. I can probably find someone who voted for or supported the Conservative Party, if there is anyone who still admits to doing that, who is against this free trade deal. Does that mean that every Hon. Member opposite should be against it as well? There is probably someone, a New Democrat, perhaps, who likes it. I do not know. I have not tried to find one. Mr. Macdonald is a prominent Canadian, and his position has been well exposed. It is not my fault that he is prominent. There is no equivalent prominent Tory. I will grant you, Madam Speaker, that that is a fact, and I know that. That type of jealousy of the fact that Mr. Macdonald is prominent should not be used by Conservatives across the way in the degree that it is used.

• (1650)

The Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) states that I should not be using something that is not thoroughly researched, because I should respect people who have done research on this issue. Need I remind the House that I have consulted with my electors, and for me that is more important than any other means of researching any material.

I wish to remind the Hon. Member across that he too should talk to the people whom he represents. In so doing, perhaps he would be better informed not about what one group thinks, not about what the corporate elite thinks—as Tories often do—but about what the Canadian people, our constituents, think about the deal and what we should be doing.

If the Hon. Member wishes to use a well informed, reasoned document, I will give him the study by Blake, Cassels & Graydon done for the Premier of the Province of Ontario, a duly elected Premier, elected with a vast majority of support, winning most of the seats in the Province of Ontario and defeating the Conservative candidate who wanted free trade. He was elected on that mandate, and that is a powerful mandate.

I have that study in hand. I have quoted a few sentences from it concluding that the binding disputes settlement mechanism will not work at all. With those facts, surely the Hon. Member across would have to agree with me that there is good reason to question such a bad deal.

[Translation]

Mr. Leblanc: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) was close to tears earlier when he talked about the women whose jobs were at risk as a result of the U.S. Free Trade Agreement. I feel differently, Madam Speaker. Recently, I had dinner with the President of the Textile Manufacturers Association who told me that he was anxious for the Free Trade Agreement to be signed, because he was convinced that Canadians and Canadian Textile Manufacturers are quite competitive with their American counterparts. The problem is not with the Americans, but with the other countries of the world, and in view of the fact the Agreement is stricly between Canada and the United States, our companies will be in a position to grow and manufacture textile more cheaply. Then, we will be able to take on the huge European market, as well as the Japanese and others. That is right. Canadian businesses will grow and create new jobs for women working in the textile industry.

As far as the garment industry is concerned, Canada has not been competitive for several years. It is competitive with the United States but not with the other countries. It would be completely wrong to think that, following the signing of the Free Trade Agreement with the Americans, the number of jobs will decrease. Quite the contrary! It will increase, because the true competition we face in the textile industry is not with the Americans. Members of the New Democratic Party who made that suggestion this morning were wrong, and so was the Hon. Member who has just spoken. What is most unfortunate is that he is such a good actor, he was almost in tears crying when talking about the possible loss of jobs for women. Imagine that! Madam Speaker, he knows perfectly well that women are not going to lose their jobs. In fact, we are very likely to see that number increase in the textile industry.

Mr. Rossi: Have you met workers employed in the textile industry or any UPA representative?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): A very brief comment. The time has almost run out. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) has the floor.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I will be brief. I have here a document prepared by the Ontario Women's Commission, and I just want to quote a passage attributed to the Economic Council of Canada, and I quote:

[English]

The Economic Council of Canada concluded that "proportionately more job gains are received by male workers than by female workers", and that "Women suffer proportionately more from job losses—Greater female share in job losses stems from a larger decline in employment in textile, knitting mills and clothing industries, in which a large number of female workers are employed".

This study was done by a very professional group, and I bring it to the attention of the Hon. Member who asked the question.

[Translation]

I may add that I found this a very interesting question, coming from the Hon. Member who, I believe, represents the riding where the headquarters of the Union des producteurs agricoles du Québec is located.

[English]

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I must say that I feel very strongly that this trade deal is perhaps one of the most critical issues facing Canada in this whole century.

When we discussed this inside our own caucus and Party, away from the audiences and the House of Commons, there has been deep depression. We honestly do feel that this is hitting at the very roots of Canadian sovereignty.

If the trade deal is carried to its conclusion, which is certainly what the Government intends to do, it will dramatically change the whole nature of Canada. Many of us conclude that by the year 2000 our economic and cultural ties will be north-south rather than east-west. Certainly, those of us on the West Coast know how strong that pull is already. With no means of protecting our economy, there is no question that this is the way that we will be going.

This deal is so serious that it seems that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) gave away the country because he was so anxious to reach an agreement and save political face.

Now Canadians and parliamentarians are being asked to agree to a pig in a poke. The public has not had an opportunity to learn about this deal. They have not received the basic facts, much less an idea of the significance of areas that are still pending, and I refer particularly to the seven-year provision for defining subsidies. This is a very ominous area that has many implications. There has been no final written legal text for the committee. The time frame under which we are all being asked to operate is absolutely ridiculous. Of course, now we have those one-day wonders, starting in my Province of British Columbia yesterday, which are a complete farce. In fact, they are an insult to the public and to Canadians who have the right to know about this deal and all its disastrous implications as far as their country and their jobs are concerned.

The Tories want us to trust them. A few minutes ago one of the Members was suggesting that we should leave this to people who have expertise in this area, have an act of faith and trust what the so-called experts are saying. The Prime Minister expects us to take a leap of faith and trust his Tory trade deal with the United States.

I would like to look at the record and remind Canadians once again how trustworthy the Government is, and how much we can bank on the statements made by the Prime Minister. Let me refer to 1983 when the Prime Minister was running for the leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party. At that time he referred to free trade and said, "We would be swamped. We have in many ways a branch plant economy in certain important sectors". He was certainly right. We agree with him completely in that regard. He went on to say, "All that happened with that kind of concept is that the boys"—and I believe he was right there too—"would be cranking up their plants throughout the United States in bad times and shutting their entire branch plants in Canada. It is bad enough as it it".

• (1700)

Certainly I would be interested in hearing from my colleagues on the other side of the House their reaction to that statement by their Leader in 1983. Apparently he has now changed his opinion and thinks that there is nothing like so-called free trade to save us from a disastrous future.

Why should Canadians, with this kind of record, trust the Prime Minister and his negotiators and his Government in this deal? Why should we be asked to take the deal on blind faith without knowing all the facts or having a final deal and without the public having a chance to assess it?

We must remember that the Prime Minister promised an increase in old age pensions. Of course he tried to deindex them and would have done so if there had not been a massive protest by senior citizens across the country. This is the Prime Minister who said to us several times, "our universality is sacred", and then he deindexed the family allowance. This is the same Prime Minister who promised us fair tax reforms, yet the proposed reforms again benefit the wealthy and do not tax corporations fairly. He also promised us a national child care program, and we have been awaiting one for over two years. There is no question that Canadians have a right to be skeptical about the trade deal with the United States which the Government has been promoting.

Again I should like to summarize what this trade deal means for Canada. First, it was supposed to give Canadians free access to U.S. markets, but the U.S. still retains all its countervail laws—the countervail laws which apply to shakes and shingles, softwood, potash, et cetera. It was supposed to have a very strong dispute settlement mechanism, but the dispute mechanism is just a token appeal body which will uphold U.S. laws including entrenched countervail provisions.

Also it was to bring in a continental energy plan. It was interesting that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) did not like me using that term this afternoon. Everything we read in the American press related to this deal, and in the papers which we had before we even got the Canadian documents, indicated that that was what the Americans were calling it. At last they have their continental energy deal. It is worth anything to them to have that deal. Only Mexico was smart enough not to sign that kind of arrangement.

In 1983, the Prime Minister said that we had a branch plant economy at that time. There will be even more control by American parent companies over Canadian industries under this deal. There will also be open and U.S. investment in Canada. It is not difficult to imagine that pretty soon, as certain Canadian businesses or industries are bought up, or as Americans start their own industries in Canada, we will again be the source of raw resources, and that manufacturing and the lucrative labour-intensive parts of these industries will be in the United States.

There will be a loss of jobs. Even the Government had to admit it. In fact, government Members have been very inconsistent about it, which shows just how little study they have done. One Minister has said that there would be a loss of 800,000 jobs. I believe another said that there would be a loss of 600,000 jobs. The original assessment of the Economic Council of Canada projected, if I recall correctly, that some 300,000 jobs would be lost, but it was not even considering the service sector. Now it wants the final documents so that an assessment can be made.

It seems only fair to Canadians that this deal should not be signed until we have that information. Surely Canadians have the right to know what will be the impact on their own jobs. There is no question that jobs will be lost in agriculture and in very sensitive manufacturing industries, particularly those in the West to which I will refer in a minute. Also there will be jobs lost in the service sector where 80 per cent of the jobs are held by women. Of course the Auto Pact and the parts manufacturing industry have been gutted.

If we add the Conservative policies of privatization and deregulation which were a lead-up to this deal, and then add on top of that the free trade deal, it is no wonder that Canadian trade unions are up in arms. The whole question of job security is threatened, particularly jobs at decent rates of pay.

I should like to comment on the implications for western provinces, particularly Alberta and British Columbia. We have really been concerned about the attempts in the House, particularly by the Prime Minister, to stir up a sort of regional racism. We are all committed to Canada. Let us look at the West, particularly the resource provinces of British Columbia and Alberta. I realize that all western provinces are resource provinces, but I am dealing now with these two provinces where there are highly sensitive manufacturing industries. Some Governments have been trying to bring in secondary industry. They always talk about it, but it is difficult to accomplish. However, at this point in time, western manufacturing industries employ about 70,000 people in food processing, metal, machine fabricating, furniture, textile, clothing, printing, and publishing. DRIE's studies show that there will be an extremely negative impact on these industries.

Mr. McDermid: That is the NDP talking.

Ms. Mitchell: What about DRIE? Does that not mean something else to the Hon. Member? Jobs in new industries are also at risk. We know that three out of four western jobs are in the service industries which are beginning to build. We know that these will be hard hit. As well, our growing links with the Pacific Rim will be affected. We are just beginning, in British Columbia and also in Alberta, to enhance greatly our relationship with the Pacific Rim with a view to establishing a much better trading relationship which is favourable to Canada. There is no question that it will take second place to a continental trade arrangement with the United States.

The trade deal is a threat to the Canadian way of life. The section dealing with seven years to define subsidies worries me especially. We know that the United States has always considered our Canadian social programs as subsidies. Although government Members keep saying that they are not included in the deal, if they are not included, why was it not stated explicitly in the agreement? As far as the seven-year definition of subsidies is concerned, social programs such as medicare, unemployment insurance, child care, and other human services are still very much there. In the view of many it means that regional development programs and cultural programs are on the table.

Mr. McDermid: Just not true.

Ms. Mitchell: There is nothing at all to say that this is not true.

Supposedly Canadian culture was protected, but as experts in the field have said, it is very narrowly defined. I would be interested in what the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) has to say on this matter.

I want to speak particularly about the impact of this deal on British Columbia. Even though the deal fails to reach the key objectives promised by the Prime Minister, B.C. has surrendered jobs in many key industries, our ability to expand and diversify our economy, and our autonomy to develop our own social and economic policies in the future. We particularly need to diversify our economy in the West.

The deal completely fails to resolve existing trade problems for B.C. industries. The export tax on softwood lumber is enshrined by the deal, while U.S. countervail duties on hogs and cedar shakes and shingles remain unscathed. Further, the deal offers no protection against future U.S. countervail duties on B.C. products.

In exchange, our manufacturing, farming, wine making—a new industry which has been making headway in British Columbia—and service sector industries are at great peril. We have surrendered any kind of effective control of U.S. investment in our resources or financial institutions, and we are compelled to share our energy resources with the United States.

Columnist Marjorie Nichols has noted, "What Canada has given away is its industrial future". Canada's chief competitive advantage among industrialized nations is our wealth of accessible energy supplies. Under the trade deal, the U.S. is guaranteed full access to these precious supplies at exactly the same price as they are available to Canadians. B.C.'s most precious asset is sacrificed and so is Alberta's. For what? A deal of so-called free trade that continues to allow U.S. protectionism against B.C. imports.

• (1710)

Former Premier Dave Barrett told reporters recently:

> Complete resource access will leave us forever as hewers of wood and drawers of water. It's really an incredibly bad deal.

Mr. McDermid: Who are you quoting?

Ms. Mitchell: I hear snorts and sniffles across the House. The Member cannot sit and listen for five minutes without nattering. I hope he turns on a replay of the BCTV account of yesterday's hearings in British Columbia. He would have heard many groups saying that the whole process of hearings is a farce. The hearings are by invitation only. The public was not allowed to be heard. The TV cameras were not allowed to be present. There is an anti-free trade coalition comprised of 43 different groups, labour, church groups and community groups which, in effect, were given 20 seconds each to present their views through one presentation.

The shore workers and the workers in the fish plants—and I want to say that many are immigrant workers, many women working under difficult conditions, many from my riding—are very upset. Their spokesman said they were very upset at the GATT ruling which would disallow Canadian processing of raw fish which appears to be threatening some 4,000 jobs. They were upset because they are afraid that the free trade agreement, if signed, will bind Canada to the GATT ruling, a ruling initiated by the United States.

What about fruit and vegetables in British Columbia? The B.C. vegetable producers were given only three and a half minutes, an industry that will be destroyed in British Columbia. Consumers, I know, are sick and tired of having only imported fruit. The Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen), I hope, will show some concern because it will affect some of the people, both growers and consumers, in his riding. There were also some very colourful statements, I might say, from Jack Munro of the IWA about the impact on woodworkers and their industry.

