GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to 30 petitions, Nos. 332-3110 to 332-3117 inclusive, 332-3119 to 332-3123 inclusive, 332-3128 to 332-3130 inclusive, 332-3132, 332-3140 to 332-3143 inclusive, 332-3191 to 332-3193 inclusive, 332-3201, 332-3205, 332-3206 and 332-3214 to 332-3216 inclusive.

I would point out to those who signed Petition No. 332-3214, tabled by the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), that it was certified on August 18 but not presented until October 1. However, the Government has responded within the required 45 days.

FAMILY REUNIFICATION—PHILIPPINES

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to present a petition signed by 280 constituents who ask that the Government pass a special Bill permitting family reunification for people who are in the Philippines right now. The situation there is volatile, with great insecurity and the danger of a Communist takeover, and they pray the Government will pass a special Bill.

CANADA POST—OPPOSITION TO CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of tabling several petitions from rural communities in New Brunswick, expressing concern about the fact that Canada Post wants to close down post offices in their areas. The petitions are from all over New Brunswick and bear several hundred signatures.

Your petitioners humbly inform the House that Canada Post's new corporate plan has created two classes of citizens by installing its super boxes in urban and rural areas; that closing rural post offices deprives Canadians of a unique federal presence and reduces postal services that are vital to rural areas; and that rate increases, especially for second class mail, jeopardize the distribution by mail of many newspapers, weeklies, regional papers, magazines and religious publications.

Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray that Parliament reject Canada Post's plan and urge the Corporation to deliver the mail to all Canadian taxpayers, without exception.

OPPOSITION TO TAX ON FOOD

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the privilege of tabling a petition signed by the residents of Ottawa and Willowdale, Ontario. Your petitioners object to the fact that this Government has either levied or increased a total of twenty-five taxes since September 1984. They object particularly to the proposed tax reform that includes the possibility of imposing a tax on food. They believe this decision would be particularly devastating for the elderly, the unemployed, youth and low-income families.

Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray that Parliament reject any measure that would have the effect of putting a sales tax on food.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I would ask that all questions on the Order Paper be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions on the Order Paper stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 29

CONSIDERATION OF CANADA-U.S. TRADE AGREEMENT BY STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 29 I ask leave to propose a motion to adjourn the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the decision of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade to undertake a precipitate study of the Canada-U.S. trade agreement in the absence of a complete text of that agreement and on a timetable that will not permit either adequate committee study or informed comment from Canadians before the committee prepares its report, thereby breaking the commitment of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that the complete text of the agreement would be referred to committee for full and detailed analysis.

The House of Commons and its committees should not be made a party to what could amount to a sham or charade whereby there is the appearance of the study of the Government's trade deal with the United States when neither the House nor its committees are doing that at all. Let us have the full text of the agreement and then let Parliament and its committees study this matter.

Mr. Lewis: What a charade of that Standing Order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member presented me, as he was bound to do, with sufficient notice. The Chair has had a chance to consider the matter. While the subject matter is of importance to all Hon. Members, it is a matter within the committee. I do not think that at this early stage it would be appropriate for the Chair to adjourn the House for a debate. However, I do thank the Hon. Member for bringing the matter to the attention of the Chair and the Chamber.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—AGRICULTURE

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre) moved:

That this House condemn the government for negotiating a trade agreement with the United States that has failed to stop the predatory practices of the U.S. Export Enhancement Program, and that will;

(a) lead to the elimination of our two-price system for wheat;

(b) undermine the powers of the Canadian Wheat Board;

(c) reduce the growth of supply management marketing boards;

(d) reduce the growth opportunities for Canadian fruit and vegetable producers;

(e) adversely affect the Canadian wine and grape industry;

(f) provide little benefit for red meat producers; and

(g) provide no new benefit for farmers purchasing farm equipment or other farm inputs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to discuss the agricultural aspects of the proposed agreement between Canada and the United States which purports to deal with free trade but is probably more correctly called a trade agreement between the two countries.

I do not think there is any doubt that this is not a good deal for agriculture or for Canadian farmers. The circumstances under which the deal was consummated left doubt as to whether the outcome would be in the best interests of Canada. The deal was arrived at in haste late at night under a deadline imposed by the American Congress.

This is an international agreement and there is great difficulty in arriving at international understandings between our countries because of the different democratic systems which we employ. The United States has a republican system and we have a parliamentary system. Under their system anything the President or his administration signs must get the approval of the House of Representatives and the Senate. In our system anything that the Prime Minister and his Ministers sign by way of international agreement becomes law virtually automatically because of the requirement for a majority in the House. Therefore, the bargaining positions of the two sides are different.

In international negotiations the Americans often use the ploy of having the executive branch of the administration sign agreements which they are fully cognizant that the Senate or House of Representatives will not accept. That does not appear to be the case with this particular agreement and that is why I, a person who finds this agreement less than good for Canada, have some difficulty knowing what I should do about it.

I realize that the Americans already perceive that they have gained a victory with this agreement. This has permeated the Senate and the House of Representatives to the point where they appear to be quite willing to endorse this agreement which is a victory for the United States. They are getting more than they are giving up. They have gained something from Canada and it is, therefore, a good deal for them.

As an opposition politician I am cognizant of the fact that any further opposition to the deal in Canada will only build on the perception across the border that this is indeed a bad deal for Canada. The obverse of that is that it is a good deal for the Americans. I face that dilemma but, being a Canadian and a representative of Canadians, I think it is my duty to speak out when faced with such a patently obvious bad deal for the interests of Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Althouse: The Government has clearly broken its trust with rural Canadians. During the negotiations the Government was as clear as possible in the House and in releases across the country that there would be no discussions on agriculture. The Government began by saying that agriculture was not on the table and then amended that by saying that the marketing boards and structures were not on the table. When we look at the tentative agreement which was presented in this House some days ago we see that neither was the case.

We learned last week that the American interpretation of what the agreement says is somewhat in conflict with that of everyone else. In spite of the clause which appears to represent a commitment by both parties not to engage in subsidization of exports to third countries to which the other party to the agreement sells, Canada's sales to the U.S.S.R., China, and India were put in jeopardy last week by the offer by the United States of a continuation of their Export Enhancement Program into those markets.

This is something that seemed to be very clearly contrary to the agreement that had been signed just two weeks before. That has not yet been cleared up and it is one of the issues we wish to highlight in the debate on this motion today.

There is also a question as to whether the over-all agreement will be more helpful to our country or to the Americans.

This morning I wish to briefly refer to a study by the Economic Council of Canada before I deal with the points in my motion. The Economic Council uses the econometric models and shows that some 355,000 jobs may be saved according to their perception of the free trade arrangement with the Americans. I want to caution the House about this particular study because the same econometric model was used by the same people to produce the results by the University of Maryland study which, with the exception of a couple of assumptions, showed quite clearly that the Americans would gain from a free trade agreement, particularly those aspects involving agricultural products. The Americans would gain more access to Canada's markets for fruits and vegetables and those products now under marketing boards such as chickens, eggs and dairy products. I remind the House that the Americans already show a trade surplus with Canada in those particular goods in agricultural trade. The University of Maryland study shows that this surplus in trade would be augmented and strengthened.

The Economic Council study was based on some different assumptions and even contains some figures that would indicate to the layman that there would be some 7,500 to 7,800 fewer jobs lost in agriculture than would be the case without the agreement. The drafter of the report told me that this does not really mean there will be jobs created but that jobs would not be lost quite as quickly. Therefore, when the Government tells us that 355,000 jobs will be created, it is not what the Economic Council intended and is not the way the report should be interpreted. It simply means that 355,000 jobs may not be lost as quickly as before the agreement.

I questioned this study because it appeared to the layman that 7,500 to 7,800 jobs would be created in agriculture as a result of this agreement, which is a complete reversal of the trend of annual job losses in agriculture that has been in effect since the 1930s. The technicians who prepared this report assured me that those losses would continue and this agreement would not reverse that trend. This figure represented an estimate of a possible decrease in the number of jobs lost.

The assumptions made in that report were not the same assumptions with which we are now dealing. Therefore, as far as agriculture is concerned, that report is of no use to the debate at all. I simply wanted to refer to it in order to make that point very clear at the beginning.

Mr. Gormley: Logical gymnastics.

Mr. Althouse: It is not logical gymnastics. It is simply putting facts on the table. If people wish to refer to the Economic Council report they should do so on the basis upon which it was presented and on the basis of the assumptions that the report used, none of which fit the proposed agreement that is before us. I invite the Member to check it out.

Mr. Gormley: Sour grapes, Vic!

Mr. Althouse: The Member mentions sour grapes. I will get to the sour grapes in a moment.

Mr. Riis: Tell that to the grape growers.

Mr. Althouse: Indeed, it leaves a sour taste in the mouths of the grape growers who are on the Hill today advocating the removal of the aspects of the trade agreement that affect their industry which will, in effect, wipe them out over the next seven years.

Let me review the points I have listed in my motion. We believe the proposed agreement will lead to the elimination of our two-price system for wheat. This is not only my assessment of the agreement, it is also the assessment of Grant Devine, Premier of Saskatchewan, who is an avowed free trader and supporter of the agreement. Even he realizes that the agreement will do away with the two-price system for wheat for which Canadian farmers have fought long and hard.

The agreement undermines to some extent the powers of the Canadian Wheat Board by removing the import licensing provisions which the Board now has for oats and barley and which it used to have for the importation of wheat and wheat products before the Government took office. The removal of those powers undermines the authority of the agency to establish prices for those three grains in Canada.

The agreement reduces the growth of supply management marketing boards. It is in this area where I believe those farmers who produce under supply management marketing boards feel most betrayed. The Government has essentially decided that the amount we now produce in Canada under those marketing boards, including the poultry boards, egg board and the Dairy Commission, will in effect be frozen at these levels over time.

There seems to be an assumption in the agreement that Canada will not be able to expand efficiently and competitively in these particular areas of production and therefore the import quota levels have been permitted to rise each year according to this agreement.

The agreement provides for an initial poultry import quota increase from 6.3 per cent of Canadian consumption to 7.5 per cent of Canadian consumption in the coming year; an increase in the turkey import quota from 2 per cent last year to 3.5 per cent of the domestic consumption in the coming year. There is an increase in the shelled egg import quota from 0.675 per cent to 1.647 per cent, which is almost triple. There is a similar increase of almost quadruple for processed eggs, as well as a slight increase with respect to powdered eggs.

Furthermore, there seems to be a tacit understanding that there will be additional quotas issued above those levels if they are applied for by importers, and that those additional import levels will become written into the agreement for the coming years. This is a clear signal to Canadian poultry and egg producers that they will have a fairly static market. The poultry market is growing much faster than average, but it will be filled to a large extent with processed products from the United States.

Mr. Belsher: You are reading between the lines.

Mr. Althouse: Perhaps I am reading between the lines, but it seems to be fairly clear. I have checked it with people from Agriculture Canada who have not been able to dispute that assessment. They say there will be some possible renegotiation, but at the moment that seems to be the way the negotiations stand.

The importation of fruits and vegetables and the growth opportunities there I think are even more frozen in time for Canadian producers than is the case under the supply management marketing boards. We retain an ability to provide seasonal import tariffs for 10 to 20 years. However, there are two very firm restrictions on the application of those tariffs. We can only apply those tariffs if the price has fallen below 90 per cent of a five year average formula—and this is the one that I think is the most detrimental to the growth of the fruits and vegetables industry in Canada—and the requirement that our acreage in a particular fruit or vegetable has not increased.

What the Government has in effect done is frozen the current acreage for fruit and vegetable production at its current level. It has not taken into account the possibility of a growth in demand through a growth in population. We are frozen at about 25 million people over the next 20 years. What we have in effect signalled to the producers of those products is, zap, you are frozen, and most of the increase in demand will be filled by U.S. products at a cheaper rate.

It is a vision of no growth in fruits and vegetables. It is a vision of no growth in eggs, in poultry products, as well as in dairy products. The mechanism being used in dairy products is a proposal to do away with any tariffs. This will mean a tendency for processed products such as yogurt, ice cream and some of the cheeses, to come in at the expense of potential Canadian production.

We have set up a system that assumes Canada will continue to be exporters of raw product. We will continue to provide the Americans with red meat and relatively unprocessed products. I remind the House that we have had access to each others markets in red meat on a virtually free trade basis for almost 50 years. That will continue. The way some companies have adapted to gain and maintain access to the U.S. market is something of which I think the House should take recognition.

One of the main plants in Saskatchewan has been exporting pork into the California market. That has always appeared to make sense on the surface. The distance from Saskatchewan to California is closer, or at least no farther, than the distance from Iowa. There are no major pork production units between those production points and the point of consumption. Yet pork producers have often run into difficulties at the border with inspections and sort of non-tariff barriers to the free flow of pork.

One of the ways we have adapted, which gets us around that, is to kill the hogs in Saskatchewan, hang them as sides, run them down to California and have the processing done there close to the final point of consumption. If there is a problem at the border, the workers in the plant, who are American workers, complain to their Congressmen that they are no longer able to get raw product from Canada and they are in danger of losing their jobs. The wholesalers who have been handling this meat go through a similar kind of process and so we have American jobs being potentially hurt and Americans complaining about it. However, what we end up with is only the opportunity to ship virtually raw product into the United States with very little processing—or jobs—in this country.

What we have done with this particular agreement is exchanged access to the American markets for an ability to send in more raw material. This means that in exchange we will import more U.S. processed product, whether it is food in the form of processed poultry, in the form of TV dinners or as yogurt or ice cream. In simple terms, we have made a simple exchange. We have decided to export jobs as far as agriculture is concerned.

Rather than become self-sufficient for our own needs and create the necessary employment and economic activity that goes with it, we have agreed to send raw products south and to bring back on occasion the processed product with the additional costs that go with it to the additional benefit of the American economy.

We have not dealt clearly with all the aspects that affect agriculture in this brief presentation, nor have the questions and answers provided in the House given us a full understanding of the deal. I think it is relatively clear that we have given away some of our sovereignty with this agreement by providing full investment freedom to the purchase of resource lands. It appears we have also done the same thing for farm and recreation lands. I simply pose a simple question at the end of my remarks; if giving away control over who invests in these fundamental lands which make up our country is not giving away sovereignty, what is?

Mr. Wise: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the spokesperson for the New Democratic Party on agricultural policy. It behooves me to say that 50 per cent of farm income comes from export sales. If we exclude grains and oilseeds from those sales, we find that two-thirds, or roughly 60 per cent of agricultural commodities which we produce here in Canada is sold into the export market, but sold exclusively into the export market.

If we think about that for a moment, we must ask how in the world the Hon. Member can stand in his place and say this is not a good deal for Canadian agriculture? I really do not know who he speaks for. I think we should be referring to the industry spokespeople. They are not ministers of agriculture. They are not opposition critics. These are people who have made their living day after day in the agricultural industry. The spokesperson for the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, a big industry in Canada, is supportive of the U.S.-Canada bilateral trade arrangement. The spokesperson for the pork industry says it is supportive of the Canada-U.S. trade arrangement. The spokesperson for the dairy industry of Canada is supportive of the Canada-U.S. trade arrangement.

The spokesperson for the Canadian Chicken Marketing Agency, and he should be very familiar to my colleagues in the New Democratic Party, is very supportive as well. The spokesperson for the Canadian Broiler Hatching Egg Marketing Agency is very supportive. The spokesperson for the Canadian Horticultural Council, speaking on behalf of that industry, is very supportive as well. The list goes on.

I sat here and listened to the spokesperson from the New Democratic Party say this is not a good agreement for Canadian agriculture when in fact, if we look at what the spokespeople for the industry itself are saying, the industry is taking a very positive position. So I simply ask the Hon. Member who in the world he is speaking for?

Mr. Althouse: Madam Speaker, I speak for the farmers in my riding. I speak for the farmers across the country.

Mr. Gormley: You haven't gone back to your riding for years. What a joke.

Mr. Althouse: I was there last Thursday, Friday and Saturday, Sir.

An Hon. Member: And it was three years before that.

Mr. Althouse: And many times before. I am just giving the most recent. The Hon. Member says three years.

Mr. Broadbent: He was here before you were, and he will be here after you are gone, fellow.

Mr. Mayer: There is another farmer, the hon. farmer from Oshawa.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. This debate having just started, I am sure all Hon. Members will have a chance to put forward their opinion. The Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) has the floor.

Mr. Althouse: I think the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) will know and agree that there are flaws in this agreement, that it does in fact encourage the export of products rather than the home processing of products.

• (1140)

I said in my speech that it does not change greatly the relations between our two countries with regard to red meat. We did not really need to state anything in this agreement with regard to red meat. We have had access to each other's markets for a long time. It has occasionally been interrupted by individual states, and this agreement does nothing about that. It has occasionally been disrupted by so-called health considerations, and this agreement does not really attempt to do anything about that. In fact, it recognizes that there will be occasions when our health requirements, on either side of the border, will affect trade.

I will admit, and I may not have mentioned it in my speech, that it has changed the tariffs between our two countries with regard to live cattle. It has taken that last one cent which was no real impediment to trade in any case on a $1.50 feeder calf— another cent does not make much difference. So that section of it was simply a regurgitation of what had been in the agreement before.

But the sections dealing with those products that are produced in Canada under supply management have created a field-day for American imports.

Mr. Mayer: He does not understand the agreement.

Mr. Althouse: The import licences have been increased, as I read the agreement. It has been agreed that the import licences will be increased.

Mr. Mayer: They are maintained at exactly the same level as they were over the last five years.

Mr. Althouse: As I understand the process of those import licences, the incentive will be for the processors and wholesalers who now hold those import licences to bring in the most highly processed product they can. It is now conducted on the basis of pounds. If one brings in a TV dinner that is all set to go which might retail for $2.95 or something like that, then one is making the best use of one's import licence. It will not result in increased processing in Canada, processing that would result in jobs. This will result in jobs in the United States. The processing and production will be done in the United States. I doubt very much if the benefit of those imports will be passed on to consumers since these people are now holding the import licence and, in effect, the import quota. It will be a great opportunity to convert those imports into profits. I see very little chance of that being passed on to consumers by way of lower prices.

Mr. Rodriguez: Madam Speaker, a little while ago the Minister rhymed off a litany of all those people who were supporting the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) free trade deal. I noticed he did not touch on the wine producers or the grape growers. I want to ask the Hon. Member if he would comment on the consideration of the Government in this free trade agreement of actually labelling those in the wine industry and the grape growing industry as losers. That is what it is doing. It is blithely writing them off as losers and forgetting the implication and the depth of that industry, as well as the importance of it to Canada. I wonder if the Hon. Member would comment on that point.

Mr. Althouse: Madam Speaker, I think it has been fairly clear to grape growers that this particular agreement is not going to be something that will leave their industry untouched. In fact, many of them believe that this will be the end of their industry and that the crop that they are now taking off will probably be the last for many of them.

There is a great deal of change-over that will have to be undertaken if Canada's grape and wine industry is to be competitive. The immediate effect will not hit until the seven-year phasing-in period. Whether more northerly produced grapes will be able to produce wine that will be competitive with those produced in southern California or Europe is a moot point. My understanding of the way grapes develop is that they need heat and sunshine in order to produce the necessary level of sweetness to produce the best kinds of wines. Our climate does not always measure up to that requirement. As a result, I think it is fairly clear that the Canadian grape and wine industry will be pretty nearly devastated by this agreement over the course of the seven-year implementation period. Consumers will most likely be consuming American wine which is produced in very large wineries.

My information notes tell me that the Gallo Brothers winery will produce most of what the Canadian market needs in about seven or eight days' production. So the chances of that happening are very high indeed.

Mr. Belsher: I have listened with interest to the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse). While I have always admired his critiques from the point of view of his agricultural portfolio, I nonetheless find some passing interest in the fact that a few weeks ago he was saying that it was the marketing boards that would be destroyed. Now he has it that the marketing boards are not going to grow quite so much. He has been able to adapt to the reality that the marketing system has been protected in this agreement. That is something that is very vital. The marketing system has been preserved. That comes through loud and clear.

The Hon. Member mentions scare tactics about TV dinners being the things that will start to roll across. That is precisely what will not be allowed to happen as a result of the agreement. I do not know how he can turn around and make these misrepresentations to the Canadian people as to what will happen. He is starting to read between the lines, and again his doom and gloom comes through loud and clear.

The Hon. Member made specific reference to the dairy industry. When I read the agreement I see that the very items that he does mention can be put on the global import control list. Will that not give us the protection that the Hon. Member is so quick to say is not there? Why does he turn around and make misrepresentations on dairy products, the subject about which he is speaking this morning?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): May I ask the Hon. Member, since the time has elapsed, to please give a short answer if at all possible.

Mr. Althouse: I will be very brief, Madam Speaker, in light of the time. The import control list is still an activity that we think we can maintain. However, using the import control list does not comply with the over-all sense of the agreement. We will not be able to continue to use export control lists of any kind if we are going to live up to some of the earlier phraseology in the agreement. I think it runs contrary to the spirit of the agreement. So I have assumed that we are intending to live up to the high-flown phrases at the beginning of the agreement and that eventually the use of the import control list will be phased out.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster).

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, I am delighted to have a chance to speak in the debate today dealing with free trade in agriculture. I think we approach this debate from the point of view of a complete reversal of what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and most of his senior Ministers told the people during the 1984 general election campaign.

At that time, in responding to a question from a reporter from Maclean's magazine, the Prime Minister said:

> Canadians rejected free trade with the U.S. in 1911, they would do so again in 1983. Canada must increase its share of total world trade—

If we look at the words of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), who rushed off to Washington after the agreement had collapsed, at the behest of the Prime Minister, and who was running in the same leadership race at that time, we will see that he said:

> Bilateral trade is simplistic and naive, it would only serve to further diminish our ability to compete internationally.

• (1150)

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), who had the senior responsibility with regard to the trade agreement with the United States, when questioned on his views on free trade stated:

> Unrestrained trade with the U.S. raises the possibility that thousands of jobs could be lost in such critical industries as textiles, furniture and footwear.

At the same time the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) when he was asked to comment on free trade stated, "It's silly".

When comparing the Tory view of free trade in 1983 and 1984 with what they are doing now to the country with this agreement with the United States, it is unbelievable. There is no question that there was never any mandate.

In the actual negotiations period it was repeatedly suggested that agriculture would not be on the table. The Secretary of State for External Affairs commented to that effect in January, 1985 or 1986. Yet today we have a free trade agreement that touches most areas of agriculture.

If we look at it in balance, what did we get and what did we give, obviously we gave a lot; in some sectors, completely everything, in other sectors, nibbling away at the powers of the various agencies and the policies of the Government of Canada. What did we get in return? We did not get very much. We certainly do not have unrestricted access to the United States market. We still have dumping duties and countervail duties by the United States. We have a binational disputes handling mechanism. Every legal authority that I have read has stated there is effectively no change in the powers and the prerogatives of the United States Government to impose countervail duties or dumping duties as it has done on many Canadian products for many years. We do not gain the binational panel.

A few months ago we had a briefing from one of the senior trade negotiators. He said there was going to be a binational panel up front where either country could take complaints for resolution by an independent tribunal. In fact, pork producers, potato producers, or producers of any other commodity that has a dumping duty or countervail duty imposed upon it, still has to go through the whole process of the countervail duty, the analysis by the Commerce Department in the United States, and the final disposition by the International Trade Commission of a countervail duty. Those producers are no longer able to take the dispute to the International Trade Court of the United States for adjudication. They are no longer able to go to a GATT panel. There would be this binational panel. Most legal authorities say that the access by Canada would not be appreciably changed. Clearly, the impact will be severe in many sectors of agriculture.

Our international relationships are even more interesting. If we look at what was negotiated in the agreement, it is clear that we did not get an exemption by the United States from its export enhancement program where it is spending several billion dollars to take away markets that Canada has had in the past. It agreed to take our export interest into account, but that is all.

If one reads the statements made by United States senior officials during the last few weeks, in fact it takes us into little account because the officials in the United States Agriculture Department have made it clear that they will be using the export enhancement program in a ruthless manner. This not only takes away traditional markets of Canada, but any market. This trade agreement only requires them to take it into account. They have already indicated that they will not take it into any serious account.

Clearly the two-price wheat system will be destroyed. The Minister for grains and oilseeds denied that in the House a few weeks ago. The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) suggested that it would be destroyed. We have to go to the Saskatchewan Legislature, where the Premier of Saskatchewan, a bosom buddy of the Prime Minister and fellow Tory, has stated that the two-price wheat system will be destroyed and that the federal Government will be providing full compensation. It was nice to hear from the Saskatchewan Premier and Minister of Agriculture that the Government of Canada will pony up $280 million to compensate Canadian grain producers for their loss of the two-price wheat system. But it would be nice to hear it from the Prime Minister here, or from the Minister for grains and oilseeds, and not have the shilly-shallying around which has been going on.

In other areas of the agreement the Government is sending a signal to the world that the Western Grain Transportation Act is a subsidy. Obviously, other countries will take that into account, because in the agreement they have agreed to remove the Western Grain Transportation Act assistance from the grain which goes into the Pacific northwest. That would happen immediately in January of 1989. Whatever tariffs are there would be phased out over a several-year period. This will cut us out of that market. We have some 300,000 tonnes of grain a year going into that market, from the information that I have been provided by the wheat pools.

The $280 million which is going into the farmers' pockets now with the two-price wheat system, not only benefits western farmers but farmers in Ontario. The Ontario Wheat Marketing Board has made it clear that the cost to it is in the range of $30 million. It is very upset at the loss of those revenues at a time when other revenues are down in any event.

With regard to the Canadian Wheat Board, we are told that within a very few years, certainly as soon as the funding is reduced for the American Farm Bill, that wheat will be able to come across the border without licence from the Canadian Wheat Board, except a cursory provision of licences for end-uses such as milling, feed-lot operations, malting, and so on. It seems clear to me that the powers and the prerogatives of the Canadian Wheat Board will be lost.

I put the question to you, Madam Speaker, if a farmer across the border in Montana delivers wheat or grains to a milling operation in Lethbridge and does not have to comply with the quota or negotiate a price below the Canadian Wheat Board price, how long will the Canadian farmer living outside of Lethbridge be able to put up with that situation? The Montana farmer can deliver as much wheat or other grains, oats, barley, as he wishes into that milling operation in Lethbridge, whereas the Canadian farmer living a few miles from the milling operation through his Wheat Board quota book can only deliver up to his quota level and, of course, at the Canadian Wheat Board price. I just do not think that that situation will last very long. In fact, there will be an incredible demand on the part of the Canadian farmer to deliver to the milling operation on the same basis as the Montana farmer.

I submit that the strength, resilience, and ability of the Canadian Wheat Board to maintain the marketing arrangements which we have had for some 40 years or 50 years will be markedly reduced by the agreement. Clearly there are many aspects to the agreement which will be extremely harmful. In my opinion none is worse than what will happen to the fruit, vegetable, and wine industries. There has been a deal made by the President of the United States and the Prime Minister to destroy the Canadian grape industry. No other sector of the agricultural economy has been dealt such a blow. All we have to do is read the recent reports by Canadian Grape Growers and the Canadian wine industry which indicate that next year they will be cutting back on the purchase of Canadian grapes. I am told that the industry provides employment in the order of some 12,000 to 15,000 part and full-time jobs in Ontario and some 5,000 to 6,000 in British Columbia.

Similarly, seasonal tariffs in the tender fruit industry will be wiped out, unless the industry retracts, regresses, and is not growing. Even if it is growing, it will only have a snap-back provision which will be quite ineffective in protecting the industry. It is not that these growers are not dynamic, effective producers; it is just that their crops come into play a few weeks later than those of California and other tender-fruit-growing areas which, as a result, get the peak of the market at the first of the season. However, as it goes down, Canadian commodities come on the market. The tariff on processed fruits will be removed, and we will see industries in southwestern Ontario moving to the United States because at present they live with the protection of tariff arrangements.

The poultry industry will be severely affected. In fact, the 12.5 per cent duty on poultry meat will be removed, so TV dinners, chicken pot pies, and the like will move into the Canadian market. The quota for poultry meat will be increased by some 20 per cent. Likewise, producers will be allowed some four million additional dozens of eggs. Pressure will be put on the industry as a result of the wide-open arrangements for foreign investment in Canada to which the Government agreed in the agreement.

We will see a takeover of Canadian processing and manufacturing industries such as we have never seen before. I predict that the poultry and feather industries will be adversely affected.

I thought it was very instructive that yesterday in the House the Minister for International Trade made remarks about the case before the GATT dealing with wine pricing by suggesting that in fact Canadian producers had discriminatory pricing or some unfair advantage. It seems to me that that prejudices the hearing before the GATT. Of course, placing all that in the agreement adversely affects these negotiations.

I would like to refer to another aspect of the trade agreement. I would not want to call it a free trade agreement. What is free about it? Wine producers and grape growers will be wiped out. The breweries are not affected, so it depended upon who the Government decided to wipe out in the agreement. I think this aspect is of great concern to Canadian hog, beef, and other commodity producers. The Government portrays this agreement as a tremendous opportunity to bust into United States markets. However, two or three studies which have been carried out by the Government indicate that if the agreement is ratified the Canadian dollar will appreciate to some 90 cents or 95 cents compared with the American dollar. If that in fact happens, the impact for many of our producers would be extremely negative. The impact of the loss of the 25 per cent or 35 per cent exchange rate will have an extremely adverse effect upon primary producers. Certainly that would be the case in the Canadian hog industry.

Apparently negotiators of the agreement with the United States tried but were unsuccessful in their attempt, if they attempted, to negotiate away the 4.3 cents per pound export countervail duty which the United States has had on Canadian hogs. If we had an agreement through which we were trying to make a free trade area of Canada and the United States, surely we would have tried to negotiate away that countervail duty. In fact, we did not. Canadian hog and other producers are still subjected to the countervail duty. The countervail duty could be imposed on pork. It could be increased on hogs. It could be imposed on potatoes and on other commodities. The agreement and the binational commission which has been established do not in fact prevent that from happening with resulting long negotiations.

I think the agreement is very unequal. Canada gives up in many sectors. Canada does not get a binational commission up front which deals with disputes. Canada gets the same old International Trade Commission, the Department of Commerce and the rigmarole involved there; a binational commission which will not deliver, in the opinion of very knowledgeable people, any significant improvement in our access to United States markets or to freedom from countervail and dumping duties. In general it opens up our markets and detracts from our opportunities to provide the basic production of food in Canada.

Mr. Wise: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the agriculture spokesperson of the Official Opposition. If not all Members of the House, certainly a majority of them, would want to join with me in presenting the Hon. Member with a special award. I would suggest it should be an award for doom and gloom.

I was amazed listening to the Hon. Member, because it was evident from his speech that he has no confidence in the ability of Canadian farmers. He has absolutely no confidence in the people in the Canadian agri-food industry to rise to the occasion and take advantage of probably one of the greatest opportunities and challenges that have faced them since Confederation.

I am not sure where the Hon. Member gets his figures when he indicates that there will be a 20 per cent increase of poultry products and a 25 per cent increase of something else. If I refer to the agreement itself—

Mr. Riis: We haven't seen the agreement yet—

Mr. Wise: —and look at the actual amount of increase in chicken parts and products, it is not 20 per cent, but 1.2 per cent. These increases simply reflect the exact amount of imports that have come into the country anyhow over the last five years.

If we look at the turkey parts and processed products, the increase is not 20 per cent, but 1.5 per cent. If we look at shelled eggs, there is a total increase of 0.9 per cent. If we look at processed eggs, liquid and frozen, the increase is 0.299 per cent. If we look at powdered eggs, the increase is 0.02 per cent.

Does the Hon. Member not realize that the agreement was reached, not unilaterally by the Government but by consultation and negotiations within the SAGIT committee? Our Government made a firm commitment to maintain supply management intact. People play around a little bit with the tariff list. If people understood the Canada-U.S. trade agreement and the rules of GATT we could move those semi-processed products and so on from the tariff list to the import-export list to protect part of the underpinnings and the day-to-day operations of the supply management board. We did not do it unilaterally, we did it by agreement with the United States, consistent with Article 11 of GATT.

The SAGIT committee recommended this action in support of the continuing financial viability of the Canadian Food Processing Industry, which is the largest single employer in Canada. It does not make much sense to maintain supply management if you place in jeopardy the financial viability of the food processors. If the food processor goes down the tube then where in the world will Canadian producers sell their primary products?

This was a sensible arrangement arrived at through negotiations and consensus within the SAGIT committee. We have full and complete control over the additional product if required. Of course, the local agency has the opportunity to supply its product. That has always been the case. It cannot supply the product in a three week period. It varies product to product. Often times the national agency will say "Look, issue the import permit". Nothing has really changed.

Under this agreement, does the Hon. Member not realize that not one extra chicken piece or part will come into Canada than has already come in over the last five years? Does the Hon. Member not realize that and understand why we did that? Does the Hon. Member not understand Article 11 of GATT?

Mr. Foster: Madam Speaker, we have great confidence in Canadian producers, farmers and food processors but we have no confidence in this agreement. It really moves to sell out Canadian producers.

I note in the agreement that Canada will now not go to GATT as an independent country fighting for Canadians but will go there as an adjunct to the United States. As the Prime Minister has done in every single international negotiation since 1984, it will be a "me, too" with President Reagan. That is exactly the way the Government will behave in the multilateral trade negotiations and at the GATT.

I am glad the Minister mentioned Section 11. I defy him to table in this House the documents which the Minister for International Trade tabled in Geneva last week. It is totally unacceptable that we have a Government that tables in GATT its proposals for the negotiations but refuses to table them for Canadians. The United States has tabled its documents in the United States so that the legislatures know what is going on, but this Government tables documents secretly.

Mr. Wise: What did you do? You did not table documents in two rounds of GATT.

Mr. Foster: The Minister of State (Grains and Oil Seeds) (Mr. Mayer), if he read the agreement, would find that his Government said, "Our position at GATT and at the MTN will be a me too position".

Mr. Wise: False.

Mr. Foster: We are not going there as an independent country. Read the agreement. The Member has not read the agreement. The Minister mentioned section 11 of GATT. Where will Canada be at the end of the day on those negotiations? The Minister knows that the United States of America is going to GATT saying, "We want section 11 removed" which provides for marketing boards, for supply management and border controls. We also know that a lot of the Cairns Group about which the Minister speaks often wanted the same thing. That group wants to get rid of the power of supply management, border controls and marketing boards which have worked extremely well for Canada. I want to know what those secret documents say and what Canada's position will be in that regard. Nobody knows.

Let me deal with the question of the poultry imports. Clearly Canada's poultry industry will be put under a great deal of pressure.

Mr. Wise: No way.

Mr. Foster: The 12.5 per cent duty will come off poultry meat and off prepared foods, TV dinners and chicken pot pies. That stuff will roll into the country with markedly reduced tariffs.

Mr. Wise: False.

Mr. Foster: Just read the agreement.

Mr. Mayer: It is false.

Mr. Nelson: We have not seen any agreement yet.

Mr. Foster: The Minister was talking about percentages. The poultry quota has been increased from some 31 to 37 million kilos a year. I said that poultry meat coming into this country would be increased by 20 per cent. The quota for eggs will be increased by four million dozen eggs. The Minister can play around with figures but those are facts. He knows that.

The Minister talked a great deal about supply management. If he wants to be completely forthcoming with the House, with Members of Parliament and Canadians who are under supply management and are benefiting from it, he should table the documents tabled at GATT to show what Canada's position will be at the end of the day with regard to supply management and section 11 of GATT. It is extremely important to Canadians.

We know where the leader is and who the leader is by this agreement. It says that the Government of Canada and the United States will co-operate in these GATT negotiations to remove all subsidies for agricultural commodities. We want to know what kind of a commitment the Government of Canada is making. Is it saying yes to the Americans in Washington who want to get rid of supply management and border controls or not? That is what we want to know.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to discuss the very important issue before us today. It also gives us a golden opportunity to send a message of accuracy, clarity and realism to the agri-food industry.

I am firmly convinced, and there is no question in my mind at all, that this Government has achieved a very positive deal for Canadian agriculture. The United States is our number one export market. Secure access to that market for our agricultural products is a key to the prosperity of Canadian agriculture. I do not care how you want to cut the cake, that is a fact which cannot be ignored. By negotiating improved access to our biggest market, this Government demonstrated its understanding of the importance of agriculture to our economy.

Canadian agriculture generated more than $20 billion in cash receipts last year. It accounts, directly and indirectly, for the jobs of 1.6 million Canadians. While only about 4 per cent of Canadians produce food, one in four, or roughly 25 per cent, are employed directly or indirectly in the Canadian food chain. As well, the industry is responsible for 10 per cent of all economic activity in Canada.

I remind the House that most sectors of our farm economy simply could not survive without trade. Nearly half of our farm cash receipts are earned from export sales. Again, our most important customer by far is the U.S. Sales of farm products to the U.S. account for about one-third of total agri-food exports.

This House will recall that during the past two years Canadian farmers have been increasingly concerned about growing protectionism in the U.S. A lot of people seem to ignore that fact. If you are under the illusion that we are going to enjoy the same type of atmosphere and attitude in the decade ahead that we have enjoyed over the last two decades with the U.S., then you are simply ignoring the facts.

A series of actions taken in the U.S. have been aimed at our exports. One involved restricting entry of hogs and pork to the U.S. It was obvious to the Government of Canada when we entered into these negotiations two years ago that we could no longer afford the luxury of maintaining the status quo in our trade relationship with the U.S., be it in agriculture or anything else. Without this trade deal Canada faced the dismal prospect of deteriorating trade opportunities with our largest trading partner. We now have a proposed deal and it is a good deal for Canadian agriculture.

Canada has obtained future duty-free and more secure access to the U.S. market for all agricultural exports, including meat and livestock, grains and oilseeds, potatoes and other commodities. This Government has delivered on the commitment it made to the farm community since day one. We said our agricultural marketing systems would be retained and that the underpinnings of supply management would remain secure. I was questioned day after day about whether we would keep our commitment. We did.

What did I mean when I referred to underpinnings? Very simple. They come in two parts. One part, of course, is the import-export control list. The other part is the tariff list. However, supply management systems have been maintained and the day-to-day underpinnings required for operation of supply management boards have been maintained. Supply management systems for poultry and eggs have been retained as well. Marginal increases in the level of global import quotas for those commodities have been agreed to. Yet this reflects only the actual average level of imports during the past five years. We have reserved the right to add new poultry products to the import-export list if required.

We have had the critics and the doom and gloomers in this House, and of course there is always a few of them across the country. I hope they take the time and trouble to examine what we have agreed to and how it will positively affect the agri-food industry in the future. This is the position of the Canadian Broiler Hatching Egg Marketing Agency, a national agency which we put in place. The chairman said:

> We would like to applaud the Canadian government for the manner in which the Agreement has dealt with supply-managed commodities. The Canadian government has, from the very beginning, maintained that producers in Canada would be able to choose the manner in which they market their products.

Who else with greater credibility could I ask? Let the industry spokesmen speak for the industry. Let us listen to what they are saying.

In addition to retaining marketing boards already in place, there is nothing in this agreement to prevent the creation of others in the future. People say yes, but if you protect the existing supply management system then you will give up the right of Canadian farmers to decide what system of marketing best suits their needs. Shortly after we entered into these negotiations I had the opportunity to speak to the annual meeting of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. I said then that we would not only protect the underpinnings of supply management, we would reserve the right of the Canadian Government to decide, in co-operation with the farmers, what system of marketing best suits their needs. That is exactly what we have done.

The Government of Canada's commitment to our dairy industry, $300 million annually, $1.5 billion over the next five years, has been maintained. When I announced the dairy policy in January of 1986, I told the dairy farmers of Canada that the industry had nothing to fear from the bilateral trade negotiations with the U.S. The supply management system in our industry works well. If it works well, do not touch it. What did the president of the Dairy Farmers of Canada have to say about the agreement? He said:

> The dairy farmers organization supports the proposed free-trade deal with the United States because it guarantees the Canadian government the right to include any dairy products on an import control list.

That is not the Minister of Agriculture, it is the current president of the Dairy Farmers of Canada. Who else would I go to for a more accurate non-partisan assessment of this arrangement?

In negotiating this deal we also said we would take into account the sensitivity of our fresh fruit and vegetable industry to imports from the U.S. We have maintained the right, and this is important, to reimpose tariffs temporarily, when prices are depressed, for a 20-year period. I should say "impose" because we have not imposed any seasonal tariffs since the last time we were in Government in 1979, because the law officers of the Crown have ruled those regulations ultra vires.

In addition, this agreement does not prevent Canada from proceeding with amendments to the Canada Agricultural Products Standards Act which would provide us with legal authority—and that is what we must have because we have not had it for five or six years—to prevent imports on a consignment sales basis and to control imports in non-standard bulk containers.

I have in the past referred to the very positive words of the executive vice-president of the Canadian Horticultural Council. Where else would I go to get an accurate and credible assessment of the agreement? The deal is important to the horticultural industry because we will have greater access to the U.S. market.

You should look at the U.S. tariff lists on some commodities. Under the existing trading arrangement between Canada and the United States, we have no access to mushroom markets and there is great potential in that for us. There is a tariff of 30 or 40 per cent on that product. In addition to the levels of tariffs, they have quantitative restrictions which make it impossible.

The previous Government sat around and did not impose any of these seasonal tariffs simply because they had been ruled ultra vires. That Government did nothing about bringing in amendments to the CAPS Act. We did not have the legal authority to impose Sections 56, 57 and 61(1).

Very soon we will be introducing amendments to the CAPS Act which will give us the legal authority to put in place regulations similar to and perhaps even more effective than Sections 56, 57, and 61(1) of the old Honey Act that have not been used for the last five or six years. That will be a better deal.

The new trade dispute settling mechanism will guarantee impartial application of anti-dumping, countervail, and other trade remedy laws. New rules will also minimize the trade impact of technical regulations. Also, export subsidies on agricultural trade between our two countries will be prohibited.

Agreements on import regulations and tariffs will enhance agricultural trade between our two countries. Most tariffs are to be phased out in equal steps over a period of ten years beginning when the agreement comes into effect on January 1, 1989. Let me quote the President of the Western Canadian Wheat Growers' Association who said:

> I think Canada now has a better chance of retaining current access and getting further access.

That is a very positive statement with regard to the people he represents and their ability to take advantage of that challenge and opportunity.

He continued:

> It's better than no agreement at all. A dispute-settling mechanism that involves both countries is likely to be fairer and it is especially encouraging that the two countries have agreed to jointly work out new rules.

With regard to bilateral grain trade, Canada's requirement for import permits for wheat, oats, and barley will be eliminated only when support levels in both countries are equivalent for each commodity. However, end-use certificates will be required and these will ensure that U.S. grain does not enter the Canadian grain handling system or jeopardize our quality standards.

The new trade deal protects many aspects of Canadian agriculture. For example, the import control list regulates most dairy and poultry products coming into Canada and the United States. Although yoghurt, ice-cream and further-processed chicken and turkey products are not now under import quota, there is nothing in the proposed agreement to prevent Canada from adding these products to the import control list. We do not do that unilaterally. We do not violate the Canada-U.S. trade arrangement or Article 11 of the GATT rule.

The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) had some very inaccurate and negative things to say about the position we are taking on GATT. The Member is misinformed. We did not table a position identical to that tabled by the United States.

Mr. Foster: Prove it.

Mr. Wise: That is why I said to him, Madam Speaker, through you, that that was false information. If he would take the time to read the statement made by the Minister of International Trade (Miss Carney) in the House of Commons he would see five paragraphs dealing specifically with the position we are taking on GATT with regard to supply management. Unlike the Americans, we are going to GATT with supply management as an example of responsible marketing, not only domestically but, more specifically, in the export market.

Canada's dairy program has been studied by 26 countries and is being implemented by 21 of them. One can search long and hard but will not find anything in the world that will come close to Canada's dairy program. There is nothing in the world so responsible in balancing supply and demand in the domestic market.

Dairy farmers have to deal with feed conditions, weather conditions, and many other factors that are beyond their control. They are not running an assembly line. One does not go to the barn and turn the cows off and on with a flick of the toggle switch. You do not turn them up 50 or 60 pounds and turn them down with a little knob. The dairy farmers managed to balance supply with demand, despite all of these things over which they have no control, within one-half of one per cent.

Dairy farmers met with me a year and a half ago and said that producing extra milk for the export market was sheer nonsense, that it was costing them $15 million a year out of their own pockets and was costing the federal Government anywhere from $15 million to $30 million. It made no sense, so we agreed to reduce the amount that they produced for the export market.

One would search long and hard for an example of responsibility and not find a better one in this world. Those commodities that are not supply managed had better study the market opportunities and pay a little more attention to management of supply.

The Member criticizes the Government for not tabling all of the details of GATT. The Member's Party was in government for the last two rounds of GATT. I ask him to check the record of how they handled the situation. The Canadian tradition existed then, as it does now, that you do not table the details of those agreements in the House of Commons. The Minister makes a statement in the House, as our Minister did last week, with respect to that. We followed the historic Canadian tradition of tabling the details in GATT and having the Minister make a statement in the House of Commons.

Canada retains the necessary latitude to prevent our supply management programs from being undermined by increased imports. I attended 190 events outside of Ottawa last year. At such events there is typically a brief speech by the Minister. I suppose some in the audience may have thought I could have been briefer. However, almost invariably the first question to be asked at a public meeting is with regard to supply management. People were concerned that we would not be able to negotiate that with the United States and asked what we would do in GATT. The supply management people led the public debate on that issue.

At the same time, Canadian farmers and food processors will have new marketing opportunities in the United States. No one from across the way talks about that. For example, some soft, ripened specialty cheeses produced in Canada are outside of the U.S. quota system. As the specialty cheese industry develops in Canada these high quality, competitive markets could find larger markets in the U.S.

I have only scratched the surface, Madam Speaker, but you have given me an indication that my time has expired.

In conclusion, I ask Hon. Members not to ignore the facts. Leave the partisan politics aside and listen to what the people in the industry are saying.

Let me deal with the grape industry. I never said that it was a winner in these negotiations. It is one industry that has attracted the attention of the Americans simply because of the provincial pricing mark-ups and pricing policies. There is no way you can ignore that. They are extremely discriminatory. It not only attracts the attention of the Americans, that issue is under challenge by GATT. The GATT panel will soon rule on that question and it is not appropriate for me to make any further comment than to say one of these days GATT will rule on that issue. I know those people in the industry. I work with them every day and we have all kinds of members from the peninsula, from the Okanagan in British Columbia and other grape-growing areas. We have been buying grapes from the peninsula since we assumed Government and we have an agri-food agreement with the Province of British Columbia where we have been removing red grapes and so on.

Let us not ignore the facts. While it may be premature, it appears at the moment that it is an industry in agriculture that has attracted the attention of the Americans as a result of the pricing mechanism of the provinces. It appears, at the moment, that there is no doubt it could well be a sector of our agriculture industry that did not fare very favourably under the Canada-U.S. agreement. We will not walk away from them today. We have not walked away from them since day one. We are quite prepared to sit down with the provinces and the industry to try to map out some kind of strategy to assist them.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I am pleased to hear that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) recognized the position in which the Canadian wine industries and the grape-growers in particular have been put and that there is some difficulty there. He will be well aware that there are over 16,000 people involved in that industry.

Mr. Wise: Well—

Mr. Riis: Full and part-time jobs because there is a great deal of part-time work. Let us say that there is 12,000 full time and another 4,000 part-time jobs, plus many more as a result of the multiplier effect.

He will also know that the farm gate receipts for the 1986 grape crop in Canada was in excess of some $40 million. There is also a multiplier effect that is significant when it comes to this industry. We are probably talking about at least one-third of $1 billion in terms of money generated because of those farm gate receipts.

Mr. Wise: I do not know about that.

Mr. Riis: The multiplier is nine to ten. If there is some dispute about that by my hon. friends opposite, perhaps they can explain what multiplier effect they would use. I use nine or ten, which is provided by Agriculture Canada and the industry.

I believe it is fair to say that the grape growers of this country believe that their industry will be wiped out if this deal is signed, to say nothing of the soft tree fruit industry and others which we will deal with later.

Does the Minister agree that this agreement will be detrimental to that industry and will essentially devastate the majority of it? What does he plan to do about that, or is he prepared to throw these 16,000 people on the scrap heap as the price the Government is prepared to pay? I am sure that is not his belief because he is an honourable gentleman.

What does he plan to do with these thousands of Canadians who in some cases have spent generations developing this industry?

Mr. Wise: Madam Speaker, I quarrel with the Hon. Member's mathematical calculations. However, setting that aside, I think he asks a legitimate question. That is why I spent the last minute or two of my speech dealing with that question. Politicians, regardless of where they sit, like to deal with positive issues, but I turned that aside and dealt with this question.

As I indicated, at the early stages it appears that the wine industry may be in some difficulty. I have stated publicly before, and will say it again, that we as a federal Government always take our obligations and responsibilities seriously. We will follow that same pattern with the wine industry. We are quite prepared to sit down tomorrow with the provinces, since it is really the provincial pricing mechanism and mark-ups that have caused the problems. Today, the Hon. Member's challenge is as a result of the Canada-U.S. agreement. Who knows what might occur when the GATT panel rules.

Agriculture is a joint responsibility under the Constitution. It is shared with the provinces. The federal Government would like to include the producers of all commodities in that partnership. That is how we have operated since day one and the way we will continue to operate with that policy.

If the provincial governments want to sit down tomorrow, I am available. However, the people in the industry should also be at the table. It is the people in the industry who will be able to assess the impact.

There has been some positive response from the wine industry. For instance, they will have greater access to the U.S. market, and with proper types of grapes and proper types of wine, access to the U.S. market may provide some opportunities.

I am sure there will be some opportunities, but the Hon. Member calculates a worst case scenario. It is somewhere in between there at the moment. We are quite prepared to sit down with the provinces and the industry to map out some reasonable strategy to deal with this problem.

Mr. Althouse: Madam Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) indicated that it was time people began to analyse this deal, not on the basis of politics but on the basis of fairness. I ask him to do that with regard to the five-year averaging formula that is used in the poultry section of this agreement. It has been agreed to go from import quotas of 6.3 per cent to 7.5 per cent, based on five-year averaging.

He should know that those quotas are on an increase scale. While I do not have the proper mathematical formula, I estimate that if those quotas are filled each year between the next six and ten years, our consumption on the basis of these quotas will be at and above 10 per cent. According to this agreement, will we not in fact become dependent on U.S. products because of the economics of production on each side of the border? Will we not become more dependent on imported U.S. products coming in through our processors and wholesalers who now hold those licenses, rather than taking advantage of the increased consumption in this country with our own domestic producers and processing jobs taking up that slack? Does this agreement not open us to increasing imports of poultry meat? The turkey agreement is similar but I am just referring to poultry at this point.

• (1250)

Mr. Wise: Madam Speaker, I answered that question on a couple of occasions. I put that question to a senior official at the trade office. If I can recall, he indicated to me it was not a rolling average, not a moving average. I will give an undertaking to the Hon. Member that I will double-check that today or tomorrow. If I am wrong, I will communicate that to the Hon. Member.

However, we must remember a couple of things. The new percentages are up slightly, 1.5 per cent the highest and .012 per cent the lowest. That is very small. What those increases do is simply reflect the amount of product that has been imported from the United States into Canada over the last five years, not unilaterally at all. If the food processing industry is short of product, does the Hon. Member want to lose a market opportunity? Does he want to shut down a product line? Does he want to lay people off? I do not think so.

If the Canadian system cannot at that given time supply the product, the processor applies for an import permit to keep the product line operating, to keep people employed. They go to the national agency and ask, "Can you people supply this product to the processor?" That is not a combative meeting. They search the market-place. If they can supply it from Canadian sources, they put it into that processing. If they cannot supply it, they tell us to issue the permit. We always check with the agency to see if they have any problems if we issue an export certificate, which is not issued by myself but by the Minister for International Trade. But she picks up the phone and she talks to me. We communicate with one another.

Why was that done for the past five years? It was done to keep the Canadian food processors in business. Everyone benefits. That is exactly what the system is going to do in the future.

With respect to an increase in the market, if the Canadian industry can supply it, it will be supplied by the Canadian industry. That has always been the case and will continue to be the case. However, there will be times when the Canadian industry is not in a position to supply the product. We have full control over that under Article 11 of the GATT because that is one of the underpinnings which is necessary for the day-to-day operations of supply management.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I listened with interest to my hon. friend, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise). While I believe he is basically an honourable Member and an honourable man in that he believes strongly in agriculture, I believe he has been betrayed by his Cabinet colleagues, and what I have to say is not a reflection on him as a person.

I think the Hon. Minister should have called his speech on the free trade deal with the United States, "The moment that the Government of Canada abandoned the family farm in Canada". That would have been a more appropriate title for his speech, because what we have found by listening to the Minister of Agriculture is that the Government of Canada had decided to abandon farm families, the family farm, family enterprises, family processors and rural Canada. That is what this Government has just declared to the people of Canada.

Let me say, Madam Speaker, that it seems to me we have come to a very critical question. Has the Government decided to support the family farm or is it prepared to abandon the family farm and turn it over to corporate enterprise or, more appropriately, to the United States? We now know that the Government has decided to abandon the family farm and the rural communities that built Canada and has given them to the United States. I want to take the next few minutes to explain why I feel this ultimal betrayal has taken place.

First, we find that the Government has decided to hold hearings across Canada on this deal. Presumably we will go across the country holding hearings in a variety of communities, but based on what? We have not seen the deal yet? We have not seen the free trade deal with the United States. We will not see it this week or next week. We will not see it until the end of November or the first part of December. Yet the committee is expected to hold hearings across Canada based on what? There is no document.

That is like asking the House of Commons to debate a Bill that is not on our desk, to debate legislation the Government has failed to introduce. How can we do this? Yet the Government's decision is to hold hearings on the most serious economic matter facing this country, by the Prime Minister's own words, the biggest trade deal in Canadian history, and no one will have seen the deal. No one will have seen the deal that presumably our negotiators initialed early in October. If that is not the con job of the century, if that is not the sideshow of the decade, to have our parliamentarians going out to hear key witnesses on an agreement no one has read or seen, then what is?

Let us identify this scam that is underway. This is the style Canadians have become used to. It is Mr. Mulroney's style.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Riis: It is his style to make the decision at the eleventh hour, at one minute before midnight, when we do not have adequate facts before us, but push Canadians up against a wall to sign the agreement. By the Prime Minister's own admission, this is the biggest trade deal in Canadian history. To ask Canadians to discuss this in an intelligent way without having seen the deal is an absolutely remarkable request. It is an absurd process. Yet that is what we are expected to do and we are expected to take this whole thing seriously.

I ask my colleagues opposite, and I ask the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister responsible for wheat and oilseeds, do we really believe that we can have an intelligent conversation, an intelligent set of hearings, talking to experts who will be touched by this particular deal, before they have seen it? What are we going to talk about? What are the experts going to react to? That is the folly of this, the unbelievable nature of this process.

I am obviously very exercised about this deal. I am very exercised about how this deal is being handled. I think what we have seen, as I said at the outset, is that the Government has decided not only to open Canada for business but to have a special fire sale on agriculture. It has decided to sell out this critical sector of our economy.

I say "critical" because I believe that Canadians have a very strong attitude towards maintaining our farm community. I believe Canadians are prepared to invest money to maintain a viable and strong farm community. That is why we have seen our farm community built on supply management programs. We have seen our farm community built as a result of marketing boards. We have seen our farm community strengthened because of border controls on cheap imports coming in from other countries. That is what built this country and that is what built our agricultural fabric from Newfoundland to the West Coast of British Columbia. That is what the Government is now abandoning. The Government is now saying it is prepared to turn its back on rural Canada.

As the Minister of Agriculture just said, the best example is what is happening to the grape growers of Canada. There are going to be thousands of thousands of people who for generations have dedicated not only their lives but the lives of their families to developing that sector of the agricultural community who are about to be abandoned. I think the Minister of Agriculture had the courage, and I respect him for it, to essentially admit that, yes, this has been one of the prices we have decided to pay in order to obtain this free trade deal with the United States.

I see, you rising, Madam Speaker, to indicate that it is one o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until 2 o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2.05 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Speaker: I would like to draw the attention of all Members to the fact that we had a fire in the equipment on the sixth floor. Nothing serious. It was simply a malfunction in one of the elevators.

• (1405)

[English]

There was a malfunction in a piece of apparatus for one of the elevators. An extremely alert employee noticed the smoke and identified it. The fire alarm was put in action. Fire Department personal was here within a few minutes. They have located the problem. There is nothing to be alarmed about. We have received word that everybody can come back into the building and we can continue.

I wish to say to Hon. Members that we are indebted, first, to a very alert employee. We are also indebted—I was with them on the roof—to a very competent group of people from the Fire Department in whom we should have every confidence. I wish to express regard for the alert employee, and for the members of the Fire Department who not only got here immediately but also obviously knew what they were doing. I think that that should be recorded.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: In view of the left-over confusion, I suggest that we wait five or six minutes, and if it is the disposition of Hon. Members perhaps we can commence Statements by Members at 2.15 p.m., and then we will carry on as normal.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I might also state that I and other Members of the Board of Internal Economy, who are your servants, have felt for some time justified in approving the expenditure of a great deal of money to try to make this place more fireproof. I hope that we have your support.

SITTING SUSPENDED

At 2.10 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 2.15 p.m.

DAY CARE

URGENT NEED FOR GOVERNMENT TO TAKE ACTION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, once again, Canadians have reason to complain about the Conservative Government's failure to act. This time, people have had to bear the brunt of the Government's inaction with respect to day-care centres. And this at a time when the Government is acting too quickly to endorse agreements like the Free Trade Agreement.

Mr. Speaker, the Government ought to realize that time is of the essence as far as day-care centres are concerned and that it must act quickly. In fact, since the Mulroney-Reagan Agreement was signed, many people have been concerned about the impact the Agreement will have and about any negative effects on a national day-care system.

If we open our borders to American services, what guarantee do we have that they will not open day-care centres in this country which, as in the United States, will be private and aimed at a wealthy clientele? There is a real risk that a profit-oriented day-care service will be set up in this country. Is that the best this Government can do for the Canadian people?

The Government is dragging its feet, and Canadians are fed up. Thousands of children are waiting for openings in day-care centres. The Government must act quickly and help those who are starting to get impatient, and rightly so.

SUNSHINE FOUNDATION

SPONSORSHIP OF SICK CHILDREN'S VISIT TO DISNEY WORLD, FLORIDA

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, it was heartening to be at the London Airport this morning to see three jets carrying 205 chronically ill, terminally ill and severely disabled children, with their volunteer helpers and medical support, leave on their Dream Lift to Disney World in Florida. The Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has proclaimed these young people "Canadian Ambassadors" to the United States of America for today.

Today's miracle came about as the result of hundreds of volunteers inspired and led by Ed and Donna Czach who themselves were parents of a terminally ill child who longed for the opportunity that was afforded to so many others today. Today's inaugural Dream Lift is a tribute to their son Paul's memory and serves as an inspiration of hope to thousands of others across Canada who might some day be touched by the Sunshine Foundation.

This concept, with the help of volunteers throughout the country, will hopefully spread to embrace all parts of Canada so that these special children will be able to enjoy a ray of sunshine similar to what we saw this morning in London which even the driving rains could not discourage.

The success of this movement is going to rely on the warmth, generosity and assistance of Canadians, and I would urge my colleagues in the House of Commons to encourage and support the creation of a chapter of the Sunshine Foundation in their own constituencies.

HUMAN RIGHTS

EL SALVADOR—MURDER OF HERBERT ERNESTO ANAYA SANABRIA

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, Herbert Ernesto Anaya Sanabria, 33 years old, a man of truth and love, yesterday gave his life for his people in El Salvador.

In May, 1986, Herbert was arrested, tortured and imprisoned by the Government of El Salvador while working for the non-governmental Human Rights Commission. In prison he and other political prisoners did a study of the torture techniques used against them which they smuggled out for publication.

On February 2, 1987, after release and a prisoner exchange, Herbert and his companions returned to serve the Human Rights Commission. On May 5, with my son David interpreting, I met Herbert at work in the Human Rights office. He spoke relaxedly, his face shining with cheerful courage, about the struggle of the El Salvador people against United States guns.

He daily took down statements from relatives of the disappeared, identified tortured bodies in garbage dumps and published the truth as he found it, while receiving government propaganda attacks and death squad threats.

On October 26 at 6.35 a.m., as he prepared to take two of his children to school, two men shot him to death.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, it may come as a surprise to the New Democratic Party, but our country stretches from the Pacific to the Atlantic. Yes, it is true that there are areas of Canada not found within the borders of Ontario and there are cities that are not called Oshawa.

Canadians in other parts of Canada are pleased and supportive of the free trade agreement which the opposition Parties are desperately trying to stop. Strangely, in all their righteous indignation, they still want to keep one of the original examples of a free trade agreement, the Auto Pact. It has, for over 20 years, provided a specific part of Ontario with money and jobs. The place I am talking about is none other than the riding of the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent). His particular style of tunnel vision leaves westerners shaking their heads. Doesn't he want any other province or city to prosper? It is time for him to remove his blinkers and see that the free trade agreement will help all of Canada, as the Auto Pact has helped Oshawa.

FREE TRADE—POSITION OF TORY PARTY LEADERSHIP CANDIDATES IN 1983

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, in order to lay open the charade of the Conservative Government's trade deal with the U.S., I am going to quote from a letter written to the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix by Mr. Dan Wirl:

> Just before the federal Tory leadership race in 1983, the following were quotes from leadership contenders when asked a question, "How do you respond to economic partnership with the United States?"

In other words, free trade.

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Hopkins: It continues:

> Brian Mulroney's answer was: "Canadians rejected free trade with the U.S. in 1911, they would do so again in 1983. Canada must increase its share of total world trade . . . "
> Michael Wilson replied: "Bilateral trade is simplistic and naive, it would only serve to further diminish our ability to compete internationally."
> John Gamble: "We would be eaten alive."
> Joe Clark: "Unrestrained trade with the U.S. raises the possibility that thousands of jobs could be lost in such critical industries as textiles, furniture and footwear."
> David Crombie: "It's silly."

What changed the minds of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his colleagues? Could it have been U.S. President Ronald Reagan, who saw this Government could be persuaded to agree with his plans and thereby allow for the takeover or destruction of Canadian industries? This is just another example of the Government not knowing where it is going from one day to the next and of a Prime Minister who says one thing and does another.

EFFECT ON MINING INDUSTRY

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, after the free trade agreement, in principle, was signed I told the people of Abitibi-Témiscamingue and the media that the accord was very good for our local mining industry.

Today Mining Association of Canada officials support free trade. Canada is the world's leading exporter of minerals, and the mining industry and its employees must be able to rely on a properly operating international trade system. Without guaranteed access to our most important market, the industry cannot survive and prosper.

In recent years our exports of metals and minerals have been increasingly affected by the protectionist measures advocated by American mining interests. Without free trade this harassment can only grow worse.

The agreement will protect existing jobs in the industry. In addition, more secure access to the American market might spur investment in new mines in Canada and in Abitibi-Témiscamingue. In the long run there will be increased and more secure employment in the mining industry.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the Mining Association of Canada for encouraging all employees of mining companies to give careful consideration to the free trade agreement.

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST FOR BETTER JOB DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, thousands of non-profit organizations in Canada and Quebec are concerned about the inaction of this Conservative Government as concerns job development programs.

Everyone knows, Mr. Speaker, that, in early September, the Government usually asks non-profit organizations to submit projects to create jobs and make them more effective. The Government is already late in asking for these projects. Its coffers are empty, and according to the Auditor General, it has wasted a shocking amount, as much as several million dollars in the Departments of Defence and others, when it should have allocated this money to job development programs which would help all non-profit organizations in every constituency in Canada.

IMPACT ON CONSUMERS

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Quebec-East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say once more how proud I am that our Prime Minister had the vision to initiate free trade negotiations with the United States.

Quebec and Canadian consumers should also be proud because, according to the Economic Council of Canada, they will be the first to benefit from this free trade agreement. They will benefit mostly from lower prices, a larger variety of products and services, and better quality products. This will be of enormous benefit, Mr. Speaker.

While it is too early to predict exactly how much consumers will save, the Economic Council of Canada forecasts a decrease in the consumer price index of between 5.7 and 7.5 per cent. Based on these first assessments, this would mean that the elimination of tariffs would represent an $8,000 savings for Canadians who decide to build a new home. What great news for young couples buying their first house!

Mr. Speaker, I know of no one who is not in favor of lower prices, a greater variety of products and services and better quality products. Major household appliances, clothing, bedding and furniture will all be available at lower prices once the tariffs have been eliminated. I think that consumers will be very satisfied with the benefits of free trade. They will certainly be very grateful to the Government.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

CRITICISM OF CRUISE MISSILE TESTS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the United States Air Force will once again test the air launched Cruise missile in Canada today. These tests continue to be an affront to Canada's history as a peacemaker in the nuclear world. The tests continue to undermine Canada's potential to play a large and credible role in disarmament efforts. The tests continue to make Canada a partner in the nuclear arms race.

How hollow have been the Tory arguments that the Cruise missile would be tested until progress was made in Geneva. Arms control progress has been made and we are on the eve of the world's first nuclear disarmament agreement. Yet Canada goes on testing the Cruise, playing its supine role in escalating the nuclear arms race in strategic weaponry.

What a shocking betrayal of the people of Canada and of their belief in the leadership role Canada should play in arms control and disarmament, a role that the Government has now totally abandoned.

FISHING INDUSTRY—POSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY LEADER ON CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, if the anti-trade position of the NDP Leader is accepted the opportunity to create hundreds of jobs in the fishing industry in my riding will be lost. That is a cost we are not prepared to pay because of ideological obsessions of the NDP.

At the present a U.S. tariff on secondary processing of fish products is a barrier to the movement of value-added fish products into the United States. Consequently, we are exporting fish fillets, and the jobs created while upgrading the fillets are outside Canada. These jobs are Canadian jobs that should exist in Nova Scotia. The free trade agreement will mean the elimination of this punitive U.S. tariff and the reclamation of these lost jobs.

The members of the NDP, however, do not support that. They only want free trade in automobiles. Is that because the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) represents a city which depends on automobile manufacturing, or is it because the president of the CAW is telling the Leader of the NDP what to do? Who actually leads the NDP—Bob White?

It is time for the Member for Oshawa to be honest with the fishing industry. My constituents are as entitled to free trade in fish as are his to free trade in cars. Can the Leader of the NDP tell us how it is that selling cars to Americans does not threaten our sovereignty but selling fish to them does?

Atlantic Canadians are sick and tired of the hypocrisy and double standard of the Leader of the NDP. He can expect me to continue to expose him for what he is.

CANADIAN CENTRE FOR OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY

OPPOSITION TO TREASURY BOARD'S SUGGESTION OF PRIVATE FUNDING

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Government is so driven by the profit motive that it is now prepared to sacrifice the health and, potentially, the lives of workers in its quest for the almighty dollar. I refer to the Government's intention to dismember, dismantle and, in effect, repudiate politically the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety.

The Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety, located in Canada's most industrialized city, Hamilton, was set up as an access for workers, both union and non-union, companies, and others to the most up-to-date information about chemicals and other dangers present in the workplace. Believe it or not, Mr. Speaker, the Treasury Board has now told the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety that it must raise $1 million in private funds by 1992 if it is to survive.

The time has come for the workers of the country to tell the Government that the lives and health of working people are not to be bartered away by the almighty dollar. It will be impossible for the Centre to raise the $1 million by the end of 1992. That will spell the end of the Centre.

I think it is a crying shame for the people of the country that the Government does not believe in getting information out to workers about chemical spills and other labour hazards in the workplace. That is the role of the Government. It is not the role of a private company to pay for the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety. The Treasury Board had better get that message.

TRADE

POSITION OF MANITOBA PREMIER ON CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Léo Duguay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, Howard Pawley returned from a weekend love-in with the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) and union leaders Shirley Carr and Bob White demanding a federal election on free trade. In the same breath he refused to recall the Manitoba Legislature to discuss the issue, but announced instead that he would be holding propaganda style closed meetings by invitation only to sell his opposition.

Could this be the same Government that spent $2 billion to build the Limestone hydro generating station?

Could this be the same Government that wants to export more energy from another hydro station at Conawapa downriver from Limestone?

Could this be the same Government that earmarked $80,000 U.S. to fight an American group lobbying against hydro imports from Manitoba?

How can the New Democrats of Manitoba oppose free trade and fight for improved access at the same time?

As the Winnipeg Sun said this morning: "Pawley and his advisors may find out that Manitobans are a lot smarter than they think".

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EVACUATION CAUSED BY FIRE ALARM—EMPLOYEE'S PROMPT ACTION

Mr. Speaker: Before we get into Question Period I want to say something that I believe all Members would want expressed on their behalf. I had hoped that my remarks just before we assembled would have covered this, but I am informed that for some reason they were not covered on the television broadcast. I want to repeat them because I think the people of this country and all Hon. Members ought to know that when we had a fire alarm a little while ago all of us owed a tribute to one of our workers, whose name I do not yet have but will obtain and deal with appropriately when I do.

This employee identified a malfunction in a motor and was able to alert other people immediately. As a consequence, the Fire Department was called.

I was on the sixth floor and on the roof of the building with members of the Fire Department. I want to say to you and the country that they were extraordinarily well led, effective, confident and competent.

We are indebted indeed for the very swift action that was taken, beginning, as I say, with an employee of this place who very correctly and alertly discovered the problem and was then very well supported by the officers and members of the Fire Department.

I know that you would want to join with me in saying to these people that what they have done is appreciated by this place.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—SCHEDULING OF COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, Canadians have been advised by the Minister of Finance that the complete and final text of the trade agreement between Canada and the United States may not be tabled until the end of November. He used the phrase "six weeks" when he made that statement.

However, the Prime Minister said on October 5, as reported at page 9632 of Hansard:

> I shall table the complete text of the Agreement as soon as the wording is finalized. It will then be referred to the appropriate committee of the House for analysis, study and debate.

Those were the Prime Minister's words.

I was amazed to learn from my colleagues that the Conservative majority on the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade have rammed through a motion calling for hearings to begin next week and to terminate on December 4. That means there will only be four days of public hearings after a final text of the agreement is received. I find that to be a violation of the Prime Minister's commitment to the House. It is absurd, dangerous and anti-democratic.

Will the Prime Minister live up to his commitment to allow Canadians to have time to analyze a final text of this very important agreement, to make their submissions, to come before the parliamentary committee after the text is received, and not to have a meaningless discussion before that text is received?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in the proposal of the Government that is at variance at all with what I or the Minister of Finance have said.

Although the final text is yet to arrive, we are trying to get this into a parliamentary forum so that Canadians can be consulted and can debate the issues across the country, as my hon. friends would no doubt want. As soon as the definitive text is received it will be submitted to the committee, on which I presume it can conduct other or more precise hearings if it wishes.

The absence of a definitive text has not prevented the Liberal Government of Ontario from holding ministerial hearings across the province. This is a Members' committee. Surely the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition would not want to prevent ordinary Members of Parliament from consulting with Canadians on this important issue.

NEED FOR DEFINITIVE TEXT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—OPPORTUNITY FOR THOROUGH DISCUSSION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, any intelligent person knows perfectly well there are hundreds of groups in this country, hundreds of Canadians who want to appear before Parliament to express their views on the trade agreement with the United States. First they need a definitive text. Then they have to prepare their briefs. They have to analyse the details to examine the impact on their own transactions and the companies they represent. They have to make reservations to travel to Ottawa and express their views before the Members of this House. To do all that requires very careful preparations. Why start committee hearings before the definitive text is published? Why try to avoid an in-depth discussion with Canadians who ought to be able to analyse their own situation in terms of a definitive text?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I increasingly get the impression that the Leader of the Opposition does not want Canadians to speak out on this very important document. The absence of a definitive document—

An Hon. Member: What document?

Mr. Mulroney: Yes, but we submitted . . . A document was submitted here in the House. Premier Bourassa called a meeting of a parliamentary committee to discuss free trade issues, including the documentation available. Premier Peterson in Ontario's Liberal Government has deployed a half dozen ministers across the province to get the views of Ontarians on this matter. I think it is quite normal that the Parliament of Canada should be able to do the same, both the Government and Parliament.

I know this does not suit the Liberals. You don't want the people to know how advantageous this document is for all Canadians, but we are going to let them know.

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF COMMITTEE DEADLINE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, once again the Prime Minister is placing phoney public relations in front of serious public discussion. Will he give an undertaking that these hearings, which are beginning on the basis of a general statement of principles, will continue past the deadline set by the committee so that when the final text is received people whose businesses are being affected, industries whose future is being affected, and Canadians who are facing a document that will change the political, cultural and social nature of this country, can be examined in detail on the basis of the final text?

The undertaking we want from the Prime Minister of this country is that the commitment and promise he made to this Parliament will be fulfilled and Canadians will have an opportunity to make their submissions on the final text that means something in detail.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are very much ready to make certain that the committee, which is of course master of its own rules—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Oh, sure!

Mr. Mulroney: This is very much in keeping with parliamentary reform, an initiative of this Government which was celebrated by the Opposition some three years ago. The committee is very much able to do this. I am surprised that the Leader of the Opposition would have any objection to Members of Parliament proceeding on this basis, when he is ready to tear up a deal that he has not even seen yet.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: You will have to make up your mind. You are ready to reject a document you haven't seen.

• (1440)

An Hon. Member: You cannot have it both ways, John.

Mr. Riis: Have you seen it, Brian?

Mr. Mulroney: As soon as the deal was initialled, the next day I brought it forward and gave it to the House of Commons, as I ought to have done. We have had debates on it. Question Period is devoted to it. A parliamentary committee is now being set up. Surely nothing could be more democratic than to ask Members of the House of Commons to consult with ordinary Canadians on a matter of such importance.

GRANT MADE TO WEST EDMONTON MALL PROJECT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the Deputy Prime Minister's conduct as Acting Minister of DRIE during July, 1986. The Auditor General's Report tabled today in the House tells us that the owners of the West Edmonton Mall were given a non-repayable $5 million DRIE grant during the Deputy Prime Minister's tenure as Acting Minister of DRIE.

The payment was made on the Deputy Prime Minister's recommendation to Cabinet despite the fact that the West Edmonton Mall was ineligible for DRIE assistance and despite the fact that the mall's application for assistance was turned down by the previous Liberal Government, the current administration, and by the Government of Alberta.

In light of these facts contained in the Auditor General's Report tabled at two o'clock today in this House, I ask the Deputy Prime Minister what possible explanation can he have for this $5 million gift to the West Edmonton Mall?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the grant in question of $5 million was in fact a contribution to the West Edmonton Mall project. It was made for reasons of commercial viability to ensure the realization of that project. It was approved by Cabinet to fund a project that would be of great benefit to that particular region.

MINISTER'S EXPLANATION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Deputy Prime Minister knows that the application was rejected by the previous Government, this Government, the Government of Alberta, and senior officials of DRIE. He knows that the mall project was started and completed before the funds were ever given to the owners of the West Edmonton Mall, so they did not contribute to the financial viability of the mall. The payment was received by the mall's owners long after the mall was completed and was operating.

I ask the Deputy Prime Minister again, in light of the facts contained in the Auditor General's Report, in light of the facts laid before all Member of this House—not my allegations, the Auditor General's Report—what possible explanation does he have for the taxpayers of Canada for giving a $5 million gift to the owners of the West Edmonton Mall? What kind of scam was the Deputy Prime Minister involved in in July of 1986?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised that the previous Government would reject any support for western Canada. That has been a tradition.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: Answer the question.

Mr. Mazankowski: I will answer the question because the Hon. Member should get his facts straight. It was not for the West Edmonton Mall. It was for Fantasyland, which is a very major and very important tourist attraction to Edmonton, to Alberta, to western Canada, indeed to all of Canada, and it deserves support.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Oh, boy!

Mr. Caccia: Your Party belongs to Fantasyland.

Mr. Mazankowski: If he wants to talk about the Auditor General's Report, this is what the Auditor General had to say, and I quote: "In summary—".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The question that has been asked of the Deputy Prime Minister is a serious one and it carries tones of an allegation. I think, in fairness, the Deputy Prime Minister should have courtesy from all Hon. Members in order to respond.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, what the Hon. Member deliberately overlooks is some of the more positive things that are said in the Auditor General's Report and I quote Paragraph 4.212. This is what the Auditor General had to say about the performance of this Government—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Oh come on!

Mr. Mazankowski:

In summary, our study found major improvements in financial control in government. We are encouraged by the progress made by a number of departments, particularly in the past two years.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Order.

Mr. Riis: A $5 million kickback.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR COMPLETION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister, but I say to the Deputy Prime Minister first—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What did Riis say about kickbacks?

Mr. Mazankowski: What did Riis say about kickbacks?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Has he the courage to put it on the record?

An Hon. Member: Come on, get up and say it.

Mr. Riis: Five million dollar kickback.

Mr. Shields: Goddam sleaze bag.

Mr. Riis: Come across here and say that, you phoney.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Have some courage, Nelson.

Mr. Mazankowski: Stand up and say it. Say it publicly.

Mr. Masse: Say it publicly.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I can ask the Hon. Member for Oshawa, despite how great the temptation may be to get into an earlier exchange, to concentrate on the question he is going to ask and to concentrate on that question to the particular Minister to whom he wishes to put the question.

Mr. Broadbent: As always, your Honour, I accept your advice.

My question is directed to the Prime Minister. It was the Prime Minister who said not many weeks ago that the trade deal negotiated between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States—and if these were not the precise words, the idea was there—was the most significant trade deal in history. Considering that this is the case and considering that almost every sector of the Canadian economy is seriously affected, does the Prime Minister not think it is incredibly irresponsible for the Government to say now that the final wording will be produced perhaps as late as the first week in December, and to have this all completed by January 2?

Does he believe the Premiers of Canada have time to look at this, that the Parliament of Canada has time to look at it and the people affected have time to look at it? Why does the Government not go back to the United States and at the very least ask for an extension of the deadline?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend should not get exercised. We said we would produce the final wording just as quickly as possible. The day after, I produced the documents in the House that were available to all of us, invited debate thereon, followed by another series of debates. I have indicated consistently that just as quickly as the final wording is available it will be made available to the House.

Meanwhile, the Government of Ontario has sent out a committee of six or seven Ministers who are travelling the province seeking views, generally speaking, on the trade initiative as it is defined. The Government of the Province of Quebec is doing the same thing. While waiting for the definitive text, I would hope the House of Commons would follow suit. Just as quickly as we have the information, I will provide it to my hon. friend and it will be in ample time for even him to make up his mind.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint Jacques): Cheap shot.

Mr. Broadbent: I will ignore that touching comment by the Prime Minister.

COMMITTEE MEMBERS' DECISION ON HOLDING OF HEARINGS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I want to say to the Prime Minister that it is not the Government of Ontario that has negotiated the deadline with the United States. It is not the Government of Ontario which will be signing the agreement with the United States. It is the Government of Canada that will be doing that. It is the Government of Canada's responsibility.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Considering that the Conservative Members of the House committee that will be looking at this, earlier this month said in committee that they would not consider this issue until they had final wording, will the Prime Minister inform the House why the Government forced the Conservative Members of that committee to change their decision yesterday to meet your deadline?

• (1450)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a genuinely preposterous situation put forward by the Leader of the NDP.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Ever since we brought in the trade deal the NDP has been saying that if the Canadian people knew about it they would turn it down. Now, when we try to make it available to the Canadian people, the hon. gentleman is opposed because he knows full well that it is in the national interest and that Canadians will approve it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: Call an election if you believe it. You are afraid of the people of Canada.

Mr. Mulroney: What could be more democratic than to have the House of Commons invite one of its committees to visit with Canadians across the country to discuss an important issue?

Mr. Riis: An election would be better.

Mr. Mulroney: It seems to me that this is entirely consistent with the idea of parliamentary committees doing their jobs. We have done nothing. We have placed no limitations on the right of the committee to govern itself, to make its own value judgments. Surely, I would expect my hon. friend to join with us in helping that committee fulfil what is clearly a very important national function. If there has been activity in the field in Ontario, and, perhaps, Manitoba and elsewhere, surely the national Parliament will want to do no less on behalf of allowing all Canadians to be heard.

REQUEST FOR POSTPONEMENT OF HEARINGS UNTIL PRODUCTION OF FINAL DOCUMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the best way to have all Canadians to hear and to understand what is involved is for the Prime Minister to have the courage to call a general election now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I do not readily expect that. Since it is important for the people of Canada actually to be able to look at the final wording, and it is important whether we are talking about the resource sector, the service sector, the agriculture sector—it is important for all these people to be able actually to see the final wording—would the Prime Minister not agree that either a new deadline should be negotiated right away with the United States, or that he should scrap these phoney hearings that will not have a final document to look at?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be generally acknowledged that ordinary Canadians who do not have the easy access to the media that some other people do have, legitimately, Members of Parliament, but also, for example, Mr. Bob White, ordinary Canadians, small businessmen—

Mr. Riis: Are you afraid of an election, Brian?

Mr. Mulroney: —should have a chance to come before a parliamentary committee to express their point of view. If they are in favour of freed trade, then they can say so. If they are against tree trade, then they can say so as well.

My hon. friend from British Columbia is calling for an election. We will call an election just as soon as members of his Party get themselves a new Quebec lieutenant.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

SALE OF BANK OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—PAYMENT OF $200 MILLION BY CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It concerns a statement—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Trinity has the floor. As Hon. Members who have been here for some years will know, she is one of the Members who ask the clearest, most concise and most direct questions in this place.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I am sure Hon. Members would want to extend the proper courtesies to hear her. The Hon. Member for Trinity.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): My question is for the Minister of Finance and it concerns a statement in the Auditor General's report which I quote:

> The transaction that resulted in the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation paying $200 million to facilitate the sale of the Bank of British Columbia was structured in a way that could be regarded as an attempt to avoid income taxes.

Since the Deputy Minister of Finance is a member of the Board of Directors of that Crown corporation, will the Minister tell the House if he approved that particular method of transferring of funds?

Mr. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for asking the question very precisely because the Auditor General used the words "could be" interpreted. This particular transaction was a complicated one, structured in such a way that no one, if they had asked, would have been able to figure out the tax implications of the transaction. Those questions were not asked and not considered because the problem was quite different.

We were trying to save a bank in British Columbia. The $200 million that the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation advanced to the parent company, the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank, was to it and not to its Canadian branch. It was made to it in order to allow it to keep the bank running, to keep the doors open, to keep the depositors' money, and to guarantee that bank long into the future. The CDIC felt that was a transaction well worth doing, as did the Government of Canada.

METHOD USED TO MAKE PAYMENT

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I am puzzled by that answer but, doubtless, either the Minister of Finance or the Minister of State for Finance might be able to make a Statement on Motions which would clarify it.

What we were told in the House by the Minister of Finance at the time was that the money was intended to enable the new Bank of Hongkong in Canada to increase its capital base and to make provision for possible loan losses. That does not seem to fit with the answer just given by the Minister.

My supplementary question is this. If, indeed, the Government wanted the assistance to the bank to be tax free, why not do it up front via a remission order and an Order in Council? Why was it necessary to use an offshore bank?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the guarantees made to the Canadian subsidiary were made by the offshore bank. It was the entity that was going to keep this bank going, not just this year, next year, but decades into the future. That is why the guarantee was structured that way.

The Hon. Member knows too, and I have heard her putting questions that have been perceptive about this in the standing committee, that banks and their tax structures, their allowances and provisions vary enormously from bank to bank and from jurisdiction to jurisdiction. Therefore those tax questions were not pursued.

GRANT MADE TO EDMONTON AMUSEMENT PARK PROJECT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a very serious question for the Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jelinek: It's about time.

Mr. Nystrom: It is about his Deputy Prime Minister's Fantasyland in Edmonton. The Auditor General stated in his report:

> In August 1985, notwithstanding the Cabinet decision, the DRIE Minister offered the company a $5 million contribution under IRDP.

It is also the understanding of the Auditor General that the Lougheed Government at the time did not approve of this.

What I want to ask the Prime Minister is this. Why did his Government and his Minister at that time offer this $5 million grant in defiance of the Cabinet and in defiance of the Peter Lougheed Government and, more important, perhaps in breach of the IRDP? It is a very serious allegation by the Auditor General. I think the country demands an answer by the Prime Minister of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. At least he did not accuse me of accepting a kickback, as his colleague the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap did.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Shame, and typical. He is learning from Broadbent.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, this is a very important initiative. I can assure the Hon. Member that his allegations are not founded. I can assure him that this is a matter that was considered. This particular contribution was made to support a very unique tourist attraction in Alberta. It is one of the most major tourist attractions in western Canada, if not in all of Canada. It deserves the support of the Government to expand and to diversify the economy. It was in that spirit that the support was given.

I would hope that the Hon. Member, rather than criticizing support for western initiatives and, in particular, diversified initiatives, and rather than condemning and ridiculing, would be supportive of them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REASON FOR FUNDING PROJECT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister just made a very, very serious statement. I would like to ask him to explain then why the Auditor General would have stated, and I quote again:

> Review by DRIE staff indicated that the project would proceed without federal funding. This made the project ineligible for funding.

It was also noted that the project began in the summer of 1984 and was reviewed in March of 1985 by a DRIE internal board that recommended against support under IRDP.

I wonder in light of this, and the recommendation by DRIE people themselves that it should not be funded, why was this project funded. Why were the rules broken? When the project was going ahead anyway, why spend taxpayers' money on something where we did not have to do it?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, because very simply it supports an initiative and an endeavour which we are trying to engage in in western Canada, namely, to diversify, broaden, and strengthen the economic base in western Canada. It is for that reason that we did it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PAYMENT MADE TO TRIPLE FIVE CORPORATION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is on the same subject. We are talking about a $5 million windfall, a gift, to the Triple Five Corporation, a corporation that has $6 billion in assets.

The Deputy Prime Minister has not provided this House and Canadians with an adequate rationale why $5 million of taxpayers' money was paid to the Triple Five Corporation. The principals of the Triple Five Corporation are not paupers.

Is it coincidence that this particular company obtained a $5 million windfall when in 1984 it contributed $25,000 to the Progressive Conservative Party and only $250 to the Liberal Party of Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, Members opposite are really scraping the bottom of the barrel.

What we have today is one of the best and most optimistic Auditor General's Reports that has been introduced in this House in 10 years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: I am quoting a Canadian Press story which states, "Still my report this year inclines to be one of cautious optimism, Dye says in what is clearly his most upbeat report since taking over as Auditor General in 1981".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RESULTS OF PAYMENT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): The Deputy Prime Minister is not answering the question.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Make a charge, John. Come on, show a little courage.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, the Regional Industrial Expansion Act requires that no DRIE assistance be provided if it is probable that a project will proceed without assistance.

My question to the Deputy Prime Minister is the following.

I can understand why the External Affairs Minister is somewhat uneasy in the circumstances, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What do you mean by that, John?

Mr. Caccia: Why are you so touchy? Calm down.

Mr. Nunziata: I wish to ask the Deputy Prime Minister what social or economic benefit did Canadians derive as a result of a $5 million gift to a corporation that has $6 billion in assets?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we know the position of the Liberal Party. It has traditionally been against western Canada for a long time, including the fact that they now have a Leader from western Canada who takes a position that is totally contrary to the interests of western Canada.

The Hon. Member just asked the question, what benefit is there. I can tell him. He should go out and visit the West Edmonton Mall and visit—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Prince Albert.

SALE OF BANK OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—AVOIDANCE OF INCOME TAXES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It also refers to the bail-out of the Bank of British Columbia. In his report the Auditor General states:

> I am obliged to conclude that a principal reason for these circuitous transactions, and in particular for making the $200 million payment off-shore, was to attempt to avoid making the payment subject to Canadian income taxes.

On that basis, does the Minister think that his Department is operating appropriately by assisting somebody to avoid income taxes in Canada?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think that question was dealt with previously in answer to the question of the Hon. Member for Trinity.

In the long run for Canada and for British Columbia, that particular transaction will result in a healthy, regionally based bank which will pay taxes for years and years.

PROCESS USED TO AVOID PAYMENT OF INCOME TAX

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): The issue here is not the bank, but the process by which a Department of the Government would assist in the avoidance of income taxes.

Can the Minister guarantee to the House and to the Canadian people that the taxpayers' will not be forced to pay another $100 million on this scam of sending money offshore and then back to Canada before it is used by the Bank of Hong Kong?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the funds that were forwarded by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation were funds that it raised through allocation of fees. These are not funds that come in the long run from the Consolidated Revenue Fund, therefore, it was not in the direct sense a taxpayer contribution whatsoever.

Mr. Hovdebo: But the taxes come to Canada.

ENVIRONMENT WEEK—BUDGET INCREASE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board, and it concerns the Auditor General's Report.

Can the President of the Treasury Board explain to us the following situation where the Minister of the Environment increased his budget for Environment Week from $35,000 to $1 million, gave a $650,000 untendered contract which resulted in a rake-off of $143,000 to a middleman who was supposed to do, of all things, rent hot-air balloons that never flew?

Could the President of the Treasury Board explain that blatant abuse and waste of the taxpayers' money?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, in this House the Hon. Member is the resident expert on hot air.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McMillan: In most cases I would defer to him on that subject, except that he is far off the mark in his question and in his comments.

An independent assessment was done for the Government of Canada after Environment Week in 1986 by a totally disinterested party, that in some respects was critical of the program. Those criticisms were taken into account in our planning for the 1987 program.

Mr. Boudria: Are you going to get the money back?

Mr. McMillan: That independent assessment stated, "In terms of financial planning, the $1 million proposed budget for Environment Week in 1986 was likely realistic in delivering a high standard of quality". It went on to state, "The Department should be commended for having the courage to attempt what it did".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the rules of this House, I am sure that you will ask that that report now be tabled for the Members of Parliament.

Now I know, Mr. Speaker, what the meaning of a "balloon payment" is.

My supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF ALLEGED INTERFERENCE BY DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister, also concerning the report of the Auditor General, why he interfered in the matter to offer a $5 million contribution to a company in his province that was not even eligible under any program while his fellow citizens elsewhere in the country and in his own province could not benefit from those programs even though they were eligible? What kind of double standard was used to reward his friends?

[English]

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Oh, oh! What a gutless one.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, again we see the contempt of the Hon. Members for western Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: Contempt for you.

Mr. Mazankowski: I have already responded—

Mr. Shields: Go phone Shirley Carr and get some direction.

Mr. Nystrom: Go phone Conrad Black.

Mr. Fulton: Take a deep breath, Jack, and increase your I.Q.

Mr. Speaker: It might occur to opposition Members that time is being used up.

The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member does not take seriously the importance of western Canadians, and the importance of the industries that are unique to western Canada.

• (1510)

I have tried to respond to previous questions, but I think what is important is to put this whole thing into context. Roughly 10 years ago the Auditor General of the day said: "I am deeply concerned that Parliament, indeed the Government, has lost or is close to losing control of the public purse".

He went on further to say: "The present state of financial management and control systems are significantly below acceptable standards of quality and effectiveness".

In the Auditor General's Report which was just tabled, he had the following to say at paragraph 1.15:

> With expenditures by our federal government exceeding $100 billion a year, protecting the public purse demands that the correct amounts be paid out to the intended recipients at the right time. A decade ago the Auditor General could provide no assurance that this was happening. Today, I can do so. The essential framework is in place. With some exceptions, financial controls are working well.

Some Hon. Members: Answer the question.

Mr. Mazankowski: I think that is a tribute to the Prime Minister and to—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill.

MINISTER'S POSITION ON FUNDING OF FANTASYLAND PROJECT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. I begin by saying that what is at issue is not the Deputy Prime Minister's commitment to western Canada, or anybody else's for that matter.

The fact of the matter is that the Auditor General says in respect of the Fantasyland project "this made the project ineligible for funding".

What is the Deputy Prime Minister saying? Is it that people who want to do things for western Canada are above the law, that people like the Deputy Prime Minister who want to do things for western Canada can do anything they like as long as they can stand up and justify it on the basis of their regional loyalties?

Surely western Canadians are interested in honesty and fairness in government as well as anybody else. I ask the Deputy Prime Minister to say why he thought he was above the law and funded a project which was ineligible for funding.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, there are national programs developed to assist and aid industry right across the country. The tourist industry is a very important industry to western Canada.

The initiative with which we are dealing here is a very important tourist attraction. It brings huge dollars into the western Canadian market. It is very supportive of jobs. It is one of the most significant job-creating activities in western Canada. It is an important industry. It is an important diversification element. It was on those bases that the project was approved.

REASON FOR FUNDING PROJECT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, no one is disputing what the Deputy Prime Minister is saying about the project. What we are asking is why the project was funded when it would have been a project which would have gone ahead anyway.

Is the Deputy Prime Minister saying that the end justifies the means, that the Deputy Prime Minister can do anything he likes as long as he can stand up and say that it was a good project? Surely that is not the way the people want the Government of Canada to be run.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, there is a cabinet process which is followed. The cabinet process in this case was followed, and I am sure the Hon. Member would be interested in that.

There was an application that was originally turned down. I think it called for some $20 million. That was considered. During the course of consideration we considered the importance of the project, the importance that it meant to economic development of western Canada, particularly the city of Edmonton which had a very, very high level of unemployment at that time, and the prospect of certain elements of this proposal being closed down. There were just and valid reasons for support. I have no hesitation at all in defending that here, in committee, in the country—anywhere at all. I will go to Edmonton and debate it with him any day of the week.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—PLAN TO REDUCE EMISSIONS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. The Minister has outlined a plan to reduce acid rain emissions in this country to some 50 per cent of their 1980 levels by the year 1994. Recently, however, the Americans have said that this plan is misleading and that in fact it will only reduce acid rain emissions by some 35 per cent as opposed to 50 per cent.

What is going on? Is the Minister trying to kid the troops?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): No, Mr. Speaker. It is true that the Canadian acid rain program is 90 per cent in place. It will slash acid-rain-causing emissions by 50 per cent by 1994 based on 1980 allowable figures.

The Hon. Member asks why we used allowable figures rather than actual figures as the basis of comparison between 1980 and 1994. The reason is that by definition a control program aimed at 1994 has to deal with allowable figures, those levels of emissions that will be allowed.

To calculate the percentage cut, we have used 1980 allowable figures so that we are comparing apples with apples, not apples with oranges.

In any event, the relevant point is that the whole control program is based on the threshold of acid loadings above which, scientists tell us, damage to the environment begins to occur. It is a sound program. It is much better than that in any other country of the world, including the United States from where some of the criticism is coming.

TELEFILM CANADA

CORPORATION'S FINANCIAL POSITION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, on October 19 the Minister of Communications received an urgent telex from independent producers and senior executives of public and private TV—from Global, CTV, CBC, TVA, Quatre Saisons, Radio Quebec, and TV Ontario—who are very concerned about the present operating policy and financial position of Telefilm. The Minister knows that that will have a very negative impact on the Canadian content of television in years to come.

As the Minister knows, Telefilm Canada halfway through its fiscal year has no more money and is offering promissory notes for April of next year instead of cash commitments for the programs of this year. Why has the Minister not advised the Canadian film and broadcast industry of what steps she as the Minister responsible is prepared to take and when she is going to meet with them, or is she planning to shut down Telefilm for the next six months, which would certainly please her American cousins?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note that the last full year the Liberal Government was in office the budget for Telefilm Canada was $16 million annually. This year the budget for Telefilm Canada is $114 million.

That is the difference between the importance that this Government attaches to the Canadian film industry and the importance that the previous Government attached to the film industry.

Telefilm Canada has said that it will honour all of its commitments. It has also moved—and I am very pleased to see that it has done so—to undertake a revamping of its cash flow methods. I would think that the Hon. Member would be pleased with that.

Obviously the growth of the film industry in the country has been great. I am pleased to see that one of the reasons it has been great is the funding which has come through Telefilm Canada.

CORPORATION'S ABILITY TO MEET COMMITMENTS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, this is only the third year that Telefilm is in financial crisis and, according to Mr. Jean Sirois, the reason for that crisis is that the Minister of Finance did such a "fine" job with the capital cost allowance in his provisions for next year's budget. That is what has brought about the crisis, not financial management, according to Mr. Sirois.

Did the Minister authorize Telefilm to issue promissory notes against next year's government allocations to Telefilm? Does this mean that they will be playing catch-up in next year's budget, or is the Minister standing here in the House and offering an increase over their present year's budget so that they can meet not only their commitments but their advance commitments for next year?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note that one day the Hon. Member comes into the House and says "You must not direct the cultural agencies. You must keep an arm's length relationship with the cultural agencies" while the next day she comes here and says "You must get into the running of Telefilm Canada". She cannot have it both ways.

Mrs. Finestone: You are the responsible Minister.

Miss MacDonald: I would like to assure the Hon. Member, in the words of the chairman of Telefilm Canada, that it will meet its commitments. Certainly it will have to extend those commitments over a period of time. I assure the Hon. Member that the Government will continue to back the Canadian film industry in many ways. I must say that she is obviously the spokesperson for the American film industry in Canada because she is the one who keeps raising their interests all the time.

Mr. Speaker: I think I should indicate to the House that there will be a question from the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso followed by a question from the Hon. Member for Vancouver East and that will close off Question Period.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON CONSUMERS

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Can the Minister tell us how increased competition in a larger variety of consumer products will benefit lower-income and ordinary Canadians as a result of the trade agreement?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that is one thing on which we do not have to wait for the fine print. The benefits to Canadian consumers as a result of the free trade agreement are tremendous. There is simply no losing whatever on the part of consumers. Any Member of the House concerned about consumers should be enthusiastically backing the agreement.

For example, in terms of low-income Canadians, the Economic Council of Canada has estimated—taking the most conservative of its estimates—that the average wage earner in Canada, based on 1983 average wages of $23,000, will have an extra $1,000 a year in spending power as a result of the free trade agreement. Everybody in the House should be applauding that.

NATIONAL PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Minister recently told the media that he is still studying the best way to present a child care proposal in the spirit of Meech Lake.

Will the Minister or will he not present the total child care plan at the First Ministers' meeting in November? Will he assure the House that these repeated delays in announcing a national child care program with objectives are not related to the Tory trade deal which allows U.S. rights of establishment for services in Canada? Does the Minister intend to allow profit-making U.S. child care chains to take over child care in Canada subsidized by Canadian taxpayers?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we have heard various allegations about the trade agreement and the fears expressed, but this one is about as good as any I have heard.

Respecting child care, the Government of Canada is committed to a child care program in the matters that have been discussed in Cabinet.

Ms. Mitchell: When?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): They will be put forward to my counterparts in the provinces at the appropriate time. Let me assure the Hon. Member that the program has nothing to do with a trade deal. We need to generate income in order that social programs can not only survive but can be expanded. We need that kind of growth and wealth. I wish that the Member would once and for all learn that Government does not generate wealth but people do.

TIMING OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, will there be a child care program announced with national objectives this year?

Mr. Blaikie: Yes or no?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): As I said to the Member earlier, Mr. Speaker, the Government will announce it at the appropriate time. I am sure she is as anxious about it as most of us are.

ALLEGED ACCUSATION BY MEMBER

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I think, during the course of the Question Period, I heard a comment from across the way coming from the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). Either advertently, inadvertently or maliciously he accused me of accepting a kickback. If I heard that in error, I would accept the Hon. Member's explanation. If he did say it, I would hope that he might reconsider the statement and perhaps withdraw it.

I have known the Hon. Member for a long time. I hold him in very high regard. I respect him as a very skilled and aggressive debater. From time to time all of us tend to overstate our case. I certainly would not hold it against him if he made such a statement in an uncontrolled outburst. I hope that in the spirit of the traditions, dignity and decorum of this place he will do the honourable thing.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I certainly want to make it very clear that I would not suggest for a moment that my hon. friend accepted any kickback. If there was any thought of saying that, I certainly would have withdrawn it. Again, there was never any intention and certainly I would not have suggested such a thing by my hon. friend.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields). Is it on the same point?

Mr. Shields: I would like to—

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Member. The question that I have asked is, is it on the same point?

Mr. Shields: No, it is not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I distinctly heard the Member hurl an accusation across the floor. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) said that the accusation was not directed at the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski).

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but the Chair is in some difficulty. The Deputy Prime Minister raised a question of privilege. In response, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) stood and withdrew completely any suggestion of impropriety and has done so in the best tradition of this place.

My difficulty here is that I am not sure what point the Hon. Member is raising. If it has anything to do with the point which the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister has made, I have to advise the Hon. Member that that issue is closed unless something extraordinary came out of the exchange.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I hope you will give me just a moment to explain my position. The accusation "kickback" was hurled across the floor. That is the most devastating accusation that one Member can make in this House against another.

Mr. Speaker: It may or may not be the most devastating accusation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: It often depends on exactly how it was put and in what context.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap said that he did not in any way mean to imply that the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister took a kickback in any of the senses that that would ordinarily apply. One cannot do more in this Chamber than have an apology as direct, unequivocal and as honourable as that. I must take the position that that closes off the issue.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I did not take down the exact language of the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) in his response to the point raised by my colleague, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski). I would appreciate knowing—I think the House would—whether the statement by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap was specific to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The reason I raise the question is that I very much believe I heard the Member from Kamloops—Shuswap shout twice across the floor—twice—the word "kickback" aimed at someone in this Government. If his explanation was designed to indicate that he was not referring to the Deputy Prime Minister but was designed to leave open the suggestion that he was referring to others, then I think further clarification is required and further action by him.

Mr. Speaker: This House has the highest regard for the right hon. gentleman and I have certainly listened carefully to the point which the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has made. Unless the Chair was completely mistaken, I did not take that suggestion, either directly or indirectly, from anything the Hon. Member of Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) said. The Hon. Member, who is well respected in this place, can of course comment. Perhaps he might make it easy for the Chair by making it absolutely clear that the Chair did not misinterpret what he had to say.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, because of the great respect I have for the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) and his position, always have had, and presumably always will have, I want to make it totally clear that I cannot imagine any scenario where I would ever accuse the Hon. Member of kickbacks. I did not in the past. I did not today. If there is any suggestion that I did, I want to withdraw it completely. I want to make it completely clear that I have the most respect for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Well, Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: That is enough!

Mr. Speaker: On the basis of what the Chair has heard, someone, and it may well have been the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) said "kickback". The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) was the member of the Government receiving the questions on a particular grant to an operation in the City of Edmonton. The question of privilege was raised by the Deputy Prime Minister, directed at the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap, and that Hon. Member has made it unequivocally clear that he is not accusing the Hon. Member of receiving a kickback.

If there is a second question of privilege, which may be what the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) is getting at, then it is the obligation of the Chair to hear it. However, I want it clearly understood that, at least in the view of the Chair, the first point raised by the Deputy Prime Minister is settled. If there is another point, I am obliged under the customs and rules of this place to hear it.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to prolong this. In order that all of us on this side of the House may determine whether or not there is a question of privilege we want to raise, I wonder if the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) would indicate exactly whom it was he was accusing of having received a kickback.

Mr. Riis: You know the rules, Joe.

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Secretary of State, who is well respected in this place and a skillful debater, will know that what he raised was not a point of order or question of privilege, but was clearly something which should be taken up in another way in another place. With great reluctance I have to indicate to him that he is out of order.

There are some other questions of privilege which the Chair must deal with, and I will hear first the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie).

EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR COMMITTEE STUDY OF CANADA-U.S. TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege has to do with questions raised in the House today. I see the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is here. I hope he will stay and give us a few minutes of his time to listen to this question of privilege.

It concerns, to use his words, the important national function which the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade could fulfil with respect to the trade agreement the Prime Minister has entered into with the U.S. Our contention is that our ability to do that, and therefore our privileges as Members of Parliament, is being severely inhibited by the fact that we will not have the text of the agreement the Prime Minister wants the committee to look at until either the end of November or early December. Given that the agreement supposedly has to be signed on January 2, that means that the committee would have maybe two weeks in which to look at the actual text of the agreement, discuss it, and travel across the country holding hearings.

This is not Question Period so I cannot ask this of the Prime Minister, but I say to you that our privileges as members of the committee, charged with the important national function which the Prime Minister mentioned in Question Period, are affected because we are being put in the position of having only seven to 14 days to fulfil that function. I say to you and to the Prime Minister through you that that is not in compliance with parliamentary reform. That is not parliamentary involvement. That is not a meaningful opportunity for public input. If the Prime Minister wants to live up to the commitments he made to this House in this respect, then the Government has to seek an extension of that January deadline so Members of Parliament can do the work they were elected to do.

Mr. Speaker: I may be able to assist Hon. Members by indicating to the Hon. Member that while he may very well have a complaint, it is centred around something that happened in committee. It may well be that the Hon. Member has a point in what he has said as well. That point has now been heard. I have to say to him that under the circumstances it is not a question of privilege.

I can only suggest, because I cannot give an order in this direction, that perhaps he and other members of the committee might meet to find some way to resolve the difficulties he has put forward. It may well be that Hon. Ministers, having heard the point raised, might be able to assist. In any event, it seems to the Chair that the committee can indeed do some work, although the complaint raised by the Hon. Member that before that work can be completed it would be certainly appropriate to have the document seems to be without question. In any event, it is not a question of privilege. It is a complaint. It has been heard in the House, and I hope Hon. Members will try to respond in some meaningful way.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I find myself in some difficulty. Earlier this morning there was an application under Standing Order 29 for an emergency debate. The opposition Party in that situation lays its complaint upon the Table and there is no place for the Government to reply. I would have appreciated the opportunity of having my hon. colleague, who has left the House, put the position. It is only fair that the position on this matter go on the record given that we now have a specious question of privilege.

The committee met yesterday with lots of notice. Committee members democratically decided, under parliamentary reform which never would have been dreamed of under the previous Liberal Government, according to Standing Order 96(2) to study the subject matter of the essence of the agreement reached between Canada and the U.S. The committee decided to study it. The committee decided it wanted to travel. The committee decided it could hear witnesses before seeing the agreement which my friends complain about. There is no question, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said, that once we have that agreement it will be laid upon the Table, as was the essence of the agreement itself the very day after it was signed.

It is absolute nonsense for the Opposition to get up and claim that something is being railroaded and ramrodded when all the committee is doing is studying. We have watched committees do that under parliamentary reform brought in by this Government time after time after time. I might say that it has been done on a lot of delicate subjects so far as the Government is concerned. Yet we have sat here under parliamentary reform and it has happened. Now, when it is a subject matter which the Government is proud of—

Some Hon. Members: Cool down, Doug.

Mr. Lewis: The Hon. Member who complains is an NDP Member. The NDP Premier of Manitoba will not even recall his Legislature to deal with this. The Liberals complain, while at the same time Liberal provincial cabinet Ministers are travelling around Ontario without the benefit of this agreement. This is nonsense.

• (1540)

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) is rising on the point of order in response to the response of the Hon. Minister of State. I will hear him for a moment.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the point of order which the Deputy House Leader has put forward, I think it should be brought to the attention of the House and you, Sir, that at the previous meeting of this particular committee, of which I am a member and which meeting I attended, it was indicated very clearly that the members did not wish to look at this agreement until the full text was available. There was a sudden flip-flop, which led to this change yesterday, which is so destructive to the possibility of Canadians hearing this agreement appropriately.

Mr. Speaker: All Hon. Members will know that on occasion the Chair exercises considerable latitude, in Members bring forward a problem that has something to do with the workings of a committee, especially because we are in a reform stage and the Chair has found that it is sometimes helpful for these problems to be aired. I think that the fact that they have been aired has sometimes led to their resolution. However, this is not the place to be debating an issue which ought properly to be debated in the committee. I ask Hon. Members to co-operate with the Chair and conclude this matter.

COMMITTEE STUDY OF CANADA-U.S. PRELIMINARY TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rose a few moments ago to be recognized on the same question, but since I had given notice this morning, a few minutes before the Hon. Member for the New Democratic Party, I wanted to raise before the House the issue of consideration in committee of the so-called preliminary document or agreement signed by Canada and the United States.

Mr. Speaker, with respect, I submit that since we have broadened the terms of reference to enable committees to examine practically anything they please or almost any subject that rises from the terms of reference of the department or agency they are considering, I think we have thereby also given the House the right to be informed about what is going on in committee. We all know that this Government and the U.S. Administration differ in their interpretation of the Agreement tabled on October 5 by the Prime Minister. Basically, we know there is no agreement on the interpretation of this document as read by the Government and as read by the U.S. Administration. Today, we are told that a committee of this House, which is an extension of the House and which has certain powers, of course, under Standing Order 96(2), namely to study, has decided to circumvent the democratic process, and that is the subject of my question of privilege: circumventing the democratic process of debate on a subject as important as a free trade agreement between Canada and the United States. I say circumvent, Mr. Speaker, because witnesses who will want to appear before the committee to express their view points will not have time to prepare themselves or draft briefs because the document is not available.

The Government does not want to give us the document. The Prime Minister promised on October 5, and I quote verbatim at page 9632:

> Mr. Speaker, I shall table the complete text of the Agreement as soon as the wording is finalized. It will then be referred to the appropriate committee of the House for analysis, study and debate.

I just heard the Minister of State (Treasury Board) (Mr. Lewis) inform the House that as soon as the Agreement is concluded and finalized in legal terms, we will have an opportunity to debate the whole question in committee.

I take it for granted that what the Government has just given us is a firm promise that the committee will resume the study it will be undertaking within a few days, of the preliminary report, or at least of the preliminary agreement tabled in this House on October 5.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that what this House wanted to achieve by extending the terms of reference of the committees was to give more power to Members of Parliament and to the Canadian people. I also submit that it is absolutely essential in a democracy to have the opportunity to express one's views.

When I look at the agenda of the committee, and I can read it to the House, I see that the committee will meet during the week of November 2 for public hearings, and on November 16, November 23 and November 30.

Mr. Speaker, if we accept the explanations of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and what has been reported by the media, the final and legal text of the agreement will be available only in late November at the earliest, and perhaps even in December, which would give the Canadian people and the Members of this House at best, and I emphasize "at best", one week to examine the final agreement and tell the Government what we think about it. I do not think that this House can accept such a thing. I find it unacceptable, Mr. Speaker, and a serious restriction of the ability of Members of Parliament to debate this issue, of Canadians to express their views and of the whole country to influence the actions of this Government.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) is rising on a point of order. Is it on the same issue?

Mr. Boudria: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the Hon. Member in a moment.

[Translation]

But first, it would probably be a good thing for the Chair to express its views about the intervention of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) because this is clearly the same question of privilege. Unfortunately, the arrangements made by the members of the committee may not be satisfactory for some Hon. Members. It also seems that it is necessary to have the final text of the document. However, the Chair does not consider that this constitutes grounds for a question of privilege.

It is obvious that those who have spoken today dealt with arrangements which some Hon. Members do not consider satisfactory.

I would suggest an immediate meeting with the members of the commmittee and perhaps also with . . . This is not an order of the Chair, but only a suggestion.

As for coming to an agreement on this matter, it would be impossible for the Chair this afternoon to reconcile the views of the various Members.

I therefore regret to say that this does not constitute a matter of privilege, but it is certainly a complaint. I hope that the Hon. Members will be able to settle the matter between themselves.

I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his intervention.

[English]

Perhaps I can say to the Hon. Minister of State that I am trying to make it very clear that, while there is a complaint, that complaint ought to be resolved within the committee. Unless something should develop which moves the difficulty clearly into a question of privilege, I do not think the Chair can add anything more to it.

As I said, I have only suggested, it is not my place to order. Perhaps some Hon. Members could get together and see if they can resolve the matter.

TABLING BY MINISTER OF DOCUMENT QUOTED

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, Citation 327 of Beauchesne states:

> A Minister of the Crown is not at liberty to read or quote from a dispatch or other state paper not before the House, unless he be prepared to lay it upon the Table.

Such an incident happened today when the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) quoted from a document.

The rules of the House, just as in a court of law, provide that the Minister is compelled to lay this document on the Table of the House. I rise to bring this to your attention and to ask that you ensure, Sir, that the document in question be tabled pursuant to the Standing Orders of the House of Commons.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, we will certainly refer to the "blues" and see whether or not the Hon. Minister referred to his notes or quoted from the document.

Mr. Boudria: He had it in his hands.

Mr. Lewis: I was not sitting beside him, as you obviously were, to see what was in his hands. We will see whether the Hon. Minister referred to his notes or in fact quoted from the text of the document. We will report back to the House.

ALLEGED INTERCEPTION OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) raised a question of privilege earlier and very courteously agreed with the Chair's suggestion that the matter be put over until the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) might be able to make a statement to the House or at least add information which would be helpful to the Chair.

I understand that the Solicitor General is here today, and I thank him for his courtesy in being prepared perhaps to help the Chair on at least some of the facts surrounding the incident.

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to the question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) yesterday in the House. I think it is important to understand the facts in their entirety with respect to this matter.

I am advised that the inmate involved is serving life for second degree murder. At the time he was the chairman of the inmate committee, a group nominated by the inmates to deal with prison officials in the resolution of day-to-day problems.

It is important, Mr. Speaker, also to know that on August 18 of this past summer there was a serious disturbance and fire at Joyceville Institution, during which extensive damage took place. Since that time, the atmosphere at the institution has been somewhat more volatile, given some operational problems due to the physical damage that took place and which is now under repair.

Given that background I will deal with the specific point raised by the Hon. Member in my absence. It is true that on Wednesday, October 21, 1987, the MP's assistant, and not the MP, phoned to speak to the inmate. He was informed that the inmate would phone him back at the number provided.

The inmate was called up from his cell to the living unit office where such calls are normally made, and the inmate used the telephone provided. It is important to note that this telephone and office used were clearly marked with the following advisory, as per correctional service regulations. There was a sticker on the phone and a sign in the room used, stating: "All activities, including conversations and telephone communications in this area, are subject to monitoring and may be recorded". The inmate proceeded to place his call to the Member's assistant, using this phone, and a correctional officer remained in this office with him while the call was taking place. I am advised that this is the usual practice.

During the course of the conversation, the inmate made certain remarks that the officer overheard, which caused her some serious concern, namely to the effect that "something heavy" would happen at the institution if inmate demands were not met. The officer reported the remarks to the warden, and after consultation with regional headquarters of the Canadian Correctional Service, the inmate was transferred to Millhaven in the normal course of events.

It is important to note that at no time was interception equipment used. It was simply the case of an officer overhearing the inmate's side of the conversation while he was speaking with the Member's assistant.

I trust, Mr. Speaker, that this background and additional information will assist you in arriving at a ruling on this matter.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) indicates a certain version of events that occurred on that particular day. In my respectful submission, the crux of the matter is whether or not an official of the Correctional Service of Canada was listening in on a conversation, regardless of the method of listening, whether by interception or overhearing a telephone conversation, with the full knowledge that that particular inmate was speaking either to an MP or an MP's assistant.

The Solicitor General seems to suggest that because the conversation did not take place between the inmate and an MP,myself in this particular case, the privilege does not extend to an MP's assistant. In my respectful submission, if a privilege attaches to a Member of Parliament, surely that privilege must also extend to staff working for that particular Member of Parliament.

I am sure, Your Honour, if you review the precedents in this particular matter and perhaps refer to some legal precedents with regard to solicitor-client privilege, you will find that the privilege attached to a solicitor extends to his or her office as well.

With regard to the other matter, whether or not my privileges were breached, I submit once again that my privileges were in fact breached because officials of the Correctional Service of Canada were well aware that this conversation was taking place between the inmate and my office. Whether or not there was a sticker on the phone or a sign in the room is irrelevant. The fact remains that the Correctional Service of Canada had full knowledge and, having that knowledge, one would have thought that perhaps the individuals involved, the warden and the guard involved, might have provided the inmate in question with another telephone in a different room, in full privacy, where they were not listening in to the conversation.

The Solicitor General indicates that the conversation was heard only one side. You are well aware of the Latin term audi alteram partem. As a result of information obtained from one side of the conversation, on the Solicitor General's admission, the Correctional Service of Canada proceeded to take punitive action against an inmate. In effect, the inmate, my constituent, was penalized when not given a proper opportunity. However, that is irrelevant from the point of view that the Correctional Service of Canada was listening in on the conversation.

This morning I received in my office a package of documents that were smuggled out of the Joyceville Penitentiary. One of the documents I received was a memorandum from the Warden of Joyceville to the inmate population.

As you know, the inmates were locked up, and are locked up as I am speaking. It is a serious situation at Joyceville. In any event I think it is important to read this memo. It is short, but will assist Your Honour in arriving at your decision. It is dated October 22, five days ago, and states:

> Some eight short days ago, I assumed the position of warden of this Institution. One of my first priorities at that time was to familiarize myself with the Institution, its policies and routines. I also met with the Inmate Committee on Monday, October 19, 1987, on an informal basis to get to know the individual committee members and to prepare for a more formal meeting, complete with agenda, which was to be held on Friday, October 23.
> The members of the Inmate Committee agreed to this arrangement. Unfortunately, Inmate Committee Chairman DeMaria, chose not to respect this agreement and, in fact, aired the concerns of the committee, which we are actively studying, to persons outside the Service. Such conduct on the part of an Inmate Committee Chairman is totally unacceptable to me. As a result, I have taken steps to relieve him of his position as Chairman and am transferring him to another institution.
> However, I am prepared to meet with the elected Secretary and range representatives as planned on Friday to deal seriously and appropriately with the proposed agenda items. Rest assured that I will give these important items my thorough and personal attention.

• (1600)

I think it is important that we put this whole situation in context. As the Solicitor General indicated, on August 18, there was what I refer to as a riot. The Solicitor General says it was a serious disturbance. Considerable damage was done. Shots were fired. People were injured. It seems to me that that type of activity constitutes a riot.

The Solicitor General indicates that since that time the atmosphere has become more volatile. But what does this new warden do, a warden of eight days at Joyceville Institution? Rather than trying to create an atmosphere of calm in the institution so as to be able to deal with the concerns of the inmate, he proceeds to listen in to a conversation between a very popular inmate, who was elected several weeks before—

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for his courtesy in breaking off his intervention at this point. As the Hon. Member knows, I am very reluctant to interfere. However, it seems to me there is a key point to the Hon. Member's application on a question of privilege and that is whether or not his privileges as a Member of Parliament have been breached as a consequence of the fact that someone in the prison staff listened to at least part of a conversation between an inmate and someone at the other end of a telephone who was from the Member's office. That is the issue I must determine.

What may have flowed from that may be of great importance, but it is not a matter with which the Speaker of the House of Commons can deal.

I listened to the Hon. Member for York South—Weston the other day and again today. I think I have the fact pattern as he has presented it, clearly and effectively. If I have not, if there is something missing, I would invite the Hon. Member perhaps to conclude with it in a moment or two.

I want to say to the Hon. Solicitor General that I appreciate his courtesy in coming back to the House on this matter. I have listened carefully to what has been said. I will look very carefully at everything that has been said. However, I think we cannot stray here on a point of privilege into other matters that may very well be the subject of a debate in this place but under another procedure.

I would ask the Hon. Member for York South—Weston, if he feels there is anything else the Chair needs to know, perhaps to wrap up his argument. I am taking the matter seriously and I am listening very carefully.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, in view of your concerns, I will conclude by referring once again to this memorandum. I repeat a particular sentence where the warden says: "Such conduct on the part of an Inmate Committee Chairman is totally unacceptable to me". In other words, what the warden is saying is that it is totally unacceptable for an inmate to speak to his Member of Parliament and the opposition critic for the Solicitor General.

In conclusion, the Chair would have to find, first, that in fact a telephone conversation was intercepted, regardless of the means, and I think the memorandum and the Solicitor General himself confirm the fact that an official was listening in on the conversation. That is agreed upon. Then, Sir, you would have to decide whether the circumstances are such that my privileges as a Member of Parliament have been breached, whether it was appropriate for that conversation to be listened to, and the punitive action taken as a result of that particular conversation.

It would be my respectful submission that in fact my privileges have been breached for the reasons I gave today and yesterday. Accordingly, I would ask you, Sir, to find that my privileges have been breached and provide me with the opportunity to move the necessary motion to refer this matter to the Committee on Elections and Privileges for a complete and thorough review and recommendation to the House.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for York South-Weston. I wonder if the Hon. Solicitor General could help the Chair on just one question? And I again thank the Hon. Solicitor General for his courtesy in coming back here immediately to help us. Can the Hon. Solicitor General advise me whether there was available a private telephone that this particular person could have used to discuss whatever it was he had to discuss or wished to discuss with his Member of Parliament? Was there any other form of telephone communication other than that available in the open room where apparently there were some members of staff?

Mr. Kelleher: No, Mr. Speaker, there was not, nor is there one anywhere in the prison. We do have a special room with a telephone that is, if I may use the phrase, clear or clean, when an inmate wishes to talk to his solicitor. We fully respect the solicitor-client privilege. When that is the object of the call, he is taken to that room. He is left alone and there is no such warning on the telephone. It is an absolutely clean and clear line to the solicitor.

This was not that type of call. As I understand it, it was not to the Hon. Member in his capacity as solicitor for the inmate but in his capacity as a Member of Parliament. For that reason, he was not taken to that other room.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the Hon. Solicitor General for assisting the Chair in this matter. I would say to the Hon. Member for York South-Weston that the Chair will give this matter very careful consideration.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House with respect to the business for tomorrow and the next day that we will be considering Bill C-46, which is an Act to revise the Royal Canadian Mint; Bill C-75, which is an agreement between Canada and Nova Scotia with respect to energy; and Bill C-76 and Bill C-77, which are in relation to the Emergency Preparedness Act and the War Measures Act.

We would reserve the right to change the order of those items in order to facilitate the business of the House. I have indicated to my hon. colleagues that in view of the earlier disruption of the business of the House for 15 minutes, and since there is no vote with respect to the opposition day topic, the Government would be prepared to extend the time allotted from 6 p.m. to 6.15 p.m. to allow for the time lost while we were outside.

I would also advise my hon. colleague, the House Leader of the New Democratic Party, with respect to the House Leaders' meeting which was scheduled for 3.30 p.m., that since we have been tied up and we all have other things to do, I think, in view of the events of the day and other events which are taking place, it might be more productive to have a House Leaders' meeting later this week.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Althouse:

That this House condemn the Government for negotiating a trade agreement with the United States that has failed to stop the predatory practices of the U.S. Export Enhancement Program, and that will;

(a) lead to the elimination of our two-price system for wheat;

(b) undermine the powers of the Canadian Wheat Board;

(c) reduce the growth of supply management marketing boards;

(d) reduce the growth opportunities for Canadian fruit and vegetable producers;

(e) adversely affect the Canadian wine and grape industry;

(f) provide little benefit for red meat producers; and

(g) Provide no new benefit for farmers purchasing farm equipment or other farm inputs.

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock p.m., the Hon. Member for Kamloops Shuswap (Mr. Riis) had the floor.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to pick up where I left off prior to Question Period. I think it might be appropriate to indicate that today we are in fact debating a motion put by the New Democratic Party regarding the free trade deal, that this House condemn the Government for negotiating a trade agreement with the United States that has failed to stop the predatory practices of the U.S. Export Enhancement Program which will provide little benefit for wheat producers, reduce the growth opportunities for Canadian fruit and vegetable producers and adversely affect the Canadian wine and grape industry. It will provide no new benefit for farmers purchasing farm equipment or other farm inputs. It will reduce the growth of supply management marketing boards. It will undermine the powers of the Canadian Wheat Board. Finally, it will lead to the elimination of our two-price system for wheat.

It was difficult to include all our concerns regarding the trade deal with the United States as it impinges on agriculture. But I believe that it can be summarized by looking at a number of examples. I will take a moment just to refer to one example, and there could be many. I chose this one because of the situation near my constituency where there has been quite a substantial effort over the last little while to develop a grape and wine industry.

The Okanagan Valley is one of the very few places in Canada, along with the Annapolis Valley, the Niagara Peninsula, a small area of Quebec, and other areas in the central interior of British Columbia, which have the climatic and soil conditions that make the growth of grapes and soft tree fruits possible. In some cases it is relatively marginal but, nevertheless, it is possible. Over the last little while the grape growers have developed vineyards on the hillsides of the Okanagan Valley and they have developed small cottage wineries. The large wineries have opened up facilities as well in the area to process both local grapes and imported grapes. They have developed a substantial wine industry.

Today, when these wine industries from across Canada compete internationally they are able to compete head to head with some of the major wineries of Spain, France, California and other areas. But I think it is fair to say that in western Canada this industry is still struggling in terms of establishing itself in both the domestic and international markets.

I had an opportunity just this morning to meet with a group of representatives of the Grape Growers Action Committee. The story that they put before us was a story of tragedy. As they reminded us, and as most Members of Parliament know, the Canadian grape and wine industry provides 16,000 jobs in this country, and many other jobs in related industries such as fertilizer, equipment, and the usual jobs of shopkeepers and others who service this particular community.

They also reminded us that farm gate receipts for last year for the grape crop were about $40 million. It was much more when the multiplier effect is considered because this money as cash flow snowballs into support industries such as financial institutions, chemical institutions, fertilizer institutions, brokers, shippers, labour, various personal expenses and, of course, taxes at the municipal, provincial, regional and federal levels. One could go on. Obviously, this is a sector of our agricultural community that has made a real dint in establishing new markets here and overseas.

The problem that they brought to our attention was that this free trade deal will wipe them out. It will destroy this industry. The pricing situation of mark-ups will be reduced as a result of this deal. They are convinced that their industry will be eliminated. I guess I cannot describe accurately or adequately what it was like to meet these representatives of the grape growing industry and to talk to one woman in particular. As a matter of fact, she said that her husband could not have joined her because he was simply so distressed and so angered and feeling such a sense of betrayal that he could not bring himself to come to meet with Members of Parliament. He and his family struggled to establish their grape growing vineyard. Now, through no fault of their own, the Government has decided to eliminate their farm. Something that he could not tolerate was coming to Ottawa and talking in a serious way to Members of Parliament. So his wife came, along with others in the Grape Growers Action Committee.

They explained that in parts of Canada these people had been growing grapes and had been on the land for four or five generations. Many of them came in the 1800s to the Niagara Peninsula area to establish their operations. To think that generation after generation after generation is now going to be eliminated as a way of life because of this free trade deal is something that I do not think we can tolerate. I do not think we can sit back and accept that. That is the presentation that they made. That is the fact of this matter. We are talking about thousands of people losing there livelihoods.

These people are special because, as you know, Madam Speaker, their operations are in a part of Canada where land use regulation is very extreme. These areas have been identified as some of the few good agricultural areas in Canada. The climatic and soil conditions are conducive to the development of soft tree fruits and related agricultural products. So land use regulations have been brought in to keep that land in that use. These people now find themselves in a situation in which the Government has decided that it will eliminate the grape growers and, to a large extent, all of the soft tree fruit industry as well as a result of this free trade deal. But these people are locked in to lands that are regulated or zoned for agricultural use only. So they cannot even sell their property. They cannot redevelop into other areas because of the land use regulations.

I can only describe it as a personal tragedy for myself to have to listen to person after person explain what this deal meant to them. I suspect that if we had an opportunity to sit down with agricultural groups from Nova Scotia clear through to Vancouver Island we would be seeing people and talking to people expressing that same view. They would express the fact that they and their forefathers had been on the land, in some cases for many generations, and they now find themselves in the intolerable and unacceptable position of having to abandon their livelihoods and their agricultural commitments.

Many aspects of this trade deal concern us. We were anticipating, of course, that the binding dispute settlement mechanism would have been brought in so that when countervails were levied against certain agricultural products we would have a neutral objective third party that would arbitrate and decide on that so-called aggravation. Such is not the case. The binding dispute settlement mechanism is no more than a review panel which will simply review whether or not American laws have been broken.

I think it is fair to say that if an American lobby group launches a countervail process it will ensure that the laws of the United States are being followed. That brings us little comfort because the laws of the United States are extremely protectionist. They have a built-in bias against imports coming into the United States from Canada. For those in the red meat industry, where we have always had free trade for all intents and purposes, they are still subject to the countervail threat. The Americans can look up into Canada now and identify what they determine to be subsidy programs for our beef producers and our red meat processors. If they determine that we are subsidizing, then of course they can launch a countervail. We were under the assumption that a free trade deal would have removed that continuous threat. We notice with hogs that the retention of the 4.4 cents per pound countervail stays in place against live hog shipments to the United States.

We were particularly alarmed when we found out the other day that the United States had broken the agreement already. This agreement is in place. It has been signed and both countries have agreed to adhere to the clauses in the agreement. The clause I refer to states that each party has agreed to take into account the export interest of the other Party in the use of any export subsidy on agricultural goods exported to third countries, recognizing that such subsidies may have prejudicial effects on the export interests of the other party.

What we found was that the United States, which has heavily subsidized its grain producers, has now taken initiatives to move into the grain markets that have traditionally been those of Canada: the Soviet Union, China, and to a certain extent India. Now that country is bringing in products, heavily subsidized, into those markets, which will result in one of two things. We will either lose sales to those traditional areas, or in order to compete we will have to drop the price so much that it will make the whole thing totally uneconomical. Those will be the two choices. Either way the Americans have broken the agreement.

When this was raised in the House with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) he stated that he was going to have a chat with the Secretary of State for the United States when he met with him on the weekend. Having a "chat" is little comfort to those thousands and thousands of grain producers who see the United States breaking the agreement that we signed only a few days ago.

I found it interesting reading the University of Maryland study which looked at this particular trade arrangement in relation to agriculture. They determined that, as a result of this trade deal, it would be very good for United States farmers. As a matter of fact, they stated that it would be excellent for United States farmers because those farmers will now gain access for fruit, vegetables, chicken, turkey, eggs, and many other products, where, until this point, they had been cut off through border restrictions of one type or another. They identified as many as 355,000 jobs in the United States that may be preserved or expanded as a result. Again, that brings us little comfort in Canada.

We have heard that the United States intends to subsidize its agricultural sector. Last year the United States Export Enhancement Program, and other subsidies for agriculture, amounted to $1.5 billion. That is a great deal of money, and in many areas that made it difficult for our exporters to compete with the United States. Consequently, we were hoping that those farm subsidies would be reduced. To our dismay, we have found that not only have they been increased, but they have been significantly increased. This coming year the United States will subsidize its agricultural sector to the tune of $4 billion. If we think that in the past we have had difficulty competing with the United States in agriculture, we have not seen anything yet. Those heavily subsidized products will cause us trouble in the market-place.

The supply management practices that will be allowed to continue in Canada as a result of this agreement raise a concern, because the products from the supply management systems will be sold to the processing industries. The processing industries will also be able to purchase more products from the United States. Of course, the United States will be selling them much cheaper than we do in Canada. We have identified the various areas, and I do not have to repeat the list, but they include areas such as chicken, turkey, shelled, processed and powdered eggs, and so on. Those products will now be allowed into Canada on an increased basis to compete with our producers. Those products will be allowed in at lower rates because of cheaper costs to do business in the United States. That will cause our farmers problems.

Unfortunately, my time has almost lapsed, and there are many other items that one ought to mention. In summary, as I stated at the outset, in our estimation, this deal with the United States that includes agriculture has been the deciding factor as to the future of the family farm in Canada. All parliamentarians, particularly those who represent rural or semi-rural areas, realized that we reached a point where the Government of Canada had to decide whether we would support our farmers in an up-front real manner in terms of making a commitment not only to the farm but to the farm family and the small towns and the rural parts of Canada, or whether we were going to abandon that and allow agri-business or corporate agriculture to come in by and large initiated from the United States.

Unfortunately, the time has now come and it would appear that the Government has made its decision. The jury has indicated its decision which seems to me has been very clearly against the family farm in favour of corporate agriculture and, much to my chagrin, corporate agriculture sponsored, financed, and controlled largely from the United States. It is a sad day for Canadian agriculture and Canada.

Mr. Manly: I was interested in the remarks of the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) on the fledgling wine industry in his constituency. That is also something that is happening in the Cowichan Valley. It causes me concern as we see this Mulroney trade deal being pushed through. It will destroy or make very difficult the possibility of developing that industry in different parts of Canada.

Like most Members of this House, I enjoy drinking wine from a wide variety of places, including British Columbia, Ontario, and Europe. It is important that we try to develop our own industry. We do not need to be exclusive devotees of one particular part of the country and state that we will only drink wine from British Columbia or from the Niagara Peninsula, but it is an important part of Canada's development.

I was interested in the comments of Jeffrey Simpson in The Globe and Mail today where he stated:

> The wine issue, peripheral in itself to the free trade debate, nevertheless illustrates the nibble-nibble strategy of free trade opponents. Throughout the country, there are groups whose interests will be adversely affected by the deal. On behalf of each of these we can expect free trade opponents to make a special appeal.

The implication is that the wine industry is not that important in the over-all picture of the trade deal that we are talking about. The Hon. Member pointed out that we are talking about 16,000 jobs. I would like him to comment on those 16,000 jobs, and how they all add up to what the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) talked about, a possible loss of 500,000 jobs.

I would be interested in hearing the Hon. Member's comments on the relationship of those 16,000 jobs to the total 500,000 jobs that could be lost through this deal.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, it is always a pleasure to receive a thoughtful question from the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly). As usual, he has raised a critical point in this discussion. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) indicated both outside and inside the House that, when the final analysis is done, there could be a loss in Canada of up to 500,000 jobs. The Minister stated that there was a possibility it could be as high as 500,000 jobs, although it might be less.

Today we are focusing our attention on the agricultural sector. It is unfortunate that we have to rely only on the opposition Parties to enable debate to take place in the House. We decided that we will use whatever days are available to debate it here, since the Government has indicated not much interest in debating it on the floor of the House, at least at this stage.

My friend asks if those 16,000 jobs are simply part of a pattern leading up to the half million job losses. I wish to say to him that the 16,000 jobs that will be lost in the grape and wine sector are not even the whole picture. There are two other critical aspects. Many other jobs will be lost. If 16,000 jobs are lost in the grape and wine sector, to a certain extent related jobs will also be lost, for example, the equipment that is used, the services and supplies required, and the jobs of other individuals such as shopkeepers and professionals like dentists, teachers, and nurses who are associated with that healthy, viable economy in the Niagara Peninsula.

Perhaps what is more important is the point made by my hon. friend that in his area of British Columbia, Vancouver Island, a fledgling wine industry is getting started. One could make the same claim for other parts of Canada, specifically, the Province of Quebec. That province has certain areas where the climatic and soil conditions are adequate to develop a vineyard industry, and it is just beginning. As we are seeing this new industry beginning to develop across Canada, it is being put on the chopping block, its head hacked off, and its growth stopped. It is that conscious decision to cut off the ability of this new industry to grow and expand that we find very disappointing. Not only do we lose 16,000 jobs directly, but other jobs are lost that are indirectly related to the grape and wine industry, plus the future jobs that will now not be there. This is an industry that will not be permitted to expand and grow because of the unfair competition that it will be receiving from the United States.

The Hon. Member has raised a very important point. Unfortunately, we do not have the opportunity, because time does not permit it, to go through every sector of the agricultural community and every other sector which will be hit by the trade deal between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and President Reagan. Perhaps, if time permits, we will have an opportunity to raise those points in another forum.

Mr. Caldwell: Madam Speaker, I am pleased to enter into the debate because I see that once again the opposition Parties are using the same tactics they have been using for the past several months, that is, to scare the daylights out of Canadians. This time they are trying to scare the farming community about what is entailed in the bilateral agreement.

They mentioned that it reduced the growth of supply management marketing boards. However, the Hon. Member did not point out how they would do that because it simply is not true. He talked about the numbers of chickens, turkeys, and eggs which will flow into Canada because of the agreement. It was simply not true, and he knows that. That is why they will not get into the detail of the agreement. The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) also knows that, if he understands agriculture and understands how the supply management system in the country works. I am not sure that they know how it works; I do not think they know how it works.

They also talked about reduced growth in opportunities for Canadian fruit and vegetable producers. How will this happen? I do not know how it will happen. Canada has been a leader in the export of fruit and vegetables, and we will continue that.

I have a company located in my particular riding, the H. J. Heinz Company, which has been selling ketchup to the States for the last number of years. It is increasing that market because it is producing a premium product, and it will continue to do so despite the reduction of tariffs.

We also have the greenhouse industry in my particular area. It has opened up a whole new market. Rather than shipping to Montreal and Toronto, it will now be able to ship to Detroit, Chicago, and such areas duty-free. They are looking at that market and saying, "We are going to go for it".

The Hon. Member is not looking at the future of agriculture. Agriculture will change whether or not we like it. Ten years ago producers in my riding were shipping tomatoes in bushel baskets. Today they take them in huge wagons and water takes them out into the plant. That is what the difference is.

Ten years ago Members of the House of Commons did not know what a greenhouse cucumber looked like, these English cucumbers. People thought they were zucchini. Millions of dollars in export sales are now taking place in that particular area.

The Hon. Member says that we are going to lose everything. He talked about his wine industry. I have a wine industry in my particular area. The producers of those wines—and I will give them a plug: Pelee Island wines, Charal wines, and Colio wines—have been doing very well. They are looking optimistically at shipping wine into the Detroit-Chicago market.

Mr. Langdon: Oh, come on!

Mr. Caldwell: The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor does not understand that. He wants to close the walls around Canada and never mind our $2.7 billion in exports every year.

The Hon. Member also mentioned hogs and that the agreement would provide little benefit for red meat producers. What utter nonsense. Thirty per cent of our pork production now goes to the United States, some $676 million worth of hogs last year. Do we not want access to that market, or do we once again close up the walls and produce for ourselves? Do we want to have Ontario producers cut back by 30 per cent? Do we want to put the people of Quebec who process this meat out of work or out of business?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but the time for questions and comments has expired, although I will give a minute or so to the other side—

Mr. St. Germain: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Could we seek unanimous consent of the House to continue with the question and answer portion with the Hon. Member?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Had the Hon. Member ended his intervention?

Mr. Caldwell: Well, Madam Speaker—

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think it is more than appropriate to continue if that is the wish of Hon. Members. Certainly I am prepared to do so. However, I like to think of it as a question and answer period, not as a speech. If the Hon. Member wants to give a speech, presumably he will have an opportunity to do so. Let us make it a question and answer period so that we can have some dialogue back and forth.

Mr. Caldwell: Madam Speaker, I was only responding to some of the items which the Hon. Member raised. Because he left so many unanswered questions, I thought I had to fill in the blanks. I was not too sure whether he was aware of what it would do.

I did not see anything in the particular agreement which would back up any of the facts they have put forth. That was the point I was trying to make.

Where does he find the facts that say that it will reduce the growth of supply management marketing boards? Where does it say that in the agreement? Where does it say that it will adversely affect red meat producers? Where does it say that? I do not see where it says that in the agreement.

I ask him to point out in detail where these things are in the agreement, for example, that it will reduce the growth of supply management marketing boards? Where does it say that in the agreement? On what page?

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I have a great deal of respect for my hon. friend. He knows that we do not have an agreement before us. There is no agreement.

He asks where these things are in the agreement. He has not seen the agreement. Nobody has seen the agreement. I do not think, with all due respect, Madam Speaker, that even you have seen the agreement. That is what we are trying to say is part of the problem.

How are we to have an informed, intelligent debate, particularly across the country, and hear from the people who are directly involved, before we have an opportunity to view the agreement?

The question my hon. friend puts is where I get my information from. We attended briefing sessions. It is not in the document, which just contains some vague reference to the whole deal. There were briefing sessions by various sectors to inform Members of Parliament. We asked those questions, and representatives of the Government at government-sponsored hearings told us these things. That is where we got the information from.

My hon. friend also asked where those things were said in the agreement. They were not said in the agreement, and that is the precise point. What will the Government take across the country to hold hearings in Kent County or throughout the Niagara Peninsula on an agreement which not a single Canadian has ever seen? In a sense, I guess I am asking a question of my hon. friend.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE RAISED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Lesick)—Agriculture—Edmonton food production inspection plant laboratory; the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper)—Canada Post Corporation—Meeting protesting plans for future service/Women—position of Minister; the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Nuclear energy—Reported design flaws in United States Perry nuclear generating station.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Althouse:

That this House condemn the government for negotiating a trade agreement with the United States that has failed to stop the predatory practices of the U.S. Export Enhancement Program, and that will;

(a) lead to the elimination of our two-price system for wheat;

(b) undermine the powers of the Canadian Wheat Board;

(c) reduce the growth of supply management marketing boards;

(d) reduce the growth opportunities for Canadian fruit and vegetable producers;

(e) adversely affect the Canadian wine and grape industry;

(f) provide little benefit for red meat producers; and

(g) provide no new benefit for farmers purchasing farm equipment or other farm inputs.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate—

Mr. St. Germain: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have a question for the Hon. Member, and we had unanimous consent of the House to continue with the question period.

Mr. Boudria: No, no. It was for them.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): There was unanimous consent to continue the exchange between the Hon. Member for Essex—Kent (Mr. Caldwell) and the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). There does not seem to be consent to continue now, so I think we should resume debate.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of State (Agriculture)): Madam Speaker, there is no doubt that during the few minutes my colleague from Essex—Kent (Mr. Caldwell) spoke he demonstrated his knowledge of the agricultural sector, and on a sector by sector basis we are in a position to appreciate the obvious benefits flowing from such an agreement. Quoting figures right and left or resorting to scare tactics will not prove anything, such an approach can only be a source of concern for Canada's agricultural community. A closer look at the censure motion sponsored by our distinguished colleagues in the Opposition shows that most of their grievances about the free trade agreement can be traced back to their erroneous interpretation of the documents we have before us, Madam Speaker.

There is no doubt in my mind that the benefits of this agreement are unparalleled. As a matter of fact, the agreement negotiated with our main trading partner gives us access to the American market and unveils challenging prospects for the coming century. This has to be reassuring, if only because over the past two years the Canadian agricultural community has grown ever more concerned about the protectionist stance of our neighbours to the south. I suggest it was to some extent unanimously felt that we had to do something. We had to take some concrete action to get out of the status quo. Without this Free Trade Agreement, we had to expect the possible narrowing of our outlets in our most important market. Because of this agreement, Canada will get a more secure and a duty free access to the American market for our agricultural exports. That is undeniably a step forward.

Madam Speaker, I just cannot understand the sort of stubbornness with which our colleagues are trying to denigrate this agreement. Should we conclude that, as Members of the Opposition parties, they have chosen to oppose at any cost a major policy of this Government which, need I emphasize it, has nothing to do with party politics. Madam Speaker, we are taking up a challenge which will make it possible for our children and for Canadians to enter at full speed in the 21st century, to stand up, without hiding behind curtains, and to show that we are quite able to trade with the rest of the world, without any concern.

These bilateral negotiations, need I emphasize it, have been conducted brilliantly. The resulting agreement will go down in history as one of the most positive and most significant events for a trading nation such as Canada. These negotiations were not carried out in secret, Madam Speaker. And all the while they lasted, numerous committees and subcommittees advised our negotiators on the views held by Canadians on each of the issues on the table. This should not be a surprise to anyone. It is consistent with this Government's disposition over the past three years to consult the Canadians for whom we are working. I think we should not feel embarrassed about that—we had consultations with people. There was a sub-committee on agriculture, and people from every region, every industry, processors, producers, everyone was consulted. Everyone could make his contribution to help negotiators at the table.

Courage and political vision were needed to admit that most industries in our farming economy could not survive alone, without external trade. And since the United States are by far our major customer, buying a third of our total agri-food exports, it would have been stupid not to take that golden opportunity, free trade. We are often told by the Opposition: Let us forget about negotiations with the Americans, let us negotiate at the GATT level. As if it were easier to agree with 94 nations scattered over all the continents, with different needs and goals, when we have a customer next door with whom we have close affinities and with whom we are already trading!

An. Hon. Member: Our natural market!

Mr. Blais: —our natural market close by. They tell us: No, do not negotiate, forget about that. Let us not put all our eggs in one basket, as I heard. That is ridiculous, Madam Speaker. We owe our people and our producers in Canada to be secure, to maintain what we already have acquired. That is important, and we owe it to our producers. And in the face of the growing threat of tariff and non-tariff barriers, non only in the United States but elsewhere in the world, faced with that wind of protectionism that was blowing, we had to move, we had to do something. We could not stay still and wait for new protectionist moves falling on us every six months. It takes courage and political vision to act that way. That is a responsible government, Madam Speaker.

I think we at last have the possibility to put an end to certain protectionist practices which have been disastrous in the past, disrupted trade and caused severe problems to many areas of our economy, especially agriculture. Canada simply could no longer afford the luxury of maintaining the status quo.

Concerning some of the objections contained in the motion, I think, Madam Speaker, that no one wants to undermine the powers of national marketing boards. The new free trade agreement, as my colleague from Essex—Kent mentioned earlier, does not undermine these boards or the supply management system which is the reason why they exist. It would be foolish, Madam Speaker, to abandon a system whose value and efficiency are recognized worldwide. Last year only, delegations from over twenty countries came to Canada to see how our marketing system works. It is a model for every one. This proven marketing system does not put any pressure on world surpluses in the agri-food area. It is a system based on discipline.

As my colleague, the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) said this week or last week about our negotiations with GATT, we are trying, as a country, to bring our trading partners and other countries working in the agricultural field to think of where we are going with this international subsidy war. Canada was the second country, out of 94, to express its intentions internationally in the agricultural field. We are leading other countries and people know where we are going. We are saying: Stop this war. But this is no reason to reject the proven system we have in Canada, a system we will never abandon unless we can replace it with a better one. We owe this to our Canadian agricultural producers who worked hard for years to build a system that works.

And it is being irresponsible for people outside the House and on the Opposition side to try to have the producers believe that we are putting that system at stake. That is not the case at all, Madam Speaker. And we owe it to Canadian producers themselves. If other marketing agencies were ever to be created in other sectors . . . and there is a feasibility study being conducted currently on a possible marketing agency for potatoe producers. We will realize once we get that report and give it due consideration that this Government by no means intends to give up its responsibilities in this area. And if there is a demand for a marketing board for hogs, for instance, the Government will then proceed. Nothing in this Accord prevents us from taking such an action. We will let the canadian agricultural producers decide what kind of agriculture they want. These are the terms of this agreement: Canadian agriculture is not tied up. It's up to us to preserve the systems that make up the very basis of our agriculture.

Another concern expressed in the motion is that Canadian fruit and vegetable producers would suffer from reduced growth of their industry. I have to point out, Madam Speaker, that on the contrary some products from the horticultural sector could greatly benefit from increased export opportunities, particularly to the northeastern United States. This could be the case with potatoes, cabbage, carrots and onions. I have already met personnally with people in the fruit and vegetable sector, and they are much aware of that. Given the importance of that sector in Canada, special provisions have been negotiated. Present tariffs will be gradually eliminated, as in other sectors, over a 10 year period.

However, over a period of twenty years, both countries will have the right to temporarily restore present tariffs if export prices fall to abnormal levels. In other words, if an increase in fresh fruit and vegetable imports from the U.S. drives down Canadian prices, we will be able to re-establish our seasonal tariffs. This a safeguard that we have. We understand that our climate creates difficulties. We are fully aware of this fact. But we also understand that this sector should be dynamic on its own. Over the years, Madam Speaker, Canadian agricultural producers have always adjusted to market pressures both at home and internationally. During the past few years, the federal Government has constantly done everything so Canadian producers could get the kind of system they want in Canada. We saw this, for instance, when a tripartite stabilization system was introduced. Discussions had been going on for ten or fifteen years in this country.

Our Government managed to get a consensus, with patience and through consultation, not with the kind of unbending and unilateral approach we had seen for twenty years before that. Not that way. Our Government consults. Our Government acknowledges the regional differences in this country. Our Government realizes that people have the right to speak and express their opinions.

In fact, Madam Speaker, the Agreement does not prevent Canada from continuing to prohibit consignment imports and monitoring shipments of goods in non-standardized bulk containers on international and interprovincial markets.

Furthermore, the assertion that red meat producers benefit very little under the Agreement is surprising, to say the least. The Hon. Member for Essex—Kent said as much a while ago. One would have to be blind not to see the obvious advantage to us of opening up our markets in the red meat industry. Is it because they don't understand the new mechanisms that have been introduced? I don't know to what extent they understand our testing system, but I think it seems pretty straightforward.

The Canadian red meat industry, whose main market is the United States, will benefit from the elimination of tariffs. Both countries have also agreed to exempt each other from restrictions on cattle imports. The advantages of a North American market in this sector are obvious. In the beef sector, Canadian beef producers will benefit from the exemption granted to Canada under the provisions of the U.S. Meat Import Law. Since the United States is by far the most important market for Canadian beef—our exports totalled about $400 million in 1986 alone—we had to obtain more secure access to this market. This is a very important part of the Agreement for Canada, and especially for Western Canada. We all know, and we saw this again today, what a poor opinion the Opposition has of the people in Western Canada. However, this Government recognizes the distinctiveness of all our regions and their contribution to this country. That is the difference. That is why this Government is a truly national Government. And we will continue to make it so.

And now, what about Canadian hog producers? Our exports of hogs, pork and pork products are worth $630 million. If we add beef as well, we get a total of over $1 billion. Need I remind Hon. Members of the recent disruption caused by several American states when they wrongfully resorted to technicalities to set up trade barriers? Remember chloramphenicol! I think the present attitude in our negotiations is such that we should be able to avoid further non-tariff barriers.

Madam Speaker, it would be to the net advantage of the Canadian red meat sector to have freer and more extensive access to a market of 235 million consumers. The Canadian Cattlemen's Association, the Canadian Pork Council and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture have had some very positive things to say in this respect. I think that a quick look at the agreement concluded in the agricultural sector will show that we have kept our word.

An Hon. Member: Certainly not!

Mr. Blais: We have always said, and last week the president of the Fédération des producteurs de lait du Québec, who has been in the industry for a long time, told me that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) had met his commitments. He always promised to maintain our marketing boards, while making it clear that agriculture was being discussed at the negotiating table. When we know that as part of the negotiations, a sub-committee on agriculture was meeting to discuss agricultural issues, I don't know by what stretch of the imagination anyone could say that agriculture was not on the table.

It is obvious that agriculture was discussed. As one out of every three hogs produced in Canada is sold in the United States, agriculture must obviously be included in any trade negotiations with our neighbours to the south. It is obvious! I therefore believe that we have kept our commitments in this regard by maintaining our marketinig boards. We shall be reviewing this whole sector and if there are any difficulties in the future because of the lower tariffs, we shall certainly deal with them. The various national and provincial federations have already begun consultations with us. My colleague the Minister of Agriculture and myself met the Dairy Farmers of Canada last week. We simply discussed the situation calmly, contrary to what we have seen here these last few weeks. I believe that, together, we can continue to build a healthy agricultural sector in Canada, maintain our existing markets and increase them in the United States, which will benefit all Canadians.

This is a historic agreement. Because of our commitment to Canadian farmers, we have no right to reject it and we have no right to let all kinds of false and even mendacious reports go unchallenged. All sorts of things have been said; for instance, that we might lose 80 per cent of our poultry production. This is pure fantasy.

We have kept our import quotas in that sector at the same level as in the last five years. Generally speaking, we have kept our commitments.

You in the Opposition should join with us to ensure that Canada will—

Mr. Boudria: I can rise on a point of order if you wish.

Mr. Blais: —you still have comments to make. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) could perhaps—

An Hon. Member: You should rise on a point of order.

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, I would like to conclude—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise on a point of order to invite the Minister not to address the members of the opposition as "you". I would like to remind the House, as I am sure that you wanted to do yourself, Madam Speaker, that only the Chair can be addressed as "you". I was not going to raise this point, but I was urged to do it and I am happy to comply.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The message is clear and the Hon. Minister of State for Agriculture (Mr. Blais) may now conclude.

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, I shall simply conclude by saying that I believe this historic agreement to be good for Canada and for Canadian farm producers. We have no choice. We owe it to our farm producers and to the Canadian population to support this agreement. It is a historic agreement and we should stop playing petty political games. I believe that we should now cooperate to help the 25 million Canadians who deserve this agreement.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Madam Speaker, it is very interesting to hear the Minister. He spoke about many farm groups, but not about the Quebec group, the Union des producteurs agricoles. In fact, the UPA has decided that this is a bad agreement and that it does not do much for farmers.

I also believe that many of the things that the Minister said show why this group, which represents all Quebec farmers. decided to be part of the coalition against free trade in our country. For instance, the Minister talked about access to the United States market. But when we examine the agreement itself, we find it does not provide for the sure access the Government mentioned earlier. That is one thing.

• (1700)

Second, the Minister spoke about fruits and vegetables. The changes the agreement brings for fruit and vegetable growers create enormous problems for them. The Minister spoke of a protection system that might exist. But it will not longer be there if competition between Canada and the United States is removed, as we see now. The competition will exist and will continue without duties, a very precarious situation for Quebec farmers.

That is why that group speaking on behalf of all Quebec farmers declared this is a bad agreement.

[English]

The Hon. Minister has talked about pork producers—of which there are many in Essex County—gaining tremendously from this agreement. In fact, as the Minister knows, pork producers will continue to face the present countervail duty. They will also face the possibility of future countervail decisions. There is no possibility of avoiding that. Appeals against any future countervails will consider U.S. law only.

From my reading of the agreement it certainly seems that the United States Government is only committed to using its "best efforts" to prevent the States individually from taking actions which are against the arrangement itself. In short, it will still be possible for any individual American state to take action against any of our agricultural exports, including pork about which the Minister spoke. I ask the Minister to comment on that and the other points which I have raised.

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, I can see there will be a sharp decline in the extent of the knowledge my colleague, and particularly his Party, have of Quebec. Yesterday they lost the only anchorman they had in Quebec and already their lack of knowledge about the Quebec situation is readily apparent.

An Hon. Member: It shows already!

Mr. Blais: It shows already, we can already see how far behind they are with respect to their awareness of Quebec agricultural problems. There is precious little the NDP can teach me about Quebec's agricultural community. Earlier this morning, Madam Speaker, I attended a regional UPA meeting in Beauce where I met six or so groups from every corner of the province, local agricultural producers right where they live.

An Hon. Member: Jacques Proulx!

Mr. Blais: Yes, I met Mr. Jacques Proulx as well.

An Hon. Member: What did he say?

Mr. Blais: It is quite obvious that when my colleague brings up the name of the President of the Union des producteurs agricoles or refers to the coalition against free trade with Mrs. Shirley Carr, with the Canadian Auto Workers, of course you are speaking for all of them. I listened very attentively to my colleague. One thing for sure is that I saw—you demonstrated this yesterday—how you let people have their say in your own Party. But I am not in your Party. When I have the floor, let me speak.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I would appreciate it if the Minister were to direct his remarks to the Chair, not to his colleagues in the House. Had the Minister concluded his remarks?

The Minister has the floor.

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, I am not used to having people speak at the same time as I do. That is why. I apologize.

As to the question of access to the American market raised a moment ago by my colleague, I would suggest that the positive step we took when signing the agreement shows indeed that we are going to reverse the protectionist process which was gaining ground as weeks and months went by. As I see it, it was a question of principle to convince our neighbours to say: This trench warfare in various sectors has to stop. I think access is guaranteed under the agreement. That is intrinsic, that transpires from the agreement, Madam Speaker.

And whenever he speaks about the pork industry, he forgets to say that the Canadian Pork Council agrees with this Agreement, Madam Speaker, and I do not see why, in those conditions, the issue is being raised. As regards any possible further countervail action, I fail to understand why that party keeps on claiming that that agreement jeopardizes our sovereignty, and at the same time, as soon as there is some evidence that either country can preserve its sovereignty and the ability to act through its existing laws and regulations, some people say: You did nothing, and now you don't solve the problem. Both countries have preserved their sovereignty, Madam Speaker. This is one fundamental issue. We succeeded in making a progressive deal for both parties, while preserving national sovereignty on both sides of the border. Together in the same direction, that is a good way of describing that deal, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Debate. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to rise today in this debate on the free trade Agreement and its possible impact on Canadian agriculture. As you know, our colleagues in this House have introduced today that non-confidence motion, whereby they claim that the free trade Agreement will first lead to the elimination of our two-price system for wheat and, second, undermine the powers of the Canadian Wheat Board, reduce the growth of supply management marketing boards, as well as the growth opportunities for Canadian fruit and vegetable producers.

Madam Speaker, I have looked at this motion with great interest and I must say that I agree with most of the issues that it raises. I was recently reading an article in a newspaper which said that this free trade deal was going to put Canadian agriculture through the meat grinder. I think this term best describes how my constituents feel about this deal. I know the Minister intends to visit my constituency shortly and that we will both participate in a debate on free trade. At least, this is the information I have. The Minister will probably indicate his support for the deal and, as you surely have guessed, Madam Speaker, I intend to say to my constituents—and they already know it—that this deal is bad for Canadian agriculture.

The Minister said earlier that many vegetable growers were happy with the free trade deal. This is strange because members of the Liberal caucus met last week with representatives of the Canadian Horticultural Council who told us that their industry would suffer a lot from this deal. Where then does the Minister get his information? I do not know, Madam Speaker. The Quebec Union des Producteurs Agricoles said recently that agriculture was sacrificed in this deal between Canada and the U.S.

Madam Speaker, why does the Government of Canada want Canadian agriculture to be similar to American agriculture? Must we have the same systems? I do not think so. Madam Speaker, 1.5 millions U.S. farmers are going bankrupt. Is that what we want for our farmers? Canadian agriculture has enough problems as it is and we should all work together to improve the lot of our producers instead of trying to put them in a situation similar to that of American farmers.

The Minister says that we are being partisan. Madam Speaker, you know better. You know that I never show any partisanship in this House, and I do not intend to change my ways today or in the coming days. However, this is an issue where all Canadians have a right to be partisan and all Members have a right to voice the hopes and aspirations of their constituents. This free trade deal, so they say, is the greatest trade agreement ever signed in the history of humanity. It is therefore a major issue, one that all Members will want to discuss.

Madam Speaker, in 1983, someone said, and I quote: "Sleeping with an elephant may be exciting until the elephant starts to move. If the elephant turns around, you are a dead man." And that same person said also: "That is why the issue of free trade was decided the way it was in the 1911 election. This would affect our Canadian sovereignty, which would no longer exist, even during leardership campaigns or in similar circumstances."

Do you know who said that, Madam Speaker? Well, if you hadn't guessed, it was the present Prime Minister when he was campaigning for the leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada. Hard to believe, isn't it, that this Prime Minister who almost always tells us the truth, could have made such a statement and then change his mind and go back on his word. Nevertheless, it is true the present Prime Minister made the statement and then changed his mind when on March 17, 1985, he sang When Irish Eyes Are Smiling with the President of United States, a song that did irreparable harm to my television set. It has never been the same since.

In any case, I have to say, Madam Speaker . . . I am looking at the Conservative Member opposite, and I will try to slow down so he will be able to understand as well. I am going to talk about what many Canadians have said about this Free Trade Agreement.

I have here a brief that was submitted to all Members in October 1986 by the Canadian Federation of Milk Producers. I will quote a passage from this brief, in which the Federation said as follows: "In this statement, the Federation wishes to reiterate its firm conviction that dismantling or disrupting any of our existing policies and programs, including the program for milk supply management, would be totally unacceptable". And what happened, Madam Speaker? As we all know, the supply management system has three main components: production quotas, quantitative import restrictions and tariff barriers. Those are the three pillars of our supply management system.

As all farmers who are listening and watching today will know, when you have a three-legged milk stool and you take away one of the legs, chances are it will fall over. And in the Free Trade Agreement, one of the three legs has been partly dismantled. I am of course referring to the tariff barriers that have been eliminated. In our milk supply management system, for instance, we had tariffs on yogurt and ice cream imports. And if anyone thinks the production of ice cream is negligible, 4.6 million hectolitres of milk are used annually to make ice cream, and a little less than half a million hectolitres to make yogurt. Which means that a considerable amount of industrial milk is used in the process. By dismantling tariff barriers, about 5 per cent of Canada's dairy industry will suffer a certain amount of damage.

It is true we have not abolished the quota system. It is true we have not abolished our import quotas. But it is not true to say our dairy industry has come out of this unscathed. That is false, because damage has been done as a result of the step taken by the Conservative Government.

• (1710)

[English]

Other areas of agriculture have been affected, and in far greater measure. For instance, the poultry sector has not only had tariff barriers removed, as did supply management in milk, imports from the United States will be increased from 31 million kilograms to 37 million kilograms. In other words, we have given them the right to increase their exports to us by 20 per cent.

Mr. Caldwell: That is not so.

Mr. Boudria: The Member opposite indicates that that is not so. It is so. That information was given to Members of the House, including myself, by Mike Gifford, who was briefing us on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise).

Mr. Caldwell: Say what he said, then.

Mr. Boudria: The Member opposite may say that they used the last five years of what was being sent to this country when there were temporary shortages of supply, averaged it out, and increased their amounts by a similar amount. Although that would be technically correct, what should be remembered is that supply management in chicken is organized in such a way that there will always be shortages so that future shortages will be in addition to that six million kilograms we already let them have for nothing.

If that was not bad enough, instead of using a cumulative average over the last five years, they took a constant of the five years prior to the agreement being signed. That included the year 1984, which had a large amount of imports into Canada, and goes to a further disadvantage in the system. I challenge the Hon. Member opposite to deny that that is the case. In other words, had we used a rolling average, we would eventually have got rid of that 1984 year. That was overlooked by the negotiators, unfortunately, or it was unacceptable to the Americans. Either way, I can assure you, Madam Speaker, that it has caused damage to the Canadian agriculture industry.

I have here a press release from the Canadian Chicken Marketing Agency. I would like to read just one line from the press release. It is dated October 7, 1987, just two days after the announcement of the free trade agreement. It says in part:

> We do not agree however that the chicken industry should be undermined by eliminating one of its very necessary underpinnings—tariffs. We will be working diligently in the months ahead to see if some accommodations can be made to the deal in order to ensure that our industry is preserved to the benefit of all Canadians.

Very clearly this industry does not like the free trade agreement one bit.

Why did we get into the free trade discussions to start with, particularly when we knew of the commitments made by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he campaigned for the Leadership of the Conservative Party some time ago? The Prime Minister had a conversion on the way to Damascus because he decided that in view of U.S. protectionism we needed to secure our access to the American markets, or so he said, and, second, we should have an independent dispute settling mechanism. That sounds nice, perhaps, to some people. However, what did we get? We got a dispute settling mechanism that is going to work using American laws, and as if that were not bad enough, we have a binding dispute settling mechanism which is binding on Canadians but potentially not on the United States. Of course, as we know, under the U.S. Constitution it is impossible to provide measures in such a way as to link a future Congress of the United States. In other words, if the Americans wanted to change their laws in the future which would make certain things countervailable that are not so now, we have no means of stopping a future U.S. Congress from doing so.

The problem, of course, is going to be, and is for us, that the alleged gains we would have from signing such an agreement have not happened, and in return we have given far too much away to the United States in order to secure a so-called comprehensive bilateral free trade agreement.

Madam Speaker, I hear an Hon. Member opposite saying we did not give that much.

For the past 15 minutes now, Madam Speaker, I have been explaining to Hon. Members what we gave and what we did not get in return, and he does not understand anything. He does not understand anything. Well, that is too bad for him. I am sure his constituents will give him a lesson if he will not learn by listening to Hon. Members in this House.

The wine and grape industry, for instance, Madam Speaker, what did it gain from that free trade agreement? And I now ask this House: What did it lose? The wine and grape industry has lost its livelihood or will lose most of it. What did it gain? Next to nothing.

Madam Speaker, many other Canadian industries are losing out.

In conclusion, the withdrawal of seasonal tariffs, for instance, in the fruits and vegetables industry, in the market-gardening industry, is clear indication of another major loss. And the Hon. Member opposite who comes from southwestern Ontario knows that. I suggest he take a position on that issue because producers in his area have lost a lot. The chicken industry has lost, the dairy industry has lost, market-gardening has lost. How many other farm industries have, and will lose out when we see the list of detailed documents? Madam Speaker, we have lost enough. In my view, producers in my constituency should not be forced to lose anything more than they already have.

[English]

I would ask the Conservative Members opposite to shake up their Prime Minister and convince him that he should not be signing that free trade agreement. Not only is it not good for the majority of Canadians, a fact which is already established, but it is not good for the Canadian farming industry. It is not good for agriculture. The agreement is bad for Canada. It is bad for agriculture, and the farmers of my riding will not forgive the Tories opposite. They have breached a solemn promise they made to the people of my riding and to all Canadians. Canadians will not forget. They will remember the Tories in the next election. If there are any Tories left in the constituency I represent after the next election, I am sure they will be called upon to answer to the people of Canada. They will be asked to explain why they have betrayed the mandate that was given to them.

The Prime Minister keeps talking about his sacred trust and those commitments he has made, and so on. Well, he has breached a solemn commitment he made in 1983, and many times there after. If I were the Prime Minister, I would change my mind right now, because it is not too late for him to repent. It is not too late for him to tell the people of Canada that he goofed, that he is sorry for what he did. We are willing to give him a second chance. We are willing to do that. It is up to him now to apologize to the people of Canada for having done what he did. He should start over, and this time he should do it right. I am willing to give him a chance. Let us see him do it.

Mr. Clifford: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talked about our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the commitments he made to agriculture, but he did not tell us specifically which commitments the Prime Minister has not kept. I have been waiting to hear what they are. The Hon. Member talks about his farmers and the problems he is having with the free trade agreement. Can he specifically tell me what is going on with the dairy farmers in his riding? Is there a problem there? The Hon. Member was not specific. We pledged that the marketing and supply system of this country would not be altered. Is the Hon. Member telling us that that has been done? I would like to hear the answer to that in specific terms. Exactly what is the Hon. Member's problem with our commitment to the marketing and supply systems for agriculture in this country and how they are potentially going to be dealt with in the agreement?

I want to know specifically what it is he is communicating to his constituents. I believe it is the job of all Members of Parliament to communicate and to give information, certainly to tell the truth to the primary producers. I do not think that has been very clear in the dialogue so far.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, that is certainly an interesting question. I never thought that there would ever be a Tory with the nerve to ask me to recite into the record how many promises the Prime Minister has breached. However, when given the chance I will try to do that. I am willing to give it a try. I have here the book of 338 Tory promises. I just happen to have a copy here. I may have referred to this document before. Let me start here under "A" as in agriculture. No. 1:

> Abolish the capital gains tax on the sale of farm property for continued agricultural purposes.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: That promise was only half breached, of course, because the Tories put in place a maximum. Promise No. 3:

> Allow the Farm Credit Corporation to offer agri-bonds so farmers will have access to reasonably-priced funds.

Mr. Thacker: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. I just want to ask the Hon. Member this. Was it not the Liberal Government in Ontario that, the minute it was elected, imposed capital gains tax on its farmers?

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I recall in the mid-1970s when the Conservative Government in Ontario imposed a speculation tax which also applied to farmland. Let me continue. Another breached promise is here: "Revise Section 31 of the Income Tax Act"—

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Have you read the tax reform paper? You do not read well.

