Mr. Speaker: I take with careful note the intervention of the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister, and if in any way it would seem appropriate to hear both Hon. Members further before I should make any decision I will do so. I want to be absolutely sure that this particular matter is handled as fairly as possible.

• (1520)

Again, in closing, I might say to the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood that the Chair, in suggesting that part of her complaint is not a question of privilege, is not in any way ruling or giving an opinion as to the force of the complaint or, for that matter, the reason for it. I want her to know that I am speaking procedurally and not trying to stand in judgment on things in respect of which it is really not the role of the Chair to stand in judgment.

I will do the best I can and report back to the House. I thank Hon. Members for their courtesy and contribution.

PRIVILEGE

JUSTICE AND SOLICITOR GENERAL—VISIT BY THE STANDING COMMITTEE TO MILLHAVEN INSTITUTION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, this morning I gave Your Honour notice of a serious question of privilege concerning certain events which took place earlier this week in Kingston, Ontario, during a visit to that city by the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General. The standing committee decided to undertake a comprehensive study of sentencing, parole and related matters involving corrections in Canada. For the purposes of that study we decided to hold hearings in a number of centres, indeed, to visit a number of correctional facilities, meet with parole officers and others involved in parole, sentencing and corrections.

Your Honour will be well aware of the significance of a study of this nature, having been in this House when the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, as it then was, chaired by a distinguished parliamentarian, Mark MacGuigan, now Mr. Justice MacGuigan, conducted a similar study and reported to this House some 10 years ago. It is a serious and important subject about which Canadians have a great deal of concern.

Seven members of the standing committee arrived in Kingston on Sunday evening and began the hearings with a tour of the Collins Bay institution on Monday morning. At that time it was apparent that there was a great deal of interest in the work of the standing committee on the part of officials from national headquarters. Indeed, a number of those officials accompanied the committee from Ottawa, as well as the legislative assistant of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher). The committee was somewhat surprised, I think it is fair to say, at the interest displayed in our work by those officials, as well as obviously being pleased.

The committee indicated to those people that while they were free to participate in any public aspects of the visit, any meetings which took place with officials of the correctional service, the parole service or others should be in the absence of those officials for reasons which I think are quite clear. We were concerned that line officers and so on should be able to testify freely without any suggestion that senior officials might in any way be influencing their evidence. That was done and those officials did not attend any hearings of the committee.

There were two events which took place that Monday which in my view constitute a very grave situation, and at least one of which gives rise to a breach of the privileges of Members of this House, in particular Members of the standing committee.

First, the committee learned that on the eve of our visit to Millhaven institution, six prisoners were transferred from Millhaven to Kingston Penitentiary. To be precise, this was done two days before we arrived. One of those six was one of two members of the inmates committee elected at large by all the inmates, a Mr. John Avery. Certainly the timing of that transfer was at the very least coincidental. We were told it was done for security reasons. The individuals involved were a negative influence in the institution and for that reason the institution was not prepared to agree to transferring Avery back so the committee could meet with the full inmates committee. However, there was a conference call and Avery was on the line from Kingston Penitentiary to Millhaven.

In the course of that transfer, documents that Avery wanted to present to members of the committee were left behind. I asked the warden of Millhaven whether we might obtain those documents with the written authorization of the prisoner involved. I was told that was not possible because the prisoner was in Kingston Penitentiary. I then asked that the documents be sent to Kingston Penitentiary and that the prisoner have an opportunity to give them to me as a member of the committee. He wanted to do that to assist us in our work.

The documents were sent over, the prisoner went to the box in which the documents were located and discovered that four of his file folders containing critical information he wanted to bring to the attention of the committee had disappeared.

That is a rather serious matter. A prisoner wants to present evidence to a parliamentary committee. He is moved from the institution where we were to meet with him to Kingston Penitentiary and his documents were not moved with him. When those documents finally come into his hands so he could present them to a member of the committee for circulation among members of the committee, four of his key file folders had disappeared.

That is the first point, and the only possible conclusion one can draw, since those documents were in the custody of the Correctional Services of Canada, is that for some reason they were deliberately removed from his file. If there is another explanation I would welcome it, but what other conclusion can there be?

The next matter I want to draw to Your Honour's attention is one from which by far the most serious conclusions must be drawn. On Monday evening the seven members of the standing committee had a meeting with some 20 parole officers as well as a number of senior parole supervisors and the District Director of the Eastern Region of CSC Parole. At that meeting we were addressed by the senior officials of the parole service. Following their presentation, there were some questions and answers and they withdrew. At that point the committee was left with approximately 20 parole officers, full-time employees of CSC involved in parole supervision. These are professionals, a number of them with many years of dedicated service in the field.

These people indicated first that they had some difficulty in even getting agreement to a meeting without their supervisors being present. They indicated that initially their supervisors insisted that two of them be present and that only two parole officers be present during the meeting with the committee, and that those four appear at the same time. The clerk of our committee, after consulting with the chairperson, made it very clear to the officials that that was not acceptable. We wanted to give the line staff an opportunity to appear directly in front of the committee. We rejected the attempt by management to insist that they appear at the same time.

During that meeting with the approximately 20 parole officers a variety of concerns were expressed with regard to their intolerable caseloads, the implications of privatization, and inadequate resources to do the job which they have been asked to do on behalf of society.

During the course of the presentations to our committee one individual indicated that two meetings had been held the previous week involving individuals who would be appearing before our committee. One meeting was held with the parole officers, the line people about whom I spoke. Attending that meeting were a number of individuals from national headquarters in Ottawa, including a gentleman named Moe Royer who I believe is the Commissioner's executive assistant, a number of other officials from national headquarters, and some officials from regional headquarters.

They met with the parole officers and I understand that at that meeting they discussed the manner in which public servants might appropriately give evidence before a standing committee of Parliament. A legal opinion was apparently handed out at that time prepared by the Privy Council Office indicating what was and was not acceptable in terms of giving evidence. I do not believe that there was any threat, intimidation, or suggestion with regard to the giving of evidence at that meeting. Indeed, I believe that one individual at that meeting suggested that people should feel free to give their evidence in a candid manner. At that particular meeting there was no attempt whatsoever to influence the way in which evidence was given.

However, one parole officer did inform the committee that his supervisor had attended a separate meeting last week. In attendance at that separate meeting were senior management officials from the Ontario regional office including the Deputy Regional Commissioner, Jim Phelps. I believe that Mr. Don Clark, the Regional Director of Operations, was also present at this meeting. In addition to these senior regional officials, the senior parole supervisors from that region were present.

During the course of that meeting it was suggested by senior officials of the correctional service in the Ontario region that the individuals present at that meeting should not offer criticisms of the federal Government or the Correctional Service of Canada in giving evidence to the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General the following week. Indeed, it was suggested to the persons in attendance at that meeting that they might be making a "career decision"—and those are the words that were used by the parole officer—depending on what sort of evidence they gave to members of the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General.

The members of the committee were informed that the subject of privatization was used as an illustration. Those senior officials who were present were told that they should not in any way levy criticism of government policy or the policy of the Correctional Service of Canada in their evidence before the committee.

I am sure that Your Honour recognizes the gravity and seriousness of this situation. A parliamentary committee is undertaking an important study of sentencing, parole, and corrections in Canada. It is absolutely critical to the success of that study that people working in the field, including parole officers and correctional officers, should be able to give their evidence to that committee without any suggestion of intimidation, threat, or manipulation of their evidence.

Suggesting to senior officers of the parole service that they were not free to testify as they might see fit about the parole system in Canada was quite clearly, in my view, an attempt to gag, muzzle, and influence the evidence that was presented to our committee.

The committee cannot do its job if that is going to be happening. The committee process becomes a charade if individuals are afraid to give evidence before the committee or if the evidence they give has been vetted by their supervisors.