This is a bad deal, Mr. Speaker. There is no question about it. It is a threat to the Canadian way of life. I have mentioned subsidies, regional development and aspects of Canadian culture. We believe there is not enough proof that they are protected.

I would like to mention the impact from an Alberta point of view. I had the opportunity to be in Edmonton over the weekend meeting with people about free trade. I must say it was very educational because I learned a great deal. The Premier of Alberta and the past Premier of Alberta think this is a wonderful deal. As a matter of fact they think only wimps are opposed. I want to let you know, Mr. Speaker, that I joined the wimp protest meeting and I am proud of it. Under this deal the Premier and former Premier feel that Alberta will have nothing but benefits. I would like to ask, as I asked the Minister earlier, if this is a continental energy policy—which it is—

Mr. McDermid: Which it is not.

Ms. Mitchell: Alberta cannot use its abundant energy resources to establish provincial energy reserves if Alberta wanted to favour its own consumers if it wanted or needed to do so. Alberta cannot use Alberta gas at reduced prices for Alberta industries. I am thinking of the petro-chemicals in particular. Alberta will also lose its ability to process resources within the province. Processing resources is important to western provinces. We must diversify. We cannot be dependent only on non-renewable resources or we will have no future for our children.

This deal is definitely a first step toward losing our sovereignty. It prevents economic diversification in western provinces. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, I believe, said that the petro-chemical industry would really benefit because Alberta now has access to U.S. markets. I wonder how the Alberta petro-chemical companies, still subject to the U.S. countervail prices, can compete in the same way. They will not be able to continue to have a favourable price for gas, which has been important to them in the development of secondary industries.

Mr. Lougheed told the parliamentary committee that the deal is not only positive but it is a must for western Canada. I wonder how many Albertans who have studied this agreement would agree. Is it better to sell our resources for a quick buck today or is it better to try to have control over your own future and diversify your economy?

What about the farming sector, Mr. Speaker? Certainly in British Columbia the fruit and vegetable producers are very concerned. The wine industry is very much threatened. I know that in Alberta and British Columbia the red meat industry had great hopes for this deal, yet they did not get the access to the U.S. markets they had hoped for. We find also that the two price system for grain has been eliminated. Incidentally, the western grain transportation which goes through the Port of Vancouver to the U.S. and the two price system, I am told—I am not an expert in this field—mean a loss of some $300 million for farmers. It will be very hard for poultry and dairy farmers to compete.

In summary, this is a bad deal for Canada and for westerners. It fails to open access to key U.S. markets. It makes unwarranted concessions to U.S. demands. It undermines economic plans to diversify resource economies. It gives the U.S. guaranteed access to our resources at market prices. It opens the door for more U.S. takeovers. It leaves the door wide open to economic forces which we will not be able to control. It entrenches U.S. protectionist measures which will be very difficult for any future Government to change. It changes the very nature of Canada. About the only benefit that I can see in this deal is that it protects Canadian beer.

Bishop Remi De Roo said to the committee that this trade deal locks Canada into a multinational theology of the marketplace where people are things and can be discarded. My Leader has said that the Mulroney trade deal is a betrayal of Canadian interests. It goes to the heart of our sovereignty as a nation. I agree with both comments.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, I enjoyed listening to the Hon. Member. She is singing from the same song that was written for her by Bob White—

Ms. Mitchell: I haven't talked to Bob White for a couple of years.

Mr. McDermid: —and Shirley Carr. It is the same song sheet which the socialists have been singing across our country. I only wish that I had the same 20 minutes to refute everything that she has said. The Hon. Member is putting totally unfounded fear into the people of Canada. There is no basis of fact, none whatsoever, and the Member knows that. I do not know who prepared the cards for her from which she is reading—

Ms. Mitchell: It came from my head. This is my handwriting.

Mr. McDermid: —they are full of inaccuracies.

Let me start with the apparel industry. Everybody is talking about the apparel industry today—

Ms. Mitchell: I did not mention that.

Mr. McDermid: —including the Hon. Member and about womens' jobs. Let us take a look at the facts and at what has happened in the apparel industry. Canadian exports into the United States of textiles—that is what Hon. Members from all opposition Parties are talking about today—have increased from $120 million in 1980 to $377 million in 1987. As a matter of fact, in the last two years, there has been an increase of over $100 million in exports to the United States. At the same time, imports coming from the United States have remained relatively stable. The market for Canada in the United States is growing. When the tariffs are removed, some of which are as high as 45 per cent, I might add, Canadians will be able to compete there very well. We only have one-third of 1 per cent of the market in the United States now. What a fabulous opportunity this will be for us.

• (1720)

Let us see what the Canadian Textiles Institute said, not at hearings in Ottawa but to the Ontario Government blue-ribbon panel. Its submission reads as follows:

> The status quo was a bleak prospect. The best available alternative appeared to be a free trade arrangement with the United States although it was not risk free and would present textile companies with some formidable challenges. On the plus side we had been steadily improving our exports to the U.S. and had invested heavily in new technology.

The Canadian Textiles Institute has accepted the challenge. It is going ahead to expand its exports into the United States. Its submission went on:

—A growing number of firms favoured free trade. They saw the opportunities and benefits and were prepared to accept the risk in preference to the status quo.

A growing majority of firms believed they could survive in a North American free trade situation provided the adjustment and transition conditions were adequate.

Eric Barry, President of the Canadian Textiles Institute, said:

It is my personal opinion that the Canadian textile and clothing industries faced a brighter future within a free-trade arrangement than without.

The evidence is there. I have just mentioned the increase in exports of textiles to the United States. Once those tariff barriers come down, they will be able to go to the United States with no problem at all.

The problem with the NDP, and we heard about it from the Hon. Member, is that it is an inward-looking Party. It is myopic. It hides behind barriers, barriers to protect this little Canada. NDP Members have no faith in Canadians. They do not believe that Canadians are productive or can compete. They do not have any faith in the Canadian people at all. That is the difference between the dinosaurs in the New Democratic Party and the very progressive attitudes and policies this Government is taking.

We believe in Canadians. We believe in our ability to compete and in our entrepreneurship. We believe we have one of the finest educational systems in the world. We have a workforce that is far more productive now than the American workforce, and that has been proven time and time again.

The Vice-President of IBM told me the other night that the most productive plant IBM has in the world is in Bromont, Quebec. The number two most productive plant for IBM is in Don Mills, Ontario. Is that not interesting? Do not tell us that Canadians cannot compete.

The other day, I participated in an opening of a Computerland store. Computerland is the largest Canadian computer company in Canada. It ranks third out of 52 computer companies over all in Canada. I asked a representative of Computerland if he was afraid of the free trade agreement and if he thought it would knock him out of the box. He said: "Are you kidding? This gives us more opportunities than you can imagine. We are number three in Canada now, the number one Canadian-owned computer company, but we will soon be number one over all". There were probably about 800 people at that opening. When we talked about free trade, the house came down. They were all so enthusiastic about it and were looking forward to those challenges.

Why are members of the NDP so frightened of something that is so good for Canada? I will answer one of the Hon. Member's questions. She asked why social programs are not included in this agreement. It is because this is not a social document, it is a trade document. We are dealing with trade, not social policy. Social policy is totally outside this agreement and has absolutely nothing, zip, zero to do with this agreement.

Ms. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, it is a great pleasure to see the Hon. Member smiling for a change. I am glad he was enjoying himself. I must say that this is not the expression we see very often as we watch him in the House these days.

The Hon. Member can say what he likes about the New Democratic Party. That is his option. However, if he wants some facts, I think he had better look at the polls to see what Canadians think about his Party and what they think about the New Democratic Party.

Mr. McDermid: You just dropped five points, be careful.

Ms. Mitchell: That is quite all right. I have not noticed that his Party has had any great ripping success in recent times.

The Hon. Member talks about unfounded confidence. Of course he has unfounded confidence in his position, just as I have confidence in my position. The only thing is that he is a member of the Government and he has the means of demanding special studies that would document some of these things like job losses. Instead of doing that, he is speculating as well.

We want more time so that all of us on both sides of the House can have more hard evidence and more real projections of the implications and effects of this deal. That is what the Government is so afraid of doing. It does not even want Canadians to hear about the deal, much less to have any input into it. I think the kind of token process that is going on is absolutely disgraceful.

I am glad that the committee has gone out on tour because that will show Canadians in a way that would never have happened if it had stayed in Ottawa just how farcical and what a sham these hearings are. I think I have given enough time to that question.

[Translation]

Mr. Leblanc: Madam Speaker, once again, I welcome this opportunity to speak to the issue of free trade and to answer the Hon. Member's questions.

She said earlier that Canadians were not educated enough, that Canada was not rich enough, that Canadians were too cautious. That is more or less what she said.

Well, all I can say is that our country has enough human and natural resources to face up to the tremedous challenge of free trade.

If Canadians seem to be afraid of this great challenge, it is just because the Opposition is spreading a lot of false rumours about the Free Trade Agreement.

I am convinced that once Canadians have heard the truth about this great challenge of free trade, this grand design, the majority will support this plan, because I have met them several times in the course of my travels in recent weeks, and I can assure you that when you carefully explain what this great plan is all about, Canadians are willing to take up the challenge. Afraid? The two previous Governments stepped back from this challenge and it looks like they would have lost the election if they had come before the House with this great plan for free trade with United States. Of course we knew this plan would be practically suicide on the part of the Government, because the Opposition would use it to spread a lot of false allegations and take the 5 or 10 percent of our industry that would be affected and make a mountain out of a molehill, and then load the dice against the 85 or 90 percent of our economy that would gain from this great plan.

That is why it takes a Government that has the guts to do it. We decided to follow through. And I can say that when we take the trouble to explain frankly what this free trade project will give Canadians, people are quick to understand and find the plan very acceptable. If this great free trade challenge was good for Ontario at the time of the Auto Pact, why wouldn't it be good for Quebec? Why wouldn't it also be good for Western Canada and Eastern Canada? After talking to a lot of entrepreneurs, I think 95 or even as much as 100 percent of the people I talked to, people who invest money in the private sector, agreed with me. How come the people who risk their capital agree with free trade and the people who don't are against it? I just don't understand, and it may be too late to find out why. But maybe we can answer the last question, and that is, why the people who risk their money are prepared to go along with the Agreement and those who do not are against the plan.

• (1730)

Ms. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, I do not understand why the Conservatives keep on misinterpreting the Auto Pact. My understanding is that it was a negotiated settlement in one sector. It is not free trade. Yet the Conservatives continue to make them synonymous.

As to the statement that Canadians are not audacious enough, I think it is an insult for Members on that side to challenge the deep patriotic and personal feelings we on this side have for our country and fellow Canadians. Canadians have great capacity in many areas and we have proven this. We have built a very diversified country and achieved economic success. That is why we have a favourable trade balance right now. The evidence is that we are doing better than the U.S. Why do we need this trade deal? We do not have to give away our resources or allow U.S. takeovers. We do not have to entrench countervailing duties in our laws and we do not have to accept a threat to Canadian culture and social programs.

Why should we be doing those things in this trade deal? We are giving everything to the other side and we do not have to. We are doing very well in trade and we should proceed in an orderly way, sector by sector, where it is needed, in an international context.

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to be able to participate in this debate for several reasons. First, because it provides me and the Government with an opportunity to tell Canadians about the importance of this very historic agreement and the benefits it will bring to the majority of Canadians. I for one will not pretend that the agreement will be well received by all Canadians or that it is good only for Canada and not for the U.S. If that were the case, there would be no agreement. However, I firmly believe this agreement is good for the majority of Canadians.

As I have sat here listening today I have been disappointed by the fact that the Opposition, both Parties, offer no alternatives when they address this subject. There seems to be a surprising, disappointing, and perhaps even naive assumption that somehow or other the maintenance of the status quo, without any effort whatsoever on our part, is in itself a policy. As you know, evidence of protectionism in many parts of the world, particularly in the U.S., is very much before us. We have to respond in one way or another and we believe very strongly that this is a positive response which will work to the benefit of the majority of Canadians. Quite frankly, we are afraid that what the opposition Parties advocate, which is essentially to do nothing, would in the long run mean the destruction of the Canadian economy as we know it today.

I am also struck by the fact that there seems to be so much criticism of this agreement from those who say it does not specifically address this or that and does not protect us from their fears, whatever they might be. As one who grew up on the Prairies I learned that there were two things we had to fear. One was drought and the other was grasshoppers. Naturally the free trade agreement does not protect us from either of those. They can occur in the future because, while they are very real threats to the western economy, they have nothing to do with trade. I suggest that many of the criticisms of this agreement have, by the same token, nothing to do with trade.

With respect to the motion before the House today, I want to say that I recognize the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) is sincere and serious in her efforts. I know she believes in the ideology and policy positions of her Party. For example, she believes that Canada must protect its sovereignty. We all believe that. Yet at the same time, she and her colleagues believe we should withdraw from NORAD and NATO. We should spend as little as possible on defence and the instruments we need to protect the sovereignty which is of concern to all Canadians.

As a good New Democrat, she believes we should keep interest rates as low as possible. Unfortunately, at the same time she believes that the Government should spend as much as it can and not worry about the size of the national debt or the budgetary deficits plaguing our country. It is those very same deficits which lead, of course, to the high interest rates that crippled our economy in years past.