Mr. Caldwell: I rise on a point of order because the Hon. Member has indicated he was going to read some of the promises that we made during the election. I notice that he started out with the first one and then went to the third. Could it be that the second promise is with respect to the elimination of federal sales tax on gasoline products and fuel oils?

Mr. Mayer: That the Liberals put in place.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) has the floor.

Mr. Boudria: Let me continue, Madam Speaker. Another promise is here. It states that it will reduce cheese imports by 20 per cent. Is that not a cute promise? We have just signed a treaty that will have the effect of increasing imports of certain dairy products from other countries. Cheese imports have not been reduced by 20 per cent. They are still at exactly the same amount. That is another breached promise.

The Member for London—Middlesex (Mr. Clifford) asked me specifically what the problems were in regard to the dairy sector as they pertain to the Prime Minister's trade deal with his friend Ronnie Reagan. Here are the problems as they affect supply management in the dairy industry.

There are two products which were under the protection of tariffs for which the tariffs have been eliminated. I see the Hon. Member is not paying attention. We will be asking questions later, Madam Speaker, so you should tell him to sharpen up. What we have is that these tariffs have been eliminated. This could cause an influx of yogurt and ice cream from the United States. If the Hon. Member says that not much milk is used for that, 4.6 million hectolitres are used annually in the production of ice cream and 4.5 million hectolitres are used in the production of yogurt. That is considerable potential damage to the industry.

I say to the Hon. Member across the way that one of the three fundamental underpinnings of supply management has been damaged by the Prime Minister. He has breached a promise to the dairy producers of Canada. He owes them an apology.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Read more of the book.

Mr. Brightwell: Madam Speaker, I have sat here and I have heard the statements made by the Hon. Member. I agree they had some basis in fact, but a great many simply did not. For instance, he mentions the fact that this trade agreement will increase the amount of cheese that will come into Canada. That is simply a fabrication. This gentleman has made it up in his mind, probably because he does not understand what is going on. We maintained our promise. We protected the supply management group in the dairy industry and the poultry industry. Perhaps the Hon. Member does not think in modern times because he talks about milking cows with a three-legged stool. In modern days they put a machine on the cows and milk them that way. I think his thinking is in about the same category as that of the people who milked cows with three-legged stools many years ago.

The Hon. Member would know if he looked at his information that about 10 per cent of Canadian dairy products go into yogurt and ice cream, these near-milk products. The reduction of tariffs in those areas, which will occur not now, as the Hon. Member suggests, or not tomorrow, as the Hon. Member suggests, but will begin to go into effect on January 1, 1989, and gradually over the 10 years after that, amounts to about 15 per cent to 16 per cent of that cost. So in fact what will happen is not an influx of material from the United States but, indeed, there could be a reduced price of the material by 10 per cent.

So perhaps the dairy industry has been affected, too, but 1.5 per cent of its gross income is on this part of the agreement. But with respect to the other part of the agreement, the Hon. Member has forgotten the fact that hundreds of thousands of jobs have been protected. He has forgotten the fact that these people will have money to buy dairy products. He has forgotten the fact that the people who will be working will have more money to spend on dairy products and that input costs will be less than they were before. The American market could be open, if there are any areas for Canadian ingenuity to enter that particular market.

How can the Hon. Member, when he has not assessed the whole picture, stand and talk in the way he has against a trade agreement that is for the future of Canada, for a growing Canada, for a strong Canada, for a Canada that is already great but will be greater because of this agreement?

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I believe my time is close to expiring. The Hon. Member has asked how I can be against the agreement. Very easily. It is a bad agreement. It is an awful agreement. It is not good, not only for the dairy producers but for agriculture generally. It is certainly not good for the dairy producers.

It is certainly not as bad as it could have been had all of supply management been eliminated. I will recognize that. I will give them a bit of credit. The agreement could have been worse, if that is complimenting the Tories. That is as far as I will go because it is certainly not good for the agriculture sector. The dairy industry was promised that it would be totally protected and was not totally protected. There was a breach of that promise.

The Hon. Member knows that there are three fundamental underpinnings of supply management. One has been damaged. The Prime Minister breached a solemn promise that he made.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, the Province of Manitoba, a part which I have the honour to represent, over quite a number of years has experienced slow, steady growth. We have not had the booms of a province such as Alberta which experienced tremendous growth when the price of energy was high. We have not had the busts which the Province of Alberta saw when the price of energy collapsed. We have not had the booms which the Province of British Columbia had when the price of lumber and pulp and paper products were high. Nor have we had the decline which it has had.

The reason that we have had a slow and steady growth is that we have had, and have, a very diversified economy. We have a mining industry. We have a manufacturing industry. We have a food processing industry which is based on a very diversified agricultural community. It is because I know that so many of the people I represent work on jobs which are dependent upon a successful farming community in our province that I am very concerned about what this agreement between the United States and Canada will do for the farming community and for the farmers of my province.

The people that I represent work for the railways, the trucking industry, the farm equipment plants, the food processing plants, all of which are dependent upon the farming community of Manitoba. It saddens me when I see this Conservative Government turning its back on farmers in much the same way as the former Liberal Government did when it forced through Parliament the Bill to change the Crow rate from a guarantee to Canadian farmers to a progressively diminishing subsidy for the movement of grain.

The signs of abandonment of our farming community are there for anybody who wishes to see. Branch lines are being torn up, farm incomes are collapsing, to a large extent because of the type of programs for U.S. farmers implemented by those so-called friends of ours in the United States. At the same time we are supposedly negotiating an agreement with them in good faith, and at a time when one would assume that if we are dealing in good faith there would be a continuation of the status quo between the two countries. The United States has used its grain export enhancement program in order that it can sell grain with the aid of tremendous subsidies to countries which have traditionally been customers for Canadian grain.

I see that the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer) has come into the House. The other day he boasted about the fact that despite all our problems, our share of the sales of grain for export in the world market is still are at 20 per cent.

Mr. Mayer: It is higher.

Mr. Orlikow: It is at 20 per cent because we had to subsidize at an increasing cost the sale of that grain to meet the subsidy programs of the United States and the European Economic Community. I say to the Minister that we could have 40 per cent of the world grain market if we gave the grain away for free.

Mr. Mayer: No, we could not, because we do not produce that much.

Mr. Orlikow: The point is that we can sell all the grain that we have for export if we are prepared to reduce the price that we charge.

We see this Government downgrading rural life by cutting back on services such as postal service which our farmers have had for many years. We see what is happening in our province to the farm community. We know how they feel about the situation when we look at reports that the number of students attending extension courses at the agricultural college are down in the last five years by 40 per cent. They have gone down because the sons and daughters of farmers who have farmed for generations in Manitoba—and the same is happening in the Province of Saskatchewan and other provinces—see that the future for farmers in Canada is bleak and that it would pay them to look elsewhere, to go away and to leave the farm.

This withering away of rural Canada is speeded up by the Government. We should realize that the rural decline in population that we have seen in Canada is accelerating at an ever-faster rate. In 1951, there were 2,800,000 people living on Canadian farms. That was over 19 per cent of our population. In 1981, this number had shrunk to 1 million or 4.1 per cent. The urban population, which in 1951 was 7.9 million, and by 1981 had increased to 18.4 million. In other words, it has gone from 56 per cent to over 75 per cent. That decline will continue and accelerate because of the effect of the clauses on agriculture that are contained in this free trade agreement with the United States.

It is, to say the least, odd that a Party which traditionally had so much support in rural Canada now seems set to abandon the farm community entirely. To back up what I am saying, we need only examine what will happen to rural Canada under the terms of this proposed U.S.-Canada trade pact. Rural Manitoba, an area which the two Ministers from Manitoba who are in the House at the present time know, is represented almost exclusively by Conservative Members of Parliament. I do not believe this situation will happen again after the next election. Here is what will happen to Manitoba farm producers with the cost estimates of the losses which they will suffer as a result of this agreement, as calculated by the Government of Manitoba. I will put those figures on the record. I checked them with a senior professor of economics at the Faculty of Agriculture at the University of Manitoba who agreed with these estimates. The Government of Manitoba has estimated that, because of the increase in the global quotas for imports for supply management products such as chickens, turkeys, and eggs, this will cost Manitoba farmers $9 million. We have heard a great deal of the argument that supply management and marketing boards are not mentioned and are not dealt with in this agreement.

When the tariffs are taken off on processed foods, products such as chicken pot-pies, TV dinners, and chicken fingers, products which are increasing in sales and use very rapidly, of course it will be possible for the American producers of chickens, turkeys, and eggs, who do not benefit from supply management prices for their product, to export into Manitoba and other provinces their processed foods and sell them cheaper than the Canadian producer and processors will be able to.

This agreement provides for a loss of the premium price which has been paid by the Wheat Board for the brewing of malt, barley, and milling oats. According to the Manitoba Government, the loss of this two-price system will cost Manitoba farmers $16 million. The loss of seasonal tariffs for fresh vegetables produced in Manitoba has been estimated to cost farmers of Manitoba $8 million a year.

The loss of the 17 per cent tariff on processed products going into canned goods is estimated at $17 million a year. I am sorry that the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds is not present, because the Campbell Soup Co. plant is located in his constituency in Portage La Prairie. Many of the farmers who grow the vegetables that go into those products processed and canned in that plant live and grow their products in the constituency of the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds.

Increased transportation costs of mill feeds going to the United States without the transportation subsidy, which subsidy is given away under the terms of the agreement, will cost Manitoba farmers $1 million. The loss of the two-price wheat for Canadian millers in Manitoba has been estimated to cost $8 million. We have a total of $55 million a year, which will be taken from the rural economy of Manitoba under the terms of the agreement. This is a very small part of the total rural economy of Canada. Apparently the Ontario Government estimated that under the terms of the agreement its farmers will lose $100 million a year.

There has been a great deal of debate in the House on whether or not farm groups support the trade deal. In answering questions today, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) listed a number of farm organizations which he claimed endorsed the agreement enthusiastically.

I should like to quote from a recent article which appeared in The Toronto Star a few days ago. It quoted Jack Penner, President of Keystone Agricultural Producers, which organization initially greeted the agreement enthusiastically. In part the article reads:

> —Jack Penner questions the implications of the deal's provision to allow U.S. farmers to sell grain in Canada as soon as the level of government subsidies is equal in the two countries for each type of grain.
> "I think we in the farm community owe it to ourselves to question that one," says Penner. "It might be detrimental to our orderly marketing of grains because individual American producers can access our market virtually unrestrained."

Elmer Platt, a representative of the Manitoba Chicken Broiler Producers Marketing Board, said the following, according to the same article:

> The major concern for poultry producers, and one that spills over to primary (slaughtering) and processing (fast foods), is that under the pact supplemental tariffs—additional quotas— will be easier to get.

He went on to say:

> —we think it is likely that price will dictate. Our industry—could be wiped out.

I would also like to refer to an article which appeared in the October 12 edition of Financial Times, which is hardly a radical publication. It refers to Zaven Kurdian, a spokesperson for the Ontario Poultry Council, who noted the following:

> —that McCain Foods Ltd. of Florenceville, N.B., "has been negotiating for a whole year to start such a project (a frozen food plant) in New Brunswick.
> With tariffs eliminated there is no way they will proceed."

Brigid Pike, President of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, is quoted as saying the following in the same article:

> "Processing in Niagara will be the first to come under the gun. This will cause a contraction in the entire industry, cutting into economy of scale."

I direct the attention of the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds to the Western Report of October 19, another journal which is noted for its free market espousal. It quoted Nelson Coyle of the Canadian Chicken Marketing Board who said the following:

> —the pact does allow U.S. imports to increase. That could steal away much of the fast food and processed chicken market from domestic producers . . . Injury can occur very quickly, . . . We doubt investors will be willing to get into this area when they know the business could be lost.

In the same article, Gerald Green, President of the B.C. Fruit Growers Association, is reported as saying:

> "It is the West's fruit and vegetable growers, especially in B.C., who will swallow the largest loss. American producers, industry spokesmen note, benefit from lower wages and favourable climate. It's most apparent in processing, where B.C. labour costs are 65 per cent higher than those of competitors in Washington State,"—

To say the least, there is a great deal of concern and skepticism in the agricultural community. By no means is it as solid in support of the deal in terms of agriculture as we are led to believe by spokespersons for the Government. Very grave reservations are held by members of the farming community and the processing industry.

Further, we deplore the Government's lack of action while seeing the spirit and the letter of the pact breached by the United States, before it has even been considered by the two countries, in the sales in traditional Canadian markets made under the U.S. Export Enhancement Program, to which I have already referred.

Our agricultural critic has already pointed out that the program has been entrenched in the U.S. Commodity Export Program with an unlimited budget. Instead of it being a temporary program, it is going to continue and expand.

How does the Government reconcile the activities of this kind of subsidized grain sales with the language of the agreement on the use of export markets to other subsidies? It does so simply by saying that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) will discuss it with U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz, and by saying, "Never mind that it means either loss of markets or lower returns or both to Canadian grain producers". Of course these are just the obvious subsidies to U.S. agricultural exports.

The agreement does not take into account the other subsidies in U.S. agriculture. How can the agreement, for example, take into account the billions of dollars of improvements which have been spent on upgrading the Missouri-Mississippi River system? It is a toll-free system, of course, but what about the money spent to make it a major grain-gathering right-of-way? How is that ever to be accounted for? Even if the continuing U.S. subsidies to agriculture are reduced—and they are several times the subsidies which Canadian agriculture receives—it will be over many years and only after an international agreement is reached. This possibility is very uncertain, given the legacy of many subsidies and capital improvements to agricultural infrastructure put in place by the Americans which will remain to our competitive disadvantage.

The Government will continue to blather about the level playing field reached with the United States while the Canadian agricultural industry is hit by loss after loss. No wonder the agricultural and processing industries are becoming more skeptical the more they learn about the deal.

Let me conclude by listing some of the actions the Americans have taken since we began the negotiations. If there was good faith in trying to reach an agreement, I would assume that we would have had a continuation of the status quo while the discussions and negotiations were going on. That is how honest people who are serious would deal.

While the negotiations have been going on, the Americans have put countervail duties on softwood, shakes and shingles, steel pipe, potash, fish, specialized steel, and at least three farm products—hogs, strawberries, and grain. All of this was done while they were supposedly negotiating in good faith with us to reach an agreement which would be fair to both parties.

The Government has given away the store, and we certainly have no intention of supporting the proposal.

• (1800)

Mr. Gormley: Madam Speaker, I have a question which I will preface with a brief preamble. If one were to have watched the debate today one would have seen the unbelievable spectacle of western Members of the New Democratic Party criticizing the Government both on agriculture and on how free trade relates to agriculture, and people would have to ask several questions. First, are western Canadian farmers, the farmers of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, cynical, slow and gullible? Of course not.

There are those of us who really represent the aspirations of western farmers. Unlike the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), who authored this outrageous motion today, and unlike the Manitoba Members, it is interesting to note the commitment of the New Democratic Party to agriculture.

In our Province of Saskatchewan, we clearly repudiated the NDP in two provincial elections. The NDP won one rural seat. In the Province of Manitoba where our Government of Canada has spent hundreds of millions of dollars, the provincial Government of Manitoba has spent $83 million to support farmers. No federal or provincial Government has done so little to assist prairie agriculture.

While the Rome of agriculture burns, the fiddling is being done by the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) holding the violin and Bob White fiddling the bow.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gormley: If we assess carefully the question of agriculture as it pertains to free trade, it is clear from the major agricultural spokesmen and those of us who live in western Canada that there are considerable benefits to be directly derived from the free trade agreement. To have the Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre, who does not even live in his constituency or in the Province of Saskatchewan, stand up in this House and talk about prairie farmers and free trade is so shocking as to be unbelievable. In fact, I find myself outraged as a western Canadian to hear this kind of conduct from the New Democratic Party.

My question, after that very brief preamble, is, when one considers that 40 per cent of New Democrats in Saskatchewan favour free trade, and the sensible people who do not vote New Democrat, a significant number of whom also favour free trade, where do western New Democratic Members of Parliament get their data, their input, their contribution to stand up in the House of Commons and fly in the face of common sense? I would like that question answered, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, a poll recorded in The Globe and Mail today reported that in western Canada—

Mr. Gormley: In rural seats.

Mr. Orlikow: —the NDP was in first place with 38 per cent support.

Mr. Gormley: What about Manitoba? You are third.

Mr. Orlikow: The Conservatives were in third place with 24 per cent of support.

I am told, and I am subject to correction, that provincial polls taken in the Province of Saskatchewan show the NDP running 30 per cent ahead of the Conservatives. I say to the Hon. Member that if the Prime Minister had not listened to that SOS from the Premier of Saskatchewan during the last Saskatchewan election and had not come through with that supposed billion dollars for grain farmers, the Conservatives would have been defeated. Where is this year's support program? The Member asked me where I got my facts. I gave him the figures as to what will happen to farmers and agriculture in Manitoba calculated by the Manitoba Department of Agriculture. As I indicated to him, they were substantiated for me by a senior economist at the University of Manitoba.

I suggest to the Hon. Member that before he accepts all the propaganda he gets from his Prime Minister, it would be useful for him and the farmers he represents to check with the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and other farm commodity organizations in Saskatchewan to see what estimates they have made of the effects of this agreement on their farmers. He should do that before he makes blanket statements in his endorsement of this agreement.

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, a few weeks ago I had the pleasure of meeting with some members of the European Economic Community who had been elected to the European Parliament. I asked them questions about when the market was formed a number of years ago. I asked if any of the 13 countries lost their culture, sovereignty, heritage or identity. They said no, not one country lost any of those things. They said they knew exactly what we are going through. When the EEC was formed a number of years ago, all the socialists and the labour unions opposed it. They fought it violently. However, the Governments carried on and trade is expanding between those countries. They are all flourishing. It has created thousands of jobs. They keep removing tariffs, and they have not heard another word about it from the socialists and the labour unions.

They said they knew exactly what we are going through, and that is exactly why we are not going to back off. We realize that the NDP made its position perfectly clear from day one. It is against free trade talks. It is against free trade. Members of the NDP certainly did not mince their words. They are totally opposed to it. That is what they said publicly. However, it is interesting to read their policy papers, which policy was agreed to in March of this year.

Referring to agriculture, the NDP says we should increase activities in promoting trade. That is what we are doing. They also say we should pursue mature state-to-state relationships and cease to deal with the U.S. on an issue-by-issue basis. We agree with that and that is what we are doing.

The Hon. Member referred to countervailing duties. The U.S. still has its laws in place until we finalize the trade agreement. The U.S. cannot ignore those laws. If someone files a complaint down there under the existing laws, they have to act on it. They will do so until we have the final deal.

Another policy of the NDP is to explore sectorial free trade with the U.S. That is what we are doing. The same thing is to be done with other countries. We have trade missions all over the world. They want production safeguards similar to the Auto Pact. We agree with that and that is what we are doing.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is with regret that I interrupt the Hon. Member, but the period for questions and comments is over.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Madam Speaker, we do not have a lot of time but perhaps I can make two brief points.

First, there are a lot of us in this House directly connected with agriculture, either hands-on as farmers or because we have lived on farms. Anyone who is part of that process and directly connected with it will know that Canadian farmers are very good at what they do. We have the best quality grain in the world. I say that not in smugness but because of Canada's reputation around the world for producing a very high quality product. We have as good cattle herds, both beef and dairy, as there are in the world. I could refer to other commodities as well, but the point is that we are very good at what we do.

Canadian farmers are also good at using the resources available to them. Farmers have a lot of pride in their work. We are often asked why we farm. We put up with all kinds of uncertainties. Some of us know what it is like to spend six months living with a herd of cows trying to calve them. Some of us know what it is like to worry that it is too dry for the crop in the spring, or that we are unable to seed because it is too wet. We know what it is to be concerned about wind storms when we hear the wind howling in the middle of the night. We know what it is like to watch clouds build up and worry about hail storms.

We also know the joy of seeing a newborn calf and know that there is nothing sadder than seeing a dead calf and seeing a cow return to the spot where she delivered her dead calf and bawl. We feel for that kind of thing.

We have heard it said in the House today that we are going to sell out the family farm and such things. Do you think that any of us who are that committed and directly involved in agriculture, who take that much pride in what we do and know firsthand the sacrifices that go into it and are willing to make them because of the joy that comes with production, would do anything that would hurt Canadian agriculture?

I find that very difficult to take. The Opposition should take us on if they think we have done a bad job, but they should not stand up and say "sell out" and impugn our motives, because we are good at what we do and we only want a chance to show that to the rest of the world.

Canada is comprised of over 25 million people. We are the biggest trading nation per capita in the world on a relative basis. We have more natural resources than any other country in the world. There is no question that it is difficult for a young farmer to start up in Canada today, but it is probably easier in Canada than in any other place in the world.

Producers must never forget that we produce for consumption, which means markets and access to markets. The United States is a big market for us. As an example, pork production is a big industry in every province with the exception of Newfoundland. We export $800 million worth of pork, and three-quarters of that goes to the United States. This is about access to that market.

The Americans have on their books the Agriculture Adjustment Act, Section 22 of which allows the Americans to close their border on 24 hours' notice. The Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) is a farmer, and I suspect a pretty good one. He produces as good quality oil seeds and cereal grains as anyone in the world. We are talking about access for his product and that of his neighbours to the largest and richest market in the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Langdon: The blocks are still there.

Mr. Mayer: Madam Speaker, this is the true small "c" conservative Party, the true reactionaries. There are no alternatives. I am reminded of Edmund Burke, who said that a conservative is somebody who believes that nothing should ever be done for the first time. They are the old democrats. They are looking to the past. We will have a great future in Canadian agriculture if we can knock down some of these trade barriers. Our first step is to deal with the United States.

Let me tell you how important the United States hog market is to Manitoba producers. About 38 per cent of the total production in Manitoba has to be exported. Of that, three-quarters goes to the United States. This is about helping Manitoba farmers gain secure access to that market. The hog and the pork business would be absolutely devastated if it did not have that market. We look forward very much to being able to promote the product of the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre in the United States without fear of having the border closed.

This deal is about the future of our country. It is about the future of our farmers. It is a very good deal and I look forward to having an opportunity to debate it more fully.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being 6:15 p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Standing Order 82(12), the debate on the motion has now ended.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

AGRICULTURE—EDMONTON FOOD PRODUCTION INSPECTION PLANT LABORATORY

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, on September 23 I rose in the House to ask a question of the Hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise). It concerned his Department's intention to consolidate services of the food production and inspection branch by moving its seed laboratories from Edmonton, basically to Saskatoon.

It will be a two-pronged move, with the germination portion to be closed in January, 1988, and the purity laboratory to be phased out within three years' time. I am here to request that the Minister reconsider his position. The seed laboratory has been a decided and tremendous asset to the Government complex located in my riding of Edmonton East, and provides a very essential service to seed growers in the area, including most of Alberta and parts of Saskatchewan, as well as growers from British Columbia and the United States.

It is the only facility in Alberta authorized to issue the orange international certificate which must accompany all overseas shipments of creeping red fescue. As you know, creeping red fescue is a rare, high grade grass seed for which Alberta is widely known. We produce much of it.

I appreciate the Minister's efforts in downsizing his Department in accordance with the Government's initiatives toward a deficit reduction. He has done a wonderful job in a portfolio that I do not for a minute think is an easy one. In this instance, though, I think he may have received some ill-begotten advice from officials believing that the end justifies the means and damn the practicality.

Edmonton is fortunate to serve as Alberta's capital city and appropriately so, since 60 per cent of the province's population lies within a 100 kilometre radius of Edmonton. Over 1,000 local growers avail themselves of the service offered by these facilities. I submit, then, that the laboratory facilities should be expanded rather than closed or moved.

To this point I have spoken only of the excellent facilities, and not of the people who run them. In short, they are a knowledgeable and efficient group who offer outstanding service to domestic and international growers. Twelve people will lose their jobs, or they will be transferred. Like the facilities, these people too are assets not easily replaced. I would think that the social costs of maintaining them far outweigh the cost of keeping them on the job, in Edmonton.

If I might quote Ms. Alycia Grayson, who, on September 24, wrote to the Minister:

> As a clerk who works closely with both the germination and purity laboratories, I am speaking on behalf of those analysts who stand to lose their jobs. We can see no valid reason for closing this lab. (Various) reports . . . indicate that some federal employees are close to retirement age; but that is not true in this case. Most of the older staff have at least eight years to work before they can collect their pensions. Where can an analyst find a job if all he/she is trained to do is analyse seed?

I am concerned, too, of a growing perception in my riding and in the West generally that the Government has one rule for the West and yet another for central Canada. I say that this is a growing perception. The fact is much different. We have three Ministers from Alberta who wield great influence in Government. Yet they are also fair to all regions. This is not a truth, it is a perception, but only a perception.

The West has never been so well represented as it is at this time. However, I want to give a case in point about this perception. About three years ago this Government phased out another federal research facility when it closed the environment laboratory. I remember objecting strenuously that such a move would imperil the quality of Alberta's land, air and water, and it was not only Alberta, it was all of western Canada and the Northwest Territories as well. This previous laboratory did the laboratory work for all of the western provinces and the Northwest Territories.

Centralization reeks of redundancy and if you will allow me, Madam Speaker, I will say socialism. To close a laboratory in Edmonton only to increase the facilities in Calgary and Lethbridge seems illogical to me. In closing, I would ask the Hon. Minister to reconsider his position with respect to the closing of the laboratory and consider the plight of the workers affected before making any further moves involving federal government employees in Edmonton.

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Madam Speaker, first, I would like to say that it is a pleasure and honour to be here in my capacity to speak on behalf of the Minister this evening. I would also like to commend the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Lesick) for his diligence in continuing to represent the best interests of his constituents, as he has done since his election to this House some three years ago. I would also like to commend him for his sensitivity to the well-being of those who would be affected by the proposed move.

As the Hon. Member knows, however, when this Government came to office some three years ago, it inherited a rather immense and, in some ways, cruel legacy. That, of course, was the legacy of a national debt which was somewhere in the vicinity of $200 billion. The present Government must spend nearly $29 billion each year on interest alone on that national debt. Because of that, the Government does not have the flexibility it would wish to have in dealing with many of the problems which exist in all of our communities.

The Government, of course, has made a commitment to reduce the size of the civil service throughout the nation in order to reduce the costs which all of us as taxpayers must bear. Unfortunately, when that happens, it means that individuals and constituencies are inevitably going to be affected. So it is exceedingly important that we hear from Hon. Members such as the Hon. Member for Edmonton East because they play a role in ensuring that the Government acts with over-all consideration, first, for the well-being of the individuals and, second, for the services which are provided.

I want to ensure that the Hon. Member, and those whom he represents, understands that the reorganization which is proposed in this instance is designed to save those necessary tax dollars and to increase the efficiency which I think all of us are committed to as individuals. The service which has been ably provided by those represented in the laboratory in the Hon. Member's riding will now be provided by those who reside in Saskatoon, not in eastern Canada. I think there has been a misconception about that fact. As the Hon. Member knows, but perhaps some of his constituents do not, there is a comparable lab in Montreal which is also being phased out. That service will be provided in future by a facility in Toronto.

I know the Hon. Member will be pleased to be able to convey to his constituents that the plan is a five-year plan, and we hope that because it is a five-year plan there will be adequate time for change and for the kind of adjustments which are necessary.

I know the Hon. Member would also want to convey to his constituents the assurance of the Government that those individuals affected will be provided with alternative employment and that there will continue to exist in Edmonton, the Hon. Member's home city, some 208 person-years within the Department of Agriculture which will provide an important service to agriculture and I think will have a very important presence in Edmonton as well. The federal Government continues to accept the mandate of providing a service in as decentralized a manner as possible. We understand the points which the Hon. Member is making.

I want to say to you, Madam Speaker, that certainly the Government thanks him very much and continues to be aware of his concerns. His voice will always be heard by the Government.

CANADA POST CORPORATION—MEETING PROTESTING PLANS FOR FUTURE SERVICE/WOMEN—POSITION OF MINISTER

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, a number of days ago, on September 28, 1987, I raised a question in the House about Canada Post. The basic message that I was bringing to the Government was a message on behalf of ordinary Canadians who had held a press conference that day indicating to the Government that in their view the Government's plans for the Post Office meant reductions in service and that what the Government was doing to the Post Office was putting in place a skeleton service.

What quite surprised me was the reaction of the Minister responsible for the Post Office. Rather than dealing with the issue and rather than responding to the views of Canadians he attempted to side-step the issue by saying that, well, the only person who was at the press conference was Jean-Claude Parrot and myself, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre, and my colleagues. That was a complete distortion of the reality.

I want to start out by saying this, and I hope that the government Member who speaks will answer it. What the Minister was doing in that case was putting forward the proposition that just because a union was a part of a group that was telling the Government that it was reducing service, that somehow the whole exercise was illegitimate. I think that that is a dangerous distortion. It is a dangerous procedure.

One of the basic fundamentals that allows us to have a democratic society is the right of collective bargaining, the right of associating collectively. That is a right that is fundamental to a democratic society. So for the Minister to side-step the issue by trying to say: "These people are involved in a very unpopular union, therefore, I do not have to respond to their concerns about service", is wrong.

The unions in this case have something to offer. They work at the Post Office. They know what is going on so they have information that they can offer to Canadians. It was not only the union that was involved. There were other groups representing ordinary Canadians at this press conference.

For example, the National Action Committee on the Status of Women was represented. Its representatives were concerned about the salary levels that are involved in the Government's plan for the Post Office, poverty-level salaries. The National Action Committee on the Status of Women speaks for women and their concerns. Women constitute some 50 per cent of the population. This was an important group that attended.

In addition, there was the the National Anti-Poverty Organization. It speaks out for the poor of the country. The poor in Canada represent at least one-fifth if not one-third of the population. So this was another group that represented a good proportion of ordinary Canadians.

Not only were there representatives present saying to the Government that its plans for the Post Office meant a reduction in service, but we had postcards that had been signed by ordinary Canadians—11 mail-bags of postcards. Can you imagine what a sight that would be if I could have brought those mail-bags into this Chamber, Madam Speaker? They would have taken up three or four desks.

There are a great many ordinary Canadians who are seeking to tell the Government that in their view the Government's plans for the Post Office means a reduction in service. They do not find that acceptable. They want the Government to change direction in that regard.

I know that the Minister said to me: "Well, we have to act in a fiscally responsible manner". We would not argue with that. That is essential. But the Government does have an option. It could pursue a policy of cross-subsidization in order to handle the financial needs of the Post Office. It could allow the Post Office to be involved in areas in which it could earn a revenue and use that revenue to cross-subsidize those aspects of the Post Office that lose money.

The question that Canadians were asking the Government that day was this. In order to be fiscally responsible, in order to balance the books of the Post Office, why do people who live in suburban locations have to be treated in an unfair fashion? Why is there door-to-door delivery down one street, and not down the next street? Why this unfairness? Why is it that rural post offices have to be closed? Why is it that the delivery dates for letters have been watered down in order to maintain the statistical standards?

I wish to make it clear to the government side today that, when I put that question, I was seeking to remind them that ordinary Canadians are saying, "From our point of view, your plans for the Post Office mean the reduction in service. We find that unacceptable". That has been highlighted over the last few days in regard to the whole question of rural post offices. In the news we have heard of the community of Wilno, Ontario.

The postmistress there has refused to accept the plan of the Government to cut her wage down to one-fifth of what it has been up until now. That plan is a type of blackmail. The Government is saying to this woman that unless your wage is cut to one-fifth of what it was before, the post office will be taken out of your community. Right now it is a Mexican stand-off in that the woman has stated that she will not accept that type of wage, and the Post Office is delaying its decision to cut off her salary on a day-by-day basis. That is not a satisfactory situation. We want to have a commitment for service at the Post Office. We want a commitment to rural Canadian life. Rural Canadians are fed up with services being cut because of policies of centralization, whether it involves schools, municipalities, or health and social services. They do not wish this to happen with the Post Office. They do not wish the nail in the coffin of rural Canada to be driven in by the Conservative Government.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, tonight I am making my maiden speech as the recently appointed Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs; I take this opportunity to thank the Right Hon. Prime Minister for having such confidence in me and I assure my Minister of my full support.

Madam Speaker, I should like to answer to my friend the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) by saying that few observers dispute the need for Canada Post Corporation to change its course in order to offer Canadians the quality service they have every right to expect. For that matter, Canada Post Corporation is assuming this responsibility very seriously.

Madam Speaker, the nature of these changes has been stated by Canadians several times, from the tabling of the Marchment Report to the most recent public opinion polls. Consequently, Canada Post Corporation has developed a plan to provide Canadians with the improved services which they have every right to expect both as customers and as taxpayers. Contrary to my friend, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre, I suggest this is not beating about the bush but getting straight to the point.

Many changes are being planned. Their purpose is to offer more reliable services, so that Canadians may have their mail delivered according to well-defined standards, to adapt to the delivery requirements in the new suburbs by adopting methods similar to those currently used in other countries, to facilitate the transactions between Canadians and Canada Post Corporation by increasing the number of sales outlets operated by its private sector partners, while ensuring that the postal rates increases do not exceed the inflation rate and by putting an end to the Government subsidies paid to an already profitable organization.

As you know, Madam Speaker, the difference in costs between the Corporation and the private sector is one of the main reasons which warrant franchising as a solution for offering Canadians a greater number of sales outlets where they can purchase stamps and obtain other goods and services.

Canada Post Corporation, however, understands quite well that changes such as the increased involvement of the private sector through franchising must come in a way which protects the interests of its employees.

That is why it has been proposed that this change, which by the way will increase the number of sales outlets by 50 per cent, will come about over a ten year period.

• (1835)

That is also why Canada Post did accept in principle the job security provisions recommended by Commissioner-Conciliator Claude Foisy in his report on the dispute between Canada Post Corporation and the Canadian Union of Postal Workers.

Pursuant to these recommendations, not a single postal worker would lose his job as a result of the opening of a franchised or sub post office, provided he would be prepared to accept alternate employment within the corporation.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, franchising is the logical way to improve postal services and make them more readily accessible to Canadians. In fact it is the outcome of ongoing co-operation with the private sector which is far from being new. It has been decades now since Canada Post has been working in co-operation with the private sector, and this association has always proved to be most rewarding.

NUCLEAR ENERGY—REPORTED DESIGN FLAWS IN UNITED STATES PERRY NUCLEAR GENERATING STATION

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Madam Speaker, ever since the accident last year at the Chernobyl nuclear generating station in the Soviet Union, our world has changed. That particular accident was not the first accident there has ever been at a nuclear generating station; there have been others. For instance, I think of the Seven Islands incident in the United States. However, at the same time Chernobyl was different from anything that came before it.

We are well aware that the fall-out from the accident at Chernobyl obviously affected the health of all those who worked at the plant. It affected the health of all neighbours who lived near the Chernobyl generating station. Of course it affected the health of the clean-up crews. It had a potential effect on the health of visitors in the area including many, many Canadians. In addition, it had a potential impact on the health of people around the world because of the fall-out from the accident at the Chernobyl generating station.

All of that has caused great changes in our thinking and in the way we approach our concerns about nuclear energy and nuclear generating stations. I think, for instance, of the change in the thinking of military strategists. I am told by some that the Chernobyl incident had an enormous impact on their thinking.

Before Chernobyl we thought in terms of the possibilities of fighting a nuclear war or of fighting a conventional war. However, now with Chernobyl we realize that, with all the nuclear generating stations which represent potential obstacles spread throughout Europe and America, even a conventional war could create a nuclear war if something happened to one of the stations as it did with Chernobyl.

Given this situation it is understandable that Canadians should be most concerned about safety at nuclear generating stations, whether they are located in Canada or whether they are located anywhere else in the world, particularly if they are located outside Canada but nearby in the United States.

Recently, about four months ago, there were reports in the press of problems which were cropping up at a number of nuclear generating stations in the United States, particularly at the Perry I plant at North Perry, Ohio; at the Fermi II plant at Munroe, Michigan; and at the Davis-Besse generating station at Oak Harbour, Ohio. All these stations reported several unusual events during 1986 and 1987 which included failures or breakdowns of plant systems or procedures.

At the same time we had reassuring reports from the American Nuclear Regulatory Commission which indicated that everything was under control. They said that they had two inspectors on a full-time basis at every nuclear generating plant in the United States. Apparently there are about 109 of these nuclear generating stations.

However, in reality there were reports of problems with the inspection of the three plants in particular which caused concern among Canadians. There were reports that an official of the American Nuclear Regulatory Commission had warned the operators of a Louisiana nuclear plant that there would be a surprise inspection at the plant before it took place. There were reports as well that problems which were brought to the attention of the American Nuclear Regulatory Commission went uncorrected and undealt with. Indeed, there were reports and there is what has been described as a cosy relationship between the American Nuclear Regulatory Commission and the operators of these various nuclear generating stations.

All of this has caused great concern among Canadians. Organizations, including Energy Probe from Toronto, the Nuclear Awareness Project of Toronto, the Durham Nuclear Awareness of Oshawa and concerned citizens of Manitoba have all got together for the express purpose of trying to close down a number of these nuclear generating stations in the United States, 49 to be exact. They recognize, and Canadians recognize, that our Government has no control over these generating stations in the United States. At the same time, because they are so close to us and impact, on Canadians from where they draw their drinking water, particularly in the Great Lakes basin, there is a very serious concern about safety at those stations.

Some four months ago I asked the Parliamentary Secretary in this House if Canada had raised concerns with the United States Government and had made inquiries. The Parliamentary Secretary assured me at that time that Canada had expressed concern to the United States and was expecting reports concerning the situation. Four months have passed.

The Parliamentary Secretary is here tonight and I am looking forward to hearing from him that Canada is continuing to monitor the situation. I am looking forward to hearing what the results of the reports that we have received are, and I am looking forward to having him reassure me and all Canadians that our Government is doing everything possible within its power to ensure that the health and safety of Canadians in Canada is being protected by the Government.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, on June 15, 1987, actually, I answered the question put by my friend from York-East (Mr. Redway) dealing with his concern about the overhauling of the Perry Nuclear Power Plant in Ohio.

At that time I commended him for his stand and especially for his concern because, as I stated at the time, after the Chernobyl incident the world would never be the same again.

I wish to commend him once again for his stand and especially for his concern, and that concern is widely shared by all Canadians. I stated at the time that the Department was very closely monitoring the situation and that he would be kept informed of the various developments with respect to that particular problem.

Every time that the Commission—the so-called Nuclear Regulatory Commission—has considered the problem over the last ten years, steps and corrections were taken.

But I understand my colleague's concern, because if there were measures, commissions, inquiries, perhaps it is because inevitably there are problems.

Therefore, the Hon. Member's concerns were made known to the Americans and very often, and I must add that at some point every week, there are discussions with our American colleagues about putting the Perry Station back into commission in the fall, and because of the proximity of the American border—hardly 50 kilometers away from the Canadian border—this is an urgent matter for all Canadian men and women.

• (1845)

External Affairs officials have discussed the problem and are monitoring the situation very closely. They have been assured that the Perry station will be given the green light only if it meets the safety standards established by the commission.

My colleague from York East (Mr. Redway) said a moment ago that it is true that we do not have any control. But in fact we do have some form of control. As long as Canadians like yourself continue to raise the issue and advocate a prudent approach, and especially as long as the Department of External Affairs remains fully aware of the existence of this very serious problem, I think that is our form of control. This may not be the kind of control which has a direct impact on operations, but the Americans are conscious of our reaction and even they are concerned. The Hon. Member referred to the many demonstrations which took place, and I think this is quite legitimate.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.46 p.m.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO OFFICIAL OPPOSITION'S QUESTIONS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some observations about yesterday's Question Period. The Auditor General's Report had just come out and that led the Official Opposition to obvious and necessary questions about the multimillion dollar payment to the West Edmonton Mall Fantasyland authorized by the present Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) when he had the responsibility for the regional expansion portfolio.

The record is clear that the Minister's authorization overruled decisions by the former Liberal Government, the Minister's predecessor, officials in the Department, and the Government of Alberta on the matter. Taking that into consideration along with the criticism of the Auditor General, the questions were certainly justified.

The Minister's reply was to the effect that the Liberal question was motivated by an anti-western attitude. I suggest that it is unworthy for the Government to make any suggestion that this was based on anti-western feeling. It reminded me of the suggestion that the amendments proposed to the Meech Lake Accord were motivated by anti-Quebec or anti-francophone feeling.

The Government should remember that this type of answer is particularly damaging to the national unity of Canada because it always gets a bigger market than it deserves. Canada is a country of great regional diversity with a multicultural society.

When authentic racism and regional bias occur, it is bad enough and we have to deal with it, but to invent anti-western feeling and racism out of whole cloth, and to hide behind it, when the real issue is the Minister's decision, is damaging to Canada and despicable. Canadians of goodwill must wince whenever this happens and must hope that the Government will find some more—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Witer).

HUMAN RIGHTS

APPEARANCE OF JOSY TERELYA BEFORE STANDING COMMITTEE ON HUMAN RIGHTS

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, Josy Terelya has dedicated his life to the pursuit of religious freedom in Ukraine. His life is a living testimony to his faith, and an inspiration to all who value freedom of worship. The strength of his faith has sustained him in his long and arduous fight for the restoration of all rights to the Ukrainian Catholic Church in Ukraine.

Because Terelya had the courage of conviction to stand up to those who would deny religious freedom, he has spent most of his life, 23 years and four months, as an inmate of Soviet labour camps, prisons and psychiatric asylums.

Terelya has become a beacon of hope to the five million Ukrainian Catholics who reside in Ukraine, and a symbol of their commitment to the church, which remains strong, even in the face of an official ban.

Earlier this month, Terelya and his family were allowed to leave the Soviet Union, and later today he will appear before the House of Commons Standing Committee on Human Rights. I ask you to join me in welcoming this brave and inspiring individual to Canada, as he joins us here in the House today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GRAPE GROWERS—EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Government expects Canadian grape producers to be competitive with their California counterparts within seven years. Regrettably, our free trade negotiators did not include mention of the various man-made advantages provided to American growers which are not available to us.

Grape growers ask: Can Canadians get all the irrigation water they want at $1 an acre? No, they cannot, but Americans can. Can Canadians write off losses in excess of $5,000 if they are working at off-farm jobs? No, they cannot.

Do Canadians pay pickers similar low wages? No, they cannot. Can Canadians get land at comparably low cost and maintain control of it by paying low levels of land taxation? No, they cannot.

Our grape growers can compete, given similar pricing policies, but our Government has signed a trade accord which has left them with a deal which is extremely unfair.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF MANITOBA PREMIER

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin—Swan River): Mr. Speaker, any Canadian who understands the economy of western Canada will know that the Canada-U.S. trade agreement is of enormous importance to the west.

However, Premier Howard Pawley of Manitoba, having received his marching orders from Bob White and Shirley Carr, has taken a position diametrically opposed to the well-being of my Province of Manitoba.

He and his cabinet have begun a series of meetings across Manitoba, closed, by invitation only, no questions allowed. He has said: "I am not going to pretend that we have an open mind at this point". That is, regardless of what happens in the discussions with Manitobans, his Government will not bend on its opposition to the treaty.

Howard Pawley's vision of Canada is not shared by the vast majority of Manitobans, those who are not the pawns of the central union leaders. He does not speak for the cattle producers of Manitoba. He does not speak for the hog producers of Manitoba. He does not speak for the countless companies in Manitoba that are eager to compete in a North American market.

Howard Pawley, show some courage and stand up for Manitoba and western Canada. Support the trade agreement for which there is no alternative.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, the tendency of the New Democratic Party to mislead Canadians has once again reared its ugly head, but this time with darker motives.

In a letter today, the Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) denounces our Government's free trade agreement.

This Member attempts to instil fear and uncertainty by deceitfully claiming that hundreds of thousands of jobs will be lost and by predicting the end of social programs.

Why would the NDP write this letter? At its conclusion, the NDP Member exhorts the reader to sign the attached petition. So it seems the New Democratic Party's real reason for spreading this false propaganda is to solicit enough petitions in order to try to paralyze the work of the House of Commons. Instead of sabotaging debate in the House with this kind of letter, the NDP should democratically participate in a free and open discussion.

• (1410)

To the New Democratic Party I say stop underestimating the intelligence of the Canadian people. Get off your anti-Canadian bandwagon and stand up for Canada.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

IMPORTANCE OF EMPLOYMENT DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) will have to decide this week whether there will be a place in the Tories' blue heaven for non-profit organizations.

Mr. Speaker, the very survival of a number of agencies in Quebec depends on the Job Development Program, which enables them to provide certain services to the community and to have someone on duty at all times. Some of these agencies are specifically concerned with womens' needs. For instance, some outstanding work is being done by Alternative Naissance, a group that is trying to humanize the whole process of giving birth.

Employees of non-profit agencies are often women with families who have decided to work as volunteers for the benefit of their sisters and of society as a whole. Mr. Speaker, these women, like you and me, are entitled to live and work in an area that meets their personal and social aspirations.

Today I want to ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard), the Government and all Conservative Members to help guarantee the survival of these agencies that are so essential to the well-being of our society.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF LIBERAL AND NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTIES

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, why do the New Democratic Party and the Liberals want to keep western Canada in bondage? For years we have had the highest freight rates in the country which have made us pay extra for everything we import from Ontario and Quebec and, in addition, high freight rates have been a major obstacle to our industrialization.

Manufacturers flee in haste when they hear about the freight rates on anything made in the west destined for the east. The competition will force down the freight rates to and from eastern Canada. In other words, free trade will let western Canada escape from bondage. Is that why the Liberals and the NDP are so vehemently and so unfairly fighting free trade? Why do these two Parties want to ensure that western Canadians will always be hewers of wood and carriers of water?

Free trade will be a major factor in providing western Canada with a new challenge and with the freedom to pursue it. I give notice now to the Liberals, the socialists, and to Premier Peterson that western Canada wants free trade and we are determined to get it.

MEDICAL CARE

OPPOSITION TO BRITISH COLUMBIA PREMIER'S PROPOSAL

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am ashamed to report that the Premier of British Columbia plans to undermine Canada's medicare system. Recently he announced that British Columbia could soon have a system where those who can afford it would jump surgical waiting lists by paying to be treated at private hospitals. This is a two-tiered health care system, one for the rich and one for the poor. It contravenes the very principles of medicare Canadians support which require that high quality universal affordable services must be available for all Canadians regardless of incomes.

Canadians know that this American system which the Premier is copying is far inferior to Canada's medicare. Canadians overwhelming support the Canada Health Act. I appeal to the federal Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) who has a responsibility and duty to ensure that provinces comply with the Canada Health Act, to require that the full cash portion of the federal contribution only go to those provinces that conform.

Recent reports of the Auditor General have pointed out that this Minister has been negligent in his duty. He has not reported correctly to the House of Commons. I call upon the Minister to investigate this situation in British Columbia immediately and to ensure that future reports to Parliament contain full details as required by the Auditor General.

TRIBUTE TO ALBERTA ENTREPRENEURS

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, this week across Canada a very important event is taking place, Small Business Week 1987. The theme this year will be "Entrepreneurship—Creating Opportunities". Small Business Week has been jointly organized by the federal Government, the Chamber of Commerce and the Federal Business Development Bank.

This is an opportunity for Canadians to salute our entrepreneurs. I am proud to say that the Province of Alberta is one of the top provinces in producing entrepreneurs. Despite the set-backs of our resource industry, I can assure this House that the entrepreneurial spirit is alive and well in Alberta.

Small business produces one-quarter of our Gross National Product and accounts for 8 per cent of our exports. Canada depends on trade. The role of small business cannot be underestimated.

Our present prospects of a free trade agreement with the United States will undoubtedly give small business an even greater role in the future toward strengthening our economy. Small business produces 20 per cent of all wages of Canadian businesses and accounts for one-quarter of the income of all employees and owners in the private sector of our country. These figures would also be enhanced by a free trade agreement.

Small businesses offer better opportunities for women. Almost one-third of small businesses are owned by women, and these figures continue to improve.

I encourage all Canadians, particularly those in government, education, and the private sector to recognize, stimulate and promote the entrepreneurship option to potential innovators.

IRREGULARITIES COMMITTED BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, while the Government is making cuts in the Employment Development Program, while the Minister and this Government are cutting unemployment insurance benefits for older workers, and while the Government is refusing to make the early retirement program available to older workers, the Auditor General informs us that a Hongkong bank was able to avoid paying $200 million in income tax; that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) was able to get his friends $5 million for an amusement park; that at National Defence, $35 million was improperly spent, some equipment was not necessary, and $8,613 worth of equipment was bought which could have been bought for $912.

Mr. Speaker, it is outrageous that a Conservative Government that now wants to cut funds that are directly earmarked for Canadians, should waste taxpayers money to do its friends a favour.

AIRPORTS

OTTAWA INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—MAPLE LEAF LOUNGE—ABSENCE OF CANADIAN WINES

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, Ottawa is the capital of Canada and is, or should be, the epitome, the essence of all things Canadian. It has a spanking new airport with the commodious Maple Leaf Lounge.

I have the wine list of that lounge in my hand and it reads: "Imported red and white wine", in both official languages, without a mention of Canadian brands being available. In fact, no Canadian brands are available. Upon special request a search was made and the response given: "We do not stock Canadian wines".

Just think what a positive force the Maple Leaf lounges across the country could be if each one of them carried a short list of Canadian wines and if imports were made available upon request only. Is this not what a Canadian would expect if travelling abroad? Why do we at home have to be so different, downgrading and indifferent?

If this approach continues to exist I urge all Members of the House to pick up a bottle of Canadian wine—they are becoming collectors' items.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

AUTO PACT—POSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative MPs here in the House and outside in western Canada have been waging a despicable and offensive campaign against the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) on the Auto Pact. They have been saying that the Auto Pact is an example of free trade—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: —which Bob White, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), and others are denying to western Canada.

It is simply false to suggest that the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) trade deal is equivalent to the Auto Pact. The Auto Pact requires that the United States automakers maintain a certain level of investment in Canada, basically proportionate to their sales in Canada. If these U.S.-controlled automakers do not want to make such a commitment, they must pay tariffs to get their cars into Canada. Had the Government negotiated a free trade deal à la the Prime Minister in 1965, today many of the jobs and plants in the Canadian automotive sector would be found in Georgia or in Alabama.

My Leader and the NDP do not want western Canada to be just a resource hinterland. We want regional development and a diversified economy. In the past few days the Conservatives have been preaching a form of regional racism which is despicable, petty and false.

I dare them to call an election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—COMMITTEE HEARINGS—STUDY OF FINAL TEXT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think we all agree after that in saying to the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent): "Ed, let him back in".

• (1420)

Yesterday the Prime Minister defended the nonsensical proposition that it is right for the parliamentary committee to have only four days to study the final text of the trade deal with the United States.

In this session the parliamentary committee studying the Radio Act amendments took two months, and, Sir, that Bill was only three lines long. The parliamentary committee studying the National Archives Act amendment took two months. The committee on the reorganization plan of Bell Canada took six months. Three and a half months were spent on the Shipping Conferences Exemption Act.

Is the Prime Minister really defending his position in spending four days from the end of November until December 4 to study the final text of the trade deal which, we understand from Mr. Reisman, may run to 1,200 pages?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is, of course, misleading the House when he states that I defended the proposition that four days would be available. That is an absolutely fallacious statement. I made no such statement at all. The Leader of the Opposition, rather than indulge in this type of half truth, should stand up and tell the truth, because I made no such statement at any time. On the contrary, I indicated yesterday that ample time would be provided to all Members of the House to discuss this important national issue.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): How much?

Mr. Mulroney: Now he says, "how much".

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): How much?

Mr. Mulroney: The Leader of the Opposition just stated that I said four days, and I said no such thing.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The end of November is when it is brought in. December 4 is when the committee—

Mr. Axworthy: How much time are we going to get? Five days, six days?

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, yesterday or Monday, all Members of the House gave a richly deserved compliment to the Hon. Member for Cambridge who chaired the committee on Meech Lake in very difficult circumstances on a most complex issue. The members of that committee did a tremendous job in a matter of some weeks.

There is ample time for a parliamentary committee to do the same thing on the question of trade. I would hope that the right hon. gentleman would be encouraging the participation of ordinary Canadians in this process, rather than discouraging, which is precisely what he is attempting to do now.

INQUIRY HOW DETAILED COMMENT CAN BE MADE ON SPECIFIC SECTIONS OF AGREEMENT WITHOUT HAVING DEFINITIVE TEXT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary committee that examined the Meech Lake Accord had a definitive text. That is the point we are trying to make.

After more than two years of negotiations, lawyers for the two Governments have yet to agree on the exact wording of the final text. And now the Prime Minister expects the parliamentary committee to examine the entire text between the end of November and December 4.

The provincial governments still do not know what kind of programs and periods of adjustment will be provided for the clothing, footwear, agricultural and furniture industry. So how can they give detailed comments on specific items of the Agreement without having the final text?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Alain Dubuc said recently in La Presse, in referring to the position taken by the Leader of the Opposition on this question, that "his verbal excess was in reverse proportion to his comprehension of the issues".

I think the Leader of the Opposition is again showing his lack of comprehension with respect to a complex issue. The day after the Agreement in principle was signed, it was tabled in the House. There was considerable debate in parliamentary committees in Quebec. The Liberal Government of Ontario is sending a committee of six Ministers across the province to collect people's views, not withstanding the fact that the Government of Ontario does not have a final text. However, we know perfectly well that the final text will reflect all the demands that were negotiated and the Agreement in principle that was signed.

I think it is altogether normal and democratic that the House of Commons should receive the views of Canadians on the initial document, and in fact actively solicit such views, either positive or negative. It is a democratic exercise that is entirely consistent with our democratic principles in this House.

• (1425)

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister indulged himself in the citation of a personal comment. It is obvious that he wants to leave the House in the same position in which he entered it, namely, as president of an American subsidiary.

Everybody in the House knows that the Prime Minister supports this deal and that I oppose it. The only difference is that I am not afraid to give Canadians the time to study it, the time to express their views, and the time to form an opinion. That is the difference between the Prime Minister and myself.

The Prime Minister is forcing a parliamentary committee to conclude its hearings by early December because he wants to meet an American deadline of January 2. He has caved in on every other point to the Americans. Does he really have to force this Parliament to meet an American deadline?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when I was president of an American subsidiary I used to wave a lot to my hon. friend who was chairman of an American subsidiary.

It is well known that my right hon. friend is against the trade deal. It is well known that he does not have the slightest intention of trying to invite enlightened debate on it. It is well known that he wants to bring Canada back and protect us as a little Canada that will not compete in the world. It is well known that he believes in protectionism, and he is trying to drag us back into the 19th Century.

But I will have him know that the House of Commons is going to strike a committee which will go across the country. We are going to listen to Liberals, Conservatives, NDPers, and even Bob White. We are satisfied that Canadians will come back with a positive view of an instrument of liberalized trade that is going to bring Canada into the 21st Century and provide new wealth and new opportunities for all Canadians.

GRANT MADE TO WEST EDMONTON MALL AMUSEMENT PARK PROJECT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister who, yesterday, avoided legitimate opposition questions about the $5 million gift which the Deputy Prime Minister provided to Fantasyland by shamefully attempting—particularly shameful for a Deputy Prime Minister of Canada—to paint those who question his conduct as being anti-Alberta.

The facts are these. In 1986, some 1,200 Industrial and Regional Development Program applications across Canada, including 26 from the Province of Alberta, were rejected by the federal Government for funding because the applications did not meet the program criteria.

I ask the Minister: How is it that in the case of 1,200 applications from across Canada, including 26 from the Province of Alberta, the rules were sufficiently important to say "no", but in the case of the Deputy Prime Minister's pet project, Fantasyland at the West Edmonton Mall, the rules were clearly broken and, according to the Auditor General, an illegitimate $5 million taxpayer gift was given to the West Edmonton Mall Limited?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I certainly question the premise of the Hon. Member's question.

I should like to state that after consultation with my officials it is clear that the project was eligible under the Industrial and Regional Development Act. No rules were bent, as people are contending.

The application was received in December, 1983, and was initially not approved on the basis that the need for assistance was not proved. No formal rejection was issued, and the application was held in abeyance.

By mid-1985 economic circumstances had changed such that the Minister judged that the project would not be completed within the original time-frame and scope without government assistance. The Minister has discretion for such a decision under Section 8 of the Act.

The funding was directed toward portions of Fantasyland which were not completed at the time of the approval.

I might add that only 25 per cent of the original request was deemed appropriate at that time.

REASON FOR MAKING GRANT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, 25 per cent, 50 per cent, 75 per cent, or 100 per cent of an illegitimate taxpayer gift is still illegitimate.

The Minister has not cited the facts. He has cited something out of Fantasyland which bears no resemblance to the truth with respect to the grant. The original grant was approved by a Minister of DRIE who is no longer in the Cabinet, despite a Cabinet directive to the contrary. When the Deputy Prime Minister became Acting DRIE Minister he had a choice.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member could put his question.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, when the Deputy Prime Minister became Acting DRIE Minister and he discovered the rules had been broken and that the previous Minister had made an offer despite a Cabinet directive to the opposite, why did he not correct the problem? Why did he follow through on an illegitimate, illegal grant to a company not qualified for that grant under IRDP rules?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, it was fully eligible and fully warranted under the economic and social circumstances, and as well very beneficial for the whole economy of Edmonton and Alberta.

I would like to quote Mr. Frank Jackman, Alberta regional director of DRIE, an official of the Government. He said at that time on November 26, 1986, that "Ottawa decided to provide assistance because it was a good project that improved Edmonton's status as a tourist destination." He further goes on to say that "had the Government of Canada not made this contribution, we clearly didn't think at the time that this project could go ahead."

APPLICATION OF REGULATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the same Minister. According to the Auditor General's Report, it was in July, 1985, that the Cabinet reviewed the project and directed that funds be restricted to the Canada-Alberta tourism agreement. That entailed, according to the Department's regulations, provincial participation. The provincial Government had declined to participate and reached the decision, so we are told elsewhere, that the project was going to go ahead anyway.

Notwithstanding what the Minister has just told the House, isn't the decision taken by the then Acting Minister quite inconsistent with the regulations laid down in the Department as they affect tourist projects and two other principal criteria which the Department itself laid down? Isn't the decision that was taken inconsistent with the rules?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Not at all, Mr. Speaker. I think those allegations are totally false. It was well within the IRDP guidelines.

At the time the initial application was made in 1983 economic conditions were such that the Department felt the project was not eligible because the need for the funds had not been proved. When the application was finally approved, the need for the funds was clear. I have noted one of our top officials in the province saying that the money was needed to complete the project, a project that now provides 15,000 jobs in the Edmonton area. As a result, $200 million of tourist money is being spent in Edmonton alone and an awful lot of secondary economic benefits for Alberta and the west have accrued.

DEPARTMENTAL RULES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister said 1983. When the decision was originally made in 1983, the Minister says, economic circumstances were quite different. But the report, if the Minister will read it, does not refer to a Cabinet decision made in 1983. The criticism is made about one made in 1985, two years later. According to the Auditor General, it is at that time that the decision inconsistent within the rules was reached.

Since the Prime Minister is responsible for the over-all performance of Ministers acting consistently with the rules, is he in agreement that Ministers should follow the rules laid down in their own Departments, or are they free to break the rules if they think there is some short run political advantage to be gained?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, first, I would like the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party to recognize that no rules were bent.

Some Hon. Members: You broke them.

Mr. de Cotret: We followed a very rigid process as we do in every case. When one talks about political advantage, I talk about economic advantage, social advantage, and building in Alberta a tourist attraction that is second only to Disneyland in California in drawing one million tourists. This attraction, with slightly less than one million tourists, brings great benefits to the whole region and province.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, we are talking about a project according to the Auditor General, not Members on the opposition side, that had been rejected by the provincial Government, was inconsistent with the rules of the Minister's own Department and would have been proceeded with anyway. The Government in flagrant disregard of its own rules went ahead and made a $5 million grant.

Is the present Government of Canada saying that it will keep the rules only when they are convenient, otherwise they will be broken? Is that it?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member does not seem to understand that this decision was not inconsistent with the rules at all.

In 1983 it was believed that the project would go ahead without federal assistance. At that point the decision was held in abeyance. In 1985, and I quoted a senior official as saying it, in the best judgment of the Department at that point the project could not be completed without federal assistance.

I cannot understand what the Hon. Member opposite has against this Government's desire to create 15,000 jobs at a cost of only $5 million. Is that not in the interests of western Canada and in the interests of Alberta?

ELIGIBILITY OF PROJECT FOR FUNDING

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is on the same subject. It is directed to the Prime Minister in view of his concerns about morality in government. No matter how you cut it, this payment to Triple Five Corporation was immoral.

Mr. Speaker: I am not quite sure where the Hon. Member's suggestions or otherwise are leading.

An Hon. Member: To the gutter.

Mr. Speaker: I would indicate that the preamble perhaps should stick to facts or alleged facts and not become too argumentative. I also point out that it is improper to accuse a Minister of immorality or other things. I would ask the co-operation of the Hon. Member.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, the Minister in answering earlier questions said that the project was fully eligible, to use his words. The Auditor General in his report at Clause 16.94 said that the project was ineligible for funding.

Is the Minister saying that the Auditor General was wrong? Doesn't he consider it totally inappropriate for a Minister of the Crown to be contradicting an independent officer of Parliament?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to commend the Auditor General on a very even-handed report and for continually doing a very good job.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Cotret: I would like to quote the hon. gentleman, Mr. Dye, who said yesterday at his news conference "I am advised it was within the Minister's prerogative to make the payment out of IRDP, and he did so or Cabinet did so." I find no illogical statement there on his behalf. It has nothing to do with the bending of the rules in any way, shape or form.

• (1440)

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER ORDER INQUIRY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): The report speaks for itself when it says the project was ineligible for funding. That is the bottom line. In view of the concerns of the Auditor General, in view of the fact that this multi-billion-dollar corporation did not need these public funds in order for this billion-dollar project to go ahead, and in view of all the shenanigans that have taken place, will the Prime Minister order an inquiry into this?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I think I have laid out the facts as they are, not as the hon. gentleman would like to believe they are. In 1983 the project was technically ineligible because at that point it was viewed that the project could be completed without federal assistance. By 1985, conditions had changed. The Minister at that point acted within the rules of the IRDP, as the Auditor General himself states, in the best economic and social interests of that area of the country to bring jobs, output growth, and tourism to an area that sadly needed it, an area that needed diversification.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S COMMENTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Minister has said that in 1985 DRIE officials said that conditions had changed and funding must be proceeded with. Why then did the Auditor General say in his report that the project was reviewed in 1985 by the DRIE internal board which recommended against support by IRDP, and that in July of 1985 the Cabinet reviewed the project and directed the federal funds to be restricted to the Canada-Alberta Tourism Agreement, not IRDP? In light of these things, why is the Minister saying the opposite thing to us in the House today?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer in two parts. First, the Auditor General clearly said himself that he was advised it was within the Minister's prerogative to make the payment out of IRDP and he did so or Cabinet did so. Second, Frank Jackman, the Alberta regional director in the Department, says very clearly—

Ms. Copps: Blame the civil servants.

Mr. de Cotret: We get advice from our officials. On November 26, 1986, he said that in his judgment, had the federal Government not moved, that project would not have been completed, and we are talking about 15,000 jobs, $200 million in tourist spending in Edmonton alone, not including the money spent outside Edmonton in the whole region.

INELIGIBILITY OF TOURISM PROJECTS FOR GRANTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, there still was a breach of a Cabinet decision by the former Minister in charge of DRIE. I would also like to ask the Minister how they can make this kind of a grant to the Ghermezian brothers in Edmonton for Fantasyland when the rules that were Gazetted for the Department say very clearly that tourism operations are ineligible for contributions.

In light of the fact that the former Minister himself issued a press release in November of 1984 that said tourism projects are ineligible for these kinds of grants, how could they make this grant to the buddies of the Deputy Prime Minister for Fantasyland in Edmonton?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, any Cabinet Minister in this House would be happy to be able to create 15,000 jobs for a contribution of $5 million. What does the Hon. Member have against western Canada? What does he have against Alberta? Why is he haggling on this point? For 15,000 jobs, $5 million is a hell of a good deal for Canadians and a hell of a good deal for western Canada.

ENVIRONMENT WEEK 1986—COSTS OF CAMPAIGN

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment and concerns the juicy rake-off of $143,000 to a consultant which he made in the 1986 Environment Week publicity campaign.

Yesterday the Minister said in the House in his criticism of the Auditor General that an independent report commended the Minister for the project. Is it not true that the same report says that the Government paid invoices having no idea of the magnitude of the cost? Is it not true that $75,000 was paid for artists who had not charged for their services? Is it not true that the Department paid $370,000 to an outfit called Paroles et Musique without a copy of the contract, and is it not true that a television show was produced and never used? This being the case, how could the Minister rise in the House yesterday to try to make the people of Canada believe that nothing was wrong with this whole sordid affair?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member quotes selectively from an independent assessment, done at arm's length from my Department, of the program we launched for Environment Week in 1986. Let me quote from the same report: "We are satisfied that total costs were on the upper threshold of acceptable costs—the Department should be commended for having the courage to attempt what it did—we do not agree that the $1 million spent was a waste of money."

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, please do not let me hire that Minister as an accountant when he gets defeated because it is obvious that anyone would go bankrupt with that kind of mishandling of taxpayers' money.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question.

[Translation]

ENVIRONMENT WEEK 1986—DEPARTMENT'S EXPENDITURES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, Canadians now know that $143,000 were uselessly paid in commissions, that expenses were paid without invoices being provided for anybody whatsoever.

Is the Minister now prepared to promise that each invoice concerning this case will be tabled in the House? Is he prepared to appear before the parliamentary committee to account for his departmental outlays in connection with the 1986 Environment Week? If not, why?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question, let me respond directly by saying that I would be pleased and proud to appear before the relevant committees of the House of Commons to defend my budget and my estimates, as I do as a matter of course and as any member of the Cabinet does as a matter of course.

The Hon. Member casts aspersions on a program that was designed to promote public awareness of environmental matters in direct response to a recommendation made to me and my Department and the Government of Canada by a group of environmentalists from one coast to the other who met in Ottawa in November, 1985. The group released a report which said that the public is not sufficiently aware of the extent or complexity of environmental issues or their possible solutions.

It urged the Government of Canada to use large-scale promotions through television, radio and newspapers to increase the public's awareness and understanding of environmental issues. We did so through an advertising campaign that won the Canadian Public Relations Society's highest award for public service advertising. It also won the United States National Advertising Agency Network award for public service advertising.

GRANT MADE TO WEST EDMONTON MALL AMUSEMENT PARK PROJECT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question deals with the Deputy Prime Minister. The record will show that yesterday the Deputy Prime Minister said he would debate the issue with me any time in Edmonton. I look forward to being in touch with his office so we can set it up.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: My question is for the Prime Minister who is ultimately responsible for the Deputy Prime Minister. Given the fact that we have the cumulative evidence of a press release from a former Minister, the wording in the Gazette and the words of the Auditor General himself with respect to the ineligibility of this proposal, I wonder what the Prime Minister has to say to the rest of Canada about the fact that one of his Ministers was so eager to break the rules. What kind of signal is the Prime Minister sending to Canadians in general if he is not willing to get up in the House here and now and disavow this kind of behavior on the part of one of his senior Ministers?

• (1450)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend asks what the Prime Minister has to say. I say that I can hardly wait for the debate in Edmonton.

Mr. Broadbent: Okay, let's have it.

Mr. Mulroney: When western Canadians have a choice between that Member and the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada they will choose the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada every time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Let's have the debate. Go ahead.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill could put his supplementary question.

Mr. Blaikie: I was waiting for an answer to my question, Mr. Speaker, but it looks as though that will not be forthcoming.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Given the fact there is amassed evidence to the effect that his senior Minister in his Government broke the rules, what kind of signal is the Prime Minister sending to all those communities which applied for funding for such projects and need jobs every bit as much as Edmonton, and some of which need them more, and did not get this kind of funding?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blaikie: What kind of message is the Prime Minister sending when one of his senior Ministers breaks the rules in order to give $5 million to a couple of "gazillionaires" who need the money like they need a hole in the head? What kind of message is that?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of DRIE have provided all of the objective data which I think should persuade my hon. friend of the very serious—

Mr. Broadbent: Oh, yeah?

Mr. Mulroney: —and I address myself to the Leader of the NDP—very serious misstatements being made by his Members which are quite at variance with formal statements made by senior public officials of DRIE and information provided by the Minister.

My question is why—

Mr. Broadbent: You answer the questions.

Mr. Mulroney: —is the NDP so desperately concerned with raising matters that damage western Canada?

Mr. Broadbent: That's regional racism. You know that.

Mr. Riis: Very divisive.

Mr. Broadbent: You're a disgrace.

Mr. Mulroney: The answer, I suppose—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the right hon. gentleman could complete his answer.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I was trying to answer the question. All of the objective data has been provided. If my hon. friend examines the data very carefully he will see that the Deputy Prime Minister and the former President of the Treasury Board conducted themselves entirely properly as has been confirmed by senior officials of DRIE. The objective was simple and straightforward although my hon. friend clearly disagrees with it. The objective was to assist entrepreneurs in Edmonton to provide thousands of new jobs and much needed diversification of the western economy.

I know that my hon. friends in the Liberal and New Democratic Parties are opposed to the interests of western Canada. That becomes clearer every day.

Mr. Broadbent: That's a lie.

Mr. Orlikow: That's why you're at 24 per cent.

Mr. Fulton: You're scum. You're lying scum.

Mr. Broadbent: No wonder you're at 24 per cent. That's the level of your argument.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: Talk about racism.

Mr. Fulton: Go ahead and pump out more lies.

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST THAT DRUMMONDVILLE REGIONAL OFFICE NOT BE AFFECTED BY STRUCTURAL REORGANIZATION OF DEPARTMENT OF EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In connection with next summer's employment structural reorganization of the Department of Employment and Immigration, the Minister assured me that the Drummondville district regional office would not be closed as a result of the reorganization. Is he now in a position to confirm this so as to reassure my constituents and the Drummond federal office staff?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the restructuration of employment centres and employment development centres is a nationwide project. Far from being complete in Quebec, it is still under way and any information to the effect that we intend to close Drummondville's district centre is unfounded. No such decision has been made concerning restructuration in Quebec.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—BILL C-22—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO NEGOTIATOR

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. This morning in a speech made to a trade conference in Toronto, Simon Reisman, the chief trade negotiator, stated that on October 3, the last day of the negotiations, the Canadian negotiating team was prepared to offer Bill C-22, the drug patent Bill, as part of a concession to have Canadians exempted from Section 337 of the Trade Bill.

Will the Prime Minister admit that that is a total contradiction of the statements made by Ministers of his Government in this House under their oaths as Ministers that Bill C-22 was never part of those concessions?

Now that this statement by the chief negotiator is on the record what action will the Prime Minister take against those Ministers who made those statements? Will he confirm that in fact Bill C-22 is still part of the concessions the Government is making to the United States to get a deal?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Is this another Axworthy special?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it has not been unknown in this House for the Hon. Member to shuffle the words before he states them. I do not accept his preamble. I categorically state again what I have said time and time before, that that which he attributes to the chief negotiator is false. We never offered any elements of C-22 or C-22 as a whole as any part of the negotiations. That has been gone through many times in this House. I stand by what is on the record of the House.

UNITED STATES OMNIBUS TRADE BILL

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister because there is now a clear contradiction between statements made by the chief negotiator and the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Give us the exact quote.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Reisman said that if Canada does not receive an exemption from the omnibus Trade Bill that the American Congress is presently considering there will be serious trouble and, in fact, there would not be a trade agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Read the quote.

Mr. Axworthy: Under those circumstances, why is the Government proceeding to sign the agreement without knowing what the results of the omnibus Trade Bill will be? Is the Government being precipitous in this case? Was Mr. Reisman stating government policy when he said that there should not be an agreement if we do not get an exemption from that omnibus Trade Bill?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the only contradiction that this House is hearing is that between this member of the Liberal Party and the 48 per cent of the members of the Liberal Party who support free trade.

IMPLICATIONS OF TEARING UP AGREEMENT

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister for International Trade. In recent days Leaders of the Liberal and New Democratic Parties have indicated that, given the chance, they would directly intervene without hesitation to destroy any previously ratified Canada-U.S. trade agreement.

As we all know, Canada has a fine tradition of honouring the commitments and agreements it formulates with the U.S. and all countries. We have achieved a very high degree of respect for doing so.

What would be the implication for Canadians—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Hypothetical.

Mr. St. Germain: —of tearing up this historic trade agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Out of order.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, that is a very timely question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Carney: It was answered today very well by The Globe and Mail which pointed out that they would be tearing up the new Canada-U.S. Trade Commission to monitor trade. They would be tearing up the new binational trade courts ready to make binding decisions.

• (1500)

They would abolish the obligations of American politicians to specify Canada when they take side-swipes against the rest of the world. They would abolish and replace the group which will be writing new trade laws between the two countries. They would be reimposing high tariffs on many Canadian goods entering the United States. They would force the reimposition of all those quotas and tariffs on meat, pork and fish going into the United States. They would be turning down the $4 billion procurement package we negotiated. They would expose the Auto Pact to the attacks of American politicians, and they would say at the end of the day that they have saved Canada.

GRANTS MADE TO EDMONTON AMUSEMENT PARK AND OTHER PROJECTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Auditor General's report points out that not only was there this $5 million special deal for Fantasyland in Edmonton, as a result of a small survey that he and his staff conducted, there were 14 other projects that were also approved, which he says were inconsistent with the Act, inconsistent with regulations, and inconsistent with internal policy.

If the Prime Minister is convinced that there has not been a rather fast and loose way of dealing with the rules, is he prepared to table this list of 14, with the explanations attached to them?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants the list of the 14, I suggest he ask the Auditor General. After all, he is the officer of Parliament and he is the one who suggested that there were 14. He must have identified them and I suggest that the Hon. Member take the opportunity he already has to ask the Auditor General directly for the list.

Mr. Riis: Of course, as the Hon. Minister knows, the Auditor General will not provide that. He considers them to be private. If the Minister was confident in his decision and his Cabinet colleagues' decisions, certainly he would provide these for the scrutiny of the Members of the House of Commons.

ELIGIBILITY OF EDMONTON PROJECT FOR GRANT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister. He has indicated the tremendous boon to tourism that this provided for the city of Edmonton. Since the regulations make it perfectly clear that IRDP grants are not supposed to be for the development of tourism infrastructure, and most Members of Parliament know from applications by their own constituents regarding tourism infrastructure that they are told there is no money available for this type of use, will he explain how it was available for this particular project, particularly when it went against the recommendations of his own staff?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology) Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to answer the Hon. Member. The department notes state: "It is noted that the application for assistance for this project was received on December 7, 1983". It goes on: "While the tourism aspect was dropped from the IRDP on November 9, 1984, the application was protected under the grandfathering provision of the changes".

It was very clear that projects submitted before December 9, 1984, were eligible for IRDP grants, and this project qualified under that grandfathering clause.

The Hon. Member is quite right that today tourism projects are no longer covered by IRDP. Those are the regulations, and we followed them.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise Hon. Members that Question Period has ended.

QUESTIONS OF PRIVILEGE

WITHDRAWAL OF UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege concerns yesterday's Question Period. In view of the statements yesterday by the Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), withdrawing his comments accusing the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) of kick-backs, I have no hesitation whatsoever in completely withdrawing the unparliamentary comments I made yesterday during Question Period with respect to the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap. I wish also to apologize to you, Mr. Speaker, and to my colleagues in the House of Commons for this unfortunate breach of parliamentary tradition.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) for acting in the best traditions of this place and for extending the complete and unequivocal apology and withdrawal, which he has done.

PRIVILEGE

STATEMENT BY MINISTER—PROVINCIAL COMPLIANCE WITH CANADA HEALTH ACT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I served notice of a Question of Privilege. During a committee meeting on April 27, 1987, in response to a specific question from me the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) promised that he would provide Parliament with the report on provincial compliance with the Canada Health Act. My concern in raising the issue was that there seemed to be no federal accountability for breaches that were occurring in Alberta, British Columbia and other provinces with respect to user fees. On April 27, the Minister committed that he would provide such an assessment to Parliament.

You will notice in the Auditor General's report, with respect to the issues relating to health and welfare, there is a specific reference to the Minister's refusal, or certainly negligence, in not complying with the requirements of the Canada Health Act in ensuring that all provincial governments are not breaking the Act by charging user fees. There is a specific reference that the Minister of National Health and Welfare is negligent in not reporting to Parliament on specific requests from Members.

I submit that certainly as a Member of Parliament and critic for Health and Welfare, my privileges are being abused when I cannot get the basic information from the Minister about how many provinces are charging user fees, in what areas they are charging user fees and how much it is costing the people of Canada.

The Auditor General's report indicates that Canadians are paying user fees in the millions of dollars, and the Minister's refusal to provide this information to Parliament is in breach—

Mr. Speaker: Of course, I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member but I felt that her remarks were getting well beyond what was the actual question of privilege.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has expressed some points of view which simply do not square with the facts or my responsibilities under the Canada Health Act. The Canada Health Act came into effect in July, 1984, and contained provisions that did not make illegal either extra billing or user fees.

The act provided that an amount of money commensurate with that collected through extra billing or user charges by any given province would have to be withheld by the federal Government, relative to the amount of money collected under those two terms.

I became Minister on September 17, 1984. No province at that time had been in conformity with those two provisions under the Canada Health Act. Specifically, there had been no changes prior the passage of the act. The federal Government indicated that it would first reduce the amount of acrimony and division between the federal Government and the provincial governments in the area of health. Therefore, I discussed exactly that fact with provincial Ministers of Health.

Today, and in fact prior to the end of the three-year hiatus period for which the Act provided, there is not one province today reporting extra billing. There is not one province today reporting user charges. Therefore, under the terms of the act, that money is not being withheld.

Second, the Auditor General stated that I had to make an annual report, which I have done.

I could go another route, and perhaps this is what the Hon. Member is suggesting, that I now ask the new Minister for health in Ontario, for example, to report on a daily, weekly or monthly basis on how the province is running its health care system. Is the province meeting its obligations under the health care system? What I am doing is asking provincial Ministers of health to give me a report and, under all Parliamentary traditions and rules, when our provincial Ministers, our provincial colleagues, our federal Ministers, our federal colleagues, put their reports on the Parliamentary table, it is accepted as their word, and I intend to do that, too.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to remind the Minister that I asked him on April 12, 1987, for a list. I have been waiting ever since. He promised it to me.

I would like the Speaker, in making his decision on this matter, to refer to Section 12.146 of the Auditor General's report in which the Auditor General is very specific about the faulty reporting mechanisms of the Department of National Health and Welfare. He suggests that because the Operational Plan Framework contains no reference to non-insured health benefits, despite the fact that they represent 40 per cent of this activity's costs, that information to Parliament about the $400 million Indian and Northern Health Services activity is inadequate.

It is the Auditor General who has suggested that the Ministry is deficient in reporting to Parliament and it was, indeed, the Minister himself who gave me a commitment last April that he was going to provide Parliament with the tools with which we can examine whether in fact the Canada Health Act is being complied with. We believe that there are breaches going on under the nose of the Minister because he is trying to shield the provinces rather than laying all the facts on the table for Parliament to make a judgment.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) has raised a matter and I have, of course, listened carefully. The Hon. Minister has replied. I am not completely satisfied that it is a question of privilege. However, I will, out of courtesy to the Hon. Member, consider carefully the Hansard report of the exchange and shall return to the Chamber with the matter as soon as it is appropriate.

I thank the Hon. Member for Hamilton East and I also thank the Hon. Minister for rising in his place and putting his own explanation of this matter at the service of the Chair.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED ACCUSATION BY MEMBER

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I rise with relation to a question of privilege of which I gave notice earlier today pursuant to Section 20(2) of the rules of procedure. My question relates to statements made by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) during and immediately after Question Period yesterday. I raise this question of privilege at the earliest opportunity after I have been able to review the record of yesterday's proceedings.

The record clearly indicates that the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap, during Question Period yesterday, twice accused the Government side of the House of "kickbacks" in relation to the funding of a tourism project in Edmonton. I would like to quote very briefly from page 10436 of Hansard:

> MR. RIIS: A $5 million kickback.

Later on:

> MR. RIIS: Five million dollar kickback.

Immediately after Question Period, and in response to a question of privilege raised by my colleague, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap denied he had intended to accuse the Deputy Prime Minister of taking a kickback. However, at no time did he deny making the statement and at no time did he withdraw. Rather, and specifically, he withdrew any suggestion that he intended to refer to the Deputy Prime Minister. I would like to quote from page NN-2 of the "blues" in which Mr. Riis is reported as having said:

> —I cannot imagine any scenario where I would ever accuse the Hon. Member of kickbacks. I did not in the past. I did not today. If there is any suggestion that I did, I want to completely withdraw it. I want to make it completely clear that I have the most respect for the hon. gentleman.

He was very specific in making his references relate to the Deputy Prime Minister.

In dealing with the question of privilege raised by the Deputy Prime Minister you, Mr. Speaker, also limited it to the issue of whether or not the Deputy Prime Minister had been the focus of the accusation. You said, and I quote from page LL-11 of the "blues":

> It often depends on exactly how it was put and in what context. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap said that he did not in any way mean to imply that the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister took a kickback—

In other words, it was recognized by yourself, Sir, as it had been made clear in the statement by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap, that his reference was exclusively, in his response to the question of privilege, to the Deputy Prime Minister.

The record shows unequivocally that twice the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap accused someone on the government side of taking kickbacks. He says he did not mean the Deputy Prime Minister. He must then have been referring to another Minister from Alberta, to all Ministers on the government side or, indeed, to a Member of Parliament of this House. That, Sir, is a very serious allegation, an allegation made not casually but made twice, an allegation of criminal activity which remains on the record until it is unconditionally withdrawn by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap.

I would ask the Hon. Member to unconditionally withdraw his allegations of kickbacks so that the record is set straight.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no question. I certainly do that. I withdraw any accusation, any implication that that term might suggest for either the Deputy Prime Minister or any other Member of Cabinet.

ALLEGED IMPROPER ACQUISITION OF LETTER

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I rise to suggest that the privilege of all Members of this House has been infringed upon. During statements by Members today the Hon. Member for the Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley) made reference to a letter, supposedly received today by himself, written by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp). I understand that letter expressed my colleague's concern regarding the Canada-U.S. trade agreement. However, that is not the issue.

That letter was sent to printing last Friday. It was returned to my colleague's office this Monday afternoon. Those letters remain in that office. Those letters have not been mailed out to the constituents to whom they are ultimately to go.

I believe we should be able to utilize the services with which your office provides us, Mr. Speaker, according to the rules of the House, having the knowledge that whatever we send to printing, whatever goes from printing to our offices, and whatever remains in our offices, is in fact secure. If we cannot have faith in that, then our ability to function as Members of Parliament is reduced accordingly.

I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to investigate the process, to inquire of the Hon. Member the manner in which the letter was received in order to determine whether or not there has been a breach of privilege which affects not only the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon in this particular instance, but all Hon. Members. If we cannot feel secure in using the printing services, then we cannot function as Members of Parliament.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to my honourable friend's point of view. I would have to say his "point of view" because it would seem to me if there is any breach of privilege, it should be brought by the Hon. Member who alleges the breach affected him or her.

Mr. Keeper: It affects us all.

Mr. Lewis: This is all hearsay.

Mr. Manly: You heard the Member opposite.

Mr. Lewis: I have no difficulty with the Hon. Member who claims the letter came out of his office raising a question of privilege, but this is all hearsay and allegations. None of it comes from the Hon. Member who is allegedly complaining, reasonably quickly, I might add, for a Member—I am not suggesting he was not in the Chamber, I just suggest it is not the Member himself bringing the point of privilege.

Second, I find it rather strange that we as Government are continually beset by "a leaked document", "a brown envelope". My goodness, we did the same when we were over there. They are the fare of the Opposition.

Mr. Keeper: You know it was a brown envelope?

Mr. Lewis: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, this may have come to our attention through a brown envelope, just as the Hon. Member from Yorkton, with a grin from ear to ear, always has brown envelopes. I am sorry, is the "brown envelope" routine only good when it goes one way?

Mr. Keeper: Did it come in a brown envelope?

Mr. Lewis: Is it only good one way? It is like Standing Order 96(2); they only want a committee to study something when it suits them. When we want a committee to study something, it does not suit them.

• (1520)

I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, there is no question of privilege. I say that because it was not brought by the Member who is alleging a question of privilege.

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I thought I may be able to offer a few words, I hope, to assuage the concerns of the Whip of the New Democratic Party—

Mr. Angus: Thank you for the demotion!

Mr. Gormley: I am sorry, I have either promoted or demoted him. I am referring to the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) who raised the question of privilege.

First, I concur with what the Minister has said. I think it would be more appropriate if the question of privilege were brought by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp), a copy of whose correspondence I spoke about in the House today.

I would like to clarify, Sir, that I did not in my statement to the House refer to when the letter was received. I simply said that the letter was dated today.

With respect to one's own office security and one's own privileges, because we have not heard from the Member who wrote the letter, I think that the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan who has raised the point may have inadvertently caused a great deal of concern about the actual security of a Member's own office. That, indeed, would be a very serious charge. I would like to at this point state unequivocally that this matter has nothing to do with the security of one's own office being breached, as in the case of one having entered an office surreptitiously to obtain a document. That is clearly not the case.

Mr. Keeper: Where did you get it from?

Mr. Gormley: Where did I get this letter? That is the question held by many concerned New Democrats.

I am delighted to share with the House that the tradition of leaking documents, that citizens consider odious and obnoxious in content and against the principles of Parliament, is alive and well. The document came into my hands as a result of someone who felt that the Government should make public correspondence that the NDP is issuing and, might I add as well, using the House of Commons printing service which is paid for by the taxpayers of Canada, as well as the the frank, something which we all take very seriously.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the comments of the Hon. Members. I believe that this is a matter which affects all Hon. Members. There are one or two scenarios which are possible, given the comments by the Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake that this letter was not obtained directly from the Member's office, that is, the office of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon. There are only two sources by which the document could have been obtained.

The first is that employees of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon could have sent to the Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake a brown envelope. The second possibility is, an employee of the House of Commons who is involved in the process of taking documents from a Member's office to the printing service where they are printed and then returned. This letter has not been mailed out yet. It has not gone beyond the precincts of Parliament. Those are the only two options.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon, is not here. He is in his riding. However, he is paying attention right now I am sure in front of a television.

I believe that the matter is important enough, Mr. Speaker, that you should review the situation to determine if there has been a breach of privilege. If the privilege of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon has been breached within the confines of the House of Commons, as a result of the actions of employees who are charged with the responsibility of serving Members in a non-partisan way, then I think it is very important that Your Honour examine the issue and report back to the House. I am not talking about a government department in which a disgruntled employee believes that the Opposition needs certain information. I am talking about employees of the House of Commons who are charged with the responsibility of serving Members in a non-partisan way.

Mr. Speaker: I will consider carefully the representations of Hon. Members. I have some doubt as to whether this is really a question of privilege. However, I am concerned about the suggestion that there may have been a breach of security or that this particular document might have been obtained from a Member's office.

I have listened carefully to the Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley). I thank him for the clarification which he gave. I will look into the matter carefully and report back to the House.

POINT OF ORDER

ALLEGED USE OF UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Earlier in the Question Period the Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley) made reference to the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) and used the term "deceitful" in his representation. As you will know, Mr. Speaker, and as the Hon. Member well knows, the term "deceitful" or the use of the word "deceit" according to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition is a term which we have agreed is unparliamentary. I simply ask the Hon. Member to withdraw that term.

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, in reference to the use of my language, I did indeed use the word "deceitful". I know that it is a time-honoured parliamentary tradition that one talks about a dispute of fact. The material in the letter was adjudged by me to be deceitful and dishonest. I know that it is not appropriate to use that language. Thus I would withdraw the use of the word "deceitful".

Mr. Speaker: I wish to thank the Hon. Member.

STATUS OF WOMEN

TABLING OF 1986-87 ANNUAL REPORT OF ADVISORY COUNCIL

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of State responsible for the status of women, pursuant to Standing Order 67, I am pleased to table, in both official languages, the 1986-87 Annual Report of the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I am tabling, in both official languages, the Government's response to petitions, Nos. 332-3118, 332-3133, 332-3148, 332-3220, 332-3234, 332-3235, 332-3241, 332-3242 and 332-3244.

I wish to make it very clear that Petition No. 332-3220 tabled by the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly) was certified on July 22, 1986, and submitted to the House on October 1, 1987.

Petition No. 332-3241—

Mr. Riis: So what?

Mr. Lewis: I will tell the Hon. Member what. There are three petitions all with respect to the decommissioning of lighthouses in British Columbia.

Mr. Manly: A very important issue!

Mr. Lewis: Right, it is a very important issue. Members of the public who sign these petitions have every right to think that they will be tabled in the House properly and quickly—

Mr. Riis: Properly? They were tabled properly.

Mr. Lewis: —and have a Government response, which we are giving.

Mr. Riis: It is not for you to determine when we can table a petition. What arrogance!

Mr. Lewis: Fair enough.

Petition No. 332-3148 regarding the transfer of dangerous goods in the Vancouver Harbour certified on November 28, 1986, by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), was tabled in the House on September 25, 1987.

Mr. Riis: You cannot control everything in the House.

Mr. Lewis: The Government is responding to all of those petitions within 45 days.

Mr. Riis: Big deal!

REMEMBRANCE DAY

COMMEMORATION OF SERVICE MEN AND WOMEN

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs and Minister of State (Senior Citizens)): Mr. Speaker, as it will be necessary for me to leave tomorrow for Europe to take part in various remembrance services on that continent, representing the Canadian Government there, I would request the indulgence of the House to make a short statement on the meaning and importance of Remembrance Day which is coming up, as we all know, on November 11. I will, of course, be representing the veterans of the country at that Remembrance Day service at eleven o'clock on November 11 here in Ottawa.

On November 11, we will once again have the sacred opportunity to pay silent tribute to the more than 110,000 Canadian men and women who died in the two world wars and in Korea.

Nearly 48,000 of those who died are buried in France, and this year we were reminded twice of the great respect such men and women won for Canada in the battles in that country.

The seventieth anniversary of the capture of Vimy Ridge recalled that triumphant Easter Monday when the brightest and the best of a pioneering generation showed what our young nation could achieve. Those of us who had the privilege to accompany some of those First World War veterans back to Vimy last April were in the presence of nation builders in every sense of the word.

Then, in August, Canadians commemorated the youth of another generation lost in World War II. Dieppe saw all three of our services in battle together for the first time. In spite of this terrible mission, the fact remains that the Canadians involved at Dieppe could not have done more.

Nearly 4,500 Canadians had their hopes and dreams extinguished at Vimy and Dieppe. Thousands more were wounded or taken prisoner, and yet more thousands back home had to learn to cope without a parent, spouse, bread-winner, or other loved one.

For Veterans Affairs every day is Remembrance Day as we help the spouses and dependants of those who did not make it home from the horrors of war.

To me, Mr. Speaker, no words could better express the horror of war and the hope that we will never experience it again than Lt. Col. John McCrae's poem entitled "In Flanders Fields". He wrote the following immortal words:

In Flanders fields the poppies blow
Between the crosses, row on row,
That mark our place; and in the sky
The larks, still bravely singing, fly
Scarce heard amid the guns below.
We are the Dead. Short days ago
We lived, felt dawn, saw sunset glow,
Loved and were loved, and now we lie
In Flanders fields.
Take up our quarrel with the foe:
To you from failing hands we throw
The torch; be yours to hold it high,
If ye break faith with us who die
We shall not sleep, though poppies grow
In Flanders fields.

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull—Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of the Official Opposition, it is an honour and a privilege to add a few words to the speech by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees).

Today, I would like to draw the attention of all Members of this House and all Canadians to the very meaning of Remembrance Day, the day on which we honour those brave men and women who served Canada during two world wars and the Korean War.

Mr. Speaker, in his speech the Minister stressed the importance of the anniversaries of Vimy and Dieppe, and he recalled our contribution in the Korean War. Canada earned its reputation as a nation at Vimy. It experienced the tragic bloodshed at Dieppe and showed its courage to the world. It finally obtained the recognition it deserved at Kapyong, in Korea.

It is only fitting that this House and all Canadians across this great country of ours stop for a few moments to meditate, to be thankful and to pay tribute to those young Canadians who gave their lives in defence of the freedom we enjoy today.

[English]

While remembering those who died, let us not forget those Canadians who returned home full of anticipation and hope, eager to forge a renewed life in an atmosphere of freedom and peace. Included in these returnees were those who suffered life-long handicaps and disabilities. We should never forget the heavy price that these veterans paid for freedom.

I wish to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to recognize the role of the veterans' associations such as the Royal Canadian Legion, the War Amputations of Canada, the National Council of Veterans' Associations, and the Army, Navy, and Air Force veterans in Canada. All of those groups are genuinely concerned with the plight of Canadian veterans. I salute them for their continuing efforts in promoting the cause of our veterans.

Mr. Speaker, 22 years ago, Pope Paul VI addressed the General Assembly of the United Nations, beseeching those present to pay attention to those memorable words he spoke: "No more war—never again!"

Mr. Speaker, it has been 42 years since the end of World War II. We must remain forever mindful of the words of Pope Paul VI, if we are to maintain peace in this world for present and future generations of Canadians.

On Wednesday, November 11, Canadians from all walks of life will stop a few moments to remember those of our fellow citizens who fought and survived on foreign beaches and also those who fought and died in the service of our country.

And when twilight comes and when day breaks, we shall remember them.

[English]

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, I am pleased to join with the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) and my colleague from the Official Opposition in reminding all Canadians of the importance of November 11, Remembrance Day.

While public attitudes about the observance of this special day have changed over the years, the significance of this day has not. At the eleventh hour, on the eleventh day, of the eleventh month, Canadians will pause at cenotaphs and places of work to remember the supreme sacrifice made by more than 110,000 men and women who fought for freedom and peace in two world wars, and in Korea.

Veterans, their families, friends and relatives of both lost loved ones and returning soldiers, sailors, and airmen, will recall special memories. We, too, will remember them and pray that war will never again happen.

To those veterans who returned home to begin life anew, we shall be eternally in their debt. We in this Party commend the Government for its non-partisan attitude and approach in working with all Members of the House to ensure an even better life for our 640,000 surviving veterans.

As we approach Remembrance Day, it is also important to remember that the day will come when we will be helping more widows of veterans than the total number of veterans themselves. Even now 30 per cent of all recipients of disability pension benefits, and nearly 40 per cent of those in receipt of War Veterans Allowance, are widows.

I bring those figures to the attention of the House as a reminder that Canada's debt to veterans will not be repaid in full when the last veteran passes away. The lives of tens of thousands of families were disrupted and perpetually affected by war. As Members of Parliament and concerned citizens, it will be our ongoing duty to provide help to those families.

The best testimonial we could give to those of whom we speak today would be to redouble our efforts to bring economic and social justice to all people, so that the conflicts which occur will be lessened and we bring about real peace in our world.

As we recall the deeds of those who have gone before us, we are reminded of the words of Rudyard Kipling, as inscribed on the War Memorial in Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario. They read:

From little towns in a far off land we came,
To save our honour and a world aflame;
By little towns, in a far land, we sleep,
And trust those things we won to you to keep.

We will remember them, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

PRESENTATION OF EIGHTH REPORT OF CANADA-EUROPE PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward—Hastings): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 101, I have the honour to present to the House, in both official languages, the eighth report of the Canada-Europe Parliamentary Association.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND INTERNATIONAL TRADE

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands) moved:

That the first report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade, presented to the House on Thursday, May 28, be concurred in.

He said: I wish to make a few remarks in support of my concurrence motion. The report entitled "For Whose Benefit" was tabled on May 28 after more than a year's study of Canada's Official Development Assistance Program. The study was done by the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade.

The committee held extensive hearings across Canada at which a wide cross-section of non-governmental organizations, businesses, individuals, and government officials presented their views. The committee also travelled to Africa where we visited aid projects in Tanzania, Ethiopia, and Senegal. It also travelled to Washington and New York for briefing sessions with officials from such organizations as the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank, and the United Nations Development Program.

The report "For Whose Benefit" cannot pretend to be an exhaustive study, but it reflects the results of a major piece of work by a committee of the House. At this time I should like to express appreciation for the work of the staff in helping us with our hearings and with the presentation of the report.

I think it is important that all Hon. Members of the House recognize the very difficult job which many Canadians are doing in the field in helping to carry on Canada's development assistance program in all continents of the world. It is a difficult and complex process.

Generally we felt that CIDA is doing a good job, given the kind of context within which it works. CIDA is the assistance link between the wealth of Canada and the poverty of many nations around the world. It handles a budget of some $2.5 billion per year.

We expect that CIDA is going to reflect Canadian values. Sometimes those values are more honoured in rhetoric than they are in reality. However, we expect that CIDA will reflect Canadian values in terms of moving toward greater equality for women, access for women, and greater concern for the environment. Sometimes in trying to implement Canadian values in a foreign context development assistance workers have a fairly difficult time. At the same time we give CIDA a mixed mandate, because in addition to protecting these values we also want to protect Canadian commercial interests.

The importance of development assistance cannot be overemphasized in the House today. Perhaps it could be symbolized by a poem which was published in The Christian Century about 20 years ago, written by Claire Van Breemen, in which a North American mother looks down at her one-year old child. I should like to read it. It is called For Jeremy, Age One and reads:

Sun-gilded Buddha with the gamin smile,
Fat diety of plenty and sure trust
Somewhere
(Where? Half a continent away, or half a world?)
Nemesis crawls
With groping baby fists
Searching for food-scraps in the gutter slime,
Or wakes to cry unhushed,
Frail moth-hands beating
At the terror and the dark.
Small son,
So long as any child
Suckles but bitterness
And wakes to fear,
You are not safe.
You are not wholly fed.

The poem suggests very clearly what we all know, that hunger and poverty in the Third World represent a nemesis for our civilization and for our children unless we find some effective way of dealing with it.

It is very important that Canada should maintain its aid program, that we should work with other nations in helping them to develop a more effective international aid program, and that our aid program should be as effective as it possibly can be.

The major findings, with the exception of the last chapter which dealt with the level of Canadian assistance, were concurred in by members of all three Parties. I should like to outline some of these major findings.

First, it said that Canada should establish a development charter with the following aims:

> i) The primary purpose of Canadian official development assistance is to help the poorest countries and people in the world.
> ii) Canadian development assistance should work always to strengthen the human and institutional capacity of developing countries to solve their own problems in harmony with the natural environment.
> iii) Development priorities should always prevail in setting objectives for the ODA program. Where development objectives would not be compromised, complementarity should be sought between the objectives of the aid program and other important foreign policy objectives.

In other words, the charter would establish the basic principles under which we want to operate. We say that development assistance should be the priority and that it should not be subjected to other foreign policy objectives. We also say that all our aid projects should be directed toward what we call human development. There should be a shift in CIDA funding from large-scale capital projects to more emphasis on primary health care and education at all levels. Where we have large infrastructural programs, they should have built-in training programs to ensure long-term maintenance and good management of the facilities. Providing hardware to Third World countries without providing proper training for use and upkeep is worse than useless.

I remember when the committee visited a water filtration plant in Tanzania which was to be providing a major source of water for the capital city of Dar es Salaam. It was supposed to have been a state of the art filtration plant, but somehow in providing it we never got around to making sure that sand was provided for the filtration. BInstead of filtration there was only a certain degree of settlement for purifying the water. The value of that plant was cut down to a fraction of its capacity.

We recommend that there should be a greater emphasis on projects directed at women and developed by women, particularly at the grass roots level and particularly for rural women who are often involved in subsistence agriculture. A very high percentage of subsistence agriculture in our world is performed by women and yet in the past women have been neglected by our development priorities.

Perhaps one of the central recommendations of our committee was that CIDA should establish a much closer link between development assistance and the human rights situation in the recipient country. The report recognizes the complexity of the human rights issue as it relates to aid, but it cannot be a straight line drawn between human rights and development assistance. There are always some subjective elements in human rights. We recognize that. We also say that as Canadians, as citizens of the western world, our understanding of human rights has to be more broad than simply that of civil, political and individual rights. Our understanding of human rights should also include socio-economic and cultural rights and that there are certain obvious minimum subsistence and security rights.

I would like to read what the commission recommends as far as human rights are concerned. Emergency humanitarian aid continues to be given on compassionate grounds without preconditions, but that it be monitored closely to prevent abuses. Even in situations where we have a very bad human rights situation emergency aid should continue to be given on humanitarian grounds. Victims of human rights violations should not be forgotten when decisions are taken to reduce or deny long term development aid to governments. Somehow we have to try to accommodate the victims so that they do not become doubly penalized.

Human rights criteria should be developed coherently as part of over-all Canadian foreign policy, and that these be applied in a universal consistent and transparent manner. Such criteria, embracing both individual, civil and political rights and socio-economic and cultural rights, be derived from established standards of international human rights law and convention.

Verifiable reports of violations, not ideology or strategic interests, be the basis for unfavourable assessment of human rights observance. We are all aware of the game sometimes played between the two major powers in our world where one accuses the other of human rights violations and does so on the basis of ideology. I think we want to move beyond that and say that our assessment should be based on verifiable reports of violations.

More generally, progress on human rights should be considered part of development, with assessments of the human rights situation in a given country being related to the over-all record of development, particularly from the vantage point of the poorest people. In other words, we try to assess human rights from the way in which development impacts on the poorest people of a country.

The committee suggested that there be human rights units within CIDA, and goes on to suggest that the Government should develop a human rights grid under which recipient countries would be in one of four categories. First, human rights negative. These would be extreme cases judged by the international community to be guilty of persistent gross and systemic violations. These countries would be ineligible for government aid. Some basic needs assistance might continue through non-governmental organizations working directly with the poor. Second would be a category called human rights watch. This would involve cases of lesser or variable concern in which serious allegations have been made, but there are many gray areas and development progress is still possible. Any direct bilateral assistance would be very carefully targetted and monitored. Third is what we would call human rights satisfactory in which specific human rights problems may arise as they do in all states but in which the over-all development context is judged to be acceptable. The full range of aid channels could be employed.

Fourth, we suggest that there should be a category called human rights positive in which the human rights record of the Government is exemplary or in which there has been a marked and sustained improvement in the human rights situation and developmental orientation of the Government. In the latter cases aid might be increased selectively in order to strengthen those positive directions.

We urge that External Affairs along with CIDA prepare an annual ODA human rights review which would be tabled in this House and then referred to the appropriate committee. We say that those countries which are judged to be human rights negative would be ineligible to receive government to government assistance, although non-governmental organizations might still be able to work in those countries and receive matching funds from CIDA.

We recommend that the Government should work for changes in international financial institutions, such as the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund that would allow human rights concerns to be placed on the agenda as part of the criteria that had to be met for loans.

We reiterate the recommendations from the special joint committee on Canada's external relations which were accepted by the Government. There should be an international institute of human rights and democratic development. This would be a pro-active institution that would seek to offer advice and help to countries attempting to develop human rights institutions. We are concerned that while there has been some movement on this, the movement has been very slow by the Government although it has announced it is in favour of that institute.

Finally with regard to human rights we say that military exports should be prohibited to any country which is regarded as being ineligible for development aid because of the human rights situation. The whole relationship between the military expenditures and development assistance is something that concerns all members of the committee. As we see the spiralling costs of military expenses throughout our world, both in the developed world and in the Third World, we have to take whatever action we can to dampen that. We made a number of recommendations regarding aid and trade.

While supporting the general principle that all other factors being equal, Canadian goods and services should be purchased in preference to those of other countries, the committee recommends that the Government relax to 50 per cent the current rule requiring that about 80 per cent of the bilateral country program budget must be spent on goods and services purchased in Canada. Eighty per cent of tied aid is one of the highest percentages of tied aid anywhere in the world. We feel that this is not acceptable and does not lead to good development processes for the Third World.

With regard to the least developed countries of the sub-Saharan Africa, we urge that CIDA be able to waive completely the tied aid requirements. We urge that Canada continue to support OECD attempts to restrict the practice of using a mix of aid and commercial financing, the so-called mixed credits, to make Canadian exports more attractive in the Third World; that is, taking aid and mixing it in with concessional financial terms and using aid as a way of moving our products in the Third World. We do not believe that this is appropriate. Canadians do not want their aid program to be used as an adjunct to the program of international trade. We recognize the importance of international trade but we believe that the aid program has to stand on its own two feet. It should have its own validity and criteria and should not be subjected to the criteria of international trade.

In providing aid to other countries, there always has to be a certain policy dialogue with those countries. We believe that there has to be more emphasis on long-term economic and environmental sustainability of capital projects. Programs for structural adjustment should be consistent with our development assistance goals.

Too often we have pushed upon Third World countries a form of structural adjustment in accordance with the IMF that results in cuts in wages and social services and a reduction in the standard of living of the very poorest of people. Again, we recommend that Canadian representatives on international financial institutions ensure that structural adjustment policies take into account their effect on the poorest people. The burden must not fall on the poorest people.

The report commends the Government for the five-year moratorium on ODA debt for sub-Saharan countries in Africa. We recommended that 2 per cent of our aid should continue to be set aside for international emergencies but that an additional 1 per cent of our aid budget, approximately $25 million, should be available to match voluntary relief contributions of Canadian agencies. This is what happened in 1984 with Ethiopian relief.

Except in emergencies, food aid should not exceed 10 per cent of our ODA budget. In recent years, it has gone beyond 15 per cent. Food aid is superficially attractive to countries like Canada. Our farmers and fishermen produce good food, sometimes more than we are able to sell on world markets. We do not like to see good food go to waste and Canadians do not like to see people in other parts of the world go hungry so they ask what would be more natural than to use CIDA funding to buy Canadian surplus food and send it to countries with hungry people.

The other side of the coin is that for the receiving country, food aid creates a dependency on imported food. It depresses the prices paid to local farmers, driving them out of business and leaving the country more dependent than ever on imported food.

I see you are giving me the signal that my time is up, Mr. Speaker. In conclusion, I would like to say that we disagree strongly with the refusal of the committee to go back to the Government's original commitment to move toward devoting .7 per cent of Gross National Product to development assistance by 1990. Africa, Asia and Central America are all crying out for help. The Government made a commitment three years ago at the United Nations that it would move toward that .7 per cent. It has not done so. Instead, it has moved the goalposts. We are now talking about reaching .6 per cent by 1995. Instead of the Government accepting even the modest suggestion of the committee that it move more quickly to reach that .6 per cent, it rejected it.

The Government has accepted some of the recommendations of the committee but it has not accepted the very important recommendation for decentralization. I wish I had more time to talk about that. The committee talked about decentralizing to the specific countries involved rather than decentralizing to regions, leaving a great deal of authority in Hull.

The Government has not really accepted our recommendation that human rights should be put front and centre in the whole development assistance question. In other areas where it has accepted our recommendations, it has done so with so many qualifications that we have to wonder what will really happen.

I see you are giving me the signal to conclude. I hope that the Government will continue to examine closely the report's recommendations, and we look forward to hearing the step-by-step announcement the Government has said it will be making to implement those recommendations which it has said it will accept.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his comments and I know that he speaks from a great background of experience, not only from his study and work in the committee and his attendance at committee meetings to listen to the witnesses who spoke to the committee on this matter in its tour across Canada, but also from his visits to the countries of the Americas and Africa to learn at first hand about the work of the committee, the ODA.

I was concerned with the Hon. Member's closing comments in which he said that he regretted that the Government had paid little attention to or given little support to the recommendations the committee made for linking the giving of aid to the finding of human rights conditions. I recognize that it is a very difficult subject, one on which we might make some progress, and I would like to ask the Hon. Member if he could comment further on why, in his understanding, the Government has not yet taken up those recommendations positively and whether he thinks there are certain respects in which the Government may be moving in the direction of the recommendations.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, we had recommended, for example, the establishment of a grid, but in the response, the Minister said that the Government believes that the establishment of a grid and especially the classification of countries according to such a grid would not serve the over-all interests of Canadian development assistance or of Canadian foreign policy and made similar comments about the suggestion that there be a report tabled in the House of Commons that looks at the human rights situations in recipient countries.

The Government says that it wants to pay attention to the human rights situations in recipient countries, and that where there are gross violations it will continue to monitor the situation, and if the violations are persistent then those countries will not receive bilateral aid. However, it does not want to open up the process so that the Canadian people and Parliament will see what the Government is doing.

When we travelled across Canada, and I am sure all members of the committee will back me up on this, we heard many organizations indicating that they were very concerned about this whole question of human rights, and these organizations came from all sides of the political spectrum. It is not a question of left or right, it is a question of the Canadian people being very concerned that our aid money should not be used to prop up Governments that are persistent violators of human rights and in fact that we are in a situation where—

Mr. Lewis: El Salvador.

Mr. Manly: The Hon. Minister mentions El Salvador. I presume he has read the editorial in this morning's Globe and Mail which points out the continuing violations of human rights in El Salvador. The Government moved to give El Salvador $8 million worth of development assistance a couple of years ago against the advice of people who have worked there and know of the kind of persistent and gross violations of human rights that take place there.

The Government does not want to be up front with its concerns about human rights. It says it wants to handle these concerns from some back room in External Affairs, without coming clean and saying to the Canadian people what it really believes about human rights.

I think the Canadian people want to know where the Government stands, what its criteria are for determining human rights violations, and they want to see a much more clearly established link between development assistance and the human rights records of the recipient countries.

• (1610)

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the background that the Hon. Member gave in his response to my question. I would like to ask a more specific question about the first recommendation of the committee, that emergency humanitarian aid continue to be given on compassionate grounds without preconditions but that it be monitored closely to prevent abuses.

Some people see a contradiction in that sentence. How do you prevent abuses if you are giving aid without preconditions? Monitoring may not have any effect one way or the other. If you monitor and find violations of human rights or monitor and find no violations of human rights, the reports would be of concern to a lot of people.

Would the Hon. Member comment on how such reports would be applied, if not in a sort of punitive way, which is considered to be ruled out by saying "without preconditions"? Apart from saying that we do not like the moral conduct of government x, what may be a ground for saying that we would discontinue giving aid to government x? I am speaking, of course, of bilateral aid.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, it is important to distinguish between long-term development assistance and emergency humanitarian relief. We believe very strongly, and I think anyone involved in development would agree, that long-term development cannot take place in a system where there is repression and gross and systematic violation of human rights, because the two are contradictory. However, there are countries which have extremely poor human rights records, such as Ethiopia, which are also faced with dire emergencies. In the case of Ethiopia millions of people are at risk. We are talking here about providing emergency relief assistance and monitoring it to ensure that it goes to the people for whom it is intended. When assistance was given to Ethiopia during the 1984-85 famine crisis there was extensive monitoring by people involved in delivering that emergency assistance to ensure that it got through to the people for whom it was intended. Canadians can be assured that that was indeed the case. That is the kind of situation toward which our recommendation is directed.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I do not rise with any joy to participate in this concurrence debate. The Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade put much time and effort into its report "For Whose Benefit?" on Canada's official development assistance policies and programs. We take the position that when a committee spends a great deal of time and effort and a great deal of the taxpayers' money to make and submit a report, and the Government goes to the effort of replying to that report, debate on it should be informed debate after all parties have been given notice and have had an opportunity to prepare themselves.

The House will know that the Government gave notice today of its intention to deal with the Royal Canadian Mint Act, which we thought would be dealt with very quickly, and then with a very important Bill which would benefit the Province of Nova Scotia.

My colleague purports, with pious unctuousness, to support the efforts of External Affairs in development assistance around the world. He supports a regime in one of the South American countries where there is no democratic use of radio and many other abuses. I am surprised that he would raise this issue in the House for debate without any notice to his colleagues in the House, without any effort to have an informed debate—

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) on a point of order.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I informed the Chairman of the Standing Committee a week ago that I intended to raise this at some point in the near future.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, if that is my hon. colleague's definition of "near future" and "notice", it may come back to haunt him some day. We will utilize that definition. I had thought better of my hon. colleague. He purports to be interested in the plight of the poor and underdeveloped nations, yet has the audacity to raise this issue for debate without any notice to anyone else in the House that he would raise it on this particular day. If my hon. colleague wants an informed debate, why does he not inform people about the debate? It is a mockery of the work of that committee and my hon. colleague's friends from all Parties on that committee and the efforts they put into that report that he does not have the honour and courtesy to notify them that he is prepared to bring it forward for debate today. If my hon. colleague wants to enter into debate, he should give notice.

Under those circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by my hon. colleague, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes):

That the House do now proceed to orders of the day.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: There is a motion on the floor, my friend.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will hear the Hon. Member in a second on the point of order.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Lewis) which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Orders of the day.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I wish to move that the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) be now heard.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. First, I must rule that the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) is out of order at this time.

I wish to inform the House that, because of the ministerial statement, Government Orders will be extended by 12 minutes.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

ROYAL CANADIAN MINT ACT AND CURRENCY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)) for the Minister of Supply and Services moved that Bill C-46, an Act to amend the Royal Canadian Mint Act and the Currency Act, be concurred in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

On debate, the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis).

I am sorry to say that it is not a debatable motion. I will reread it. Mr. Lewis for the Minister of Supply and Services moved that Bill C-46, an Act to amend the Royal Canadian Mint Act and the Currency Act, be concurred in. It is not a debatable motion.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Lewis (for Mr. Côté (Langelier)) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

[Translation]

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I move that Bill C-46 be read the third time and do pass. I want to take this opportunity to thank the members of the Legislative Committee on Bill C-46 for their good work.

I shall be brief. The purpose of Bill C-46 is to amend the Currency Act and the Royal Canadian Mint Act, so as to consolidate all technical matters pertaining to coins within one piece of legislation, to improve financial arrangements for the Mint and give it more operational flexibility, and finally, to simplify the marketing process for new projects approved in the Mint's corporate plan.

These changes are desirable to permit the Mint to continue its record of success, both commercially and technically.

As far as technical matters are concerned, it is desirable to allow the Mint to respond quickly to situations of metal shortages and to make minor changes in the size and composition of circulating coins. Any major changes in circulating coins will remain subject to the authority of Parliament.

All technical aspects of producing new coins will now be consolidated within the Royal Canadian Mint Act, while the Currency Act, under the authority of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), will be concerned only with matters relating to our monetary system.

Among the changes that will improve the financial and operational flexibility of the Mint is a provision that will permit the Mint to issue $40 million in shares which may be purchased by the Minister of Supply and Services.

These shares will provide the Mint with the funds it needs to meet its financing requirements. The Mint's borrowing authority will be raised from $35 million to $50 million, which may be borrowed from the private sector or the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

To provide further financial flexibility, the Mint will also be authorized to use its surplus operating capital to cover capital and other expenditures, instead of turning the surplus over to the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

The Bill also provides that the Government may authorize the Mint to produce precious metal coins to augment its series of gold coins.

The Mint will have the authority to borrow, rent or lease precious metals to ensure the interrupted production of coins such as the Maple Leaf.

Finally, the number of members sitting on the board of directors will be increased from seven to eleven, and it will no longer be necessary for three of those members to come from the Public Service. These changes will help provide all the expertise required for the proper functioning of an organization operating according to the rules of the market-place. Mr. Speaker, the principal mandate of the Royal Canadian Mint is to provide Canada with coins of the highest possible quality. However, the excellent record the Mint has acquired is also, if not primarely, due to its success in providing other products and services. These related activities have made the Royal Canadian Mint one of our most profitable Crown corporations on a year-to-year basis.

All the changes proposed in Bill C-46 will serve to give the Mint an up-to-date legislative environment that will permit it to continue its record of success.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would just like my constituents to know that I was here but abstained to show the stupidity of the delaying tactics.

Mint and Currency

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On debate, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo).

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault), on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must declare the motion by the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques out of order.

[English]

In the meantime, there having been no intervening proceeding, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) has the floor.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Shields: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would also like to have it recorded for my constituents that I am in the House but I refrained from voting also because I wanted to point out the stupidity of the delaying tactics of the NDP.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I understand that under the rules, I have unlimited time to speak.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hovdebo: I am very pleased to speak on—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Shields: Take all night, Stan.

Mr. Hovdebo: I have lots of time. I will wait until it gets quiet. I can wait, I have unlimited time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. We will give some time for those Hon. Members who wish to clear the House to do so. On debate, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, the Mint was established in 1908, and since then—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hovdebo: At that time, it was developed to produce coins. In 1969, it was made a Crown corporation. In the past, the Government sold Crown corporations which were making money. Regardless of its ideology, this is one Crown corporation the Government does not intend to sell, even if it is making money.

The Government sold Canadian Arsenals a year or so ago because it made money. I hope the new company will make shells that shoot straight. The Auditor General's report suggests that it is no longer making shells which the Department of Defence can use to fight a war.

The Government also sold Teleglobe which made money as well. The ideology of the Government is that if a Crown corporation makes money we should get rid of it because if we do not get rid of it it may contribute to the profits of the Government and help get rid of the deficit.

Consequently, it was surprising to us that this Bill was not part of the Government's privatization policy. Instead of that, the Government included in this Bill a number of provisions which do a lot to tidy up the operations of the Mint. This is an adequate Bill in that it allows the Crown corporation to operate as a Crown corporation should. I suppose that once the Government has this model of a Crown corporation in place it will not have to privatize any others because all the Crown corporations will be making money and eliminating the deficit.

The Mint operates almost entirely without direction from the Government, although it reports to Parliament through the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Côté). The responsibility of the Mint is to produce the coins which we use every day. The production of money in Canada is presently controlled by two Acts, the Royal Canadian Mint Act and the Currency Act. This Bill tidies up the operation of the Mint to a certain extent. The Government is putting almost all of the control into the Royal Canadian Mint Act.

In addition to producing the coins which we use in Canada, the Mint produces coins for overseas. These coins are produced for profit, and through their production the Mint has made a considerable amount of profit over the years. The changes in the Act will give the Mint more scope to mint coins for special occasions and for other countries.

Over the years the Canadian Mint has developed a reputation as a major coin producer in the world. It has contracted with many countries to produce their official coins. In addition to that, the Mint makes coins for Klondike Days and other special occasions around the world. Recently, of course, the Mint has produced a series of coins which is being sold to help finance the Olympics.

Under the present structure the Mint has a certain amount of corporate power to control the currency used in Canada. The main mandate of the Mint is to produce and arrange for the production and supply of the currency of Canada. It is also empowered to produce coins for other countries, which has become a major portion of its operation.

Until a few years ago, only the Mint was able to melt and refine gold, silver and some other metals. This has changed considerably over the years, but that is still part of the corporate responsibility of the Mint. Under the Act the Mint has the authority to buy and sell gold. It can refine, store, and deal with gold, silver, and other metals. The buying and selling of these precious metals is handled by the Mint for the Government of Canada.

One of the concerns of the Mint over the years has been that if it needed more metals to produce coins it had to go through a rather involved procedure to obtain them. The new Act will shorten that process considerably by giving the Mint more power in that area. The Mint prepares, stores, and ships coins of gold, silver and other metals. It makes medals, plaques and other articles. These products are of such high quality that they are sought after by collectors around the world. The sale of those articles has increased the contributions of the Mint to the government coffers.

There is a catch-all clause in the mandate of the Mint which allows it to do all other things which are incidental and conducive to attaining the objectives and exercising of the powers of the Mint.

Over the years the Mint has developed a world-wide reputation and its coins have been very much sought after by collectors.

Bill C-46 is basically a housekeeping Bill which makes a few language changes and technical amendments to the Mint Act and Currency Act. This includes the transfer of a number of sections from the Currency Act into the Mint Act and vice-versa.

While certain portions of the Act were unexplained during the committee proceedings, we have allowed them to stand without amendment because they seem to pose no harm. One such clause in the Bill allows the capitalization of the Mint at $40 million, with 4,000 shares at $10,000 each, which will be held in the name of the Minister.

Some may suggest that this provision is unnecessary if there is no intention to privatize the Mint at some point, and there is no doubt that this process of capitalization proposed by the Government would facilitate the possible future privatization of the Mint. While further amendments to the Mint Act would be required if privatization were the aim of the Government, this capitalization structure certainly makes it possible to sell shares in the Royal Canadian Mint.

I find it hard to believe that even the present Government, with its ideological approach to the privatization of Crown corporations, would allow a private corporation to produce our currency.

As I said, this corporation may be the model the Government can use as a Crown corporation that can be profitable and help to decrease the deficit which gets larger every year. As such, the Government would not have to lean so heavily on its ideological approach to privatization.

The Bill states that the selling of shares is to be done in such a way that the Minister would purchase all the shares and then may ask for them to be redeemed. This was somewhat confusing, and not explained adequately by officials of the Mint or Members of the Government in the committee. The clause remains in the Bill as it was written.

It is difficult to understand why the Government would capitalize the corporation to this level and then state in clause 3.1(3):

> The shares of the Mint are not transferable—

Therefore, no one else can have them:

> —and when issued to the Minister in accordance with this Act shall be registered in the books of the Mint in the name of the Minister and held by him in trust for Her Majesty in right of Canada.

That is a rather logical approach. Clause 3.1(4) states:

> No shares of the Mint may be issued otherwise than as expressly authorized by this Act.

Clause 3.2(1) then states:

> The Mint shall, at the request of the Minister after consultation with the Board, redeem such number of shares issued to the Minister in accordance with this Act as the Minister may direct.
> (2) The price to be paid for each share redeemed by the Mint pursuant to subsection (1) is the issue price of the share.

It is a very confusing capitalization structure. The Mint is capitalized up to $40 million, the shares are sold to the Minister and may be redeemed. It appears that the Government believes the Mint may not be worth the $40 million in the future and allows the Minister to seek funds to replace the shares.

It seems as though the shares would disappear, since there is no suggestion that the Mint should be able to hold shares in its own right because it is a Crown corporation.

While the process set out in this clause seems very confusing, it does not make much difference to the Bill and it is not worth trying to amend.

The second major amendment included in the Bill concerns the board of directors. This is another reflection of the ideological philosophy of the Government, because it is suggested that public servants should be dropped from the board, and the board increased from seven to eleven members.

There have been occasions when the board of directors has been dominated by civil servants. If those officials are too closely connected to the Minister, the Minister appears to have direct control over the Crown corporation, which contradicts the policy of the previous Government, as well as this Government, of an arm's length relationship between Crown corporations and government.

The idea that a Crown corporation should operate without direction from the government has caused problems with many Governments. It caused the previous Government considerable trouble in the case of Canadair. We had the Minister offering letters of comfort which allowed the Canadair Corporation to borrow almost unlimited funds without any reference to Parliament. As the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) will know because he was a member of the Public Accounts Committee at the time, a corporation such as Canadair could borrow funds which eventually had to be paid by the Government of Canada. It was a form of expenditure which did not have to pass through Parliament.

I must say that I and other members of the Public Accounts Committee at that time were pleased, after kicking up enough of a fuss, that the Government did remove letters of comfort from the procedures which it had been using to finance Crown corporations. The other side is that if we do not have a close enough connection between the corporation and the Government, we may still have this kind of thing happening because we give executive power to the board of directors of the Crown corporation so it can go out and borrow money, which is money the Government of Canada would have to repay if there was any forfeit. Consequently there is some concern about the fact that public servants will not be asked nor expected to be members of the board of directors, although this Bill does not suggest it is impossible to have a member who is a civil servant.

Why the board has been increased from seven to 11 members is unclear. The suggestion I received from my research and investigation into this area is that the Mint has operated very well, very thoroughly and effectively with seven members for a long time. I really would like to believe that this has nothing to do with having another place where the Government can put one of its particularly favourite citizens, although it is a possibility, and the board has not really needed that increase in the past. Perhaps because of the expansion which the Mint suggests it may do in the future it will need a larger board. We will give them the benefit of the doubt.

The third area of operation, as far as this Bill is concerned, is the precious metal coins. Gold and subsidiary coins are presently authorized under the Currency Act. The change made is to switch that authority from the Currency Act and put it under the Mint Act. The base metal coins are also moved from the Currency Act to the Mint Act, which is a very logical move because it will mean one operation instead of two.

The control of the size, weight, standard and margins of tolerance will be set by the Cabinet after this Act is passed. At present the requirement is that a change in the size and weight of a coin, even the make-up of a coin, is to come before Parliament. This Bill gives the authority to the Governor in Council, and consequently saves some time as far as the production of the Mint is concerned.

One of the problems one could see with respect to the Mint was the fact that under the present Act, the provision for the production of gold coins, such as the gold coin that has been so popular lately, bringing in a considerable amount of income to the Mint and consequently to the Government of Canada, had a sunset clause. After a certain date, it could no longer be produced. One could see what would happen in a situation like that. The Mint would set up the production of these coins, and if they were selling as well as they are today and as they have been for the last number of years, it would know that at some date it would no longer be able to produce those coins. This would make it impossible for the Mint to plan because when the sunset clause came into effect it would no longer be in business. Consequently, the Mint would lose a certain amount of its income and it would also be in a situation where it could not plan for production over a long period of time. What this Bill does is to take off that sunset clause. It makes the production and sale of gold coins a continued and secure business.

Again, I have to say I am glad to see that the Government is putting in place the kind of business structure for these Crown corporations which makes them accountable but still productive and income producing. I can think of no better way of getting rid of the deficit than by having Crown corporations continuing to make money over a long period of time.

One of the things we have learned by being in government in Saskatchewan and other provinces is that the democratic socialist approach is to recognize that there are some areas where Crown corporations are necessary, and if we operate them well, they will help to pay for the social services required in the province. That was the basis of operation of Saskatchewan Crown corporations up until 1982 when we, unfortunately, changed the Government of that province, which started to sell off those corporations, and its credit rating, which was based on those Crown corporations, went from a triple A to a single A. The effect is that as long as the lending powers of New York and the financial world figured that we had enough assets to pay our debts in Saskatchewan, even if those assets were in Crown corporations, they had no hesitation in lending money to us. Now that the Crown corporations and the buildings are disappearing from the assets of the Province of Saskatchewan, the province is losing the power to borrow money.

Mr. Althouse: It did not run deficits either.

Mr. Hovdebo: As my colleague suggests, during the time of the New Democratic Party Government in Saskatchewan we did not have any deficits either. Of course, that pleases the people who lend money.

Some have suggested that this is a very capitalistic approach or statement. There are no better free enterprisers in the country than New Democrats.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hovdebo: Many of us are free enterprisers. We recognize that an individual who owns his company, his farm, his store or whatever makes a great contribution and in so doing probably operates a business very well. It is the large multinational corporations that do not operate in the best interests of the country that are of concern to us. The people who exploit the resources of Canada are not the type of people that we think should be given full rein to do so. They must use part of the proceeds from that exploitation to help pay for the social services of the country. Consequently, among those who support New Democrats are a great many farmers, small businesses, and those who recognize that their real support is from the New Democratic Party which allows them to operate and which assists them to operate. It does not give unlimited action to the large corporations which have only one bottom line. That bottom line is profit for themselves and no particular concern for the Government. If the Mint were to be privatized, that is exactly what would happen. We would find ourselves being exploited in one more area by the private sector if it decided that that was the best way it could make a profit in this area.

I have a number of other concerns that I wish to put on the record with regard to this Bill. There are a number of areas in which the Government has not taken any action. One of them is that, traditionally, the Mint has used Canadian metals to make the coins of Canada whenever it can. However, with respect to coins that are made by the Mint but which are not used in Canada there is no provision in the Act or in the regulations which suggests that there must be Canadian content in the manufacture of those coins or, for that matter, with regard to any coins made for Canada.

I would like to see such a provision in the regulations. I accept that traditionally that has been the case and that most likely it may not be done any other way. However, as of late I have come to doubt that. There might be some need to put such a provision in place.

I say that because we have before us at the moment a free trade agreement which suggests that coins, metals or any resource can be brought into Canada without the use of quotas or barriers of any kind. In fact, if I read the free trade agreement properly, it appears to me that if we were to suggest that all our coins must be made from Canadian metal then that would abrogate the agreement. If we said that Canadian products must be used then that would prevent the use of American metals which that country might want to send us. Perhaps it wishes to rid itself of some of the gold it has in Fort Knox and send it to Canada in order to make coins since we are making more money on our coins than that country is on its coins.

We would not be able to say, "We will only use Canadian gold to make the coins under the free trade agreement". At some time it might be in order to include in the regulations and in the Act a provision which suggests that any coins which are to be used in circulation in Canada be made from Canadian metals and that any coins sold as the product of Canada be made from Canadian metals.

At the moment gold can be brought in from South Africa or from the United States, Canadian coins can be made from it and they can be sold on the world market. There is nothing in the Act or in the regulations relative to the Act which suggests anything different. Consequently, particularly under the stresses of a possible future ban on Canada being able to do that, it would be worth-while to put in place such a provision to tell our American friends that this is one area in which we will use Canadian inputs as far as possible.

Most of the other clauses in the Bill are straightforward. When the Bill was first introduced, the Parliamentary Secretary gave us a very straightforward outline with respect to the main changes that were to be made. However, at that time he did not seem to be able to give us the real reasons behind the changes, nor was he able to do that later in committee. In the regulations we will be looking to some very specific definition with respect to what the Mint can and cannot do in the future.

I must say that I have no quarrel with the main objectives of the Bill and what it is intended to do. The points I have made with respect to Canadian content, the board of directors and capitalization are issues which I think the Government could explain to us at the third reading stage. In order that the people of Canada and Members of Parliament understand exactly why it has done the things it has done the Government should explain them to us.

It is interesting to note that in the past in the process of making coins the Mint had to borrow or lease metals and then go to the Department of Finance for authorization to purchase metals which it would use in coins to be offered for sale. To some extent the process made sense in that this meant that the Mint did not need a large amount of capital to operate. There is no understanding in this Bill that, although this will be changed, or may be changed, the capitalization will be used to allow the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to lend money so that it means something.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

PRESENTATION OF SIXTH, SEVENTH AND EIGHTH REPORTS OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the Sixth, Seventh and Eighth Reports of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments in both official languages.

OPPOSITION TO TAX ON FOOD

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): I have the honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106 from a number of people in Alberta communities, including Grande Prairie, Valleyview, Spirit River and Wembley.

These petitioners are concerned that the federal Government's White Paper on Taxation includes tax reform that would still permit 60,000 profitable corporations to pay no income tax at all and they draw to the attention of Parliament that the federal Government is still planning to levy a tax on food and other essential items through a national sales tax and is also failing to provide full indexation to the personal tax system.

Therefore, they call upon the Government of Canada to reject these proposals and especially reject a tax on food. They are asking consideration for the restoration of full indexation to the personal tax system.

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION PROHIBITING DISCRIMINATION ON BASIS OF SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a certified petition from a number of Canadian citizens in a number of locations across Canada pointing out that in February, 1985, the Government ordered the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to prepare a report on equality rights in Canada. In October of that year, the subcommittee on equality rights submitted a report to the House recommending that the Canadian Human Rights Act be amended to prohibit discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation in all areas under federal jurisdiction, including the RCMP and Canadian Armed Forces and in age of consent legislation.

In March, 1986, the Government accepted this report and its recommendations, saying it would take whatever measures are necessary to ensure that sexual orientation is a prohibited ground of discrimination. The Government has yet to introduce significant legislation acting upon these recommendations supported by the Government.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that Government and Parliament act to implement the recommendations contained in the report.

CANADA POST—OPPOSITION TO CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of tabling a large number of petitions from the riding of Saint-Léonard—Anjou, from Western Quebec, Ontario, the South Shore and Vancouver, totalling several hundred signatures.

Your petitioners humbly inform the House that Canada Post's new corporate plan has created two classes of citizens by installing its super boxes in urban and rural areas; that closing rural post offices deprives Canadians of a unique federal presence and reduces postal services that are vital to rural areas; and that rate increases, especially for second class mail, jeopardize the distribution by mail of many newspapers, weeklies, regional papers, magazines and religious publications.

Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray that Parliament reject Canada Post's plan and urge the Corporation to deliver the mail to all Canadian taxpayers, without exception.

REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE ROYAL ASSENT TO BILL C-22

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, it is my honour and privilege to present a duly certified petition on behalf of residents of Edmonton, Alberta, most of whom are employed in the pharmaceutical industry. The petitioners call upon Parliament to ensure that the Senate stops delaying the passage of vitally important legislation, namely, Bill C-22.

The petitioners clearly state their desire for the House of Commons, the duly elected body representing the Canadian people, which has passed amendments to the Patent Act, to urge the Senate to stop its stalling tactics in order for the benefits of Bill C-22 to be realized. More than $100 million and several hundred high technology jobs will benefit the Alberta economy. The petitioners are anxious to benefit from the medical advances the legislation will create and they urge immediate Royal Assent of the legislation.

HOUSING—REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, the petition I am tabling today was signed by residents of Ville Saint-Laurent, Westmount, Saint-Léonard, Ville Mont-Royal, Pierrefonds, Saint-Hubert and Montreal North. Your petitioners deplore the fact that in 1986 over 100,000 people were homeless in Canada; that the number of young people, women and entire families who are homeless is increasing steadily; that the amount of affordable accommodation is still declining; and that the Government has yet to do anything to deal with this problem.

Therefore, your petitioners humbly pray Parliament to take immediate action, so that all Canadians will be housed in accommodation that is sanitary and adequate and to introduce social adjustment programs to help these Canadians in need back into the mainstream of Canadian society.

[English]

REQUEST FOR RE-OPENING OF CANADIAN EMBASSY IN ECUADOR

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition signed by approximately 525 residents of Metropolitan Toronto who are concerned that the Canadian Embassy in Ecuador has been opened and closed twice in the past 10 years and is now closed, causing hardship to many people seeking visitor or immigration visas to Canada, particularly because the waiting time for an interview at Bogota, the nearest consular point in Colombia, would be about six months.

Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to express support for the reopening of the Canadian Embassy in Ecuador and to urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to reverse the decision to close the embassy. As in duty bound your petitioners will every pray.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from a number of people in Metropolitan Toronto who are concerned that Bill C-55 threatens Canada's traditional commitment to assisting refugees and sets out measures designed to keep most refugee claimants out of the country as opposed to ensuring that genuine refugee claimants are given protection.

Therefore, the petitioners call upon Parliament to ensure that Government and Parliament will withdraw Bill C-55 and substitute legislation embodying the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of the claims of refugee claimants before a refugee board, independent of the immigration commission, universal access to these hearings for every applicant in Canada and the right to appeal on the basis of fact. In duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

CANADA POST—OPPOSITION TO REDUCTION IN SERVICE TO RURAL AREAS

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition to the House of Commons and Parliament assembled. The undersigned residents of Canada, at Wilno, Ontario, now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your House will therefore provide a remedy, and relevantly declares that the Canada Post Corporation has already started reducing services in certain rural areas of Canada.

The Canada Post Corporation intends to continue systematically to close an important number of post offices in small municipalities. The population is firmly opposed to any reduction in the postal personnel and the normal services to which the rural citizens are entitled. The population does not accept and will not accept at any time that the small communities be penalized by the planned reductions.

For those reasons they ask Parliament to give an immediate answer to their request regarding the fact that their rural communities will not have to suffer any form of discrimination to the quality of their postal services. They ask that Parliament agree that the rural municipalities will not be penalized by the closing of their post offices.

They finally ask that the rural communities which have already been badly affected by the reductions will recover the complete postal services to which they were accustomed. The fight for the Wilno post office is the fight of every rural community in Canada. They want to retain those services.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins), a senior Member of this place, has presented, as is his right, a petition on behalf of certain Canadians with respect to certain matters. However, I would ask Hon. Members to keep in mind that it has been traditional here, and I think it is appropriate, that while some remarks are made giving us some indication of what the subject matter of a petition is, it is not customary to go through the entire petition. I am sure all Hon. Members would want to co-operate with the Chair on this matter.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CLOSURE OF CN SUBDIVISIONS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by a very large number of constituents from the riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. Actually, there are 745 signatures. This petition is in addition to a previous petition signed by 250 residents which I tabled in this House. That comes to a grand total of 995 petitioners.

These people are very concerned with internal documents of CN Rail which suggest that this corporation wants to shut down the Alexandria subdivisions in my constituency and the Alderdale subdivision in the riding so well represented by the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins). The petitioners are asking for the Parliament of Canada and the Government to ensure that the Alderdale, Beachburg and Alexandria subdivisions of CN Rail remain open so that the constituency I represent and the constituency the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing-Pembroke represents, can keep on having train service so that our industries can continue to prosper. Without this, our areas will be in serious financial difficulty.

CANADA POST—OPPOSITION TO CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I have quite a few petitions from people in New Brunswick who are opposed to Canada Post's new corporate plan which creates two classes of citizens by installing super boxes on a permanent basis, both in urban and rural areas.

[English]

The people all over the province of New Brunswick are extremely concerned. They are asking that the Government reject the corporate plan proposed by Canada Post Corporation and instruct the corporation to proceed with mail delivery to all Canadian taxpayers without discrimination.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the petitions I would like to submit this morning are from a number of citizens in many communities in Ontario, including Scarborough, Agincourt, Don Mills, and Pickering. The petitioners protest the plan on the part of the Government to close rural post offices and ask the Government to reconsider such a decision because of the negative consequences that decision would have.

OPPOSITION TO TAX ON FOOD

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the privilege of tabling, pursuant to Standing Order 106, a petition that is one in a series of several dozen similar petitions which I have seen as my duty to table, and this petition reads as follows:

Whereas since September, 1984, the federal Government has imposed on Canadian taxpayers 25 new taxes or tax increases, in particular on medical and dental supplies, snack foods, candy and soft drinks;

whereas the federal Government in its tax reform proposal is studying the possibility of imposing on Canadians a general tax on goods and services, including food;

whereas food constitutes a vital element in day-to-day life and the imposition of this tax would have the effect of seriously penalizing certain categories of taxpayers such as the aged, families, the unemployed, low-income taxpayers and youth;

wherefore the undersigned petitionners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject all measures that would have the effect of imposing a sales tax on food products.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has received a request from the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) that we revert back to presenting reports from committees. The Hon. Member was unable at that time to present the report. The Chair would ask if the Hon. Member has consent of the House to do that.

Mr. Riis: No.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Riis: If it was anybody else in the House of Commons I would say yes.

BUSINESS EXCELLENCE AWARDS CEREMONY

Question No. 190—Mr. Henderson:

1. In (a) 1984 (b) 1985 (c) 1986 (d) 1987 to date was the Business Excellence Awards ceremony, sponsored by the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, held and, if so, on what date and in which location?

2. For the same years, (a) did the Department of Supply and Services issue the request for proposals for the staging and video-taping of the Awards ceremony and, if so (i) on what date (ii) how many firms submitted proposals (b) did the department award the contract and, if so (i) on what date (ii) on what date was the successful firm notified (iii) what was the value of the contract?

3. In (a) 1985 (b) 1986 (c) 1987 to date, were contracts relating to audio-visual productions awarded to Steve Shaw Productions of Toronto by the department and, if so, how many?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): I am informed by the Departments of Regional Industrial Expansion and Supply and Services as follows:

1. The presentations for the Canada Awards for Business Excellence were held in the following cities and on the dates indicated below:

1984	Toronto	May 25
1985	Montreal	November 5
1986	Vancouver	October 9
1987	Halifax	September 22

2. Supply and Services awarded four audio-visual production contracts for the Business Excellence Awards ceremony over the past four years:

1984 (a) A request for proposal was sent out April 26 to five companies; three responded. (b) A contract was signed for $20,000 on June 14; the winning firm was notified of its selection May 25.

1985 (a) No request for proposal was issued because by the time the decision to use an audio-visual presentation was made, there was not enough time to do a request for proposal. A supplier was sole sourced based on guidelines. (b) A contract was signed for $36,739 on October 16. An amendment for $6,000 additional work was signed February 17, 1986.

1986 (a) A request for proposal was sent out June 23 to eight companies; three responded. (b) A contract was signed for $44,895 on August 12; the winning firm was notified of its selection July 16. The contract was amended for $1,000 additional work on December 12.

1987 (a) A request for proposal was sent out June 25 to five companies; all five responded. (b) A contract was signed for $69,660 on August 18; the winner was notified of its selection on July 13.

Not all four contracts were for staging and videotaping. The audio-visual productions evolved over the four years from a simple slide show transferred to videotape to a complex multi-image presentation including slides, videotape, master of ceremonies, staging, and original award presentation music.

3. In fiscal years (1985-1986) (1986-1987) and this fiscal year to date, five contracts have been awarded to Steve Shaw Productions for audio-visual presentations. All five contracts were competitive.

Order Paper Questions

WELL DRILLINGS OFF ATLANTIC COAST

Question No. 199—Mr. Howie:

1. From January 1, 1986 to date, how many drillings have been carried out off the Atlantic coast in search of oil pools?

2. How many of these drillings found an oil pool large enough for future oil production there to be financially feasible?

3. What is the anticipated yield, in barrels, of these oil reserves?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1. During the period January 1, 1986 to September 29, 1987, a total of 24 wells were drilled off the Atlantic coast. Fifteen of these may be regarded as exploratory wells in search of new oil and gas; the remaining nine were delineations of existing discoveries.

2. & 3. Under Section 101, subsection 7, of the Canada Petroleum Resources Act, tow years must pass from the well termination date before information or documentation in respect of an exploratory well can be released. Also, such information would not include an estimate of oil reserves in a particular field as it would require an interpretation of data which might prove prejudicial to commercial interests.

FEASIBILITY OF PARKING GARAGE ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Question No. 201—Mr. Scott (Victoria—Haliburton):

Since 1970, has the government investigated the feasibility of building a parking garage for visitors to Parliament Hill and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, what was the result and for what reason is there still no visitors' parking on the Hill?

Hon. Stewart McInnis (Minister of Public Works): In so far as Public Works Canada is concerned:

A traffic and parking study for downtown Ottawa and the Parliamentary Precinct was undertaken by Public Works Canada and the National Capital Commission in March, 1982. The consultant was M.M. Dillon Ltd. (Reference Summary report #7 by NCC/PWC). The purpose of the study was to identify traffic patterns and volumes to assist in the future development of the Parliamentary Precinct. As this was essentially a planning study, no proposals for a parking garage for visitors were made.

A long-range development study by NCC and PWC is under way to develop and integrated approach for possible locations for new buildings, pedestrian circulation, traffic, and parking structures in a manner which would be appropriate to the heritage importance and character of Parliament Hill.

The over-all administration of parking is the responsibility of the Speakers of the Senate and House of Commons.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that all remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADA-NOVA SCOTIA OFFSHORE PETROLEUM RESOURCES ACCORD IMPLEMENTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-75, an Act to implement an agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of Nova Scotia on offshore petroleum resource management and revenue sharing and to make related and consequential amendments, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Gauthier: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I rise to bring to the attention of the House that it is sometimes difficult for Members of Parliament to prepare for debate when the Order Paper published for the good conduct of business of the House is changed at the last minute by the Government. I object strongly to that procedure because it is difficult enough for Members to cover committees of the House without having somebody playing games with the agenda of the House.

I see this morning that we have on the Order Paper a motion to resume debate on Bill C-46, a motion of the Minister of Supply and Services. I have in place my spokesperson, the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins), who is able and willing and able to proceed with this motion. I see that the Government has changed the order to Bill C-75. I find that not only unfair but totally not in keeping with the normal proceedings of this House. I object strongly, Mr. Speaker, to this procedure being undertaken by the Government in the future.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise in reply to the same point of order.

The offices of both Parties were informed early this morning, I would say about 9.30 a.m., to the effect that we would not be proceeding with Bill C-46 but that instead we would proceed with the back-up legislation from yesterday, legislation which is very important to the Province of Nova Scotia, which was unfortunately held up yesterday—I would not say longer than necessary but by a longer than planned debate on Bill C-46. Therefore we are going to proceed with second reading of Bill C-75 today.

Both Parties were informed that this would happen at 11 a.m. We think that we should be able to get through that quickly and send it off to a legislative committee and then proceed with Bill C-87.

I appreciate that my hon. friend is inconvenienced, but we did try to notify the offices as soon as possible. Naturally, we try to stick to the projected order of business wherever possible. I am sorry if there was any inconvenience, but we did notify the offices at, I would say, approximately 9.30 a.m.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I want to indicate that while the Order Paper indicates that we will be discussing Bill C-46, legislation in respect of the Royal Canadian Mint Act, that the—

Mr. Lewis: Projected order of business.

Mr. Riis: That was the projected order of business. I simply want to indicate that there was an effort by the Deputy House Leader to inform the opposition Parties about 9.30 this morning that he was intending to change the order of business. Again, I just want to confirm that. Yes, an effort was made.

However, I want to take some issue with the point made by the Deputy House Leader that our debate on Bill C-46 was rather protracted. Rather, we have just started the debate on the Mint Act, Mr. Speaker, as you well know. Our representative from the New Democratic Party was simply making the case that we have to debate this at some length now because of the implications of free trade.

It would appear that the Government is now setting the stage to privatize the Mint which, of course, would then make it eligible for an American firm to purchase our Mint. We are very concerned that the United States might gain control of the Canadian Mint as a result of this legislation.

So I am simply saying to the Chair, who is concerned about the procedure and the work of the House, that we do not plan necessarily to expedite this debate in light of the free trade threat to the Mint of Canada.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I am standing in my place to say a word on this matter because it does affect my privileges as a Member of this House, as it would other people in similar conditions.

We were proceeding with this matter yesterday and games were being played in here by the New Democratic Party. The Government moved yesterday to proceed with Government business and we had votes in the House yesterday afternoon over all these procedural matters. I can only say that I was prepared to speak yesterday. I am prepared to speak today.

As my Whip said, we have dozens of other things to do, yet we have to come in here which wastes the time of Members of the House of Commons. With our time as precious as it is to get our other work done I think it is totally unfair to be changing this at the last minute.

If we are going to have a good debate on the Mint, then let us go ahead and do it. But let us understand that we will do it decently. Yesterday we were ready to proceed with this matter without any problem whatsoever. The NDP started moving motions and the Government tried to proceed with business. Really, Mr. Speaker, if the Canadian Mint were run the way that this House of Commons was run yesterday it would go broke.

I think that the Canadian people should know what kind of tactics are going on in the House of Commons. We are here to do work. We came here yesterday prepared to do work and then we ran into games all the afternoon. This Parliament is not for that purpose. This Parliament is to debate the issues of the nation and to say our piece, make our points and do the best we can in Opposition against the large number of government Members.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make it very clear that if this keeps happening I am going to be on my feet every day opposing it. The Members of this House have a right to know what is definitely going to be on the Order Paper today, tomorrow, and so on. That is why we have consultation among House Leaders. If these commitments are changed on the spur of the moment then it disrupts all our own schedules that we have to go through in the day-to-day process.

All I ask is that we have fair play in the House, that Members know what the Government is going to do and that when we have debate we debate seriously.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Regarding the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), I think the Hon. Member is aware, having been a Member of this House for a number of years, that the Government's prerogative to determine the orders of the day is absolute, and even if we do have this projected order of business, the Government may change the order at any time, without notice. I think the House is aware the Government gave notice to the Opposition this morning. I am sorry, but I will have to reject the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier.

[English]

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to again address this House to encourage the passage of Bill C-75 at second reading. It deals with the implementation of the agreement between the Governments of Canada and Nova Scotia on offshore petroleum resource management and revenue sharing.

Moreover, this Bill contains certain measures from previous agreements which were retained and modified to make them consistent with the new agreement.

As this second reading will broaden the debate, it seems to me normal that the Minister responsible for this sector, who I am representing today, should put forward the necessary information as a representative of the Government of Canada. The Minister together with his provincial counterpart will be responsible for enforcing the application of the Act which is under his responsibility.

I wish to discuss briefly the heart of the Bill. The passage of this Bill, which was tabled before the House for first reading on June 26, 1987, will enable the Government of Canada to respect its commitment to the Government of Nova Scotia whose corresponding provincial Act was passed on May 19, 1987. In fact, this legislation is mirror legislation to that passed by the Nova Scotia provincial Government on May 29, 1987. It will show the manifest solidarity of the Government of Canada with the Government of Nova Scotia in terms of the importance that we attach to the legislative framework within which resource exploitation will take place.

The accord which we seek to ratify today will replace the Canada-Nova Scotia Agreement of 1982 on offshore petroleum and gas resource management and revenue sharing. This new accord contains several improvements, which I will discuss later in detail.

If I may be permitted, Mr. Speaker, I will cite a few now. First, it will ratify the creation of an independent body to administer and regulate all aspects of offshore petroleum and gas activities. Second, it will modify the development fund so that $200 million will no longer be considered as a loan, but will now be considered as a grant. Third, it will authorize the payment of the sum of $25 million by the Government of Canada to Nova Scotia Resources Ltd. which will enable it to participate in the exploitation and development of offshore activities.

This agreement, which is intended to build on the Atlantic Accord, will give concrete form to a co-management concept which both levels of Government wish to make effective and efficient. Furthermore, it will be consistent with this Government's over-all approach to the management of eastern Canada's offshore resources.

When the Prime Minister, (Mr. Mulroney), signed the agreement on August 26, 1986, he correctly observed that, "This accord constitutes a clear improvement over the 1982 agreement, in that it makes Nova Scotia a full partner in the development of its offshore area".

As you can see once again, Mr. Speaker, the era of confrontation with the provinces, fueled in the past by the previous Government, is well and truly over. Only through co-operation, actively encouraged by this Government since September, 1984, will we build a strong and united Canada. The fundamental option that we took as a Government at that time means that today we can reap the fruit of our efforts, and make them work, not only for Nova Scotia but for Canada as a whole.

To achieve this end we have adopted the simple philosophical principle of Jules Lequier, "What one does, one becomes . . . " Therefore, we have not dragged our feet in energy matters; we have helped to bring harmony to a country that had been previously divided. One only has to be reminded of the national energy policy perpetrated on the country by the previous administration to understand what we mean when we talk about division.

I wish to discuss briefly the objectives of the agreement. The Governments of Canada and Nova Scotia have therefore agreed, through this accord, that the petroleum and gas resources of the offshore area must be developed in such a way as to harmonize the interests of all Canadians, particularly those in Nova Scotia, and that a durable and profitable socio-economic infrastructure is essential.

The agreement is designed to establish a fair tax system and consistent administration of the petroleum resources which are based on the same principle of equity and parity that prevail with the other producing provinces, taking into account the special situation of the offshore area.

The sanction by Parliament of this Bill will endorse the development of the petroleum resources at the earliest opportunity, in the interest of both Governments, and will thus contribute to the security of our energy supplies. It will also confirm Nova Scotia as the principal beneficiary of the activities related to the petroleum resources, and will enable its Government, among other things, to see the benefit of the measures adopted, as if the resources were on land.

Finally, it will reaffirm the equality of the two levels of Government with respect to the actual management of the resources and the maximization of the economic and industrial benefits for Canada and Nova Scotia.

I wish to discuss the key elements of the agreement. The Bill that we are proposing today takes into account the Canada Petroleum Resources Act, which deals with the management of petroleum rights, and which we passed earlier this year, as well as the Canada Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, which deals with the technical regulation of offshore petroleum activities.

As the provisions of the Crown share contained in the 1982 agreement with Nova Scotia were repealed in 1985, we negotiated with the provincial Government a new arrangement which makes it eligible to receive from the Government of Canada annual payments equal to the share of net profits that it would have received under the previous arrangement with respect to offshore projects. This measure should reflect more accurately the actual costs and revenues of the projects in question. It will remain in effect until Nova Scotia reaches the average of the tax level of the other Canadian provinces.

The result is that the Nova Scotia Government is given the responsibility for setting and collecting royalties, as if those resources were on its territory and, therefore, administering the revenues from petroleum and gas activities. The provisions on equalization contained in the 1982 agreement are maintained in this agreement.

I should like to explain briefly the Canada-Nova Scotia Offshore petroleum board for my colleagues. The actual concept of co-management will take on its full meaning in the creation of an independent body which will replace the present Canada-Nova Scotia Petroleum and Gas Resources Board. The mandate of the new board will be to make decisions on matters directly affecting the management of offshore petroleum resources. The offices and personnel of the board will be in Nova Scotia and will perform the functions previously performed by the Canadian Oil and Gas Lands Administration with regard to all offshore operations in Nova Scotia.

The body in question will be called the Canada-Nova Scotia Offshore Petroleum Board and will be composed of five members including a chairman appointed by both Governments. The latter will appoint two members respectively and may appoint alternate members to act as members of the board in the absence or incapacity of any of the regular members. Furthermore, not more than two members of the board may be public servants of the signing Governments.

The board will make decisions on announcing discoveries. It will regulate activities in the petroleum fields and exercise special powers in emergencies. It will also approve the technical aspects of development plans. It will collect royalties. It will carry out public inquiries designed to elucidate matters related to its mandate. It will make recommendations in respect of possible amendments to the Act or regulations flowing from the agreement.

Certain decisions of the board considered vital will require the ratification of both Governments. Examples would be the call for tenders, the ensuing issuance of exploration permits, the definition of specifications related to major discoveries and to production licences, as well as the final approval of development plans. As the decision related to certain Nova Scotia projects is specified in the Bill, they will require only the approval of the provincial counterpart, the Minister responsible for energy in Nova Scotia.

Like other producing provinces, Nova Scotia may now, as a result of the passage of this Bill, participate fully in the negotiations and consultations with the Government of Canada in all matters related to offshore petroleum.

The 1982 agreement saw the creation of a development fund of $200 million to put in place the necessary infrastructure, but before any petroleum and gas production would begin. In the new accord the Government of Canada renounces that condition.

I will now refer to the drilling fund. We had agreed, within the framework of the drilling fund created with a view to bringing offshore petroleum rapidly into production, to pay a sum of $25 million to Nova Scotia Resources Ltd. so that it could participate in the exploration and bringing into production of petroleum in the offshore area of Nova Scotia.

We included in this Act the provisions related to environmental protection contained in the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act which guarantee the same protection for all other frontier lands. In the event of an offshore disaster, the future Act provides for a financial compensation plan for fishermen, or other persons affected, for any damage resulting from wastes or spills.

Subject to ministerial directives, the board will determine the need for a public review in relation to the exercise of any of its powers or the performance of any of its duties when such a review proves necessary. The board may establish terms of reference in a timetable which will permit a comprehensive review of all aspects of the matter and appoint the commissioner or commissioners.

It may require the person who proposed the potential development to submit a preliminary development plan, an environmental impact statement, a socio-economic impact statement, as well as a benefits plan. Finally, it may require that the commissioner or commissioners hold public hearings in the province or elsewhere in Canada and report on them to itself as well as to both Governments.

I should like to make a brief statement on access to production. Aware of the need to reduce substantially Nova Scotia's dependence on foreign oil, the two Governments agreed to encourage within that province the use of oil and gas produced off the East Coast. Furthermore, in the event of a shortage of petroleum in the province, when deliveries are insufficient, Nova Scotia will be given first choice in purchasing under market conditions offshore petroleum not included in a contract.

I should also like to allude to some of the benefits. I see that both parties finally agree to ensure the maximum of the benefits related to offshore petroleum activity for all Canadians, particularly for Nova Scotians. The benefits plan submitted to the board by companies fully involved in offshore exploration must indicate that first consideration will be given to competitive goods and services produced in Nova Scotia and, consistent with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, that workers in that province will be given first consideration for training and employment.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I think you can see that the passage of the Act will mark another milestone in the history of the country, the now more harmonious history, I might add, of federal-provincial relations. The Act will finally sanction the regional development to which Nova Scotia is entitled that in turn will result in the creation of new jobs. The economic and industrial benefits are significant for both Nova Scotia and indeed for Canada.

Although Martin Heidegger maintained that "the will to do something is tantamount to accomplishing it,"—and that is from page 102 of Essays and Lectures by Gallimard—it seems to me that we must take one more step in the right direction by ratifying as quickly as possible this important accord, because the Government and the people of Nova Scotia are awaiting its passage.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have an opportunity to speak on this piece of legislation, Bill C-75. I find this to be rather perplexing in that we are dealing today with a piece of legislation which is completely irrelevant at the present time because of the policies of this Government toward the offshore, particularly the offshore off the East Coast of Canada.

The short title of the Bill we are debating today is the "Canada-Nova Scotia Offshore Petroleum Resources Accord Implementation Act". Not only is the Government's policy completely incomprehensive, it practically made the short title of the Bill incomprehensive.

I am very concerned about quite a few things in respect of the offshore and the Government's policy. First, I would like to deal with the way the Government has tried to frustrate the implementation of energy policy in the country. In January there was an Energy Ministers' conference, which was to be the way that energy policy would be formulated. The energy Ministers of the ten provinces and the federal Minister of Energy met, and they were to meet again during the summer to formulate the ideas which the various public servants and bureaucrats of the respective provinces had formulated during the intervening period.

They met in January. Of course, there were the discussions, all the talk and the completely ridiculous statements the Energy Ministers made about how they would solve the energy policy problems of Canada. To begin with, the federal Minister of Energy did not even wait for the summer and a second meeting of energy Ministers to say what he wanted to do. In June he came out with a paper entitled Energy Security in Canada which does not deal with the question of security of supply at all. In fact, the main thrust of this publication by the Minister is to stockpile oil in case there is a shortage of it in Canada, but I will get into that later.

First, we have the Minister instigating a meeting of Energy Ministers. He did not wait to meet a second time before coming out with his own policy. When the second meeting took place in St. John's in August it fell flatter than a pancake. Then we have the second attempt in the spring of 1987 before the first attempt was completed. The second attempt was "Energy Options" and a well known individual on Bay Street, Mr. Thomas Kierans, was asked to head a committee and make recommendations for energy policy. If you want to get someone to determine energy policy in Canada, Bay Street is not the best place to go. Nevertheless, this is what the Minister of Energy did.

There was a meeting in Calgary in June and since then there have been other meetings. The hearings will be wound up in Montreal in December. We do not know what will be brought forward, but that did not stop the Government with respect to the Energy Ministers.

A third link was started. The Government brought forward the recommendations of the White Paper on Tax Reform which are completely contrary to developing energy security. The Government when it was in Opposition said that there should not be grandiose energy programs in Canada, such as the Petroleum Incentive Program, that they are too costly and there are better ways of developing energy reserves and encouraging some energy security in Canada.

The present Government said in the 1984 election campaign that it would do it through the tax system. But what did the Government do? It came out with a White Paper and cut back tax programs to encourage the development of oil and gas. While it knows it is cutting back the incentives to develop oil and gas projects in Canada, the Government feels the projects should be encouraged through special programs targeted to those particular or respective energy projects. The Government has reversed itself completely.

In 1984 during the election campaign the Conservatives said that oil and gas development should be encouraged through the tax system, yet in this year's White Paper the Government said no, that it wanted to cut back the assistance through the tax system to target various projects. Not only did this break the promise in the election campaign about help through the tax system, it changed the Government's position completely about not targeting for special projects.

Mr. Shields: You are grasping at straws.

Mr. MacLellan: Now the Government is saying that it is going to target special projects. But we really do not know what the Government means because the Government has not done anything constructive to date. What is the Government doing through the White Paper? First, it has cut back on the put in use rule which was very important in Canada because it was targeted largely to major projects. The put in use rule said that you cannot use deductions for major projects until they are actually put in use.

If you have an offshore project, perhaps a Hibernia, where a gravity based drilling operation is to be put in place costing between four and five billion dollars, the developers, Mr. Speaker, cannot use deductions until the platform is actually put in use, costing the developers millions of dollars.

The Government said that the rule would apply to property acquired after 1989 and stipulated that neither the capital cost allowance nor the income tax credits could be used prior to an asset being put in use or, if earlier, the year in which the construction of the asset is completed.

In addition to the put-in use stipulation, the Government cut the rate of capital cost allowance for these types of projects in drilling and exploration facilities from 30 per cent to 25 per cent.

Third, in the White Paper, with respect to the investment tax credit, the Government did not touch the actual rate of 25 per cent for high cost exploration. That is unchanged, but the Government proposed that the investment tax credit could only be applied to one-half of the federal tax payable.

With these three stipulations, the Government of Canada has greatly reduced the inclination of possible developers from going to the East Coast and developing oil and gas reserves existing in that area. That applies not only to the East Coast but to the Beaufort as well. That was the third attempt at trying to set some energy policy.

Fourth, the most recent one, is the free trade agreement. It completely nullifies and makes obsolete the other ideas which the Government said it would bring forward, not that those ideas were ever going to come forward. We have only the Government's word that there would be any ideas coming forward. I would like to deal with the free trade agreement later on, but I want now to concentrate on the offshore.

We have a tremendously serious situation because of lack of activity. I want to refer to some things said by the Parliamentary Secretary. He said that things are wonderful now because there is no confrontation with the provinces. We are talking about an agreement between Canada and Nova Scotia which replaces an agreement entered into between Nova Scotia and the previous Liberal Government. Not only that, the agreement between Nova Scotia and the former Liberal Government was entered into in the final days before the election in 1984. Nova Scotia obviously wanted to enter into that agreement. There was no confrontation or bad feeling between Canada and Nova Scotia at that point. In fact, the way it looks right now Nova Scotia would have done better by sticking with that agreement than entering into this second one with the present Government.

We criticize the Crown's share and say that the Crown's shares are no longer applicable. The present agreement says that Nova Scotia will get something, but the federal Government is doing absolutely nothing to promote the offshore. Until the federal Government does something to promote the offshore, to create some activity, there will be no activity, and Nova Scotia will reap none of the benefits from the production of oil and gas. What the Government has been saying about the relations between the Province of Nova Scotia and former Liberal Governments is just not true. In fact, those relations were most cordial.

This Bill will do to develop oil and gas on the offshore. There is nothing here. It is only a means of conducting meetings and of regulating what will happen if perchance exploration and development does take place, but it is not taking place. Until actual exploration is carried out in Nova Scotia and there is development of the oil and gas reserves, this Bill will just be an academic exercise.

The Parliamentary Secretary said as well that this Bill will cut Nova Scotia's dependence on foreign oil. That is just not true. This Bill will not do anything to cut Nova Scotia's dependence on foreign oil. For instance, at the present time we in Atlantic Canada are dependent almost exclusively on imported oil. In fact, in 1986 the whole of Atlantic Canada relied on foreign oil for 99 per cent of the oil that was used. The Province of Quebec relied on foreign oil for 60 per cent of the oil it used in 1986.

In Atlantic Canada, 180,000 barrels of foreign oil a day were imported in 1986. In the first nine months of 1987, that increased from 180,000 barrels per day to 200,000 barrels per day. The actual dependence on foreign oil is increasing.

We have the reserves but nothing is being done to develop them. The one puny utterance from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) was contained in this document, Energy Security in Canada, in which he advocates stockpiling oil. He does not advocate moving ahead to develop the reserves that exist in the offshore. He wants to stockpile foreign oil. That is fine as an interim solution, but that is no plan for developing the energy security of this country.

The Parliamentary Secretary said that this Bill gives Nova Scotians, in times of shortages of supply, the ability to have the first option on oil produced in Nova Scotia. I would like to refer to Clause 39 of the Bill which is entitled "Regional Security of Supply." Clause 39(2) reads:

> (2) Where there is a shortfall of petroleum deliveries in the Province, the Provincial Minister may, after consulting with the Federal Minister, give notice to holders of production licences in the offshore area that the consumers and facilities referred to in paragraphs (1)(a), (b) and (c) that are specified in the notice have, during the term of the notice, the first option to acquire, on commercial terms, petroleum produced in the offshore area unless a sales contract with respect to that petroleum has been entered into prior to the giving of the notice.

For one thing, of course, it is dependent upon a sales contract not having been entered into. That, of course, is a very big "if". Second, it flies in the face of the Government's free trade agreement with the United States. The Government cannot now make assurances to Nova Scotia or to any other province that it will get this kind of priority access to its own reserves. The Government saw to that. It gave away any right that Nova Scotia or any province would have to the first option to production in its jurisdiction. We do not know where that oil will go or where the natural gas will go. The free trade agreement makes sure of that.

I would certainly agree that the Parliamentary Secretary stated the philosophy of his Government when he said the will to do something is tantamount to accomplishing it. The will is the only thing it has, because it has not accomplished anything in developing the offshore of this country. If the will exists, it is certainly a well-kept secret.

This summer we were supposed to have, according to the statements of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), some agreement with the developers and the owners of Hibernia. We did not get anything. The Minister of Transport said, as reported by his local newspaper, that they are asking too much, they are not being fair. This coming from the same Government that says we should let the private sector develop our energy opportunities. This is the same Government that says we should let Petro-Canada operate as a private sector corporation and not restrict it to being an arm of public policy. Yet at the same time, it will blame the lead players in the development of Hibernia for not doing anything.

We do not know what this Government is doing. We certainly have not heard anything from it as to what it will be doing to try to help develop the oil and gas reserves off the East Coast of Canada.

It is completely ridiculous that the Government would say that it is doing something to develop these reserves. Just recently, when he was in St. John's, the Minister of Energy told the people of Newfoundland that the free trade agreement would be good for the development of Hibernia. He said that with the free trade agreement, Hibernia will have all sorts of new markets. Atlantic Canada is 99 per cent dependent on foreign oil. Quebec is 60 per cent dependent on foreign oil. What is wrong with the markets that already exist?

Is the Minister saying that the oil and gas off the East Coast of Canada is not good enough for Atlantic Canadians and the people of Quebec, that it should not be wasted there but should really be sold in the United States if it is to have any major purpose whatsoever? That is just ludicrous and it is an insult to the people of eastern Canada.

We have been told that under the free trade agreement, even in times of energy shortages, the United States is to get a proportionate amount of Canada's energy. That is quite significant, particularly with respect to oil. This country is rapidly running out of supplies of light and medium crude. It is not the policy of the Liberal Party to say that we should not be selling oil to the United States. Up until the free trade agreement, we had the National Energy Board to tell us when we would be running short and when we would have a scarcity of supply. We relied on it to do this job.

The Liberal Party was the first Party to endorse the decision of the National Energy Board to do away with the surplus test. We felt that that was the best way to go. It was fair to the suppliers of natural gas and it was in the best interests not only of the sale of Canadian natural gas to the United States but to the development of new reserves.

We did not and could not, nor could anybody, accept the Conservative Government's agreement to completely gut the National Energy Board. We will not know when we are running short and, if we do, we will not be able do anything about it.

We have said that we will give a proportionate amount of our energy to the United States and we do not know how much that will be. Let us just look at some of the rumours we have been hearing about energy. Supposedly there will be a block period which will indicate what percentage will be going to the United States. We do not know when that block period will be, or for how long it will be, but supposedly that is what it will be. If that block period is the first six months of 1987, then 37 per cent of all oil produced in Canada will be earmarked for the United States, because in the first six months of 1987, 37 per cent of all the oil produced in Canada was sold to the United States. That means we are obligated even at times when we do not have security of supply for our own needs.