Indeed, after the formal part of that meeting I was approached by a young woman who is a parole officer. She informed me that she was asked to go through some sample questions and answers. One of the questions put to her as a question which the committee might ask was with regard to whether there were adequate resources for the parole service in the Kingston region. It was suggested to her how she might answer that question without being critical, without, in effect, telling the truth.

This goes directly to the core of our privileges as Members of this House and, indeed, as members of a standing committee of this House. This attempt to manipulate the evidence presented to the committee, in conjunction with the other activities to which I have referred, including the disappearance of key documents which a member of the inmate committee wished to present to the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General—and indeed this particular matter in isolation—surely constitutes a fundamental breach of the privileges of Members of this House.

I left that tour yesterday at noon as, I believe, did my colleague, the Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata), who will doubtless be speaking on this question of privilege as well. I left because I did not want to participate any further in that charade.

I hope that Your Honour will recognize that I have indeed raised a prima facie case of breach of privilege today and that, that being the case, the appropriate disposition of this matter is to allow the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections to examine carefully what has transpired. It has been suggested by the chairperson of the standing committee that this is second-hand information. The fact is that the committee heard from a parole officer who spoke to his supervisor who attended that meeting. Surely it is only right that a parliamentary committee have an opportunity to call as witnesses those who were involved and ask them exactly what happened on that occasion.

The Solicitor General said during Question Period that he talked to the Commissioner of Corrections who promised him that there was no problem, that this did not happen, that there was nothing wrong. I do not doubt for a minute that the Solicitor General has confidence in the Commissioner of Corrections but, with all due respect to the Solicitor General, that is just not good enough. It is not the Government nor the Commissioner of Corrections but Parliament itself which is affected by this attempt to control the flow of evidence to this committee.

I hope that the Solicitor General will conduct his own inquiry rather than only asking the Commissioner of Corrections whether he was satisfied that it happened. The Solicitor General is apparently not prepared to do that. The public can draw their own conclusions on that.

However, our job as parliamentarians is surely to ensure that our privileges are not in any way diminished as a result of the actions of government officials or others. It would be my submission—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member has made some comment concerning the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) and what he is or is not prepared to do. The Solicitor General has not had a chance to rise in reply to the comments of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), but all Members will know that the Hon. Member for Burnaby did ask questions during Question Period. It seemed to the Chair that the position the Solicitor General was then taking was that, having had some information concerning the serious matter that the Hon. Member for Burnaby raises, he checked with some of his officials and was informing the Hon. Member that his official or officials denied the allegation contained in the question of the Hon. Member.

If the memory of the Chair is correct, I do not think the Hon. Solicitor General basically went any further than that in his reply to the Hon. Member in Question Period.

At least for now, I would ask the Hon. Member for Burnaby to confine his remarks, as he has been doing with some skill, strictly to the question of privilege, and not to get into another area which may be the subject of a later political debate that does not assist the Chair very much at the moment. I would ask the Hon. Member to continue and conclude his remarks.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, certainly my understanding was that the response of the Solicitor General was that he had consulted with the Commissioner of Corrections and was satisfied, based on his assurances, that the incident in question had not occurred.

However, as Your Honour has indicated, there is a fundamental distinction between whatever action the Government and the Minister might take, and the question as to whether or not there has been a breach of privilege of Members of this House.

Indeed, I will conclude my remarks by noting that, based on the information which I have brought before the House, at this point I am prepared to move the necessary motion should Your Honour find that there is a prima facie case of breach of the privileges of Members of this House. I believe that the only way we can determine exactly what did transpire is precisely to send this matter to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections to allow that committee to call the necessary witnesses in the appropriate atmosphere and get to the bottom of this.

As a Parliament, we must send out a very clear message to those who would work in this committee in the future, and to those who are prepared to stick out their necks in some cases to give evidence to this committee, that they will not in fact be subject in any way to reprisals as a result of giving evidence before this committee.

Finally, I have given notice of my intention to raise this question of privilege to the chairperson of the committee, the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney). In view of the fact that that Member, and I believe some other Members of the committee are in Kingston today, I suggest that they certainly be given an opportunity to make whatever representations they believe to be appropriate with respect to this question of privilege. I would assume that any ruling would be deferred until they have been given an opportunity to make submissions on this very serious question of privilege.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, as the critic of the Solicitor General's Department for the Official Opposition I was present in Kingston, at Collins Bay Penitentiary and Millhaven Institution, at the same meetings as the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). I want to share with the Chair my impressions and my understanding of what occurred.

I regret very much that the Hon. Member for Burnaby has chosen to raise this matter today with the full knowledge that the committee is still in the Kingston area conducting its affairs. I also regret that the Member has chosen to use such inflammatory and provocative language in view of the very tense situation at Millhaven.

The Millhaven Institution just outside Kingston has a cell capacity of 536 inmates. On October 14 of this year an inmate was shot and killed by a guard, who shot from a tower in an attempt to break up a fight that was taking place in the yard. Following this particular incident there was a sit-down strike, and for approximately the last two weeks the inmates have been locked in their cells for 23 hours a day. They have been allowed out for an hour a day for meals and so on. Their meals have been cut back—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) has the obligation in this House to cover this particular Department and these matters. He has spoken forcefully on occasion in this House and has raised some of these matters before.

However, I would ask that the Hon. Member confine himself specifically to the alleged question of privilege that the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) has raised. Otherwise, I am afraid we may get into a long debate about the conditions in one prison or other. While those are very serious matters, and I know that the Hon. Member and other Members take those matters very seriously, we will get a long way from the procedural point that the Chair is seized with in this particular application.

I would ask the Hon. Member for York South—Weston to assist the Chair and discuss specifically the point that the Hon. Member for Burnaby has raised. The Hon. Member may or may not agree with the Hon. Member for Burnaby in bringing the matter before the House at this time—that may be a matter of difference between them—but the Hon. Member for Burnaby has brought this matter to the Chair.

I think the point is quite clear to all Hon. Members and it is on that point that I ask the Hon. Member for York South—Weston to assist the Chair. The Hon. Member may not agree that it is a question of privilege, but the Chair does not know exactly yet which position he takes.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I was hoping to give the Chair and the House some background in order to understand the situation at Millhaven resulting in the transfer of the six inmates, and the reasons why we were told Mr. Avrey and the five other prisoners were transferred out of Millhaven to Kingston en route to Archambault in the Province of Quebec, and why the telephone conference took place.

The Member for Burnaby talked about documents that went missing and about the transfer of Mr. Avrey. As I understand his question of privilege, it is based on two separate points. One was the transfer of six inmates out of Millhaven on the eve of the visit of the parliamentary committee, and the second leg of his question of privilege concerned the evidence that was given to the committee by the parole officers on Monday evening in the Kingston area.

With regard to the first point, I was trying to indicate to the Chair the situation at Millhaven. It is tense. As the Chair may or may not know, the inmates are privy to television sets and information that is available to the general public. One must understand that the inmates are in their cells for 23 hours a day. They are watching the news and understand what is going on in the United States with the uprising in the two institutions there. They are aware of the work of the committee.

Six inmates were moved. On Monday morning, while we were at Collins Bay, the Member for Burnaby insisted that Mr. Avrey, whom we were told was a member of the inmate committee at Millhaven, be moved back to Millhaven, together with the others, in order to meet with the committee.

Mr. Robinson: On a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Before I hear the Hon. Member for Burnaby on a point of order, I should perhaps make some comment here. I will, of course, hear the Hon. Member for Burnaby, but I say to the Hon. Member for York South—Weston that, perhaps after the Hon. Member for Burnaby has raised his point of order, the Chair needs to know whether the Hon. Member for York South—Weston is supporting the position the Hon. Member for Burnaby has taken or is rising to indicate that in the opinion of the Hon. Member for York South—Weston there is not a point of privilege here. That is the point in respect to which I think I am called upon to keep the debate.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I just wanted to suggest, with respect, precisely the same thing. There are two fundamental issues; the first is the question of the transfer of Mr. Avery, a member of the inmate committee, and the disappearance of his documents, and the second is with respect to the alleged interference with senior supervisors and suggestions with respect to their careers.