As a good New Democrat, the Hon. Member believes we should not negotiate a comprehensive bilateral trade agreement with our largest trading partner, and that our interests are best served in multilateral trade negotiations under GATT. That is what they have been telling us over and over for several weeks. Unfortunately, as a serious and sincere New Democrat, she and her colleagues also believe that we should refuse to accept any decision from GATT which does not agree entirely with Canadian policies or practices. The Hon. Member is serious and sincere but, in my opinion, seriously mistaken and misguided on this issue.

Is it any wonder, then, that the motion before us is such a mishmash of slogans and forebodings? Consider the NDP spawning ground. Never in the history of our country have we seen such a fertile source of contradiction and incoherence. They have failed to mount any effective criticism of the free trade agreement on economic grounds and are now unfortunately relying on the old slogans we have heard in Canada before. "You are selling out the country", they allege. "You are giving up our sovereignty". What a pathetic sight. What a desperate line of argument.

When the negotiations began, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said, and I think all of us remember this well, that: "Our political sovereignty, our system of social programs, our commitment to fight regional disparities, our unique cultural identity, our special linguistic character, these are the essence of Canada and these are not at issue in these negotiations". The fact is that the Government has honoured every one of those commitments. On culture we had Bill C-58, which is the principal economic support for our cultural industries and it remains intact. The special status of cultural investment in this country has been confirmed.

What about regional development? Our sovereign right to pursue initiatives in that area has been recognized. The western diversification fund is so important and so much appreciated in western Canada. The Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and the Northern Ontario Development Agency will all continue to assist those regions to diversify and develop their economy. Let us not forget who introduced these programs. It was this Government under this Prime Minister.

What about social policies which the Hon. Member spoke of? Medicare, unemployment insurance and all the other social policies to which all Canadians of all political stripes are committed remain intact. Furthermore, our sovereign right to meet the needs and wishes of Canadians is fully intact. In fact, we shall soon be exercising that sovereign right again when we introduce in the next few days, according to my understanding for the first time in the history of this country, a national day care policy. Is this the kind of policy initiative taken by a Government that wants to give up its sovereignty? No, of course not. This is the kind of initiative taken by a Government that knows how to exercise our national sovereignty in the interests of all Canadians.

Under the free trade agreement Canada is free to apply and introduce the economic, social, cultural and constitutional policies it chooses to introduce. That is exactly what we as a Government have done and what we will continue to do.

We undertook bilateral negotiations with the U.S. in the same spirit that we participate in the multilateral negotiations under GATT. Our objective is to make Canada's economy stronger and more internationally competitive through trade liberalization. If I may say so, I firmly believe that much of the prosperity we in the western world have enjoyed in the 40 years since World War II is a result of the trade liberalization policies we and others have agreed to.

We believe that a stronger, more competitive Canadian economy means a stronger, more independent sovereign Canada. The free trade agreement represents a new vision of Canada, a vision of a strong dynamic country with a leading role to play in the world. We see a bold, confident Canada in the future.

What is the vision of those who introduced the motion today and those who support it? In two words, it seems to me that that vision is one of myopia and insecurity. In my opinion, they regretfully see a smaller Canada, a Canada which seems to be threatened on all sides, and a Canada which is regretfully lacking in self-confidence. That is very tragic because I, as a western Canadian, understand very clearly that western Canada was peopled by those who arrived there perhaps some 100 years ago and believed in themselves, their region, and the potential of their region to become a very productive world trading community.

We have done that in the past because we believed in ourselves. We must have that type of vision going into the twenty-first century. Unfortunately, it seems that today there are all too many Canadians—and this, of course, is expressed most clearly by those in the opposition Parties—who lack that type of vision for the future. Instead, they have a disappointing and, I would suggest, incomplete vision of what this country can be.

Quoted in Maclean's recently, Paul Reichmann said, "Americans work hard. Canadians work better. We will prosper in a free trade deal".

We share this view because we believe it is a testimony to the confidence and faith of Canadians and in the ability, the drive, and the capacity to work hard which we have demonstrated in the past and which I believe we are anxious to continue in the future. We believe it is time that the Government of Canada demonstrated that it has the same faith in Canadians as Canadians have in this country and in their ability to perform and compete in the world community.

Unfortunately, not all Canadians share that view. It is evident from the motion before the House today that the Hon. Member for Hamilton—Mountain (Ms. Dewar) and her colleagues in the federal House, and I include as well some of their provincial colleagues in the Province of Manitoba, do not have that same faith in Canadians and in the future of this country. They seem to believe that the bigger government gets, the better it is. They seem to believe that Canadians must be led by the nose by the bureaucracy and the state from the womb to the tomb.

However, I can say as a historian that history has taught us over and over again that the womb of the state is sometimes not unlike a tomb. What is meant to shelter often instead suffocates. History has also taught us that relying on the policies of the past to meet the challenges of the present is an approach which is often doomed to failure.

Curiously enough, today's critics of free trade harken back to the slogans and fear mongering of yesteryear at the turn of the century, the campaigns of 1891 and 1911. It is important that we not in any way confuse the patriotism of the past with what was, in many ways, a devotion to the British Empire. The issue today is not what was appropriate in 1891 or 1911, but what is needed in 1987, 1989, and into the 21st century.

Some have noted that the positions of Parties change with the passage of time. As an historian I remember very clearly the positions of the various political Parties in 1891 and 1911. However, it seems to me that what we must remember, what is often forgotten, is that the circumstances of the moment have changed as well. Those policies which were appropriate in 1891 or 1911 are not automatically appropriate in 1987 or 1997, as many in this House would have us believe.

I am very proud to be a Canadian. I say that as someone who was born in western Canada and received much of my education in western Canada but continued that education in the United States and lived outside my country for a while. I always knew I would come back to Canada. Quite frankly, I am pleased that I did, even though there have been, on occasion, economic reasons for remaining outside the country.

One of the reasons I ran for office some four years ago in a by-election is that I believe in this country, I believe in the potential of the country, and I believe in the people who reside in it. I believe in our values, I believe in our institutions, and I believe in what I think is our unique way of bringing fair solutions to the challenges we face as a country and a people.

I believe that we are very capable of responding to the challenges and, in this case, opportunities, to a greater extent than many people, and unfortunately even some Canadians, appreciate today. There may well be explanations which I am not party to, but I am disturbed by the fact that there are some Canadians today who seem to be losing confidence in themselves. There are some Canadians who seem to be losing confidence in the future. There are some Canadians today who are overcome by fear of the unknown, if you will.

In this agreement and the Government is asking Canadians to continue in our traditions of the past of having confidence in ourselves and of being willing to take some risks to try to develop the potential which is ours as we go into the future. As we do that, we must remember that we no longer live in an isolationist world. We no longer live as an island unto ourselves. We are very much a part of a global economy and depend very much on trade within that global economy.

My special interest, as you know, is agriculture. Some farmers have asked me on phone-in programs why we worry about trade, why we do not concentrate instead on the Canadian domestic market. We could do that, and I dare say there are some in the House who would advocate that, but it would be at an incredible price to ourselves.

As many of us who represent agricultural constituencies know, 50 per cent of agricultural income comes from exports. To give up that opportunity to trade, to say no to the opportunities which are before us in the free trade agreement and in the GATT, is to say no to our future, to say no to the 50 per cent of income which comes from exports and, quite frankly, to say no to the future of at least half of the Canadians who could no longer find employment in that industry.

In a global economy you either face the competition or you are out of competition. To be able to compete any industrialized country needs guaranteed access to at least 100 million people. Unfortunately, Canada and Australia do not have that guarantee within ourselves. Therefore, we look to a free trade agreement with the United States as a solution to that lack of guarantee. This free trade agreement will give us that guarantee, it will give us that market which is at least 10 times the size of the Canadian domestic market. It is vital to every sector of our economy; the resource industry, the manufacturing industry, and the service industry.

Canadian industry, large and small, has faced this fact. That is why virtually all industrial associations in this country, representing the large and the small, are now supporting the free trade agreement. They not only want to compete, they are begging for a chance to compete. These enterprising Canadians are committed to our unique social, economic, and cultural institutions. They know that these Canadian institutions can only be as strong as the Canadian economy. Of course, we are willing to pay a certain price to be Canadians, but we need the wealth which is generated by trade and we need the economic growth that results from trade in order to be in a position to do that.

Sovereignty is not something that is given to a nation. Sovereignty is something that a nation earns every day. For Canada, in my opinion, and in the opinion of the Government, trade is the key to that sovereignty.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I appreciated the comments made by my hon. friend. They were thoughtful comments and, while I have some disagreement with a good deal of what he had to say, I appreciate that they were presented in the way in which they were.

I want to ask my hon. friend a couple of questions. Nearly 80 per cent of our trade is now with the United States. I do not think another country in the world has 80 per cent of its trade with one other country. If there are such countries, I am not aware of them. In the European Economic Community, for example, once a country is doing over 20 per cent of its trade with one the partners it begins to get very concerned and limits any increase in trade with that country. They believe that 20 to 25 per cent is the maximum allowable because once it gets beyond that point the other country has a certain amount of control over your economy.

At this time 80 per cent of our trade is with the United States, and that is increasing in spite of some initiative over the last number of years to divert trade into other areas.

Would the Hon. Member like, as an ultimate goal, to have 95 per cent or all of our trade with the United States? How does the Member respond to questions which I and others on a recent parliamentary delegation to Singapore, the Philippines, Indonesia, and Hong Kong were asked at every stage? People in the business and international trading world were asking why Canada does not do more trade in that part of the world. They asked why Canadians do not aggressively pursue new trade options in their part of Asia.

There was a feeling that the amount of initiative in this north-south trade has been somewhat at the expense of pursuing aggressively trade in new areas, particularly the Pacific Rim in this case. I would like to hear my colleague's comments on both those issues.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Madam Speaker, both questions are very appropriate and thoughtful. Canada is very much a product of its geography. Those of us who have taught Canadian history and have observed Canadian politics have sometimes said that indeed there is too much geography in Canada. There are many theories that Canada is one of the most difficult countries in the world to govern because of that geography. Without a doubt, the very presence of the Canadian Shield represents an immense barrier which the Government must very consciously work at to overcome. That geography has meant that we have developed more of a trade relationship with the United States as opposed to the relationship between countries in many other parts of the world where there are alternatives.

The Hon. Member mentioned Europe, where virtually any European country is surrounded by neighbours on two or three boundaries as opposed to the one boundary we have.

Smaller countries which have entered into the European Economic Community probably share some of the fears that I hear Canadians expressing today. For example, I hear people ask how a nation of 25 million can exist with a nation of 250 million. While that is a legitimate question, I suggest the answer first lies within our own country. That ratio has existed throughout our history and we are proud of the continuing peaceful relationship we have with the United States.

There are also examples in Europe where the very small countries are as comfortable with a free trade agreement as are the large countries. As a matter of fact, countries are begging for admission into the European Economic Community. Greece, Portugal and Spain recently joined the Community and Turkey wishes to do so. Luxembourg is an example of a small country that is still comfortable with the experience of co-existing with larger ones.

It does not automatically follow that the small in any way are jeopardized by a relationship with the large, unless the small countries have no confidence in themselves.

Some of us watched the football games on the weekend. Football teams that were not expected to win did indeed win. If they had gone into the football game with the same sense of insecurity which I hear some Canadians express today, they probably would have been defeated before the game began.

The point is that the essence of the agreement is that we must believe in ourselves. In a perfect world, I would certainly prefer that we had less trade with the United States. While I am uncomfortable with the fact that 77 per cent of our trade is with the United States, I do know that many attempts in the past to redress that have been unsuccessful, despite the intervention of Government in many cases, because it has, quite frankly, been to the economic advantage of producers and consumers in Canada to maintain that trading relationship.

I do not believe we have put all our eggs in one basket. This Government is very much committed to developing trade with the Pacific Rim, as is Canadian industry. For example, when I advised the President of the Canadian Pork Council of my inability to reach him, he told me that he was going to Tokyo to develop markets there for Canadian fresh pork.

We should also stress that the free trade agreement is built within the comprehensive framework of the GATT. The agreement is part of the whole and not meant to stand alone. By working toward both a freer trade agreement with the United States and an improved GATT agreement, the interests of Canadian consumers and producers will be very definitely protected.

Mr. Gottselig: Madam Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Brandon—Souris (Mr. Clark) on the excellent presentation he made this afternoon. Since the free trade debate began, we have seen the sides clearly drawn, mainly on political philosophies. This has been evident in the daily newspapers in western Canada, eastern Canada, in the farm papers and in the positions put forward by the spokespersons on free trade.

The political debate that is ranging in Canada over this issue should be more confined to this Chamber and possibly to provincial legislatures throughout Canada, rather than to the degree to which it is engaged in by some of the participants.

There is no doubt that the issue of free trade is a very complex one. However, I think it deserves to be studied carefully by examining the real issues and not participating only in rhetoric, particularly when it is purely political in nature.

The Member did an excellent job of putting forward the position the Government has taken since this debate began.

Of the two or three key issues that I hear raised in discussions about free trade, one is the fact that people do not seem to be totally convinced that we have provided protection, particularly for the supply managed commodities. Perhaps the Hon. Member could comment on the protection that has been put in place for the feather industries and the dairy industries. Perhaps he could also comment on the two-price wheat system that is certainly questioned in western Canada by growers to whom I speak, who want to know the Government's intention with respect to the removal of two-priced wheat.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has raised a number of important questions. I will try to address them as briefly as possible.