The Government is backing away from developing an energy policy, which means we do not have the assurance that our supplies of light and medium crude are going to be replaced through new projects, such as oil and gas on the East Coast, the tar sands, the Beaufort, or through upgrading. We do not have that assurance because the Government has waffled for three years on this question. We are no further ahead now than we were in September of 1984, regardless of all the government statements, commissions, committees, brochures, periodicals, and free trade agreements with the U.S.

The Atlantic Accord did nothing to help the oil and gas industry off the coast of Newfoundland. Now we are talking about the Nova Scotia offshore and this Bill will not make any difference at all. In 1987, this year, only $33 million has been spent on the Nova Scotia offshore. It is only because of the grandfathering of the Petroleum Incentives Program that we have that. That was put in place by the former Government. In 1984, $600 million was spent on the Nova Scotia offshore, so it is completely ludicrous for the Government to say it is concerned about exploration in the Nova Scotia offshore.

Under this agreement the Government turned the $200 million loan under the former agreement into a grant, but look at where the money was spent. Some of it went into things that were not even within miles of the Nova Scotia coastline. That is not easy because it is almost completely surrounded by water. The money was turned into a political slush fund.

What about the $25 million for Nova Scotia Resources Ltd. to develop its reserves in Nova Scotia? That, unfortunately, is woefully inadequate for that company which has a very high debt. Unless it is able to take part in some kind of profitable development of oil or gas very soon, the situation is only going to get worse.

What we want is to develop the reserves to add to the security of supply in Canada, which is minimal at the present. We want the Government to stand by what it said it was going to do—develop security of supply. Do not tell me that the major players in projects like Hibernia and Venture do not want to go ahead. It is up to the Government to develop a fiscal regime that will encourage them to do so. After all, it is the Tory Government that said the private sector was going to do it.

It is no good to say that the Government will give loan guarantees to Mobil. That company does not need loan guarantees. It is not going to go broke. What they want is a plan. They also want to make money, of course, and the Government said there is nothing wrong with that. If Mobil makes a profit, that is great. However, there is something very important at stake here and that is energy security for Canadians. The Government has to do what it said it was going to do, get development going on the East Coast. This legislation is not going to have any effect at all until the Government develops the political will to do something for Nova Scotia.

A great deal of this legislation is similar to the wording in the Atlantic Accord. There are a few things in there that I question and I will do that in committee, but that is the easy part. The difficult part is to get the Government to realize the importance of the offshore to Nova Scotia as well as Newfoundland, indeed to all of Atlantic Canada, and to start honouring the commitments it made, take them seriously and not just try and slough off this very important industry in Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words on behalf of my Party concerning Bill C-75, which implements the agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of Nova Scotia dealing with the offshore.

Before I do that, since this is the first time I have had an opportunity to say a few words in my new capacity as energy critic for the NDP, I want to pay tribute to the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). For many years he was a very competent spokesman on energy for our Party. I want to say how much I, my Leader, and all of us in caucus appreciated the contribution he made in this field. He had some expertise in this area gained in the work he did before being elected to this House and made a great contribution, not only on behalf of his Party but on behalf of all Members of Parliament, to understanding the problems of energy in this country. The Hon. Member has done some good work on this particular issue, offshore resource development, made a few speeches and raised a number of questions.

As the House already knows from those speeches and others, our Party of course supports the agreement we have before us today. This is simply mirror legislation to that already passed in the Nova Scotia Legislature a number of weeks ago. The most important thing we can do today is raise some questions about the future of energy in this country and then send it off to committee for detailed study. There we can call in experts and government officials and make sure we scrutinize the Bill very closely.

This Bill is very similar to Bill C-6, an agreement between Canada and the Government of Newfoundland on the Newfoundland offshore. It is very similar as well to the Atlantic Accord which has already been dealt with in this House.

As I said, we support this arrangement but we have a number of questions we want to raise in committee. Those questions will be positive, of course, and I want to say a couple of very positive things about the Bill before us today.

First, I am glad to see that there is an agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of Nova Scotia. There was a time in the 1970s and early 1980s when this kind of agreement was not possible. I am not going to place the blame for that squarely and solely on the doorstep of the former Government. The 1970s were very turbulent times in the oil business around the world and in Canada. It was very difficult at that time to come to this kind of agreement. It was also a time when a great constitutional debate was taking place and these kinds of agreements were more difficult to achieve.

The second positive aspect about this agreement is that it now includes provincial involvement in the offshore business in Canada. I believe provincial involvement is very important, and I suggest that we should try to carry this a step further and consider a constitutional amendment to enshrine provincial control of offshore resources in the Constitution of Canada. That is very important to provinces like Nova Scotia and Newfoundland.

I know how important it is to Saskatchewan for the Constitution of Canada to include some control regarding energy. In 1981 our Party was instrumental in persuading the government of the day to insert in the Constitution of Canada an amendment which provided for some control over resources for provinces like Saskatchewan and Alberta. I believe that was a very important step in terms of our controlling and husbanding resources such as gas and oil and potash which are so important for our development.

I know the importance of this control because in Saskatchewan we have a gas and oil industry and a potash industry. We have many other natural resource industries. Such control is also important to Alberta, and we should seriously consider a constitutional amendment extending the same kinds of rights to people in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia in regard to offshore energy.

I want to raise a number of questions about the Bill which I know have been raised in Nova Scotia, and before in the House. For example, it is not clear whether there is enough protection in the legislation for aboriginal land claims in the Province of Nova Scotia. I suggest the committee should closely examine the Bill to make sure that the rights of aboriginal people, our original Canadian citizens, are adequately protected in Bill C-75. I also want to make sure that there are some public rights to inspect development and benefit plans in the Province of Nova Scotia, and that there is adequate access to information and adequate benefits in terms of royalties to the Province of Nova Scotia. We must have enough details and information about how these programs regarding royalties and other benefits will be carried out under this legislation.

My third concern is that, according to my understanding of the legislation and the comments I have heard, there is no provision for an independent environmental impact assessment of what this will mean in the offshore of Nova Scotia. There should be provision for an environmental impact study, because the environment is important not only to today's generation, but to the generations of the future.

My fourth concern is that there is no requirement for a public hearing process on applications. This is another question that should be considered at committee stage.

The fifth and probably most important concern of Nova Scotians about this agreement between their government and the Government of Canada is that there may be inadequate protection for the fishery on Georges Bank in relation to offshore drilling. The Georges Bank is one of the richest fishing banks, not only in this country but in the entire world. There is some concern in the Province of Nova Scotia that the Bill should provide more protection for this extremely wealthy renewable resource from offshore drilling.

For example, I am aware that Texaco is attempting to get permission to drill in the Georges Bank. While oil and gas is important to the future of Nova Scotia and this country we must never forget that the fishery is a much wealthier resource, a renewable resource and one that we must protect with all our ability so that it will continue to produce for many generations to come. I understand there was some protection for the fishery on Georges Bank in the previous accord five years ago. Although it may not have been adequate in 1982, that protection has now been removed.

Finally, I believe the committee should ask some serious questions about the protection of security of supply for the people of Nova Scotia. I am not convinced that anything in this legislation addresses the issue of adequate security of supply.

Let me conclude by making some general observations about this legislation. I have not seen from this Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) or his predecessor, the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), any vision or plan for the future of energy policy in this country other than relying on the private sector and primarily the huge American multinational corporations to develop energy for us. I do not see any vision to Canadianize the industry, to control it for Canada, to plan our developments and, in some cases, conserve the gas and oil for future generations.

Rather than a true Canadian plan, I see something that makes me fearful as a Canadian. It is a continental energy policy in the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States that will develop our energy in this country lockstep with the energy needs of the United States of America.

As we debate this legislation before the House today, we must raise questions about the future security of supply for Nova Scotians, Newfoundlanders, Albertans and all Canadians. We must ask how we can use that resource to best develop our country, create jobs, and provide energy supply at a reasonable price for Canadians.

The most serious aspect of the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States is the complete integration of the North American energy market in Canada and the United States. In fact, President Reagan said that this free trade agreement is the economic constitution of North America.

The Hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie), the former mayor of Toronto, is in the House. I know that as mayor of Toronto he wanted substantial control at City Council in order for the people of Toronto to make decisions that affected their own lives.

I argue that the same thing pertains in this situation. Canadians should have the ultimate say on the price of energy in this country, and the ultimate say over security of supply. According to the free trade agreement, the only option available is to charge the same price to Canadian consumers as we charge to consumers to whom we are exporting in the United States.

I was in the House in the 1970s when there was a tremendous increase in the price of oil. Many people supported a two-price system at that time which kept the price for Canadian farmers in my riding, of whom there are thousands, at a much lower price than they would have had to pay if we were to charge our farmers the world price. People were able to heat their homes for a much lower price because we had a two-price system. People were able to pay a lower price for gasoline because we had a two-price system.

If we adopt this free trade agreement we will not be able to adopt such a system, because we will have to charge the same price for the person in Kamsack, Toronto or Halifax as someone in Los Angeles, Chicago or San Francisco. I believe it is detrimental to the future of Canada to give away our sovereignty.

While current situations may warrant similar prices now, we do not know if that will be the situation in the future. However, there may be a time when the Government and Parliament of Canada will have to introduce an act similar to that in the 1970s when consumers were cushioned from the crisis in the Middle East when oil prices went through the ceiling in a matter of months. It is beyond me how the party of Sir John A. Macdonald and John Diefenbaker can forever give up this sovereignty over the price of energy in Canada.

Mrs. Sparrow: They are not giving away sovereignty.

Mr. Nystrom: The Hon. Member from Calgary says they are not giving away any sovereignty. Just read the free trade agreement. It is a broad agreement to assure the freest possible bilateral trade in energy, including non-discriminatory access for the United States to Canadian energy supplies and secure market access for Canada to energy markets in the United States.

Mrs. Sparrow: The provinces have total control of it.

Mr. Nystrom: The provinces, under this agreement, can no longer charge a different price for consumers in Alberta than what they sell it for in the United States.

Mrs. Sparrow: We don't want that, anyway.

Mr. Nystrom: The Member from Calgary confirms that. She says they do not want it anyway. My argument is that we may want it. In the 1970s we had a Canadian price which was much lower than the price of exports to the United States. I support that kind of policy very strongly and there was massive support for that policy in the Province of Saskatchewan.

I would like to challenge any member of the Conservative Party to come into my riding and put the argument that my farmers do not deserve a lower Canadian price when prices go through the ceiling, as they did in the 1970s. I am really concerned about that. It is a debate that we are going to have. I see the Member from near Toronto, the Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis), smiling.

Mr. Lewis: Simcoe North.

Mr. Nystrom: I remember the anger of the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) a few years ago when certain Albertans came out with a bumper sticker that said, "Let the eastern bastards freeze in the dark". There was a lot of anger in this House. I was angry. As a western Canadian, I thought it was a very unfair comment to make about central Canadians. But it will not be Albertans who will say that in the future. It could be the Americans because they control our energy policy, and I do not agree with that.

We could have long term contracts without giving up our right to set a Canadian price. We could have long term contracts without giving up our right to control supply in a time of crisis. What we are giving away in this particular free trade agreement is the right to security of supply because it says that in the time of crisis the United States must have proportional access to the diminished supply in Canada and we must not discriminate on price. We cannot use energy to develop in a discriminatory fashion the economies in Saskatchewan, Manitoba or Quebec because we must charge the same price in the United States.

I hope that becomes a major issue in the next election campaign. If it is, the Conservative Party will be tossed out on its ear because Canadians want their sovereignty and the right to set their own energy prices and to control their own security of supply. That is exactly what the people of this country want. They were very happy back in the 1970s to have a two-price system. The people in my riding were very happy to have that system and I was very proud to support a two-price system that provided the farmers of Kamsack with a price for their fuel that was much lower than they would have had to pay if the Conservative Party had been in power.

I want to campaign across this country for the right of Canadians to set their own price and to control their own security of supply. I am surprised that this kind of policy would come from the Party which fought so hard against free trade with the United States in 1911. The party of Sir John A. Macdonald and John Diefenbaker had a Canadian vision. Canadians want to control their own sovereignty and they want the power to make those decisions.

I will conclude by saying that this will be a long debate because it concerns the future of Canada. It is very surprising to me that my Conservative friends opposite want to give up the right to set our own price and the right to control our security of supply. That is an incredible thing. I ask my friends opposite if they are Members of Parliament of this country of Canada, or are they really Congressmen from the United States, because they are giving those rights to Washington and not to Canada? Our Party will fight them on that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-87, an Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges to give effect to the international convention on the harmonized commodity description and coding system, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters, and to amend or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure today to introduce Bill C-87 which will replace the existing Customs Tariff and incorporate the provisions of the Duties Relief Act. This is the bulkiest legislative measure ever tabled in the House—three tomes and 1,905 pages.

Mr. Speaker, this Bill reflects the Governmen't pledge to implement the new Customs Tariff by January 1, 1988. Parliament was made aware of the Government's intention through notices of ways and means motions tabled with the Budget documents on February 26, 1986 and February 18, 1987. The Bill will also enable us to enforce the detailed provisions of the notice of ways and means motion tabled in the House on Friday, October 2, 1987.

Since our customs legislation had to be overhauled, the Government is introducing measures designed to replace the entire Customs Tariff. The original approach of the new legislation will make it possible for the Government to set up a tariff structure which, as we near the turn of the century, is more in keeping with a modern, technology-based economy.

The Bill has been drafted to account for the principles underlying the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System. This system is the result of an international endeavour aimed at standardizing the tariff classification and the system of statistics pertaining to commercial exchanges among the world's major trading nations.

Under the harmonized system a given good will basically be classified according to its characteristic or nature rather that the use to which it may be put. It will be classified only once to avoid resorting to multiple choices.

The Harmonized System is an entirely new approach to commodity classification. It was developed in consultation with government and private sector experts, in order to allow for present-day technology and the range of products involved in international trade.

Together with its main trading partners, Canada is committed to implementing the new tariff system as of January 1, 1988. The tabling of this Bill in the House was an important step in a lengthy process that started in 1981, when the Canadian Government decided to adopt the Harmonized System.

In 1981, most countries were using a common commodity classification system for customs purposes. The system, developed in Brussels by the Customs Co-operation Council, was the predecessor of the Harmonized System.

Canada and the United States each had a different system for tariff classification. Both countries understood the advantages of using a system they would share with the rest of the world. That is why we participated in the development of the Harmonized System, together with the other members of the Council, including major trading countries such as the members of the Common Market and Japan.

Canada has an important role to play internationally by helping improve the climate of trading relations, and this Bill will help it play that role. The Harmonized System is an important step towards a more rational and more specific world trading system. Adopting this system will benefit our importers and Canadian business people in general.

The new Customs Tariff is set up in a more logical manner, which makes things easier for the importer and for the customs officers who have to classify imported goods and determine the applicable duty. This should simplify import formalities and reduce the number of appeals from tariff classification decisions.

The Harmonized System also lends itself better to computerized import procedures. Revenue Canada has developed a brand new data processing system that will be introduced at the same time as the Harmonized System. The private sector has also taken steps to adjust its methods for processing imports and exports to the Harmonized System. As of January 1, 1988, importers will face fewer administrative formalities and be able to clear goods through Customs faster then was the case under the old system. The new system will also result in a savings to business and the Government.

As far as international trade negotiations are concerned, by adopting the Harmonized System, countries will be better able to understand their respective tariffs. The outlook for multilateral trade negotiations like the Uruguay Round in which Canada is participating today would be considerably brighter.

The Harmonized System also provides for a statistical coding system integrated in the tariff classification system, which will vastly improve the statistical data on Canada's imports and exports. This process will also make it easier to compare Canada's trading statistics with those of other countries.

The proposed new tariff was adopted only after close public consultation. A working paper highlighting the benefits flowing from the adoption of the new tariff classification system had been released in 1981. In 1984, draft tariff provisions covering all goods included in the current Customs Tariff, converted to the harmonized system, were submitted to the Tariff Board for public consultation. Board officials held public hearings on the Government's proposals and heard evidence from commercial organizations, corporations, consultants and customs brokers. Their testimony and the board's detailed analysis were the basis of recommendations contained in the four reports tabled in the House.

The Bill now before the House features a great many of the Tariff Board's recommendations. It also takes into consideration the results of the international trade negotiations to which Canada was party so that the rights of our trade partners will be respected throughout the conversion process.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to commend the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) for his helpful co-operation. He did his utmost to keep importers aware of the Customs Tariff amendments we are proposing.

In 1986, Revenue Canada Customs and Excise officials launched a public information program featuring leaflets, briefings and training seminars. This program has been recently accelerated and expanded. Importers and customs brokers from coast to coast were convened to learn more about the impact of the new tariff on their day-to-day activities. They were also able to become familiar with the improved customs processing system scheduled to be set in motion by Revenue Canada on January 1, 1988.

Once the new system is operational, occasionally goods may be classified under an item not provided in the Customs Tariff. The Government will then use a special procedure to deal with any problems that may arise. To enable the Government to respond quickly and efficiently, the draft Bill included a provision that will authorize the Government to make any necessary changes in the schedules during the 18 months following the Bill's coming in to force.

I may also draw your attention to a provision in the Bill that would extend the prohibition on importing pornographic material or hate literature, as it appears in the present Customs Tariff, beyond the expiry date of December 31, 1987.

Mr. Speaker, as you no doubt recall, this provision, which appears in Schedule C of the present Customs Tariff, was last amended in 1986. The expiry date was to apply to this provision since it was expected that amendments to the provisions in the Criminal Code dealing with pornography would have become effective by that date. Hon. Members are of course aware that the legislation provides a more specific definition of pornography and that these definitions, as soon as they have been approved by Parliament, will be included in the Customs Tariff. Since amendments to the Criminal Code are subject to scrutiny by the House, the Government has preferred to extend the application of this provision for an additional period of six months to ensure effective control of imports of this kind of material.

There is another point I would like to mention. The revised legislation maintains the present tariff treatment for books and other publications. Hon. Members will notice that books and other publications are generally taxed at a rate of 10 per cent. Mr. Speaker, I may explain that despite this statutory rate, books will continue to enter duty free by order of remission. We found it necessary to maintain the 10 per cent duty because of the multilateral trade negotiations now proceeding in Geneva. The Government would consider reducing these tariffs in the course of these negotiations, in exchange for concessions by our trading partners.

The Harmonized System will bring about a fundamental change in the way goods are described for customs purposes. Under the new system, there will inevitably be a number of changes regarding the rate of duty applied to certain goods. However, we have tried to keep the impact on Canadian importers and producers to a minimum. Generally speaking, the conversion will have no impact on revenue.

I should like to deal now with the question of timing. Hon. Members are fully aware that the date set for implementing the harmonized system—January 1, 1988—is getting ever closer. This is why we will have to proceed with dispatch in our consideration of this Bill so that Canada be in a position to honour its commitments to its international partners. Hopefully Hon. Members will give due priority to the study and speedy adoption of this measure.

The Government acted as quickly as possible to be sure it would be able to have the legislation passed before January 1, 1988. Canada's trade sector, particularly importers and exporters, look forward to seeing this legislative measure in the statute books. Similarly our main trade partners who will also be switching to tariff systems based on the harmonized system next January 1 expect Canada to play its role in international development.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that Bill C-87 is an important initiative on the part of the Government. It has the support of importers and businessmen who made a number of representations to pave the way for implementation on New Year's Day 1988. It deserves the full consideration of Hon. Members. After examination I am sure they will agree that this Bill will bring significant improvement to Canada's tariff statutes. Given the benefits which businessmen and Canadian industries stand to gain under the new system, I hope all Hon. Members will readily support the Bill.

[English]

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Ways and Means motion in this particular case looks remarkably intimidating and runs to two big volumes. However, the principle of this Bill is quite simple. It is one of harmonizing the descriptions of commodities and the coding system that are now used for tariffs. This is the first fundamental revision since Confederation.

Our present system is quite complex because goods are slotted into one of 12 groups according to end use. Therefore goods will often fall into more than one category which can cause confusion.

The decision to harmonize and to standardize so that the major industrial countries would be using approximately the same system was undertaken on a multilateral basis with the European Economic Community, the United States and Japan. In Canada work on this has been going on since 1981, although the international negotiations only began in October, 1986.

The Bill before us will increase the number of tariff items from 3,500 to 8,000, and that is simply the subdivision of items. Naturally, we all know that as a result of Canada's negotiations through the years with GATT more and more of our trade is free of tariff.

Also as a result of increasing the number of categories, this Bill will increase the accuracy of trade data. It should be easier for both importers and exporters to classify their goods, therefore, business should be free of the need to have classification appeals which are time consuming and expensive for industry, and also for government, because they eat up a lot of taxpayers' dollars.

The detailed categories should be easier to use. Also, there should be advantages, from the point of trading, because our major trading partners will be using the same classification system for tariffs. This does not necessarily mean that in each case the tariffs will be the same. In theory, this Bill before us is revenue neutral. That is one of the things that remains to be seen.

We are usually told when this type of Bill appears in the House that it is simple, it is technical, and no one disagrees on the principle and, therefore, we should be able to pass it quickly. We have all found through experience that a Bill which appears simple to officials and bureaucrats often has hidden costs and complexities; hidden that is from bureaucrats but very obvious to the business people using the Bill.

Although I do not feel that we need an extensive debate at second reading on this Bill, I would certainly suggest that it go to a legislative committee which would call witnesses. The witnesses who should be heard from would include the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, representatives of importers and exporters, and representatives of small business. Before we put this Bill in place we should know exactly what is involved in terms of costs and convenience for the users of this new system. We should be assured that they are satisfied that the advantages outweigh the disadvantages.

While the Minister has stated that the new legislation will be of significant benefit to Canadian importers, manufacturers, and producers, and that it will result in a more transparent "user friendly" tariff system, we should also know of any possible complications on the other side.

One fairly clear advantage of this new system, and of having it co-ordinated with systems of our major trading partners, is that for the first time statistical trade data will be compatible with the tariff. That should both improve Canada's trade statistics or the quality of reporting, and it should also make it easier to reconcile and compare trade statistics as between Canada and other countries.

Of course, having more accurate import and export data is an advantage in international trade negotiations such as the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations in which Canada is a participant. It has also been said that the new system is more compatible with modern automated customs processing procedures, and that it will form a fundamental part of National Revenue's new customs commercial system to be implemented on January 1, 1988.

Members in the House regularly receive complaints from importers about delays in getting their goods through customs. If this particular reform is part of anything that assists and speeds up that process, it would be a distinct advantage.

I stated at the outset that this is the first fundamental revision of our commodity description system since Confederation. As the Government is modernizing that system, it has also taken the opportunity to include in this Bill some updating of the legislative provisions to the customs tariff, some of which contain wording from the last century.

Another change in the Bill is the incorporation of the Duties Relief Act into the customs tariff, so that we now have brought together in one statute all the legislative provisions relating to the conditions under which customs duties on imported goods are either imposed or relieved.

We have been told that officials have consulted extensively on this Bill with trade associations, customs brokers, and interested parties. But I would repeat, no matter how extensive those consultations have been, they are no substitute for a committee of the House receiving witnesses, holding public hearings, and being quite sure that all the implications have been fully taken into consideration.

The Minister has stated that this was designed to be revenue neutral over-all, but within that some individual rates of duty will be increased or decreased. Before giving this Bill third and final reading, Members of Parliament should be very clear about the exact financial implications, and which sectors will be impacted by these increases and decreases.

This Bill does retain special preferences for the Commonwealth Caribbean countries. It should also be carefully reviewed in committee to ensure that the provisions for developing countries match those in the general preferential tariff.

There is another exception in that the Government has retained the current 10 per cent statutory rate of duty on books and related publications. This is an item on which many of us in the House disagree. But by virtue of a remission order, in fact the goods are entering Canada on a duty-free basis. We may wish to consider whether it is satisfactory having one thing in the statute, and a remission order to negative it, and whether it is not time to change the statute.

In his press release the Minister stated, that,—"given the magnitude of the tariff conversion that has taken place, some 'fine-tuning' may be required for a limited period following implementation on January 1, 1988". I would suggest that if we have good enough committee hearings, perhaps some of the necessary changes could be made now before the Bill comes into effect.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do not leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION

MEECH LAKE ACCORD—REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO SUPREME COURT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, on Monday, October 26, the Government defeated every opposition amendment which attempted to correct ambiguities and gaps in the Meech Lake Accord.

In particular, the Government refused amendments which would have protected the Charter of Rights from any possible impact by the Accord. I personally do not believe that the Meech Lake Accord impacts adversely on the Charter, but others do, and there is legal uncertainty as a result.

In the circumstances, in order to clarify these matters, and to prevent time-consuming and costly litigation, I ask the Government to make a reference now to the Supreme Court of Canada to get an interpretation ruling on these important questions.

This was done with the constitutional process in 1981 and should be done again. If the court rules that there is a serious derogation from the Charter, then that can be corrected at the next constitutional conference.

TRIBUTE TO HARD WORK OF ENTREPRENEURS

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw to the attention of the House that we are presently in the middle of Small Business Week. Small Business Week is an excellent way to inform and promote one of our most valuable assets—our entrepreneurs. Some Hon. Members might be surprised to know that there are over three-quarters of a million small businesses in our country, employing 40 per cent of our labour force and providing 26 per cent of the total wages paid.

In my home Province of British Columbia small business is even more important. There are relatively few corporate headquarters or large manufacturing operations, so we rely on the 128,000 small and medium-sized enterprises for employment and economic growth.

Small Business Week provides a forum in which to establish and reinforce the environment where we can all appreciate the qualities of the small business owner. In today's world, qualities such as creativity, hard work, and the desire to succeed should be actively encouraged. In light of the free trade agreement with the United States these values take on increased importance.

Our Government is committed to promoting these values and maintaining a positive economic environment. Lower interest rates, a fairer tax system, and increased investment opportunities ensure that Canadian small businesses will have the opportunity to meet the challenges ahead.

SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORT TAX

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the continuing willingness of the Canadian Government to let the United States of America control our trade agenda appals me. This past Tuesday the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew), in a speech to the Canadian Wood Council, said that Canadians are not speaking from a position of strength in discussions with the United States pertaining to the export of Canadian softwood lumber.

The Minister suggested that the U.S. lumber sector is likely to reject the formula worked out between the federal and provincial Governments to replace the 15 per cent softwood export tax with a system of provincial levies. This formula, I might add, has not yet been presented to the U.S. negotiators.

The Minister admitted that the free trade agreement will not assure our current share of the U.S. softwood market. The Government's supine approach to the softwood lumber issue astounds me. When will it wake up and emulate the actions of the U.S. Government and industry by vigorously negotiating our side of the issue?

GRANT TO EDMONTON AMUSEMENT PARK PROJECT—OPPOSITION MEMBERS' QUESTIONS

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I am perplexed by the insinuations and aspersions which have been cast upon the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) during recent Question Periods. I am disappointed that supposedly experienced Members of the House have stooped so low as to impugn the integrity of someone who has served Canada so well and for so long.

The owners of the West Edmonton Mall and Canada Fantasyland complex in Edmonton have also been on the receiving end of the Opposition's ill-informed barbs. I want all Members to know that I resent any slurs which may indicate that these people are anything but tremendous assets to our community. This incredible facility has brought over 9 million visitors to Edmonton in the last year alone, resulting in untold millions of dollars being pumped into an economy which sorely needed it.

It is significant to note that out of a 1.25-inch thick Auditor General's report, all the Opposition can criticize is a grant to a corporation which has created 15,000 new jobs, injected over $200 million back into a stagnant economy, reduced the provincial tourism debt by 50 per cent, and given Canada an attraction that can only be described as the eighth wonder of the world.

FAVOURABLE AUDIT OF CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION'S FINANCIAL STATEMENTS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the CBC on the very successful handling of the Corporation's financial affairs during the last fiscal year. As you know, last year the CBC experienced tremendous difficulties in implementing a very complex new financial information system which prevented it from receiving a complete audit from the Auditor General.

The board and staff have worked hard and well since then to sort out and perfect the new system and this year have earned the complete approval of the Auditor General who remarks in his report released this week that the CBC:

> —has provided to the Government and, ultimately to Parliament, a reliable account of its stewardship of public moneys for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1987.

The report also states that the CBC has been rendered:

> —an unqualified audit opinion on the 1987 financial statements.

The CBC was severely criticized last fiscal year for its audit problems, and I think we should be just as ready now to congratulate the chairman of the board, the president, and the staff for their work over the past year and to assure them that they have more than lived up to the confidence placed in them by Parliament and Canadians. Our public broadcast TV and radio networks are the lynchpin of Canada's culture and identity. They are a source of top quality news, drama and music, and all Canadians are very proud of the CBC.

PENITENTIARIES

FERNDALE INSTITUTION—INMATES' ASSISTANCE IN FIGHTING FOREST FIRES

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, the men and women serving sentences in our correctional institutions tend to be forgotten by the person on the street unless their presence is highlighted by a sensational incident. However, some, even from within the constraints of such an environment, manage to provide society with a helpful hand at critical times. I would like to acknowledge some of them today.

Over the last few weeks about 40 federal inmates from the Ferndale Institution in Mission, British Columbia, have been putting in 12-hour days assisting the B.C. Forest Service in fighting fires in the Norrish Creek area. These inmates were trained by the B.C. Forest Service in firefighting techniques. This training program has not only provided a worth-while opportunity for inmates to acquire some new skills and use their time productively while incarcerated, but it has also demonstrated that they can continue to make a valuable contribution to the community while serving their sentences.

Such demonstrated personal commitment and community awareness on the part of staff of the Correctional Service of Canada and the inmates participating should be praised. They are setting a unique example for other institutions as well as for the general public.

Let us thank them and tell them to keep up the good work.

GRANT MADE TO EDMONTON AMUSEMENT PARK PROJECT

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. de Cotret) told the House that his $5 million grant to Fantasyland created 15,000 jobs. Curious about this 15,000 jobs I called the personnel office at Fantasyland to inquire about the number of people employed by the Ghermezians. My request for information was flatly denied.

I am concerned about a Government that violates its own grant eligibility guidelines to open the public purse to friendly developers. I am concerned about a Minister who boldly asserts that 15,000 jobs were created by the application of this grant but shies away from the particulars. I am concerned about an employer who has clearly instructed his staff not to release employment figures. Surly if the Ghermezians did create 15,000 jobs, they would be proud to affirm this fact to the public. Perhaps their reluctance to reveal the size of their labour force is prompted by the knowledge that the 15,000 figure does not hold water unless, of course, the dolphins are on the payroll.

HISTORIC EVENTS

COMMEMORATION OF SLOVENE INDEPENDENCE

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, October 29, Canadians of Slovenian heritage celebrate their Independence Day. In 1918, under the leadership of Dr. Anton Korosec, the Slovenes withdrew from the Austro-Hungarian empire and proclaimed their independence. Later in that same year they joined as equal partners with Serbs and Croats to form the Kingdom of Yugoslavia.

Over the years, Slovenian immigrants to Canada have contributed greatly to the growth and development of this nation, one example being Reverend Frederick Baraga, a Slovenian missionary who, in 1830, came to Canada to work among the Indians and later became the first Bishop of Sault Ste. Marie and Marquette. Today, the Slovenian community is a vital and thriving community within the Canadian mosaic.

Canadians of Slovenian heritage invite all Canadians to join with them in commemorating Slovene independence and its underlying reminder of the continuing struggle to establish freedom and justice for people of all nations.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, Canadian consumers may not know that last year almost 10,000 drugs which were not properly tested by Government authorities were sold to the public.

This point has been raised by the Auditor General who said that close to 10,000 drugs sold in Canada this year have not been properly tested, which is another way of saying that the Government is playing Russian roulette with the health of Canadians because it has made cutbacks in health promotion.

[English]

The Auditor General pointed out that these 10,000 emergency drugs which were released on to the market actually created a potential risk for people. This shows that the Government is prepared to play Russian roulette with the health of Canadians by putting drugs on the market-place that are not properly tested because of cut-backs in health protection and promotion.

The health of Canadians is too sacred to be put at risk. We urge the Government to reinstate the full budget for the Health Protection Branch to ensure that drugs put on the market are properly tested. We do not want to have another thalidomide situation, and that could be the result of this very disastrous government cut-back.

ALBERTA—INCREASE IN NUMBER OF SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Walter Van De Walle (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, October 25 to 31 is Small Business Week in Canada. I would like to take this opportunity to recognize the nation's entrepreneurs.

We are all well aware that small businesses are the core of Canada's economy. They are the source of new ideas, the cradle of innovation. In addition, small businesses provide the greater portion of jobs and opportunities for the people of this country.

In my home province, the Province of Alberta, there are approximately 120,000 small businesses of which 97 per cent employ less than 100 people. I was pleased to find that in the first part of this year Alberta saw an increase of 10,169 small businesses. This is indeed good news.

Small Business Week is a time to look at the accomplishments of the people who own and operate the nation's small businesses. Not only did they provide 70 per cent of the new jobs in the last two years, but they have also shown that individual determination and hard work can have a significant impact on the outlook of the entire nation.

The Canada-U.S. trade agreement will present new opportunities. Canadians as free enterprisers can look forward to a bright future of increased employment and productivity. Small business is big business in Canada.

REVENUE CANADA

AUDIT OF FARMERS' INCOMES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) is again harassing some 700 farmers who used the investment tax credit when they traded in old machines for new ones. The point at issue is whether or not the machinery dealers were offering too much for used machines. Revenue Canada thinks it knows this market better than the dealers. In the final analysis, it is the farmers who pay the taxes levied.

Since 1986, several Ministers have personally assured farmers that the audits begun in late 1985 would stop. They did for a time, but since then they have been on again and off again several times. Audits last stopped last spring but now they are on again.

The investment tax credit program helps in many deals. Unfortunately, Revenue Canada has never made it clear how it wants things handled. Its interpretations are retroactive and changeable, its actions are of questionable legality. What law permits it to rewrite legal contracts years after the fact?

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF LIBERAL AND NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTIES

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the NDP and the Liberals are trying to fool the people by saying over and over again that free trade will mean the loss of sovereignty, that we will lose our social programs and that the Americans will take our jobs. What nonsense!

Canada has had virtually free trade for a number of years in some red meats. We have not lost our sovereignty, none of our social programs have disappeared and no Americans have taken our jobs. On the contrary, this free trade with the United States has brought benefits in the way of more prosperous times for the ranchers, more jobs for the people and increased prosperity for the areas involved in both countries.

The NDP and the Liberals seem to think that if they tell a non-truth often enough, the people will believe it. Canadians are not naive. What free trade has done for the red meats can be repeated over and over again, bringing buoyancy to our economy, and prosperity and jobs to our people.

• (1415)

So keep right on, Mr. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and Progressive Conservatives. There is victory at the end of the road for free trade and a greater united Canada.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FEDERAL-MANITOBA CHILD WELFARE ACCORD—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, this is to advise the House that in November, 1985, the previous Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), signed a political Accord on Manitoba Indian child welfare. The Accord was signed with Indian representatives and the provincial Minister of Community Services. It outlined a negotiation process for a new child welfare arrangement in Manitoba to replace the existing tripartite agreement which was about to expire.

Although that Accord was signed two years ago, there has been no progress towards the new arrangement which it provided for. The political-ministerial negotiations stipulated in the Accord have not taken place.

The Manitoba Indian child welfare agencies are currently operating with funding levels below those of their provincial counterparts. They are, however, expected to provide services according to provincial standards. Yet they do not have the resources that will allow them to carry out those responsibilities.

Therefore, Sir, I ask the Minister to fulfil his obligations under the Accord. Child welfare is a priority for Manitoba Indian people. Surely it ought to be a priority for the Minister and his Government as well.

ALLEGED INTERFERENCE BY SOCIALIST LEADER IN QUEBEC'S AFFAIRS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Last weekend, Mr. Speaker, the socialist leader—spending the money he gets from the auto workers who have been enjoying free trade since 1965—came to tell Quebecers and Premier Robert Bourassa that free trade will do no good to the hydro power sector.

Contrary to the statement made by the socialist leader, the free trade agreement does not force Quebec to export its energy in times of shortages. Contrary to what he has been saying, Quebec Hydro and the Government of Quebec retain full control over their resources. Contrary to what he has been saying, hydro rates will be set by the law of supply and demand.

The socialist leader did not read the free trade agreement, he cannot see the difference between renewable and non-renewable energy, and he could not care less about the management skills of Quebec Hydro and Premier Bourassa.

Mr. Speaker, should you care to seek further information about this interference of the socialist leader in the affairs of Quebec, I would refer you to Alain Dubuc's article published in La Presse of Wednesday, October 28, 1987.

FISHERIES

USE OF DRIFT-NETS ON PACIFIC COAST OPPOSED

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, for years fishing groups, both sport and commercial, have joined with environmental groups, notably Greenpeace, demanding that the Canadian Government negotiate an end to the use of drift-nets in the international fishery. Canadian representatives have, in recent years, discussed this issue with their American and Japanese counterparts in the International North Pacific Fisheries Commission. Due to Canadian efforts the agenda at next month's meeting will include the topic of marine debris and the issue of drift-nets.

However, the Canadian Government has also sanctioned an experimental drift-net fishery which, in 1986, claimed 49 marine mammals, including two killer whales and five pilot whales. Even after this destruction the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) approved another drift-net experiment in 1987. The death count this year is 90 marine mammals and 512 sea-birds.

How can the Minister be taken seriously when he is pressuring the international community to end this drift-net fishery and at the same time attempting to introduce the use of drift-nets on the Pacific coast? This hypocrisy and the use of drift-nets have to stop.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE DISPUTE—FRENCH PRIME MINISTER'S ANNOUNCEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Last spring we repeatedly warned the Prime Minister of Canada not to negotiate with France about the sovereign rights of Atlantic fishermen. We warned him that any negotiations on this issue by Canada would be seen by France as an act of weakness, and that is exactly what has happened.

French Prime Minister Jacques Chirac has announced that French fishermen will now illegally take at least 36,000 tonnes of fish in our waters next year and that French fishermen will operate, to use his words: "under the best possible security conditions".

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Will the Deputy Prime Minister admit that the weakness of the Prime Minister this spring led to this disgraceful situation? Will he tell us whether our Prime Minister has found out from Prime Minister Chirac of France just what the French Prime Minister meant when he said he would guarantee the security of the French fishing fleet in our waters?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first, in connection with the hon. gentleman's question, Mr. Chirac said nothing about fishing in our waters, nor did his Minister of Fisheries. His statement was that they would fish for 36,000 tonnes of fish in the disputed zone of 3PS. The difficulty is that no one knows whose waters those disputed waters are, whether they are France's or Canada's.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: What a sell-out!

Mr. Crosbie: That question will only be known when an international tribunal adjudicates it.

The Hon. Leader of the Opposition was in the Government in 1972 when the infamous treaty of 1972 was entered into, which gave the French the right to take thousands of tonnes of fish in Canadian waters. He now has the audacity to get up and question our firmness, when we have closed Canadian ports to French fishing vessels, we have closed the Burgeo Bank to French fishing vessels, and we have closed all areas of 3PS outside the disputed zone to French fishing vessels.

On October 9 we told the French there would be no quotas in Canadian waters under the 1972 treaty, given to France by the Leader of the Opposition and his Government in 1972. There will be no quotas next year unless they show that they are reasonable and reach an agreement with us.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister responsible for Newfoundland has just inaccurately rewritten history. In his statement he just conceded to France Canadian sovereignty over the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

INQUIRY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER CONTACTED FRENCH PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister promised to solve this problem with President Mitterand of France. He did not. The Prime Minister promised to solve the problem with Prime Minister Chirac of France. He did not. The Prime Minister of Canada promised to solve the problem at the Economic Summit, and then at the Francophone Summit. He did not.

My supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister of Canada called Prime Minister Chirac within the last 24 hours to ask him exactly what he meant about this thinly veiled threat to Canada and what he means in refusing to stop the illegal French fishing, now to the limit of 36,000 tonnes, in our waters? Has our Prime Minister been in touch with the Prime Minister of France?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think we might ask the Leader of the Opposition if he has been in touch with the Leader of the Liberal Party in Newfoundland who said that Canada is offering unreasonably small amounts of codfish to the French in 2J3KL. Has he been in contact with Mr. Wells on that question? I do not think he has.

With respect to the question of France, we are negotiating with France because we want to settle the question of how much fish is to be caught in the disputed area of 3PS. In that negotiation we have had no help from the Hon. Members opposite who have continued their contrived hysteria.

The Leader of the Opposition wants to tear up the free trade agreement with the United States before it is written. Why does he not want to tear up the agreement he entered into with France in 1972? Is that his next tear-up? What does he suggest to settle this matter?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I think the people of Newfoundland will find the Minister's answers totally unacceptable this afternoon. We have been in touch with Clyde Wells, and he wonders why the Minister does not get off his butt and protect the fishermen in Newfoundland.

• (1425)

UNACCEPTABLE THREAT AGAINST CANADA

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Because I might, in the current circumstances, get a sensible answer, I want to return to the Deputy Prime Minister. The answers so far are simply not good enough. Cut it anyway you want, the Prime Minister of France has made an unacceptable threat against Canada. Our Prime Minister has not responded appropriately in the circumstances.

I ask the Deputy Prime Minister will the Prime Minister tell Prime Minister Chirac that if he thinks or even dreams of carrying through his thinly veiled threat that the consequences, in diplomatic terms, will be unacceptable to him?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows all about butts. He has had his hands on more butts than there are Members in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: With reference to the Leader of the Liberal Party in Newfoundland, I will quote what he said on the CBC last night:

> The EEC is giving up their share, some 9,500 tonnes,—

Which the Liberals gave the EEC in 1980.

> —that quantity can be used to bargain reasonably with France and give France a significant portion of that 9,500 tonnes and try and bargain reasonably without in any way impacting on the inshore fisheries or the Canadian fisheries in the area.

That is what the Leader of the Liberal Party in Newfoundland said.

With respect to Prime Minister Chirac, there has been no threat from the Prime Minister of France. I will tell you what the Prime Minister said—and I know him personally—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: He expressed his disappointment at the attitude of the Canadian authorities—we are too tough for them—which was delaying progress, he said, in the negotiations. He pledged that French boats would be able to carry on fishing in waters within French sovereignty "under the best possible security conditions".

It was the hon. gentleman's Government in June of 1984 which entered into an arrangement with France so that we would not interfere with its navy vessels when they went into disputed waters, the 3PS. Has he forgotten that now? He was in office for such a short period, I suppose he cannot remember these little incidentals.

REQUEST THAT CANADA ARREST FRENCH VESSELS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the record of this Government in dealing with the French over Canadian fish has been nothing short of humiliating. Mr. Chirac insulted Newfoundland's Lieutenant Governor, tricked this Government into supporting their nominee to the World Court; the chief French negotiator ordered the French negotiators to leave the table. Now he announces a new big French quota in Canadian waters and says he is going to protect it with the navy.

Canadian fishermen want to know when the Government is going to stand up to the French and arrest them if they violate their quotas, like we do everyone else. We are fed up with these Chirac attacks.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Well, Mr. Speaker, we have been wondering since the middle of August where the Hon. Member was. It is like the return of Boris Karloff.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: We are going to follow the same practice as the Liberal Government that operated from 1974, when the hon. gentleman was elected, until it was removed in 1984, except for that brief terrific period of eight months when we were in power under my late, under my former Leader here.

Some Hon. Members: oh, oh!

Mr. Foster: And Joe isn't dead yet.

Mr. Crosbie: When the French leave the disputed zone, if they go fishing one iota, one jot, one tittle outside the disputed zone, we will arrest their vessels just as we arrest the vessels of other countries. We block them from the western gullies and we block them from the Burgeo Bank, and if they come outside to fish, we will arrest their vessels. If they stay in the disputed zone we will observe the Liberal agreement of June, 1984. We will not interfere with their vessels as long as they do not interfere with ours. That is the Liberal agreement we are carrying on, because we think it is sensible between two friendly countries that we do that. Never mind the bellicose hysteria, the hyped-up hyperbole of the Opposition.

• (1430)

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the only contribution that I can think of that this Minister of Transport could make to discourage the French from Canadian waters would be to put him on the deck of one of our fisheries patrol vessels, give him a loudspeaker and ask him to speak in French. Or maybe we could convince them to use him as ballast—that might sink the entire French fleet.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister this. Is the Government of Canada going to arrest the French fleet if they do what Mr. Chirac said they were going to do, which was to catch 80 per cent of the entire total allowable catch out to 200 miles—six times their quota? Or are we just going to faint at the sight of the French flag?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): I think it was a French woman, Mr. Speaker, Marie Antoinette who said: "Let them eat cake". That is the closest the hon. gentleman has ever gotten to the French. She was the one French woman who liked bakers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, it was George Bernard Shaw who said this: "No man fully capable in his own language ever masters another". Never was that more true.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: With respect to the French vessels, just to put this in the correct perspective, the French have threatened that they will set—something which they have been doing—their own quota in the disputed zone. We do not agree with it. We are going to protest it. We have barred their vessels from Canadian ports. They are suffering because of that. The mayor of St. Pierre and Miquelon is at odds with the French Government, putting the pressure on them to be reasonable.

Our course of action has been most appropriate. As long as the French do not come into our waters and attempt to fish, we are not going to arrest their vessels, as long as they stay in the disputed zone. What other steps we will take we will have to decide, if this happens, because 1988 has not yet arrived, although most Members opposite do not know that.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT APPLY ECONOMIC PRESSURE

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Transport. For Newfoundlanders and for Newfoundland fishermen in particular this is not a laughing matter.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: The Minister of Transport has said that the action of France in terms of announcing that they will drastically increase their overfishing in the waters off St. Pierre and Miquelon, in the disputed waters, is both irresponsible and provocative. In light of the fact that the Minister has already outlined certain measures which he intends to take, or which he has announced, we have on this side of the House no argument with that. We think they are correct.

I want to say this to the Minister now. Since it seems that the Government has decided that a major economic investment will be made in submarines, will it give some consideration, in light of its own thinking on this matter, to seeing what economic pressures can be brought to bear on the French to get them back to the table so that we can get on with settling this contentious issue?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have a question from the hon. lugubrious Member. It is a serious question. It is a serious issue.

With respect to the situation, it is a disputed zone. That is why we are negotiating. That is the pressure on us. We are responsible. We are going to observe proper conservation measures. The Minister of Fisheries will have to set the Canadian TAC for that zone in December, when he sets it for all the other zones that are in Canadian waters. We will observe the Canadian TAC.

The French who, in the past, took 15.6 per cent of the catch in the disputed zone historically, now claim that they can take 60 per cent. We cannot stop them because it is a disputed zone under international waters. But we are going to protest.

With respect to French nuclear submarines, there has been no decision to buy them. The Ministry of National Defence is looking at the French version and the English version to see which best suits Canada. If it concludes the French model best suits Canada, then we can make a decision, if we are still in dispute with France over the offshore area, the fishing area, whether or not to go ahead with such a purchase. But it works two ways.

We are trying to sell things to France. We are trying to sell France water-bombers. If the water-bombers were built in the Hon. Member's district, he would not be so bellicose about cutting off sales of x to France, if water-bombers from his district were going to be cut off by France which would refuse to buy them from Canada. These things work two ways.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): My supplementary question is to the same Minister, Mr. Speaker. Yes, if my district or my area were involved, I would be up shouting and screaming for some action to be taken, just as fishermen in Newfoundland are standing up and asking for some specific action to be taken by the Government.

In light of the fact that there is a trade surplus in favour of Canada I want to ask the Government, again through the Minister, is the Government contemplating some economic measures which can be taken to force France back to the bargaining table? Or is he prepared to stand up and personalize his attacks on the Opposition and allow the fishermen of Newfoundland to lose their fishing, to lose their stocks?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has a very remote knowledge of fishermen in Newfoundland. There is actually a Member in the House from the NDP from Newfoundland. This Hon. Member is from Sudbury.

Mr. Broadbent: Come on!

Mr. Rodriguez: Personalize it.

Mr. Crosbie: Is he not from Sudbury? He is from Sudbury, Mr. Speaker. Let me get to my answer.

Mr. Rodriguez: Regional racism again.

Mr. Crosbie: The fishermen of Newfoundland are closely associated with these negotiations. Their representatives have been at the negotiations. They were there on October 9. They have supported the position we took. They are supporting our negotiator, Mr. Fortier. They agree with us that there should be no quotas to go to France for next year because of its present attitude. They agree that the 1972 treaty is unworkable, the treaty that the Liberal Government entered into, because of the attitudes of the French. They agree with us that the French must reduce their catch in 3PS.

We have exerted tremendous pressure on the French by cutting off French fishing vessels from our ports so that trawlers in St. Pierre and Miquelon cannot get repaired in Marystown.

So the thing now is for Canada—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Crosbie: —to wait, to see whether this pressure works or not, not a lot of vaporous hot air from the Opposition in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENERGY

COME-BY-CHANCE OIL REFINERY—MARKETING OF PRODUCTS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am from Newfoundland. Let me say at the outset that Newfoundlanders appreciate any Member from any part of Canada from any political Party who helps bring relief from this terrible, insensitive Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: We do not believe in the creed, Mr. Speaker, of dividing region from region.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): You cannot even unite your Party!

Mr. Tobin: —the manipulative actions of the Minister of Energy and how those actions have directly resulted in the loss of 300 jobs at the Come-by-Chance oil refinery.

I have today received a copy of a secret contract entered into between Newfoundland Energy, the operators of the Come-by-Chance oil refinery, and Petro-Canada. This contract contains restrictive provisions which prevent Come-by-Chance from marketing its product anywhere in Canada outside the Province of Newfoundland.

I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister this. Why did the Government arrange a contract as part of establishing the Come-by-Chance oil refinery that makes that refinery located in Newfoundland, Canada's poorest province, the only refinery in Canada that is not able to market its products in the domestic Canadian market? How can we have free trade in energy with the United States when within Canada this refinery has been blackballed?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, I am acting on his behalf today.

The Hon. Member's facts are completely wrong. Some months ago, the Petro-Canada Crown corporation turned over lock, stock and barrel to the Newfoundland Government, to pass on to Newfoundland Energy Ltd., the Come-by-Chance oil refinery, and all the assets, for $1. Petro-Canada had invested more than $30 million in preserving that asset.

The new owners say that they plan to sell their product in the United States. There is a surplus of refining capacity in eastern Canada now. Three or four refineries had to close in Montreal.

As some condition of protection for the investment that it had in that plant, Petro-Canada made it a condition that, if the refinery wished to sell in mainland Canada outside the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador, it would enter into an arrangement where it would have the right of first refusal to any products sold on the mainland at a special price. Newfoundland Energy can sell on the mainland, but first it must offer to Petro-Canada—which gave them $30 million worth of assets for nothing.

That is a simple, reasonable, commercial condition that was accepted by the Province of Newfoundland, that was accepted by Newfoundland Energy, and it ill behooves them now to come complaining and giving little documents to the Hon. Member, the gentleman opposite, who does not know what to do with them.

PURCHASE OF JET FUEL BY AIR CANADA

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, Newfoundlanders can only come to the conclusion that this Member is looking for a sinecure in the Senate, because he obviously does not intend and does not have the face to go back—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question.

Mr. Tobin: Air Canada has reported to the National Energy Board that this year it has already imported 1 million barrels of jet fuel worth $200 million from outside this country because the jet fuel is not available within the existing refining capacity in Canada. Air Canada has attempted to buy jet fuel which is available at Come-by-Chance, but has been rebuffed because of the terms and conditions contained within this agreement.

Air Canada, which reports to the Minister of Transport, is spending $200 million outside the country because the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Energy will not allow Come-by-Chance to supply that fuel, even although the fuel is not available elsewhere in Canada.

What type of arrangement is that for the province with the highest unemployment in Canada, when the ability to market in Canada would mean 300 more jobs, $9 million more additional payroll, and a boost to an economy that is sick and tired of the wimpish attitude of this failed Newfoundland representative in the federal Cabinet?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is a continuing rising tide of hysteria among the opposition Members.

The Come-by-Chance oil refinery is in my district. I asked Petro-Canada to turn the refinery over to the people who now have it, who wish the refinery to produce gasoline products and other products for them to sell in their Cumberland Stores down in the United States. That is why it was established there. If there is a sale, or if Air Canada needs to purchase jet fuel and they buy it on the mainland of Canada—

Mr. Tobin: Outside of Canada.

Mr. Crosbie: They can purchase the jet fuel from whom they like outside Canada. There is no impediment. Petro-Canada has not interfered with them buying jet fuel. Let me say that this is a concoction. There is no impediment. If they wish to sell in the mainland of Canada, they do it through Petro-Canada, which should have some chance to get some return on the $30 million that this Crown corporation, created by the Hon. Members opposite, put into that operation, which went for nothing to the people who now operate it, and who should stick to their agreement, be man enough to stick to it, and stop whining about it.

GRANT MADE TO EDMONTON AMUSEMENT PARK PROJECT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister.

Two days ago the Auditor General produced a report in which he documented a very serious contention or judgment. He stated that the $5 million grant that had been made to Fantasyland in Edmonton was not justified in terms of the criteria established in general by the Department relevant for this grant. Second, and in particular, he stated that the project would have proceeded without the money.

Yesterday in the House the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology called those contentions into doubt. He stated that it was eligible, and that the project would not have proceeded had the money not been made available.

A few hours ago I spoke to the Auditor General and I asked him if he stood by his judgment. He said categorically yes. Specifically, I asked him if he had anything to say about whether or not the project would have been proceeded with. He stated that his officials checked again today, and these are his words, "That's not what the file says".

Second, I asked him if he stood by his claim that the project was ineligible for grants. Was there evidence to support the claim or the application? He said that there is no evidence to support the grant. In short, the Auditor General stands totally by what he said, after checking the facts today.

Does the Deputy Prime Minister have something to say about this?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, far be it from me to take issue with what the Auditor General has had to say.

For the record, it should interest all Members of the House to be aware of what DRIE officials had to say about this particular transaction. With your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, I wish to quote from a response that DRIE officials made to the Auditor General. This was prepared last summer in response to the audit that was taken.

The following statement was written by DRIE:

> —that the application for assistance for this project was received on December 7, 1983 and while tourism was dropped from IRDP on November 9, 1984, the application was protected under the grandfather provision. It is clear from file documentation that the necessary permits, construction contracts and actual construction on this project was/were not entered into prior to December 7, 1983 and therefore the project was not prior committed within the terms of Section 29(1) of the pre-November 9, 1984 Regulations to the IRDP.
> DRIE's position remains that the project continued to be eligible for assistance consideration under IRDP, notwithstanding the fact that construction was well advanced in August, 1985 when the DRIE Minister made the actual decision to assist.

It further states:

> The IRDP contribution facilitated the company in arranging the additional financing and consequently ensured that the project was completed within the originally proposed scope and timing. If DRIE had not offered the assistance at that time, it is highly probable that construction would have been delayed and the significant contributions that have accrued to Canada's economy over the past two years from this tourism facility would have been substantially lessened.

That is the position of DRIE. Obviously, the Auditor General has the right to consider that or to reject it. But that is the position of DRIE.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Minister will table the document. I would like to know the time that that official stated that yesterday.

Mr. Mazankowski: No, last summer.

Mr. Broadbent: The statement was made last summer, I understand.

But considering that the Auditor General checked as recently as this morning and said to me on the telephone that the files in the Department do not support the claim that the grant was eligible, and specifically the Auditor General reported to me that, in his judgment, after looking at the evidence, the project would have proceeded without a $5 million hand-out by the Government, I want the Minister to say in his words why an additional $5 million was necessary when the Auditor General of Canada says that it was not necessary.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I appreciated the indulgence that you gave me. I thought that the answer I gave was quite fulsome, and that represents the position of DRIE. I do not have access to the Auditor General's files. I hope that the Leader of the NDP appreciates that.

The Auditor General stated at his press conference that, "I am advised that it is within the Minister's prerogative to make a payment out of the IRDP and he did so, or Cabinet did so". The Auditor General goes on to state, "Ministers have that prerogative to make those kinds of decisions and they took it upon themselves to make the decision".

The decision was made in a normal, proper manner, Mr. Speaker, and this House, this Government, and I as a Minister stand by that position.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MAKING OF DECISION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is right. A Cabinet Minister made this decision. That is obvious. But according to the Auditor General, the decision was not in accordance with departmental procedure. My question is quite simple. Does the Government intend to make decision according to the rules, yes or no?

• (1450)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I thought the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion outlined the steps in a very clear and coherent manner. I have tried to follow that up today in the best manner possible. Yesterday he quoted the Alberta Regional Executive Director for the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, and this goes back to November 26, 1986.

This is not a new story. It was released in December, 1986, when the annual report of the IRD Program was tabled in the House and there was some comment about it at that time. I am surprised that the Hon. Leader of—

Mr. Broadbent: We thought that it was consistent with the rules then.

Mr. Mazankowski: Of course it was and it still is. That is the decision of DRIE officials. It was confirmed by the Regional Director in Edmonton and it was quoted yesterday.

IMMIGRATION

AMNESTY FOR REFUGEE CLAIMANTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The House has passed Bill C-84 and Bill C-55 which deal with immigration and an ever growing number of refugee claimants in Canada. Yet it is reported in today's newspaper that the Government has "every intention" of introducing an amnesty to clear the backlog of refugee claimants.

Will the Minister tell the House and the people of Canada if this report is true? If not, what is the Government's intention on this very important issue?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, every time I have been asked about an amnesty for people claiming refugee status, I have always said no.

The reason is a good one. Although they wanted to come to Canada and they were assured that there would be an amnesty anyway, one, two, or three years after, I considered that to be a very bad signal.

On the other hand, I believe that it would just legitimize queue-jumpers. All those who come here and have to wait a while to be accepted are not to be treated unfairly by that kind of rule. I repeat today that there is absolutely no question of giving amnesty to anybody.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO CHAIRMAN—DESIGNATE OF REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Could the Minister give us an explanation of why the newly designated Chairman of the Immigration and Refugee Board could have given out this erroneous information?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, when I met with Mr. Fairweather it was very clear that he had the right to speak out on immigration. However, it is obvious that a Minister has the right to say what I said today, and I repeat that there is no amnesty for anybody.

ENERGY

COME-BY-CHANCE OIL REFINERY—IMPORTATION OF JET AIRCRAFT FUEL

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Already this year Air Canada has had to import a million barrels of refined jet fuel into Canada because it could not get it in Canada. Canadian Airlines International has had to import 200,000 barrels already this year because it could not get it in Canada.

This jet fuel could be refined by the Come-by-Chance refinery. It would create 300 jobs at an annual payroll of an additional $9 million.

Why, when this jet fuel cannot be purchased in Canada and has to be imported, will the Hon. Minister not lift the sanctions or the restrictions on the Come-by-Chance refinery and allow it to supply this refined jet fuel?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there are no restrictions on the Come-by-Chance oil refinery except such as the owners of that refinery agreed to by way of a contract.

The hon. gentlemen opposite are experts at tearing up contracts. They want to tear up the free trade agreement. They want to tear up this and they want to tear up that. Now the hon. gentleman is saying that this contract should be torn up.

It was entered into between Newfoundland Energy Limited and Petro-Canada, and the Newfoundland Government participated. They entered into a contractual agreement. In return they got $30 million worth of assets for one dollar. If they wish to sell any product on the mainland of Canada, all they have to do is make an offer first, give a chance of first refusal to Petro-Canada, and if Petro-Canada does not accept it, then they can offer it and sell it to anyone they like.

They have nothing to complain about. They were established at Come-by-Chance because they wanted to sell products in the United States. We already have an over-capacity in refining in eastern Canada, as they know, in Montreal.

I remember Hon. Members opposite making a fuss because a refinery was closing in Montreal. Surely they can have their partisanship diminish a bit and see that this is just a contractual arrangement.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, Petro-Canada has the right of first refusal, but it has 15 days in which to decide whether it is going to take it. Also, Come by Chance Newfoundland Energy would have to pay Petro-Canada 15 per cent of its gross profit if in fact it did sell.

It was not only one dollar. They also took over $26 million in liabilities and took over a first mortgage of between $35 million and $40 million—

Mr. Speaker: The difficulty that the Chair is in is that certainly a certain amount of latitude has to be added but this is not an Examination for Discovery over a contract and what people said. I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, since Newfoundland Energy was forced to sign that contract with a gun to its head, because either it signed or its refinery was to be torn down the next day, why is the Minister of Transport denying Newfoundlanders 300 extra jobs and $9 million extra a year in revenues to that province?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that is typical exaggeration—

Mr. Tobin: That is the fact, John. You have been caught with your pants down. Now, pull them up and tell the truth.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, if I can be allowed to answer, at the moment the refinery has suffered from a fire and it is not producing. When it does produce—and I have been down and inspected it and gone through it; it is in my district—it is going to employ several hundred people.

I induced Petro-Canada to turn over for nothing $30 million worth of assets at that refinery, and I had the Government of Canada turn over the wharf down there which cost something like $30 million, for one dollar.

I am the Member who represents the district. If there was such a nefarious arrangement that prevented these people from selling their oil products anywhere unfairly, I would personally intervene to stop it, but that is not the case. This is a bargain arrived at by two adult parties, and they have to live up to their obligations.

GRANT MADE TO EDMONTON AMUSEMENT PARK PROJECT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and it pertains to the grant to Fantasyland. By virtue of the statement from DRIE which he read to the House today that did not refer to the fact that the project would not have gone ahead if the money had not been granted, but that the project might have been delayed if the money had not been granted, and given the fact that one of the criteria for whether or not money should go to such projects is whether or not the project would go ahead, I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister how he has the nerve to get up and talk about delay as a reason for him giving that grant, when the criteria talk about whether or not the project will actually go ahead.

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to criteria. He calls them criteria. They are talking about rules being broken. They are talking about regulations being broken. The fact of the matter is that none of the rules have been broken.

If he looks at Section 8 of the Act, the learned socialist over there, he will see that the Act talks about economic and social benefit, incrementality, and viability. When this was revised by the Department, it was found, in accordance with this, that the bottom line is that a Minister of the Crown has the legal power to exercise his discretion on these criteria. He exercised it in favour of Alberta, in favour of Edmonton, in favour of the chosen sector in those parts of the country. That is what happened.

The criterion in the decision to which he refers was one of viability. The circumstances changed from 1983 to 1985. We are proud of that decision because, when we look at tourism in Edmonton and Alberta today, we find that the West Edmonton Mall is drawing over two million tourists annually—

Mr. Speaker: I think I just might remind Hon. Members—

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill in a moment. A great many questions have been asked on this subject. The questions, although not exactly the same, really do search after the same mission. The consequence is that the responses are, of course, very much the same.

This procedure can go on for a quite a long time but I would point out that the usual tradition has been that when questions are asked over and over again, if they are taking up a great deal of time sooner or later the Chair is asked to intervene. I do not want to intervene on an important matter without good reason, but I am indicating to the House that when the same question or nearly the same question is asked continually, sooner or later the Chair has to take into account other Members and other matters in the House. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill.

REQUEST FOR LIST OF PROJECTS NOT FUNDED

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, it was the Deputy Prime Minister himself who introduced this new line of argument. We are simply responding to it.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Blaikie: The Deputy Prime Minister earlier said that he wanted to debate the issue with me in Edmonton or here. Now he will not even answer questions in the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member would put his question and we will see whether the Minister will answer.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this grant to Fantasyland took up 80 per cent of the money allocated for Alberta under this particular program, could the Deputy Prime Minister provide to the House and the people of Alberta a list of the projects that were not funded because he decided to give 80 per cent for Alberta to this one particular project? Would he be willing to provide that kind of information?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, with your admonishment on this very important issue, I think the issue which the Hon. Member is raising was pretty appropriately described in an editorial in today's Edmonton Journal, which reads:

> Flap over mall's DRIE grant is just political piffle.

John Ferguson of the The Citizen wrote:

> MPs fiddle in Fantasyland while markets tumble.

I find it passing strange that the Hon. Member was around and in this House when the Government put together a deal that saved Versatile at a cost of $45 million of federal government taxpayers' money.

Mr. Blaikie: That is right.

Mr. Mazankowski: I never heard a whimper from him nor should I have, because it was a good deal for Winnipeg, a good deal for Canada, and a good deal for western Canada.

Mr. Blaikie: Yes, that is right.

Mr. Mazankowski: And this is exactly the same.

Mr. Broadbent: It was honest and it was different.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Shields: Put more questions then.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise that, given the time, that concludes Question Period.

Mr. Nunziata: Hold it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Refer to the rules.

Mr. Speaker: The Deputy Prime Minister.

ALLEGED UNPARLIAMENTARY CONDUCT

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Again we witnessed, as reported in Hansard yesterday, an occurrence which I believe constitutes unacceptable parliamentary conduct on the part of two New Democratic Members of Parliament as reported at page 10482 of Hansard. I know that there have been some very hot exchanges on the floor of the House of Commons and I know that Ministers and Members from time to time go a little far in terms of the words they use, which they sometimes regret.

At page 10482 of Hansard in the second column while the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was responding, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) is reported to have stated:

> That's a lie.

The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) went on to say—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): He laughs. Broadbent laughs. What a parliamentarian.

Mr. Mazankowski: —"You're scum. You're lying scum." Then the Member from Skeena said:

> Go ahead and pump out more lies.

I think that demonstrates not only an act of weakness but an act of desperation and, of course, it is totally unparliamentary. The Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party can laugh about it. He laughs and thinks it is a big joke. I do not. I have respect for this institution. I respect its traditions. I respect its decorum and dignity, and, Mr. Speaker, I think you have done an excellent job in trying to preserve that. In the interests of all Members of Parliament, particularly in the interests of preserving the dignity of this very important institution, I would think that the two Hon. Members should do the honourable and appropriate thing and withdraw those words and apologize.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) has put his finger on a very sensitive issue indeed and I want to respond. He has raised a question of privilege. I refer to the same page of Hansard. He has quoted what I have said, but I want to read with care and deliberation what was said just immediately prior to that. As a Canadian who has worked hard for the development and progress of Canadians in all regions of my country let me quote what was said immediately prior to that by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney). He said this:

> I know that my hon. friends in the Liberal and New Democratic Parties are opposed to the interests of western Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Right on.

Mr. Broadbent: And I said:

> That's a lie.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Riis: The regional racist is up again. Sit down, racist.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I think that in the interests of some of the decorum and dignity of this place, of which it is often capable, without foreclosing the right of Hon. Members to rise in answer to the point of order, which is really what the Deputy Prime Minister has raised, without making any judgment on the issue at the moment, I will adjourn this matter for one hour and I will come back to it.

The Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata).

ALLEGED IMPUGNING OF INTEGRITY OF AUDITOR GENERAL

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a separate question of privilege. Several days ago the Auditor General, an independent officer of Parliament, tabled his report for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1987. At Clause 16.89 through to 16.97 the Auditor General of Canada, and I repeat, an independent officer of Parliament, made some statements with regard to a particular federal grant to the West Edmonton Mall.

Today, during Question Period, the Government through the Deputy Prime Minister, and yesterday, put into question the integrity of the Auditor General of Canada by indicating—if I may finish my question of privilege—or implying that the Auditor General of Canada was either deliberately misleading Parliament or presented to Parliament an incomplete report.

Mr. Speaker: I regret interrupting the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata), who has certainly in his intervention pointed out that there well may be a difference of opinion among different people as to certain matters that took place. However, I think that if one exams the debates carefully, one would find that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) said that he did not have access to the files of the Auditor General and as a consequence was not in a position to know upon what basis the Auditor General may or may not have said something.

I must say to all Hon. Members that I did not take it from anything that was said by the Deputy Prime Minister that he was impugning in any way the integrity of the Auditor General of Canada. If the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) can go back over the Hansard report of today and tomorrow, or at a time when he can be here, depending on his other responsibilities, he can indicate to me that that is in fact what happened, then of course I would listen very carefully and consider it very carefully. However, given the fact that the memory of the Chair is such that I do not think that in fact happened, I would ask the Hon. Member to consider the "blues" and then perhaps he would like to return to the Chair.

Mr. Nunziata: If I may complete my point, Mr. Speaker.

Ms. Copps: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) in a moment.

Ms. Copps: This is on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member in a moment. Perhaps I can just tidy this matter up. The Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) may have something to briefly add that may help the Chair.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I have raised the point of privilege. I would simply request, Sir, that you review the "blues" today and review Hansard of yesterday when the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) and other Ministers of the Crown accused opposition Members of being anti-western Canadian because they criticized this particular grant. By implication, they are suggesting that the Auditor General is anti-western Canadian for criticizing the grant.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that the Hon. Member's question of privilege is that in some way, the Government's response to questions may have impugned the integrity of the Auditor General who is a servant of this place which consequently affects the privilege of Hon. Members including the one who has raised the complaint. That is the issue the Chair will consider and I would ask the Hon. Member to look carefully at Hansard. I will do the same and if it is appropriate, we can deal with the matter later.

ALLEGED UNPARLIAMENTARY CONDUCT

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) started discussing with the other side—as a matter of fact, the point was raised by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) about the word "lie" used as recorded in Hansard—I was about to rise on a question of privilege because of the words that were pronounced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) yesterday when he said:

> I know that my hon. friends in the Liberal and the New Democratic Parties are opposed to the interests of western Canada. That becomes clearer every day.

Your Honour said earlier that you wanted to state—I am not sure what Your Honour meant. Are you staying the decision? Are you delaying the decision? You will make a decision on this later, obviously, and if you do this, will you be hearing further representations on the case?

Mr. Speaker: No, I am sorry—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): This is why I would like to know what Your Honour meant, because we are highly interested—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Speaker: I would ask Hon. Members to extend the courtesy in this place that is appropriate. No Hon. Member needs to be told to sit down, except perhaps when the Chair has to do it. The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) has asked a question. The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) has raised a point of privilege. It has been partly responded to by the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent). I felt it was in the interests of this place that that matter be adjourned for an hour and that is what I am doing. I say "adjourned", not closed off, and in 45 minutes now, because that was 15 minutes ago, I will hear the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party further. But, I have adjourned that matter for 45 minutes for reasons which I think Hon. Members can well understand. It may be that the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques would wish to make an intervention at that time.

POINTS OF ORDER

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF QUOTED DOCUMENT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) did quote directly from documents from the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion and I would ask that he now table the full document pursuant to Standing Order 327.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) is of course completely correct. I see the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) is indicating that he will table the document.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to table this document.

Ms. Copps: That's not the same one.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. Member has not seen the document and she is already accusing me of not producing the same document. It is the same document. I read from one which is underlined and I must apologize, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) has the floor.

Mr. Mazankowski: I simply want to apologize to Hon. Members of the House in that it is in one language only and that is the way I received it.

ALLEGED USE OF UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, when I was attempting to rise on a point of order, the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) was in the House. He has obviously had to slip out for other business but I simply want to give notice that the Hon. Member used an unparliamentary term in the House of Commons. It is very clear that referring to a Hon. Member by the term "idiot" is considered to be unparliamentary.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Who was he referring to?

Mr. Riis: I am not certain who he was referring to, but I think Hansard will make it clear. I was hoping he would be here to withdraw the use of the term that is declared in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition to be unparliamentary. I simply serve notice in anticipation that the Hon. Member would rise at the appropriate time and do it himself.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), and I think it would be appropriate that some inquiry be made as to what particular Member the Hon. Member may or may not have been referring to and on which side of the House that Hon. Member was sitting, but I will deal with the matter appropriately in due course.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, despite all the excitement we have seen in the House of Commons in these past 10 or 15 minutes, someone has to cool down and remind everyone that the time has come to ask the usual business question. I would like to turn to the Government to ask what is on the agenda for the House of Commons concerning government business in the coming week.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, today we will continue with the second reading of Bill C-87, the Customs Bill. If time permits, we will continue with third reading debate on Bill C-46, the Mint Bill. Friday, if not completed, we will continue consideration of the above business, and when completed we will call Bill C-54, the pornography Bill.

Monday we will commence second reading of Bill C-76, the emergency preparedness Bill, followed by Bill C-77, the emergencies Bill. We will confirm later that day the date of the next allotted Opposition day.

DISPOSITION OF BILL C-87—CUSTOMS TARIFF

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Additionally, there have been discussions and I think you will find agreement among the parties for adopting the following motion dealing with the committee consideration of Bill C-87:

> That the order for second reading and reference to a legislative committee on Bill C-87 an act respecting the imposition of duties and customs and other charges standing on the Order Paper be changed to read second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could have an opportunity to ask the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) a question. He has indicated the business of the House for the next number of days and the Hon. Minister will know that at the moment, Bill C-204 is before committee and the intention was that Bill C-51 was to be considered by that legislative committee at the same time since they both deal with issues surrounding the advertising and smoking of cigarettes. Does my hon. friend have any plans to introduce for second reading Bill C-51 at some early date?

Interparliamentary Delegations

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I know that there have been discussions going on among House Leaders about the future business and I would hope that that might be a matter that we could resolve at the next House Leaders' meeting.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) has a point of order which he may wish to raise at this time. I will hear him now.

• (1520)

Hon. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have two reports to table today covering interparliamentary delegations. I request permission of the House to revert to Routine Proceedings in order to have the privilege of tabling those two reports.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the request of the Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse). Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATIONS

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF CANADIAN BRANCH OF COMMONWEALTH PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

Hon. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have two reports to table today, but I first wish to thank the House for the courtesy extended to me.

Pursuant to Standing Order 101, I have the honour to present to the House, in both official languages, the report of the delegation of the Canadian branch of the Parliamentary Association to the Thirty-Third Commonwealth Parliamentary Conference held at Kuala Lumpur from August 28 to September 6, 1987.

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF CANADIAN PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION TO PAKISTAN

Hon. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, in addition, I have the honour to present to the House, in both official languages, the report of the Canadian Parliamentary Delegation which paid an official visit to Pakistan from September 7 to September 13, 1987. In view of the importance of this report, I wish to speak very briefly to it. There are some aspects that I would like to point out to the House.

Canada has a program of annual food aid to Pakistan to assist that country in feeding some 3.5 million refugees who have arrived there over the past three years. The commissioner informed us when we were there that our food and other aid programs were very much appreciated. However, he suggested we consider some changes and I wish to mention this to the House because all of us from time to time address non-governmental organizations who wish to help. There are two ways to help and sometimes we do the wrong thing. It was therefore suggested that we consider these changes.

The shipment of flour is not as helpful as we were led to believe. It was pointed out that we keep the wheat germ, the bran, the shorts and the middlings, and the refined flour becomes full of weevil and is hard to store. When I asked what they would like to have in place of bags of flour they said please send bags of wheat. They can grind it with grinders there and have a more palatable food for their people. They would also prefer that we send less milk powder. I asked why, because I saw their children starving. They said they do not have pure water with which to mix the milk powder. In its place they would appreciate cases of evaporated milk.

Here I was addressing perhaps 500 Afghan refugees in a refugee camp and I said if they were to come to Canada with a shopping list what would be the six or eight priority items for which they would ask. It is interesting, and this is what I want to outline especially for the House, that the first item they need is tents to house some of those people. If the tents do not have floors, they ask us to send rubber sheets to put in the tent. Third, they need quilts to go over the rubber sheets. It cools down to 90 degrees at night, but it is sometimes 110 degrees during the day and there is lots of condensation when those temperatures are in evidence.

The fourth item they asked for was more blankets. Fifth, they need boiling kettles, not enamel but aluminum, so they can stick two sticks in the ground, put a pole across, and use the kettle as a pot in which to boil water. The sixth item, naturally, was food. The seventh items was medicines, and the eighth was small children's books with large lettering—stories like we read to our own children, so they can teach their children the English language.

Those are the points that I wanted to highlight because all of us can help by using them when addressing NGOs, church groups or any other organization that wishes to send some help. They are doing a monumental job in Pakistan. They are fighting our war for us. They are appreciative of all we can do, but by rearranging our food aid program we can do a little better.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and the House for this opportunity to present these very important facts.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if we might have unanimous consent of the House to forward the remarks of the Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) to the president of CIDA. I think they are very well-founded.

Mr. Speaker: The House has been asked for unanimous consent. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I was just noting my appreciation, along with that of all Members of the House, for the new rules which allow the chairmen of parliamentary associations to come into the House and give us a brief summary of their trips and their experiences. I want to thank the Hon. Member for this report. It is the first time in my experience that we have had such a comprehensive report from the chairman of that group called the Commonwealth Association. I congratulate him and I hope he continues the practice.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-87, an Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters and to amend or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make just a few remarks with respect to this Bill because our critic in this area will be making more extensive comments later.

There are three points I wish to make in particular. The first is simply to mention that there are some considerable objections by the Automobile Industry Association of Canada to this Bill and its rapid passage through the House. My colleague from Regina will be dealing with that point in detail.

Second, I am particularly glad that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) is in the House. I wish to draw to his attention a very important change which is taking place with respect to customs activities in the City of Windsor. A barge service is being established which will transport from the American side of the border to the Canadian side, to quote from a government document, "hazardous materials that must now go over the Blue Water bridge even though the shipment originates near or south of Detroit". Included in these hazardous materials are both toxic chemicals and gases which I fear, given the very congested waterway of the Detroit River at that point, is an invitation to an accident which would seriously threaten downstream water in the Detroit River and therefore the water supplies of significant parts of my constituency.

I understand that this particular question is being looked at simply from a customs point of view, as to what customs facilities need to be built on the Canadian side in order to mesh with the customs facilities which have been built on the U.S. side. That is simply not good enough. We need a careful environmental inspection of what could be an extremely hazardous situation for people in the City of Windsor and people elsewhere in my constituency.

I would ask the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) to check into this matter and see to it that there is an environmental review of what is being proposed in this case. I see him nodding his head.

This Bill, which deals with the Customs Tariff, also provides some of us who have not had a chance to speak about the free trade deal that has been initialled with the United States an opportunity to discuss the many inadequacies of that trade deal. I hope my colleagues and others will take the occasion to raise questions and express points which concern them and their constituents with respect to this very inequitable trade deal which has been signed with the United States.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-87 is a long and very complicated Bill dealing with the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the international convention on the harmonized commodity description and coding system, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges. Notice of this was tabled in the House on October 2, 1987, in a Ways and Means motion.

Bill C-87 provides for the revision of the Customs Tariff. Despite the convoluted description, it is indeed largely a technical Bill. The revision has been to restructure the existing Customs Tariff according to the principles of the harmonized commodity description and coding system, an internationally based system for the standardization of Customs Tariff clarification and statistical trade data.

Canada intends, along with other GATT members, to implement this HS-based tariff legislation on January 1, 1988.

The date itself concerns our Party.

This legislation reflects the same scenario we see with the trade agreement the Government intends to sign with the United States. It has asked a committee of this Parliament to begin touring the country to receive representation from Canadians about the impact of the agreement. Yet we know that the fine print of this agreement has not yet been agreed to, let alone made public. The Government is asking Parliament to seek the opinion of Canadians on this very important and historic agreement that will affect the nature and future of this country for years to come, without actually seeing the fine print. That is shameful in view of the Government's promise of a process of open consultation with the Canadian public.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government took great pride in its promise during the last election of an open government that would consult the people. Certainly, Canadians wanted an open government that consulted them, after years of Liberal Governments and a Prime Minister who took actions that were not based on consultation.

However, this Government is exactly the same, particularly in respect of the free trade deal and Bill C-87.

I want to read a letter that was sent to the Hon. Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) on October 8, from the Automotive Industries Association of Canada. They ask the Government to postpone implementation of this legislation for six months because it has not been able to properly digest the contents of this very complicated Bill. Yet the Government is insisting on ramming it through and implementing it without proper consultation.

The letter states:

Dear Minister Hockin:

I am writing on behalf of the Automotive Industries Association of Canada, the national trade association that represents more than 1,200 suppliers, distributors and wholesalers of automotive parts, accessories, tools and equipment. Our industry employs over 70,000 people and volume of sales annually at the wholesale level exceeds $7 billion. Our members also supply products for related industries, such as agriculture, forestry and industrial machinery and equipment.

We believe that the implementation date of January 1, 1988 for the new Harmonized Tariff System must be set back at least three months, to April 1.

Such action would parallel the three month set-back being provided in the U.S. for the comparable legislation. This document of some 3,000 pages will receive no more than cursory examination by the majority of members of the House of Commons. Furthermore, the tight schedule precludes detailed study by the industries that will need to comply with the new system.

Government has been labouring over this conversion for over seven years, yet only recently have Canadian companies had some hint of the final draft. The errors or omissions we have noted lead us to believe that companies in industry will be adversely affected by the tariff changes.

Importers need to know how to classify inventory well before the implementation date so they can classify goods on the implementation date and know which changes in duty will apply to their products. We believe that the automotive aftermarket, farm implement, manufacturing and other industries affected are far from being informed or prepared for changes in duty rates that will become effective on passage of this legislation. Indeed, importers may even have been misinformed of the status of importations by unannounced or unexplained changes in the original draft of the Harmonized System.

A significant portion of Canadian industry exists because of the end use made/not made in Canada provisions.

To completely abandon these concepts without a satisfactory conversion period could result in a shifting of manufacturing capability to plants outside Canada. While we favour a free trade agreement between Canada and the U.S., a minimum five year phase in is needed. That means continuing tariffs for those automotive products that are also produced in Canada.

The AIA made a presentation to the Tariff Board in May outlining a number of errors and omissions in the draft of the Annex to the Harmonized System (correspondence enclosed). Their report on proposed amendments, intended to be issued this November, has now been delayed we understand until April 1988. This would be after the January 1st implementation date. How can you implement legislation until the rules and regulations are finalized?

> At stake is the viability of some Canadian companies. For example, Versatile Farm Equipment in Winnipeg will now be denied duty free entry of welding equipment for automation of their company, if the new system comes into effect without change.
> There are many products where duty has been removed or added, without just reason. These anomalies must be corrected before implementation. I am enclosing another attachment that gives some more examples of the type of problems we know will occur.
> Industry has not had seven years to gear up for the new HTS like government. We have had less than seven months to obtain and digest information and respond. We respectfully request that you delay implementation of the new HTS until both government and industry are ready—April 1 at the earliest.
> Yours very truly,
> Dean H. Wilson, P. Eng.
> President.

I enter this letter into the record because it makes some extremely important points. First, the accusation states that the industry has not been able to study the full impact of the changes being proposed, that the changes themselves cover some 3,000 pages. It also notes that this Parliament and all Hon. Members will not have much of an opportunity to understand this piece of legislation. Indeed, I think the association understates the facts. How many times do we get a piece of legislation that covers some 3,000 pages which the Government expects just to pass through in a pleasant afternoon sitting?

Again, we have a similarity between what the Government is doing with Bill C-87 and what it is doing with free trade. I am certain the trade agreement our Prime Minister and President Reagan will sign will cover hundreds of pages of technical agreements which will affect the nooks, crannies and corners of this country, little industries here and there. It will have profound impact on various regions and their industries, no one will have an opportunity to really digest what it all means and what the impact will be in the long term.

The Government is asking the people of this country to agree to something without seeing the fine print. That is like the proverbial second-hand car salesman trying to sell a lemon, trying to get you to sign on the dotted line, without letting you read all the fine print.

Mr. Manly: Would you buy a used car from that man?

Mr. de Jong: No, I would not buy a used car from that man, Mr. Speaker. The letter from the Automotive Industries Association makes some other points as well. It points out, for example, that the Government has been working on this conversion for over seven years. Yet only recently have Canadian companies been given some hint of the final draft. It points out errors and omissions it has noted that leads it to believe that companies and industries will be adversely affected by the tariff changes. In other words, it is stating that the Government has not even done its work properly over these last seven years. There are errors and omissions in what we are asked to pass today. These errors and omissions, while they have been pointed out to the Government, have not been acted upon.

The association also points out in its letter that several industries, the automotive aftermarket, farm implements, manufacturing and other industries are far from being informed or prepared for the changes in duty rates that will become effective on passage of this legislation. An industry that is important to this country is being asked to comply with changes that have been sprung on them, that it has not been able to digest properly and does not know what the effects will be. It also points out in its letter that because of some of the tariff changes, manufacturing could be driven to the United States. For example, and I quote again from the letter:

> To completely abandon these concepts without a satisfactory conversion period could result in a shifting of manufacturing capability to plants outside Canada.

Again, the industry is warning us that the unforeseen effects of Bill C-87 might very well be that industry is driven out of this country. It is saying that the Government and the industry, which has not been properly consulted, have not really thought this through. I suspect and submit that it is also true of the trade agreement the Government is attempting to force on the Canadian people. That is something the Government has not totally thought through. The association brings up some very important points that are quite similar to the debate on the trade agreement on which this country is now embarking.

The other aspect of Bill C-87 which is also worth noting is that while the Tories on June 6, 1986, imposed a 10 per cent duty on books and periodicals in response to the U.S. 35 per cent tariff on Canadian shakes and shingles, the Government, after an outcry by the book industry in this country withdrew the 10 per cent duty on books and periodicals but did it through a remission order, in other words, an order from Cabinet. What Bill C-87 now does is to maintain the duty on books and periodicals in legislation and does not take it off as it should. In other words, while the remission order is still in place, the legislation is also in place which allows the Government to reintroduce the tariff on books and periodicals. Why has the Government left this out of its legislation? Is it really thinking of slapping a tariff on books and periodicals again? I do recognize that the Government has some trouble with books and things of intellectual quality. I recognize that some of the Hon. Members are not too familiar, perhaps, with books and periodicals and feel they are dispensable. After all, they are luxuries, and we might as well slap a 10 per cent tax on them.

Mr. McMillan: Nonsense.

Mr. de Jong: Of course, I recognize the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) as one who, I would tend to think, is quite familiar with books and periodicals. I am not suggesting that all members of the Conservative Party are strangers to books and periodicals, but listening to some of the remarks of members of the Government one can only come to the conclusion that it has been a long time since they read a book or periodical. I do not include the Minister of the Environment, who I feel is a learned gentleman and, indeed, an honourable one. He knows a lot about acid rain and I think he reads a lot of books about acid rain. We just hope his next step is to stop reading and start doing something about it. That is the next step. We are all behind him to encourage him along the way.

So, when we deal with Bill C-87, which is quite a technical piece of legislation, we support the Automotive Industries Association of Canada in its request that the Government delay for three months the implementation of this Bill. In this way the industry can begin to comprehend and digest more fully what all the changes would mean to that particular industry and other industries. We urge the Government to be open to the suggestions from the industry to clean up the Bill so that it will not have the effect of driving some industries down to the United States and therefore lose Canadian jobs.

In debating Bill C-87 we must also talk about the larger question that is looming over this country, that is, the proposed trade agreement between the Prime Minister and President Reagan. We must surely ask the question whether this is something that will be of benefit to Canadians.

I see you have given me the two fingers, Mr. Speaker, and by that I understand that I have two minutes remaining. I see the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has his whole hand in his mouth. That does not mean anything.

I wish to point out in closing my remarks that the Government proclaimed the great benefits of the slogan "Open for business", which its counterpart in Saskatchewan, Premier Devine, campaigned on so eloquently in 1982. The slogan in Saskatchewan now is not "Open for business" but "Hoping for business". We must point out that it is the foreign investors and foreign-owned companies in this country that have the worst record in terms of job creation.

According to a Stats Canada study, between 1978 and 1985 Canadian-controlled companies created some 876,000 new jobs while foreign companies eliminated 12,800 jobs. Meanwhile, the share of profits earned by foreign firms in Canada rose from 31 per cent to 43 per cent of total profits. These few statistics point out eloquently point out the effects of having an economy that is so greatly controlled by people foreign to us. Their interests are not the interests of creating jobs and real economic activity in Canada. Statistics show that they received almost 50 per cent of the profits made in this country, yet between 1978 and 1985, in a seven-year period, they actually eliminated over 12,000 jobs.

I hope that these statistics will give the Government some pause as it makes this headlong dash into the embrace of the American eagle. I hope that government Members will begin to recognize that it is not in the interests of Canada, which they have sworn to uphold, to continue with this madness of a trade deal with the United States.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) for a very helpful speech on the whole question of tariffs and pointing out how it relates to the whole question of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) trade deal with the United States. The thing that I would like to ask him about is this. The Prime Minister is very clearly on the record as having stated his opposition to free trade before he became the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party. Other leading members of the Conservative Party, including the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), who is in the House today, also indicated their opposition to the folly of some kind of total agreement with the United States on trade. That was their position before the 1984 election. There was no commitment to negotiate an agreement with the United States during the 1984 election.

Since that election we have seen nothing but one concession after another to the United States. We have seen the abolition of FIRA by which we gutted our capacity to look into American takeovers of Canadian firms. We have seen the struggle to ram through Bill C-22 which will result in higher drug costs for Canada. We have seen the bungling and the supine attitude toward the softwood lumber issue. We have seen a whole range of issues on which the Government has buckled under pressure from the United States.

The question I would like to ask the Hon. Member is this. Why does the Hon. Member think that the Prime Minister changed his position on the question of free trade when he was so clearly opposed to it before he became the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party? He made no attempt to seek a mandate for it in the 1984 election campaign. Why would he have changed his position and now be entering into this agreement with the United States which is so clearly fraught with danger to the Canadian future?

Mr. de Jong: I thank my colleague and friend, Mr. Speaker, for asking a very important question. I am not certain if I can give a complete answer to it. He is certainly correct in pointing out that the Prime Minister, including the front-bench Members of the Government, were all against the concept of free trade. Since coming to power they seem to have turned themselves around 180 degrees. What motivated them to do that I am not certain.

Certainly, one could say that before the Prime Minister became Prime Minister he was a branch plant manager. Perhaps he feels comfortable in that role. Certainly, under a free trade agreement he will again become more of a branch plant manager, except that the branch plant will now be Canada. I find that to be the driving force of Members opposite. They feel that the future of the country is to be tied totally to the future and the well-being of our cousins and friends south of us.

They do not have a vision of an independent country, of an independent Canada, that is able to make its own way in the world and that is able to stand up on its own economic feet. They do not see that Canada has enough of a vitality and imagination to be able to function as a free country, free not just politically but also culturally and economically. They feel that Canadians just do not have it in them to be able to do that. They feel that we must make all sorts of concessions to the United States in order to get some favoured position, some favourable consideration by the Americans, so that when the United States goes through, and surely it must go through, major internal economic reorganization, somehow Canadians will be spared the measures that the Americans are threatening to take.

Mr. Manly: Fat chance.

Mr. de Jong: As my colleague says, "Fat chance". I think the Americans are out there to protect themselves. I think one expects them to do that. There is not necessarily anything that is immoral about that. Nations have the responsibility of looking after their people and themselves. I wish this Government would take the same position as far as Canada is concerned and stand up and say: "Canada first". If it says that, then we would not be involved in these types of negotiations that we have been involved in with the United States.

• (1600)

The Government's ability and technique of negotiating leaves something to be desired. As my colleague pointed out, before the Government sat down at the bargaining table, it already gave away several major chips. What a manner in which to negotiate! These people are so anxious to tie our fortunes to the American fortunes that they are willing to give almost everything away.

In conclusion, in answer to my friend and colleague, I find the Government's handling of this most shameful, the fact that it stated one thing before and during the election, and since coming to power has totally changed its position. It is now going to force this through Parliament. It is calling upon a committee of Parliament to travel across the country and receive representations from Canadians and industry, without our seeing let alone digesting the hundreds of pages of technical documents that will be associated with this agreement. I find that a most shameful act. It is shameful to this Parliament and to the people of Canada.

Mr. McKenzie: The NDP Members have been making repeated statements about former positions of Conservatives in regard to free trade. Many of us have had to change our positions on the free trade concept because of the protectionist attitude in the United States.

I wish to refer to the many various positions of the NDP, and read some of its trade resolutions from March, 1987. The NDP stated, "Increase activities to promote trade". We are increasing activity to promote trade. The NDP went on to say, "Pursue mature state-to-state relationship and cease to deal with the U.S. on an issue-by-issue basis". That is what we are doing. We do not wish to deal on an issue-by-issue basis. The NDP is correct there, but it has obviously changed its position.

The NDP goes on to state, "Explore sectoral free trade with the U.S. and other countries with production safeguards similar to the Auto Pact". That is what we are doing. In regard to the free trade policies from the 1987 convention, the NDP states, "Expanded trade will benefit Canada. Tariffs are outdated". We realize that, that is why we are proceeding with these trade talks and the committee travelling across the country. The NDP also states, "Build up export markets for small firms". That is what we are doing.

The NDP and others have made repeated comments about the softwood lumber deal. The Leader of the NDP stated that the decisions made by the Mulroney Government would wreak havoc on our major export industry and could cost us thousands of jobs. We are accused of abandoning key aspects of sovereignty. The fact is that the industry is booming. In B.C. the forest products industry is well on its way to a record-breaking profit year. The net losses for the United States are $140 million while Canada will make a $117.6 million gain. In August, several firms had already earned more than they did in all of 1986. Softwood lumber production throughout Canada has set new records so far in 1987, and exports to the United States remain near the record high levels of 1986. The NDP was all wrong on that. I would like to know when it has ever been right.

Mr. Riis: Call an election and find out.

Mr. McKenzie: The de Havilland deal was another example. The NDP predicted total disaster if de Havilland were sold to Boeing. The sale immediately generated $90 million for the federal Treasury, plus a further $65 million payable in successive instalments. The sale has resulted in orders for 42 Dash-8 aircraft, valued at over $400 million, and the company has orders and options on hand for another 132 aircraft. That was another false prediction of the NDP.

Another one where it was out a mile was where it predicted with the 1985 Budget that 200,000 Canadians would lose their jobs. It was dead wrong. Over 900,000 new jobs have been created. I would like to know when the NDP has ever been right about anything.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I ask the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) to give a short answer, if possible, as the time for questions and comments is practically over.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief in responding to the Member from the Conservative benches.

There is not very much to say. The quotes he gives are somewhat weak. The quotes he was giving do not show that in 1987 we would be in favour of what is proposed here. In fact, the very opposite is true. The fact is that the Member cannot see that, and it says volumes.

On the concern raised by the Hon. Member on the softwood lumber, I wish to quote from an article in The Globe and Mail on October 28 under the heading, "System of provincial levies to replace 15 per cent lumber tax". The article states, "The chances of rebuilding the Canadian share of the U.S. market on the basis of price competition are slim," the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) said. "Even with the free-trade agreement," he told the council, "the best the industry can expect is to hang on to the U.S. business it has".

Those were comments from the Minister. So much for free trade, so much for its handling of the softwood and shingles issues, the Minister stated that as far as lumber was concerned, we will not gain from this. The best we can hope for is that we can hang on.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Read the whole statement. Tell the truth.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE RAISED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Grondin)—Youth—Plight of unemployed and homeless—Government position / Expectations of youth—Government position; the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine)—Trade—Free Trade—Position of socialist party in 1965; the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mrs. Dewar)—Trade—Service industry—Effect of Canada-United States trade agreement / Provincial jurisdiction over service jobs.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-87, an Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters and to amend or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested to listen to the letter from the automobile parts manufacturers that was read into the record by my colleague from Regina. They urge the Government at least to postpone the implementation of this Bill, because they had not been able to discuss with the Government the tremendously adverse effects which these changes in duties will have on the industry in Canada, industry which they say employs 70,000 people.

I was interested because it is another example of the ideological blinkers and blindfolds worn by some people speaking for the Government, or its chief negotiator in the so-called trade talks—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member who, of course, will be allowed to continue his speech. But the House does have another matter to deal with at this time.

PRIVILEGE

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the courtesy of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) in taking his seat.

As a consequence of a question of privilege raised by the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) shortly after 3 o'clock until approximately 3.10 p.m., at which point the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party had the floor, I adjourned the matter until now.

The Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party has the floor, and I will recognize the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent).

• (1610)

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, a question of privilege has been raised which touches for me a very important matter about Canadian politics. I want to speak briefly to it on the question of privilege.

As Leader of an opposition Party I had the occasion to oppose in public debate Mr. Trudeau as Prime Minister leading a Liberal Party, the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) leading a Conservative Government, for a brief time the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), and more recently the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

During all this time, as a man who went into national politics, not local politics, I have believed deeply in the well-being of Canadians from coast to coast. I have believed deeply in the obligations of Leaders of Parties and of all MPs to enter into passionate, reasoned debate about different approaches to Canadian politics and about different solutions.

However, I have opposed with all my being any concept of politics that I would ever say about a political opponent of mine, Prime Minister or otherwise, that he or she was opposed to Canadians in one part of my country. When I am confronted with politics of this kind, it moves me considerably.

I was faced with that yesterday, leading up to my comment. A Minister of the Crown said, in reply to a question from one of my colleagues, the Hon. Member for—

An Hon. Member: Yorkton—Melville.

Mr. Broadbent: —Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom)—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Saskatchewan, it is hard to remember.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Member is at it again. The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville asked a question of a Minister and he got as part of the reply: "What does he have against Alberta?" That is what one Minister said to my colleague.

In reply to a question to the Prime Minister that gave rise to my comment, which has been raised as a question of privilege, the Prime Minister of Canada said:

> I know that my hon. friends in the Liberal and New Democratic Parties are opposed to the interests of western Canada.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Are you withdrawing, Ed?

Mr. Broadbent: I found that disturbing at that time and I still do. Although I expect the Prime Minister to tear my arguments to shreds if he can so do—and he ought to do that—I find very offensive the suggestion that I am opposed to the interests of any part of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The matter which has been raised by the Deputy Prime Minister is a serious one and it gives the Chair concern.

I would ask Hon. Members to let the Chair handle the discussion. The Hon. Member for Oshawa has the floor, and he is entitled to be heard.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I was saying that I expect rigorous debate, but I would never hurl the accusation at my political opponents that they are opposed to the interests of any part of my country, and I expect the same of them.

I expect them to disagree with my arguments, if they want to, and to challenge alleged claims of fact, if they want to, but I expect them never to question my commitment to the well-being of Canadians in any part of my land.

When that was raised—and it has been raised a number of times in reply to questions—when the Prime Minister said, "I know that my hon. friends in the Liberal and New Democratic Parties are opposed to the interests of western Canada", I replied: "That's a lie".

I happen to believe that it is totally untrue. I say that with the total commitment of my being about that assertion about me, and I say that about the other opposition Party. To suggest that it is against the interests of one part of our country is unworthy of serious debate.

In my view that is a serious parliamentary breach, but I also respect the rules of the House and, therefore, I withdraw unequivocally the terminology I used to describe what I think is very unacceptable political behaviour in my country.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Finally.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Oshawa, for responding in the way he did.

Mr. Riis: The nine-month Prime Minister, he is such a sleazebag.

Mr. Speaker: I would think that as a consequence of this exchange all Hon. Members will strive mightily—

Mr. Mazankowski: He called you a sleazebag, Joe.

An Hon. Member: No, he didn't.

Mr. Mazankowski: I heard him.

Mr. Shields: So did I.

Mr. Speaker: —not to put the Chair in a difficult position.

There are several issues involved here—and I will recognize the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) in a moment—but one of them is a matter which arises out of an exchange in Question Period. As the Hon. Member for Oshawa pointed out, there can be great divisions of opinion on what is good on the part of the policies of one Party for one part of the country or another. That is one debate. However, what I must deal with is the procedural issue. Hon. Members know that some things are just not parliamentary.

The Hon. Member for Oshawa has explained his own feelings in the matter but has supported the Chair completely, for which I thank him. However, that does not end the matter because the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister has laid his complaint also in respect of words used by the Hon. Member for Skeena. Although there may be a great temptation for a lot of Members to get into this debate, I am going to try to contain it. I will hear the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton).

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I think the remarks which were made yesterday by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) need to be restated. The Prime Minister stated, and I quote:

> —is the NDP so desperately concerned with raising matters that damage western Canada?

In the next statement the Prime Minister of Canada said:

> I know that my hon. friends in the Liberal and New Democratic Parties are opposed to the interests of western Canada.

My father's family came to this country 300 years ago, my mother's family came here 200 years ago, and I am a third generation western Canadian. My grandparents are from Edmonton. My mother and father were both born in Edmonton. I have lived my entire life in British Columbia and I have worked very hard in the last ten years, eight of those years in the House.

I have great respect for the Chair, as the Chair knows, and I have great respect for the traditions of the House. However, when the Prime Minister of Canada says what he said, knowing as I do the traditions of the Party which I represent—the CCF and the NDP over the last half century in western Canada, in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and the rest of the country—and looking at what I consider to be the really mean spirit with which the Prime Minister said what he said, I simply cannot withdraw what I said.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member takes the position, at least at the moment, that he cannot withdraw. Of course I know that Hon. Members will realize that the words the Hon. Member has used are unparliamentary. No matter what his position may be in respect of any other Hon. Member or other Party, or even the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the way that we maintain order and ultimately free speech in this place is that we have imposed certain rules on ourselves.

Of course there are various ways for a Chair to react to the position which the Hon. Member takes. So far as this aspect of the Deputy Prime Minister's application is concerned, I shall adjourn the matter. I would ask the Hon. Member to consider carefully his position. Perhaps he may want to discuss it in the next little while with some other Members of his own caucus.

Mr. Nystrom: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): On a question of privilege—

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Several Hon. Members are rising and of course I would want to recognize them. The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) has a question of privilege. I just want to know on what the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) is rising so that we can proceed in a tidy way.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, it is on the same point and on a personal question of privilege related thereto.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York Centre has a question of privilege. In respect of the point in so far as the application of the Deputy Prime Minister is concerned, the complaint in respect of the Hon. Member for Oshawa is finished and I am not entertaining any further comment on it.

• (1620)

The complaint with respect to the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) is still open and I am adjourning it to give the Hon. Member time to give the entire matter further consideration. I am not prepared to hear any further debate on that particular aspect of the Deputy Prime Minister's application. The effect is that part of the application has been dealt with by the withdrawing of unparliamentary words by the Hon. Member for Oshawa. The second part of that application is adjourned. I will hear the Hon. Member for Skeena at some further time.

If there are other Hon. Members who have points of order or privilege, then, of course, the Chair will hear them. But I do not intend to have further argument on the adjourned part of the application. I think I have made it very clear that on the other part of the Deputy Prime Minister's point of order that is completed.

The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) is rising on a question of privilege. The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) will be rising, and I believe the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) is seeking the floor. I will in due course extend the appropriate courtesies to all Hon. Members and I will hear what they have to say.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): I do this seriously, Mr. Speaker. I very seldom rise on a question of privilege. I have not called anyone a liar and I do not intend to at this point at all—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: —or further down the road. I am sorry if you misunderstood that.

I do think some motives were imputed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney)—and I speak as a Saskatchewanite. You are a British Columbian, Mr. Speaker. I grew up in Saskatchewan and I represent a Saskatchewan riding—when he said in this House:

> I know that my hon. friends in the Liberal and New Democratic Parties are opposed to the interests of western Canada.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The interests of western Canada.

Mr. Nystrom: I want to say very simply that I think you should take this matter under advisement, Mr. Speaker. We can have differences in this House but I never question the commitment of my friend, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), to western Canada or that of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) to western Canada, but I think it makes my job of being a Member of Parliament from Yorkton—Melville a little more difficult when my commitment to western Canada is questioned. What is being said is that I oppose the interests of western Canada.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The interests.

Mr. Nystrom: I think that imputes motives to me, and it is something which makes my job more difficult as a Member of Parliament. Beyond that, I think it is a very insensitive thing to say. It is the kind of regional racism which pits one region of the country against other regions of the country, and it is a highly insensitive thing for someone to say in this House.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Such sanctimony.

Mr. Nystrom: I would like you to take a look at this matter, Mr. Speaker. As I said before, we can disagree in this House but we do not have to question each other's commitments to our constituencies and our parts of the country, but this sort of thing is particularly bad when it comes from the Prime Minister of Canada, I repeat Canada, the Prime Minister who represents all of us.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We know the New Democratic Party's piety in public. That is shameful.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville has raised a point of order. I will, of course, consider it. I think I have his point and I do not think I need to hear anything further on that. The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan).

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to make a similar point on my own behalf as a Liberal Member who would have been referred to by the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) statement at page 10482 of Hansard which reads:

> I know that my hon. friends in the Liberal and New Democratic Parties are opposed to the interests of western Canada.

I want as well to draw attention to the imputation of motives to members of my Party and the New Democratic Party.

I respect very much the difficulty in which the Chair is placed when questions of privilege are raised and when, as you have done, Mr. Speaker, a Member has been invited to consider language used in commenting on the remarks of the Prime Minister. I want to urge you also to invite the Prime Minister to consider the statement he made, which was so provocative in imputing motives to Members on the opposite side, and that while it does not justify the statements made and withdrawn, it certainly makes them understandable to the average Canadian. Having given the opportunity to the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) to reflect on his own situation in relation to his words, I hope that the same opportunity will be given to the Prime Minister within the same time frame to reflect on the despicable politics and the unacceptable imputation of motives contained in his words.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York Centre—I think, we will try to stay as procedurally exact as possible—has made a point. It was very much the same point made by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville. The Government may wish to respond at this point to what has been said in both of those cases. I think that I am probably obligated to hear at least from someone on the government side. I look to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) for guidance as to who will be recognized. The Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark).

Mr. Riis: The nine month wonder is on his feet.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I am not sure, Mr. Speaker, exactly what point is being discussed in terms of strict procedure. There has not been a question of privilege raised according to the rules as I understand them.

Ms. Mitchell: Do you agree with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney)?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Since there is a debate, let me make two points. One, the language complained of has to do with the Prime Minister's words with regard to the interests of western Canada. As a western Canadian, let me make it clear that the interests of western Canada are very positively and aggressively served by the free trade agreement, which is opposed by both Parties in this House. The interests of western Canada were badly affected by the National Energy Program which was introduced—

Mr. Riis: You are lucky you lasted nine months.

Mr. Speaker: I am very hesitant to interrupt the right hon. gentleman for reasons which are well known in this Chamber, but I have tried to draw the distinction between what may very well be a difference of opinion, which might very well be a part of something for debate with respect to what was said or not said or the exchange, and the strictly procedural responsibility that lies upon the shoulders of the Speaker in this case.

I want to assure the right hon. gentleman that in considering the representation of both the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville and the Hon. Member for York Centre I will be looking very carefully at the exact words which the Right Hon. Prime Minister said. I would ask the co-operation of all Hon. Members in containing this particular discussion, at least as far as is appropriate, within procedural grounds. The difficulties in the questions and answers for the Chair is that they were, in some respects, debate in themselves and they lead on to further debate. I do not think it is in the interests of this particular not very easy series of applications to extend that debate beyond the procedural grounds.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I certainly not only accept that ruling, as I naturally would, but I agree with it. The point I was trying to make was that no point of order or question of privilege has been adduced and none exists.

Mr. Speaker: I want to assure the right hon. gentleman that I understand perfectly well the position of the Government on this. As I say, I will be looking very carefully at the exact words when I have to decide whether or not who and under what circumstances anybody was out of order or whether privileges had been abridged. However, I think the floor now belongs to the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault).

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, while you are looking at the exact words pronounced in order to make a decision as to whether they breached privilege or whether they constitute a point of order, I submit that, contrary to the point made by the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), there is a definite point of order. I want to quote from Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, page 103. Beauchesne is very clear in Citation 316 "That a Member, while speaking, must not" and there follows a long enumeration of what is prohibited, I will skip sub-paragraphs (a) and (b), (c), (d) and come to sub-paragraph (e) which is clear and says that a Member, while speaking must not:

I want to submit that when some Members on the opposition side were questioning the validity of a decision with regard to a grant that was made to Fantasyland in Edmonton, they were doing just that. They were just trying to establish, by questioning the Government, that the grant may have been made without the proper procedures being followed.

Now, for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to say what he has said and what is recorded in Hansard on page 10482, which is that the Liberals and the New Democratic Parties are opposed to the interests of western Canada and that that becomes clearer every day, is certainly, I submit, to impute motives contrary to Citation 316 of Beauchesne's.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to add that on this side of the House, we are often less than satisfied with what the Government is doing. For instance, the Government has been remarkably slow to react to what is happening in Montreal East and to provide grants. We have asked questions, and I have just done so—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I will show you that what I have to say is quite in order. We asked some questions not long ago, and we will ask the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion some more, but we never at any time assumed that the Government was so slow to react because the Minister or the Government were hostile to the interests of the Montreal area. We never said that and we are not going to.

Mr. Speaker: I realize the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) wants to be thorough in his comments. That is understandable. I think the Hon. Member's comments are most interesting, but I think I may have resolved the point at issue. As I said for——Right Hon. Secretary of State, we do not want to extend this argument. I think we are getting into debate. I have the point of the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) and I am quite prepared to consider it. He may want to rise briefly to close off his remarks.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw your attention to the fact that I am the only one so far in the debate who has quoted the rules of this House, and I do not think I should be cut off because I am trying to keep this at the level of procedure, whereas—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It was not the intention of the Chair.

[English]

It was only that when we get into a debate about questions asked about Montreal or somewhere else, we are getting a little bit beyond the procedural point. I am much indebted to the Hon. Member because he has cited those. As I say, I have invited the Hon. Member to continue his remarks.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Which I will, and I thank you, Mr. Speaker. Citation 316 of Beauchesne's is there for a purpose and it has been used in the past in this House. The purpose obviously is that while some language is specifically prohibited on pages 104, 105 and others of Beauchesne's including the word "lying", for example, which was withdrawn a few minutes ago, there is other language which, while not being specifically prohibited, has an obvious tendency to create disorder in the House. The language that tends to impute motives is language of that kind.

This is the reason I am asking you, Mr. Speaker, to take into account this specific citation in Beauchesne's when you make your decision, and if you come to the conclusion which, I suggest respectfully, the Chair might wish to come to, the words that were uttered by the Prime Minister should be withdrawn. Words that impute motives that are completely other than those that were meant by the one who has the floor should not be used.

I think, Mr. Speaker, you should make a decision that will send a clear message to all Hon. Members that this should not be done. This should serve as an example. If the Prime Minister of Canada is not able to respect the rules and traditions of this House, why should other Hon. Members do so?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to the point raised by the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault), and I know he has done so with a great amount of sincerity. I would submit that the citation he quoted is not applicable in this particular case. The citation says that besides prohibitions contained in Standing Order 35, it has been sanctioned by usage that a Member while speaking must not impute to a Member bad motives or motives different from those acknowledged, and I think that is the most important element here.

There is no question of the Prime Minister imputing motives against a Member. It is really no different from a headline from the Windsor Star of November 10, 1984, which reads, "Broadbent says Tories covering up". One could say that that headline imputes bad motives, but not a single Hon. Member—while we may not like that headline, we may not like what the Leader of the New Democratic Party has said—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Was that said in the House?

Mr. Mazankowski: Whether it was said—it has been said in the House on many occasions as well, but there was never reference to a particular Member, and I think there is a difference when singling out a Member or a group of Members who belong to a political Party.

I see the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) is nodding his head in the affirmative, and that is a matter that should be taken into consideration.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): You are imputing motives again.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is a good motive, I think the Hon. Member would agree.

The issue here is not the content of the debate. The issue here is the use of parliamentary language, and I am appreciative of the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) for having withdrawn his remarks. I know that he takes issue with certain statements the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has made, but there is a way to counter that. Rather than saying it was a lie, the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party could have said that it was untrue, and it would have been totally parliamentary to do so. That is why I appeal to the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) for whom I have a great deal of respect, and I know he may feel very deeply about this as well.

The fact is that we are trying to maintain some standard of parliamentary behavior and utilization of proper and appropriate parliamentary language. I have from time to time used words that are excessive and offensive, and I have withdrawn them. I regretted having used them. The Hon. House Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Riis) and I had a bit of an exchange, and he as well, in a very gracious manner, withdrew. I think our respect for each other grows as a result of acknowledging that we made a mistake.

I would appeal to the Hon. Member for Skeena, who is a very good Member of Parliament and a vigorous debater. I have been to his constituency and I have tried to unseat him, and it has always been done with the most honourable of intentions. I think what we are doing here is something that is important, not only to Hon. Members of the House but indeed to those watching.

If any Hon. Member of Parliament takes issue with something that is said on either side of the House, there is a parliamentary way of dealing with that, and that is all we are asking for here. Once again, notwithstanding the very eloquent argument the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) put forth, I would humbly submit that in this particular case, it would not apply.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I do not often tend to agree with my hon. friend, but on this procedural matter, I want to say that he did, I think, make a very important point when he referred to Citation 316 of Beauchesne's which refers to the imputing of motives to a Member.

It is with a little reluctance, now that I agree with my hon. friend, that I refer to the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) who felt it inappropriate to raise the matter himself. On the same day, in the same exchange, as reported on page 10480 of Hansard, in the exchange with the Hon. Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret), the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) did refer to my hon. colleague from Yorkton—Melville when he asked what the Member had against western Canada and what he had against Alberta. While I appreciate my hon. friend's pointing out this aspect of the citation, the Minister was referring specifically to the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville when he asked what that Member has against western Canada, and more specifically the Province of Alberta. As you reflect on this matter raised by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), I ask you to consider that as well.

Mr. Speaker: I will carefully consider the representations. However, I am quite happy to be able to say to Hon. Members that in a difficult situation and after a brief adjournment I appreciate very much the co-operation and dignity with which all Hon. Members made their interventions.

With respect to the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), I would ask him to consider his position. He knows he can discuss the matter with his good and loyal colleagues. If he wishes, he can of course discuss it with the Chair.

ALLEGED INSULTING REMARK

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. During the high-minded speech of his Leader, the House Leader of the NDP called me a sleazebag. I wonder if in the spirit of amity now pervading this House he might want to withdraw that remark.

Mr. Nystrom: I think Crosbie said that was all right. Not about you, Joe.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): He said I was a former Leader, that is all right.

Mr. Speaker: I am tempted to say I did not hear him. However, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has the floor.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, during the time when my Leader was making his points, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), was yelling and hurling insults in an attempt to disrupt my Leader. I suspect that in a moment of weakness, albeit probably true, I indicated what I thought of the Right Hon. Member. I recognize his point, that the term—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Sleazebag.

Mr. Riis: —sleazebag, thank you, Mr. Minister, is unparliamentary. As a parliamentarian, recognizing the inappropriate use of that term, I certainly withdraw it.

Mr. Speaker: Knowing the Hon. Member as I do, perhaps it was only a momentary lapse.

The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) on a point of order?

ALLEGED ACCUSATION AGAINST ALL MEMBERS

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I do not want to belabour this but I think something else that happened yesterday is also serious. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap was asked to withdraw his accusation of kickbacks concerning the Deputy Prime Minister, and he did so. Then it had to be brought up again. I would just repeat what the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs said:

> The record shows unequivocally that twice the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap accused someone on the government side of taking kickbacks. He says he did not mean the Deputy Prime Minister. He must then have been referring to another Minister from Alberta, to all Ministers on the government side or—

Mr. Speaker: Again, I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member but this matter has been completely settled.

Mr. Mazankowski: No, with respect, it has not.

Mr. Speaker: Then perhaps I can receive some guidance as to the extent to which there may be something new.

Mr. Mazankowski: Get to the point, Jack.

Mr. Speaker: I was certainly under the impression that the matter had been settled. If I am incorrect, I will hear Hon. Members further.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, the point I am trying to make is that it was made clear in the request by the Secretary of State for External Affairs that the accusation against all Members of this House be withdrawn unequivocally. The Hon. Member rose and said:

> Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no question. I certainly do that. I withdraw any accusation, any implication that that term might suggest for either the Deputy Prime Minister or any other Member of Cabinet.

He was asked to withdraw with respect to all Members of this House of Commons. I happen to be a Member of this House of Commons. I was very active as chairman of the Alberta caucus in lobbying for and getting a grant for the West Edmonton Mall because all of us in the Alberta caucus felt it was necessary.

Mr. Nystrom: Not Kindy.

Mr. Shields: At that point unemployment was ravaging Edmonton and it was the only construction job going. With that in mind I would ask that he withdraw the allegation against all Members of this House of Commons, particularly those on this side of the House.

Mr. Speaker: First, I want to say to the Hon. Member that, on reflection, clearly I was incorrect and I apologize to Members for that. Yesterday the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap did withdraw, as the Hon. Member for Athabasca properly pointed out. It seems that the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs was seeking a withdrawal of broader proportions than that. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap could clarify the situation.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, this is getting to be rather repetitive. I appreciate the comments made by my friend from Athabasca praising himself. I was brought up to think it is better to receive praise from others. However, that is another matter.

I must admit that when the exchange occurred we were trying to determine why this particular firm or family received $5 million when our information was that everyone recommended against it. Then an Hon. Liberal Member indicated there had been substantial political contributions made by the firm to the Progressive Conservative Party. It was then the thought occurred to me, and in retrospect I wish it had not, that there might have been some kickbacks. I guess I hurled out the thought, which I probably should have kept to myself, that kickbacks seemed to be involved.

Knowing my hon. friend, the Deputy Prime Minister, I certainly had no hesitation in withdrawing the statement as it might have applied to him because I know that is certainly not the case. Then the Cabinet got edgy and I withdrew the accusation against the Cabinet. Now I suppose everyone is getting edgy and one begins to think we are protesting too much.

However, just to clear the air—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Bring yourself to it.

Mr. Riis: —I do not think the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead received a kickback in this matter. I do not assume any cabinet Minister received a kickback.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): This week.

Mr. Riis: I did not assume any back-bencher from the Province of Alberta or anywhere else received a kickback. I hope that makes it perfectly clear. Next time I am thinking along those lines I will keep it to myself. At this moment I fully withdraw any implication that any Hon. Members in the Conservative Party received kickbacks in the matter of the Fantasyland grant of $5 million.

Mr. Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

Mr. Prud'homme: Good.

Mr. Shields: I wish you could hear what I am thinking right now after what you said. I would be out of this House for a week.

Mr. Nystrom: Jack-in-the-box.

Mr. Manly: He can every time you shake your head, Jack.

Mr. Shields: You have no class, Nelson.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-87, an Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters and to amend or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in the few moments I had before the House moved to spend an hour on the matter of privilege, I was saying that what we have had from the Government and the chief free trade negotiator and, unfortunately, a number of columnists who write in some of Canada's major newspapers, is a completely one-sided explanation of what is involved in this agreement.

We have been lectured repeatedly that if we want this free trade agreement that will bring so many benefits to our country we will have to change our ways and stop our system of regional development grants and other forms of assistance which have established industries and plants in various parts of the country. However, while we are being lectured that we must change our ways, nothing is said by cabinet Ministers, Mr. Reisman, or columnists about the fact that the American Government, states and cities are involved in precisely the same kind of practices that we are being told we must curtail.

Of course, there is no suggestion that if we stop those practices which the Americans say are improper, the Americans will do the same.

I want to put on record some of the views expressed by two of Canada's well known columnists. Deborah McGregor, wrote an article entitled "Dragging Subsidies out into the Open", which appeared in the Financial Times on October 5, 1987. She begins by saying:

> It is appropriate that, in the final days of the free trade negotiations between Canada and the United States, the spotlight was brought to bear on subsidies.

She goes on to say:

> Too often subsidies have been used to coddle and cajole Canadian companies into short-term strategies and perverse behaviour.
> A case in point is the Canadian Government's willingness to play handmaiden to one of the world's largest corporations—General Motors Corp.—by participating in a $220 million interest-free loan earlier this year. Poor old GM had only $5.5 billion in profits in 1985.

Next she says:

> It is likely that the GM case has returned to haunt the Canadian negotiators at the free trade table.

Are we to assume that we are following practices which the Americans do not follow themselves?

Let us consider an article by Jeffrey Simpson in The Globe and Mail on October 9, 1987. It is subtitled "Free Trade isn't risk-free but neither is battling U.S. protectionism". He said in part:

> In the United States, the free market is surrounded by liturgy. And why not? The free market has been the driving force behind making the United States an enormously wealthy country, a military superpower, a magnet for tens of millions of immigrants who sought to share in its bounty.

He goes on to talk about how we in Canada have subsidized various projects. He states:

> This has meant a substantially greater direct involvement in the operations of the free market in Canada than in the United States.

In another part of his article he lists some of the supposed subsidies with which we have been involved and which we would have to stop if this agreement goes through. He includes in this list Sydney Steel and Sydbec. I hope Members from Nova Scotia are listening because he believes such projects would not be allowed.

Others include Domtar's plant at Windsor, Cominco's smelter at Trail, the Faro mine in the Yukon, the General Motors plant at Ste. Thérèse, Quebec, and others. The inference is that the Americans are not involved in such procedures.

Let me deal with the automobile industry in the United States. The figures I will quote are from documents prepared by a senior official for the Canadian Government, J.G. Miller, planning and analysis division of the Automotive Marine and Rail Branch, in April, 1986.

Let me summarize briefly what has happened with five plants built recently in the United States. Assistance has been supplied to these plants by the state or municipal Government for infrastructure, pollution control, tax abatement, education, training and for the establishment of what they call foreign trade zone status.

The Mazda plant in Flat Rock received $184 million. The Mitsubishi-Chrysler plant in Illinois received $175 million. The Honda plant in Ohio received $130 million. The Toyota plant in Kentucky received $269 million. The Chrysler plant in Detroit received $366 million.

According to the New York Times of September 18, Honda announced expansion of its operation in Ohio. According to this article, the expansion was encouraged by incentives from the state. Ohio granted Honda other incentives, including tax abatements and state money to train new employees. Why have Mr. Reisman, who negotiated the original Auto Pact agreement, and the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), as well as columnists, not told this to Canadians? Surely we need this information if we are going to give intensive consideration to this free trade agreement.

The same ought to apply with respect to this tariff proposal we are discussing today. The letter to the Government from the auto parts manufacturers urged the Government to give very serious consideration to the implications of the tariff changes.

Let me give some details on the kind of assistance the American states and cities give to their automobile plants, which we are told is an improper practice for a province or city in Canada. The Honda motorcycle plant in Ohio received a state grant of $5.2 million and another grant of $11 million from the state to improve the transportation. It received a tax abatement from the municipality, valued at $1 million.

Another Honda plant in the same state received a tax abatement from Shelby County of $850,000.

Despite the time which has been taken by questions of privilege, I presume we will be proceeding with Private Members' hour at five o'clock. Before we get to that point, I want to move the following motion pursuant to Standing Order 9(4)(a):

That the House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment for the purpose of continuing consideration of Bill C-87.

• (1700)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will those Members who object to the motion please rise in their places?

And more than fifteen Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 9(4), the motion is deemed to have been withdrawn.

Motion (Mr. Orilkow) deemed withdrawn.

[Translation]

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

ADVISABILITY OF DECLARING CANADA A NUCLEAR ARMS FREE ZONE

The House resumed from Monday, September 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. Young:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of declaring Canada a nuclear arms free zone by prohibiting the deployment, testing, construction and transportation of nuclear weapons and associated equipment through and within Canada, the export of goods and materials for use in the construction and deployment of nuclear arms and further, the government should encourage cities, provinces and states throughout the world to undertake similar action.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise to speak on this matter because it is a very important issue which the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) has brought before the House. I hope at some point the House can vote on this Bill so that Canadians can see where their elected representatives stand on one of the most important international issues in the world.

What is a nuclear weapons free zone? The concept is a simple one. A nuclear weapons free zone is a defined geographic area within which the possession, deployment, storage, transit, manufacture, testing and other support of nuclear weapons and nuclear weapons systems is prohibited. An area can become a nuclear or weapon free zone as part of an international zone as well. These zones do exist in the world. This is not a new idea, something made up by the Hon. Member for Beaches in spite of the fact that he is a most creative and imaginative person. The fact is that nuclear weapon free zones exist by international treaty signed by most of the countries in the world, in four regions, the seabed, Antarctica, outer space—that is a giant stride—and Latin America. There are proposals for regional nuclear free zones in the Nordic countries, the Balkans, other parts of Europe, the Middle East, the Indian Ocean, Southeast Asia and Africa. There are even countries which are nuclear free such as Japan, Austria, Sweden, and lately New Zealand, and a number of NATO countries with varying conditions.

What is the purpose of a nuclear free zone? It is not to stop the effects of a nuclear war. Once a nuclear war breaks out, no one is immune, whether one is in a nuclear free zone or not. We are not suggesting that anyone would be. All bets are off when that happens and, whether the country is nuclear free or not, it will be vulnerable to direct attack. Having a nuclear free zone is not an attempt to make one immune to the effects of war. Rather, it is an attempt to influence national and international behaviour before war breaks out. It is a preventive measure. It is a measure to try to reduce the likelihood of war.

What are the requirements for a nuclear free zone for Canada in the Canadian context? First, there should be no nuclear weapons on Canadian soil. We have had that debate before. In fact, that debate was won in Canada. Both former Prime Minister Diefenbaker and former Prime Minister Trudeau talked about Canada as nuclear free, not taking nuclear weapons, and no transit of nuclear weapons through Canadian territory, which is difficult when we have American warships with nuclear weapons in our waters. They referred to there being no production in Canada of components for nuclear weapons systems. That means that we have to be very careful about the uranium we produce, that it goes for peaceful purposes, not to be put into American nuclear reactors. Those are some of the requirements for a nuclear free zone in Canada. I will let other Members speak about what that would mean.

I would like to conclude by mentioning two special areas. I think the Canadian Government should be really pushing a nuclear free zone in the Arctic among the Nordic countries. I believe that is an area we should be working on. It is an area that is open. The Soviets have talked about it. Our Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) rejected that notion very quickly. I do not think that is the way to go. We should have further talks about it. If you look at the Arctic from the top of a world globe, it looks much different from on a flat map. You can see the Soviet Union, Alaska, with the Americans and the Nordic countries and you can see just who our northern neighbours are. It is quite impressive, looking at a map of the northern zone.

I think we should be looking in that area in terms of some proposals from Canada to the Soviets, the Americans and the Nordic countries of a nuclear free zone in the Arctic. That is in Canada's national interest. We have a lot to gain if we did that. It would dramatically reduce tensions and defence costs. We would not need to send nuclear subs up there. If we had a nuclear free Arctic, there would not be any subs there. It may be a difficult treaty to negotiate, but at least we should be taking the first steps towards the negotiations.

There is a second area I would like to mention, and I note the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) is in the House as well as the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly). We have a particular interest in this area because we are from the Pacific Coast, right on the water—my riding is not on the water but the other ridings are. We look out to the Pacific. There have been very interesting things going on in New Zealand, and there have been suggestions for a nuclear free Pacific zone. If we could get that, just think of all the problems that we might avoid, Mr. Speaker. As countries become independent and more outgoing in the Pacific, we do not want them to be brought into the cold war. I think New Zealand is to be complimented. I notice the voters of New Zealand re-elected the Government that had the courage to stand up to the Americans.

Yesterday the New Zealand Government protested the fact that our friend, France, and I hate to say it, has been bad, if I can put it that way—

Ms. Mitchell: Evil.

Mr. Waddell: I would not say evil, but I would say France has been very disappointing and has caused great concern because it continues to conduct nuclear tests in the South Pacific. Yesterday it set off a 50 kiloton underground nuclear test. France should stop playing imperialist games in the Pacific. It should get out of there and give independence to its colonies. It should get out of nuclear testing. There should be world pressure on France to make the Pacific nuclear free. These tests are giving problems not only to the inhabitants in the South Pacific but to everyone in the world.

Let me conclude by saying that this Bill with respect to a nuclear free zone is an excellent one. I have spoken about how it can be applied. Looking to the future, let us look at the Arctic and the South Pacific. However, let us first get our own backyard in order and let us have a nuclear free zone in Canada.

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds—Grenville): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to add my voice to those of my colleagues who have already spoken to the motion before us by the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) who is a very well respected Member of the House.

Members on both sides of the House are all well aware that Canada does not possess nuclear weapons or have any plan to do so. Furthermore, the deployment, testing or construction of such weapons within Canada, or their transportation through Canada, could not occur without the express consent of the Canadian Government. Canada's situation in this regard is very different from that of a number of NATO countries which accept the stationing of nuclear weapons on their territory. As for Canadian exports, it is Canadian policy that all exports of nuclear material, equipment and technology shall be strictly for peaceful, non-explosive purposes. This policy is implemented through bilateral agreements and with the co-operation of the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Canada is a strong supporter of the nuclear non-proliferation regime and endorses in principle the establishment of nuclear weapons free zones where they can make an effective contribution in this regard. Until such time as the non-proliferation treaty gains close to universal adherence, the establishment of such zones can make a contribution to the objective of preventing the proliferation of nuclear weapons.

However, to be effective, a nuclear weapons free zone must, in our judgment, fully meet the following criteria: apply to a well-defined region; have the support of the countries of the region; and, most important, promote regional and international stability. Canada's central concern is to ensure that in current and foreseeable circumstances our policies contribute both to national security and international stability.

Collective defence and arms control and disarmament constitute fundamental elements of Canada's national security policy. This Government's commitment to collective defence is exemplified in Canada's membership in NATO and NORAD.

The primary role of NATO is to safeguard the security of member nations by deterring aggression. This Government believes, as do other alliance Governments, that our collective nuclear deterrence strategy has been a critically important element in maintaining peace in the East-West context for over 40 years.

Canada has voluntarily shouldered the obligation to contribute to the capability of the alliance to implement its strategy of deterrence. As I have mentioned, this has involved a less onerous burden for us than for several other alliance members who have accepted the deployment of nuclear weapons on their territory. It would neither be consistent with our alliance membership, nor with our own security interests, for Canada as a matter of principle to attempt to dissociate itself from any or all aspects of the nuclear deterrence strategy.

Deterrence will remain an essential element of our collective defence until there is much greater progress in reducing levels of armaments, particularly strategic nuclear weapons, and in building a more secure world.

Arms control and disarmament is also an essential element of our national security. The Canadian Government, like other alliance members, recognizes the desirability of moving toward reduced reliance on nuclear weapons. Also important is the achievement of balanced reductions of conventional weapons. The fact that a U.S.A.-U.S.S.R. INF agreement, that will eliminate all intermediate-range nuclear weapons on a global basis, is virtually within reach is a significant milestone in the arms control process.

The U.S.A.-U.S.S.R. negotiations began as a result of an alliance initiative. The progress in the negotiations has, in no small measure, been due to the ability of the alliance to maintain a consistent, co-ordinated approach. The alliance is similarly providing strong support for the efforts of the two superpowers to negotiate major reductions in their strategic nuclear arsenals.

As we move toward a less nuclear world, the conventional balance of forces gains an importance. In this area, too, Canada and other NATO countries are co-ordinating their efforts to bring about negotiations with the objective of maintaining security through balanced reductions of armaments.

Canada has been able to make a serious and constructive input to these important arms control negotiating efforts, in which we have a direct interest, because of our presence at the table as an alliance member. Without that continuing direct opportunity to act and react, Canada's influence on such events would be dramatically reduced. Even in multilateral arms control forums much of Canada's credibility and capacity for influence is derived from our alliance membership, which signals to others our level of knowledge about and direct involvement in the activities of key deliberative forums. To the extent that we decline to assume our share of the collective defence burden, Canada's ability to influence events as an alliance member would likewise be diminished.

The question therefore must be asked: What would really be achieved by declaring a nuclear weapons free zone? In many respects nothing would change. Canada would remain a country without nuclear weapons and with no direct involvement in the manufacture and maintenance of nuclear arsenals. However, by suggesting that we should dissociate ourselves from key aspects of the collective defence strategy of the alliance, Canada's credibility and influence with our traditional European partners, not to mention the United States, would be significantly diminished. Our own security would certainly not be enhanced and could, in fact, be compromised. Such a declaration, furthermore, simply turns a blind eye to the realities of today's interdependent world. This interdependence is just as real in the area of national security as in other areas.

Finally, I would like to make the Government's views on the question of a world referendum on nuclear disarmament perfectly clear. Although a global expression in favour of nuclear disarmament would be fine in itself, it would not be a substitute for the negotiation of effective international arms control agreements. The call for a referendum fails to recognize that meaningful progress in reducing levels of nuclear weapons must be the product of negotiations among Governments. There are no short cuts or substitutes for the negotiating process.

Even if such a referendum were to be held, it is not clear how the results should be interpreted in view of the global diversity of political systems and approaches to freedom of expression. Furthermore, practical considerations, such as the enormous expenses associated with such an undertaking at a time when the United Nations is attempting to avert financial crisis, would present a serious constraint. When the uncertain benefits are compared with the staggering costs, the utility of such a referendum is highly doubtful.

It is for all these reasons that I have cited that I would strongly urge my colleagues on both sides of the House to vote against this motion.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, evidently, the Hon. Member for Leeds—Grenville (Mrs. Cossitt) had not much time to reflect upon the statement that she read a few minutes ago. If she had, I would be inclined to think she would not have made it. She would not have made it because she would have come to the conclusion that, in Canada, were it not for the Cruise missile testing we would be already a nuclear weapons free zone. That has been the policy of successive Canadian Governments. that is what we have been aiming at for decades except, as I said, for the fact that we did test Cruise missiles and are still testing them.

She would not, as she did in the conclusion of her speech, make this spurious argument about the cost of a referendum; this terrible, dangerous cost which, compared to the arms race cost in the world today, would be a profound concern to the world community.

Evidently, we must bring to the attention of the Hon. Member for Leeds—Grenville that while the cost of arms 20 years ago was in the range of $30 billion, it is now well over $300 billion, and it is estimated at even $500 billion. Would the Hon. Member like to compare the cost of the referendum about which she expressed concern with the yearly cost of arms?

Would the Hon. Member still believe that because of the cost of that type of mobilization of public opinion, which is what a referendum basically is, it should not be attempted in order to generate the pressure which is needed to be put upon the politicians who make those important decisions to be convinced and alerted to the fact that public opinion in Canada and elsewhere does wish to move in the direction of a global nuclear free zone? That is basically the sense of a referendum.

Of course, it would be well beyond the scope of holding it in only one nation. As it has been advanced by Project Ploughshares on a number of occasions over the past few years, it would not only take place in municipalities and provinces across the nation, but it would take place in every nation where a concept of declaring the world nuclear arms free is extremely desirable.

I would like to take the Hon. Member for Leeds—Grenville through the text of a book written 20 years go by former Prime Minister Lester Pearson, and in particular to the chapter entitled "The balance of fear", and his image of a meeting of an austere ostrich. It states:

> 'An austere ostrich of awesome authority was lecturing younger ostriches one day on the superiority of their species to all other species'.
> These are the first words of one of James Thurber's Fables for our Time, about a conference of ostriches called to find out why they could not fly. One impatient young ostrich, Oliver by name, was complaining bitterly that while man, an animal, could fly sitting down, ostriches, birds, couldn't fly at all.
> An old ostrich looked severely at Oliver, first with one eye and then with the other. 'Man is flying too fast for a world that is round,' he said. 'Soon he will catch up with himself in a great rear-end collision, and man will never know that what hit man from behind was man.'

In his book entitled Peace in the Family of Man, Lester Pearson concluded:

> So far, we've avoided this rear-end collision, but we shouldn't be too complacent about our escape.

In particular, the ending of the speech of the Hon. Member for Leeds—Grenville was complacent in stating that we should not entertain such thoughts of a referendum because it is too expensive.

In addressing the motion and its merit, for which we should be grateful to the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young), one has to reflect that there is a lot of fear in the world community and in Canada about the potential of a nuclear war. The knowledge is that without changes in the international society, this fear will be with us for some time. This is what motivates the public to express the notion that we should have and want to have areas or zones in the world that ought to be declared nuclear free. It is a legitimate understanding, and this is why politicians eventually put this type of motion on the Order Paper.

The question that one should ask is, how far would such a measure proposed by the Hon. Member for Beaches influence other nations in doing the same, particularly the most powerful ones that are engaged in this deadly race for weapons paralleled by attempts to control the arsenal of nuclear powers, and hopefully to reduce them?

There are a number of considerations that must be made in this respect. As Lester Pearson stated in Peace in the Family of Man, we must aim at the major objective of limiting armaments by progressive stages, beginning with a freeze on existing levels and categories of weapons, with a prohibition of the testing of new weapons, enforced by international control and inspection, and then a ban on the deployment of anti-ballistic missile systems.

Much could be said on those items in any debate, but let us not forget that in the end what will bring about any of those three steps that I outlined would be the re-establishment of a dialogue between East and West and putting on track again the good old word that has disappeared from the diplomatic dictionary in recent years, namely, the word "détente". In the end that is what will bring some type of mutual confidence that must be at the base of nuclear disarmament in the world. As Mr. Pearson observed 20 years ago:

> There are people in the Kremlin, and no doubt in the Pentagon, who believe in military power as an agent of the wrong kind of persuasion: not as something from which you negotiate for accommodation, but as something to be used as a threat to bring bout the achievement of a political objective.
> This influence shows itself in another way, which General Eisenhower went out of his way to refer to in his last broadcast as President of the United States: 'We have been compelled,' he said, 'to create a permanent armaments industry of vast proportions . . . This conjunction of an immense military establishment and a large arms industry is new in the American experience . . . In the councils of government we must guard against the acquisition of unwarranted influence, whether sought or unsought, by the military-industrial complex. The potential for the disastrous rise of misplaced power exists and will persist. We must never let the weight of this combination endanger our liberties or democratic processes.'
> President Eisenhower was in a good position to know that a military-industrial complex of this kind can influence, and may increasingly seek to influence, national policy.

Mr. Pearson concluded:

> Even if we believe that the Russian fear of a threat from outside its borders is basically a paranoiac fear, we ought to understand that from their point of view it is not baseless.
> Somehow we have got to persuade the Russians and their friends that with common fears we also have common interests; that the greatest of all common interests is the avoidance of war, whether it is brought about by calculation or, as is more likely, by accident; war which could destroy us all. If that seems a policy for Utopia, I'd like to know a better one.

As we are debating here we know that we are part of a world community that is engaged in military expenses in the hundreds of billions of dollars. While that continues, the Hon.

Member for Leeds—Grenville makes a distressing statement on such an important matter.

• (1730)

We know that the world is attempting to combat poverty in Africa and in Asia in particular. It is trying to come to grips with environmental degradation caused by desertification, increased population pressures, urbanization, and poverty in some of the subcontinents like India and parts of Africa. Therefore, this matter is one which must be approached with an outlook that takes into account the enormous inability on the part of our society at the present time to understand what are our priorities.

Evidently our priorities are to find ways of shifting the expenses which go into the military complex to expenses which deal with rehabilitation and development of those parts of the world where the need is so great and the attention is so little. They do not command the attention that nations which have nuclear weapons can command at the present time.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I express appreciation to the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) for having brought forward this very important motion. At the same time I express my disappointment with the position taken by the Hon. Member for Leeds—Grenville (Mrs. Cossitt) in attempting to suggest that the proposal that Canada declare itself a nuclear weapons free zone would not change anything, and in attempting to suggest that we are already at the stage where we do not have nuclear weapons on our shore. I will be detailing instances where specific changes must be made if we are to become a nuclear weapons free zone. She also dismissed the possibility of a global referendum on nuclear disarmament. Of course she said quite rightly that there were no short cuts or substitutes for the negotiation process.

We are all fully aware of that fact and very much in favour of the negotiation process. We do not see the global referendum as a short cut to negotiation. We do not see a nuclear weapons free zone as a short cut to negotiation toward nuclear disarmament. We see them as small but important and significant steps which can lead to that kind of final step being taken.

We need to motivate public opinion so that there will be a mass movement of people in Canada and throughout the world demanding that their leaders and their Governments move toward a more stable international situation. The slogan "Where the people lead the Government will follow" is the sort of thing a global referendum would do.

I take issue with the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) who suggested that Cruise missile testing is the one area where we are not a nuclear weapons free zone. There are other areas, and later in my remarks I will zero in on the presence of nuclear submarines in Canadian waters.

This morning I was talking to a young woman who was visiting my home. She has a little baby; Nicolita will be one year old tomorrow. I told her about this debate and she said: "Speak for Nicolita". In a sense that is what the debate is all about. We are speaking for our children and for generations who are yet unborn. The decision which this House and other Parliaments around the world makes will affect the future of our children and our grandchildren, countless generations. That is what is involved when we talk about nuclear weapons and their long-term effects upon civilization and genetics. We are speaking for Nicolita and for all children in the world.

Two weeks from now will be Remembrance Day. We will remember the contributions made by men and women in 1914, 1918, 1939 to 1945, and in the Korean War so that we could have a second chance to build a decent kind of world. Yesterday the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) quoted the words "To you from failing hands we throw the torch". We must pick up that torch and work to ensure decent peace in our world. It cannot happen if we are constantly threatened by nuclear weapons.

Canada is in a very strategic place, and that is why the motion is so important. Canada has a unique contribution to make to the whole issue of nuclear confrontation, that is, the fact that we are placed between the two nuclear superpowers. We are uniquely placed either to make a contribution toward the stabilization of our world or toward the destabilization of our world. When we allow Cruise missile tests we are in fact encouraging further destabilization and the confrontation between the United States and the U.S.S.R., which they are attempting to defuse at the present time.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has said: "We do not have a nuclear dimension to our policy. Canada does not have nuclear weapons on its territory, nor shall it during the life of this Government". It is not quite that simple. One policy in particular undercuts what the Prime Minister said. I refer to the presence of nuclear submarines from the United States which visit Canadian ports.

Because I come from Vancouver Island I am specifically concerned with the visit of nuclear submarines, submarines equipped with nuclear weapons, to Nanoose which is just north of my riding and to Esquimalt which is just south of my riding. Both those ridings are presently represented by Conservative Members. I wish they would speak out for the true interests of their constituents in this particular issue.

The United States has a policy of saying that it will neither confirm nor deny the presence of nuclear weapons aboard those submarines. Instead of standing up and saying that we have a policy of no nuclear weapons on Canadian soil or in Canadian waters, the Canadian Government simply honours that policy of the Americans. It honours their policy of not telling us whether or not they are bringing nuclear weapons into Canadian waters, into Canadian harbours.

Next week Greenpeace will be releasing a major study about the possible effects of an accident aboard one of those vessels in Esquimalt Harbour. What would happen to Esquimalt Harbour and to the whole area of greater Victoria if there were an accident aboard one of those visiting submarines? The study which Greenpeace will be releasing next week will detail the kind of devastation that would take place if that were the case. However, it is important to say that as devastating as that would be, perhaps the most significant factor is not the possibility of a local accident but the fact that by having those submarines in Canadian waters Canada is contributing to a very dangerous policy of the United States.

I should like to quote from the Ploughshares working paper on a nuclear weapons free zone. In part it reads:

> Naval nuclear weapons represent a growing danger to world peace. Increasingly, these weapons are becoming warfighting weapons designed for use during a conventional or nuclear war. As such, they are widely recognized to be one of the most likely causes of a nuclear war. The provocative "Maritime Strategy" recently adopted by the U.S. Navy actually calls for attacks against Soviet nuclear submarines early in a conventional war. One purpose of this dangerous plan, according to Admiral James Watkins, former U.S. Chief of Naval Operations, is to "alter the nuclear equation" in favour of the United States prior to a major nuclear war. As Professor Barry Posen of Princeton University has commented, "of all the possible Navy strategies, this one is the most likely to cause the other side to reach for nuclear weapons".

What we are doing by having American nuclear submarines capable of having nuclear arms—the American Government will neither confirm nor deny there are nuclear arms but we can be sure that they do have nuclear arms—is that we are contributing to that very dangerous kind of policy. We have the CF-METR base, the Canadian Forces Marine Experimental Test Range at Nanoose where American submarines are involved in nuclear related anti-submarine warfare exercises. Just last year the agreement for the American use of that base was renewed despite the objection of thousands of Canadians from coast to coast. The request for a public investigation into the use of that base was denied by the Government. It went ahead and negotiated it. That very seriously compromises what the Prime Minister said about not having any nuclear weapons on Canadian soil.

I would urge Members opposite to think of future generations, think of Canadian responsibility, think of what Canada can contribute to the whole possibility of a nuclear free world. I urge them to support this motion made by the Hon. Member for Beaches.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, as a Member for Vancouver East, I am particularly proud to be taking part in this debate on the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young). I would like to read the motion once again:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of declaring Canada a nuclear arms free zone by prohibiting the deployment, testing, construction and transportation of nuclear weapons and associated equipment through and within Canada, the export of goods and materials for use in the construction and deployment of nuclear arms and further, the Government should encourage cities, provinces and states throughout the world to undertake similar action.

I am particularly proud because I come from the City of Vancouver which, under the past mayor, Mayor Mike Harcourt, was one of the original municipalities in Canada to declare itself a nuclear weapons free zone. My colleague, now the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar), has been an outstanding Member in this same struggle. She has actively promoted this concept with municipalities throughout Canada. We are asking the Government to take specific action as outlined in the motion.

When I drive into Vancouver coming from the airport I must say I am always very moved by the highway signs which inform me that I am about to enter a nuclear weapons free zone. It is my fondest hope that some day this concept will be enforced not just on land but beyond the shoreline of the Port of Vancouver so that no ships bearing nuclear weapons will be permitted by the federal Government to enter Vancouver harbour. I know there are many other people, citizens of the Vancouver area, who share this desire, many of my constituents in particular.

In asking the Government to consider the desirability of declaring all of Canada a nuclear arms free zone, New Democrats are not embarking on a remote, academic, technical debate about an unimaginable future. We are concerned with the present. This debate is about an issue that affects the families and individuals of all constituencies across Canada. I am particularly concerned about my riding of Vancouver East. Even as Members of this House debate, the nightmare of a nuclear Armageddon is affecting the daily lives of many young children, youths and adult citizens who live, work, study and play in our communities. I know that these young people and their parents in my community of Vancouver join thousands of fellow citizens to march each year to show how strongly they are committed to peace and to the kinds of goals expressed in the motion.

For two generations the human race has lived under the shadow of the bomb and at the sufferance of the powers and principalities that control the bomb. This single inescapable fact has had drastic consequences for the ways in which we think about the present and plan and contemplate for the future. The psychological damage that nuclear armaments have already inflicted on ourselves and our children is not hypothetical. It does not depend on someone, somewhere, someday making a slight miscalculation. It is here. It is now and it is all around us as we talk.

I want to speak as my colleagues did about schoolchildren, children who have not even reached their teens who already wonder out loud whether they will have the chance to grow into adulthood. I want to speak about youngsters I have seen playing in the schoolyards of Vancouver East, children whose watercolours on classroom walls offer bleak, sombre testimony to their vision of a nuclear winter. I want to speak about children who go peacefully to bed only to wake up screaming from nightmares of World War III. This happens to young children in all our communities. Most Members of this House are familiar with recent surveys conducted in this country, the United States and western Europe of the responses by young people to the ever present threat posed by nuclear weapons. The pattern that emerges from these surveys is a chronicle of confused hopelessness, unrelieved anxiety and sometimes suicidal despair. On occasion that despair has resulted in people completely losing hope and choosing the path of suicide. Pathetic messages left behind by these young people are a searing indictment to those who would brusquely dismiss—as the Member across the House is doing—this phenomenon as irrelevant or perhaps even humourous to the issue we are debating today.

It is extremely difficult to join in this debate without becoming emotional. Surely it is a sign of some serious disorder for anyone to speak or even to be here today without becoming emotional. Members who have seen the film If You Love This Planet—and I hope everyone has—surely will recall the response of peace activist Helen Caldicott to charges that her crusade against the threat of nuclear weapons was, to quote, "overly emotional." I applaud Dr. Caldicott's response:

> Anyone who can contemplate the prospect of the world-wide race to thermonuclear Armageddon without becoming emotional cannot be classified as a sane human being.

I hope that all Members who are here in this House today will consider this issue with considerable emotion.

All New Democrats support this motion. The people of Canada, I must say, know where New Democrats stand on the desirability of making Canada a nuclear weapons free zone. It is perhaps one of our most important policies. Over the years a number of my New Democrat colleagues have sponsored Bills and motions with the goal of prohibiting the deployment, testing, construction and transportation of nuclear weapons and associated equipment through and within Canada and the export of goods and materials for use in the construction and deployment of nuclear arms as reflected in this motion today.

To look back in history, on March 5, 1986, and again on October 8, 1986, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) introduced such Bills. I am sorry to say these Bills received only first reading. On December 13, 1984, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), who I hope is listening to this debate from his hospital bed today, introduced a nuclear weapons free zone Bill. This Bill proceeded to second reading on March 18, 1985. The Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) has presented the House with another opportunity to demonstrate some real leadership to the people of Canada. I very much hope that Hon. Members from all Parties will lend their support to this motion.

Unfortunately, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) said on behalf of the Liberals in 1984 that they may wish to make it absolutely clear at this time that they are neither for nor against the concept of a nuclear weapons free zone in Canada. That is a typical Liberal response. I am pleased that the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) spoke positively in support of this motion today. I only hope that he was speaking on behalf of his Party and not as an individual.

Hon. Members opposite have supported what I would call some nonsensical arguments about the international repercussions of Canada's becoming a nuclear weapons free zone. I would like to quote Project Ploughshares in this regard. In Making Canada a Nuclear Weapon-Free Zone, Project Ploughshares has said:

> It is both technically and politically incorrect to argue that refusal to participate in or support the nuclear forces of other NATO members is incompatible with membership in the Alliance... Currently Denmark, Iceland and Norway are actively examining the prospects of creating a regional, Nordic Nuclear Weapon-Free Zone... Greece is attempting to negotiate a similar, Balkan zone. These countries intend and expect to remain members of NATO even if they should become full nuclear weapon-free zones.

As well, we are concerned by the statements made, I presume reflecting the Government's position, by the Hon. Member for Leeds—Grenville (Mrs. Cossitt). I hope very sincerely that she will review this information and reconsider the statement she made today.

I know how keen supporters across the country are for us to pass this motion in the House. I would hope that there would be debate in the communities across Canada and that people will talk to their Members of Parliament, particularly those who are members of the Official Opposition and those in the government Party, about this matter.

Finally, I would like to end by quoting a poem by Tommy Douglas, who was a tireless fighter for peace. He wrote:

> You say the little efforts that I make
> Will do no good; they never will prevail
> To tip the hovering scale
> Where justice hangs in balance.
> I don't think
> I ever thought they would.
> But I am prejudiced beyond debate
> In favour of my right to choose which side
> Shall feel the stubborn ounces of my weight.

I know all of us in this Party would urge all Hon. Members to take a very tangible step in support of this motion as a positive step toward peace, a world where our children can sleep at night with less fear of a nuclear holocaust.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate does not insist upon its amendments 1(a) and (b), 2(a) and (b), 3, 4(a), 5(a) and (b), 6, 7(a) and (b), 9, 10 (b) and (c) with which the House of Commons did not concur; that the Senate concurs with the amendments made by the House of Commons to its amendments 1(c) and 8; that the Senate does insist upon its amendment 4(b), and that the Senate has substituted eight amendments for its other amendments concerning Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, for which it seeks the concurrence of the Commons.

I also have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House about observations and amendments contained in Part II of the nineteenth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on the message from the House of Commons concerning certain amendments to Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto.

For the benefit of Hon. Members, these messages will be printed in today's Votes and Proceedings, and copies will be available at the Table in both official languages.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings for the above messages.]

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

ADVISABILITY OF DECLARING CANADA A NUCLEAR ARMS FREE ZONE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Young:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of declaring Canada a nuclear arms free zone by prohibiting the deployment, testing, construction and transportation of nuclear weapons and associated equipment through and within Canada, the export of goods and materials for use in the construction and deployment of nuclear arms and further, the government should encourage cities, provinces and states throughout the world to undertake similar action.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will not take long. I know that this motion is to come to a vote, so I will end my remarks before six o'clock.

I did want to respond to some of the remarks made by Hon. members of the Opposition regarding the motion which is to declare Canada a nuclear weapons free zone. First, the motion calls for unilateral action. That really goes against the tradition of Canada and its security as a nation.

Since the late 1940s, Canada has very carefully cultivated a relationship with and co-operated with members of the NATO Alliance to ensure that we have a collective security, and it would be the joy of all joys of those in the Warsaw Pact if that kind of collective security began to fragment. We cannot allow the concept of collective security to be destroyed by any fragmentation in the idea of unilateralism for which this motion calls by declaring Canada a nuclear weapons free zone.

Second, the motion seems to assume that the most important issue in the world is peace. No one would deny that that is an incredibly important issue. All of us cherish the privilege of living in peace. In fact, I would underscore the fact that it is because we have had a collective security concept that we have been able to live in peace in this land.

The most important issue is not peace, it is freedom. There are many nations which are in peace. I can tell of the days I spent in East Germany. There is peace there, but it is not the kind of peace that I would enjoy. I have been in Bulgaria and there is peace there. I saw no war, no conflict, but it is not the kind of peace that I would enjoy. The most important privilege we have in this land is not peace but freedom. Hon. Members of the opposition Parties ought to appreciate that the most.

Third, the motion seems to assume that those with weapons are militarists. That is totally fallacious. The country that is the most militarily equipped and prepared in Europe today is not West Germany, France or Britain, it is Switzerland. Switzerland holds military manoeuvres every weekend and has its recruits in reserve, allowing them to take their weapons home from training. They keep their rifles in their homes. Who would say that Switzerland or Sweden for that matter, which is also militarily prepared, are militaristic because they believe in being militarily prepared?

We cannot accept this kind of motion. I recognize that it must come to a vote and it ought to. The House ought to express itself on this motion, but I hope it is roundly defeated, and I believe it will be because it deserves to be. We need to preserve not only the tradition of peace in this country but the tradition of freedom.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 is deemed to have been moved.

YOUTH—PLIGHT OF UNEMPLOYED AND HOMELESS—GOVERNMENT POSITION/EXPECTATIONS OF YOUTH—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, on June 11 1987, I asked a question in the House to the Minister of State (Youth) (Mr. Charest). It concerned the plight of unemployed and homeless youth. I asked the minister what he intended to do to try to alleviate the plight of thousands of young Canadians faced with that serious problem. Unfortunately, his answer or rather his lack of answer forces me to bring back the issue today.

In my question, I was referring to the pomp with which some programs for the youth have been launched, and particularly to an article on the official opening of Centre Entreprise-Jeunesse de Montréal that has been published with a photograph in a newspaper on June 10. This article refers specifically to the ostentation which accompanied the official program opening, which included a display of a great many balloons of various colours, catering services, wine at will, a video presentation, et ceatera, et ceatera. Mr. Speaker, that is what I wanted to talk about at the time and what I still want to talk about today, because the Government is behaving in such a way, in connection with the launching of some programs, as to mislead the public into thinking that many significant programs have been implemented for young Canadians, while unfortunately the real needy are in fact ignored.

I am afraid the Minister of State (Youth) has no idea of what this lack of shelter means for young Canadians. Because he has hardly any solution to propose, he asked me in his reply or comment, to offer him suggestions for improving the current situation. I am not surprised at all, Mr. Speaker. The Minister is not and has never been truly conscious of the actual problems and needs of young Canadians. He does not care and is still less determined to try and find final and concrete solutions to their problems. For that matter, if he had listened a little more carefully to my question, the Minister would have realized that I had made one suggestion, that is, to set up a permanent mechanism or organization for listening to the homeless. But, anyway, it is neither my responsibility nor that of my party as Official Opposition to find solutions.

I suggest it is incumbent on both the Government and the Minister of State (Youth) to find solutions together with the dozens of departmental officers who are there to develop concrete programs to help solve the problems of the homeless. It is not up to us to compensate for the Government's not doing its job. We will assume this responsibility as soon as we are again in government in a few months from now.

I agree with the Minister when he says there are no miracle solutions to solve the problem of the homeless. Still that is a very poor excuse to refrain from taking any action at all in this sector. Unfortunately we have precious few problems in this country to which miracle solutions do exist. But if we try hard enough we find out that intelligent, simple and concrete measures can indeed help us improve considerably most of the problematical situations we encounter. I will prove that in a few minutes.

Various interest groups dedicated to help the homeless and the jobless have told me and the Leader of the Opposition how disconcerted they are about the inaction of this Government with respect to this issue. The United Nations General Assembly declared 1987 the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless. The primary objective is to make sure that this year there will be an appreciable and significant improvement in the living accommodation and environment of some of the most destitute people. It seems to me that as Canadians we have a role to play and a responsibility to assume in the quest for this objective. Most people concerned over the homeless agree on one point: they are ever more numerous and ever younger. What used to be the bastion of people aged 45 and over is now wide open to younger people.

So again I ask my question to the Minister, hoping that this time he will have the opportunity and courage to respond. Are homeless youths really one of the concerns of your Government? In the affirmative, would you be prepared to implement a measure or put into place a permanent structure to look after the needs expressed by their spokesmen and solve the problems they face?

As recently as yesterday, Mr Speaker, to face the urgent and dramatic situation of homeless youths, a task force of the Montreal diocese, in co-operation with the archbishop's palace, announced the November opening of a shelter-help centre for young people between 18 and 30 years old, in the basement of Montreal's Saint-Louis-de-France church. This temporary shelter for the winter months will provide beds for the 18-30 year-olds who have no place to stay.

His Eminence Robert Riendeau, director of the archbishopric charities, says the project is only temporary considering the urgent situation of youths and the fact winter is so near. But he believes the organization of a network of shelters is not a government responsibility. I agree with him on that point. However, in justice, it is the duty and the responsibility of the Government to ensure its citizens a subsistence and decent living conditions.

I am therefore asking the Governement, the Minister responsible, to take concrete measures before the end of the International Year of the Homeless, to allow those young people without a shelter to benefit as soon as possible from a decent program that will provide them with income and an opportunity to live a decent life in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, first I want to compliment the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Grondin) for raising this question. It is indeed an important social issue that is not easy to solve and for which there will be no immediate solution. It will take the help, co-operation and understanding of all sectors of Canada and Members of Parliament in order to solve the problem.

I want to compliment the diocese in Montreal for taking the initiative to provide a shelter for the homeless, as the Member has pointed out. I believe that is the beginning of the kind of work that must go on. I agree with the priest in that diocese that that is where it starts. While the Government must do its part, that is where the solution begins.

The Hon. Member seems to think that the Government has not been doing anything. He mentioned the jobless and the homeless. The jobless rate for teenagers since August, 1984, has dropped 4.4 per cent. That did not happen by magic. It is as a result of planning, programming, and Government agencies and departments looking at needs and how they can be met. Because of such programs as the Canadian Jobs Strategy and the Youth Employment Program, led by the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest), there has been an attack on unemployment among the youth.

The Member says that the Minister did this with fanfare. Would it help to initiate Government programs if people do not find out about them? It seems to me patently obvious that in order to design programs and reach youth we must find ways to publicize them. It may seem like fanfare to the Hon. Member, but we must broadcast that kind of news if we are to tackle this issue.

I also point out that the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) just returned from Saskatoon where he has been meeting with a task force on post-secondary education, trying to tackle the whole matter of illiteracy or partial illiteracy in order that we can deal with this important issue.

The other side of the issue is the homeless. On any one day in the City of Ottawa one can find a thousand homeless. There are agencies in Ottawa that are trying to bring those homeless to a place of shelter, but more important, a place of meaning. It is not enough to say that we must provide shelter, we must also ask why they are homeless. Many of these young people are 17, 16, 15 or younger. Why are they not at home with their parents? Why are they runaways? That is the question with which agencies, like the diocesan priest, are wrestling. How do we get them back to the shelter of their home where they belong? What is the conflict that has arisen between them and their parents that they have run away?

Those are the social issues governments cannot solve but which this Government is trying to tackle by bringing an undergirding to the family structure so that families feel good about being families and become knit together. That is why the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) is taking his time with the child care program. We want to have a child care program which provides a sense of security about how those children are going to be cared for in day care centres. They will find, then, that they feel good about themselves and they will not feel the need to run away from home, which really is the problem, I think the Hon. Member would agree.

The problem is that young people want to run away from home. We have to deal with that so that we do not have to talk about homeless young people in our society.

TRADE—FREE TRADE—POSITION OF SOCIALIST PARTY IN 1965

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, on October 21, 1987, I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to explain to us the position of the socialist party in 1965 when the Auto Pact was signed.

As you know, the socialist party then objected to the Auto Pact, just as it now objects to the free trade agreement.

It is important for the public to know what the socialist party had forecast in 1965 if free trade were implemented in the automobile industry. I now refer, Mr. Speaker, to Hansard for May 10, 1965, when Mr. Tommy Douglas, who was then Leader of the CCF, which was a socialist party, and it is the same party today, had this to say about the Auto Pact: "The other criticism we have of this Agreement is that it appears to make no provision at all for the employees in the automobile industry who will be displaced as a result of it."

This is what the leader of the socialist party said in 1965 and we are now hearing exactly the same negative speech from the heirs of Mr. Douglas. Yet, what has happened because of the Auto Pact since 1965? Canadian automobile exports to the United States now amount to $33 billion. In other words, more than a third of our total exports, thanks to the Auto Pact. Those $33 billion of exports account for 7 per cent of our Gross National Product and for 840,000 jobs, most of them centralized in southern Ontario, specifically in the socialist party leader's riding Oshawa. Those jobs are centralized in a community where, at present, unemployment is less than 3 per cent and where General Motors has decided to invest $2 billion.

Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to understand the position taken by the socialist party in 1965 when it was against to free trade in the automotive industry. It is still opposed to free trade today, anticipating the same disasters, such as jobs lost, etc., whereas it did not happen since 840,000 new jobs have resulted from that agreement. Today, it is opposed to the benefits that free trade has brought about in the automotive industry since 1965. Those benefits, incidentally, were implemented and negociated by the same negociator, Ambassador Reisman, who is in charge of present negociations. That party is opposed to the possible economic spin-off which will benefit other Canadian workers throughout Canada.

It was said in the House, Mr. Speaker, that members from the socialist party have a grudge against Western Canada. In fact, they have a grudge against the whole country because their leader is only interested in his own riding of Oshawa and its immediate surroundings. The socialists don't want the benefits of the Auto Pact to be extended to all Canadians, and to make their negative representations, they are using the money of workers in the automobile industry who earn good salaries and pay dues to big unions, to Bob White's union. They want to use that money. They are paying for advertising across the country and they are using the money of workers who enjoy the benefits of free trade in the automobile industry. They are using it to oppose the ratification of an agreement with United States, because they are living quite handsomely, those socialists Mr. Speaker, they are Bob White's soldiers. These people in the House are saying only what their financial backers, Bob White and company, want them to say. And incidentally, Bob White is doing pretty good for himself, too, these days.

Canadians should realize the kind of position the socialist party is taking. They should realize that in 1965, they were against free trade in the auto industry. Today, we have the socialist party and Bob White who want to maintain all the advantages of free trade in a specific sector of our economy here in Canada. Mr. Speaker, every Canadian should seriously reflect on the position taken by the socialist party. In 1965, they were against free trade, and now that their workers enjoy the benefits of free trade, workers who are paying Bob White a handsome salary . . . He gives the orders, he supports their campaigns and their political financing, and that is why these people cannot consider the well-being of all Canadians, because they are indebted to Bob White, who has been enjoying the benefits of free trade since 1965.

• (1815)

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his timely question. I might just follow it up by stating that this is not the only time that the NDP has been wrong.

Members opposite have a record of negativism on free trade and other issues. I need go back only as far as this Government's economic statement of November, 1984, when the Leader of the NDP said in the House on November 9, 1984, that the Government would "destroy thousands of jobs . . . The effect of this program would be a net increase in unemployment".

As we all know, that simply is not the case. Since September, 1984, 959,000 new jobs have been created. Total unemployment is down by 336,000, and the rate of unemployment is down by 3.1 points.

This historic free trade agreement, which the Opposition is opposed to, will build upon that impressive record of job creation. It will secure access to our biggest export market and it will create jobs. That is what this deal is all about—jobs. If the NDP is truly concerned about unemployment in Canada, it will support this major initiative.

I would also like to briefly touch upon free trade and its benefits to the auto industry. We said when we went into these free trade negotiations that the Auto Pact was not on the table, and it was not. The Auto Pact, including the safeguards, remain in place.

That is what the Canadian Auto Workers wanted. That is what the auto parts industry wanted. That is what Ontario wanted. Although, as my colleague has just finished pointing out, that is not what the NDP wanted in the past. However, this Government felt that the Auto Pact was working well. Therefore, we did not raise it at the table.

The free trade agreement preserves the benefits and the obligations of the Auto Pact for the original participants. It really has become the Auto Pact "plus" because it also recognizes that there are nine other vehicle assembly companies with projects under way in Canada and the United States which have been left out of the current arrangement.

What we have done is written a set of rules that will allow them to obtain the benefits of rationalized production within North America if they meet a tough new rule of origin that will require them to buy more domestic parts. This policy will create jobs much more effectively than the fortress Canada policies espoused by the NDP. Time will prove this Government's vision for Canada right, and the NDP's lack of vision wrong.

TRADE—SERVICE INDUSTRY—EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT/PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION OVER SERVICE JOBS

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the question I raised on October 14 and some of the discussion I have heard this afternoon are very similar. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) responded to my question by stating that the Advisory Council on the Status of Women said that a free trade agreement with the United States would improve the economic prospects of Canadian women. Some of the statements that I heard in the chamber this afternoon frightened me because I suddenly recognized how little research and depth of knowledge there is in the Government when it is going ahead and signing a free trade agreement, and it does not understand what "managed trade" is and what "free trade" is.

The Mulroney trade pact is something that is very dangerous to the economy of this country. When we looked at the Auto Pact, thank goodness our representative, Tommy Douglas, who was such a great Canadian, had his input at that time to make sure that there was Canadian content in every automobile manufactured. That was certainly what managed trade is all about.

My question was a question of the services. Those services have never been studied by the Economic Council of Canada. We do know that other countries have consciously excluded services from trade agreements, recognizing the potential threat to the economic and social programs, and that the development of indigenous service industries is critical to maintaining independent political and economic situations.

We also know that many of those services come under provincial jurisdiction. We have asked, and have not received an answer, as to what type of negotiations and agreements were made with the provinces to allow them to negotiate away many of the jobs of the women of this country.

An Ontario Government study of services under free trade concluded that there is no net benefit in a free trade agreement in five specific areas: banking, culture and broadcasting, investment dealing, telecommunications, and transportation, which will see increased foreign competition. The study advised the Ontario Government to oppose trading off losses in the service sector for gains elsewhere.

In the House on October 14 my question was, what type of negotiations took place with the provinces that they were going to be able to bargain away areas that came under provincial jurisdiction? It is very clear in this agreement that services have been part of it. The Economic Council of Canada has not done any studies in the service area. It has stated that it will undertake a study in the future. It did not compile that when it was projecting a great gain in employment.

It is crucial that the Government looks at the implications to the women of this country, 80 per cent of whom are employed in the service industry. It is important that the Government look at that and recognize the implications. As soon as the Government receives those results, without any whys or wherefores, it should tell the United States that we will not be different to any other country in the world, and we will not include services in any of our trade agreements.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the trade agreement will secure and enhance Canada's export opportunities in the United States, providing better economic opportunities for all Canadians. This is as true in the service industries as in the goods producing industries.

For the first time, there will be a binding agreement governing trade and investment in a large number of service sectors. Those sectors include, for example, computer services, professional and business services, and enhanced telecommunications services.