At no time did I suggest that all six of those who had been transferred be sent back to Millhaven. I certainly did ask that Mr. Avery, as a member of the inmates committee, be transferred back. I would hope the Hon. Member in recounting events, if they are to be relevant, at least would be accurate as well.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure all Hon. Members try very hard to be accurate and to the degree they succeed, the Chair is, of course, assisted.

Perhaps it is appropriate now for the Chair to respond partially to what I have heard. I will hear the Hon. Member for York South—Weston, but, as I understand it, it is the intention of the Hon. Member for Burnaby that I consider whether or not two events that happened; first, the moving of one prisoner prior to the arrival of the committee and the apparent alleged disappearance of some documents; and, second, a further situation which the Hon. Member for Burnaby said took place in which he alleges there was some kind of pressure or interference by officials with those with whom the committee was meeting as people to give evidence about their duties and responsibilities and the work they were doing, constitute a question of privilege.

As I understand it, the combination of those alleged facts amounts, in the words of the Hon. Member for Burnaby, to a question of privilege because it was a deliberate attempt—that is the position of the Hon. Member—to keep the committee from getting information the committee indeed ought to have had. If I have misunderstood in any way the Hon. Member's position, then I am sure he will correct me, but it seems to me that that is the issue. I would ask Hon. Members when they rise to give me their help and confine themselves to that issue and resist any temptation to wander very far away from it, although hopefully most of the time we try to follow a bit of common sense, and it is impossible to discuss something like this without knowing a little of the background. The Hon. Member for York South—Weston has assisted the Chair in that. I do not think there is any need to go any further. I will hear the Hon. Member for York South—Weston and I hope he will keep in mind what I have just said.

Mr. Nunziata: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

In the morning at Collins Bay Penitentiary we met with officials from the Correctional Service of Canada, in particular, those responsible for security at Millhaven Penitentiary. They confirmed in fact that the six inmates, including Mr. Avery, were moved. They also indicated to the committee that from a security perspective, it was not appropriate to move the inmates back. At that particular point in time I questioned the reasons the inmates were moved in the first place. I also pointed out to the committee that, having made that decision to move the inmates from Millhaven to Kingston, it was not within the jurisdiction of the committee to overrule the security staff and insist that these inmates, whether all six of them or Mr. Avery himself, be moved back to the institution.

They advised us if that were to occur, although it was physically possible to move these inmates and Mr. Avery back, it would not, from a security perspective, be a wise move.

On behalf of the Official Opposition I took the position that we ought to defer to the security people, to the Correctional Service of Canada. If something went wrong, I, as a member of the committee, did not want to be held responsible for overruling the advice of the security people. The security people advised us at that point in time—this is the Monday morning at Collins Bay—that an attempt would be made to hook up Mr. Avery by way of a telephone conference call with the inmate committee and the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General at Millhaven Institution, so, in effect, Mr. Avery could be present via telephone to make submissions to the committee and to his co-inmates who were on the inmate committee. The Hon. Member for Burnaby objected to this particular course of action.

We carried on with our responsibilities that day. When we returned to the hotel, the Ramada Inn in Kingston, the mother of Mr. Avery and his wife, together with a number of other wives of inmates, were at the hotel. They met with the Hon. Member for Burnaby. I also met with the women involved. I spoke to the father-in-law of another inmate who had been transferred. They asked me to visit Mr. Avery at Kingston Penitentiary. I told them I did not think it was necessary at that point in time.

As I understand, the Hon. Member for Burnaby did in fact go to Kingston Penitentiary that Monday night to visit with Mr. Avery, presumably to discuss the conditions at Millhaven Institution and to obtain whatever information was necessary to satisfy the Hon. Member. The following day members of the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General met with the inmate committee of Millhaven Institution. Mr. Avery was on the line from Kingston Penitentiary by way of a telephone hookup. He was able to hear what was happening at that particular meeting. He was able to make submissions. The chairman of the justice committee gave members of the inmate committee every opportunity to make submissions with regard to conditions at Millhaven Institution. Mr. Avery was given every opportunity. I, as a member of the committee, asked Mr. Avery a number of questions. I asked members of the inmate committee a number of questions. Documents were in fact presented to the committee by members of the inmate committee.

Mr. Avery did indicate over the telephone that he felt certain documents were missing from his file. Notwithstanding, Mr. Avery made submissions with regard to conditions at the penitentiary. This is where I part company with the Hon. Member for Burnaby. Rather than participating at that meeting, rather than trying to understand what was happening, the Hon. Member for Burnaby was not present at the meeting. He chose not to be present. Of course, he was not present with Mr. Avery at Kingston Penitentiary. Rather he chose to occupy his time elsewhere while the committee was meeting with Mr. Avery.

On the first point, with regard to the transfer of the inmates from Millhaven Institution to Kingston Penitentiary, it would be my respectful submission that there is not a breach of privilege. We might very well question the reasons these inmates were moved, and I intend to pursue that particular matter. I pursued the matter with the warden at Millhaven Institution. I asked him the reasons, and whether he considered it appropriate to move those inmates. Having made that decision to move the inmates, including Mr. Avery, the Correctional Service of Canada did give Mr. Avery the opportunity to speak to the committee. If the Hon. Member for Burnaby had acted responsibly and participated in that meeting—

• (1600)

Mr. Speaker: I would ask that the Hon. Member for York South—Weston to put aside for the moment whatever views he might have of the conduct of any other member of the committee, and again confine his remarks, which he has done at least partially, to the question of privilege.

As I understand it, the Hon. Member for York South—Weston is taking the position with the Chair that, with respect to the movement of Avery or others, in his opinion, that does not constitute a question of privilege.

However, there is the other part of the question of privilege which is a serious matter as alleged by the Hon. Member for Burnaby, and that is the question of whether there was interference with employees of the service either designed to or having the effect of limiting the information that they wanted to give to the committee. I would ask that the Hon. Member for York South—Weston address that particular point.

Mr. Nunziata: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To conclude the first point, the committee, the inmates involved, were given full opportunity to address the committee, make submissions, and present documents. At the conclusion of our meeting, we also invited the inmates' committee to forward any other documents to the committee for its consideration in its deliberations.

With regard to the second aspect of the Hon. Member's point of privilege, at that meeting on Monday evening at the staff headquarters in the Westlake Building, the parole officers made some very serious allegations.

I should point out that during the evidence given before the committee one particular parole officer read from a brief. At the conclusion of his submissions I asked that parole officer if he was prepared to leave a copy of the brief with the committee. Quite understandably, the parole officer was concerned with regard to his own future employment. At the beginning of his submissions he asked the committee if he could be given witness status. He also asked the committee if he could receive any assurance that his evidence could not be used against him. He made some very serious allegations. But I should point out that the evidence given by the parole officers was not direct evidence. The Hon. Member for Burnaby indicated that. He stated that the parole officer was told that his supervisor had attended a separate meeting. The parole officer was not present at the meeting, but he was told by someone else that that person was present at the meeting and certain information had transpired.

As a lawyer, Mr. Speaker, you understand the weight that ought to be given to hearsay evidence. Based on the evidence that was given to the parliamentary committee, the Hon. Member for Burnaby has drawn the following conclusions which I submit the evidence does not lead one to conclude, at least at this point in time. The Hon. Member stated, "There was an attempt to gag, to muzzle, to influence the type of evidence to be presented to our committee". The Hon. Member for Burnaby also indicated that "the evidence was vetted". He also stated, "There was an attempt to manipulate evidence". At another point, the Hon. Member talked about the disappearance of key documents.