First, I believe most Members in the House are aware that the supply management programs remain intact. Furthermore, we have a continuing right to establish new supply management programs in the future. It is important to stress that fact because there are many who feared that they would be destroyed by the agreement. That is not the case.

Second, the quota system for imports in all those supply managed programs remains intact. The Hon. Member referred to the feather industry. In some cases there is an increase in quota, with a maximum of 1.5 per cent which is permitted under the freer trade agreement. I believe that is an increase with which most of the industry is comfortable.

The Hon. Member asked me to comment on two-priced wheat. I think the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer) and others have made it very clear that whenever that program should be phased out in the future, adequate compensation would be provided to producers, if necessary. However, we believe that it is quite possible that by the time this happens the price will be rising and hopefully the export price will be closer to the domestic price.

Most of the western grain farm community, at least, has responded fairly well to this because domestic wheat constitutes about 8 per cent of our market, and it is the 80 per cent of our wheat which we sell in the world community that is very important to us. That is where we must concentrate our efforts.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being six o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that, pursuant to Standing Order 82(12), proceedings on the motion have expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

SHIPBUILDING—FRIGATE CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM—AWARDING OF CONTRACT

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to be able to participate in the adjournment debate this evening on a matter that is indeed very cherished in the part of the world I come from, primarily the constituencies of Saint John and Fundy—Royal. I am delighted that we have such an eminent Parliamentary Secretary with us tonight. I understand he is going to answer on behalf of the Government. I hold him in great esteem. I consider him to be one of the most respected, if not the most respected, Parliamentary Secretaries. I know he will be fair. I know he will be charitable, and I do not say that just because he happens to pay half the rent.

I raised my question regarding the awarding of the next six frigates because of the apparent struggle between Quebec and New Brunswick which I consider to be not only degrading but somewhat unpleasant. I fear, as do many New Brunswickers, that an opportunity to build the frigates in a yard that has the expertise and the best offer will be lost as Cabinet participates in a regional struggle which, as most people are aware, has delayed the awarding of the contract.

The case supporting the awarding of the frigate contract to the Saint John shipyard is indeed very strong. The company wants to build all six ships in its yard. It feels it can do so for a package of $1.976 billion, which is a considerable saving of $80 million per ship. I want to point out to you, Madam Speaker, and to all Canadians that this is about $700 million less than the original estimates for this package.

The Saint John yard is the prime contractor of the first batch of frigates. It has developed the technology and has assembled the personnel necessary to construct this class of frigate. In place today is a world class, top notch complement of designers, engineers, program managers and construction workers, all ready and willing to undertake the challenge of constructing the next six frigates. The record of the Saint John yard is excellent. The frigate program now under way is commendable. It is on schedule and within budget. The lead ship should be delivered by October 1989. In an era where we should have no waste contributing to the spiralling deficit we were exposed to because of the previous administration, this is a refreshing revelation.

I want to say that the first phase of the frigate program has been successful in creating jobs in southern New Brunswick and in Saint John. It has injected millions of dollars into the local economy of Atlantic Canada and has stimulated industry and job creation. You may be aware, Madam Speaker, that the shipbuilding industry in southern New Brunswick is critical to the employment and economic expansion of our region. A decline in the shipbuilding industry always hits the local and regional economies very hard and has repercussions throughout every sector.

Defence procurement programs appear to be distributed fairly across Canada. British Columbia is a leading bidder for the half billion dollar ice-breaker contract. The West won the contract to improve the CF-5 fighter jet. Quebec received the CF-18 contract. I am seriously concerned by reports about the confusion surrounding the awarding of the contract. Ministers are reported to be making statements and then retracting them. I am concerned about the delay and the apparent regional confrontation within Cabinet. Almost every media account of this issue draws parallels between the awarding of this contract and the awarding of the CF-18 contract. I know Members of Parliament from Quebec are concerned about unemployed shipbuilders and economic opportunities, job creation and high-tech development.

However, a great deal has already been done by the Government to stimulate economic growth in Quebec. I think that we should square up to that fact. For instance, a $55 million grant was provided to improve petrochemical facilities. Under a $100 million federal-provincial agreement Quebec will receive more than 40 per cent of Canada's tourism development budget. A $100 million interest free loan was made available to General Motors. A three-year agreement generating $278 million in federal funds will be used for the purchase of training courses. Close to 3,000 jobs have been created in the aerospace sector which has received almost $200 million in federal contributions.

It may not be well recognized by the majority of Canadians, but Quebec has already handsomely benefited by the lion's share of the 1983 frigate contract. Although Saint John was a prime contractor, some $972 million will be spent in Quebec providing 12,180 man-years of work compared to $650 million to be spent in the Atlantic region providing 8,100 man-years of work.

The Saint John yard has calculated that splitting the work between Saint John and Quebec will cost an extra $480 million. As Canadians, this is something that we do not look forward to. We could almost purchase another frigate with the money that would be saved.

The Saint John yard has established itself as Canada's centre for the design and construction of navy vessels. It has created a centre of excellence. I strongly urge the Government to make a decision as soon as possible and award a six frigate contract to the yard that offers both the expertise and the best deal, the Saint John Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company. Canadians do not want to see Cabinet bend to political pressures and replay the CF-18 scenario.

Mr. Ron Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to respond not only to my colleague, but one of my dearest friends, someone who represents so ably the constituents of Fundy—Royal. I might point out that the Hon. Member is equally at home on the range, and always shares in pulling his weight in all endeavours, whether they be for frigates, or for his constituents in any way, shape, or form.

I understand the concerns of the Hon. Member, and I do not think there is anyone who could have put the problem more loquaciously. I will attempt to sum up the current situation relative to the awarding of the contract for construction of the second batch of patrol frigates.

As mentioned previously in the House by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Côté), I will repeat again for those still unaware that the decision has not yet been taken by the Government.

I would like to clarify for the House the importance of this contract. As has been pointed out, we are talking about billions of dollars. It is a total expenditure of $3.5 billion. I think that the Government has every reason to insist on carefully weighing all aspects of a defence expenditure of this magnitude. I can assure my hon. colleague that such an important decision will not be made in haste. When it is made, it will be a decision that will prove beneficial for all Canadians.

As in all decisions on the awarding of contracts, Phase II of the Canadian Patrol Frigate Program will be based on clear criteria: the responsiveness of defence requirements, the expertise and technical capacity of the contractor, and the costs and regional and economic benefits associated with the project.

As the Minister of Supply and Services and others have stated in the House, and as a means of calming the anxieties of my colleague from Fundy—Royal, I repeat that the contract for the second phase of frigates will be made according to operational requirements, the best value against the cost, the efficiency of the contractor, the time frame proposed, and the industrial spin-offs.

Of all people, I can well appreciate the strong belief of the Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal that the contract should be awarded to Saint John Shipbuilding. Even though my fellow Member represents the interests of Atlantic Canada, he must also realize that the role of the Government is to respond in the best interests of the country as a whole, and to determine the best way to ensure regional development.

FREE TRADE—REQUEST THAT PROVISIONS OF AGREEMENT DEALING WITH RAILWAY TRANSPORTATION BE AMENDED/UNITED STATES SUBSIDIARIES OPERATING INTRAPROVINCIALLY IN CANADA

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Madam Speaker, I wish to follow up on the question that yesterday I directed to the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Vézina). She was asked questions not only by me, but by my colleague, the Hon.

Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud). The Hon. Minister has been unable to answer any of the four specific questions that have been put forward by either my colleague from Westmorland—Kent, or myself.

• (1810)

These questions concerned the transport industry in relation to the free trade agreement which Canada will sign and enter into with the Americans. I sympathize with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on his bad luck in selecting a competent Minister of State for Transport. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) is a great joker, but he has failed to come to grips with the complex issue of transportation. The terrible thing about it is that we have had a succession of Ministers of State for Transport, one after another, who have shown irresponsibility or incompetence. That is the situation exactly, when we look at the answers given by the Minister of State for Transport yesterday.

The only bright spot in the Department is the Parliamentary Secretary who has shown some understanding of the problems and a willingness to listen to representations in all meetings of the Standing Committee on Transport and in answering questions in the House yesterday and today.

In reality, the deal with the Americans will be terrible for the trucking industry. While the Government tried to make people believe that it was a marvellous deal, the reality is that it will be a terrible one for the trucking industry.

Raymond Cope, President of the Ontario Trucking Association says that 100,000 jobs in the province's trucking industry are at stake. He went on to say: "We see the potential to devastate the Ontario trucking industry". Mr. Ron Downey, President of the Manitoba Trucking Association says that the Canadian and U.S. trucking industries are not playing on a level playing field. He went on to say:

> Certain tax and immigration changes should have been put in place before the trade accord.

Mr. Don Norquay, Chairman of the Manitoba Motor Transport Board, said the following:

> The draft agreement would not allow Canada to take any action to prevent complete domination of our highway transport industry by Americans.

These people represent the industry and they are absolutely furious at the lack of appropriate responsibility and initiative on the part of the Minister of Transport.

[Translation]

Yesterday, I asked the Minister of State (Transport) (Mrs. Vézina) to tell us whether the Canadian provinces will be able to refuse license applications made by United States truckers based in states that do not give Canadian truckers a fair deal. This was a very simple question calling for a yes or no. The Minister was not even able to tell me whether such would be the case. This matter is very important for the workers in the Canadian trucking industry, for 43 American states continue to regulate the trucking industry within their own respective jurisdictions. Under their regulations, Canadian trucking firms cannot transport merchandise or goods from one point to another within the same state: Michigan, New York and Pennsylvania, three major border states, are part of this group. Because of these regulations, for instance, in the State of New York, a Canadian firm cannot transport goods from New York City to Rochester. On the other hand, a firm based in the United States will be able to transport goods, say, from Toronto to Windsor because of the deregulation of the trucking transport industry which the Conservative government will impose on Ontario and the other Canadian provinces through Bill C-19. This right provides access to extremely profitable trucking services and will mean enormous profits for the American companies which take over contracts from the Canadian trucking industry. This is a far cry from fair competition, one of the basic principles and objectives of the so-called Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States.

The truckers would like the provincial transport commissions to keep their other regulatory powers, as this would give them some reciprocity as far as regulations are concerned when the American truckers ask for authorization to move goods from one province to another. The commission would be able to verify whether Canadian carriers have been refused a similar operating permit in the state or region of origin of the American trucker submitting an application to transport goods in Canada.

This is what I asked the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Vezina) yesterday, and she was unable to give me an answer. I trust that the Parliamentary Secretary will be able to clarify the situation this evening because, and I shall close with this, the Canadian Trucking Association has suggested, to correct this situation which could be extremely unfair to the Canadian trucking industry, that the final text of the schedule on transport in this agreement between Canada and the United States give at the very least the same status to the reciprocity provisions as to the principle of national treatment. This is the minimum required, and I trust that the Parliamentary Secretary will be able to give us an affirmative answer.

• (1815)

[English]

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, in spite of the nice words from the Member opposite I must challenge his allegations against the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie). As my friend opposite knows, Ministers are worked to death in this country and the Minister of Transport has handled his portfolio with great aplomb and also with enormous hard work and dedication. Absolute major Bills, Bill C-18, C-19 and C-21 changing the public policy of this nation were rammed through this House under the tutelage of the present Minister of Transport.

Mr. Ouellet: By the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Thacker: With respect to Ontario trucking, there is no doubt some Ontario truckers are worried about the free trade agreement but not all Ontario truckers are. As well, let me say to my hon. friend that in Alberta that industry has been deregulated and subject to the market-place for many years and has thrived. There is no reason at all why Ontario truckers with their entrepreneurship and ingenuity cannot go into the United States and compete, and compete with anyone in the world.

My friend has pointed out that some 43 states in the U.S.A. have refused licences to subsidiaries of Canadian trucking firms which want to carry freight only within those specific states. He also points out that some of our provinces as a result of Bill C-19 will for at least five years come under the reverse onus clause, and after that it will be a fit, willing and able test which anyone can meet. Even at that time, U.S. truckers will not be able to operate here interprovincially at will. They would, as now, have to establish themselves as Canadian companies, engage Canadian citizens, have a subsidiary corporation or at least a Canadian corporation, pay income tax here and compete within the competition milieu of Canada. I think we can whip them as Alberta truckers have in the U.S. They have done well so I am not quite as worried as my friend opposite, although he raises the point very well.

If discrimination of restrictive practices by states against Canadian carriers can be proven, the Government could invoke that clause in Bill C-19, which my friend talked about eloquently when the Bill was going through, the Motor Vehicle Transport Act, which permits retaliation if remedial action is not taken through consultation. I can assure the Hon. Member that the Government under the Minister of Transport or, indeed, any Government will retaliate if the Americans do not treat our truckers fairly.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS—PRINCIPAL SAVINGS AND TRUST BANKRUPTCY/REPORTED TRANSFER OF FUNDS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Madam Speaker, on August 12, I put a question to the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) concerning the Principal Savings and Trust Company. At that time, two corporations in the Province of Alberta had claimed bankruptcy; namely, First Investors and Associated Investors. It should be stated clearly that those companies fell under the jurisdiction of provincial regulation and not federal regulation. However, they were part and parcel of a corporate network or web of companies operating that type of business.