The agreement will ensure that in the future U.S. laws and regulations will not be changed so as to deny Canadian service suppliers in the United States equal treatment vis-à-vis their American competitors, or prevent them from establishing in the United States or maintaining a commercial presence there. Of course, as is only reasonable, Canada will accept the same disciplines in future with regard to our laws and regulations.

The agreement will also bring immediate help to business travellers crossing the Canada-U.S. border in the course of their business. Unnecessary prior approval procedures and other requirements will be eliminated, without affecting either country's control of its immigration policies. The result will be greater freedom for Canadian suppliers of a large number of services to pursue new business opportunities in the United States. The agreement will truly secure and enhance our access to United States markets in the sectors it covers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 10 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House resumed from Thursday, October 29, 1987, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-87, an Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters and to amend or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to continue debate on Bill C-87 which normally would be considered, I suppose, a housekeeping Bill, but a fairly substantial housekeeping Bill in that it is a proposal that attempts to fulfil a commitment to many other countries of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trades to harmonize tariff structure and the Customs Act in our country and to make our procedures similar to those of the other countries.

This process has been ongoing for some seven years. It has been very long and tedious work to figure out each of the procedures that will have to be put in place so that governments can adjust in a way that the tariffs will be levied consistently right across the membership of GATT. As I noted, it has taken some seven years for the initial preparation of the numbers for what has now become Bill C-87.

Early in October we were presented with reams of paper brought to us with the little trucks and carts of the House of Commons, something over 3,000 pages, I am told, of very detailed lists of the changes that will be involved due to this harmonization of the Customs Tariff Act.

After having worked at this for some seven years, the Government is now proposing that industry will have until the end of this calendar year, December 31, to digest and understand all of the changes that will affect its operations with regard to customs and tariffs and the importation of materials that it might need. The exportation procedures that will have to be followed, if they are to be complied with, will also have to be taken into consideration.

We think that this is too fast. We do not think people in the industry have had enough time to digest these more than 3,000 pages of proposals that are before them. We are suggesting to the Government that it wait at least until April 1, 1988. That is a fairly common courtesy and a common procedure in that it is the beginning of our fiscal year.

This will give industry an extra three months to digest what it is that it is supposed to be doing to make changes to procedures so that large errors will not be made in the computation of what is owed or what should be collected. As a result, perhaps, it will force some industries into a very tenuous financial position because of having misunderstood some of the changes that are to come with the implementation of these tariffs.

We have been spending some time attempting to bring this matter to the attention of the Government to point out that it is extremely important that the implementation of these procedures be delayed for at least three months so that industry has an opportunity to catch up. I say that because there are so many pages to digest.

We have been trying to make a similar type of argument with regard to an even more important, in some respects, trade arrangement that the Government has more recently involved itself in, that is, the agreement that was initialled with the United States of America. We are being rushed in respect of this one as well by the Government. It has been telling us that we should be prepared to hold hearings on it even before the final text is available.

The position of the Government seems to be that the committee, a committee of the House of Commons, and the general public itself, will have to make do with the initial overall general statements to decide whether or not an industry or an individual company will be negatively or positively affected by this agreement. It is virtually impossible to make those kinds of calculations and analyses if all of the facts are not before one.

So here we have an instance in which the Government has in fact put all the data in front of us, more than 3,000 pages, much of it in very detailed tabular form. But it is very difficult to sift through 3,000 pages, as you can well imagine, Mr. Speaker, to assess what this will mean in terms of the operation of any particular company that is involved in importing and exporting. It is therefore our contention that more time should be permitted for these people to understand the system and to make the internal changes that are necessary so that the collection and payment of duties and tariffs is done correctly.

We do not disapprove on our side of the House of the process of having entered into these harmonizations with the other GATT nations. I think it will lead to some improvement in the trade relations between the close to 100 countries that are involved in the GATT at the moment. But we think that improvements could be made to the method of implementing it. Much of it could be corrected, we think, with a little more time being permitted to the various affected groups.

We have had representations since the tabling of those 3,000 and some pages. We have heard from important groups across Canada, such as the various industries that are members of the Automotive Industries Association whose members consist of people involved in after parts manufacturing, auto parts manufacturing, and the farm equipment industry. They are saying that they need more time to sift through this information. They have pointed out already some of the errors or omissions in the draft of the annex to the harmonization system that was made available to them back in May. They thought that the text of the amendments would be issued to them some time this November. Their committee report must now be delayed until some time in April. This makes it very difficult to fit in with the January 1 implementation date.

As a result of this delay it is very difficult for these people to even understand how this measure will impact upon them. The final wording of how each of the industries will have to comply will not even be available to them until that April 1 date. So it is really difficult to set up procedures beginning January 1. As I said earlier, three months of making the wrong choice on collection or payment of a tariff can put some companies very close to the verge of bankruptcy, if they have guessed what the rules will be on a wrong basis.

I speak for agriculture for my Party and I want to make a few brief comments with respect to the affect of trade arrangements on farm equipment, because that is one item on which farmers spend a great deal of money.

At the outset I should point out that farm equipment has traded between Canada and the United States on virtually a free trade basis since the early to mid-1950s. So we have had more than 30 years of experience of virtual free trade. There are no tariffs or customs duties levied on new tractors, combines, or major pieces of equipment. Most smaller pieces of farm equipment cross the border virtually free of tariffs as well. I know that, regrettably, there are some people in the West who still believe that there is in fact a tariff on American equipment coming into Canada.

The rumour and the myth of protected eastern farm equipment manufacturers hiding behind tariffs is still rampant in western Canada. Regrettably, sometimes, it is fed by politicians out there. But I want to make it very clear that since the early 1950s the situation in reality has been one of no tariffs and no customs duties on new equipment.

There is, however, a difference about which we should all be aware between the Canadian and American dollars. When many producers look at the cost of a new tractor in the United States, compare the price listed there with one listed in Canada, they often forget to make the accommodation for the difference in the value of the American versus the Canadian dollar. When they do that they find that the price is virtually the same with, perhaps, some slight difference due to extra transportation costs to get the tractor from a U.S. plant into Canada.

One of the few tractor plants that we still have in Canada is the Versatile equipment plant. It is no longer Canadian owned. It went to the Ford Company. It is now an international corporation. The Government provided, I believe, something in the neighborhood of $40 million of assistance in one form or another for that deal to be consummated. The company has agreed to rebuild the plant and to make its equipment more automated. As a result of some of these changes, the Automotive Industries Association tells us that the Versatile farm equipment plant in Winnipeg will now be denied duty free entry of welding equipment for the automation of its company.

Under the proposals contained in those 3,000 pages tabled some weeks ago, we are less able to trade freely between our two countries in this important sector than we were before. In order for us to make use of the automated equipment to keep our plants competitive with American plants, we will now have to pay a duty, as the Automotive Industries Association interprets the numbers that were tabled here in early October. This does not seem fair. It seems particularly unfair when the Government has been talking loudly and long about free trade between our two countries in everything. We have an industry where free trade virtually existed in the business of farm equipment, tractors and combines in particular, and those changes will now make it more difficult for the struggling tractor side of that market to continue functioning in Canada.

There are very important matters contained in those 3,000 pages which require far more time and attention than what has been given up to this point. I realize it is the intention of the Government to attempt to get as many of these types of Bills through as quickly as it can, but I think that this particular one is far too important to be permitted to go through quickly.

On the government side, there must be some thought given to extending the amount of time, setting back the implementation time, in order that the paperwork that the Government still has to do can be caught up before it becomes implemented. In that manner, the industry associations and the industries affected can make the proper accommodations and not be caught short preparing for something that is perhaps a misinterpretation or an unexpected result of what the final wording of the draft regulations might be. It is bad practice to make this type of change so precipitously when all of the paperwork has not been done.

I realize that it has taken seven years for the Government and its various agencies to get this far. Surely another three to six months could be permitted to allow the industry to catch up with Government, since it is starting from a dead start now and will only have five or six months to catch up. If the Government's proposal is put into effect now, it will only have two months to get everything in place, and it still does not have all of the final documentation and regulations in place to consult. Those will not be available from the Government until March 31 or thereabout.

It is not good administration or good government for this Bill to go through so quickly.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in this debate because of the importance of the issue. It is the first time since Confederation that a Bill of this magnitude has been tabled in the House, and I think that although the subject matter is at times dense and complex, it deserves to be clarified for Canadian taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, this Ways and Means motion is particularly intimidating, with its two big volumes, although the principle of the Bill is quite simple. It is to harmonize the description of commodities and the coding system that are now used in the Customs Tariff.

The present system is quite complex because goods are classified in one of twelve groups, according to end use. As a result, goods will often fall into more than one category, which can cause confusion.

The decision to harmonize and to standardize so that the major industrial countries would be using approximately the same system was undertaken on a multilateral basis with the European Economic Community, our neighbour to the South, the United States, and Japan. In Canada, work on this has been going on since 1981, although the international negotiations, according to the information released by the Department, only began in October, 1986. The Bill before us will increase the number of tariff items from 3,500 to 8,000, and that is simply the subdivision of items. Naturally, we all know that as a result of Canada's negotiations through the years with GATT, more and more of our trade is free of tariff.

[English]

It will be easier for our traders, importers and exporters, to classify the goods and hopefully reduce classification appeals. Essentially we are dealing with a simplification, since detailed categories will be easier to use. This harmonization of commodity descriptions and coding system should make it easier to trade, because major trading partners will be using the same classification system for tariffs. It does not mean that the tariff rates will be the same. It only means that the classification under which they are operating will be harmonized.

We are told by the Minister, and I take his word, that it is revenue neutral. It is not a Bill that will in any way bring additional funds to the Government, but will afford our export and import markets a better harmonized commodity and coding system.

I do not wish to prolong the debate, therefore, I will finish my comments by stating that indeed we will support this Bill, as we believe it is time that Canada acted in a co-ordinated and cohesive manner with our trading partners. We believe it is appropriate that we should today approve of this process.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to rise today to make a few comments on Bill C-87, an Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System.

I wish to begin by picking up the theme of facilitation of both Canada's exporting and importing trade processes. I believe that this is an objective that is worthwhile pursuing. To some degree, it characterizes the statement that is often made, that it is the nuts and bolts of the business that are important. It is the attention to detail which should be meriting better consideration than it receives. The old saw is that it is harder to find a good plumber than a good lawyer, but in many cases more rewarding to do so.

What we are looking at in this Bill is an expansion of the categories of classifications of goods imported under the various customs tariffs, and, conversely, exported to our trading partners. That expansion should not mislead us because, of course, it stands for a better level of description, a better level of detail and, in essence, a very worth-while expansion of the standard taxonomy of description of trade goods.

I would not want to go into a long, historical perspective on the development of trade or on the development of customs tariffs as they particularly relate to the North American context and the interaction with our major trading partners. However, I think it is worth while to instance that the trading classification system at which we are looking today is one that has grown up over a period of centuries. That is a fact which should give the Government some cause for reflection, because the classification system is but part of the over-all discipline of trading relationships and the limitations or barriers, as some would term them, that have grown up around the trading relationships of Canada and indeed of all nations over such a long period of time.

These classifications, along with the tariffs which will be applied under these classifications, along with such matters as quotas, dumping, countervailing procedures, measures to promote domestic industry, and import substitution programs, constitute part of an interrelated scheme of trading regulation which, having grown up as I said over a period of centuries, should really not come under the jeopardy of being arbitrarily disbanded over a period of mere years or indeed mere decades.

Turning back to the harmonized commodity coding system, the usefulness of standardized coding systems, not only on the international but also on the national and interregional horizons, really requires no great argument to convince us of its utility. Many of us will have had experience with such harmonized coding systems as the international standard book number system, which is used by libraries to facilitate identification of text, and the Dewey decimal classification system, which I believe has been in use since the turn of the century to enable the classification of subject matters. Let us not underrate the significance of such systems as a means of international communication.

Lacking as our world does an international language understood by all, although through the course of history there have been languages which had legitimate pretensions to that status, it is very often necessary to resort to the use of a metalanguage, which of course the coding system essentially is, in order to determine the accurate identification and the complete understanding in the minds of all who relate to a particular issue as to what is the subject matter.

The harmonized coding system, which is in the process of being adopted and implemented by Canada's major trade partners and indeed by the major trading nations of the world—and eventually we would assume by all nations of the world—will have another benefit that I think should not be overlooked. Of course that would be the facilitation of the measurement and description of world trade as a whole.

World trade could not be properly classified if under some countries' reporting regimes certain items were included in groups, whereas other countries under their own reporting and classification regulations either disaggregated or aggregated those items with or without other similar products.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) mentioned the usefulness of harmonized classification in reducing the appeals which would be necessary against customs classifications. We must remember that in these appeals we are talking about a two-way process. We are talking of the process of Canadian importers bringing goods into the country under Canadian tariffs and about the process of Canadian exporters selling goods abroad under the tariffs of the importing nation. These appeals can indeed at times be lengthy and arduous, and very significant amounts can hang on the success or the failure of an appeal. The whole commercial transaction which gives rise to the importation of the good can be jeopardized depending on the classification of the good which is being imported. Naturally this is even more significant when going into countries which, unlike Canada, have significant tariff barriers for whatever reason, whether it be protection of domestic industry or simply the collection of revenue.

The harmonized commodity description coding system, the internationally based system for the standardization of customs tariff classification and statistical trade data, is one of those nuts and bolts improvements which will facilitate the continued development of international trading relationships. Canada, along with other members of the GATT, intends to implement legislation on the basis of the coding system by January 1, 1988. That will not lead to a dramatic improvement in Canada's trade balances or to a dramatic expansion of Canada's trade, but the fact that we are talking about an international coding system should turn back our attention in a very timely fashion to the international, the world-wide, or global dimension of Canada's trade. I think we have been preoccupied—and certainly the Government has been preoccupied—with bilateral trade and bilateral trade issues over the past few years; "bilateral" of course referring to Canada's trading relationship with the United States.

In the context of switching our focus to international trade, I think it is quite timely that we look at some of the failures of bilateral trade arrangements over the past few years, failures in large measure brought upon Canada by the Government, and draw from that the lesson and the moral that Canada must spend a great deal more attention on international trade on a multilateral basis.

For example, on June 6, 1986, the Government imposed a 10 per cent duty on books and periodicals in response to the American 35 per cent tariff on Canadian shakes and shingles. That action, presumably intended as retaliation or notice to the United States of Canada's displeasure, injured the very industry it was designed to protect. Canadian book publishing and book distribution and printing industries were naturally outraged at being the focal point of the Government's response. They made clear that the Government's decision to impose a 10 per cent duty on books and periodicals jeopardized an already fragile enterprise. The removal of that tariff in February, 1987, confirmed that the measure had been an ineffectual response. Were it that we had been able to remove that tariff in response to the American Government removing the American tariff on shakes and shingles; however that was not the case and the continuing damage from the shakes and shingles tariff is something with which the Government will have to live and something for which the Government has to acknowledge responsibility for having inflicted it upon Canadians.

Like other speakers I should like to turn very briefly to the objections raised by the Automotive Industries Association of Canada.

Here of course we can bring out another obvious disagreement between the Government and this opposition Party, namely, that the Government considers that the Auto Pact is a free trade arrangement, whereas we in the New Democratic Party believe that the Auto Pact is essentially a fair trade and a managed trade arrangement of the type that we would like to see more. We do not believe that it is a free trade arrangement and we can certainly produce examples to back that up.

The Automotive Industries Association makes some very telling points about the way in which the standardized coding has been introduced. It points out that the Government's legislation on this coding system has been in process for some seven years. There will be a period not of years but of two or three months to respond and analyse the proposed system. This document, as the Association points out, of 3,000 pages, will receive no more than cursory examination by the majority of the Members of the House of Commons. I must commend the Association on its faith and also gently point out its naivety. The vast majority of this House will not have the time or the perseverance to look at a 3,000 page document on customs classifications.

As the Association says, the tight schedule precludes detailed study by the industries that will need to comply with the new system, something that should be commended to the Government. By and large it is not Government that bears the largest brunt of the consequences of any particular piece of legislation, legislation is by its very nature something that Government formulates to regulate that which as a Government it cannot regulate by policy or practice. Naturally most of the internal responsibilities and concerns of Government are regulated by internal policy and practice.

Errors and omissions which the Automotive Industries Association list are significant. It believes the after-market, the farm implement manufacturing and other industries affected are not informed or prepared for the changes in duty rates that will become effective. Those changes in duty rates, as the Minister has pointed out and none of us has cause to doubt him, are revenue neutral.

Because of the change of classification, certain items will become taxable at higher rates of duty whereas others will become taxable at lower rates of duty or will become duty free. As the Automotive Industries Association says, a significant portion of Canadian industry exists because of the end use made/not made in Canada provisions. To abandon these concepts completely without a satisfactory conversion could result in the shifting of manufacturing capability to plants outside Canada.

Another point well made by the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) is that relating to farm equipment. Now some of the intermediate products, if we can call them that—the machinery required to produce farm equipment itself—will now be subject to import duty. The AIA concludes by saying industry has not had seven years to gear up for the new coding system like Government. It has had less than seven months to obtain and digest the information and respond.

This should be a charge to the Government for future initiatives to have proper division between the time needed for consideration internally by Government and the time required by the private sector. This will allow the manufacturing and commercial sectors to adjust to what the Government is contemplating.

No discussion of any trade related measure in these times could be complete without reference to the free trade deal which the Government has made with the United States of America, perhaps more accurately I should say the Government believes it has concluded with the United States. That in itself represents a dramatic turn around in the views of key members of this Government from four or five years ago when they were contesting the leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party. I think it would be worth while for the people of Canada to hear quoted the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) as recorded in an article in Maclean's magazine of June 13, 1983:

> Canadians rejected free trade with the United States in 1911. They will do so again in 1983. Canada must increase its share of total world trade, which has dropped by 33 per cent in the past two decades.

Another candidate to that position, now the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) is also quoted in the same issue as saying:

> It's silly.

It is indeed. He went on to say:

> Canada must improve relations and trade with the United States, of course. But our natural destiny is to become a global leader, not America's weak sister.

Indeed, if anything shows the Government's willingness to become the weak sister of the United States of America it is the free trade deal which the Government believes it has concluded.

Some of the concessions which the Government made to the United States of America before the signatures were on the deal are worthy of recording. We gave up the Foreign Investment Review Agency and the National Energy Program. We gave up our drug licensing system which had been successful in providing low cost drugs. We have allowed American truckers to get full access to Canada. A duty was imposed on Canadian groundfish without a response. A 35 per cent tariff was put on cedar shakes and shingles. There was the export tax of 15 per cent on softwood lumber which I see costing jobs in my riding and which has cost jobs in many areas across northern Ontario, and the duties of up to 85 per cent on Canadian exports of potash. There is American trade legislation to restrict access to the American market, tariffs and quotas on our steel exports; the enhancement program for grain exports which is cutting into traditional Canadian markets. Our only enduring response is a duty on American corn for feed purposes.

I do not believe the Government has cemented a trade relationship with the United States because there is the matter of American congressional approval. There is the much more significant matter that it may be possible for a court either in the United States or in Canada to rule that no agreement in the true sense of the word "agreement" has been reached by the signing of this very preliminary memorandum of understanding, as I believe it should be more fairly categorized.

In looking at this so-called free trade deal we are supposed to be seeing the future of Canada, but it is not a Canadian future which the Government is presenting to us.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put the following question to the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry). He mentioned the situation in 1983. Now he will have to admit that the economy and the situation in the United States have changed considerably since 1983. In fact, we can accurately say that in 1983, when the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made those comments on free trade, the time was not as favourable nor the need as great, especially since Canadians could not see any pressing need to embark on such an agreement. Would he not agree that the situation has changed a great deal since 1983?

The Hon. Member mentioned the corn market. The situation was not as urgent in 1983. The protectionist laws that the various state assemblies in the United States would like to see passed were not being discussed at that time. It seems to me the situation has changed a great deal since 1983, and that is why it is understandable that at the time, the Right Hon. Prime Minister queried the relevance of such an agreement at that particular time. But would the Hon. Member not agree that the situation is entirely different today?

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I fully agree with the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) that the context had changed, but I disagree to the extent she would have wanted the House to understand.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the industrial structure, the international trade regulation review process which now exists in the United States has been in operation for four years; in other words, since 1983 the Americans have had their major external trade regulation institutions—both institutions and processes—as well as the possibility of filing complaints before their various tribunals.

In the final analysis, what has happened since 1983 is that there has been a change in the attitude of the United States, of industries to a certain extent, of the American legislators, they have felt increased aversion towards trade, particularly imports.

What is to be noted, Mr. Speaker, is that the Canadian Government has been unable to change this attitude or to convince the Americans that our situation is different. As they say . . .

• (1050)

The man on the Indianapolis streetcar believes that American external trade is dominated by the Japanese, that it is the influx of Japanese and Asian electronic goods that represents the growing trade imbalance of the United States. That of course is not the reality and this Government has failed significantly to communicate to the United States what the reality is.

The reality, of course, is that it is not luxury products that the United States imports from Canada; it is not things that they could very well manufacture at home or indeed do without. The fact is that the bulk of Canadian imports into the United States, bearing in mind of course that the Auto Pact two-way flow is very significant, are the resource products that American industry requires as its basic inputs.

We are talking about, for example, the humble two-by-four upon which the American construction industry naturally depends. We are talking about such Canadian products as potash, upon which naturally American agriculture is highly dependent. We are talking about such products as newsprint, without the imports of which the American newspapers could not produce those fabulously fat daily and weekend editions of which they are so fond.

I would contend that the Government, in going hell-bent for a free trade deal, has ignored and neglected one of the most basic preparatory measures that I would have considered to be necessary, and that is ensuring that those on the other side are fully informed of the nature of the two-way trade relationship.

It has been said in Canada, and I think correctly, that two million jobs, particularly in the northern United States, depend directly on the production of goods for the Canadian market. What the Government has failed to do, of course, is convince the American public to sensitize the American legislative and decision-making organs to the significance to U.S. employment of that very great benefit to the United States of America, the existence of a purchasing Canadian consumer, a buying Canadian public, a Canadian market that has money to spend on the goods the United States produces.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to my colleague's proposition that the only products Canada sends to the States are raw materials. On behalf of my constituents in Midland, Ontario, who work at Mitsubishi Electronics and are sending television tubes to the States, tubes which are subject to a harassing anti-dumping motion, and on behalf of my constituents who work at Fahramet in Orillia which processes high-quality steel valves for the oil industry in Texas, valves which are also subject to the same harassment, I wonder if the Hon. Member could explain why the United States is seeking protection against those high-quality, high-technology products that come from my riding.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, while the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) has been around this place long enough to know that the best way to destroy an opponent's argument is of course to misrepresent it, I think he knows very well that I was talking about the total value of Canadian exports to the United States when I made the perfectly accurate proposition that the larger part of Canadian trade consisted of raw or semi-finished materials which were worked on further when they got to the United States. That is obviously not the case with all Canadian exports to the United States. It is obviously not the case with the television tubes and the valves for the oil industry produced by the Minister's constituents.

I think it is worth bearing in mind that the measures that are being taken or contemplated against the two products which my hon. colleague mentioned are being taken or contemplated under the provisions of mechanisms which have existed in the United States for many years. It is not something that has changed since 1983, and that of course was the gravamen of the question of my colleague from Gatineau.

I think I would complete my reply to my hon. colleague by citing the words of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) who said in 1983, when questioned by Maclean's, that unrestrained free trade with the United States raises the possibility that thousands of jobs could be lost in such critical industries as textiles, furniture and footwear and that before we jump on the bandwagon of continentalism—that is really what the Government is jumping on, is it not—we should strengthen our industrial structure so that we are more competitive.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If not, may we call it eleven o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

COMMUNICATIONS

CALGARY WINTER OLYMPICS—INQUIRY WHY AGREEMENT NOT MADE WITH CBC TO TELEVISE OLYMPICS IN FRENCH OUTSIDE QUEBEC

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, a few years ago, CTV and TVA, both private networks, acquired the rights for the Calgary Games. The trouble is the TVA network reaches only a small percentage of francophone audiences outside Quebec, and then only on cable. I think it is outrageous that so many francophones outside Quebec will not be able to watch the Calgary Winter Games on television in their own language—in French.

The CRTC's solution to allow cablevision services to transmit the signal is unsatisfactory, because there are some serious drawbacks. First of all, not every francophone community outside Quebec has cablevision. In communities where the service does exist, transmission of the Games would mean depriving viewers of some of their regular programs, thus upsetting their viewing schedule. When a cable service substitutes a Canadian program in French for a regular program in English, whether Canadian or American, subscribers are quick to complain. So our language minorities are again getting the short end of the stick!

We know that the CBC has bought the rights and will broadcast the Games in English on the national network, for one hour a day for sixteen days. Why wasn't there a similar agreement with Radio-Canada which reaches 99 per cent of French-speaking Canadians, both in Quebec and outside Quebec?

EDUCATION

NATIONAL FORUM ON POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION—NEED FOR NATIONAL EDUCATION STRATEGY

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, this past week in Saskatoon, several of my House of Commons colleagues and I went through a tremendous learning experience. The first national forum called to discuss the challenges and opportunities facing post-secondary education through the 1990s and beyond brought together 600 educators and representatives of government, labour, the private sector and the disadvantaged.

We were brutally honest about one question: "Do we have the right education system for the 21st century?"

Along with the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper), the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis), the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins), and the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce), I was there to hear the 600 delegates give a round of applause to Canada's Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) when the forum Chairperson, Brian Segal, noted that it was that Minister who convinced his cabinet colleagues and provincial counterparts to join him in bringing about this historic stepping stone in helping us arrive at a national education strategy.

If there was a consensus at the forum it was that you do not solve a problem simply by throwing more money at it. The forum embarked on setting out a national approach to what we want to do and who is going to do it.

Long live the spirit of Saskatoon!

HORTICULTURE

SUBSIDIZED WATER ENJOYED BY U.S. PRODUCERS—CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, all fruit and vegetable growers in the southwestern United States are benefiting from highly subsidized water. This impacts on all Canadian horticulture producers but is lessened by temporary seasonal import quotas designed to permit our growers to offer their prime harvest at slightly better prices.

University of Victoria Professor Derrick Sewell, in a speech he delivered on water policies in western Canada at the recent annual meeting of the Agricultural Institute of Canada, estimated that for every $350 worth of water consumed, American growers pay only $13. Our Government's negotiators did not target this item in the free trade agreement initialled earlier this month. Instead, they permitted U.S. negotiators to target our Western Grain Transportation Act as a subsidy on the transport of canola products at Vancouver. That is something the Americans will often refer to as the t's are crossed and the i's are dotted, I am sure.

Why did our side not place U.S. water subsidies in black and white as well so that horticultural production can continue in Canada on a fair and equitable basis?

TRIBUTE TO CANADIANS WHO MANAGE THEIR OWN ENTERPRISES

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, the many measures implemented by the Government since it came to power clearly demonstrate its desire to help small businesses succeed and to create a climate conducive to creativity.

This week, from October 25 to October 31, 1987, we are celebrating Small Business Week in Canada. Sponsored by the Federal Business Development Bank and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, Small Business Week pays tribute to Canadian men and women who operate their own businesses.

This year, the theme of the Eighth Annual Small Business Week is: "The Creative Power of Entrepreneurship". More than 300 communities across Canada will be taking part in some 400 scheduled activities. Last year, Small Business Week attracted 175,000 visitors. This year, the Federal Business Development Bank has set up two new workshops that are being offered free: "Getting Started in Business" and "Various Options and How to Develop your Market". There will also be four special workshops: The balance sheet as management tool; How to run a business; Strategic planning; and How to identify business opportunities.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the 750,000 business people who employ 40 per cent of our labour force and who have created practically all new jobs in Canada in the last two years.

INVITATION TO MR. REISMAN TO WITHDRAW CERTAIN COMMENTS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I take strong exception to Mr. Reisman's remarks that all those who do not share his views are Nazis and liars. I would suggest to this gentleman—handsomely paid as he is by the taxpayers and holding a cushy job because somebody has been protecting him—first, that he offer apologies to Canadians and Quebecers who do not think as he does and, second, that he congratulate all those who defend and perhaps fight against the Mulroney Government free trade proposals.

Mr. Speaker, these people are staunch defenders of the interests of Canadians and Quebecers alike. Are we liars because we say that textile workers will lose their jobs? Are we liars because we say that footwear industry workers will lose their jobs? Are we liars because we say that electrical appliances workers will lose their jobs? We are saying so in light of a study made by Economic Council of Canada officials who are supportive of the free trade deal and yet readily admit there has to be losers.

Therefore, I would urge Mr. Reisman to withdraw his remarks and keep the debate on a more positive note. He will be the loser in all this because he may just be the greatest liar.

FILM INDUSTRY

DUBBING AND DOUBLE STANDARDS—FRANCE'S POLICY—MEANING OF LA FRANCOPHONIE

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the Quebec film dubbing industry is presently in a precarious situation. Last September, the French Minister, François Léotard, was contemplating letting Quebecers dub 20 per cent of feature films, which means a business opportunity of some $4 million for our actors. As a result of pressures exerted by actors' unions and French dubbing firms, the Minister reduced that rate to 10 per cent only and last Monday, October 26, he stated that nothing would be left to Quebec.

What a dramatic turn of events! I therefore fully endorse the position taken by the Union des artistes and its president, Serge Turgeon. I urge both the Quebec Government and the Government of Canada to take all reprisals required, in case of failure, against the French dubbing industry.

Our actors' job is both demanding and difficult. They deserve a better consideration. If they are refused access to the European market, let them at least live decently in their own country by further protecting their rights.

Mr. Speaker, if francophonie means anything, let us give Quebec the place it deserves.

HUMAN RIGHTS

EL SALVADOR—AMNESTY GRANTED TO DEATH SQUADS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the President of El Salvador, Napoleon Duarte, passed a law giving amnesty to his own government-protected death squads. These are the people who killed four American churchwomen after raping them; killed two U.S. agricultural advisers; and kidnapped, tortured or killed more than 50,000 Salvadorans who dared to disagree with the military. Within the last few days they killed a trade union leader and the president of the Human Rights Commission, and on Tuesday four armed men abducted a school teacher from her classroom in front of her students, and her whereabouts are unknown.

The President has given amnesty to all such thugs and murderers, and therefore the FMLN, the rebel group, broke off peace talks. That was all they could do. How could they possibly lay down their guns when the Government allows the killers of such people to walk free on the streets and even passes a law protecting them from prosecution?

I call on the Canadian Government to denounce this fascist law and cancel bilateral aid to El Salvador.

FREE TRADE

THE BUSINESS OF BUSINESSMEN

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, the Montreal South Shore Chamber of Commerce, in its November magazine issue, recognizes and supports free trade, and I quote:

"The South Shore is indeed a land of predilection in that regard. Our area lies next door to the important Montreal market but also, with its highway, railway and air network, is close to the huge 55-million consumer market in the North-Eastern United States.

Our 7,500 SMBs, and especially our 2,000 manufacturing industries, consider a free trade agreement as being vital to their future development. The Canadian market is limited and our businesses need access to the American market. Our future lies there.

In that regard, we must look ahead rather than back. We should not be afraid of mighty American corporations invading our market, but rather start immediately looking at how we can reap profits on their own market. Quebec's SMBs are recognized for their aggressiveness and innovative spirit. We must be able to have that opportunity."

The advertising paid by labour leaders in collusion with the NDP says, and I quote: " . . . Canada does not belong to those two men." And they mean the Prime Minister of Canada and Mr. Reagan.

Business people on Montreal's South Shore have just told them that they are wrong, that they cannot be right, because they are the ones who take the risks and they are the ones who also agree to meet the challenge of free trade.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON EXPORTS OF ELECTRICITY

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, no matter what the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) says in his subdued and sotto voce style, it is becoming clear that the term "free trade" is a misnomer. A better term would be "economic union" because what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is proposing is more than the lowering of customs tariffs. Many other changes are implied. For example, there is the export of electricity.

The Quebec Minister of Energy is already saying that Ottawa will no longer be able to intervene through the National Energy Board. It will no longer be able to tell Hydro Quebec at what price electricity should be sold to Ontario and

New Brunswick before making offers to Maine or Vermont. In other words, when it will be in the national interest to stop electricity exports Ottawa will no longer be in a position to do so. It is very doubtful that that is what Canadians want. Fortunately, Canadians are beginning to appreciate the real meaning of the term "free trade". It really means economic union.

IMPROVEMENT IN GOVERNMENT FINANCIAL CONTROLS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, "Our study finds that there have been significant improvements made in financial controls". So speaks the Auditor General in his recently tabled report to the House of Commons. The gist of the report points to the real and successful efforts which have been made since September, 1984, in cleaning up accounting practices and ensuring that the taxpayers get value for money. The Government is regaining control of the public purse.

The Auditor General rightly draws the attention of Parliament to continuing problems with the cumulating deficit even though the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has performed wonders, with the albatross left around his neck by previous Governments.

We look forward to the debt management study which will be published in 1988, and compliment the Auditor General on his continuing work with the federal Government reporting study.

GRANT MADE TO EDMONTON AMUSEMENT PARK PROJECT—MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, in the House of Commons on Wednesday, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret) said that the Government had created some 15,000 jobs by giving a $5 million grant to its friends, the Ghermezian brothers in Edmonton, for the West Edmonton Mall. That is nothing but a gross exaggeration. It is hyperbole and extremely misleading. It is nothing but unadulterated baloney.

If 15,000 jobs were created for $5 million, a job would be created for every $333 spent by the Government. The annual report of DRIE says that it costs about $8,000 to create one job.

If we were to take the word of the Minister, with the $1 billion budget of DRIE, we could create 3 million jobs per year. What a gross exaggeration! The Minister is living in Fantasyland. He is the Minister of fantasy figures. We could wipe out unemployment forever in one year in that kind of fantasy. That shows why the Conservative Party is in such trouble.

The Minister is also saying that the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party are against Alberta and western Canada. I find that to be very divisive, offensive, and the worst kind of regional racism practised by the Government. It is a very petty and offensive position to take. It is very divisive for the future of the country and is certainly not becoming for the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney).

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—SOVEREIGNTY—POSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward—Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I want to continue my comments of last week regarding the whining of the NDP about the supposed loss of sovereignty due to free trade.

There are approximately 30,000 councillors, aldermen, deputy reeves, reeves, mayors, et cetera, representing the villages, townships, counties, towns and cities in Canada. Add these to the nearly 1,000 elected members of provincial and territorial Governments and you have an impressive number of dedicated people serving this country in their various capacities.

Many in this House, such as the shy and unassuming Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka (Mr. Darling), the quiet and retiring Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), and yours truly, have served in these other arenas.

There may be a few of the Liberal-NDP coalition who have no faith in this country, but I tell you that the vast majority of those I have just named are proud Canadians dedicated to service. They have no fear for the sovereignty of Canada. They know, as do I, that Canada and all it stands for will not only survive but will grow and benefit from free trade.

EDUCATION

NATIONAL FORUM ON POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION—NEED FOR NEW NATIONAL FOCUS

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, last weekend 500 people from all over the country came together in Saskatoon to focus on post-secondary education. There is a crisis in that field and this generation is in danger of becoming a lost generation.

One clear message coming out of that forum from all those participants from all provinces was that there must be a new national focus, preserving provincial jurisdiction but bringing together all the partners in the country to arrive at a forward-looking prospect for this situation. There is no more important issue in the country.

I challenge the House, and the Government in particular, to find a mechanism, in the spirit of Meech Lake, to forge a partnership which will focus on one of the most important issues before us, that is, the cause of young people and particularly post-secondary education.

MANUFACTURING INDUSTRIES—EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin—Swan River): Mr. Speaker, there was a study on free trade published in 1984 by the Ontario Economic Council entitled "Trade, Industrial Policy and Canadian Manufacturing", by Richard Harris and David Cox. The study predicted that free trade would bring about a boom in Canadian manufacturing which would be of significant benefit to Canada, and Ontario in particular. Most major business organizations agree with the Harris and Cox assessment and are confident that Canadian companies will prosper under the Canada-U.S. trade agreement.

Opposition to the initiative by the Ontario Government may, therefore, be of some political value, but makes very little economic sense. Ontario, and the Government of Manitoba, have mounted anti-free trade campaigns based on confusion, fear and uncertainty. Equally illogical is the opposition of the labour unions to the trade agreement.

A recent Environics and Globe and Mail poll showed that 46 per cent of union members think free trade is a good idea. This indicates their confidence in the expected boom in manufacturing and the resulting benefits to those employed in that sector.

Therefore, opposition to free trade obviously reflects the personal ideology of union leaders, based not on economic sense but on political opportunism.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—CHIEF NEGOTIATOR'S STATEMENT ON POSITION OF OPPONENTS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday Canada's chief trade negotiator, Simon Reisman, said publicly that opponents of the Prime Minister's free trade deal are using "the big lie, as practised in Nazi Germany".

When asked about that this morning on television the Minister for International Trade said, "Oh, Mr. Reisman is entitled to his views I don't feel that it's very fair . . . to ask me to comment on a personal opinion by Simon Reisman".

Was the Minister's colleague serious? How can she condone remarks like that made by an ambassador, Canada's top trade official, who speaks publicly on behalf of the Government? What did the Minister for International Trade mean when she said that it is all right for the chief trade negotiator, speaking publicly as an ambassador, to criticize and charge that the people who oppose this trade deal are Nazis? How can the Government put up with this, or is it condoning these shocking comments?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, in the selective quotes which he has used in the House the Hon. Member did not give my views which I expressed on that television show. I said, "We are all Canadians . . . we all love our country," and we are all entitled to our views.

I went on and said that those who are for free trade are Canadians confident in our future who know that we are the best in the world. Those who are against free trade tend to be protectionist and fearful. However, we are all Canadians, we are all entitled to our views, and we are all encouraged to participate in the debate.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER DISAVOW NEGOTIATOR'S PERSONAL OPINIONS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, surely the Minister must realize that when Simon Reisman speaks he speaks as an ambassador on behalf of the Government and as its chief trade negotiator. When Mr. Reisman speaks the Minister cannot make a distinction between his personal opinions and the views of the Government.

Will the Minister, here and now, make it clear that Ambassador Reisman was not speaking on behalf of the Government and that he cannot express personal opinions when he speaks as trade negotiator and ambassador? If she does not do that, she is condoning his words. If that is the case, Mr. Reisman should resign and she should resign.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member did not mean to suggest that Mr. Reisman should be restricted in any expression of his personal views.

Ms. Copps: He's an ambassador.

Miss Carney: If he does suggest that Mr. Reisman should be restricted in his views, he has more courage than I in trying to make that point known to Mr. Reisman.

Mr. Nunziata: You're afraid of him, are you?

Miss Carney: I again make the point that the position of the Government of Canada—

Mr. Nunziata: He's been pushing you around, hasn't he?

Miss Carney: They want to shut up the debate. They do not want to debate this issue on its merits, but rather on slurs, myths, and misleading statements. They do not have the courage to get up in this House and debate the free trade agreement on its merits—

• (1120)

Mr. Riis: Let's have a debate.

Miss Carney: —as our Government is encouraging Canadians to do.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, on March 16 in the House of Commons, the Prime Minister said: "Let Ambassador Reisman speak for Canada". He certainly does not speak for me, nor for the Liberal Party, nor for millions of Canadians. It is shocking that the Minister for International Trade, speaking on behalf of the Government, is willing to let Mr. Reisman run around this country in his official capacity expressing his personal opinions no matter how shocking and wrong they are.

Does the Minister not realize that if she continues in this unacceptable course of action—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: —she is not only showing that Mr. Reisman is out of control but that she and the Government are condoning these actions? Mr. Reisman is not any private citizen. He speaks as ambassador on behalf of Canada. This Government stands accused and convicted of allowing him to call Canadians Nazis. It has to live with those words.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is not unusual for the Hon. Member to suggest that Mr. Reisman does not speak for him. It is very difficult to find out who does speak for the Liberal Party.

Mr. Nunziata: Simon says jump, Pat, jump.

Miss Carney: We are in the ludicrous situation where the Leader of the Liberal Party is saying that he wants to tear up the free trade agreement when a majority of his own Party supports it—

Mr. Gauthier: Who said so?

Miss Carney: —and when the president of the Sarnia-Lambton Liberal Association says his position is "totally irresponsible".

Mr. Nunziata: Jump, Pat, jump, says Simon.

Miss Carney: No wonder it is hard to figure out who speaks for the Liberal Party on free trade.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS—CONTENT OF AGREEMENT'S FINAL TEXT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that when the Minister for International Trade says she wants to debate this trade arrangement on the merits, she is not serious. She obviously thinks it is acceptable for Canada's trade ambassador to call Canadians who have concerns, or who are worried about the trade deal, nothing but a bunch of Nazis.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Order.

Mr. Tobin: That is not a light matter.

I want to bring the Minister's attention back to something else she said this morning on the CTV Program Canada AM. When asked why she was rushing the committee process when in fact the detailed agreement is not before the committee yet, the Minister said with respect to the details:

> All they're going to get when they do get the final text is a bunch of incomprehensible legal language that isn't nearly as clear to understand as what they have now.

When the text arrives, the Minister is saying it is going to be a bunch of incomprehensible legal language that no one will understand, not the Government, not the Opposition, and not the people of Canada.

Given this startling admission from the Minister who says she wants to debate the deal on its merits and on the facts, how can she proceed with a committee hearing, and how can she proceed to sign a deal, when she herself describes the legal text, even in advance of seeing it, as something that is incomprehensible? That answer is incomprehensible and, frankly, Mr. Speaker, stupid.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I stand behind my quote on television.

Ms. Copps: I bet you do.

Miss Carney: The point I made, and I will repeat here, is that the "elements of the Agreement" that we filed in this House are a clear statement of what Canada is getting out of the free trade agreement.

Mr. Nunziata: You are Simon's puppet, Pat.

Ms. Copps: Simon says.

Miss Carney: Waiting for the text is not helpful to those who want to debate this issue on its merits.

May I point out in terms of the amount of debate which is going on, on which the Opposition is stonewalling, there was a Royal Commission that debated free trade for two and a half years. It travelled all across the country, cost $11 million, and reported in support of free trade. There have been Senate committee meetings, public discussion, a report supporting free trade. There have been provincial hearings and meetings on this issue in several provinces, and more are planned, on free trade.

In contrast, I would like to point out that in 1966, when the Opposition was in power, our Party asked for the Auto Pact to be referred to committee and that Liberal Government of the day refused our request.

Mr. Mazankowski: Shame!

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, you would have to be an olympic mental gymnast to follow the Minister's convoluted logic.

STUDY OF FINAL TEXT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Again I quote the Minister with respect to the detailed text this morning on Canada AM: "All they're going to get when they do get it—", that is the final text, "—is a bunch of incomprehensible legal language that isn't nearly as clear to understand as what they have now".

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Tobin: It was the Prime Minister who promised a full debate on the final text. Does the Prime Minister agree with his Minister that this final text is going to be nothing but an incomprehensible bunch of legal language that no one can, should, or will understand? Or is the Prime Minister telling us now that his commitment to the House is broken, that Canadians and Members of Parliament are too ignorant to understand the final text, and that in fact they want to bamboozle the nation and this Parliament with this charade of a committee hearing process that is now going on in Ottawa? Is that what he is telling us?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I also pointed out that the bulk of the final text is going to be about 1,200 pages of tariff schedules.

Mr. Tobin: All the more reason to look at it.

Mr. Mazankowski: You wouldn't understand it.

Miss Carney: I look forward to the Hon. Member's perusal of the tariff schedules. I have already pointed out that those tariffs are known to the SAGITs involved, to the Sectoral Advisory Committee, and that the committee had Mr. Reisman and Mr. Ritchie before it yesterday. They could have asked for them, because I am sure they would have quoted all 1,200 pages of the tariffs.

What Canadians want is information. What Canadians want is—

Mr. Tobin: Is the truth. Is the text—

Miss Carney: —is for the committee to get on with the job—

Mr. Tobin: —not a charade, not a sham, not a propaganda machine.

Miss Carney: —of dealing with the free trade agreement, hearing from Canadians, and making its report. That is what the parliamentary process is all about.

AMBASSADOR'S COMMENTS ON POSITION OF TRADE AGREEMENT OPPONENTS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I too have a question for the Minister for International Trade, after listening to Mr. Reisman's comments in which he said: "A great deal of what the opponents are engaging in is the big lie mastered by Joseph Goebbels, the Nazi Propaganda Minister". Here we have a senior public servant, an Ambassador making $1,000 a day, who is going about the country. These are not his personal opinions when he is paid that kind of sum by the Government, by the taxpayers of this country. Is the Minister in fact afraid to get up and discipline Mr. Reisman for his outrageous attacks?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think the record should show that Mr. Reisman was making his remarks in the context of his experiences as an honoured member of the Armed Forces in the Second World War.

Mr. Rompkey: The war is over, Pat.

Miss Carney: The point he was making as a member of the Armed Forces was that he first encountered this kind of "big lie" technique in the Second World War in which he served for Canada. I see nothing outrageous in that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

APPROPRIATENESS OF COMMENTS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, we now have a situation where the Trade Minister is not just trying to explain away these comments, she is trying to defend them, and I would like to ask the Prime Minister of this country if he thinks it is appropriate behaviour for a senior official, a man who has great sums of money coming to him from the Canadian people, for such a person to use such outrageous, ad hominem attacks which draw on the sense of past indignity which people in this country have had to fight against in a world war?

• (1130)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not had occasion to read the transcript of the remarks to which my hon. friend refers. I will do so just as quickly as I can and make an appropriate response to my hon. friend.

I know that Ambassador Reisman, who has been one of the most distinguished of Canada's public servants over some 40 years, and who culminated a brilliant career in the Public Service of Canada by negotiating the free trade agreement, has taken, understandably, exception to some of the very grave distortions and misleading personal attacks that have been made upon him and upon the free trade agreement.

Having said that, I happen to believe that one ought not to impugn the personal motives of anyone at any time. I will review the transcript in that light and respond to my hon. friend.

AGREEMENT TERMINATION CLAUSE—GOVERNMENT MANDATE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Prime Minister at least for having the sense of responsibility to respond in that way.

I ask the Minister for International Trade to comment with respect to a statement which was made yesterday by Mr. Reisman to the effect that it could take three to five years' notice to get out of the free trade agreement. Are the Minister and her Government trying to freeze this country into a free trade arrangement for which they have absolutely no mandate whatsoever?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, again I say to the Hon. Member that the issue of our mandate is a curious one for the Opposition to raise.

There has been a Royal Commission on this issue that took two and a half years and cost some $11 million. It recommended free trade. There was a Senate committee, two Senate committees if I recall, that had public discussion on the issue of free trade.

This Government was elected with a mandate to create jobs, which we have done, 960,000 new jobs, since we took office. Studies of the Economic Council and other studies have indicated that the free trade agreement and free trade will create hundreds of thousands of new jobs. That is certainly a mandate that Canadians understand.

Mr. Riis: That is not what the Minister of Employment said.

Miss Carney: What they do not understand is the total lack of any alternative by the Hon. Member.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE DISPUTE—CANADIAN CLAIM TO 3PS ZONE WATERS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, anyone listening to this Government stoutly defending France's right to do whatever it wishes in the 200-mile zone south of Newfoundland might well wonder what country this Government represents. The French can now catch all the fish they want. They can take all the minerals, oil and gas that they want. They can take the entire ocean floor and all the salt water as long as they remain within that 200-mile zone south of Newfoundland, according to this Government.

I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs this. Does he not realize that the Government's position weakens Canada's claim to these waters? Does he not agree that these are Canadian waters and that France has no more claim to them than do the Basques, the British, or the Vikings?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is serious about his concerns he will know that the agreement that was signed giving ships flying French flags the right to be in the disputed zone was an agreement that was signed on June 21, 1984, by a Liberal Government of Canada. The Leader of the Liberal Party at that time was the Right Hon. John Turner. If he wants to know why Canada was put in that position, he should ask Mr. Turner about the Turner agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REJECT FRANCE'S DEMANDS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, this is not 1787, 1887, 1972 or 1984. This is 1987.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: Now we agree on one point.

Any international court, according to the international precendent, would only give France an eight to ten-mile economic zone around St. Pierre and Miquelon for the use of the people of St. Pierre and Miquelon and nothing else, and the Minister knows it. I ask the Minister this. Will the Government today reject France's imperialistic demands and stand up for Canada?

Where is our Government? They are hiding under the diplomats' tables.

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, not only is it 1987 but tomorrow is Hallowe'en.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Two things need to be put on the record, Mr. Speaker. One is that we are bound with regard to the French-flag vessels in the disputed zone of 3PS. We are bound by the Turner agreement, the Liberal Party treaty signed in 1984. It is a treaty to which Canada is committed. We cannot cavalierly break that Turner treaty. As I say, if the Hon. Member wants to have further information as to why Mr. Turner signed and authorized that treaty, then he can put that question to him directly.

The other point that has to be raised is that the reaction that is coming from France now, a reaction which he somewhat exaggerates, is as a consequence of very firm actions which the Government has taken. We have closed Canadian ports to French vessels serving the fishing fleet. We have refused to reopen the Burgeo Bank. We have closed the rest of 3PS outside the disputed zone.

When the French for the second time broke off the negotiations that had been under way since January of this year, we gave notice that quotas will not be given in 1988. The reason we are hearing from the French is because of the firm, effective action of this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TWO-PRICE WHEAT SYSTEMS—EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Grains. The Government has been less than straightforward in its comments about the elimination under the trade agreement of the two-price wheat system.

Can the Minister explain why on the one hand the federal Government says that the two-price system for wheat will not be affected by the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal, while on the other hand the Premier of Saskatchewan has taken out ads in the Saskatchewan press stating that Canada's two-price wheat will be eliminated, and that the federal Government will provide compensation of $280 million for the annual loss to farmers? Will the Minister explain this difference of position?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that it was this Government that took the decision back in April of 1986 to see that the domestic price went to $7 per bushel. So it is this Government that is responsible for seeing the benefit of the two-price system go to Canadians farmers.

Also, the Hon. Member will know that the agreement does not come into effect for a little over one year. As tariffs come down there will continue to be pressure on the two-price wheat system, pressure which, as he is aware, is there now. If he wants to be fair about it he will also know that we have said that if there is going to be a change in the two-price wheat system we will see that producers are compensated for the benefit that they now have under the two-price wheat system.

SASKATCHEWAN PREMIER'S POSITION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister telling us that the Premier of Saskatchewan does not understand the agreement? Or is he saying that the Premier is taking this political route because that might be the easiest way to sell the agreement? I would like the Minister to make it clear to the Premier of Saskatchewan exactly what it is, or go to the Premier of Saskatchewan and explain what it is so that we get the right story out there.

• (1140)

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, I am not so sure that the Hon. Member fully understood what I said in response to his first question.

Very simply, to say it again, it has been this Government that has been responsible for the benefits flowing to farmers under the two-price wheat system. It is farmers like himself and his neighbours who have benefited as a result of actions by this Government.

The Hon. Member will also know that agriculture, especially western agriculture, stands to benefit substantially under the terms of the free trade agreement initialled at the beginning of this month.

I will say again that, as a result of benefits received under the two-price wheat system, and as a result of actions by this Government, if there are going to be any changes to the two-price wheat system for whatever reason—and there are all types of domestic pressures coming from the two-price wheat system that have nothing to do with the free trade agreement—we will see that our farmers are compensated for any changes that we make in the two-price wheat system. That is very clear.

The Hon. Member does a disservice to farmers who are suffering from many uncertainties by attempting to cloud the issue with nothing more than political nonsense.

CANADA SAVINGS BONDS

OPPORTUNITY FOR HOLDERS OF BONDS MATURING NOVEMBER 1

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

Considering that the sale of new Canada Savings Bonds has an announced cut-off date of October 31, what action is the Minister taking to ensure that Canadians will be able to rollover the bonds that mature on November 1?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member is aware, we have given 48 hours' notice of our intention to cease cash sales at the close of business this evening.

The holders of outstanding issues that mature on November 1 will be able to roll those over on Monday, November 2. That will provide them with the protection that they can keep their funds invested in Canada Savings Bonds.

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION—PAYMENT TO HONGKONG BANK OF CANADA—TAX IMPLICATIONS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance.

In response to my question on Tuesday about the tax treatment of a $200 million payment by a Crown corporation which did a circle via a bank in the Bahamas to the Hongkong Bank of Canada, the Minister of State for Finance replied, and I quote from Hansard, October 27, page 10437:

> This particular transaction was a complicated one, structured in such a way that no one . . . would have been able to figure out the tax implications of the transaction.

Will the Minister be kind enough to explain to the House the contradiction between that answer and the fact that several days before the transaction was completed, the district office of taxation in British Columbia provided the purchaser with a letter of comfort to the effect that the $200 million would be not taxed?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Hon. Member is well aware that the relationship between a taxpayer and Revenue Canada is confidential, and only known by those two organizations.

INQUIRY WHETHER SIMILAR OFFER MADE TO CANADIAN INSTITUTIONS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): My supplementary question is directed to the same Minister.

At the time that the Bill on the Bank of British Columbia was introduced in this House, the Minister of State for Finance stated that a number of Canadian financial institutions were canvassed about taking over that bank.

Was the same $200 million tax-free sweetener offered to those other Canadian institutions?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I recall the process at that time, there were a number of banks contacted to see whether they had any interest. Off the top of my head, I do not recall if any of the other banks were sufficiently interested in principle to embark upon any further discussions with them.

Mr. Heap: Vancity Credit Union was.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hongkong Bank was interested. It was on that basis that discussions were commenced.

As the Hon. Member is aware, the CDIC is empowered to make offers to potential purchasers if, in its judgment, it is cheaper for the CDIC to make a direct commitment, as it did in this case, than it would be to allow the bank to go under.

Clearly, the second option was something that the CDIC and certainly the Government wished to avoid, and in the event it was cheaper than the judgment that the CDIC had made—

Mr. Heap: Did you offer that deal to Vancity Credit Union?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —as to whether the bank would have gone under.

ROLE OF CDIC IN STRUCTURING DEAL

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is on the same matter.

I wish to ask the Minister of Finance whether it was CDIC that suggested the deal be structured in such a manner that the parent company in the Bahamas would receive the $200 million rather than the Hongkong Bank of Canada? If that is so, surely the Minister cannot stand in this House and tell us that the tax implications were not known to the Government.

Again, I repeat the question, and I think it is a question of integrity, why does one Minister stand up in the House, in this case the Minister of State for Finance, and tell us that the deal was structured in such a way that no one could figure out the tax implications, whereas officials from the Bank of Hongkong of Canada have stated quite publicly that the deal was structured in such a way to save them paying taxes? They knew several days before the deal was okayed that this was going to be the manner in which the $200 million was to be paid.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Hon. Minister of State for Finance and I have made the point that our primary motivation here was to save an important regional bank that, had it gone under, would have had very powerful repercussions in the financial community in western Canada, particularly in British Columbia.

Our primary motivation was to save that bank. We did not get into the details of the tax considerations of that transaction. We knew that the cost of $200 million was significantly less than the cost the CDIC had indicated it probably would be had the bank gone under. That was the motivation that we had, and that is why the deal proceeded on that basis.

POSSIBLE IMPACT ON GOVERNMENT DEFICIT

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): My supplementary question is the following. Surely the Minister must recognize that by structuring the deal the way it was structured that in essence the Canadian taxpayer ended up paying because of the loss of approximately $100 million in tax revenue. Otherwise, CDIC would have had to pay more, and that would have come out of CDIC which is financed by premiums from the banks in the trust.

In essence, part of the load of bailing out the Bank of B.C. was shifted from CDIC to the backs of the Canadian taxpayers.

On November 26 of last year the Minister of State stood in this House and said that the bail-out of the Bank of British Columbia would "have no impact on the Government's deficit". He stated this knowing that Revenue Canada had already calculated that this deal would give this bank a $100 million tax gift.

Why did the Government not have the integrity to tell Canadians the whole truth about the deal? It is a question of integrity.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I totally reject that. If the Hon. Member wishes to have a reasonable debate on the facts of the issue then fine, we can have that debate. But the Hon. Member should not bring in these red herrings of integrity on a deal when we are trying to explain it clearly to the Hon. Member.

Earlier this week my colleague stated that the purpose of the $200 million payment was to get that money into the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank which had the capital, the financial resources, and the strength around the world to provide the backing to the Bank of British Columbia in a way that would ensure the continued existence of that bank. That was why the money went to the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank. That is why the deal was structured that way. It was not motivated for tax reasons.

AIR TRANSPORT

PROMOTION OF TOURISM IN EASTERN ARCTIC—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Thomas Suluk (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport, whom I had occasion to travel with across the length of the Arctic this fall, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

The Northwest Territorial Airlines that flies across the Arctic coast has now been bought by Air Canada. Because Air Canada is a public airline it should be much easier for the Government to provide subsidies for northern travel to promote tourism and economic development in the eastern Arctic.

• (1150)

Could the Minister tell the House whether the federal Government, in conjunction with the Government of the NWT, will be willing to provide subsidies to the northern segment of Air Canada?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question, and his interest, which continues to serve the people of the eastern Arctic.

As the Hon. Member knows, the ability of Air Canada now to be represented in the 10 communities in the Northwest Territories, the direct links to over 100 destinations in Canada which Air Canada serves, and the international links will surely serve the people of the Northwest Territories and the cargo which is needed and, in the reverse, the tourism industry in the Northwest Territories that he so strongly supports.

However, I would make a commitment to my colleague to discuss with the Minister of Transport and take the responsibility of discussing with the Government of the Northwest Territories a way of assuring that travel, which is so necessary in northern Canada, can be implemented with this takeover or this merger of Air Canada and NWT Airlines.

ALLEGED COMMENTS BY MR. REISMAN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister and concerns the comments and statements of Mr. Reisman that those who do not share his views are Nazis and liars.

I think that it is important to point out that, contrary to what the Minister for International Trade has said, the fact that Mr. Reisman is a veteran does not allow him to call all those who do not share his views liars.

My question for the Prime Minister is as follows. If someone objects to this agreement and says that there will job losses in the footwear, textile, clothing and electrical appliances industries, do you think that he or she is a Nazi, a liar, or simply someone who, just like you, wants to defend the interests of Canadians?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, according to the Hon. Member, Mr. Reisman said that those who do not share his views are liars and Nazis. He never said such a thing. This is a fallacious comment on the part of the Hon. Member, but he is quite used to spread false rumours about other people. Mr. Reisman never made such a statement.

I have already replied fully to another Member who asked a question about this. I shall examine the transcript closely and report to the House afterwards. However, I believe that it is important for us to deny vigourously such allegations as that just made by the Hon. Member.

In reply to the second part of his question, I would simply repeat to the Hon. Member what the Liberal Government led by the Hon. Robert Bourassa said as recently as yesterday and the day before, namely that the free trade agreement would have very beneficial effects for Quebec and Canada and that everyone, starting with the responsible leaders of this country, should support Quebec in this initiative.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REQUEST MR. REISMAN TO APOLOGIZE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister—I am not sure he can even understand himself—has just said that what I said is false, but he added that he will read the transcript because he is not sure what Mr. Reisman did say. I think he is rather confused. Once you are in a position to read the transcript and learn what Mr. Reisman said, the way he treats those who do not share his views, when you find out that he said twice what you do not know he has said, all this time thinking that what I am saying is not correct, but when you discover that what he said is not fair to Canadians, are you going to ask him to apologize to all Canadians and Quebecers who do not think as he does, and to admit that Canadians who are trying to protect jobs are just as good Canadians as Mr. Reisman?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): True, Mr. Speaker, I did not read the transcript. But I know full well that Mr. Reisman did not say that those who do not think as he does are liars and Nazis.

So I would ask the Hon. Member either to produce the transcript showing that Mr. Reisman said these very words or to apologize to all Hon. Members and to Ambassador Reisman not only for misleading the House but also for repeating a lie concerning a public servant.

EMPLOYMENT

JOB DEVELOPMENT FUNDS—REALLOCATION QUERY

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. I have in my hands notes prepared for the national caucus of the Progressive Conservatives, as well as the Quebec caucus, indicating an announcement to Tory Members of a reallocation of job development funds, an announcement which evidently is not being made to all Members of Parliament.

My question to the Prime Minister is a simple one. Is this another example of Tory patronage in preparation for an election?

Mr. Mulroney: Did you get those from Toupin?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure where the Hon. Member got the documents to which he referred. However, if there are any announcements in respect of job strategy or job programs, they will be made in the usual manner.

ELECTION POSSIBILITY QUERIED

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, these notes are not prepared as a presentation to the House of Commons, nor to the public at large, but to the Quebec caucus and the national caucus of the Conservative Party. We have the numbers.

Are we looking now toward an election pretty soon? Is this a repeat of the 1984 Special Employment Transition Program under which the Liberal Government created first-class unemployed and second-class unemployed? Is this a new Tory slush fund?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member would like to receive notes with respect to his own Quebec caucus. Unfortunately that was demolished in the last week or so, so he should not be so jealous.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

CALGARY WINTER OLYMPICS—TELEVISING IN FRENCH OUTSIDE QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Nearly one million francophones outside Quebec will be denied the right to watch the televised reports of the Calgary Winter Olympic Games, yet these same Canadian men and women will have to pay their share of the $200 million earmarked by the federal Government for financing the games.

Can the Prime Minister explain how he intends to maintain equity and cultural identity in this country when we have shameful evidence of discrimination towards almost one million Canadians? How can this Government behave so unfairly after the kind of promises it made when the Constitutional Accord was signed?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this has nothing to do with the federal Government, quite the contrary. Unless I am mistaken, the contracts were awarded by the organization which manages the games, and it was only after that we in the Government and others came to realize that certain Canadians, mostly francophones, might be deprived of as complete a coverage as that available to their English-speaking fellow citizens. The moment it was brought to my attention I got in touch with the Minister of Communications and asked her to devise some kind of formula to correct this unfairness, this injustice. As soon as the Minister reports to me I will hasten to get back to the distinguised Member for Ottawa—Vanier.

QUERY ON MEASURES GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO TAKE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I raised the matter on several occasions in this House and I already asked a question that was related to it. But since you know very well the situation of minority groups in the provinces, do you not find it shameful, not to say discriminatory and unfair that close to one million French-speaking Canadians are to be deprived of their right to coverage of the Winter Games in Calgary? What will the Government do to help the CBC, the CRTC and the cable networks so that in the provinces, whether it is Manitoba, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland or elsewhere people may watch the Olympic Games in French?

The Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, actually the TVA Network, which obtained the rights to broadcast in French, unfortunately does not cover the whole country. That is unfortunate, that is a situation however that has developed over the years, and in which the TVA network does not have the resources needed to cover—

An Hon. Member: Channel 10.

Mr. Mulroney: —yes, Channel 10—to cover all. The CBC was one of the bidders, and I take it that the contract was awarded elsewhere.

This being said, and despite the fact that contracts would have been awarded according to very objective criteria, it is a fact that the French TVA network does not serve all of French-speaking Canada. So, this is a gap that should be filled in the spirit of such an important event nationally. This is more or less what the Government is attempting to do, in co-operation with TVA and the CBC.

LABOUR

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR ELDERLY WORKERS—REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF NEW FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL COST SHARED PROGRAM

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. The Labour Adjustment Benefits Program, which provided financial assistance for older workers who were laid off in the textile, clothing, footwear and tanning industries and in some communities came to an end in August, 1985, and was to have been replaced by a new federal-provincial cost-shared program. Can the Minister tell this House what progress has been made in the negotiations with the provinces for this new program? Also, will the workers laid off since that date be penalized by the absence of an agreement?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as concerns the former LAB program, I should point out to my colleague that, while this program was supposed to come to an end in August, 1985, it was kept in place by this Government until August, 1986. Since June, 1986, I have consulted all my provincial counterparts about the new POWA program and those discussions are still going on. As concerns Quebec, I made a formal offer to my provincial counterpart last summer, and in our latest discussions, he informed me that he wanted to consult his colleagues before giving me an answer.

ALLEGATION BY SENIOR PUBLIC SERVANT—REISMAN

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have received notice of a question of privilege from the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I believe my privileges as a Member of Parliament, particularly as an opposition Member of Parliament, have been breached when I am likened to a Nazi and associated with individuals such as Joseph Goebbels, the propaganda minister for Adolf Hitler.

As you well know, Mr. Speaker, that allegation has been made against not only myself but all Members of the Opposition—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Quote the allegation.

Mr. Riis: —who have indicated their opposition to the free trade agreement.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Quote the allegation precisely.

Mr. Riis: I refer to a report headlined:

> Reisman likens free-trade foes to Nazis

Mr. Reisman as a senior public servant, an individual with ambassador's status, has likened free trade foes to Nazis.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Order, Mr. Speaker. This is an abuse of the rules.

Mr. Riis: When the question was put to him he said that he does not regret his remarks.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): This is abuse; another NDP abuse.

Mr. Riis: It seems to me that I am constantly being interrupted by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). Perhaps if he has an observation he will rise and make his point.

It makes my job as a Member of Parliament very difficult in terms of my constituents and others, having heard from one of the senior public servants of our country—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): This is an abuse of the rules.

Mr. Riis: —an individual paid by the taxpayers of Canada presumably to represent all Canadians and all taxpayers who has indicated and referred to those who oppose the agreement he has negotiated—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Another NDP abuse.

Mr. Riis: —namely, all of the Members of the Opposition, as Nazis and has—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Riis: —referred to them as having the same status as Joseph Goebbels.

I ask you to consider this matter, Mr. Speaker. I recognize that Ambassador Reisman is not a Member of the House of Commons. I realize also that when you examine Beauchesne's Fifth Edition you will find that calling anyone a Nazi is certainly unparliamentary.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Give us the quotation. Follow the rules of the House.

Mr. Riis: To refer to anyone as "Goebbels" is also unparliamentary. I ask that you look into this matter.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Such contempt for the House of Commons.

Mr. Riis: I have been constantly interrupted by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I usually give him the benefit of listening when he makes his statements and I look forward to him standing in his place, someone who has played a significant role in the negotiations, and explain, if he believes that Ambassador Reisman calling opposition Members "Nazis" and likening us to Goebbels is an appropriate use of the term.

I do believe that our privileges as Members of Parliament, particularly those in the Opposition, have been breached by this senior public official.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak to the same question of privilege. I want to draw to your attention that apparently Mr. Reisman repeated and confirmed—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Apparently.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): —his remarks in committee yesterday. At that time he said, according to a press report:

> —that one doesn't try to deal "rationally and logically" with these people who "deliberately set out to defy fact and reason."

Mr. Reisman not only accused those who do not agree with his and the Government's free trade agreement as being Nazis but he has accused them, in effect, of telling untruths when they oppose the Government's policy.

Mr. Reisman speaks as ambassador, as chief trade negotiator. He is not only speaking as a private citizen on behalf of the Government when he says those things, but he is accusing those people who do not agree with the Government's position as people who "deliberately set out to defy fact and reason". He, Ambassador Reisman, is saying that they are untruthful and he is accusing as being untruthful Members of Parliament to whom the Government and its servants, including Mr. Reisman, are accountable and responsible. He is accusing also of untruthfulness not only parliamentarians, like the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), and dozens and dozens of other Members of Parliament, but he is making the same accusations against millions of individual Canadians.

With respect to Members' privileges, I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to examine what Ambassador Reisman said. I want to tell you that if you find there is a prima facie case of a breach of Members' privileges I for one would be quite prepared to move the appropriate motion immediately.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is not the Chair's intention to have the House enter into a long debate on this matter. The Chair with regard to this particular matter is willing to hear the different House Leaders.

Ms. Copps: I rise on a different point, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will come back to the Hon. Member. On the same matter I believe the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) is rising.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that my colleagues have tried to raise this as a matter on the floor of the House. I think it demeans the debate. We are prepared to have a debate on the substance of the matter.

Mr. Tobin: No you are not.

Mr. Lewis: If one were to examine fairly the words quoted in the press one would find that no such comment was made. The best evidence I could give you of that are the remarks of the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon). If you check the blues you will find that the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor quoted properly the text of what was said as I read it in the newspaper. The best evidence of this comes from the very Party, the New Democratic Party, whose House Leader raised the matter. I would quote those same words but I do not have them in front of me. As I read the text in the newspaper this morning the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor, a Member of the New Democratic Party, was right on. He quoted accurately. He did not distort words and then went on to a question from that. The best evidence before you comes from the New Democratic Party—the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor. I submit there could be no point of personal privilege resulting from a broad comment made outside the House; that it can be said to affect a Member's privileges inside this House and thus be a question of personal privilege which either offends the Member because it was said in this House or prevents the said Member from doing his or her job properly as a Member of Parliament. It happens. We are in the public milieu. Comments are made.

Hon. Members in an effort to raise, not the substance of the issue, not the substance of the free trade debate, but mechanics, have made an effort to associate themselves with remarks they found offensive.

Mr. Tobin: That doesn't have anything to do with the question of privilege.

Mr. Lewis: We are all big people. This happens all the time. One could associate oneself for example with the remarks of Senator Hebert who referred to the Tory Party as "fascist". We did not raise that matter because we would not put a specious point of order or a specious question of privilege before you, Mr. Speaker. We know it happened in the other place where they have other problems. The remark was not made here and, therefore, we did not raise the matter. I still submit that the best evidence of exactly what was said, the evidence I ask you as a Member of the government side to base your decision on, is the evidence raised in the House of Commons by the Hon. Member from Essex who quoted correctly the remarks of Ambassador Reisman in the Journals today.

• (1210)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair, I believe, has the point with regard to the matter which we called this morning the "Reisman matter". The Chair will first find out exactly what was said. The Chair will reserve on the matter and get back to the House as soon as possible.

On a different question of privilege, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED ASSOCIATION BY MINISTER WITH UNACCEPTABLE REMARKS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the Chair, in reviewing the comments made and repeated on the Nazi question, that a Minister of the Crown this morning here in the House, specifically the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), associated herself with those remarks. I believe this is an important question of privilege and a different question of privilege because, while Mr. Reisman acting as an ambassador made comments outside the House, this morning in defending the ambassador, the Minister associated herself with remarks which, frankly, not only insult Canadians but, in particular, insult Members of Parliament and prevent us from carrying out our responsibilities. If there is supposed to be—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Are you against war veterans?

Ms. Copps: The Minister asks if I am against war veterans. The very point that must be examined vis-a-vis the Minister's association is why did we fight in those wars if not to prevent people, including the ambassador and representatives of the Government of Canada, from making the kinds of remarks that were made outside the House and that the Minister associated herself with in the House. That is why we fought wars.

When the Speaker is reviewing today's Question Period in Hansard, could he please examine the specific remarks made by the Minister for International Trade associating herself with the campaign attacking those people, who are opposing the bad deal of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), as Nazis and as being part of "the big lie" and Goebbels' information machine? By defending those remarks in the House, she did not dissociate herself from them. In fact, it took the Prime Minister to pull her up short in her seat and to ensure that he will review the matter and put this whole thing to rest.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief and technical on this.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): On what point?

Mr. Nystrom: On the point of Mr. Reisman and the comments of the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: First, the Chair does take as a separate point the question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). The Chair will look into the matter and will return to the House on that point.

The Chair has mentioned before that we do not want the House to get into a debate over what I called the "Reisman matter" this morning. However, I am willing to hear the Hon. Member on a specific matter on which I believe he wishes to cite Beauchesne's. But certainly the Chair is not in the mood to entertain further debate on the matter. I would be willing to listen to a legal argument if that were the case, albeit a short one.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, it is the same matter raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Mr. Tobin: I rise on a point of order. I would like the Speaker to know that it was my intention to rise on the same point of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) with respect to the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney). I do not know if the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) is on a different point or not.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will hear the Hon. Member on the second question of privilege. We are back for a minute, the Chair hopes, on the first question of privilege. The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

ALLEGATION BY SENIOR PUBLIC SERVANT—REISMAN

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): I will be very brief. The comment has been made that no specific accusation has been made against a specific Member. I want to refer to Mr. Speaker Jerome, a highly respected Speaker of this House back in the 1970s, who responded to a question of privilege raised by Walter Baker, a very distinguished House Leader of the Conservative Party. In that case a Mr. August Choquette had made a slanderous accusation against the House while giving testimony. Mr. Choquette was quoted as saying in open court that if everyone who had ever taken or given $600 or $700 in bribes in their life was arrested, 50 per cent of the MPs would no longer be sitting.

After citing various authorities in support of his position, Mr. Baker of the Conservative Party moved that the accusation that a substantial portion of the Members of House of Commons were receiving bribes be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. While the Speaker stated that he had no difficulty in agreeing that there was a question of privilege, he expressed some doubt as to the form of the motion.

Mr. Speaker Jerome said that in this case, the motion having been amended to include the name of Mr. August Choquette, constituted a question of privilege, and the Baker motion was adopted by the House. Mr. Speaker Jerome cites a whole number of Standing Orders and citations from Beauchesne's, but I will not bore you with those. They appear on page 26 of his book.

I think we should look into this matter because what the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) has said today in reference to the Reisman statements does have an impact on the privileges of all Members of the House. I think in this case, you should decide whether or not Walter Baker's motion of May 7, 1976, is indeed a precedent.

My last point is that I think the Minister for International Trade, in supporting what Mr. Reisman said, is also making a reflection on other Canadians who are not in a position to defend themselves on the floor of the House. They refer to a lot of ordinary Canadians who feel very strongly on this particular issue and are not able to defend themselves.

There are some precedents for that that I recall from my experience in the House as well. In those days, the Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) was a staunch defender of those ordinary Canadians who are not here in the House and not able to defend themselves.

ALLEGED ASSOCIATION BY MINISTER WITH UNACCEPTABLE REMARKS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the record should show clearly that the point of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), indeed repeated by myself, is not directed at the comments of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). The Prime Minister made what I believe to be an appropriate response in the House today when he undertook to check the record and respond back to the House at the first opportunity, presumably next week.

The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) was confronted as the Minister responsible for the ambassador with these remarks. Hansard will show, as soon as the Speaker has a chance to review her comments, that when confronted with the remarks reportedly made by the ambassador, the Minister did not dissociate herself from the remarks in responding to an NDP questioner. She did not take the position of the Prime Minister, who said that he would check the record and make an appropriate response in due course, but rather said that if the ambassador is suggesting that those who are engaged in a campaign against free trade—I am sorry, a separate point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not want to cut off the Hon. Member, but I think he is again getting into debate. If the Hon. Member has a specific point to raise, as did the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), I am certainly willing to hear it, but as the Hon. Member understands, the Chair does not want this debate to continue.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief. I am advising the Chair that if he checks the record, he will find that the Minister for International Trade has defended the notion that opposition Members are Nazis and are engaging in "the big lie", as was done by Nazis in World War II, in opposing the Government's free trade initiative. I advise the Chair that Hansard will show that, and I am asking the Chair to find that not only were those comments made outside the House by a Government representative, Ambassador Reisman, but that those comments have now been defended and in fact repeated in the House by a Minister of the Crown. That is beyond any doubt clearly in violation of the privileges of Members of this Chamber.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor) Mr. Speaker, since the Deputy House Leader (Mr. Lewis) has referred in such glowing terms to the setting forth of my question, I simply want to indicate that in my view it would be very important to look not just at the original stories dealing with Mr. Reisman's comments but at the stories which followed from committee yesterday in which Mr. Reisman first backed off from his statements and then appeared in press comments subsequent to the committee meeting to have reinforced and restated his opinions. I think it is both sets of newspaper reporting that should be examined.

• (1220)

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I want to make just one reference to Hansard in order to aid you in your decision-making. It is found at page 10166 of Hansard, October 20, 1987:

> Canadians should be asking which is worse, genuine racism or using racism as a tool? I suggest that this Government has been using racism as a tool to pass repressive legislation.

No one ever raised a question of privilege about it, but those words were spoken by the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly).

Mr. Manly: Very true!

Mr. Friesen: How is it that if a government Member is purported to have made that statement, it is seen as bad, yet when an opposition Member stands in this House and makes an accusation like that against the Government that is seen by members of the Opposition as being okay?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank Hon. Members for their representations. The Chair will, of course, look into both questions of privilege and report to the House.

CORRECTION TO STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Point of order, Mr. Speaker. During Question Period today, when I referred to the agreement sanctioned by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) during his very early days as Leader of the Liberal Party, I referred once correctly to it as an agreement and once incorrectly as a treaty. It was an agreement. It is nonetheless binding, but I want the record to show that my reference to the word "treaty" was an inaccurate reference.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the Hon. Minister.

The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) on a point of order?

Mr. Fulton: Question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

ALLEGED UNPARLIAMENTARY CONDUCT—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF RULING

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, word made its way to me just prior to eleven o'clock this morning that I was not going to be recognized during Question Period. I had a very serious matter to raise with respect to the Lubicon Indian Band. What I want to find out is precisely what the ruling is. The matter I was directly linked to was adjourned yesterday and my understanding of a matter that is adjourned is that a ruling is being considered, one way or the other.

It seems clear to me that once word arrives to me that I am not going to be recognized during Question Period, when there are important matters to raise, such as those affecting the Lubicon Band because of the decision made last night by the Government of Alberta—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): There are consequences to your actions, Jim.

Mr. Fulton: —it means that my rights as a Member are being tampered with.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): By yourself.

Mr. Fulton: I would like some clarification from the Chair as to exactly what the ruling is with respect to the matter raised on Wednesday. As I made clear to the Chair yesterday, it is not my intention to withdraw the remarks I made in relation to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

Mr. Speaker: Yesterday the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) took a position with the Chair that he would not withdraw remarks which are clearly unparliamentary, the kind of remarks which are not permitted here, never have been permitted here, and I think the wish of this House is that they will not be permitted here. Having done that, the Chair has one option; the Hon. Member could be named and put out of here for a couple of hours. In the opinion of the Chair that is no discipline whatsoever.

Second, I have asked the Hon. Member to reconsider his position. I have not put any time limits on it. I should also say that the Hon. Member for Skeena is very well and honourably known to me, not only as a colleague here, but personally. I have the very highest regard for the Hon. Member. I also think I can have some understanding for his feelings in this matter. However, no individual Member's feelings can take precedence over the rules and traditions of this place.

If the Hon. Member wishes to serve his constituents, then he must put himself back in grace in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

JUSTICE AND SOLICITOR GENERAL

TABLING OF GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General. This interim report deals with the very important problem of missing children. It is important to note that the study of this issue was brought about in no small measure by the deep concerns of the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby). He should be commended for his efforts.

IMMIGRATION

STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON IMMIGRATION LEVELS FOR 1988

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table the annual report to Parliament on immigration levels for 1988. This report embodies the view shared by many of my provincial counterparts and consultative partners in the private sector, that continued increases in immigration represent many benefits for Canadians, both from the practical standpoint of economics and in social and demographic terms.

For 1988 we are announcing a level range of 125,000 to 135,000, an increase of 10,000 over 1987. As Hon. Members know, this does not represent a target, a quota, or a ceiling, but simply a planning range supported by financial and human resources for our immigration program.

It should be noted in this regard that for the first time in many years it is anticipated that the 1987 actual landings will meet if not exceed the level set for this year. We expect a similar accomplishment in 1988 as well.

This kind of success demonstrates to Canadians that we place a great deal of importance on immigration as a vital part of Canada's development as a nation. There has been some discussion of increases being spread over a three-year period. While I considered this approach, I concluded a one-year announcement was appropriate. The basic reason for that is that my department is currently conducting a productivity review with External Affairs to consider ways in which a greater efficiency in processing immigrants could provide for a greater number of admissions. I would like to await the results of this review next year before considering what levels we should have in 1989 and beyond.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, many Canadians still believe the old story that immigrants steal jobs from Canadians, which is just not true. The increased consumption of goods and services due to immigration has the further effect of providing for a net increase in jobs and economic activity in this country. Canadians should realize that immigrant business people alone, who represent less than 3.5 per cent of all immigrants, annually inject more than $1 billion into the Canadian economy.

However, aside from the very significant economic benefits for Canada, the primary objective of Canada's immigration policy is still family reunification, which is reflected both in the principles underlying this report and in the increased levels forecast for 1988.

Mr. Speaker, we expect that 50,000 immigrants in the family class will be admitted to Canada in 1988. If more are eligible, they are welcome.

This figure is the highest one for family class immigrants since 1981. I may add that under the present Government, this figure has increased by more than 25 per cent since 1984.

I think it clearly shows how important family class immigration is to this Government, a policy that will be further reflected in changes that will expand the criteria for this class. These changes in the regulations will mean that individuals selected for immigration to Canada or being sponsored by family members already in Canada may include sons and daughters aged 21 or over, if they have never been married. Previously, children over 21 were not considered dependents and were assessed as assisted relatives.

In addition, the assisted relatives selection criteria will be amended to increase the additional number of points for married children and brothers and sisters from 10 to 15. These measures reflect the spirit and the intent of the recommendations of the standing committee and provide more opportunities for family members to be reunited.

Mr. Speaker, as we all know, the subject of immigrants and refugees has provoked some very lively debate in recent months. The policies and procedures inherited by this Government proved inadequate to cope with the new situations and new challenges, due especially to the general and increasing pressure of economic migration and to the ongoing question of genuine refugees.

[English]

The Government has therefore been required to take major initiatives to strengthen Canadian policy and to reaffirm Canada's obligations and responsibilities in these areas, both nationally and internationally. These measures ensure that Canada's immigration policy will remain open and outward-looking to all peoples of the world. We have opened up new opportunities for families to reunite. We have responded to the family reunification recommendations of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. We have streamlined the processing system for the family class.

At the same time, we have signalled clearly that Canada's refugee policy will no longer be available as an alternative avenue for immigration. We have taken interim control measures to manage the flow of illegal migrants. We have tabled a Bill on refugee determination designed to streamline that process and to curb abuse of the system. We have tabled a Bill to increase penalties for smugglers and prevent organized fraud.

We have also begun the productivity review I referred to earlier. In conjunction with the Department of External Affairs we are seeking ways to do more for less in the area of processing which it is to be hoped will lead to marked improvements in service for all our clients.

I would like to turn now to the annual refugee plan which is included in the report. I am concerned that recent criticism of the proposed refugee legislation has coloured the perception, not only of concerned refugee aid and advocacy groups, but of the average Canadian. I wish to make it absolutely clear that the longstanding generosity of the Canadian people to the legitimate refugee in need of Canada's protection is not only reaffirmed by the Government but enhanced.

The levels for landings of government-assisted refugees have been increased by 1,000 to 13,000 in 1988. This is an increase of some 30 per cent in direct government-sponsored refugees since the Government took office.

It is also expected, Sir, that some 2,000 people will be landed as refugees in the course of 1988 after determination by the Refugee Status Advisory Committee. As well, a planning range for humanitarian admissions under special circumstances has also been established and set at between 3,000 and 6,000. Finally, as all Members know, there remains no level or limit to private refugee sponsorship.

There are about 10 to 15 million refugees throughout the world. However, resettlement far from their country of origin is seldom the answer to their problems. The UN High Commissioner for Refugees prefers other solutions such as voluntary repatriation or resettlement in countries of first asylum in the same region.

However, for those who have no other option, resettlement in a third country, with the help of government and private sector, may be the answer.

Canada uses its acceptance program abroad to help refugees who are in greatest need and also to urge other resettlement countries to follow its example. In this respect, a concerted effort by the international community removes some of the pressure on countries of first asylum and encourages them to keep playing their essential role.

I may add that in response to concerns expressed by Canadian non-governmental organizations, the Government will sponsor increased numbers of refugees from Latin America and Eastern Europe in 1988.

I can, therefore, state before the House without any hesitation that since the present Government came to power, Canada's commitment to refugees the world over has never been as serious as it is now, and that as long as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) leads this Government, this trend will continue in the future.

Mr. Speaker, it is not a coincidence that nearly 100 countries, members of the Commonwealth and the francophonie, now see Canada as a source of moral leadership. These countries have placed their confidence in the courage and determination being shown by the Leader of this Government and of our country, never to compromise our principles on human rights.

[English]

We will fulfil, to an ever greater degree in the future than we have in the past, those humanitarian obligations we have freely entered into which have now become so vital a part of our national identity. We will continue to lead the world in seeking constructive solutions and answers to these critical international problems. This may prove to be especially significant as we begin to consider our own demographic situation in the years ahead.

If current below-replacement level fertility rates continue—and there is no reason to think they will not—Canada's population will begin to decline shortly after the turn of the century. Present net immigration levels—by that I mean immigration minus emigration—only slow and do not stop such an impending decline. A policy of long-term moderate and controlled growth in immigration established in the near future may deflect this outcome. It is something we must consider.

The growing complexity and urgency of this and other immigration issues, both national and international, underline the importance of the consultative process. It is my hope, therefore, that in the course of the coming year we shall find ways of broadening and expanding that process, new and better ways of communicating with our partners in the provinces, the non-governmental organizations, the legal and academic communities, and with Canadians themselves.

It has become fashionable to ridicule and belittle the words and phrases of political debate. That criticism, however, makes them no less valid, no less true. I should like to conclude this report with a reminder to all Members and all who may be listening of just how important immigration is to this country.

Immigration is one of the fundamental supports upon which Canada was founded and upon which we have developed ever since. It remains a powerful force in the lives of all Canadians. The benefits brought to the immigrant and the refugee, both economically and socially, can be seen in the kind of society we are—dynamic and industrious but compassionate and considerate as well. Respect—respect for one another, respect for the traditions we perhaps do not share in common, respect for the heritage we are creating together, and respect for the Canadian way is the gift of immigration.

The integrity of our policies is, therefore, absolutely vital. We have established ways and means, and they must be respected and upheld because it is through them that we stand ready to share our opportunities and the benefits of life in Canada, and to welcome them with a warmth unequalled by any nation. This is never more true than when it comes to the reunion of the family and the extension of sanctuary to the genuine refugee.

This report anticipates that Canadians will share this positive view of immigration, that they will be reassured by the steps the Government has taken to reaffirm its importance and, not least, that they will join us in realizing the importance of immigration to Canadian life.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Minister may rejoice and be pleased in tabling his report today, but that should be the extent of his pleasure because whatever his Government says these days, be it on trade, drugs, environment, science and technology, fisheries, cruise missiles, you name it, it lacks credibility, and the same must be said about immigration. We on this side of the House believe that the Government once again is misleading Canadians, and I will tell you why, Mr. Speaker.

First, today the Minister announces the increase from 125,000 to 135,000, yet only a few months ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) proclaimed that Canada should let in up to 200,000 immigrants. A few months ago the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) proclaimed 175,000. Today the Minister deflates his own Prime Minister's figures. Which are we to believe?

I will give another example. We all know how anxious Canadians are to reunify their families. Last year the Minister for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) projected a total of 105,000 to 115,000. Yet he admitted only 86,000 people. The Minister today is promising 50,000 family reunifications, yet he knows deep in his heart that he does not have the financial and personnel resources that are needed to process these people. In addition, last year he promised, for 1987, 45,000 family reunifications and delivered only 35,000, which represents 20 per cent below that projection.

Another area where promises were not kept is in humanitarian immigration. Last year the Minister promised 5,000 to 8,000 people. This year he back-pedalled to somewhere between 3,000 and 6,000 people.

The Minister's statement also lacks credibility because it deals only with figures. It contains not one word about services for an increasing number of projected new arrivals. Immigrants are more than just numbers, we must remind the Minister. In his statement he does not devote one word to immigration adjustment or to the services which are needed upon arrival by an increased number of people. What a shame.

To be taken seriously, the Government and the Minister have to rebuild lost confidence. Church groups, volunteer organizations, minority groups and immigration and refugee aid groups sharply and understandably criticized the Government last summer for its regressive and ill-conceived policies. A Bill introduced in this House in August, you will remember, Mr. Speaker, as an emergency measure, is still waiting to become law.

The Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) and I welcome the two promises made today. Persons selected to immigrate to Canada, or who are sponsored by family members already in Canada, will now be able to include their sons and daughters who are 21 years of age and over if these children have never been married. We welcome the promise made that the immigration selective system will be modified so that bonus points awarded to married sons and daughters and brothers and sisters will be increased from 10 points to 15 points. These are recommendations stemming from the standing committee and we now wait to see when and if these measures will be implemented.

Basically, there is a profound question of confidence at stake. It boils down to the question, can we have confidence in the promises made by the Prime Minister and this Minister in light of the performance of this Government? Canadians are wary of these promises.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I wish to begin by thanking the Hon. Minister for both the prompt and early delivery of his 1988 levels report to the critics and also for a generous appendix of useful statistics.

His report brings one important piece of hopeful news but unfortunately ducks or obscures most of the issues. The hopeful news, is that unmarried children over 21 years of age, we are told, will now be admitted as members of the family class. We understand that to mean without employment criteria, without being screened for education, skills, job offers, or any of the criteria which apply to independent immigrants and assisted relatives. If they are married, we are told, and come as independent immigrants, they will receive a 15 point bonus for kinship instead of a 10 point bonus, and we welcome that also.

We are also assured that if more than the planned 50,000 apply—and I welcome the increase in the planning from 45,000 to 50,000—and are eligible, they will be welcomed.

However, there is no promise to increase the overseas staff which a year ago was planned to be increased but was cut back by the action of the Department of External Affairs, and no promise to redeploy the overseas visa officers so as to reflect the actual volume of applications in different parts of the world. Therefore, it is very questionable whether the Minister can succeed in the increase he has promised.

The news, however, of the enlargement of the concept of the family is good news. It not only helps immigrants to settle into Canada, that is, by bringing in immigrants who already have a family to welcome them, it also directly benefits families in building family life, reflecting the Government's attention to the values of family life, and enabling Canadians to develop those small support systems that are centred in the family. For that the New Democratic Party is grateful because we have urged this change for several years, and we do commend the Minister for this move.

Otherwise, the news is mostly gloomy. It is mainly that the brain drain still reigns as the chief concern in Canada's immigration policy. The point system still tries to scoop the skilled and educated elite from around the world to Canada's benefit, regardless of what is done in the former colonial countries. Furthermore, there is very little practical result yet to be seen for the Minister's claim that he has streamlined and speeded up the immigration procedures.

There is also an interesting contrast. While the Minister has increased family reunification a little, the increase for refugees is stingy considering the needs of the persecuted and Canada's unusually rich resources. The Government is increasing the over-all planning level for Government sponsored selected refugees by only 1,000. It is cutting back by 3,000 on the planning level for humanitarian admissions. In other words, the Government, while it brags about stepping forward by 1,000—from 12,000 to 13,000—is in fact stepping backward by 2,000. That is in light of the fact that Canada's commitment is not merely narrowly to the UN convention on refugees but more broadly—which in the past years Canada has honoured—has a statutory commitment to a humanitarian goal in our immigration policy. That goal is being sharply reduced by the Minister.

We also have no assurance that there will be action to respond to the complaints of the churches, which have advised the Minister and the legislative committees that studied the Minister's repressive refugee legislation, of very specific details of how seriously the Government's red tape cuts back on the number of people that churches are able to sponsor. The churches, when they have undertaken a certain number of sponsorships, find that they cannot bring in all those people because of the Government's red tape.

For example, Chileans I know of in Buenos Aires, who have been recognized by the UN as refugees and sponsored by Canadian churches, have been refused by the Minister's Department for reasons that were never properly explained. Therefore, when the Minister says that he hopes that the churches will sponsor perhaps 7,000 or 6,000 refugees, he should have undertaken to cut the red tape which hinders them from doing that.

The third point is that while the Government has promised 2,000 refugee claimants to be landed by the refugee status advisory committee during the year 1988, he conceals the fact that these are cases left over from previous years. If Bill C-84 and Bill C-55 ever become law, that flow of claimants recognized in Canada will dry up very sharply since nearly all the claimants will be turned away unheard.

The Minister has bragged about the example that Canada sets to other countries of resettlement. The example that Canada will set, if Bill C-55 becomes law, is that a large number of people—according to the Government's estimates probably the majority—who come to Canada claiming refugee status will be sent away without the full oral hearing that is required by the Supreme Court of Canada's interpretation of our Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

They will be sent away without Canada having decided whether or not they are in fact refugees. They will be sent away to some other country, perhaps a country to which they passed through. The example Canada is setting is that we will not even ask, we will not even listen to their refugee claims. We will send them on, whether it is to Germany, France or wherever. We expect those countries to deal with that hot potato that we will not deal with. That is a disgraceful example. It is a denial of Canada's signature on the United Nations's Convention regarding the status of refugees.

There is another irony associated with the refugee policy of the Government which the Minister fails to acknowledge in his report. That is the role of the much attacked administrative review of the people who applied for refugee status. These people were examined for possible landing on non-refugee grounds by a decision a year and a half ago. They have been attacked by Ministers and by Members of the government Party as queue-jumpers. The fact is that without 6,500 of those people who were landed in 1986 from the administrative review, the Government would have fallen not 5,000 or more short of its 1986 planning level but about 11,000 short. So the Government's pride in almost reaching its level in 1986 is based in part on these people that it despises and calls queue-jumpers. In 1987, nearly 14,000 have already landed from the administrative review. Without that it is very doubtful that the Government would come close to this year's planned level of landings.

In the Government's allocation of the 1,000 increase planned for refugees selected overseas, the Government fails to take account of the situation that is mushrooming in Central America. With the increase of the death squad killings condoned by the Governments of Guatemala and El Salvador, which have yet to prosecute anyone for those killings except when they went so far as to kill American churchwomen in El Salvador, with that rise in the level of fascist-type terror in El Salvador and Guatemala, there needs to be a substantial increase in the planned levels for Central American refugees in Canada. There needs to be an increase at least in line with the 1986 totals from Latin America which were 4,735. Instead, the Government has provided only an increase from 3,200 to 3,400 for all of Latin America.

As well as ignoring what is happening in Central America, the Government is ignoring what is happening with one of our trading partners, Chile, a country to which this country has from time to time shipped war goods. The Government now, through its so-called access to information law, prevents people from finding out what is being shipped there in the way of war goods. Chile has intensified the repression even beyond anything that has existed in the last dozen years in that country. That is not recognized or taken into account by the Government's proposed planning for refugee acceptance.

I do recognize, and I strongly support, that the Government has doubled the Middle East and West Asia planned level. It has brought it up from 900 to 1,800. I hope that this will include a substantial increase of several hundred for Afghan refugees in Pakistan, India or other nearby countries. The designation of West Asia-Middle East is a very broad designation covering an area that has many millions of refugees from several different sources of conflict. But the record of Canada in failing to consider Afghan refugees is another disgraceful record. I hope the Government is on the way to remedying that.

Therefore, I thank the Minister for his report, particularly in the matter of enlarging the concept of family reunification. I hope he will take the administrative measures and provide the resources to carry out the plans he has announced. I strongly urge the Government to reconsider the administrative changes and even legislative and policy statement changes which do not reflect the reality of Canada's obligation to refugees and to the people in humanitarian need that come to Canada or desire to come to Canada. These are people who would have a good case for coming to Canada, if the Minister would listen to them.

JUDGES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-88, an Act to amend the Judges Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

STRIKING COMMITTEE

CONCURRENCE IN THIRTY-SEVENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, if the House gives its consent, I move, seconded by Mrs. Vézina, that the Thirty-seventh Report of the Striking Committee, tabled earlier today, be concurred in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have the unanimous consent of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PETITIONS

REQUEST FOR IMPROVEMENT TO MAIL DELIVERY SYSTEM IN PRINCE ALBERT, SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of a group of citizens from the City of Prince Albert. The petitioners suggest that certain areas of the City of Prince Albert should have mail delivery service equal to the service provided to every other area in the city, and that the imposition of supermailboxes lowers the value of property. They suggest that there be a halt to the installation of supermailboxes, that carrier service be provided, or the level of service in group boxes with no charge maintained.

This petition is signed by approximately 60 petitioners.

I have another petition, Mr. Speaker, which states that the petitioners in this particular area would rather have the old boxes than the new ones.

I am unable to present this petition because of a technicality. It is signed by 200 petitioners.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I request that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement, Government Orders will be extended by 32 minutes. Therefore, Private Members' Hour will begin at 2.32 p.m.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-87, an Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters and to amend or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words on this Bill. Although it is a technical Bill, with a technical title, it is not a very difficult Bill to understand. It is an intimidating Bill in the sense that the Ways and Means motion on which the Bill is based is contained in two very large volumes of approximately 3,000 pages. Consequently, although the Bill itself is not major, it means many things to many different organizations and groups involved in the movement of goods across the border.

The principles of the Bill are very simple. It harmonizes the description of commodities and the coding systems that are now used for tariffs. It is interesting to note that this is the first change in the coding and the structure of tariffs since Confederation. To some extent, that has been brought on by the fact that we are in almost continuous negotiations with other trading nations of the world. Because of the GATT negotiations and other agreements we have been signing, it has become necessary to have this type of harmonization of terms and coding.

Our present system is complex, surprisingly so because we have too few categories into which things may be slotted. There are only 12 categories or groups used in the coding of products. Consequently, it is quite common for the products or goods to fall into the wrong category because of the simple grouping.

In the present tariff structure, there are approximately 3,500 tariff items. This seems to be a large number, but because of the complexity of our trade these days it is very difficult to recognize into which category or group the goods fall. This is being increased to approximately 8,000. In many cases, it is a simple subdivision of items that are presently in the tariff codes. Again, it is because of the increased complexity of our trade and the GATT negotiations that we deal with from time to time. Hopefully, most of those GATT changes will assist in speeding up the movement of goods through the customs offices.

I am sure that every Member in the House has received a complaint from importers or exporters on the delays of either getting goods out or in. Any reform which would increase the ability or the time it takes to get a particular item into the country would be considered worth-while.

This Bill provides for the Customs Tariff, and at this particular time in our country when we are negotiating the Mulroney-Reagan agreement on trade, it is interesting that this Bill has come forward at this time to make the type of changes which should have been made some time ago.

• (1310)

It is a fairly technical Bill which restructures the Customs Tariff according to the principles of harmonized commodity description as indicated before. If it is accepted internationally and is based upon a system of standardization, it should clarify and improve the statistical base on which we now define our trade.

The Bill is being brought forward to some extent in exactly the same scenario as the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement has been negotiated, in that we are uncertain exactly what it means and why it is important to have the Bill passed quickly at this particular time.

I believe it was yesterday that the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) read into the record a letter from the Automotive Industries Association of Canada. I would like to refer to a couple of points in that letter which show that there is a parallel between this Bill and the trade agreement and that perhaps we are moving a little fast in both cases. According to the letter, the association believes that the implementation date of January 1, 1988 for the new harmonized tariff system must be set back at least three months to April 1, and that such action would parallel the three-month setback being provided in the United States for comparable legislation. It also indicates that the document, some 3,000 pages long, will receive no more than a cursory examination by a majority of Members of Parliament, and that it feels pressed because it does not understand the effect of the changes in the Bill.

As I said, we have a parallel here with the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement. Again we are being pressed to accept a Bill or an agreement for which we do not have a final text. Of course we will get the final text a few weeks before it will be signed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States. In both these parallel cases the citizens of Canada, Members of the House of Commons, and the people involved in trade will find themselves in a position of signing something which they do not really understand or being presented with something on which they have not had an opportunity to express their opinions sufficiently. It is very important to make note of that now before the Bill goes to committee.

Another suggestion of the Automotive Industries Association of Canada was that it needs more time to understand it better. It also recognized that the House of Commons operates under a certain amount of pressure and therefore requires more time to understand the kinds of laws being made, just as we in the Opposition and many other people across Canada would like to understand the effects of the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement on our industries and on our economy.

Also, the letter from the Automotive Industries Association of Canada indicated that a significant portion of Canadian industry exists because of the end use made or not made in Canada. To abandon completely that concept without a satisfactory conversion period could result in a shifting of manufacturing capabilities to plants outside Canada. Although the association favours the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States, if we can call it a free trade agreement, a minimum of a five-year phase-in is needed.

Again I suggest that the same concept must be applied to the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal. More time is necessary. There should be no suggestion that it be passed now and that Parliament or the country be locked into that trade agreement on the basis of the very little information we have now and the very little information which seems to be forthcoming, since we were told that we will not get the final text of the agreement until probably the end of November. Also, it is supposed to come into effect early in January. More time is needed in both cases.

I want to refer to another area of concern about the harmonization Bill. On June 6, 1986 the Tory Government imposed a 10 per cent duty on books and periodicals in response to the 35 per cent tariff which the Americans had imposed upon Canadian shakes and shingles. They imposed duties on other items as well, but I want to deal with the duty on periodicals and books. That retaliatory action injured the very industry which it was designed to protect—the Canadian book publishing and printing industry. It increased the cost of books. Book sellers and publishers found, therefore, that the public was less inclined to buy books.

The Canadian book publishing and printing industry was outraged at the choice the Government had made in its response and made clear that the Government's decision to impose a 10 per cent duty was jeopardizing its already fragile enterprise. A lot of harm was done in a very short time, from June 6 until it was removed in February, 1987. I suppose its removal in February, 1987 proved its ineffectual response to U.S. tariffs.

Bill C-87 retains the current statutory rate of duty on books and periodicals. However, the items continue to enter Canada duty-free, because a remission order allows the duty to be rebated at a later date. We have had a second attack on the movement of books and periodicals throughout the country. One of the requirements of the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement is to remove the favourable postal rates for Canadian magazines moving across the country. Without this favourable postal rate the Government might just as well have reimposed the 10 per cent duty on books instead of a remission order to be rebated. The system rebating duties is quite common in our structure of customs and duties. If you take a look at the Public Accounts tabled last week you will see pages and pages containing remission orders worth billions of dollars. If you try to follow them through you will find that it is practically impossible. The Auditor General in his report on Tuesday put his finger on this whole area of accountability because he feels, as do many Members, that the process of accountability on remission orders is minimal. Something should be done. In the bookselling industry the idea that you must pay the duty and then ask for a remission order to get it back is a hardship. Many of our bookstores and publishing firms are not that well off. They find it hard to pay the duty and get it rebated later.

I see that I should come to a close, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nickerson: You should.

Mr. Hovdebo: Duties are almost a fancy with many people. I am sure the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) recognizes that most people do not know that they are paying duty. Most people do not even realize that duties have been added on to the price of the goods they buy. They pay hidden taxes without too much complaint, and it behooves us as Members of Parliament to be sure that the amount of the duty and the process by which duties are imposed is done fairly and properly. To do that more time should be given so that industries and individuals affected can have an opportunity to voice opinions pro or con on how the duty is being imposed, the size of the duty or even the code slot into which the particular good or product is being placed.

We then accept as Members of Parliament, as does the Government which makes the decision on duties, the responsibility of making sure that the almost insidious process of taxation that goes with duties not recognized by the individual paying them are correct. We should take the time not only in the approach on this Bill but in the efforts we make to amend it in committee to be sure that we know what is going on.

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, I heard the socialist Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) refer to a letter from the Automotive Industries Association stating that it was not in full agreement with the Bill concerning the customs harmonized system. What needs to be said, Mr. Speaker—and our socialist colleague should have mentioned it—is that the letter is based on what is now dated information and on a faulty interpretation of the Bill. We did whatever was required to have Department of Finance representatives get in touch with the association.

Since the Hon. Member for Prince Albert went to the trouble of focusing on an allegedly negative response to our Bill, I believe he should have listed as well the many associations which did express support for this measure, such as the Canadian Association of Customs Brokers, the Canadian Importers Association, the Canadian Manufacturers Association, the Motor Vehicle Manufacturers Association, the Canadian Association of Provincial Liquor Boards, the Information Technology Association of Canada, the Aerospace Industries Association of Canada, the Canadian Horticultural Council, the Canadian Fruit Wholesalers Association, the Canadian Chemical Producers Association, the Association of Canadian Distillers, and the Canadian Textile Institute.

I would also have liked my colleague from Prince Albert to tell us where he stands with respect to Bob White's position, he who lives off the auto workers, he who is paid with the union dues of the very people who have enjoyed free trade since 1965, something they are defending so staunchly. Finally, still with resprct to free trade, I would have liked to hear the comments of the Hon. Member for Prince Albert concerning the position of their real leader, the one who pays them, the one who finances their political Party, the one who does their advertising with money earned since 1965 through free trade in the car manufacturing industry. I would have liked to hear just where he stands concerning his real leader, his financial backer, Bob White.

[English]

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, maybe it was in the translation, but I think the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) did not understand what I said. I did not suggest that the Automotive Industries Association of Canada, which has nothing to do with the union—this is the bosses association—and the New Democratic Party were against the Bill. The need to make changes in codifying and recognizing what slot a particular good should fall into is not being questioned at all. The two huge volumes made up of over 3,000 pages need careful scrutiny. That is what the association is asking for. It is not showing itself as being particularly against the Bill and neither are we as a Party against the idea of sophisticating to some extent the process of codified products crossing the border. Harmonizing does just that, and we think that it should have been done a long time ago. The Member from Lévis seems to be very confrontational in his approach suggesting that both the letter and the New Democratic Party are against the program. We are suggesting to Members of this House that we have a responsibility to make sure that we pass good legislation.

• (1330)

Back in 1984, the Prime Minister, and I am sure the Hon. Member himself, told their constituents that when they formed the Government, they would consult. That is all we are asking for. Let us consult the people who are most involved in the movement of goods and find out if the things we are suggesting might be wrong or might take more time to implement.

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, the Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) advises us to consult. That is exactly what I was saying. Our Government is consulting the public on major legislative projects, whereas the socialist Party is listening to Bob White, their big financial backer. By listening only to Bob White, the socialist Party is not working for Canada, but for Oshawa where the auto workers are well paid because of free trade. The socialist Party doesn't want the rest of Canada to get benefits similar to those resulting from the free trade deal of 1965. They do not agree to that and they only listen to the advice of the guy who gives them orders, who wants something for Oshawa and nothing for Canada.

[English]

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, again I point out that these are the bosses and they have nothing to do with Bob White particularly, except that they must recognize that if they do not get along with Bob White, they will have problems.

The industry has not had seven years to gear up to this new harmonized trade structure, but the Government has had that time. Therefore, the association has said the following in a letter:

> We have had less than seven months to obtain and digest information and respond. We respectfully request that you delay implementation of the new HTS until both Government and industry are ready—April 1 at the earliest.

I am suggesting as well that the consultation process has not been long enough. This legislation requires that the Bill be put into effect on January 1. If it goes into effect on January 1, automobile suppliers and others who deal with goods crossing the border will not have had enough time to read those 3,000 pages and be sure their industries will not be negatively affected by the law after this Bill is passed.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of my hon. friend from Prince Albert. Given that the industries association points out in some of the correspondence it has had with all Members of Parliament that a report it is preparing along with Government as to how to handle the proposed amendments to this new harmonized trade system will not be printed in November as originally hoped for and will now not be available until some time in April of 1988, I ask how we can expect to implement legislation until the rules and regulations are finalized. How can we in good conscience pass something like this when the rules and regulations are not final, are not understood by the industry, nor even in fact available to the industry? Why should we make it effective until those rules and regulations are before the public?

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the point I have been making. In fact, the report to which my hon. colleague referred will not be available by January 1; it will probably not be available until April. These organizations feel that implementation, even immediately after the report, is complete will not give them enough time. They say, at the least wait until April 1, but if possible, wait even longer.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak to Bill C-87, an Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges. This Bill is certainly an important one. As the previous speaker mentioned, it has been in the making for a number of years and is basically directed at providing a comprehensive revision of the Customs Tariff that will govern the application of duties on goods imported into Canada.

I think there are very few of us who would disagree that it is important that we attempt to restructure our tariff system according to the principles of a harmonized commodity description and coding system and to move to a more comprehensive, internationally-based system so that Custom Tariff classifications and trade data are standardized.

I do not think we have great difficulty with that, but it is a very complex Bill. It sets out a greater number of items than those that are in the existing legislation, some 8,000 as compared to the existing 3,500. This may be quite appropriate in order to refine the system so that it is more understandable to those affected.

As a relatively new Member of the House, one of the comments one most often hears from the average Canadian is that much of what we do is incomprehensible. I suppose I can agree with that in part, and hope I do not add to that too much. Given the seriousness of this Bill and its complexity, it is important that this House take the time and give the time to those affected to really understand and study the Bill.

It is important to reiterate that this kind of Bill does not affect many Members of the House but certainly affects a large number of small and large business people. We in the New Democratic Party are very supportive of the business community and understand that many small businesses, and I can speak for those in my riding of the Yukon, do not have the personnel to allow staff members to devote however much time is necessary just to study this 3,000 page Bill. Therefore, it takes them much longer to understand all of its ramifications on their particular businesses and industries.

Another speaker has mentioned that many of these tariffs are hidden to the consumer. They are built into the price. It is therefore extremely important—and again I want to refer to small business in particular—given the fragility of many small businesses which work on very small profit margins and must understand clearly any legislation which affects consumer prices and their ability to import and export goods.

Again, while the intent of the legislation is not one with which we disagree, it is incumbent upon Members of this House to ensure that those affected, the business people as well as consumers, are given sufficient time to understand completely the ramifications of the legislation and to be able to address them in a forum in which they can make their views known.

We just had an exchange between two Members of this House regarding some comments by the Automotive Industry Association that the implementation schedule for this new harmonized tariff system, set for January 1, 1988, be set back at least two months. Added to that, it was pointed out that the rules and regulations under which this Act will function will not be ready until at least three months after that date, probably around April. Legislation is one thing, but if you are in business and you are affected by any legislation, you must take the time to really understand the rules and regulations. If we have 3,000 pages to go through in the one instance, the rules and regulations will of course be equally complex.

I mention again the particular limitations of small business. We in the NDP certainly feel that small business is one of the stand-bys of Canadian business, and we know that the majority of jobs created in Canada are the result of the efforts of the small business person. I might mention that in The Globe and Mail today there was a very good article about the role of women in small business and how successful business run by women has been.

This request simply to extend the time so that everyone can understand what is happening does not seem unreasonable to me. We have just been through a very lengthy debate on the Meech Lake Accord. One of the very basic criticisms one hears as you go around this country is that there was not sufficient time for people to be consulted about that Accord. It was seen that First Ministers agreed to it in a very short time with little public consultation. That is a responsibility and a charge which I think everyone in this House must address.

It is a similar situation with the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement. We are being asked to sanction the free trade road show which is going to go around the country listening to people's views. That is very important, but again it is to be done within a very short time frame, with a very clear objective, and one wonders how many average Canadians will get on the agenda when those hearings arrive in their community. I certainly hope that, unlike other such hearings, the committee makes sure it goes to the Northwest Territories and Yukon where there are many questions about this agreement. We see some parallels here in that this is a complex Bill and we think it reasonable that the people affected have the time to consider it.

One can understand why the Canadian public seems to get a little confused at times by some of the things that happen as a result of the passage of this legislation. I have mentioned before that even the title is pretty difficult for people to understand. I am not necessarily criticizing it, but the public sometimes gets a couple of different messages from people when it is explained what it will mean to them. I would like to give some examples of that in the current Mulroney-Reagan trade debate.

In 1983 Maclean's magazine said that David Crombie—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ellis): The Hon. Member should know that personal names are not used. I know I am going to get some points of order if she does not refer to Members by their riding or ministry.

Ms. McLaughlin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) said in 1983, according to Maclean's magazine, referring to the free trade deal, that, "It's silly". I do not know that I would use such highly technical language, but it certainly is confusing for a number of people. I want to give a few examples of that.

Recently, in fact last week in Washington, a U.S. Republican Senator, Mr. Murkowski, called Canada's position on Alaskan oil development inconsistent with our position in favour of wilderness designation of the Alaskan coastal plain. If you are not familiar with it, that issue concerns the Arctic national wildlife refuge which contains the largest caribou herd, the one of a kind porcupine caribou herd, on which many people from my riding rely for their existence. We have had negotiations with the Americans on this issue, and in support of the Government I must say that it has been very supportive of the idea of having this area designated as a wildlife refuge. However, at the same time, in the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement, we seem to have negotiated access to Prudhoe Bay oil. What Senator Murkowski says is: Make up your mind. On the one hand you are saying, "Keep this land a wild refuge", and on the other you say, "Open up areas for access to oil". This is confusing to the Americans, to the average Canadian, and pretty confusing to me. We seem to be giving two messages to people.

Certainly this tariff Bill is an extremely important Bill to understand because there is so much discussion right now about the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal. I believe there will be some considerable confusion in the public's mind because so many people hear every night on television and read in the newspapers various and sundry versions of the deal. Of course, we have not seen a final version, what it will mean, and so on. Some people will assume there is some link here. I am not suggesting that. However, there are a few things we have to point out about the trade deal which have led to some of this confusion.

First, in the free trade deal we saw the U.S. get most of what it wanted. It wanted full access to Canadian energy supplies and got it. It wanted an open market for investment in Canada, and it got that. This is also the first time that free trade in services was included in a trade pact. There is some question that this might be a model the U.S. can use at GATT to open up services world-wide.

We have had much discussion in this House about Bill C-22, the drug Bill, and I will not go into that. Yet the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement calls into question our ability to stand up for Canadian sovereignty, Canadian direction and protection of our intellectual property.

Another area I would like to mention briefly concerns the elimination of western grain transportation subsidies. To say a word about subsidies, when speaking in our various communities one often picks up the idea, quite well promulgated by the Americans, that the U.S. has a free enterprise system, and there are really no subsidies. It is a market where the strongest will survive, they know how to do it, and they have made a strong rich country on that basis. A little bit of that is true, but like every myth, some of it is a bit of an exaggeration. It is important for Canadians to remember that the American economy in many sectors is very heavily subsidized by individual states as well as the federal Government. It would be wrong to say that the Canadian economy is a heavily subsidized economy compared to that of the U.S. The same would be true about the whole tariff agreement as well.

Finally, I would like to say that in the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement there are two areas in particular which give people in Canada some cause for concern. They are related to a suspicion or unease about whether we are in fact protecting Canadian sovereignty. I believe that people intuitively realize that the economy of a country of 250 million people will be basically different from that of a country of 25 million people. They must have different systems. Our geography, our climate, and the fact that we have, as in the North, widely dispersed areas, require a degree of subsidization if Canadians who live in Rankin Inlet or Old Crow are to receive the same benefits as the average Canadian, given the obvious limitations of living in the far North.

Sometimes when studying the equalization of a standard of life for Canadians we look at some regions, north of the 60th parallel as an example, as a sort of welfare state subsidized by taxpayers rather than as an investment and part of the future of the country.

I want to speak briefly about the development of a continental energy policy. There are a lot of questions about whether Canada will retain sovereignty and control, whether we will have made-in-Canada prices for oil and gas, whether we will have controls in times of shortage, and whether Canada will be able to direct its own economy in this area. This is a big concern to the North.

The second area which goes along with this in a very significant way is foreign investment review. The level of assets for companies subject to foreign investment review has been raised from $5 million to $150 million. There are only a few hundred companies in Canada which fall within that category.

I have tried to illustrate that there is a general suspicion with regard to all trade and trade-related activities. I put this Bill in that category because it deals with tariffs. There is a suspicion that we are not standing up for our sovereignty and are not getting the best deal. There are many aspects of the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal which have made people uncertain about whether we have really stood up for ourselves or have allowed ourselves to fall down and become the fifty-first state.

Requests such as that by the Automotive Industry's Association should not be pushed aside. They simply want, as I suspect many larger and smaller associations do, an opportunity, not to defeat the Bill or to be obstructive, but only to understand what the implications are for them. It is unfortunate that when Canadians want to question something they are seen as being obstructive and in opposition rather than only wanting to understand what the implications are for them and their role.

I hope this Bill will go to committee and that the Government will take these concerns seriously. I know the Government would want businesses to understand this legislation. I urge that this recommendation be studied very closely.

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of commenting on the remarks of the Hon. Member for Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin), but since she chose to talk about the free trade agreement I, too, would like to say a few words on this subject.

First, I should like to remind her that on May 10, 1965, right here in the House of Commons, Mr. Tommy Douglas who was then Leader of the socialist Party had this to say about free trade in the automobile industry, and I quote: "The other criticism we have of this agreement is that it appears to make no provision at all for the employees in the automobile industry who will be displaced as a result of it."

But I must point out to my colleagues that since then, as a result of free trade in the automobile industry, we export $33 billion a year to the United States and 840,000 people depend on that industry for a living. Assuredly she is under instructions from Bob White, who is contriving to use workers' funds to further the socialist Party's political goals, but she should remember her party's position 30 years ago, the results of which we are seeing now. And today those same people are opposed to free trade. They are alarmists, Mr. Speaker, alarmists who remind me of another union leader, Jacques Proulx, the Chairman of Quebec's UPA, who says he is looking forward to a stock market crash. He hopes the stock market downgrade will go on so that it will harm and put an end to free trade negotiations.

Mr. Speaker, the members of his organization, the farm owners should, in view of those irresponsible and virtually idiotic suggestions, demand the immediate resignation of Mr. Jacques Proulx who is hoping for the collective demise of our Quebec small businesses due to the stock market crash. It is just as idiotic as the position taken by my colleague for Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin) against free trade, as the position taken by all the people ruled by Bob White, who uses money earned because of free trade to deprive other Canadians across Canada of the benefits he wants to monopolize in the riding of Oshawa, the riding represented by the socialist leader (Mr. Broadbent).

[English]

Ms. McLaughlin: Mr. Speaker, I always appreciate the instructive comments of the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine). I will certainly speak to Bob White and Shirley Carr the next time I see them and convey the Member's comments to them.

Mr. Fontaine: Come to my riding.

Ms. McLaughlin: I would be happy to do that as well. I am sorry that I do not have the historical perspective to refer back to 1965. I would like to say that I was not born then, but that would be incorrect. I will, however refer to a few comments made by the current Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) as quoted in Maclean's magazine in 1983. With regard to free trade he said:

> Unrestrained free trade with the United States raises the possibility that thousands of jobs could be lost in such critical industries as textiles, furniture and footwear. Before we jump on the bandwagon of continentalism, we should strengthen our industrial structure so that we are more competitive.

The term "free trade" is extremely misleading. I would have thought that someone from his side of the House would not have thought there was a free lunch and would not be trying to tell the Canadian people that there is a free lunch by using that statement. This is a Mulroney-Reagan trade deal.

[Translation]

Mr. Leblanc: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a fairly direct question to the Hon. Member for the NDP and socialist Party, as my colleague said earlier. What does she have to say about the fact that entrepreneurs, investors, business people and all our captains of industry are in favour of free trade? How come—I must say I think this is horrifying and I can't understand why they do this—how come the New Democratic Party and a number of labour leaders are against free trade, when at the same time, the people who do the investing and who take the risks, the people who are responsible for the money they invest, how come they are in favour of free trade, and their employees or perhaps rather their representatives—In fact, I talked to several employees and union members who said they did not support the negative statements made by their union leaders.

What we have here is a complete paradox. The person who has the responsibility and who does the risk taking says he is in favour of free trade, and the person who does not take the risks is against free trade, and with him the NDP. I don't understand. Would the Hon. Member care to comment?

• (1400)

[English]

Ms. McLaughlin: Mr. Speaker, as a former business person myself, I would like first to say that we in the New Democratic Party speak to both businessmen and businesswomen. There is no homogeneous opinion. I think that must be quite clear to members opposite as it is to members on this side of the House. That is what the debate of the Mulroney—Reagan trade deal is all about. There is no homogeneous opinion from businessmen or businesswomen.

I would say that there are many people in my riding, and in other ridings, to whom I have spoken, particularly small business people, who are extremely concerned not about just the short-term implications, but about the long-term implications. We are looking to the future of Canada, not to Canada in 1989 but to Canada in the year 2009 and 1999. I believe one of the things we are here to do is to debate those different perspectives with both businessmen and businesswomen.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker—and I see we have a very distinguished Speaker this afternoon—I would like to speak on the Broadbent-White opposition to the free and fair trade agreement. However, first I would like to read something into the record:

> Expansion of our trade with any and all countries willing to trade on a fair and equitable basis will benefit both ourselves and them. Careful planning is needed to adjust our production to the trade requirements of a fully employed economy. Tariffs are out-moded patchwork attempts to protect domestic industry; they restrict trade while giving less and less protection to the home industry.

One would think that this comes from the Conservative Party manual, but it does not. It comes from the New Democratic Party, a Party which is all over the map. It has policy conferences, all kinds of statements and policies on trade as of last March, but after those Members come away from their convention, they take a totally different position. I would like to quote some of the New Democratic Party trade resolutions; first, "Increased activities promote trade". That is what we are doing. The New Democratic Party has other policies. There is one thing about the NDP, one always knows where it stands. It has two positions, for and against it. I will give you, Mr. Speaker, another statement: "Pursue mature state-to-state relationship and cease to deal with the U.S. on an issue-by-issue basis". Why has the NDP not stuck with that policy that it supported last March? I find it very strange that that Party has walked away from it. Here is another one: "Focus Canadian efforts on resolving specific disputes". That is exactly what we are doing. The NDP goes on to say: "Explore sectoral free trade with the U.S. and other countries with production safeguards similar to the Auto Pact". That is exactly what we are doing.

The Hon. Speaker knows all about what the socialists and labour unions did when they formed the European Economic Community. They were howling and screaming against it. Now there are 13 countries in the European Economic Community. Thousands and thousands of jobs have been created. Nobody lost their identity, their culture, their heritage, and we do not hear a squeak or a peep out of the unions, the labour movement or the socialists in the European Economic Community now. And we will silence them all before we are finished.

Ms. McLaughlin: I just remind the Hon. Member that the Democratic Party—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ellis): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the time for questions and comments has expired. However, we will give her just a moment to respond briefly.

Ms. McLaughlin: I will just briefly say that the New Democratic Party does not stand for hitching itself to one star, that is, the United States, which will just drag it down, but, rather, it supports multilateral trade with the United States and other countries, sector by sector, and having our economy designed and directed by us, not by the United States.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I always enjoy the interjections by my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie). Having quoted the New Democratic Party trade policy and industrial economic policy for Canada, and saying he agrees with them—I think that was the implication—I am prepared to sell the Hon. Member a membership to the New Democratic Party any day. I would be pleased to do that. As long as there is no IQ test attached to it, we will be okay.

What we are witnessing here as the afternoon wears on is obviously some sensitivities. We saw earlier that the key negotiator, Mr. Reisman, the Ambassador negotiating for Canada, was so frustrated, he started to call his opponents Nazi supporters, or tried to equalize those of us who oppose this to the Nazis or at least to taking on the personality of Joseph Goebbels of Adolf Hitler's regime. That is getting pretty low. That is about as low as we have now come in this interchange when those kinds of insults are hurled by the Ambassador, who is paid by the taxpayers of Canada to represent all the people of Canada, not just one side of this discussion.

It is a very important discussion and I suspect that what is reflected is anxiety. The Government has taken a very clear position that its economic policy for the future is to tie the economics of Canada to the falling star of the United States economy. Those of us who tend to question that are now being called names. The Government has to find a bogeyman rather than admit that perhaps it has erred. Perhaps the problem with the Government, as reflected in the popularity polls—the Government is now at 24 per cent for the fourteenth straight month—is a result of all these initiatives. It should do the honourable thing and take a look at itself. What is the problem?

The Government blames others. It blames the press for all the bad press it receives. It blames the opposition Members, the small Opposition in the House of Commons against the overwhelming parliamentary majority of the Government. It has now even got to calling people opposed to its policies, whether it is a trade union leader, business leader or farm leader, Nazis.

I can understand the frustration, but, if I may be permitted to suggest, the Government should go back and listen to some of its Party spokespersons in years past, people who have stood up for what they believe, in the best interests of Canada. I refer to no other than Sir John A. Macdonald. If he were standing in the House of Commons today, he would walk across the aisle to this side of the House. He would be standing on the opposition side opposing this sell-out to the United States, opposing a continentalist energy policy. I would challenge my Conservative friends opposite to identify a single speech, a single comment made by Sir John A. Macdonald, advocating a continentalist energy policy. That is challenge number one.

Let me offer another challenge, Mr. Speaker, particularly to my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). Could he identify that in any of the hundreds of thousands of speeches that John Diefenbaker gave in this House and outside the House, a parliamentarian par excellence, a Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, who had a vision of what this country should be? It was a country that saw itself as putting Canada first, not a foreign country, not the United States. He stood in this House of Commons day after day, month after month, year after year, and gave speeches saying it was time Canada got control of its economy and its destiny and built on it with the kind of resources, both human and natural, we have.

If John Diefenbaker were here today, he would also be crossing the floor. We would have a migration of good Conservatives cross the floor of the House of Commons. We would have to expand the walls, push them back, to allow all of these thoughtful, traditional Conservatives to stand on this side of the House. Mind you, we might balance it, because the Liberals would all be moving to the other side, historically.

Mr. Taylor: Let's talk about the living.

Mr. Riis: Well, how about we starting off with the past Prime Minister of Canada, the Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), who is now Secretary of State for External Affairs, when the question was put to him prior to the last federal election? After all, there is no mandate for this Government to impose a Mulroney-Reagan trade deal on the people of Canada. As a matter of fact, it is quite the contrary. When the question was put to the previous Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Hon. Member for Yellowhead, he said this, "Unrestricted free trade trade with the United States raises the possibility that thousands of jobs would be lost—". He said that thousands of jobs would be lost.

• (1410)

Then, just a few days ago, Mr. Speaker, you will remember that the Minister responsible for employment echoed those figures when he said that as many as 500,000 jobs may be lost.

Mr. Manly: Maybe more.

Mr. Riis: Maybe more, maybe less.

He is a thoughtful man. He is a man who understands the economy of this country. He understands the clauses of the trade deal. He demonstrated he had the courage of his convictions when he told the truth. He said as Minister of Employment responsible for the employment of Canada, "I predict that it is possible that we could lose 500,000 jobs". He was simply echoing the words of our present Secretary of State for External Affairs.

One could go on to others who are living, I might add to my hon. friend from Crowfoot, some of the living Members on the government front-benches. I go to the Secretary of State of Canada (Mr. Crombie). When he was asked what he thinks about free trade he said, "It's silly. Canada must improve relations in trade with the United States, of course. But our national destiny is to become a global leader, not America's weak sister". Those were the words of our present Secretary of State. I respect him for those views. He is an honourable man. He tells the truth. He tells it as it is.

Who can I go to next? I suppose one of the people for whom I have a great deal of respect in this House, and I suspect most Canadians do, in spite of our political differences, is the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), who I think is one of the few front-benchers who really does lend a sense of dignity to this place. The following question was put to him as a person who was soon to become the Minister of Finance responsible for the fiscal and monetary policy of Canada. "What do you think about the free trade deal with the United States"? He replied, "Bilateral free trade with the United States is simplistic and naive. It would only serve to further diminish our ability to compete internationally".

He is another honourable man. He is another Member of the House of Commons, the Parliament of Canada, who speaks straight, who tells it as it is. In a sense he sends out a clear signal to the people of Canada as a spokesperson of this House.

I could go to our present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), a man about whom I have a number of views. Just before he ran in the last federal election and became the Prime Minister of Canada he was asked, "What do you think of free trade with the United States, Mr. Mulroney"? He was then the Leader of the Official Opposition. He said, "Canadians rejected free trade with the United States in 1911. They would do so again in 1983. Canada must increase its share of total world trade, which has dropped by 33 per cent in the past two decades".

Here again was the Prime Minister who, when a question was put to him in a straightforward, objective and clear way, said that he opposes it. Of course, he then went on with his infamous story. I think he paraphrased Tommy Douglas actually when he said, "Why would we support free trade"? Why would we support a trade deal that would liken us, as a mouse, to being in bed with an elephant? Everything would be fine until that elephant rolled over and crushed the mouse. You know who the mouse was, Mr. Speaker. It is us Canadians. Now we have a situation where, in fact, we, the mouse, are jumping into bed with the elephant. That seems to be a rather strange turn of events.

I enjoyed reading about Mr. John Gamble. We all remember John as an esteemed colleague of this House for many years.

Mr. Manly: He should have won the leadership.

Mr. Riis: My friend from Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands says that perhaps he should have won the leadership. He also had a very clear view, which, of course, was shared by our present Prime Minister. The question was put to Mr. Gamble about free trade with the United States. I do not think we could find more of an entrepreneur. He was the entrepreneur of entrepreneurs. He was a very fair-minded free-enterprising spirit. When the question was put to him, he said, "We would be eaten alive. If we open our market to the United States, we won't be able to sustain our manufacturing". That was from a person with a great deal of passion whom I think most of us respect.

I could go on. I have a whole list of people from the front benches and, as my friend from Crowfoot indicated, who are living today, who are alive and well. When the question was put to them one after the other about what they felt about free trade, all of them in one way or another, either directly or indirectly, spoke against it. Now that they are elected, they were asked, "What do you plan to do with our economy"? They said, "Well, we have a great idea. We are going to enter into a free trade deal with the United States". That is a total betrayal, Mr. Speaker, if I may say so. When one says that one is not going to do something and then is elected to office and does it, is that not in a sense misleading the people of Canada? I do not want to get into the use of words that will cause me difficulty in referring to Hon. Members across the way.

I do not see that the people of Canada can have any other view than simply this. "We voted for a Party that said it would do this. When they were in office they did that". We feel that is not in the best interests of this country. For that reason I am very discouraged that our Ambassador for trade has fallen to the very low depths of getting into name-calling with respect to those who have opposed this particular deal who, in a sense, are simply agreeing with what the present Cabinet by and large said prior to 1984.

I want to refer to the task at hand, that is, Bill C-87. This Bill as I see it is very symbolic of what is going on today. I just started to glance through it over the last few days to see what the Bill is all about. I do not have the strength, presumably, to hold all of the volumes that will be attached to this Bill. This is just a part of it, Mr. Speaker. There are pages and pages, thousands of pages—perhaps not thousands of pages, I do not want to get too caught up in rhetoric—there are hundreds and hundreds of pages of very complicated material that we are supposed to digest now, quickly sned it to committee, quickly review it, get on to third reading and pass it quickly. Ideally, we are to pass it within the next few days. To do that job appropriately would be impossible. To do it adequately would be impossible.

As has been brought to our attention, we have received letters from different groups which have indicated that they would like us to give more thought to this Bill. They would have liked the Government to have consulted more. There was some consultation with various trade groups, brokers, manufacturers and the small and large businesses involved in international trade. But they make it very clear to us that adequate time was not given to this matter, that there was not adequate review and attention paid to all of the details. They are asking the Parliament of Canada to hold off implementing all of these various provisions quickly until they can really analyse and assess what the impact will be on their various industries. This is something which, of course, will touch the lives of thousands of Canadians and thousands of different industries in the import-export business. Of course, that accounts for the lion's share of Canada's economy.

The reason I say this is symbolic is that it is exactly what has happened with the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal. Here, literally at the eleventh hour, minutes before midnight when it looked as though it were impossible to get this deal, they pushed it to the wall and, bang, signatures were put on it. We initialled a trade deal. We are now trying to figure out what it is all about, what it all means. The Prime Minister said, "Listen, do not worry, people of Canada, and do not worry the elected representatives of the people of Canada, because within two or three weeks we will have the entire trade deal signed, sealed and delivered, the t's crossed and the i's dotted, then you can review it and we can send it out across the country so that the people can review it to see how it will affect their lives, their businesses, their regions, their sectors of the economy".

We now find out that such will not be the case. We will not have the completed document until literally days before the President and the Prime Minister of Canada sign the final agreement. This means that 99.9 per cent, I guess, of Canadians will never even have a chance to look at the trade deal at all.

The Prime Minister of our country said that this was the biggest economic deal ever. He said that this was the biggest trade deal in Canadian history. He is only going to allow at the most a few days—and even that is not clear at this point—for Canadians and their representatives to review this material on which to make a reasoned decision.

So, Mr. Speaker, here we are. We are about to enter into this horrendous trade arrangement with one of the world's major trading nations, and Canadians will not have a chance to review the deal. We are being asked to sign a blank cheque, to buy a pig in a poke, to sign away our future in the name of some unknown trade deal with the United States.

That is not the way to do business. If we ran a business like that, if we ran a farm like that, or even our own lives like that, always making decisions at the very last second based on inadequate information, by definition, we would not be successful. You would not succeed, Mr. Speaker.

• (1420)

That is why we sometimes spend days and weeks in the House evaluating a particular Bill. My hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—Delta (Mr. Friesen), and I have sat on legislative committees. We go through Bills clause by clause and phrase by phrase, change a word here, add another phrase there, and attempt to understand and improve the legislation. This may take weeks on a fairly simple piece of legislation, but to do it properly requires time. Here we have pages and pages of the Customs Tariff legislation that we will have to zip through in a few days. It is the same when dealing with the trade deal with President Reagan. We feel that this is inappropriate as a process, let alone the deal itself.

Needless to say, we are very concerned. We have now reached a point where there is almost alarm on how this will be dealt with. The Government has indicated that it is quite committed to touring the country on this deal. It will look at this document, not the thousands of pages, but this little flimsy thing that was tabled in the House of Commons, and it states that this is enough to go on.

Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, signing a mortgage for a house without reading the mortgage? We remind people across the country that when a deposit is made in a bank, when a mortgage is signed, when a legal deal is entered into, they should read the fine print. Have a lawyer explain the meaning clause by clause. But when it comes to the biggest trade deal in Canadian history, we are asked to have faith and sign the document, and we are told that everything will be all right. Considering that this comes from a Prime Minister who reflects the support of fewer than a quarter of the people of Canada, that is not much comfort.

To be fair, what we have here is a request to have a leap of faith. There are those who leap ahead in this leap of faith based on free trade with the United States. They think that this is a good deal. Historically, in this country Liberals have always thought it was a good deal. The economic laissez-faire position of the Liberals has always been that a continentalist policy here in North America where Canada and the United States virtually enter into an economic union is a good idea. From the very beginning, two groups have always stood up in the House of Commons and opposed that type of view of the future of Canada in the North American context, that is, the Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party.

Anybody who has read Canadian history realizes that Conservatives did not like a free trade deal and a continentalist policy with the United States, and neither do New Democrats. Now we see a change of plan, which I do not understand. I am very confused when I ask myself what has changed over the last hundred years that we are rewriting Canadian political history; the Conservatives now want to sell out the country and the Liberals are joining the NDP. It is interesting.

I see that I have one minute left, Mr. Speaker, and I will conclude my remarks by simply stating that when it comes to Bill C-87, all of those changes to our Customs Tariff and the implication that we have to deal with this very quickly, are symbolic of how we are now doing business generally as a House of Commons, rushing and jamming things through without adequate and proper evaluation, study, and consideration. I wish to say that we are not in favour of this approach. We do not feel comfortable with it at all. Consequently, when it comes to a vote, I am afraid that we will have to vote against Bill C-87. Hopefully, once the Bill is sent to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, the expertise on that committee will permit Members to analyse it thoroughly and properly and bring back the appropriate amendments for the House to consider.

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, I worked with the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) on the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs for almost two years. I have a great deal of respect for the Hon. Member in that area, but some of the things that he has uttered today I find baffling.

I wish to draw the Hon. Member's attention to an article written by Douglas Fisher in the Toronto Sun on Sunday, October 25. The article states:

> Ontario is producing over half of our total merchandise export to both the world and the U.S., and almost half of the latter is in automotive products.
> Can you see the unbelievable irony implicit in those latter totals. Tie them into the blistering attack on the free trade deal by Bob White and the automotive unions. Such high production and export is a direct consequence of the main accord we already have with the U.S., the automotive agreement negotiated two decades ago by Simon Reisman, today's villain and traitor to White and Broadbent.
> Want more irony? Back when this marvellous deal was made, who was dead-set against it? Yes, the Canadian head of White's union, and the federal NDP.

In all honesty, Mr. Speaker, I think it is a little unfair to go back too far in history. I also think that my hon. colleague is a little unfair in going back and asking what has changed in a hundred years. A great deal has changed in 100 years. A great deal has changed in the last 18 to 24 months.

Mr. Fisher further states:

> Do you not wonder, looking over the trends and the components of our trade interdependence with the U.S., where we may get other buyers for our goods if this trade is in jeopardy through rampaging U.S. protectionism or an American recession?
> The Common Market? Japan? China? The U.S.S.R.? You know the answers, even if you have forgotten how miserably both John Diefenbaker and Pierre Trudeau failed in finding alternatives to American trade.
> We must look at the American trade and not blink, not duck away. Above all we should not scream in fear or hate about a sellout, or of nationality and culture going, then gone.
> What do you think we'll get from the Bob and Ed show and from David Peterson if, as they clamor, we reject the treaty and the Americans, as is likely, dismantle the Auto Pact?

I wish to ask the Hon. Member a couple of basic questions. Let us forget who said what 10 years or 20 years ago. Would the Hon. Member not agree that the prudent thing to do is analyse the situation today, and what the prospects and outlooks are for the future? Let us base it on those facts today as best we can analyse them, and not dwell on these historics and histrionics that we see from the other side of the House.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I do enjoy an opportunity to reply to my hon. friend whom I respect a great deal.

I referred to the history because I am sure that Canadians are attempting to understand what is going on. I do not necessarily mean in the House of Commons, but on the whole matter of the negotiated trade deal with President Reagan. One of the things Canadians find confusing is the fact that the Progressive Conservative Party has changed its whole philosophy on economics in terms of its traditional position. That was the point I was attempting to make.

Perhaps I am wrong, and I would hope that my hon. friends would stand up and explain what John Diefenbaker or Sir John A. Macdonald stood for, and how they would feel today. Perhaps that is another matter for another debate.

I wish to respond to my hon. friend by indicating that the Auto Pact was a deal negotiated between Canada and the United States, a deal that has a whole group of safeguards built into it to ensure that Canada receives a good deal.

First, let us be perfectly clear that that is not a free trade deal. It is a special deal with all types of controls to ensure that Canada receives a reasonable deal. I compared that to what has happened in farm machinery. For many years in farm machinery we have had free trade, contrary to the myths perpetuated by a few people. For years we have had free trade with the United States on tractors and combines. Before we had that, we used to make tractors in Canada. We had manufacturing plants where we made tractors. As a result of free trade, Mr. Speaker, do you know how many tractor-making plants we have today? One, namely, Versatile. Versatile makes tractors because there is a niche in the western market on the flat prairie drylands, and they build a tractor primarily to be used in that environment. I wish to make this point because I think that there is a great mythology.

All the factories have moved to the United States because the economies of scale in the big American markets make it sensible to have those factories in the United States. So we import tractors from the United States that used to be built in Canada. That is what we are concerned about.

Once we get down to free trade in all the other areas, the tendency will be the same. Why have a plant in Canada when, down in Dearborn, Michigan, or Los Angeles or Tacoma, Washington, or Dallas, or wherever, there can be those same plants and the machinery can be delivered up to Canada? Then we will import them. That is why we are concerned about this trade deal.

• (1430)

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Could the opposite not be true, that a plant could manufacture here and distribute all over the United States?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not exactly a point of order.

Mr. Riis: No, Mr. Speaker, it is not a point of order, but it is a valuable interjection.

One reason Canada is famous around the world for the number of branch plants it has, by and large branch plants of American corporations, is that we have had tariff walls. Therefore, if Americans wanted to distribute their equipment in Canada, for example, it was to their advantage to build their plants in Canada and from there distribute throughout the Canadian market. They had branch plants in Japan, Germany, Italy, and Mexico from which to distribute to those markets.

I should like to ask you a question, Mr. Speaker. If you were a major investor and wanted to expand your operations and to conduct a lot of research and development, which is so important to our future, into new product lines or marketing initiatives, would you do it in your little plant in another foreign country or in your parent plant in your home country? Nine times out of ten it is done back in the parent company in the home country. That is not Canada today and that will not be Canada in the future. This is why we are concerned and want to have the Canadian economy built by Canadians for Canadians.

YELLOWKNIFE ELECTRIC LTD.

Mr. David Daubney (for Mr. Edwards) moved that Bill S-10, an Act to revive Yellowknife Electric Ltd. and to provide for its continuance under the Canadian Business Corporations Act, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Daubney (for Mr. Edwards) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I take it that I have unanimous consent to stand in my place instead of the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards) who is unable to be present today.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Daubney: I am happy to be able to speak very briefly on behalf of the Hon. Member on this particular Bill. As he explained to the House at second reading, this is a situation of a corporation which in all innocence ceased to exist under the laws of Canada and now seeks to be revived to wind down its corporate affairs and dispose of corporate assets which are effectively trapped within the corporate veil.

The Bill was sponsored in the other place by Senator Nathan Nurgitz as an Act to revive Yellowknife Electric Ltd. and to provide for its continuance under the Canada Business Corporations Act. The Bill was passed by the Senate on June 16, 1987, by unanimous consent.

Second reading of Bill S-10 was granted on September 18 of this year, and it was referred to a legislative committee. It has returned to the House for third reading without amendment.

Yellowknife Electric Ltd. was incorporated on March 21, 1955 by Letters Patent issued under the Canada Companies Act, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952. Subsection 125(1) of that Act requires a company to file with the Department of the Secretary of State an annual summary. Yellowknife Electric failed to file the prescribed annual summaries for the years 1964, 1965, and 1966.

The default of Yellowknife Electric Ltd. in filing was published in The Canada Gazette on June 11 and June 20, 1966, stating that Yellowknife Electric Ltd. would be dissolved in law, unless within one year of the publication the company filed the summaries for the three years in respect of which it was in default. Those prescribed summaries were not filed and, as a consequence, Yellowknife Electric was dissolved pursuant to Section 125(12) of the Canada Corporations Act.

Upon examination of the facts of this case, it is apparent that the failure of Yellowknife Electric Ltd. to file the prescribed annual summaries was an innocent omission, without intent or malice.

The directors of the company did not see, nor did they have any knowledge of, the default in filing the annual summaries as this is a matter which is left in the normal course to a corporation's solicitor. Apparently the notices to file were sent to the registered office of the company, but the company's solicitor omitted to file the same. The directors of the company also apparently did not see, nor did they have any knowledge of, the notice published in The Canada Gazette.

On June 24, 1967, an Order was published in The Canada Gazette dissolving the company. Not aware of this dissolution the company continued to carry on business as if it had not been dissolved.

Yellowknife Electric Ltd. cannot carry on business unless it is revived and continued under the Canada Business Corporations Act. At this moment the company is attempting to wind down its affairs in Yellowknife, Northwest Territories, but cannot do so as assets are trapped within the company. These assets cannot be dealt with by the company, as Yellowknife Electric Ltd. is technically not a legal entity.

I am advised that the company has no liabilities. The directors only became aware of the dissolution after signing an interim agreement for sale and purchase of corporate realty.

The Registrar of Land Titles in the Northwest Territories would not accept the transfer documents without a certificate of good standing. The issuance of such a certificate was impossible, as the company had been dissolved and did not exist in law. I believe that it was at this stage that it was discovered that the Bill would be necessary and that it would be necessary for the Parliament of Canada to become active in the case.

To address the question of why the Bill is in the House today, Hon. Members should be aware that the Companies Act as amended, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, had no revival provisions for a company dissolved in circumstances such as applied in the case of Yellowknife Electric Ltd. This, with respect, could be described as a legislative oversight. Rare as those may be, this appears to have been one.

However, today's legislation, the Canada Business Corporations Act as amended, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, allows for revival of corporations as a purely administrative matter. One simply files articles of revival with the Director of Corporations, and the director issues a certificate of revival. The same procedure exists for obtaining articles of continuance.

I hope that the facts as I have briefly outlined them will be of some benefit to Hon. Members this afternoon in determining the fate of this company. I hope the House might consider the circumstances and give consideration to the affairs of the company so that it could be restored to personhood, so to speak, and continue the objects of the directors of the corporation.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief in my remarks as the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney) has already outlined the basics of the case concerning Yellowknife Electric Ltd.

When the matter was before the House, before going to committee, we on this side agreed that there did not appear to be anything deliberate or intentional on the part of the company in not filing the required documents. However, it seemed that the matter had to come before the House and that several questions warranted examination by a committee to protect both the petitioner as well as the House from making a hasty decision and later finding out some of the ramifications.

The basic question was that the company did not file the required documents. It had done so for some time. In the 1960s it stopped filing those documents, and the company was duly dissolved and dissolution was published in The Canada Gazette. Unaware of that, it would appear, the company continued to function for some 20 years. Anyone would agree that while possibly not an action with that intent, it was not indicative of good management practices. It was for that reason we felt it warranted a second look by a committee just to ensure that these matters could be fully explored and understood as to why the company continued to operate for 20 years.

There were a couple of issues discussed at the committee and the two questions we had were addressed, one, how could it happen that the company was not aware for that length of time about the requirement for filing statements, and how could it continue to operate? Clearly it appears after full discussion at committee that it was simply an oversight. Both the lawyers in charge and members of the company were unaware that the documents were not filed. There was no intent to do something which would be illegal in any way. Two, it was important to ensure that this decision to reinstate the company would not in any way affect the rights of anyone else who might have been in this situation prior to our action. After discussion it was clear that within the Bill there was a section which stated that the company:

> —is liable for all the obligations that it would have had if it had not been dissolved.

This question about possible implications for others was cleared up. Finally, we understood that the company would have to apply for continuance under the Canada Business Corporations Act and, therefore, file summaries in arrears and so on. It is our opinion that this rather unusual practice of remaining in business for 20 years was simply an oversight. This matter was addressed at committee. We understand that the importance for this company is now to dispose of assets which it has, and we have no further questions in this regard, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 2.43 p.m., the House stands adjourned until Monday next at 11 a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

At 2.43 p.m. the House adjourned.

DEATH OF FORMER PROVINCIAL PRIME MINISTER

RENÉ LÉVESQUE 1922-1987

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister who has been confined to his bed for the last few days, I would like to say the following, on his behalf.

The death of René Lévesque has affected me more than I can say. To a whole generation of Quebecers, including myself, René Lévesque embodied the pride, the sense of belonging and the passion of Quebecers for their province.

From the dawn of the quiet Revolution to his retirement from political life, and during the May 1980 Referendum, René Lévesque was the man of one dream and one cause: Quebec's full emancipation. During those years he took his province through some of the most difficult and at the same time most exhilarating times in its history.

Like all great politicians, Mr. Lévesque was both a dreamer and a realist. He was able to make passion listen to reason. Whether or not all Canadians agreed with the cause for which he fought to the very end, they owe him this tribute: René Lévesque was a great man and a great democrat.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, Quebec has just lost one of its most passionate sons and one of its most articulate spokesmen. Canada has lost a figure who dominated public life in this country and in his own province for nearly twenty years.

René Lévesque embodied some of the characteristics of this country. His impatience, energy and compassion, his brillant discourse, his emotions, all will remain engraved in our memory as striking attributes of this remarkable man and his time.

[English]

For English Canadians he was that sometimes incorrigible man who would not let them forget his dream of a more sovereign Quebec.

I knew Réne Lévesque. I had the honour to be the Parliamentary Secretary to the late Arthur Laing when he was Minister of Natural Resources of this country and Mr. Lévesque was the Minister of Natural Resources. From 1963 on I enjoyed his company and the stimulating force of his personality. I did not share his vision of Quebec, nor his vision of Canada. But never once did I doubt his sincerity and his passionate commitment to the people of Quebec. Although he did not succeed in his ultimate quest, he forced Canada to come to terms with Quebec's place in Confederation under a renewed federalism. Réne Lévesque was a man who reflected the spirit of Quebec and, in some ways, perhaps the spirit of Canada.

[Translation]

René Lévesque's entire political career was a series of superlatives. He experienced great victories and great defeats. There was nothing ordinary about this man.

We remember the scenes of triumph on November 15, 1976. We remember the emotional atmosphere on both sides on the night of the Referendum in 1980.

Emotional and impatient though he was, René Lévesque always set democracy above all other principles, and he always respected the democratic decisions made by Quebecers.

Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of the Liberal Party of Canada, we offer our sincere condolences to René Lévesque's family and to all his friends.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, today I wish to join all Canadians who sensed a profound loss upon the decease of the former Premier of Quebec, René Lévesque.

René Lévesque was for all Quebecers a symbol of their pride in belonging to one of the founding peoples of this country.

All his life he fought for recognition of the language and culture of more than 6 million Canadians, in Quebec and across Canada.

As Premier of Quebec, he acquired the respect and admiration of the entire political community in this country through his integrity, his great sense of justice, and his respect for democracy.

The integrity of the government led by René Lévesque aroused the admiration of the rest of Canada.

René Lévesque was a very likable and a very compassionate man, which makes this an even more tragic loss for all of us.

However, the tremendous work done by René Lévesque will not have been in vain. It has already brought about profound changes in our society, and the process continues.

• (1110)

[English]

On behalf of all my colleagues in the House, and I know countless thousands of English and French-speaking Canadians outside the Province of Quebec, I extend the profoundest sympathies to Madam Lévesque and all those who were close in the life of a great Quebecer and, in a very special sense, a great Canadian.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE—FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare has the honour to present its first report. In accordance with its mandate under Standing Order 96(2), the committee agreed to study alcohol and drug abuse in Canada. The committee heard evidence from individuals and representatives of organizations in the field of addiction. It urges the Government to consider the recommendations contained herein.

Drug abuse in Canada is not a new problem. Last December when the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare began its study of drug abuse, there had been renewed concern by professionals and by ordinary Canadians about the abuse of drugs. A national poll that had recently been conducted indicated that the vast majority of Canadians believed that Canada had a serious problem of illicit drug use.

Following a meeting with the President of the United States, our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) called attention to this problem and began a governmental review process that resulted in $210 million in new federal Government initiatives under the national drug strategy.

The committee believed that it had an important role to play in providing advice to the House and to federal and provincial Governments on how best to address problems of substance abuse. Our work took us across Canada and brought us face to face with health care and social service professionals, government officials, citizen groups, young people, parents, and educators. We soon came to realize that substance abuse problems are not limited to the abuse of street drugs, but that Canada faces problems of the abuse of illicit drugs, legal overuse of prescription drugs and, above all, the abuse of alcohol. Substance abuse problems are not limited to one part of Canada or one age group, but affect Canadians of all ages and walks of life in every province.

It is my pleasure to table in this House the first report of the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare entitled "Booze, Pills and Dope—Reducing Substance Abuse in Canada".

Our committee is recommending new initiatives with enhanced funding in prevention and treatment programs with a special emphasis on youth and aboriginal peoples. We are proposing steps to reduce the carnage on our highways caused by impaired drivers.

After careful review of the issue of substance abuse in the workplace, our committee is strongly opposed to the random testing of Canadian workers. We prefer to see a more co-operative and therapeutic approach to drug abuse in the workplace. Where drug testing is required because of real demonstrated risk to safety, we have recommended policies to provide safeguards.

Our committee wishes to see the federal Government discourage abusive drinking by maintaining an approach to taxation which recognizes the need to balance public health concerns with the overwhelming acceptance of social drinking by Canadians.

We are concerned that those who profit from the sale of alcoholic beverages shoulder their fair share of the responsibility to prevent alcohol abuse. Toward this end we are recommending that beverage alcohol advertisers be required to provide appropriate public education messages.

While the focus of the committee was on the health aspects of substance abuse, we also considered a number of measures related to the control of the supply of drugs. For example, we are recommending that federal and provincial Governments take steps to close "head shops", those businesses which specialize in the sale of drug paraphernalia. We would like to see law enforcement agencies given better tools to allow them to trace the profits of international drug trafficking.

Our committee has provided recommendations for the education of health care professionals, for program evaluation, and for the creation of a national centre on substance abuse. We realize that no matter what steps are introduced by Governments, there will always be some people who will abuse drugs. But we also believe that those recommendations, if implemented, will have a significant and positive effect on the reduction of substance abuse problems in Canada.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS—ELEVENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the eleventh report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts which deals with income tax expenditures.

The report particularly highlights the need for improved information to Parliament about tax expenditures, and the need for the Department of Finance to improve and put in place sound monitoring and evaluation procedures. Improvements are required both in the quality of tax expenditure information, and in the process whereby such information is provided to Parliament.

Income tax expenditures are demand driven, and by their nature may cost more than initially anticipated. Therefore, it is important that Parliament and the public be better informed about them.

The committee has recommended that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) table annual tax expenditure accounts in Parliament starting in 1987.

Pursuant to Standing Order 99(2) the committee has requested a comprehensive government response to certain recommendations.

PETITIONS

REQUEST FOR BROADCASTING OF WINTER OLYMPICS ACROSS CANADA IN THE FRENCH LANGUAGE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to present a petition which is in accordance with Standing Order 106 and which relates to a sad situation concerning the broadcasting of Calgary's Winter Olympic Games, namely the fact that francophones outside Quebec will not have access to nation-wide French broadcasts. The situation is so serious, Mr. Speaker, that I have a number of petitions to present and I will be doing that this week with the support of my colleagues with a view to urging the Government and Radio-Canada to do something.

Mr. Speaker, close to one million francophones residing outside Quebec will not be able to watch French television broadcasts of the Calgary Olympic Winter Games.

Whereas the CRTC compromise under which French TV signals would be made available to cable companies is unacceptable because not all francophone communities outside Quebec have cable service; and whereas French-speaking Canadians will pay their share of the $200 million earmarked by the Conservative Government for the Calgary Winter Olympics Games organization, your petitioners humbly call upon Parliament to urge the Conservative Government to respect its commitments towards Canada's linguistic minorities by providing all communities from coast to coast with the possibility of watching, in both official languages, broadcasts of this international event, the 1988 Winter Olympics Games.

Petitions

OPPOSITION TO TAX ON FOOD

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to table a petition on behalf of residents of Shediac, St-Charles-de-Kent, Richibucto, Bass River, Rexton, Cap-Pelé and Saint-André. Your petitioners deplore the fact that as part of its proposed tax reform, the Government is considering the possibility of putting a tax on food.

Wherefore, Mr. Speaker, your petitioners humbly pray Parliament to reject any measure that would have the effect of imposing a sales tax on food products.

• (1120)

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED TAX REFORMS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to present a petition on behalf of constituents from the City of Thunder Bay and the Town of Red Rock who protest the changes made to the taxation system of Canada.

They protest that the tax reform proposals do not change an already unfair tax structure for average Canadian families, while wealthy Canadians earning over $100,000 per year do not pay their fair share and even receive a tax cut under the proposals.

They also protest the fact that 60,000 profitable corporations will be allowed to pay no income tax at all under the reform, and that the reform proposals include the possibility of a tax levy on food and other essential items.

They press for the restoration of full indexation in the personal tax system and urge the House of Commons to change these proposals of the Government.

REQUEST FOR MANDATORY USE OF AIRBAGS AND THREE-POINT SEAT BELTS IN FRONT AND REAR SEATS RESPECTIVELY OF AUTOMOBILES

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of tabling petitions signed by residents of Lac-à-la-Croix, Quebec City, Saint-Augustin, Nepean, Ontario, Sault Ste Marie and Thunder Bay. These 105 signatures are in addition to the 30,463 I tabled previously. Your petitioners are aware of the fact that since 1974, federal automobile vehicle safety regulations allow the use of airbags on the driver's side in private cars. They are also aware that during the public debate on highway safety last April, it was acknowledged that an airbag on the driver's side would further reduce the number of deaths and serious injuries.

Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray Parliament to make the following mandatory: 1. The use of three-point seatbelts for passengers in rear seats; 2. The use of airbags in front seats.

Order Paper Questions

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, question No. 189 will be answered today.

CSIS—SECURITY FILES ON MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Question No. 189—Mr. Riis:

1. Does the Canadian Security Intelligence Service maintain security files on any Member of Parliament and, if so, on whom?

2. Has CSIS conducted an investigation or made any reports on the activities of any Member and, if so, on whom?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): 1. For security and privacy reasons, CSIS does not divulge publicly the names of any individual on whom it gathers personal information. Furthermore, as a matter of national security policy, CSIS does not confirm or deny specific targets of investigation.

2. The Service only investigates matters that fall within its mandate as defined by the CSIS Act. Specifically, the Service investigates any person who is involved in activities that constitute a threat to the security of Canada as defined in Section 2 of the CSIS Act. For the reasons already stated, the information requested cannot be provided.

Mr. Lewis: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question enumerated by the Minister has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I wish to inform the House that as a result of the ministerial statement Government Orders will be extended by seven minutes beginning at one o'clock.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CUSTOMS TARIFF

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Friday, October 30, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-87, an Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters and to amend or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Friesen) on debate.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, at the close of the day on Friday I think there was a few minutes left—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member is rising on a question or comment, but I recognized him on debate. Since the Hon. Member who had a few minutes remaining for questions and comments is not in the House, I cannot recognize the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

On debate, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp).

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to join in second reading debate of Bill C-87 dealing with harmonized—

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. For the edification of the House, it seems to me that when an individual has time left on questions and comments one should not be able to avoid comments on one's speech by simply vacating the Chamber.

My colleague, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Friesen), had a comment which he wished to make on the speech made by the Hon. Member, and I see no reason why he should not be able to make it. There is nothing in the rules, as I read them, which says that the Hon. Member has to be here to participate. Obviously he has to be here for questions, but if one wishes to make comments on the speech of the Hon. Member one should be able to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is a little difficult for the Chair to know whether the Hon. Member will ask a question or make a comment. Therefore I do not feel, as an occupant of the chair, that I should allow any further comments or questions on that particular Hon. Member's speech, and I recognize the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, as I said a moment ago, I appreciate the opportunity to join in second reading debate on Bill C-87 which is designed to establish in Canada a harmonized tariff system. It is simply known as a system under which the movement of goods into and out of the country will be governed by a different classification system than the one that has prevailed for many years heretofore.

It is important that there be careful consideration of these matters. When we debate a Bill of this sort of course we are only dealing with the authorization. There are thousands of pages implementing a Bill of this sort—not that this one is slight by itself—which can have far-reaching consequences on the industry. Therefore, I am pleased to take some time to debate it in order to raise appropriate questions about the implementation of the Bill, about its principles, perhaps even more so about the consequences of the Bill, and about questions of timing as to the carrying into effect of this change in classification.

I want to say at the outset that this is not a theoretical question at all. Questions have been raised and concern has been expressed by the Automotive Industries Association of Canada, which is a national trade organization of some 1,200 suppliers, distributors, and wholesalers of automotive parts, accessories, tools, and equipment. This industry employs over 70,000 people in Canada. It has a volume of sales which, at the wholesale level, exceed $7 billion. Members of the association are involved in extensive trade between Canada and the United States.

When an association of this sort raises questions about the timing of the proposal and expresses concern about the way the harmonized tariff system can impact on its operations, of which it is uncertain now, it seems to me it is important that Members of the House of Commons pay careful attention to it and to ensuring that this Chamber live up to its constitutional position as a deliberative chamber considering what may be the impact of the actions by the Canadian Government.

The proposal itself can have a good deal of practical value. We have all been aware in past months that the Canadian and American Governments have been working to ensure that their statistics on exports and imports are accurate. The figures released by the Americans on exports from Canada to the United States have sometimes been far larger than the Canadian figures and, if inaccurate, have served to feed the sense in the United States of being deluged by products from other countries. That could be very useful to arrive at a standard system of classification under which there can be no disagreement about the nature of the good and about the classification in the tariff system which should apply to it.

We have had a system of some 3,600 classifications. We now move from this end-use classification to another one in which the nature of the product itself will be the basis for classifying it. As the Automotive Industries Association has pointed out, where a rear view mirror for a motor vehicle was previously considered an automotive part, it will now simply be considered mirror glass. That sort of change, through one page after another of our tariff system, can have very important consequences for industries as it changes a particular tariff level that applies to a product.

The Government has been working on this change for seven years but the industry has only in the last months learned what the detailed nature of this system will be for each of the products produced it exports and it imports. To expect this system to be in effect as of January 1, 1988 rather than even a few months later is rushing things. It begs the question whether the U.S. will have adopted the system by then or whether it will adopt it all. It imposes on the industry a discovery in practice of what the consequences will be as industry converts on the run rather than having a good deal of lead time to consider the application and conceivably to reconsider purchase and sales practices. That seems to me to be a very important point to keep in mind.

I shall come back to it because this matter of how rapidly things are rushed through is something which concerns not only the Canadian tariff system and trade arrangements, but also the trade deal that is still being worked out with the United States. We were told it had been consummated a month ago, but we do not yet have the final details and we may well not have them much before the end of November. A committee will be voting on that end result early in December in order to allow a deadline in January. That sort of rushing of items is not carrying out the business of the country in a proper way.

There are some other concerns about the nature of the change which I want to put before the House this morning. The Automotive Industries Association has pointed out that to change from the previous end-use to a nature of item classification is not just a matter of doing things more accurately for classification purposes, it is not just a matter of arriving at a classification of our entire trade which will be in line with what is being done in the United States and other countries as well, it is not just a matter of ensuring that statistics are accurate, but it is a matter of far reaching consequences in the nature of the Auto Pact which governs trade between the two countries in automotive products.

Here we have a nice example of how pressing ahead on something which makes technical sense could have far reaching consequences. We have had understandings on where products should be made and how they should flow. We have had levels of Canadian content particularly established to protect industry in Canada. How will all of this impact on the new arrangements or, better put, what will the harmonized tariff system do to those arrangements?

I have been commenting on the speed with which all of this is being carried through. The proposal came to the industry very recently and there has been no opportunity to determine what its impact will be. The Versatile implements factory in Winnipeg had financial difficulties because of industry problems and because of problems experienced by its parent company in Vancouver, but this company was expecting to improve its productive facilities by bringing in welding equipment. This would have been possible under previous arrangements, but with the new changes in which it is classification by the nature of the product it will be impossible for Versatile to do so. This is a specific instance of a factory which should be improving its efficiency and productive potential being affected quite harmfully by this legislation.

The kinds of uncertainties I was feeling a few moments ago about information is, of course, integral to what we face with the trade deal supposedly concluded in early October. We were all given to understand that the agreement had been arrived at by Saturday night as the letter went over to the Capital buildings to assure members of Congress that a deal was in the bag. We have learned since then that negotiations went on through Sundary, that hard decisions still needed to be made and that those discussions were part of the difficulties in the different summaries that came out on the Sunday.

The U.S. summary clearly included items that were still on the American wish list. The Canadian summary was held back as Canadian negotiators fought for items which they wanted in the agreement and found difficulty in achieving. We had this picture late on a Sunday of the negotiators gathering before one of the Canadian representatives who had his documents in a briefcase on his lap. These were the documents that were to have been concluded the previous day. It presented a curious spectacle about which I am surprised American Congressmen have not made more. American Senators are still biding their time while lawyers for the Canadian and American Governments fight over the details to clarify the various arrangements of which we have only summaries now.

The pressure being placed on us here raises the possibility of far greater injury for the industries of Canada, for the regions of Canada and for the people of Canada than the Automotive Industries Association can raise in its own particular case. We will not have any real opportunity to debate the particulars when they finally appear. The committee will hardly have time to go into the details because we are bound to get an enormous document. I make no claim myself, much less than the industry does, to have looked at those 3,000 pages of the detailed changes which are being made.

This deal affects the whole trade of the country. Large industries which have previously not been affected by trade very much now find themselves having to worry about the consequences. To expect in a few days that we shall be able to come to grips and understand it is to expect a superhuman ability in this House of Commons which I have not seen. There is the possibility that a committee dominated by members of the Government will insist on ramming things through in just a few days at that point, as they were inclined to do when the committee began its hearings last week. It is certain that the people of Canada will not really have begun to understand fully the consequences of the deal by the time the committee has to vote on it.

Then there will be just days left for consideration of the deal in the House of Commons, at the same time as large items of other business including the various changes in taxation that were proposed last spring will have to be dealt with. This is not the way the business of Government should be done.

In recognizing the shortcomings of the Government's timetabling of these matters, one must also recognize that the fast-track proposal of the United States is one that has been imposed on us. Yet its consequences now are that the work continues when it was supposed to have been concluded. We expected surely that we would have three months to digest the deal. What we have instead is ongoing consideration of details.

We are told, in fact, not that this is all being resolved day by day as the discussions take place, but that disputes which will have to be resolved far above the level of lawyers for the two countries are being laid aside time after time. One can well imagine, on the precedent of the negotiations of that week or more at the end of September and the beginning of October through to a weekend—negotiations that turned out to take twice as long as we had initially thought they would—that this process will take time.

The worst of it is, as time becomes more and more difficult to find for all these deliberations, the Government sees only one hope for saving itself politically, and that is the possibility that enough Canadians may find this deal attractive at the end so they will vote for it and in the process vote for the Government. Here is a Government that knows it is finished in any other context, but this is its one hope. Is such a Government capable of the kinds of negotiations that are still clearly required?

It is not that matters were concluded at the beginning of October by any means. There are still all sorts of difficulties being raised. We know how good American lawyers and officials are at defending their own interests. Two sketches of the deal came out at the beginning of October and we have learned certain things about various areas from the summary. Its effect on the energy industries of the west is a lovely example of what caused the controversy that took place in the House last week.

We know, of course, that westerners want to export oil and gas and have often in the past experienced some difficulty entering the American market, but to get what they hope will be secure access, that magic phrase the Government holds out before us, what is the Government prepared to do but to yield its directing role in the industry. If the Canadian Government thought, in the case of another price inflation in energy, that it would be wise to try to hold back on the deal, there is no way that decision could be used by the Canadian Government to the advantage of Canadians. Surely the Americans would immediately demand that they have the same kind of access and that will surely make any kind of distinctive Canadian role in the energy industry at a time of great price increases very difficult.

What if petroleum feed stocks should be made available at a lower price than that which prevails in the market to a petrochemical company in Alberta in order to give it some advantage? Surely that will be protested immediately as an unfair subsidy. Any possibility that our resources might be used in a distinctive way to promote development in Canada, even in cases where we do not think that we are providing any sort of unfair subsidy to industry, will be impossible.

Softwood lumber, of course, is a perfect example of that. Here is a Government that negotiates politically and loses the battle. For government Members to protest that they are the ones defending western Canadian interests while we supposedly are not is to try to make the same kind of argument they would want to make against the automotive industries which is that they have safeguarded the interests of the industry. However, the industry says that they have not, that more time is needed for careful consideration of the harmonized tariff system. The industry needs to be sure of what its consequences are and I call on the Government to ensure that it has enough time to do that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? Since there are no questions or comments, debate.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on Bill C-87. I do not intend to take my full 20 minutes because there are only a few points that I want to make.

Bill C-87, as has already been explained by the previous speaker, is largely a technical Bill. It provides for a new customs classification system which is due to take effect on January 1, 1988. I would like to speak at the outset about the process because I think the process at this point in time is just as important as the Bill itself.

I refer to the process because there has been voiced already by a major component of the Canadian industrial sector an opposition, not so much to the substance or total content of the Bill but to the fact that this Bill has come on rather quickly and is being, not rammed through Parliament but debated in rather short order, even though seven years of investigation and research has gone into it. Certain components of the industrial sector seem to feel that they have not had sufficient time to study all the details of this very technical Bill.

I refer specifically, of course, to the auto parts industry which has already made representation to the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin). It would like the effective date of the legislation date put back from January 1 to April 1, 1988, to give it greater time to study the full impact of this Bill, the major purpose of which is to harmonize the tariff system as it presently exists between the United States and Canada.