With regard to the muzzling, the gagging, or the attempt to influence, there is no direct evidence. There was no direct evidence before the committee. But having stated that, the allegations were serious enough to deserve an investigation. Even though the parole officers were not prepared "to go public", they did in fact give in camera evidence before a committee.

I hope that prior to drawing the conclusions that the Hon. Member for Burnaby has drawn, an opportunity will be given to investigate these particular allegations. As I understand, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) has undertaken to investigate the allegations in order to understand what occurred at the meetings in question, and then to report back to the House.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, there are always two sides to every story. Unfortunately, certain Members decide to draw conclusions after hearing only one side of a particular story. I would ask you, Sir, prior to making your decision in this matter, to hear the other side of the story. I do not know what the eventual investigation might show, but we have a responsibility to act responsibly in the circumstances rather than proceeding to condemn individuals and to draw conclusions before we have all the information before us.

There were other members of the justice committee who were present at the meetings in question. I hope that the Chair will at least seek the opinions of the others to determine what in fact is the accurate version of events.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of comments with respect to matters that arose from the submissions of the Hon. Member for York South—Weston who, at least until today, I had understood was the official critic of the Liberal Party. The Solicitor General seems to have jumped into bed with that Member. I want to suggest—

Mr. Speaker: There is always a temptation to enter into some good-natured and partially partisan comment on the part of Hon. Members. When we are discussing a point of privilege, and especially where there is a suggestion made that something very serious might be taking place that ought not to have, I would ask that all Hon. Members refrain from making partisan comments and direct their remarks to the information that the Chair needs, and that is the issue of privilege which has been brought in front of the Chair.

Mr. Robinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will refrain from any further comment on the comments of the Hon. Member.

It was suggested that perhaps it might be appropriate to wait until the other members of the justice committee returned to the House to raise this point. As Your Honour will confirm, there is a duty and obligation on Members of this House to bring to the attention of Your Honour, at the earliest possible opportunity, any alleged breach of privilege. I believe that in bringing this matter before the House today and asking that Your Honour reserve any decision until members of the justice committee have had an opportunity to make any submissions that they may see fit to make, I am performing the requirement that I have to perform in terms of the rules of this House in bringing the matter before Your Honour at the earliest possible opportunity and not waiting. The suggestion by the Hon. Member for York South—Weston that I should have waited to bring this matter before the House, and I know that he is a relatively new Member, but certainly with experience he will—

Mr. Speaker: I have no quarrel with the Hon. Member for Burnaby for bringing the matter before the House today. Of course, there is a rule of which we are all very familiar, that a question of privilege should be brought at the earliest opportunity. From some things stated by the Hon. Member for Burnaby and the Hon. Member for York South—Weston, I took it that there is some disagreement between them over exactly how this might have been handled. That is a matter which is interesting to the Speaker, but it does not affect what the Speaker is called upon to do, and that is to either find a prima facie case of privilege, or to find that there is not a prima facie case of privilege.

The Hon. Member for Burnaby will conclude his remarks.

Mr. Robinson: On that particular point, I wish to make it clear to Your Honour that while I was referring to two separate events, that is, the transfer of Avery in particular on the eve of our visit and, of course, linked to that the documents which disappeared which he wished to present to the committee on the one hand, and the meeting which took place with supervisors on the other, I was not in any way suggesting that those two events together constituted a breach of privilege.

Indeed, it is my submission that the alleged attempt to influence the nature of evidence given to the committee in and of itself constitutes a breach of privilege of Members of this House. I want it to be made very clear that I do not seek to establish any linkage between those two events.

In other words, should Your Honour find that there was not a breach of privilege with respect to the transfer of one of the prisoners, as my colleague for York South—Weston has suggested that, in my respectful submission, would in no way diminish the significance of the other circumstance with respect to breach of privilege.

Finally, I would note that while it has been suggested, again by the Hon. Member for York South—Weston in his submission, that there was no direct evidence with respect to the attempt to influence the information that came before the justice committee, surely that fundamentally misses the point.

The people who could give direct evidence of that were the same supervisors who were told that if they did in fact in any way contradict government policy, or criticize Correctional Service Canada, their jobs could be on the line. Obviously it is not surprising that those same individuals would not get up in front of their fellow supervisors and say to members of the justice committee they had been approached and it had been suggested to them that they not present the facts as they saw them. Of course that was not going to happen.

Fortunately, due to the courage of one parole officer, we learned that in his conversations with his supervisor that his supervisor told him that this is what had happened. I am suggesting that this allegation is serious enough that it warrants careful examination by the appropriate committee of the House. The fact that it was not made directly by one of the individuals involved is neither here nor there, particularly given the fact that after the supervisors left it was suggested by parole officers themselves that in a number of respects their evidence was not in fact entirely accurate, particularly with respect to the impact of privatization.

I would hope that Your Honour would recognize that in terms of the integrity of this process, in terms of the privileges of Members of the House, and in terms of the fundamental importance of individuals seeking to give evidence in a totally unfettered manner before a committee of the House, it is absolutely essential that we get to the bottom of the matter. It is not good enough to leave that investigation to the Solicitor General. It is not his privileges as Solicitor General which have been breached. Rather, it is the privileges of each and every member of the house. As the guardian and custodian of those privileges, Mr. Speaker, I would hope that you would make the necessary finding with respect to a prima facie breach of those privileges in order that the House might conduct the proper investigation.

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to be brief and I will attempt not to stray too far from the point.

I think it has been accepted by all Parties that I was not there and that I was not directly involved in this matter. Indeed, it is not a matter involving the House per se, but a matter involving the parliamentary committee.

Having said that, with respect to the transfer of inmates I basically accept the submission put forward by the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) in that indeed they were transferred for security reasons and that, upon hearing the request to have Mr. Avery participate, I am advised that a conference call was arranged so that he could participate to that extent.

I am also advised that at the request of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) a special visit was facilitated to Kingston Penitentiary for the Hon. Member so that he could visit with Mr. Avery, and I understand he did.

With respect to the second point, I really cannot comment in the sense that that meeting was held in camera. None of my officials, none of the officials of the Solicitor General's Department, and nobody from Correction Service Canada was involved or present at that meeting, so I am not in a position to comment other than to say that I put the general question to the Commissioner on whether or not he gave any instructions, or if he was aware of any instructions by anyone in his department, to attempt to influence, muzzle, or gag the evidence given by any of the employees of CSC.

It seems to me from a brief discussion I had with the chairman of the committee over the noon hour that indeed there was some evidence put forward at the in camera meeting which was could be paraphrased, I guess legally, as hearsay. Beyond that I am really not in a position to comment.

It seems to me that the committee is seized of this matter, and I submit that it is a matter for the committee to decide at this point. It is open to the committee, certainly upon their return, to decide how to deal with these allegations.

I will certainly facilitate the committee in any way to make witnesses available and to carry out necessary investigations or things of that nature, but I do not think that it is a question of a breach of privilege per se in the House.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the second leg of the question of privilege, I should make clear to the Chair that the parole officers involved did in fact have an in camera meeting with the committee. They in fact had the opportunity to speak frankly, and in fact they did speak frankly because they made certain allegations. The committee met with them. They heard the evidence. The people who gave evidence at that particular committee chose not to "go public" or to allow their brief to be part of the proceedings of the committee. They just brought certain matters to the attention of the committee. The committee was not given any documentary evidence or direct evidence. They were presented with hearsay evidence, and I leave that with the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: This is an important matter. I notice that the Hon. Member for Burnaby might want to say a few more words, but I will accept what I think was the original invitation of the Hon. Member for Burnaby to hear other submissions that might assist me, and this afternoon adjourn the matter. I will have discussions with all Hon. Members; there are other Hon. Members who very well may want to make a comment. I wonder if I could indicate to the Hon. Member for Burnaby that I will hear him again but that at the moment I think it is appropriate to adjourn the matter. I thank all Members for the assistance which they have given to me.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGATION BY SENIOR PUBLIC SERVANT—REISMAN—MR. SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: I should like to deliver a brief ruling. On October 30, 1987, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) rose to express his view that his privilege as a Member of Parliament had been breached when Canada's Ambassador and Chief Negotiator for Trade with the United States was reported to have likened opponents to free trade to Nazis. The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) also found offence in the report of Ambassador Reisman's remarks.