In fact, the Principal Savings and Trust Company, which is interlinked with those two provincially-regulated companies, is regulated federally under the auspices of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. At that time, I was hoping that the Minister could provide to Members of the House information which would shed light on some of the obvious questions that had been put and are still wanting for answers.

We have learned in recent weeks and indeed in recent months of investigations that have been launched by provincial administrations. We have also learned to our dismay that a great number of Canadians from across Canada have been affected negatively by the operations of Principal Savings and Trust and the other companies to which it was linked. In fact, 50,000 to 60,000 of those Canadians have lost many personal investments.

The point here is that Canadians in my own Province of Nova Scotia and indeed my own constituency as well as people from Alberta, parts of British Columbia and all across Canada have lost a great deal of money. The Government's claim is that this falls under the jurisdiction of the provincial Government and not the federal Government, therefore its responsibility has been met. However, the Parliamentary Secretary is aware that audits were done by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation of Principal Savings and Trust. The Minister, under the guise of confidentiality, has refused to table those audits.

I realize the importance of confidentiality within the business sector, but what ought to be of paramount importance, not only to the Government but indeed to the managers and business leaders in that sector of the economy is that we must know and know clearly all the facts and all the details surrounding the collapse of Principal Savings and Trust and the associated companies. It is only through that knowledge that Canadians as well as business people involved in that business can have confidence that the system we have in place is in fact serving and meeting the needs and objectives about which Canadians feel very strongly. The Government has persistently and consistently said no to making that information available.

Government Members are also aware that some very misleading practices have taken place. We would like to know what the Government has communicated to the Province of Alberta with regard to those practices. Has it given the file to the Minister responsible in the Province of Alberta? Has it given the file to the commercial fraud section of the RCMP? Has it done an investigation under Consumer and Corporate Affairs?

I think that Canadians are losing thousands upon thousands of dollars because of mismanagement and that the Government is attempting to protect, under the guise of confidentiality, what took place weeks, months and maybe even years ago in those companies.

• (1825)

I hope the Parliamentary Secretary is able to inform not only Canadians in general but those 60,000 Canadians who have lost money in Principal Savings and Trust about whether or not it is prepared to co-operate with provincial Governments in fully reimbursing those people. I hope he is able to tell us that the Government will provide all of the details and remove the guise of confidentiality in order to protect the system and give it integrity not only for today but for the future as well.

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to respond to the Hon. Member on behalf of the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin). As the Hon. Member and all other Hon. Members know, these have been very difficult times for the financial industry in general. We have all been saddened to see the failure of several banks and trust companies. Those failures have naturally raised questions as to the adequacy of the regulatory framework. I very much appreciate the concerns of the Hon. Member which he has raised before in this House as well as tonight.

From his remarks the Hon. Member recognizes that the Principal Group and its affiliated companies, except for an inactive federally-incorporated insurance company, were under the supervision of the Alberta Government. The federal Government's only involvement was through the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation insuring Principal Savings and Trust Company. As a result of that role, depositors in that trust company will be completely protected up to the insurance ceiling of $60,000.

As Hon. Members are all too painfully aware, many investment contract holders claim misrepresentations were made to them by representatives of First Investors Corporation and Associated Investors Corporation in the sale of investment contract certificates. I note, as the Hon. Member did, that the Province of Alberta announced certain measures to bring the affairs of the two investment companies under the control and scrutiny of the courts and the two companies' creditors. It is my understanding that Government has since expanded its inquiry to include a complete review of all inter-company transactions among the Principal Group of companies.

As Hon. Members know, the federal Government has placed a very high priority on addressing the problems of federally-regulated financial institutions. The Hon. Minister of State for Finance, on December 18, 1986, released a policy paper entitled "New Directions for the Financial Sector". The Government has already completed the first two stages of the process with the recent passage of Bill C-42 and Bill C-56.

The third stage of the reform package will introduce legislative amendments which should help prevent circumstances of the type currently causing investment contract holders in the uninsured affiliates of the Principal Group so much concerned. In this regard, federally-regulated institutions will, with limited exceptions, be prohibited from engaging in transactions with their affiliated companies. In addition, the actions of corporate officers and directors will be subject to stringent performance requirements to control conflict of interest and other insider activity. I would also note that the federal proposals contain a directors' policy which will ensure that one-third of the directors are unaffiliated and no more than 15 per cent of the directors on the boards of federally-regulated financial institutions are insiders.

I believe we have made considerable progress with Bill C-42 and Bill C-56 and that the third phase of this program will address the majority of concerns presented this evening by the Hon. Member.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

OPPOSITION TO OLD MAN RIVER DAM PROJECT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, today friends of the Old Man River are in court to oppose the decision of the Alberta Government to build a $350 million dam that would flood 7,000 acres of land. The dam would ruin the ecology of the river, would destroy trout habitat, and would eliminate deer and caribou grazing areas by flooding.

The Old Man River is the last untouched river in Alberta. For centuries native people have relied on this river for their livelihood. Just below the proposed high water line there are more than 200 tepee rings and what is believed to be the most westerly medicine wheel in Alberta. The valley of the Old Man is a spiritual sanctuary for the native people.

The Alberta Government should resist pressure by the 300 landowners who will benefit from the irrigation provided by the dam but who do not have to pay for its construction. The heritage, spiritual, and ecological values the river offers are far more important than agricultural growth in a country which already has agricultural surpluses.

The Friends of the Old Man deserve the support of all Canadians. Everyone who feels strongly about the heritage and value of this magnificent river should write to the Premier of Alberta and to Alberta Members of the Legislature and register strong opposition to the building of this dam.

TRIBUTE TO ROBERT ARCAND OF AMOS

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, today I should like to pay tribute to Mr. Robert Arcand, president of the Société d'entraide économique du Québec and of Financière Harricana Inc. of Amos, Abitibi.

Mr. Arcand received a doctorate from the University of Quebec in Abitibi—Témiscamingue, the second time a prominent resident of our region has been awarded a honoris causa doctorate.

Mr. Arcand had the courage to take over the Société d'entraide économique after it had hit rock bottom, and it was not easy. Putting that company back on an even keel has been an outstanding achievement in Quebec.

In his testimonial, Mr. Jean-Louis Dulac emphasized that Harricana Metal Company of Amos started from scratch and now enjoys international recognition. His example goes to show that progress and expansion have no limits.

In his statement, Mr. Arcand expressed gratitude and underscored the contribution of his wife Pierrette and his children Annie, Marie-Claude and Sébastien.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Abitibi and Témiscamingue are proud of Robert Arcand of Amos.

FISHERIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA HERRING FISHERY—FREEZE ON LEASING OF LICENCES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, last year crews on herring boats were being charged to work on herring boats. Non fishermen leased licences for exorbitant prices and many vessels doubled up on licences.

Today the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) announced half measures to correct the situation. He bans vessel owners from charging workers for the right to work, but he has placed no safeguards to guarantee that fishermen will not be paying through lower wages or lower percentages of the over-all catch.

The Minister ignored the advice of his own Pacific resource council which recommended in October that seine vessels be allowed only one licence and that gillnet licences be issued only to bona fide fishermen. Instead, the Minister has frozen the leasing of licences. While this prevents the further doubling up of licences, it does not solve the problem of existing multiple licensing. He has locked the barn door but the horse has already gone. He will allow further purchase of second and third licences in May, 1988, to replace leasing.

Since 1983 fishermen have asked for changes to the herring licensing policy. They were told to be patient. The measures proposed by the Minister will allow multiple licensing to continue. Patience is a virtue, as the saying goes, but is it any wonder that fishermen on the British Columbia coast are losing their patience with this Government and this Minister of Fisheries?

TRIBUTE TO BUSINESSMEN AND BUSINESSWOMEN OF ABITIBI WEST

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, in my riding last Saturday night, on November 21, I was in La Sarre to attend the first "Excell'Or" gala evening organized by the local Chamber of Commerce. The purpose of this event, a "first" and very well organized, was to publicize and recognize the outstanding performance of business people who participate in our community's economic growth. More specifically, I would like to mention two of our award winners. In the category "Big Business", the Howard Bienvenue Company of La Sarre won the award. In the category "Person of the Year", the award went to Mr. Jean Perron, president of Normick Perron.

Mr. Speaker, we congratulate the winners and finalists, and recognize in them the entrepreneurship and initiative of the business community in Abitibi West. To the organizers of this unforgettable evening, I say bravo, and until next year!

CANADA POST CORPORATION

DOMINION, CAPE BRETON—EFFECT ON SENIOR CITIZENS OF PROPOSED CHANGE IN SERVICE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in Dominion, Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, it has become quite clear that Canada Post has every intention of changing the present level of service from that of personal service to community mailboxes.

In rural Canada the post office is a meeting place. It is a place for information on Canada and on other residents in communities. Canada Post is trying to close the post office in Dominion because the Government of Canada sees the post office as a grabbag chance to make money.

With respect to replacing the services of the post office in Dominion, Cape Breton, with supermailboxes, I have this to say. Fifty per cent of the 3,000 person population of Dominion is made up of senior citizens. Surely the Government should not have to see senior citizens at 70 years of age walking in the snow to get their daily mail.

On November 10 a resolution was passed by the Municipal Council in the town of Dominion, forwarded to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) on November 12. It was followed up by a citizens' meeting attended by over 300 individuals on November 16. A letter was forwarded to the Minister on November 18, 1987, requesting a personal meeting with him in order to terminate the regressive actions of Canada Post to close the postal services in Dominion, Cape Breton. The citizens, the municipal council, the Tory MLA in that particular constituency, as well as the provincial Legislature are against this regressive action by Canada Post.

WINTER OLYMPIC GAMES

OLYMPIC TRUST—END TO HARASSMENT OF SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the 1988 Winter Olympics in Calgary are an important event for Canada and the world. Recent actions by some Olympic officials unfortunately reinforce the idea that politics and sport do not mix. The Olympic Trust claims sole rights to use the word Olympic, its derivatives, and the "stick man" symbols.

In Ottawa they tried telling the Olympic Ski Shop, the Olympia Restaurant and the Olympic Tuck Shop that they could not use the word Olympic. It is ludicrous that they would have to change their company name or logo. The Hull Olympics hockey team, a team in its fourteenth season, would not appreciate being told that it is infringing trade mark laws and would have to change its name.

• (1410)

The Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) has put an end to all this nonsense as Olympic officials have agreed to stop harassing small businesses. The Minister is not only concerned with the importance of these games to all Canadians but that our reputation in the international sports world not be marred by this petty squabbling. The Olympic Trust should never mind the trees and start worrying about the forest.

MULTICULTURALISM

ANTHOLOGY OF RACIST VIEWS—A CANADIAN'S ANSWER

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have received quite a bit of correspondence from Citizens for Foreign Aid Reform, including an anthology of remarks on race made by Canadian forefathers. As a result, I have written this letter to Mr. Paul Fromm:

> This is to acknowledge receipt of the anthology of racist views expressed by various significant figures from Canadian history. While I appreciate this review I must tell you that even as a child I was made thoroughly familiar with them and their implications in a most compelling and unforgettable way.
> You will of course appreciate why I am less convinced than you and your colleagues in C-FAR that I am a less worthy Canadian than those with more purely European characteristics.
> Since as an academic I have an interest in the thoroughness of any intellectual endeavour may I suggest that you consult the literature on race and racial purity published just before and during the Holocaust. You may there find additional quotes to bolster your case.
> For my part I will continue to believe that multiculturalism is the trend for Canada's future.
> However should I prove wrong I would appreciate your advice on where I might resettle. Doubtless my lack of racial purity will make it difficult—

It is signed Howard McCurdy, MP.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

NORTHERN ONTARIO—FEDNOR PROGRAM—QUALIFICATIONS OF BOARD MEMBER

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, as I stated yesterday, I am proud as a northern Ontarian and also as a Progressive Conservative of the FEDNOR Program the Government has successfully delivered to the people of northern Ontario. The recent criticism in the press and from the opposition benches cannot be justified.

I wish to point out a particularly glaring misstatement of the facts concerning the FEDNOR representative from Timiskaming, Mr. Pat Birney.

This gentleman served from 1943 to 1945 in the Royal Canadian Air Force. He is the Past-President of the Royal Canadian Legion and life member of the Royal Canadian Legion.

He was a construction superintendent for 20 years and was for 20 years councillor for the Town of New Liskeard. He was the Mayor for two years and Vice-Chairman of the Timiskaming Health Unit. He was President of the Children's Aid Society and a member of the South Timiskaming Planning Board, the Director of the Northern Ontario Development Board for seven years, and President of the Tri-Town & District Association for the Mentally Retarded.

This gentleman is an excellent representative of Timiskaming. He deserves proper recognition. He will continue to contribute greatly to the FEDNOR Program and to northern Ontario. It is absolutely sickening to hear opposition Members suggest otherwise.

TRIBUTE TO JUSTINE LACOSTE-BEAUBIEN

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, last week I had the pleasure of attending a party to launch the biography of Justine Lacoste-Beaubien, founder of the Sainte-Justine Hospital. The book was launched on the eightieth anniversary of the hospital, the first Francophone hospital in Montreal. Today, Sainte-Justine Hospital still enjoys the respect and appreciation of the entire community. Since its founding in 1907, Sainte-Justine has cared for over 1,500,000 children.