The reason I am concerned about process here is because, as other speakers have alluded to and very appropriately, this kind of process with inadequate consultation or lead time for thorough discussion and understanding of the item being debated is very directly related to the totally unacceptable process of the debate on free trade. I suggest that that is related to Bill C-87, and certainly for purposes of debate in this Chamber.

I think it is absolutely unacceptable that a standing committee should be charged with the awesome responsibility of thoroughly investigating the advantages and disadvantages or content of a memorandum of agreement without actually having the opportunity to spend several weeks, indeed even several months, digesting, discussing, debating and trying to understand the content of the actual finished agreement. This is the responsibility we have placed on the shoulders of the House Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade.

I suggest that the basic reason why last week there was so much heated debate, name-calling and personalization of a legislative process, why individual Ministers were criticized and condemned, why Members of Parliament were hurling unacceptable language back and forth at each other, both in the House and in committee, is because we did not have a finished document to debate. Consequently, and I am speaking now from an Opposition point of view, they had to direct their attack not against a Bill, resolution, or some kind of finished document, but against the process.

• (1150)

Your Honour, you sat on this side of the House for many years, as have many of your colleagues in the Government. You and they know that when you do not have the finished product to debate you end up directing your fire, your wrath, your criticism at the process. That is what is happening today on this issue of free trade.

For the life of me, I cannot imagine a U.S. Senate committee debating a proposed treaty between the U.S. and a foreign country without having a copy of that treaty in their hands. It would be anathema to the American congressional system.

This is one of the fundamental weaknesses of this Chamber. I am not pointing a finger at any one Minister or any one Government. We are all to some extent to blame. This is a legislature. It is also part of the executive branch. We have to clearly define and delineate the responsibilities of the legislative branch and the executive branch. If the Government expects us on this side of the House to intelligently and knowledgeably debate such an important matter as the free trade agreement, then we must demand a finished copy of the agreement with all the i's dotted and all the t's crossed. Unfortunately, we do not have that document.

We are being asked to debate and pass on a resolution, as it were, concerning trade with the U.S.—

Mr. Charest: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I understand the Hon. Member has an interest in the issue he is presently discussing and I do not argue with that at all. On the contrary, his interest is sincere. My point is that I fail to see how what he is saying now relates specifically to the Bill we are discussing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There is such a thing as relevancy in this House. The Hon. Member knows that and I am sure he is going to get back to the Bill.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I thought I was speaking to this Bill. I said I was talking about the process by which this Bill has come about. There is opposition to it from the auto parts industry because they have not had enough time to look at it, digest it, and understand it. I am drawing a parallel between their dilemma and the dilemma of this House as a legislative body in dealing with the entire free trade package because we do not have a copy of the finished agreement. Yet we are being asked to accept it in a matter of a few weeks. That, I suggest, is relevant.

I have a letter addressed to the honourable Minister of State for Finance from Dean H. Wilson, president of the AIA. It says:

> I am writing on behalf of the Automotive Industries Association of Canada, the national trade association that represents more than 1,200 suppliers, distributors and wholesalers of automotive parts, accessories, tools and equipment. Our industry employs over 70,000 people and volume of sales annually at the wholesale level exceeds $7 billion. Our members also supply products for related industries, such as agriculture, forestry and industrial machinery and equipment.

I could read the whole letter but the substance is simply that they want more time to understand the technical aspects of this very technical and complicated Bill.

I am saying that with respect to the whole trade picture, not just the automotive industry but everything else we trade back and forth with the U.S., we in this Chamber should have a much longer period of time to discuss all aspects of the agreement we are supposed to pass on in a few weeks' time. It is December 4 or December 5, I think, that the committee has to report by. If they are lucky they will have the full text of that agreement for only a few days prior to that date. We are being asked to accept that agreement, and today we are being asked to vote on a very technical Bill which even the industry concerned wants more time to understand and digest.

Specifically dealing with this Bill, it will assign specific numeric codes to specific product categories. This is apparently upsetting the auto industry as well. It will help standardize import and export statistics and the identification of goods for customs duties purposes. The codes are designed to help end the discrepancy between what the U.S. says it exports to Canada and what Canada reports as imports from the U.S.

Canada's present system of coding imports and exports for tariff purposes contains only 3,600 classifications. A completely different system is used to compile trade statistics. The new system demands substantial adjustments by all companies which ship, receive and handle cross border traffic. Customs classifications for some goods will not change dramatically, such as chemicals, foods and plastics, for example. However, a rear-view mirror, which was mentioned in a speech earlier this morning, for a motor vehicle will in future be considered mirror glass rather than an automotive part. The basic principle is that goods will be classified for what they are rather than what they are used for. This may or may not be a good thing. At this point the automotive parts industry wants a longer period of time to fully digest the impact of these changes on the industry.

As I said a few moments ago, I say to the Minister who interrupted me that we on this side of the House want a longer period of time to fully understand and digest the impact of the free trade agreement on the whole automotive industry.

Mr. Charest: Twenty years? Forty years?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I remind the Hon. Minister that according to this Memorandum of Agreement on free trade the Auto Pact is gutted, it is gone, the tariffs are removed and there is no leverage. Instead of insisting on 60 per cent Canadian content in automobiles we are going to have to accept 50 per cent North American content. That will be devastating to a constituency like mine and many others in southwestern Ontario that rely so heavily on the auto parts industry. The Japanese auto parts companies will not be coming into Canada, they will be going into the U.S.

I see my time is up. I thank you very kindly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

Mr. Winegard: Mr. Speaker, the information of the Hon. Member with respect to the Auto Pact is quite wrong. The 60 per cent Canadian value remains for all companies now covered by the Auto Pact. We heard a similar kind of comment in this House about three weeks ago and I thought we had straightened it out. What the 50 per cent refers to is direct manufacturing costs for those companies not now in the Auto Pact. That will translate into something like 60 per cent or 65 per cent North American value added. I find it interesting that the American manufacturers are concerned that that is all going to happen in Canada. Today we hear that some Canadians at least believe it is going to happen in the U.S. If we are going to talk about the Auto Pact in this debate, I think we better understand what the arrangement really is.

• (1200)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) have a rebuttal?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I do not know whether I would call it a rebuttal, Mr. Speaker. I simply want to make one statement. The experts in the automotive industry to whom I have spoken have said that there is no longer an incentive for the Japanese, for example, to set up new auto parts industries in a satellite environment around the established assembly plants in Canada. Consequently, they will go closer to the big market which is in the United States.

That is what I have been told by experts in the field. If I am wrong, I apologize, but I do not think I am wrong. I think that is what will happen. There will not be the expansion of the auto parts industry which we desperately need.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my friend, the Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), and my colleague, the Chairman of the Committee on External Affairs and International Trade, have reminded me of where my memory lapsed before. This may help me explain some of the difficulties with the issue.

This debate nicely illustrates the difficulty of knowing when the actual language is not yet established and we only have summaries. It is clear that people in the American industry are suspicious that we will get the advantage in Canada. It is quite obvious that people in Canada are anxious that the gain will be in the United States, that the plants will be established there. We still have the 60 per cent Canadian rule and we now have a 50 per cent North American rule. Members of the Government devoutly hope that this will increase the percentage. We are just as justified in being afraid that it will reduce it.

That is a nice example of the difficulty of dealing properly with these matters when the final language is not established and when both sides can be rightly suspicious. That was the point I wanted to make earlier.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow the Hon. Member for Guelph (Mr. Winegard) to ask a question if he is going to ask it of the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn).

Mr. Winegard: Mr. Speaker, my question for the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) is very direct and simple. In my opinion the language of the agreement is clear. Does he believe that that agreement reduces the Canadian value added for current members of the auto pact from 60 per cent to 50 per cent?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, when I said that a few moments ago in the House I was simply echoing what many experts have told me, my caucus, and our research people. They have said that in the long term that is exactly what will happen, we will lose. People who wanted to expand presently existing auto parts industries in Canada and those who had planned to come to Canada in five years time will now set up operations closer to the big market. The big market is in the United States, not in Canada, as the Hon. Member for Guelph (Mr. Winegard) knows.

• (1210)

The Acting Speaker (M. Paproski): The time for questions and comments has expired. Debate. The Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé).

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we too can afford to comment on Bill C-87 and shed some light for the Canadian population because, after listening to my NDP colleagues, I have the impression their Party wants to drag us back to the Dark Ages. They suffer from tunnel vision, they would rather ignore market opportunities, they want to eliminate all trade expansion chances and, of course, they are against free trade, that is obvious, because it would enable Canadian labour to progress and Canadian firms specializing in research and technology to join their efforts and a break through in certain markets to which they did not have access until the deal was signed.

The Minister of State (Finance) gave Hon. Members background information on Bill C-87 which will replace the existing customs tariff and incorporate the provisions of the Duties Relief Act. I want to take this opportunity to highlight the benefits which the new legislation will give Canadian businesses, particularly importers and exporters from coast to coast. Mr. Speaker, we all know how important Canada's exports are to the economy of this country and the impact they have on job creation.

Our country is one of the great trading nations of the world. From the outset, our economy has been based on international trade, and today, exports are one of the main motors of Canada's economic growth. Imports also play an essential role in our economy by providing the machines and equipment needed in many industries to expand the range of products offered by Canadian suppliers. In the circumstances, it is obvious that Canada needs up-to-date customs legislation. Although it may not be clear at first glance, the orderly flow of international trade depends largely on the rules set by legislation such as the Customs Tariff and the Duties Relief Act.

Of course, Canadian producers who import and export daily know perfectly well that their ability to produce and to compete on both domestic and international markets depends on the effective functioning of laws and regulations implemented by the federal Government to regulate trade. The Minister of State (Finance) (Mr. Hockin) said that our customs legislation was very much in need of updating. It has worked very well since it was introduced several years ago, but today, we have different needs and different resources.

Mr. Speaker, the same principle applies to all industries and all sectors. The Customs Tariff and the Duties Relief Act are several years old. Are other industries still in the wireless telegraphy age? Do all aircraft still have propellers? And why does industry now use computer processing, robotics and automated office machines? The Customs Tariff? It can wait. It is not terribly important. We are going to stick with black and white TV. We don't need colour for Customs. Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of State pointed out, we must expedite the passage of this Bill.

What our companies need is a system for classifying import and export commodities that is simple and easy to understand, so that customs duty and other tariff aspects that concern commodity trade can be easily determined and accurately implemented. Any uncertainty can mean delayed decisions, lost markets or unforeseen expenditures.

We also need a system that can be computerized to provide for electronic recording and transmission of import and export transactions. Both business and government are depending more and more on machines to process their work. Our present system for processing imports is far from adequate in this respect.

Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned earlier, when every other sector operates with super-sophisticated equipment, how can we expect our importers and exporters to take paper and pencil and check piles of catalogues to find out what products are subject to duty?

As we use two different systems for commodities classification, importers must be familiar with both. Because of that, our trade data are not sufficiently accurate. Moreover, as the tariff system is different in other countries, we cannot directly compare our tariffs and our trade statistics with those of other nations.

This bill should allow us to correct those deficiencies and meet our new requirements. This is a new approach to commodities classification for the purpose of our customs system. The Harmonized System on which the legislation is based is the new standardized international mechanism used for commodities classification. The adoption, by Canada, of a customs tariff based on the Harmonized System coïncides with similar measures taken by all our major trade partners.

So, as you can see, Mr. Speaker, we are not the only ones to adopt this system. We are not going alone. It is obvious that, in this era of instant transactions and electronic communications, our businesses cannot adequately function without a system directly linked to other systems on international markets.

So, this international tariff standardization initiative will help Canadian producers by simplifying the determination of duties on imported and exported products. This improved capacity to foresee the classification of commodities in Canada as well as in other countries which have adopted the Harmonized System will benefit Canadian businesses. For instance, a Canadian skate manufacturer will, for the first time, when he knows the classification for skates in the Canadian tariff, also know where to look in the United States tariffs and those of all European and Northern hemisphere countries. This could make it much easier for Canadian businesses to perform well on international markets.

Another purpose of the logical approach of the Harmonized System is to facilitate the computerized processing of import and export transactions. Canadian businesses have been getting ready to adapt their reporting for import and export operations on the basis of the new tariff system. One of the main incentives to adopt the new system will be its increased efficiency and the potential savings for the private sector. Once the system is running smoothly, it is expected that importers will save millions of dollars each year.

Revenue Canada is now implementing its new trade customs system, and from January 1, it will be established on the Harmonized System, which means that, after that date, importers and customs brokers will be able to send the data on their statements directly to Revenue Canada from their own offices and will receive an immediate acknowledgment. This represents a major step toward a red tape-free environment.

The new tariff will also facilitate trade negotiations. For instance, the negotiations between Canada and the United States were carried out on the basis of the Harmonized System. In fact, it was the first time that international free trade negotiations were carried out with the new tariff structure.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would also like to speak for a few moments about the historic agreement signed between our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the American Government to provide for free trade between our two countries, which agreement, I must say, has the appproval of the Canadian population as a whole, the majority of Quebecers, and even more so, of the Chambly riding, which includes many importers and exporters. Mr. Speaker, the population of Chambly is made up of economically dynamic people who are willing to take up challenges, who are not afraid of competition and who are ready to increase their markets.

I think that the constituents of Chambly are not the only ones who display such qualities. Unlike the Liberals and the NDP, Mr. Speaker, these women and these businessmen who want a better country and who want to guarantee a better future for their children are already looking forward to the turn of the century. These people tell their MP: Yes, continue to support your Government, keep up the good work. The free trade agreement has to be implemented as soon as possible because the sooner the agreement becomes reality, the sooner our firms will find new markets.

About ten days ago, Mr. Speaker, I was the guest speaker in Los Angeles before 300 road transport brokers, most of them Americans. Mr. Speaker, we discussed various issues during three hours and these people take a very positive approach to the Canada-U.S. agreement because they know full well it will open up new markets for them, not to mention the fact that they may also gain access to Canadian technology. When it comes to transportation, they are very much aware that Canadian road transport technology is one of our leading sectors, that right now they are not in a position to offer their clients the kind of quality services available here because our product is definitely much better than theirs.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, Canadian brokers attended the conference and they too see the free trade agreement as a boon. They are open-minded about it because it will lead to market breakthroughs unparalleled in the rest of the world. I think we must—our Prime Minister made it quite clear when he said the agreement would guarantee Canadian sovereignty, and the people of Quebec will not be short-changed under the free trade agreement. We are not going to sell our birthright for a mess of pottage, Mr. Speaker. What we have with the United States is a trade deal, a business deal, and our sectors of culture and communications will not be affected, our agricultural sector will be very well protected under the free trade agreement. We will continue to fight for this, and at the same time we will make it possible for the people of Canada and the peple of Quebec to open up new markets and create jobs for younger Canadians.

A moment ago I was listening to the remarks of the Minister of State (Youth) (Mr. Charest). Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State (Youth) is doing a tremendous job for young Canadians. We need this kind of approach, we need this agreement to make it possible for Canadians, particularly younger Canadians, to begin the XXIst century facing wide open new markets and opportunities to innovate in their respective sectors.

Mr. Speaker, after listening to what my NDP colleagues had to say, I simply could not refrain from taking such a challenging opportunity as Bill C-87 to digress a little and set the record straight. Of course, Mr. Speaker, before you call me to order I intend to conclude by referring specifically to Bill C-87.

The new tariff system will enable Canada to compare its trade figures with those of other countries. Hon. Members would know that the United States trade deficit has become an urgent issue which is of grave concern to the American administration. Every year Statistics Canada officials and their American counterparts compare the trade figures of our two countries. In the past the United States came up with figures indicating that their trade deficit with Canada is much more significant than we had been thinking all along. A detailed analysis of such talks is necessary to reconcile these differences. Although many people are inclined to think it is just a technical exercise, there is more to it than that. A trade deficit or surplus between two countries may have many and varied consequences, such as fluctuations in the exchange rate and lobbying for protectionist measures. Accurate trade statistics are also useful to the business world. That is why it is important for us to have access to better ways and better tools in order to compare our statistics with those of other countries.

Mr. Speaker, I am about to conclude. I emphasized the benefits of the new Customs Tariff because some Hon. Members may think this is a technical Bill, of little interest to their constituents. Granted, the Bill does seem technical, but I maintain it deserves some careful attention and will certainly be of interest to businesses in their ridings, as it is to my own riding, Mr. Speaker, which is about sixty kilometres from the American border. There is a constant exchange of goods between our two countries, and this particular information is very relevant, Mr. Speaker, for the businesses I have the honour to represent in this House and for many other businesses across Canada. We cannot deny that this country is constantly engaged in international trade. And I say, Mr. Speaker, that we should do everything we can to increase that trade in the years to come! To do so, however, we must give our industries, our business people and our brokers the tools and mechanisms they need to compete on international markets, on the same basis as other countries and other businesses outside this country are able to do.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I strongly recommend that Hon. Members, after examining this Bill, expedite its passage as soon as possible, because it is a formidable tool for our Canadian industries.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greewood (Ms. McDonald).

• (1220)

[English]

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the Bill that we are looking at today, Bill C-87, has been called a technical Bill. I want to argue that it is more than a technical Bill. There are technical aspects in it to provide for a new customs classification system which is due to take effect on January 1, 1988.

This Bill is to bring in what is called a harmonized system. The new customs classification will allow for the quicker release of goods crossing the border into Canada. It is a system that will particularly facilitate trade within multinational corporations. It is no coincidence that the Government would want to bring in such a system.

Harmonized classification assigns specific numeric codes to specific product categories. They will help standardize import and export statistics and the identification of goods for customs duties purposes. The codes are designed to help end the discrepancy between what the United States says it exports to Canada and what Canada reports as imports from the United States. Certainly, clarification is highly desirable. I think there are some objectionable features to this Bill, and I will certainly raise some questions about the process, but clarity is very badly needed.

We are a trading nation. Trade makes up 30 per cent of our GNP, which means that 70 per cent is not from international trade but from domestic purchases and sales. Nevertheless, it is very important to our economy. It is very important to understand what is happening in trade. Having this kind of clarification will aid in understanding our economic situation better.

Canada's present system of coding exports and imports for tariff purposes contain 3,600 classifications. But a completely different system is used to compile trade statistics. The new system demands substantial adjustment by all companies which ship, receive and handle cross-border traffic.

Some of these companies are now telling us that they need more time in order to deal with this issue. This is a subject that has been studied for some seven years. But it has been only a relatively short period of time that companies which need the information as to what is in the Bill have actually had the great thick texts to go over. Some of these corporations are telling us that they do not have enough time. January 1 is too soon, and they are asking for a delay. I expect that there will be a delay in the United States, so why should these corporations not have the benefit of a delay also in order to be able to adjust to the new system?

Some goods will not change dramatically, but for others there are very substantial changes. As a result, tariff and duty rates for some products will change, which means that some importers will have lower tariffs to pay, but there will be higher, and in some cases substantially higher, tariffs depending upon the changes in codes.

So it is not just a technical matter here. There will be real economic impacts. That is something I will want to go into in a bit more detail later. Some industries such as those which belong to the Automotive Industries Association have complained most strenuously that there has not been a thorough enough examination of what are the implications. They are of course prominent in asking for a delay. To set it back at least three months is their proposal.

They point out that there is still doubt as to whether the Americans will adopt the system at the beginning of the new year. The association points out, "The Government has been labouring over this conversion for over seven years, yet only recently have Canadian companies had some hint of the final draft. The errors or omissions we have noted lead us to believe that companies in industry will be adversely affected by the tariff changes".

Reasonably enough, industries that will be adversely affected need time to protest and to adjust, if necessary, if their protests are not successful. Unfortunately, however, we have a Government which wants to push this measure through. There has been a lengthy internal examination process but it has not been adequate for the people who will be affected. We are very aware of this pushing through of legislation. In the case of free trade there was not even a seven-year period of study before.

The proposed changes in bilateral free trade with the United States—the Mulroney-Reagan deal—are much more complex and the Government wants to push it through even faster than that. Thus we have the spectacle of a committee that will be asked to deal in a matter of days, after it has the final text, with this matter and come up with its report. Canadians will have to react to this deal, to appear before committee, to put forward their concerns, all without even seeing the final text. The committee will already have heard them. They will have had to make their presentations on this extremely important matter on the basis of synopses, newspaper reports and, in some cases, conflicting reports from what the Americans say is in the deal deal and what the Canadians say is in the deal. Many of the provisions will not even be available in November or December since they will be negotiated over the long term. That is an even more flagrant example than the one we have before us in Bill C-87 of the Government trying to push through measures without adequate concern being given to them.

I want to make a more specific comparison between what we have here in this Bill and what the proposed bilateral free trade deal is with the United States. The proposal we have before us now is not just with the United States. This is a proposal to harmonize in a more general fashion. It is one which would facilitate multilateral trade. It is an approach in general that we very much favour. The New Democratic Party would like to see Canada improve its trade with many countries of the world. The United States is already our major trading partner. It will probably continue indefinitely to be our major trading partner, probably by far. But we would like to see our trade expand with other countries. We favour measures that would make that possible.

We are very concerned with the impact of increasing bilateral trade. We wonder what that increase will be, in what direction it will go, as well as what the impacts will be. So we have two possibilities. We could be going in a multilateral way or a bilateral way. In order to make the decision between these different approaches we have to look at what the impact will be on ordinary Canadians.

I want to cite one particular area that I think has been inadequately considered in making these comparisons. It is with respect to the impact on women's jobs. With bilateral free trade there will be very serious losses in the jobs of women. Women will be the worst hit. I want to make it very clear that this will happen both in the area of manufacturing and in the area of services. Manufacturing, an area in which women are concentrated, is a losing industry. The Macdonald Commission conducted studies in this area. It did not even look at services where there are even more women than in manufacturing. But even the Macdonald Commission discovered that the losing industries were ones that happen to be those in which women are prominent. For example, in textiles, clothing, agriculture, food processing, footwear, and electrical goods very large numbers of women are employed in Ontario and Quebec, and in the case of food processing, all across the country we will see a loss of jobs in those areas.

In the case of textiles and clothing, factories will close down in Canada and be relocated in the United States. Yet with the free trade deal a company will be able to import those products made in the South with low wage rates, without unions, and with minimum working conditions. Under those types of conditions, they will be able to compete very well with our industries. There will be pressure on the companies that keep plants in Canada to reduce their wages and benefits, and worsen working conditions in order to meet the competition.

People in favour of free trade have been quite frank in stating that there will have to be harmonization. What is "harmonization" when the competition is with a low-cost country like Brazil or Korea in the case of textiles and clothing, and in the case of the United States, in those states that do not have protection for their workers, do not have unions, have so-called right-to-work legislation, and have been successfully engaging in union-bashing so that people are unprotected? That is the type of competition that will mean wage rates will go down.

Even more jobs will be lost in the service sector. In this area, I do not think that the Government has been entirely frank. This is where the United States sees that it can make an impact.

The Conservative Member who spoke before talked about looking to the next century and an expansion of jobs for young people in the future. He also talked about confidence. I, too, look to the next century, and I, too, wish to see an expansion of jobs. I, too, have a great deal of confidence in Canadians, in fact more than that Member. I believe that we can create jobs here in Canada. What type of confidence is there when one takes this blind approach that there will be jobs. The Member was not specific about where those jobs would be. Of course, he did not admit that there would be job losses.

In the case of the service sector, this is an area in which we have already lost jobs. In data processing we have lost more than 150,000 jobs, which were largely women's jobs. In this area the United States is a major service sector export-importer for commodities. Canada has been doing well, and we have a surplus for our commodity trade. But we have a substantial and growing deficit for services. Here we will open our doors for more competition in an area in which we are not doing well.

Where is the intelligence in that? We want to open the doors where there is an increase and new advantages for the industries in which we are already strong and exporting? It does not make sense for us to welcome competition in an area where we have already lost jobs, and where we have weakened our position. That is foolishness. That is not looking to the future; it is looking to a very bleak future. We will not have the economies of scale, and we have the disadvantage of being branch plants.

Much of this transferring of jobs, and especially the loss of women's jobs, has been from the branch plant, thanks to telecommunications, to the head office. That will continue. If other corporations are given those advantages, for example, banks, insurance companies, and so forth, they too will close down their data processing, financial services, and various management functions within Canada and move them off to the United States. There will be a serious net loss of jobs for us.

In looking at manufacturing and services, we must anticipate that it will be very difficult with this bilateral trade deal which we do not favour, and which we are strenuously speaking against. I represent a riding in Toronto, Broadview—Greenwood, an area where manufacturing is important. Under the bilateral trade deal, with the gutting of the Auto Pact, there will be job loss in that area. It will affect the whole region of southern Ontario, not only my riding, which will be indirectly impacted. In my riding there is small manufacturing. There are some people who think that there will be advantages and they will be able to export more to the United States. We are not sure that, even where they may be able to export more, they might not be vulnerable to countervail because of our social programs. Even where we think there might be an advantage, there is a possibility that the Americans will clamp down, use their countervail procedures because of our so-called unfair social programs that give an unfair advantage to the Canadian corporation. Even where we think we may have a chance, it is not entirely clear because so many of the details—not details in terms of the lives of people, they are very important, but details in terms of the free trade agreement—have not yet been established.

Ontario will be very much affected; women's jobs in Ontario will be very much affected. In Quebec—

[Translation]

—the industries that are losing are those where the majority of the jobs are held by women. Those industries will be affected by a free trade agreement. The women of Quebec will be the losers if there is an agreement on free trade. Textiles, clothing and food processing—those are the industries that employ large numbers of women and those are the industries where the job loss will be highest.

[English]

Those of us who are concerned with jobs in Ontario and Quebec see that very clearly in manufacturing. There will be an impact in other parts of the country with agriculture and food processing. Our food processing is in many small centres scattered across the country which means jobs in many small towns. With a free trade agreement there will be a concentration and jobs will be lost across the country in small towns where there is a food processing plant, a cannery, or poultry processing. There will be many losers across the country. There will be a smaller number of very large plants in the United States, and with a very small increase in their production they will be able to supply the Canadian market. Presently those factories are working under production, so they will not need any extra investment. They will have to hire a few more workers, add an extra shift or two, increase their production with the current capital investment that they have, and they will be able to take over our markets.

Canadians cannot compete on that basis. We do not have those economies of scale. If we wish to move into the American market, it will require an enormous addition of capital. Our construction costs are greater. Our growing season is shorter. It is not that Canadians are not productive, lazy, or fearful. We live in a different country with a different climate. It is unfair to ask a Canadian farmer in a Canadian climate with Canadian construction costs to compete with a Californian farmer in a different climate with a subsidized irrigation system.

The Government talks rather foolishly about confidence, and I suggest it is a misplaced confidence which is not based on reason. To expect the farmer in Ontario, Nova Scotia, or British Columbia to compete on this basis is simply unfair.

We know that small towns across the country will be very badly hit. They will lose the base, the agriculture, and many of those food processing jobs at the same time.

Trade is important for Canada. It is 30 per cent of our Gross National Product. That means that 70 per cent is not in trade. We must look at what the impact will be on the whole economy. If we lose jobs in the areas where we can expect to lose them, in food processing, agriculture, electrical equipment, footwear, textiles, clothing manufacturing, and services, what will that do to purchasing power? What will that do for Canadians who lose their jobs and collect unemployment for a while? Some of them will be on welfare, and some of them will drop out of the labour market completely. How will they participate in the economy and create jobs for other people in the services?

We must look at how the whole economy will be affected, and the Government has been very remiss in doing that. It has talked very glibly about the winners, but it has not identified the losers. The Macdonald Commission did not even look at the service sector. Some 70 per cent of women's employment is in the service sector, yet the Macdonald Commission did not even bother to look at it.

The Government has not been frank in looking at the impact of a free trade agreement in the service sector and the impact on women's jobs. Therefore I think it is very important that we spend some time looking at the multilateral approach and at how we can improve our trade with many countries. It is also important to look at the losses in the case of the free trade approach, in concentrating so much on trade with the United States.

We must also look at the times in which we are right now. I see that my time is almost up, but I would like to say that it does not bode well when we see tough economic times in the United States right now. It has a massive deficit and there are uncertainties. There is a confidence crisis in the United States from years of mismanagement of the American economy. Is this a time when we would want to be more fully integrated with them rather than seeking better, newer, and brighter trading opportunities?

I say that Canadians are capable and confident. We believe that we can create jobs in Canada and that we should be exploring other trading relationships to provide jobs for Canadians in Canada. We also believe that we should be proceeding with a multilateral approach, a much more imaginative one, not concentrating heavily on the United States, particularly in areas where we know there will be serious losers.

The Conservatives are simply banking too much on loose rhetoric and nice sounding words, but so far they have not been able to deliver the goods.

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, I find it particularly appropriate that the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) would finish her speech by referring to rhetoric and not to the facts.

One of the questions I have for her concerns the textile industry. As you know very well, Mr. Speaker, I am a Member of Parliament from the riding of Sherbrooke, Quebec, which is one of Canada's greatest textile centres. Following the conclusion of the trade agreement signed with the Americans, le Comité de survie du textile representing textile workers in my riding publicly stated that it is in favour of the trade agreement signed by Canada and the United States.

Actually it has said that this is a good deal, and I am referring to the most important group of textile workers in the Province of Quebec, if not in Canada.

Perhaps the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood could explain how she has come to her conclusion when the workers favour the agreement. I am not referring to the industry, which by the way is also favourable to the trade agreement, but to the workers who are members of that union in the province of Quebec. They have publicly stated that, knowing full well what are the implications.

I want to be even more precise by saying that I am referring to two people who have actually met with the NDP caucus. They also met with the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). As well, the two people who lead the union have already met with the Leader of the Hon. Member's Party. They are exactly the same people who say they are in favour of the agreement.

How did the Hon. Member reach the conclusion that the agreement would hurt the textile workers who clearly contradict her?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) to answer the question, but I think we are getting a little off the Bill.

I hope that we can get back to the Bill, but I will allow the Hon. Member to answer the question.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, this is an important question, and the debate is not over. If some representatives of some workers at this point in time think it is good for them, that is certainly their affair, but the debate is far from over. The examination is not over. We do not yet know what textile companies are going to close down in Canada. We do know that there will be closures and we do know that there will be removal to the United States.

Mr. Charest: How do you know?

Ms. McDonald: The Hon. Member has referred to la survie. Survival in the textile industry is indeed at issue. Textiles are in trouble in Canada. There has already been job loss in textiles in Canada, so we are not talking about an industry that is in great health and has no worries for the future.

I remind the Hon. Member as well that the textile industry in Canada depends on purchases from the clothing industry in Canada—

Mr. Charest: No, it is the other way around.

Ms. McDonald: Clothing people have to buy the textiles.

Mr. Charest: Right. Now you have it.

Ms. McDonald: I mean, the clothing is not taken apart in threads and remade into textiles. Textiles have to be bought by the clothing industry. The clothing industry itself is going to be affected.

If there is a loss in clothing plants—and we know that imports in textiles are increasing, that the domestic clothing industry is increasingly importing, not buying from Canadian sources—as we lose the domestic clothing industry that means even fewer purchases of textiles. When textiles lose, those jobs are going to go.

In the case of textiles, labour costs are similar in Canada and the United States but construction costs are very high. In the case of clothing, textiles cost more in Canada than they do to import, so there is going to be an ongoing effect that way.

We cannot look at just one industry without the other. They are both in trouble. They have both lost business. They have both lost jobs in his province and in mine. I am worried, and I just do not share the glib approach that all will be well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow a very short supplementary question and then recognize the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway).

However, I should like to remind the Minister that the Bill at hand is Bill C-87. I hope the Minister will take that into consideration. I will allow the Hon. Minister a supplementary question.

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, as you know from habit and from previous experience I always take very seriously anything you say to me and with the utmost respect.

That having been said, I would like to make a very short comment. It is not a question. I would like to bring to the attention of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood the fact that she has just offered a performance which is very much symbolic and typical of what those who are against the free trade agreement are saying now.

Tomorrow, first thing in the morning, she should wake up and read in Hansard the answer she just gave me. I presume that she will probably feel very bad about it because it demonstrates the level of total, absolute ignorance of the Hon. Member in dealing with this issue.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, that was not a question or a comment but an insult.

Mr. Charest: It was a comment.

Ms. Copps: It was an ignorant remark.

Mrs. Killens: I have no respect for him.

Mr. Charest: I am sorry I woke you up.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): This is what happens when we get off the Bill. I would hope that the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood would have a chance at rebuttal.

• (1250)

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, lately I have been reading a book by Margorie Griffin Cohen on free trade and women's employment. I suggest the Hon. Minister should have a look at it. It deals in detail with projections, particularly textiles in which he is interested, and all of these other manufacturing and service sector jobs. It gives a very painful analysis of what the impact would be. Perhaps the Hon. Minister would not be so glib in his approach if he had a little bit of information which could be very well provided by looking at Cohen's book.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) and then I will recognize the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn).

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it quite clear at the outset that my comments and questions will be related strictly to the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald).

First, I would like to refer to her comments with respect to the question of pursuing other trading agreements and arrangements rather than pursuing the Canada—U.S. trade agreement. The Member indicated that she and her Party believe that what Canada should be doing is pursuing other trading arrangements in order to increase our trade. The Hon. Member is aware that Canada is doing just that. It is not relying strictly on negotiations with the United States but is pursuing through the GATT a multilateral trading arrangement to help reduce tariffs generally and improve our trading arrangements, vis-à-vis the world. The last GATT negotiations which concluded in 1979 took about seven years to negotiate and another eight years to implement. Is it her Party's and her position that we should do nothing but rely on these GATT negotiations as far as our trade is concerned and wait for 15 years perhaps before we conclude any improved trading arrangements over and above what we have now?

My second question relates to her comments with respect to the great tragedy and disaster that she forecasts concerning the job situation as a result of the trading arrangement with the United States. The Hon. Member will recall that when the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) brought down his economic statement in 1984 and a subsequent budget in 1985 she and her Party forecast enormous decreases in employment nationally, in her own riding and in ridings across the country, as a result of those measures. I must say as well, I believe the Hon. Member and her Party forecast great decreases in employment for women as a result of those measures. Instead of that, almost one million new jobs have been created and unemployment has fallen by about 3 per cent. In her own riding as in my mine, which is adjacent to it, the unemployment figures at the moment are somewhere in the neighborhood of 4 per cent, which is traditionally full employment. How can Canadians have confidence in what she and her Party are forecasting about what will happen with this trading arrangement with the U.S. in light of New Democratic forecasts in the past?.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I note that the Hon. Member brags about an unemployment rate of 4 per cent in his riding and my riding. It is true that unemployment in our ridings is much lower than the national average and we are very fortunate. I do not think though that we should be complacent about the high national levels of unemployment, close to 10 per cent and in some parts of the country it is much higher still. In Cape Breton, Newfoundland, and single industry towns unemployment is still very high. What does 4 per cent mean? In Sweden with decades of a Social Democratic Government—

Mr. Stewart: And 75 per cent income tax.

Ms. McDonald: —when unemployment rose to 4 per cent it was considered scandalous. Sweden has kept unemployment in the 1 and 2 per cent range. Four per cent unemployment is considered high in Sweden. We have positive models. Unemployment has gone down in Manitoba and in the Yukon under New Democratic Party Governments.

As to whether GATT should be the only measure we should pursue regarding trade, I think we should be looking at other trade irritants. For example, there are things we could be doing on a bilateral basis with the United States. We could be pursuing another form of Auto Pact in the case of Korean and Japanese producers who sell massively in Canada. With the so-called free trade agreement with the United States, instead of being able to pursue something like the Auto Pact with these other producers we will be kept out and the Americans will be able to import American produced cars and parts into Canada. We should have been negotiating a separate distinctive deal that would be to our mutual advantage—between them and us. We are not doing that. The so-called free trade deal will prevent us from doing something that could be very beneficial for Canada. The Auto Pact has been beneficial, and we need more examples of a sector by sector, industry by industry basis where we look at what is in our interests, what would improve jobs for Canada. We should be making those decisions ourselves and not depending solely on the blind forces of the market.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) on one short question and then we will resume debate.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I just want to make a brief statement. I am a bit confused here this morning. The Minister who represents the riding of Sherbrooke which has a large textile industry said that the free trade agreement will be good and that the workers agree that the free trade agreement will be good for their industry. I suppose what I have is a rhetorical question. Why or how will the free trade agreement be so good for the textile workers in Sherbrooke when in the United States the textile industry is looking to this free trade agreement as a saviour for its rapidly declining industry? They cannot both be winners in this new arrangement being proposed. Obviously there has to be a winner and loser here. Effectively we are shutting out—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member knows that he should not comment on the Minister's statement. That is not part of the debate. The question or comment should go to the speech which the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) made. I do not think I should entertain any more questions and comments. That period has now terminated.

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): It won't be a point of order.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Charest: In referring to what the previous speaker said—

Ms. Copps: That is not a point of order. He is clearly out of order. Sit down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I really do not know what the point of order is until I hear it.

Ms. Copps: He is commenting on the previous speaker's comment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Minister has the floor for a very short point of order.

Mr. Charest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for extending the courtesy of listening to what I have to say before coming to a determination, contrary to what other people in the House do, who consistently do not listen to people before saying something and reacting. I guess they are being consistent with themselves when they do that.

The Member from Brant said that somebody has to win or lose each time there is a deal. I have to ask whether or not every businessman is a juvenile delinquent who thinks that way each time he concludes a transaction.

• (1300)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is debate, that is not a point of order. I recognize the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) on debate.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to participate in this debate on harmonization. I think many Canadians do not even know what harmonization means, including many Members of the House. That has been clear from the quality of the debate we just heard from the Minister. Obviously he is not interested in dealing with this issue.

The Bill itself seeks to bring about an international standard which would expedite trading among GATT nations. That is laudable and something we support. We in the Liberal Party believe strongly in liberalized trade, in reaching out to all parts of the world. However, I have some concerns, and I think they have been articulated by some of the other Hon. Members who have spoken.

Let us look at what will happen with harmonization between Canada and the United States under the free trade deal. I come from the Niagara region of the country, the Golden Horseshoe as it is known, the area which, along with British Columbia, produces fruits and grapes. As a result of the free trade deal, our grape industry will be wiped out as of next year. Ontario wine companies have already told the grape producers that they will not buy their 1988 crop because they will bring grapes in from the United States more cheaply, specifically grapes to be used for the production of table wine.

However, Canadians also eat table grapes. I just became aware, by examining some of the issues surrounding free trade, that in the United States they spray table grapes with sulphur so that they will last longer. As well, sulphur kills the cocoon eggs of fruit flies. Because the Americans want to sell grapes to Canada and other places they are concerned about fruit flies and so spray them with sulphur, but such spraying is not legal in Canada. We do not permit farmers to spray their grapes with sulphur because it could present a potential health hazard.

The reason I am raising this is that if we harmonize with the United States in entering into free trade, will we harmonize to the high Canadian standard which does not permit the spraying of sulphur on table grapes, or will we harmonize to the lowest common denominator, the American standard, which allows the spraying of grapes with sulphur?

Just a few days ago I was speaking with the Minister of the Environment for the Province of Ontario about some issues with which many Canadians are only just now beginning to come to grips. This is one of the reasons why we should have a full and open debate on all of the elements of free trade.

The Ontario Minister expressed a fear over what will happen under free trade because Canada and, particularly, certain provinces have higher standards with respect to environmental pollution. I represent the steel companies in my riding, including Dofasco. As we know, coal-fired generating stations create tremendous amounts of sulphur dioxide, causing acid rain which is now killing the trees which produce maple syrup. We know the problems of acid rain, but the Ontario Minister of the Environment fears that as a result of this free trade agreement Canadian Governments will no longer be able to require companies to install pollution devices that are up to Canadian standards.

Through this so-called harmonization process, which will affect not only agriculture but also industries across the board, the Americans will be able to argue against these fancy pollution devices because they do not believe there is a problem with acid rain. In fact, the American President has already said that. The Canadian companies will want to know why they should install expensive million-dollar scrubbers and devices when the American competition is not required to do so.

Mr. Brisco: Surely you are not serious.

Ms. Copps: Obviously the Hon. Member has not studied all the implications of free trade. I am repeating a conversation I had with the Minister of the Environment for the Province of Ontario who happens to have a very good reputation—

Mr. Brisco: Obviously uninformed.

Ms. Copps: I realize the Hon. Member is far more informed than the Minister of the Environment of Ontario. However, my point is that, when dealing with harmonization between Canada and the United States, we will be moving toward the lowest common denominator which means accepting acid rain and table grapes that are sprayed with sulphur, thus preventing the quality of life we have had in this country. That is why we need a full debate on this bad deal.

Mr. Charest: That is sour grapes.

Ms. Copps: The truth hurts. Study the deal, then let's have the deal go to a full committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 1.07 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1.07 p.m., the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

COMPOSITION OF FEDNOR ADVISORY BOARD

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, a curious and interesting event occurred last week in northern Ontario. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret) paid a visit to the beautiful city of Sault Ste. Marie, a city which has in recent years been beset by exceedingly high rates of unemployment. The Minister was there to open the office of FEDNOR, an agency of the Government of Canada set up to administer the Northern Ontario Initiatives Program, a $100 million program to encourage northern Ontario entrepreneurs. It is a program we welcome and badly need.

The Minister was asked why the FEDNOR Advisory Board had only Tory appointees. He replied that the appointments were made without regard to political affiliation. If one can accept that, Sir, such a person would be eligible for honorary membership in the Flat Earth Society. Pressed further by a young reporter, the Minister demanded to know who had made the outrageous charge that only Tories sat on the advisory board. The Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) was named. Said the Minister: "Let him say that outside the House and put his seat on the line." I have repeated the statement outside this House.

I conclude what must be a first for Canada, at least since the time of the railway scandals in the days of Sir John A. Macdonald—to be called a Conservative today is apparently equated somehow with personal defamation of character.

DEATH OF FORMER PREMIER

RENÉ LÉVESQUE (1922-1987)

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, Quebec mourns the loss of René Lévesque who died suddenly yesterday.

René Lévesque was considered the father of modern Quebec. He was able to convince the provincial government to put an end to the power companies monopoly and to establish Hydro-Québec as a powerful economic lever in our province.

This morning, Premier Robert Bourassa had this to say: All of Mr. Lévesque's career had but one goal, just and dynamic progress and growth for Quebec.

He was an extremely engaging and exceptionally talented man. History will remember him as one of our most determined and generous patriots.

The Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) conveyed his admiration, stressing René Lévesque's sincerity. In the Prime Minister's words, he was, in his own way, a champion, a great democrat and a great Quebecer.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Quebec will remember René Lévesque. He made an exceptional contribution to Quebec society for he consistantly strove to improve the living conditions of the ordinary citizen to whom he always remained very close.

Thank You René.

POLITICAL PARTIES

REFORM PARTY OF CANADA MEMBERSHIP

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, this past weekend in Winnipeg, Preston Manning was confirmed as the new Leader of the western-based Reform Party. Mr. Manning and his Party announced that they will field candidates in all western ridings in the next federal election. My NDP colleagues and I welcome the challenge, but I want to point out how ironic it is that 99 per cent of the members of this new Party are disenchanted and disillusioned Conservatives.

How is it that with a Conservative federal Government that purports to speak for western Canada and purports to care about the concerns of western Canadians, the Conservatives in western Canada decide to form another Party? The answer is simple. Conservatives in western Canada are fed up with a scandal-plagued, patronage-ridden, secretive Government. Even with a majority of the seats in western Canada, they cannot get it right.

What have they done on Senate reform? Absolutely nothing. What have they done about federal government purchasing? The situation is actually worse in western Canada than it was during the Trudeau era. What about regional development? They gave $5 million to build Fantasyland, a project which was going to be built anyway, while hundreds of small business people had their requests for similar funding turned down.

It is not surprising that in the next federal election there will be two Conservative Parties on the ballot in western Canada, the Progressive Conservative Party and the Reform Party.

NATIONAL CRIME PREVENTION WEEK

CITIZENS' PARTICIPATION IN ACTIVITIES TO PREVENT CRIME

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, Sunday, November 1, marked the beginning of the fifth National Crime Prevention Week, a special time for cooperation between police, neighbours, educators and businesses. Events have been organized across Canada to call attention to the contribution that everyone can make to better and safer communities.

One of the highlights of the week will be the presentation of National Crime Prevention Awards to deserving individuals and organizations across Canada. The Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kelleher) will be travelling across Canada to honour these Canadians who have helped make their communities safer.

Awareness has grown over the past few years as a majority of Canadians are now engaged in at least one crime prevention activity.

We must continue to work together to involve even more Canadians in initiatives organized to promote crime prevention year round.

DEATH OF FORMER PREMIER

RENÉ LÉVESQUE (1922-1987)

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the untimely death of Mr. René Lévesque has been a shock and has filled with consternation Quebecers and Canadians throughout Canada as well as members in the "Francophonie" governments.

I did not share Mr. Lévesque's political option but I always had great respect for his fervor and sincerity in fighting for this ideas. He has been prominent in the political life of Quebec for nearly 10 years as Premier of that province. His political action forced Quebecers to rethink their Canadian option. Mr. Lévesque also made the rest of Canada consider constitutional amendments to make Quebec more at home in Confederation.

In that sense, the political action of Mr. René Lévesque may have helped bring about the Meech Lake Accord. M. Lévesque will be remembered for the forcefulness and tenacity with which he upheld his convictions. In his own important way, he contributed to the progress of Canada and Quebec.

On behalf of my colleagues, the Liberal members from Quebec, I extend my heartfelt sympathies to his family and friends.

S. O. 21

RENÉ LÉVESQUE (1922-1987)

Mr. André Plourde (Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup): Mr. Speaker, to all my fellow-citizens of the riding of Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup riding, and to the entire population of Quebec, René Lévesque's passing away means the loss of a man who, through his faith and honesty, crystallized for us all the pride of being Quebecers.

Personally, I will remember René Lévesque because of his message of love for Quebec and his deep convinction that Quebec had all the qualities required to assert itself economically, socially and culturally. He was undoubtedly one of the greatest political figures in Canada, and as a member of a rare breed of politicians, always managed to set aside partisan considerations when he fought his great battles for Quebec. Having had the privilege to meet Mr. Lévesque on a few occasions, Mr. Speaker, I had come to realize to what extent he was concerned with the future of Quebec and all its regions. He was a man fully dedicated to service, with a total disregard for himself. His loss, whatever our own persuasion may be, will deprive us of a major contributor in our continuing reflection on Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, it is with a profound emotion and sadness that on behalf of the whole population of the constituency of Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup, I offer my deepest sympathy to Mrs. Lévesque and her family.

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt):

T'was All Hallows' Eve and all thru the riding

7,000 souls were asking, "Where's our MP hiding?"

They stormed the streets, from the smallest child to the mayor

They had voted for hope, all they got was despair.

Jobs, jobs, jobs, whispered a ghost from history,

Three years later, most of Sept-Isle is still on UIC.

"We wanted jobs", the people shouted, "An MP who would listen"

But all they were tossed was a Port Cartier prison.

Meanwhile, back in the gloomy depths of the PMO

Cringed our noble PM, the boy from Baie Comeau,

"I've been run out of Central Nova, now Manicouagan.

Maybe next time, I should run in the Okanagan".

But, alas, his minions said "T'was not all in vain"

For once, they need not answer "So what are the boys saying?"

MINORITIES

IMPORTANCE OF LINGUISTIC RIGHTS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, according to a recent Gallup poll, more than 13 million Canadian men and women, or over 50 per cent of the population, feel that services to the public should be provided in both official languages.

In Ontario, the province with the largest population where the French-speaking minority accounts for 4 per cent of the total population, 49 per cent of respondents favoured services in both official languages.

In Quebec, where the English-speaking minority accounts for 8 per cent of the population, 73 per cent favoured that. It is encouraging to note that a majority of Canadians understand and respect minority language rights.

The goodwill shown by the Ontario Liberal Government in its policy on services provided to the public appears to be snowballing, because last week, Prince Edward Island also promised to follow suit. If this favourable wind reaches out to other provinces, if as promised Quebec does solve its bilingual sign problem, and if this Conservative Government finds the political will needed to put on the agenda its new Official Languages Bill, tremendous progress will have been accomplished in Canada in the area of language minority rights, thanks to the goodwill of Canadians.

HISTORIC EVENTS

SEVENTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF RUSSIAN REVOLUTION—HUMAN RIGHTS RECORD

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, the seventieth anniversary of the Russian revolution is a cause for celebration in the Kremlin, but it marks 70 years of oppression for ethnic and religious minorities in the Soviet Union as well as for political dissidents and freedom fighters. It marks almost half a century of occupation of Latvia, Estonia, and Lithuanuia. It means over four decades of the Red Army imposing governments on the countries of eastern Europe. It means the invasion of Afghanistan. It means becoming the world's leading exporter of arms.

According to the World Human Rights Guide, the Soviet Union scores a mark of only 20 per cent in spite of having signed the Helsinki Human Rights Accord.

• (1410)

Under Chairman Gorbachev there have been highly publicized releases of political prisoners, high on publicity but low on numbers.

The free world may still ask if the professed restructuring of Soviet society is any more than a facade to cover the old structure in which the Soviet people are still confined.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CAPE BRETON CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY UNEMPLOYMENT—CALL FOR OLDER WORKER ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, unemployment in the construction industry on Cape Breton Island is unacceptably high. The Cape Breton Building and Construction Trades Council has concluded that a government program designed to provide a program for older worker adjustment would be most appropriate for the workers represented by the Council.

Since the relative boom years of the late 1960s and early 1970s, when union membership was 25 per cent higher than the present levels, employment prospects for workers in the construction industry in Cape Breton have been bleak.

Many of the 4,500 workers represented by the 14 unions affiliated with the Cape Breton Building and Construction Trades Council have been forced by economic conditions to lead a "merry-go-round" existence which sees them repeating a cycle of short term employment, unemployment insurance, welfare, short term employment, and so on.

At the present time 25 per cent of union members are employed, leaving 3,375 unemployed.

The inevitable consequences of these unstable and marginal employment prospects include stress, ill-health and family breakdown.

I call on the Government of Canada to implement the program it announced several years ago with regard to older workers' adjustment. Stop negotiating with the provinces and start providing some action for older workers.

POLITICAL PARTIES

POSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY ON NATO AND FREE TRADE

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, the Members of the "New Socialist Party" of Canada are acting like lemmings, blindly following ideology and policies which are archaic and myopic regarding the future of Canada.

The New Democrats should take time to examine the record of other socialist Governments. Take NATO and free trade. The NATO Alliance was created by a group of nations, many of which were socialist. When the EEC was created, almost half the countries had socialist Governments. It is very evident that these socialist countries placed the well-being of their people in the forefront.

The point is very simple. NATO is there to ensure that our democratic system of government continues to survive. The European Community realized very early that trade barriers would inhibit their nations' economic growth and hurt their people. They found that when they lowered the trade barriers the distinct European societies, both large and small, were not threatened. Cultural identities, monetary policies, armed forces, and government, all continue to function as before. The only thing that changed was how their people benefited from the improved economic climate.

The NDP should look at the EEC's economic success instead of listening to the Bob Whites of the world whose interests are very narrow. Free trade will give Canada a very healthy future.

TRADE

CANOLA PRODUCTS—EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, canola producers in Canada have lost ground in the Canada-U.S. trade agreement.

The loss of the Western Grain Transportation Program for the transport of canola products to the United States via Vancouver increases the export cost and therefore decreases the value at crushing plants by amounts that range from $25 a tonne in Alberta to between $35 and $38 a tonne for Saskatchewan and Manitoba processors, effective January 1, 1989. Some in the industry also feel that canola oil, only recently accepted for human use in the United States, will be similarly affected.

Canada will be taking a massive cut in its ability to ship canola products. However, it will take 10 years for the U.S. tariff on Canadian shipments of canola oil to be phased out.

In agreeing to this type of non-reciprocal elimination of trading advantages, the Government has once again failed to act in the best interest of Canada's agricultural producers.

POLITICAL PARTIES

POSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC AND LIBERAL PARTIES ON CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are used to mindless opposition, solely for the sake of opposition, from the NDP. This is only to be expected from a party of misfits and losers.

What surprises them is that the Liberals have thrown in their lot with the NDP and adopted the same tactics with respect to the free trade agreement.

"The first thing we will do is to rip up the pact", declares the Liberal Leader (Mr. Turner), in the unlikely event that they ever form the Government. The only thing that this statement indicates to Canadians is that the left-wing rat pack has taken control of the Liberal Party.

Thoughtful analysis has been cast aside, constructive criticism has been abandoned, and the interests of Canadians have been trampled underfoot by an Official Opposition bent only on becoming more obstructionist and reactionary than the NDP, and consequently on its own destruction.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REINSTATEMENT OF TORONTO IMMIGRATION OFFICER

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, last week's decision by the Public Service board which ordered the Government to reinstate Toronto immigration officer, John Quigley, provides a happy ending to what was a very ugly episode. Mr. Quigley was fired back in January for having brought to my attention, after his superiors failed to act, that the Government was inviting people with criminal records to apply for refugee status.

The Government stopped the practice only after the affair was made public, but it nevertheless felt obligated to dismiss Mr. Quigley in order to ease its embarrassment and to intimidate any other officers. The ruling confirms that the politically motivated firing was wrong and unjustified.

I also wish to say to the board's vice-chairman who made the ruling, and who regrettably questioned my judgment and the role of MPs in such issues, that I make no apologies whatsoever for my actions. Given the same circumstances, the same stubborn Government, unwilling to admit and to correct a serious error, I would do it all over again without changing a single beat. After all, the ultimate statement on my actions is by the same Government which put a halt to the questionable practice. It therefore rendered itself guilty all on its own a long time ago.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON PLAIN PEOPLE

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, Abraham Lincoln once said: "God must have loved the plain people: He made so many of them". The plain people mentioned by Lincoln are the rank and file, the ordinary people, the workers.

Today I want to talk about the plain people. I believe I can speak for them because I am one of them. Common people have a tough time making both ends meet. They are not flush with this world's goods and many live from hand to mouth. Any reduction in the things they have to buy is a godsend. That is why free trade is attractive to the rank and file. Most, if not all, of the things they buy will be cheaper under free trade.

It will be a bonanza for the young couple planning marriage, as washing machines, dishwashers, bed sheets, furniture, et cetera will save them a lot of dollars. There will be jobs, and opportunities to advance as Canadians as we will lose no sovereignty.

Free trade will open the doors to a whole new world for Canada and Canadians. That is why the PC Party is fighting the Liberals, the New Democrats and the leaders of the trade unions. We want the workers to have a future, a great future. Free trade can give it to them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

TRADE

TEXT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT—REQUEST FOR FINAL VERSION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, first we were told that the final text of the Canada—United States trade agreement would be available in October. Then, we were told that it might not be ready before the end of November. Now, it was reported last weekend that we might not receive the final, legal text before the Parliamentary Committee has completed its public hearings.

According to the Minister of International Trade, everything we need to know about this agreement is contained in the document entitled Elements of Agreement. On page 17 of this document, we find that Canada and the United States "have agreed on a text which would enhance our mutual rights and obligations under the GATT and Standards Code".

I the two countries have indeed agreed on a text, where is it?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as I told the committee last week, we expect to have the agreement between Canada and the U.S. filed some time between the beginning and the end of November. I do not know if that is what the hon. gentleman's question addresses or not, but that is how I understood it.

SERVICE INDUSTRIES—NEED FOR FINAL TEXT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister still thinks that the people who will be appearing before the committee do not need a more precise text in order to analyse the affect of the agreement on their own particular businesses and professions. We take the position that the country and the elements of the country need a final text in order to appear intelligently before the committee.

• (1420)

I wish to refer to page 19 of the same document where it states that Canada and the United States "have agreed to complete a final text", and it lays out a set of disciplines covering a large number of service sectors.

Since the service industries—transportation, insurance, banks, and the computer industry are the fastest growing areas of our economy—do not have a final text, and since the people in these industries need to know what the effect of the agreement is in precise terms upon their industries and companies before they appear before the public committee, then I say to the Minister, if the two parties have agreed to a final text, where is the final text? Where is the document upon which people can make intelligent appraisals and decisions in detail affecting their industries, before this committee?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think we should point out to the House that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition did not need a text before he decided to walk away from the deal, then to tear up the deal, and now this weekend to renegotiate the deal. He managed to take three completely different positions on the free trade agreement without ever actually seeing the text at all.

In regard to the service industries, I could point out to the Right Hon. Member some of the comments that have been made by members of the service industries. Chris Greene, the President of the Canadian Association of Management Consultants, stated, "I am very, very excited with our world-class expertise and our Canadian structures. I think it will have a block-buster effect on our clients and our professionals".

William Shields, the Executive Director of the Royal Architectural Institute, stated, "We are delighted, because otherwise we would have to go to every state and province and lobby for these changes".

People in these industries are on record as supporting the agreement that we made in services, and they are looking forward to being able to operate in the future under the terms of the free trade agreement.

DISPUTE SETTLEMENT MECHANISM

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, people who need absolute detail, before deciding on the basis of advice that they receive from their lawyers, accountants, and bankers to appear before this committee, need a final text.

On the current timetable of the Minister, and particularly reinforced by stories this weekend, the text will not be available before the committee hearings conclude.

Let us look at another page of this document as it relates to the so-called dispute settlement mechanism. With respect to this mechanism, the documents upon which a final decision has to be made, say "The provisions of this part shall apply . . . except as provided in the Annex". That is to say, the dispute mechanism shall apply to a list of things, "except as provided in the annex".

I turn to the annex and all it has is "AD/CVD/Financial Services". There is no complete annex. There is no annex at all. There is no way that any industry or company in this country looking at this document can ascertain whether the dispute mechanism would apply to its their particular situation.

Once again, how are people going to be able to comment on the purview and content of this agreement without a final text that spells it out a little further than this blank annex in this current agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I do not have the elements of the agreement with me here in the House, but I can answer to the dispute settlement mechanism.

As outlined in the "Elements of the Agreement" which we have tabled in the House, it covers three particular circumstances. First, it covers disputes arising out of the agreement itself, and it shows how those disputes would be dealt with. Second, it deals with the disputes that arise specifically out of trade remedies such as countervail and anti-dumping. Third, it deals with disputes in the area of financial services.

I hope that that information is useful to the Right Hon. Member.

EFFECT OF AGREEMENT ON TRUCKING INDUSTRY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister for International Trade.

A few days ago the Chairman of the Manitoba Motor Transport Board stated that the free trade agreement proposal will lead to the "complete domination of our highway transport industry by Americans".

The President of the Ontario Trucking Association stated that it has "the potential to devastate the Ontario trucking industry and the Canadian trucking industry". Tens of thousands of jobs are at stake.

• (1425)

Why is it that the Government in its agreement initialled with the United States did not take into account the provisions of the new transportation legislation, which the House passed just three months ago, that provided for a complete review of all takeovers and acquisitions in the trucking industry at a threshold of $10 million, in order to provide protection for truckers against total takeovers?

Why did Ministers not take that into account in the agreement which they initialled? Why did they wipe it out? Why are they wiping out the jobs of all those truckers?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I reject entirely the claim that is being made by the Hon. Member in this regard. Therefore, there is nothing that I can comment on at this time.

Mr. Axworthy: The Minister's rejection is just a clear admission of error, of fault, and of grievous injustice which will be done to the trucking industry.

EXEMPTIONS FOR UNITED STATES MARITIME INDUSTRY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, why was it in negotiating this agreement that the Americans were able to gain exemptions for their maritime industry, which were entrenched and grandfathered in the agreement, but we were not able to get similar protection or exemption provisions for our trucking industry?

Could the Minister explain that major discrepancy and advantage which the Americans got over the Canadians in the very crucial transportation area?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member may not be aware of the fact that since this Government took power we have been deregulating in the area of transportation. I would refer him to the measures we have taken in this regard.

In terms of the Jones Act, the Americans ring-fenced that provision as something they are not able to deal with at this time, in the same manner that we ring-fenced those interests that are important to us, such as retaining Canadian ownership of energy, for instance, a point which the Hon. Member often overlooks.

TWO-PRICE WHEAT SYSTEM

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise some questions with the Minister for International Trade with regard to a whole set of ambiguities and uncertainties which exist with the text of the agreement in front of us but with no actual detailed outline of what has been negotiated.

I should like to start, if I may, by asking the Minister to try to clear up an ambiguity in respect of our two-price wheat system. Before the committee on Thursday Mr. Reisman said that two-price wheat was not something we had to worry about and that it would continue. Yet, on Friday, the Minister responsible for grains indicated quite clearly to the House that there was a clear possibility of the two-price system disappearing quite quickly. Mr. Devine, the Premier of Saskatchewan, has indicated the same. What is the situation here?

I ask the Minister to clear up this ambiguity and to tell Canadians and farmers across the country what they face in the future.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, there is no ambiguity at all. I refer the Hon. Member to the statement made in the House in Question Period last week by the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board in which he said that it was too soon to tell what will happen to the two-price system under the proposed free trade deal. He pointed out and made very clear that if it comes under pressure as the tariffs go down, grain farmers would be compensated for any benefits they might lose under any trade deal. He made that point very clearly and repeatedly in reply to the questions he was asked.

Mr. Langdon: Perhaps I should send a dictionary across to the Minister to indicate what uncertainty or ambiguity actually means, because her answer has just described it perfectly.

TRANSPORTATION ANNEX TO AGREEMENT—REPORTED PUBLICATION IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a second question for this Minister. There has been leaked in the United States a transportation annex to the agreement. It has been published with a fair amount of detail in business publications in the United States, yet transportation groups within this country are not able to respond to the details of that transportation annex. It is not something which has been put to the public.

• (1430)

Will she see to it that that transportation annex is published in its present form so that transport groups and companies can react, speak out, and give their sense of what this agreement is all about?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am unaware of the transportation annex about which the Hon. Member speaks. It is not clear from his question whether it is an American transportation annex or a Canadian transportation annex. I will have to ask him to be a little more explicit about the nature of the annex since I am not aware of it.

QUERY CONCERNING TERMINATION CLAUSE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, in fact, the ambassador and the deputy ambassador speaking to the committee on Thursday spoke of the transportation annex being negotiated. The fact that the Minister does not know about it frankly is scandalous.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is not what she said.

Mr. Langdon: I ask the Minister a third question with respect to the details of this agreement.

[Translation]

Will the Minister now tell us when this agreement will be completed? Will it be in one, two, four or five years? What is the answer?

Mr. Nystrom: Soon.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, may I point out that the Hon. Member has attributed to me something that I did not say. I said very clearly that his question did not indicate whether he was talking about an American annex or a Canadian annex and I asked him to clarify that. I think it is scandalous from that position he would impute that I was unaware of the evidence of our ambassadors to the trade committee. May I point out that any annex, including a transportation annex will, of course, be published when the full agreement is published.

In terms of his question about the termination clause, I have said several times in this House that that will be negotiated in the final agreement. I have pointed out several times in the House that the U.S. trade law restricts that kind of clause to six months. There are discussions taking place about how a longer termination clause can be provided for in this agreement. That is one of the things being undertaken in these discussions which will take the "Elements of the Agreement" and present in a final text which will be presented to Parliament.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

SEPT-ÎLES CITIZENS' FILE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I understand that even though he did not walk with us in Sept-Îles on Saturday, the Prime Minister still got cold feet, and in his absence, I shall address my question to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. For some days now, the Minister has assured us that he would have an answer for us and that he would examine the problems of the people of Sept-Îles. I had informed him that there would be a major demonstration and that the people of Sept-Îles would have a clear and specific message for the Government. After the demonstration on Saturday, and I imagine that the Prime Minister must have panicked, I would like to ask the Minister if he can give us any news today.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as I told my hon. colleague, on October 22, I met with the economic participants in the Sept-Îles region who told me about their concerns for economic development. At the time, I very clearly indicated that I had asked for an economic development plan not only for Sept-Iles, but for the whole North Shore. This economic development plan is progressing well. I expect to receive it this week and to have it approved by Cabinet within a few weeks. Indeed, I have promised the people of Sept-Iles this plan for December and there is now no reason to believe that they will have to wait any longer than that.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, after that answer, it is not surprising if the galleries are getting empty.

INVESTMENT TAX CREDIT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The people in Sept-Îles who met with your predecessor, the Minister of Finance and yourself did not ask for a sophisticated plan that could only be delivered by Santa Claus but for something as simple as an investment tax credit. Did you discuss it with your desk mate, the Minister of Finance? Are you going to deliver it, yes or no?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, obviously we are going to deliver an economic and development plan which will boost the whole economy of the area. I shall quote the last paragraph of a letter from the Port-Cartier Chamber of Commerce to my hon. colleague, in which he was told: "We remind you that concrete and sustained action is required to win people's confidence and that it is improper to take them hostage for political purposes." I wish that my hon. colleague would remember that. This letter tells it all and I hope you will keep it.

INVESTMENT TAX CREDIT—CITIZENS OF SEPT-ÎLES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, last Saturday, 7,000 people in Sept-Îles put a very clear and precise question to the Government. Does the Government intend to give them the instrument required for the economic renewal of the area, that is the investment tax credit which is available to other areas with a similar unemployment rate?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, when you talk about economic development, more than one single instrument is involved. Recently, we acted with the Western Diversification Office and the Atlantic Development Agency. We already have a plan for Eastern of the Quebec. I recently announced the official opening of a new agency for Northern Ontario. As I indicated to my colleague of the Official Opposition a few minutes ago, we are putting the finishing touch to the measures and details of a development plan for the whole north shore region. It is a disadvantaged region which deserves our attention, but which deserves more than simply an economic expansion tool, which deserves a series of economic expansion mechanisms designed to create jobs and attract the kind of investments it needs to achieve its full potential.

SEPT-ÎLES REGION'S NEEDS—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT RESPOND IN BETTER MANNER

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, other regions benefit from investment tax credits, so why not the Sept-Îles region? Why only vague promises instead of a response to clear, specific and fair claims? Why not respond to the needs of that region?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Precisely, Mr. Speaker, what we are trying to do is respond to the needs of the region. The needs of the region are enormous, and we intend to implement a series of programs and policies to enable the people of the region to fulfill the kind of potential they are entitled to achieve in the very near future.

ENERGY

COME-BY-CHANCE OIL REFINERY—ACCESS TO CANADIAN MARKET

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. The Government of Canada has heralded the continental energy policy as an important plank in the free trade agreement. This continental policy means a free flow of energy goods between Canada and the United States.

How is it that the Government of Canada is prepared to allow American refineries wide open access to the Canadian market and at the same time, through Petro-Canada, is denying the Come-by-Chance oil refinery in Newfoundland access to the Canadian market for the next 25 years?

Is the Deputy Prime Minister prepared to admit today that under the Petro-Canada contract and following the imposition of a free trade agreement the Come-by-Chance oil refinery in Newfoundland, in the country's poorest province, will be the only refinery in the nation, in fact the only refinery in North America, that will not be allowed access to the Canadian market? What kind of discrimination is that, insane discrimination, against Canada's poorest province?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think that question was asked last week and answered by the Minister of Transport. I think he dealt with it very fully.

• (1440)

RESTRICTION ON SALE OF PRODUCT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Government preaches a policy of regional development and practises a policy of regional disparity and discrimination. Given that Air Canada, a Crown corporation; Marine Atlantic, a Crown corporation; Quebec Hydro, New Brunswick Hydro, P.E.I. Hydro and a host of others have all tried to buy product from the Come-by-Chance oil refinery in Newfoundland but have been refused because of the restrictive clauses enforced by Petro-Canada at the request of the Minister of Energy, when will the Government wake up, remove these discriminatory clauses and allow Newfoundland, Canada's poorest province, to realize its full potential in the refining industry? Why carry on with this policy of discriminating against Canada's poorest citizens?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, some time ago the Hon. Member was criticizing the Government—

Mr. Tobin: This is not Fantasyland, it's Newfoundland. Wake up.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member would want to extend to the Minister the same courtesy that was extended to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, there have been criticisms coming from the other side about the Government not doing anything to facilitate the opening of the Come-by-Chance refinery and this Government took an initiative to see that that occurred. In so far as his comments about this Government's failure to respond to regional disparities are concerned, I think the record clearly shows that a number of initiatives—

Mr. Tobin: Why the restrictions?

Mr. Mazankowski: Why the restrictions? The Minister of Transport answered that question very fully. I regret that the Hon. Member does not accept that answer. He can certainly take issue with it, but that is the fact—

Mr. Tobin: You can remove them and your problem is solved.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister has the floor.

Mr. Mazankowski: With respect to the Hon. Member's criticism of this Government's regional economic expansion initiatives, I think the record clearly speaks for itself. It has been elaborated on by the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology. The Atlantic Opportunities Agency is operating, the Western Diversification Program is operating, the Northern Ontario Economic Development Program is in operation, and IRDAs have been negotiated with all 10 provinces. We are attempting to do more in terms of procurement. The list goes on and on.

The Hon. Member knows that unemployment in his province has dropped by probably four to five percentage points since this Government assumed office.

FINANCE

REGULATION OF INVESTMENT INDUSTRY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. Last week, in spite of the world staring into the ugly face of potential recession, only one question of the 54 the Opposition asked dealt with this possible economic crisis. I now ask the Minister, in view of authorities such as Henry Kaufman claiming that the investment industry may need re-regulating to take into account the unprecedented globalization of that industry, what initiatives is the Government, along with the provinces, now considering to stabilize the investment market and possibly to forestall any future investment earthquakes?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his interest in this important matter. I would say that two-thirds of the Government's task at the federal level has been accomplished already with Bill C-42 and Bill C-56 whereby we put in place a stronger supervisory system for financial institutions. We also improved the prudent portfolio regime for financial institutions, plus, of course, measures for controlling conflict of interest and self-dealing, and we put in place new investment rules. All of this has been accomplished by those two Bills and a third Bill which we will introduce in the next month.

I have also been in touch with my provincial counterparts to ascertain what we can do with the provinces because, of course, they regulate the securities exchanges. I have talked to most of them and a number of fruitful ideas will be pursued at our next meeting.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

WESTERN CANADA'S SHARE OF PROCUREMENT CONTRACTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It also deals with regional fairness and equal treatment.

Today figures were released showing that western Canada's share of supply and service contracts has gone down from 14.2 per cent to 11.8 per cent in the past two years, meaning that it is even worse than it was during the Liberals' years under Mr. Trudeau. Since we in western Canada represent nearly 30 per cent of the population of this country, why are we receiving only 11.8 per cent of national contracts from the Department? Why does the Government not treat Manitoba, British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Alberta and the Territories more fairly?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question and fully acknowledge that there is an imbalance in terms of procurement. Steps are being taken to correct this. For example, in 1986-87 western firms received about $1 billion worth of contracts and this represented an increase of about 25 per cent over the previous year. I am also happy to report that the number of active suppliers in western Canada has increased by some 50 per cent.

I should say at the outset that one of the things that we as a Government attempted to do was to address the very fundamental problems affecting western Canada in the agriculture sector, the energy sector, and the investment sector. By dismantling FIRA we have now been able to attract a lot of foreign investment dollars into that part of the country and that is creating jobs and economic activity. We have redressed the transportation policies and of course have brought forth a proposal to enhance trade with the United States and with other countries.

I think those are very fundamental steps that are welcomed in western Canada and indeed endorsed by western Canada. The fact is that we do have a slight imbalance in terms of procurement and I acknowledge that. I can also assure the Hon. Member that steps are being taken to redress that.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I remind the Deputy Prime Minister that nearly 30 per cent of the population is in western Canada. I want to know why we got only 11.8 per cent of the share. Why is western Canada's share declining? Specifically, what will the Government do to make sure that we in the West get our fair share? It is even worse now than it was two years ago.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I thought I outlined some specific steps that were being taken, and I can also include the western diversification initiative which is encouraging and motivating many high technology companies and companies that had not heretofore done business with the federal Government to become involved in bidding on government contracts. The western diversification initiative, besides being a program for further economic development, is also used as a pathfinder in terms of utilization of existing programs and procurement policies, and the results are starting to show.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

SALE OF BANK OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—TAX-FREE PAYMENT TO HONGKONG BANK

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance and it concerns the deal that allowed the Hongkong Bank of Canada to exclude $200 million from income for tax purposes. In the proceedings of this House and the Senate last year, there is no hint that the $200 million was to be given tax-free, yet we now know that is how the deal was cut. Will the Minister tell the House why he withheld this information from Parliament?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that I did not withhold any information of that sort from Parliament. In fact this particular question was pursued and discussed in Committee of the Whole and also in the Senate. The Hon. Member knows that what we bought in this particular instance for $200 million was a guarantee from the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank, one of the largest banks in the world. The money goes to its address, and if it isoffshore it is removed taxed offshore. The Hon. Member knows that. There is no mystery to that.

• (1450)

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have been through Hansard and the Senate records very carefully and never was there a hint that this money was being paid to anyone but the Hongkong Bank of Canada. The parent company was mentioned in terms of the security, but we were told this money was being paid to the Hongkong Bank of Canada and we were not told it would be tax-free. As for the quality of the deal, that is not at issue. It may have been a wise decision, but what is at issue is the method.

FAIRNESS OF TAX SYSTEM—GOVERNMENT RESPONSIBILITY

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Finance. He has said Governments have a particular responsibility to ensure the tax system is perceived by all taxpayers to be fair. Does the Minister think that taxpayers will perceive as fair a secret deal with a foreign bank which allows it to receive $200 million tax-free from a Crown corporation?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think my colleague and I have made it very clear that our motivation was to save a bank. The Hongkong and Shanghai banking corporation was the only entity in the Hongkong family of companies that could give the necessary guarantees. As I said on Friday, we have made clear the elements of the deal and I do not think the way it was done should undermine the tax system in any way.

MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of State for Finance on the same issue. On October 27 the Minister told this House that the deal was so complicated that:

> —no one, if they had asked, would have been able to figure out the tax implications . . . Those questions were not asked and not considered because the problem was quite different.

Yet on Friday the Minister of Finance admitted to the country that the Department of Finance knew all along that the deal was structured in such a way as to enable the Hongkong Bank of Canada to avoid paying $100 million in taxes.

Did the Minister know that the deal was structured to save that bank $100 million when he stated in the House that he was not aware of the tax implications?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the arrangement was not structured to avoid taxes. Let me explain the contradiction that he thinks is there.

First, with respect to the payment going to an address offshore, that means the offshore bank would be paying taxes offshore. The comment I was making was that the structure of the Hongkong Bank of Canada, put together with the Bank of British Columbia, was such that it was very difficult to tell how much capital it had, what its provisioning would be, what its taxable position would be. Therefore my comment was about the Canadian subsidiary, and that of the Minister of Finance was about the parent.

REVENUE CANADA RULING

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, it is really a question of integrity. Can this Government not do something that is straight, honest and above-board, and not attempt to shift the burden from CDIC to the backs of taxpayers, which you have done in structuring this deal in the way you have structured it? The question also is—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member will put his question and put it properly and not slip into using the personal pronoun.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, was the Minister aware that several days before the deal was signed, and several days before he stood up in the House and said there were no tax implications to this deal, the Department of National Revenue, in a letter to the Hongkong Bank's Canadian subsidiary, had already ruled that the $200 million payment to the Hongkong Bank to aid in the takeover would not be taxable?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, again there is a need for clarification because there is great confusion implicit in that question.

The comment I was replying to was to the effect that if the CDIC makes a payment, that somehow affects taxpayers. The CDIC is funded by member institutions. Therefore it is their funds, not taxpayer funds, that are used. That was the clarification I was making.

Finally, we went to all the major Canadian financial institutions, Schedule A banks included, to try to find a buyer for this bank. We could not find one here. We finally found one offshore. As a result, we saved the bank, saved the jobs of 1,500 employees, and saved a regional financial institution.

TRADE

UNITED STATES EXPORT ENHANCEMENT PROGRAM—REPORTED SALE OF WHEAT TO ALGERIA

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement the U.S. undertakes to take Canada's interest into account when it uses its export subsidy programs. Yet today we learned that the U.S. has funded the sale of some 525,000 tonnes of wheat under its Export Enhancement Program in two sales to Algeria. Why does the U.S. continue to break the agreement, and what is the Government doing to ensure that it lives up to the terms of the agreement in using its export subsidy program, which is not only stealing away Canadian markets but is driving down the price Canadian farmers receive for their grain?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Export Enhancement Program is a matter of concern to us all. I raised it in a vigorous discussion with Mr. Shultz a little over a week ago when I was in Brussels. I have heard reports with respect to a sale to Algeria. There was an intervening report that they had backed away from that, but I would have to check to see if they have attempted to use the Export Enhancement Program in this way. In any event, as we have discussed before, that is not a new program.

POSITION OF UNITED STATES ADMINISTRATION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, everyone knows it is not a new program. Obviously the Government did not get a firm commitment that the U.S. would not use it. However, I wonder what kind of commitment the Minister got from Mr. Shultz. The U.S. Secretary of Agriculture, at about the same time the Minister was meeting with Mr. Shultz, said the U.S. was going to continue to use this program and gain more markets. There was no indication it was going to take Canada's interests into account at all. This is in direct defiance of the agreement.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in so far as the agreement is concerned, we have been through this before and there is a difference of interpretation which has to do precisely with the question of whether this is a new program.

Regarding the application of the Export Enhancement Program, we do not like that practice. We will continue to make our case and we hope to be able to win that case. So far we have not. As the Hon. Member knows, the fact that the U.S. has been using this program against traditional Canadian markets and others has not stopped Canada from being very aggressive and very successful in international grain sales.

RAILWAYS

DELAY IN GRAIN DELIVERIES TO THUNDER BAY—NEED FOR MORE HOPPER CARS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. He is undoubtedly aware that for more than a month the railways have failed to deliver enough grain to the Port of Thunder Bay to meet commitments there. Ships have been lying idle in the harbour and workers on lay-off when they would like to be at work moving grain into the ships. Last Thursday the Dominion Marine Association called for a public inquiry into the grain transportation agency.

When does the Government intend to recognize the need for more hopper cars on the Prairies in order to move grain? In particular, when does it plan to ensure that the CNR is up to the challenge it faces in keeping our grain moving?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, according to my information, four ships are now being loaded, while eight are idle. We are indeed very concerned about the situation the Hon. Member just mentioned.

[English]

DOMINION MARINE ASSOCIATION'S REQUEST FOR ACTION

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the Government should be aware of the situation and should not have to take this as notice. The Dominion Marine Association is calling for action and my colleagues have been pressing the Government to take action on behalf of western Canada.

When does the Deputy Prime Minister plan to take action in order to ensure that our grain handling system is up to the task it faces so we can avoid the discrimination between Canadian ports which Thunder Bay is suffering from at the moment?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that grain shipments have been at an all-time record high. That applies to the movement of grain out of both our major Ports of Vancouver and Thunder Bay. As a matter of fact, my understanding is that movements are up, in the order of 35 to 40 per cent. I think that is a pretty good record.

• (1500)

In any event I will certainly look into the matter and get back to the Member, I hope later this week.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

ALLEGED NON-PAYMENT OF DUES BY UNITED STATES AND ITALY

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. Is it true that the GATT might soon become inoperative because member states such as the United States and Italy have not paid their dues? Does this concern the Government of Canada? Before we cast the first stone, are we current with our subscription?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that we are in a position to cast stones, if necessary, on this issue because we certainly have paid our GATT assessment. We were one of the first countries to pay the 1987 GATT assessment. We are looking to pay the 1988 GATT assessment as soon as possible because of the problems which the GATT has experienced due to the failure of certain countries to pay their membership dues.

This illustrates the fact that we place a lot of importance on the GATT as our multilateral trade institution. We were a founding member of it and are one of the leading proponents of reform of the GATT. That has been acknowledged by the GATT in assigning Canada a very high profile role in the fortieth anniversary of the GATT which is coming up soon.

Mr. Speaker: I want to advise the House that there will be a question from the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier followed by a question from the Hon. Member for Don Valley East, and that will close off Question Period.

WINTER OLYMPIC GAMES

TELEVISING IN ENGLISH AND FRENCH OF WINTER OLYMPIC FROM CALGARY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns the Calgary Winter Games that will be held from February 13 to 28, 1988, less than three months from now.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, the CBC's English network has an agreement for television broadcasting of the games in English, one hour a day for sixteen days, across Canada. There has been no agremeent with the French network for a similar service.

I would like to ask the Minister whether he agrees with the letter the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) (Mr. Jelinek) circulated, and I will quote the letter verbatim:

"As you know, the Government of Canada has a one-third interest in the Fifteenth Olympic Winter Games. It has contributed about $200 million in non-tax revenue, in addition to central services".

Doesn't the Government consider television broadcasting in English and French an essential service for this country, when an event as important as the Olympic Games is concerned?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Government considers it very important that coverage of the Winter Olympics in Calgary be in both official languages. It is important to advise the House that the problems which developed with the agreement were as a result of broadcasting rights which were awarded by the former Government.

I understand that a solution was proposed to the joint committee last week and that an agreement arrived at among CANCOM, the CRTC, and the cable companies will provide comparable Olympic coverage to Francophones and Anglophones throughout Canada.

REQUEST FOR COVERAGE IN BOTH OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, first, the Olympic committee gave the rights, not the Government. Second, not all francophone communities in Canada have access to French language cable. There is no access to French language cable in Newfoundland, B.C., Manitoba, New Brunswick, and parts of Ontario—my own province. It is unsatisfactory to say that they will receive coverage through cable. It is a cop-out.

Will the Minister and his Government make it possible for the Olympic Games, which received $200 million, to make an agreement with CBC and Radio Canada, to which 99 per cent of all Canadians have access whether they speak French or English, so that Canadians have access to the games in their own language?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the question addresses the point which I made at the beginning of my answer. The Government believes that Canadians of both official language groups have the right to full Olympic coverage. I gave the Hon. Member the information on the work that was being done. Personnel from the Department of Communications are working with the CBC in an effort to resolve the problem and ensure that the coverage is as requested by the Hon. Member.

BANKS AND BANKING

CHARTERED BANKS—INCREASED SERVICE CHARGES

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs and is with regard to the inordinate increases in bank service charges. I refer to such things as rental of safety deposit boxes. A $2 increase may not sound like much, but when added to an original charge of $2.50 it is an 80 per cent increase.

Has the Chairman heard similar complaints, especially from lower-income people or senior citizens? Would he consider putting this issue on the agenda of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs for analysis and possible investigation?

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the committee is nearly finished its work on tax reform and will be studying other matters, in particular this issue which has been brought to the attention of myself and other committee members and is causing the committee members some concern. It seems that charges are unreasonable and that something ought to be done about that. Perhaps they ought to be investigated.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-87, an Act respecting the imposition of duties and customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters and to amend or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if I could have an elaboration of the ruling made this morning. I wanted to stand and make comments on the speech made by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) last Friday. It had been my intention to do so last Friday afternoon, but the time ran out. I, therefore, wanted to do it this morning. It was not my intention to ask any questions, only to make some comments.

The Standing Orders are silent on this matter. Would the Chair elaborate on its ruling in order that we could prepare ourselves?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Chair has made a ruling and as soon as I receive the precedents I will pass them along to the Hon. Member.

When the House rose at 1.07 p.m. the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) had the floor on debate. Since she is not in the House, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner).

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in debate on Bill C-87 which is a Bill respecting the imposition of customs and other charges. The Bill has to do with providing relief against the imposition of certain duties. By this Act we are revising our present and very complex system of describing and coding commodities that go into international trade. It has been well documented for a long while that goods often fall into more than one of these categories. That, of course, causes confusion and does not help in attaining what we all want, that is, fair and easier multinational trade.

It should be noted that Bill C-87 is part of a multilateral agreement that was worked out among the EEC countries, the United States of America, Japan, and Canada. Work on the revision of this complicated code began in Canada in 1981. The actual international negotiations began in October of 1986, and the changes that we have in Bill C-87 were negotiated with Canada's trading partners which belong to the General Agreement on Trade and Tariffs.

What will Bill C-87 do for the country? What will it do for our exporters and our importers? It will make it easier for them to classify goods. It will reduce the number of classification appeals which are always expensive and time consuming. Of course, no one in the world of business is particularly keen on a great deal of government red tape. Therefore, the passage of this Bill should make it easier to do business and trade with the European Economic Community, Japan and our largest and most important of all trading partners, that is, the United States of America.

It is almost unnecessary for anyone to say that Canada is a trading nation, but recognizing that fact is absolutely essential in understanding our national economy. Our prosperity depends essentially on how much of our goods and services we can sell throughout the world, whether it is in Europe, Asia—including the market in China which is opening up—Latin America or the United States.

Interestingly enough, our exporters do not have to work quite as hard at finding a market in the United States as they do in some parts of the world.

It has become very easy for us to do business with the Americans. While I could be challenged on this observation, I believe that sometimes it has led to a certain laziness or lack of ambition of some exporters to try to find those more difficult markets abroad.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that wonderful occasion when I was under your leadership on a very important visit to the People's Republic of China. You may recall that questions were raised with the delegation about why our business people in Canada were not more energetic. We were asked why they do not try harder when there are business opportunities for them in China.

We were told that the Chinese like Canada because of what it did a long while ago in leading the western world in the recognition of the legitimacy of the Chinese Government. We were asked why Canadian businessmen did not take advantage of that fact.

That is a good question and one that I cannot answer. Perhaps a clue lies in the fact that we have had it so easy both in the past and in the present in doing business with the United States that we do not try harder in some other parts of the world.

This afternoon we are debating the principle of Bill C-87. It seems to me that the principle is basically sound. First, it is that multilateral trade is essential because we in Canada, as trading nation, would never want to put ourselves in a position of being locked into doing business with a single customer.

I suggest that anyone in business would be just a little worried if their goods were sold to one buyer. If that customer decided to operate differently, what would become of the supplier?

It is always healthier to diversify, and the approach Canada must take is to trade as widely as possible throughout the world and leave no potential market unexploited. We have good products to sell and there are good business people in this country. We do not want to miss any area of the world where a Canadian product could be provided.

The easier and freer the trade in most cases, the better it is for Canada. I recognize, however, that there are certain circumstances where certain regions of the country with a certain product at a certain time may require a degree of protection. However, it should always be emphasized to those people that the protection must be temporary in nature as a means to become established. It should not be regarded as a permanent government protection.

We are beginning a national debate on a new trade deal between Canada and the United States. A number of questions can be asked about this agreement which I believe relate directly to the principle of the Bill before us. There are questions that I want to pose: Does the new trade agreement that has been negotiated with the United States really provide freer and easier access to the U.S. market? Does it really save us from the threat of U.S. protectionism which is growing and causing a good deal of concern in our country? Does it really give us any greater and wider access to the U.S. market than we have now? Does it mean that our tremendous trade surplus with the United States will become still greater?

As I listen to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promote the deal that he and his officials negotiated, I get the idea that our multi-billion dollar trade surplus—which I believe to be in the neighbourhood of $20 billion—will perhaps double. While I have not heard that exact prediction, it is the impression I get from listening to what has been promised. There will be an increase in the trade surplus and there will be more direct jobs as a result.

I want to make some preliminary comments on the initial transcript of the elements of a Canada-U.S. agreement. That is all we can do since we do not yet have the details. I suggest that everything to be said about this agreement must be preliminary in nature.

First, the debate that is beginning to take shape will feature a number of leading characters in this country, including economists, academics, politicians, trade unionists, people from the business sector, agriculture and so on. It should be very clear that what we are debating in Canada is not free trade versus protectionism. If the debate is nothing else than that, I suggest that it will be a futile effort, largely a waste of time. While such a debate will stir the emotions on each side of the question, I do not think much will be accomplished.

It is generally agreed that freer and easier trade is better than locking ourselves into an isolationist cell. That would be absurd and could hardly be the subject of any kind of debate. Therefore, the debate in Canada should not be the highly academic one of free trade versus protectionism. That should be left for an assignment we might very well give to a first-year class in economics. But that is not the issue in this debate.

The real debate is the Canada-U.S. trade agreement that has been negotiated, what exists now, and what we could have if a better agreement had been negotiated. The questions we must ask are: For whom is this trade agreement good, for whom is it not so good, and for whom is it downright dangerous and even damaging?

It is extremely difficult to speak definitively on this issue because we do not have all the details of the agreement. It seems to me rather premature for a Commons committee to begin an intensive study and analysis since we need the details in order to do that. We want to debate the question in terms of what is known. We do not want the debate to be hysterical in nature, we want it to be informed and balanced.

I suggest that once we have the full agreement, it is then vital and quite necessary that all the time necessary be set aside to see whether or not we have a good agreement. In other words, a timetable, a time restriction of a few weeks or a few months cannot be put on it. Let us have enough time. If we are doing something as important for the future of our nation as this trade agreement may be, we need time to consider for whom it will be detrimental and in what ways. Whose well-being will it contribute to in the economic terms of our nation? What threats are there, if any, to our sovereignty, to our political independence?

As we are drawn deeper and deeper into the U.S. economy acted out on the stage of a North American continentalism, what will be the benefits for Canada? What will be the gains and the losses? Surely, to raise those questions is in no way to be unfair to the Government. To raise those questions, it seems to me, is the responsibility of every citizen. It certainly is the responsibility of those who are elected to represent our citizens in the House of Commons. So each sector and each Canadian interest must carefully examine for itself or have done for it how the U.S.-Canada trade agreement will impact upon it.

The grape growers, for example, are concerned. Are their concerns legitimate? Are they well based in reality and in fact? The automobile workers are worried about the effects on the Auto Pact which has benefited them with secure jobs, in most cases, and reasonable benefits for the work they do. Canadians wonder whether our financial institutions will face the possibility of U.S. takeovers. If they are taken over by U.S. interests, what will this do to our banking system? Will it improve it or will it be detrimental to the banking system? Will we lose control if we no longer have the financial institutions under our jurisdiction fully and totally? Will somehow our economic control be diminished at the same time?

The agricultural critics on this side of the House have raised many important questions and concerns. They need to be answered. The Premier of Ontario and his Government are apprehensive, to put it mildly, about the possible effects of this Canada-U.S. trade agreement on a very healthy Ontario economy.

The list is a long one. But coming as I do from northern Ontario, which is a resource region of this country, I have some questions that my constituents are putting to me, questions that need answers. Let me say at the beginning that I do not in any way fear a policy which gives the Americans the first option on the buying of Canadian resources. If they buy those resources which, first of all, we have all determined are excess to our domestic needs, and we have set them aside for export purposes to be purchased at fair market value by the Americans, our good friends, our friends with whom we are aligned internationally and in terms of defence arrangements, then to give them first option is not repugnant to me at all. It makes perfectly good sense. But when we do that, can we be assured by the Government in this debate that there will be no resource grabs?

What do I mean by that? Can we have the assurance that, if there is unrestricted investment from the United States in the development of our resources, we will still be able to control our own resource policy? Will we still be able to make those decisions that this amount of our resources is surplus, eligible for export, can be sold at a fair price, and the Americans can have first option? Can we have that assurance?

We in northern Ontario in recent years have been the beneficiaries of free trade. We have, for example, had free trade in pulp, paper, lumber and minerals. It was only in the 1980s that we were suddenly shocked, as if a pail of cold water had been thrown on our heads, by the U.S. countervail action on our softwood lumber. We fought and we won that action in the United States once before, before the International Trade Commission. It was expensive. It was time consuming. The Liberal Government of the day stood behind the industry and we were victorious. We thought that that was the end of it. But during this administration, countervail action, again from the U.S. coalition of lumber producers, has come forward, and this time for reasons that are still inexplicable to me. There was no fight in us. We could not stand up to the United States of America. We buckled under, and instead of going ahead with the countervail action and seeing if we could win it—and the chances were good that we would win—we gave in. We imposed upon ourselves, something very curious for a trading nation, a 15 per cent export tax on softwood lumber.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), under questioning in this House, justified it by saying, "Well, at least we are keeping the money in the country". That is true enough. But that export tax has forced marginal operations to close. Four sawmills in my constituency were forced to close directly because of the 15 per cent. It is true that they were not big profit earners, but they were making their own way. They were providing jobs, and four of them closed. Another one that was scheduled to open never did. Therefore, the total is five.

With respect to the trade deal, the first question that I ask and the first telephone calls that I got from northern Ontario were to this effect. What does the new Canada-U.S. trade deal do for the 15 per cent export tax on softwood lumber? Here is the answer. The answer is that that arrangement is now locked into the agreement forever and a day. The parties have agreed that the free trade agreement does not impair or prejudice the exercise of any rights or enforcement measures arising out of the 1986 softwood lumber memorandum of understanding. So an agreement that we thought was going to give us free trade in northern Ontario, that was going to give us relief from a 15 per cent export tax, we realize now is with us for all time to come.

Some very good analysis has been done on the free trade agreement. The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) said to me in answer to questions, "If we had had this new arrangement, if we had had this new binational panel in effect, then the problems that you had in northern Ontario, in B.C., the Maritime provinces and Atlantic Canada with the softwood lumber you would not have". A very reputable firm by the name of Osler, Hoskin & Harcourt has come to this conclusion with regard to the new trade arrangement:

> If these rules had been in effect at the time of last year's U.S. subsidy case against exports of Canadian softwood lumber, the mechanism proposed under the agreement would not have led to any different result for Canadian exporters than that which occurred.

So the question that my constituents are asking is this. What have we gained for softwood lumber under this agreement? I have to tell them that we have not gained anything. All we have done now is to have carved it in stone. It is there as part of an international agreement for all time to come.

You are indicating, Mr. Speaker, that I have very little time left. I just want to raise one other question. It has to do with where decisions will be made in the future. In British Columbia, the Government has tried to replace the 15 per cent tax with a higher stumpage fee. What they have ended up with is paying the higher stumpage fee plus the 15 per cent.

Mr. Greenaway: Temporarily!

Mr. Penner: That is right. Instead of paying $5 a thousand board feet to produce it, they are temporarily paying between $80 and $90. My hon. friend opposite was quite right to interject with "temporarily". Why is it temporary? Why cannot the Minister for International Trade go to the United States and say, "You have raised your stumpage fees in British Columbia therefore you have a clean bill of health with respect to the 15 per cent export tax"? What she said to the industry was this. "First, I must clear it with Washington". The Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) said the same thing in another respect. The Council of Forest Ministers in Canada has agreed that there can be a system of provincial levies to replace the 15 per cent export tax. They have gone to the Minister and said, "Here is our proposal". The Minister said, "On paper it looks good. But first of all I have to see if Washington and the U.S. lumber industry will say that it is adequate and it fulfils what they see as being necessary".

• (1530)

I wish to say to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the House that there is a warning here for all of us. It looks to me as if the Canada-U.S. trade agreement will mean that more and more decisions that affect various commodities and various aspects of our economy will first have to be cleared by Washington.

That worries me. It seems to me that that is a definition of having our sovereignty threatened. It does seem to me that we are losing our political independence. This is only a small signal. Perhaps it is only a little storm on the horizon. I wish to know, is that small storm going to be a full-blown tempest? If it is, Sir, on every side of the House and from every region of this country we all ought to be seriously concerned. We need to know the answers before we say yes to the Americans on this U.S.-Canada trade agreement that has been negotiated.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-87 before us today could be described as customs harmonization legislation. I imagine that, from the government side, it is a very routine and technical matter as it has been put forward. In reality, it is a matter of serious concern to Canadians.

It is interesting, when we go back in history, that the Customs Tariff has been an extremely important instrument of national and industrial policy in Canada. If my memory serves me correctly, the Customs Tariff, much the same as we see it in the format today, was inaugurated during the time of Sir John A. Macdonald under the national policy.

In those days the Conservatives had a national view of Canada. Indeed, Confederation was an attempt to unite the provinces of British North America against absorption by the United States. In those days the Conservatives had a vision of Canada. The Customs Tariff when it was developed in the national policy was part of this vision.

In order to prevent Canada from simply being a hewer of wood and carrier of water, the Conservative Government of the day imposed a Customs Tariff which forced American producers not only to export to Canada and totally overwhelm Canadian industry, but to develop industry in Canada in order to manufacture here, create employment, add value to the resources of this country, enrich people, and strengthen Canada.

That is a thumb-nail sketch of what the Conservative Party was formerly. It was nationalist, it developed Confederation, it developed a national industrial policy, and the Customs Tariff formed an integral part of that. It was absolutely opposed to free trade with the United States. It had a sense of long vision, and it knew what would be the end result of free trade with the Americans, with unimpeded access to the full Canadian market. It knew that we would be destroyed economically and industrially, and Canadian sovereignty would be gone.

It is interesting to see the complete reversal of roles as the modern-day Conservative Government for short-term alleged benefit would see Canada overwhelmed by the United States. The elephant and the mouse image is very clear that Canada will be overwhelmed by the United States. Today the Conservative Government does not have a national vision of Canada. It sees an integrated market, almost a great big North American cash register. It does not see the preservation of Canada as a major priority from an economic viewpoint, and as that economic absorption occurs, certainly Canadian sovereignty will be lost. What we are looking at is far more that the economic amalgamation in Europe in the European Economic Community where in many cases partners are reasonably balanced and protective mechanisms are in place. With the over-hasty agreement, the enormous concessions, and the failure to develop the concept of what trade improvements with the United States should be, this Government has sold Canada down the river economically, and Canadian sovereignty will be gone if this deal moves forward.

My colleagues to the right in the Liberal Party, the old Grits of Canadian history, were free traders. It is interesting to see them wrap themselves in sheep's clothing today and stand up as opponents and spokespersons for Canadian nationalism and Canadian ownership and direction when, in fact, the Liberal Party of old was a Party of free traders. The present Leader of this Party, the Right Hon. Member who represents the riding of Vancouver Quadra from Toronto, wrote in a book not too many years ago that Canada should be seeking wide open free trade with the United States. In that same book, he indicated that the manner to entice Americans into such a free trade agreement was a give away of resources. He specifically mentioned a give away of water in the literature.

One must be very cautious. As ordinary Canadians watching the unfolding of the political drama over free trade in Ottawa, on the one hand we see that Conservatives, who used to be nationalists with a vision of Canada and a sense of responsibility to protect the Canadian economy, develop it, watch it flourish, and protect Canadian sovereignty, have now switched to being Liberals, free traders. On the other hand, the Liberals, who used to be free traders, are now telling us that they are Conservatives and that they have a vision of Canada. All this stems from the Customs Tariff, the proper development of it and using it to shape the operation of the Canadian economy.

During the period when the Liberals were in power, they recognized the complete sell-out of Canada in the sense that under their administration eventually they watched Americans come and obtain almost unrestricted acquisition of Canadian industry and the Canadian economy.

I recall reading at one time that Alastair Gillespie, when he was Minister of Energy, was asked in the House if there was any protection, any monitoring of American acquisition of Canadian industries. He stated, "Well, no, there is no formal one. My secretary, if she happens to see a clipping in a newspaper or magazine that is interesting, will clip it out and call it to my attention, but that is all the monitoring that goes on".

The end result of that type of attention from our free trading friends in the Liberal Party was that Canada lost a great deal of its sovereignty. We watched Americans come into this country, pick off a Canadian company that was competing in this market with them, and buy it, then they would shut it down. The operation would be served from the United States.

The Americans would come in to a Canadian company that was exporting overseas, doing the type of research, marketing, and innovative business activities that were required to make Canada a great nation to expand our export capabilities, and state that that company was competing with them. There was no restriction. They would buy the company and shut it down, or else they would insist that it serve only the Canadian market while the American parent company served the international exports. This is all part of the record. It is part of the history of the Liberal Party, and indeed also part of the Conservative history in Canada. It is well documented and absolutely true.

By unlimited investment in Canada, the Americans were able to shut down vigorous Canadian companies and provide the product from the United States. They were able to shut down vigorous Canadian companies that exported abroad, take those exports and insist that they be done from the United States and that the Canadian company, using U.S. parts, assemble a product in Canada and serve the Canadian market with it.

We do not have any serious misunderstanding about the intention of the Conservatives in this regard. Under the free trade agreement they have completely opened up foreign investment in Canada. The end result will be just as I have said—the Americans will come in now that customs tariffs will be removed, will buy Canadian companies, and will shut them down. That employment will go to the United States. American companies will shut down vigorous Canadian companies which are exporting products overseas. They will limit their activities to the Canadian market, force them into assembly operations rather than development, and indeed put an end to vigorous Canadian competition overseas.

It is a matter of size. Canadian banks have played an enormous role in this regard. It is well documented. Canadian banks would rather lend money to large U.S. multinational firms than they would to Canadian entrepreneurs, basically because of the large sack of cash on which American companies are sitting. American companies would not have to put up any cash to buy out Canadian companies. In fact, Canadian banks would be quite prepared to lend them the money to take over Canadian companies and to sell the soul of Canada for a small cut of interest from a secure borrower in the United States. The banks of Canada assisted the undoing of the nation in terms of foreign investment.

It goes even further. What about when the United States was plagued with balance of payments problems? We should be looking at the kinds of services allowed into the country. During the periods of Nixon and Johnson, they both encouraged American multinational companies to come to Canada and remove profits rather than invest them here. They were told to remove the profits and to sell services to their wholly owned subsidiaries. They were to sell legal services from American law firms, not from Canadian ones. It involved the whole range of services used by industry—engineering, research, and advertising. It was almost an American policy to redress its balance of payments during the Vietnam War. It forced branch plants in Canada to acquire all their services to whatever degree they could in the United States in order to ensure that the money flowed out of Canada and did not wind up in the pockets of Canadian service organizations, consultants, engineers, researchers, lawyers, or accountants. Those professional groups watched as the money flowed across the border and into the United States.

What we have before us today is a Conservative Government advocating not only that that happen but that the whole process be accelerated. It is absolutely dishonest.

I imagine that the Government will roam the country telling Canadians that the free trade agreement is a good operation in its present form. More and more Canadians are coming to understand that the unbridled ability of American companies to come into Canada, to purchase Canadian firms, and to do what they will with them, will mean that in the end Canada will not be a sovereign nation. We will not be able to control our economy. Under the Liberal regime we came very close to losing the ability to direct it. With the free trade agreement before us there is no doubt that we will see the loss of the ability of the Canadian Government and of the Canadian people to direct our economy.

It is astounding that we sit here juggling customs duties today without any intention to develop a national policy behind them but simply to accommodate Americans. I challenge Conservative Members to rise in the House and tell us in what way this will assist the Canadian economy to grow. In what way will Canadian business and industry grow from this particular manoeuvre? The honest answer is that they will not. It will simply facilitate the process of the Americanization of Canada.

It is interesting that no one can deny the kinds of things which brought into place the Foreign Investment Review Act, as weak an instrument as it was. It was almost an invitation to American firms to invest in Canada. The Liberals refused to put real teeth in it. They always did things half measure. They never really knew whether they were Liberals or Conservatives when it came to confronting issues. As a result, there was never direction in the country. There was always lip service paid to serious problems. Indeed the Foreign Investment Review Act was merely lip service. It should have been much tighter.

They also constantly refused to develop a national industrial policy. In the absence of a national industrial policy, the Foreign Investment Review Act was out in limbo trying to manage investment without any idea or any picture of what they wanted the economy to be or to do. Unfortunately that was the supreme failure of the previous Government. It had no idea. It had no sense of Canada. It had no view of Canada as a nation. That could have come from a national industrial strategy. However, the major flaw today is that the Conservative Government, in much the same way as did the Liberals, is approaching free trade in a manner which will leave Canadians severely handicapped. It has no picture of what the Canadian economy should look like. There is no industrial strategy in Canada to help Canadian industrialists and entrepreneurs to strengthen themselves and be able to compete effectively in the United States market. Only the losers have been highlighted. Some 300,000 to 500,000 people could lose their jobs. There could be massive dislocation.

On the other side of the coin there is the hope that some businesses will be able to export across the line. Such businesses will find severe competition from much larger corporations with much more money to come into Canada. They will not only be denied access into the United States, but they will be put out of business in the Canadian market.

Let us look at the American view of this particular treaty, the one which they will use as argument in the United States to sell the agreement. Anyone in the United States who sits down and reads the agreement will be absolutely thrilled. There will be a rush to support it because it is such a massive giveaway of this country.

To some degree the softwood lumber problem is a red herring. I think that the Conservative Government, in conjunction with the provinces, has already worked out a solution. Of course it is the right of the Canadian Government to remove the export tax. I suspect that that would come very close to the time of the agreement. When many people in Canada are hollering that it is flawed only because of the softwood lumber agreement, the Government will simply whip it away and say that it has solved all their problems. In fact that is likely to happen on that particular issue.

However, a really tragic aspect of the particular agreement is the ability of the United States to buy out Canada, to come in and purchase competitive firms, to limit their capacity if not close them, and to apply without any sanction whatsoever the old bogyman of the extraterritorial application of the U.S. law in Canada. An absolutely wide open opportunity has been given to exercise that in Canada, far worse than ever before.

It is astounding to know what are the benefits of the agreement. It certainly seems that the primary concerns are loss of Canadian sovereignty, the deindustrialization of Canada, and the ownership of the major percentage of what industry exists being in the hands of the United States.

• (1550)

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly) was talking about deindustrialization of Canada. My concern is about the need for developing industrialization in the part of Canada from which he and I come. The whole Province of British Columbia and, indeed, western Canada, is based on resources. The classic idea is that through exporting resources there would be an accumulation of capital, which would then be used to develop secondary industry. That is the justification for developing and exploiting resources at a very rapid rate. That has not happened in British Columbia or in other parts of western Canada largely because the head offices of the companies exploiting the resources are not situated in the West. They are in eastern Canada or are multinationals located in Chicago, New York or wherever.

Given the free trade agreement, given the difficulty that we have already in trying to develop secondary industry,what will happen to the possibility of developing secondary industry in the communities which the Member represents on Vancouver Island, and what about the mainland?

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, to answer the very perceptive question from the Hon. Member for Cowichan, Malahat and The Islands (Mr. Manly) let me quote some of the most distinguished Members of the House of Commons today. I am quoting directly from Maclean's magazine for June 13, 1983. The now Secretary of State (Mr. Clark) said:

> Unrestrained free trade with the United States raises the possibility that thousands of jobs could be lost in such critical industries as textiles, furniture and footwear. Before we jump on the bandwagon of continentalism, we should strengthen our industrial structure so that we are more competitive.

That is what I tried to put forward to the House today. The now Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie), at that time a leadership candidate, said:

> It's silly. Canada must improve relations and trade with the United States, of course. But our natural destiny is to become a global leader, not America's weak sister.

That is absolutely what I said a few minutes ago.

John Gamble, a notable Canadian who found succour in the arms of the Conservative Party, said:

> We would be eaten alive. If we opened our market to the United States, we won't be able to sustain our manufacturing.

That is one of the very few times in my life that I have agreed with John Gamble.

Then the now Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said about free trade:

> Canadians rejected free trade with the United States in 1911. They would do so again in 1983. Canada must increase its share of the total world trade, which has dropped by 33 per cent in the past two decades.

What can I say? What happened to him today?

Peter Pocklington, another one who has found warmth and comfort in the bosom of the Conservative Party, said:

> I believe in free trade between Canada and the United States, but we must ensure that Canadian industry gets the same access as we give the Americans.

He is one of the true. I think a Liberal moved over there. Then we have the now Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who said:

> Bilateral free trade with the United States is simplistic and naive. It would only serve to further diminish our ability to compete internationally.

With such noted Canadians standing up and appealing for support within their own Party and to the nation as a whole for their view of what a stupid idea free trade is, what can I say?

Mr. Greenaway: Mr. Speaker, anyone can change his or her mind. That is a privilege we all have. I know the Hon. Member at one time in his life was espousing the advantages of Canada belonging to NATO. Now, like the rest of the New Democrats, he wants to pull out of NATO. We all change our minds, and the Hon. Member knows that.

The Member makes a great issue of stating that Canada will be overrun by the Americans if we enter this agreement. Has he noted what has happened in the European Economic Community? That is a common market and I do not see any of the countries losing their individual sovereignty or individualism. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly) could comment on that.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I do respect many of the ideas of the Hon. Member for Cariboo—Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway) and respect the distinguished service he has given in the House, but on free trade I think he has been misled.

If you look at the European Economic Community, many partners are of similar size with balanced economies. If we were 250 million people strong we would be looking at a more open trade arrangement with the United States. The dilemma is that we are 25 million people as opposed to 250 million and we will be overwhelmed, just as the candidates for the leadership and his own Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said in the past.

Second, the free trade agreement before us today is a rush job. There is no protection in the agreement. If you read the briefing notes put forward by the United States administration to convince the Senate and the Congress to support this, the Americans believe that Canadians have sold themselves out, that it is a deal too good to pass up. In the minds of many Canadians the Conservative Government has made this its sole reason for existence, and it is the entire issue before this Parliament. In order to get the agreement through in a timely manner, the Government had to rush it to the point where the Canadian Government was not able to build things that strengthen Canada allowing us to compete effectively, namely, a gradual opening up of certain trade sectors, such as the automobile sector.

The Government opposite has spoken about the Auto Pact as an example of free trade. But we had sector trade liberalization which enabled us to develop a small section of the economy in a more effective way. However, it took a considerable period of time to do it, and has been under way for a period of time with plenty of safeguards for Canada. That does not exist in the free trade agreement. It throws off all control by Canada and the ability to direct the economy. It gives an invitation to the United States to come here and take the country over.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I found the comments by my friend, the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly) very interesting. I taught Canadian history at the university before I was elected to Parliament in 1984. I find the shifts in attitudes and the change of position of the Conservative Party and this Government of ours truly astonishing. The Member sketched quite well the attitude that used to exist and the position which the present Government is taking. The Member spot-lighted that change in attitude by giving us the excerpts which Maclean's magazine published in 1983 during the leadership race of the Conservative Party and the position the various candidates took. The only one who came close to supporting the stand of the present Government was Mr. Pocklington from Edmonton. Yet, this is a Government in which various of these candidates are front-bench Members, one of whom, having won the leadership and having taken a very critical stance, has suddenly become the wildest partisan of this continental trade arrangement with the United States, the continental union of 100 years ago which was rejected by Conservatives at that time. The Liberals realized the political foolishness of it fairly quickly. They came up with a different refinement.

What explanation does my friend have for this? I realize that this tests all of our comprehensions when we see this kind of watershed change in attitude. What was it that led the Prime Minister and his colleagues to take such a stand and get into this continental deal with the United States over the last two years or so?

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to cast our minds backwards for some of the answers in the historical fabric of Canada. I would bow to the expertise of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) into whose field I am treading. I would not mind if I could reverse the question and have him talk to us a little bit about the annexation manifesto which generated from a large number of Conservatives and downtown Montreal businessmen. At that particular time in 1849, they were quite prepared to sign the whole country over and get themselves annexed to the United States. I am afraid today that this particular agreement is the same kind of an expression, an annexation manifesto that will tie us to the United States. In that tying, the United States, with a much larger population, 10 times that of Canada, will overwhelm this country.

• (1600)

I think the critical point is that leaping into an agreement with the Americans in an unprepared manner, in a manner which puts at stake the Government's entire credibility, will do an enormous disservice to Canada. Indeed, this is not a free trade agreement, it is another annexation manifesto.

Adjournment Motion

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse)—Human rights—Ethiopia—Political prisoners; the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall)—Pharmaceutical industry—Bill C-22—Senate committee's report—Minister's position; the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie)—Auditor General's report—Minister's position on funding of Fantasyland project—Reason for funding project.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CUSTOMS TARIFF

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-87, an Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters and to amend or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to make a few comments on Bill C-87, a Bill that is largely a technical one aimed at harmonizing the customs classification system which is due to take effect on January 1 of next year. While this is largely a technical Bill, we want to use this opportunity to speak about the agreement that was reached by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government with the Reagan administration. We believe that this agreement will have wide-spread adverse consequences for the people of Canada and the future of Canada as a nation.

I have just been looking at the classic work of George Grant, Lament for a Nation, which looks at the fall of the Diefenbaker Government in 1963. While Grant has some sympathy with Diefenbaker and sees him as a person who had a vision of Canada, he felt that Diefenbaker was incapable of really carrying that vision out, that he was incapable of governing in any way that was commensurate with his vision of Canada as an independent country, a country that could be in control of its own destiny. He felt that in many ways, the country had already been sold down the river by the continentalist approach of C. D. Howe. Of course, today, the natural inheritors of C. D. Howe's vision are sitting once again on the government benches. The Conservative Party has taken over the function of moving Canada into a continentalist economy.

The agreement that was reached in the early days of this past month can be criticized on two grounds. First, its process can be criticized. The process the Government used to reach this agreement was flawed and dishonest from the beginning. We have already quoted extensively from the comments that were made by several of the candidates for the leadership of the Conservative Party in 1983, but I think it is important to drive this message home to the Canadian people, to remind them that when these people were running for the leadership of the Conservative Party and campaigning during the 1984 election campaign, they did not say they were looking to negotiate a free trade deal with the United States. In fact the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark)—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. We are debating Bill C-87. I think it is starting to turn into some sort of a free trade package here, but I would like the Hon. Member to get back to the Bill if at all possible.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, certainly I can appreciate that admonition. The Bill which provides for what is known as the harmonized system, the new customs classifications, will allow for the quicker release of goods crossing the border into Canada, and that is a part of what we are talking about.

Even without entering into an agreement, we already have, to a very large extent, free trade with the United States. This Bill will allow for common coding of tariffs and it will encourage freer trade throughout the world. We are talking about the fact that this Government is not content simply to lower tariffs, it is not content simply to liberalize trade, but rather it is basically selling out the future of Canada. This is what I was trying to establish when I was referring to this article from Maclean's of June 15, 1983, in which the present Secretary of State for External Affairs said:

> Unrestrained free trade with the United States raises the possibility that thousands of jobs could be lost in such critical industries as textiles, furniture and footwear. Before we jump on the bandwagon of continentalism, we should strengthen our industrial structure so that we are more competitive.

We have not seen that strengthening of the industrial structure. Instead, we have seen the Government dismantling the programs that could have led to a strengthening of that structure.

The Secretary of State, then a candidate for the leadership of the Conservative Party, talked about thousands of jobs which might be lost. The Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard), when he was asked about this a few days ago in the House, said that perhaps 500,000 jobs could be lost, perhaps more, perhaps less. What the Secretary of State said four years ago is still true, yet we are moving toward this free trade agreement with the United States.

The Secretary of State himself said:

> It's silly. Canada must improve relations and trade with the United States, of course. But our natural destiny is to become a global leader, not America's weak sister.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said:

> Bilateral free trade with the United States is simplistic and naive. It would only serve to further diminish our ability to compete internationally.

We can only agree with him. The present Prime Minister, then seeking the leadership of the Conservative Party, said in 1983:

> Canadians rejected free trade with the United States in 1911. They would do so again in 1983. Canada must increase its share of total world trade, which has dropped by 33 per cent in the past two decades.

If Canada would reject that kind of agreement in 1983, as the Prime Minister said it would, I believe Canada would also reject it in 1987 or 1988 if Canadians get an opportunity to go to the polls on this particular issue.

The point I want to make is that when members of the present Government were running for the leadership of the Conservative Party in 1983, they were very explicit. With the exception of the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), they did not see free trade as a desirable option for Canada to pursue.

When they were engaged in the 1984 election campaign and had a platform to lay before the people of Canada, the vision that they had of Canada, the candidates did not mention free trade as being part of that vision. They did not mention that they would have an agreement with the United States that would give the United States equal access to our energy, an agreement that would gut the possibility of Canada taking action that would allow us to protect our own culture. They did not mention this to the Canadian people so they do not have any real mandate for it.

As soon as the Government was elected in 1984, we began to hear the Prime Minister talking about how the United States is our best friend, and we have to stand up for our best friend, and when our best friend wants something, we should do what we can to accommodate our best friend. Certainly we have been accommodating to our best friends in the United States for the last three years. We have seen one example after another of how this Government has backed down on every demand the United States has made.

The Government backed down and eliminated the National Energy Program. It gutted FIRA. It allowed American takeovers of our book publishing industry after saying it would not. It did not stand up to maintain Canadian ownership of Dome Petroleum. The very week that the free trade negotiations began, the Americans imposed a 35 per cent duty on our shakes and shingles. We saw a 15 per cent tariff applied to our softwood lumber exports. That was later changed because of our weak approach. We said, "Do not apply the tariff, we will apply a tax ourselves", and we added a 15 per cent tax on softwood. The Americans applied an 85 per cent countervailing duty on our potash. The Government took a completely weak-kneed approach to opposing the Americans in all these cases.

When the Government talked about entering into a free trade agreement with the U.S., members of the Opposition continually tried to get information as to what exactly was on the table. We were assured that the Auto Pact was not on the table. We were assured that culture was not on the table. We were assured that—

Mr. Greenaway: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. We are back on the free trade debate again.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have looked at the Bill and I know there are many different things in it, and eventually the Hon. Member will get back to the Bill.

Mr. Greenaway: Don't count on it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is just a matter of a few minutes. The Hon. Member is trying to demonstrate that this Bill is related to free trade. I believe that is what the Hon. Member was trying to say.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I would just remind the Hon. Member once again that this Bill will provide for common coding of tariffs. That will probably result in easier trade. What I am saying is that while we can be in favour of freer trade and allowing easier access for Canadian goods in the markets of other countries, as well as the goods of other countries in Canadian markets, the main thrust of the Government in its deal with the U.S. goes far beyond what the Canadian people really want. While they favour freer trade and increased trade, they do not favour the process the Government followed when it entered into an agreement with the U.S. I was just trying to detail the way in which that agreement took place.

Mr. Greenaway: I know, but get back to the Bill.

Mr. Manly: When the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) spoke in the debate a few months ago, she listed the things on the table, but she did not say energy was included or that there would be a sweeping provision to give the Americans total access to our energy. That kind of giveaway of Canadian resources is quite different from freer trade and freer access to markets, and that is what I am trying to emphasize. It is completely opposed to the basic concerns of the Canadian people.

Mr. Greenaway: It is not.

Mr. Manly: The whole process of the talks was characterized by the last-minute aspect when, just before the final deadline, the Minister sat down over some fried chicken and managed to get a deal. What way is that to reach an agreement that is going to affect the future of Canada for the foreseeable future? We are talking about the future of our children and grandchildren, and the Government has sold out that future in a process which ignores the real wishes of the Canadian people.

In addition to the process by which the initial agreement was reached and signed, we see the process the Government put in place for dealing with that agreement in the House of Commons. Instead of having all the documents available for the committee to study, allowing adequate time for that study and to hear from those who are most affected, so that the committee can reach a reasoned conclusion about whether or not the agreement is good or bad for the Canadian people, it was given a deadline. It has to report to Parliament by December 4, yet it will not have the final text of the agreement until the end of this month. We expect that committee to reach some kind of reasoned, logical conclusion about this agreement, but it will only have the text for a few days. That is a complete betrayal of any concept of parliamentary democracy, and on an issue as important as this. I simply want to emphasize that a bad process cannot lead to a good deal.

The Americans are going to get equal access to our energy resources. We say the agreement gives Canadian culture some protection, but it also says that no Canadian action can infringe on American economic interests in that area. The agreement gives American multinational corporations the power to come in and take over any Canadian company with an asset value of up to $150 million. The threshold used to be $5 million. Only some 500 Canadian companies will have any protection at all if this agreement is ratified.

In conclusion, while this particular Bill might have some value, the free trade agreement goes far beyond what this Bill talks about. We feel that the Canadian people should have a chance to speak on that free trade agreement, and that is why we have been urging the Government to be honest with the Canadian people, tell them they are going to have that chance, and that there will be an election on this issue in the very near future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I want to respond to the words offered by the Hon. Member in connection with free trade, although not necessarily with the Bill being debated. He asserted that the Government has no mandate to have negotiated the free trade agreement and to have signed it in principle. He asserted that this Parliament has no mandate to deal with the issue, and that raises certain questions which I will put this way.

We did not, in the 1984 election campaign, talk about the specifics of the Meech Lake Accord. We had no way of doing that. What we did was to pledge ourselves to reconciling the nation. The Meech Lake Accord is a way of doing that. That was supported by the NDP without any election campaign commitment or approval. Because Members on both sides, given the experience we have had and the contents of the agreement, believed that it was good for Canada and it was a valid way of fulfilling that commitment to reconciliation, it was passed in principle just one week ago.

In the 1984 election the Progressive Conservative Party committed itself to renewing the economic strength of the nation. The free trade agreement is one way of doing it. It is a way that has credibility, because through the economic policies of the Government well over 900,000 new jobs have been generated. No one is quarreling with that result.

I suggest that if we quarrel with the free trade agreement it should not be because it was not specifically suggested in the 1984 election campaign but because of particulars which members of the Opposition challenge. I recognize the validity of that. However, if it is not valid for the Government and this Parliament to endorse or defeat that free trade agreement, then I suggest that we had no right to endorse the Meech Lake Accord because it was not specifically in the 1984 campaign either.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member raises a very interesting point. I would like to consider it briefly. First, I think it is important for the Hon. Member to remember what I said at the beginning of my speech, that being that several members of the present Government, including the Minister of Finance, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie), and the Prime Minister, when campaigning to be the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party in 1983 were very explicit in rejecting the concept of a comprehensive free trade agreement with the United States. The present Minister of Transport said that such an agreement was desirable and advocated it. The others, in a public debate, indicated their opposition. They were very clear and forthright about it.

The Canadian people had a pretty clear idea where the Government should have stood on that issue. There was absolutely no indication during the 1984 campaign that the Prime Minister had decided to change his mind on that issue. He changes his mind on a lot of issues, but he did not signal his intention to change his mind on that one.

With regard to the Meech Lake agreement, I think the fact that the ten provinces and the three political Parties which are represented in this House are all basically in agreement with the principle of Meech Lake indicates that there is a drastically different situation in that. In conclusion, while Meech Lake is not going to destroy Canada as a nation, there is as very strong feeling among a lot of people across Canada, and certainly within this Party, that the free trade agreement which the Prime Minister has reached with the United States will destroy Canada and that the vision of Canada which we have had for over 120 years is going down the tube because of this agreement.

Due to that, I think it is very important for the Hon. Member to think back to the commitment which he made to his constituents in 1984 and to ask himself whether the agreement which is being negotiated right now with the United States, which gives equal access to our energy to the United States, under which we do not have the capacity to protect our culture, under which American companies can come across the border and take over any company worth up to $150 million, and under which we can impose no content or performance requirements for those takeovers, is in keeping with the commitment he made to his constituents in 1984 and whether he wants to fight an election on that issue. If he does not want to fight an election on that issue, why not?

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, subsequent to the 1984 election the Government initiated the appointment of a joint committee of the House and the Senate to study Canada's international relations, its initial responsibility being, among other things, the study of a free trade proposal. The Government did not enter into free trade negotiations on the basis of a whim or change of mind within the Cabinet. It did so after the special joint committee, representing both Chambers of Parliament, went from one coast to the other and heard substantial testimony from all manner of citizens and was persuaded to recommend to the Government that it enter into negotiations for a free trade agreement.

The same recommendation was made by the Macdonald Royal Commission on Canada's economic future. Both the parliamentary committee and the royal commission reached the conclusion that such a free trade agreement offered the greatest promise for Canada's economic future.

I made a commitment to the people of Scarborough West in 1984, that we would renew the economy, that through the stimulation of the private sector we would produce jobs, jobs, jobs. Since 1984 that is precisely what the Government has done, that is precisely what the country has enjoyed. No election commitment has been more honorably and fully met in the history of the country.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, when the joint committee travelled across Canada it heard substantial testimony from organizations representing hundreds of thousands of Canadians who opposed the concept of a free trade agreement with the United States. Our Party certainly did not agree with the final report which spoke of a free trade agreement with the United States. There was no consensus arrived at by that special joint committee.

With regard to jobs, in my riding the rate of unemployment is still unacceptably high. If the Hon. Member wants to have an election on the issue of jobs after looking at the rates of unemployment in British Columbia, New Brunswick and Newfoundland, let the Government call an election, then we can find out whether the people are satisfied with the record of the Government on that issue. I say that in my area they are not.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, the temptation to leap into the fray is strong. I would like my colleague to comment on the relevance of the debate today. Customs tariffs, which we are debating today, are an absolutely critical part of an industrial strategy. Trade agreements are absolutely critical to such a strategy, and trade strategy is shaped through customs tariffs.

Although this Bill is passed off by the Government as a very small, technical piece of legislation, I believe that customs tariffs have far-reaching effects on trade agreements and industrial strategies in the country. I know that you recognize that, Mr. Speaker, and that is why we have been allowed to speak on a more wide-ranging subject. Some of the more narrow-minded Conservatives in this place may fail to see the relevance of that. Perhaps my colleague could comment on that.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the best example of the relevance of the Customs Tariff is the fact that the free trade agreement which the Government just finished negotiating removes the tariff on the Auto Pact which has not been used for a number of years. That was the one club which the Canadian industry had to ensure that the Americans honoured the details of the Auto Pact. By removing the tariff we have given away the farm with regard to the Auto Pact. We no longer have any effective enforcement mechanism to back up the Auto Pact. The issue of tariffs with which we are dealing in Bill C-87 is very important to the question of an industrial strategy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

EMERGENCIES ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (for the Minister of National Defence) moved that Bill C-77, an Act to authorize the taking of special temporary measures to ensure safety and security during national emergencies and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak at length on this Bill, but I wonder if the Government might give us a few notes or a few explanations on the scope of this very important legislation which is being amended by Bill C-77 so that we may have a democratic debate on this whole question, namely that the Bill is "to authorize the taking of special temporary measures to ensure safety and security during national emergencies and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof". I would have thought that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) would be here, or that a Minister might explain the principle of the Bill so that we could have an intelligent debate here in the House.

As I just said, Mr. Speaker, I do not have any notes on this question, but I vividly remember the October crisis and the severe criticisms which were made at the time about some of the provisions. I should think that this parliamentary initiative, this Bill C-77, is aimed at making some amendments to the legislation and making it more acceptable to Canadians. Therefore, I would have thought the Government would have provided explanations, without going too far, without encouraging them too much, to the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault), the Hon. Member for Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic (Mrs. Killens), the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud), the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) who are here, as well as to the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), from Montreal, whom I see here—and would have told them what was proposed in the Bill. But, for lack of explanations, we will let the Bill through second reading and will take the opportunity of discussions in committee to obtain explanations, unless Hon. Members want to rise now.

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, first you will excuse me for rising after the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). I was indeed going to rise to give a few words of explanation on Bill C-77 introduced today. Besides, those explanations are contained in a press release issued on June 26, 1987, that was made available to all Members of the House, including the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, who, I assume, is capable of reading the explanations and comments provided by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) something like four months ago already, and those explanations were clear enough for spokespersons from the Official Opposition to be in a position to state their intent to let the Bill pass even before they had a chance to hear me. But to make a long story short, what is involved actually is the replacing of the War Measures Act which, as mentioned by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, had to be used in 1971, a sad period in our history—

An Hon. Member: In 1970.

Mr. Charest: I cannot refer to 1970, excuse me, I was still quite young at the time—but to explain our intentions, Mr. Speaker, in making those amendments, whom better to quote than the Hon. Jean Chrétien, former Member for Saint-Maurice who, in his book La cage aux lions, mentioned the legislation at the time ensured that they needed very specific measures. I think he compared the legislation to a huge van in which a bicycle was to be placed because there was no other means of transportation nor more reasonable ways of doing the job at hand. That is his explanation, in his own way, his well-known style, of the reason why the legislation had to be changed. This is what the Minister of National Defence did. He explained it in his press release that already dates back to June 26, 1987, which we would be happy to make available once more, provided however the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier does not already have a copy in his office.

[English]

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, are we debating Bill C-77 at this point?

Mr. Gauthier: Questions and comments after the Minister's speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are no questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) has the floor on debate.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I had no idea that we would get to Bill C-77 so quickly today. It was my understanding that it would be called tomorrow or later in the week, and that we would be discussing Bill C-76. I understand it has passed second reading stage.

I sincerely hope that Bill C-76 will go to committee because it requires very serious scrutiny.

Mr. Prud'homme: Bill C-76 has been sent to a legislative committee.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I have much to say about Bill C-77. As my Party's defence spokesperson, I want to put on the record the very serious misgivings we have with respect to this new legislation that will replace the War Measures Act.

Therefore, I welcome the opportunity to lead this debate on behalf of the New Democratic Party. Let me say at the outset that New Democrats are determined that the War Measures Act should never be used again. That is why we are happy that the Minister has brought forward a proposal to replace the War Measures Act. It has been a long time in coming and I congratulate him for finally bringing this debate to the floor of the House of Commons.

His Bill is a good first try, in my judgment, although it is not perfect by any means.

I will use this opportunity to explain in detail my very deep concerns relating to Bill C-77.

• (1640)

First, I want to say that I hope the parliamentary process, particularly in committee, will be allowed to work. We have heard many nice words from the Government about the spirit of parliamentary reform. In truth, we have made some progress thanks to the work of the committee led by the former Member for St. John's East and now the Lieutenant Governor of Newfoundland.

Now it is time for the parliamentary process to shine. We will need many hearings and a great deal of testimony from both expert witnesses and ordinary Canadians. This is an issue which touches the very lives and liberties of every Canadian. It involves an issue that cuts to the very heart of the Canadian consciousness. Is there anyone in this House who was not in some way touched by the events of October, 1970? Who could not be affected by the profoundly un-Canadian sight of Canadian troops in battle dress in the streets to suppress the domestic troubles of their fellow citizens?

I do not want to reopen old wounds. Instead, I hope that this Bill as amended will complete the healing process. Together with the evolution of our Canadian Constitution I hope that the replacement of the War Measures Act will close one chapter in our history and usher in a new era in which the rights and freedoms of all Canadians will be honoured and respected at all times and in all circumstances.

The roots of the War Measures Act are deep. They go back much further than 1970. The original Act was born in August of 1914 when the First World War broke out. The Government of the day found that it had virtually no laws to deal with the situation. So it rushed through this law. It was modelled on foreign legislation. It received almost no debate. It had virtually no consideration. In effect, it gave the Government a blank cheque. Parliament and the people of Canada surrendered all their rights at that time in 1914.

The War Measures Act allowed censorship, arbitrary arrest, travel restrictions and Government control of trade and property. There were no rights untouched. In effect, it provided for an authoritarian Government to replace a democratic Government without a shot being fired. I suppose that we should not be surprised by the problems this caused later on. It was a recipe for disaster. The process was so poor there was little thought that a bad law was perhaps unavoidable.

Let us not repeat this fatal error again. We need full debate. We must hear many points of view. We should deliberate in an air of calm and reason. There is no emergency at this time. We have time to consider what we are setting in place for future generations. There is no war. There is no apprehended insurrection, no violence, no upheaval. Now is the time to give it straightforward, serious, cautious and deliberate consideration.

It is the future that we must be concerned about. For if the War Measures Act shows us one thing it is that people suffer for past mistakes. Following the Russian revolution suspected dissidents were interned in Canada because of the extraordinary powers in the War Measures Act. The Communist Party was outlawed. Even Jehova's Witnesses were suspect. The political and religious freedoms that we are bound to uphold in this place were denied by Canadians. One of the most bitter of all ironies is that in the fight against communism we outlawed a communist party here in Canada which is precisely the same kind of authoritarian action that a communist Government would take. Therefore in doing so we reduced, or diminished to a considerable extent, the dynamism of our own democracy.

Again, in the Second World War thousands of Canadians of Japanese origin were interned. Racism raised its ugly head. The bitter legacy of this tragic episode still haunts the Canadian Government today. Japanese Canadians are still waiting for redress and for justice.

As I have already mentioned, many were arrested without warrant and held without bail in the October crisis of 1970. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) will remember that well. I believe he was Minister of Justice at the time. Many other Members will also recall that sorry episode.

Again, I do not wish to appear as if I were looking back with the wisdom of hindsight, but it is always a tragedy of inestimable proportions when a legislative body such as this, the supreme legislative body of the land, deliberately and knowingly passes legislation that it knows will deny basic human rights and freedoms to the citizens of a democracy, one of the great democracies in the world today, our own country.

I know that New Democrats remember that period very well. We have our own reasons. The public approved of the measure and Parliament favoured the proclamation by a vote of 190 to 16. The 16 were ridiculed, but they stood firm and history has vindicated them. That is one reason why the memory of Tommy Douglas is held in such high esteem in this country.

Later, of course, successive Liberal Governments recognized their error and tried to reform the War Measures Act. But nothing ever came before this House. That is why it is galling to listen to Liberal Members criticize this Bill, as no doubt they will and have. They were in government for 14 years after 1970 and did nothing to correct this problem.

One effort to at least examine the problem came from the task force on Canadian unity. It recommended that the Government have the right to seek parliamentary approval within a specified time limit for any extraordinary powers. It also recommended that the Government state the reasons for its actions and the duration of the emergency powers in its proclamation. The task force further recommended that provincial powers and individual rights be safeguarded to various degrees depending on whether the nation was at war or at peace. I am happy to see the bones of some of those recommendations in the Minister's proposals. We will try in the legislative process to improve upon them.

We will have help, of course. I do not pretend to have all the answers in this debate at second reading. I do not think anyone in this Chamber has. I hope that experts from such groups as the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Civil Liberties Association and others will give us their professional suggestions. Perhaps some of those Canadians who suffered from the excesses of the War Measures Act should come before our committee. I want to know whether they would feel any safer with this proposed law on the law books. If this Bill would not prevent such disastrous mistakes from happening again, then in our judgment it is useless.

We shall also look forward to hearing from the Minister in committee. It will be interesting to know what thinking went into this Bill. For instance, the McDonald Commission did not think that the Government needed any additional emergency powers in peacetime.

What has changed since the McDonald Royal Commission report was published? We have had disasters such as the Mississauga train derailment that required mass evacuation, but that was carried out without resorting to the War Measures Act. Why does the Government need such powers now? This is something else that we should look at in committee. I am not suggesting that the Government should not have these powers, but I think that the onus resides with the Minister and his experts to prove to this House that he needs these extraordinary powers in order to deal with that kind of an emergency.

I have other specific concerns about this Bill as well. I would like to put some of them on the record this afternoon. Under the section dealing with public welfare emergencies the Bill speaks of an emergency as a "breakdown in the flow of essential goods, services or resources". That would seem to have very serious implications for the right to strike.

A recent Supreme Court decision said that the right to strike is not protected by the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. So the Minister's assurances about this Bill being subject to the Charter is of no comfort to working people who may from time to time find themselves involved in a strike situation.

• (1650)

Another recent example shows that this power may not be necessary. That is the recent rail strike. It was an unfortunate incident, but it illustrates the point that I am making. During that strike the Government brought forward legislation that returned the rail workers to their jobs. The Government was not prevented from acting quickly. It did not use the War Measures Act. Why then does it seek new, special powers in peacetime? This is a very touchy subject.

Those who belong to trade unions whose activities span the nation such as in transportation, whether it is air, rail, or shipping, those who are involved in communications, and those who are involved in the postal services, whether it is inside or outside workers, all of those persons could feel that their rights are being infringed upon, or potentially infringed upon, if this Bill is passed without any change.

In response to the Government's back to work legislation, there were protests on Parliament Hill and elsewhere. Peaceful protest is the right of those affected. They had a right to register their displeasure. Under this Bill such a protest could have been prevented. I ask again, does the Government need such power? Should it have such power? These questions must be thoroughly discussed, debated, and reflected upon when this Bill goes to committee.

Probably the most contentious clause of this Bill is the one that deals with public order emergencies. This is the type of situation that gave rise to the use of the War Measures Act in 1970. This clause takes its definition of threat from the Canadian Security and Intelligence Service Act. This fact alone should make us very cautious, because of the difficulties already encountered with CSIS, in determining what is subversion and what is legitimate dissent.

This has always been a very difficult issue to resolve in this Chamber, and indeed in other democratic bodies throughout the world. In my view, one of the things that keeps a democracy healthy is the right of its citizens to dissent, to object, and to oppose. It is often of a very negative nature, but nonetheless it is the right of a citizen to stand up in public and disagree with the Government, disagree with a law, suggest that the law is changed, or state that the regulation is a bad one.

It is a far different situation if someone is actively engaged in planning or executing a subversive action. That is something quite different. Most intelligence gathering agencies and most counter-intelligence gathering agencies, whether it is the FBI in the United States, MI-5 in Britain, or CSIS in Canada, find it extremely difficult to delineate the difference between legitimate dissent in a democracy, which should be welcomed, and subversive activity, which is clearly illegal.

The CSIS Act cites activities "in support of the threat or use of acts of serious violence against persons or property for the purpose of achieving a political objective within Canada or a foreign state".

I would remind the Minister that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) recently met with Oliver Tambo of the African National Congress. The ANC has not renounced violence in its fight against apartheid. I hope that the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State did not promise to support the ANC. Otherwise they might have to have themselves arrested under this Bill, if it becomes an Act of Parliament. That may sound rather ridiculous and extreme. Nonetheless, if one studies the wording of the CSIS interpretation of subversion, it is found that it is a pretty wide open interpretation and could include or involve all types of legitimate legal activity. It may rub the Government of the day the wrong way, whether it is Conservative, Liberal, or NDP, but nonetheless Governments in a democracy do have to tolerate legitimate dissent.

Others on the government benches have had contact with the Reagan administration, which supports the effort of the Contras in Nicaragua. The Contras use violence, and President Reagan spoke of their cause in this very Chamber. Should that be illegal in Canada? I am quite sure that most of my colleagues across the way would disagree and say that that is perfectly legal, and I agree that it is perfectly legal. Again, if a narrow interpretation is attached to the CSIS interpretation of what is a subversion then, of course, Bill C-77 becomes potentially dangerous.

A public order emergency also gives Cabinet the right to prohibit public assembly. But how could a Canadian avail himself of the right to protest peacefully the declaration of emergency powers? His right to disagree with government policy would be extremely limited.

Similarly, a legitimate protest against the emergency declaration could be suppressed and no one would find out. The Government could censor the media or simply forbid travel to the troubled area. How could anyone find out if the declaration of an emergency was justified if no one was allowed in or out of the area? How could parliamentarians rally public support against an unjust proclamation if the public was being kept in the dark? That is all included in this Bill as presently written. In committee we will chop through those clauses, clean them up, and make the definition much clearer and more limited.

I also have concerns about the clause dealing with international emergencies. The definition of an international emergency is extremely broad. The Bill speaks of a threat to "any country in which the political, economic or security interests of Canada or any of its allies are involved". That pretty well covers the global waterfront.

Our allies include the United States and western Europe which have very extensive trade interests around the world. In fact, it is hard to think of any country on earth where either Canada, the United States, or western Europe does not have some type of political or economic interest.

We have a perfect example right now in the Persian Gulf. The United States is escorting tankers through one of the most militarily dangerous stretches of water in the world. Other European nations are also involved because they have an economic interest in oil from that region. What would happen if another "Stark" incident blew up into a major confrontation? Canada could become involved under the terms of this legislation. There would probably be a great debate as to whether Canada's vital interests were involved. But the Government would have the right to mobilize first and answer questions later. I would not want to wake up one morning and read that the Government had declared an international emergency and have to wait for the matter to come before Parliament after the fact.

One of the reasons that I would not be comfortable in that situation is the other extraordinary powers that the Government could assume during a perceived international emergency. For example, Cabinet could authorize search and seizure without reference to the courts. Why does it need to bypass the justice system? Are the courts not to be trusted in an emergency? Have judges in this country ever shown themselves to be less than vigilant in their devotion to national security? It is their job to balance the interests and rights of the state and those of the individual. Yet the Government wants the right to enter any home without reference to the courts at any level. Clearly this part of the Bill is unacceptable to those of us in the New Democratic Party.

Finally, Parliament must consider the total discretion granted to Cabinet under the terms of a war emergency. It is difficult to see any difference between this clause and the current War Measures Act. I wonder why some powers could not be set out in the Bill. Canada has been in two world wars. Does the Government not have any idea what powers it needs to mobilize the Armed Forces? Could they not be added to the powers listed in the other clauses of the Bill?

I see that my time today has run out, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to continuing debate at a later time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member will have 10 minutes for questions and comments the next time this debate comes up in the House. His time of 20 minutes has expired.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I was under the impression that, at second reading, the lead-off speaker for my Party has 40 minutes.

• (1700)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): May I explain to the Hon. Member that there have been three speakers. The first was the Minister who moved the motion for second reading of the Bill, which immediately eliminates the first 40 minutes as he was deemed to have spoken. Then there were two other speakers, which eliminates the other two 40 minutes. We have heard three speakers for 40 minutes each, with no questions or comments.

The fourth speaker, the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), has 20 minutes plus 10 minutes for questions and comments. I have given him an extra two minutes or three minutes after his first 20 minutes, and I will entertain 10 minutes for questions and comments the next time Bill C-77 is before the House.

It being 5 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members business as listed on today's Order Paper.

FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Thursday, October 1st, consideration of the motion of Mr. Nickerson that Bill C-211, an Act to amend the FreshWater Fish Marketing Act, be read a second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Marc Ferland (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to address the House, at the beginning of this second hour, on the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson).

In order to understand what we are trying to do here, I think it must be said that the purpose of the Bill which is going to be debated is to remove the monopoly presently enjoyed by the FreshWater Fish Marketing Board for interprovincial and international marketing of fish and fish products.

To remind you of the mandate given to that Board, it was established in 1969, under the FreshWater Fish Marketing Act, for the purpose of marketing fish and fish products. The Board has a monopoly over marketing and trading in fish on interprovincial and export markets. It exercises this monopoly itself or through its agents, first to ensure an orderly marketing and, second, to increase fishermen's income. and third, find international markets for our fish and increase interprovincial trade and fish exports.

The participation of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, Ontario and the Northwest Territories was established in agreement with the Government of Canada. The FFMC is a Crown Corporation covered by Schedule C, Part I, of the Financial Administration Act. It must carry out its operations independently without appropriations from Parliament.

The major purpose of the Corporation is to provide the highest possible income to commercial fishermen based on their catches, and all its activities contribute to this end. The Corporation keeps informed of the social effects of its interventions, but will not support the cost elements which can be directly attributed to the taking into account of these social considerations.

If a provincial or federal department or agency decides to apply social considerations to the activities of the Corporation to meet objectives other than the provision of the highest possible income for fishermen, such a department or agency will have to support the costs related to this intervention.

Mr. Speaker, both in agriculture and in other sectors of our economy, especially the agro-food sector, there is an increasing demand for marketing boards, particularly from farmers and producers. Yet, this Bill aims at abolishing a marketing board which, in 1986-87, had one of the most successful of its eighteen years according to its own report and to the comments of its Chairman. Its sales have totalled nearly $59 million, $10 million more than the record amount registered the previous year. Net revenues before final payments amounted to $14 million, $6 million more than the record set two years ago.

One very important fact is that the disposable income of fishermen has reached $36.6 million, $7 million more than the last record high.

Mr. Speaker, I think the Corporation, at least as far as 1986-87 is concerned, has indeed met our expectations, which were to find new markets for fish and find the best possible price for our fishermen so they can earn a decent living.

According to the president's report, and I quote:

> Strong demand for fish and seafood products in Canada and the United States assisted us in reaching many objectives for our major species.
>
> For species such as Pickerel, Sauger and Northern Pike whose landings were in balance with market demands, selling prices were excellent. For species whose supply had previously exceeded demand such as Lake Trout progress was made in eliminating or reducing inventory. We had a record sales volume for Whitefish, but an increase in landings prevented inventory reduction. However, we are optimistic the chronic over-supply of Whitefish will be alleviated in 1987/88.
> We continue to improve in all aspects of our operations and believe the Corporation is properly positioned with the products and the people to participate fully in the ongoing growth of the fish and seafood industry for the benefit of our 3,500 fishermen.

Mr. Speaker, in my view the Corporation plays a vital role in providing 3,500 fishermen with a decent income. I am convinced if we were to get rid of the Corporation prematurely, without consultation with the provinces—because what the Hon. Member is proposing is to abolish the Corporation unilaterally.

As I said earlier, the Corporation was created jointly with and with the agreement of the provinces—

I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are indicating to me that my time is almost over and that I may not be able to complete my remarks. My point is that fish producers are the ones who directly depend on the Corporation to earn an adequate income in order to support their families and not have to resort to unemployment insurance or welfare to make a decent living in this country.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that to abolish this marketing board would be contrary to the will of the producers, in agriculture or elsewhere. Farmers are exerting considerable pressures for the creation of more marketing boards. We are presently considering a request from potato producers.

Why do the producers wish to have these boards? It is simply because they want to get a fair retribution for their work, they want a decent living for their families, they do not want to live all their lives on public charity.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is premature to abolish the Corporation at this time. It would run contrary to the will of our government which is trying to find the best ways to provide adquate incomes to all Canadians.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would simply express the hope that this marketing board will not disappear as quickly as the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) would like.

[English]

Mr. Morrissey Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. speaker, I welcome the opportunity to comment briefly on the Bill presently before us. At this time I want to say that I am neither for nor against Bill C-211. However, I have some serious concerns about fishermen who are served by the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. Will it serve their interest to have this marketing agency disbanded? I believe we have to ask ourselves why the corporation was brought into being in the first place. The answer is quite simple. In the early 1960s the inland fishery and fish trade were in serious difficulty. They were experiencing difficulties similar to those which afflicted the salt fish industry in Atlantic Canada. Consequently a federal-provincial conference was held in October 1964 in Ottawa to identify the problem areas relating to the inland fishery. As a result of this conference a commission of inquiry into the freshwater fish marketing was established in 1965. The terms of reference for Commissioner G. McIvor included instructions to inquire into the underlying factors which contributed to the weaknesses in the export prices of freshwater fish. The commission completed its findings and prepared its recommendations in 1966.

• (1710)

The commission reported that prices for round or dressed fish in export markets were weak because there were too many exporters to counter a control exercise by a few importers. It also reported that in marketing of round or dressed fish, Canadian exporters were receiving too small a share of the prices paid by consumers. The commission recommended that a fresh fish marketing board be established under federal jurisdiction; that the board be the sole seller of freshwater fish produced in the designated areas; and that the board pool the returns from the sale of fish and fish products.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), when he was speaking in this debate on October 1 said that the single desk selling system did not really work out, that the commercial clout that was supposed to have been given to the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation never really materialized in fact and things had gone from bad to worse. During its first year of operation when it was established in 1969 I believe, the FFMC generated sales of $14.4 million. It is interesting to note that since then each year sales have increased. In 1986-87 sales generated $58.6 million. It is also interesting to note that currently approximately 70 per cent of the wholesale price for fish marketed by the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation is returned to the fishermen.

Although I am sure my colleague from the Western Arctic has the greatest concern in the entrepreneurial spirit for private companies to be involved and not a government agency to be the sole marketer of fish, I am concerned that if prices should drop in the market-place for freshwater fish that, occurred in the early 1960s might happen to this industry. I share the same concerns for the disbandment of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation as I would express if there were an attempt to disband the Canadian Saltfish Corporation. I believe they were not set up by Government just for the mere fact of having a government agency in place. They were set up to serve the fishermen and the industry as a whole with the greatest of intent to improve conditions.

I am neither for nor against the Bill at this time, but I still want to caution Members present that the Bill deserves a very serious look and we should give it our very serious attention. We should not act in a hasty manner and create great havoc in an industry which is doing quite well at the present time.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Bill before the House is in the name of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). He has introduced it, I suppose, for the past eight, nine or ten years, as I recall, to try to get rid of the monopoly in the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. In his particular area and down through western Canada there is one marketing agency, one corporation, set up by the federal Government to buy all of that freshwater fish and then sell it. It is a complete monopoly. If a private businessman wishes to buy some freshwater white fish—a very popular fish—and he figures he has a market in the United States or Europe for that fish, he can pay more for the white fish than the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation can pay to the fishermen. He is able to pay more and he can get more for that white fish, if it is good white fish, in the United States or in Europe. But according to the law, he is not allowed to do that because the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation has the sole right to buy and market that fish.

We have the same situation on the East Coast of Canada with salt fish. A businessman can come along and say, "I can pay you more for your fish because it is of excellent quality". Perhaps he can pick a part of the coastline where the fishermen catch the biggest fish and bleed the fish properly so that it is of better quality than the general amount of fish being exported. Perhaps the individual can get more in the market-place, but he is not allowed because the law says that there is only one marketing agent for salt fish in Canada and that is the Canadian Saltfish Corporation.

Many businessmen came to the Progressive Conservatives when they were running in the last election. They asked them, "If you get in power, for goodness' sake change the law so that private business people can buy and sell salt fish and freshwater fish". The Progressive Conservative Party met with these business people and said yes. In fact, the Progressive Conservative Party said, "Yes, we will free you from the monopolistic practices of the previous Government because we will boot it out. They are the ones who set up these corporations that control and monopolize the market-place. These corporations are the only ones allowed to buy, sell and market all of these products in Canada.

• (1720)

In fact, the Progressive Conservative campaign handbook says the following on page 47:

> We will reduce the role of crown corporations in the fishery as we create economic conditions that allow private companies and fishermen's co-ops to prosper.

Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Party, and nobody can blame it for doing this, met with these business people on the East Coast and in central Canada, who wanted to get into the business of buying and selling fish, salt fish and freshwater fish. That is what it came up with as a policy.

What has the Progressive Conservative Government done? Since it has been in power, the only thing the Progressive Conservative Government has done with the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation that I can see is that it appointed a prominent Progressive Conservative to be the Chairman of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. That is all that was done, to my recollection.

Instead of changing the corporation, the Government appointed a chairman. Mind you, this particular Chairman is a chartered accountant, the author of two books on taxation, a prominent gentleman who used to write, as I recall, very good columns in the Winnipeg Free Press once upon a time. That is all the Progressive Conservative Party did with the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation.

Now we have this Bill before us today. As far as the positions of the political Parties are concerned, I can now say that the Progressive Conservative Party stands fully behind the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. So does the New Democratic Party and so does the Liberal Party. This is because they have taken the position that the general good of all the fishermen in those areas should be the primary concern of the Government. In other words, there should be one marketing agent that would be able to perform in the way a cartel performs by regulating prices in the market-place. The political Parties have said furthermore that in this way, the Government of Canada can very easily assist the industry at times when prices go down and fluctuate in the market-place.

One can understand the position taken by the hon. gentleman who introduced the Bill. Perhaps some of the best freshwater fish is in his area. Perhaps up in the Arctic in his particular area, there are business people who are telling the fishermen that they can market the fish for a better price. Maybe he represents that kind of an area. Perhaps that fish is put in with other fish from other areas of Canada that is not as good as the fish from his area.

All of us who represent fisheries areas know what the Hon. Member is talking about. For example, on the northeast coast of Newfoundland, there is better salt fish than in other parts of eastern Canada, but our fish goes in with the salt fish from other areas to be marketed by the Canadian Saltfish Corporation.

As I say, the official position of the three political Parties of the House of Commons is in favour of this marketing structure, this Crown corporation. The hon. gentleman will just have to accept defeat and realize that he will not get such a Bill through the House of Commons.

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this Bill, I think it would be prudent first to ask the House to recognize the prosperity and positive market conditions which Canada's freshwater fishing industry has recently enjoyed. Fresh fish are a wholesome and healthy product whose consumer acceptance in our major market in the United States appears to be growing. As with all good things, I hope this surge of prosperity continues.

Yet this is not a time for complacency. I refer specifically to the interim report on freshwater fisheries of the Senate Standing Committee on Fisheries tabled in September of 1986 entitled The Marketing of Fish in Canada. I recommend this excellent report to anyone who wishes a general overview of the freshwater fisheries, their markets, their problems, their concerns and their opportunities.

The report deals with these issues and especially the concept of a single-desk system of marketing as now used by the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation for Canada's freshwater fisheries. The report gives a glimpse of the future of our fisheries, the opportunities as well as the pitfalls.

I will refer to these matters in some detail, but going directly to the point, the report refers to activities of the FFMC and consistently indicates that provincial co-operation, which I remind the House was instrumental in the establishment of the corporation, be sought and encouraged. It is abundantly clear that co-operation with the provinces is crucial to the success of the freshwater fisheries of the western region covered by the corporation.

Today, the provinces and the vast majority of the fishermen continue to support the FFMC and the findings of the report are also pertinent in this manner. These findings, the result of 25 hearings, 17 of which were devoted exclusively to the freshwater fisheries, and 40 submissions could not have had a clearer thrust in the substance of their recommendations. These recommendations address a wide range of issues and challenges facing the fishery including new technology, over-participation, over-capitalization at the processing level, insufficient development of local markets, product substitution, and the introduction of potentially crippling import duties by our major market, the United States.

With respect to the challenges of making products available on a year-round basis, of co-ordination of supply and especially of the management of large inventories and delivery surges, the committee stated that the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation devotes considerable resources to unload these inventories, continually seeking out and developing new markets. As a central marketing organization set up to accomplish precisely this task, the corporation has on balance a good record of success. It is a record to which my colleagues have referred today and it has proven to be even more successful within the last year.

Let us examine some of these problems and challenges that are being faced by the freshwater fishermen of our western region and the contribution of the corporation in facing these challenges in more detail.

• (1730)

Single desk selling, as examined by the report, brings greatest over-all benefit when created to consolidate the efforts of a dispersed production. It can also be useful in industries where production varies widely according to the season. It can also provide for streamlining of the marketing process. Greater control can be exercised over quality and variety of products, speed of delivery, and flexibility in transport and payment terms. The single desk system can mobilize resources to seek out markets.

I suppose the area covered by the corporation, 5.34 million square kilometres with a population of less than five million, qualifies as a dispersed area. Indeed, it is larger than most of the world's nations, perhaps as dispersed as any harvesting area in the world. The 23 species of fish appeal to many different markets.

The U.S. is by far the leading market for the products of the freshwater fishery. The harvest of Canada's freshwater fishery does not, however, figure prominently in the total U.S. supply picture. This is because there is substantial production of freshwater fish in the U.S. As well, other nations have aggressive marketing policies for their products. Fortunately, there is now a healthy trend within the U.S. toward increased per capita consumption of fresh fish. However, consumer behaviour is easily changed by prices. Experts believe that price rises for fish products, mainly the result of higher production costs, may soon lead to product switching and the substitution of cheaper protein.

The American consumer is demanding. That is the reality facing Canadian fishermen. We are not the only ones selling our wares. Reliability of supply, price, quality, and attractive presentation to and education of the buyer are often the difference between success and failure in the supermarket. The committee could not be clearer on how to achieve that success: "The Canadian freshwater fishing industry should also endeavour to make its products available in the market-place on a broad scale and on a year round basis." It is that sort of activity which has been addressed by the FFMC. The expertise has a broader application to our fisheries as well.

Let me take a moment to recount some of the problems our freshwater fishery faces. These problems have been tackled by the corporation in co-operation with the provinces. Co-operation is the key word. They have looked at the question of over-participation, overcapitalization, and insufficient development of local markets. These problems are also opportunities. They present an ideal example of potential for continuing constructive co-operation with the provinces. Provincial initiative has always been an important corner-stone of opportunity for the freshwater fishery. Indeed, the committee realized that, and this brings me to the second theme spoken of by my colleagues, that of the role of the provinces in the success of our fishery.

Over-participation and overcapitalization at the processing level may very well create havoc in the fishery. In 1984 the average harvest of 6,435 kilograms generated average gross revenue of $8,222. This overcapitalization at the processing level raises the cost of bringing a product to market, creates pressure for higher prices, and raises expectations for higher than possible gains. The recommendation by the committee to cope with this problem was that the provincial and territorial Governments, in co-operation with the FFMC, co-ordinate their efforts to bring about a good balance of investment in harvesting facilities among participants in the western fishery, given the harvestable quantity of fish. It is that co-operation which sounds a signal note for the future prosperity of our fishery. Other speakers have referred to provincial initiatives in the establishment of the corporation. What better example might we have of the continuing need for provincial input and support than in the recommendation to eliminate the pressing problem of overcapitalization at the processing level.

Provincial participation and co-operation always was and always will be a necessity for the success of the fishery. This applies to similar recommendations with regard to the allocation of fish stocks, product substitution, and development of local markets.

These examples of provincial participation are meant to add to what is a matter of great concern to the provinces. Given the onslaught of new technology, especially in aquaculture, the need for co-ordination of supply, the over-participation and overcapitalization, and insufficient development of local markets, product substitution, and potentially crippling export duties, now is the time to focus all possible co-ordinated efforts to maintain the health of the fishery.

I can foresee potential difficulties for our freshwater fishery if the FFMC is limited in its ability to co-operate with the provinces and face these challenges. We should not forget that the freshwater fishery is as important to many of our small communities as is the fishery to the Atlantic coast communities. These problems are a test of the fortitude and skill of the Canadian fishermen.

Finally, I agree with the thrust and substance of the excellent report produced by the Senate Standing Committee on Fisheries. We know the participating provinces and the vast majority of fishermen support the FFMC. A bright future for the fishery and continued profits for the fishermen can result from continuation of this partnership. Thus we should continue to forge the bonds of the partnership, unique in the history of this growing fishery, between the six Governments which founded the FFMC and which led to success for the fishery and profits for the fishermen.

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to speak today on Bill C-211 sponsored by the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), my neighbour to the north. He has brought to the attention of Members of this House the fact that there could be some discrepancies in this marketing board which may or may not be to the benefit of his constituents, but certainly not to mine. This gives me an opportunity to tell you about the many lakes and rivers in the northern part of my constituency in Saskatchewan. Most of you probably do not know that there are more lakes in Saskatchewan than there are in Manitoba and Alberta combined. Of course, there are a lot of fish in those lakes.

Before the marketing board was set up, there were at least six different places in my constituency where fishermen caught fish. The industry provided employment for a good many people in the North. We supplied an excellent quality fish which could be purchased in my home town, the City of Prince Albert, and many other places to the south.

Today of course it is a different story. We now have no one working in the industry other than the fishermen themselves. They must first haul ice to where the fish are caught, pack the fish in ice and then haul them back again, truck the whole fish down to Winnipeg, having only removed the head and guts, where they are then processed further. Yet now we cannot buy that product in my home town or in Prince Albert. It is just not available. It all seems to go to the United States. The Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation has not done its job of making that fish available in other places.

The cost has been fantastic. The fishermen are receiving 70 per cent of the payout after freight and deductions. When you are hauling fish from Stony Rapids, Saskatchewan, you have to fly them to Wollaston Lake where you put them on a truck to haul them to Winnipeg. It is obviously the trucker who makes the money rather than the poor fisherman. The price of gas and equipment has gone up far in excess of the increase they have received in the past few years.

I hear everyone talking about the increase in sales. I have a book, should anyone be interested in borrowing it, entitled How to Lie with Statistics. That is exactly what the fish marketing people are doing. They say that in 1969 they sold $14 million worth of fish and in 1987 they sold $58 million worth. There was not a damn pound more sold but the price went up. You can sell the same amount and still raise your sales as long as you get more money for it. I do not buy that one.

It does not sit too well in my craw when I listen to people up north talking about getting 10 cents and 12 cents a pound for fish when fishermen on the Great Lakes probably get 40 cents or 50 cents a pound. They certainly have a tremendous advantage over the fishermen in the North. The fish may not be as good, but that is the way it goes.

The last time I was up north the fishermen were trying to develop a better marketing system with the freshwater fish marketing people. As a result of attending the meeting which I did, I could see that the chance of them getting much more for their fish was pretty slim.

There is always a good side to such things as this. In this case it would be tourists fishing for trophy fish. I believe that as long as the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation is handling the fish from my area and that of my neighbour in the North we will have to concentrate on trophy fishing because most fishermen will not take their boats out in the weather with which they have to deal during the seasons that they can catch fish for the paltry sums which they get out of it, and I do not blame them. They have ideas about selling on their own, but it is against the law. They are not even allowed to peddle a little bit to their neighbours.

It appears that the only solution will be trophy fish. All the people who are so in favour of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation should save their money and come on up to catch a big trout or big pike to hang on their mantle. That would be their contribution to solving the problem in the North.

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, in the speech which the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) made on October 1, he said that he has been faced with this problem for 15 years. He first raised the problem in the Legislative Assembly of the Northwest Territories 10 or 12 years ago. He raised it here after he was first elected in 1979 and again in 1985 in the form of Bill C-235, which was referred to committee. I was the Chairman of the Fisheries committee when that Bill was referred to it. I regret very much that we were not able to deal with it. We were caught with some other very pressing business and before we knew it, the session had been prorogued and the Bill died.

Something must be dreadfully wrong with the system when a Member has to spend that much time and effort trying to get redress. We have just heard from the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Scowen) that he, too, has problems with the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. It boils down to the fact that the corporation has a monopoly on selling fish from the four provinces and the territories. We have the same problem in my province with the vegetable marketing board. It has a monopoly on the sale of vegetables and it is very difficult for anyone to sell their vegetables to stores.

The Member indicated in his speech that he believes that the quality of fish produced in his area is much superior to that in southern areas. There are fish which should be flown directly from that area to market without being frozen in Winnipeg, which destroys the whole fresh market aspect of it.

Some of the things which the Member said in his speech may be slightly inaccurate according to the figures and material I have been given by the Department. However, I agree with most of what he said. The problem seems to be that some of the provinces are in favour of maintaining the FFMC while others are not. I believe that the territories would be well advised to see if they can opt out as a last recourse.

I do not agree with the Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) who said that there is no solution to this. Although the parties are supposed to agree on the policy, if this is as bad a situation as that Member and the Member for Mackenzie say it is, we should try to repair it. At the very least, the Bill should be referred back to the committee in order to get to the bottom of the problem.

There is no doubt that the Senate found that problems exist. In its report it suggested that a pilot project should be undertaken to try to get people interested in a private fish industry in the North. I believe that would be a move in the right direction.

In his speech the Member for Western Arctic said:

> By what right does the Government of Canada prevent anyone from offering a fisherman $2 a pound for his product instead of forcing him to sell it to a government Crown corporation for 20 cents a pound?

If that is indeed happening in his area he has a legitimate complaint. I believe there must be some advantages to the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation as well because any marketing corporation has some benefits. One benefit is better control over markets, supply, and quality, although that is not always the case.

It has been said this afternoon that the industry in the West is not doing as well as it should be. I do not have any figures on the poundage, but it looks as though 1986-87 was a record year with $59 million of fish products being sold. That is an increase of $10 million over the former record year, which was 1985-86.

• (1750)

The net income to the fishermen was $36.6 million. The difficulty with this 1986-87 annual report of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation is that it does not break down what the fishermen received per province or in the Territories. For example, the fishermen of Manitoba may have been doing quite well while, according to the Hon. Member for Western Arctic, the fishermen in his area were not doing as well. This situation should be corrected.

I suggest that an official of the Department seriously examine this situation and impress upon the provinces that a problem exists.

Perhaps one solution that may be acceptable to everyone involved is to allow the territories to opt out. Another solution is to adopt the Senate recommendation of a pilot project.

In conclusion, I do not believe an Hon. Member should have to spend seven years trying to get a solution to a problem confronting him and his constituents. It is up to the Department or Members of the House to address the issue.

An Hon. Member: How are you voting?

Mr. Greenaway: I believe I will vote with the Hon. Member who proposed this Bill because he has a just complaint. I will try to be here when this motion comes to a vote.

In the meantime, I suggest that positive steps could be taken. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) could step up the process and persuade the provinces to deal with the problem. If they decide to stay with the present situation, so be it. However, if the territories want to opt out, perhaps that would be the answer.

In any event, I told the Member this morning that I think he has a good Bill, and just criticism of the present situation. I do not believe it is fair for the territories to be tied into a system that is simply not working.

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland—Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to say a few words on Bill C-211. This has been a genuine financial success story which is rather unique in that it has blended the skill and entrepreneurial initiative of the Canadian freshwater fishermen with legislative co-operation between the federal Government and its governmental counterparts in four provinces and the Northwest Territories. It is a success story which proves that co-operation between provinces and the federal Government can forge profits in the rough and tumble of the market-place.

The Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation resulted from the focus of the collective will of the Government of Canada, in co-operation with the Provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, and the Northwest Territories to introduce application of what is known as the single desk selling system for freshwater fish.

The results of this system are shown by the recent profitability of the corporation, and dramatically increased returns to fishermen. I want to go further, and to bring facts and hard numbers to a debate that is certainly not new in the Hansard of the House of Commons and on which the Hon. Member who introduced it has spoken many times. I am glad that we are not the first to be concerned with these matters, as they affect the interest of our freshwater fishermen, a group whose recent successes must be placed in the context of future challenges.

Let me first recall that the purpose of this corporation was to solve five major financial and economic problems which had been identified by the Province of Manitoba in a brief presented to the National Fisheries Council held in Ottawa in January, 1964. The problems were ones which hopefully can be consigned to our past.

They included disorderly marketing, too many exporters, poor processing equipment, inadequate quality control facilities, and fishermen receiving too low a share of the prices, prices which were constantly fluctuating. That is certainly not a pretty picture and a far cry from today's prosperous industry. But it was different then.

These problems, as described by the commission of inquiry chaired by Mr. George McIvor, placed the fishermen in the western inland fishery in an appalling position of weakness. The commission said clearly:

> We find that under these circumstances, the fisherman is essentially an indentured labourer for the fish companies.

Not just the commission, but also four provincial governments and the Northwest Territories believed that Canada and its regions needed a strong presence in the diverse markets for freshwater fish to survive and prosper. That was 1965, and the corporation was established in 1969 by the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act.

While I would like to provide some of the figures, time will not permit. We have come a long way from the days of the individual producer being an indentured labourer for the fish companies, and the spectre of grinding, unending debt that prompted that description by the McIvor Commission. Last year, total payments to fishermen increased from $28.1 million to $36.6 million, over 30 per cent in one year.

The corporation has outperformed many of our leading industrial corporations. While it is true that historically periodic fluctuations exist, with patterns of lean and fat years, nonetheless the over-all picture, when viewed over a five-year period is one that the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation and all Canadians can be proud of. Sales have increased nearly 50 per cent, net income has increased by nearly 80 per cent, and retained earnings by nearly 120 per cent.

Today, the industry enjoys buoyant markets as the demand for fish expands. Yet the traditional cyclical nature of the industry will present the fishermen with new challenges.

The freshwater fisheries are now in transition. New technologies, especially the development of aquaculture, will see the introduction of a whole new interplay of market forces, in an arena in which an isolated fisherman would be at the mercy of these macroforces.

In conclusion, the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation is a success story of which we can all be proud. This is not to suggest that it is perfect, but we should consider that to change its mandate at this moment would return us to a position of relative weakness in an uncertain and fluctuating market.

For these reasons, and in recognition of the many successes it has had in a highly competitive and uncertain market-place, I believe that we should encourage and enhance the successes of this corporation.

Mr. Roger Clinch (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to follow the distinguished Hon. Member for Northumberland—Miramichi (Mr. Jardine), an adjoining riding to the great riding of Gloucester in northeast New Brunswick.

As I understand it, Bill C-211 proposes to repeal from the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act the definition "participating province" in Section 2, Part III of the Act, and the schedule to the Act. Such amendments would essentially abolish the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, as Part III of the Act establishes the mandate of the corporation and sets out its duties and powers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2), the order is dropped to the bottom of the list of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 is deemed to have been moved.