The Chair has had an opportunity to review the matter and must point out to the House that, as stated at the time by the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis), comments made outside the House are not likely to prevent Members from doing their jobs properly, which as Hon. Members know is the essence of privilege.

It is very important, again to the public who are watching and listening, to indicate that something can be inflammatory, can be disagreeable, and can even be offensive, but it may not be a question of privilege unless the comment actually impinges upon the ability of Members of Parliament to do their job properly.

Without belabouring the point, I would refer Hon. Members briefly to a decision by Mr. Speaker Lamoureux on April 29, 1971, when he said in part:

> In my view, parliamentary privilege does not go much beyond the right of free speech in the House of Commons and the right of a member to discharge his duties in the House as a member of the House of Commons.

Hon. Members will understand, of course, that the position taken by the Chair in no way condones the sort of language attributed to Ambassador Reisman. However his remarks, whatever they may have been, remain beyond the scope of the privileges of this House.

ALLEGED ASSOCIATION BY MINISTER WITH UNACCEPTABLE REMARKS—MR. SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: The very same day, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Mrs. Copps) rose on a question of privilege, separate but connected, interpreting the statements made by the Minister of Internal Trade (Mrs. Carney) during the Question Period as an indication that she was supporting the comments made by Ambassador Reisman.

I have carefully examined the official report of that day's Debates and I find that what was said, at least in the opinion of the Chair, does not amount to evidence of that suggestion.

I thank Hon. Members again for their interventions. I hope my comments today have helped clarify the matter.

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Gerry Weiner (for Minister of Employment and Immigration), moved that Bill C-90, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker and Hon. Members, today I am pleased to begin the debate on Bill C-90. This Bill is an amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act to extend the variable entrance requirement, the VER.

According to the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act a person applying for UI benefits must have a minimum of 14 weeks to qualify. But since the late 1970s the VER has been used to make this requirement more flexible and responsive to the needs of unemployed Canadians, especially those numerous Canadians who lose their jobs and have 10 to 13 weeks of insurable employment to their credit. According to the VER, the number of weeks that an unemployment insurance claimant needs to qualify depends on the rate of unemployment in the region where he or she lives. Therefore, in regions of high unemployment claimants can qualify for benefits with as few as 10 weeks of insurable employment.

As Hon. Members know, the present VER legislation is in effect only until January 3, 1988. We propose to renew it again in order to enable thousands of Canadians living in regions where the economy is weaker to qualify for UI benefits.

Statistics show that the Canadian economy is doing well. The country as a whole has gained an extensive new lease on life since the recession and it is continuing. However, in some regions economic recovery is slower and the rate of unemployment remains higher than the national average.

The principle of the VER recognizes that it is more difficult to find and keep a job in a region of high unemployment. This is, in fact, one of the most important aspects of the UI program since it takes into account the labour market conditions in each region of the country. If the VER is not renewed, Mr. Speaker, all claimants will, as of January 4, 1988, have to show that they have 14 weeks of insurable employment in order to be entitled to unemployment insurance benefits. This means that more than 100,000 unemployed Canadians could be unable to meet the entrance requirements to receive UI benefits. Thousands of Canadians would thus find themselves in difficulty and most would have to turn to other sources to support themselves and their families. They would inevitably have an impact on provincial welfare programs. Our Government wishes to continue to provide financial support to Canadians in the designated regions, that is, to those who need it the most. It is important that Bill C-90, which renews the VER for a 12-month period, be passed as quickly as possible. In this way, unemployment insurance claimants will know where they stand with regard to their entitlements.

As I mentioned earlier, the VER enables us to recognize economic disparity between regions when deciding the entitlement of UI claimants. It is in this connection that the VER was created and it is for this reason that we want to continue it for the next year.

I am asking for the support of all Members in passing this amendment for the renewal of the VER for a 12-month period until January 3, 1989.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the Government and the Minister finally saw the light, even if for only a short period of time, on the issue of the variable entrance requirement. It was only a few short months ago that we heard the Minister and the Government speculating about abolishing the variable entrance requirement.

Obviously the Government and the Minister have had a conversion on the road to Damascus. Only a few short months ago, they believed that those who are unemployed in Toronto, where there is an unemployment rate which is currently at about 5 per cent, should have the same access to the unemployment insurance fund as those who are unemployed in St. John's or the riding of Gander—Twillingate, areas which have unemployment rates of approximately 18 per cent, 20 per cent or 25 per cent depending upon the age group.

When we in the Opposition got wind of the fact that the Government was planning to change the variable entrance requirement and to make the application of unemployment insurance eligibility equal across Canada, regardless of the employment situation, regardless of regional disparities, regardless of inequities, we of course raised Cain in the House of Commons and in the communities. We convinced the Government to back off on its intention to change the variable entrance requirement.

The variable entrance requirement means that for those in Toronto to qualify for unemployment insurance, they have to be unemployed for more weeks than those in St. John's because the general unemployment rate is lower and theoretically the chances of finding a job are better in Toronto than they are in St. John's. Hence it is called the variable entrance requirement. It is a principle in which we believe. We think it is primary to redressing some of the regional inequities and imbalances in Canada. Unfortunately, the Government does not agree with that.

This particular piece of legislation only extends the variable entrance requirement for one more year. If the Government really believed, as we do, that it is important to allow a more liberal interpretation of the unemployment insurance system in areas with high unemployment, it would have extended it for five years. I believe, although I stand to be corrected, that when previous Liberal Governments introduced variable entrance requirements, the extension periods were generally up to five years. The Minister is shaking his head to signify no, so I stand corrected.

Clause 1(6) of the Bill reads in part: "during the period of 133 months," and the figure 33 is the change in the legislation. Presumably, at one time someone had agreed to have the variable entrance requirement in effect for 100 months because that is the way the Act was written.

We will certainly support the variable entrance requirement and we believe in it. Indeed, we prevailed upon the Government to keep it a part of the unemployment insurance system. However, we want to know why the Government is extending it for only one year.

I have a theory which I would like to propose for consideration by the House today. We know that 1988 will be a tumultuous year for the Government. When the variable entrance requirement was originally introduced by the Liberal Government, there was no possibility of the existence of the Prime Minister's free trade agreement with President Reagan, but there is such an agreement now. We know that a preliminary agreement was signed on October 4, and we know that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is determining the timetable of that particular piece of legislation, an agreement of 2,000 pages we have not even seen yet, so that it is passed by January 2 because the Prime Minister wants to have his picture taken with the President. It is a sad and sorry situation when the Parliament of Canada has its agenda determined by a photo opportunity.

Thankfully, the American Congress's timetable stretches for a little longer. The American timetable requires that once the President signs the document, it returns to Congress for further consideration. There could be several months of delays before American Congressmen do or do not put their John Henrys to the document along with the Ron Reagan and the Martin Brian.

When Congress finally agrees to this bad deal—and I am sure it will want to sign it because it is certainly in its best interests—we may have a period of grace of about a year from now. Let us say that the whole thing is cleaned up by next fall. The Minister's agreement to extend the variable entrance requirement for only one year is a clear message that he wants to leave the option open at the end of next year to do away with the variable entrance requirement. He wants to ensure that if the Government decides to abolish the variable entrance requirement, the door will be open to do so. In fact, this provision is rather short lived for a piece of legislation.

Why would there be any relationship between the variable entrance requirement and the trade deal? There is an element of the deal that has not been thoroughly exposed to public discussion, and I believe the public has a right to know about it.