Justine Lacoste-Beaubien and a group of women volunteer workers saw and met the challenge. Justine Lacoste-Beaubien, founder of Sainte-Justine Hospital, was a woman ahead of her time. She did not wait for today's pressure groups to fight for the concerns of her contemporaries. She was a brave woman who led the way for many of us. She is a role model for all Canadian and Quebec women. She has left us a legacy of eighty years of loving care, and we thank her for that legacy.

Today, Sainte-Justine Hospital is in financial difficulty, and I want to ask the provincial Government to take action to prevent a number of its clinics from closing.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

NORTHERN ONTARIO—FEDERAL FUNDING FOR FEDNOR PROGRAM

Mr. Aurèle Gervais (Timmins—Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak about the new economic development program for northern Ontario called FEDNOR. Under this new program, the Government of Canada, for the first time ever, designated northern Ontario as a distinct economic region requiring special economic assistance.

The $55 million in outright grants or incentive loans plus an additional $15 million for guaranteed loans which will generate a total of $100 million have been earmarked for northern Ontario entrepreneurs and small businesses. This is new money in addition to all other provincial and federal programs.

I had hoped that all MPs from northern Ontario would have rejoiced at this good news and would help make the program work for the economic betterment of northern Ontario and their respective ridings. However, lo and behold, to my disappointment, instead of trying to help, some Liberal and NDP Members decided instead to attack the FEDNOR board members unfairly.

• (1415)

Come on, colleagues! Forget the partisanship and personal attacks. There are many good things for communities in your ridings in this excellent FEDNOR program. I invite all MPs, MPPs, mayors and councillors from northern Ontario to co-operate and work together closely with the FEDNOR board in order to bring full benefits to northerners for whom the program was designed.

BROADCASTING

ACTION DAY COMMITTEE'S CALL FOR SUPPORT

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, this morning my caucus colleagues and I met representatives of the Action Day Committee for Canadian Programming. They came here to express their concern about the state of Canadian radio, television and film production. Their heartfelt message was clear. Action for Canadian programming must be taken now before it is too late.

The committee pointed out that public broadcasting in this country is in trouble. The CBC, starved of funds, is having difficulty operating. As well, production of Canadian feature films and television drama faces an uncertain future. Less than 5 per cent of all drama on Canadian television stations is Canadian. Fewer than 3 per cent of the films in our cinemas are Canadian. That is unacceptable. The arts create a mirror for society. Film and television are potent instruments to help a society define itself.

I join the Action Day Committee in urging that we move together as a nation to develop our film industries and public broadcasting. The show must go on.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—IMPLEMENTATION—CONSTITUTIONAL AUTHORITY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Both he and the Prime Minister know that energy pricing, wine distribution policy and marketing boards all fall within provincial jurisdiction. Yet they also fall within the ambit of the Prime Minister's trade deal with the United States. The Prime Minister says he is going to implement the deal with or without provincial consent.

Has the Deputy Prime Minister consulted his Leader and is he aware of the constitutional precedent established 50 years ago that the Parliament of Canada does not have authority to implement a treaty on matters within provincial jurisdiction? If so, does he have some new constitutional rule that he would like to make us aware of?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman knows very well that signing international treaties is strictly the prerogative of the federal Government. I do not think that should be a question in anyone's mind. I do not know whether the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is suggesting some sort of provincial veto in these matters.

The fact is that the free trade arrangement we have negotiated is good for all regions of Canada, including Ontario. It is good for the sectors to which the hon. gentleman referred. If there are some difficulties I suspect they will be resolved in the co-operative manner reflected in the way this Government has carried on for the last three years.

IMPORTANCE OF AGREEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister was talking not about signing the agreement but about implementing it. I want to refer the hon. gentleman to the Labour Conventions case decided 50 years ago which clearly dealt with the issue of provincial jurisdiction. Knowing that the Prime Minister has great confidence in our Ambassador to the U.S., Mr. Gotlieb, I will also refer him to Mr. Gotlieb's book Canadian Treaty Making where he says quite clearly at page 85: "The Parliament of Canada cannot, through making a treaty, legislate in fields of provincial jurisdiction and jurisdictional competence." That is quite clear.

This morning the Prime Minister told reporters in effect: "Don't worry about what I said yesterday about implementing this treaty or about infringing the Constitution; wait until you see the final text." That is precisely the point. We have not seen the final text.

The Prime Minister is meeting with the provincial Premiers this evening, tomorrow and Friday, and there is no final text. The committee of the House of Commons is on the road and there is no final text. Business and professional people across the country have no final text, yet the Prime Minister is insisting on ramming this deal through Parliament and insisting on meeting the date of January 2 when the people of Canada have no opportunity to analyse the final text.

• (1420)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Is this the Deputy Prime Minister's view of how the Government and Parliament ought to be dealing with a matter of such importance to the cultural, economic, and social life of Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, this is a very important issue and a very important debate. That is why I am surprised that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition wants to tear up the agreement before he even sees it. I find that very irresponsible.

The fact of the matter is that there has been a lot of debate on this issue in the House and in the country, starting with a Royal Commission which was chaired by his former colleague which cost Canadian taxpayers some $24 million. It made a very comprehensive analysis of the total economy of Canada and a very thorough examination of the pros and cons of a free trade arrangement with the United States of America.

There have been two weeks of parliamentary hearings by the committee and there will be two more. There have been several days of debate in this House. Question Period has been dominated by this issue.

I know that the right hon. gentleman has been laid up in the last week or so. We regret that and welcome him back to the House, but I am sure he had the opportunity to follow the debate even from his bedside. I hope that he will continue that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: From his bedside? Cheap shot, Don.

Mr. Gauthier: You are pretty sick yourself.

Mr. Mazankowski: I am not as sick as the hon. gentleman who does not have the guts to stand up and say what he says from his seat.

I suggest that the first priority of business for the right hon. gentleman should be to get back to his riding to sort out the difficulties he has there, because there is obviously a difference between his position and the position of his constituents.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I do not recommend the Hon. Member's bedside manner to anyone in the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I understand that the Prime Minister is having some difficulties in his riding of Manicouagan. I invite him, on behalf of the people of Quadra, to come on out to Quadra and we will take him on head to head on that issue right in Vancouver.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, since you have the adjacent riding, I will nominate you as arbitrator.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

FREE TRADE—QUERY WHY CANADA MUST FOLLOW UNITED STATES AGENDA

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister was against free trade during his campaign for the leadership of his party. In the last election campaign he did not mention a free trade agreement with United States. And now he wants us to adopt an agreement, although no one has seen the final text. And when we do see the text, it will be too late to change it . The Prime Minister maintains the agreement must be adopted by Parliament in December, in time to be signed on January 2. I am not trying to mess up the Government's secret plans to have an agreement signed by the Prime Minister and the President of United States in January, but could the Deputy Prime Minister inform the House why we have to follow the U.S. agenda to analyse our case here in Parliament and clarify the situation for Canadians?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the position of the Prime Minister and the Government of Canada on this issue is very clear. I think the Leader of the Opposition has a responsibility to make his position clear to the Canadian people as well.

We know that he is in favour of free trade. He said, at one time, that he was in favour of this deal but would like to improve it. Then he said that he did not like it and so was going to tear it up. This week he said that we should be doing all our business through the multilateral negotiations of the GATT, and last week his members were condemning the GATT ruling.

Where does the Leader of the Opposition stand on this important trade issue? He owes the country and this House the service of telling us very clearly where he stands.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, if the Deputy Prime Minister wants to know the position of the Liberal Party and my Leader he can read Hansard. We had this debate in the House in March. If he reads Hansard he will know exactly what our position is.

• (1425)

Mr. Epp (Provencher): What is the date?

Mr. Garneau: They are asking for the date. I will give you the date of June, 1983, to see what your Prime Minister was saying about free trade.

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHY AGREEMENT MUST BE SIGNED SO QUICKLY

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the First Ministers' meeting starts tomorrow. One of the items on the agenda was supposed to be the trade agreement with United States. Now it seems the legal text, which it seems will be more than 1,000 pages long, is not available.

How can the Deputy Prime Minister and the Prime Minister sign a final agreement more than 1,000 pages long on January 2, before the provincial Premiers have had a chance to read and examine it and decide whether they want to adopt legislation and regulations covering areas that come under provincial jurisdiction and are included in the Agreement the Prime Minister absolutely wants to sign the day after New Year's?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Member's question is absolutely absurd. This whole process has been conducted through the consultation of the First Ministers. There have been innumerable meetings with the Prime Minister and the First Ministers. There will obviously be more.

Clearly, there is nothing in the document or in the process that has been established that is alien to the First Ministers. I can assure the hon. gentleman that that will continue. It is regrettable that the final text is not available. We had hoped that it would be, but I think it is important at this stage of the game to ensure that all details are sorted out in a proper manner because our commitment, first and foremost, is to obtain the best deal for Canada. That continues to be our sole objective.

REASONS FOR URGENCY

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I would like to get back to the issue of the final text of the Agreement. We do not have the text and neither do the provincial Premiers. When they see the text it will be too late, since the Prime Minister of Canada, without final and binding consultations on the legal text, will have signed a contract, a treaty with President Reagan that will commit the provinces in areas that come under their own jurisdiction.

I want to ask the Prime Minister and especially the Deputy Prime Minister why they feel it is so urgent to make Parliament reach a decision on a text at least 1,000 pages long, and all in three weeks' time. Why is it so urgent to have this document signed on January 2?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister and the Government have been up front and forthcoming in this process all along. As soon as the "Elements of the Agreement" were completed they were tabled the very next day in the House of Commons and made available to all Members. That has formed the focus of debate. It is expected that the final text will be fully consistent with the elements.

As far as continuing debate is concerned, enabling legislation will have to put this agreement into place. There will be debate on the floor of the House of Commons. There will be committee hearings, there will be Senate approval, and there will be ample opportunity for all Hon. Members to get involved in all aspects of the debate. And there will be ample opportunity for all Canadians to come before any legislative committee that will be considering this.

GOVERNMENT'S RIGHT TO IMPLEMENT TREATY—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by welcoming back to the House the Leader of the Official Opposition. I wish him well in his health. I noted he challenged the Deputy Prime Minister to a debate in Vancouver Quadra on this matter. I just say good luck. The Deputy Prime Minister has so far refused to debate this subject even in his home Province of Alberta.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: In the absence of the Prime Minister, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Yesterday the Prime Minister said—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: They do not want to hear the Prime Minister's words, Mr. Speaker. I can understand that, but I thought they at least would be respectful.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

Mr. Broadbent: The Prime Minister said yesterday:

> The right of the federal Government of Canada has never and never shall be, challenged to negotiate and implement foreign treaties.

As is not unfamiliar, the Prime Minister is wrong. Will the Minister of Justice now confirm that the right of the federal Government to implement treaties within provincial jurisdictional authority was not only challenged but successfully challenged in 1937? Will he confirm and state clearly to the House that what the Prime Minister said yesterday was wrong?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I do not think any serious student of constitutional law would doubt the right of the federal Government to enter into treaties on behalf of the people of Canada. Furthermore, I am really amazed at the complaining we hear with respect to this historic treaty on the part of the Opposition. Predecessor Governments have never gone to the extent of having these matters debated by committees of Parliament. They have never allowed the matters to come for ratification before the House of Commons.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is wrong. That is absolutely wrong.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: This is totally unprecedented, and the Liberal Party is particularly vulnerable in this regard.

All I can say with respect to this transaction is that, once this transaction is completed between the two countries, it will then be incumbent upon us to move on the areas with respect to jurisdiction which is in the federal Government, and I simply say that I know all levels of government will co-operate with the federal Government in that regard.

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister said all levels of the federal Government will co-operate with the federal Government. That is encouraging. One would hope that would be the case.

COMPLIANCE OF PROVINCES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): On page 35 of the "Elements of Agreement" both national Governments are obligated to obtain the required authority from state, provincial and local governments. Is the Minister of Justice saying that that clause was put in there by accident? Is he saying that Ambassador Yeutter of the United States, when he stated publicly that they expected provincial compliance, was just indulging in mere rhetoric? Or will the Minister of Justice at least acknowledge the truth to the House of Commons, that for this agreement to be operative, as the Macdonald Commission previously pointed out, and as everyone who has looked at the free trade agreement understands, provincial agreement is required? Will the Minister concede that?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I want to confirm for the Leader of the New Democratic Party the fact that the Government of Canada is totally, constitutionally, morally, and in every other way, able to enter into this treaty on behalf of the people of Canada. The fact that there is a question with respect to certain elements which impinge upon provincial jurisdiction, I think is interesting, but it is not fatal to any agreement between the two countries.

I simply reiterate the position put forward by the Prime Minister and by the Minister for International Trade that we are confident that, in the final analysis, once this agreement has been concluded, all levels of government will co-operate in doing the appropriate things in order to bring this agreement to fruition.

PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister in fact said something quite different. The Minister of Justice should acknowledge that. He said "implement". He did not say just "negotiate" an agreement.

[Translation]

But according to the Minister, for the time being the federal Government agrees on the fact that, if the agreement is to be effective, issues which fall within the provincial purview must be endorsed by the provinces. Is that true for the Government? Yes or no?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the answer is the same in either of the official languages of Canada. I simply reiterate what I said previously. We are satisfied with our constitutional ability to enter into this agreement with the United States for an enhanced trade arrangement with that country. We believe we have the jurisdiction to bring it into full force and effect. We know that the provinces will co-operate in areas which may affect their jurisdiction.