HUMAN RIGHTS—ETHIOPIA—POLITICAL PRISONERS

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my subject tonight arises out of a question I put to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). It was in connection with the linkage between overseas aid and human rights, focusing particularly on the situation in Ethiopia, a country that has received both aid and development assistance from Canada in rich measure, but which has a shocking, indefensible human rights record, judged by the World Human Rights Guide, published by The Economist, as the worst in the world.

CIDA announced as of October 26 that Canada will give $10 million in food aid for drought stricken areas in Ethiopia which will bring to $20 million the total bilateral aid given to Ethiopia by CIDA, a previous $10 million having been divided equally among Government relief agencies and Canadian NGOs, non-governmental organizations. This is right. I join the Government in this with great enthusiasm and great commitment.

But I bring to the attention of the House two matters. The first concerns reports of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade and the response of the Government to that report. In the first instance, the standing committee of this House argues that human rights and overseas development assistance should always go together. The report of that committee, after an exhaustive study, stated that respect for human rights is one of the most important conditions for a true developmental process. It is not unreasonable therefore for Canada to expect that Governments receiving our aid will pursue approaches to development and in supporting human rights that can be broadly supported and approved by the Canadian people.

According to the standing committee, the Government should clearly base its decisions on aid and assistance on a set of principles that respect the priority of human rights. The Government has largely agreed with this contention of our standing committee. It has suggested in its response that the basic principle of the Government will be to ensure that repressive regimes are not legitimized through Canadian development assistance policy and that victims of human rights violations are not doubly penalized by being deprived of needed outside help as well as of their rights. I welcome the news that as far as Canadian aid will go, we will see to it that Ethiopians are not deprived of their human right to sustenance. But are we taking equal efforts to see that the people of Ethiopia are not deprived of their basic human rights, civil, political and social?

The Government has already said in its response that human rights concerns must be fully integrated into Canada's development policies. It has given us the advice that the most valuable guide to human rights is to focus on those violations which are patently systematic, gross and continuous. Clearly, the Government is overlooking, ignoring, bypassing, the patent systematic, gross and continuous violations of human rights in Ethiopia if the Government does not join together with its new and renewed aid programs an equally strong and, hopefully, successful emphasis upon human rights and the need of the Ethiopian Government to come up to at least minimum standards.

According to The Economist human rights guide, Ethiopia is worthy of a rating of only 13 per cent, by far the lowest in the world, and the lowest in Africa. There is no country in the world, according to this guide, that has a worse human rights record. Just listen, Mr. Speaker, to some of the human rights abuses in that sorry country. There is no freedom to travel in or outside the country. There is no freedom to peacefully associate. There is no freedom to exchange ideas and receive information. There is no freedom to publish and educate in ethnic languages.

As well, there are such shameful unbelievable abuses as these: serfdom, slavery, enforced and child labour, extra-judicial killings and disappearances, torture by the state, compulsory membership in state organizations, political censorship of the press, censorship of mail, no peaceful political opposition allowed, no rights for women, arbitrary police powers exercised and an arbitrary seizure of personal property.

• (1805)

The most flagrant abuse of human rights on the mass scale was as recent as this summer when the spectre of famine returned to the north of Ethiopia once again, not only because of drought but more particularly this time because of swarms of locusts attacking in massive numbers, seven huge swarms sweeping over Tigre and other parts of the land. Airplanes that could have carried spray to destroy those locusts were prevented from taking off at Addis Ababa. As the House may be informed, more recently aerial sprays have been permitted, but the delay has been a tragic human cost.

I urge that the Government use this opportunity of Ethiopia's need for food assistance and in rightful response to that need by the Canadian Government to insist and demand in the name of humanity that the Ethiopian Government give at least a minimal response to this plea for justice.

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): In reply to my friend the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse), Mr. Speaker, may I say that the Government has followed with great interest the drafting and approval process of the new Constitution in Ethiopia. Hon. Members are aware that we are quite concerned about several human rights violations in that country. We have raised these issues on a number of occasions with the Ethiopian authorities and, if need be, we will keep on doing so. We see the adoption of a new Constitution as a major event, since it amounts to a formal commitment to respect human rights in Ethiopia.

The Canadian Government is quite disappointed that a general amnesty for all political prisoners in Ethiopia was not announced on the day the new Constitution for the People's Democratic Republic of Ethiopia was proclaimed on September the 12th. Our Embassy in Addis-Ababa has since then told the Ethiopian authorities about our disappointment, especially with regard to the members of the former Royal Family of Ethiopia who have been held in custody since 1974. I can give my honorable colleagues the assurance that the Government will continue its efforts in this direction.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the Hon. Member for Scarborough West for his constant dedication to humanitarian causes. His personal contribution to that area certainly deserves our admiration.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY—BILL C-22—SENATE COMMITTEE'S REPORT/MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on October 22, 1987, I posed a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) regarding the passage of Bill C-22 in the Upper Chamber whereby several amendments were made.

It should be noted that the debate on this particular subject matter has gone on for an extended period of time. My colleagues in the Upper Chamber have very reluctantly accepted the major thrust of Bill C-22. However, in order to clarify a number of points that had been made previously, particularly in lieu of the statements made by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and other Ministers of the Crown, across the country, the members of the Upper Chamber have made three amendments which in no way detract from the over-all thrust and substance of the Government's legislation.

In fact, the Upper Chamber has called for amendments with regard to job guarantees, expenditures on research and development, as well as guarantees with regard to consumer protection. Those three amendments would merely confirm in legislation what the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has been telling Canadians for many weeks, indeed months. In some respects it seems rather shameful that the Minister has not seen fit to concur with the reasonable amendments which have been made by members of the Upper Chamber.

I should point out for your edification, Mr. Speaker, that if these amendments were included in the legislation, they would provide a great deal of certainty and confidence to Canadians who, up until this point in time, have had some rather grave and serious reservations about the over-all thrust of Bill C-22.

I have asked the Minister to reflect upon and reconsider his point of view, not to object to or cast out of hand the obvious reasonable amendments which have been made by the Upper Chamber.

In summary once again, the amendments moved by the Upper Chamber do not in any way derogate from the over-all thrust of the Government's legislation. They are an attempt to codify into law the statements which have been made by Canadians and organizations that travelled across the country to appear before the committee of the House of Commons and the committee of the Senate. It would codify those things which the Minister and the Government have been telling us about expenditures on research and development. I think all Canadians, indeed all Members of Parliament, would want to see them realized. Equally important would be the job guarantees to which our government colleagues have alluded. I hope they would see their way clear to reflecting upon these obviously reasonable yet important amendments to the over-all thrust of Bill C-22.

If the Minister wishes to be true to his word—and thousands of Canadians have heard him in the Chamber and across the country—he should have no difficulty whatsoever in placing the amendments into legislation and thereby accepting the principles laid down by the Upper Chamber and by Canadians from coast to coast, whether they be the United Church, senior citizens, provincial Governments, or whomever.

I hope the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister would reflect most sincerely on these very worth-while and reasonable amendments.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, what I cannot condone is the way the Liberal majority in the Senate is brazenly obstructing the will of the majority in the House of Commons, whose Members are elected by the people. Meanwhile, Opposition Members have failed to prove that Bill C-22 offers no guarantees either for job creation or for increased investments by pharmaceutical companies.

Mr. Speaker, the Bill provides for review by Cabinet and by Parliament, after respectively, four and ten years of implementation. This is a built-in safety valve which forces the companies to honour their commitments or else see the legislation revoked or revised.

Mr. Speaker, the serious implications of an unsatisfactory performance should, I hope, be ample reassurance for Opposition Members that none of the companies is going to try to get out of its commitments. The drug companies have already guaranteed the public over $800 million and have publicly announced that the industry will increase the ratio of R & D expenditures to sales from 4.9 to 10 per cent over the next ten years. Considering the coverage they are getting from the media, their reputations would be very much in jeopardy if they failed to meet these objectives. They would lose the confidence of the Government and the average Canadian, as well as the support of the rest of the industry.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-22 has received a great deal of attention from the media across this country. Bill C-22, Mr. Speaker, was fully ratified in its present form by the Quebec National Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-22 is a legislative measure which Quebecers want—as do the people of Ontario, I hope, and the other provinces in Canada—to make it possible for people doing research to find markets, to make it possible to create employment in Montreal, to make it possible to create permanent jobs, which happens to be the purpose of this Bill.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, allow me to suggest to my colleague that he should try to bring his friends and Liberal senators to their senses so they will stop filibustering this measure passed by the House of Commons.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT—MINISTER'S POSITION ON FUNDING OF FANTASYLAND PROJECT—REASON FOR FUNDING PROJECT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my intention is to follow up on a question which pertains to the city from which you come. I know it will be of some interest to you. It has to do with the questions that I asked in the House last week of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) concerning a grant to the Fantasyland project in the Edmonton mall.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that when it was first raised the Deputy Prime Minister defended the decision to give the money to the Fantasyland project on the basis of how, in his judgment, he thought that the project was good for Edmonton, the mall and western Canada. We were quarreling about whether the criterion for selecting which project would get these moneys had been met and whether the Deputy Prime Minister had bent or broken the rules in order to provide the grant.

The Deputy Prime Minister in the early stages of the debate last week did not even try to pretend that the criterion had been met. He argued that what he had done was the right thing on the basis of what he thought to be the merits of the project regardless of the criterion. It was only in subsequent days that he then started to try to find ways in which he could fit the Fantasyland project into the criterion. It was interesting to see this line of argument develop over the next few days.

I want to address myself to some of the rhetoric that accompanied the defence by the Deputy Prime Minister and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of the Government's decision to give this money to the Fantasyland project. What I object to strongly, and I hope you share this view, Mr. Speaker, is that Members of Parliament should be able to rise—opposition Members in this case—and ask legitimate questions of the Deputy Prime Minister or any other Member of the Cabinet about the granting of moneys to particular projects without having to be subject to the accusation that because we raise a question we are against a region, in this case western Canada.

I hope that some day western Canadians like myself can ask another western Canadian, in this case the Deputy Prime Minister, without having either the Deputy Prime Minister or the Prime Minister say, as the Prime Minister did say on the record, that the NDP is somehow against the interests of western Canada because we raised an issue. If we raise an issue with respect to some contract given in Atlantic Canada, are we against the interests of Atlantic Canada? If we raise an issue with respect to the granting of a contract in Quebec, are we against the interests of Quebec? If you cannot raise these kinds of issues without that kind of accusation being leveled, you cannot do your job.

I think it was a very low point in the life of Parliament when that kind of an accusation was made against myself and against other New Democrats because we raised such a question. I can tell you sincerely that this kind of regional McCarthyism, or as we have called it, regional racism, has the same dynamic that whenever you raise a question you are accused of something. Conservative Members of Parliament in previous Parliaments used to be frustrated when they asked a question about something happening in Quebec and Liberal Cabinet Ministers of those days used to retort, no matter what the question was, "You are against Quebec". Conservative Members of Parliament did not think that was an appropriate response by Cabinet Ministers then and it is not an appropriate response today when the Deputy Prime Minister or the Prime Minister use that kind of an answer to respond to that kind of a question by Members of Parliament.

Western Canada is a politically plural society. There is more than one political tradition in western Canada. Conservatives need to have enough respect for western Canada to realize it is not just Conservatives who speak for western Canada. With respect to many controversial western issues, whether it be energy policy or whatever the case may be, there are one or more views.

The tradition from which I speak, the CCF and NDP tradition, actually predates in many respects the tradition of the Deputy Prime Minister. He is basically a product of the Conservative tradition in western Canada created by John Diefenbaker. Long before John Diefenbaker came along, there were CCF members who spoke out for western Canada.

Many Canadians resent this monopoly that western Progressive Conservatives think they have on speaking for western Canada. It will come back to haunt them because western Canadians do not appreciate those who think they have a monopoly on their particular political mind-set. I think we saw that developing out of the events that happened here last week and out of what I understand to be some of the comments made about the exchanges that took place in the House last week.

I make a sincere appeal as one Member of Parliament to other Members of Parliament, let us not drag this place down by getting into this game of accusing each other of being against any particular region or in this case, against western Canada. My children are the fourth generation of my family to have made their homes in western Canada and I for one will just not put up with somebody like the Deputy Prime Minister saying that I am against western Canada. It is not true and the Deputy Prime Minister should have more respect for Parliament and for other Hon. Members than to have suggested that.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member's colleague from Skeena might take heed of the very apt and appropriate words he has just directed to us. For the record, it should be of interest to the Hon. Member to be aware of what DRIE officials actually had to say about this particular transaction. I wish to quote from a response DRIE officials made to the Auditor General last summer:

> —that the application for assistance for this project was received on December 7, 1983 and while tourism was dropped from IRDP on November 9, 1984, the application was protected under the grandfather provision. It is clear from file documentation that the necessary permits, construction contracts and actual construction on this project was/were not entered into prior to December 7, 1983 and therefore the project was not prior committed within the terms of Section 29(1) of the pre-November 9, 1984 regulations to the IRDP. DRIE's position remains that the project continued to be eligible for assistance consideration under IRDP, notwithstanding the fact that construction was well advanced in August, 1985 when the DRIE Minister made the actual decision to assist . . . The IRDP contribution facilitated the company in arranging the additional financing and consequently ensured that the project was completed within the originally proposed scope and timing. If DRIE had not offered the assistance at that time, it is highly probably that construction would have been delayed and the significant contributions that have accrued to Canada's economy over the past two years from this tourism facility would have been substantially lessened.

That is the position of DRIE. Obviously the Auditor General has the right to examine it, to consider whether or not it was appropriate and indeed to reject it, but the fact remains that that was the position of DRIE acknowledged by the Auditor General.

VICTORIAN ORDER OF NURSES

TRIBUTE ON NINETIETH ANNIVERSARY OF ORDER—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, on this occasion of the ninetieth anniversary of the Victorian Order of Nurses, I would like to offer the Government of Canada's sincere congratulations to the Order, a national voluntary non-profit organization comprised of 75 branches in nine provinces across Canada.

It was in 1897, with the support of the National Council of Women, that Lady Aberdeen founded VON Canada. Lady Aberdeen had been actively promoting visiting nursing in Britain, where she had made the personal acquaintance of Florence Nightingale, who later wrote to her in Canada, and offered support and encouragement for the new Canadian nursing venture.

At a public meeting on February 10, 1897, Sir Wilfrid Laurier made a motion inaugurating the Order "as a mode of commemoration by the Dominion of the Queen's Diamond Jubilee". Lady Aberdeen was chosen president of the new Order, and on December 28 of the same year, Queen Victoria granted VON Canada a Royal Charter.

The Order's first 12 nurses were admitted at an official ceremony in November, 1897. After only five months, the Order organized a team of four nurses to accompany the Canadian Government Expedition to the Klondike. Throughout the 1917 Halifax disaster, the influenza epidemic of 1918, and two world wars, VON Canada continued to meet the challenging and changing needs of Canadians.

The first branches were organized in Ottawa, Montreal, Toronto, Halifax, Vancouver, and Kingston. When other requests for nursing services came from remote pioneer districts in the west, the VON offered to establish cottage hospitals. In 1898 the first of 44 cottage hospitals was opened in Regina. The last of these was turned over to local authorities in 1924.

More recently, in response to changing community needs, VON Canada is offering such innovative services as adult day-care, placement co-ordination, foot-care clinics, volunteer visiting, and such specialty services as palliative care and respiratory care.

During 1986, some 1,618 VON nurses provided more than three million home visits to 134,500 Canadians. I offer my thanks and congratulations, I am sure, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of all the Members in the House, to this active and vital organization.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Official Opposition I am pleased to join with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) this morning to honour the contribution of the Victorian Order of Nurses to Canadian health care on this, the occasion of its ninetieth anniversary.

The Minister has spoken this morning of the Order's first 90 years of service in Canada; of its selfless contribution in times of war, natural disaster and health epidemic. The mark of a truly great health organization is service to Canadians day in and day out in both urban and remote communities. The Victorian Order of Nurses meets and indeed surpasses this standard.

When, in the past, Canadians required nursing care, the Victorian Order of Nurses has always provided this public service with compassion, efficiency, and dedication. As Canadian society has changed and developed, so has the nursing services provided by the Victorian Order of Nurses. It is this ability to identify the needs of Canadians and to respond to those needs which will ensure that 90 years from now parliamentarians will again rise in the House to congratulate the Victorian Order of Nurses for its outstanding contribution to Canadian health care.

Again, on behalf of the Official Opposition, our sincerest congratulations.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me as health critic for the New Democratic Party to add our most sincere congratulations and appreciation to the Victorian Order of Nurses for 90 years of very special nursing services to Canadians.

The VON public health nurses and nurse practitioners have consistently pushed forward the frontiers of health care in Canada, bringing services to northern and remote communities and to the elderly and infirm in the comfort of their homes. They have a vision of a health care system which we as New Democrats share, a system that is preventive and community-based.

Many studies have shown that we must shift a much larger share of our health care dollars from curative to community care. Our population is rapidly aging and institutional care is very costly. It is essential that older people have the option to remain in their own homes as long as possible with a range of community support services like those provided so well by the VON.

I am sure that VON nurses were pleased when Bill C-3, respecting the Canada Health Act, included a new Clause 9 to provide insurance coverage for "additional services rendered by health care practitioners". Unfortunately, to date no provinces have implemented this clause, which could greatly extend community nursing and paraprofessional services. The bulk of funding is still going to hospitals and nursing homes. Only 10 cents of the health care dollar goes to community support services.

I call upon the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to extend and expand the tradition established by the Victorian Order of Nurses by increasing funding for community nursing and by persuading provinces to implement Section 9 of the Canada Health Act.

PETITIONS

DECOMMISSIONING OF LIGHTHOUSES

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to rise in the House to present a petition which requests that Canada Coast Guard not destaff lighthouses on the West Coast of Canada in order to protect and enhance the safety of the travelling public.

A great deal of concern has been expressed in the petition, and the individuals wish that the Minister would act immediately to overturn the proposal as laid down by the Canada Coast Guard.

REQUEST FOR BROADCASTING OF WINTER OLYMPICS ACROSS CANADA IN THE FRENCH LANGUAGE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to present a petition which bears the signatures of a number of residents of the Ottawa—Carleton region and which is in accordance with Standing Order 106. This petition humbly sheweth that:

Whereas close to one million francophones residing outside Quebec will not be able to watch French television broadcasts of the Calgary Winter Olympic Games;

Whereas the CRTC compromise under which French TV signals would be made available to cable companies is unacceptable because not all francophone communities outside Quebec have cable service;

Whereas French-speaking Canadians will pay their share of the $200 million earmarked by the Conservative Government for the Calgary Winter Olympic Games.

Wherefore your petitioners humbly call upon Parliament to urge the Conservative Government to respect its commitment toward Canada's linguistic minorities by providing all communities from coast to coast with the possibility of watching, in both official languages, broadcasts of this international event, the 1988 Winter Olympic Games.

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition signed by people from the riding of Ottawa—Vanier, in which your petitioners state that nearly one million francophones living outside Quebec will be enabled to watch the Calgary Winter Games on French language television.

The compromise suggested by the CRTC which would be to make the TV signals in French available to cable TV distributors is unacceptable.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) pointed out, your petitioners humbly pray Parliament to urge the Conservative Government to respect its commitments to language minorities in this country by making this program available.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I also wish to table a petition on behalf of many people in Ontario who want to watch the Olympic Games in French. Your petitioners are asking the Conservative Government to meet its commitments to this country's language minorities by making television broadcasting of this international event, the 1988 Olympic Games, available in both official languages throughout the country.

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty as well to table a petition on behalf of people who are very concerned about the fact that the 1988 Olympic Games will not be televised in French throughout Canada.

Your petitioners humbly pray that the Government will meet its commitment to official language minorities and ensure that television broadcasts of this international event be available to all minority groups in the country.

CLOSURE OF EMBASSY IN ECUADOR

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Official Opposition I am pleased to present to the House a petition containing hundreds of names and concerning the closure of the embassy in Ecuador.

The petition reads as follows: Whereas the Canadian embassy in Ecuador has been opened and closed twice in the last 10-year period, and whereas the closure of the embassy in Ecuador has caused hardship to those individuals seeking to apply for immigration to Canada and for visitors' visas, and whereas the waiting period for an appointment with an immigration officer in Bogota, Colombia, the nearest Canadian embassy to Ecuador, can be as long as six months, wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to express their support for the reopening of the Canadian embassy in Ecuador and to urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs to reverse the decision to close the embassy.

CANADA POST—OPPOSITION TO REMOVAL OF RURAL ROUTE SERVICE—WILNO, ONT.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition to present to the House of Commons on behalf of the rural communities in Canada which stand to lose their post offices over the next 10 years under this Government.

The Government has given direction to Canada Post to cut back on rural services and on rural post offices, whereby rural postmasters and postmistresses will be taken off salary, and we will not have a representative of Canada Post per se on the payroll of Canada Post in the rural communities of Canada.

The petitioners from Wilno, Ontario are a case in point. They feel that the fight for the Wilno Post Office is the fight for every rural community in Canada. They do not want to see these rural services diminished in any way, because the postmaster or postmistress is the one remaining public servant of Canada identified with the federal Government in many of those communities. He or she is well known to everybody in the community and stands as a representative of the federal Government of Canada and indeed a servant of the community.

Therefore, I present the petition to support their cause that the Government retain rural post offices for the services of rural communities.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE—GRANTS TO METROPOLITAN TORONTO AREA

Question No. 194—Mr. Redway:

Since September 4, 1984, did the Department of Justice make grants and/or loans to persons or corporations, non-governmental organizations and governments within Metropolitan Toronto and, if so, in each case, in what amount and for what purpose?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Since September 4, 1984, the Department of Justice made the following contributions to persons or corporations, non-governmental organizations and governments within Metropolitan Toronto:

$75,000 Public legal education information network in Canada—Canadian Law Information Council

PATENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House proceeded to the consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are making history here today in the House of Commons but not the kind of history any of us could be proud of. Never before in this country, in this Parliament, has the House of Commons been asked to approve a legislative proposal not once, not twice but three times.

Mr. Frith: You might get it right the third time.

Mr. Andre: Three times we have been asked to pass a piece of legislation.

Let me recount very quickly the history of this legislation. All kinds of claims have been made as to its initiative, where it has come from, where it is tied to and so on. It bears reminding the House that in June, 1983 the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), then the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, introduced a White Paper on behalf of the Liberal Government which said in part:

> To generate further growth in this industry—

Namely the pharmaceutical industry:

> —the Government of Canada has decided to change the Patent Act to rebalance the 1969 policy.

That was the policy of the Liberal Government which needed to rebalance the 1969 changes to the Patent Act to generate growth in the pharmaceutical industry. On April 17, 1984 the then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Judy Erola, appointed the Eastman Commission. In June, 1984, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), who at that point in time was duly elected and receiving briefings from Mr. Osbaldeston, continued to hold directorships of several companies, including the chairman of Sandoz Canada. In that capacity he was highly critical of compulsory licensing and said that it needed to be amended.

On July 16, 1984, during the election campaign, which deals with the question as to whether the Government has a mandate, the Progressive Conservative Party said:

> A Progressive Conservative Government would review the Patent Act to ensure that intellectual capital is protected and to allow innovating companies to profit from the investment made in research and development without causing the consumer to pay unduly higher prices for medications.

We are on record as a Party during the election campaign as saying that we would change the Patent Act.

On February 16, 1985, four months after the Government was sworn in, the current Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Côté) then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, described the Government's intention to act on the pharmaceutical issue in a February 16 interview with Les Affaires, a Quebec business journal. The Minister stated that he intended to table a new policy for pharmaceuticals by the spring of 1985.

On February 22, 1985, again just four months after being sworn in, the Government, the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada and the Canadian Drug Manufacturers Association initialled a protocol suspending compulsory licensing applications while work proceeded concerning amendments to Section 41(4) of the Patent Act. Four months after the Government was elected, we had this protocol, but it came apart and was never acted upon. On February 28, 1985, the Eastman Commission reported. On March 15, the then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs announced that consultations with the generic and brand name companies would be held. There were a series of consultations.

I might point out that on June 20, 1985, the then PQ Government of Quebec adopted a resolution unanimously in the National Assembly calling for amendments to the Patent Act. That was repeated by the newly elected Liberal Government of Quebec on December 19, 1985.

Someone has suggested that the trade negotiations were tied to Bill C-22. The Government in July, 1985 had P and P meetings in Baie Comeau. The Cabinet decision to initiate trade talks was announced in September, 1985. The amendments to the Patent Act came out of our commitment in the election and preceded by almost a year any concern about the decision respecting free trade.

One year ago on November 6, 1986, the Bill was finally given first reading in this House. There were 12 hours of debate in this House and extensive committee hearings were held. Finally the Bill was sent to the Senate in May of this year. The Senate resisted all efforts on our side to encourage it to engage in pre-study on the Bill. That is something the Senate does quite often on complex and important Bills, but the Senate refused to do so in this instance. When the Bill was referred to the Senate, instead of giving it the usual treatment of reference to a standing committee, the Senate set up a special committee which went on a tour of the country to try to get some groundswell of opposition. Some $350,000 were spent on that. That committee reported at the end of June. I was around all the month of July making it known to the Senate that I was here to discuss the Bill with the Senators. I had only one meeting, and after prodding from our side finally, on August 12, the Senate reported. On August 26 this House discussed the motion to send the Bill back to the Senate.

I might mention a couple of quotes from the debates of that day. The Hon. Member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) said:

> —we believe the Senate should let the Bill pass after the House of Commons has, in fact, reviewed the matter.

On the same day the Leader of the Opposition, the Right Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra, said:

> —at the end of the day the elected House of Commons must prevail. That is a clear position of the Liberal Party.

The Bill went back to the Senate. The Senate has then referred it to another committee. The Senators said they had no intention to delay, and I made it clear that I was anxious to appear before their committee. Finally, on October 3 I had one appearance before the committee. A member of my staff saw the amendments which we are now debating written on a document dated September 29. In other words, the Senate had already made its decision on the amendments before I appeared before their committee. It then reported to the House. The Senate was to debate the matter two weeks ago, but it was not possible because the Liberal Leader in the Senate was in Scotland and he wanted to speak. The Senators were going to discuss the matter last Tuesday, but again it was not possible because my remarks from the committee on October 3 were not yet translated. Then the Senators were to discuss the Bill on Wednesday, but the Governor General had need for the Red Chamber. Finally, on Thursday with one speaker from each side, the Senate sent the Bill back.

I challenge anyone to suggest seriously that what we have been exposed to over the last six or seven months is cold, analytical, non-partisan sober second thought. I challenge anyone to describe that as sober second thought.

Mr. Nunziata: What are you suggesting?

Mr. Andre: We have now before us amendments with which we must deal.

I have a motion I would like to put to the House respecting these amendments. I have given copies to each of the opposition Parties and if it is agreed, I would like to have the motion taken as read. It is technical and extensive and I will deal with the substance of it, of course, in debate, but in the interests of saving time, perhaps I could have the agreement of the House that this motion, seconded by the Minister of State, might be introduced as read.

• (1130)

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, would there be a quick summary of the motion given before we give the unanimous agreement to it? I would like to hear the motion in summary.

Mr. Andre: I am not asking for unanimous agreement to the motion, I am asking for unanimous agreement for it to taken as read and I will give a description.

Mr. Skelly: Before that is given, will the Minister just give a quick summary?

Mr. Andre: Okay, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Nunziata: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I understand that a copy of the motion has been given to opposition critics. However, there are others in the House who have not had an opportunity—

Mr. Andre: I gave four copies to each Party.

Mr. Nunziata: That is true, but there are more than four Members in the House of Commons. I have not received a copy and perhaps the Minister can give us a précis of the resolution itself in order for us to participate adequately. If not, we might be put in a position to request that it be read.

Mr. Andre: I will read it and I want to thank the Hon. Member for his respect for the traditions of decency and fair play in the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As soon as the Minister has read the motion and has forwarded it to the Chair, the Chair will make copies for everybody in the House.

Mr. Andre: The motion reads as follows:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this House agrees with amendment 18(b) made by the Senate to Bill C-22, an Act to Amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, but disagrees with all other amendments except amendment 13(a), (b), (c), and (d), 14(a), (b), (c) and (d) and amendment 16(a) because this House believes that amendments 4(b), ll, 12, 15(a), (b), and (c), 16(b), (c), (d) and (e), 17(a) and (b) and 18(a) are in contradiction to the fundamental principles of the bill and undermine the objectives of the policy.

More specifically:

Amendments 4(b), 11 and 12 change the coming into force of the sections thereby jeopardizing all the research and development commitment of the industry, and are therefore not acceptable;

Amendments 15(b), (c) and 18(a) remove flexibility from the Patented Medicines Prices Review Board inconsistent with the design of such regulatory agencies and are therefore inconsistent and not acceptable;

Amendment 15(a) arises out of Senate amendments 13 and 14 and is therefore inappropriate;

Amendment 16(b), (c), (d) and (e) and 17(a) and (b) arise out of amendments 13, 14, and 16(a) which are proposed for further amendment by this House in this Message. Therefore the Senate amendments are inappropriate.

And that Senate amendments 13(a), (b), (c), (d), and 14(a), (b), (c) and (d) be amended to read as follows:

That clause 15 of Bill C-22 be amended,

(a) by adding, immediately after line 36 on page 13, the following:

"(1.1) Where, in the opinion of the Board, a patentee of an invention pertaining to a medicine has, within such period as is prescribed, increased the price at which the medicine is sold in any market in Canada by a percentage in excess of the percentage increase in the Consumer Price Index, as published by Statistics Canada under the authority of the Statistics Act, for that period, the Board may, by notice in writing, require the patentee to provide the Board with such information and documents concerning the costs of making and marketing the medicine as the Board may specify and as is available to the patentee in Canada or is within the knowledge or control of the patentee, and on the receipt of any such notice, the patentee shall comply therewith within such time as the Board may specify."

(b) by striking out line 45 on page 13 and substituting the following:

(c) by adding, immediately after line 33 on page 17, the following:

"(5.1) Where, in the opinion of the Board, a patentee of an invention that is a medicine has, within such period as is prescribed, increased the price at which the medicine is sold in any market in Canada by a percentage in excess of the percentage increase in the Consumer Price Index, as published by Statistics Canada under the authority of the Statistics Act, for that period, the Board may, by notice in writing, require the patentee to provide the Board with such information and documents concerning the costs of making and marketing the medicine as the Board may specify and as is available to the patentee in Canada or is within the knowledge or control of the patentee, and on the receipt of any such notice, the patentee shall comply therewith within such time as the Board may specify."

(d) by striking out line 42 on page 17 and substituting the following:

"accordance with subsection (5) or (5.1),"

(e) by striking out line 17 on page 20 and substituting the following:

"purpose of the report referred to in"

(f) by striking out lines 2 and 3 on page 23 and substituting the following:

(a) a summary of pricing trends in the pharmaceutical industry; and

(b) the name of each patentee to whom a notice under subsection 41.15(1.1) or 41.16(5.1) was sent during the year and a statement as to the status of the matter in respect of which the notice was sent."

(g) by striking out lines 4 and 5 on page 23 and substituting the following:

"(2) The summary referred to in paragraph (1)(a) may be based on information and".

And that Senate amendment 16(a) be amended to read as follows:

That Clause 15 of Bill C-22 be amended by adding, immediately after line 17 on page 19, the following:

"(12) Where an order is made under paragraph 6(d) in respect of a medicine, the prohibitions set out in subsections 41.11(1) and 41.14(1) cease to apply in respect of the medicine effective on the date of the order."

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, just to make the record absolutely clear, I did not request that the Minister read the motion, I simply requested a précis of the motion itself. I will let the record speak for itself and the manner in which the Minister read the motion speak for itself. I do not think Canadians are impressed or amused by the Minister.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, let me very quickly indicate that among the amendments sent by the Senate, there is one amendment that seeks to improve the quality of the translation between French and English, and in fact the amendment of the Senate does that and we certainly find that acceptable.

The Senate was of the impression that the rules respecting drugs which are researched, discovered and patented in Canada might be exempt from the requirement to keep prices lower than the cost of living. Our officials disagree with that observation, but certainly the amendment in that regard proposed by the Senate gives added assurance, and in that regard is acceptable.

The other amendments deal with three fundamental questions. The suggestion was made by the Senate that the provision dealing with what is called pipeline drugs and I will define them in a moment, be retroactive. The Bill acknowledges that between the old regime prior to Bill C-22 and the new regime which would be in place after Bill C-22 is passed, some drugs are caught in between, in the pipeline for approval. That was the reason the Government signed a protocol on February 22, 1985, almost two years ago, providing that there be a halt to applications and processing of compulsory licence applications pending the introduction of the new Bill.

In the event, the protocol fell apart, and applications continued to stream in for compulsory licences, so after much negotiation and discussion, it was decided by the Government that for those drugs, there would be a special time period during which the brand name drug would have a period of exclusivity. The rules were that if a compulsory licence had been applied for and granted prior to June 27, 1986, the patentee would have seven years of exclusivity. If an application for compulsory licence had been applied for but not yet granted by June 27, 1986, the patentee would have an eight-year period of exclusivity. Anything applied for after that, of course, is 10 years of exclusivity.

Senators have suggested that the June 27, 1986, date is retroactive, so they have eliminated through amendments that provision and said that the Act will come into force when it is proclaimed. We have difficulty with that. First, it violates the agreement that we had negotiated with all parties over almost two years, a year and a half at that point in time. It would be a very bad precedent for Parliament to say that the Government cannot honour an agreement which in essence it entered into with all parties concerned after much discussion.

Then there is the question of retroactivity. Why is that offensive in itself? People make plans based on their interpretation of the law and the rules. It has been deemed unfair by the courts, and certainly by Parliament, to come along and say that the rules under which someone has been operating under for the last year and a half were not really the rules and we are now changing the law. If we were to accept the Senate amendments and do away with the June 26, 1986, date in the Act, we would be saying to all those companies who have based their behaviour until now on that date that they were wrong, that is not the correct date. That would be retroactive and detrimental. It is for that reason that we cannot accept the Senate amendments in this respect. We believe it to be inappropriate and a bad precedent to do so.

There is a second group of amendments which deal with the question of research and development commitments. The Senate has said, in debate and through its amendments, that if we have a commitment from the industry to spend 10 per cent of sales on research, why not write it into the law and make it specific?

Mr. Orlikow: Why not?

Mr. Andre: I will explain why not. First, the commitment is an industry commitment, not company by company. There is an important difference. It may well be that there will be companies who spend 8 per cent of sales on research, or 6 per cent. There will be companies who spend 10 per cent, 12 per cent, 14 per cent. The commitment we have, and what the industry will be held accountable to, is the over-all average. On an annual basis Parliament will receive the report of the drug prices review board and that will allow us to monitor whether the performance requirements have been met.

In addition, it is also bad law because it will negatively affect their behaviour. Let me give you some hypothetical examples. A new small company, perhaps Canadian but it is not its nationality but its size that is relevant, has one or two new products. It is typical in the industry that when a new product hits the market, sales start out rather slowly because physicians do not immediately jump to use a new product. They want some assurance that it is going to work properly for their patients and so on. If it turns out that the drug is valuable in the treatment of disease, then sales start to go up.

You could have a small Canadian company spending 10 per cent or 15 per cent of its sales on research while selling at a certain rate, and then if sales of the drug start to take off in the latter quarter of the year, they would have to halt sales because their sales to research ratio for that year would be knocked out of whack and they would lose their patent. It would have the effect of triggering undesirable behaviour by a company in order to meet a rigid numerical test.

Another not uncommon practice for companies with a limited number of products is to buy other companies so that their salesmen have a complete line of products. For example, most drug companies have a line of over-the-counter drugs such as cough medicines, headache remedies, stomach remedies and so on. If a new company were starting up with a limited number of patented drugs and wanted to complement its sales line by buying an over-the-counter operation, it might not be able to do that if the total sales of the group caused its R and D ratio to be knocked out of whack.

Bear in mind that research and development cannot be turned off and on like a spigot. You do not go down to the local UIC office and hire Ph.D.s in biochemistry. It takes a long time to get a research program under way. Planning is required and you are not able to respond that quickly. By having a rigid numerical formula for each and every company, you could trigger behaviour that nobody wants.

Another possibility, based on the Senate amendments, is that a company would restructure itself so that it hold its valuable patents and does its research in one company and everything else in the other. It would be very easy to meet the research targets spelled out in the Senate amendments through the one company, while the other company has no patents and therefore it does not really matter whether it has any research or not because no penalties can be imposed under the provisions of the Act.

While the intent of the Senate may be the same as ours, to achieve a spending level on research of 10 per cent of sales, while the argument for writing it into the law sounds reasonable at first blush, in fact it is not a good law and not the right way to go. For that reason I recommend that this House not accept those amendments.

The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte Marie (Mr. Malépart), in a radio interview, said that at end of the day we are going to be accountable if the industry fails to meet the R and D requirements. The Government that introduced the legislation is going to be accountable. However, the Government of the day will have the ability to go back to the old rules after four years. The Government of the day will have sufficient power to make sure that the industry meets those levels. If it does not do so, it will be accountable to the people in the election, and that is the way it ought to be.

Mr. Orlikow: You will not be that Government, that is for sure.

Mr. Andre: The Hon. Member may be right. If he is, then why in blazes is he doing everything he can to hold up this legislation? If he is confident that his Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), is going to be the Prime Minister, he should know, and he does, that the Government of the day will be able to undo this legislation by Order in Council. No Bill is necessary. If he is confident about being the Government, then he should have no difficulty in helping us get this motion through.

There is a third group of proposed amendments which would put in a rigid numerical test which says that the cost of a drug should not increase more than the cost of living as indicated by the Consumer Price Index. That is the intent of the legislation. The Senate says if that is the intent, write it in and be absolutely specific. That is bad law. I remind the House that when we had runaway inflation, the Anti-Inflation Board was there to make sure that prices and wages did not increase beyond specific levels. However, there was always flexibility to allow for exceptional cases. Good law provides flexibility.

Let me give a hypothetical example. A company has a new drug on the market and it is very useful in treating certain diseases but it has a negative side effect for 10 per cent of its users as a result of an impurity. By spending more money the company can remove that impurity or reduce the unfortunate side effects to 1 per cent, but to recover the cost it would have to increase the price more than the cost of living. The company would, in essence, be precluded from doing what might be appropriate for medicinal reasons because if it did so the Act would require that the company lose its patent automatically and without judgment. I do not think we should have law which contains such a provision.

There could be dozens of reasons why a particular drug may merit an increase of more than the increase in the cost of living in a particular year. The Senate apparently believes that the drug prices review board will not be in a position to ensure that that happens. The head of that board, Dr. Eastman, believes that the board has the power.

However, in order to give added assurance we are suggesting that Clause 15 be amended by adding, after line 36 on page 13, that if, in the opinion of the board, a patentee has increased the price in excess of the Consumer Price Index, the board can require that patentee to provide detailed financial information on how the price of a drug was set to enable the board to make a judgment. If the board makes a request under this provision, it will be required, in its subsequent annual report, to report that it made a request of that company and to give its reasons for its judgment, whether to allow the increase or to take away the patent.

We think this is an unnecessary addition, that the board would be effective without this, but we will put it in black and white in the law. One of the consequences of the activity of the Senate is to raise once again the spectre of whether drug prices will increase at a faster rate than the cost of living. They will not. I maintain that those who claim that they will are wrong and have no basis for making that claim.

However, it has been repeated so frequently that, as is the case with many things which are repeated again and again, a case has been established by virtue of repetition rather than by virtue of any foundation. That being the case, it is perhaps not unreasonable to give added assurance to the public that drug price increases will be less than increases in the cost of living except where clearly justified and justifiable.

That is the basis for the amendments. We cannot accept what the Senate is proposing. We believe that its proposal to make every company meet rigid numerical tests in research and development will lead to avoidance, distort business decisions, and could be unfair in some cases.

By way of rationale, it is very common for companies to sell drugs on licence. The most successful drug company today according to the stock market is Merck. Merck will be introducing a new anti-peptic ulcer drug called Pepsum but the patent will actually belong to a Japanese company. Merck will be selling it in North America on licence from the Japanese company.

Since you cannot take away from Merck a patent that they do not have, the inadvertent effect of the Senate's proposal would be to exclude from consideration this drug, which may or may not be very important in terms of revenues to Merck but which, in my view, should be considered when deciding whether Merck is doing its 10 per cent of sales on research. I think that should involve the judgment of the House and future Governments. The drug prices review board should be published, but a rigid numerical test is simply bad law. It is bad not to permit judgment in these instances.

With regard to the cost of living, we believe that under the original Bill C-22 the drug prices review board would have kept increasing the cost of all drugs, including that 80 per cent which never attracts any generic competitors, under increases in the cost of living. We must remember that when there is no generic interest in a drug taking away the patent is hardly a penalty.

We are convinced that the drug prices review board will work. We believe that the annual exposure of the public to drug prices will have a significant downward impact. However, because the concern that prices will rise has been repeated ad nauseam, although it has never been established on any rational basis and is only a propaganda technique, some people have started to believe it.

Therefore, to give added assurance we are proposing these amendments which empower the board to do that which I am sure it would have been able to do anyway, that is, to examine in detail the rationale for any price increases above the cost of living, to make a judgment as to whether or not they are appropriate, and to report annually on the fact that it has made the analysis and on why it has accepted or rejected the price increase in each instance.

I believe that that provides suspenders on top of a belt, but it should keep the pants up and be doubly assuring to those who are nervous.

Finally—

Mr. Dingwall: Thank goodness.

Mr. Andre: The Hon. Member groans and says that he is glad I am concluding. I remind him that I had the distinct pleasure of listening to him for two hours on his third reading debate.

Mr. Nunziata: He made sense, you don't.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, in closing I will read a quote from Senator Frith, the Deputy Leader of the Opposition in the Senate. In speaking on July 24, 1986, on the amendments to Bill C-67, the Parole Act, which the Senate amended and which was sent back to that place in the summer of 1986, Senator Frith said the following:

> Notwithstanding that we are right and they are wrong, notwithstanding all of these reasons to insist, the fact is that we are not an elected body. It is our job—and I believe that we classically fulfilled our job in this case—to expose the weaknesses of this bill. We proposed an amendment. We drew the attention to the people of the country and to the media of the weaknesses of this bill. We passed a good amendment, an amendment that we can be proud of. If the majority of the elected representatives still give us the back of their hand, then I suppose they should get away with it.

The Senator was saying, and he was right, that the Senate should not exercise a veto over the House of Commons. On August 26 of last year the Leader of the Opposition said:

> —at the end of the day the elected House of Commons must prevail.

He was saying that the Senate should not exercise a veto over elected representatives. It is unacceptable that the Senate should veto the House of Commons.

• (1200)

Mr. Caccia: It is not about the veto at all, and you know it.

Mr. Andre: Our Government will have to face the electorate with our record. We are prepared to do that. However, it is unconscionable for people to seriously propose that we should have to face the electorate on a record that is not of our own building but one that is a merger of what the Senate wants and what the House of Commons wants. That is simply an unacceptable democratic principle.

There has been more said about this Bill than any other Bill in the history of this Parliament. It has had more due process, more second thought—sober or otherwise—and it is time to get on to other business and demonstrate to the other place, by our quick action on this motion, that this it is about time they let the will of the elected representatives of Canada prevail—

Mr. Caccia: You know very well that is just rhetoric. They put on paper your own promises.

Mr. Andre: The Hon. Member came in, was not here for most of my debate, and now says they have just put on paper my own promises. I have just spent half an hour explaining why each of those amendments is bad law. He was not here.

He has nothing to learn and he is going to make sure that he never learns anything by plugging his ears and coming in and making a statement which, as I just spent half an hour explaining, is not true. He has the gall to make this accusation.

Mr. Caccia: You are not convincing.

Mr. Andre: How would the Hon. Member know whether or not I was convincing if he was not here to hear me?

Mr. Caccia: I was here for the past 20 minutes.

Mr. Andre: He was not here to listen to me, but he was sure that I was unconvincing. That is great logic.

It is the end of the day—

Mr. Caccia: For you.

Mr. Andre: I would prevail upon the Liberal Party, but also upon the New Democratic Party, to make the point. I have not reviewed all aspects of the Bill. Those points have been made repeatedly here, more often than should be necessary. I think it is time that we got on to other business.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to rise—

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I just want to apologize to the spokesmen for the opposition Parties who were here for my debate. Unfortunately, I have to leave for a speaking engagement and I want to apologize to them. However, my staff will be here. Should any questions arise that require me to answer, I will endeavour to get back to them.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Before the Minister leaves the Chamber, I want to ask him a question. Why has the Minister refused to table his motion with regard to the amendments submitted by the Senate in both official languages? Why has the Minister not extended the courtesy to Members of Parliament of tabling the motion in both official languages? I would like the Minister to explain why he has refused to do this and what shameful excuse he can give to Canadians for allowing this to take place, when we have two official languages.

Mr. Skelly: On a point of order.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I will very quickly explain that. Indeed, there is no requirement for tabling, if you will. The procedure is to read the motion, but this motion being long and technical, I extended the courtesy of distributing it to the opposition Parties in advance of reading it.

The reason that it is not available in both official languages is that, as recently as two hours ago, inaccuracies were discovered as a result of gremlins in the typewriter. It was simply not possible to have it earlier.

While I take the Hon. Member's point about its being absolutely necessary to reflect that this is a bilingual country with respect to our dealings in this House, I can assure him that it is not through some insensitivity, disinterest or anything else. Normally, motions are not given to the Opposition. I extended the courtesy of doing so in advance of its being read in the House. I hope the Hon. Member will recognize that for what it is and not as some attempt to violate the Official Languages Act.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I am raising a point of order because I feel very strongly that the Minister must be told it is absolutely unacceptable that the Government and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre)—who has conveniently left the House, to go and hide—should table in the House a number of amendments to a Bill as important as Bill C-22, while copies of these amendments in both French and English are not available to opposition Members.

Mr. Speaker, it is unacceptable and a direct contradiction of the spirit of the Official Languages Act. I want to make it quite clear today that this Government has a duty to ensure that Parliament can function properly, and that the Government must not only respect the letter but also the intent of the Act, which is that all Members shall have access to documents they can read in their own language. The methods used by the Minister do not meet this requirement, and I am referring to the fact that he gave a quick reading in English—we had to try and follow what he said—of a very technical amendment that was several pages long, and that of course Hon. Members have to be able to react to those amendments. I think that in 1987 it is absolutely unacceptable, when we have a Government, a Minister who comes to the House, gives us the verbal back of his hand and then has the nerve to leave after tabling amendments dealing with a very important Bill in one language only.

Mr. Speaker, I will let my colleages from Montreal and Quebec take it from here.

[English]

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Minister has brought before the House today one of the most important matters that we have discussed. Indeed, the Minister mentioned that it is historic. The Senate has slapped the House of Commons in the face with respect to this issue and the House cannot stand still.

It is with great regret that I see the Minister has left and I am unable to ask for unanimous consent of the House for a short period of questions to determine what would be the proper course of action.

In my opinion this House should be dealing with the affront to the elected officials of Canada posed by a non elected group. The Government must resign and go to the people on this issue or take up the offer to geld the Senate before the Meech Lake Accord becomes final. This is completely intolerable and the House must address that question before we get on to the merits of the drug Bill.

It has been proposed that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) call a constitutional conference before the Meech Lake Accord is finalized and we still have an opportunity, with seven of the provinces and 50 per cent of the population, to put the Senate in its place and remove the powers that have basically offended the people of Canada by denying the passage of legislation put forward by their elected representatives. It is disgraceful that the Minister has left the House before we can have an opportunity for a short period of questions on this important matter.

• (1210)

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), who has now left the Chamber, accused me of having not been in the Chamber when he delivered his speech. I object very strongly to this and I would ask him, through you, Mr. Speaker, to withdraw that statement. I have been in this Chamber since a few minutes after he began to speak.

His statement is not only incorrect, but it affects the credibility of the Minister himself who alleges something that is not true. In addition, I must draw to the Chair's attention that the Minister chose to leave this Chamber as soon as he completed his remarks.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), on a point of order.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I think Canada's francophones have been insulted and they may well feel insulted by the Minister's tabling in the House this is a bilingual country!—of a document in English only, about a Bill, about issues that are very important to Quebecers. They may well feel insulted by the Minister, who says he realizes this is a bilingual country but in fact hands out strictly unilingual documents. Canada's francophones are fed up with words, words, words. They want action and they want it now. Mr. Speaker, to add insult to insult, the Minister goes so far as to inform us he distributed this document as a courtesy. Should we ask him to have the courtesy to make it available in French? It is not a courtesy, it is our right. If Canada is a bilingual country and if the Conservative Government is bilingual, in practice as well as in theory, then something should be done about this, and the chairman of the Conservative caucus from Quebec caucus should defend the rights of francophones.

Mr. Speaker, this happens at a time when the father of all Quebecers, after fighting to defend the rights of francophones against the stranglehold of the English, is lying in state in Montreal.

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to reassure my hon. colleagues and say that, as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, I will certainly stay in the House to listen to their remarks and later on convey to the Minister their concerns about this Bill.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I should like to indicate to my colleagues that if ever a Government has been consistent in its approach to the official languages issue, it is this Progressive Conservative Government. Let us not fall into this leftward trap for they would like nothing better than to use this little incident—I will direct a question to you, Mr. Speaker, and to say that it is an insult to Canadians, etc. In my opinion, Canadians are well aware of the fact that this Progressive Conservative Government has an absolutely unblemished record in this country with respect to the question of the two official languages.

I understand that the Minister tabled this morning with the clerk a copy of the amendments. For this reason, Mr. Speaker, could you indicate to the House how things stand with regards to the translation of this document?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Actually, the Chair has just received—

Mr. Malépart: It's about time. It's a shame!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: —the translation of almost all the amendments.

Mr. Malépart: For francophones, it's an hour later in the Maritimes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Having received the translation of almost all the amendments, the Chair will have it distributed to the Hon. Members right away.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I want to support the objections made by my friends in the Liberal Party. I happen to be a Member who is still only knowledgeable in one of our official languages, which is English. It is unfortunate and I congratulate those Members on both sides of the House who have taken the time and made the effort to learn the second language. However, I happen to be the spokesperson and critic on this subject for our Party and I want to say that if the Minister, who introduced this motion of the Government in response to the Senate's proposal, had tabled it in the French language, I would have had a great deal of difficulty in dealing with it.

I am sure that Members of this House whose main, if not only, language is French are having the same difficulties now and certainly until the time they receive a translation, as I would have had in the reverse.

It seems to me that a Government which prides itself on the progress it has made in expanding the use of both languages, could have waited another day and had the translation here before it brought this motion forward.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, this matter has been raised as a point of order, but I am specifically rising on a question of privilege and seeking direction and a ruling from the Chair on the matter. A Minister of the Crown, representing the Government of Canada, came into the House of Commons this morning and presented a resolution to the House. I was here when he presented his motion. He presented the resolution, then sought the unanimous consent of the House to dispense with the reading of that particular resolution.

If you recall at the time, Mr. Speaker, I stood and asked the Minister to give a précis. I was not aware at the time that the resolution was not translated into both official languages. The Minister proceeded to read the resolution, notwithstanding the fact that he was not requested to do so, with such speed that it was totally incomprehensible.

I am sure that if you review the video Hansard, Mr. Speaker, of the Minister's reading, you will find that not only was it incomprehensible in English but I am sure the translators in the House of Commons, who are here to translate into both official languages, were unable to translate the Minister's reading of the resolution into French.

Although I have some knowledge of the French language, Mr. Speaker, I am not proficient enough to read and to understand a resolution of this nature, and I understand there are Members in this House who are unilingually French. We are either a bilingual country or we are not. It seems to me that if a Minister of the Crown finds it acceptable in the Parliament of Canada to present a resolution in the House in only one official language, it is not only insulting to French Canadians, generally, but insulting to this House and shows contempt for the Official Languages Act and for the fact that Canada is officially bilingual.

The Minister gave us some lame excuse for not having the—

Mr. Dingwall: A patronizing comment.

Mr. Nunziata: Indeed, it was patronizing, as my colleague has pointed out. He said he extended a courtesy to other English speaking members of the Opposition in providing them with a copy of the resolution in English. If it was a courtesy to provide a copy of the resolution in English, how can one describe the discourtesy and contempt in not providing the resolution in French, the other official language?

The Minister indicated that there were some gremlins in the Translation and he only became aware of it a few hours ago. By his own words, the Minister is admitting that he had full knowledge of the fact that the resolution was not translated in both official languages when he commenced his remarks today. Notwithstanding the fact that he had full knowledge that the resolution was not translated, he proceeded to introduce that resolution in the House and to read through the resolution with such speed as to make in incomprehensible. He was arrogant in the delivery, and I am seeking a specific ruling from the Chair. I believe my privileges have been breached as well as the privileges of all Members, by the fact that the Minister did not present the resolution in both official languages.

I believe very strongly that the Speaker should rule on the matter even though there might be a technical escape for the Minister. I am sure the Government may use some technical arguments for not presenting the resolution in both official languages. The fact remains that at the very least the spirit of the Official Languages Act has been breached and contempt has been shown for it.

A few short days ago a very prominent Canadian died, a Canadian who fought all of his life for the fact that those people who have French origins in Canada should have certain rights in this country. He went as far as to argue that there should be sovereignty association because the English-speaking majority were infringing upon the rights of French Canadians living in Quebec. Today the Government of Canada has given reason why there are those in Canada who believe in sovereignty association and separatism, because the Government has shown such contempt for the other official language.

You indicated in your comments, Mr. Speaker, that an hour after the Minister had presented his resolution, you had received a partial translation. That is not good enough. The fact is that the House did not have the complete text. A partial translation is not enough. Canada does not have partial bilingualism. It is full and complete. People have fought for that right. I ask you to stand up in the House, Mr. Speaker, and reinforce that right of all Canadians.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for his representation. However, in the opinion of the Chair, I must rule that the question that he raised, although an important one, is not a question of privilege. In Beauchesne's Fifth Edition at Citation 411(3) it states:

> All motions must be presented to the Speaker in writing in either of the two official languages.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: If I rise on a point of order, it is to give the translators a chance to provide us with a true copy of the document which the Minister has tabled in English only. I have scrutinized the support document which we were provided with and which is a translation of the technical amendments which the Minister is proposing. On page 1 of this document—

[English]

The front page of the document where it states that a message be sent to the Senate and explaining more specifically what the purpose is, is not with us at this time, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I should think that the House would want to give all Members the opportunity to perform their duties correctly and responsibly, and that it might spare a few minutes to ask the Clerk how much longer we might have to wait for the final translation. Should it be a matter of only five minutes, I think that the point would have been made and that the translation will be useful. But if this is to take one or two hours, perhaps the Clerk might advise the Chair concerning the time needed to provide a translation of the document submitted in English only by the Minister.

I bring this to the attention of the Chair in an attempt to help solve this problem which is a serious dilemma for us and which, as the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) reminds me, has been raised on a number of occasions in the House. It was even suggested that the Commissioner of Official Languages ought to mention this in his annual report and urge the House to request that all documents be tabled in both official languages to make work easier for all Hon. Members.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) made the point: Had this document been available in French only, I think everybody here would agree with me and say: we must wait for the English version. I think it is just as unacceptable that we are given the document in only one language, that we are given a partial translation. I ask the Chair to tell us how much longer—five minutes, ten minutes—we have to wait before we get the final translation, and if that is how long it takes I am prepared to wait.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), on a point of order.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I must say I am getting very impatient, because I don't like wasting my time here in the House. I am not necessarily blaming the Government or the Chair or the staff. It is the system. I am sure everyone here realizes my good faith and personally, I think I have been very accommodating. However, one does get sick and tired of being accommodating all the time. I say "All the time" to make myself quite clear, because I realize people always get upset when this issue is brought up.

[English]

I know that many people get upset when we raise that—parliamentary language stops me saying exactly what I was going to. But on that question, I have had enough.

For those people who may feel that we are raising some difficult point, I am not blaming the Government, or ourselves, I am blaming the system. Surely the Clerk does not have at his disposal a translation immediately. Surely a Minister of the Crown knows ahead of time that he is going to table something, he knows that he is going to table an amendment. The Ministers have the staff, the know-how, and the possibility, and they should do it.

To show our fairness, I ask for those who may be impatient and whose first language is English, to put themselves in our shoes. Since I have been in the House, I have never seen anyone having to raise this question because some documents were produced only in French. Those amendments are very technical and difficult to understand in one's own language; just imagine trying to adjust in another language.

I call upon you, Mr. Speaker, to ensure that if Ministers do not have the possibility, the time is now coming, and I am sure our House Leader, our esteemed Whip, and our colleagues will say that we will no longer make exceptions.

You know the volatility of the House, Mr. Speaker, It is very difficult. If some Members start playing with the rules of the House and applying them, not much work will be done in the House. As a senior Member, I would not like to be the one to raise this again. I also would not like to be the one to start applying the book of rules of the House.

Please, Mr. Speaker, say to the House Leader to get his act together, and say to cabinet Ministers that from now on this will not be done. I hope that Mr. Speaker will understand that I will not eternally raise that question of having those services within the boundaries of the Hill. People dream of having a bilingual Canada from one ocean to the other. I dream with them. But let us start here within the confines of this building, this place, this House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I should have to rise in the House to reproach the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) for having tabled amendments in English only.

It is positively unconscionable that today, in 1987, when every department has staff that is competent to prepare the documents the Minister needs, that that Minister should come to the House and table this text in only one of our two official languages.

What I find particularly unfortunate is that this is not the first instance of a profound lack of respect for a custom that has been a tradition in the Parliament of Canada for over 15 years. The previous Government would never have allowed this to happen, but it is typical of the present Conservative Government that it should fail to observe the now well-established parliamentary tradition of tabling documents in both official languages. I must reprimand the Minister severely for this breach of parliamentary tradition.

In fact, I see this as typical of the Conservative Government's general attitude to official languages. It is not the first time the present Government has been at fault in this respect.

Not long ago, I was reading an article in one of the Montreal papers which recalled that twice within the last few weeks, the President of Canadian National spoke in English only at some very important public meetings sponsored by Canadian National in the province of Quebec.

Who would have thought this could happen again in Montreal? Many years ago, a former president of Canadian National insulted French Canadians, and at the time, we hoped that subsequent presidents would be fluent in both official languages. Fortunately, the previous Government took steps to ensure that at least one of the two senior directors of Crown corporations as important as Canadian National would be fluently bilingual.

I must say with deep regret that the present CN president does not speak French, and it is a very serious shortcoming on the part of this Conservative Government that it has failed to ensure that one of the two heads of this Crown corporation—it is headquartered in Montreal and sponsors formal dinners and major social activities throughout the Province of Quebec—does not have the decency to see to it that the spokesman for CN is someone who can speak the language of the majority of people in the Province of Quebec.

And this, coupled with the attitude of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) today, reveals precious little concern on the part of the Conservative Government with respect to the two official languages, as well as French in the Province of Quebec and in the House of Commons.

Such a situation therefore is no longer acceptable, and I urge the Government, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to issue strict orders to his Ministers so that this situation will never arise again.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order I must say that I objected very strongly and that I felt insulted as a francophone—and I am sure all francophones in this country are as well—by the attitude of the Conservative Government and of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), who tabled a document in English only.

The Conservative Government first decided to table the text in English. But then, when Members of the Official Opposition, both anglophones and francophones, objected to this procedure, the House gave us a document with part of the text in French.

Mr. Speaker, I have to say that I completely disagree with this approach. I am sure there is not a single francophone in Canada who agrees with this way of doing things. First, we get a text in English only. If opposition Members had not objected or had failed to mention the fact, no one would have noticed.

So what did the Government do to correct this mistake? Did it say, sorry, we will adjourn the House for a few minutes until we get the French translation and we will submit both versions at the same time? No! People came running through the House to give us a text that was half-filled in and incomplete, and expected the francophones to be satisfied. Here is a bit of French, that should do it!

Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government's behaviour cannot be condoned. And aside from any political considerations, I deplore the fact that we did not hear from our francophone colleagues on the Government side—I know some of them are ardent defenders of the French fact—and that we did not see them rise in the House to teach the Government a lesson. If we say nothing today, the Government will maintain its offhand approach, and that is why it is so important for all Ministers of the Conservative Government to understand that in future, documents shall be tabled in the House in both official languages. I am sure that if any of the Conservative Ministers—and I am sure this certainly applies to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs—if any of the Ministers had to table a text in French only, there would have been the devil to pay. So if that is how anglophones feel about it, francophones feel just the same, and I hope this will not happen again.

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I must tell you that I am somewhat disappointed, because after the Minister tabled his document in the House and had copies of it distributed, when I asked the page for a copy in French, he told me that none was available.

Several minutes later, we are told that the translation of some of the amendments is available in French. On the one hand, I have a document in English with all the amendments, and on the other hand I have a document in French with only some of the amendments.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest the Minister is showing his contempt for all French-speaking Canadians, considering that he had received this document from the Senate last week, more specifically last Thursday, and that he had plenty of time on Friday, Saturday, Sunday, and Monday to get a translation. He could be excused on the grounds that translators do not work on Saturdays and Sundays, which leaves both Friday and Monday. Now we get here, and are told: Sorry, the French translation is not available. To get it, as francophones, you may have to wait a few days after the debate is over. We do not have the French text.

Mr. Speaker, I know that you are taking note of our objection to this kind of action by a Minister representing the Government of Canada.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, could I suggest to the House this compromise? In order to allow for the translation of this document, may I suggest that we call it one o'clock and that following negotiations, we proceed with the scheduled debate at 3 p.m.? Therefore, I now seek the unanimous consent of the House to call it one o'clock, to make it possible for the translators to complete the translation of the document.

• (1230)

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. colleague has made a very helpful observation. I am sure that when the Minister was considering his actions he had in mind Standing Order 70 which provides that motions may be in writing and in one language or the other.

I appreciate the comments of my colleague who has just spoken. I can assure him that while we had the response from the other place for two or three days, there were considerations taken by the Government in respect of what response might properly be made to the other place.

I think my friend would admit and acknowledge that in fact two of the changes requested from the other place were in translating more correctly part of the document, and that is why those two changes were agreed to by the Government. We had no difficulty with that. However, I can assure my hon. friend that the decision was only taken late yesterday afternoon as to exactly what would be the response. Of course that triggered putting the response into one of the official languages. Obviously we have to get our response in one official language before we can even begin to translate it into the other official language.

In any event, I think my colleague has made a very helpful suggestion. It is my understanding that the entire wording will be available very shortly in both official languages.

In the interests of a reasoned debate—and I know my colleague who will respond for the Official Opposition does not want to be interrupted—I think my colleague has made a very helpful suggestion that we should call it one o'clock or 1.06 or whatever and that the debate resume after Question Period. We are content with that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to call it 1.06 p.m.?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 12.40 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—FORECAST THREAT TO PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, according to constitutional law Professor Petter the so-called free trade agreement threatens provincial jurisdiction. He notes that in addition to removing the authority of provinces to protect domestic wine and spirits producers there is potential for encroachment by the federal Government on provincial powers in the sectors of energy, services, investment, and the right to set quantitative restrictions.

In the text of the Washington-Ottawa agreement, Canada is committed to take all necessary steps to ensure provincial compliance. This raises the spectre of the federal Government using its taxing and spending powers to force provincial co-operation.

It seems strange for a federal Government, pledged to respect provincial jurisdictions, to make a 180 degree turn and impose the supremacy of the federal Government over the provinces. Here is another contradiction of this Government between its promises and actions. If so-called free trade will be imposed on the provinces it will sap their powers. What a sham of Progressive Conservative promises.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY GOVERNMENT IN MANITOBA

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, so, the NDP are riding high in the popular opinion polls, but can the New Democrats govern? Ask the people of Manitoba which has the only NDP Government in Canada. It also has the highest provincial debt, $9,000 for every man, woman and child. Its spending is out of control. After Quebec it has the highest rate of taxation.

Though the New Democrats talk about the environment, according to the Canadian Nature Federation, Manitoba has the poorest record on environmental matters of all provinces. The NDP Car Insurance Corporation is losing $50 million annually.

No wonder then, as popularity polls are taken across the country, in Manitoba where people have an NDP Government the NDP trails a poor third at 27 per cent, down from the 31 per cent of days gone by.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

NISHGA LAND CLAIM CASE—SUGGESTED REFERRAL TO SUPREME COURT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, B.C. Attorney General, Brian Smith, has applied to the Federal Court of Canada to prevent Ottawa from settling the century-old claims negotiations with the Nishga Tribal Council. The Nishga have an historic claim of aboriginal title to the Nass Valley and have been negotiating with Ottawa for 12 years. The Supreme Court of Canada split three-three on this case in 1973. Already this year the Federal Court rejected a similar application to that of Mr. Smith's.

The Government of Alberta just last week agreed to settle the outstanding 47 year old claim of the Lubicon Band and negotiations began yesterday. Clearly the Government of British Columbia, which is a signatory to the Meech Accord and to the Constitution Act of 1982, is trying to stall the recognition and affirmation of aboriginal title and rights in British Columbia. In attempting to scuttle the Nishga negotiations, the British Columbia Government is forcing a crisis.

The Government of Canada must act in the interests of all Canadians and protect the constitutional, legal and moral rights of the Nishga. If there is insufficient political will to conclude and negotiate a settlement at the federal level, then now is the time for Canada to make a direct reference of the Nishga case to the Supreme Court of Canada.

NORTHERN QUEBEC

INTERNATIONAL SYMPOSIUM FUTURE OF NORTHERN QUEBEC TO BE HELD AT AMOS

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, an international symposium on the future of northern Quebec will be held from November 19 to 21 in Amos, Abitibi. This symposium will enable northern specialists to meet and it will promote an exchange of experiences and viewpoints on northern development.

S. O. 21

Under the chairmanship of Mr. Louis Edmond Hamelin, a world known northern specialist, this symposium will be organized jointly by the Université du Québec en Abitibi-Témiscamingue, Hydro-Quebec (La Grande region), the municipality and the James Bay Development Corporation.

Nearly 30 speakers from Canada, Quebec, France, Sweden, the U.S.S.R., Norway and China will be there to discuss northern development.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration of Canada (Mr. Bouchard) will attend the opening of the symposium on November 19. The issues examined will be social economic development, northern development management and territory development in a multi-ethnical spirit.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the work of the members of the organizing committee for the Symposium on the Future of Northern Quebec as this Symposium will prepare northern residents for the year 2000.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—OPINION OF HON. MITCHELL SHARP

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, on the issue of free trade, we heard this morning that a freer trader by the name of Mitchell Sharp thinks this is a bad deal. The reason he thinks it is a bad deal is not because he is against liberalized trade but because he feels that this particular deal will compromise Canada. We are pitting a strong partner against a weak partner in a continentalist approach to trading as opposed to opening our eyes, our arms, and our markets to the whole world.

In fact this issue is not about free trade; it is about a bad Mulroney deal which is selling out Canadian interests in energy, culture, and economics for the all-mighty American buck. A point was made today in the committee when somebody said there is a price to pay for being a Canadian. We heard a Conservative member ask in a snarky fashion, "What price?"

The continentalist pull which has had its historic impact on this country is such that if we do not develop and continue to nurture an east-west trading relationship among the provinces, we will be taking the first step toward absorption by the United States. That is what this issue is all about. It is about keeping Canada together. It is about a bad economic and cultural deal that could cost Canada our sovereignty.

We on this side of the House believe that Canadians are entitled to all the facts on the deal. We want a full and open discussion because we believe Canadians will reject this bad Mulroney deal when they finally see the fine print. The Government wants to ram it through because it knows it will not stand up to the scrutiny of Canadians.

HOUSING

CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING PROJECTS—SUGGESTED ROLE FOR CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, last weekend in Toronto I attended both the sod-turning ceremony for a new CMHC-funded senior citizens' home sponsored by Hope United Church and the Shelter for Women Conference sponsored by the YWCA. Participants at each event stressed the great difficulties churches and co-ops are having in finding land for affordable housing projects when they must compete against offshore investors and private condominium developers.

How can CMHC help to solve this problem without providing enormous amounts of new money? The YWCA conference had two excellent suggestions, one, lend the co-ops money to buy land on condition that CMHC becomes the owner or can sell it if the project does not proceed; two, advance the time of the annual CMHC co-op housing proposal call to ensure that budgeted funds do not lapse but are actually used to create housing.

In this International Year of Shelter for the Homeless I hope the Standing Committee that deals with housing matters will give these suggestions serious consideration.

PESTICIDES

CONSEQUENCES OF USAGE

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Canada is being blanketed with a thin film of pesticide residues, threatening animal life of all kinds and in all regions. World Wildlife Fund research recently showed a growing threat to the smallest water insects, through snapping turtles, to the polar bear, all living far from the original source of the contaminants.

Last week the Law Reform Commission of Canada issued a study which had alarming results. Many pesticides in use are unsafe, including some accepted on the basis of fraudulent safety tests.

The Pest Control Act has not been amended in 15 years and even its weak provisions are not being enforced. There is no remedy at law for pesticide damage to the environment or for long-term health consequences. Screening for pesticides in food is often haphazard and pesticides are still being dumped in massive quantities into our river systems.

What is the federal Government doing about all this? Precious little. Research funding for toxicology has been cut back, and the Environmental Protection Act deliberately excludes herbicides and pesticides, yet we are all being affected, from farm families to consumers in the cities, from the blue heron to the voter next door.

I call on the Government to begin to take seriously the environment and health threats from herbicides and pesticides. This means money, research, legislation and enforcement, and I call on the Government to do it fast.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

PUBLICATION OF DOCUMENT "BASIS OF RESOLUTIONS"—POSITION OF NDP

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, Peter Cook was right to speak about the wrinkled face of the socialist Party in this morning's issue of the Globe and Mail.

That Party recently published the summary of a document entitled "Basis of Resolutions". This document refers to the evolution of the NDP up to their 1987 Convention. Here are a few passages from this document:

Resolution K.2.1, 1979: The NDP encourages support for a whole series of efforts to establish the legitimacy of the dissident, socialist and Marxist ideology.

Resolution T.1.3, 1983: The New Democratic Party will be satisfied only when we achieve a socialist and democratic Canada; in B.4.3, 1985, the NDP objects to Canadian participation in NATO; in H.1.2, 1981, the NDP suggests the purchase of Imperial Oil at a cost of $12 billion; in E.l.3, 1981, the NDP suggests the purchase of the Canadian Pacific at a cost of $4 billion; in K.3.2, 1981, the NDP proposes legalizing prostitution and bawdy houses; in D.4.2, 1977, the NDP proposes a surtax on food products with little nutritional value.

If the socialist leader is honest, I challenge him to table in this House his "Basis of Resolutions" for the specific information of Canadians, and to say whether he still agrees with the resolutions this document contains.

EMPLOYMENT

ALLEGED GOVERNMENT INACTION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow 500 employees or should I say unemployed workers from Vickers of Montreal will demontrate on Parliament Hill in an attempt to catch this Government's attention.

Thousands of people in Sept-Îles tried to pressure the Government into saving jobs in their city. Unemployed workers from Matane had to pay for buses to come here in order to get the Government to do something. But this government did nothing, nothing at all to create jobs.

The Picard report was published a year ago with 86 recommendations to help promote and develop the Montreal area. Still nothing. Five weeks ago, the Committee for the development of East Montreal tabled a report on job creation and industrial development in East Montreal. But his Government did not do a thing, Mr. Speaker.

This is unfortunate. Tomorrow, unemployed workers will come here to try to be heard by this Government. One thing is sure, this Government will not last very long.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

MANAGEMENT OF PUBLIC FUNDS—GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Marcel Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts for the past two years and as a former public auditor, I feel obliged to rise to express my satisfaction with the Auditor General's annual report, tabled in the House on October 27.

Believe me, Mr. speaker, I can appreciate all the efforts made by the Mulroney Government, a Government that is trying to be efficient, open, sound and honest in the management of public funds. The Auditor General's report is ample proof of the marked improvement of public administration in Ottawa and of the tightening of controls.

What a contrast with the 1981, 1982 and 1983 reports. Public administration then had no orientation, no controls and no effectiveness.

There was so much to be done. We inherited deficits and problems in so many areas: budgetary, constitutional, environmental, in the field of international relations and so on.

There is no use asking who showed more honesty and more morality. You simply cannot make comparisons with the previous Liberal Government. We put order where there was nothing but disorder before September 4, 1984. That is what the Auditor General himself is saying.

Mr. Prime Minister, Québec-Est wants to thank you for your leadership.

RELIGIOUS PERSECUTION

EXECUTION OF BAHA'IS IN IRAN

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I hope all Members of Parliament will join with me in regretting the fact that two more Baha'is in Iran have been killed as a result of their refusal to recant their religious faith. These two men, Amir-Husayn Nadiri and Ardishir Akhtari, have been in prison since September 12, 1984. Their execution on September 28 of this year brings to at least 207 the total number of Baha'is killed since 1978 in Iran for refusing to recant their religious beliefs.

This religious fanaticism on the part of the Khomeini regime is an offence to the whole world and something that all Members of Parliament should be able to join together in condemning. This is one of those occasions on which I regret the passing of Standing Order 43. This is the kind of occasion on which all Members of Parliament could join together to send a unanimous message to the regime in Iran that this kind of persecution and execution of people for their religious beliefs is completely unacceptable to the entire international community.

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to read a letter which I received from one of my constituents which is so typical of the letters I am receiving from a lot of my constituents. It reads:

> With the stock market seeking new lows, it is comforting to know hypocrisy is reaching for new highs.
> John Turner has repeatedly said, "Being Canadian has a cost and I am glad to pay that cost". He states this as he rants against the free trade agreement that will be of such enormous benefit to consumers.
> As an "ordinary Canadian" taxpayer, I find his words full of hypocrisy as well as repugnant. Does he not realize he no longer has any concept of what the "ordinary Canadian" is willing to pay for?
> When John Turner walks into his closet to dress each morning, he thumbs through his button-down $80-plus cotton shirts and has to decide whether to wear a blue, white or striped one. How many "ordinary Canadians" have to make those decisions? Few! Why?
> Because most "ordinary Canadians" cannot afford a closet full of $80-plus cotton shirts. These same shirts, with free trade, would cost about half what John Turner "is willing to pay to be Canadian".
> Perhaps Mr. Turner should try to "buy his Canadianism" at his own expense—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. Members know that the Chair always wants to allow some latitude in Statements by Members but they ought not be used as an attack on any particular Member. I am sure the Hon. Member would not want to do that.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—NEGOTIATOR'S TESTIMONY TO COMMITTEE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, our number two trade negotiator, Gordon Ritchie, has admitted that the Government did not do any job studies before signing the trade agreement with the United States. That was his testimony yesterday before the committee as reported to me. That contradicts everything Canadians have been told by the Government.

The same negotiator admitted that parts of the final text, which we have not seen, are critical to an understanding of the agreement. That again contradicts everything we have been told by the Government.

Finally, the negotiator admitted that the dispute settlement mechanism will not improve Canada's chances in disputes with the United States. That, once again, contradicts everything Canadians have been told by the Government.

In the absence of the Minister for International Trade I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Why has the Government consistently and repeatedly misled Canadians about the job impact of the trade agreement, about the availability of critical information on that agreement, and about the value of the dispute settlement mechanism?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, this is, of course, a matter which is before the committee. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows that every study which has been conducted with regard to a free trade agreement with the United States indicates that there will be a significant net gain of jobs in Canada. That should be welcome news to the right hon. gentleman, notwithstanding the fact that he said he would tear up a free trade agreement with the United States.

Mr. Riis: Can you table those studies?

Mr. Mazankowski: The Economic Council of Canada is an independent body that has studied this quite thoroughly, as have other institutions which have indicated that this is a very positive initiative for Canada.

With regard to the dispute resolving mechanism, the right hon. gentleman and other Members across the way have indicated that this trade arrangement would not be worth anything if it did not have a binding dispute resolving mechanism. That it has. That is a first in the international arena and is something which the hon. gentleman should endorse even though he does not like a free trade arrangement with the United States.

COST OF GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN—PROGRAMS TO ASSIST AFFECTED WORKERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am basing my questions on the testimony of Gordon Ritchie, our number two trade negotiator who reports to Ambassador Reisman and, through him, to the Prime Minister.

• (1420)

Mr. Ritchie said in the committee that the dispute settlement mechanism would not improve Canada's position in disputes with the United States, that it is not binding and continues to apply American law to Canadian exports.

The Government has spent $12 million in putting together an advertising campaign to promote this trade deal across the country. According to Mr. Ritchie's testimony, the Government has not yet had time to put together any adjustment programs to protect Canadians who will lose their jobs as a result of the trade agreement.

Is the Deputy Prime Minister aware that 60 per cent of Canadian women in manufacturing work in industries which will be hardest hit by the trade deal? These include women working in the textile industry, the electronics industry, the food processing industry, and the leather manufacturing industry.

Why can the Government find $12 million to put together an advertising program to promote the deal, yet not have the money to put in place currently any program to protect Canadian workers who will be affected by the deal?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have a range of programs now, including the Canadian Jobs Strategy, Job Futures—a range of programs to help individuals, as well as a range of programs in the Department of Industry and Science and Technology that help companies. That is also reinforced by the programs for western diversification and Atlantic opportunities. That clearly addresses the needs for adjustment that the Hon. Member is seeking.

We do not expect that there will be those needs for adjustment because we believe that in a growing economy we will be able to take advantage of these programs and, as the Deputy Prime Minister said, increase jobs in this country during the period in which we move into the free trade arrangement.

Let me add one other point to the second part of the Hon. Member's question relating to the impact on women. The study for the National Advisory Council on the Status of Women stated that the free trade agreement will be beneficial to women in Canada. The Economic Council also came to that conclusion. Again, the Leader of the Opposition is off base on this particular comment.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Again, I based my question on the testimony of Mr. Gordon Ritchie before the committee last night where he said that the Government is only now planning programs for adjustment for workers who are to lose their jobs. He said that last night. He also said that new programs would be necessary to cushion those workers who are going to lose their jobs.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—EMPLOYMENT—WOMEN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance or the Deputy Prime Minister.

Can the Minister comment on the statement made by his colleague the Minister of Employment and Immigration to the effect that half a million jobs will be lost as a direct result of the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement? Or perhaps the Minister might comment on the Maryland University study which indicates that 77 per cent of Canadians who will be laid off in the textile sector will be women? Should he want to consult his Cabinet colleague responsible for the status of women, how can one contradict a study specifically related to the textile industry?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is distorting what the Minister of Employment and Immigration said. Let me remind him again of the various programs that are in place now to help those people who lose their jobs today or in a free trade environment. Industrial adjustment programs are in place now. Community futures programs are in place now. Skills investment programs are in place now. Restructuring assistance is in place now. There is product improvement and plant modernization. All these programs are in place now.

However, the key to this is that in a growing economy, which is creating more jobs, this adjustment is much easier to accommodate and will certainly be far less than the adjustment that is taking place in the country today.

Again, I draw the attention of the Leader of the Opposition to the Economic Council report which points out that yearly some 4.5 million people change their jobs from one company to another. We have a growing economy that has created 959,000 jobs in the last three years. Because we have a growing economy we are able to accommodate this adjustment. What we expect in the free trade agreement will be far, far less than that which is happening right now.

• (1425)

COMMENTS MADE BY TRADE AMBASSADOR

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. There is a report in today's news that Bruce Phillips, Director of Communications in the Prime Minister's Office, has now said the Prime Minister will not seek a retraction from Ambassador Reisman of the maladroit and unfortunate remarks he made last week.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister said he would report to the House on that matter. We now have a comment from his Director of Communications.

Considering the transcript is very clear that Mr. Reisman said that those who oppose the free trade deal are using the big lie techniques that were used in Nazi Germany, why is it that the Prime Minister and his Government are condoning those kinds of remarks? Does he not believe that that will now give licence to other spokespersons of the Government to continue to use that kind of insulting language that all Canadians find reprehensible?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that is no. I am surprised the Hon. Member would raise this matter when it is a question of privilege raised by Members of this House which has not yet been disposed of at this particular time.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would simply say to the Deputy Prime Minister that it is not I who raised it. It was a spokesperson for the Prime Minister's Office who has now issued a statement on behalf of the Prime Minister saying they would not issue a retraction. We believe this is a matter before the House. We expect the House to be treated with dignity and respect. Ambassador Reisman did not even bother to show up at the committee last night to issue any kind of apology or show any example.

We want to know why the Government is treating this Parliament with disdain. Why is it condoning these kinds of remarks? Why is it giving licence for this kind of low-belly response and debate it is sponsoring on the free trade issue?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister and the Government of Canada are not treating the House with disdain. I need only remind the hon. gentleman that when the Auto Pact arrangement was put in place the Government of the day, which was a Liberal Government, chose to exclude the House of Commons—

An Hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Mazankowski: —any committee debate, any provincial involvement or any public involvement.

Mr. Axworthy: Did I ask about the Auto Pact?

Mr. Mazankowski: I find it rather strange today—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): What about the Nazis?

Mr. Mazankowski: —that the Hon. Member is trying to deal with something which is currently before the Speaker for adjudication. But if the Hon. Member wants to bring forth quotations, perhaps he might be interested in this remark that occurred in the committee, since we are allowing committee proceedings to be debated on the floor of the House—

Mr. Gauthier: No.

Mr. Mazankowski: —which is somewhat irregular. Mr. Reisman said this:

> I want to say that I have the utmost respect for every Member present in this room who I believe is approaching their task and their responsibility in a conscientious and sound manner. I intend to answer questions in response to their queries in that spirit. That is the way I am going to conduct myself at this meeting.

ECONOMIC COUNCIL'S STUDY—CREATION OF JOBS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, all I would say to Mr. Reisman is you don't show respect for Members of Parliament by comparing them to Nazis. That is the point.

I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister another question. It has been said by the Prime Minister and the Minister for International Trade a number of times that this trade deal the Government is negotiating with the United States will lead to the creation of some 350,000 jobs. They base this on the Economic Council of Canada study. The Minister of Finance just a few minutes ago referred to the same study.

Considering Mr. Ritchie in committee yesterday explicitly acknowledged that the Economic Council model is totally inapplicable to the agreement that has been entered into—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Order.

Mr. Broadbent: —will the Minister tell us where they get this 350,000 figure? Is it based on studies or is it just another example of Government propaganda?

• (1430)

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I was at the committee hearings last night, and the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party was not there. I think that he is quoting a little out of context.

Let me say that the best evidence that was presented to the Government, not only by the Economic Council of Canada but by the C.D. Howe Institute, by the Royal Commission on the Economy of Canada led by Donald Macdonald, by the Fraser Institute, and all the legitimate studies that were done looking into the free trade issue, all stated that there will be net increases in jobs in this country. There is no question about that.

What Mr. Ritchie stated last night was that now the deal has been struck there will be further studies which will show conclusive evidence that this is a positive job-creation vehicle for Canada.

REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF GOVERNMENT STUDIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I am informed—

Mr. Shields: By Bob White.

Mr. Broadbent: —and the Hon. Member replying did not deny this—that Mr. Ritchie acknowledged in two key assumptions made by the Economic Council that it is totally inapplicable to use that as a model for job forecasting. That is what he pointed out. The Prime Minister and the Minister for International Trade have been using that model.

Since Mr. Ritchie also stated that not a single study has been done yet on the basis of this agreement, will the Government produce those studies before it signs a final agreement so the people of Canada will know what we are getting into?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member that this Government used the International Trade Advisory Committee, which was made up of Canadians from all walks of life; it used 15 sectoral advisory committees, which were made up of some 500 Canadians from coast to coast representing all areas of the economy. It was their recommendations, support, and advice that drove our trade negotiation team. They are very happy with the result of the trade negotiations. They are telling us that it will be positive for the economy, positive for their sectors in the economy, and it will create jobs—

Mr. Riis: Based on what evidence?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Where is the hard data?

Mr. McDermid: —and we take their advice over the Hon. Member's, that's for sure.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT GUARANTEES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, both the Government of the Province of Quebec and the Government of Ontario carried out studies in the past and their findings with respect to new job creation were negative, not positive at all.

My question to the Minister is simple: Will the Government guarantee that the committee will have the studies made by the federal Government concerning this agreement before a decision is made? Yes or no?

[English]

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact I spoke with a former Minister of Industry in Ontario today regarding the study referred to by the Hon. Member. He stated that they were not jobs that were going to be lost, but that they were sensitive jobs in the economy. I can tell the Hon. Member that that study was done two years ago. Let him do a study now—

Mr. Broadbent: You do one and give us the study.

Mr. McDermid: —and I think he will find that it will be very positive for this country.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PRODUCTIVITY BONUSES FOR SENIOR MANAGERS—CASH BONUSES FOR CROWN CORPORATION HEADS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, with the acceptance by the Government of the Burns report last week, some 4,400 managers in the Public Service now qualify for so-called productivity bonuses over and above their present salaries, and each person is being asked to judge the manager below them to see if they qualify for a cash bonus.

The biggest cash bonuses are being awarded by this Cabinet to the heads of our Crown corporations, 10 per cent, 15 per cent, 25 per cent over and above their present salary, as Christmas presents.

I ask the President of the Treasury Board and Deputy Prime Minister, does this not really mean, for example, that Mr. Donald Lander, the head of Canada Post, will be rewarded with a $51,000 cash bonus as a Christmas present for closing rural post offices right across the country? And Mr. Ron Lawless, the head of Canadian National, will be given a $81,250 cash bonus as a Christmas present for closing down rail lines across the nation. Are not those so-called productivity bonuses just pay-offs for lay-offs?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Advisory Group on Executive Compensation was established by the previous Government in 1968, and it has provided a guide and recommendations to the Government of Canada to provide salary ranges—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): The lay-offs and the closings are now.

Mr. Mazankowski: —for the executive level of the Public Service, as well as Crown corporations.

I think the Hon. Member knows that the principle used is that the Public Service should not be a salary leader, but rather a salary follower. It was in that context that the adjusted ranges were proposed.

I am not sure where the Hon. Member got his figures. My understanding is that for the two individuals he mentioned in particular, the maximum salary levels have not changed in the recommendations in the Burns report.

APPROVAL OF SALARY INCREASES

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, what the Government forgets is that while the shareholders in the private sector demand first and foremost profit, the shareholders in the public sector, that is, the people of Canada, demand first and foremost service. That is the difference.

The Government has to answer now how a cabinet Minister can ever again be at arm's length with Crown corporations—that great principle of arm's length. How can the Minister of Transport be at arm's length with the President of CN when the President of CN could be up for an $81,250 cash bonus to be approved by Cabinet?

The President of CN will not be at arm's length from the Minister of Transport. He will have his arms around him, if he can manage it, with a back-scratcher in one hand—scratch for cash—and his other hand in the Minister's pocket.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I find it rather surprising that the Hon. Member would now seize upon the opportunity to take exception to the system, because it has been in place for quite a number of years. What was good for the Liberal administration does not seem to be good for this administration.

The fact of the matter is that the board of directors do make recommendations for any increases in the salary levels of their executives. Then it is processed through Order in Council.

Hon. Members opposite are very quick to seize upon some of the horror stories so-called in the Auditor General's report. I would invite the Hon. Member to read Section 17 of the Auditor General's Report where he talks about the delays and the difficulties with regard to salary inversion and compression, and the need for ensuring that the executive level have an appropriate compensation as compared to their subordinates. Perhaps the Hon. Member might then have a more sympathetic point of view.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—STUDIES ON POSSIBLE JOB CREATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. He will recognize that all of the studies that have been referred to so far today were studies conducted on the concept of a free trade deal. Now we have before us a Mulroney-Reagan trade deal which is quite different.

The Deputy Prime Minister has indicated that the Government has studies that clearly indicate there will be a significant increase in jobs. Were those studies done based on the present trade deal that we have before us today? If so, will he table those? If not, will he explain why the Government is taking this decision without doing any in-house study in terms of the impact on jobs in Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Starting with the Macdonald Royal Commission, which spent in excess of $20 million in public funds, it went out and criss-crossed the country and talked to ordinary Canadians—

Mr. Broadbent: It didn't have anything to do with this deal.

Mr. Mazankowski: —to businesses, to unions, to a broadly based cross-section of the Canadian people. It came forth with some very firm recommendations. On many occasions Canadians accuse Governments of not dealing with Royal Commissions in an effective way. The clear recommendation was there.

Every study that has been undertaken by groups, independent of government, have indicated that the free trade arrangement is going to create jobs, and create a lot of jobs—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): In the United States.

Mr. Mazankowski: —and improve regional equity in this country. That is something that I think every individual would want to applaud.

• (1440)

The New Democratic Party cannot have it both ways. I ask the New Democrats "what is your option?" That is what I ask them. When we started on our economic renewal program the NDP were quoted as saying that our spending cuts would kill 100,000 jobs. New Democrats have consistently said there would be job losses following every economic initiative that we have taken. They were wrong then, and they are wrong today.

REQUEST FOR POSTPONEMENT OF DEADLINE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the difference is that we are interested in making a decision based on facts, facts before us and a deal before us, and we do not have that deal before us today.

So far all the Deputy Prime Minister has discussed are studies done on the theory of free trade. We are talking about a specific deal the details of which are still not before us.

Since this is, by his own admission, the biggest trade deal in Canadian history, would the Minister not agree that it would be appropriate to approach the Americans to put off that January 2 deadline so that the Government can carry out specific studies and so we will understand clearly what the impact of this new deal is on jobs in Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think that Canadians would be interested in knowing what kinds of studies the NDP engaged in when the Leader of the NDP said on November 9, 1984, after the Minister of Finance brought in his Economic Statement, that that would cost 100,000 jobs. The Member for Hamilton Mountain said 100,000 or 200,000 jobs would be lost. The Member from Vancouver East said 150,000 jobs would be lost as a result of the May Budget. The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition said 125,000 jobs would be lost. Where were their studies, Mr. Speaker? It is now time to start testing the credibility—

Mr. Riis: You are the Government.

Mr. Broadbent: Let's have a debate in Alberta.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF JOB-CREATION STUDIES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of International Trade my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. He will know that when the Minister of International Trade was travelling in Atlantic Canada she surpassed most of her colleagues by insulting members of the United Church, and then went on to tell the people of Atlantic Canada that thousands of new jobs would be created as a result of consummating this agreement with the United States.

In view of the very serious statement made by the deputy negotiator, Gordon Ritchie, last night that there are not studies available to support that contention, why should the people of Atlantic Canada believe the Government when there are no studies whatever to support the comments? The fact is that people in Atlantic Canada will suffer greatly as a result of consummating this free trade agreement. Why does he not produce those reports?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we are taking our information from the people of eastern Canada—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: —who are advising the Government, who work there, who provide the jobs, who have the industries and who say that this deal will be good for them. Certainly we are taking their advice. Those are the people of eastern Canada. The Hon. Member says the deal will be bad for eastern Canada. Where is he getting his reports from?

Mr. McKenzie: Shirley Carr.

Mr. Axworthy: You negotiated the deal.

EFFECT OF AGREEMENT ON ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. In view of the fact that you refused to answer specific questions—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Dingwall: —regarding government policy, let me ask him are we in Atlantic Canada, are the fishermen in Atlantic Canada, to depend upon the voices at National Sea—which, by the way, is owned 20 per cent by the Government of Canada—who say that free trade is somehow good for Atlantic Canada, when policies supporting inshore fishermen are due for countervail by the United States? Why don't you come clean and tell us the specifics in the matter?

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is fully cognizant of the fact that in Question Period a Member rising to put a question wants to put it with as much vigour as possible. It is putting the Chair in difficulty when Members break the rules. The Chair will then, of course, have to interrupt the Hon. Member. I would ask the Hon. Member to keep in mind that there are rules in this place. The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member would have difficulty digesting good news about the free trade arrangement, but a well known economist, the chief economist for the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council— which Council, incidentally, is funded by the Atlantic Provinces—Elizabeth Beale, said in referring to the free trade arrangement that "it won't eradicate our economic problems but it is the best opportunity we have. You can tinker with regional development programs but in the long range we need basic economic changes. The status quo has not been good to us."

Mr. Broadbent: That is true.

Mr. Mazankowski: That very clearly summarizes a very positive endorsement of what we have been trying to do.

While we are challenging each other on figures, may I ask the Hon. Member what studies he had when he, his Leader, and the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East said in May, 1985, that the Minister of Finance's Budget would cause the loss of 150,000 jobs, or the Member for Hamilton East who said it would cause the loss of 100,000 to 125,000 jobs?

Mr. Riis: This is answer period now.

Mr. Mazankowski: We know that they were wrong then, and they are wrong today.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—REPORTED ATTACK AGAINST ANGOLA

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Today it is reported that South Africa has launched another, this time quite heavy, attack into Angola. What will be the Canadian response to this situation in which South Africa, in alliance with UNITA, uses Namibia, which should by now have been freed and is therefore illegally occupied, to launch attacks continually on a sovereign nation, one of the front line states that presumably we are trying to support through SACTU?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, while taking nothing at all away from the gravity of the question that was raised by the Hon. Member, I have to say that we have no absolute corroboration of the rumours. However, on the basis of what we have heard, we are very troubled that this action has been taken.

We have condemned and continue to condemn the aggression of South Africa with respect to Angola. We believe that the occupation of Namibia, as the Hon. Member knows, is illegal. We believe that that question should be resolved in accordance with the Security Council resolution with which the Hon. Member is well acquainted.

It is part of a pattern of violence in South Africa that will continue so long as the apartheid system remains in place.

UNITED STATES ROLE

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, there is one matter that has been well corroborated, namely, the involvement of the United States in arming southern African style Contras who are in alliance with the South African regime. When will the Canadian Government protest this complicity of the United States in undermining the Angola regime?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, again without commenting upon some of the assumptions in the question, I think the Hon. Member would agree with two things. One, there has been some movement away from the thesis of constructive engagement in the United States. That is a welcome development, a development of which evidence was given in the speech made in New York a month ago by Secretary of State Shultz.

• (1450)

Second, if we are going to have the kind of impact we want to have as a result of economic and other sanctions against the South African Government, we will require the active participation of American authorities. The question has to be raised, are we more likely to achieve that kind of co-operation on the part of American authorities by taking the kind of action recommended by the Hon. Member, which, in my judgment, would have no constructive impact?

TAX REFORM

POSSIBILITY OF TAX CREDIT OF $1,000 FOR FAMILIES WITH DEPENDENT CHILDREN OVER 18 YEARS OF AGE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday, the Conseil des affaires sociales et de la famille, a Quebec advisory agency, submitted its brief on tax reform to the Minister of Finance. That council indicates that the proposed tax reform of the Conservative Government is a real attack on families and a substantial regressive step for the Canadian society in terms of equity. rIn addition, the council deplores the fact that the Conservative Government has eliminated the $1,000 exemption for dependent children over 18 years of age with no compensation whatsoever. My question to the Minister, and thousands of Canadian families are also asking it, is the following: Is the Minister prepared to change his reform proposals and grant families with dependent children over 18 years of age a tax credit equivalent to the $1,000 exemption which he eliminated, so that the Canadian families affected get at least some compensation from the Government?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member must understand when he puts that question that eight out of 10 Canadians will be better off as a result of tax reform and that, by changing exemptions to credits, we are able to help those people in lower income brackets. If he looks at the impact tables I set out with the tax reform work, he will see that married people do better out of tax reform than singles, so that I think we have addressed the importance of tax reform for families and for married people.

Having said that, as the Hon. Member knows I am awaiting the report of the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs Committee which is studying the tax reform proposals. When I have received its report, I will be better able to comment.

[Translation]

POSSIBILITY OF PROGRESSIVE TAX CREDIT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Minister of Finance has not listened to those groups of Canadians, which clearly demonstrates, following a comprehensive study of the report on tax system as it applies to families—as you know that study clearly shows that those families with many children are penalized compared with single persons. Also, those groups would like a tax credit of $65 per child. Does the Minister not believe it would be better to grant a progressive child tax credit which would increase with the number of children in a family, and to give back that refundable tax credit to low income families?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I repeat what I said in my earlier reply to the Hon. Member. Eight out of 10 people, 80 per cent of Canadians, will be better off as a result of tax reform. I believe the social groups to which he is referring will find that they are all, by and large, better off as a result of tax reform with the exception of those who are making pretty full use of tax preferences. Those tax preferences, as he knows, are being cut back, and I think he would support them being cut back, but the bottom line is that the large majority of Canadians are better off as a result of tax reform.

[Translation]

SOCIAL BENEFITS FOR FAMILIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance who should know that a tax reform is no reform at all when it goes against the family's interests. What is the response of this Government to the Conseil des affaires sociales et de la famille regarding the erosion of family benefits? Will the Minister assure the House that those social benefits will not be further eroded?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that is essentially the same question as those asked by previous questioners. I would point out to the Hon. Member that we have, during the life of this Government, increased the child tax credit and introduced and increased, as a result of tax reform, the refundable sales tax credit. These are beneficial to families and to people with children, and these are things that are very indicative of the directions we are going in tax reform and will continue to go in as we move into the second phase of tax reform.

Ms. McDonald: Will the Minister not admit that while there have been increases in some measures, there have been decreases in others, and when we add it all up the result is negative?

[Translation]

ASSISTANCE FOR FAMILIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): In principle, does the Government recognize that families need more assistance rather than a net reduction of the social benefits they enjoy?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not have the specific numbers with me here today, but I think if the Hon. Member will check the impact tables that are in the tax reform documents, she will find that people with children benefit more out of tax reform than single people. We obviously have a difference in points of view here, but I will abide by the facts set out in the tax reform proposal.

CRIMINAL CODE

GUN CONTROL—AMENDMENT OF PROVISIONS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. The Minister is aware that very recently the State of Florida amended its gun control legislation, dramatically loosening its gun control laws. I am sure he will recall as well that one year ago, in fact on October 14, 1986, in response to a question I put in the House, the Hon. Minister advised the House that he was reviewing our own gun control legislation and expected to have recommendations very shortly. How soon is shortly? Can the Minister assure the House that his recommendations will not follow the example set by the State of Florida?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I want at the outset to assure the Hon. Member that we in this country do not propose to emulate the law change that took place in the State of Florida which clearly has the loosest gun law in the civilized world, as far as I can make out.

I think the people of Canada want a balanced, effective set of gun control laws. They want laws that in fact will meet their expectations with respect to public safety yet will allow for the legitimate use of rifles and guns for sporting and other legitimate purposes. Accordingly, I do not propose to make any very substantial change in the direction of the present gun laws.

In fact, as I indicated to the Hon. Member last year, I am reviewing the laws in order to clarify situations which were not contemplated when the Bill was originally passed some 10 years ago. "Soon" means before too long.

GRANT MADE TO EDMONTON AMUSEMENT PARK PROJECT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and is about the Government's contribution to Fantasyland in the West Edmonton Mall. Can the Minister confirm that the Government has failed to comply with the Industrial and Regional Development Act which has required, since November, 1984, that no contribution can be made to any project in the service sector unless a specific Order in Council is passed declaring that the project is eligible under the Act?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question in the House quite fully. There was a "Late Show" question on it last night. I invite the Hon. Member to read the answer.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I read the answer.

ORDER IN COUNCIL QUERY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): If the Minister feels the law was complied with, I would like him to tell the House when the Order in Council was passed and when it was Gazetted because I have found no record of it at all in the Gazette. I would ask him, if in fact it has not been properly passed and Gazetted, will he recognize that that contribution was a loan, and will he agree to undertake to get that contribution paid back?

• (1500)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the same answer.

THE CENSUS

ALLEGED RELEASE OF CONFIDENTIAL MEDICAL INFORMATION

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the census. Will the Minister order an RCMP inquiry into allegations that his departmental staff passed confidential medical information about census respondents to drug company sales representatives? Will he direct the RCMP to investigate in particular the complaints of the Young family of Powell River, British Columbia?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, of course we have been made aware of the problem raised by my colleague and, according to the information we have, I must tell my colleague that all standard procedures were followed in this case.

[English]

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT OF CENSUS FORMS—RIGHT TO REFUSE IN-DEPTH INTERVIEWS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister guarantee this House that Canadian families who do not wish to participate in in-depth interviews concerning personal medical problems will not be exposed to continuous harassment in violation of their basic rights? Will he guarantee that the census forms will be amended so that respondents can exercise their right to refuse such interviews and that right will be respected by census employees?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat the answer I gave my colleague: all standard procedures have been followed. I did respond to the allegations brought to my attention. Should my colleague have additional allegations or claims to make, I will be pleased to entertain them and act accordingly, Mr. Speaker. But until I get proof to the contrary I hope the credibility of the Department and the census or those who are responsible for these procedures will be maintained in all fairness.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: There will be two more questions, by the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe, followed by the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East. That will close off Question Period.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—COMMENTS MADE BY TRADE AMBASSADOR

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns the statement today in The Toronto Star by Bruce Phillips, the Prime Minister's spokesman, that indeed the Prime Minister has reviewed the transcript of comments attributed to Ambassador Reisman in which he on at least two occasions compared some critics of free trade, presumably both in and outside this House, to the Nazi propaganda machine run by Joseph Goebbels. The Minister knows that Members of the House and, I suspect, Canadians no matter which side of the debate they are on, reject that kind of language and insult as a legitimate defence for the Government or any of its official spokesmen.

Does this statement by Mr. Bruce Phillips represent the end of the Prime Minister's commitment to check the record and report back to the House, or can we expect to hear from him when he is back here again?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, that is a repeat of an earlier question and I have already provided an answer.

Mr. Speaker: A very short supplementary because the question has been asked.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, Canadians want to know whether or not it is the official position of the Government that it is acceptable for a Canadian Ambassador to describe Canadians concerned about free trade as Nazis? Is that the position, yes or no? If it is, it is not acceptable in a civilized society.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, that accusation, as he phrased it, was never made.

When we look at the question of public debate on the trade agreement it is important to come back to the point made earlier by the Deputy Prime Minister. When the Liberal Party brought forward the Auto Pact agreement they refused a Conservative request to have the matter referred to a committee of this House. There was not one word of testimony. There was not one witness heard. There was not one moment when an examination such as has been proceeding under this Government was allowed by that Government. The public was shut out. The provinces were shut out. Parliament was shut out.

MARINE SAFETY

SAFETY CONDITIONS ON FISHING VESSELS—TASK FORCE REPORT

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. While we know the majority of fishermen operate within safety standards and have operated for years without any problems, there is serious concern regarding safety on fishing vessels. Can the Minister tell us what action his Department is planning in order to improve safety on fishing vessels and when such action might be implemented?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is good to hear a serious and responsible question for a change. Some months ago I appointed a task force from the Coast Guard to review the issue of safety in the fishing industry. That group travelled widely throughout Canada and on both coasts. They have now made a report to me with 41 recommendations. The report will be released today. The recommendations will be followed up and there will be a working group that will see that they are implemented. This has been done with the co-operation of the Department of Fisheries.

I should note that the conclusion is that human error is responsible for many of the accidents in the fishing industry, and that the main action recommended is education and a greater communication of information, because it is the skippers and owners of these vessels who have to take the greatest responsibility with respect to perils at sea.

I am also happy to say that statistics show—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Crosbie: —that the record in Canada is better than that in the U.S., Norway, and some other maritime countries.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Finish it in caucus, John.

Mr. Crosbie: It is too bad that the Liberal Opposition is not interested in anything but vituperation and contrived hysteria.

PRIVILEGE

ELECTION OF CHAIRMAN TO LABOUR, EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION COMMITTEE—MEMBER FOR LASALLE—MOTION FOR REFERENCE TO ELECTIONS, PRIVILEGES AND PROCEDURE COMMITTEE

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Orders, I gave you notice of my intention to rise on a matter of privilege and to introduce a motion of referral to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I could proceed immediately.

The House will surely know that the election of the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration was quite an exciting and even very noisy event on Wednesday, October 7, 1987, around 3:30 p.m. The officers to be elected were the chairman and vice-chairman of the committee. The minutes and proceedings are to be found in Issue No. 42 of the Minutes of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, page 4212, where the qualifications of the nominees, namely myself, the Hon. Member for Laprairie (Mr. Jourdenais), and the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier), were discussed.

During the sitting, a member of the Committee asked Mr. Lanthier whether he was parliamentary secretary. Another Member, Mr. John Oostrom, took his defense, stating—excuse me, the Member who sponsored Mr. Lanthier's nomination, in reply to Mr. Warren Allmand, had this to say: To my knowledge, Mr. Lanthier is no longer a parliamentary secretary. Another Member, Mr. Rodriguez, asked him: Is Mr. Lanthier parliamentary secretary at this point or not? Mr. Lanthier answered: I am not, at least I do not think I am. Mr. Rodriguez: You do not think your are, well are you or are you not? Mr. Lanthier said: I am no longer, at least I do not think so. I said goodbye yesterday to the Minister and the Deputy Minister of Public Works. Please note that this happened on October 7, 1987.

Now, at the end of last week, the Government tabled the Public Accounts of Canada. I examined them in detail on Friday, especially Volume II, and the additional information and analyses on page 1209 of the Public Accounts, 1986-87, where the salaries of parliamentary secretaries to Ministers are listed, and there I saw the entry: Lanthier, C—which means Claude—Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works—October 15, 1986, to October 16, 1987, with a $9,450 salary.

Mr. Speaker, I was taken aback because I remembered vividly the answers given by Mr. Lanthier on October 7.

Mr. Speaker, ever since I was elected to the House of Commons, I have always assumed with humility my role as a Member of this House and I have a great deal of respect for this institution. Since last Friday, I have made inquiries and even went to the Privy Council Office where Mr. Chassé confirmed that the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) had not resigned as a Parliamentary Secretary and that he still held that job on October 14. All other Parliamentary Secretaries were appointed on October 14, with their appointment effective on the 15th. Therefore, Mr. Lanthier was still a Parliamentary Secretary and he was still paid accordingly.

I had consultations with parliamentarians and experts in different Parliaments and even in the House of Commons of the United Kingdom. I quote a committee chairman, who should be, like the Speaker of the House, above all suspicion, partisanship, and conflicts of interest and who should be straightforward.

Mr. Speaker, I hasten to add that I raise this issue which is so essential for the proper functioning of the House as a good parliamentarian who seeks to uphold the respectability of this House, of its members and Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, this is probably the first time such a question of privilege is raised by a Member on the Government side about one of his colleagues in the same Party. As recently as last week, all those present in the House heard the Prime Minister confirm the importance of the McGrath reform.

On October 7, when the election was held, the presence of shock troops, of groups that have been called "goons" could be noticed. Even the assistant Whip for the Government, the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) was there to lead the Government troops with his advisers. It is impossible to plead ignorance or forgetfulness. The Hon. Member for LaSalle is a well-known professional engineer. Precision and accuracy are part of his psychology. He made a false statement and the election is therefore invalid. Members of the Committee and of the House have been misled. The Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) should resign immediately as chairman of the Committee. I urged him to do so honourably in a letter I wrote to him today, and I quote:

> Dear Mr. Lanthier,
> In the speech you made in support of your candidacy as Chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This letter does not need to be read. The Chair has received the complaint of the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member could perhaps take a few minutes to conclude his remarks.

Mr. Jourdenais: Mr. Speaker, I want to read the letter advising him to resign—

> —and Immigration. Twice you hid the truth concerning your status of Parliamentary Secretary. I checked your statements and I am convinced that you misled the committee and the House. If you respect your honour as a Member and the honour of this House—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am very sorry, the letter may be very interesting but it is a serious attack against an Hon. Member. I think that for the reasons I have just indicated it is not necessary for me to hear more of the letter. Perhaps the Hon. Member might give it to me once he has completed his remarks.

Mr. Jourdenais: Mr. Speaker, would you allow me to read certain citations from Beauchesne's?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has asked whether he may read certain citations from Beauchesne's. Of course, his argument is a procedural argument. Please.

Mr. Jourdenais: So here is Beauchesne's citation 231, page 77:

Personal Interest

231. (1) The personal interest of a Member in a subject before the House must be a direct pecuniary interest, and separately belonging to the persons whose votes were questioned, not in common with the rest of Her Majesty's subjects, or on a matter of state policy.

(2) Disallowance of a vote, on the score of personal interest, is restricted to cases of pecuniary interest and has not been extended to those occasions when the dictates of self respect, and of respect due to the House, might demand that a Member should refrain from taking part in a division.

Citation 232 reads as follows:

232. (1) A member's right to vote on a question in which he is personnaly interested is one of those matters that must be decided by the House and not by the Speaker.

(5) The principle of the rule which disqualifies an interested Member from voting must always have been intended to apply as well to committees as to the House itself.

Mr. Speaker, I have several citations to read, but still I will make my point. I believe a person seeking to obtain a position in the House or in committee must be frank and honest. And in this case we saw a person who came in, was pushed, coming from I do not know where, but who indicated three times in a row that he was not chairman. It is not because he is Parliamentary Secretary that he has or does not have the right to become chairman. I am told it is not the tradition. But what concerns me most is that he resorted to an argument which is not really the right argument. Had he told us he was Parliamentary Secretary the tradition would probably have been mentioned and he would not be the chairman.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move the following motion: That the question of the behaviour of the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) be referred to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure, and in the meantime I would ask you to invite the Hon. Member for LaSalle to relinquish the chairmanship.

As for me, Mr. Speaker, I intend to move a motion of non-confidence at the next committee meeting and recommend that a new election be held.

[English]

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make two or three points, if I may. As part of parliamentary reform the Opposition requested, and the Government agreed, that the Parliamentary Secretary reporting to the Minister, the Estimates of whose ministry were being reviewed by a committee, should not sit on that committee. It is my understanding that at the time about which my hon. friend complained the Parliamentary Secretary was not the Parliamentary Secretary to that particular Minister.

In any event, I am advised that the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) did resign in writing, which resignation was in fact accepted in writing prior to the date of the election to which the Hon. Member refers. That is obviously something we can check and we will be pleased to provide Your Honour with that information so that it can form part of your judgment.

I suggest that under those circumstances you may wish to stay the matter until we can provide you with that evidence.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to address the question of privilege raised by my colleague, the Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais). This is yet another indication of what has gone wrong with the immigration committee. It is evident that parliamentary reform lives only in theory and not in practice.

We experienced the John Quigley and Georges Grossmann affairs. We saw the chairmanship questioned. In addition, there was a motion put forward by government Members at the committee that the research director should be fired.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) has a very great interest in this committee which is respected in this place, and certainly by the Chair. However, I must once again remind Hon. Members that the task of the Speaker is to listen to the exact procedural point as that is what I have to resolve. I think I understand the exact procedural point which the Hon. Member has brought forward.

The Hon. Member for York West might address that, keeping in mind that the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) has indicated that he has some information which might be of vital interest to the House, although it is not yet in front of us.

• (1520)

I would ask the Hon. Member for York West to continue but to stay off the other matters, some of which are before me for consideration, as the Hon. Member knows.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I was attempting to place before the House and Your Honour the perspective of the last meeting that took place on October 7. It was a meeting that was somewhat difficult because of these other events.

When we came to the election of the chairperson for that committee, we had the candidacy of the Member for LaSalle(Mr. Lanthier), a Member who had never attended one meeting of the immigration committee and had never put forward his agenda for the committee.

When there is an allegation, on top of those variables, that the Member for LaSalle also misled the committee in terms of his office of Parliamentary Secretary, it becomes very serious indeed. If it is found to be true that on October 7 the Member for LaSalle said quite clearly two or three times to members of that committee that he was no longer Parliamentary Secretary yet received funds as a Parliamentary Secretary until October 14, then he is taking unfair advantage of members of that committee who had been frustrated, angered and disappointed with the shenanigans that had taken place on that committee—

Point of Order—Mr. Mazankowski

If Your Honour finds that the Member of Parliament for LaSalle was a Parliamentary Secretary as of October 7 and beyond, I hope that the Member for LaSalle would come forward and resign his chairmanship, because he has abused the confidence of Members. If he did not enjoy the confidence of my support, he surely will not have it now if, in fact, he was a Parliamentary Secretary as of October 7.

In conclusion, I suggest that if the Member for LaSalle was Parliamentary Secretary he does not deserve the confidence of the committee and surely not of this House. He should do the honourable thing and resign and try to regain integrity and the confidence and respect of the committee.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) is rising. I ask him to keep strictly to the point. The Chair cannot settle all of the questions of argument that take place in a committee which may or may not concern matters that ought to be discussed here or, if they are, perhaps at some other occasion.

The point that the Chair must consider, because I know the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt realizes it full well, is strictly the one that the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) has raised. I would ask him to stick to it. Obviously there are disagreements within that committee. Quite frankly, right now I do not want to hear about them. I already have some of them before me for consideration.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I was extremely concerned at that particular meeting. First, I was aware of the fact that the Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier), who is now Chairman, had been a Parliamentary Secretary. That is why I wanted to clarify in committee exactly what was his status.

I will not go into the background of what we knew was taking place in that committee when certain Members were showing up to do a specific job in the committee.

I put the question to Mr. Lanthier, as appears at page 42:16 of the committee hearings on October 7. I asked: "Is Mr. Lanthier a parliamentary secretary at this time or is he not?" The Hon. Member for LaSalle replied: "No longer, I do not think". I asked: "You do not think so? Well, are you or are you not?". The Hon. Member for LaSalle replied: "No longer. I do not think".

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair has the point that is being raised. The Chair is in some difficulty because I have just been handed a letter dated October 7—

[Translation]

—October 7, 1987, and addressed to the Right Hon. Brian Mulroney, P.C., M.P., Prime Minister of Canada.

I will read the letter:

"Mr. Prime Minister:

I hereby advise you of my resignation as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works. This resignation is effective today, Wednesday, October 7, 1987.

Sincerely yours,"

[English]

It appears to have been signed by the Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier).

Some Hon. Members are asking questions. As I say, I only have the letter.

I think it would be appropriate if the House heard from the Hon. Member for LaSalle, and this is not the place to hold a trial, or what may certainly seem to some to be a trial.

I think there are certain facts which the Chair must have. I think this letter clearly makes it incumbent upon the Chair to adjourn the matter until I can hear from the Hon. Member for LaSalle. I would ask Hon. Members to co-operate with that.

Mr. Mazankowski: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I certainly want to hear the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), but I have a question of privilege from the Hon. Member for the Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin). If the point of order is short, I might ask the Member for the Yukon for the courtesy to wait for a minute or two.

Ms. McLaughlin: Agreed.

POINT OF ORDER

FUND-RAISING LETTER FROM LEADER OF NDP

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it will be a short point of order. Today I received a letter from the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), on behalf of the New Democratic Party, asking me for money.

An Hon. Member: What?

Mr. Mazankowski: For money to support the efforts of the NDP in spreading fear and hysteria among the Canadian people.

Mr. Gauthier: How much are you giving, Don?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, it is really taking a lot for granted. To suggest that I could support that group over there is really the height of—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) said that it would be a short point of order, and indeed it is. If it is any comfort to Hon. Members, I might advise the House that the Chair received one, too.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, my point is simply this: There is enclosed in the envelope a statement saying: "You can afford to be generous". That is somewhat offensive because, quite frankly, I have difficulty supporting my own Party, let alone supporting the NDP. That is really taking a lot for granted and being presumptuous.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) has the floor.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I just want to explain why the Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) received the letter. If you check the results of the last provincial election in Alberta, Vegreville went massively for the Party of light and goodness, the New Democratic Party, with a tremendous MLA, Derek Fox. This is the Minister's last chance to get re-elected, by crossing the floor. He is a good red Tory and he has a chance to do it.

Mr. Speaker: I suppose that in purely procedural terms there may be those who think that we ought to proceed to something else. However, I cannot let the opportunity go by without hearing what my long-time colleague and friend, the Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly), may have to contribute.

PRIVILEGE

ELECTION OF CHAIRMAN TO LABOUR, EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION COMMITTEE—MEMBER FOR LASALLE—MOTION FOR REFERENCE TO ELECTIONS, PRIVILEGES AND PROCEDURE COMMITTEE

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I was somewhat disappointed that the issue raised by the Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) was overrun as quickly as it was.

• (1530)

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry. It was not overrun and I did not mean to overrun it quickly. I said that in view of the fact that I have that letter, I think before we proceed any further we ought to hear from the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier). In other words, it is only adjourned. I do not want to carry on with it now.

Mr. Riis: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly), in spite of what I said, is still seeking the floor. I will hear him in case I have not fully appreciated what he is saying.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for La Prairie indicated that the Parliamentary Secretary and Chairman of that committee had received payment to October 14, and it is in the records.

Second, if I might just have one minute—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Order.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the Hon. Member when the matter comes back to the Chamber. That is what I intended. I have not given any indication that I would not hear Members further. However, in view of the comments that have been made, which I think are serious, and in view of calls for resignations and other things, I felt that given the fact there is now a letter which, I think, is of intense importance—there may be questions of when it was sent or when it was received—I have asked Hon. Members to co-operate in adjourning the discussion until we can come back to it again with the Hon. Member for LaSalle here. At that time I certainly will hear the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River.

I apologize to the Hon. Member if he thought he was in any way being removed from having the right to comment on the matter.

Mr. Tobin: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: We are now infringing on the Hon. Member for Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin) who has a question of privilege. I think that does take precedence. Perhaps it might be more convenient to listen to the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) who is indicating to me, and I accept it at face value, that it will be a very short intervention.

Mr. Tobin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the Speaker could advise us today, with the greatest of respect for the Speaker's ruling and the wisdom of the Chair which he has exhibited consistently, when we could expect some decision with respect to the comments attributed to Ambassador Reisman and whether or not they affect the privileges of Members?

Mr. Speaker: I will do everything I can to bring it in front of the House soon, and as the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) said in Question Period, that is, without too much delay but very quickly. I am conscious of the fact that after this week there will be the usual adjournment. I am doing the best I can to meet the needs of Hon. Members. I thank the Hon. Member for his request.

POINT OF ORDER

FUND-RAISING LETTER FROM LEADER OF NDP

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have a very short point of order, taking up from my hon.

friend, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), when he raised his point of order. I have been waiting for some time. I have a desk full of letters from my friend, the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), who has been sending out letters to various, I guess, random Members from northern Alberta. I just want to congratulate him on identifying a critical trend in Canadian political history. He said in his letter: "The mood of the electorate is changing". I think he needs to be congratulated. He is right on. The mood of the electorate is in fact changing.

Mr. Speaker: I think everyone has been treated fairly on that very interesting point of order the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister has raised. As the Chair has remarked, I am glad I was not left out.

PRIVILEGE

STANDING COMMITTEE ON EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND INTERNATIONAL TRADE—TRAVEL TO THE YUKON

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the question of privilege raised with Your Honour earlier today, it has come to my attention that the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade is planning to go to all of the 10 provinces to seek the views of provincial residents on the trade agreement and perhaps through an oversight, it is not planning, or has not planned at the moment, to go to either the Northwest Territories or the Yukon.

By not travelling to the territories, the ability of the committee to fully understand and to hear from all the residents in the territories is greatly diminished, in my view, and I feel once again northerners would see this as being locked out of a major Canadian political debate. Therefore, I believe that my ability to represent my constituents has been compromised because the committee will not be giving all territorial residents an opportunity to express their views.

If you find that this is a prima facie case of privilege, I would be prepared to move the appropriate motion.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, if I may be of assistance to the Hon. Member, I would not normally be prepared to suggest on the floor of the House what House Leaders are discussing, but I think in this case, in the interests of the point my hon. colleague made—which is a valid point. I take it as given—I would advise the House that we are presently discussing among House Leaders a draft travel order, the wording of which is to adjourn from place to place in Canada. Therefore, at our level there is absolutely no intention of excluding anywhere in Canada.

We appreciate that Canadians want to have an opportunity to appear before this committee, given, of course, that this is the first time in history that a treaty of this nature has been exposed to committee hearings and will get proper discussion coming forward.

There is absolutely no question that this is to be in any way exclusive and we will certainly bring it to the committee's attention.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I find it very regrettable that the House Leader of the New Democratic Party has not spoken to the Member to explain to her the discussions that are currently taking place in this regard. The feeling is that this intervention is exclusively to try to gain some political points and I regret it very much.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I would be the last one to suggest that this was a place to talk politics, the floor of the House of Commons, and I do take some exception to the intervention from the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet).

There has been considerable discussion between myself as House Leader of the New Democratic Party and the Hon. Member for the Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin).

An Hon. Member: Why did she ask such a dumb question then?

Mr. Riis: My hon. Conservative friend asks why she would ask such a dumb question. I would suggest that asking why the committee is not travelling to the Yukon is not a dumb question. Perhaps that is more of a reflection on the Hon. Member.

Let me make it perfectly clear—

Mr. Ouellet: Why ask the question if it is already known that the committee is going there?

Mr. Riis: The point is that I want to simply confirm what the Hon. Member has indicated. There have been some discussions and the discussions with the House Leaders have included the fact that the committee would be eligible to travel to various points in Canada. It was during discussions at the committee level that it was decided they could perhaps avoid travelling to the territories, including the Yukon and Northwest Territories. I think all my hon. friend from the Yukon is saying is that since the Yukon was left out of the Meech Lake discussion, she is concerned it is going to be left out of the free trade discussion. She is simply doing what her constituents have asked her to do, and that is to represent the people of the Yukon and ensure that when the biggest trade deal in Canadian history is going to be examined by the people, the people of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories will also have that opportunity.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, on that same point, I think we are seeing an example here of negotiating across the aisle between the different Parties. I would like to remind Members that whatever the three House Leaders decide among themselves, they must come to the House to ask unanimous consent to put these motions, and if the Hon. Member for Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin) does not agree with the motion to the effect that the committee will not travel to the Yukon, all she has to say is no, and then the committee does not travel until she is satisfied that the committee will go to the Yukon. Therefore, I cannot see the point.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has perhaps added something helpful. I have to say to the Hon. Member for Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin) that while she may very well have a complaint, it may not be as great or as severe a complaint as she may have thought, in view of what has been said by the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) on behalf of the Government. However, it is not a question of privilege. It is a matter arising out of a committee. As I say, the Hon. Member may now have received a response from the Government that may in fact be satisfactory. In any event, there are other remedies available to the Hon. Member, as has been pointed out. It is a matter of concern, of course, to this House, and the Hon. Member might take some comfort from the fact that Members on both sides have indicated the importance of the committee, of where it goes and the matter which it is discussing. I thank the Hon. member for her intervention.

DISPOSITION OF BILL C-77

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend, the Deputy House Leader will be aware that yesterday business of the House of Commons moved particularly quickly. We were able to complete examination of a number of Bills somewhat unexpectedly because of the expeditious nature with which the various debaters addressed those Bills.

• (1540)

In all corners of the House it is recognized that Bill C-77 is an important piece of legislation. Because of the fact that the Minister was unable to make the presentation on behalf of the Government, the spokesperson for the Official Opposition was unable to respond, and the spokesperson for the New Democratic Party still had some remarks to make at the end of his presentation, I would suggest that the Minister consider reintroducing Bill C-77 to facilitate the consideration of that Bill as we would normally approach it. In other words, have the Minister introduce the Bill and provide ample opportunity for the opposition spokespersons to respond. I do not think that that is an unreasonable request.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, that is item No. 2(1) on the agenda for the House Leaders' meeting which will start immediately after the House moves to Orders of the Day. I am perfectly prepared to entertain some rearranging of that debate immediately. We will take care of that.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the Day.

PATENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto; and the motion of Mr. Andre (p. 10664).

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly) on a point of order.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, after we left the debate this morning we were on a point of order considering a couple of very serious matters. One of them was an attempt to make a request of the Government House Leader to provide the House with an explanation of what the House will do as a result of the Senate refusing to pass legislation that came out of the House. This is an extremely important matter.

I would ask for unanimous consent to permit the Government House Leader to stand up and explain exactly what the House can do, as elected representatives of the people of Canada, to ensure that an unelected group of people in the other place do not override the legislation passed by the elected representatives.

With unanimous consent will the House Leader explain what progress has been made on the proposal submitted to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to use the time before the passage of Meech Lake, when only seven provinces and 50 per cent are required, to eliminate the powers of the Senate, so that it will not again interfere with the legitimate passage of legislation by the elected people in the House of Commons?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member rises on some matters of importance. He asked for unanimous consent to get into a discussion. It seems to me to be a long way from the matter that is presently before the House for debate. The House is the master of its own procedure.

The Hon. Member has asked for unanimous consent to hear remarks on behalf of the Government by one of the Ministers concerning the situation with respect to the views of the other place on a piece of legislation which is presently before this House.

I have some difficulty with that procedurally. I would probably have to consider it. I will not have to consider it at all if there is not unanimous consent.

Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the Hon. Member that there is not unanimous consent.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier is seeking the floor?

Mr. Gauthier: No, Mr. Speaker, I was going to offer some remarks because I thought that you were asking for comments or advice on this point.

Indeed, I think it would prejudice the decision of this House to anticipate what is going to happen. I do not think it would be proper for us to entertain such a statement at this time.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier who does, I might say, bring considerable helpful advice to the Chair. The Hon. Member was anticipating my own comments on my concern about the procedural validity of the motion, even if there was consent. However, there is not consent, so I think that we should revert to Orders of the Day.

The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to participate in this debate. I say at the outset that I can understand and appreciate the fact that the Minister responsible for this particular piece of legislation is away from the House on important government business. I do wish to take this opportunity to share with you some of the various happenings that have taken place earlier today regarding the insensitivity and incompetence of the Department of the Minister responsible in providing a motion in both official languages. I would hope through you, Mr. Speaker, that perhaps as we progress a little in the debate, you would indicate as to whether or not copies have now been made available to all Members in both official languages.

I see that you are nodding your head expressing that that is the case. Is that correct, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We can make sure that any Member who wishes a copy of the French text will receive a copy. They are on the table.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lesick)—Financial institutions—Principal Savings and Trust—Reimbursement of investors; the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Environmental affairs—Introduction of pollution control legislation; the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner)—Free trade—Softwood lumber export tax—Effect of agreement on pulp and paper industry.

PATENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto; and the motion of Mr. Andre (p. 10664).

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): I should remind Members that in his opening remarks, the Minister indicated that the $300,000 that was spent by the special Senate committee to hear the views of Canadians with regard to Bill C-22 was somehow a very drastic and inappropriate expenditure of federal funds.

While he stood in his place, the Minister failed to tell Canadians the amount of funds that were used for the defence of a senior Minister in the present Government under a conflict of interest. Millions of dollars went to the defence of a Member of Parliament who was a cabinet Minister and a former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The Minister failed to say anything about that.

On Bill C-22 the Minister tried to give the impression that what was happening at the present time was unprecedented. That is not the case. What is happening now is unprecedented as to what the Government is doing. When disagreements like this one occurred in the past, conferences were held between the Senate and the House of Commons, and they were held at this stage, that is, when the Senate has twice sent back a government Bill. Instead of following the normal procedure and holding a conference, as has been done in the past, the Government of Canada has acted on its own, proposing new amendments without any consultation whatsoever.

The Minister responsible for this piece of legislation ought to have his facts straight before he attempts to delude Canadians as to what is going on in regard to this piece of legislation.

My colleague from the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly), who has now left the Chamber, attempted to portray in the House of Commons this new-found sense where the NDP now supports the thrust of Bill C-22. It does not want the Upper Chamber to try to make improvements to Bill C-22. I find that change of heart with regard to this particular piece of legislation to be rather telling of the New Democratic Party and the position that it has taken on social policy. In fact, I suppose Members of the New Democratic Party are doing this on a daily basis, checking to see which way the winds will blow. One day they are opposed to Bill C-22, the next day they wish to make amendments to Bill C-22 and now, today, we have a senior Member of this House from British Columbia, a Member of the New Democratic Party, saying to the Canadian people that the Upper Chamber ought not to improve upon Bill C-22, thereby supporting the over-all thrust of increases in drug prices for Canadians. That is the position of the New Democratic Party. I say it is a shame that the NDP Leader, for whatever reasons, is not here in the Chamber to address those concerns as evidenced by the comments of that Member.

• (1550)

In order to give effect to the statements made by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) that prices of drugs will not increase faster than the increase in inflation, Bill C-22 was amended to reflect the Minister's own words. I must point out that the Minister responsible has been telling Canadians from coast to coast that the Prices Review Board will keep price increases at less than the cost of living. When he appeared before the special Senate committee on Bill C-22 on April 14, 1987, the Minister said:

> Under the legislation, the Drug Prices Review Board will have a mandate to examine the prices of all drugs and to keep the prices less than the rise in increase in inflation.

That is found at page 28. On August 20, 1987, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs told Members of the House the following:

> The Drug Prices Review Board will be in place and mandated by law to keep those prices increases at less than the cost of living. Thus for the first time we will have those drugs for which there is no generic competitor being held down in terms of price increases by the Drug Prices Review Board.

That is found at page 8249. On the following day the same Minister repeated the same message to the House. He said:

> This package, Bill C-22, provides consumer protection . . . It provides that drugs will not increase more than the cost of living.

He went on to say:

> Under our scheme the Drug Prices Review Board will be examining those drugs and keeping the price increases of them at less than the cost of living.

That was the Minister responsible in this House and across the country for consumers.

The amendment which was suggested by the Senate Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee provides that the Consumer Price Index should be the primary factor which the Prices Review Board considers rather than merely one of many factors. The thrust of the amendment of the Upper Chamber is that the primary consideration be the Prices Review Board and that is in accordance with the Minister's own statement. Should the price of a drug increase faster than the Consumer Price Index, the manufacturer would then lose its period of exclusivity on that drug and at the board's discretion, its period of exclusivity on any additional drug. This amendment is in total conformity with the Minister's own words. If he will not agree to this amendment or to the thrust of this amendment, perhaps he could explain to Canadians and to Members of this House why he refuses to include in the Bill guarantees that reflect his very own words. If he does not accept this amendment, which is evidenced by his comments here, let him then confirm that price increases in excess of inflation will be permitted.

I suggest to the Minister, to his Cabinet colleagues and to the Members of this House that the Minister responsible for consumers cannot and should not have it both ways. He has to choose.

The second area of substantive amendments deals with research and development. At second reading debate in the House of Commons on November 20, 1986, the same Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs stated:

> We have received commitments from the industry to invest directly in research and development $1.4 billion and to create 3,000 jobs between now and 1995. The commitment is worded so that 10 per cent of sales will be invested in research and development.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, those words, those commitments are found nowhere in Bill C-22. They are not in the Bill. They are not in an exchange of letters as was the case, if you will, with the Auto Pact. These commitments are contained in what? In press releases. What Canadians are asked to put their reliance in is the promise and the weight of a press release. The Government seems to talk with perverse pride in the fact that it has not obtained a firm undertaking or guarantees from the very companies which would so handsomely, and I underline the word handsomely, profit from this legislation. This approach in my view is both naive and unacceptable.

In 1985 the Government of Canada introduced a 10 per cent sales tax on non-prescription drugs such as Aspirin and cold remedies and even poison ivy treatments. Now, the implementation of a tax on medicine is in itself scandalous. Does an individual who falls ill not face enough adversity without being taxed on the very medication he or she must purchase to treat his or her ailment? Apparently not in the view of the Government. When it comes to collecting additional revenues from the ill, the sick, the Government has absolutely no hesitation in codifying such measures in the very law of Canada to ensure that it collects its own reward in the form of a sales tax. There is no hesitation, no doubt. It is a clear unequivocal desire to implement sales tax on the sick and on the elderly.

Contrast this approach to the one being taken in the legislation before us. The Government of Canada assures us that the pharmaceutical manufacturers will increase research and development expenditures by a total of $1.4 billion over the next 10 years. But there is nothing, absolutely nothing, not a comma, not a sentence, not a reference, not an amendment, absolutely nothing in the Bill that requires the Government to do so. Over a billion dollars is reportedly at stake. The Government and, indeed, right now the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) laugh. They hold up press releases and then they cry victory. It is shameful, shameful behaviour on the part of a national Government which is supposed to take its responsibility both seriously and sincerely.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs went on and stated before the special committee on Bill C-22, "I prefer a carrot to a stick. I don't think a stick is necessary". He said that on April 14, 1987. No, Mr. Speaker, one would certainly not want to use a stick on the multinational pharmaceutical interests. When it comes to taxing Canadians who fall ill, this Government apparently has no hesitation in holding the stick over their heads. I ask government Members where is the fairness, where is the social justice, where is the dignity? I suggest it is highly lacking and that is evidenced by their actions.

• (1600)

Is the goal of the Government to promote research and development in Canada? The people in the Senate did their best to further that goal by providing amendments to Bill C-22. They recommended that a pharmaceutical royalty fund be created, the same recommendation that was made by one of Canada's most distinguished authorities, Dr. Harry Eastman. Drug companies would receive additional monies in direct proportion to the amount of research they conduct. The Government found this unacceptable. It prefers to give a blank cheque to the pharmaceutical giants to be paid by the sick, the elderly and the infirm of Canada.

The Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, in the spirit of compromise, now recommends that at the very least, the promises of the Minister and of the pharmaceutical companies be placed in the legislation itself. Surely if the Minister believes in his own words, if the industry, as evidenced by the press releases of the pharmaceutical multinationals, believes in its own words, what do they have to fear? If what they have said will be realized, why would they be afraid? What do they have to hide?

The Senate did not ask for any additional commitments. It is not substituting a totally new scheme in place of that proposed by the Government. The Senate amendments simply ask that the promises made by the industry be contained in the legislation and nothing more.

The amendments would require the drug companies to actually spend the funds they have promised to spend on research and development. If the drug companies are serious about the commitments they have made in Quebec, Ontario and other parts of Canada, they should have no reason for concern because this amendment would never, ever come into effect. It would only come into effect if those companies and the industries at large reneged on their promises and failed to live up to their commitments.

This amendment is obviously unacceptable to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I would ask the Minister to take the time to explain to the employees of the pharmaceutical industry why he refuses to put into the Bill a guarantee that research and development will actually increase as promised by the industry and now by the Minister.

As introduced by the Government, Bill C-22 does not even require pharmaceutical companies to maintain their present levels of research and development and employment, let alone increase them. That is shameful national social policy. What kind of Government would be that irresponsible to the people it says it represents and wishes to represent?

If the Government says that research and development will increase to 10 per cent of sales, and if the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada is making the same commitment, why is there hesitation about putting it in the Bill? Let me use this analogy. If a consumer went to buy a car, a fridge, a stove or any other commodity and the salesman made all sorts of promises about the vehicle, the fridge or the stove, but then at the end of the day when the consumer went to pay for that particular commodity, the salesman refused to put any of those promises in writing, would the consumer not have some serious concerns and reservations about the promises? I think the answer is obvious to most Canadians.

If the Government refuses to put into writing its own words, then all Canadians have good reason for concern. It is not fair, it is not good public policy, it is not in the interests of Canadians, it is not in the interests of trying to maintain reasonable prices for prescription drugs for the Government to give away without receiving anything in return.

I underline again and again the unfairness, the incompetence, the give-away, the walk-away about the objectives of social policy. Why is the Government afraid to put into legislation things it has been telling Canadians from coast to coast? Unfortunately, the reasons for the Government's refusal are what we in the Opposition have been echoing for quite some time.

The Minister may say, as he attempted to say in committee, that for certain technical reasons, this amendment cannot be accepted, but it can be accepted. It only requires the political will to do so. There could have been that will, as evidenced by the suggestions we made in committee and in the House and our colleagues made in the Senate. If there was one iota, one teensy little bit of political will on the other side to protect Canadians from the harshness of this particular Bill and to give us guarantees for research and development, jobs and the protection of the consumer, the Government would have moved on those suggestions.

Canadians now hold the position, as evidenced by opposition across the country, that this Government does not really believe what it has told us. It is a smoke and mirrors game. Say one thing, do the complete opposite. The Government did it on free trade. In 1983, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said no way to free trade. Now free trade is here. The same thing was true with the sacred trust. He put legislation in to deindex pensions for senior citizens. The list goes on and on.

Who have been hit? Who pays for these unconscionable acts of the Government? It is the Canadian consumer who pays.

The third area of amendment deals with the retrospective operation of Bill C-22. We heard today a litany of words and sentences piled up on top of one another by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. One would have to be a Philadelphia lawyer, a medical surgeon and a Ph.D. in biochemistry to understand what he was talking about. He did not know what he was talking about.

As a matter of principle, legislation with a retrospective application is highly objectionable. Bill C-22 is no exception. The committee found that the use of June 27, 1986, as the operative date impairs the rights of certain licensees and of those who have applied for but have not yet been granted compulsory licences. The Minister tries to weave, bob, stand on this foot and stand on that foot to justify using the date of June 27, 1986.

Some have said the Minister is on drugs. I do not believe that for one moment. I think he has taken the drug and right now he is coming off it. That is why he is making such silly, stupid and irresponsible statements as he made here this morning. I wish we had the opportunity to have him in the Chamber in order to have a frank and free-flowing debate on some of those irresponsible and somewhat incompetent statements regarding the retroactivity of Bill C-22.

Generic companies have expended time and money under the present legislation. They have applied for compulsory licences and notices of compliance in good faith. We are now told by the Government that those efforts are to be of no avail because the law is to be changed as of June, 1986. Where is the fairness? The Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling), who sat on the committee studying this Bill, referred with great eloquence to the generic companies as nothing more than rapists. That was his understanding of the contribution generic companies can make to the pharmaceutical industry. Members opposite have a very narrow view of the industry. It is based on one foundation, that of the multinational corporation. We in this Party believe it is more than just that group. It is the generic industry, the Canadian consumer, provincial Governments, and other interested groups across this country.

The unfairness of the retroactivity involved in this legislation is without parallel. What is particularly disturbing is that the companies which will be harmed are in the main Canadian generic companies. Not only do we bring in harmful retroactive legislation, it is most harmful to the Canadian generic industry. So much for helping Canadian business. So much for trying to facilitate expansion of the Canadian pharmaceutical industry. The Government is doing everything but.

I want to underline that the obvious beneficiaries of Bill C-22 are foreign based multinational companies. Let us be clear. It is one thing to say, as the Minister said, that new jobs will be created, research and development will take place, and prices will be maintained in line with the CPI. It is quite another thing for him to say, because of a magical process called the press release, that we should place our faith in multinational corporations with respect to creating jobs, increasing research and development, and maintaining reasonable prices. The Minister is out to lunch, he does not know what he is talking about, when he relies solely on the press releases of multinational corporations.

There is of course an argument to be made that all firms operating in Canada should be treated equally. In this instance the Government seems to have gone out of its way to hinder development of a Canadian controlled pharmaceutical industry. What the Senate Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee has done is to recommend that the Bill be amended to provide that the new regime would only come into effect on the date the Bill is proclaimed. It says that this new regime would apply only to brand name drugs that received their notice of compliance on or after that date. In this way new drugs would be afforded the increased protection of Bill C-22, while drugs now on the market would continue to be governed by the old rules.

What is so earth shattering about that suggestion? Why could the Minister not accept the thrust of that amendment? Has he made a side deal with the multinational corporations which he refuses to inform Parliament about? That is the conclusion Canadians are coming to. The Minister refuses to codify his own words in this legislation. Surely any fair, reasonable and objective individual would have to conclude that there must have been some side deal in order that we revert not to June of 1987 but June of 1986.

That is a long period of time. I am sure even you, Mr. Speaker, reasonable and objective man that you are, coming from that great Province of Alberta which is opposed to higher drug prices, can see the insensitivity on the part of the Minister regarding the Senate's amendment concerning retroactivity. Who is it going to hurt or hinder? Canadian consumers? The generic industry? The employees of those generic firms, a point which has not been mentioned in this House as of yet?

There are other objections to this Bill. The amendments proposed by the Senate Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee are reasonable and deserving of our support. There is nothing in these amendments, absolutely nothing, to cause any discomfort to the Government, particularly since they mirror the Government's own words. I would like to draw to the attention of Members of this House comments made in a Financial Post editorial on October 26, 1987. If anything, that paper has not been overly fair, understanding or sensitive to the views of opposition Members about this Bill, nor to the Senate's view, nor indeed the whole issue of intellectual property rights. However, for the edification of Members opposite I want to quote what The Financial Post had to say. It says in part:

> The Government seems determined to manufacture a constitutional impasse over its drug patents law, Bill C-22. It was one thing for the Senate to alter fundamentally the nature of the bill, as it did in its first round of amendments. It is quite another when, the bill having been returned to the upper house, a Senate committee suggests the most moderate, sympathetic amendments, wholly in keeping with the spirit of the legislation and respecting every constitutional precedent—only to meet with brusque dismissal from Consumer & Corporate Affairs Minister Harvie Andre.

The Senate banking, trade & commerce committee's recommendations only sharpened the bill's purpose, that it might at least achieve what it intends. One sets explicit guidelines for the new drug price review board. A second established R&D commitments in law, on a company-by-company basis, rather than industry-wide. And a third merely cancels the bill's retroactivity, in accord with natural justice. In every essential, including the 10-year monopoly for new drugs, the bill is intact. Consumers, taxpayers, and economists might have complaints at this, but the minister should have none.

Finally, it says:

—the government should surely be able to accept the Senate amendments and spare us a constitutional showdown.

Mr. Speaker, that was in the The Financial Post of October 26, 1987, in an article entitled "Drugs and trade", commenting on the amendments which have been referred to us in this Chamber for our consideration—reasonable, objective amendments being put forward, not to lessen the government thrust of Bill C-22 but to improve it and to codify and confirm the words of the Minister responsible.

The Minister has come into this Chamber and insulted my colleagues from the Province of Quebec. He has made reference to opposition Members using stalling tactics. On a previous occasion this Minister accepted amendments of the Senate and then went on to make two additional amendments himself.

I do not know whether the Minister was speedreading, talking in his sleep, talking as he was coming off drugs, or what, but he seemed to suggest in his motion that he was accepting one of our amendments and some other amendments, the full impact of which we are in the process of examining. The Minister has certainly not gone far enough in my view.

In this debate we must emphasize the position which our Party has taken from day one. It was the NDP which said "no amendments to Bill C-22, none whatsoever". That was a couple of months ago. There was then some wavering and then they wanted some amendments, in fact they even suggested some amendments. When the standing committee met, some amendments were brought to Parliament but they were rejected by the Government. Today the senior member of the New Democratic Party from British Columbia says that we should do away with the Senate, that it should have no right to improve Bill C-22.

I am not suggesting that that is hypocrisy. I am not suggesting that they are sitting on the fence wavering back and forth, waiting for a political opportunity to jump in or jump out. I would not say that about the members of the New Democratic Party. They do not know where they are at. If the convention is in Montreal, they are against Bill C-22. If the convention is in Atlantic Canada, they are probably against Bill C-22.

It is clear to Members in this Party that the New Democratic Party has been, as I am sure the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) will agree, inconsistent throughout this entire debate. That ought to be brought to the attention of the House.

I know that my colleagues across the way are very much aware of their inconsistency, of the way they change their feet, pulling one foot out and putting the other foot in to meet the political whims of the day, whatever they may be. First they wanted no amendments, then they wanted amendments, and now they want no more amendments. Are they in support of Bill C-22 or are they against it? I think Canadians should know where they stand. We have seen in this House a terrible display of inconsistency by members of that Party. They do not know where they are at and I suppose they never will.

We, however, have been consistent throughout. We have said since day one that there must be amendments to the Patent Act. The Government has advocated a 10-year monopoly period for the multinational corporations. The Minister of Justice has a social conscience and I know that he agrees with me—although he cannot say anything because of cabinet solidarity—that that was the wrong way for the Government to proceed. I know that my good friend, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, also agrees that it was a Draconian measure taken against the consumers of the country to include a 10-year period of exclusivity. The Minister of Justice shakes his head. I do not know whether he is blowing his nose or what.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You remind me of Allan MacEachen. I don't know why.

Mr. Dingwall: We have been very clear that there must be amendments to the Patent Act. We have adopted as our position the recommendation of Dr. Harry Eastman, a distinguished authority in Canada who made very sound and reasonable recommendations to what is now known as Bill C-22. That has been our position and we have not wavered one iota, unlike the NDP which is all over the country saying one thing to one group and a different thing to another group. We have been consistent.

Our Leader has gone to western Canada and stated clearly and unequivocally where we stand as a Party. He has done the same thing in the Province of Quebec, including in the City of Montreal and particularly to the Montreal Board of Trade. He has clearly spelled out the position which we have adopted since day one.

Members ought not find it difficult to understand that we would look upon the amendments sent to us by the Upper Chamber with great sensitivity and great understanding for they, too, have had the objective of improving the overall being of this piece of legislation. That ought to be clear to all Members.

What are Canadians saying about Bill C-22? I would like to read to you, Mr. Speaker, what some Canadians are saying about Bill C-22. I have a letter from Regina, Saskatchewan, dated August 13, 1987. It reads:

• (1630)

> It is a saddening situation that the present Government should show a contemptuous and uncaring attitude towards its citizens. Most hurtful of all is the position that they take in believing most of us are stupid and believe their propaganda that the Bill will create jobs and add to a better business outlook in Canada. This is nothing but an aberration on their part. Since when have European and U.S.A. States multinationals given the slightest consideration to the well-being of the citizens of Canada?
> Trusting that we may depend on your continued opposition to the passage of Bill C-22 in its present form.

That is from Regina, Saskatchewan. Canadians are speaking out on legislation that they know will affect them dearly.

A physician from London, Ontario, writes:

> As a physician, I am aware of the difficulties some patients are having paying for drugs. It is important that we take whatever steps are necessary to keep drug prices lower . . . The Government has done the country a disservice by implying that the drug Bill will not push up drug prices. I applaud you in your efforts to amend the drug Bill. Keep up the good work!

That is another Canadian who is concerned about drug cost, and knows something about it.

I have a letter from another individual from British Columbia. Perhaps this explains the irrational and inconsistent behaviour of the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River when he makes his change of heart as to what the position of the New Democratic Party really is. No one really knows what their position is, depending on the day and how the winds will blow.

This person writes: "Like many Canadians I strongly support the Senate for its stand on this issue. Competition not regulation is the best means of price control and a healthy domestic generic industry has been providing this since 1969. Sick Canadians require protection, not the foreign pharmaceutical industry which has been enormously profitable for many years. In Canada unique drugs such as insulin have almost always originated in universities, seldom, if ever, by industrial research, and legislation is unlikely to change this. The Government is getting seriously out of touch with our citizens who are having to look elsewhere for protection. I hope the Senate will stand its ground in the interest of Canadian consumers and our domestic industry".

That was written by a doctor from British Columbia. Canadians are voicing their concerns about the thrust of Bill C-22.

I also have a letter that was sent to the Minister, to whom I have referred in a very kind way. I refer to him as the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, but from time to time I do make mistakes. My mistake is that I have been generous and kind. I have called him the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, but I tell you that he is the Minister of corporate affairs.

He will go down as a great Minister of corporate affairs, manipulating, conceiving, facilitating, expediting secretly and every other way the interest of multinational corporations while he does not respond to the real people, the individuals who need the protection of the Minister. When he does respond to them, it is without any degree of political will to assist and facilitate them in achieving the objectives that they believe are important.

The Minister of corporate interests received a letter on August 19, 1987. Part of it reads:

> As a Chairman of a Department of Psychiatry which deals with hundreds of individuals who require certain medications to get through life, I am constantly reminded of the need to keep drug costs at an absolute minimum. Of the more than 60,000 patients which we at Queen's are seeing during the year, two-thirds are individuals who have serious financial constraints and whose day-to-day emotional survival depends on cheap medication. Your wish to counterbalance these benefits with increased research commitments appears rather vague to me.

That is from the Chairman of the Department of Psychiatry, Professor of the Department of Pediatrics, Queen's University. It is another Canadian who is expressing his view with regard to this legislation.

Many other Canadians are opposed to Bill C-22. I do not wish to reiterate all of those groups and organizations who have opposed it, but it must be said for the benefit of Members and indeed the Canadian public that six provincial Governments are opposed to Bill C-22. Yet we only hear from the Government benches that one government, the Government of Quebec, supports Bill C-22.

I have stated in this Chamber on several occasions that we support research and development, we support jobs, we support the lessening of price increases and the maintenance of reasonable prices for prescription drugs. That is why we have attempted both in the House of Commons and in the Senate to effect amendments which would serve that purpose. Yet the Government has chosen not to do that, for whatever reasons.

Let it be said clearly and unequivocally that the amendments which have been put forward by our Party and our colleagues in the Senate have been made to strengthen the Bill and provide Quebecers with those assurances on jobs, research and development and a guarantee with regard to the cost of prescription drugs. That has been the primary consideration.

The Minister began by telling us that there will be all sorts of benefits for all Canadians, those who live in western Canada, Atlantic Canada, Ontario and Quebec. The Minister then said that perhaps he should change that to mean the capitals of the various provinces would benefit. Now he has sliced off the Atlantic, thrown out western Canada. Nothing going to Brandon, Manitoba.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Yes, there is, $30 million.

Mr. Dingwall: The Minister says $30 million. Why do you not have the courage of your words and put it in writing in the Bill so that Canadians will have confidence in what you are saying?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Do not use arguments that are not true.

Mr. Dingwall: What is the Minister of National Health and Welfare afraid of? Why does he refuse to put his words into writing?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I am afraid of the kind of comments you make which are unfounded.

Mr. Dingwall: He is not a chameleon. Prove it and put it in writing in the Bill.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Your association with the truth is unfounded.

Mr. Dingwall: What will be going to Lunenburg, Nova Scotia, Shediac, New Brunswick—

Mr. Nunziata: Or Revelstoke, B.C.?

Mr. Dingwall: Or Revelstoke, B.C.? What will go to Portage la Prairie? The Minister knows.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Stay with the truth, David. It will be a new experience for you.

Mr. Dingwall: The Minister talks about truth. I challenge the Minister to put up or shut up.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): You said there was nothing in Manitoba, until I corrected you.

Mr. Dingwall: If you believe in your words, why do you not place it in the Bill?

Mr. Grisé: Very decent. Very high profile argument.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) has the floor.

Mr. Dingwall: I ask the Minister simply to put his words in writing. The Minister talks about truth. I would not want to say that we must question the truthfulness of the Minister.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): You said nothing in Manitoba, until I corrected you.

Mr. Dingwall: What is going to Brandon, Manitoba? Put it in legislation.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): You said nothing in Manitoba.

Mr. Dingwall: The Minister said $30 million. I say to the Minister, put it in writing. Codify it into law. But the Minister says: "No, I shan't do that". So who is being untruthful?

• (1640)

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): You are.

Mr. Nunziata: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Dingwall: I suggest the Government is being untruthful.

Mr. Nunziata: I distinctly heard the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), former Prime Minister of Canada, accuse another Hon. Member of being untruthful. As you know, Mr. Speaker, that is unparliamentary.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I think we will wait until I see the "blues". I do not believe I heard that. I can wait until tomorrow. However, if the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs would like to comment, I would appreciate hearing from him.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) was uncharacteristically correct and I withdraw.

Mr. Dingwall: We are getting places today, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the Minister of National Health and Welfare would accept the challenge to take the truthfulness of the comments of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs as well as the truthfulness of the multinational corporations, and take that truthfulness—if he believes so strongly in their truthfulness—and place it into law so that all Canadians can see and recognize that their words really mean something, that they do not have to depend upon the mere words and weight of a press release that may have been issued from the head office of the multinational corporation or, indeed, from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I think the Minister might want to do that for Canadians if he is so concerned about truthfulness.

We have heard the Minister talk about the great benefits that would be bestowed upon Canada with Bill C-22. The area now being concentrated on is the City of Montreal. We are told all sorts of benefits will go to Montreal. I am not against benefits going to Montreal. My colleagues are not against benefits going to Montreal. I just ask the Hon. Minister to put it into law. Why does he not put it into law and reassure the people, as we have suggested in our amendments, that what he is saying will be realized, as opposed to this smoke and mirrors game the Government is playing with the Canadian people? After all, it is Canadians from coast to coast who will have to pay the lion's share of the increase in the costs of prescription drugs. Canadians across the country, the elderly, our senior citizens and the sick will have to pay.

Of course, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, of all people, should be all too aware of what effect increases in the cost of drugs will have on our provincial Governments. He knows that when the costs of prescription drugs go up, it is not directly seen by Canadians because most Canadians, yes, are under a drug plan or program sponsored by their provincial Government. However, where do the provincial Governments get their money for health care? It is through the taxation system. The Minister knows that smaller and poorer provinces, even his own Province of Manitoba, are going to have to pay higher drug prices. Costs are going to go up and someone has to pay for it.

We are not asking for something we have contrived or stirred up at the drop of a hat. We are just trying to put into law the words of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Mr. Nunziata: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I hate to interrupt my colleague and friend in the middle of his remarks, but he has been indicating for some time now that certain promises made by the Government ought to be entrenched in legislation. Is he suggesting that Canadians do not believe promises made by the Minister and the Government? Is that why he wants it in legislation?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): This is not the time for questions and comments. The Hon. Member has the floor in unlimited debate. If the Hon. member for York South—Weston would like to write his colleague a little memo to tell him exactly what is happening, that is fine, but I would hope that the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond could carry on with his debate.

Mr. Dingwall: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Can you handle it on your own?

Mr. Dingwall: The Hon. Member will have an opportunity to say a few words in this debate and I will wait with great anticipation to hear what he has to say about some of the recommendations which have come forward from the other place.

The word we have received to date has been a mere statement of intention. I think the price Canadians have to pay in terms of higher drug costs, no guarantees for jobs, no guarantees for research and development, is a pretty big price. If we are going to give the multinational corporations a free monopoly for a 10-year period, surely it is a measure of good public policy to have some clear legislated commitments in order to ensure Canadians jobs, expenditures on research and development, as well as reasonable prices for prescription drugs. But the Bill is completely devoid of that, and for that reason I have urged the Government time and time again to take its words and put them into writing. I know the Minister of National Health and Welfare has a little difficulty with this. This is where we may depart company. If the Government says something and is not prepared to legislate it on such an important measure as this, Canadians quite rightly are going to conclude that perhaps there is something wrong, perhaps the Government is not going to deliver on its commitments.

I go back to what I said in my opening remarks when I referred to the car salesman or the salesperson selling a stove, refrigerator or microwave. They make all sorts of grandiose promises about that particular product but when an individual goes at the end of the day with money to purchase the item and have it delivered, the salesperson says: "Well, I cannot put those things in writing". Quite rightly an average reasonable Canadian consumer would conclude there is something wrong and more than likely would not purchase the item. They would want to go home and reflect upon the fact that the salesman was not prepared to put in writing or give a guarantee of what he said the item would do.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare knows only too well that we have heard there are going to be jobs, expenditures on research and development and all Canadians are going to benefit. If the Minister believes that, why does he not put it into law? What is he afraid of? The only time it will trigger into effect is if the multinational corporations do not live up to the sentiments they have expressed.

Therefore, I say to my colleague and friend, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, he cannot have it both ways. He cannot speak out of both sides of his mouth. When he is enacting social policy in this country, he ought to do the decent and honourable thing and come clean and tell Canadians exactly what is going to take place.

• (1650)

If the Government is not prepared to accept the amendment put forward by my colleagues from Cape Breton—The Sydneys, York South—Weston, and from Windsor, that we have made repeatedly in the House, the only thing that we can conclude, as reasonable objective consumers and opposition persons, is that the Government does not believe that what it has stated will materialize.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I see that the hour is approximately 4.51 p.m. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) has now spoken for some 50 minutes. I understand the House will be adjourning in eight minutes. Can the Chair indicate whether the Hon. Member has unlimited time, or whether his remarks might be restricted by any rule of the House?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member is well aware that he has unlimited time. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond has the floor.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I am glad that you clarified that for my colleague, who, as you know, is a new Member to the House of Commons, but a very able and distinguished Member of Parliament.

That is the issue here today. There is no hidden agenda. Opposition Members do not have something that they are attempting to pull out of the hat at the last moment. We are looking for improvements to Bill C-22. I thought as legislators it was our job to improve upon the legislation. As other Members have, I took an oath with regard to the constituents whom I represent. Surely, in a free and open society when we rise to speak in this Chamber, we have to accept that sometimes there are suitable, concrete, good amendments and suggestions that can come from other corners of the House.

The Minister has left the unfortunate impression that there may have been a side deal, therefore they cannot agree to put their words in legislation in terms of the retrospectivity going back to June, 1986. Imagine, Mr. Speaker, it is November, 1987 and the Government wishes to have a Bill retroactive to June, 1986. That will not favour the generic companies in this country. It will not favour Canadian consumers. It will not favour the senior citizens who live on Minto Street in Glace Bay in my constituency. It will not favour the senior citizens in Dominion in my constituency. It will not favour the senior citizens in North Sydney and Cape Breton. It will favour one particular group, the multinational corporations.

While we are on the point of multinational corporations, let us review in summary fashion the financial health of those corporations. As they would say in some quarters of this country, if they were crawling along their way in terms of financial viability, one would have to scratch their head and look at this legislation in a different light. In looking at the track record of the multinational corporations, as was done by Dr. Eastman in his report from 1968 to 1983, there is conclusive evidence that that sector of the pharmaceutical industry did better than any other manufacturing sector on job creation, on profits, and on return of investment. So as they say in parts of this country, "They ain't no poor people there. There ain't no poor people running the multinational corporations".

Let it be clear, which we do not seem to get from our colleagues in the New Democratic Party, that we are not against businessmen or businesswomen reaping a reasonable profit, a return on their investment to their shareholders. We are not against that. We never have been against that, and hopefully we never will. Surely, as individuals who are elected to serve—and I underline the word serve—

Mr. McCurdy: Don't forget about honesty now.

Mr. Dingwall: The Hon. Member mentions honesty. Perhaps we can hear another flip-flop from the New Democratic Party. We have heard one today, perhaps we might hear another one.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have listened to the Hon. Member for one hour and 15 minutes, and on a number of occasions he has implied that members of the New Democratic Party are flip-flopping, inferring that we are no longer opposed to this Bill.

I wish to make it very clear, and the Hon. Member knows that what I am going to say is correct, that we have opposed this Bill from the beginning. We will continue to oppose this Bill.

The question of the rights of the Senators is another question, which we can debate if the Hon. Member would give other Members a chance to speak, which he has not done so deliberately.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member, who has been here for many years, knows that that is not a point of order. It is a point of debate. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond has the floor.

Mr. Dingwall: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your kindness. The Bill and the position—

Mr. Nunziata: Of the NDP is hypocritical.

Mr. Dingwall: Well, I do not wish to get into that now. We can do that later, perhaps tomorrow or next week.

Mr. Orlikow: You have made sure that we cannot do it today. You have made very sure of that.

Mr. Nunziata: They are very self-righteous talking out of both sides of their mouth. Tell it the way it is, David.

Mr. Dingwall: I think that they have been very consistent in that they have been very inconsistent.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Getting some help again, David? Can't you handle it on your own?

Mr. Dingwall: I invite the Hon. Member to participate and ask a question, if he so deems.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Watch, John, he is behind your back.

Mr. Dingwall: You should know something about being behind your back.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): He's never behind mine.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It has been a quiet afternoon. I have enjoyed the debate, and I would hope that the Hon. Member would carry on for the next minute or so.

Mr. Nunziata: Without interruption, please.

Mr. Dingwall: It has been very clear that, in this debate with regard to the thrust of Bill C-22, amendments have been put forward and rejected by the Government. Although some of those amendments may have come from the two different opposition Parties, the Senate of Canada, individual citizens and different groups across this country, the Government has refused to accept or entertain the bulk of those amendments, notwithstanding the sound advice, and the reasonable, articulate, objective suggestions that have been made by all of those individuals.

In conclusion, the amendments that have been put forward by the Senate in no way derogate from the over-all thrust of Bill C-22. It is a mere attempt to improve upon the Bill, to codify into law the statements and sentiments expressed by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre). That has been its thrust.

I now wish to call it five o'clock.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 5 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideratin of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

PARLIAMENT HILL

PROPOSED ERECTION OF STATUE OF QUEEN ELIZABETH II

The House resumed from Friday, October 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Tupper:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of commissioning the structure of a statue of Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II, to be placed on Parliament Hill in commemoration of the thirty-fifth anniversary of Her ascension to the Throne.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I count it an honour indeed to have the opportunity to speak on the motion introduced by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper) and seconded by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil). The motion reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of commissioning the structure of a statue of Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II, to be placed on Parliament Hill, in commemoration of the thirty-fifth anniversary of Her ascension to the Throne.

I strongly support this motion, Mr. Speaker. Over the years in my public life I have had the opportunity of watching, seeing and speaking to Her Majesty the Queen. The first instance I had of meeting the Queen was before her ascension to the Throne when she was still a princess. She toured Canada and came to Edmonton. A reception was held in the Banff Springs Hotel and I remember the next day the Premier telling us that the Princess had a real sense of humour. He had his speech written on cards. While having dinner he was looking over these cards and the Princess said to him "What would happen if I took those cards and shuffled them? What kind of a speech would come out then?" The Premier remarked that it would have been a very odd speech if she had shuffled the cards. I was very impressed with her way of meeting people as though they were members of her family. She has a tremendous love for people.

I have met the Queen on other occasions. Every time I have had the opportunity of meeting her, seeing her or listening to her my affection and my loyalty has increased.

When I was in opposition I had the opportunity of spending a week or two in London with the Parliamentary Association. During the week Commonwealth Day occurred. There were 23 of us from various Commonwealth countries at the meeting. We were invited by Her Majesty the Queen to have tea with her and the Duke. People were there from China, Hong Kong and the various islands. We were a group of Commonwealth members of all colours, creeds and political Parties. I will never forget the tea we had with Her Majesty. She took the opportunity to speak to every one of the delegates. She asked people about their countries and how conditions were. When she spoke to the Liberal Member and myself, she told us she was interested in the Canadian youth. She seemed to be dedicated to doing something for youth, which made me very pleased.

A few days later we celebrated Commonwealth Day. We ceased our studies that day and went to Westminster Abbey where a beautiful service was held. It was a lovely tribute to Her Majesty. Representatives of every Commonwealth country were there with their flags. As the various people came in following Her Majesty into the Abbey she said how proud she was to be the Queen of such a tremendous group of people. I kept a copy of the speech Her Majesty gave that day.

I would like to refer to a few things she said about the people of the Commonwealth. Speaking about Commonwealth Day, she said:

> First and foremost, it is about people, and particularly about the young. In many countries they make up nearly half the population. At its most spectacular and exhilarating it is about athletes such as I saw last year competing brilliantly in the unique atmosphere of the Commonwealth Games; at its most enchanting it is about the children who gave me such a welcome on my first visits to some of the island nations in the Pacific Ocean; but fundamentally it is concerned with all those who in their early years have to learn how best to meet the challenges of living in the world today.

As I heard Her Majesty say that, I thought here is the head of a wonderful group of nations who is down to earth and knows how to express the feelings of the people over whom she reigns. She did not tell them what was good for them. She was trying to assist them in meeting their challenges. The Queen went on to say:

> This is why, through its youth program, its technical and professional programs, and its work in the field of health and education, the Commonwealth helps to tackle the problems of underemployment and undernourishment and to provide opportunities for millions of families to achieve the fulfilment in life which is their natural right.

As the Queen talked about undernourishment, I thought what a challenge it is that she is giving us to help those who do not get enough or the wrong kind of food and to help those who are not educated. I thought how often in Canada people reluctantly go to school wondering why they have to spend so much time there. Yet almost half of the boys and girls of the world today would give their right arms or anything they have of value just to know how to read.

It made me think of when I was a young Grade 12 student in the Drumheller Valley. A coal miner asked me to teach him how to read. He must have been a man of 50 or 60 years old. I said "Yes. Sure, I will be glad to". It was my first attempt at pedagogy. I had a little old primer which had "This is a flower. This flower is red. This flower is blue". I went over this book with him day after day. One day he was reading to me and said "This is a flower. This flower is black". It struck me funny when he spoke about a black flower. I guess there are black flowers but I did not think there were in those days. I did not withhold my laugh. I looked at him and saw how I had hurt him. I told my mother about it when I got home and she asked me if I had apologized. She said that I should never say anything like that because he was learning how to read. I apologized all right. It was the first lesson I had which I have practised many times since, when teaching school. One should never do anything to hurt a youngster and stop him or her from developing in his or her own way. The coal miner eventually learned how to read and could read pretty well. I was very proud of that.

Here we had the Queen telling her subjects to help those who could not read and those who are undernourished. I admired that. The Queen concluded her address with:

> The Commonwealth cannot of itself solve all the problems of the human race but as a world-wide community it works for peace and for the elimination of poverty.
> Through the ready sharing of ideas, experience, skills and resources between governments and between people in all walks of life it seeks year by year to enrich the world in which its young people are growing up.

That was the Queen of Canada speaking. Yes, I think we should have a statue of Her Majesty the Queen. She has been a wonderful sovereign. She has set an example in living, in helping others, in sharing. I think we could do no better than to have a statue of Her Majesty the Queen on Parliament Hill here in Ottawa.

• (1710)

I see my time is up. There are many, many other things I would like to mention about Her Majesty but I have to stop now. I want to say that I count it an honour to be a subject of Her Majesty the Queen and I look forward to seeing, I hope before too long, a statue on this Hill put up to remember this wonderful woman for many, many years to come.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the speech made by my hon. colleague. I listened very intently and it occurred to me that it is more than appropriate that we take some time to consider the role of the Queen in respect to our nation and the Commonwealth to which this nation belongs.

A very interesting comparison can be made between this country and the United States. In contrast to Canada, they have in the United States in the same person the head of state and the head of Government. We know what great difficulties and confusion are caused by that state of affairs. That can be exemplified by the Watergate era. The then President of the United States, Richard Nixon, being both head of state and head of Government, caused a great deal of concern throughout the nation as to how to deal with the question of his actions as head of Government while at the same time he was symbolic of the American nation as a whole.

If we give a little thought to it, I am sure we would realize that there are a great many Canadians who would be very upset if our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) were at the same time head of state and head of Government. It is convenient to have a clear separation.

Of course, in addition to being the head of our state represented by the Governor General, the Queen is also the symbolic head of the Commonwealth. The Commonwealth of Nations met in Vancouver not very long ago. At that time, I was pleased to have the occasion to meet the Queen under conditions in which we were able to exchange a few words as one person to another. I must say that I was quite impressed by her basic humanity and with the way she was able to converse with common people. In the final analysis, she has blood as red as ours flowing in her veins, and on that basis, with the exception of the symbol she constitutes, she is no different from the rest of us.

I think it is important to talk about the Queen's position with respect to the Commonwealth. The Commonwealth is a group which shares the legacy of the British Empire and has eschewed the chains of imperialism to constitute a collectivity of nations which are bound together by their common heritage across racial, religious and ethnic lines. It is a voluntary grouping of nations.

If there is any other characteristic that ought to exist in the Commonwealth of Nations, it is that there should be an absence of any element of racism. Its mission should be to ensure that in this world, and certainly among the Commonwealth nations, there be no truck with racism.