We have heard the Prime Minister and the various Ministers in the House, on the hustings and up and down the streets of Portage and Main and the streets of Montreal, say that our social programs have remained untouched by this deal. In fact, because there is no guarantee that our social programs will be protected, our social programs are indeed very much up for grabs. Our unemployment insurance scheme is very much subject to a possible frontal assault by the Americans, and I will explain how that may occur.

When the Canadians decided that they wanted to get themselves into this deal with the Americans, one of their stated objectives was to guarantee access to the American market and another was to eliminate these trade irritants that are constantly cropping up, trade irritants like the one that cropped up when the Americans complained that our fishermen were unfairly subsidized because they received unemployment insurance benefits during the off season. Our Prime Minister promised that, in hammering out this deal, he would deal with the question of the American perception of what constitutes an unfair subsidy. However, he failed. The Americans and the Canadians could not come to any kind of reconciliation on what constitutes an unfair subsidy, so they agreed that they would hammer out this rather contentious and thorny issue over the next five to seven years.

We have a trade deal where Canada is giving away energy, and control over our own drug prices and investment. At the same time we have not managed to secure from the Americans once and for all a guarantee of what constitutes a subsidy.

An Hon. Member: Nonsense.

Ms. Copps: The Hon. Member says "nonsense". Yesterday I stood in this House with four glossy documents, part of the $12.5 million propaganda package put out by the Government which, thank God, the CBC in Saskatchewan has been smart enough not to air across that province, and I defy any Member of this House to stand up and show me where it contains an explicit exemption for medicare, unemployment insurance—this is relevant.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to bring to the attention of the Hon. Member, who has been here now for three years, that there is such a thing as relevancy. I know the Hon. Member is getting to the Bill and I am sure she will carry on.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, it is very relevant. Over the next five to seven years we and the Americans have to sit down and negotiate exactly what constitutes an unfair subsidy. The Americans have already shown their cards in that they claimed that our fishermen were receiving unfair subsidy by receiving unemployment benefits in the off season. They would not receive those benefits if we did not have a variable entrance requirement. If you had the same regulations in St. John's, Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe, or Gander—Twillingate as you do in Toronto, then you would not be able to give fishermen unemployment insurance benefits. My premise in standing up to highlight the Government's failure to extend this legislation beyond one year is based on the fact that it wants to leave the door open to cave in to the Americans on the trade deal as it relates to unemployment insurance and it does not want to close off its options.

What if the Americans and Canadians sit down over the next five years and decide, for example, that pregnancy leave is an unfair subsidy? Millions of women in Canada of childbearing age are eligible for paid leave while they have children. That is acknowledged and accepted by all Canadians. There was some reluctance on the Conservative side when the legislation was initially introduced, but it exists nonetheless. It is a statement we make as a society that we value our children, our families, and the women of this country. We feel they need time to nurture their children.

Mr. Thacker: Unless they are the unborn.

Ms. Copps: Pardon me?

Mr. Thacker: Unless they are the unborn.

Ms. Copps: The Hon. Member is getting on to another subject, which is important but not relevant to this particular discussion.

If the Canadian negotiators hold true to the form in which they gave away FIRA, drug prices and everything else before they even got to the negotiating table, we may find ourselves three, five or seven years from now bargaining away things like maternity benefits. We may bargain away unemployment insurance benefits for fishermen. We may accede to claims made by the Americans that medicare is an unfair subsidy.

Mr. Mayer: What a bunch of nonsense.

Ms. Copps: Now we are getting into the nitty-gritty of what this bad deal is about and why the Government refuses to extend it beyond one year.

Mr. Mayer: Why not blame the snowstorm on the agreement and get everything in there?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry this Bill is being rammed through in order to provide a photo opportunity for the Prime Minister. However, I hope Canadians will start to look at exactly what this deal is going to mean for them.

I am a Canadian who has seen the American system. That system does not want pregnancy benefits. It does not believe in a variable entrance requirement for unemployment insurance. That system is, generally speaking, not as supportive of its female half. The American Constitution has not even recognized women's equality.

If I were running an American company which was in a sector predominantly employing women, and I saw that my Canadian counterpart had a chance to keep all his skilled labour on during pregnancy because the Government offered pregnancy benefits, I would go to my Government and say that the Canadian Government is offering pregnancy benefits and that it is an unfair subsidy; it is putting me at a disadvantage. The women in my company do not get paid when they leave for that reason and I often lose good labour and the possibility to compete as a result. This is possible because the two parties in this bad Mulroney-Reagan deal have not been able to come together and define specifically what constitutes a subsidy. Everything and anything is up for grabs, including medicare, pregnancy benefits, and child care benefits.

The Minister is shaking his head. I believe that is the reason he is bringing in a variable entrance requirement which will be good for only one year. He does not want to lock us into a long-term strategy which says that in various parts of Canada we can be unemployed for varying periods of time and still qualify for unemployment insurance. He wants to leave the door open to cave in to the American claim, which has already been made, that Canadian fishermen are unfairly subsidized because they get unemployment insurance benefits during the non-fishing season. Unfortunately, the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer) does not understand the unemployment insurance system. If he did, he would know that a claim of unfair subsidy has already been laid by the Americans in this respect, and one way the Government will be able to cave in to the American demand is by abolishing—

Mr. Mayer: But it was not substantiated.

Ms. Copps: —the variable entrance requirements, which will then set a uniform policy across the country. That means that if you are living in Toronto or Corner Brook or Victoria, you will have to be unemployed for the same number of weeks to qualify for unemployment insurance. I am sorry he does not understand the system. If he did, he would realize that the reason the Government is bringing in this legislation for only one year is to keep its option open.

• (1650)

Mr. Speaker, this is why I am very glad we were able to convince the Government not to implement Mr. Forget's recommendations concerning unemployment insurance. For a while the Government did toy with the idea of doing away with what is called the variable entrance requirement.

I am glad the Government finally saw eye to eye with the Liberal Party which said that the legislation should contain provisions to account for different circumstances in different regions of the country. For instance, as a result of measures taken by this Government with respect to lumber, workers in northern Ontario or northern Quebec are now without jobs. And if the unemployment rate is higher in Timmins, Cochrane or Kaspuskasing, for example, these workers must have more ready access to unemployment insurance benefits than others in Toronto where the lower unemployment rate ranges from 4 to 5 per cent.

This principle, which aims at reducing to a certain extent the disparities between the regions, has always had the support of successive Liberal Governments. We all know that there are regional disparities and that unemployment is now very low in Southern Ontario. On the other hand, in Newfoundland, where unemployment is quite high, if you live in a town where unemployment has reached 13, 15 or 20 per cent, it is much better to have faster access to unemployment benefits than if you live in a town where unemployment is only 5, 6 or 7 per cent and where there are more job opportunities.

In rejecting the recommendations of Mr. Forget to make the system uniform and the same for everyone, which would disadvantage those who live far from the business centres where unemployment is low, why is the Government extending application of the Act by only one year? Why not ask for five years to reassure all the workers that the rules of the game will not change during the negotiation of the Mulroney-Reagan agreement? The reason why it is interesting to examine this Bill in the context of the Mulroney-Reagan agreement is that we already know what is going on, in spite of the protests of the Prime Minister. Not too many Canadians may have believed him, but he has stated both in the House and elsewhere that our social programs would never be touched.

Mr. Speaker, I challenge any Member of this House to show me what guarantees have been included in the text of the Agreement for our senior citizens or for unemployment insurance. These guarantees do not exist.

Actually, Canada and the United States could not agree on what is meant by a subsidy. As we know, fishermen have already been hit by a claim from the Americans indicating that unemployment insurance benefits to our fishermen were an unfair subsidy. That already has been going on. It is in all our newspapers. We know our fishermen are threatened by that claim from the Americans that unemployment insurance benefits to fishermen are an unfair subsidy.