BROADCASTING

TELEFILM FUNDING

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, for ourselves and our children's sense of belonging, we need to see and know more about ourselves as Canadians, particularly on our television and theatre screens. At this point in time, Mr. Speaker, your chances of turning on a television set set or buying a ticket for the movies and finding a Canadian story are less than 5 per cent, and that is very sad and dramatic.

My question is directed to the Minister of Communications. What is the Minister planning to do with respect to the shortfall in Telefilm funding which, as she well knows, will result in further decreases in television and film productions in Canada? Is the Minister not aware that the CBC and the private broadcasters are caught in a bind and will not be able to meet their new Canadian content commitments? What concrete action is the Minister planning to take with respect to this very serious deficit?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity this morning to meet with representatives of the Action Day Committee. I may say I was very pleased with that meeting. I consider it to have been very helpful and productive. Members of the committee and I are agreed on the need for more and better Canadian programming on both the public and private networks. In the past we have attempted to do that very thing through such support measures as the Broadcast Development Fund which is now permanent, and through the new Feature Film Fund of $165 million over a five-year period.

Those programs have had a very beneficial effect and I regard with some pride programs like Degrassi Junior High, Loyalties, and John and the Missus which have come to our Canadian screens as a result of these programs. These support programs will indeed continue and others will be introduced.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, the promises regarding past performance and the future needs are certainly not going to be met by the Minister's words. It takes action to meet that deficit.

FILM DISTRIBUTION LEGISLATION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, talking about action, 10 months ago the Minister of Communications promised film distribution legislation that would mean more money for investment in Canadian films. She has written a Bill. I have a copy of the Bill. When will the Minister deposit this Bill in the House? Or is she in the process of vetting it so it will have no teeth? Or has the free trade agreement interrupted the scheduling of the tabling of this Bill?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talks about action. I may say that in this past year we have introduced a Public Lending Rights Program which, for the first time, reimburses our authors all across the country. The former Government would not do it.

We have also, for the first time in 60 years, introduced amendments to the Copyright Act which will be very beneficial to our actors and authors. If the Hon. Member would stop trying to stonewall the Copyright Bill, the broadcasting industry, the authors and the actors of this country would be a lot better off.

I have also given a commitment that we would introduce legislation which will make Canada a separate market for film rights and which will give Canadian distributors access to those rights. That will be done. I have said it will, and it will be done.

AMOUNT OF CANADIAN PROGRAMMING ON TELEVISION

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): My question is also directed to the Minister of Communications. The Minister also met members of the Action Now Group this morning. My caucus colleagues and I also met this morning with representatives from the Action Day Committee.

• (1440)

In our discussion the committee pointed out that less than 5 per cent of all drama on Canadian television is Canadian, and fewer than 3 per cent of films in our cinemas are Canadian. I am sure that the Minister agrees that that is unacceptable.

Is the Minister now prepared to agree to the Action Day Committee's key recommendation that minimum targets be agreed to for the production of Canadian television, drama, and feature films for distribution in Canada on public and private outlets?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Absolutely, Mr. Speaker.

I know that this is the first question that has been raised by the Hon. Member as critic, and I welcome him to that post. I may say that if he had been there previously, he would have heard me say over and over again that it is our goal to increase Canadian programming, and to have more and better Canadian programming on both the private and the public networks.

I have made proposals to the standing committee on this matter. I have taken the message to the Canadian Association of Broadcasters, and to the CBC, on how this can be done.

I would hope, knowing that I have the support of such interested people as the Action Day Committee, that we will look at the whole aspect of an incentive fee which will allow more Canadian programs to be produced. I welcome the support that I have received from the committee today.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, first I wish to thank the Minister for her kind words in welcoming me as the critic for communications. I was the critic in 1982 and at that time I heard many of the same promises that the Minister is making today from the then Minister of Communications, Mr. Fox. It has been a long time coming.

I am happy to hear that the Minister is in agreement with the commitment that the action group has requested, which is an additional 800 hours of new TV drama each year, and at least 50 low-budget feature films annually to be produced in this country.

However, what we are all concerned with, Madam Minister, is your commitment. This requires new money. On the other hand, we are concerned when we hear members of your Government talking in terms of privatization of the CBC—

An Hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is a very experienced Member of the House, and he knows the appropriate manner to put a question. I would ask him to do so.

Mr. de Jong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your kindness in allowing me to place my question.

My question to the Minister is the following. When will she announce and introduce the legislation that she has promised in order that the film industry and all Canadians can indeed judge how determined and committed she is?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, since this is a day for handing out compliments, I want to say to the Hon. Member that back in 1982 he would have heard whatever Minister was here making comments about the Copyright Act and changes to it.

May I say that the Hon. Member's predecessor strongly supported the amendments to the Copyright Act. We would welcome him in committee in order that we could get on with the Bill. It will have a very beneficial impact on authors and artists in this country, and the way we are able to produce Canadian broadcasting.

I can also assure the Hon. Member that, in looking at the broadcasting policy and the new Broadcasting Act which will be coming in before too long, the resources that will be needed for such changes will indeed be there.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ESTABLISHMENT OF NUCLEAR WASTE STORAGE SITES—POSITION OF ABITIBI AND NOTHERN QUEBEC

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In Ottawa last February 2, Mr. Hatcher of Atomic Energy of Canada stated before the Standing Committee on Environment and Forestry that he did not think the Abitibi region would be considered as a possible nuclear waste disposal site. Today Montreal's Polytechnical School is seeking funds from Atomic Energy of Canada to make a study. Here is my question, Mr. Speaker: Before undertaking any study on possible nuclear waste disposal sites in New Quebec and Abitibi, and before giving grants to this group, would it be possible for the Department to make immediate representations to have Atomic Energy of Canada officials meet with the Inuit, Crees and Naskapi with a view to honouring the James Bay Agreement, because we do not want Abitibi and northern Quebec turned into a nuclear dump in the coming years?

[English]

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's ongoing concern on behalf of his constituents.

To my knowledge, AECL is not prepared to enter into this form of a study. But I can also assure my hon. friend that the James Bay-Quebec Agreement provides for environmental protection, and provides for the necessity of discussions with the people of the James Bay area.

I can also assure the Hon. Member that the James Bay Agreement and the environmental protection provided therein will be honoured, and any decision will have to take place with the agreement of the people who reside in the James Bay area, the Cree, the Naskapi, and those citizens who are responsible for implementing the review.

SHIPBUILDING

REQUEST FOR DETAILS ON SPLITTING CONTRACT TO BUILD FRIGATES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns the difficult circumstances of shipyard workers in Quebec. The Quebec Minister of Industry and Trade said that the Minister of State (Transport) informed him that work on Phase II of the six frigates would be done, without tenders, in the shipyards in New Brunswick. Members from the Atlantic Provinces are saying that all six frigates will be build in shipyards in the Atlantic Provinces, and the Minister of Supply and Services would have Quebecers believe they will have one or two. Quite simply, shipyard workers, both in Quebec and Atlantic Provinces, want to know the truth. Will the entire contract for building the frigates be given to shipyards in New Brunswick or will the work be split between Quebec shipyards and shipyards in the Atlantic Provinces? Yes or no?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Supply and Services is not here today, but he specifically answered that question the other day. The record indicates the Government's position.

QUEBEC SHIPYARD WORKERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Minister ought to read Hansard. The Minister of Supply and Services has said nothing, and he is good at talking out of both sides of his mouth, one side for the Atlantic Provinces and one side for the Lauzon shipyard near Quebec City. This is what we want to know: Do you know, or can you say, whether or not all six frigates will be build in shipyards in New Brunswick or whether the work will be split between various shipyards, either in Quebec City or in the Atlantic Provinces, and whether certain projects will ensure that 3,000 shipyard workers in Quebec who are now unemployed will have work after the holidays? Yes or no?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Minister of Supply and Services stated the other day that a decision is pending, all matters are being considered, and the decision will be given reasonably soon.

Oral Questions

TRADE

UNITED STATES EMBARGO ON GROUNDFISH IMPORTS FROM CANADA

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

Today we learned that while the American negotiators were negotiating the trade agreement with the Minister and his Government, on the other side of Washington the Americans were placing an embargo on fish imports from Atlantic Canada.

Nothing has been done about the countervailing duty on Atlantic groundfish. The American Government has now imposed new embargoes on Canadian imports.

Can the Minister tell the House what other measures or actions by the American Government is he aware of that threaten Canadian jobs and industry?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries I wish to advise the Hon. Member that this was an action taken by the Secretary of Commerce of the United States at the behest of the New England Fishery Management Council.

The Americans have size restrictions on the catching of fresh groundfish down there, and using that as a subterfuge they are now applying those size restrictions on imports of fresh whole groundfish. They state that their intention is to have the restrictions extended to fresh fillets of groundfish.

The Government put in a strong protest to the American Government on November 10. We requested that the ban be lifted. We know that other companies, even American companies, are opposing this action. As a matter of fact one company has initiated legal action against the U.S. Secretary of Commerce for having approved this action.

• (1450)

The National Fisheries Institute of the United States has also approached the U.S. Secretary of Commerce.

An Hon. Member: Here we go.

Mr. Crosbie: I am glad to see that the hon. gentleman who interjected reads something, because I thought he was entirely illiterate.

We are going to continue to work toward a bilateral settlement. However, if we fail to resolve that matter bilaterally, then it might well be our turn to take a matter to the GATT of which the hon. gentleman's Party opposite is so fond.

SPIRIT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT—EFFECT OF U.S. ACTION

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has already admitted to the House that the Americans have violated the spirit of the trade agreement by interfering with our grain exports. We now have another example, apparently in a diplomatic note, of what the Government has called the "undermining" of the agreement.

Does this not show, before we have even seen the text of the agreement, an absolute lack of faith on the part of the American Government in this deal?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is an action taken by the New England Fisheries Management Council.

It was at their instigation, and it is allegedly to do with protection in the catching of undersized fish. Of course they realize, or they should realize, that in Canada we have the most efficient and best fisheries management policy in the world and that, therefore, there is no reason whatsoever to apply these American rules to fish imported from Canada.

If it were extended to fillets, it could mean something like reduced Canadian exports of those products of between $25 million and $30 million. It is obviously a subterfuge. Unless the matter is settled to our satisfaction, we will certainly have to proceed to the GATT to get it reversed.

POLICY APPLICABLE TO POLITICAL ADVERTISING

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. The CBC will not allow the Saskatchewan Government to advertise free trade on its stations in Saskatchewan.

Will the Minister explain why political advertising was allowed on CBC during the Quebec referendum but was not allowed for a political ad in Saskatchewan?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, because I knew that there was some concern about this matter I made inquiries and found that CBC Radio-Canada did not carry any advertising for either the oui or non side during the Quebec referendum. I looked into that particularly. Private stations may have done so, but the CBC did not.

I found, however, that while they did not address or allow advertising from either of the protagonist sides during that referendum, there were ads during that period, one which dealt with anti-alcohol abuse and ended with the slogan "say no", and another with regard to seat-belt legislation which ended with "buckle up for Quebec". Those ads were used at that time, but there was no advertising accepted from either the federal Government or the Government of Quebec.

TRADE

U.S. RESTRICTIONS ON FISH IMPORTS FROM CANADA—SPIRIT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responding on either international trade or fisheries. It concerns the American trade embargo, their restrictions on fresh groundfish exports from Atlantic Canada.

As I read the preliminary transcript of the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement, it clearly states that both Parties recognize that "this agreement is subject to domestic approval on both sides. Accordingly both parties understand the need to exercise their discretion in the period prior to entry into force so as not to jeopardize the approval process or undermine the spirit and mutual benefits of the free trade agreement".

My question is for whomever in the government wants to respond. Will the Government now admit that this latest provocation against our fishery undermines the spirit of that stand-still clause?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we are certainly glad to have the support of the hon. gentleman for the free trade agreement. It is the first sign of common sense on the benches over there that we have had in some time.

As a matter of fact, there are continual protests from Members opposite about protective actions taken by the United States and, when the Government brings forward a solution so there will be a lot better regime in force, they then oppose the solution.

It was on October 1, 1987, before the free trade arrangement was signed, that the United States Secretary of Commerce approved this emergency measure prohibiting imports of round whole cod and haddock under 19 inches, but he can depend upon it that we are going to press the point strongly. Since then there has been a signing of this arrangement, and that is another argument that we will press strongly.

Mr. Henderson: The Minister did not answer the question on the stand-still clause. It is obvious that the Government, in its negotiations with the United States, has been standing still while the Americans have been negotiating circles around it.

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO PROTECT FISHING INDUSTRY

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister and the Government what real action will they take with the Americans to protect our Canadian fishing industry. I do not want all those grand words and buffoonery that we hear from this Minister from Newfoundland every day. I want some action, the people of Canada want some action, and fishermen want some action.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. gentleman is aggravated because we pulverized him on his little opposition day motion last Friday, so I will not take umbrage at his name calling here.

The action which is going to be taken is that we have delivered a note of protest to the United States. We have a free trade agreement that is going to reduce tariffs on Canadian fish to zilch over the next five years, so that our higher value-added processing can be done here in Canada. That is tremendous progress. The Hon. Member forgot to mention that in his comments.

If necessary, we are going to the GATT where we had success last week in connection with user fees that were imposed by the Americans. If necessary, we will go to the GATT just as other aggrieved parties go to the GATT. We are one of the 95 members that are entitled to go to the GATT, which the Member's Party and Leader support with such great affection.