Being aware of the Queen's position on the Commonwealth's treatment of the issue of apartheid, I was very pleased to learn that she is very concerned about the refusal of the British Government led by Margaret Thatcher to join with the rest of the Commonwealth in dealing with the issue of apartheid by making it possible for this noble collection of nations to exert its power and influence upon that dreadful regime to ensure that racism be eliminated there as it must be eliminated throughout the world. We are left in a rather curious situation. The Queen, the symbol of our nation and of the Commonwealth, resides in a country whose Prime Minister refuses to act in accordance with the traditions and concerns shared by so many of this great group of nations.

Rather than constructing a stone statue of the Queen, I think the greatest monument would be a Commonwealth which has been successful in establishing unity on this very serious problem which concerns so many. If the Commonwealth can act as Canada would lead it to act, then of course the greatest monument to the Queen would be a Commonwealth that is characterized by having taken for the first time effective actions to ensure that this legacy of racism colonialism has been left behind and will be eliminated once and for all. That is the kind of monument to build to the Queen.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I am indeed pleased, as are others, to have the opportunity to speak in this debate. I want to compliment my colleague from Nepean—Carleton who brought this private Member's motion to the floor for debate. I would like to put it on the record again:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of commissioning the structure of a statue of Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II, to be placed on Parliament Hill in commemoration of the thirty-fifth anniversary of Her ascension to the Throne.

I was not known in my earlier years as a strong monarchist. I had neutral feelings on it, but I have to admit that the older I get and the more experience I have in this place, the more attached I am to the monarchy, recognizing its advantages and the good it does for us as a country, for the Commonwealth and for the world in general.

I must also say that in preparing for this short presentation this afternoon, I read through the record of Hansard for the last time this motion was debated on October 2, beginning on page 9623. I note something in the speech made by the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper) when he introduced his motion. He answered a question that immediately came to my mind when I was first approached about speaking on this Bill this afternoon and that was, is it indeed appropriate to honour a living monarch. My assumption was that because we did not honour a living Prime Minister in such a way, we similarly would not honour a living monarch. The Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton has put that problem to rest by explaining how protocol has been set forth by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes) in a recent statement. There is no problem as far as that goes at all.

I kept on reading Hansard and I came to the second speech made on that occasion by my own Member of Parliament here in Ottawa, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). I was very disappointed by his speech, I have to say. If I could summarize his speech in a few words, I would have to say that he raised all the points he possibly could as to why it would not be appropriate to have a statue of Her Majesty at this time on Parliament Hill. He asked a number of rhetorical questions but did not answer them in discussing whether or not this was a good time to do this. He said, and I quote from page 9626:

But should we do this now? If we should do it now, on what basis should we make the decision?

The Hon. Member never did answer the question. He never did say whether or not he thought it was a good idea, he just raised all these questions that would put doubt in someone's mind. I was disappointed that he as the first speaker for the NDP would take such a nihilistic attitude toward having this statue on the Hill.

The third presentation the last time this motion was up for debate was made by the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins). Again I thought he at least would be more favourably disposed to the monarchy. However, when I go through his speech he never does say he is in favour of it. He says nice things about Her Majesty, but as he got on to the topic of the statue he, as did the NDP Member, raised the spectre of the partisan debate here about the statue for former Prime Minister Lester B. Pearson. To start talking about Prime Ministers is a partisan issue. Both the opposition Members chose that as a reason to be less than positive about the statue for Her Majesty. The very important point raised by the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) and many others is that the Queen is non-partisan. Yet for some reason we had to get into this partisan discussion and use it as an argument against a monument to the Queen.

I have to say that I am disappointed with the lead speakers from the other two Parties who were less than enthusiastic about the idea of having a monument to the Queen.

Other speakers, including my hon. friend from Bow River, gave excellent speeches. That Hon. Member was able to interject a lot of emotion into his presentation. He also made some personal comments which I want to have the privilege of doing as well.

I happen to be a little bit proud of the fact that the Queen is less than two months older than I am. She and I are contemporaries. I followed her career with some interest partly because of that.

There is a second reason. As a young boy I began collecting postage stamps. The first Canadian stamp she appeared on was issued in 1935 to honour the Silver Jubilee of King George the Fifth, her grandfather. If memory is correct, she appears on the one-cent green stamp. The interesting thing about that stamp is the fact that on one stamp out of a plate of 100 stamps, there is a tear in her eye. That particular stamp is known as the "weeping princess" stamp. That is just a little anecdote about her first appearance on a stamp of Canadian design and it is certainly of interest to those who collect stamps.

I have a couple of other personal attachments for Her Majesty which make me very much disposed to support this motion. When she was here a few years ago my first wife and I were able to meet her in the halls of the Centre Block. There was a great gang of people there but when she saw my wife, who was in a wheelchair, she quickly moved from one side of the corridor to the other side to shake her hand. She was that kind of person. As the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) said, she has a warmth and feeling for people and she has shown it on many occasions.

Finally, I had the honour some years back to exchange honours with her husband, the Duke of Edinburgh, when I was a practising physician. He and I exchanged honours at a general practitioners' meeting in the United Kingdom. Again, that makes my attachment to her and the Royal Family that much closer.

When I have occasion to speak to children in high schools I like to raise five words with them. The first three are "representative parliamentary democracy" and I go on to explain those words. They have a very intense meaning for me as a Member of Parliament. The other two words are "constitutional monarchy". I take great pride in explaining to those children the importance of the word "monarchy". It was alluded to by the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville. Our monarch is the head of state, quite contrary to a republic or presidential system. I take great pride in explaining the advantages of a monarch who is not a partisan politician. Unfortunately, the Americans have a system where only approximately half the people have respect for the head of state. In a monarchy, 100 per cent of the people can have respect for the head of state because she is non-partisan. It is very much to her credit the way she has fulfilled that role during the last 35 years.

There are a lot of good things which have been said about the Queen and a lot of reasons why she should be honoured at this time. It is the thirty-fifth anniversary of her ascension to the throne. I was also interested to learn that she is now the longest reigning monarch we have had since Confederation. More important, since she became officially the Queen of Canada, she is the only Queen we have had as a country. That is another good reason to honour her in this way. She was the first Queen of Canada.

I see my time is coming to an end. We have a lot of buildings and hotels and other institutions which are honoured by having the Queen's name attached to them. It seems to me not unreasonable that we should consider that here on Parliament Hill. Surely there should be something on Parliament Hill to identify her in that way. I was interested to read an excerpt from the issue of Monarchy Canada of the spring of 1982. It said:

> A country, to have any kind of national feeling, must have a national memory.

Is there any better way of having that national memory of our present monarch than to erect an appropriate statue to her on Parliament Hill?

Mr. Sid Fraleigh (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to rise and participate in this debate. It is very commendable that the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper) saw fit to put this motion forward. I would like to take a few minutes to outline what I consider to be a very difficult job which has been handled very ably by a very classy lady.

The Queen is the head of state of a great collection of widely diverse countries with widely diverse systems of Government. As was so ably pointed out by the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy), she handles the problem that the Commonwealth has with South Africa with a lot of class. There is a great variety of other Governments that she has to handle just as tactfully. The Commonwealth contains a large number of countries that do not practise the same kind of democracy that we do, and she handles herself well in that respect. If you examine the make-up of the Commonwealth I am sure you will agree with that.

The most important thing for us as Canadians, the reason we should be supporting this motion, concerns her relationship with us as our head of state. She also happens to be the Queen of England, Australia and New Zealand. By act of our own Parliament in 1953, by our own deliberate decision, she is officially and explicitly Queen of Canada, the first of many monarchs who have reigned over our territory to bear that title.

The monarchy itself is also ours by free and deliberate choice. When the Fathers of Confederation set about framing our Constitution they chose to make the new nation a constitutional monarchy. Indeed, they wanted to call it the Kingdom of Canada. The British Government was afraid that would upset the Americans and so asked the Fathers of Confederation for an alternative title. They replied with the old anglofrench word "dominion" which seemed to fit their creation like a glove. "He shall have dominion from sea to sea and from the river unto the ends of the earth".

The Fathers of Confederation did not choose constitutional monarchy only because they were used to it or because they were too stupid, too ignorant, or too much afraid of the British. They chose it in ample knowledge of the republican system which covered almost every country of the Americas. They did it deliberately and with their eyes focused not only on Canada and its position in the Commonwealth, but also taking into account the problems which it might raise with our neighbours.

I would like to relate to you, Mr. Speaker, what I see as the benefits which our nation derives from our relationship with the Queen and the Commonwealth. Our school system teaches our system of government and our relationship with the Queen. Most, if not all, Canadians treasure that system.

My relationship with the monarchy extends back to when I was a child and the Queen's mother and father first visited Canada. I will never forget the thrill of that first view of the Queen's mother and father. That was followed by several visits of the Queen to Canada. With each visit the thrill is not diminished but increased.

I certainly agree with the Member for Nepean—Carleton that rather than waiting until the Queen has passed on it would be a tremendous tribute to her while she is still alive for this House to authorize the erection of a statue in her honour. I fully support the motion of the Member for Nepean—Carleton.

• (1740)

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to rise today to speak on the motion introduced by the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper). Naturally, as a French-Canadian from Quebec, I do not personnally identify with royalty as closely as my English-speaking colleagues. For us, the Queen of England was never considered the perfect incarnation of the French fact in Canada. She is certainly a gracious Queen and we would never question her grace and the important role the British Crown has played from one generation to the next. England was a great country, and historically, it certainly gave us one of the major cultures in the world today.

Simply put, the fact is that, in my own region, we are not as thrilled by the Queen of England as people in other regions. We are not quite on the same wavelength. Naturally, a few years ago, she suddenly became the Queen of Canada. This brought her a bit closer to us. We could feel a bit more than before that she belonged to us. However, I believe that to motivate our young people and incite them to develop this country, we should find personalities closer to us. Such personalities might not be able to claim that their ancestors go back to the Magna Carta as does the gracious Queen Elizabeth, but they should know about the realities of this country and have lived in this British colony which we had to make our own and develop in an admittedly very hostile continent.

Once more, we are not questioning the virtues of the Queen. She has personified the respect of individual rights for an entire nation. She has personified family values, the permanence of certain values of social solidarity, but I believe that she is already ever present in Canada. She is on our dollars. She is on our stamps. She is often here in person. Her children come to see us. So do her cousins, nephews and nieces, and I believe that we always welcome them very graciously, as we would welcome our own family members. We are always very happy that they are here, but if we want to have our own personality to delevop and to define what makes our country so special and so different from England, we have to be able to identify with values which are typically our own.

Moreover, I believe that, by erecting immediately a stone statue to a Queen who is very much alive, we would be freezing her in a state from which she could no longer move. Finally, I prefer to see her here once in a while as during her last trip when she went to Saskatchewan and to Rivière-du Loup, met with the public, kissed children and spoke with adults. This seems to me much more charming and human than a stone statue on Parliament Hill.

I prefer to see the Queen as a symbol of this Commonwealth, a group of nations helping each other to develop their most democratic and humane qualities, even though some of these nations might unfortunately lag behind the others. Canada plays a very positive role in that organization. I believe that the Queen is an important symbol of the Commonwealth but, because I represent Quebec in Ottawa, I would prefer to have in this House symbols that are more representative of the French culture, which is one of the two main cultures in a multicultural Canada. I would rather have monuments that represent all of that, and consider the Queen as the symbol and the head of the Commonwealth.

I do not think that a statue of Her Majesty would mean very much for those I know in our young generation, for people in their 20's and 30's. I would rather see Her Majesty enjoy a long and happy life and keep her international role as head of the Commonwealth. Quite honestly, I do not think that a statue made of stone can play a very positive role.

Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with this motion. I hope that we will find in our midst, within our borders, symbols that will help us promote respect for the individual and for our democratic rights. We do not need one more statue of Her Majesty. We prefer to know her as a living monarch and not as a stone statue on Parliament Hill.

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am indeed pleased to take part in this debate on the motion which the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper) moved this afternoon and which reads as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of commissioning the structure of a statue of Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II, to be placed on Parliament Hill in commemoration of the thirty-fifth anniversary of Her ascension to the Throne.

Mr. Speaker, being 35 years on the Throne of England is undeniably a quite uncommon achievement which deserves to be commemorated.

Mr. Speaker, Canada is a monarchy and while being an independent country, we honor and respect Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II, as our Sovereign because our own Parliament is modeled on the British Parliament and this is the way both Governments operate.

If we hold monarchy in high esteem, Mr. Speaker, it is because as Canadians and especially as French-speaking Quebecers, who have always been easy to indoctrinate, we have always shown respect to the various levels of authority, whether political or religious.

Normally, when one talks about commissioning the erection of a statue for someone to be placed on Parliament Hill, Mr. Speaker, it is for someone who has passed away, but such is not the case this time, as Her Majesty the Queen is still alive and well, as she clearly demonstrated during her last visit to Canada and especially to Quebec where she had not been for the past 23 years. Because of past and well publicized events, Her Majesty had not dared come to Quebec again. Thanks to the initiative of our Government, of our Prime Minister and the close ties between the Canadian and Quebec Governments, it has been quite easy this time to get together and plan—I repeat together—a visit of Her Majesty the Queen on Quebec territory.

Many Quebecers, many Canadian men and women, of course, heartily welcomed her wherever she went, but particularly, Mr. Speaker, Her Majesty emphasized herself the welcome she was given by Quebecers, by the people of Quebec City and of the area of Rivière-du-Loup and Sainte-Anne-de-la-Pocatière, which really surprised her. Of course, we should certainly not forget the impact of the personality of our Queen. Everybody will agree with that. It is of the utmost importance.

Mr. Prud'homme: She is a good mother.

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, I heard a few comments from the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) who, I am sure, is eloquent enough to rise and deliver them himself in this House, given his parliamentary experience. I, for one, would be quite satisfied if I could over the years acquire only half of his parliamentary knowledge. I think the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis has an unique understanding of our parliamentary system.

Speaking about important persons, Mr. Speaker, I apologize for making a digression, I was obviously referring to the Queen and I am now referring to the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis. We always refer to very important persons, Mr. Speaker, and I would be remiss, since I have the floor, if I did not say a few words about one of our great men who has just passed away a few days ago, the former Premier of Quebec, Mr. René Lévesque. Again, I think that all Canadians are deeply affected by the loss of that great politician, that distinguished builder of Canada and Quebec. Of course, Mr. Speaker, we do not have to endorse his political views or his vision of Canada, but we must respect his philosophy, the way he upheld democracy in Canada and Quebec and particularly his strong will and integrity when leading his political party.

I felt it was my duty, Mr. Speaker, under that motion to refer to the exceptional work of a great Quebecer and Canadian, Mr. René Lévesque. I join all others who have already extended their deepest sympathies to the aggrieved family.

Excuse me, Mr. Speaker, if I digressed somewhat, but to come back to the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper), it is a fact that we eagerly hope that the many personalities, the great men and women in Canadian history may some day be commemorated by a statue.

The Hon. Member mentioned that great efforts had been made in Canada to give public places the name of our distinguished Monarch. A special example comes to my mind, the Queen Elizabeth Hotel in Montreal. The Queen Elizabeth Hotel in Montreal was built at about the same time as our Queen came to the Throne of England, the Commonwealth Throne, and it was quite logical in my view to put up what was at that time the biggest hotel in the Montreal area. The Queen Elizabeth Hotel still has a reputation of being one of Montreal's great hotels. That is true. I am sure that this reputation of a great hotel in recognition of Our Majesty will never be tarnished in the years ahead.

Mr. Speaker, Montreal's great hotel always will keep that pride, that priviledge of bearing the name of Her Majesty the Queen of the Commonwealth.

Mr. Speaker, I think much remains to be said on the basic question, namely wether we should erect a statue to Her Majesty the Queen of Canada? Should we not at the same time, if we erect that statue while Her Majesty is quite alive, as a first step ask her permission to erect a statue of herself? I think that is absolutely essential and I do not know the answer, Mr. Speaker. And I think there should still be much discussion before a final decision is reached on that matter.

Mr. Speaker, I would think it quite premature to make a decision along that line, and I would invite all Members in this House—you are signalling, Mr. Speaker, that my time has already expired and I apologize for that. But I would invite Hon. Members in this House, before reaching a final decision on the matter, to seriously consider that possibility, that motion.

In my view, it is quite premature to come to a final decision, but I leave the floor to other Members.

Mr. Louis Plamondon (Richelieu): Mr. Speaker, I am almost in full agreement with what the Hon. Member who has just spoken has said concerning the advisability of commissioning the erection of a statue to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, Queen of England and the Commonwealth.

First of all, it is clear that reigning for 35 years over a kingdom is something very significant and admirable; yet, because she has not yet passed away, I feel it is somewhat premature to think of placing a stone figure of her on Parliament Hill in front of the Parliament Buildings.

Needless to say, I feel that Her Majesty is far more the Queen of England and the Commonwealth, but has very little kinship with Canada, and not because of her person, for her generosity, dignity, grace, perfect command of both our official languages, and unconditional dedication to the advancement of the Commonwealth are universally recognized, not to mention her tremendous support for many humanitarian endeavours which she has often endorsed. It was pointed out, during her recent visit to Quebec, to what extent in her remarks she dealt with humanitarian issues, referring for instance to people confined to hospital beds. She has never refused to get involved when the time came to help the sick, or to do her utmost to help many Commonwealth countries progress as rapidly as other countries of the world. It goes without saying that she is universally admired and praised as a person. And I suggest that all Commonwealth countries pay tribute to her in an exemplary fashion whenever she pays them a visit.

We did so ourselves, as my honourable friend mentioned a while ago, when we welcomed her in Quebec and in Canada. People were delighted to come and greet her, and to see her, but because of her person and in part because of the tradition she is associated with.

Let us call a spade a spade: Hers is only an honorary position, without any decision making responsibility attached to it. It is not a position which contributes in any way to the advancement of our society. One even wonders whether occasionally, the reference to the Queen during Royal Assent has not been a disruptive instead of a unifying factor. When I was over in England, I happened to read an editorial in the paper, and this was about 15 years ago. The author said that since the Queen was more a factor of dissent than unity in Canada and we remember the burning issues that were creating problems at the time within Confederation well, our British editorial writer said, why not get rid of the symbol?

I think that was going a bit too far. We must keep the symbol because it means so much to one of the two founding peoples of this country. It represents a great deal, and I think that after the death of the monarch, a monument would have to be considered, since it would symbolize the links with Great Britain that presided over the birth of this nation and of all the countries of the Commonwealth.

However, a statue of the Queen is also a symbol of colonialism. We must decide whether this country's links with the Queen and with Great Britain and the monarchy have been so important we should erect a statue. Did these links make Canada the great country that it is today? Or do we owe that greatness to the two cultures and origins of two of the founding peoples of this country?

Before erecting a statue that could be seen as a symbol of colonialism, I would rather consider people like Diefenbaker, Stanfield, Trudeau or the present Prime Minister. It is to them, not to a symbol of colonialism, that Canada owes its greatness.

I think we should bear all this in mind when considering the appropriateness of erecting such a monument. I suggest we wait until Her Majesty is no longer with us, and that we consider erecting a statue as a symbol of the Commonwealth. For the time being I don't think this is particularly urgent, however, and I would invite Hon. Members to consider whether it would be appropriate to put this statue or monument in front in Parliament.

That is what I had to say, Mr. Speaker. My time has expired, and I hope my colleagues will agree with the point I tried to make.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the minute or two left to join with those who have indicated in very eloquent terms their support for the proposal made by our colleague in the Chamber for the erection on Parliament Hill of a statue commemorating the most successful reign of our Queen, Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II. I do so, of course, without any fear or trepidation whatsoever. I am and always have been an unabashed monarchist. I feel she has helped our country to greatness.

I see it is six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2) the order of precedence on the Order Paper is dropped to the bottom of the list.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS—PRINCIPAL SAVINGS AND TRUST—REIMBURSEMENT OF INVESTORS

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, early in August I rose in the House and asked a question of the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin). It pertained to the collapse and the bankruptcy of the Principal Group of companies in Edmonton.

The Minister responded that the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation was already in the process of assessing matters, and hoped that the depositors would be reimbursed by the CDIC within three weeks of the date of the question. That covers the Principal Savings and Trust Company only of the Principal Group.

I wish to thank the CDIC, through the Minister, for all its efforts in assisting Albertans, and a large number of Edmontonians and constituents of mine from Edmonton East, to deal with the devastating conditions of the loss of their savings, and not of their own making.

I also wish to thank the Minister for the toll-free information line that he established to assist those who were affected. They could call and find out what was happening to their money, if they could get any money back, and what this was all about. People needed assurance, and our Government provided that assurance. I believe that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) showed great sensitivity to the needs of the people when there was a devastation of this magnitude on the financial scale.

The financial services sector in Alberta has been rocked by closures, bankruptcies, and otherwise poor performance within the past few years. Members will recall the closure of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank, both in Alberta.

At the present time some credit unions are under a very severe strain and have been restructured because they have also suffered a great deal from the lack of business, and also from the loss of a great deal of business.

The uninitiated may wonder out loud if we in the west really know how to handle our financial affairs. I say of course we do, yes. We do, we can, and we will continue to do that, but this was an extraordinary set of circumstances which affected the regional banks, especially those in the West.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, coming from that great area of Edmonton, regional banks have filled a very important role in Alberta. Usually they are smaller institutions with a flair for serving the unique needs of a particular region.

It seems that recent history has not been kind to regional banks. For instance, the National Energy Program initiated by a federal Government completely devastated Alberta, the energy industry, and ancillary industries. In the construction industry men and women lost their jobs by the tens of thousands. Then there was a world-wide recession which also affected Alberta. Then in January, 1986, the declining world oil price caused a severe drop in the economy of Alberta, and it affected the price of land, buildings, high-rises, homes, and businesses. Alberta's economy, which was so energy dependent, and rightly so, was crushed and it has not been able to bounce back to its former level. Needless to say, many Albertans lost a lot of money. I would like to ensure that their losses were not in vain. I would support any federal initiatives that this Government may take to defend against any similar disasters in the future. It makes no difference whether they occur in Alberta, Saskatchewan, or Nova Scotia.

I feel that there is absolutely no reason why Principal's bankruptcy could not have been avoided. I am wondering whether the federal Government is considering putting in place a system of scrutinizing which would allow it to work with the provinces in order to strengthen regional banks to ensure their viability, and to preserve the very important service that they provide.

• (1805)

The large banks that we have, the Toronto-Dominion, Scotiabank and others with headquarters in eastern Canada have served their needs in the west exceptionally well. But there is one exception. They are not sensitive to the needs of Albertans. This is where the regional banks were able to provide excellent service and where the regional banks had the sensitivity to talk, saying "What can we do and how can we help you? We can give you money".

We in the west need the protection of the federal Government working together with the provincial Government to make sure that the people feel confident in the financial institutions so that the affected companies and the average Albertans will never have to go through this series of bankruptcies again.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think it is fitting that you are in the chair tonight. Along with your colleague, the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Lesick) many of your constituents have suffered because of this financial loss with Principal Savings and Trust Company. You have shown great concern toward those constituents. That, of course, is continuing in the House this evening.

As Hon. Members know, the Principal Savings and Trust Company, an Alberta supervised trust company within the Principal group was insured by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. As a result, depositors in this trust company were protected up to the deposit insurance ceiling of $60,000.

The access of insured depositors to their funds has now been restored through an arrangement reached between the CDIC and Metropolitan Trust. Metropolitan Trust began operations on September 14 and has been acting as CDIC's agent in paying out the claims of insured depositors. This arrangement has helped to limit the disruption in financial services to the former depositors of Principal Savings and Trust who had the option of withdrawing their deposits or, if they wished, of redepositing them with Metropolitan Trust.

Though the CDIC is a federal Crown corporation, it should be remembered that there was no direct federal involvement in the Principal group situation since the parent company and all of its affiliates, except for an inactive federally incorporated insurance company, were under the supervision of the Alberta Government. However, the federal Government has placed a high priority on addressing the issues of investor protection and our financial regulation in general, particularly as they relate to federally regulated financial institutions.

The December 18, 1986 policy paper on New Directions for the Financial Sector, which was released by the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) paved the way for a number of significant reforms of the regulatory and deposit insurance system. These measures include Bills C-42 and C-56, enacted in June, which increased the supervisory powers of federal regulators and provide the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation with more flexibility in dealing with financially troubled member institutions.

In summary, I would note that the federal Government has seized the initiative in this important sector of the Canadian economy and introduced the comprehensive reform program. Key elements of the program include increasing the financial stability of our financial institutions, providing the regulatory authorities with expanded powers and improving inspection practices. I believe that the proposals represent an effective program that will enhance the soundness and competitiveness of the Canadian financial system. I share the hope with the Hon. Member for Edmonton East that this does not happen again.

FREE TRADE—SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORT TAX/EFFECT OF AGREEMENT ON PULP AND PAPER INDUSTRY

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, let there be no misunderstanding. The trade deal which Canada has negotiated with the United States does nothing to assist the softwood lumber industry. So far as pulp and paper is concerned, there seems to be no assurances that that industry can breathe more easily without any fear that in the future the United States administration may impose upon it a countervail or at least begin countervail action against it.

My question on October 8 concerned why the Government locked in the 1986 softwood lumber memorandum of understanding in the new Canada-U.S. trade agreement. The Minister replied by saying that despite the export tax Canada imposed on the industry, the industry is doing well. She spoke of record production and record profits. She did not, however, tell the whole story.

Many sawmills did close down as a direct result of the 15 per cent export tax. They were producing studding, and they were, it is true, marginal operations. Nevertheless, jobs were lost and communities were affected. Some of those were in my constituency.

The 15 per cent export tax added about $600 million to the cost of Canadian softwood exports. In the first two months after the tax was imposed, the Canadian share of the U.S. softwood lumber market dropped to 28 per cent from 33 per cent. The Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) has said, as reported in an article that appeared recently in a journal on forestry, that the chances of rebuilding the Canadian share of the U.S. market on the basis of price competition are slim.

The industry has done well in some places, thanks to its efficiency, new technology, the availability of good resources, the low Canadian dollar vis-à-vis the U.S. dollar and the demand in the United States for a high quality product which we can provide here in Canada. Even if the industry is performing well in certain places now, it still is in a precarious position. What happens if the demand falls, and there are clear indications that housing demands in the United States may fall because of the stock market crash and cautious investment? What happens if at the same time the Canadian dollar, as a result of the Canada-U.S. trade deal, begins to rise to a par with the U.S. dollar?

The answer to the imposition of the 15 per cent tax was originally either to raise the stumpage fees where they were low in Canada or to introduce some sort of provincial levy to take the place of the export tax. In British Columbia, the stumpage fees were raised and they were raised very significantly. Hon. Members should know, however, that despite the fact that stumpage fees were raised, the 15 per cent tax is still there, albeit temporarily. The cost to the industry to produce 1,000 board feet of lumber has gone from $5 to somewhere between $80 and $90.

I said that the tax is still there temporarily. The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) was in British Columbia and met with the industry. They thought she would announce that the 15 per cent tax would be lifted immediately because the stumpage fees were going up. Such is not the case. The Minister made it clear that she had to have some discussions in Washington before that could be done and I want Hon. Members to note that.

Meanwhile, the Minister of State for Forestry is having discussions with the Council of Forest Ministers. They have a program designed to exchange the 15 per cent tax for some provincial levies. What has the Minister of State for Forestry said to the Council of Forest Ministers? He has said that on paper the plan looks feasible, it looks acceptable, but he is not sure whether the U.S. lumber industry will not prefer to keep things the way they are. Then he went on to say, however, that the details presented to him will be discussed with the United States of America in two weeks.

It looks to me as if we are beginning to have a new approach to economic decision making in Canada. It looks as if more and more questions about resource revenues will now be decided not in the provincial capitals of this nation, not here in Ottawa, but in Washington, D.C.

• (1815)

I am wondering, and I will put it in the form of a question and perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary will find some way to reassure me, if a new pattern is emerging in Canada whereby Canadian resource development policy is really going to have to be ratified in the U.S. If on top of everything else we have unrestricted U.S. investment in our resource economy, if we have decisions about price and marketing made in the U.S., it seems to me as an observer and participant at the very beginning of this important debate on Canada-U.S. trade, that at least a measure of sovereignty is sacrificed. It seems that some of our autonomy is being abandoned. It seems to me that our decisions about the well-being of our economy are going to be delivered into the hands of U.S. officials and politicians.

Nothing in this trade deal helps the softwood lumber industry. I asked in a supplementary question on the same day if the pulp and paper industry was safe. The Minister said I should have no fear, we now have a binational panel. What will it do for us? Will it protect us from unfair U.S. trade laws? Not at all. All it can do is see that the law is equally applied so that Canada does not suffer a greater disadvantage than someone else. Some experts have said we are no better off than we were before, and the Parliamentary Secretary will be interested in what Osler, Hoskin and Harcourt said in a preliminary analysis of the trade deal. Everything is preliminary because we do not have the details.

I conclude on this note. If these new rules had been in effect at the time of last year's U.S. subsidy case against the export of Canadian softwood lumber, the proposed mechanism would not have led to a different result for Canadian exporters than that which occurred. I say that the binational panel is not the answer to the problems of the industry as the Minister suggested in her reply to me.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that I have only three minutes to answer some very unsubstantiated allegations included in the Hon. Member's remarks.

Mr. Penner: You better name them.

Mr. McDermid: I will be happy to. First, there is not unfettered, wide-open investment in the resource industry in Canada because of this agreement. It is very obvious to me after listening to him that the Hon. Member has not read the agreement. He has a preliminary opinion from a law firm which says there would be no different decision on the softwood lumber matter. That might very well be true. However, it would be appealed to a bipartisan committee which makes a binding decision. The case is the same as it was in 1983 when the law was fairly applied, except for one thing. The political winds in the U.S. have changed rather dramatically. They have become extremely protectionist. That influenced the decision-making process in the U.S. Department of Commerce. There is no question about that. It was the same case and they did a 180-degree turn from 1983 to 1986. The only difference this time is that we can appeal to a bipartisan committee made up of two Canadians, two Americans and a neutral chairman with a binding decision-making power. If the law was applied wrongly, it can be overturned. It is binding and it is very important.

The pulp and paper industry in Canada has absolutely nothing to fear if it is a fair trader. One of the things that the Hon. Member does not talk about is that Canadian trade laws are basically identical to the American trade laws. It is how they are applied that we are concerned about. We want a fair panel to decide whether they are being applied properly or not. Canadian laws are still in place and they are exactly the same as the American laws. Where we have been having our problems is in the application and that is why this binding dispute settlement mechanism is going to be very important.

As far as softwood lumber is concerned, the stumpage fees and other arrangements being made by the provinces have now been negotiated with the federal Government. We have discussed it and now we are going to present our case to the U.S. The Memorandum of Understanding says very clearly that we must show that we have replaced the 15 per cent tax through provincial initiatives. That is what is going on now in addition to some other anomalies that were in the memorandum of understanding which we are presently trying to straighten out.

Although the tax is being collected at this time it is being placed in a trust fund and will be refunded to the people. The Hon. Member is absolutely right that stumpage fees have gone up and it looks as though a proper replacement has been made.

Therefore, the decision-making on this trade agreement is not in the United States at all. It is a co-operative thing. It is an excellent agreement. The agreement is 33 pages and may take a little time to absorb, but I suggest that the Hon. Member read it because it is very important. I think that when he has read it he will agree that it is a great deal for Canada.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—INTRODUCTION OF POLLUTION CONTROL LEGISLATION

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, if you believe in public opinion polls you believe, as I do, that next to the economy and jobs the greatest concern of Canadians is with the environment. That is why the new Environmental Protection Act which the Government has introduced into Parliament, and which has received first and second reading and is finally before a legislative committee for consideration, is so important.

You know as well as I, Mr. Speaker, that that piece of legislation is only one of a good number of initiatives which the Government has undertaken in the last three years with regard to the environment. The initiatives taken include $40 million contributed by the federal Government and the provinces for the clean-up of the Windermere Basin in Hamilton Harbour as well as the Sydney tar ponds in Nova Scotia which is reputed to be the worst toxic chemical disposal site in eastern Canada.

In addition, the Government has entered into an agreement with the United States Government, Government of the State of New York, and the Government of the Province of Ontario to reduce the toxic chemicals which flow into the Niagara River by 50 per cent by 1996. The initiatives include as well a $2.3 million increase in the budget for pesticide controls and initiatives which have been taken on acid rain. The federal Government is contributing $335 million under agreements with the five eastern provinces to reduce acid rain emissions by one half by 1994.

In addition, new motor vehicle emission standards were introduced in September. An international agreement was reached at Montreal a short time ago on reducing damage to the ozone layer. As well, there will be $1.5 billion invested in the Canada-U.S. North American Waterfowl Management Plan. There is also the $1 million endangered species recovery fund.

Those are all initiatives which the Government has taken. In addition, five new national parks have been designated including the Pacific Rim Park at South Moresby in British Columbia, the Ellesmere Island Park in the Northwest Territories, the Bruce Peninsula Park in Ontario, and the Mingan Islands Park in Quebec. All of these initiatives have been undertaken in the last three years by the Government.

The Environmental Protection Act is another step. It, of course, deals with protecting the environment from new toxic pollution. That Bill is presently in committee and I am looking forward to seeing it passed so that it can help to protect Canadians from toxic chemicals in the future.

That is only one more step, Mr. Speaker. You, I, and the Parliamentary Secretary know that other things should be done as well to clean up the environmental problems which we have now.

• (1825)

What we really need on top of all these other things is a superfund like the one that was created in the United States, particularly for the purpose of cleaning up the problem areas in and around the Great Lakes.

There are some 45 industries in Canada that are polluting the Great Lakes. There are some 53 industries in the United States that are polluting the Great Lakes. There are some 10 hazardous waste sites in Canada that are leaking into the Great Lakes and 105 hazardous waste sites in the United States that are leaking into the Great Lakes. There are 32 municipalities in Canada that are polluting the Great Lakes and 81 municipalities in the United States that are polluting the Great Lakes.

We need a clean-up of all those industries, hazardous waste sites and the municipalities, especially the particularly hideous hazardous chemical dumps on the south side of the Niagara River in the United States. They include the Love Canal, High Park, 102nd Street and S Area dumps. All of them are causing enormous pollution.

There is much to be done. The Environmental Protection Bill which is now in committee is one more step in getting under way to solving the problems of the environment and cleaning up pollution. I hope tonight the Parliamentary Secretary will assure us that the Government will be pushing very hard to enact the Environmental Protection Bill into law and will then move on to these other major jobs of cleaning up the polluted areas that already exist in our environment.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, first let me say how pleased I am that the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) has outlined some of the excellent initiatives that this Government has put into place in the three short years we have been in office. I also want to compliment the Member himself for the work he has done in preserving the environment and for his work with the municipalities, having been the Mayor of East York, which is part of the great City of Metropolitan Toronto. I know of his concern and the work he has done.

At the time of the introduction in the House of the Canadian Environmental Protection Act on June 26, 1987, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) also released an enforcement and compliance policy for the new legislation for public comment. The Minister of the Environment invited four non-governmental agencies which specialize in environmental law to critique the compliance policy.

Last month, the Canadian Environmental Law Research Foundation, the Alberta Environmental Law Centre, the West Coast Environmental Law Research Foundation and the Conservation Council of New Brunswick presented their assessments of the enforcement policy at two seminars. The seminars were held in Toronto and in Edmonton, and included participants from industry, provincial governments and public interest groups. These discussions along with the briefs submitted by individuals and industry will assist in finalizing the policy document.

The new Canadian Environmental Protection legislation is the fruit of extensive collaboration among the federal, provincial and territorial governments, as well as industry, organized labour, environmental groups, native and consumer groups. In the months between December, 1986, and March, 1987, Environment Canada officials participated in more than 30 multi-stakeholder meetings throughout the country. It was these consultations, plus 300 letters and briefs, that led to the refinement of the Bill about which the Member was speaking. It recognizes that the protection of the environment is essential to the well-being of Canadians.

We are the first federal Government in Canadian history to put in place comprehensive federal environmental protection legislation. Bill C-74 was debated in this Chamber at second reading for more than 10 hours, during which it was endorsed in principle by all Parties. It has now been passed to committee stage. The Chairman and the committee members have been appointed and I am very pleased that the Hon. Member for York East has been appointed as a member. We will begin our meetings and subsequent clause by clause study, with amendments being considered, and we will be doing that within the next few days.

I can assure this House that this Bill will receive a comprehensive study. The new Act, once passed, provides the basis for eliminating risks to the Canadian environment from toxic chemicals through the closing years of this century and well into the next. We are very pleased with this legislation. Indeed, I would agree with the Hon. Member for York East. We want to pass this legislation as quickly as possible.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—TELEVISING OF COMMITTEE HEARINGS URGED

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, if you can believe it, the Government is so afraid to let the world know about its views on free trade that it does not even want to televise the hearings that are held in capitals across the country.

It is bad enough that we must hold the current hearings in Ottawa behind closed doors so that we will not hear, for example, directly, as we did last night in the committee, from members of the Steel Producers Association that, even though we have free trade, they do not intend to pursue American markets because they have enough customers in Canada. Furthermore, they do not have the capacity to sell more steel to the United States.

If the steel industry, which is supposed to be one of the so-called winners in this bad deal, does not intend to pursue expanding steel sales to the United States, what in heaven's name is the reason for pursuing a free trade agreement? The public should have the right to know these facts, Mr. Speaker.

• (1405)

The Government saw that the Meech Lake debates were serious enough to be exposed to the public in full committee televised hearings. Surely an agreement which speaks about the very future of our country is important enough to be televised across Canada both through the hearings in Ottawa as well as in capitals across the country.

Let the people decide. What is the Government afraid of? It knows that this is not a free trade deal, it is a bad Mulroney deal, and let the people see—

Mr. Speaker: The Member's time has expired. The Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal (Mr. Corbett).

VIA RAIL

ATLANTIC LIMITED SERVICE—THROUGH PASSENGERS' FREEDOM FROM BORDER-CROSSING INQUIRIES

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada is to be commended for taking action to rectify a problem that could have seriously affected the popularity of VIA's passenger train, the Atlantic Limited.

As a result of representations and negotiations undertaken by the Government of Canada, a 90-day trial period agreement has been struck with the American authorities to amend the immigration practices that have deterred many Canadians from riding the Atlantic Limited between the Maritimes and central Canada.

For a 90 day period, beginning on December 1, only those Atlantic Limited passengers detraining in Maine will be subject to U.S. immigration inquiries. Other passengers will enjoy an undisturbed and comfortable ride.

This is good news for those who enjoy rail travel and want to see the Atlantic Limited remain one of the great rail services in Canada. We should be delighted that both Canadian and American authorities recognize the importance of the Atlantic Limited to Maritimers as a vital transportation link.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

TRIBUTE TO CONTRIBUTION OF NATIVE VETERANS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow a group of 17 native veterans will be returning to Europe to pay tribute to their fallen brethren who served Canada in World Wars I and II. The memorial visit by the veterans to several Canadian war grave sites will include a traditional Indian ceremony to be conducted on this Remembrance Day at the Dieppe cemetery in France.

Many Canadians may not realize that, at the time of their enlistment into the Canadian Armed Forces, Canadian aboriginal people had no rights to vote nor could they be conscripted to defend our country. For many of these veterans it was their first experience away from their home communities surrounded by foreign languages and customs of their fellow soldiers.

On the home front, the loss of a provider and a companion meant greater responsibilities, loneliness, and hardship for many Indian women. Upon their return from war, many of these volunteer veterans and their children were stripped of their Indian status and it is only now being returned to them 42 years later following the 1985 amendments to the Indian Act.

The sacrifices made by native veterans to serve their country were unselfish and should be a source of pride for all Canadians. The fact remains that their wartime contribution has yet to be fully appreciated. And so, Mr. Speaker, this Remembrance Day when we pay our respects to all Canadian veterans to whom we are indebted, let us remember in particular the contribution of Canada's aboriginal soldiers.

NATIONAL CRIME PREVENTION WEEK

BAD EFFECTS OF DRUGS

Ms. Carole Jacques (Montreal-Mercier): Mr. Speaker, today is the fourth day of National Crime Prevention Week.

We are all aware of the damages caused by drugs. We must therefore make sure that our young people have the information they need to make their decisions in the full knowledge of what the consequences of their actions will be for themselves and those who love them.

Prevention starts at home, in school and in all other places where young people spend their time.

During this National Crime Prevention Week, certain communities will concentrate on the drug issue. A number of youth conferences will be held in such places as Vancouver, Edmonton and Summerside to examine the problems and find possible solutions. Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, crime prevention will be one of the issues discussed at the Maisonneuve College, in Montreal.

Whatever means we take to prevent crime are restricted only by the limits of our imagination.

IMMIGRATION

IMMIGRANTS' DIFFICULTY IN INTEGRATING WITH FRANCOPHONE COLLECTIVITY

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, for the past several months, we have seen the Department of Employment and Immigration make various cutbacks to the staff of our Employment and Immigration Centres throughout Canada and to the budgets allocated to the various programs of the Department.

On the other hand, we have also seen how unimportant the Conservatives consider the integration of immigrants into Canadian society.

We would never have expected the budgetary cutbacks of this Department to affect such an important sector as the programs to give immigrants training in one of our two official languages. Believe it or not, Mr. Speaker, this is precisely what is now going on in the St. Maurice region.

In my constituency, fifteen people had registered for a French language training program offered by the Canada Employment Centre, which was to start on October 26.

Four days before that date, on October 22, these fifteen people were advised by the Employment Centres in the region that the French course had been cancelled because of budgetary cutbacks.

Is it not completely illogical, Mr. Speaker, to make cutbacks in programs aimed at giving some training in one of our two official languages to our immigrants so that they may function normally in Canadian society?

These immigrants are showing their will to join our society, but the Conservative Government puts obstacles in their way instead of providing them with the tools they need.

Is this not an unacceptable situation, Mr. Speaker?

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—NATIVE PEOPLE'S TRIBUTE TO "CORPORATE CITIZEN OF THE DECADE"

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, recently Mr. Bill Pierce, long time oil man, pipeliner, and Vice-President of Interprovincial Pipeline Company, was declared "Corporate Citizen of the Decade" by Chief Gerry Antoine of the Fort Simpson Indian Band at a meeting of the Decho Regional Council.

Referring to the construction of the Mackenzie Valley pipeline, Chief Antoine told Mr. Pierce:

> We do not feel that native people were intentionally abused by your firm. Thank you for keeping most of your promises when the pipeline was under construction and continuing this approach through the operation stage.

Judge Thomas Berger, the southern socialist, was wrong. The people of the Mackenzie Valley were right. Oil and gas developments can take place in the North to everyone's mutual benefit. This has been proven by men like Bill Pierce and Gerry Antoine.

NATIVE PEOPLES

PLACEMENT OF CHILDREN IN WHITE FOSTER HOMES—CALL FOR INCREASED FUNDING FOR INDIAN BANDS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the most tragic consequence of the European influence on the native peoples of Canada has been the loss of their children. White child caring agencies using non-native standards have apprehended thousands of Indian children and placed them in white foster homes. Children who have lost their identity and have nowhere to go at age 17 end up on the streets.

Native people want to reclaim their children and are beginning to set up Indian child care agencies on reserves, with foster homes as well. The federal Government should be facilitating this positive development. Instead, it is starving bands for resources. It pays for the apprehension of children but provides no resources to strengthen natural families.

In Manitoba, Indian child caring agencies are expected to provide preventive support to families and train Indian workers on a budget 30 per cent less than that provided to provincial child care agencies. In Alberta, bands which want native children returned are being challenged by foster parents who are connected with the white association.

The Indian Association of Alberta has been refused Indian child welfare training programs. There are no funds for on-reserve community support services and family counselling. For native children, tomorrow is too late. I call upon the Government to provide Indian people with the resources required to make a success of both Indian self-government and Indian child welfare.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—SUPPORT FROM CANADIAN FEDERATION OF INDEPENDENT BUSINESS

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade welcomed the Canadian Federation of Independent Business and its position on free trade with the United States. The President, Mr. Bulloch, said:

> The CFIB believes freer trade with the United States to be the best way to ensure access for Canadian exports . . . and welcomes the opportunity to compete for new business in an enriched and enlarged market-place.

He also said that it is expected to provide significant benefits to small business.

The CFIB is an established, credible organization that speaks for 80,000 businesses across Canada. My riding of Edmonton East has a high concentration of these entrepreneurs and I have heard from many of them. They feel that the agreement is good for Canada. It is good for Alberta, very good for Edmonton, and I urge all Hon. Members to solicit the views of their business communities. Yes, free trade is good for small business. Free trade is good for Canadians.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—PROTEST BY ONTARIO FARMERS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, Ontario farmers are ploughing into the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) free trade deal. More than 400 of them were at Queen's Park yesterday to protest the deal. The excellent Ontario Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Jack Riddell, echoed the feelings of the farmers when he said:

> This deal flies in the face of the long-term heritage of this country. Family farms are at risk here.

It is quite evident that Ontario farmers have been allowed to bleed to death so that the Prime Minister can leave his mark on history. We in the Liberal Party will not allow him to soil his hands with the blood and sweat of Ontario farmers. We intend to protect our supply management system. We intend to protect the farmers of this country.

DEATH OF FORMER PREMIER

TRIBUTE BY CITIZENS OF LONGUEUIL AND THEIR MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT TO MR. RENÉ LÉVESQUE

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, as the Member for Longueuil and as someone who for nine years had the privilege of having the ex-Premier of Quebec, Mr. René Lévesque, as his provincial Member, today I wish to pay tribute to René Lévesque who was a great Member of the National Assembly and a great Premier. He did much to make Quebecers proud to be what they are. He also made French Canadians prouder of being French Canadians, and Quebecers and French Canadians prouder of being Quebecers and Francophones.

He was also a great democrat. It was his decision to have his party supported by individual contributions, thus setting an example for other parties across this country.

Mr. Speaker, I therefore want to take this opportunity today to pay tribute, personally and on behalf of my constituents, to René Lévesque, the former Premier of Quebec.

EXPRESSION OF REGRET BY MINISTER OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS CONCERNING READING OF MOTION

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the House, I reacted to a lack of courtesy on the part of the Opposition and unfortunately, in so doing, I was discourteous to my Francophone colleagues.

I had asked that the long and complex motion I tabled in the House be deemed to have been read. When the Opposition refused its consent, I read the entire motion so quickly that the interpreters were unable to do their work. I sincerely regret any discourtesy I may have shown towards my Francophone colleagues and to all Francophones who were trying to follow the proceedings.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—FRUIT AND VEGETABLE PRODUCERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Canadians all know that our climate is severe and our geography problematic. Our growing season is much shorter than in the United States. That is why we have always given our farmers seasonal protection.

Canadians also realize that it is in the national interest to have food products, from soup to nuts, processed here in Canada.

So why did the Government sign a trade agreement with United States that destroys our fresh fruit and vegetable producers and is a threat to our food processing industry? Is the Government trying to wipe out our family farms here in Canada?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to respond to the opening question of the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. One has to deal with reality and facts. The bilateral trade arrangement between Canada and the United States as it relates to agriculture is a very good deal for Canadian agriculture.

• (1420)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: The right hon. gentleman must realize that 50 per cent of farm income comes from export sales. He must also realize the fact that, excluding grains and oil seeds, two-thirds of all farm income comes from commodities sold exclusively on the United States market.

The hon. gentleman must also realize the fact that there is no way we can continue to have a strong and viable agricultural industry in Canada by feeding a market of only 24 million Canadians. If we are to have growth and expansion, which is what we want in the agri-food industry, we must have access to the huge U.S. market of 235 million Americans.

SIGNING OF AGREEMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture kept assuring the House that agriculture would not be part of any trade deal with the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Above all, the Minister of Agriculture ought to know that so-called free trade in agriculture between this country and the United States is not possible. Our farmers have a three to five-month growing season compared to a 12-month growing season in the south of the United States. He knows that that is not possible.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister appears to concede that.

The Minister and his colleagues keep telling us that it is too early to tell whether our Canadian system of two-price wheat will be eliminated under this agreement. The Government keeps telling us in the House that it is too early to tell which of our chicken producers, fruit producers, or vegetable producers will be destroyed. The Government keeps telling us that it is too early to tell whether our yoghurt manufacturers, food processing manufacturers, or cereal manufacturers will be run out of business by this deal.

I will direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. How could the Government have signed a deal without caring about the long-term effects on the Canadian people, particularly on those who grow and process the food which Canadians eat every day?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman indicates that the Minister of Agriculture, that being myself, indicated to this House that agriculture would not be part of the bilateral trade arrangements. Indeed, that is absolutely false. We made our position very clear as we entered the bilateral trade arrangement with the United States with reference to certain things which we were going to secure.

We have fulfilled each and every one of the commitments which we made to the country, and laid out in this House a motion on behalf of the Government put forward by my seatmate, the Minister for International Trade, on March 16.

We indicated that under a bilateral trade arrangement our agri-food marketing system would remain intact. We succeeded in that.

Mr. Boudria: No, that's not true either.

Mr. Wise: We said that we would maintain those underpinnings which were necessary for the day-to-day operation of supply management. We delivered on that commitment as well.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Wise: Yes we did, Mr. Speaker. They say that we did not and that is an indication to me that they do not understand the supply management system of this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the right hon. gentleman could ask the next question.

EFFECT ON HORTICULTURAL INDUSTRY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, by withdrawing seasonal protection for our horticulture industry, that is, the growers of vegetables and fresh fruit, and our flower industry, the Minister has allowed Canadian agriculture to be thrown into a free market with the growers in the southern United States.

We have incessantly asked the Minister for International Trade and the Deputy Prime Minister for answers on the effect of this trade deal on our farmers and our food processors. We have received no concrete answers for the thousands of Canadian farmers.

Ms. Copps: Right on. We want answers.

• (1425)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We have received no answers for the 230,000 workers in our food processing industry in Canada. That is not just irresponsible, it is absolutely frightening.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Come on, ask a specific question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I suppose I should not be surprised because this is the first Government in Canadian history that contemplates putting a tax on food.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is hesitant to interrupt on a lead question, but the preamble is long. Would the right hon. gentleman put his question, please?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Does the Government not care whether food for Canadians is grown and processed in Canada, and if it does care, why did it sign this agreement with the United States?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as a fifth generation dairy farmer I am disappointed in the right hon. gentleman because I really thought he had a greater in-depth knowledge of Canadian agriculture.

We indicated when we entered into the agreement that we would reserve the right in Canada of Canadian producers to decide what marketing system best suits their own needs. We also fulfilled that commitment.

The hon. gentleman raises the issue of horticulture. We have a better deal for the Canadian horticultural industry over the next 20 years under the bilateral trade arrangement than it has had in the last ten.

The hon. gentleman should know that the law officers of the Crown have ruled ultra vires our ability to impose and to utilize in the interests of Canadian fruit and vegetable growers regulations such as Sections 56 and 57, and Section 61(1).

This agreement will give us the authority to proceed with the appropriate amendments to the CAPS Act which will provide us with the required legislative framework to impose regulations such as Sections 56, 57, and 61(1), which, for the hon. gentleman's information, are in the interest of the Canadian fruit and vegetable growers in order to provide that seasonal protection during time of harvest. We have not had that in the past and we have suffered because of the inaction of that former Government in the many years it was in office. As a result of the trade arrangement, we can go forward.

In addition—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Wise: —the horticultural industry in Canada will have that protection for 20 years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MACDONALD ROYAL COMMISSION RECOMMENDATION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, may I say to the Minister that only a Tory Government could achieve the destruction of the family farm—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: —at the same time as totally jeopardizing a $40 billion food processing industry that provides employment for hundreds of thousands of Canadians. Only a Tory Government could accomplish so much at one time in the destruction of the Canadian economy.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member could contain his preamble to setting the facts of the question. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry.

Mr. Axworthy: The Macdonald Royal Commission report explicitly states that agriculture should be exempted from any free trade agreement because of the complexity of merging the supply marketing and subsidy programs. We now have an example of the entire food processing and food development industry in Canada becoming subject to jeopardy. Why does the Government not follow the recommendation of that commission and exempt agriculture from this agreement?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we did not want it exempt from this agreement because we are interested in growth, and productivity, and financial viability in the future of Canadian agriculture.

The Hon. Member mentions placing the future of the family farm in jeopardy. If anyone placed into jeopardy the well-being of the family farm in Canada it was that Member's Government when it was in office and allowed interest rates to go from 9 per cent to 24 per cent. That was the measure that placed them in jeopardy.

If those Members were that interested in some of the people and some of the farmers in this country who are in financial difficulty, if they really care enough to take a minute to look at them on a case-by-case basis, they would find that, almost without exception, their difficulties trace directly back to that interest rate increase from 9 per cent to 24 per cent when they were in office.

• (1430)

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I only remind the House that this is a Minister of Agriculture who is presiding over the largest number of farm bankruptcies in the last 50 years.

EFFECT ON FOOD SUPPLIERS AND PROCESSORS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): I want to ask the Minister a specific question. In a statement today the Grocery Products Manufacturers Association points out that both the suppliers and producers and the processors of breakfast cereals, yogurt, ice cream, pasta, bread, canned fruits, vegetables, baked goods, frozen meat pies, and soups will all be put in jeopardy because of the free trade deal.

Was the Government not listening to the farmers and processors of these particular ingredients when it signed the free trade agreement? Why was the Minister so deaf to the interests of a $40 billion industry that is now being put in jeopardy by this deal?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): It is very simple, Mr. Speaker. We were meeting with farmers and all the people in the agri-food industry, the processors and so on, while the hon. gentleman was reading newspapers.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wise: The hon. gentleman should realize that we have had the ITAC committee, the International Trade Advisory Committee, the SAGIT committee, the largest on food, agriculture and beverage, the largest SAGIT of all, and that the SAGIT committee voted unanimously to support exactly what we have achieved in this agreement. So we followed the instructions of the SAGIT committee.

The hon. gentleman should realize as well, as it relates to some of the questions in the minds of the processors, that if one looks at the supply management commodities, and one finds this quite often, if they change the label from three to four colours on their package, or from four to five colours, or from two to three colours, they have incurred a greater cost to the product than the entire contents of the can. The hon. gentleman is baffled. If he knew the industry he could follow me very well—

Some Hon. Members: Time.

Mr. Wise: —because it has been estimated that the additional cost—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Wise: Well, they do not want to listen. It has been estimated by independent sources that the additional cost—

An Hon. Member: Come on!

Mr. Speaker: I think the Minister has gone on for quite some time.

EFFECT OF AGREEMENT ON ENERGY SECTOR

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Today it was learned that some 62 per cent of Canadians believe that the Americans got much more in this deal than did Canada, a figure I am sure will grow the more Canadians learn about it. On October 8 in this House the Minister responsible for International Trade in replying to a question from myself said—and I want to ask the Minister if he, as Minister of Energy, agrees with it—and I quote from page 9820 of Hansard:

> I can also assure him that any rights the provinces had before this agreement concerning their own policies they will have after this agreement.

She was talking about rights in the energy sector. Does the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources agree with what the Minister said on October 8?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that when Canadians get to understand the free trade agreement with the United States, particularly as it relates to the energy sector, they will realize just how much we need this agreement to guarantee supplies in our own country.

Second, Mr. Speaker, nothing whatsoever in the agreement leads the Canadian Government to believe that constitutional amendments will be required. Therefore the powers vested in the provinces under the Canadian Constitution are still the same.

[English]

EFFECT ON PROVINCIAL POWERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a set of questions and answers prepared by officials in the Minister's own Department—to whom they were sent I am not sure—dealing with the same question, and the answer is entirely different. The proposed question in the notes being distributed is:

> Can provinces continue to price their energy resources differentially intra-provincially versus extra—provincially (including exports)?

That is the question being asked. The wording of the suggested answer is interesting:

> The official answer to this—is:
> "It is our expectation that the provinces will not take actions incompatible with the spirit and intent of the free trade agreement".

It does not answer the question at all. It then goes on, interestingly, to say the following: "The question of provincial compliance with this agreement is a very sensitive issue which the Prime Minister wants to deal with himself".

Some Hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I want to understand. Will the Minister tell us what is going on? He has just given us one answer today in the House that is at variance with what is being said by someone in his Department who is preparing notes, and the suggestion is that the Prime Minister is going to deal with it. Are provincial powers changed in energy or are they not? Answer it.

Mr. Shields: No. It is that simple.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the leader of the socialist party should realize that there are thousands of public servants in my Department and that I do not know the opinion of each and everyone of them. Second, since he was kind enough to refer to a document, I wish he would table it in the House. I am not personally familiar with it and I should like to study it.

[English]

PROVINCIAL COMPLIANCE WITH AGREEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the question is not necessarily whether the Minister has read the text. What I am interested in is knowing what the truth is. Time after time the Prime Minister of Canada says one thing, the Minister says something else, and we find out the truth is somewhere else. That has got to change.

The clear assertion, which is in the Minister's document, not mine, is that the question of provincial compliance with the agreement is a very sensitive issue with which the Prime Minister wants to deal himself. That comes from the Minister's Department. I repeat, it is not mine.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Why don't you table it?

Mr. Broadbent: Is the Minister telling us that his Department does not know the answer as to whether provincial powers are changing or not?

Some Hon. Members: Table it.

Mr. Broadbent: Or is he going to repeat that the powers remain the same? What we want is some consistency and we want some truth on this side of the House.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, not being familiar with the contents of the document to which the leader of the socialist party is referring, I can hardly respond. It is even difficult to vouch for its authenticity. I believe the best way to proceed would be to table it. I will examine it and tell him whether or not, first the document is authentic and, second what is the value of the suggestions.

[English]

PROVINCES' POWERS TO SET PRICES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I would be happy to do so if there is agreement to table the document. It is normal that Ministers do that, but I would be happy to do that and send him a copy.

But, setting the document aside, I want the Minister to answer the question. Considering that in the elements of the document he has, the "Elements of the Agreement", it suggests that the Americans will have access to our energy at prices that cannot be at any variance with prices in Canada, considering that is what the Americans believe as well, and considering that that does change the provincial Governments' rights as they exist now, why is the Minister trying to pretend that these powers are not changing? And why is it left to the Prime Minister to deal with this "sensitive" matter?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, since the leader of the socialist party is again referring to a document in his preliminary remarks, a document I do not have, I cannot answer this question because I do not know on what the Hon. Member's question is based.

ROLE OF NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD—SURPLUS TEST

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is likewise directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and these documents he does have. In a speech in St. John's on October 8 the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said: "Those who do not understand think that the National Energy Board will be reduced to a monitoring function". If they do think that, they come by it honestly because in the document the Government handed out, in the preliminary transcript, it says:

> With respect to existing measures, Canada has agreed to (1) limit the application of its "surplus test" for energy exports to a monitoring function—

Does the Minister know what he is doing? Does he have any idea what the Government is giving away to the United States? If he does, will he come clean with the Canadian people?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, under the agreement, the National Energy Board will continue to receive export applications. The Board will still have the power to refuse an export permit or to reduce, under certain circumstances provided by the agreement, the quantities shipped abroad, in case of a shortage, for instance, or if it becomes necessary to implement an export reduction policy. This is exactly what the National Energy Board can do right now.

However, Mr. Speaker, this Government has provided de-regulation of the energy sector quite apart and independently from the free trade agreement. It is in the framework of this de-regulation that the discretionary powers, or rather the powers of intervention of the National Energy Board could be changed, amended or suspended according to the marketing policy of the Government.

• (1440)

DISTRIBUTION OF GOVERNMENT INFORMATION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the National Energy Board has no power to protect the energy requirements of the Canadian people. Because of the proportionality in the preliminary agreement, a certain percentage of energy has to go to the United States—

Mr. Shields: Not true!

Mr. MacLellan: Yes, it does. In relation to the percentage that was sent to the United States in the preceding three years, the United States has the right to that same percentage at that particular time. There is nothing the National Energy Board or the Government will be able to do after the agreement is signed.

Why are the Minister and the Government sending letters all over Canada with misinformation which is misleading the Canadian people, information that is directly contrary to what is set forth in the Government's own preliminary agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I read this morning the article reporting the heated comments of my hon. colleague. I believe that if anyone lacks any credibility in his analysis, it is the Hon. Member sitting on the other side of the House.

I can assure the Hon. Member that the major concern of this Government is to provide security of supply for the Canadian public. In this context, the free trade agreement will allow greater and more dependable development of our natural resources. Canadians will enjoy better security of supply under this agreement than with the policies of the previous Government, which brought Alberta to the brink of bankruptcy.

[English]

PROVINCES' RIGHT TO DETERMINE PRICES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, that was a fascinating attempt to avoid the issue on the part of the Minister of Energy. I wish to ask the Minister this question. The fact is that right now the provinces have the right to sell to their own consumers energy at lower prices than if they export it. Will that right continue, yes or no?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, this is a clear and specific question and the answer is in the Canadian Constitution which confers certain powers to the provinces.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF PROVINCES' POWERS TO SELL ENERGY AT LOWER PRICE TO LOCAL CONSUMERS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, how very interesting that the Minister should choose not to answer in the House. So again I will ask the question, hoping to get an answer.

Can the Minister tell us what powers the provinces now have to sell energy at lower price to local consumers? Will such powers continue to exist?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, provincial powers and responsibilities with respect to natural resources stem from Canada's constitutional text. Nothing in the free trade agreement changes that or leads the Government to believe that it will be necessary to amend the Canadian Constitution.

DEATH OF FORMER PREMIER

INQUIRY WHETHER FLAGS WILL BE FLOWN AT HALF-MAST DURING STATE FUNERAL FOR MR. RENÉ LÉVESQUE

Mrs. Carole Jacques (Montreal—Mercier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. At a time when Quebec is mourning the sudden loss of a truly exceptional man, René Lévesque, the illustrious defender of the French language who has made us proud to be Quebecers, I would like to know whether he can give the House the assurance that flags will be flown at half-mast tomorrow during Mr. Lévesque's state funeral, as a last tribute?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, yes, I can give that assurance. The Prime Minister has personally requested that the flags on all federal government buildings throughout Canada be flown at half-mast tomorrow, the day of the funeral. The Hon. Member should know as well that, consistent with tradition, flags on federal government buildings in the Province of Quebec have been flying at half-mast.

Mr. Speaker, you will know that I contacted you early this morning and I asked that the appropriate moment of silence be observed tomorrow, the day of the late René Levesque's funeral, out of respect for him and the people of the Province of Quebec and Canada.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—FARMERS' FUTURE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I want to get back to the Minister of Agriculture. He asked us to look at reality, to look at the facts. I may remind him that on Monday, his official translator, the Minister of State, had a chance to do exactly that when he met with 1,800 farmers in Victoriaville, where they told him their future was in jeopardy.

I want to ask the Minister of Agriculture why he has been misleading farmers by telling them that agriculture would never be affected, and why it now takes three pages in his agreement to say that farming will not be affected.

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, those statements attributed to me are absolutely and completely false. Let me respond in this way, and perhaps the Hon. Member might understand. If we did not have secure access to the U.S. market for Canadian hogs, a large percentage of which are produced in the Province of Quebec, then hog production in Canada would be reduced by about one-third. That would be completely and totally devastating, not only to Canadian agriculture but to Quebec agriculture as well. Incidentally, the spokespeople for the hog industry are extremely supportive of this agreement.

With respect to another commodity which is very important to Quebec and Canada, cattle, if the Canadian cattle industry did not have access to the U.S. market, then it would shrink by one-third. That would be very devastating to Quebec agriculture and to Canadian agriculture.

I am indicating to the Hon. Member that we want growth in the Canadian agri-food industry. We get growth by getting access to a large market ten times the size of Canada's.

[Translation]

PORK PRODUCERS—$10 SURTAX—MEASURES TAKEN BY GOVERNMENT

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture is trying to reinvent the wheel. Canadian hogs are already going to American markets, with the Canadian food products and animals that are sold over there. His agreement has done nothing.

I want to ask the Minister, who is talking about hog producers, what his agreement has done about the ten dollar surtax.

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if anyone thinks that we will have the same trade environment with the United States in the next decade as we have had in the last 20 years, then they are just simply whistling in the dark.

What the hon. gentleman should be doing is standing up to applaud us for maintaining supply management. Some 74 per cent of agriculture in his province is supply managed.

Mr. Lapierre: And you are screwing it up!

Mr. Wise: He should be up commending us for maintaining the underpinnings in supply management. He should also be up complimenting us for maintaining the right in the future for Canadian farmers in his province and the other nine provinces to determine what marketing system best suits their own needs.

In case Members opposite do not know about underpinnings, let me tell them—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Wise: —there are two sections in underpinnings. We will see how interested they are.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wise: They are not interested!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SHIPBUILDING

INQUIRY WHEN SIX FRIGATES WILL BE BUILT

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. The Minister knows full well that Government decisions concerning the award of contracts for ship building and maintenance contribute to exacerbate regional antagonisms. The fight over the second part of the frigate contract is proof positive of that. My question is this: When will the Government finally decide to make up its mind concerning the construction of those six frigates?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Supply and Services): Of course, Mr. Speaker, the decision has yet to be made. A number of bids are now under review and an announcement will be made when Cabinet reaches a decision.

• (1450)

[English]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER OF FINANCE MEET REPRESENTATIVES OF SHIPBUILDING INDUSTRY

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Undoubtedly the Deputy Prime Minister is aware that the Minister of Transport announced in the last few days the refit of Coast Guard vessels in his Province of Newfoundland at Marystown, which will keep men working there while the yards at Port Weller and Port Arthur are awaiting work and lying practically idle.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister assure us that the Minister of Finance will meet this year with representatives of the shipbuilding industry to accept their representations that the exemption from duty of large fishing vessels be lifted so that there will be work in the Atlantic yards on the construction of these boats and that the government work can be spread over other yards, including those in Ontario?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, this is another case of an Hon. Member who does not have his facts straight. He ought to know that when a ship like the Simcoe needs repairs costing over $5 million, obviously bids are invited from the various shipyards in this country. That is what happened in the case of the Simcoe, and the best bid was approved. That is the way to help fight regional disparity, by providing for healthy competition. That is what this Government has been doing since 1984, Mr. Speaker, and that is how we have been able to create over 900,000 jobs in Canada.

FUTURE OF VICKERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister who was talking about awarding contracts. This morning, 300 workers from Vickers in Montreal came to express their disapproval of the Conservative Government's failure to act in this respect. Could the Minister inform the House—after all, this is the third time these people are here! Could the Government, and the Minister who was already making plans with the previous Minister of Supply and Services to close down a shipyard in Quebec—could the Minister inform the House, in the presence of the workers' representatives who are here today, whether the Vickers yards will continue to exist? If so, is the Government prepared to immediately announce it is awarding them a contract so that 500 workers at the Vickers yards can go to work?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Supply and Services): First of all, Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants to be frank, we shall be frank. In 1984, when we inherited a disastrous economic situation, especially in Canada's shipyards, this Government was certainly not responsible for that situation. Seventy-four Members from Quebec had neglected to defend the interests of Quebec's shipyards.

Mr. Speaker, consider initiatives like Bill C-22, which they have the nerve to turn down, and all in the interests of Quebec taxpayers, Mr. Speaker!

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PROVIDE WORK FOR SHIPYARDS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, this morning Vickers employees and their representatives booed the Minister and the Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve for their inaction. Surely the Minister knows that a welder will never weld an aspirin. What they need is a ship contract, not pills. The Minister is the one who needs pills. What I and those people want to know is this: Seven ships are waiting to undergo repairs in 1988, so those people want to know why you wait until the year before the election to award patronage contracts? Why do you let them go hungry and force them to go on social welfare benefits, why not have these ships sent for immediate repairs in all Canadian shipyards so as to prevent these workers from going hungry?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Supply and Services): First of all, Mr. Speaker, we did not wait for my colleague's representations before meeting with the workers. I met with them the first time they asked, at 11.30 this morning. I did not really need the intervention of my colleague.

Second, Mr. Speaker, when making reference to the Government's concern over the future of Canadian shipyards people should know—as my colleague does—that we are in a position to award various contracts from coast to coast precisely because our Government assumes its responsibilities. We will continue to defend the interests not only of Quebecers but of all Canadians as well.

SALE OF BANK OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—TAX-FREE PAYMENT TO HONGKONG BANK

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for the opportunity to be able to direct a question to the Minister of State for Finance, in the absence of the Minister of Finance.

Last night the Deputy Minister of Finance confirmed that the Finance Department arranged a series of meetings between the Hongkong Bank and Revenue Canada prior to a deal which the Auditor General says was structured to allow the bank to avoid $100 million in taxes.

Why did the Government play such an active role in a foreign bank's attempt to avoid paying taxes? Surely the Minister must recognize that in these matters Revenue Canada and Finance must remain neutral.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member read his question because the convoluted reasoning, even from the reading, is beyond description.

First, the Hon. Member knows that any citizen of Canada can go to Revenue Canada for a conversation about taxes. There is nothing strange about that.

Second, the Department of Finance indicated last night through the Deputy Minister that Revenue Canada's telephone number was given to the bank and it pursued the advice it sought.

Third, and most important, what is incoherent about the premise of the Hon. Member's question is that he would have liked us to have structured the deal artificially in order to create taxes. Why in the world would the Government of Canada or CDIC pay someone who is not giving a guarantee for a guarantee? The payment went to the offshore owner who was giving the guarantee. The Canadian subsidiary was not giving the guarantee, therefore the funds were not forwarded to it.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, the House must commend the Minister of State for Finance for his clarity in answering questions regarding the Hongkong Bank! I think he has had to clarify three different clarifications since he started to speak on this particular topic.

ROLE OF DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, the point is that $200 million was given to the head office of the Hongkong Bank in such a way that it did not have to pay tax, while the costs associated with the takeover will be tax deductible. Therefore we have $200 million going in as non-taxable income, yet all the costs associated with it are now deductible for tax purposes.

My question is basic and simple. It deals with the integrity of the Finance Department and the Government. Surely the Finance Department must not even appear to be involved in setting up a tax avoidance scheme. Surely it is like the cops running their own drug ring. The Finance Department is there to protect the integrity of the tax system—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the integrity of the tax system was totally protected in this particular case. The Hon. Member knows that any Canadian citizen is allowed to have the advice which Revenue Canada gave. The subsidiary was not in a position, as the Hon. Member knows, to provide the guarantees we were seeking. It was to the party from whom we were asking for the guarantee that we sent the money.

What we must remember is that as a result of this deal we ended up saving CDIC $400 million. If there had been a liquidation, the Hon. Member must remember, $600 million would have disappeared, plus 1,500 jobs, plus all the branches, plus a regional banking institution.

SHIPBUILDING

FRIGATE CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM—AWARDING OF CONTRACT

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is really supplementary to the questions put by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon and the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte—Marie, except mine is a voice for Atlantic Canadians.

My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It deals with what some of us have known for weeks and what is now public, namely, there seems to be some tinkering going on concerning the award of the contract for the second batch of frigates.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister assure Atlantic Canadians and every taxpayer of this country that millions of dollars will not be squandered on a political fancy and that the contract will be awarded on the basis of merit, value, performance, schedule, and industrial benefits? Everyone knows this is the Saint John Shipbuilding Company.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, ch!

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his question. As I said earlier, there has been no decision at the present time. Several proposals are under evaluation. We take into consideration certain factors like the best price, best quality, best technology and time of delivery. I can assure the Hon. Member that these factors will prevail in the decision.

Mr. Gauthier: And the best number of votes!

CHOICE OF SOLE SOURCE NEGOTIATOR—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same Minister. A few days ago the Minister for Forestry in New Brunswick said on television that the Saint John shipyard had been chosen as the sole source negotiator. What does that mean?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, a number of proposals are now being assessed and considered by Cabinet. When a decision is reached, as to the contractor and sub-contractor, as the case may be, such decision will be announced.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

SALE OF BANK OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—ROLE OF DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. It concerns his tax deal given to the Hongkong Bank. In light of Mr. Stanley Hartt's testimony of yesterday, can the Minister tell the House why it is that the Deputy Minister of Finance took an active part in organizing a meeting between the officials of the Hongkong Bank and the Revenue Department whose sole purpose had to be known to everyone, namely, tax avoidance?

Why did the Finance Department take on that role if it was not to give a tax break of $200 million, courtesy of the taxpayers of Canada? I would like clarification, not circumlocution, this time.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the only circumlocution this House has heard on this issue is the accusation of tax avoidance. Any Canadian, I repeat, unless the Hon. Member wants to change this, any Canadian can go to Revenue Canada for a ruling. The Deputy Minister of Finance gave the phone number, he did not attend the meeting and, as a result we saved 1,500 jobs and kept a regional financial institution.

Mr. Speaker: I have to advise that the time for Question Period has expired. The Hon. Member, for Cowichan—Malahat—The Island on a question of privilege.

PRIVILEGE

AVAILABILITY TO ALL MEMBERS OF STUDY ON FISHING VESSEL SAFETY

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I want to bring an issue before you which affects my privileges as a Member of this House and my ability to serve my constituents.

Coming from a coastal community, I have a great deal of concern for the safety of fishermen and their families as do other Members of my Party, including the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly), the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) and the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett), all of whom have raised the issue of fishing vessel safety in this House and have urged action.

On Monday, November 2, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) wrote to Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament with ridings affected by marine transportation policy. He indicated in the letter that the main thrust of a coastguard study into fishing vessel safety would be released yesterday, November 3. The letter signed by the Minister was inadvertently sent to the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River and was attached to an information kit for Members of Parliament set up by the coastguard. It has not been received by other Members of coastal communities, including the Hon. Member for Skeena and myself who are on the same floor of the same building as the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River.

This letter formed the basis for the question that was asked of the Minister of Transport yesterday by the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher). I find that the Minister of Transport is playing cheap partisan politics with the safety of fishermen.

I ask you to look into this matter, Mr. Speaker, to inspect the letter, and if there is a prima facie case of breach of privilege, I am prepared to move the necessary motion for referral to the proper committee.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member in all good conscience should withdraw the charge that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) would play cheap politics with the safety of fishermen.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Thacker: He should withdraw that comment. It is a totally inappropriate comment and it is most undeserved.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, concerning the insinuation left by the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) that I have received material ahead of time, I can assure the Hon. Member that the material arrived in my office in this morning's mail. I was interested about what material was coming but I did not see the material until this morning.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, let me clarify the point made by my hon. colleague. The memo was addressed to the Progressive Conservative Members of the House of Commons only. In other words, regardless of when it might have arrived on the Member's desk, it was destined to a select group of Members of the House of Commons. That was the point my hon. colleague was attempting to make.

It is obvious that this is favouritism, and when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) directs mail on a very critical item only to certain political Members of the House of Commons, we obviously find that our privileges have been breached.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has listened carefully to the intervention of the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) and others Members. I will consider the matter and report back to the House.

ALLEGED MISUSE OF THE WORD PARLIAMENTARY—RULING OF MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: I want to draw the attention of the House to the fact that I am now prepared to report on two questions of privilege, the first brought some days ago by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), and the second is a matter of privilege brought by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus). I shall deal first with the question of privilege of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell who rose on September 22, 1987.

The issue he raised concerned what he alleged was a misuse of the word "parliamentary" by the service known as the Parliamentary New Service.

In presenting his argument, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell cited the case from May 6, 1985, where the words "Member of Parliament" were used by other than the currently elected Member for that riding, and the Speaker ruled that a breach of privilege had occurred because the Member could be impeded in fulfilling his duties if confusion existed in the minds of his constituents as to who the Member really was. That particular ruling is of interest, but I have to advise the Hon. Member regretfully that I did not find it of assistance in the present case.

[Translation]

Also, the 1983 incident referred to by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) had to do with a newspaper advertisement which the public could have seen as a quote from Hansard, which it was not . The sacred nature of Hansard has always been protected, and while the press is at liberty to quote from it, they must do it truthfully rather than try to mislead the public by altering or falsifying the record as published in the House of Commons Debates.

• (1510)

[English]

A similar case occurred in 1960 when the Sperry and Hutchinson Company reproduced the Debates of the House and the Speaker ruled that anything that relates to control by the House, present or future, over its own reports, having the possibility of abuse of such publications in mind—which is easily imaginable—required the Speaker to allow to go forward by finding at least prima facie grounds for complaint. This is found in the Journals of the House, February 16, 1960, at pages 157 and 158.

In 1965, the Steelworkers Hamilton Council-PAC News used the cover of the Debates in its newsletter. The Speaker ruled that there was a prima facie case of privilege and based his ruling on the 1960 case.

[Translation]

However, in none of those matters do I find any parallel with the point raised by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. All the cases referred to involved deliberate attempts at misleading the public by falsely depicting a document as a quote from Hansard. Truly, such is not the case in this instance.

[English]

There are a number of previous rulings which dealt with incidents concerning "parliamentary task forces" composed of members from only one Party caucus. In the "Parliamentary Task Force" case of December 10, 1979, the issue revolved around the question of the use of public funds for examinations conducted by members of one political Party. In the 1980 case, the issue concerned the use of the term "parliamentary task force" for what was essentially a special committee. In the first case, Speaker Jerome stated:

> —in my opinion the greater wisdom would be to ensure that in every case—where public funds are used to support such a committee—such a committee consist of Members of more than one Party in the House.

As can be seen, these two cases do not directly apply here. There has been no allegation that public funds are involved in the Parliamentary News Service.

The most direct pronouncement on the use of an expression relating to Parliament is found in Statutes. The Act respecting the use of the expression "Parliament Hill" was given Royal Assent on May 19, 1972. The purpose of this Act was to prevent the commercial use of the words "Parliament Hill".

In the case being raised by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, however, the question at issue is whether or not the use of the word "parliamentary" by itself should be restricted in any way by the House.

As the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) pointed out to the House, the dictionary defines "parliamentary" as "of or relating to Parliament", and of course "Parliament" is defined as "the Council forming with the Sovereign the supreme legislature consisting of the House of Commons and the Senate". Therefore, anything describing or relating to either Chamber or the two Chambers together in conjunction with the Queen could be termed "parliamentary".

Does the use of the word "parliamentary" in the Parliamentary News Service not describe the fact that the news covered by the service relates to or concerns Parliament? I think that is true. The news it provides may be, in fact probably is, selected with a view to enhancing a particular perspective. Does this alter the fact that it relates to Parliament? Any newspaper or broadcaster in the country always has been and continues to be free to select those items emanating from Parliament which they believe to be of interest to the public. Because this place is an institution composed of partisan, political people, there are often opposing viewpoints reflecting in its proceedings. I would think there are few Canadians who are not aware of that fact.

[Translation]

The question before me is whether the use of the term "parliamentary", in this instance, is a breach of privilege or some sort of contempt of the House.

[English]

Hon. Members all know that privilege is a narrowly defined procedural expression. To quote from Erskin May's Parliamentary Practice, it is:

> —the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament and by members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions, and which exceed those possessed by other bodies or individuals.

[Translation]

Having examined the recorded precedents and studied the substance of the matter raised, I am not convinced that the rights or privileges of any Member have been breached. I have not been convinced either that the dignity of Parliament or the integrity of its proceedings have been compromised by the use of the term "parliamentarian" in this case. I cannot therefore conclude that this is a genuine question of privilege.

[English]

I do feel, however, that a legitimate concern has been raised by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. Both the Chair and indeed all Hon. Members of the House should be conscious of the need to protect and enhance the reputation of Parliament and of this House and be vigilant in their duty in this regard.

I might say to the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell that sometimes the line between the position he is taking and that which is permissible can indeed be very fine. I would say that to the degree possible, when others are using the word "parliamentary", they might take into account that very fine distinction.

I thank the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell for raising the matter and I also thank all those who participated in the discussion. There is not, however, in the Chair's view, a breach of privilege in this instance.

I might say to the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell that he has probably done the House and the public some service in bringing the matter to the attention of the Chair.

I now turn to another matter of privilege.

ALLEGED IMPROPER ACQUISITION OF LETTER—RULING OF MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: On October 28, 1987, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) rose on a question of privilege. The issue he raised related to a letter referred to by the Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley) during Statements by Members earlier that day.

I asked the officials responsible for providing printing services to investigate the matter concerning the printing of the letter in question. The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) submitted a two-page letter and an attached petition to the printing unit in the Wellington Building on Friday, October 23. These two documents were reproduced in 2,700 copies according to the Hon. Member's request and they were returned to the Member's office on Monday, October 26.

The employees involved in printing, folding and handling of this request have provided assurances that they did not retain or distribute copies of this material to anyone other than the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon. I should further note that in submitting this request to the printing unit, neither the Hon. Member nor his staff gave any indication that the material was either confidential or sensitive.

It may well be that the Hon. Member or his staff did not feel that that was necessary. However, had the Hon. Member indicated that the material was sensitive or confidential, the procedure that would have been taken is that it would have been produced under tight supervision and returned to the Hon. Member in a sealed package, which would have included any waste or damaged copies that resulted from the printing and folding operation.

I cannot find that any irregularity occurred in this instance, nor can I find that that any Hon. Members' privileges have been breached in any way. However I thank the Hon. Member for bringing the matter to the attention of the House. It may well be that again that this matter having been brought to the attention of the House, the same problem will not happen again.

I would say to all Hon. Members that if there is any difficulty with security in the printing of material on behalf of any Hon. Member, it would be helpful if any such instances were brought to the attention of the Chair. Hon. Members will realize, having seen the facilities where printing is done, that it does take some extra special effort to have absolute security. I hope that this report back to the House is of some satisfaction to the Hon. Member and I thank him for raising the matter.

STRIKING COMMITTEE

PRESENTATION OF THIRTHY-EIGHTH AND THIRTY-NINTH REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the thirty-eighth and thirty-ninth reports of the Striking Committee.

Mr. Speaker, if the House so agrees, I intend to move concurrence in the thirty-eighth report later today.

[Editor's note: for text above reports, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

CONCURRENCE IN THIRTY-EIGHTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, if the House so agrees, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Quebec East (Mr. Tremblay):

That the thirty-eighth report of the Striking Committee, tabled earlier in this House, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have unanimous consent to move this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

JUSTICE AND SOLICITOR GENERAL—AUTHORIZATION FOR STANDING COMMITTEE TO TRAVEL

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I have four motions which have been discussed with the other House Leaders and I would like to present them now. The first is:

Business of the House

That the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General be authorized to travel to Kingston, Ontario from Sunday, November 22 to Wednesday, November 25, 1987, inclusive, for the purpose of holding hearings, visiting correctional facilities and observing panel hearings of the National Parole Board in relation to the Committee's study on sentencing and conditional release, and that the necessary staff do accompany the Committee.

I think you will find unanimous consent for that motion to be put immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Minister have unanimous consent to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BILL C-77—NULLIFICATION OF MOTION FOR SECOND READING OF BILL AND REFERENCE TO LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, the next motion is with respect to Bill C-77. I move:

That, notwithstanding any Standing Order of this House, the proceedings on Bill C-77, an Act to authorize the taking of special temporary measures to ensure safety and security during national emergencies and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, which took place in the House on Monday, November 2, 1987, be nullified, and that, the entry on the Order Paper and Notices under Government Bills (Commons) be changed to indicate that the motion for second reading and reference to a legislative committee of the Bill had not been duly moved, seconded and proposed.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations and we are prepared to support this motion.

I simply want to take this opportunity to thank the Government. There is no requirement that we start over in a more appropriate way, and we simply want to say we appreciate this initiative.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, this order reflects the discussions held among House Leaders and represents a constructive way to have this Bill considered in the normal fashion. Therefore, I think it is the right thing to do.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Minister have unanimous consent to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

FINANCE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS—PRESENTATION BY STANDING COMMITTEE OF REPORT ON TAX REFORM

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, the next motion deals with the proposed presentation of the report on tax reform from the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. I move:

That, notwithstanding any Standing Order of this House, on Monday, November 16, 1987, at 12.30 o'clock p.m., the House shall revert to "Presenting Reports from Committees" for the sole purpose of enabling the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs to present the Committee's report on tax reform; and

That, immediately following the presentation of the said report, the House shall revert to the business which was interrupted.

STANDING ORDERS—AMENDMENTS TO S. O. 89(2) AND 96(3)

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the House Leaders at the request of the Subcommittee on the Disabled and the Handicapped, and the following motion takes into account those discussions and the request of the committee. I move:

That Standing Order 89(2) be amended by deleting paragraph "(e)" and by adding the following new paragraph:

"(y) Status of Disabled Persons;"

and that the paragraphs be relettered accordingly;

That Standing Order 96(3) be amended by adding the following new paragraph:

(g) Status of Disabled Persons shall include, among other matters, the proposing, promoting, monitoring and assessing of initiatives aimed at the integration and equality of disabled persons in all sectors of Canadian Society."

and;

That all the business of the Subcommittee on the Disabled and the Handicapped be transferred to the Standing Committee on Status of Disabled Persons.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) have unanimous consent to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND INTERNATIONAL TRADE—REQUEST THAT STANDING COMMITTEE BE AUTHORIZED TO TRAVEL TO THE YUKON AND THE NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I realize time is getting short and presumably before the week is out we will be considering other orders permitting the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade to travel and hear witnesses on the free trade proposal. I would simply like to suggest to the Minister that he use his good offices to ensure that as the committee determines places in which to hold hearings, consideration be given to travelling to the Yukon as well as the Northwest Territories.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise my hon. friend that as a result of what happened in the House yesterday, I took the initiative to mention to the committee Chairman that there was a feeling that the committee should include the Yukon in its travel plans. He advised me that they were being welcomed by witnesses in all provinces because of great acceptance of the free trade agreement and he thought he could fit the Yukon into those proceedings.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I understand that members of that committee are meeting tonight to work out, if they can, some consensus on travel. I hope the committee will accept the position that our Party is taking that the committee travel to both the Yukon and Northwest Territories, but I think we should await the results of those discussions.

REQUEST FOR BROADCASTING OF WINTER OLYMPICS ACROSS CANADA IN THE FRENCH LANGUAGE

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has asked me to present this petition and I also want to present it on my own behalf.

The petitioners humbly sheweth that nearly one million francophones outside Quebec will not be able to watch the Calgary Winter Olympics in French on television; that the compromise suggested by the CRTC of offering the French television broadcast to cable distributors is unacceptable as not all francophones communities outside Quebec have cable television; and that French-speaking Canadians will pay their share of the $200 million allocated by the Conservative Government for the organization of the Calgary Winter Olympics;

Wherefore the undersigned humbly pray and call upon Parliament to urge the Conservative Government to keep its commitments to linguistic minorities in Canada by making available in both official languages and in all communities throughout Canada the televised broadcast of The 1988 Winter Olympics, which will be an international event.

And your petitioners will ever pray, Mr. Speaker.

OPPOSITION TO TAX ON FOOD

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I too should like to present several petitions signed by taxpayers in my riding who object to the Conservative Government proposal aimed at taxing food. Whereas food constitutes a vital element in day-to-day life and the imposition of this tax would have the effect of further penalizing the elderly, low income families and, of course, the unemployed and younger people in our society;

Wherefore these constituents object to this Conservative Government proposal and urge it not to levy a sales tax on food products.

PATENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed, from Tuesday, November 3, consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto; And the motion of Mr. Andre:

That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this House agrees with amendment 18(b) made by the Senate to Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, but disagrees with all other amendments except amendment 13(a), (b), (c), and (d), 14(a), (b), (c) and (d) and amendment 16(a) because this House believes that amendments 4(b), 11, 12, 15(a), (b), and (c), 16(b), (c), (d) and (e), 17(a) and (b) and 18(a) are in contradiction to the fundamental principles of the Bill and undermine the objectives of the policy.

More specifically:

Amendments 4(b), 11 and 12 change the coming into force of the sections thereby jeopardizing all of the research and development commitment of the industry, and are therefore not acceptable;

Amendments 15(b), (c) and 18(a) remove flexibility from the Patented Medicines Prices Review Board inconsistent with the design of such regulatory agencies and are therefore inconsistent and not acceptable;

Amendment 15(a) arises out of Senate amendments 13 and 14 and is therefore inappropriate;

Amendment 16(b), (c), (d) and (e) and 17(a) and (b) arise out of amendments 13, 14, and 16(a) which are proposed for further amendment by this House in this Message. Therefore the Senate amendments are inappropriate.

And that Senate amendments 13(a), (b), (c), (d), and 14(a), (b), (c) and (d) be amended to read as follows:

That Clause 15 of Bill C-22 be amended,

(a) by adding, immediately after line 36 on page 13, the following:

"(1.1) Where, in the opinion of the Board, a patentee of an invention pertaining to a medicine has, within such period as is prescribed, increased the price at which the medicine is sold in any market in Canada by a percentage in excess of the percentage increase in the Consumer Price Index, as published by Statistics Canada under the authority of the Statistics Act, for that period, the Board may, by notice in writing, require the patentee to provide the Board with such information and documents concerning the costs of making and marketing the medicine as the Board may specify and as is available to the patentee in Canada or is within the knowledge or control of the patentee, and on the receipt of any such notice, the patentee shall comply therewith within such time as the Board may specify."

(b) by striking out line 45 on page 13 and substituting the following:

(c) by adding, immediately after line 33 on page 17, the following:

"(5.1) Where, in the opinion of the Board, a patentee of an invention that is a medicine has, within such period as is prescribed, increased the price at which the medicine is sold in any market in Canada by a percentage in excess of the percentage increase in the Consumer Price Index, as published by Statistics Canada under the authority of the Statistics Act, for that period, the Board may, by notice in writing, require the patentee to provide the Board with such information and documents concerning the costs of making and marketing the medicine as the Board may specify and as is available to the patentee in Canada or is within the knowledge or control of the patentee, and on the receipt of any such notice, the patentee shall comply therewith within such time as the Board may specify."

(d) by striking out line 42 on page 17 and substituting the following:

"accordance with subsection (5) or (5.1),"

(e) by striking out line 17 on page 20 and substituting the following:

"purpose of the report referred to in"

(f) by striking out lines 2 and 3 on page 23 and substituting the following:

(a) a summary of pricing trends in the pharmaceutical industry; and

(b) the name of each patentee to whom a notice under subsection 41.15(1.1) or 41.16(5.1) was sent during the year and a statement as to the status of the matter in respect of which the notice was sent."

(g) by striking out lines 4 and 5 on page 23 and substituting the following:

"(2) The summary referred to in paragraph (1)(a) may be based on information and".

And that Senate amendment 16(a) be amended to read as follows:

That Clause 15 of Bill C-22 be amended by adding, immediately after line 17 on page 19, the following:

"(12) Where an order is made under paragraph 6(d) in respect of a medicine, the prohibitions set out in subsections 41.11(1) and 41.14(1) cease to apply in respect of the medicine effective on the date of the order."

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to continue this debate on an important piece of legislation affecting all Canadians and to make particular reference to the reasonableness of opposition Members, opposition Parties, and the other Chamber with regard to suggesting amendments to Bill C-22. As I indicated yesterday, the Government had the opportunity to accept reasonable amendments which in no way derogate from the over-all thrust of Bill C-22, which merely codify in law the statements which the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) made across the country, in this House, and before the various committees of Parliament.

Unfortunately, the Minister responsible has seen fit to reject those suggested amendments notwithstanding their reasonableness. Canadians must very seriously question the truthfulness of the statements which the Government is making.

I attempted yesterday to provide an analogy to Members in the House. When an individual goes to buy a car, stove, microwave, fridge, or whatever, and is told by the salesperson that the product has all sorts of guarantees and can perform in particular ways but learns, upon going to pay for the item, that the salesperson is not prepared to put in writing the guarantees of which he or she had spoken, the consumer will be very suspicious of the intent and truthfulness of the remarks.

Mr. Nunziata: They wouldn't buy.

Mr. Dingwall: As my colleague has said, they would not buy. We cannot buy the response which the Government has made to the reasonable amendments proposed to it. I ask again and again what the Government has to hide. Why can the Government not believe in its own words? Why can it not insert in the legislation the things which it has promised? After all, the amendments which we are seeking, which I am sure would be supported by most reasonable men and women, would never be triggered if the commitments which we have heard from the multinational corporations were kept.

Our reservation, suspicion, and questioning of the truthfulness of the statements of the Government and the Minister are very real. We had hoped that we could codify the suggestions into law, thereby assuring all Canadians that the word of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs means something. The Minister talks to people in Quebec about job guarantees, additional expenditures to be made on research and development, and the maintenance of reasonable prices for prescription drugs. I would have thought that he would have seized this opportunity to show that he is really committed to what he has said.

It is with great regret that Members in this Party will continue to doubt and to question aloud the veracity of the statements of the Minister and, more particularly, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) because, in the end result, it is the Prime Minister, as the Leader of the Party and the Leader of the Government, who must bear the ultimate responsibility for the actions or lack of action of the Minister he has appointed to serve in his Cabinet.

I have said repeatedly in this Chamber that this Minister, who has been given the twofold responsibility of corporate interests and consumer interests, has chosen to represent only one, that is, the corporate interests of the country. As evidenced since 1984, consumers will have to continue to wage their battle to obtain fairness, equality, and objectivity from the Government. We will continue that fight on their behalf, not only on this Bill but on other measures which are lacking in the Government's agenda for supporting and enhancing the rights and economic viability of consumers from coast to coast.

The Prime Minister had an option to stand up for Canadian consumers. I regret most sincerely that he has chosen rather to stand up for and support foreign-based companies.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, Canada had developed a system for the research, production, and sale of prescription drugs. After a period of time, generic companies were permitted to pay a royalty and get a licence to produce drugs used with great frequency and to sell them to Canadians at half the price charged by the company which originally developed the drug. This system, which was developed and made operational by legislation that was passed in the late 1960s by a Liberal Government, after a great deal of study was working well. It saved Canadians hundreds of millions of dollars.

• (1540)

Yesterday, the Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) implied that members of the New Democratic Party were waffling in our opposition to the Bill before us now. Nothing could be further from the truth. We have opposed the Bill from the beginning and we continue to oppose it.

The question of what power a non-elected Senate should have in dealing with this or any other Bill is a separate question that needs to be debated on other occasions. The fact is that we have a non elected Senate which has virtually all the powers of an elected House of Commons. That is an issue which neither the Liberal Party nor the Conservative Party has wanted to address. Obviously, they still do not want to deal with it.

The fact is that this whole question surrounding Bill C-22 was not opened by the present Conservative Government but by the former Liberal Government when the then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), yielded to pressure from the multinational drug companies, agreed that a study had to be made, and appointed Professor Eastman to make the study. By the time Professor Eastman made his report to Parliament, there was a change in government. The Liberal Government was gone and the Conservative Government came to power.

Professor's Eastman's study stated that the system which was in place since 1969 had worked well and saved Canadians hundreds of millions of dollars. It stated that the multinational drug companies that were campaigning for changes, pleading an inability to fund and finance research, were among the most profitable companies in Canada. The prescription drug industry in Canada, as in the United States and other countries, is among the most profitable.

Professor Eastman told us that the licensing system which permitted generic companies to manufacture prescription drugs, after receiving the licence and paying a royalty to the multinational companies, was working well. However, he suggested some improvements that could be made, including the proposal that royalty fees be increased.

It is evident from this Bill and the discussions that have taken place since its introduction that the Government has rejected virtually every important recommendation made by Professor Eastman. One can only come to the conclusion that if this Bill were not written in the offices of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association, the organization representing multinational companies, it could have been written there because the Bill gives those corporations virtually everything they want.

Despite all of the debate we have had in the House, the Government adamantly refused to accept or even consider any of the serious amendments and recommendations that were brought forward. The same happened when the committee which dealt with this Bill held its hearings.

I do not recall when I have seen such unanimous opposition to any proposal as I saw in the committee which dealt with this Bill. We heard from labour groups, consumer groups, seniors, and organizations representing nurses. A number of provinces indicated that their citizens would not only pay tens of millions of dollars directly in drug costs, there would be an additional cost of tens of millions of dollars for the various pharma-care and insurance programs that cover part of the prescription costs of those who are ill. The Government ignored all the submissions and recommendations. The only support for the Government's proposals was from some of the medical researchers who told us that this Bill was important in order to provide funding for medical research.

The reason that medical research in this country is in a crisis situation is not that this Bill has not been passed, but that the Government has ignored all the promises it made before it was elected. It said that a Conservative Government would stop the underfunding of medical research and scientific research in every aspect of Canadian life. The Conservatives knew before they became the Government that Canada had one of the worst records of any of the industrialized countries in the world with respect to support for and funding of medical and scientific research.

We are not opposed to the amendments which were made by the Senate and sent back to the House of Commons. These amendments we are discussing today are very moderate and very much a retreat from the version of the Bill which the Senate returned to the House of Commons last August. These amendments, if adopted, would require each company to invest the $1.5 billion they said they were prepared to invest in medical and drug research. The Bill in its present form does not include this intent and, if passed in its present form, would not require the companies to live up to those promises.

The Minister repeatedly argued that we opposed this Bill for politically partisan reasons. During the committee hearings, dozens of groups representing almost every segment of society expressed their opposition to this Bill and made reasonable, sensible, and valid suggestions to improve it. All those proposals and recommendations were rejected. The Minister keeps on lecturing Members of Parliament and groups which oppose what the Minister insists on doing in this Bill, saying their criticisms are not based on partisan political reasons but on a lack of information and lack of understanding of what this Bill sets out to do.

I want to put on the record in the few moments I have some of the views expressed by business groups and media people who are not very far-out radicals. In fact, they usually speak up on behalf of the business community. On October 26, the Financial Post carried an editorial entitled "Drugs and Trade". I would like to read a few sentences from that editorial which talks about the brusque dismissal of all the proposals received by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre). I quote in part:

> The Senate Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee's recommendations only sharpen the Bill's purpose, that it might at least achieve what it intends. One sets explicit guidelines for the new Drug Price Review Board. A second establishes R&D commitments in law, on a company-by-company basis, rather than industry-wide. And a third merely cancels the Bill's retroactivity, in accord with natural justice.

The article ends by saying:

Meantime, the Government should surely be able to accept the Senate amendments and spare us a constitutional showdown.

On Monday of this week the Globe and Mail carried an article written by its national political editor, Hugh Winsor. It is entitled: "If Cabinet is serious about C-22, Andre should be put on leash". I do not believe any Member of Parliament has been tougher on the Minister than Mr. Winsor. The article states in part:

The Senate committee has shown how that could be done while maintaining the basic thrust that so engages the international drug companies and their backers in Washington—increased patent protection. When the Bill comes back to the Commons this week, Mr. Andre can continue barking. He can watch the Bill die and then attempt to use its death as a way to mobilize public outrage about an organization which, until recently, was at No. 101 on a list of 100 public concerns (unless, of course, somebody was in line to be appointed.)

But attempting to further raise the profile of the Senate and C-22 has its risks. Instead of worrying about the Senate, people might start looking beyond the Government's rhetoric and begin weighing the substantive issues of drug pricing, of lobbying, and on the puny performance of the drug industry with or without patent protection. In that balance, Mr. Andre and his preferred Bill come off as lightweights.

Mr. Winsor is right on because the fact is that when the system was put in place, according to the multinational companies, we deprived them of the financial ability to do the research necessary. In the years prior to 1968-1969 when there were no restrictions on the drug companies, when they were able to do whatever they wanted and whatever their parent companies did in other countries, there was very little research with the exception of insulin, which was researched and discovered not by any of the multinational companies but by the medical department of the University of Toronto. There was not a single major drug developed by the multinational companies when they were not hindered by the legislation which they claim was so inimical to their ability to make profit.

We heard about the unanimous support for the Government's Bill which comes from the Province of Quebec. In the Montreal Gazette on October 30, just a few days ago, Peter Hadekel wrote an article entitled: "Drug companies should consider compromise". He says in part:

The Bill was tied up in the Senate for months, leading to Conservative charges of obstruction and resulting in demands for Senate reform.

The Liberal Senators justify their actions by claiming that Canada has been burned before.

They cite the broken promises from companies such as Bell Helicopter, Textron Inc. and McDonnell, Douglas Corp., which won Government contracts and aid by promising the moon on job creation.

Now, the Senators say: "We want it in writing."

The ball is in the Government's court.

That is simply the fact, Mr. Speaker. The Senate amendments simply prove that even an institution which is really superfluous to a democratic system can sometimes come up with some good ideas.

The Senate amendments, if accepted by the Government, simply spell out in some detail the requirements the companies would have to follow. They would actually have to invest money in research if they are to receive the benefits this Bill will give them. They have said that if this Bill is passed they will spend $1.5 billion on research. The Senate amendments would require them actually to do that. They would require each company actually to do research before it could benefit from the clauses in the Bill which give them the kind of protection they have not had until now.

I say in closing that we have argued from the beginning that there was no need for a major change in the system of patents as they impinge on the development of prescription drugs. However, if we must have this Bill, then we want it to do as much as it can to protect the rights of ordinary Canadians. We believe that the Senate amendments move in that direction and so we are sympathetic to them. However, I have no real hope that the Government will listen to reason at this late date when it has not done so up to now.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), particularly to his comments on the Senate amendments which, as he said, move in what we consider a constructive direction. I believe that he also said that the Senate amendments fall far short of what we in the New Democratic Party consider would be an adequate Bill, that they fall far short of correcting all of the problems we saw in the Bill. I wonder if the Hon. Member would care to enlarge further on what he thinks are the deficiencies of the Bill even as amended by the Senate?

• (1600)

Mr. Orlikow: The system we have had until now led to the situation in which generic drug companies, which are almost entirely Canadian-owned, after a period of time, which in fact worked out to about seven years, developed research and the prescription drug. They had the exclusive right to produce, market and sell that drug at whatever price level they believed necessary or possible. The system we have had until now permitted, allowed for, generic drug companies to apply for and to obtain a licence to produce that drug and, while producing that drug, pay a royalty to the original company. But they were able to produce many of the drugs which are most commonly used, drugs that are used for people who are depressed, drugs such as Valium, the barbiturates, or any of the other drugs which are very widely used. They were able to produce those drugs, and by the time the drugs were dispensed to the consumer, the person who had a prescription from his doctor, they could be purchased for half, or less, the price charged by the multinational company which held the original patent.

We say that that system worked quite well. We were prepared to accept the suggestion, the proposal of Dr. Eastman, that the system would be fairer if the period of exclusivity were more clearly defined and if the royalty paid to the company which originally developed the drug were increased from the present 4 per cent to some higher figure. Aside from that, we believed that the system was working well and did not need the kind of major changes that in fact this Bill will lead to.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, since there has been so much evidence, as the Hon. Member has reminded us, that the Bill was not needed or, if it was partly needed, that it goes far beyond what was needed in order to maintain for Canadians the advantages of the drug industry that are available in Canada, would the Hon. Member care to comment on what he thinks is the reason that the Government has, as he put it, almost apparently allowed the Bill to be written in the offices of the multinational drug corporations? What is the reason for the Government's surrender to these corporations?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, let me give the Hon. Member two reasons. First, as I indicated during the course of my speech, the multinational drug companies are tremendously profitable companies in Canada, in the United States, and in the western European countries in which their head offices are sometimes established. They are able to mount very powerful lobbies in all of these countries, including Canada. They are able to make major financial contributions to political Parties who will listen to them and try to accommodate them. That is one reason.

The other reason is that we believe, and I think there is substantial evidence to substantiate it, that in the discussions between President Reagan and our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) leading up to the free trade proposal it was made very clear to our Prime Minister by President Reagan, on the advice and the urging of the multinational corporations whose head offices are in the United States, that if we wanted a free trade agreement, this legislation, which would change the system we have, would be necessary. This system demonstrated to Americans and to American Senators and Congressmen that, if introduced and implemented in the United States, American citizens could save hundreds of millions of dollars a year. Thus they wanted this Bill out.

So I believe that part of the reason that the Government is so determined to enact this Bill and is so obstinate in its refusal to consider even the most mildly limiting amendment to it is that there was a commitment made by the Government to the President of the United States that we we would pass this Bill as proposed and fostered by the multinational drug companies.

We believe that this was part of the agreement to get the so-called free trade deal between Canada and the United States. Of course, there is no reference to the events which occurred when the Government assumed office and began hearings in the United States that its number one trade irritant was the drug patent law and the concessions that were made at the Shamrock Summit on intellectual property. Of course, the Government has never admitted that that is why it brought in this Bill. But there has been more than enough testimony in Senate hearings and in hearings before the House of Representatives, as well as that given by representatives of the multinational corporations in the United States, that this was part of the price that Canada would have to pay if we wanted a free trade deal.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have always thought that this Bill was a bad Bill. I heard about it several years ago, that is to say when it was at the committee stage. Everything that was told to me about it by people who were studying it perhaps four years ago seems to be well supported by what has come out during the debate in Parliament. This is now the third time that we have debated it in Parliament.

I was surprised a while back to see an editorial in The Toronto Sun in which I find that The Toronto Sun agrees with me.

Mr. Boudria: You should reconsider your position.

Mr. Heap: The Hon. Member says that I should reconsider my position. I did. I read the editorial very carefully. The only other time I can remember an editorial in The Toronto Sun agreeing with me—in fact it even alarmed me by naming me and stating its agreement with me—was when I spoke in favour of the abolition of the Senate a year or two ago. When The Toronto Sun said it agreed with me I had to read that editorial very carefully. It turned out that its reasoning was not entirely the same as mine, although it did overlap mine somewhat. I consulted with some of my colleagues and my constituents and they confirmed my view that I was on the right track in spite of the fact that The Toronto Sun agreed with me. I have had a great deal of experience with The Toronto Sun over the past decade or so as a resident of Toronto and as a member of Toronto City Council. I always thought that it was a good, reliably far right-wing example of the conservative point of view.

Mr. McCurdy: Are you talking about The Toronto Sun?

Mr. Heap: The Toronto Sun, that is right. I was startled again to see this editorial on October 23, 1987, entitled "Upper downer". The opening line states, "Harvey Andre's outrage with the Senate rings more than a little false in our ears".

The whole editorial is in disagreement with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre). It contains statements such as, "I would sooner lose this Bill . . . than acquiesce to the principle that we have a bunch of unelected Liberals exercising veto power over the elected government of Canada are pure rhetoric". The editor of The Toronto Sun then says bluntly that, "Such bluster does not deal with the fact that the drug patent Bill is a bad Bill and the changes are reasonable". He is referring to the changes proposed by the Senate. He says that the changes are reasonable because it is a bad Bill. That is very plain language. The Toronto Sun always uses plain language. Whether or not one likes what it says, it does not leave much doubt about what it is saying. It says that this is a bad Bill for both business and the consumer.

Sometimes we have the Government undertaking to protect consumers in Canada from producers, particularly protecting them perhaps from the high wages that an employer has to pay to his workers and protecting them by bringing in goods from some country with a police state Government which keeps the wages down. In those cases the Government undertakes to help consumers. According to The Toronto Sun the Government is not helping the consumer here. It also says that it is not helping business.

They claim that the committee proposes 10 years of monopoly protection for new drugs to apply to drugs marketed after the Bill becomes law. The Conservative Bill would start the meter running as of June 27 of last year. In other words, on good conservative grounds, The Toronto Sun objects to having the Bill made retroactive. That is a very strong principle in the country, the principle that law should not be made retroactive. The Toronto Sun is taking a well-established position there and on that basis is opposing the Bill.

It goes on to point out further that, "Research and development commitments would be written into the Bill as they should be", referring again to the Senate amendments. It continues: "Standards would have to be met by each brand name company rather than by the industry as a whole. Individual companies that didn't measure up could lose all their patent protection".

We have heard many heart-rending pleas from the Minister over in that corner about how we must have this Bill because the poor, starving owners of drug companies cannot manufacture drugs in Canada without the extra profits that his Bill would guarantee them. However, he does not want them to guarantee the production in Canada that he says would be had by the profits from us from the higher drug prices. He wants to guarantee the higher drug prices that would come as a result of the Bill, but he does not want to require them to guarantee the production in Canada or the thousands of jobs which he says they would bring.

In fact the editorial goes on to say: "Annual increases in drug prices would have to be less than the increase in the Consumer Price Index", that is to say, if the Senate amendments were accepted.

The Minister has often assured us that we do not have to fear increases. Of course everybody knows that there will be some increase with inflation. All the Senate asked was—make it a firm part of the law that the annual increases in drug prices will have to be kept down below the general level of inflation. No, the Minister will not consider that at all.

It is very interesting that the Bill is being opposed by such a wide range of people in Canada. We have had expert opinions. Experts have studied the matter which admittedly is complex. The great weight of the expert opinions has been against the Government's Bill on the ground that it gives far too much to the multinational corporations and that what it gives them is far more than necessary to enable them to do fairly the production in Canada that they claim to do. Experts such as Roy Davidson, a former senior economic adviser to the Government; William Watson, a McGill University economist; John Hill, a Brantford pharmacist; and so on.

Other sectors of the public have communicated with us in letters to their Members and in their appearances before the committee. In agriculture we have heard from veterinarians and Keystone Agricultural Producers. Of course there have been groups of many thousands of senior citizens among those who, under our present state of medicine, are very dependent on prescription drugs. Most of them are of a fairly conservative point of view and probably would have normally voted for a conservative candidate whether of the Conservative Party or of the Liberal Party; there is not that much difference. However, in spite of that general point of view, we know well about many thousands of senior citizens who have not only signed petitions against the Bill but have appeared before caucuses of Parliament and in front of the Parliament Buildings to ask us not to adopt the Bill. There have also been the Manitoba Coalition on Health and Higher Education, the National Federation of Nurses Unions, and the Consumers' Association of Canada.

Aside from these citizens' organizations we have had a great many newspaper editorials and columns such as the editorial which I read from The Toronto Sun. I will refer to more of them later.

We have also had reactions from provincial Governments. It is not every time that a provincial Government, let alone several provincial Governments, undertakes to make its views known on a Bill going through Parliament. Some Bills concern them, and some do not. Evidently this Bill concerns not only the producers of drugs, including producers of generic drugs in Canada as well as multinational corporations, and not only consumers. It also concerns provincial Governments.

We have had representations from the Government of Manitoba. Hon. Members on the other side may wish to assume that that is only because it happens to be a New Democratic Government. However, Saskatchewan is a rootin'-tootin' Conservative Government and it is unhappy with the Bill, as are the Saskatoon City Council, the Government of Ontario, the Government of Prince Edward Island, and the Government of Newfoundland. Good heavens, the Government of British Columbia is lined up against the Bill. If there were ever an enthusiastic backer of wide-open, wild-eyed, absolutely no holds barred, laissez-faire free enterprise, it is the Government of British Columbia, but it is against the Bill.

The reason is plain enough. Under our public health insurance system the Governments of the provinces are responsible for managing the costs of public health insurance, and prescription drugs are a very significant part of those costs. The Governments of the provinces know, whether they are New Democrat, Liberal, or Conservative, that the costs of prescription drugs are going to go up and that the Governments of the provinces will be stuck with paying those costs.

There is a very wide section of public opinion in Canada—consumers, producers of generic drugs who have been very beneficial to Canada for many years now, provincial Governments, and even municipal Governments in some cases—that is against the Bill which the Government insists on driving through. The Senate tried once to amend this Bill. It was turned back. It tried again with a much more modest set of amendments, and the Government wants to turn back most of those too.

• (1620)

It is clear that the Government stands very much alone in Canada without the support of the general population, without the support of the other Governments in Canada, without the support even of the Senate. It is well known that the Senate is never tainted by the presence of any New Democrat or former Member of the CCF.

Mr. Boudria: Oh, yes, it is.

Mr. Heap: They are all good solid members of the Liberal or Conservative Parties or Independents.

Mr. Duguay: Forsey was a CCFer all his life.

Mr. Heap: Senator Forsey was a CCF member but not all his life. He left the NDP a good while before he became a Senator.

Mr. Boudria: What about Hazen Argue?

Mr. Heap: The Government stands almost alone in Canada. It has a few allies, but they are not really in Canada. The Government has its allies in the multinational corporations which are producing the drugs, the expensive drugs, and they want to produce more expensive drugs. Local branches of multinational corporations are the nearest thing inside Canada, leaving out President Reagan, that the Government has for supporters on the Bill.

Since Bill C-22 has not been moving through Parliament at the speed wanted, the companies have gone on "strike". For people on the other side of this House the word strike is usually a dirty word. The Government is accustomed to opposing strikes whether it is strikes of railway workers, inside postal workers, letter carriers or grain handlers. It takes measures to try to get rid of unions by making changes in corporate ownership. Yet the biggest corporations have a long and, they might think, honourable, and others may think dishonourable, record of going on strike when it suits them.

At the beginning of World War II when Canada declared war on Germany because our allies in Europe were threatened, most notably Britain and France, we needed munitions, tanks, airplanes, guns et cetera, and the Government went to the large corporations asking them to manufacture the necessary tools of war, and a contract was offered. It said, "We will give you a cost plus 5 per cent contract. Just tell us how much you paid for materials, plant and labour, add 5 per cent and we will sign the cheque". That was the deal. "You can put your brother-in-law on the payroll. He can sleep all through the shift and we will pay for it and add 5 per cent as well". The corporations went on strike. They would not accept that. They said "No, it has to be cost plus 10 per cent". Canada was at war. Canada needed the guns, the airplanes and so on. The Government signed for cost plus 10 per cent. That is when some of the corporations in Canada became as fat as they became then and have remained so since.

What we have now is the same sort of thing. We have a class system. If somebody working for wages says, "I won't work unless you give me more money, and all my friends in the union likewise won't work unless you give us more money or unless you improve our working conditions", whatever it is that is in dispute, "We won't work. We will withhold our labour unless you give us our demands", that is considered by Members on the government side to be not in the public interest. In fact, the Government is willing to put people in jail who do that. The Government has put people in jail—

An Hon. Member: Not us.

Mr. Heap: Your predecessors have, and they have done so in the provinces. Certainly their counterparts in Ontario put people in jail during the nurses' strike simply because they said, "We won't work".

Mr. Belsher: What about breaking the law?

Mr. Heap: But when corporations do that, they make sure they have friends on the government side of the House who write a law which makes them heroes for doing the very same thing as nurses or postal workers or others are made into criminals for. A strike is considered a noble thing when done by the rich and a bad thing when it is done by those who are not rich.

What we have here is a capital strike in which the company simply said, "We are not going to expand our production in Canada unless you give us this guarantee, this Bill, this licence to print money, by extending our patent rights into Canada for many more years".

Those are the kinds of friends which the Government has and those are the kinds of friends who rely on the Government. The Financial Post for October 26 had a story entitled "Drugmakers put plans on hold". It reads:

> Multinational drugmakers in Canada have responded to the stalling of the Government's new patent law with one voice. Until the Bill goes through, the industry's new research and development plans are on the back burner.

That is a strike, just like the postal strike, the letter carriers' strike and the railway workers' strike. Those people went on strike when it was legal. The Government passed laws in some of those cases to make a legal strike illegal. The Government does not have the law to make this strike of the drug makers illegal. The Government has never done that in any other capital strike either. This article in The Financial Post quotes

Mr. John Zabriski, President of Merck Frosst Canada Inc. as follows:

> The expansion is dependent on Bill C-22. We made that perfectly clear when we announced the research plans. We won't go ahead until the Bill is passed.

There it is, Mr. Speaker. That is the guarantee that drug makers are demanding and their friends in the Government have guaranteed to get for them. Will they give a return guarantee? Will that be written into the same law? No, Sir, not when it is done by the present Government, even though the Senate would have asked for it.

This is typical of the morality of the Government that we have now. It will do everything to legitimize the power and the wealth of the largest corporations and will use whatever force or law is considered necessary to limit the power and the income of people who have to earn their living by working for others, whether it be the railway workers, the postal workers, the grain handlers or whoever.

What we have is a very clear example of the power of the great corporations in this country. I think it is very unfortunate that the Government is so adamant. There was, according to rumours in the press, some consideration of a possible compromise. Apparently the Government not only has friends in the multinational corporations and the multinational friends in the Government, but there is one other even bigger ally behind them, namely the Government of the United States. There has been a long standing agreement between the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States to put through Bill C-22 without amendment. That was rumoured, suggested and hinted at over the past year during the debate. It was always furiously denied by whatever Minister was answering questions, including the Prime Minister. No, no, no, a thousand times no. The Tories would not think of making the drug Bill part of the free trade deal. But it was.

That came out a month ago at the time the free trade deal was being shown to the press. There was a hurried change and people were asked to give back their copies of the press release. Most of them gave it back. One journalist said there was one copy that was not given back, so we have a clear comparison between the first version that includes the drug patent Bill as part of free trade and the second version which has the page reprinted with that paragraph missing.

The combined power of the multinational corporations and the Government of the United States has insisted that this Bill go through Parliament unchanged. It is fairly clear, as the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) said, that one of the reasons for that is that these same multinational drug companies charge much higher prices in the United States, but Americans can read, Americans can travel and Americans can learn that the same drugs are cheaper in Canada. In fact, this is one cause of the difference in health costs.

The per capita cost of health is higher in the United States than it is in Canada, even though medical records show that the rates of mortality and morbidity are lower in Canada than in the United States. With less money per capita, we get better health care in Canada than Americans get in the United States. Part of the reason for that is the extortionate price of prescription drugs, freely charged by these same corporations in the United States.

Even though Canada comprises only 10 per cent of the industry's market, its population being only one tenth the size of the population of the United States, the corporations find the situation in Canada to be a dangerous example. Because Canadians have found it possible for some years to provide necessary drugs at lower prices, there is a danger that the people of the United States might demand the same thing. Therefore, the corporations have to force Canada to take this legislative step that will force the price of drugs up for Canadians and protect the profits of the multinationals not only in Canada but also in the United States.

It is a sad day when this Government lines itself up against the people of Canada, represented by thousands of seniors, against the medical experts of Canada, against the provincial Governments of Canada and against the Senate of Canada and and lines itself up with the multinational drug corporations whose head offices are elsewhere, and with the President of the United States. It shows clearly the principle of "Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also". That is where the Government's treasure is, with the wealthy.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) for the way in which he outlined the situation. A Montreal Gazette article of August 20 of this year refers to a letter the U.S. consumer advocate, Ralph Nader, wrote to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). According to the article, Mr. Nader said:

> —your Government is close to making a very serious mistake by choosing corporate wealth over the Canadian public's health and welfare.

In response to that, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) told the Commons on August 19, according to the same article:

> "What Mr. Nader fails to realize is, this is Canada not the U.S. We have medicare. We have a social safety net. We have 85 per cent of our population covered by drug plans, and virtually 100 per cent of our senior citizens. No one on welfare goes without drugs in this country."

What effect will Bill C-22 have on this great distinction that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has described? What effect will the Bill have on our medicare plan and on pharma-care programs in different provinces and what effect will it have on individual consumers who are not able to take advantage of those pharma-care programs?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. colleague for drawing that letter to my attention and for reminding me of Ralph Nader's intervention. It is comical that the Government, which likes to buddy up to the Government of the United States, likes also to scorn one of the most intelligent and courageous critics the American population has produced in our time, Ralph Nader, a man who has devoted his life to exposing corporate rip-offs, a man who has often visited Canada and probably knows a great deal about Canada. On a point like this, perhaps he knows better than the Minister does.

Certainly it seems as if the Minister does not know what he is talking about when he says that Ralph Nader is wrong because he does not know that we have health insurance in Canada. It appears that the Minister thinks that the cost of health care in Canada is paid somehow or other by manna from heaven, that it does not have to be paid for by the people, and that the corporations can inflate the cost of prescription drugs and get away with it. The Minister seems to be saying it is okay because it will be charged against provincial Governments. If the Minister really does not know where the money comes from, he ought to learn, but I think he probably does know. I think he is hoping that the people of the country do not know where it comes from.

In fact, drug plans and health plans will be priced higher than Governments are willing to pay and Governments like the one in British Columbia will advocate setting up a two tier system of health, a poor system for most people and a rich system for the rich people. That will be one of the results of this drug legislation.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, last night there were committee hearings looking at the free trade deal between Canada and the United States, this deal the present Government is trying to sell to the Canadian people as a pig-in-a-poke. The committee itself does not even have the full text of the agreement. Nevertheless, the committee heard from Mitchell Sharp, who is well known to the Canadian people as someone who himself has advocated free trade. He looked at the details that are available on this agreement and said that he cannot support it because he sees this as being an unconscionable loss of Canadian sovereignty to the United States. He says that it will result in—

Mr. Siddon: Is not he a Liberal?

Mr. Manly: He says it will result in a great—

Mr. Siddon: The Liberals all say the same thing.

Mr. Manly: He is a Liberal. Sometimes the Liberals are not quite sure what they are saying, whether they are in favour of something or not. It is something like the Progressive Conservative Party. We recall that just before the last election, during the leadership campaign, Progressive Conservatives were all saying, "Oh, no, we would not want to have free trade because if the Canadian mouse got into bed with the American elephant and it rolled over, what kind of a pizza would that make?"

The Liberals have the same problem as the Conservatives sometimes. They do not always say the same things from one time to the next. Nevertheless, what Mitchell Sharp said, and I would like to have the opinion of my hon. colleague on this, was that this free trade deal would put a great deal of pressure on Canada to ensure that our laws are brought into conformity with the laws of the United States and that our social policies and practices will be brought into conformity with those of the United States. Is this not already happening with Bill C-22?

Here in Canada, there has been legislation that has been beneficial to the Canadian people as a whole, but now, in order to curry favour with the United States and to ensure that this free trade agreement will be accepted, we have gone ahead and accepted changes to our drug patent legislation that are inimical to the interests of the Canadian people. I would like my hon. colleague to comment on this statement by Mitchell Sharp.

• (1640)

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, apparently what Mitchell Sharp was referring to was the fact that the main attack by the U.S. on the Canadian economy is around the question of subsidies. They want to interpret as subsidies what Canadians have struggled for and produced as social legislation, things such as health care, unemployment insurance, regional equalization and so on. The Americans want to accuse us of using those things as subsidies for anything we may export, whether it be softwood lumber, fish, or steel. They will use the same argument against the health care system if we even try to increase benefits in order to pay for the extortionate drug charges the Government will force on people. The U.S. will say that is a subsidy and your products will be excluded from the U.S. because the Government is paying for the health care costs forced on Canadians by this legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On debate, the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly).

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that we would be considering putting the question on this important issue at the present time. Just on a point of order, I certainly do not think the House was ready for the question. The Hon. Member for Vancouver East—

Mr. McDermid: She was not even in the House when he called the question.

Mr. Manly: —is prepared to speak, and just on a point of order, I do not think we are ready for the question.

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) on debate.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The bus was a wee bit slow. I apologize.

I am somewhat ambivalent about having this opportunity to speak to Bill C-22 which has now returned to the House of Commons for the third time.

An Hon. Member: Do you have a new speech?

Ms. Mitchell: Despite the fact we do not agree with the Senate action, and I think it is unfortunate that we did not take some of those steps proposed a couple of years ago to control the Senate in this regard, we must say that we continue to oppose the Bill.

As everyone knows, the Bill will give 10 years of exclusive monopoly to the manufacturer of new, innovative brand name drugs. What do we get in exchange? The companies say they will put $1.4 billion into research and development, creating an estimated 3,000 jobs. They also say this will encourage new discoveries and act as an incentive for manufacturing drugs in Canada. The Bill also provides for an independent drug prices review board. It sounds good when you hear it, but it has no teeth so it is not really that meaningful.

The Bill also provides for a review by the Government after four years and by a parliamentary committee in the tenth year. By then, of course, consumers will have paid a considerable amount of money that they would not have had to pay under current legislation. The opponents of the Bill estimate this kind of monopoly will prevent consumers from obtaining lower cost generic labelled drugs which, in many instances in the past, have been about half the cost of brand name drugs. It is no wonder that people right across Canada are concerned about this Bill. It is not just opposition Parties, or the Liberal Senators who to some degree are playing games. I have heard from senior citizens in my riding, health organizations such as the B.C. Health Coalition, and petition after petition after petition has been presented from people opposed to this Bill for very legitimate reasons. They feel it is a life and death matter. If they have to use prescription drugs, they want to be able to afford the cost. That cost will probably double under this legislation.

I know many people on this side of the House have mentioned these points before, but we are concerned that drug prices will increase at a time when the strain on health care budgets is also increasing. In British Columbia we hear all the time about the escalating costs of health care. Unfortunately, the Government of that province sees a solution to that problem in establishing a two-tier medicare system. We find that completely intolerable. They want to have private hospitals for the rich where people will not have to wait and will have all kinds of luxuries. Then they would have a poorly financed ordinary system for everyone else.

Realistically, we do have a real problem with the cost of health care across Canada. The results of this Bill will mean that hospitals are going to have to pay a considerable amount more for drugs they are giving to their patients. It also means that Governments with pharma-care programs will have to pay a lot more. Certainly I hope most provinces have some coverage for low-income people and our seniors at least. It is too bad that it is not a universal program. Of course, the cost of drugs will also go up for consumers.

I feel particularly concerned about the people with chronic medical problems who require prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. I do not know how people on limited incomes and who suffer from diabetes, epilepsy or arthritis and who require regular prescription drugs, can afford those drugs right now. In fact, many of them cannot. Yet under this new plan it will be a terribly worrisome problem for many such people. As a result, many may not have their prescriptions filled. If they do not have pharma-care or some other coverage, it is quite possible that some will do without. That of course means a risk to their health.

The other criticism we have, and I will document this a bit more in a minute, is that there is real skepticism across the country about the great promises of lots of jobs and lots of research and development. It sounds like a real case of bribery so that the pharmaceutical companies will have a monopoly here as they have in the U.S.

We hear from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) that he thinks this is just great. Those of us opposing this Bill are opposing job creation and research and development. It is no wonder that we on this side, and I think a great many people outside, particularly our viewers, wonder if this is not another scam of the Conservative Government. We have heard statement after statement contradicted later and it is very hard to have any trust in what the Government is saying. We know, of course, that the pharmaceutical companies have a vested interest in this matter. Their spokesperson is Judy Erola, the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs under the Liberals. It is no wonder the Liberals are not speaking very strongly against this Bill tonight.

• (1650)

People are also opposed to this Bill as it relates to the so-called free trade deal. We call it the "Mulroney free trade deal". We have heard many statements in the House and have seen statements in the American documents about the free trade deal which make us very skeptical about what was happening behind our backs, about the footsie which was being played with the Americans. The documents which we saw certainly seemed to indicate that this had been discussed as part of the free trade negotiations. If you believe completely in an open border, it is understandable that you would expect multinationals to come into Canada and take over in the same way as they do in the United States. That, of course, is what the Government wants.

Some people make the argument that generic drugs may not be as safe or effective as brand name drugs. This point has been refuted and I will document that in my subsequent remarks.

As I understand it, the most recent Senate amendments to the drug patent legislation are quite modest. They only attempt to put into the legislation that which the Minister has promised verbally would be accomplished by Bill C-22. He said that $1.4 billion worth of research and development would be done by the multinational drug companies and that 3,000 high technology career opportunities would be created. If this is a fact and has been clearly documented, why not put it in the Bill? The Minister also said that we needed consumer protection on prices and a much tougher drug prices review board. That is what is provided for in the other amendment of the Senate. The amendments before us also abolish the retroactivity to June 27, 1986.

Leaving aside for the moment the fact that the Senate is not an elected body and should not be telling the House what to do, as we on this side firmly believe, and leaving aside the fact that the Government supports the idea of a Senate and only wishes that it had had the opportunity to make more patronage appointments in order to have more power over the Liberal Senators, why will the Minister not compromise? I would like to quote from an article in The Ottawa Citizen of October 27 of this year. It reads:

> Perhaps he doesn't want to disappoint the Bill's most vocal supporters, the people who work in the pharmaceutical industry. But surely they would not object to measures that strengthen the prospect of new jobs in their industry?
> Perhaps, as cynics have claimed all along, the drug Bill was really devised as a favour to the Reagan administration, and has nothing to do with Canada. That may be unfair. But why would the Government abandon the existing system, one that delivers affordable drugs in a competitive environment? The new legislation limits competition, threatens price stability, and opens the door for government intervention in the industry. It doesn't make sense. It never has.

I would like to deal with the cost of health care which will definitely increase under this Bill. Prices will go up for consumers. The generic competition stimulated by the 1969 amendment has saved Canadian consumers and taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars, some $211 million in 1983 alone. That is a lot of money. Provincial treasuries, which together spent over $800 million on drugs in 1983, have also saved enormous sums. Why are the provinces not knocking on the door and sending lobbyists to get the Government to rescind this Bill? I hope they have been doing that behind the scenes.

While insisting that the new policy will not cause drug prices to rise, the Minister has acknowledged that it may result in a delay of the price reduction associated with the introduction of new generic drugs. In fact, Canadian consumers can expect substantially higher costs during the 10 year delay in the introduction of each new generic drug as patent holding companies set prices at monopoly levels.

Despite its claims about drug prices, the federal Government will pay the provincial governments $100 million in transitional payments by 1991. The Government is admitting how much this will cost. That is the proof right there. It will come as scant consolation to Canadian taxpayers that at least until 1991 they will subsidize increased drug company profits through their federal taxes instead of their provincial taxes.

The B.C. Health Coalition had the following to say about the probable effects of increased costs in the Province of B.C.:

> The information kit provided by Consumer and Corporate Affairs Canada to promote Bill C-22 explains that there may be some impact on provincial pharmacare plans which were devised without detailed knowledge of the legislation. Accordingly, we propose a transitional payment to the provinces of $25 million per year for four years of this policy, leading up to its first full review.
> The B.C. pharmacare program is budgeted at $160 million for 1987-88. That is after increased deductibles were introduced to affect savings of $15.4 million and user fees for seniors were introduced to affect savings of $22 million. If the entire $25 million budgeted to compensate provincial pharmacare programs for the ill effects of Bill C-22 were given to B.C., it would be inadequate to restore this year's cutbacks. If B.C. gets only 10% of the $25 million compensation, then it would equal a mere 1.5% of the pharmacare budget for B.C.

One of the Ministers from B.C. is here. I hope he will take this back to his friends in the B.C. government. The B.C. Health Coalition continued:

> The higher prices that result from Bill C-22 will produce pressure for further cuts to provincial pharmacare programs. As was found in studies of patients in both London, Ontario, and Halifax, prices will deter some patients from filling prescriptions for essential medications.

Indeed, as the editorial in The Ottawa Citizen states, it does not make sense and it never has. Where is the logic in increasing costs at a time when all provinces are complaining about the strain of increasing health care budgets? We know what some of the motivations of the Government were. I refer to some of the backroom deals which were going on in the free trade negotiations.

With regard to research and development and the spin-off jobs which we are told will be created in order to bribe us to support this Bill, the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada claims that Bill C-22 will result in $1.4 billion in new research and development and in 3,000 high-tech career opportunities. According to the 1985 commission of inquiry on the pharmaceutical industry by Supply and Services Canada, expenditures on research and development in 1967 represented 3.5 per cent of the value of factory shipments while in 1982 this figure increased to 3.8 per cent.

Why would anyone believe that R and D activity will double under Bill C-22? Canada had no less pharmaceutical R and D after allowing generic competition than it did before 1969. The only evidence we have to support increased research and development are the promises of the pharmaceutical association members and, of course, the Minister.

We can contrast the threats and promises of the PMAC with the recent experience in the United States. The United States Consumers Report in August, 1987, stated that in early 1987 the U.S. House subcommittee on health and environment investigated recent hikes in prescription drug prices. They found in the United States that a 12.2 per cent increase in drug prices between July, 1985, and April, 1987, compared to only a 2.7 per cent increase in the Consumer Price Index during that time. Therefore, it is evident that the enormous amount of money generated by the multinationals through this kind of monopoly does not go primarily to R and D funding. There is no question that the revenue gains of some $4.2 billion, which is a considerable difference, goes to profits for the same multinational corporations as those that operate here in Canada.

There has been some question about the quality of generic drugs versus brand name drugs. There has been evidence to substantiate the fact that the active ingredients are the same as those in brand name drugs. The only difference is in the fillers, the shape and the colours.

I want to refer to Health and Welfare Canada and the Auditor General's report which stated that one of the big concerns is that Health and Welfare Canada is not looking carefully enough at the processing of drugs, and is not requiring enough evaluation by drug companies themselves.

Why should we change something that is working? The present system allows new drugs into the market but also allows no name drugs to be available at a reasonable price to consumers, hospitals and other medical plans. The drug patent legislation worked well since it was introduced in 1969. Canada has gone from having some of the highest cost drugs to the lowest cost drugs. This difference in cost and revenues has contributed a great deal to allowing us to develop and pay for one of the best, if not the best, medicare systems in the world.

I agree with my colleagues on this side of the House who ask the Government to withdraw this Bill. Let us think of the people of Canada rather than free trade deals under the table and pharmaceutical companies that want huge profits.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, was my colleague in the House yesterday when the Member from the Official Opposition talked about how inconsistent New Democrats have been on the issue of Bill C-22? When one looks around the Chamber now, one wonders if a comparison can be made between the New Democrats and the Liberals with respect to their commitment on this Bill, as manifest at this moment.

Mr. Siddon: There were only two of you 10 minutes ago.

Mr. McCurdy: Perhaps my colleague saw Canada AM on CTV this morning where there was another example of Liberal consistency.

The Hon. Member is aware of the active response to this Bill on the part of the two Opposition Parties as well as the general population. Would she care to comment on the consistency of the Official Opposition with respect to this legislation? I think we could have a very interesting discourse on that topic and I am anxious to hear what she says. I am sure my colleague, the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) would be interested as well. There is one other person here who might be interested in this kind of self examination, and perhaps you, Mr. Speaker, might be interested in hearing an examination of Liberal consistency on the issue of Bill C-22.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for his question. I was in committee yesterday afternoon and unfortunately was not privileged to hear all of the comments made by the Liberal Member. I will certainly read Hansard carefully.

It was most interesting to watch Canada AM this morning, on which there was a Liberal panel of two persons, each one taking opposite positions. One Member of the panel was the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs under the Trudeau administration, who was also the Minister for the Status of Women at that time. At that time, she was supposedly speaking on behalf of consumers. This morning, she was not speaking for consumers, but for the multinational pharmaceutical companies which are anti-consumer, if anything.

The other member of the panel, the critic in the present Liberal caucus, disagreed with everything this former Liberal Minister was saying. I might say that he spoke quite eloquently and I certainly agree with his position against the Bill.

Furthermore, the position of the Liberal Senators does not seem to be in co-operation with the Liberal caucus in the House, and certainly not with the Leader of the Liberal Party, who takes no responsibility for the shenanigans that are quite questionable from a traditional and parliamentary point of view.

I am sure the Hon. Member sitting to my right today will have many positive things to say. I know that he would not agree with the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs because he is very much committed to consumers, particularly to the voters in his own riding. I hope I have answered the Hon. Member sufficiently.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, a number of provinces, including my Province of Manitoba and the Hon. Member's Province of British Columbia, if I understand correctly, have developed pharma-care plans as part of their package for delivering high quality health care. A substantial part, if not all of the cost of prescription drugs is paid for by those plans which are funded through the tax system.

The Manitoba Government made representations to the parliamentary committee and pointed out that this Bill would have a very detrimental effect on its program. The Province of Manitoba has a substantial deficit in its funding. Therefore, it would either have to pay for this through the tax system or through an increase in the deterrent fees that Manitobans pay before they collect part of the cost from that pharma-care program. I wonder if the Hon. Member could explain to me how the system works in her Province of British Columbia?

• (1710)

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I think that is a most important point. As I mentioned several times in my remarks, we do have a pharma-care program in British Columbia and I am very proud to say that this was instigated by a New Democratic Government, and the same thing has happened in Manitoba. It is very interesting that the Social Credit Government, an ultra-conservative Government, has been in power in British Columbia for many years, but one thing it dared not take away is the pharma-care program. That is because it is so important to elderly people who rely so heavily on this plan to help cover the costs of their medical expenses.

As my colleague said, the big concern of, I am sure, even Social Credit Governments, as well as the Government of Manitoba, is that with the price of drugs going up, which would be a result of this legislation if it ever passes, there will be a tremendous burden on the provinces. I would think the provinces are going to have trouble covering their costs. In fact, the federal Government has even acknowledged this by offering compensation to the provinces, not nearly as much as they would have to pay out, but a token compensation, so even the Government admits that it is a real problem.

Another worry I have is that provincial Governments may not be able to maintain the pharma-care programs. In conservative areas it could be an excuse to do away with these programs. That would be a great worry. I think senior citizen groups across the country must surely feel very badly that the Government, which has appointed a Minister for seniors—and I note he has not been up on his feet speaking on this Bill—has failed to recognize this. These groups believe strongly in the pharma-care program and want to keep the costs of drugs down.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would love to join in this debate and point out how it is a debate for the future of this country, for the future of our young scientists and researchers who will be able to take meaningful jobs so that this country can get onto the cutting edge of high technology. Of course, we know the position of the New Democratic Party. It wants to keep everyone in poverty, as does every socialist government around the world.

I recently went through a list of 160 countries and the socialist countries are the ones which have the poorest people because they are denied any ability to get out and create jobs.

With those temperate words, I move:

That the House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment for the purpose of continuing consideration of the motion standing on the Order Paper in the name of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in relation to the amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those who object to this motion will please rise.

And fewer than 15 Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, just moments ago we were talking about honesty. We heard the Hon. Member, who just successfully introduced a motion for extension of the debate, give us another display of the consistent devotion to dishonesty and hypocrisy of the Conservative Government.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. McCurdy: I will repeat myself, Mr. Speaker. We have had another manifestation of the consistent devotion to dishonesty and hypocrisy of the present Government.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe the language that is being used is unparliamentary. In fact, the motion that was put before the House and passed is within our rules. It is allowing us to debate a very important Bill. What it is doing is putting us to work in the hours after six o'clock tonight, and Members of the New Democratic Party are objecting to working. That is their objection. Because we are following the rules of the House, and we had a motion pass, the Hon. Member is calling the Government dishonest. I think that language is excessive and he should be called to account for using that type of language in this Chamber.

Mr. Orlikow: Point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no need for me to hear the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) on that point of order. There are two things; first, the motion obviously was in order and decided to be so by the Speaker. I do not think there is a problem there.

With regard to the words mentioned by the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy), the Member knows the rules and I am sure he did not aim his remarks at any particular Member, at least that is the way I understood them. Therefore, if they were not aimed at a particular Member, the remarks are not unparliamentary. The Hon. Member has the floor on debate.

Mr. McCurdy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for exhibiting the keenness of hearing and intelligence so lacking on the other side. And in respect—

Mr. McDermid: Now look at the arrogance coming from over there.

Mr. Siddon: What a hypocrite. Now who is being dishonest?

Mr. McCurdy: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) called me a hypocrite. That was heard. It was directed specifically at me.

Mr. McDermid: He said: "Listen to the hypocrisy".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I did not hear the word. I will look at the "blues" and report back to the House.

Mr. McCurdy: Let us see if we cannot explain a couple of things to the Hon. Member. I did not object one whit to the extension of debate. I am perfectly willing to work here all night, and I chose my words very carefully, and I repeat again, that this Government is dishonest and hypocritical, and that is in order because it is the truth. On the other hand, distinctly heard on this side of the House was the specific epithet of "hypocrite" directed to me by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. That was clear. That person is, I guess, unfamiliar with courtesy and parliamentary language. However, we will not belabour the point because there are other more important things to address.

I think the most important thing to address within the context of dishonesty and hypocrisy are the statements made a moment ago by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary when he said that virtually every socialist and social democratic country in the world was condemned to poverty.

Mr. McDermid: He did not say that. There you go again.

• (1720)

Mr. McCurdy: That is foolishness. If those Hon. Members opposite, bleating like the hypocritical lambs they are, cannot accept that truth, then that is unfortunate. That just reflects how ill informed and how little they understand, as they little understand the notion of science and research.

I heard the Parliamentary Secretary talk about how many jobs will be created as a result of Bill C-22. What dishonesty, what hypocrisy from a Government that is about to reject an amendment from the Senate that would make it a requirement that the pharmaceutical manufacturers guarantee that 10 per cent of their receipts be devoted to just that. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) has said over and over again that the purpose of the Bill is to produce research in Canada on drugs and pharmaceuticals. He has said repeatedly that he has the promise of the pharmaceutical industry, not just for campaign contributions in the future, but for a significant contribution to research in Canada as a result of being relieved from the existence of generic drugs.

If Members of the Government were honest, if they were honest with the Canadian people, if they were being honest with all those young scientists on behalf of whom they purport to act, then they would have accepted this amendment. But we know that it is not the motivation of this legislation to create research in this country. It has always been transparently clear that even when they manage to understand what research and development is about they have not acted in order to encourage it with respect to this legislation or any other.

But with all of the bleating from the other side and the dishonesty from the Official Opposition, it is possible that the electors have forgotten what this is all about. What it is all about very briefly is this. There existed in Canada a situation up until the late 1960s in which the pharmaceutical companies which have fought for and obtained this legislation literally robbed the Canadian people, the sick and the maimed of their money at exorbitant rates by setting extraordinarily high costs for drugs in Canada, among the highest prices in the world. They made great profits. They made great profits under circumstances which are going to be recreated in Bill C-22. Even while they were making those great profits at the expense of the maimed, the sick and the ill they did not spend a significant penny on research in Canada.

As a matter of fact, while the present legislation has existed, legislation which created generic competition for patented drugs, the rate of research in Canada increased just as did the rate of employment in the pharmaceutical industry generally and which in the latter area exceeded the rate of employment creation in the United States, the home country of the pharmaceutical companies that this Government thinks it was elected to serve.

We have established as a result of the legislation of the 1960s generic licensing which has made it possible for Canadians to get drugs at cheaper costs than in the United States by a significant degree. Not only have we produced less expensive generic drugs but the patented products themselves have been available more cheaply. There can be no question whatsoever that the Government is in the process of legislating a situation in which not only will there not be generic competition, and therefore a situation in which new drugs will cost much more, 100 per cent more—perhaps 200 per cent more—but inevitably the generic drugs will cost more as time goes on.

This results from the fact that instead of the immediate prospect of licensing after a drug has been approved, that is after four or five years, these companies will now have in total 15 years to 17 years. Let me repeat that. Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association companies will have 15 years to 17 years of exclusivity. That means it will be in the year 2004—let me repeat that, the year 2004—by which time generic competitive drugs will be available to the Canadian people in lieu of the patent drugs which will be more expensive on their introduction than they presently are.

We heard yesterday the Liberal spokesman talk about honesty and consistency, and there has only been one spokesman. The Liberals with their tremendous consistency and their tremendous honesty on this issue have shown their true colours. They have quit fighting Bill C-22. Not another word will be heard from them, unless they change their minds. But, of course, they have not been able to get their stories straight. The fact of the matter is that it was a White Paper introduced by Members of the Liberal Government that started the process of this Bill in the beginning. It was they who established the Eastman report. It was the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who was the initiator of the changes which have been produced through Bill C-22. It was a former Liberal Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who appeared on CTV this morning and argued with her former Liberal colleague about whether there should or should not be a Bill C-22. It is a Liberal Senate that is sending the Bill back while it has had a firm notion of what it should do for a long, long time.

While the Liberals have been having a heck of a time making up their minds what to do, the New Democrats got in touch and worked with the senior citizens of the country and produced petition after petition against Bill C-22 which we tabled in the House while the Liberals still play around trying to figure out what to do. Consistency and honesty from the Liberal Party, well, that would represent a severe change in character, one that would come to us all in an unexpected fashion.

The New Democrats have been clear about where they stand. They are opposed to Bill C-22. What is before us now are the amendments from the Senate. The amendments from the Senate are very simple. One says that written into the legislation should be something which I am sure the Government will regard as very, very offensive, something that will certainly be in contradiction to promises made to the pharmaceutical industry that the Government serves, that is, that there should be—absolutely should be—research done by the pharmaceutical manufacturers if they are to retain their patents.

In other words, the Senate would implement the promises of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. We know he does not regard that as desirable because there was never any intention on the part of the Government to ensure that that research would be done. That is their dishonesty, that is their hypocrisy. They said they would ensure that prices would not rise beyond the rate of the Consumer Price Index. One of the other amendments suggested by the Senate is that that should be in the legislation, too. We could not have that in the Bill. That would mean that the Government would, by legislation, keep a promise.

We know that that would be honest and that it would eliminate hypocrisy to live up to a promise. This Government, by practice, by habit, does not live up to its promises. That is the record of the Government which has put it at 24 per cent in popularity. That is the record of the Government that will have it condemned by the electorate. It will justifiably be condemned because legislation such as Bill C-22 is not in the interests of the Canadian people. It is in the interests of its controllers down in Washington.

I issue a challenge to this Government. It is very simple. Accept the amendments that would require it to fulfil its promises and we will go along with it.

• (1730)

Let us do this instead of the silly nonsense of that unleashed pit terrier running around condemning the Senate for doing what the people want. Let us all join together and do what the people want and take care of the Senate under other circumstances.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I find it rather interesting that we have a new position now from the New Democratic Party. It has just been announced. I am sure the Liberals will be interested in this—that if they accept the amendments they will support the Bill. They will support the Bill. That is what he said. It is a new policy. His critic is paling down here in the front.

Mr. Orlikow: Not at all.

Mr. McDermid: I am not sure that he will make it through the sitting tonight. However, they said that they are going to support it, if they accept the amendments. It is another new position from the New Democratic Party.

I want to ask the Hon. Member a question. He was bragging about Italy, that great socialist country. He was mentioning it earlier. The last country in the western world to have a law like the one we have in Canada which we are trying to change was Italy. Does he know when Italy removed it? It was when it joined the European Common Market, because as part of the membership it had to provide patent protection for those people who made discoveries. Does he know who brought in that law in Italy?

Mr. Rodriguez: Who?

Mr. McDermid: Mussolini. Mussolini brought that law in. It was the only other country in the world that had it.

I ask him, if he is bragging about all these socialist Governments over there, why do they not have a Bill which throws the thing wide open and does not offer patent protection for those people who invest millions, millions, and millions of dollars and do not get a decent return on their investment?

Why do those great socialist Governments about which he is talking not have the type of legislation that we have here in Canada and that we are trying to change so that it is the same in all countries of the modern world?

It is not just the United States. The NDP keeps trying to say that this is a deal from the United States. What poppycock! Italy, Germany, Switzerland, and Britain are all countries that have said: "Look, bring your law into line with the laws around the world on patent protection", and that is what we are doing.

He is bragging about socialist Governments over there; why do they not have a law like that?

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, it is a solid record that they are establishing. I said earlier that the Government was characterized by dishonesty and hypocrisy. I also suggested before that it may be even, indeed in some instances, characterized by a lack of keenness in hearing if not in intelligence.

I will repeat what I actually said. I said that we will support these amendments, and the consequence of our supporting—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McCurdy: Oh, yes—

Mr. McDermid: We will check the "blues" on that one.

Mr. McCurdy: We will check the "blues", and if there has been an inadvertent injection of a word that seems to change the intent of what I said, let me make it clear. We will support the amendments, and then I suspect we can all go home.

I find it curious but characteristic that a Government that would refuse to reject the attribution of Nazism to those who oppose its actions would revert to Fascist Italy to find examples for an additional attack.

Mr. McDermid: The Government did not say that.

Mr. McCurdy: I guess it is just a search for identification with those who, in many respects, have a closer identification with their philosophy than with ours.

However, I must say that I am not entirely clear on what it is that Italy under Mussolini was supposed to have done or not to have done. I am not entirely clear what socialist Governments are supposed to have done or not to have done. However, let us just say this: Canadians were proud of the fact that we had a unique regime in respect of patented drugs and generic drugs, which had as its function some measure of control of intellectual property but the balance of which was on the side of serving the people of this country rather than foreign-owned pharmaceutical companies that would exploit the poor and the sick.

Perhaps they have forgotten how this piece of legislation originated. This is how it originated. The President of the United States came to Quebec City. He was sitting there talking with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and the President said: "Look, Brian, you have got to do something about it. You are giving drugs to sick people cheap and it has got to stop".

We have had a lot of bleating and complaining that none of this had anything to do with the free trade agreement. However, we know, they know, and Canadians know that this is a Government which has not been able to identify for whom it is supposed to work. I will tell him for whom it is supposed to work. It is for the Canadian people.

If they say that this Bill is going to produce research, then they ought to accept that there should be guarantees that that research will be done. If they say that they are going to control prices, then they ought to accept amendments which would ensure that that will be the case.

If the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has difficulty understanding that or understanding our intent, let me repeat it for him one more time. We have a couple of minor amendments which make a lot of sense from the Government's point of view. We still do not like this legislation, but if we accept those amendments—and we will vote for them—then I suspect that we will all be able to go home, on this particular matter, with some degree of satisfaction that at least the Government has tried to live up to its promises.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to join, with limited time to anticipate the experience, in a debate in the House. It is not that this is a Bill about which we do not know anything. After all, Bill C-22 has been troubling the Parliament of Canada and the people of Canada for many months, since the Conservative Government came into office in 1984 and began breaking election promises and began damaging the interests of the Canadian people.

I want to take a few moments to consider the unseemly history of the particular Bill by way of taking a position. I see before me a most unlikely—

Mr. McDermid: Well, you look so lonely over here all by yourself.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): My friend from the other side has crossed over to sit in our area. It leaves me a little uneasy, but I am never troubled by being alone. New Democrats have had a long history of small numbers, but of course things look different these days partly because of legislation of the sort at which we are looking in Bill C-22.

The history of this Bill has been a very, very strange one. We have a Bill which the Government claims it brought forward because of its own understanding of it being in the national interest. On the other side, we have made charges that the Bill exists for one reason alone, that is, to satisfy the demands of American interests, multinational pharmaceutical companies that have resented the fact that the Parliament of Canada decided in 1969 to protect the interests of Canadians by ensuring that drugs could be made available in generic copies to Canadians at lower prices than pharmaceutical manufacturers which had developed the drugs were continuing to sell them, long after they had recouped development costs and should have in fact been reducing the prices in order to save consumers money.

In 1969 Canadians found themselves, and I would submit that they continue to do so, in a situation in which pharmaceutical companies will continue doing their research and all important work far from our shores. It will be done near the headquarters of the various companies.

We have had a promise held out, the only possible element in the proposal which could be in the national interest, that there will be research done in Canada that will create jobs. Of course we have dealt with the particular suggestion in the past that this will be important employment. I see the Minister, who has had involvement with science and technology before, and I see others from various provinces of Canada on the other side. They know that there is a great desire in the Montreal area to have some of this employment. We have the strongest suspicions that the kind of work that will be done will be in the way of consumer testing to satisfy the licensing authorities that the drugs are safe and so on. The basic research required in pharmaceutical development will not take place in Canada.

The question of where the Bill fits in involves far more than the question of what its importance will be to employment in Canada or what its immediate consequence will be, leading to higher prices for pharmaceuticals. The Canadian consumer will lose money, most of which we are sure will be transferred out of Canada to enrich the shareholders and owners of the pharmaceutical companies. It will do nothing for Canadians. That conviction is one about which we are absolutely convinced.

The question of where this Bill fits in as it pertains to dealing with the United States has produced some of the strangest contradictions. It has left us, the Canadian people and commentators in the media convinced that we are getting far less than the truth. I recognize that describing this situation precisely would be unparliamentary. It is one of those situations that faces us when we are told things that tempt us to unparliamentary description of what a Minister is insisting on when he says that this Bill has nothing to do with the free trade negotiations and the Mulroney trade deal. This is quite apart from pressure from the multinational corporations. Those particular assertions simply stretch the credulity of the entire Canadian population. I doubt if anyone believes those particular protestations.

Mr. McDermid: John Bulloch.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): The pharmaceutical manufacturers protested the original legislation of 1969. They have been seeking the kind of change which Bill C-22 involves. They have been seeking it for a long time. They found a Government that could be suckered into accepting it. To suggest that the Bill has nothing to do with the free trade negotiations may represent just that element of truth of which this Government should be thoroughly ashamed.

Mr. McDermid: It has absolutely nothing to do with it.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Instead of coming to the table with the Americans and approaching the U.S. Government with a proposal that we want to look at the possibility of better relations between the two countries and consider the various elements objectionable in Canada—listing items, laws, the administration of trade laws and so on—something else was done. We should decide what should be changed, and that in a more leisurely way, and then when we come to agreement come to Parliament and change the law. But we all know perfectly well that that is not what the Government did. Instead of approaching the U.S. administration in 1985 with the whole panoply of Canadian legislation relating to all sorts of things such as the way in which we governed our energy resources, the way in which we endeavoured to control foreign investment and the way in which we were ensured that pharmaceutical manufacturers did not exploit Canadian consumers indefinitely—instead of recognizing that there were various items in Canada which the Americans might well want to say something about—what did the Government begin to do? It proposed laws weakening the Foreign Investment Review Agency grievously and destroying attempts to ensure that energy resources would be in the control of the Canadian people for their own interest. It should have ensured that the pharmaceutical manufacturers, as I have said, would not be able to go on exploiting indefinitely. But the Government put these proposals forward.

Under the rules of this House there were limits on how long we could resist measures, given the Government's majority. We sometimes face the action that we have tonight in the extension of hours. The Government has taken advantage of its majority and rammed things through. It has used the kind of power that if the Conservatives had been in Opposition, they would have screamed all over the country and would have been prepared to storm the Speaker's chair the way they did in the last Parliament. They were capable of any kind of parliamentary measure. Many of these items which should have been very, very large bargaining chips to balance those items which the Americans were determined to keep on their side, which the U.S. negotiators would not concede, were given away here in Parliament long before the negotiations went to the table. The assertion that Bill C-22 has nothing to do with the talks with the United States is not, in my opinion, true.

Mr. McDermid: It is true.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): If it were true, the Government should be ashamed of making the assertion because this measure is one the Government should have had at the table in order to extract concessions from the Americans.

Mr. McDermid: It was a campaign promise and the people supported it.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Given the way in which this bunch has run the affairs of Canada, given the way in which it has been prepared to sell out the national interest, given its readiness, as the summary of the agreement with the Reagan administration now indicates, to give up control of energy resources, given its readiness to abandon almost completely any significant way for the middle range and smaller companies in Canada to any real review on foreign investment, given its readiness in one area after another to sacrifice the national interest in the trade deal, we are here again tonight considering how to deal with Bill C-22.

We have a Bill that does pose difficulties. We have another mess of things in the way in which the Conservative dominated Commons has exploited its power. It faces a Liberal dominated other place in which Senators are able to take advantage of the dominance they have in opposition to this measure. We recognize in our caucus that that poses some very real difficulties for us.

We have a Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and Ministers who have damned the other place. It was completely unseemly the way the Conservatives have taken advantage of the patronage trough, the Senate and other places, as much as they have. The Prime Minister conceded just days ago in Halifax that he completely underestimated the desire of the Canadian people to chuck the whole system and to have a real recognition of merit in the appointment of people. These people have taken every advantage of every Senate opening. The Prime Minister has dumped friend after friend into the Senate. We have people upset by what those who still have the majority have done in the way of trying, from their perspective, to improve the Bill. If I were to go into this matter and consider what we have before us which my good friend, the Hon. Member from Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy), was dealing with a few minutes ago, we have a very nice question of how to regard what has come before us in this second return of the Bill from the other other place.

Editorial writers, commentators of various sorts in The Globe and Mail and other periodicals have written article after article. Now I do not have any particular sympathy with the New Democratic Party, no sense, I presume, of our conviction that the other place should have been got rid of a long time ago.

We have the other place sending the Bill back this time with amendments which do not weaken the Bill from the Government's perspective. I want to be very clear about the distinction I am drawing here. I am talking about Bill C-22 as the Government has put it forward, has defended it in the House, has defended it in committee and to the Canadian people. The Bill is designed to ensure that there is more research in Canada. We are told the Bill is designed to allow some increase in prices but not any exorbitant price increases. We are told by the Government that gouging of the Canadian consumer by pharmaceutical manufacturers will not happen.

The people in the other place have been very canny this time. They said: "There is no point in destroying the Bill with amendments, let us take the Government at its word and bring amendments forward to deal particularly with those two items". The amendments will ensure that there really will be research done in Canada. The guarantees would be provided in the Bill so that Members of both Houses and Canadian consumers can be sure that there will be some real return on this particular weakening of our licensing provisions.

There is much concern across the country about higher costs. As a matter of fact, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has conceded that prices will go up. He offered provincial Governments a certain increase in funding to cover the increased costs they would incur in administering provincial drug plans for senior citizens and others. That concession surely was an honest admission that there would be an increase in costs about which the Canadian people had previously not had to worry.

Senators gave us amendments which provide that the Government's declarations be written into the Bill. Ultimately, as we all recognize, when votes take place to determine what will happen, the majority rules. Senators have asked the majority, the governing caucus, to ensure that the guarantees are there for the Canadian people.

Those assurances, both on the side of research and on the side of limited price increases, are ones that we think are right. We recognize, of course, that they were offered by the Government in a desperate attempt to sell a Bill that has never been popular with the Canadian people and is not now popular.

I suppose one of the reasons the people in the other place continue to hold this Bill back is that they realize that the closer we come to the next election, the more difficult it will be for the Conservative Government, which sees itself at about 25 per cent in the public opinion polls, going down to a defeat just about as sure as the one suffered by Richard Hatfield and his colleagues, to sell this Bill. The Government will become more and more uncomfortable about what it is dumping on the Canadian people.

These proposals from the other place take the Government at its word and ask the Government to put into the law of the land that which has been promised. They ask the Government to ensure that the promises are engraved in stone in a way that will allow future Governments to work with them and in a way that will allow the people of Canada to have assurances of what they will receive in return for this particular weakening of Canadian licensing laws.

What have we been given? We have been given the Government's refusal. That brings us back to the question of why Bill C-22 was put forward in the first place. Why should promises made in the House and outside not be put into the Bill where they might actually acquire some real force?

Whether the Bill was part of the negotiations on trade or not is a nice question. If it was not, it should have been. If it was not, then why do we want to avoid confining those who will be the beneficiaries of this Bill, the pharmaceutical manufacturers? Is the Government so weak-kneed, so much in the pocket of big interests which have been pressing for this for years, is the Government so much the lackey of those interests that it cannot accept proposals that would provide some real guarantee to the Canadian people?

Of course, for this Conservative Government, those are purely rhetorical questions. It is completely the prisoner of these interests and if it did not do this because of the trade negotiations, it clearly made promises somewhere along the line. There were sacred trusts for the Canadian people uttered on the airwaves and in public meetings, but behind closed doors, the rich have done very well for a long time with the tax laws and the other laws. They continue to do well whatever the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) may say, because behind those closed doors, Conservatives were making promises. They are now acting on those promises.

The other place is the place where many of the friends of Conservative Members have been appointed and are expecting to enjoy a long life on the dole. It is a system of indoor relief for the lucky people in the Canadian patronage system. Even when suggestions are made by those from from that place, the Government does not take them at their word. It refuses them and remains completely the lackey of the pharmaceutical manufacturers it so obviously has been.

If government Members had the kind of honour that one expects of Members of Parliament and if they acted on that kind of honour, they would accept these amendments and put them into the law. Nothing is lost to the Canadian people. If there is nothing to be sacrificed by Canadians, I guess there might be something to be lost by the pharmaceutical manufacturers who will do their darndest to make up for 18 years of facing competition from generic producers. They will do their share of milking the Canadian public now that they will have their chance after this Bill is passed.

Presumably, at some later hour today, we will see that bunch on the other side of the House pass this Bill in a form other than that which the Senate sent to us, and we will see this particular unseemly struggle go on. So be it. With every month that passes, we get closer to the next election. Bill C-22 will be one more reason to turf them all out.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, listening to the fine speech of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp), I would be inclined to ask him to give us the benefit of his thoughts on the retroactivity clause that is being proposed in this Bill.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, that a Bill take effect only after it has been passed expresses a principle that should govern the legislation of this country generally if not always. We have far too much done by ministerial edict.

Tax changes and Ways and Means Motions are passed many months down the road, sometimes so embarrassingly late that the people in Department of National Revenue have trouble getting tax forms reflecting changes ready for the people. Those are nice expressions of the ineffectiveness of the Government's ability to achieve its goals as fast as it wants to, although I should not throw that particular charge at this particular Conservative majority.

The proposition that a measure should receive full debate, be properly considered, be proclaimed and then go into effect at a future date is the correct proposition. To work instead in this way with an earlier date, no matter what happens to the Bill, is surely a perversion of the parliamentary system. It is to be thoroughly rejected as I have rejected it.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my hon. friend a question. He was a professor at a Canadian university before he came here as a Member of Parliament and I think he can answer this question. The Parliamentary Secretary who moved the motion extending the hours of debate made the claim that more than 100 countries with socialist Governments are among the poorest countries in the world.

I do not have a complete list in front of me, but it is my understanding that Norway, Sweden, Spain, Greece, Australia and New Zealand now have democratic socialist Governments. Among the countries which have had, and will have again, democratic socialist Governments are Denmark, Holland, Belgium, France, West Germany, Portugal, and Great Britain. That is by no means a complete list.

If I understand correctly, those countries have among the highest standards of living in the world. They also have the most well-developed systems of social security, including old age pension, health care, and unemployment programs. Can the Hon. Member put on his history professor hat and comment on the ignorance or otherwise of the Parliamentary Secretary who made that charge?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I thank my good friend for that question. It allows me at the outset to make one particular distinction which the Canadian people want made. It is people on the other side, who are so given to perversion of the truth, that want to gloss over a distinction. That distinction is between the democratic socialists of the European countries my good friend has referred to, and those other countries, often calling themselves socialists, which, in one form or another, live under a dictatorship. In those countries the attempt to achieve reform occurs with the greatest of difficulty. My good friend was talking about the democratic socialist countries, and it is the traditions of those countries in which we live.

Our rivals on the left, if you will, always know what we are doing when we say we are democratic socialists. We are drawing just that kind of distinction. We are in association, if you will, with our friends in the Scandinavian countries. We are in sympathy with our friends in the British Labour Party, the Socialist Party of France, and the Social Democratic Party of the Federal Republic of Germany. We are also in sympathy with those Mediterranean countries which have in the last 10 years or so, thank God, achieved freedom from right-wing military Governments—

Mr. McCurdy: Conservative Governments.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): —conservative Governments and worse, and now live again under democratic Governments. They have elected socialists, as in the case of Prime Minister Papandreou in Greece.

What we have among those countries, as we know, is not the world's poorest countries. We can choose only one example because it is the most senior of them all and looked to for that reason. That country is Sweden. It entered the 1930s facing many economic challenges, as so many countries did. We know what happened on Wall Street in 1929, and the ramifications that had for other economies of the western world. We have been reminded of that in the events of the last few days when one stock exchange after another crashed.

In Canada, the U.S. and other countries we saw reactionary legislation. We saw protectionist policies which dragged other countries down. We saw clashes between the rich and poor become more and more intense. We saw Governments appearing which might be ready to experiment, as in the case of the American administration under Franklin Delano Roosevelt. That Government had no clear sense of how to get out of that situation and it remains a good historical question whether all the New Deal measures in the U.S. did get them out of the Depression in any significant way throughout the 1930s.

What did we see in Sweden? We saw a social democratic Party that was prepared to bring labour and capital together. We saw a Government sensitive to that kind of social harmony. It recognized the need for social programs and a government role in the economy. Through the 1930s it succeeded in avoiding the depths of the Depression which hit so many other countries. I need not remind you that those years produced Nazism which forged its way toward the horrors of World War II. Its racist policies were written across the face of Europe. We suffered the destruction of millions of people. That is what the failure of liberal constitutionalism in Germany produced.

Compare that with Sweden where we saw a Government which endeavoured to bring the classes together, avoid the great disparities which existed in other countries, and through sound economic and social policies make Sweden an envied country in Europe. Whatever we North Americans think in our happy days of our situation here, that is what democratic socialism represents. As my good friend suggested, the ignorance of Members and Parliamentary Secretaries and so on is never better revealed when they suggest that socialist countries are the poorest countries on earth.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in his rather pathetic speech yesterday in the House the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) made two points that I would like to argue with because they are a flagrant demonstration of either ignorance or impotence.

First, as you will find at page 10665 of yesterday's Hansard, the Minister talks about a commitment from industry to spend 10 per cent of sales on research, and about writing it into the law and making it specific. As you may recall, that was the Senate recommendation. After all, it is an important commitment and should find its way into the legislation. Yesterday the Minister took the position that that cannot be done. He went on for a considerable length of time attempting to prove why that cannot be done. Time is too valuable to examine each of the examples given. All I can say is that they are unconvincing and shallow, if not empty. The commitment to put at least 10 per cent of sales into research and development here in Canada is one of the main points of this agreement.

The Minister went on to say in his intervention that it is unacceptable that the Senate should exercise a veto over the House of Commons on Bill C-22. Let me remind him that he still does not understand what is going on in Parliament. The Senate has not vetoed anything. The Senate has performed within the constitutional mandate given to it. There is no evidence anywhere—and it is astounding that the Minister would raise this red herring—that the Senate has used a veto power on Bill C-22. The Government has been shadow boxing in an attempt to create an impression that the Senate has gone beyond its constitutional boundaries. I have looked into this matter because it is important that Canadians know in detail what is going on. It is alleged that the Senate is flouting constitutional convention in the debate on the drug patent Bill and I would like to place on the record clearly what is happening.

• (1810)

The Senate is not rejecting the Bill nor vetoing it. It is only proposing amendments. Surely no one in this Chamber, including the Government, and particularly the Minister, would deny the right of the Senate to do that. It is constitutional. It has been done in the past and as long as the Senate exists in its present form it will continue to do so.

The next question is whether the amendments would be fatal to the Bill, whether they take away the proposed 10 year monopoly of the multinationals. They do not. Do they prevent or discourage the companies' proposed investments? They do not.

The next question which arises is what they do. They strengthen the Bill by doing four things. One, they strike out the retroactive feature of it. That is very important because the inclusion of that provision would penalize products already on the market. Second, they make the companies' promises of investment part of the law. In other words, they make them legally binding. Third, they provide for the withdrawal of benefits to companies which do not live up to their promises. Fourth, they strengthen the safeguards against excessive price increases both when a new drug is introduced and during its monopoly period.

What is wrong with all of that, Mr. Speaker? The Government says the Bill is perfectly acceptable. It is certainly acceptable to the multinationals, to the Government, and to certain people and organizations. However, I submit that it is manifestly unacceptable to the generic drug companies, the Consumers' Association of Canada, the opposition Parties in the House of Commons, and the Senate.

Let us tackle for a moment the alleged constitutional convention. Some university professors have pointed out that the Senate, as an appointed body, has no political mandate to obstruct the elected House of Commons. They go on to say that it is accepted by opposition as well as government Senators that the appointive nature of the Senate must necessarily make its rule subordinate—and I emphasize "subordinate"—to the elected House.

The question is how subordinate it must be. It would be hard to find an authority for the view that the Senate can never reject a Bill passed by the House of Commons. Certainly the Senate would never throw out a Bill for which the electors had given the House of Commons a clear mandate. The question is whether the drug patent Bill was part of the election platform of the Progressive Conservative Party during the last election campaign. The answer is clearly that it was not.