The Canadian Government and the Americans could not agree on what constitutes a subsidy. In the matter for instance of maternity benefits to women, and as we know we have programs in Canada to help women so that they may have 60 per cent of their salary paid by the unemployment insurance program. Will the Americans claim, once the agreement is signed, because there is nothing written down to guarantee those programs to Canadians, will they claim before the binational tribunal that in women intensive industries—with women at child bearing age—women benefits are an unfair subsidy? If they do that, and if the binational tribunal finds that unemployment insurance benefits to fishermen, UI benefits to pregnant women, old age security pensions, medicare programs are unfair subsidies, we will have to withdraw those benefits because of that Reagan-Mulroney deal.

This is why, Mr. Speaker,—and it is not hard to guess what the motives of this Government are—this bill which has its roots in liberalism, should take into account the differences between the various regions as far as the accessibility to unemployment insurance is concerned. Why just a one-year extension? I think, Mr. Speaker, that the reason why there is just a one-year extension is that the Government wants to maintain its right of withdrawing those benefits either from fishermen or women in different regions and to replace the variable entrance requirement with a standardized system which would be agreeable to the Americans.

The Government is not trying to give Canadians a satisfactory system by introducing a bill which will aplly during only one year. It wants to leave the door open and be ready to say by next year to fishermen and pregnant women: We are sorry, but the Americans have decided it is an unfair subsidy that should be withdrawn. What other motive . . . The Minister has left because he is afraid of having to answer the question. He thought he could conceal the problem to the Opposition and say: "Well, it is a fine bill and we will acept it". We would be ready to approve or endorse it but for more than a year, Mr. Speaker. If the bill is to be in effect for only one year, it is obviously because this Government wants to use an option in the Mulroney-Reagan deal to question the possibility of providing unemployment insurance to fishermen, women and people living in remote areas such as northern Quebec and keep the door open to a plan already set up by the Americans, a plan to pay fishermen which should be scrapped.

That is the position of the Americans who seem to think that handing out unemployment insurance benefits to fishermen should be against the law. But we strongly disagree with that policy. We believe that with this kind of variable entrance requirement we guarantee and protect the right of Canadians from coast to coast to benefit from or have access to programs designed to restore some form of economic balance between regions. Mr. Speaker, the reason why the Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds) (Mr. Mayer) gets so upset when I raise the matter of benefits for pregnant women, benefits for fishermen, and even benefits for medical assistance such as Medicare, benefits for the elderly and pensions, the reason why he is so upset is that he does not want Canadian men and women to realize the full impact the Reagan-Mulroney agreement might have.

Mr. Speaker, all we are asking the Government, anxious as it is to have the Prime Minister photographed with the President of the United States on January 2, all we are asking the Government is at least to give Canadians all the facts. And one of these facts, as I see it, highlighted by the ever so slow decision-making process of the Government in introducing this unemployment insurance change for only one year . . . The Government cannot guarantee that no existing or future social program will be affected by the Mulroney-Reagan Agreement. And it cannot give us this guarantee because of a major flaw in their approach. They wanted that trade deal at all cost. The Prime Minister himself said that before striking a deal he wanted to know precisely what would be accepted by the Americans in terms of subsidies. But why is there nothing in writting in the four documents that have been published and distributed by the Government? Why is there nothing in writting saying that the prime Minister will guarantee to Canadians that unemployment insurance benefits will not be affected by this deal, that maternity benefits or medicare will remain untouched? He should guarantee that there will be no change—even if we know that he has already made that kind of commitment, which was worthless anyhow—and that old age security benefits will not be affected by this deal.

Why could they not agree with Americans on what constitutes and unfair subsidy?

[English]

It could not decide or get together with the Americans to agree on what constituted an unfair subsidy. Therefore, it left everything out of the agreement but claims that medicare and pregnancy benefits are safe. However, the opposite is true. There is nothing in writing. Since the two parties have agreed to sit down to negotiate over the next five to seven years what constitutes an unfair subsidy, it is quite clear that our social programs are at risk not only in the future but now. It is quite clear that our unemployment insurance benefits are at risk.

The Americans have already stated their intention to argue that fishermen's benefits are an unfair subsidy. The Americans and Canadians could rationalize that the fishermen are only a small portion of the population who can be cut away as bait and negotiated away in the same fashion as the wine industry and grape growers were negotiated away.

We may see the fishermen ineligible for unemployment insurance benefits some three to seven years down the road. The variable entrance requirement is the key element to fishermen having access to the benefits about which we are speaking.

Why does the Minister introduce a Bill that only extends the period for one year if the Government is convinced that unemployment insurance is not up for grabs in the trade deal? Why does it not extend the period for seven years, beyond the period of negotiation for unfair subsidy, so that Canadians will know that the Government has committed itself in writing to five to seven years of variable entrance requirements, thereby guaranteeing that this particular program will not be put up for grabs during the period of negotiation of an unfair subsidy?

I suggest that this one-year extension dovetails rather nicely with the time by which the American Congress is expected to pass the trade deal and when it could possibly take effect in a number of sectors. It is possible that next year, after the Government has its trade deal it could do away with the variable entrance requirement.

Perhaps we will hear that this measure was simply introduced to keep the Opposition quiet and that the Government does not sincerely believe that someone from Gander—Twillingate should have access to unemployment insurance more quickly than someone from Toronto, even though the unemployment insurance rate may be 15 or 20 points higher. If that is not the hidden agenda of the Government, why does the Minister propose to extend this for only one year? Why does he not introduce a Bill that will extend it for five to seven years in order to give Canadians the assurance they want?

Frankly, we do not trust the negotiating skills of the Prime Minister. I believe the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) is well motivated. One could breathe a little easier if he were prepared to maintain the variable entrance requirement for the next five to seven years as part of the unemployment insurance package, in the knowledge that our fishermen will be protected and women will still have the option to take pregnancy leave.

The Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds suggested that I might as well blame the snowfall on this trade deal. I bring to his attention that it is not only the Opposition that has called the future of Canada's social programs into question.

The President of the British Columbia Business Council appeared before the trade committee. We know that British Columbians are forthright and honest, and he told the committee that while he favoured the deal, it could put medicare at risk.

The committee holding hearings on the free trade talks is only visiting the capital cities of each province. It listened to a total of eight interest groups from British Columbia, four of whom were picked by the Government, two by the Liberals and two by the NDP. One of those four chosen by the Government members of the committee was the President of the British Columbia Business Council. He finally admitted that the assertion by the Opposition as well as the National Anti-Poverty Organization, the National Action Committee on the Status of Women and people throughout the country was correct, that our social programs and the unemployment insurance variable entrance requirement, which is a key foundation to the unemployment insurance system, are at risk.

This business spokesman who came before the committee said that this particular deal will pose a threat to medicare.

Mr. Holtmann: It proves we are not biased when we select our people.

Ms. Copps: They are not biased when they select their people. The Member agrees with the President of the British Columbia Business Council who says that medicare will be threatened as a result of this deal.

Let us get beyond the dollars and cents argument and the glowing rhetoric of the Prime Minister who says that this deal will mean new prosperity and will open new boundaries. The fact is that it will be a continental economic constitution, as referred to by the President of the United States. We are concerned about the impact of this deal on our way of life in Canada, on the education of our children, on the kind of health care system we have, and on the kind of unemployment insurance mechanisms we have to help those who need that social safety net when they are out of a job. Not only are these concerns being expressed by members of the Opposition, but they are also expressed by those Canadians who have been characterized by Government spokesmen as Nazis and regional racists because they want to know what will happen to such things as pregnancy leave and unemployment insurance benefits.