OPPOSITION OF CERTAIN MUNICIPALITIES TO SUPERMAILBOXES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister who answers for Canada Post Corporation. In certain municipalities—and in Jonquière's Petite France neighbourhood, to be more specific—there is strong opposition to the installation of superboxes.

Can the Minister tell me what is the position of Canada Post Corporation management concerning the installation of superboxes on their territory?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Canada Post is introducing supermailboxes in an effort to improve service while keeping costs in line.

Of course it works with the municipalities in terms of placement of the boxes and to ensure that it is done in keeping with over-all municipal plans. However, the final decision on whether or not to use them is one which rests legally with the Canada Post Corporation.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICE CANADA

ALLEGED INTIMIDATION OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE WITNESSES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. At a meeting on Monday between the Justice Committee and some 20 federal parole officers in Kingston, we were informed that senior Ontario corrections officials last week attempted to influence the way in which senior staff testified before the committee by suggesting that their careers could depend on what they said to our committee.

What action has the Minister taken to deal with this clear attempt to muzzle witnesses appearing before the justice committee, and what will the Minister do to ensure that no further such intimidation takes place?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I was aware through media reports of the concerns of the Hon. Member. As a result, we had occasion this morning to discuss these allegations with the Commissioner of the Correctional Service Canada who denies the allegations. He tells me that they are incorrect and without foundation.

Indeed, it was Correctional Service Canada officials who recommended and suggested to the Justice Committee that they come down to Kingston to tour the facilities, and have assisted them in every way in this endeavour.

Mr. Robinson: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is so far from the truth as to be utterly absurd.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER SPEAK TO PERSONS ALLEGING INTIMIDATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. We know that parole officers are deeply concerned about the impact of privatization, inadequate resources, and intolerable working conditions. Why would the Minister not accept the word of parole officers that, in fact, senior prison and parole officials have been trying to muzzle people who appear before the committee? Why will the Solicitor General not do the right thing and speak directly to those people who made the allegations, and learn for himself just to what extent his officials are trying to prevent the truth from being told about a system in crisis?

• (1500)

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I have already advised the House, this has been discussed with the Commissioner who does not agree with those allegations.

In addition, over the noon hour I called the chairman of the committee and discussed the allegations with him. I can assure this House that the comments made by my hon. colleague are not shared by the chairman of that committee.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT— TRANSPORTATION ISSUES

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Today the Dominion Marine Association, the Canadian Trucking Association, as well as the Canadian Bus Association have all come out strongly against the free trade agreement and are asking the Government to suspend negotiations on all transportation issues in the free trade agreement for a period of 90-days. The trucking and shipping modes alone carry over 420 million tonnes of cargo and employ some 400,000 Canadians.

Will the Minister intervene now and apply the 90 day moratorium demanded by these groups? There is still time to save this industry from the ravages of the trade agreement. Will the Minister act now?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is part of a pattern of gross over-exaggeration, induced hysteria, and plain and utter nonsense that is given us by Members opposite. The Canadian trucking industry is in no danger whatever, no danger, from the Canada-U.S. free trade arrangement.

An Hon. Member: Says who?

Mr. Crosbie: As a matter of fact, if it were subject to the Canada-U.S. free trade arrangement it would be protected in the future from the threat of any further American protectionist action. It is simply silly to say that there is any threat to the Canadian trucking industry from the Canada-U.S. agreement. The real dispute, the real objection, is to the deregulation that occurred with the Motor Vehicle Transportation Act, not with this free trade arrangement.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR MORATORIUM

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Deputy Prime Minister. This industry is totally unprotected. So how can the Government ignore the representations of spokesmen for Dominion Marine Association, the Canadian Trucking Association, and the Canadian Motor Coach Association? How can the Government ignore the representations of the 400,000 workers? Why not take action by enforcing the 90-moratorium sought by these associations? Will he do something to protect the 400,000 workers?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, once again we hear wild, unsubstantiated silly statements made by an Hon. Member opposite. The Canadian truckers are in an extremely competitive position vis-à-vis United States truckers. Over 1,000 of them operate in the United States now. This free trade arrangement will do nothing to harm them. It will only help assist them in their efforts, together with the deregulation policy of my hon. friend, the Deputy Prime Minister. Cease your attempt to scare Canadians.

Mr. Ouellet: Help the Americans.

Ms. Copps: It is a bloated falsehood.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise that the time allotted for Question Period has expired. I note the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre rising and I will try to be sure that I see him tomorrow.

I might just say to Hon. Members that we did not do as well in the number of questions today as perhaps I and others had hoped, especially after the last several days when we were doing very well. Perhaps we can do better tomorrow.

The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood on a question of privilege.

PRIVILEGE

DISPOSITION OF PRIVATE MEMBERS' BILLS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a question of privilege regarding the handling of my Private Members' Bill C-204. The question concerns the nature of Private Members' Bills, how they will be handled, whether or not they will be obstructed and whether or not there will be two classes of private Members in this House, namely, private Members who are Conservatives and may get their Bills passed and private Members who are not Conservatives and who will have their Bills obstructed.

There have been three private Members' Bills which have been adopted since parliamentary reform, a reform which we all know was intended to give private Members the opportunity to have serious business dealt with, debated in the House, voted on and sent to committee and returned for approval. Only three private Members' Bills have been passed, and all three of them have been Conservative Bills. Some of them have been dealt with very, very quickly indeed.

Yet in the case of my Bill, it was introduced and read for the first time October 6, 1986. It was finally read for the second time after many hours of debate on May 29, 1987.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. All of what the Hon. Member says about the number of Bills passed, who sponsored them and the chronology of her own Bill may be very accurate and may be of considerable interest, but I would ask the Hon. Member to let the Chair know what is the point of privilege.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, the point of privilege is that there has been obstruction of my Bill. I wish to give you details of that obstruction and I wish to show that it has been treated differently from other Bills. That is the reason I referred to the other Bills. I do not think it is a coincidence that Conservative Bills have been passed and mine has not.

My Bill was approved at second reading. It was referred to committee. It took a long time before the committee received it. There was a delay of 12 sitting days before the first meeting was held. Standing Orders require that the committee meet within two sitting days. There was a further delay of 19 regular sitting days between the third and the fourth meetings of the committee. There was active obstruction in the committee during that period, June 26 to October 6.

There has been one chairperson and, of course, it is the Speaker who appoints the chair. The chair has acted in a biased manner. There has been a deputy chair acting in his absence. On five occasions a deputy chair has substituted for the chair. In one case, the person who substituted was an Hon. Member who has himself declared a conflict of interest, in effect, on the subject, namely, the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) who has been an active Member of the committee. He has obstructed work on the committee, has acted as the chair, and I will refer to the details in a moment, Mr. Speaker. He was actively obstructionist in meetings yesterday. He circulated to all Members of this House a statement declaring that he had an interest in opposing the Bill because of a private interest, that "I freely admit that I am biased because in the real world I am a wholesale distributor—"

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is in some difficulty. Hon. Members know that generally speaking it is not the Chair's function, nor does the Chair procedurally have the authority, to interfere in committee proceedings.

The Hon. Member may well have a complaint. It is not for the Chair, certainly at this point, to say one way or the other. The difficulty I am having is identifying a point of privilege.

I must say to all Hon. Members and to the public watching and listening that privilege concerns something done which makes it impossible for Hon. Members to carry out their duties as Members of Parliament. It might, but generally speaking, does not arise just because someone may not be getting a Bill through a committee as fast as one likes, getting a motion supported or getting witnesses recognized. That is a matter of the internal workings of the committee.

I am not saying that there might not be a case where activities of a chairperson or the activities of other Members in committee might well amount to a point of privilege, but I am having difficulty—I am not diminishing in any way the Hon. Member's complaint—in seeing it as a point of privilege that the Chair can resolve. I will hear the Hon. Member further. I would ask her please to try to isolate exactly what the point of privilege is.

• (1510)

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, there are two particular points I wish to make. When a government Bill is before a legislative committee, there are normally five members of the committee who are committed to passing the Bill, five government Members who have voted for the Bill at second reading. There may be two members opposed but there are not more than two. There may be no members opposed, depending upon the nature of the Bill.

My private Member's Bill, however, is before a committee which has two members in favour of the Bill and in fact five members opposed to it. It is the exact reverse of the way a government Bill is treated.

A procedure under Private Members' Business that is intended to make it possible for private Members' Bills to be passed, as my Bill was passed at second reading, has been obstructed by the nature of the appointments to the committee. I submit that committee appointments should reflect the same principle for private Members' Bills as they reflect for government Bills. There ought to be a preponderance of members favourable to the Bill on the committee. The chairman ought to be someone who is favourable to the Bill and someone committed to being fair to all Members. That has not been the case.

Finally, I would like to refer to a very particular instance of obstruction which occurred yesterday, an instance which certainly interfered with my ability to handle the concerns of other Hon. Members with the passing of this Bill, a Bill which has been approved by the House.

Yesterday I had proposed that the witnesses who were before the committee be sworn. I had given the chairman advance notice of this so that he could be prepared for it. The chairman passed this information along to his deputy chairman and the meeting was ready to begin. The chairman was waiting for one Conservative member to arrive. Two opposition members and the Conservative chairman were already present.

The chairman of the committee who has publicly opposed my Bill then left the chair, went out to the hallway to greet the incoming Conservative member and told him not to enter the room until there was a sufficient Conservative majority to defeat my motion. That is the utmost of bias. It is unfair—

Mr. Shields: How did you know that?

Ms. McDonald: The Hon. Member was heard by other people in the room telling the Conservative member not to enter the committee room. The meeting was late. It was held up until there was a Conservative majority. My motion would have passed if that member had been allowed to enter and the meeting had started on time. The witnesses were ready.

I submit that that is a very gross interference with normal procedure. It is unfair and my basic principle is that parliamentary reform is designed to give private Members a chance. When a Bill is passed on a free vote with no obstruction in debate, what good is that if the Bill is then obstructed by the Government using its majority to gang up members of a committee against the Bill? It is quite wrong.

Government Bills go before committees with a preponderance of Members who are in favour of the Bill. Once a private Member's Bill has gone through second reading, the same principle should apply. If it does not apply, then the parliamentary reform designed to make it possible for private Members to have serious business considered will simply be a farce.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Member with interest. While she may very well have a grievance and may be somewhat unhappy about the proceedings and the result, I would submit to you that I doubt very much whether or not she has a question of privilege.

As well, the point should be made that in the exercise of dealing with her grievance, she has in fact imputed a number of motives, either directly or indirectly, to a number of Members, if she has not made outright allegations against the chairman of that committee, the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James), and against the vice-chairman, as well as indirectly against the Whip of our Party who is responsible for allocating membership to that committee.

The Hon. Member contends that the issue of private Members' Bills is handled in a somewhat different fashion than government Bills and that there has been obstruction. I think we all recognize that this is a private Members' matter and there are no government Whips present. There is no exercise of Party discipline. It is not an issue on which Party discipline is imposed. I think the record is fairly clear on that, considering the votes that have taken place in this Chamber on matters that have been brought forward by private Members from both sides of the House.

I take it that the Hon. Member is suggesting that the committee membership should be selected on the basis of the position the members take with regard to a particular issue. I think that would be a gross injustice. The Hon. Member may have a grievance and may take issue with the position that was taken by the members of that committee, but surely if we start selecting members of a committee on the basis of their predetermined positions on a given issue, that would be the greatest farce we could ever perpetuate upon the democratic process.

What we have here is as well a reflection upon a vote that was taken in a committee. I think we all recognize the rules in that regard. I know that it is improper for anyone to reflect upon a vote that has been taken in the House of Commons, and essentially the same rules apply in committee as apply in the House of Commons.

I do not argue with the grievance the Hon. Member has put forward about which she feels very strongly, but I think that in the enthusiasm and vigour with which she has presented her case, she may in fact have inadvertently violated a number of Standing Orders, procedures and parliamentary traditions herself.

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member cites members of the Conservative Party, and I think it is totally unfair that she should do so. I was one of the members who sat on the committee when that particular item was selected to be voted on. We certainly treated it like a private Member's Bill in the spirit of parliamentary reform.

I believe that the Hon. Member is merely facing a situation of private Members exercising their rights under the auspices of parliamentary reform. That is simply it.

Mr. Speaker: As I have indicated, I listened very carefully to the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) and the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain). In the interests of erring on the side of caution in this matter, I will reserve.

I can indicate to the Hon. Member that certainly part of her complaint about the speed or otherwise of the passage of her Bill is something I do not look upon as a question of privilege. I can indicate that I am having some trouble accepting the proposition that because the Hon. Member was unsuccessful in a vote in committee with respect to swearing a witness, that that amounts to a question of privilege.

However, the Hon. Member has made some pretty severe allegations about the chairperson. The Chair is conscious of the fact that the chairperson is appointed by the Chair although the other members of the committee are not appointed by the Chair.

As I say, from an abundance of caution and in order to give this matter every careful consideration, I will reserve and return to the House on it at an appropriate time. I hope that any comment I may have to make then might be helpful. Before I close off, I see that the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister is rising and I will hear him.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, in your usual manner of exercising an abundance of caution, for which I compliment you, I think the other point should be made, and I was remiss in not making it. Since the chairman and deputy chairman have been imputed in this, it might be appropriate, in the consideration of this matter before you make a final decision, that they may have the opportunity to be heard as well.