We can then move on to the next question, namely, whether there is any convention which says that the Senate is bound to pass a Bill on which the electors have never been consulted and which might be passed by the Commons only in its dying moments. Is there any convention which says that the Senate must pass a Bill to which the majority of the provinces object? As you know, six provinces object to this Bill. After all, the Senate was created partly to protect the interests of the provinces in matters under federal jurisdiction.

Is there any convention which says that the Senate cannot, in a matter which it considers sufficiently grave, insist that the Government submit that matter to the test of the general election? It did precisely that with Borden's naval aid Bill in 1913 and it passed the first old age pension Bill only after the Government which proposed it had been returned in the election of 1926.

I am not one to quote readily, but I thought that Sir John A. Macdonald summed it up well when he said: "It is only valuable as being a regulating body calmly considering the legislation initiated by the popular branch and preventing any hasty or ill-considered legislation which may come from that body, but it will never set itself against the deliberate and understood wishes of the people".

These are the words of a Prime Minister who cannot be accused of being a wide-eyed radical, a member of the political left. Everyone knows to which Party Sir John A. Macdonald belonged.

We know that the Fathers of Confederation wanted the Senate to bring sober second thought to bear on radical legislation passed by the House of Commons. The phrase "sober second thought" is often used. The Fathers of Confederation feared radical legislation of the left. However, why should the principle not apply equally to radical legislation of the right? I invite any Member on the government side to answer the question.

I will now deal with the issue which must be of particular interest to most Canadians, that is, the cost of this legislation to them. I am told that in 1983, according to the studies carried out by the Eastman commission, the savings to Canadians resulting from the direct substitution of generic products was $211 million. It is estimated that in today's figures that would be worth over $500 million. This does not include the savings derived from lower brand name prices because of competition. The proposed change in Bill C-22 would eliminate those savings for all new products for a period of 10 years. This could cost provincial drug plans and individual consumers hundreds of millions, in fact billions, of dollars over the years ahead.

It is also important to remember that the protection of the public interest is deeply entrenched in our philosophy and the reason which motivates the participation in the debate on this Bill. The public interest is protected by means of a compulsory licensing system that engages early enough in the process so as to moderate prices through competition. That is why we object to the time period being proposed to multinational companies for new products that they will bring on the market.

The interesting point in this debate is that the Senate, in its second round of amendments, has given the House of Commons a set of proposals which reflect, virtually word for word, the commitments made by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in his appearance as a witness and in his speeches on Bill C-22. The amendments are nothing more and nothing less than that.

In other words, the Senate has taken to task this invisible Minister. It has challenged the Minister to put into the legislation what he has claimed that this Bill will do, so that we can protect Canadians and also protect the jobs and ensure that the investment being promised to the workers in Quebec, Ontario and other parts of Canada will materialize.

There is nothing in the Bill to ensure that these commitments will be fulfilled and, in that sense, I submit that the Senate has performed a phenomenal service to Canadians from coast to coast by taking the painstaking trouble to set into precise language a commitment on reinvestment matters which was made by the Minister, in a manner that will ensure that these commitments become part of the law and legally binding. This is the matter that is before us today.

I cannot understand for the life of me why the Government and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in particular would say that he cannot accept the totality of the amendments. The reasons he gives for not being able to do so are so weak, shallow and superficial that they make him a laughing stock. Furthermore, he said that the Senate is exerting veto powers on the House of Commons.

We want this matter to be resolved soon. We know that there are a number of companies whose workers have been promised future jobs and expanded jobs. We understand their concern very well. At the same time, we know that the Canadian consumer has benefited greatly by virtue of the generic prices of drugs. Everyone who goes to the drugstore counter knows the difference between $6 for a generic drug and $18 for a drug that is not available generically. It hurts the pocket-book and it hurts Canadians of all incomes.

So far, we have had a good system. We want to build on that system rather than change it drastically and in a manner such that we do not know whether the Minister's promises will become a reality. We believe the Senate has performed a fine role and its amendments are extremely sensible and desirable. I still hope the Government will reconsider its stand and accept the amendments that have come from the Senate at this time because they certainly call for support on the part of the Canadian public which I am sure understands the role of the Senate in this particular instance.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) has given a very thorough account of the legislative concerns in this Bill, particularly of the detailed work that was done by the Senate in its recent amendments. The rationale he has given for those amendments is that the Senate tried to incorporate into the Bill the Government's stated goals.

The Government has stated today and on other occasions that Canadian laws are far out of line with laws of countries in western Europe. Would the Hon. Member compare this Bill as it would be amended by the Senate with laws in countries in western Europe of which he is aware, particularly the principle of requiring a performance by the companies that receive the benefit of increased prices and so on?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, forgive me if I detect in the question by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) an implied support for the role of the Senate in its amendments, which I welcome. If I misread him, then I will withdraw that.

I feel that it is important in the evolution of our own laws to consider what is being done in other jurisdictions in the evolution of our own laws, but not to the extent of copying what we feel may not be advantageous to Canadians at large. In that sense, I understand we have been the envy of the world because of our legislation on intellectual property, particularly in the case of drugs.

Of course, it becomes a debate on ideology, but I am sure the Member for Spadina shares my view that when it comes to matters of health, I do not see why the intellectual properties of a drug should be extended for an unreasonable length of time. In the end, we are talking about human health and it is human health that needs to be protected. The almighty dollar has no role to play in that question.

In a perfect world, I would like to think that once a discovery is made it belongs to the whole world and not just to a few who want to make a fortune on that discovery. Unfortunately, the world does not function in such clear-cut patterns and therefore we must draw the line somewhere.

In my judgment, the legislation we have had since 1969, and the proposals of the Eastman report draw a sensible balance between the requirements of maintaining a certain degree of incentives for multinationals and implementing within a reasonable time the requirement to open that intellectual property to the public so as to permit the production of generic drugs at a much lower cost. That seems to me to be a very fine Canadian, small "l" liberal compromise.

• (1830)

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I sort of got provoked into saying a few words about this Bill for the umpteenth time. I want to say that I detect very clearly in this Bill that what has happened since the mid-1970s is that federal and provincial Governments have become anti-consumer. I recall the days when Ron Basford and the present Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) were Ministers of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and attempted to bring in competition policies. It took a long time. There was a corporate resilience that fought—

Mr. Caccia: Resistance.

Mr. Rodriguez: No, resilience. They used every trick in the book to fight any changes to the consumer laws of this country so as to prevent fair treatment of consumers. Eventually, because there was a mood in the country of consumers and consumer groups, competition policy was brought in. We are now into a cycle. What we have now is an anti-consumer Government.

Bill C-22 is further evidence of the anti-consumer mentality of government Members. I am not one who comes here to praise the other place. God knows, I would never stand in my place and praise the other place. However, I want to say that what I have been reading is tantamount to treason coming from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) when he speaks about the crustaceous denizens of the other place. It is tantamount to treason.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. When things are described as being tantamount to treason, surely nothing could be more unparliamentary than accusing Members of this House or the other House of anything even approximating a treasonable nature. I would ask if the Hon. Member might reconsider those remarks.

Mr. Rodriguez: I think that Hon. Member ought to sit down and put his head under the desk.

Mr. McCurdy: He doesn't know which end is up.

Mr. Rodriguez: I have the evidence. This is what the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said about the other place:

> I would sooner lose this Bill and any one of a number of Bills than acquiesce to the principle that we have a bunch of unelected Liberals exercising veto power over the elected Government of Canada. That principle ought to offend anyone.

He goes on to say:

> If we were starting with a clean slate and putting a government together in Canada and someone suggested we should have an appointed body that has the same powers as the elected body that is answerable to no one, the members of which stay till 75, I mean, you'd be laughed at, you'd be ridiculed.

That was not said by Stanley Knowles. That was said by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In a radio interview the Minister said: "You know General Pinochet would not suggest that for Chile". That is the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs criticizing those who sit in the other place. I have no question of the criticism. It just seems to me that it is phoney because on the other hand, the Prime Minister has been appointing Tories to that place like he is expecting to be out of power shortly. He keeps putting more of these unelected persons in there to stay there until they are 75 years of age. He appointed Staff Barootes, Finlay MacDonald, Brenda Robertson, a former Minister in the "Hashfield" government. He appointed Richard Doyle, former Globe and Mail editor, a staunch supporter of Bill C-22. He appointed Paul David, Jean-Maurice Simard and Michel Cogger. Yes, Michel Cogger is in there, and right from the late and lamented blue machine comes Norm Atkins, and there is Myra Spivak, the wife of former Manitoba P.C. Leader, and Jean Bazin. Hot dog! And all of them are going to stay until they are 75 years of age. And when the New Democratic Party forms the Government after the next election, they will be trying to put the boots to good socialist legislation.

Ms. Mitchell: Do you think the Tories would do that?

Mr. Rodriguez: They are criticizing the Liberals for doing it to Bill C-22 while at the same time they are appointing their own hench people. The Minister called them "hacks and flacks". Would I dare to show such disrespect? Absolutely not. I would not call them such names.

I did not come here to praise the other place. I am not here to do that. I would not dare to presume to do such a thing about such worthies. But why would some of those people oppose Bill C-22? For example, I have a question in mind. Why would Ian Sinclair do that? If ever there was a person who knows the corporate world and is part of it, it is he. In fact, he is an extension of all his buddies over at the Rideau Club. Why would he oppose something that his corporate brethren all want? Would those worthies oppose it unless they really felt that Bill C-22 was going a little too far? Surely, they cannot be accused of putting politics before self-interest. So we have to ask ourselves if they are sincerely responding with fair criticisms about Bill C-22.

Before I ask myself that question I should look at some of those criticisms. It is not just the other place and it is not just New Democrats. There was an editorial in The Financial Post entitled "Drugs and Trade" which stated:

> The Senate Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee's recommendations only sharpen the Bill's purpose, that it might at least achieve what it intends.

Who said that? Who wrote this article? It is from The Financial Post on October 26, 1987.

Mr. Heap: Do you read those vicious socialist papers?

• (1840)

Mr. Rodriguez: I have to know what they are up to. The only way to know what they are up to is to read their papers. This is an editorial that takes to task Bill C-22.

Here is another one entitled "If Cabinet serious about C-22 Andre should be put on leash". It is from The Globe and Mail of November 2, 1987, written by a writer named Hugh Winsor. That article states this:

> So if the Government says the prices board will keep drug price increases below the rate of inflation, Senator Sinclair wants to ensure that by tying the price increase to the consumer price index.

In other words what the Minister says the Bill does very softly, the other place says, "Well, let us write that in as an amendment to the Bill". That sounds fair.

Here is another one. It is entitled, "Drug companies should consider compromise". It is from The Gazette of Montreal dated October 30, 1987. It is an article written by Peter Hadekel.

Then we have another article entitled, "Senate overdose". It is an editorial out of The Ottawa Citizen of October 27, 1987. It states in this editorial:

> No matter how meddlesome the unelected Senate may be, the government's problems with this bill do not begin and end in the upper chamber. They begin with a piece of legislation that flies in the face of public opinion, conservative ideology and common sense.

Here is a paper, Mr. Speaker, that really stretches the limits of one's imagination as criticizing the Conservative Government. It is entitled, "Upper downer". It is an editorial from The Toronto Sun, and I quote from that real left wing paper, "Harvie Andre's outrage with the Senate rings more than a little false in our ears".

Mr. McCurdy: Say it again.

Mr. Rodriguez: "Harvie Andre's outrage with the Liberal Senate rings more than a little false in our ears". From The Toronto Star I quote from an article entitled, "Let's not swallow bad medicine bill". It states in part:

> Such obstructionism, if it continues, merely invites the Tories to campaign for re-election on a promise to clip the Senate's wings. That would divert public attention from the real issue: a bad drug patent bill.

Here is another left wing editorial from the Winnipeg Free Press entitled, "Fine-tuning the polls" which states:

> Should anyone be surprised at the news that a poll commissioned by the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers' Association of Canada has discovered that "82 per cent of Canadians support patent protection for pharmaceutical products, along with a system which limits the price increases of drugs to the rate of inflation"?

Are you surprised, Mr. Speaker? That is the result of that poll.

I want to say to the Government which is trying to get this Bill through the House, and which through the constitutional processes of the Houses of Parliament has been hung up on the fence of political protocol, where I hope it stays forever, that it should really take a hard look at it. Is the Bill really serving the interests of consumers or is it simply satisfying the friends of the Government both here and in Washington?

Mr. McCurdy: They have more down there.

Mr. Rodriguez: Is that the reason? After all, the Minister has claimed that the the pharmaceutical companies would be prepared to spend all this money for expansion and research and development. I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister ought not to be riled up. He ought not to be riled up about the fact that the other place is using constitutional protocol and has decided that it has to send the Bill back to the House of Commons with some suggestions for amendments. Instead of dumping on the other place, it seems to me that they should be extremely upset by some of the things which these multinational drug companies have threatened. In other words, what I am accusing them of is blackmail.

Out of The Financial Post of October 26 I see a headline entitled, "Drugmakers put plans on hold, Research shelved until Government patent bill becomes law". The article states that the multinational drug companies in Canada have responded to the stalling of the Government's new patent law with one voice. It states, "Until the Bill goes through, the industry's new research and development plans are on the back burner". "The expansion is dependant on Bill C-22", said John Zabriski, President of Merck Frosst Canada Inc. "We made that perfectly clear when we announced the research plans", he said. "We will not go ahead until the bill is passed". Talk about threats from an unelected group.

What is the Minister talking about? He dumps on the other place. He says they were not elected to anything and they are threatening the House of Commons that was duly elected. What are the drug companies doing? What are they doing but threatening Parliament? That is a strike by capital. We had a strike by labour the other day in the Post Office. You know what we promptly did after eight days, we brought a Bill into this House to put the labour back to work. I have not seen the Government acting with the same gumption and the same back bone and the same courage when it comes to the multinational drug companies. It just crumbles. Members of the Government just shiver in their boots and shake because they know full well that the Party funds will get cut off. I think it is shameful that the Government and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who is appointed to protect the interests of consumers in this country, have put a greater emphasis on protecting the corporate part of his portfolio than on the consumer part.

I want to say that it is equally shameful, shameful and dastardly, that when the drug companies, the multinational drug companies, reach into the very entrails of the Liberal Party and pluck a former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and make that person their lobbyist, to come and do a job on Liberal Senators and Members of Parliament, well, that is obviously the height of it.

I see the same thing happening with a former Minister of Defence who was hired by the Government of France to lobby for obtaining contracts for nuclear submarines from Canada. I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, we need honesty in Government. We have not seen the lobby legislation come through yet, even though it has been promised for over two years now. Talking about threats and incestuous relationships, we have an example of them before us in Bill C-22.

We also see the fact that charges have been made that Bill C-22 was the quid pro quo for free trade. I know that they protest too much about that. But everybody in Washington knows that that was the quid pro quo, that this was part of the deregulative process along with privatization that makes free trade possible in the United States as seen by the Government.

• (1850)

I sincerely hope that the Bill gets hung up in the whole process and is eventually quashed, because I would like to meet the Tories on an electoral platform in a general election to talk about the issue of drug prices and their effects on consumers, and about their anti-consumer attitude tied into their giveaway of the country under the free trade agreement.

I say that the Bill ought to go back to the other place. I hope that the Senate sends it back and that it goes back and forth, back and forth. I also hope that we have an election before it becomes law.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, it was very interesting to hear the eloquent remarks of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). As always, he was able to dramatize the sordid behaviour of the Government.

Let us look at the record of the Government. The Government promised that the Auto Pact would not be on the table. It promised that it would not tamper with social programs. It has made promise after promise and broke them. If that Government promises that there will be more research as a result of this legislation, would anybody believe it? If the Government promises that as a result of Bill C-22 there will be no increase in drug prices, would anybody in the country believe it? If the Government said that the sun was going to rise tomorrow, would it not put the fear of God in everyone that the world was going to be put into perpetual darkness?

Therefore, is it not necessary on the basis of that record to have some security when the Government makes a promise? A promise is a very frightening thing from this Government. Does it not also make sense for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) to accept the Senate amendments which would implement the promises made by the Minister in respect of the Bill?

I would like to hear my colleague's comments on that atmosphere which has been created by the Government and on the appropriateness of the Government conceding to the Senate in this instance for its own survival.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I would not trust the Government to negotiate anything at all.

It is not so much that I am outraged by the fact that the Tories tell me that certain things are to happen which they will not put in the Bill and I have to go on blind faith. That is disturbing in itself, but what is even more disturbing is that they think that the people of Canada believe them. They believe the multinational drug companies that have told them that they will make certain research and development investments in Canada. Our history is strewn with corporations that have made promises on the basis of getting grants.

We have seen big rabbits jumping around as this Government and previous Liberal Governments have held out big carrots, and the rabbits ate the carrots at the same time as they promised innumerable jobs. The rabbits ate the carrots and hopped along to some other farmer who offered them even bigger carrots, and the only jobs they left were for people with pooper-scoopers. That is the only jobs that were left.

It is absolutely ridiculous to think that Canadian people believe a Government whose Members say that they believe. They are not here to believe. If they want to believe, they can watch Jimmy Swaggart. They are not just believers; they are practitioners in promoting the big fib. You will notice, Mr. Speaker, that I did not use the other word. Reisman cannot get me; Simon says! They are the ones practising the big fib, f-i-b. They are fibbers. I have to be parliamentary.

In direct response to my hon. colleague, the fact is that they have said that they believe the multinational drug companies. They expect Canadians to believe that. Indeed, we put the fib to the test. The other place has put them to the test by simply saying "let us write it into the Bill".

Now their true colours come forward. They have been unmasked four days after Hallowe'en for what they really are. They are not prepared to put one jot or tittle or iota of pressure on their buddies from the multinational corporate boardrooms, not one jot or tittle of pressure, and they should be ashamed of themselves.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether my hon. colleague is not being a little too harsh on the poor Conservative Members! I mean, there they sit over there. There were 210 of them, and now there are 208, 207, 206, and their numbers are going down every day. All they have is a little over 200 Members. The poor Tories, they cannot even get their own legislation through. They can barely get it through this House. Thirty or so of us over here certainly stand up to them very well on that score. They cannot get it through the other place. The Bill is bouncing back and forth like a yo-yo. Maybe the Hon. Member is being a little too harsh on the poor Tories. After all, obviously they do not have what it takes to govern.

I would like him to turn his wit and wisdom of which he has a considerable supply toward the Liberal Party. Does he not think it passing strange that on Canada AM this morning we watched a debate between a former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Judy Erola, a person he knows fairly well, speaking out strongly for pharmaceutical companies, and the spokesperson for the present Liberal caucus sitting beside her and speaking in the opposite direction? As I said earlier, I certainly agreed with what he said. Then this Bill popped over to the Senate and was dealt with by Liberal Senators who take control of everything, yet the Leader of the Liberal Party in the House certainly does not seem to want to have anything to do with it. What does he think of the positions of the Liberal Party and of its former Minister?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I should like to remind the Hon. Member, who I know is very eloquent, that there is only one minute remaining in the question and comment period.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, how can I deal with that subject in a minute? However, I will try. I, too, watched the Punch and Judy show this morning. It really boggled the mind, to say the least.

My hon. colleague referred to the poor Tories and their bumbling and stumbling on the Bill, how they cannot get it through this place, and how they have difficulty, when they finally get it through this place, to get it through the other place. What really bothers me—and I know it bothers many Canadians across the country—is that that gang is out of its cage and is off negotiating free trade agreements.

Ms. Mitchell: It scares you, doesn't it?

• (1900)

Mr. Rodriguez: It scared the devil out of me. It could make a saint out of me. I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, it really could. Whatever devil I had in me, that scared it right away.

In relation to my colleagues to my right, I want to tell you that I can feel for them. I feel how embarrassed they must be. I really do. I could imagine my own caucus. But we have to understand that the same person, the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, has now taken a position on the board of directors of Inco. It is all part of the pattern. I feel hurt as they feel hurt by the whole process. They have people from their own ranks, Ministers, and one of the most powerful Ministers in the Trudeau Government has now taken a position as a lobbyist at $100,000 a year and here we have Liberals screaming for lobbyist legislation. It seems to me that they must feel very hurt. Here are the Liberals fighting this Bill for consumers and here is a former Minister beating them over the head with a stick trying to get them to get in line, organizing a demonstration outside of their conference in Montreal to embarrass their present leader. I feel hurt for them. It is an embarrassing situation. It is a sensitive issue for them. The Premier of Quebec is demanding that they get the Bill. This is hurtful. I understand how they feel. I want to commiserate with them and offer them my sympathy.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate. The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to speak about such an important Bill and especially to speak after the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). First, if we look at the substance of the amendments and of Bill C-22 itself, I believe that it is very important to note that the Conservative Government unfortunately could not care less about consumers as far as this issue is concerned. As for the previous Government, it had asked a committee of experts to determine what was the best way to protect consumers, promote research and create jobs. The Eastman report said, and this was always the position of the Liberal Party, that with a minimum protection of four years, multinationals could create jobs, consumers could be protected and the companies would not go bankrupt.

Unfortunately, the Conservative Government has given in to the blackmail of the multinationals. Instead of suggesting a middle ground position and of telling the various groups concerned that the legislation introduced would provide protection for five years, after which there would be an evaluation, and if this period did not prove sufficient, the matter could be discussed further at that time, the Government decided to act unilaterally to provide what I consider an unacceptable for ten-year protection period which will increase the prices of new products.

In fact, because the Government was so sure there would be an increase in the price of drugs, it included a provision in the Bill for compensating the provincial governments, because when people get welfare or senior citizens use their drug card in Quebec and other provinces, the increased costs will be paid by the provinces. That is why the Government includes in its own Bill the sum of $25 million annually for the next four years, or a total of $100 million to compensate for these increases.

Unfortunately, the Conservative Government forgets that four million Canadians happen to be workers who do not benefit under programs like private insurance or insurance for senior citizens or people on welfare. They have no insurance whereby drug costs are absorbed by a government or by a private company.

Four million Canadians are ignored in this Bill, and it is their cause the Official Opposition is defending.

The Government says there is no cause for alarm. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), who sounds more like the Minister of Corporate Affairs, because he never defends the consumer, says there is no cause for alarm, since most people are insured. Most workers do have insurance. However, insurance costs will go up, workers will have to pay higher premiums and their purchasing power will go down.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat that as far as the substance of the Bill is concerned, the Conservatives are making a terrible mistake, for the simple reason that first of all, we have four million Canadians who will be affected, and these four million people have no insurance coverage whatsoever in any of the ridings of Hon. Members present, and they are going to remember this.

As for those who pay insurance premiums, insurance companies will automatically increase their premiums because of the increased price of drugs, and here again, every one of our constituents will be penalized by this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, as far as the strategy is concerned, this is the nth time the Bill has been returned to the House as a result of a decision by Members of the other place. My position is very clear: the House of Commons has priority over the Senate. Elected Members have priority over the Senate, Mr. Speaker, and today I dare hope we are sending this Bill back to them for the last time. The Government has been trying to go for broke with this Bill, the population may decide to turf it out at the next elections, but they cannot get rid of the Senate because senators are appointed for life.

My position is clear and I even introduced a motion to be honest—for one has to be honest in the House—a Private Member's motion to limit the power of the Senate after the first time the House of Commons has sent a legislative measure back to the Senate. Should the senators then decide—I respect these people, they are paid to do a job—to send the Bill back with amendments, but if the House of Commons wants to keep it unchanged or rejects all amendments, when the Bill is sent back to the Senate for a second time, automatically after 60 days the Bill would be deemed to have been passed; it would be the same thing with respect to constitutional amendments, but the time limit would be longer.

Mr. Speaker, one has to be intellectually honest. The problem with this infighting is that nobody is standing up to protect the consumers, nobody even does anything at all to promote research. Sadly, because of the Government, because of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and what I consider his not particularly honest way to lead the debate, it has become a debate between the House of Commons, the Prime Minister, the Minister of Corporate affairs, and the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister blames the Senate, but if he were honest he would stop appointing senators. Not only would he stop making Senate appointments, but he would not pick a senator to act as Minister responsible for federal-provincial relations. We heard the Prime Minister make the kind of remarks which are an insult to members of the Senate, yet in the same breath, hypocritically, he appointed a member of the other place to sit in his Cabinet. There are two reasons for this, I might point out to my Conservative colleagues: Get mad, you are not competent enough, and he has to pick someone from the other place which he hates. This sort of attitude, this hypocrisy I do not accept, Mr. Speaker, and if the Prime Minister is so anxious to have his Bill, he should accept the motion—he should assume his responsabilities and curtail the Senate's powers, as I said.

Mr. Speaker, there are also my friends and colleagues from the NDP. I was here earlier listening with great interest while the Hon. Member for Nickel—Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) was doing his usual act.

Mr. Speaker, this may be amusing, he is quite funny—the Quebec comedian "Tit-Zoune" used to do that, but he was paid to make people laugh. Here, earlier, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt had people laughing, but he forgot that what we were defending were human beings. The debate was most important, it defended the poor people of Canada, and when I heard the Hon. Member rightfully blame the Prime Minister, when the Prime Minister says he is against the House of Commons, against the Senate, and he listed all those party hacks who were appointed by this Conservative Prime Minister, up to that point I agreed with the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt when he blamed the Prime Minister's attitude of being against the Senate but appointing people—

But I found his behaviour and his judgment to be unacceptable at the end, when he, when his own Party suggested that the Senate be definitely scrapped. Until then, I respected his views. Until then I agreed with him. But when it comes to blaming the Prime Minister for blaming the other House while using that other House, he ends up asking the Senate to block the Bill once again.

Mr. Speaker, his act was funny. But actually what is unacceptable, is his way of blaming the Prime Minister. He makes the same error as the Prime Minister. He is against the Senate. He blames senators for not being elected. Those people should not prevail over us, but he ends up suggesting: I am against you. Your being there is pointless, but please, block the Bill, send it back to us.

Mr. Speaker, the NDP's behaviour is understandable. First, with this Bill, it must be said that the very large majority of interested parties in Quebec, including myself and the overwhelming majority of my colleagues from the Liberal caucus of Quebec MPs, support patent protection, job creation. Mr. Bourassa is not going to the extreme of asking for a ten-year period to exploit the customer. Ti-Louis Laberge is not exactly hand in glove with the multinationals; Gérald Larose, Mayor Jean Doré, the Fédération de l'Âge d'Or du Québec are all asking for a minimum of protection, nothing excessive, for these patents, while the NDP is flatly opposed to what Quebecers want.

Last year, before Christmas, the Leader of the NDP was delighted to welcome the turncoat from Terrebonne—who was disenchanted with the Conservative Party—into the New Democratic fold. When the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) saw a Quebecer crossing the floor, he felt that was the best Christmas present of all. Ten months after the first time a Member elected by the people of Quebec, a francophone Member, agreed to try and become a Member of the NDP, ten months later that same person had to leave the Party simply because there is no room for Francophones in the NDP.

The NDP does not understand the distinct nature of Quebecers. There is no understanding of Bill 101 and all the important issues so dear to Quebecers. The NDP cannot understand because of their attitude that everybody is the same, everybody is equal. They do not aggrandize people. They cut them down to size.

Mr. Speaker, this Bill has brought out the positions of three parties and their lack of understanding. The Conservative Party's attitude to Bill C-22 is a traditional one, in keeping with the Prime Minister's style. He caved in to the multinationals as he did on the banks and so many other issues. Whenever someone waves a fat billfold, Brian cannot resist. He is utterly spineless and he caves in. That is what happened. The multinationals said they wanted ten years. If they had said fifteen, he would have given them fifteen.

On the other hand, all the groups involved in Quebec and first of all the unions—it seems to me the NDP was living off the dues I paid to the FTQ, the union dues of Quebec workers who are paying part of the NDP's way. I would have thought . . . People like Louis Laberge and Gérald Larose were all unanimous at the Economic Summit in Montreal. Yet, in Quebec City, the Quebec Liberal Party and the Parti québécois are still not on the best of terms!

• (1910)

[English]

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to point out that there is not a quorum in the House. I would like to call for quorum.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We may proceed. The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) has the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the Hon. Member has asked to check whether there is a quorum. This shows . . . Look at the Conservatives coming back. This shows the little interest these people have in this Bill which they are supposedly determined to have adopted, Mr. Speaker. I can understand that there is a free lunch on the other side and that those people will be there every time they can get something free, but to come back to this bill and to the behaviour of the NDP, I must say that they have shown no understanding as far as this issue is concerned. That party is now trying to please the Quebec population by hiding its true behaviour and attitude. I am proud that they voted for the distinct character of Quebec, but as the Hon. Member for Terrebonne (Mr. Toupin) himself said, we have to look at what it does in practice, and Bill C-22 would have given the NDP Members and their Leader an opportunity to show Quebecers that they had understood what the distinct character of Quebec meant and what we want that is different from the other provinces. There could have been a different approach. We can argue about whether the protection period should be four, five, six or seven years, but the NDP showed no understanding for the views of Quebecers as concerns pharmaceutical patents.

Their reaction is typical of people from Ontario: clean, square and cold. The NDP Members, including their leader, consulted with the local union representatives in Ontario and decided: If it is good enough for Ontario, it is good enough for Canada as a whole. If it is bad for Ontario, it is bad for Canada as a whole. Such is the NDP position, including being against Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I would have liked the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) to show more wisdom and remain above the fray between the House of Commons and the Senate. I believe the Senators have proposed very good amendments, and even if I can hardly accept the fact that the Senate could scuttle the Bill anytime, I think they should be commended for their dedication and excellent job. I think that the amendments which they are proposing to this Tory Government—for what reason? Everybody is saying: We want to protect Canadian consumers. The Government should say so in so many words in the legislation, to make sure that consumers will be protected and that the multinationals will not abuse the situation. Government Members will have to come clean in their own riding and answer the question: Why did you not support this or that amendment to the Bill?

Contrary to the NDP, the Liberal Party is saying: We want to make sure that there will be jobs in the Montreal area and in other areas. That is what we want and that is what the Senators are asking: Put this down in writing, right into the Bill.

Mr. Speaker, all Conservative Members, including Quebecers and others, but particularly those of Quebec, will have to come up with an answer. Why did you not want to guarantee this provision in the Bill, why did you not include this provision in the Bill? Considering the attitude of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) yesterday when he tabled amendments in English only, I am not surprised that he could not care less about protecting Quebec consumers.

Finally, I dare hope—and this is my position, Mr. Speaker—that the Bill will be sent back to the Senate. The Government wanted to forge ahead, the Government wanted to stick to its position. Hopefully the senators will let it go through as passed by the House, despite the fact that I will vote against Bill C-22, despite the fact that my Party is against this measure.

With respect to democracy I think it is important that the House should always have priority over the non-elected. Mr. Speaker, I hope that in two or three years, if ever we realize that consumers have to pay high prices—this mistake—costs, consequences, then we will be able to blame the Government and the Senate for working at loggerheads instead of trying to find effective means to protect consumers and jobs.

Mrs. Bertrand: Mr. Speaker, I usually listen when the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) speaks because I know that he always speaks his mind. However, I never saw him skating around as much as he did this evening. It is true that the hockey season has started, but the Hon. Member certainly skated around this evening.

His speech was in three parts. He closed by accusing the New Democratic Party of just about everything. What I find surprising is that, most of the time, the Liberal Party votes with the New Democratic Party in this House.

Second, he blamed the Senate for its position. Another thing which surprises me is that I read in last week's newspapers that, according to the leader of the Quebec Liberal caucus, the whole federal caucus is behind the Senate. It made the headlines of the newspapers. I did not believe my own eyes. Perhaps the Hon. Member is being frank, but I still do not understand his attitude. He is skating around the issue.

Finally, I would like to ask him a question since, as a Quebecer, he is aware that Quebec would receive nearly 45 per cent of all the benefits of this bill because of investments and jobs created, especially for our young people, and as a Quebecer, he knows that all the parties in the National Assembly asked unanimously on two occasions that this Bill be approved, as has the Fédération de l'âge d'or. In fact, I have heard no one in Quebec object to this Bill; even the man in the street, who should find such a technical and complex Bill difficult to understand, is asking: What is happening in Ottawa and why is the Senate blocking this Bill? Can the Hon. Member, who is a Quebecer and who knows that nearly everyone in Quebec, which is the province I know best, fervently wishes that this Bill be adopted, justify the fact that he will vote against it?

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, it is simply because the Hon. Member and I do not meet the same kind of people. The House will recall that the Hon. Member, who just commented on the issue of old age security pensions, stated that a government was under no obligation to keep its promises and could renege at any time.

She started by saying that I was frank and forthright but was skating on thin ice. Since I am against the Liberal Senate, she said that I was forthright. I will try to put all this into perspective for the Hon. Member. First of all, one can be either for or against a Bill, even if Quebecers are in favour. The people of Quebec do not want the money to go to the multinationals. They want a minimum of protection. Second, I have every right to be against this Bill and even to object to the behaviour of the Senate because its Members are not elected. I think that is my privilege. If my lieutenant in the caucus wanted to say what he said, it is up to him to answer the question. As I said before, I have a motion on the Order Paper asking for limitations on the power of the Senate ... maybe the Hon. Member has not been following this issue very closely.

Even when she says—I mentioned that there were people in Quebec who were in favour. However, to be perfectly honest, and I think intellectual honesty is very important here, we have the FADOQ which is in favour, and the AQDR which is opposed. We should not give the impression, and if I did I would be imitating the rhetoric of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, we must not give the impression that all Quebecers are in favour. Just because the Leader of the PQ and the Leader of the Liberal Party are in favour does not mean everybody else is as well.

In the world outside and here in the House, and perhaps this could enhance the quality of the House, the vast majority of Quebecers are in favour of some kind of protection. People do not make a distinction between seven and ten years. They are in favour of protection in order to create jobs, but especially to protect the consumer. To be perfectly honest, there is a group that is not quite as popular in Quebec, representing associations that are opposed to the Bill, but the vast majority of Quebecers object to the fact that the Senate is obstructing the Bill. That is the difference.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) said that the NDP does not understand Quebec, that the NDP does not understand that Quebec is a distinct society. Well, I want to point out that it was the three Liberal Members who had proposed that the words "Quebec as a distinct society" be deleted from the motion on the Meech Lake Accord, and ten others voted against the Meech Lake motion.

Some Hon. Members: Yes, against!

• (1920)

[English]

I want to ask him this question and I want an honest answer. A little bird has whispered in my ear and told me that there will be only two Liberal speakers on Bill C-22 tonight. He is the second one.

I have also been told by a little bird who whispered in my ear that when this motion goes back to the Senate it will not be opposed anymore.

An Hon. Member: Good news!

Mr. Rodriguez: I want him to confirm or deny what a little bird has whispered in my ear, that there was a high summit meeting of two executives of multinational drug companies, Premier Bourassa, two Liberals from his caucus, a prominent Liberal from the other place, and they have cooked up this deal. That in fact great considerations were made—

Mr. McCurdy: What does that mean?

Mr. Rodriguez: It means that monetary contributions were made to the Liberal Party for them to pack up their bags on opposing this Bill. I want him to confirm or deny that.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, whom I almost called a clown a moment ago because he did not know Tit-Zoune senior in Quebec—but Tit Zoune was good. In answer to the clown from Nickel Belt, the bird that talked to him must have been a liar, a doom and gloom bird. Either the bird is no good or the Hon. Member is hard of hearing. First of all, he said there was only two Liberal Members that have risen.

Some Hon. Members: Tonight.

Mr. Malépart: I am the third one. Either he cannot count—so there you are, that was his first mistake.

Then he asks: What is the Senate? I am telling you—tonight.

Mr. McCurdy: Tonight.

Mr. Malépart: Yes indeed, I am the third one. Mr. Speaker, they cannot count. Mr. Speaker, I am the third Member today to rise on this bill.

As far as the Senate is concerned, I have been honest, I have stated my own position and I dare hope that the Senate, contrary to the hypocrisy shown by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), will respect the wish expressed by the House of Commons.

Thirdly, in answer to the point raised about those Summit meetings, I am not part of these Summit meetings—

Mr. McCurdy: The Hon. Member has been sold cheap.

Mr. Malépart: Turning now to the money question, Mr. Speaker. When an Hon. Member lacks courage, as the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt has just shown, and attacks a former opponent who is not here to defend herself, when an Hon. Member demonstrates such cowardice and then, when he feels trapped, tries to imagine that the Liberal Party has adopted this position because that would help us get money, that shows how desperate the Hon. Members opposite are. They don't know what to say or what to do anymore. That is sad. I now understand why the Hon. Member for Terrebonne (Mr. Toupin) could not tough it out 11 months as a Member of the New Democratic Party. After ten months only, the Hon. Member for Terrebonne has said: The distinct society in Quebec is not recognized inside the NDP. This is sheer hypocrisy. So let them say clearly that they are against Bill 101 in Quebec.

I will conclude on this, Mr. Speaker. We have seen the style shown by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt. That is sad but I dare hope that other Hon. Members in this House will think more about consumers when considering this Bill.

• (1930)

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, the revelation just disclosed by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) is quite shocking indeed. However, it is not surprising because the same type of thing happened prior to June of last year and was well documented in the magazine This Magazine. There was a complete story in This Magazine about the history of Bill C-22 and the development of policy for it.

As I recall, that article outlined how the pharmaceutical industry, particularly the multinational organizations, had launched intensive lobbies over the years, primarily with Ministers in Liberal Governments. That pressure caused the previous Liberal Government, the members of which are now at least making token protestations to Bill C-22, to formulate a policy that actually mirrored what the present Government intends to do. All indications from the past tell us that the Liberal Party was about to do much the same thing as the Conservative Party is doing today.

I do not usually find myself referring to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), but on many occasions when he has answered questions in this House about why the Government brought this policy forward he referred to discussion papers of the previous Liberal Cabinet which mirror the policy before us today.

The authors of the exposé in This Magazine of the multinational drug companies' involvement in this policy-making process told the story of what took place behind the curtain behind your chair, Mr. Speaker, between the then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the then critic on health policy for the Liberal Party who was also very much involved with the contents of Bill C-22.

The agreement that was arrived at behind your chair was that the Government should proceed with this policy. They recognized that if the policy was enacted the only people in the House of Commons who would squawk, if I remember the term properly, would be the members of the NDP. On that basis those two colluded to bring this policy forward which the Liberal Party has now been opposing, at least until today.

If the circumstances described by my colleague are indeed correct, I can only describe that as shameful. The Liberal Party is showing its true colours once again. It is equally as much in the pocket of the multinational drug companies as are those it criticizes today. Members of the Liberal Party have been running around the country for the last 18 months criticizing this policy, fooling Canadian people into believing that somehow or other the Liberal Party would be their saviour in defeating this policy. They have turned round, done a flip-flop, and caved in for very questionable reasons.

In fact, the Hon. Member from the Liberal Party who spoke a few minutes ago spoke about the Government's intellectual dishonesty in proceeding with Bill C-22 when it knows it is not in the best interest of Canadians. If the story told by my colleague from Nickel Belt tonight is based on fact I am sure you, Mr. Speaker, will be hearing from us over the next several days on whether the rights and privileges of all Members in this House have been violated by one Party entering into such an agreement with the corporations in the country which are not acting in the best interests of Canadian consumers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have been requested by the Opposition House Leader, on behalf of the Official Opposition Whip, to defer the vote until after Question Period tomorrow.

It being 7.44 p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DISPOSITION OF BILL C-22

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions with the House Leaders and I think you will find that there is agreement that the following motion be proposed having to do with the vote on Bill C-22 later this day:

> That the deferred division on the motion of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs respecting the Senate amendments made to Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and provide for certain matters thereto, be taken at 3.30 o'clock p.m. this day.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment so that this does not repeat itself. I was not able to be here at the appointed time last night to ask you to defer the vote until today. I had another engagement and was out of the House, but the House Leader of my Party went to the Speaker at that time.

I believe the Speaker then has, according to my interpretation of Standing Order 13(4)(a), the authority to decide what time the vote will be taken. Most of us presumed that the vote would be at three o'clock but it is being changed to 3.30, and I do not have any trouble with that, but I take it that the Speaker still has the authority to decide when a vote will be taken when that vote has been deferred. I want that made clear.

Mr. Speaker: I will consider the matter the Hon. Member has raised. I think I have the answer, but in view of the fact that it has been raised, I will look into it and return to the Hon. Member. In the meantime, I take it the Hon. Member is in agreement.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

REQUEST FOR BROADCASTING OF WINTER OLYMPICS ACROSS CANADA IN THE FRENCH LANGUAGE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present to the House a petition signed by a great number of constituents who all express dissatisfaction over the fact that French television broadcasts of the Calgary Winter Olympic Games will not be available to a great many residents of rural areas in Canada. All your petitioners humbly call upon Parliament and urge the Government to respect its commitments towards the linguistic minority by making it possible for Radio-Canada to broadcast the Winter Olympic Games.

[English]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table a petition signed by the required number of people. The petitioners state that, whereas close to one million Francophones residing outside Quebec will not be able to watch French television broadcasts of the Calgary Winter Olympics, the CRTC compromise under which French television signals would be made available to cable companies is unacceptable because not all Francophone communities outside Quebec have cable service, whereas French-speaking Canadians will pay their share of the $200 million earmarked by the Conservative Government for the Calgary Winter Olympic Games. Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to urge the Government to respect the commitment to Canada's linguistic minorities by providing all communities from coast to coast with the possibility of watching in both official languages broadcasts of this international event, the 1988 Winter Olympic Games.

OPPOSITION TO TAX ON FOOD

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present another petition which meets the requirements of the provisions of Standing Order 106.

Whereas the federal Government has imposed 25 new taxes or tax increases on Canadian taxpayers since September 1984, in particular on medical and dental supplies, snack foods, candy and soft drinks;

Whereas the federal Government in its tax reform proposal is studying the possibility of imposing on Canadians a general tax on goods and services, including food;

Whereas food constitutes a vital element in day-to-day life and the imposition of this tax would have the effect of seriously penalizing various categories of taxpayers such as the elderly, families, the unemployed, low and middle income taxpayers, and youth;

Wherefore your petitioners humbly call upon Parliament to reject all measures that would have the effect of imposing a sales tax on food products.

PRIVILEGE

AVAILABILITY TO ALL MEMBERS OF STUDY ON FISHING VESSEL SAFETY

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the alleged question of privilege raised yesterday by the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly), I wish to advise you and all Hon. Members as follows:

First, every Member of this House, on November 3 at about 1 p.m., received a press release outlining the key elements of the fishing vessel safety report prepared by the Canadian Coast Guard. This package included the release and executive summary plus the 41 recommendations.

Second, the report itself was of course available to all Hon. Members in the mail room and also in the distribution centre.

Third, the Official Opposition transport critics plus certain government and opposition Members, received the above package plus three additional pages with information concerning the purpose of the study, background information and the implementation strategy.

Therefore, it is clear that the Minister gave a release to all Hon. Members and a bit more information in detail to certain Hon. Members in all three Parties. No favouritism was shown at all to government Members, and I submit that the privileges of the Hon. Member Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands were not violated. I therefore trust that he will rise and withdraw his statement that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) is playing cheap partisan politics with the safety of fishermen.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary pointed out that these materials were circulated on November 3. I have a letter here dated November 2 and it is addressed to Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament with ridings affected by marine transportation policy. Included with the letter was a briefing book from the Canadian Coast Guard.

To the best of my knowledge, I have not yet received a copy of this package, which is from the Coast Guard and which is presumably designed to help Members who live in ridings affected by this new policy have a better understanding of what is involved. I submit that the situation remains as I laid it before you yesterday. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) has been playing favouritism on an issue of vital importance to all Members with fishing communities or people involved in the industry in their constituency.

• (1120)

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to arrange for my friend, or any other Member, to receive the bit of additional information that was provided to the NDP critic, the Liberal critic, as well as another NDP Member. If they simply let us know, we will provide them with the extra 11 pages, I think it is, of information.

Nonetheless, the Hon. Member seems to be shifting his ground to alleging the Minister of Transport is showing favouritism. I reject that as well, and the Hon. Member should rise and withdraw his original statement about cheap partisan politics. No Minister of Transport is ever going to play cheap partisan politics with the safety and lives of fishermen.

Mr. Speaker: I am not at all sure that anything is advanced by hearing more argument as to the facts. I have the point of the Hon. Member and will consider it. He has been invited to rise. Whether he wishes to respond to what the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has said, I am not sure, but I will certainly hear him.

Mr. Manly: Just for your information, Mr. Speaker, the additional material is not two or three pages. It is 18 pages in the Coast Guard study information kit on fishing vessel safety for Members of Parliament. This is the material that was included with the letter.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary can help me. As I understand it, the information attached to the letter dated November 2 which went to some Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament was at the same time sent to critics of the other two Parties. Am I correct in that?

Mr. Thacker: Yes, Mr. Speaker. While the letter was dated November 2, it was not sent until November 3, after the date on which it was available to all other Members of Parliament.

Mr. Speaker: It think the Chair can settle this. There is apparent concern on the part of the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) that perhaps the Minister had been favouring one side of the House over the other by sending out some material that did not go to every other Member. It would seem to me that it may not have gone to every other Member, and it does seem to have been delivered not on November 2 but on November 3. The word of the Parliamentary Secretary must be accepted and it seems that the information was given to all Parties although perhaps not to every Member at the same time.

In any event, the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands indicated, if I heard him correctly, that perhaps the Hon. Minister of Transport was somehow in this particular exercise doing something that was not in the interests of fishermen and other people travelling across the waters of the West Coast. I do not think it is appropriate for the Chair to comment on that one way or the other. That may be the Hon. Member's opinion. However, most certainly, under the circumstances, what we have here is an argument over distribution of some information.

With the greatest respect, the Chair cannot see how the Hon. Member's privileges, in the sense of his capacity to carry on as a Member of Parliament, have been in any way impaired. Therefore, I have to say with respect to the Hon. Member that I find it is not a question of privilege.

Point of Order—Mr. Nickerson

ALLEGED UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, last night a rather unfortunate occurrence arose when one Hon. Member of this House accused another Hon. Member of being treasonous. I refer you to page 10750 of Hansard. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) is quoted as having said:

> However, I want to say that what I have been reading is tantamount to treason coming from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) when he speaks about the crustaceous denizens of the other place. It is tantamount to treason.

Immediately after that was said I rose and brought it to the attention of the Deputy Speaker who was in the Chair at the time. Unfortunately, his attention had not been particularly focused when the words were uttered and the matter was allowed to slide.

I would refer Your Honour to other occasions when this has been found to be unparliamentary terminology. That was the case on November 19, 1957, as shown at page 1248 of Hansard, and also on July 14, 1959, as shown at page 6015 of Hansard.

I wonder if it might be possible for you, Sir, to review Hansard, the transactions of last evening, and make a determination of whether or not what was said was unparliamentary. If it is found to be unparliamentary, then I ask that you request the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt to withdraw those remarks.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) has asked the Chair to consider Hansard and the words expressed and the context in which they were expressed. I most certainly will do so and report back to the House at an appropriate moment.

PRIVILEGE

ELECTION OF CHAIRMAN TO LABOUR, EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION COMMITTEE—MEMBER FOR LASALLE—MOTION FOR REFERENCE TO ELECTIONS, PRIVILEGES AND PROCEDURE COMMITTEE

Mr. Claude Lanthier (LaSalle): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House today to respond to two questions of privilege.

[English]

I think two questions of privilege were raised concerning the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. I would like to answer both those matters. Would you like me to start with the question of privilege of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), or the one put forward by the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais)? Both of them were raised at quarter past three which seems to be designated now as "let's hit Lanthier time." Which one would you like me to raise first?

Mr. Speaker: I think out of an early morning generosity of spirit, I can indicate to the Hon. Member that the choice is his.

[Translation]

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, I will deal with the more recent of the two before dealing with the question raised last week.

Mr. Speaker, regarding the question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) last Tuesday, when I was temporarily absent from the House because of a previous engagement in the beautiful riding of LaSalle—which I could have postponed, by the way, if the elementary parliamentary courtesies had been observed and I had been given as little less as one half-hour's notice—I feel it is my duty to set the record straight and refute some very frivolous allegations that were made in an unfortunate debate the principal party concerned was unable to attend because he had not been asked or even been advised that it would take place.

On October 6, at a regular weekly meeting at the Department of Public Works attended by the Minister, the Deputy Minister, the Chief of Staff and senior officials concerned by the meeting's agenda, I said goodbye to all these people after announcing my resignation as parliamentary secretary.

The same morning, when I got back to my office, I dictated a short letter of resignation and asked my senior assistant to get in touch with the Prime Minister's Office to explain my decision, in line with the approach suggested by my colleagues for seeking the candidacy for the position of Chairman of the Standing Committee of the House of Commons on Labour, Employment and Immigration.

On the 7th, I signed my letter to the Prime Minister's Office and received an acknowledgment a few days later. In any case, copies were sent here immediately by one of my assistants while another assistant phoned the debate through so I could listen on my car phone on my way to Montreal.

In the course of this debate it was also alleged I was being paid as a parliamentary secretary even after my election as chairman of a standing committee of the House of Commons. There is really no problem here, Mr. Speaker. The appropriate adjustments will be made as soon as our payroll system has been advised of the status changes affecting my salary, if that has not already been done. There is certainly nothing out of the ordinary about all this. I would also like to make it clear that my business and personal assets as well as my wife's assets were still in a blind trust, as a cautionary measure. My paychecks and various allowances are regularly deposited to my wife's bank account by my assistant, in complete confidence, after a cursory check by me.

It has already been proven that these questionable allegations simply do not hold water, and in any case, it is a well-known fact that the Department for which I worked very hard as a parliamentary secretary does not report in any way to the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, which is exclusively concerned with the Department of Employment and Immigration, the Ministry of State (Immigration), the Department of Labour and the Ministry of State (Youth). So even if I had remained parliamentary secretary, I would still be eligible to be elected as chairman of any committee other than the committee dealing with my Department.

As for the gratuitous allegations of lying that were made—all in vain, I can assure you—I do not intend to even consider them at this time.

• (1130)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the Hon. Member would withdraw the word "lies". There may be things that were incorrect and things that are absolutely wrong, but I know the Hon. Member would not want to suggest, no matter how wrong or incorrect he may think someone else has been, that they would deliberately lie. I would ask the Hon. Member to set that straight on the record, to withdraw that particular word, and carry on with his explanation, which is very helpful to the Chair.

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw if you understood that I was accusing the other Party of lying. However, what I am saying is that I was accused of lying. I will not comment on that.

Mr. Speaker: I may have misunderstood the Hon. Member and I apologize for that.

[Translation]

Mr. Lanthier: What I am saying, Mr. Speaker, is not that my honorable friend has lied, but that he has suggested that I had lied and would not respond to his charges.

Since I feel, as do many other Members of this stately Chamber, that these charges were laid in the heat of an argument on the futility of a childish, if not underhanded or malicious revenge; since the new and complicated business transacted by our important standing committee is obstructed by such futile procedures; since the very substance of the basic principles of the parliamentary reform was strictly adhered to; since the independence of a standing committee must be ensured; since the complete description of the true facts have been presented; and since more of the privileges of any Member of this dignified Chamber has been abused, even indirectly, I respectfully urge you, Mr. Speaker, to rule on this question of privilege at your earliest convenience, in order to restore within the very important Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, a true climate of healthy co-operation between all its dedicated and very competent members.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to respond to the question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

Following my election as Chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, Mr. Speaker, the committee was immediately asked to consider an important proposal concerning the unreliability of a member of our research team. It was therefore moved and debated that this member of our research team, who is an outside consultant under contract, be fired on the spot.

Following debate, the question on this motion having been put, five Members voted for and five against. As Chairman of the Committee, I refused to cast the deciding vote, because I felt I was not as fully informed as I should to assume the responsibility of this major decision.

Mr. Speaker, one of the main points being discussed was this: Some Members claimed that a researcher should be at the service of the committee in general through its Chairman, while others felt that a researcher under contract could just as well help individual Members carry on their own personal investigation.

Since these two factions of my beloved committee expressed diametrically opposed views, after protracted debate on the question and as committee chairman seeking to achieve a consensus I suggested that an outside consultant be hired to undertake a full inquiry into this matter and submit a report to the committee before year's end. While waiting for the consultant's report, and with a view to respecting as much as possible the rights of all committee members, I also asked that the services of the researcher remain available to individual committee members, after request to, consultation with and approval by the committee chairman.

Unfortunately I was unable to obtain such consensus on this solution which I deemed reasonable, all the more so since it was provisional, temporary and basically respectful of all rights and privileges of members acting in good faith. But a vote was then held on this resolution incorporating the basic points of my consensus proposal; the result was five for and five against, so I exercised my right to cast a vote.

That, Mr. Speaker, was the thrust of the proposal.

[English]

Mr. Warren Allmand moved:

That the Chairman be given the option to engage a consultant, to assist in the evaluation of the Committee's research needs and to report to the Committee by December 31, 1987.

[Translation]

And then there was another proposal:

[English]

Mr. Andrew Witer moved:

That during the course of the evaluation of the Committee's researchers and research needs, no member of the Committee engage any of the researchers without the consent of the Chairman.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I think there are two very important facts arising from these events which should be considered in reaching your decision. First of all, the Hon. Member who raised the question of privilege in the House had agreed to this half-a-loaf solution when a consensus was sought. Furthermore, since that time, nearly a month ago, although meanwhile a steering committee has been appointed, two deputy chairmen have been elected, the committee has been sitting regularly twice a week to deal with the complex and important matters submitted for consideration, I have received no request, either verbally or in writing, for retaining the services of a researcher on an individual basis.

Since then, a consultant was hired by the committee. I am referring to Mr. Jos Maingot of the Law Reform Commission, a former member of the legal team of the Speaker of the House of Commons. This consultant, whose integrity, competence and experience were immediately recognized by all members of our committee, is now working with the chairman and the clerk of the committee in order to hasten the results of this investigation to meet an even tighter deadline.

Mr. Speaker, far be it from me to breach the rights and privileges of a committee member or any Member of this House. I therefore respectfully seek your decision on this matter, and I assure you of my unqualified respect for the elementary principles of natural justice. I am not a lawyer but merely an engineer who wants to be reasonable and find ways to settle differences and reach a consensus among all members of my committee.

Mr. Speaker, this morning, since two questions of privilege were before the House, we decided to cancel the committee's regular meeting until you reached a decision. Without wishing to hurry the Chair, we would appreciate it very much if you would give us your decision on these two questions as soon as possible.

• (1140)

[English]

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I will not take any time to speak on the second point that was raised because I think other Members who were present at the meeting are far more able to do that.

However, in relation to the first point, I would ask you to review Hansard or the "blues" later. I believe you will note there that the Member in question alleged that another Member raised a question of privilege, the motivation for which he attributed to vengeance. I think that such a reference is definitely against the rules of the House. One cannot attribute such motives to another Member whether it is in debate, in reference to a question of privilege, or anything else.

I would ask you to review that. While I am not the Member who was attacked by that statement, I feel that all parliamentarians are affected if that kind of remark is allowed to be made without being responded to.

Mr. Speaker: I have the Hon. Member's point and I will consider it. I might point out that this ought to be a procedural argument, and comments are sometimes made in these arguments which go beyond procedural points. They are of very little help to the Chair and create other difficulties, because other Members rise and exercise their undoubted right to comment on them. If they are out of order, it just gives the Chair another matter to deal with.

However, I am very conscious of the strong feelings that have been exercised in this matter. It would be helpful to the Chair that any comments that Hon. Members make in assistance to the Chair in this matter be kept on the procedural points.

The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has been able to join us. He may not have been able to hear all of the intervention of the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier).

Out of courtesy to the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), he may want to consider the remarks in Hansard before making any further comment. If that would be of assistance to the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, I will adjourn this matter for a sufficient time for him to be able to examine the remarks of the Hon. Member for LaSalle.

I would say the same thing to the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais). It might expedite the matter. However, if the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt is seeking the floor, I will hear him briefly at this point.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to get into a discussion on the question of privilege. However, I must say that I find it passing strange that we were scheduled to have a standing committee meeting at 9.30. We invited witnesses—

Mr. Speaker: I must ask the Hon. Member's co-operation. I understand that the meeting was cancelled. I have seen the notice. A reason has been given. It is not for me to say whether the reason is adequate or inadequate.

However, we have a serious question of privilege before us on which the Hon. Member has spoken. I would ask Hon. Members not to get into something else until we at least have a chance to settle this.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to get into it. But I want to say that I am not prepared now to respond to the points that the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) has made. First, if I had known that it was going to be dealt with at 9.30—and I am sure there are other members from the committee who would have wanted to be here to deal with it—then I would certainly have done so.

I would ask that we put this matter over until all parties who are affected by it can be here. As you know, I have discussed this with you and waited for that, so that we can all be here to have a discussion about the question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), of course, is co-operating with the Chair. I think that would be the appropriate thing to do.

The Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) seeks the floor again, but I am wondering if it might not be best if we just adjourned this until other Hon. Members who are interested have an opportunity to examine carefully what the Hon. Member for LaSalle has said.

At this point, I think I will adjourn the matter and bring it back to the House as soon as it is convenient for all those who are involved.

[Translation]

I see the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) has risen from his seat. Perhaps he would consider the Chair's suggestion to adjourn debate on this matter for the time being. I will recognize the Hon. Member for a short comment.

Mr. Jourdenais: Mr. Speaker, actually, I have a question about the suggestion you made just now to get back to this some other time. Is it customary to ask the people involved, the person who raised the question of privilege, to be present when the other person or the Member against whom an attack was made—if we can call it that? I was not aware the question would be raised, and if someone hadn't called me, I would not have know what was going on. Is this normal procedure or is it just how things turned out this morning?

Mr. Speaker: Occasionally, a question of privilege is brought before the Chair without notifying the other parties, but it is, of course more courteous to do so.

In this particular instance, I suggested adjourning the debate for the time being since several Members, including the Hon. Member for La Prairie, were unable to be here to listen to the comments by the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier).

[English]

Unless the Hon. Member for LaSalle has some helpful comment, I would ask him also to go along with the Chair's wish to adjourn the matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, regarding the remark made by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russel (Mr. Boudria), if it will help the Chair to reach a decision, I am willing to withdraw the remarks the Hon. Member found offensive.

And as for lessons in courtesy, I reserve the right to pick and choose my teachers among the Members of this House.

Mr. Speaker: The suggestion by the Hon. Member for LaSalle is probably very sensible, and I thank him for making it.

[English]

I am going to exercise the discretion of the Chair and adjourn this matter. I will notify all Hon. Members when it is appropriate to carry on the discussion. Orders of the Day.

ANIMAL PEDIGREE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Harvie Andre (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-67, an Act respecting animal pedigree associations, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan—Simikameen): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak in support of this Bill which will replace the Livestock Pedigree Act with the Animal Pedigree Act, and which carries implications for the Canadian livestock industry which is such an important element in the economy of the constituency of Okanagan—Similkameen, the area I represent.

• (1150)

Since the Bill was tabled in June we have heard from industry representatives regarding modifications they would like made to the Bill before us. As a result of these interventions by industry leaders, the Minister has prepared draft amendments and has proposed that these draft amendments be considered later in committee.

We want to ensure that the best possible legislation is enacted to serve the pure-bred industry. Amendments to the Livestock Pedigree Act are long overdue. The old Act has been in force since 1900 and was last amended in 1952.

For almost 90 years the Livestock Pedigree Act has been regulating the activities of the 68 Canadian breed associations serving Canadian agriculture. The Animal Pedigree Act would update and replace the old Act with new legislation in order to better address today's realities in the livestock industry.

The main purpose of the Act is to promote breed improvement and to protect those raising or buying registered animals. It is estimated that the gains made in livestock productivity due to genetic improvement amount to roughly 1 per cent a year. That works out to be worth about $200 million a year for the Canadian livestock industry. Improved productivity has also enhanced our exports of Canadian breeding stock and semen. For example, in the past decade, Canadian exports of bovine semen have more than quadrupled. Recent figures show that exports of livestock and livestock products are worth well over $1 billion annually.

Livestock is an integral part of our agri-food system. There are solid economic reasons for the Government to ensure that the best possible livestock records are maintained. The new Animal Pedigree Act would retain the provisions of the old Act regarding animal pedigree associations authorized to keep pedigrees and to register animals of specific breeds. However, the new Act would also allow establishment of associations to keep records and to identify animals of evolving breeds. This is an important addition designed to encourage the best possible records and pedigrees of evolving breeds.

Livestock producers have been requesting these revisions for several years. The livestock industry has changed much since 1952. The new legislation is designed to meet today's requirements. The new Act will provide better protection to both buyers and sellers of livestock by strengthening Canada's livestock registration system.

I would also like to point out that the provisions of the new Animal Pedigree Act, as contained in this Bill, have met with the full concurrence of the animal industry. Consultations with all sectors of the Canadian pure-bred animal breeding industry have been going on since 1982. Therefore, I am confident that this legislation will serve the animal industry well. In turn, it will be a real service to Canadian agriculture.

I will briefly outline the major new provisions contained in the Bill now before us. First, the new Animal Pedigree Act will more clearly define the basic purpose, powers and duties of animal pedigree associations. The new Act provides for the formation of the Canadian Livestock Records Corporation. This new corporation would replace the Canadian National Livestock Records which currently has the status of an affiliation whose legal powers and status are unclear. Third, the new Canadian Livestock Records Corporation would keep pedigrees for pure-bred animals and for animals in the process of evolving into new breeds. Any interested livestock association could avail itself of this service.

The Act also defines a pure-bred animal as having at least 87.5 per cent, that is seven-eighths, of its inheritance from one breed. However, additional associations could make this more restrictive if they so desired. The Act also provides for the recognition of new breeds of animals. It makes provisions for embryo transfers and artificial insemination.

The Act provides for the amalgamation and dissolution of breed associations. It also includes an expanded offences section. It specifies time limits for transferring certificates of registration or identification after a change of ownership, and sets penalties for exceeding those time limits. In addition, the level of fines under the new offences section is to be determined by the value of the animal to which the offence relates. The maximum level of fines under the new provision would be raised to $50,000 from the old $500 maximum set back in 1952.

The new Act also updates provisions under the old Act in line with current federal corporate law legislation. Taken together, these revisions will provide better protection for both buyer and seller of registered or identified animals. In fact, the revisions will strengthen Canada's livestock registration system and could potentially increase world demand for Canadian livestock.

In summary, the Animal Pedigree Act will provide greater protection for the buyer of livestock, more realistic penalties for violations of the Act and more flexible rules for breed organization. This is a long awaited piece of legislation which deserves the support of this House.

Mr. Speaker: Debate.

Mr. Althouse: If there are questions, I have some.

Mr. Boudria: We cannot have questions for the first speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), I think, is putting the question as to why are there no questions and comments. Under the procedure, the first three speeches are up to 40 minutes and there is no comment or question allowed on them. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) has the floor on debate.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond on Bill C-67 on behalf of the Liberal Party. This Bill, of course, has been some time in the making. Members will know that the Holstein Association has been lobbying for this legislation for some time now. In fact, it wrote to the now Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) some months ago asking for his support to ensure that this Bill would come up for discussion in the House of Commons in a short period of time.

In fact, I have a letter here that was sent by the Holstein Association of Canada dated May 13, 1987, in which it is asking my colleague, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), for his support in ensuring that this legislation will be discussed in the House of Commons in a short period of time. Therefore, needless to say, although a long period of time has elapsed between the time this lobbying effort was commenced and today, we do not intend to delay the Bill unnecessarily. Therefore, we will not debate this Bill in any manner that would prevent it from going to committee.

• (1200)

My wish is for the Bill to go to committee as soon as possible. I would like to take this opportunity now to indicate that my own personal preference is that the Bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture rather than sent it in the customary way to a legislative committee. Apart from everything else, the Standing Committee on Agriculture is chaired by our distinguished colleague, the Hon. Member for Brandon—Souris (Mr. Clark), who is very knowledgeable in such issues, as are most, if not all, the members of the Agriculture Committee.

It is my view that the Bill would receive a better hearing there. It would be heard by people who have a greater understanding of the issues, not to mention the fact that our committee is well assisted by technical staff and support staff who are also very qualified. For those reasons my own personal preference would be that the Bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture rather than to a legislative committee.

Although I have indicated that the Holstein Association of Canada is in favour of this Bill, and that I support the work of the Holstein Association of Canada, I do have a bit of a vested interest in supporting it because there are more dairy farmers in the riding that I represent than in any other constituency in Canada. I suppose that that enables me to have a better appreciation of the Holstein Association and the Holstein clubs in various counties across the country.

Although the Bill does enjoy the kind of support that I have just described, it should be noted that a number of groups have serious questions about particular clauses in the Bill. I recognize that the Parliamentary Secretary and the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Agriculture have indicated both publicly and privately in one case that there are amendments which the Government is contemplating and will be bringing forward at the committee stage. It is my hope that these amendments that will be proposed before that committee will alleviate the concerns that some people have expressed in the past.

For instance, the Appaloosa Horse Club has indicated that there are measures in the Bill which it finds would need important amendments in order to make the Bill acceptable. The Appaloosa Club in a letter which it sent to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) dated August 13, 1987, indicated that it had been wanting improvements to the legislation but that it had never been consulted since the draft Bill was put together, or at least since the efforts were commenced to put a draft Bill together in December of 1985. It felt that this lack of consultation had created conditions which perhaps had affected it in a negative way and that now amendments would be necessary in order to make the Bill acceptable.

One such amendment is the following, and I read from the letter that the club sent to our colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, in which it is stated that Clause 59(g) of the Bill would need to be amended because, and I quote from the letter, "this means that commercial livestock breeders will not be able to identify, promote, or advertise to sell livestock that are not registered to a specific breed". In other words, livestock which is not registered could not be advertised for sale, as the club understands that particular provision of the Bill as it is presently drafted. That may be a clause of the Bill to which the Parliamentary Secretary, the Minister and the Government are prepared to offer certain amendments in order to correct this potential deficiency.

The club also noted that Clause 54 of the Bill could use some amendment as well as Clause 59(j). The Appaloosa Horse Club of Canada, needless to say, is of the opinion that the legislation should be amended. I read to you, Mr. Speaker, the conclusion of the letter in which it is stated:

> In conclusion, it is the opinion of the Appaloosa Horse Club of Canada that if Bill C-67 is passed in its present form, the Association, as well as its members, would be adversely affected.
> We would encourage you to have this Bill sent back to committee so that we, as well as other Associations, can have more input to Bill C-67, to make it better for the Canadian Livestock Industry.

In other words, notwithstanding those shortcomings, the club is not advocating that the Bill die on the Order Paper, or that the Government withdraw the legislation, but merely expressing the view that the Bill could and should be amended. As I read the information package that was sent to us, it would be willing to participate constructively in order to have amendments brought forward at the committee level.

In conclusion, I want to indicate that our Party does not wish to delay this legislation at all. It is our hope that it will be going to committee as soon as possible. In my own personal view, we should make an exception this time and not send it to a legislative committee. Of course, there is nothing specifically wrong with doing that, but it would be better, I think, for the legislation and we could provide better amendments and have more constructive and better participation if, by exception, we send this Bill to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in this debate on behalf of the Liberal Party. I may point out that although this Bill has taken far too long to reach the floor of the House, we appreciate the Government's decision to finally consider the second reading stage of this proposal. We have no intention of prolonging debate. We hope the Bill will be referred to committee very shortly, and as I said earlier, my personal preference is to have the Bill considered by the Standing Committee on Agriculture instead of a special legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker, that being said, I hope all Members of this House will co-operate in having the Bill referred to a committee of the House as soon as possible, so that we can make the necessary amendments, as was pointed out to us by the Appaloosa Club, and perhaps other organizations would also like to suggest some changes if we have hearings before a parliamentary committee.

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Nickle Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) rising on a point of order?

Point of Order—Mr. Nickerson

POINT OF ORDER

ALLEGED UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. Earlier this morning the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) rose on a point of order referring to remarks I made yesterday. He quoted me as saying, as reported at page 10750 of Hansard:

> However, I want to say that what I have been reading is tantamount to treason coming from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) when he speaks about the crustaceous denizens of the other place. It is tantamount to treason.

The Hon. Member for Western Arctic said that I was being unparliamentary in the use of the word "treason". I meant that remark, Mr. Speaker, completely tongue-in-cheek. As everyone knows, no one can be treasonous when referring to the other place. I wish to withdraw it unconditionally, if it has hurt the feelings of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), I make no bones about that.

• (1210)

Mr. Speaker: I wish to thank the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, and especially thank him for having sought the counsel of the Chair before he rose on this elegant withdrawal.

ANIMAL PEDIGREE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wise that Bill C-67, an Acting respecting animal pedigree associations, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak at second reading on Bill C-67, an Act to amend the Animal Pedigree Act. This is a technical type of Bill, and because of its technical nature, the House probably would have been best advised to have sent it on from here to the Standing Committee on Agriculture to hear witnesses and the proposed amendments which I understand the Government has been preparing.

The contents of the Bill are very important for the animal industry in this country. There have been no major amendments to this rather old Act which began in 1900 and was last amended in 1952. Since that time there have been a number of very important technical changes that have occurred in agriculture which have made the keeping of livestock pedigree records somewhat different from what was the case as understood by the Acts previous to 1952.

Since that time there have been a number of technical changes, for instance, frozen semen is now very much in use. It was not in 1952, and it was only beginning to be developed in the early 1950s. Embryo transfer technology is now available and used in the more expensive animals. This permits a particularly good female of the desired type to produce many calves in the course of a year. Less desirable animals will carry that embryo to full gestation and the calf will be born being of the original mother's blood lines, but having been nurtured and raised by a totally unrelated cow.

Those types of things make keeping of records for livestock more challenging. Therefore, it is the intention of the Department of Agriculture to attempt to tighten up the process by making the proposals that they have in this Bill.

Many of the major livestock breeds are in full accord with this particular set of changes, however a number of the breeds that are getting to be known or are developing have some difficulties with the Bill as it stands. Some of those difficulties are understood by the Department, I am told, and it will be presenting amendments to the Bill before us today as soon as it gets to committee.

Unfortunately, at this stage we in the Opposition do not have the exact copies of those amendments before us, so we will have to await the hearings in the committee to see what is proposed. Once we have seen those changes, we will be able to determine how quickly the Bill should go through. There are a number of groups and breed associations that have some technical problems with the Bill as it now stands. Depending on their reaction, we will be able to decide whether the proposed amendments will permit the Bill to go through committee relatively quickly.

In the past, this particular Act has applied to most of the standard barnyard animals on the farm from cattle, horses, goats, sheep, hogs, et cetera. The new Bill is designed to be expanded to include dogs, chinchillas, and foxes. I am told, Mr. Speaker, that cats are not yet included.

The main changes to the Bill are the establishment of two types of associations. There will be those types of associations that are incorporated with respect to distinctive breeds of animals, and there will be a second set of associations which will be incorporated in respect of evolving breeds. Those who are aware of the Hays' Converter, a new breed of cattle that was developed some 15 or 20 years ago by the late Senator Hays and his associates, will be aware that that is the term being used for an evolving breed for the purposes of this Bill.

Under this Bill, it will require four generations of closed breeding in order to constitute a new breed, and it must be seven-eighths pure. It is mostly beef breeders who are involved in the production of those new evolving breeds. However, theoretically it could apply to any species.

Under this Bill, there will be three main standards set. There will be a pure bred designation; animals could be designated registered; and the third designation would be identified. Those are the three terms that will be used for the purposes of this Bill in identifying the level of credentials behind each of the animals registered.

A pure-bred animal will now be one that is seven-eighths pure. An animal containing 50 per cent and more can be registered under this Bill. This will include NIP animals which before were classified under the identified category. Under the changes proposed in this Bill, the term "identified" will now only be used for evolving breeds.

Associations must be formed on a national basis. Local organizations will no longer be permitted. Therefore, this Bill gives the Minister slightly more discretionary powers as to the types of associations that might be formed. Associations cannot impose fines or monetary penalties. This will be left to the Department itself, and to the over-all Livestock Records Corporation.

Associations are now authorized to keep semen and embryo records and to issue those certificates. This was something that was not absolutely clear under the old Act. Many of the associations did do this, but it was not required under the old Act and it is now. Since this technology is very much available and applicable, it is a good step forward in the registration of livestock pedigrees.

Under this Bill, an association must apply to the Minister for official recognition of any new breed. The major change in the bookkeeping side that comes from this particular legislation, is a change in the Canadian Livestock Records Corporation, which is a central livestock registry. It will be the successor to the current Canadian National Livestock Records. The old agency was not a legal entity. The new one that is being prepared in this Bill will be a legal entity. It will cover the registration services to associations where the association decides now or in the future not to provide this service itself.

Under the Bill the Minister will have the authority to perform an inspection or inquiry if there are irregularities in the association's affairs, or suspected irregularities. There are clearer rules for offences and fines. The maximum fines have been substantially increased. The fine on summary conviction will be $25,000, and the fine on an indictable offence will be $50,000.

It has been reported that most of the dairy breeds are quite pleased with this particular direction. Some of the beef sections are showing a few concerns with Clause 59(g) which makes it illegal for an association to sell an animal of a breed that is not registered or eligible to be registered. This concerns some of the beef associations, because they have been operating under slightly different rules. For instance, it is fairly common practice to sell a commercial grade Charolais that cannot be registered, a practice that has been going on across most of the country. We are told that the amendments being proposed will perhaps be able to handle this problem.

In addition to the question of frozen embryos and frozen semen some other problems have arisen in the registration of pure-bred pedigreed livestock in Canada. I am not sure that some of these issues have been dealt with thoroughly by this proposed legislation, nor do we know at this stage whether or not the amendments will deal properly with it. Some of the viewers and perhaps a few people in the House will be aware that there has been a fairly long-standing controversy over the registration of a particular Hereford bull called Perfection. It was found much after the fact that his parentage was in some doubt. Under the technology of the day it appears, from a thorough search of the records of the Hereford Association of the United States, and consequently Canada, that his mother had produced far more progeny than it was technically possible to produce back in those days, and so the registration of the bull was in some doubt. This has had fairly large financial implications on Canadian breeders because two of his progeny were sold to Canadians. They won great honours in the show ring and were sold for very high prices. Now the registration of the descendants of those bulls has been put in doubt. A rough calculation shows that some $350 million worth of lawsuits are at stake over this bull and his progeny.

I am not sure that, with Bill C-67, we will be able to solve the problems concerning this animal and his offspring. We are expecting that some proposals may come in the amendments, and we will await the presentation of them to find out if, in fact, a solution on handling the descendants of the old fellow in Canada is possible.

For Canadian producers of Herefords and their association we have generally taken the view in Canada, after some vacillation, that an animal not eligible for registration in the United States would not be registered here. Because Perfection originated in the United States, our Hereford Association initially banned his progeny, relented, and then reinstituted the ban. We do not know whether the proposed amendments will solve the question of registering animals that have come down to us through Perfection. This Hereford bull looked very good and appears to have very good breeding behind him. But there are some doubts as to his mother.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Althouse: I think I am using correct parliamentary language in this matter, Mr. Speaker.

Similar though different problems have arisen with the Hereford Domino 15-G and the Sundance lines. These bulls have presented a somewhat different type than is normal for Herefords to present. There is still some doubt within the association as to whether owners of the descendants of those bulls should be permitted to continue to register them as pure-bred animals under the old Act.

We are awaiting with interest the amendments being proposed by the ministry to see whether these problems can be properly addressed when they come before us at the committee level.

The problem the Appaloosa horse people have been presenting to us along with some of the Arabian, the quarterhorse owners, and other recreation type horses, is one of dissatisfaction and uncertainty with the proposals in the Bill. I expect we will be hearing directly from those associations at committee stage. I hope that the Ministry of Agriculture is fully aware of their problems. I know that some of these groups have been in touch with the registrar and others and that the proposed amendments which the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen (Mr. King) referred to in his opening remarks will deal with their problems. Briefly, the Appaloosa people are worried that they may have to close their books because the Bill does not appear to allow outcrosses. The Appaloosa people are now using quarterhorses and thoroughbreds quite routinely as a means of upgrading the quality of this relatively new breed, relatively new at least in terms of being a registered association, and they have concerns about what the Bill might do for them.

As well, we have information from some of the breed associations that are afraid that the requirements for using registration services might affect them negatively. Some of them have just installed computers on the assumption that they would be able to farm out part of their computer space to other breed associations. A strict reading of Clause 59(g) indicates that that would be rather difficult to do, though there are some second opinions that think there might be a possibility of selling or assigning shares in the computer company, setting up a second company to get involved in the business of providing services to breed associations, but that is still not clear to some of the breed associations. They are hoping that that will be clarified when the amendments come before the Agriculture Committee or, if the House insists, the legislative committee handling this legislation.

We are prepared to have this legislation go through this House relatively quickly in the hope that the committee, whether the Standing Committee on Agriculture, which generally would deal with something as technical as this, or a legislative committee, will have good and adequate time to hear the concerns of the various breed associations and the people who are affected by this Bill.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, we have waited a long time for Bill C-67 which contains amendments to the Animal Pedigree Act.

Let me reiterate what the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) said. We plan to move expeditiously at this stage of the Bill. The Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen (Mr. King) indicated in his opening remarks that the Government has quite a wide range of amendments to put forward. Obviously they will address a number of the concerns which my colleague from Humboldt—Lake Centre articulated. But other points ought to be made.

• (1230)

While we are prepared to move expeditiously with this Bill today, because there was not an earlier agreement, it will be going to a legislative committee. Because of the extreme technicalities involved in this Bill and certainly the advantage inherent in having people with considerable expertise discuss the clauses of this legislation, perhaps the Government ought to give some consideration to sending Bill C-67 to the Standing Committee on Agriculture for it is on that committee that some of the best agricultural expertise in the House of Commons exists. Having looked at Bill C-67 in detail, I think we will need all the expertise we can get to be able to react to it in an intelligent and productive way.

The Animal Pedigree Act is an updated version of an Act that has been around for a long time. It was first introduced in the year 1900. It was virtually unchanged until the major amendments that were made in 1952, and subsequent to that, there have been virtually no changes to it at all.

Obviously things in the livestock business have changed since 1952. There have been significant changes in terms of improving the quality of breeds, and specifically in the use of frozen semen. The influence of that on breed registration is very important, to say nothing of the technology of embryo transplant.

In my own area of central British Columbia, the raising of livestock is a major industry. There has been experimentation in embryo transplants at the federal research station. As well, there has been research in British Columbia on the extended use of frozen semen. This has caused a great deal of concern on the part of those associations interested in specific breeds of cattle because of the impact this will have on other livestock in the future.

In the various associations interested in livestock breeds, there is a recognition that an upgrading of the Animal Pedigree Act is in order and it is a reflection of the tremendous amount of change being experienced by the livestock industry. While this Bill was primarily designed with cattle in mind, it will also include new animals. The Act as it is presently constituted involves cattle, horses, sheep, goats and hogs but now, in the words of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), this Bill will reflect changes requested by the various sectors of the industry and will be expanded to include dogs, chinchillas and foxes.

I regret the fact that the Minister of Agriculture has not decided to deal with cats. The cat lobby has been active lately and has indicated an interest in amendments to include cats. I am very serious when I say that the points the cat lobby raised with us are significant. Perhaps at the legislative committee or at the Standing Committee on Agriculture, the concerns of the cat community could be brought forward.

The fact that this Bill has been designed primarily for cattle is certainly reflected by the fact that Mr. David Clemons, the present Secretary of the Holstein Association of Canada, was the major architect of this legislation. At this point, I would like to recognize the work Mr. Clemons did in facing this particular challenge and the incredible amount of expertise he brought to bear on the preliminary drafting of this legislation. As a matter of fact, I suspect that it was only because Mr. Clemons visited the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) on June 17 that this Bill was actually tabled. Again, in dealing with this Bill that is so important, we must recognize the role that Mr. Clemons played in the development of this legislation.

There are several changes in the Bill. Highlighting the changes, there will now be two types of associations, those incorporated in respect of distinct breeds of animals, and those incorporated in respect of the evolving breeds. Most of us are aware of the Harry Hays Converter which of course was an evolving breed by definition in that the evolving breed is a group of animals in the process of evolving into a new breed. Ex-Senator Hays, a well known Albertan, has certainly been helpful in developing this new breed in western Canada.

There must be four generations of closed breeding of an animal for it to constitute a new breed and it must be seven-eighths pure. This primarily affects beef cattle, and as my hon. friend from Calgary will know, the movement toward seven-eighths pure has been important to the livestock industry.

There are now three main standards, pure-bred, registered and identified. Before this Bill, the term "registered" only referred to pure-bred animals. Now a pure-bred animal will be one that is seven-eighths pure. An animal 50 per cent pure and up can now be registered, and this will include the NIP animals which before were classified under the identified category. The identified category will now be used only for the evolving breeds to which I referred earlier.

According to the legislation, an association must represent a group on a national basis, not simply on a local basis. This has caused some consternation with some of the newly forming groups in areas of Canada that are regionally oriented and perhaps have a more regional perspective on livestock breeding. Nevertheless, an association will have to represent a group on a Canada-wide basis and I suspect, in considering the importance of developing strong and very productive breeds, that this is probably in the best interest of everyone in the long run.

The Minister, however, has slightly more discretionary powers as to the type of association that can be recognized, and we can only hope that the Minister of Agriculture, whoever he or she may be in the future, will act with a great deal of prudence when it comes to deciding on recognizing an association, particularly one that is not totally national in scope.

We are all well aware that an association cannot impose a monetary penalty but is now authorized to keep semen and embryo records and to issue certificates for both of these. As well, we recognize that an association must apply to the Minister for official recognition of a new breed. Again, I hope that will provide us as interested parliamentarians, particularly those on the Standing Committee on Agriculture, with an opportunity to be kept abreast of any new developments in new breeds.

A major change in the legislation is the establishment of the Canadian Livestock Records Corporation, more commonly referred to as the CLRC, and a central livestock registry, which is the successor to the Canadian National Livestock Records. Before, the Canadian National Livestock Records was not a legal entity. Now it is important that it become a legal entity. The new corporation is the only one authorized to provide registration services to the various associations when an association decides not to provide this service itself. Obviously this is very important, particularly recognizing the significant initiatives being taken by various associations on these matters.

Also, the Minister will now have the authority to perform an inspection or inquiry if there are irregularities in an association's affairs. It has concerned many of us for many years that the Minister did not always have the ability to act when irregularities were alleged. Now the Minister will have that opportunity.

• (1240)

As far as the various livestock groups are concerned, the dairy industry views it as a good piece of legislation, probably because Mr. David Clemons was so involved in the drafting stage. The industry has some concern about some minor drafting errors and omissions, but we can deal with those in committee. It is concerned about being prohibited from punishing members because it would make it difficult to offer better rates for others. That seems to be pretty straightforward.

As far as beef is concerned, Clause 59(g) makes it illegal for an association to sell an animal of a breed that is not registered or eligible to be registered. It is currently common practice to sell a commercial grade Charolais that is not registrable. According to Luc Bégin, chief animal registration officer with Agriculture Canada, this would be allowed on condition that the animal is clearly listed as a commercial grade.

Going back to the comments of my hon. friend from Humboldt—Lake Centre concerning the progeny of Perfection, it is unlikely that they will have their own percentage registry. Most likely, records will be kept for each of the offspring, and if Perfection is reinstated in the U.S., then the central registry will have copies of the records and owners will be able to apply for registration. This whole issue has caused a great deal of concern, particularly in the Canadian Hereford Association. The controversy began when the two Hereford Associations in the U.S. decided that Perfection's pure-bred status was questionable. They in a sense expunged him of all his progeny in the various registries. That included several championship bulls, including two with Canadian owners. As my colleague indicated, nearly $350 million worth of lawsuits are under way. I guess the Canadian Hereford Association waffled somewhat because first it banned Perfection and then allowed its progeny back into the Canadian registry pending the outcome of the U.S. lawsuits. They will be reinstituted once the ban is clarified.

Clause 59(g) is also of concern to horse breeders. The Appaloosa Horse Club of Canada, in a letter to the Minister of Agriculture, interpreted it to mean that commercial livestock breeders would not be able to identify, promote, advertise and sell livestock not registered to a specific breed. If that is so, breeders could lose a great deal of money. I guess the question we must ask is how the amendments will quell the fears of both horse and cattle producers. That will obviously have to be answered once the Bill goes to committee.

The Minister should also explain the effect, if any, it could have on horses which have dual registration in both the U.S. and Canada. The owners of Appaloosa, Arabian, quarterhorses and other recreation-type horses are extremely dissatisfied with the Act and have voiced this concern in phone calls and letters to the office of our agriculture critic. Mr. King of the Appaloosa Horse Club believes it would force his association to close its books because it would not allow outcrosses and quarterhorses and thoroughbreds routinely crossed to improve the quality of this fledgling breed. Of course, the Appaloosa breed has been developing significantly throughout the country and these concerns have to be met by the committee studying this legislation.

Certificates would have to specify the exact percentage of other breed in the crossings, and the horse clubs fear their opportunities for international sales would be squashed because the animals would not be considered pure-bred by American buyers.

One could go on at some length on all of the concerns about this Bill, but since we are simply dealing with the principle of the Bill, and we have outlined a number of concerns today and will outline more in committee, we should move the Bill into committee as soon as possible.

We have waited a long time for these amendments and we are pleased to see that we can now proceed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to call it one o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: One o'clock it is. I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1.45 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

EMPLOYMENT

SITUATION IN EAST MONTREAL—URGENT NEED FOR GOVERNMENT TO ACT

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, several hundred Vickers workers from Montreal East came to demonstrate on Parliament Hill. These workers did not ask for unemployment insurance, they did not ask for social welfare benefits, they asked for jobs. These people want to work.

We in Montreal East have about 22,000 unemployed workers, we have about 10,000 people on welfare rolls, we have an unemployment rate of 12.4 per cent as compared with 9.6 per cent in 1981, and we are facing the possible loss of 3,000 more jobs. Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government has been making studies for three years and reports are piling up. Now is the time to take action. Now is the time to award repair contracts for the ships Simcoe and Tracy. Now is the time to designate Montreal East under the Program for Older Worker Adjustment. Now is the time to open an office to help restructure and upgrade major concerns. Now is the time to set up a special manpower training fund for companies undergoing restructuring.

Mr. Speaker, since August 1986 the Conservative Government has done away with the early retirement programs which enabled textile and footwear workers to retire early as a result of plant shutdowns, and we have been waiting patiently for over a year. These people now have neither unemployment insurance benefits nor jobs, and they have to sell their houses to be eligible for welfare payments. It is unbelievable how this Government is neglecting workers.

WILDLIFE

PRESERVATION OF FALCONS—CALL FOR LAUNCHING OF INVESTIGATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, this past week in Kingston The Whig-Standard published a series of articles on Operation Falcon as a result of a 10-month news investigation. These articles demonstrate that this was in fact the "Falcon Fiasco" which damaged the beautiful birds it was intended to preserve as well as many Canadians who are internationally known experts and proponents of falcon preservation.

These Canadians include the Owl Lady, Kay McKeever, recipient of the Order of Canada, and David Mossop, a leading Canadian expert on falcons, who was charged despite RCMP objections. The charges were later dropped for lack of evidence. Mossop is out of pocket thousands of dollars because of the incompetence and bungling of the Department of Justice in this area.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service had a convicted falcon smuggler on its payroll working in Canada as an undercover agent without any knowledge whatsoever of the Canadian federal Government or provincial enforcement agencies. This is illegal and is a breach of Canadian sovereignty, yet the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has lodged no formal protest whatsoever.

I call upon the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to launch a full inquiry into the falcon fiasco which would answer questions such as why the plea bargaining by federal prosecutors allowed North America's two biggest wildlife smugglers to go free, including one who claimed to have made a profit from his fines.

There must be an investigation immediately to get to the bottom of this very serious matter, to produce a full public report, and to ensure that the objectives of preserving these precious and beautiful birds were not subverted by those who would destroy Canadian sovereignty and attack Canadians who have worked for many years to save these precious birds.

HISTORIC EVENTS

SIXTY-NINTH ANNIVERSARY OF POLISH INDEPENDENCE

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, on November 11 Canadians of Polish origin will be celebrating the sixty-ninth anniversary of Polish independence. In 1918 Poland regained her independence and became a sovereign nation after suffering 120 years of foreign oppression and occupation. Despite the ravages of war Poland maintained her dignity and resolve in order to take her rightful place once again among the Commonwealth of Nations.

In 1939, however, Nazi fascists and Soviet communist tyranny snuffed out the precious freedom and independence which for over two decades the Poles had so diligently maintained. Today, even in the face of adversity, that spirit of freedom still burns bright within the hearts of the Polish people.

As we celebrate our own Remembrance Day, let us join with Canadians of Polish descent to commemorate this day and to pay tribute to their national courage and resilience.

Freedom extracted a fierce toll from Canadian soldiers during the two World Wars and we must never forget the lesson they taught, that freedom and democracy are non-negotiable commodities and must be restored wherever they are denied.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

NORTH SYDNEY, N.S.—ELIMINATION OF RAIL CAR INSPECTIONS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, Canadian National, in its latest cut-backs on the railroad on Cape Breton Island, has cut out the last railcar inspector in North Sydney.

• (1405)

There are no more rail car inspectors in North Sydney even though there is a great deal of traffic from North Sydney to other parts of Canada, since rail cars must go through North Sydney to pick up the containers that arrive on Atlantic Marine ferries.

There will be no rail car inspectors to inspect those cars. Instead, inspections will be carried out by brakemen. Although CN has been worried about derailments in Atlantic Canada, it will now exacerbate the situation by not inspecting these cars.

Of course the real reason for the elimination of inspectors is that it does not want cars to be repaired in Sydney, as it would mean keeping workers on the job in Sydney to do these repairs.

Now the cars will go all the way to Moncton, perhaps with cracked axles or other deficiencies, which will be a danger to the cars and, of course, to human lives.

I ask Canadian National and the federal Government to reverse this terrible decision and maintain at least one rail car inspector in the town of North Sydney.

REMEMBRANCE DAY

SIGNIFICANCE OF CEREMONIES

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, November 11 is Remembrance Day, a day commemorating those Canadian men and women who died in two World Wars, the Korean War, and in our peacekeeping efforts throughout the world.

In recent years Remembrance Day has taken on a more significant role for Canadians, especially among our young people.

In Edmonton, community groups, citizens and children march together with veterans and Legion members to the Cenotaph to lay the commemorative wreath, after attending church services.

In most schools in my city, special programs are held commemorating this day. Veterans, bedecked with their medals, deliver speeches and answer questions of students. Last year over 17,000 young people were addressed by veterans.

War is not glamorous, but we must remember and appreciate the sacrifices made by our fellow Canadians who served, that we might enjoy the democracy and freedoms we have today. Lest we forget.

HEALTH

AIDS DISEASE—CALL FOR NATIONAL EDUCATIONAL PROGRAM

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, recent media reports that some private schools have embarked on mandatory AIDS testing for staff and students highlight the Government's failure to develop a comprehensive adequately funded national AIDS educational program and action guidelines to combat ill-advised hysteria.

Provincial Governments have succumbed to misdirected strategies, particularly Premier Vander Zalm's notorious Bill 34. The federal Government reportedly is considering mandatory testing for all immigrants. And some of this country's correctional services are implementing the death penalty by default with their refusal to permit the distribution of condoms to inmates.

The false sense of security engendered by such moves is a sure-fire recipe for promoting a plague.

Numerous community based AIDS groups which are federated under the Canadian AIDS Society are the effective vanguard fighting the spread of AIDS in Canada. But the Government has been niggardly, dilatory, and half-hearted in its support for these already available educational agencies.

Ignorance and narrow minded, prejudiced attitudes pose the real danger to the health of all Canadians. I call on the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to make adequate funding available immediately for comprehensive AIDS educational programs throughout Canada.

REMEMBRANCE DAY

NAMING GEOGRAPHICAL LOCATIONS AFTER DEAD SERVICE PERSONNEL

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, next Wednesday, across the country Canadians will pay tribute to all those who fought in World War I, World War II, and the Korean War. We will remember those who gave their lives for the sake of freedom.

Following the Second World War, thousands of mountains, lakes and streams across Canada were named for men killed during that particular conflict. The object of the Mountain Project in Chilliwack, British Columbia, which took two years to complete, was to honour servicemen from the Chilliwack area by publicizing the local mountains named for them.

An engraved wooden cross was placed on top of each mountain or beside a lake or stream of each one so-named, and their biographies were published in the Chilliwack Progress.

A total of 67 crosses were placed by groups such as Chilliwack Search and Rescue, Chilliwack Outdoors Club, Boy Scouts, prison camps, and Camp Chilliwack.

I applaud their efforts in making sure we do not forget the great sacrifice many men and women made for Canada's peace and security.

We shall not forget.

RENÉ LÉVESQUE (1922-1987)

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Over the past two days, Mr. Speaker, Quebec, Canada and certain other countries of the world have been unanimous in their tribute of respect and admiration for René Lévesque. Unfortunate though it may be that such unanimity is evidenced only during periods of mourning or crisis, this very human trend attests to the strength of a few men and women who, through their work and accomplishments, manage to douse for a while the flames of division and struggle among human beings.

I for one can only join in this spontaneous move which rallies men and women of every social class and every political persuasion. I do not think I would be exaggerating if I were to suggest that if Jean Lesage was the father of the quiet revolution, René Lévesque was and will ever be the father of Quebecers.

A courageous, persistent and honest man, René Lévesque faithfully reflected typical Quebecers. His most outstanding achievement was undoubtedly to offer Quebecers his services as a political leader who first and foremost was humane and ever mindful of ordinary people. Through his activities as popularizing journalist and populist leader, René Lévesque was able to heighten, among the humblest members of our society, the sentiment of pride to be Quebecers.

We are all indebted to him. And if a strong nation is the legacy of the involvement of men and women selflessly devoted to their fellow human beings, René Lévesque will always stand prominent among great men in our national pantheon.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

IMPORTANCE OF DIVERSIFICATION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the Department of National Defence has selected a principal contractor for the construction of six frigates, the second set of a total of twelve.

The Department decided to deal with the contractor who had the additional of the expertise acquired in building the first six frigates. The contractor wants the frigates built in his own yards, alleging it would cost $80 million more per frigate if he had to share the order with other shipyards.

I urge the Department of National Defence to ask the principal contractor to provide hard evidence of this additional expense, which I think is debatable.

In dealing with this issue, the Department of National Defence should consider that expertise in building frigates should not be limited to a single firm. Who would take over if things went wrong in that particular yard?

In any case, strategically, technically and economically, there is not a single country where the armed forces rely on a single supplier. We should certainly not be the first!

THE CONSTITUTION

RECOGNITION OF ABORIGINAL SELF-GOVERNMENT

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, last March the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), in his opening address to the First Ministers' Conference, stated that the explicit recognition of the right to self-government is an essential prerequisite to any constitutional amendment. Within weeks of those remarks, the Prime Minister was well on his way to cementing a constitutional deal that ignored his own public commitment.

On a policy level, the Conservative Government then cut off constitutional funding for aboriginal groups before the ink was even dry on the Meech Lake Accord. Canada's aboriginal people know it was principally the intransigence of Tory and neo-Tory provincial Governments which denied them the constitutional changes they sought to restore self-government to their communities.

Now that Quebec has been welcomed back into the Canadian constitutional family, the need to recommence constitutional negotiations on aboriginal self-government is even more pressing. The Government should immediately make a formal approach to the provinces in pursuit of this worthy and worthwhile Canadian objective.

EDUCATION

NATIONAL FORUM ON POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, the City of Saskatoon was very pleased to host the National Forum on Post-secondary Education which was held last week. I was privileged to accompany 500 delegates from across Canada in meaningful debate regarding the future of our education and youth in this country.

I wish to congratulate all those who participated, and extend special congratulations to the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) and the National Forum Committee for the outstanding organization of this conference. The forum committee will be presenting a report which will include recommendations to the Government for future discussion at the Council of Education Ministers.

This was an historic event as it was the first time that two levels of government collaborated on the future of education in our community colleges and universities, with the participation of people representing youth, education, labour, industry and all levels of government.

With the recently negotiated free trade agreement, qualified employees will be needed in Canada to remain internationally competitive. I believe the results of this forum will lead our labour force into the next century as leaders in the international market-place.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CLOSURE OF CANADIAN EMBASSY IN ECUADOR

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), and I were recently contacted by a number of our constituents about the closure of the Canadian Embassy earlier this year in Quito, Ecuador. These constituents, many of whom have family and friends in Ecuador, are concerned about the hardship this will cause to Ecuadorians who are seeking immigration to Canada and for those seeking visitors' visas.

• (1415)

I am informed that the waiting period for an appointment with an immigration officer in Bogota, Colombia, the nearest Canadian Embassy to Ecuador, can be as long as six months.

The Government says it is closing this embassy and others for reasons of financial restraint. But the savings to be had are paltry when compared to the loss of reputation Canada sustains as an actor in international politics.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has said: "In every case we can continue to serve Canadian interests as effectively under the new arrangements as is now the case". I reject that explanation. There is simply no substitute for having a person in a country experiencing the daily life of an unfamiliar society.

I urge the Government to reconsider the closing of the embassy in Ecuador and the embassy closure policy of the Government in general.

NATIONAL CRIME PREVENTION WEEK

TRIBUTE TO COMMUNITY EFFORTS TO PREVENT CRIME

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, today is day five of National Crime Prevention Week. Over the last few years we have seen a positive community response to the difficult problems of crime. Programs such as Neighborhood Watch and Crimestoppers are examples of co-operation between police and community members, co-operation that is necessary to prevent criminal activity.

Other effective crime prevention measures can be traced to concerned organizations. Governments have put in place harsher penalties for drinking and driving in response to input from groups such as MADD, Mothers Against Drunk Driving, and SADD, Students Against Drunk Driving.

As well as congratulating effective programs and organizations, we must call for an increased effort to get at the root causes of crime. Economic causes such as poverty, lack of education, unemployment, and social factors like family breakdown and community apathy all contribute to the growing problem of crime.

Events are taking place across Canada this week that are calling attention to these problems and proposing long-term solutions. The only way to control criminal activity in the long term is to strengthen communities, community ties, and to link individuals and citizens' groups with a common purpose. Such concerted and united action must be on the front line against crime.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister.

THE LATE RENÉ LÉVESQUE, FORMER PREMIER OF QUEBEC

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might seek the unanimous consent of the House to observe a moment of silence out of respect for the late René Lévesque, the former Premier of the Province of Quebec.

[Whereupon the House stood in silence for one minute.]

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—ENERGY SECTOR—EFFECT ON CANADIANIZATION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Deputy Prime Minister. He will know that it has been the stated policy of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Energy to pursue Canadianization of our energy sector. In fact the stated policy of the Government is that takeovers of Canadian energy companies that are valued at $5 million or more are subject to review. Yet the Minister of Energy's own briefing notes indicate that as of January 1, 1992, indirect acquisitions of energy companies in this country will not be subject to any review whatsoever.

How can the Deputy Prime Minister and the Government allow the Americans to take over our energy sector? How can the Government allow our energy sector to become Americanized when its stated policy has been to Canadianize the energy sector?

• (1420)

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we should define "indirect acquisition". Indirect acquisition would mean that that energy company or that energy industry was already owned by a foreign company and, therefore, there would be no change in the balance of ownership that is presently there now.

ENERGY SHORTAGES—PROTECTION OF CONSUMERS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the indirect acquisitions of Canadian companies are of Canadian companies and not foreign companies.

Not only have we been misled about the availability of a final draft of the energy text in the agreement, not only have we been misled about Canadianization, but according to the Minister's own documents any measures to protect Canadian consumers "can be overridden by a challenge under U.S. countervailing and anti-dumping legislation".

Why has the Government signed an agreement to take away from Canadian consumers protection against energy shortages?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): This agreement does not take that protection away. We still have the National Energy Board that monitors the amount of energy we have here. It still grants the export licences for export of product from Canada. The control is there.

I might remind the Hon. Member that the Canadianization policies of the energy industry are grandfathered within this agreement. So what he is telling the Canadian people is not correct.

POSSIBLE EFFECT OF AGREEMENT ON PROVINCIAL RIGHTS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I am quoting from the Minister of Energy's own briefing notes. Those are not my notes, they are the Minister of Energy's notes.

As a result of the free trade agreement, not only will the rights of Canadian consumers be subject to American court challenges, but the rights of the provinces over their own energy reserves must be decided by the Supreme Court of Canada if they are to be honoured.

How could the Government of Canada sign a free trade agreement that would take away from provinces like Nova Scotia, Quebec, and Alberta, their own rights over their energy resources? How could the Government tie up energy investment in this country for years while those questions are being reviewed by the Supreme Court of Canada?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is wrong again. That is three times. Three strikes and you are out.

Let me remind the Hon. Member of what the Minister said on October 8, 1987. I quote from page 9820 of the Commons Debates:

> I can only repeat that in our energy negotiations we secured access for all forms of energy which this Government has put in place. I can also assure him that any rights the provinces had before this agreement concerning their own policies, they will have after this agreement.

INQUIRY WHY BILINGUALISM AND CULTURE NOT PART OF EXEMPTIONS

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to any of the Members opposite who would care to field questions on the Mulroney deal.

Mr. Speaker, in committee yesterday, we had witnesses on behalf of the Coalition québécoise who mentioned a major point omitted by the Agreement from the Canadian Government. On page 15 in the section on standards, it is permitted to adopt standards and regulations to protect health, safety, the environment and national security.

I want to ask the parliamentary secretary why bilingualism and culture are not included in this section.

[English]

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): I disagree again with the findings of the group that appeared before the committee yesterday.

The free trade agreement will have absolutely no impact on the current requirements for bilingual labelling and for the provision or use of manuals in French, none whatsoever. Bilingual labelling and French language consumer information will not be negatively affected by this provision at all.

[Translation]

QUERY WHETHER EXEMPTIONS WILL BE CLEAR IN FINAL TEXT

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I shall address my question to the Deputy Prime Minister as it is very important for all Canadians. Is it true that, as the Parliamentary Secretary has said, this will have no effect on bilingualism and bilingual labelling? Can the Deputy Prime Minister assure me that the exemption will be clearly, precisely and specifically stated in the final text?

• (1425)

[English]

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think when the final text comes out and the Hon. Member reads it—I hope he does read it because I am not sure he has read the agreement yet—he doesn't have to give me dirty hand signals—I can tell the Hon. Member that it will be very clear that they will not be affected in any way, shape or form.

Mr. Lapierre: Yes or no?

AIR TRANSPORT

AIR TRANSPORTATION OF PLUTONIUM—UNITED STATES-JAPAN AGREEMENT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, it has been reported that the President of the United States has now signed an agreement between his country and Japan allowing for the transportation of plutonium over Canadian territory. I understand that the Canadian Government has asked to be consulted about this agreement.

My question is for the Minister of Transport. Have our friends, the Americans, responded to our request for consultation and have we seen the agreement? What is our response to it?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman can rest assured that there will be no plutonium flights over Canadian territory unless the Canadian Government gives its consent to such flights.

The U.S. can sign an agreement with Japan and Japan can sign an agreement with the U.S. They can sign an agreement together, and they can sign it with 10 other countries or 100 other countries.

There will be no overflights over Canada with respect to carrying plutonium unless the Government of Canada finds that it is safe, that it is in order to do so, and gives its consent, of that the Hon. Member may be assured.

As to consultation, yes, there has been consultation. The United States knows that Canada has the right to restrict or refuse overflights of plutonium which, by the way, are at least several years hence because there is nothing contemplated in the near future in any event.

CONSULTATION WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, perhaps we should wait until the very last minute.

The Minister of Transport says that we have been consulted. Does that consultation, I repeat, include the details of the agreement? When the Minister of Transport says that we must be assured of safety, does that mean containers will be used that will withstand not a 400 kilometre per hour impact, but the 700 kilometre per hour impact that is likely? Does it include the preparation of landing strips in the North and the necessary facilities for handling crashes in the North if that should happen?

Are these the criteria that will be applied in adjudicating whether Canadians will accept the overflight of plutonium over Canada?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Members love crying "wolf" on the other side of the House. "Wolf" is constantly being cried in this issue.

Japan and the United States signed a nuclear co-operation agreement on November 4. No proposal has been made that they fly plutonium under that agreement over Canadian territory. They agree that if they are going to make any such proposal in the future Canada will be consulted and will have the right to review the proposal.

It is agreed that we have the right to restrict or refuse any overflights across Canadian territory. That is agreed to by both Japan, the United States, and by all other international bodies involved. If there were any such proposal there would have to be a transportation plan, and an appropriate pass for transporting the plutonium must be developed. Those activities could take a number of years.

We are just as concerned about any possible accident with plutonium as is the Hon. Member. There has been no such proposal. If there ever is such a proposal, we will determine whether or not it is safe, whether or not it is in the interests of Canada for such overflights to be permitted, and it is recognized by all concerned that we have the right to decide that.

REQUEST THAT CANADA REFUSE PERMISSION FOR OVERFLIGHTS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, for the Minister to say that we are calling "wolf" is not only silly but irresponsible. We are talking about the potential overflight of what could be termed plutonium dustbombs which would by wind, if a crash were to occur, lead to the contamination of the entire northern environment and serious health effects would last for many, many years indeed. Rather than lodging a notice that maybe we will, maybe we will not approve such overflights, rather than conjuring up notions of crying "wolf", is it not time to simply say no, we will not subject the North to that kind of hazard?

• (1430)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, isn't life simple when you are in the Opposition? You simply tear up agreements, you simply say no and that is all you do. You do not recognize the fact that there are international Conventions to which Canada is a party which require certain courses of action to be taken.

If you are in the Opposition, you will not listen to the fact that there has been no proposal for any such overflights. You will not listen to the fact that the United States and Japan have agreed that we must be consulted and consent, and you apparently do not want to listen to the fact that there has to be a transportation plan and a safe cask in which to move that material for it even to be considered.

We will not say an anticipatory no when we have never been asked to say yes or no. It would be ridiculous and contrary to our international obligations to do so.

Mr. Riis: The people of Canada are asking.

Mr. Crosbie: Anticipatory hysteria.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF FORMER SPEAKER, RIGHT HON. ROLAND MICHENER

Mr. Speaker: I wish to bring to Hon. Members' attention the presence in the gallery of a former colleague who served our country with distinction as a Member of Parliament, Speaker of the House of Commons, High Commissioner, and Governor General, the Right Hon. Roland Michener.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AIR TRANSPORT

POSSIBLE TRANSPORTATION OF PLUTONIUM THROUGH CANADIAN AIRSPACE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, following the imagery used by the Minister of Transport in his reference to the wolf, if he has read that fable to the end he would realize that at the end of the story the wolf does show up. He might want to be a bit more careful in his statements in which he seems to be more concerned about Japan and the U.S. than Canadians and our environment in the fragile North.

The Minister's case seems to rest upon the question of safety. There is no way that one can be assured that those safety standards work until an accident occurs. If an accident does occur over the Canadian North, then the game is over.

Why does the Minister place so much importance on the standards to be applied to this flight over the Canadian North instead of taking a clear-cut position now by indicating to the international community that Canadians will not even entertain an application, as the Opposition has been urging the Minister to do since last August?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I suppose we have just heard again from Little Red Riding Hood. The position is—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: One has to assume that a question is asked for some purpose and therefore I should be allowed to reply.

The situation is that dangerous goods, including plutonium, are regulated in accordance with the International Civil Aviation Organization Convention to which over 100 countries belong, which stipulates that states retain the power to apply their domestic regulations concerning the carriage of cargo to international overflights. We also have to keep in mind that we have already filed with ICAO what is called a state variation, which requires our approval for any overflight transporting fissile material across Canadian air space.

We have to understand that there has been no proposal for any such overflight. It would be contrary to our obligations under these international treaties for us to say no when we have not even received a proposal.

When and if a proposal is received, it will have to be looked at very carefully, and unless it meets the strictest standards of safety that apply to all carriage of dangerous goods, it would not be entertained. But we will not say no before a proposal is even made. That would be the height of ridiculousness, absolutely and incredibly ridiculous. Even the hon. gentleman did not act like that when he was in government.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Transport had carefully read his instruction notes since last August, he would not be taking such a shaky, wishy-washy position today on the floor of the House of Commons. He evidently does not know his file because, if he did, he would not rise in the House and say today that we have to wait for an application before we take a stand. My question to him—

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

CONDITIONS FOR MAKING DECISION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, this is a very clear and straightforward question. Will it take an accident, a disaster, and irreparable damage to the fragile Canadian environment in the Arctic area for the Minister to take a position and decide to deny these flights over the Canadian North?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think it was Dalton Camp who had something to say about the family the hon. gentleman is named after, and he is acting like a cashew nut today.

I repeat, no one has made any such request. No one has made a proposal for such an overflight of Canadian territory and we will not deal with it until they make such a proposal. If they make such a proposal at this time, we would have to say no because at the present time there is no suitable cask in which to carry that material which would withstand the impacts that would have to be regulated and so on, so the answer at the present time would have to be no.

Who knows, there has been no proposal, but in several years' time there may be a safe way of transporting this material. That is the present position. We will listen to the hon. gentleman's fears and alarms and those of the hon. gentleman from Windsor when the time comes.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON PROVINCIAL POWERS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the Kitchener-Waterloo Record says in a report today on its front page that Ottawa appears to be preparing to force provinces to put the U.S. trade deal into effect. The paper quotes a Justice Department lawyer who said that there is no limit as to the nature of the provincial legislation that could be disallowed.

In view of this very serious report, is the Minister of Justice prepared to make it very clear to the provinces that there will not be any recourse on the part of the federal Government to disallow powers such as that to try to bludgeon the provinces into this unfair trade deal?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the Kitchener-Waterloo Record of today.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I realize that. I was reading the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix. In response to the specific hypothetical question put by the Hon. Member, I can only say that it is certainly the position of the Government that the treaty or the agreement itself is within federal jurisdiction and federal competence.

• (1440)

It has been stated, with respect to areas which impact on the provinces, that we are satisfied the provinces will indeed co-operate and do the things necessary to give full effect to an agreement which brings so many benefits to Canadians. I hope the Hon. Member will understand the progress this Government has made in federal-provincial relations, which progress is so different from federal-provincial relations in the past.

Mr. Langdon: The reason the Kitchener-Waterloo Record has this front page report is because the Minister for International Trade just visited Kitchener and was not able to satisfy the reporters from that paper—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Langdon: —that the Government would not take this course of action.

GAS DISTRIBUTION AND PRICING POLICY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, is it because of this uncertainty about disallowance, which the Minister did not actually deal with, that the Minister of Energy, outside the House yesterday, said the question of who controls gas distribution and pricing policy in this country may ultimately have to be decided by the Supreme Court of Canada?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the Hon. Member's allegation about the incompetence of the reporters of the Kitchener newspaper. Anyone who knows the Minister for International Trade will know that she answers all questions with great effect.

With respect to the question of provincial involvement, may I remind the Hon. Member of the very extensive discussions, briefings, and the amount of time spent by the Prime Minister personally with the provinces, step by step, as this process unfolded over the course of the last few months and years. This consultation with the provinces is unparalleled. They are not taken by surprise by this arrangement. They have been kept fully informed. I think this is a terrific deal for all provinces and all of Canada and I know they will support it.

USE OF FEDERAL POWERS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. It is reported—

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Where?

Mr. Axworthy: —that the negotiations over the final text are being held up an inordinately long time. One reason for that is because the U.S. has not received from the Canadian Government any firm assurance that the provinces will implement that part of the agreement which falls within their jurisdiction. The Minister for International Trade said the federal Government expects the provinces to implement it. We are now into a major federal-provincial conflict over this fundamental point.

The Minister did not in any way deny the fact that the federal Government may use its declaratory or other powers under the Constitution to force the provinces to follow this agreement. If that is not the case why will the Minister not get to his feet and say so? Why will he not say that the provinces have the right to veto this agreement in areas under their jurisdiction?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the provinces, even those opposed to the agreement, have said they will not scuttle it. Premier Peterson has made it very clear that this is within federal jurisdiction, and that although he philosophically opposes it he would not scuttle or destroy the deal. We understand why. He realizes that this is going to be very good for Ontario, but philosophically he cannot handle it.

Mr. Axworthy: It strikes me that it was not a philosopher who wiped out the Tory Party in Ontario last summer. It was a very pragmatic politician.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members will know that we are well into Question Period and well behind in the number of Members who have been recognized. I am going to ask Hon. Members to limit their preambles to the facts necessary to the question and then put the question.

DISPUTE SETTLEMENT MECHANISM

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Deputy Prime Minister who I hope will speak on behalf of the Government. Speaking of the Province of Ontario, today it tabled a report prepared for it by the legal firm of Blake, Cassels & Graydon, a distinguished group of legal experts, particularly in trade. That firm reported specifically that the dispute settlement mechanism is so flawed that not only will it not guarantee access, it will provide even further problems for Canadians in gaining access. It will deny the provinces and individuals their right to normal redress in the courts on trade disputes. The litigants in any trade dispute will be denied their constitutional rights.

Considering that serious flaw which has been pointed out by legal experts, is it not proper for the Government to admit that this mechanism is not worth the enormous price Canadians will have to pay? It will not work and will in fact do more damage to Canada than what we have now.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it has been acknowledged here in Canada, in the U.S., and throughout the world, that the dispute settlement mechanism negotiated during the bilateral trade talks is a very unique achievement, one that will probably set the stage for further activities of this kind around the world.

I am not surprised that the Province of Ontario would draw the conclusion it has. I understand that during the course of the hearings the provincial Government entertained only those who were opposed to the free trade arrangement rather than those who would present a balanced point of view. It is obvious that they would come to that kind of conclusion.

ENERGY SECTOR—PROVINCIAL RIGHTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday, as he knows, the Minister of Energy said that the Supreme Court of Canada may have to decide whether the energy part of the trade deal violates provincial constitutional rights to control resources. I have here a copy of the briefing notes for the Minister of Energy which, by the way, I confirmed have been sent to his office and he knows about them.

Mr. McKnight: How did you confirm that?

Mr. Nystrom: They also indicate concern about provincial rights.

I want to ask the Minister why, on the one hand, the Minister of Energy believes this issue may have to be decided by the Supreme Court, but on the other hand is still saying these rights have not been trampled upon? His own officials are saying there is some concern in this area.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Government position is very clear. I do not know if the Hon. Member was in the House a little earlier in Question Period when I read this, but I will read it to him again in case he was not. It is found on page 9820 of Hansard of October 8. To quote the Minister for International Trade:

> I can only repeat that in our energy negotiations we secured access for all forms of energy which this Government has put in place. I can also assure him that any rights the provinces had before this agreement concerning their own policies, they will have after this agreement.

ALLEGED DIFFERENCE BETWEEN DRAFTS OF AGREEMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary does not know what the Minister has been told. The briefing notes say, and this is a very senior official in the Department—

Some Hon. Members: Who?

Mr. Nystrom: —that the question of provincial compliance is a very sensitive area and the Prime Minister himself should be dealing with it.

On page three of these briefing notes the Government acknowledges that there is now a discrepancy in the area of incentives for future gas and oil exploration between the original draft and a more recent detailed draft which weakens the Canadian Government's position to pursue incentives independently in this area. Does the Deputy Prime Minister acknowledge the difference between the original draft and a more detailed draft? Can he also tell the House whether or not he would agree to have this more detailed recent draft referred to the special committee now studying the deal so we can compare the original draft with the much more detailed draft which is probably much closer to reality?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has made it very clear and I will simply emphasize what he has said. The provinces own the resources. They possess all rights derived from that ownership. It is up to the provinces to decide whether or not to sell those resources. They remain responsible for the management, production, and conservation of those resources. I am not sure how much clearer we can be on that point. That simply re-emphasizes, in more elaborate fashion, what the Minister for International Trade said in this House.

• (1450)

The committee is seized of the issue which the Hon. Member is raising about different interpretations. Clearly that is the most appropriate place to obtain this kind of detailed information. I am sure that the committee will have the opportunity to call all the expert witnesses it wishes to call. I understand that the Chairman of the Committee has been very co-operative in that regard. That is where the Member should seek that information.

FISHERIES

GEORGES BANK—REQUEST FOR REFUSAL OF OIL AND GAS DRILLING PERMITS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. He ought to know that one of the richest fishing grounds in the world is on the Georges Bank off Nova Scotia in the Gulf of Maine. The Deputy Prime Minister ought to know as well that thousands upon thousands of Canadian fishermen earn their living from the sea.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister give an undertaking to the primary producers in Nova Scotia and to this House that no oil and gas exploratory drilling permits will be allowed and that, in particular, Texaco will not be allowed to drill on the Georges Bank?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, there is at present in place a process for reviewing proposals by companies such as Texaco. The Government, and myself in particular, have said repeatedly that no such drilling will be authorized by myself should it in any way jeopardize the interests of fishermen in view of the very precious resources on the Georges Bank on which they depend.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, we know that when it came to standing up for the fishermen in Newfoundland in the Canada-France deal the Government caved in to France. We now know that when it comes to standing up for the fishermen in Nova Scotia the Government is prepared to cave in to multinational corporate interests in the United States.

Will the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans give a clear and unequivocal commitment today that there will be no drilling whatsoever and that he will communicate to Texaco and the Nova Scotia Government the decision that there shall not and must not be any drilling on the Georges Bank?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am amazed at the impatience of the Hon. Member. I wonder where he was when his Party was in government and many initiatives were taken and agreements signed such as one with France which impaired in perpetuity the interests of the fishermen in Atlantic Canada. He should not try to set an example in matters of this nature.

The Government has taken strong and vigilant initiatives to protect and enhance the fishery and the economic benefit which it has brought to his province and to Atlantic Canada since the Government took office.

Mr. Dingwall: You're a wimp.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VISITS BY NUCLEAR POWERED VESSELS TO ESQUIMALT

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. This morning Professor Jackson Davis released results of a study commissioned by Greenpeace, Operation Dismantle, Canadian Physicians for the Prevention of Nuclear War, and the Greater Victoria Disarmament Group on the effects of a possible accident resulting from the visit of a nuclear powered or nuclear armed vessel to Esquimalt. Plutonium concentrations of up to 10,000 times acceptable limits would be carried through the Greater Victoria area with up to 3,400 latent cancer deaths resulting.

In view of these disastrous consequences—even though the probability of such an accident is low—will the Government hold a public inquiry weighing the benefits of visits to Canadian ports by nuclear powered or armed vessels against the possible disastrous consequences of such visits?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the Hon. Member allow me to take that question as notice. I will certainly take his representation into consideration and perhaps the Secretary of State for External Affairs, when he returns to the House tomorrow, might be able to respond to it more fully.

RESULTS OF GOVERNMENT INQUIRY

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Will the Government at least release the results and details of its own inquiry into the safety aspects of such visits to Canadian ports? Will it make public the evacuation plans which are supposed to be followed in the event of such a disaster?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly bring this to the attention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Last June, during a by-election in St. John's, Newfoundland, the Prime Minister announced the establishment of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and promised $1 billion in new funding for that agency over five years. This week the President of the Atlantic Provinces Chamber of Commerce called into question the Prime Minister's commitment not to shelve existing programs to pay for the new Atlantic agency.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister assure the House today that the Industrial Regional Development Program will not be eliminated, shelved, or scaled down when its current mandate expires on March 31? Will he further assure the House that the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency will indeed be funded by new money rather than a reallocation of existing regional development funds?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is a case of anticipatory crocodile tears by the hon. gentleman who seizes on a rumour to place a question in the House, as is the usual practice of the Opposition.

The position of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is very clear. It has been allotted $1.5 billion in new money to be spent over the next five years to encourage business development and job creation in Atlantic Canada. It will not be used on infrastructure. It will not be used to clean out Halifax Harbour or to make St. John's Harbour odour free.

Mr. Tobin: Why, are you leaving town?

Mr. Crosbie: It will not even be used to make the hon. gentleman odour free. There are not sufficient funds to do that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Angus: That answer stinks.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I am tempted to say that the only way to make St. John's Harbour odour free is to have the Hon. Member move out, but I will not say that because I would be responding in kind.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO CHAMBER OF COMMERCE PRESIDENT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Rick Des Brisay, President of the Atlantic Provinces Chamber of Commerce, reports that based on a survey of the business community in Atlantic Canada 74 per cent of that business community rates the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency as only fair to poor in dealing with regional development. The so-called rumour to which the Minister refers has spread right across the business community of Atlantic Canada.

Does the Minister realize, as he should, being the very bright boy that he is on occasion, at least with his Gillette-like tongue, that the shell-game that he and the Prime Minister are playing with regional development money in Atlantic Canada is further deteriorating the confidence of the business community in a region where unemployment is already too high? Can he give me a straight answer without going crazy with his Platonian tongue?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member would need a lawn mower to get the fur off his tongue.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I am disappointed in Mr. Des Brisay's comments. Mr. Des Brisay is constantly making critical comments about the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. It is time for him to give that agency a chance. Its success will depend upon the initiatives of Atlantic Canadians because the decisions will be made in Atlantic Canada. The money is available but they must come forward with suggestions on how to expand their businesses and create new businesses.

Local initiative is required. If the local initiative is there, it will be a huge success. If it is not, it will be a failure. It is up to the people of Atlantic Canada to take advantage of it.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON WATER RESOURCES

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Opponents of free trade have raised the spectre of Canadian water being siphoned off to the United States as a result of the bilateral trade agreement. Will the Minister advise the House of the Government's response to this concern?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the subject of water has never been negotiated in the free trade talks. The subject of water is not part of the free trade agreement, nor will it be.

Earlier today the Deputy Prime Minister tabled in the House of Commons a federal water policy which makes very clear the federal Government's opposition to large-scale water exports to the United States or to any other country, for that matter.

We oppose such large-scale exports because, first, Canada is not a water-rich country. We need the water for our own purposes. We can ill afford to export our water for other countries' purposes.

Second, the inter-basin diversions that would be required to get the water from Canada to foreign markets would be devastating to the environment of Canada and to Canadian society, especially in the North where the ecology is so delicate and where native peoples would be particularly vulnerable.

WINTER OLYMPICS

COMMEMORATIVE COIN PROGRAM—UNITED STATES PLAN

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. It concerns yet another plan by the United States Government to undercut one of our programs.

The U.S. Mint has announced its plans to launch its own Olympic coin program in direct competition with ours. Does the Minister agree that this action by our so-called friends south of the border will undermine Canada's Olympic coin program and hurt our ability to finance the Calgary Olympics? If so, has he been in touch with the United States Government to tell it to keep its hands off our programs?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, first, this Government agrees with free enterprise and the opportunity for each country to do what it wants.

In the case of this specific coin program, I want to tell the Hon. Member that the United States is a little late because our coin program is well ahead of schedule. Our sales in the United States are only 17 per cent of the total program. Most of our sales come from Canada, Europe, and Asia. Therefore, I can assure the Hon. Member that the Olympic coin program in the United States will not harm our program. In fact, our program is already over the hump.

Mr. Angus: We on this side of the House recognize that part of the problem is the Government's belief in free enterprise. That is why you sold us out to the United States' Government.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, how many times will the Government give in to the United States and allow it to do whatever it wants without protecting the people of Canada and their interests? How many times?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I want to tell the Hon. Member and other Members a fact of life. We in Canada have been able to build the best facilities in the world for the Calgary Olympic Games. We will put on the best Winter Olympic Games in the history of the Olympic movement, and we are not protected by anyone. In fact this is a typical example of how Canada can benefit from a freer trade agreement with the United States.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—POLL RESULTS

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade. It relates to the recent Decima poll on free trade as reported in The Toronto Star yesterday.

It says that 62 per cent of Canadians say that the free trade deal is better for Americans according to this survey, yet it says that only 44 per cent of Canadians know that we have signed a free trade agreement. There is a great deal of confusion.

Does he feel that the report was slanted in a way that might inadvertently mislead the Canadians to my left, and can he indicate that there are certain American interests who fear the exact opposite, that Canadians have a better deal than the Americans?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I read that article in one of those famous Canadian newspapers, The Toronto Star. Many of the figures in that particular survey were not reported. The good news was not reported.

For example, 70 per cent of Canadians believe that prices will be lower, 57 per cent of Canadians believe that as far as energy is concerned the free trade deal is a good one for Canada, and 51 per cent believe that there will be more jobs as a result.

I am not surprised that 62 per cent of Canadians think the Americans got the better of the deal today, but it is interesting to note that after this particular survey was taken we find that auto parts manufacturers in the United States, the energy industry in the United States, the AFL and CIO in the United States say that Canada got the best deal and they are opposed to it in the United States.

WAR CRIMINALS

STATEMENT BY FORMER ROYAL COMMISSIONER—LAYING OF CHARGES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. In light of the criticism by Royal Commissioner Mr. Justice Deschênes of the failure of the Government to advance its war criminal policy to the stage of laying charges, especially in the 20 cases that were identified for urgent action, what is going wrong and when can we expect some charges to be laid?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think Mr. Justice Deschênes was saying the same thing that so many Canadians have said. Naturally, there is an impatience with respect to a resolution to this matter due to the fact that the previous Government did virtually nothing. It was acknowledged by his Prime Minister in a meeting yesterday with a closed group of people that he had a lot to confess for as a good practising Catholic.

As far as we are concerned—

Mr. Nunziata: Shame on you!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I believe we have in fact moved in this matter with resolve and disposition.

Ms. Copps: What does his religion have to do with anything?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Bill was proclaimed on October 30. This is November 5.

Ms. Copps: What does his religion have to do with anything?

Some Hon. Members: Shush!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We have been moving quickly, according to a very—

Ms. Copps: It is not a religion issue.

Some Hon. Members: Shush!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —with respect to a review and an investigation of these files.

Ms. Copps: That is outrageous!

Some Hon. Members: Shush!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We have had matters of agreements—

Ms. Copps: Absolutely outrageous!

Some Hon. Members: Shush!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: If the Hon. Member for Hamilton does not want to hear this—

Mr. Ouellet: Tell your guys to shut up.

Ms. Copps: Religion has nothing to do with this issue.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York Centre.

DESCHÊNES COMMISSION REPORT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, if Mr. Trudeau did in fact say that—

Ms. Copps: And religion has nothing to do with it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ouellet: She has as much right to speak as you do.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question.

Mr. Kaplan: If Mr. Trudeau did in fact say that his Government gave the matter a lower priority, it remains a fact that there were more concrete results during the Trudeau Government than there have been from this Government which says it gives the matter a high priority. Results are promised, but where are they?

The Deschênes report recommends that there be prosecution in 20 cases that were identified as being cases for urgent action. When will there be some results?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, again, this is a misrepresentation of the Deschênes Commission report. He said that there are 20 cases that required extra attention because of their nature. He said that each of those cases required further investigation, further action, and most of the cases involved investigation for evidence behind the Iron Curtain.

What we have done is to move with dispatch with the legislation. Second, we have made very good gains with respect to getting the safeguards that the Deschênes Commission recommended with respect to getting evidence behind the Iron Curtain. We are negotiating agreements to protect the rights of Canadians in this regard.

Third, we are fully involved in the investigation of these cases and we are carrying them on with dispatch and resolution, which is more than I can say about the previous administration.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That concludes Question Period.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED IMPUTATION OF RELIGIOUS MOTIVE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago the Minister of Justice(Mr. Hnatyshyn) suggested that a former Prime Minister's religion motivated his action with regard to the Nazi War criminal issue.

I want the Minister of Justice to stand and apologize. He suggested somehow that because the former Prime Minister was a Roman Catholic, he did not take the action that was necessary to bring that matter to justice.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I made no innuendo or imputed any motives.

Mr. Nunziata: You did so.

• (1510)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I was quoting the newspaper reports of what the former Prime Minister said himself.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister, in the House, only a few moments ago, made an association between a person's religion, in this case the former Prime Minister's, and the decisions that resulted in the Deschênes Commission and the Government's action thereto.

It seems to me that the Minister of Justice should be the first person in this country to know that the recommendations of the Deschênes Commission have absolutely nothing to do with religion. The fact that a person is a practising Roman Catholic, Buddhist, Jew or anything else, is completely irrelevant to this issue. The fact that he would even suggest such a thing, I think deserves an apology because it shows that he does not even understand the issue with which we are dealing, that is, the result of the Deschênes Commission.

Mr. Speaker: A question of privilege has been raised. Perhaps the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) could obtain the newspaper article from which he was apparently quoting and give it to the Chair. I will consider the matter and report back to the House.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to do so. I can only say to the Hon. Member that the Ukrainian Orthodox go to confession as well.

Ms. Copps: That is not the issue.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Perhaps the Hon. Member should read the report of the Citizen of November 5, which I will give to the Speaker. The newspaper refers to the following statement by former Prime Minister Trudeau:

> He said, "In our religion, we have confession and I must confess that our Government did not do things it should have done".

That is the reference I was making. If the Hon. Member takes issue with that, she should talk to Mr. Trudeau.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, maybe I am naive and ignorant—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: —but I do not understand—

Mr. Jelinek: You got that right!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member may not have a question of privilege but the Hon. Member feels aggrieved and has a right to be heard.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I just do not understand and I would ask the Minister to clarify. He made a comment about his religion. What does my religion as a Roman Catholic or anyone else's religion have to do with the question that was asked by my hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan)? It has absolutely nothing to do with it and I suggest that the Minister should not exacerbate the situation by making further religious references on an issue which should affect all Canadians.

Mr. Robinson: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) in a moment. In the meantime, the Hon. Minister of Justice has the floor.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, if this will satisfy the Hon. Member, I had absolutely no intention to impute motivations. There was no intention of trying to suggest any religious overtones with respect to the matter. I quoted the former Prime Minister. I hope the Hon. Member will understand that that was the intention and accept my word for it.

Mr. Nunziata: The record will speak for itself.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might provide some information on this matter as the only Member of Parliament who was actually present at the meeting at which the former Prime Minister, Mr. Trudeau, made the comments in question.

The article to which the Minister of Justice referred is one source of information of what was supposed to have been an off the record briefing by the former Prime Minister. However, an article in the Toronto Star also refers to it. The former Prime Minister is quoted as stating:

> I belong to a religion where, when we confess our sins, we confess not only what we did but what we failed to do—
> In hearing my former parliamentarian Svend, I felt it was a good lesson for my soul when you realize the number of subjects we had failed to deal with.

In the context of that particular statement, I would suggest, with the greatest of respect, to my colleagues from the Liberal Party that they are blowing completely out of proportion the statement that was made.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has heard enough. I have the point. I will consider it. I will look at the article and report back to the House.

I might say that the Chair is cognizant of the fact that in this place things can be said, or there may be a misunderstanding of something that has been said, that can cause a lot of disappointment, dismay, and at times wound. I will look at it from that point of view. However, the Hon. Minister has stated quite clearly that that was not his intention, and it is more complicated because he was apparently giving the quote from his own memory, and we have heard another quote very much along the same lines. However, I will come back out of courtesy and respect to all Hon. Members and respond to the matters which have been raised.

There is no need, in the opinion of the Chair, to carry this matter any further.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have the customary question that is asked on Thursdays as to the intentions of the Government with respect to business that it wants to put before the House.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon we will commence consideration of Bill C-88, the Judges Act. If this Bill is not completed this afternoon, we will call it again for tomorrow. Following completion of Bill C-88, we will call Bill C-54, the Bill dealing with pornography.

On Monday, when the House returns from the remembrance week adjournment, we will call Bill C-77, the emergencies Bill, followed by Bill C-54, and hopefully there will be a designated opposition day sometime later that week.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of Guy Fawkes Day, there has been an agreement among all Parties that we would ring the bells prior to 3.30 p.m. and the vote will take place precisely at 3.30 p.m. I would suggest that as soon as we are through with routine business, we ring the bells and come back to vote at 3.30 p.m.

POINT OF ORDER

DESIGNATION OF PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY TO MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice while he is in the House a question with respect to the status of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice, or the absence of a Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice. The Prime Minister's Office had in fact issued a press release indicating that the Hon. Member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer) was appointed as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice. He is a very distinguished Member and certainly many of us look forward to working with that Member in this important area of parliamentary responsibility.

However, I note that Hansard from yesterday, which lists the Parliamentary Secretaries, makes no reference to the Hon. Member for Cambridge in the list of Parliamentary Secretaries. I would like to ask through you, Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Justice would clarify this omission and indicate just exactly who is the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, there was a press report that came out. I am not aware of any other dispatches or documents published by the Prime Minister's Office. Certainly, there were press reports with respect to the appointment of the Hon. Member for Cambridge as my Parliamentary Secretary. This is not correct. I regret that in the sense that I agree with the Hon. Member for Burnaby that the Hon. Member for Cambridge is a very distinguished Member and one who would be a great asset as a Parliamentary Secretary, as he was for a period of time with me previously.

However, the position still remains vacant primarily because it is the most sought after position as Parliamentary Secretary and there are such a lot of people applying for the job. I guess the decision is rather hard to come by.

I am hoping that someone will be appointed at an early time, but I am now being well served by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hawkes) who will assist me in that capacity for the foreseeable future until a Parliamentary Secretary is appointed.

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed from Wednesday, November 4, consideration of the amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto;

And the motion of Mr. Andre:

That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this House agrees with amendment 18(b) made by the Senate to Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, but disagrees with all other amendments except amendment 13(a), (b), (c), and (d), 14(a), (b), (c) and (d) and amendment 16(a) because this House believes that amendments 4(b), 11, 12, 15(a), (b), and (c), 16(b), (c), (d) and (e), 17(a) and (b) and 18(a) are in contradiction to the fundamental principles of the Bill and undermine the objectives of the policy.

More specifically:

Amendments 4(b), 11 and 12 change the coming into force of the sections thereby jeopardizing all of the research and development commitment of the industry, and are therefore not acceptable;

Amendments 15(b), (c) and 18(a) remove flexibility from the Patented Medicines Prices Review Board inconsistent with the design of such regulatory agencies and are therefore inconsistent and not acceptable;

Amendment 15(a) arises out of Senate amendments 13 and 14 and is therefore inappropriate;

Amendment 16(b), (c), (d) and (e) and 17(a) and (b) arise out of amendments 13, 14, and 16(a) which are proposed for further amendment by this House in this Message. Therefore the Senate amendments are inappropriate.

And that Senate amendments 13(a), (b), (c), (d), and 14(a), (b), (c) and (d) be amended to read as follows:

That Clause 15 of Bill C-22 be amended,

(a) by adding, immediately after line 36 on page 13, the following:

"(1.1) Where, in the opinion of the Board, a patentee of an invention pertaining to a medicine has, within such period as is prescribed, increased the price at which the medicine is sold in any market in Canada by a percentage in excess of the percentage increase in the Consumer Price Index, as published by Statistics Canada under the authority of the Statistics Act, for that period, the Board may, by notice in writing, require the patentee to provide the Board with such information and documents concerning the costs of making and marketing the medicine as the Board may specify and as is available to the patentee in Canada or is within the knowledge or control of the patentee, and on the receipt of any such notice, the patentee shall comply therewith within such time as the Board may specify."

(b) by striking out line 45 on page 13 and substituting the following:

(c) by adding, immediately after line 33 on page 17, the following:

"(5.1) Where, in the opinion of the Board, a patentee of an invention that is a medicine has, within such period as is prescribed, increased the price at which the medicine is sold in any market in Canada by a percentage in excess of the percentage increase in the Consumer Price Index, as published by Statistics Canada under the authority of the Statistics Act, for that period, the Board may, by notice in writing, require the patentee to provide the Board with such information and documents concerning the costs of making and marketing the medicine as the Board may specify and as is available to the patentee in Canada or is within the knowledge or control of the patentee, and on the receipt of any such notice, the patentee shall comply therewith within such time as the Board may specify."

(d) by striking out line 42 on page 17 and substituting the following:

(e) by striking out line 17 on page 20 and substituting the following:

"purpose of the report referred to in"

(f) by striking out lines 2 and 3 on page 23 and substituting the following:

(a) a summary of pricing trends in the pharmaceutical industry; and

(b) the name of each patentee to whom a notice under subsection 41.15(1.1) or 41.16(5.1) was sent during the year and a statement as to the status of the matter in respect of which the notice was sent."

(g) by striking out lines 4 and 5 on page 23 and substituting the following:

"(2) The summary referred to in paragraph (1)(a) may be based on information and".

And that Senate amendment 16(a) be amended to read as follows:

That Clause 15 of Bill C-22 be amended by adding, immediately after line 17 on page 19, the following:

"(12) Where an order is made under paragraph 6(d) in respect of a medicine, the prohibitions set out in subsections 41.11(1) and 41.14(1) cease to apply in respect of the medicine effective on the date of the order."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There has been a proposal by the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) that we call in the Members for the vote. Is there unanimous consent for that?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Andre) which was agreed to on the following division:

JUDGES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved that Bill C-88, an Act to amend the Judges Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as I stated after Question Period, I am very pleased to be able to address the House today on Bill C-88, an Act to amend the Judges Act.

• (1540)

As you know, Parliament established a process in 1981 to review the salaries, benefits and other amounts payable under the Judges Act. Every three years a commission is appointed to inquire into the adequacy of judicial remuneration. These commissions report to the Minister of Justice who, in turn, tables the report in Parliament. The rationale of having such commissions is obvious. Triennial commissions provide, on a regular basis, advice to the Government which is independent in nature. The process respects and enhances the independence of the judiciary according to our traditions.

The Supreme Court of Canada recently dealt with the independence of the judiciary in the Beauregard decision and affirmed that this independence is grounded on both security of tenure and financial security.

The 1986 commission chaired by Mr. H. Donald Guthrie, Q.C., submitted its report to me on February 27, 1987. I then tabled the report in Parliament. The report contained 27 recommendations in total. These recommendations dealt with salaries, pensions, benefits and income tax related matters. The standing committee considered the commission's report in April and accepted it subject to three modifications. Two of the modifications pertained to pension matters. The third modification related to salaries. The standing committee agreed with the commission's proposed salary adjustments but recommended their implementation effective April 1, 1987 rather than April 1, 1986.

The Government has the recommendations of the commission dealing with pensions and tax related matters under continuing consideration. As you might expect, Mr. Speaker, these matters are very complex and relate to broad policy concerns of Government. The Government is moving, in Bill C-88, to address the salary recommendations of the commission and matters directly related to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Bill C-88 is an appropriate response to both the triennial commission report and the report of the standing committee. the commission found that the income of federally appointed judges has "failed to keep pace with other groups in our society". The commission called for a new salary base for judges which is fair to the judiciary. The commission expressed concern that eminently qualified lawyers have declined appointments due to the financial consequences which were to follow.

The Government has accepted the findings and recommendation of the commission regarding salaries and is implementing the recommendation in this Bill. However, in the context of the Government's fiscal framework, we will be phasing in the proposed adjustment over three years. Clause 1 allows for increases effective April 1 and each of the years 1986, 1987 and 1988.

The Bill supersedes indexing adjustments for 1987 and 1988 during this phase-in period. I think it is important to understand that. Therefore, Hon. Members will realize that a certain portion of the adjustments being effected in Bill C-88 would have been received in any event through the operation of the indexation provisions in the Judges Act, indexation provisions which, I might add, use the industrial aggregate index as is the case for Members of Parliament and others.

In addition to providing adjustments to judicial salaries, the Bill will repeal the provisions of the Judges Act which suspend the pension entitlement of a surviving spouse during his or her remarriage. This statutory suspension of benefits raises serious legal questions involving equality rights which have been recognized both by the report of the parliamentary committee on equality rights and by the Government's response thereto. Another amendment to the Judges Act will also eliminate consideration of a child marital status as a criterion for eligibility for survivors' benefits under the Judges Act.

There are at present over 800 men and women serving Canada on the federally appointed bench. These judges sit on the county and district courts which now exist in British Columbia, Ontario and Nova Scotia; the superior courts, trial and appeal; and under Section 101 of the Constitution, the Federal Court of Canada, the Tax Court of Canada and the Supreme Court of Canada. These men and women serve with honour and distinction. The role has, as many have observed, been enhanced since the coming into force of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. They face increasing workloads and deal on a daily basis with matters of tremendous importance dealing with the criminal law, civil disputes and complex matters relating to the Constitution and Charter.

While we have always been fortunate to attract excellent candidates to judicial offices, we must ensure that the salaries and other benefits judges enjoy are fair and keep pace with other groups in our society.

I call upon all Hon. Members to join with me in supporting this Bill which is based on certain recommendations of the triennial commission and which relate to fairness and to equality rights considerations.

As I stated previously, Parliament created the triennial commission process for a good and valid purpose. I call upon all Hon. Members to act in the spirit of this process and support the Bill. We, as parliamentarians, have a profound duty to act in a fair way in responding to the report of the triennial commission and to respect the independence of the judiciary in Canada with regard to the matter of financial security.

I would say only that whenever one deals with matters of salaries concerning the judiciary, it should be remembered that the judiciary, because of the nature of their responsibilities, are divorced from the politics of the country and really have no one to act as their advocate concerning the appropriateness of remuneration. When the amendments were made to the legislation to provide for the independent commission to make an assessment on a realistic basis, I think we provided ourselves as parliamentarians with a vehicle within which we can consider these matters. Hopefully we will operate in a sense of fairness and equity toward the judiciary as they are most important to us in Canada.

I commend the Bill to Hon. Members. I hope that we can see our way clear to passing this Bill at an early date.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of the Official Opposition with the uncharacteristic purpose of supporting this legislation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: I would like to say a few words, however. I have read the Guthrie report and I approve of the idea of having this independent commission review judicial salaries. There is no doubt that the salaries being settled by this legislation are high salaries in proportion and in comparison to those earned elsewhere in the Public Service and in society. But they are not high salaries when one compares them to the incomes of the profession at the level from which we draw our judiciary and from which we hope to continue to draw our judiciary. I approve of the idea of indexing because I think it is difficult in this institution to deal regularly with these salaries when we see so much injustice in the salary mechanisms established elsewhere by this Parliament.

I want to refer to a couple of examples. The judiciary is a special case. We sometimes run into people in our constituencies and elsewhere who say Members of Parliament are underpaid. It is nice to hear that if you are a Member of Parliament. Certainly there are Members of Parliament, depending on their profession, who might have been making a lot more money if they had been doing their other job and not serving their country. In this Parliament that is not true in every case, nor should it be in every case. This Parliament is better because it drew people from all kinds of different jobs, people who were teachers, small businessmen, people in some cases who were out of the labour force and living at home, religious leaders and others for whom salary was not the issue. When you look at the salaries of Members of Parliament I do not think one should draw conclusions from what you find when you are looking at the problem of the bench.

Our purpose is to draw from the level in a profession at which salaries are very much higher than the $127,700 which is to be the salary level after the phase-in period for which the Minister has provided. That looks like an awful lot of money but I believe one would find that it is less than virtually all of the individuals who would receive that salary would make if they continued with their successful careers as lawyers working at the level from which we are drawing judges and from which we hope to continue to draw them. Therefore, we support this legislation.

I want to refer to one particular feature of the legislation, the removal of the provision that a pension to the spouse of a judge ceases on remarriage. I approve of that change. I think it is a humane way to treat the judiciary and I think also it will mean something to successful lawyers, some of whom are young and have spouses who will be very much affected by the abandonment of promising and lucrative careers as lawyers to become judges. It is a meaningful and humane thing for the Government to do and we support it.

That particular provision, the continuation of spousal pensions on remarriage, is one which the Government ought also to offer in other areas of Public Service. One of my colleagues, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) will, I hope, speak on this matter. This humane provision ought to be followed elsewhere. The Government ought to change other legislation so that that same humanity will be applied by the Government as an employer of those other than the Section 96 judiciary to which the amendments that are before the House primarily apply.

I offer my support and I would like to ask if there might be unanimous consent to go through all three stages of the Bill today so that we could settle it and move on to other matters which I think ought to be given more time.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no unanimous consent. Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to make a few comments with respect to Bill C-88, legislation which would implement in a phased-in way the recommendations of the Guthrie commission which submitted a report and recommendations to the Government of Canada on judges' salaries and benefits on February 27 of this year.

We in the New Democratic Party support the second clause of this Bill which would delete the offensive provisions of the existing Judges Act which effectively bar widows or widowers of judges from remarrying if they wish to continue to receive their pensions. Those provisions are archaic and discriminatory and I welcome the initiative of the Government in repealing those provisions from the Judges Act.

Indeed, the Special Committee on Equality Rights recommended that a similar bar to pensioners be repealed throughout federal jurisdiction. I would certainly hope that the Government would apply this important principle not just in the case of judges but indeed in the case of all others who are in receipt of federal pensions.

At the same time, I might say that we are still waiting for the Government to make good on the commitments and promises it made to bring forward other legislative changes in response to the unanimous report of the Special Committee on Equality Rights.

[Translation]

It was on March 4, 1986, that the Government promised to amend the laws of Canada to implement the changes recommended by the Equal Rights Commission. Mr. Speaker, eighteen months later, the Government has still done nothing to keep this important promise. I ask the Government to keep its promise to ensure equal rights in Canada. I am well aware that you might one day hold another position than the distinguished one you now hold. I do not know whether it will be that of Prime Minister, but you will certainly assume the duties of that position with the same distinction as those of Deputy Speaker.

[English]

That deals with Clause 2 of the Bill. There is another provision in this legislation, indeed the heart of the legislation, Clause 1, which would implement a substantial pay increase for members of the bench appointed by the federal Government. The current base level of salary for a federally appointed judge at the Superior Court level or at the Federal Court level is approximately $110,000 per year.

The Guthrie commission states that the income of judges has failed to keep pace with that of other groups in our society. Objectively, I suggest that for a man or a woman to be paid, as the lowest paid federally-appointed judge is, something in the order of $105,000 per year is not unreasonable or unfair. I suggest furthermore that those salaries are already indexed as of January 1 of each year to take into consideration inflation.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister whether the Government has money to spend to increase salaries and pensions in Canada. If not, why increase the salaries and pensions of judges instead of those of other Canadians who have a much greater need for such an increase?

[English]

I realize that some would say it is easy to attack a pay increase for judges since they cannot respond in the Chamber themselves, but we have an obligation to look at the legislation on its merits. The suggestion has been made that there are lawyers, men and women who should be on the bench but who are not because they cannot afford to get by on an annual salary of $110,000 a year.

As I have said on other occasions, if a lawyer is approached to serve, something which in itself is a great honour, and says, "No, I am not prepared to serve as a judge because I think $110,000 a year represents too much of a sacrifice for me", that lawyer should continue in the profession of the law. I do not want that kind of person on the bench. I do not want someone who believes that $110,000 a year is not enough and who is not prepared to accept the call to the bench. The Guthrie commission stated that it has independent knowledge of eminently qualified lawyers who have declined appointment to the bench due to the loss of income that would result. I suggest with respect that for every one of those individuals there are many more eminently qualified lawyers, to use the words of the commission, who could serve with distinction but who have not been approached.

• (1600)

I oppose this Bill, as I have opposed other provisions of a similar nature. I hope when it goes to committee we might get some justification from the Minister about why it is that a Government which is speaking, as it should, of scarce resources has decided to increase the salaries of those who are already at the very highest level of income.

I want to take this opportunity as well to indicate that we in the NDP are deeply concerned that this Government has failed to follow through in another area of fundamental importance affecting the judiciary. That concerns the process of appointment to the bench.

[Translation]

It has been quite some time since the Minister of Justice promised to change the Canadian system of appointments to the bench. He would know that his former Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead (Mr. Gérin), chose to resign because he was so frustrated by his own Government's lack of will with respect to the appointment of judges and to democratizing the process of political party contributions in Canada.

[English]

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) knows that his predecessor, now the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), promised over two years ago to bring forward changes to the system of appointment of judges. He knows the Canadian Bar Association stated that many Canadians believe the system still contains an excessive amount of political patronage. Indeed, many examples of that remain, unfortunately.

Just today we learned of the speculation that the Attorney General of British Columbia, Brian Smith, is apparently being considered or trying to have himself considered for Chief Justice of British Columbia. What a perversion of justice. As Attorney General he has displayed utter contempt for the Charter of Rights. He has shown total incompetence in dealing with the law. He described as seditious conspiracy the efforts of British Columbians to peacefully protest against labour legislation in that province—excuse me.

Mr. Friesen: Even he chokes on it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You should choke on your words.

Mr. Robinson: We learned today that this individual may be considered—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Who said so?

Mr. Robinson: —for appointment as Chief Justice in British Columbia. That is certainly possible because the federal Government and the Minister of Justice have refused to bring forward changes to the system of judicial selection which they promised.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We were waiting for you to come back.

Mr. Robinson: How much longer must Canadians wait before the Government makes good on its promise?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, how many months will we have to wait before this Minister and this Government live up to their commitment to revamp the judicial appointment system?

[English]

I hope that the speculation and rumours concerning this appointment are misguided. Certainly we in the Province of British Columbia are fortunate in having a distinguished chief justice in Mr. Justice Nathan Nemetz. I know all British Columbians, indeed all Canadians, would be deeply shocked at any suggestion that the occupant of that very important and fundamental position in the Canadian judiciary would be someone who has displayed such contempt for the elementary principles of justice and the Charter of Rights. I hope the Minister will rise in his place and once and for all squelch that suggestion.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The last one to criticize me became a Minister of Education.

Mr. Robinson: We know that the role of the judiciary in our society has been enhanced significantly as a result of the adoption of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Indeed, we recognize the fundamental importance of the judiciary in Canadian society. However, I question the decision of the Government to move forward with salary increases based on the Guthrie recommendation. I believe that decision is not warranted.

My final point concerns some other recommendations made by the Guthrie commission. It pointed out that inequities remain in the system of judges' pensions. Without in any way endorsing all of those recommendations in this respect, I would have hoped that the Minister of Justice would come forward not just with a package dealing with salaries, but one which recognizes some of the inequities documented by the commission. One of those inequities deals with the question of pensions for judges who have served more than 10 years but less than 15 years. The commission recommended that there should be provision for a partial pension for those individuals. I welcome and support that recommendation and I hope the Government brings forward at an early date legislation to implement that recommendation. I hope the Government also bears in mind those individuals who have served with distinction and honour in the federal judiciary when determining the date upon which such provisions take effect.

In conclusion, while we welcome the changes in Clause 2 which will put an end to this offensive barrier with respect to pensions, we must register our opposition to the proposed salary increase. We have to bear in mind that the federal judiciary automatically has its salaries indexed under the existing provisions of the Act. I look forward to dealing with this and other questions in committee.

Mr. Lewis: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think you will find there is unanimous consent to revert to Motions in order to take care of a motion to allow the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade to travel, and a motion to adjourn the House today until Monday, November 16, 1987.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND INTERNATIONAL TRADE

AUTHORIZATION FOR STANDING COMMITTEE TO TRAVEL

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade be authorized to adjourn from place to place in Canada between November 22 and December 5, 1987, for the purpose of holding hearings, as the Committee deems appropriate, on the subject of the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States, and that the necessary staff do accompany the Committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) have unanimous consent to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, that committee is in session in the West Block at this time, but I am here to oppose this motion because it is the kind of proposal which is making a complete farce of the hearings on free trade. The Government has already asked the committee and the Canadian people to study this so-called free trade agreement without benefit of any legal text. We have already been told that the text will not be ready for several weeks. We are holding hearings and planning more hearings, asking people to comment on the principles of the agreement rather than on the text which I understand will run to about 900 pages while the agreement which we now have before us consists of only about 36 pages.

That is not all, Mr. Speaker. The American Congress will have until about April 1 to study this agreement. According to the fast-track system which has been adopted in the United States, they have 90 days after the President signs the agreement on January 2.

We do not have the legal text, yet are asked to study the agreement. The House Leader is now proposing a motion which the committee rammed through last night against the wishes of opposition Members. Members of the Opposition on the committee suggested last night that we do want hearings on the so-called trade agreement between Canada and the United States but that two weeks was totally inadequate.

According to the plan which is being put to the House this afternoon, one day will be spent in each province. One day will be spent in British Columbia in one city, one day in Alberta in one city, one day in Saskatchewan, one day in Manitoba, and one day in the Northwest Territories. In the second week we will cover eastern Canada spending one day in Quebec, one day in New Brunswick, one day in Prince Edward Island, one day in Nova Scotia, and one day in Newfoundland.

We are receiving hundreds of letters from groups and individuals who want to be heard on this most important agreement which the Government itself says is one of the most significant economic measures since the Second World War.

We are asked to study, in only a few weeks, one of the most significant economic measures which will impact on almost every economic walk of life in Canada. We are sitting in Ottawa this week, as we will be the week after the break, then will spend two weeks on the road and be expected to make a report. If we are to pursue the proposal made by the Conservative majority on the committee, hundreds of individuals and groups will not have a chance to be heard. We will be pushing through a report of the committee without adequate hearings.

I remind the House that when we dealt with such things as the Crows Nest Pass rates and the pharmaceutical Bill we spent several months in committee hearing from individuals and groups. Those matters were important but not as important as this agreement. We are asked to hear the people of Canada in two weeks, one week in the West and one week in the East. We think that is totally inadequate. We tried to amend the motion last night by providing for additional hearings across the country. The government majority turned that down. They are trying to ram this through. They do not want individuals and groups to be heard as they should. We will oppose this motion.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to speak in opposition to this motion. We have heard from government Members time and again that they would like to have this so-called Mulroney deal discussed. However, the reality is that when an opportunity arises to study the deal in detail we get absolutely no co-operation from the Government.

I am from the most industrialized riding in Canada, the riding of Hamilton East. There are more factories per square foot in my riding than in any other riding in the country. I, for one, feel highly insulted that as a result of this committee's Conservative majority only one day will be spent in each province to hold hearings which will not permit the voices of all people to be heard.

Does the Government really believe that the Province of Ontario stops in Toronto? Does the Government really believe that the Province of British Columbia stops in Victoria? Does the Government really believe that the Province of Newfoundland stops in St. John's?

If the Government were really serious about examining this agreement in detail, it would permit full hearings which would include travel, not only to the capitals of each province but to other communities and to rural areas which may be affected.

[Translation]

The fact that this committee, with its Conservative majority, is trying to put this Agreement before Parliament without even holding hearings outside Parliament is an insult to Canadians. They are not going to Quebec and they are not going to New Brunswick. They are afraid the Canadian people will see details of the Agreement that include compromises on questions of language, culture and national sovereignty. Those are the points that will be affected by this Agreement. This Government with this literally crushing majority is trying to prevent discussion and full debate on the Mulroney-Reagan deal.

[English]

The issue before us is possibly the most important question to face Canadians because it deals with the very future of our country. It deals with whether our children can be Canadian. It deals with whether we will have control over our own laws. It deals with whether we will have control over our own sovereign destiny. It deals with whether we will say yes to Canada or whether we are prepared to sell out our country merely to make the bigger buck by an association with the United States.

If the Government were really serious about giving Canadians a chance to examine this bad deal in detail it would encourage full hearings, not only in capital cities but in every part of this country. In fact, it would take the question to the people.

The Government is afraid that if Canadians see the fine print they will start to realize that this deal compromises our sovereign rights in our own law-making, our access to energy, our future rights to guarantee cultural policy, our right to a safe environment, our right to have safe streets to walk on and to guarantee a quality of life which is different from that which exists in the United States.

If the Government is not afraid to examine those questions, why is it using a muzzle to restrict debate to one day in each of the capital cities of this country? The capital cities of this country are not the only areas in which Canadians deserve a voice in this most important question. I believe it is an outrageous abuse of parliamentary majority that the Government would choose to move in such an insidious way to ram through a deal which, by all counts, is not only a bad deal for those who are opposed to free trade, but also from the perspective of those who support the general concept of free trade.

What is the Government afraid of? What does it have to hide? Why is it afraid to go to the people? Is it because the Government believes that the people will see this bad Mulroney deal for what it really is, a sham, a sell-out, a step toward continental absorption and assimilation?

We want to fight it but we need the ear of the people to do so. That is why we cannot have a committee that simply goes to the capital cities of each province for one day. In Ontario, the border does not stop at Steeles Avenue. The people of Hamilton have a right to have a say, as do the people of Timmins and Atikokan, as well as the people of Red Deer, Alberta. The people of the Northwest Territories have a right to a say, as do the people of the Yukon.

This motion is outrageous and, as far as I am concerned, is an example of a democracy that has run amuck, a government that is out of control and is only interested in ramming through a motion which could spell the very end of our country.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of the New Democratic Party to deal with the motion before us.

We have raised our concerns a number of times, both in the House and in the committee, about the extent as well as the area to be covered in the public hearings to be held by the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade.

There will be two weeks of hectic travel in which the committee will go to every capital city and a community in the Northwest Territories. Travelling to 11 cities in 11 days is an impossible task in itself. I know the difficulties that lie ahead for that committee having been on the Transport Committee that spent a week, if not longer, to tour the western Arctic alone on the question of deregulation of the transportation industry.

We have a number of regrets in the way the Government has handled the free trade deal. We are disturbed by the Government's demand to have hearings prior to receiving the details of the agreement. We are opposed to a committee of this House being given a very few days in which to travel and in which to review the final details, should it receive them, before it is due to report to the House. We most sincerely regret that the Yukon, which includes some 800 miles of Canada-U.S. border, will not even have one day of quasi hearings. Once again, the Yukon is left out of a process that so fundamentally affects this country, just as it was left out, along with the Northwest Territories, in the Meech Lake Accord process.

I regret that the Government has chosen to take this smoke and mirrors approach to consulting the people of Canada. The committee will not visit the northern parts of Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia or Quebec. The capital cities do not represent the people of Canada.

We are not prejudging what the people of Canada will tell the committee, but the people of the northern parts of provinces should at least have an opportunity to express their views on the agreement, as they should. While we regret the timetable and travel schedule of the committee, we would regret even more not even having this small opportunity to hear from Canadians.

Clearly, the Government, with its majority on the committee, had the opportunity to include the Yukon in its timetable. We must respect the resolution of the committee even though we may not like it, but it would have been even more unwise for the committee to hold hearings only in Ottawa, preventing the regions of Canada and all Canadians, including fishermen, farmers, small business people, natives, and women from having a say on this fundamental question for the future of Canada.

The committee must be given permission to travel so that people throughout the country may be able to give the Government the message that they must be heard and it should call an election in this country so people can have their say.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, not only is the substance of this deal for economic union between Canada and the United States very troublesome, the process by which it was drafted and by which the Government wants to ratify it is very disturbing.

We must also place some importance on the process behind this deal because it was the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who told us about open government, accessible government and participatory democracy. We have seen that those are very much empty words when it comes to the actual implementation and spirit of what is meant by them. It is empty rhetoric.

We cannot afford to ignore the process behind the free trade deal that was just signed by the President of the United States and our Prime Minister. This so-called agreement has the potential of changing the very nature and identity of this country, and what we mean by the term "Canadianism".

The Prime Minister's statement in 1983 becomes all the more relevant in this debate. When he was seeking the leadership of his Party at that time, he said no to free trade. During the election of 1984 not one word was spoken on the arrangement of a free trade deal with the United States. One would think that those statements would logically call for a debate on the process. Yet the Prime Minister is denying that process. He does not have the courage to call an election on this issue, but would wait until the deal is finalized and consummated. He has also denied a referendum to allow Canadians to clarify their view of this agreement.

Canadians are being denied these processes by which they can express their views to their elected leaders during a most crucial time in Canadian history.

That is why we in the Liberal Party believe that a committee should travel to all regions of this large and diverse country. This deal has the potential of affecting the lives of all Canadians, whether they live in big cities or small towns, whether they are farmers, fishermen, factory workers, or business owners. The quality of life for Canadians should not be predicated on whether they happen to live in a specific city within their province. That is why it is important that if this committee is to travel, that it travel to all the communities and give a voice to all Canadians. Their input should be felt not after the election and not in some other book the Prime Minister might wish to write about where he stood. The voices of Canadians should be heard now so that they can have some measure of opportunity to change the course of this very agreement.

• (1630)

If the Prime Minister, his Government and his Cabinet are confident about this deal, as they seem to be every day during Question Period, there should be no timidity on behalf of the Government to go to the regions of this country.

Not only do we not have the fine print of the agreement tabled at this committee so that Canadians can actually see where the "t"s are crossed and the "i"s dotted, but the Government does not want the committee to travel to all the communities with the general outline of the deal. That should tell us something about what the Government really thinks and, more important, what it really fears. It fears that Canadians will have an opportunity to see the deal for what it is. It is not free trade, it is the first step of economic union, to be followed by the discussion of political union. This deal deserves the scrutiny of all Canadians so that they can say something about the future of their country and the country of their grandchildren. If the committee is to travel, let it do it properly and let it be accessible to those Canadians who want to stand up and be heard.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher)—Immigration—Amnesty for refugee claimants—Government position/Statement attributed to Chairman—Designate of Refugee Board; the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap)—Nicaragua—United States funding of Contra attacks/request that Government urge Honduras to honour its commitments.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

STANDING COMMITTEE ON EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND INTERNATIONAL TRADE

AUTHORIZATION FOR STANDING COMMITTEE TO TRAVEL

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lewis:

> That the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade be authorized to adjourn from place to place in Canada between November 22 and December 5, 1987, for the purpose of holding hearings, as the Committee deems appropriate, on the subject of the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States, and that the necessary staff do accompany the Committee.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, moments ago I was in the lobby of the House meeting with a constituent. We were talking about free trade as it affected that constituent's plant just as the debate commenced on the issue of the travel of the committee to listen to free trade issues.

It is bad enough, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) so eloquently pointed out, that we do not even have the full text of the agreement, but we are proceeding with hearings in which my constituents and the constituents of every other Member are supposed to make representations to the Government on whether or not they are in favour of an agreement which they have not seen, but only have the general outline.

I have a letter in my hand that was given to me by my constituent moments ago. The industry to which I am referring is known as Texturon. It is a mill in Hawkesbury, Ontario, which employs some 70 to 75 of my constituents. I invite Hon. Members opposite to listen. They may learn something.

Mr. Friesen: It did not stop Premier Peterson.

Mr. Boudria: I must respond to the Hon. Member opposite who said it did not stop Premier Peterson from holding hearings. That is a mighty interesting view. First of all, as the Hon. Member will know, Premier Peterson personally is against the free trade agreement, very correctly so. Second, it is not Premier Peterson who has negotiated this mess, it is the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his bunch of cronies.

Mr. Friesen: That is overpowering logic.

Mr. Boudria: They are the ones who messed it up. I will read the letter given to me by my constituent to explain why we need to hold hearings in more than a few selected communities where the Government hopes that little controversy will be raised, and that we need the documents. The letter is addressed to myself and it states in part:

> Dear Mr. Boudria:
> This letter is written objecting to the planned agreement on free trade with the U.S.A.
> You are familiar with our operation on Cameron Street in Hawkesbury at which we produce textured polyester yarn in a modern plant with excellent high speed equipment. Should total free trade with the U.S.A. be placed in effect, we beyond doubt will have to close our plant in Hawkesbury.

I heard five minutes ago that a plant in my riding in Hawkesbury is threatened with shut down, but the Government is telling us we can only have hearings in a few places in the country. If that is not bad enough, we are supposed to hold hearings without the documents. So we will have hearings in a few selected communities, begin them in a hurry—something the Government has already orchestrated—and without documents. Plants in my riding are being threatened with shutdowns but that does not matter to Members opposite. They want to get this mess over with because it is an embarrassment to them. That is the only point upon which I will agree with the Government. It is an embarrassment because it was so poorly done. That in itself is no justification for hearings to go on in that kind of brevity without detailed documents and only in a few selected communities.

Of course, we want hearings. We want people to be able to speak on this issue, but we want the people to have the documents available in order to make informed comments. We want the Government to bring the committee to the people. The Government itself has said that this is the most important trade agreement in the history of mankind.

Mr. Darling: Right on!

Mr. Boudria: If that is so, if it is that important—that does not mean it is that good, by the way, it just means that it is that large—

Mr. Darling: It's good too.

Mr. Boudria: If it is that important, surely it should be able to stand up to public scrutiny. The people in my riding and the people in every other constituency in Canada should have the right to speak on it. Once those hearings are completed, then the people of Canada can look at the final deliberations of the committee, having conducted its hearings properly with proper documents. The Prime Minister should have the intestinal fortitude to—not to use other words—go to the people of Canada and tell them: "This is of such importance, I want you to speak to me directly as to whether you are in favour or against", not by means of a referendum, because we cannot have that in our parliamentary system, but by means of a general election. That is the way it should be done.

Meanwhile, the committee hearings should be conducted in such a way as to provide people with information first, good and thorough hearings second, and held in a number of communities where people can participate. The Government would then be able to see how my constituents in Hawkesbury and elsewhere in the riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell think of this agreement. That is true of communities in every other constituency in Canada whether they are represented, albeit temporarily, by a Conservative Member, by a member of the Liberal Party or by a Member of the New Democratic Party.

I do not want to unduly delay this process, however, I have to indicate to the Government my dissatisfaction with a process which does not fully enable my constituents to participate and inform the Government of their views of this agreement. The hearings will not be held in enough communities in Canada and proper documentation is just not available. I say to government Members opposite that it is time they started to listen.

[Translation]

Canadians have had enough of this arrogance, Mr. Speaker. It has been going on far too long, and I would therefore urge Government Members—if they have any hope of being re-elected and, more important, of serving the Canadians who elected them and gave them a mandate to form a government—to ensure that, according to their own conscience, this job is done well. Mr. Speaker, some parliamentary committees—there is the committee on which I sat not long ago, which took weeks and even months to find out what should be done about our Canadian postal services. Our postal services are important. And what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) himself qualified as the most important trade agreement in human history is even more important. However, if it is as important as all that, how can, and why should, Canadians be denied the requisite documentation and also the opportunity to testify before a parliamentary committee and, Mr. Speaker, I would also add, the privilege of making their views known in a general election?

• (1640)

[English]

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I hope that by now the Government realizes the strong dissatisfaction on the part of the Liberal and the New Democratic Parties with the manner in which the Conservative majority on the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade has decided to deal with the question of that committee's travel to hear evidence from Canadians on the Government's trade deal with the United States. Others have made very clear the reasons for that dissatisfaction. I will deal with those reasons very briefly.

Basically, we feel that the committee is not going to enough centres in Canada to allow Canadians, particularly people who cannot be identified as spokespersons of large organizations or big business, to express their views on the most fundamental issue that has faced our country perhaps since it has come into existence. It is not enough to have a committee visit only provincial and territorial capitals. There are many other places that deserve a visit by the committee for hearings to let people have their say. I can mention by way of example my own communitiy of Windsor, the fourth or fifth largest industrial centre in Canada. Windsor should be a place that the committee comes to hold a hearing on the subject of the Government's trade deal with the United States.

There is a second reason that I think argues very strongly as to why the Conservative majority on the External Affairs committee was wrong to ram through a motion limiting the hearings of the committee to the provincial and territorial capitals and also rejecting the request of the Liberals and the New Democrats not to cut off the hearings early in December. The Congress of the United States will have until April 2 to hold hearings on this trade deal, to study in committee this trade deal and, in fact, to be shown the very drafts of the exact wording of the final version of the Government's trade deal with the United States.