Why did the Government not get a written guarantee in the deal that these programs would never be touched? It could not agree so it said: "We will sign the deal. We will give away energy, drug prices, foreign investment, and in the next five to seven years we will renegotiate what constitutes an unfair subsidy". As far as I am concerned, this particular Bill, the variable entrance requirement which is extended for only one year, is a further piece of evidence to show that the Government's long-term agenda is to dismantle our social programs and our unemployment insurance as we now know it. I would love to go on in much greater detail, but I see the clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on Bill C-90 which is the extension of the variable entrance requirement for a year. We all know that this variable entrance requirement came about because the previous Liberal Government, in its wisdom, saw the need. In fact, it was going to be a wait of 14 weeks before one was able to collect unemployment insurance. I sat on the committee when Bud Cullen was the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and there was considerable flak from the back-benchers, so the Trudeau Government of the day backed off and brought in this variable entrance requirement. In fact, it wrote into the Bill that after a certain period of time the variable entrance requirement would be dropped and 14 weeks would apply right across the country.

I thought I should give you that background information, Mr. Speaker, to this debate on Bill C-90. Subsequent Governments since that time, as the clock hands moved closer together to 12, always brought in a Bill to extend the variable entrance requirements. This is why this Bill is before us today.

In 1984 we had to bring in a Bill. In 1985 and in 1986, we had to bring in a Bill, and now here we are at the crucial hour and we have another Bill before us. The New Democratic Party caucus has no problem with supporting this Bill. I want to assure the Minister that we can go bang, bang, bang and put it through all stages. However, I want to use this opportunity to say a few things about the unemployment insurance program and about its administration.

First, the very fact that the Government has to extend the variable entrance requirement is an admission that it has not done a very good job, indeed, it has done a very poor job, in ensuring that in the hinterland of this country, in the regions, employment is created. I know the Government boasts about the hundreds of thousands of jobs that have been created. If it has done that, Newfoundland should not still be sitting at 17 per cent unemployment. If the Government had been successful in dispersing employment evenly across the country, there would be no need for a variable entrance requirement. It is an admission of failure on the part of the Government. It knows that it would not be politically wise to let the variable entrance requirement of 10 weeks to 14 weeks die in January of 1988 and go to a 14 week period across the country because it would receive a considerable amount of flack. Its job-creation programs have not done the job they should have done, particularly in the regions, and we now have the spectre of the Government entering into a free trade deal, and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) saying that we can expect the loss of up to 500,000 jobs.

While urban centres in central Canada will be hard hit by the Minister's prediction, think, Mr. Speaker, of what it will do to the hinterland of the country. For example, in my riding the present unemployment rate is 11 per cent. In Newfoundland it is 17 per cent. In many regions we are looking at double-digit unemployment. We really have not improved the situation in the hinterland, and everyone cannot live in Toronto, I want to tell the Government that. Many of us who live in northern Ontario would like to remain there and raise their families there.

Mr. Keeper: There are no houses in Toronto.

Mr. Rodriguez: People moving to Toronto are creating all sorts of social problems. There is a lack of housing. We know about the overloaded sewage disposal system. We know about all of those things. They are very evident. The Minister himself said that because of the free trade deal this country could lose up to 500,000 jobs. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in his speech to the Exporters of Canada here in Ottawa said that labour adjustment programs would have to be put in place. Then we have an argument in this House as to whether he said it, or who said it, and he said he said it and who said he said he said it, and he did not say he said it. No one believes that Party over there any more, anyway, and this just reinforces the fact that the Prime Minister is not believable on this issue.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration said we would lose up to 500,000 jobs. Just six months or seven months previously the Solicitor General, the Hon. Member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Kelleher), said we would lose up to 800,000 jobs. At the time he was Minister for International Trade. That is what the Government said. Let us keep that in mind. This is not scare-mongering by the New Democratic Party. It comes from the lips of government Members who hope we will forget. I want to say that I am quoting Ministers of the Crown. They are the ones who are declaring that hundreds of thousands of jobs will be lost to the economy.

The second thing that bothers me about this legislation has to do with the deficit in the unemployment insurance program. A short while ago the Minister announced that he was not touching the premium rate for unemployment insurance, that is, the amount of money paid into unemployment insurance by employers and employees. In fact what he did was to increase the level of the maximum insurable earnings. He went on to say he was not touching the premium rate, leading people to think that somehow or other they will not have an increase in what they are paying into the unemployment insurance program. I think that was pure subterfuge because, in fact, by increasing the maximum insurable earnings, the average employee will pay some $43 a year more, and employers, since they pay 60 per cent and the employees pay 40 per cent, will pay some $57 more a year. Small businesses will pay $57 more a year per employee.

So while the Government did not cut the premium rate by adjusting the maximum insurable earnings upwards, it is collecting and taking from each employee an average of $43 per year more. What is the Minister going to do with that money? He stated that he wants to retire the deficit in the unemployment insurance program. That deficit was accrued in a period of recession in the early 1980s.

I wish you to keep in mind, Mr. Speaker, those figures that I am putting on the record. In 1986, the unemployment insurance program generated a surplus of $721 million based on the present rate structure. All of that $721 million was applied to the deficit. Based on the present rate structure, the projected surplus this year in the unemployment insurance fund will be $1.6 billion. That is the surplus, and it will be applied to the deficit. It took four years of recession to run up the deficit in the fund. Employees are now paying large amounts of money out of their pay-cheques and pockets as premiums, and small businesses are paying considerable amounts of money per employee into the unemployment insurance fund, and it is generating those types of surpluses.

This is the moment while the Government is adjusting the maximum insurable earnings upward—and I have no problem with that—to cut the premium rate. By increasing the maximum insurable earnings, if it could take in the same amount of money, in the next fiscal year the Government could generate another $1.6 billion. This is the time to give a break to employees and small businesses. Instead, the Minister is keeping the rate at the present level and increasing the maximum insurable earnings. If the present state of affairs continues, I would project that in the next fiscal year there would be a surplus in that fund of more than $2.3 billion.

There is no reason for this type of pick-pocketing by the Government. That is what it is, it is pick-pocketing by the Government. I say to the Government, shame on you. At a time when the fund is generating those types of surpluses—and I know that Tory back-benchers will all think it is the appropriate time to privatize the unemployment insurance program, we know that that is what we might hear from them—this is the time to give workers and small-businessmen a break on unemployment insurance.

Mr. Harris: Why won't they?

Mr. Rodriguez: The Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) says, "Why won't they?" I simply think that it is once again the bureaucracy in the Employment and Immigration Department exercising undue direction to the Minister. This is a Department where the bureaucracy runs the elected officials.

I have looked at this Department long and hard, and I think that the direction has come from the Deputy Minister and those minions and nabobs who surround and advise him. They want to be able to say that they wiped off the deficit in jig time. "We are efficient administrators". It is an indirect taxation on workers and employers in this country.

They all talk about getting government off the backs of workers and employers. Here was a chance to give them a break. Instead, the Government wishes to get that deficit back in 2.5 years rather than over a period of four years. That is my concern.

The other concern I have is about this variable entrance requirement. I am not as paranoid as the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) who spoke before me. The Hon. Member saw this as some plot with respect to the free trade deal coming in for one year and then cutting out unemployment insurance. I have a similar concern, because when the free trade discussions commenced, we started to get leaks from behind closed doors that the Americans wanted our social programs on the table. Remember that our UI was on the table, our medicare program was on the table, our family allowances were on the table. Old Simon came to the rescue, and Simon says, "We got them to take it off the table".

It does not take a heck of a lot of ingenuity to figure out that the Americans won this one, because they took it off the table and they have seven years to define a subsidy. It will take seven years once the economy of this country gets locked in with the American economy, and how are we going to say no? We will have been in there for seven years, and then we will find out that the Americans will bargain toughly, and that indeed we have unfairly subsidized, for example, fishermen on the East Coast with unemployment insurance.

I am amazed at how naive the Government is on the whole question of the free trade agreement and the possible impacts that it might have on our unemployment insurance program and our other programs such as medicare, family allowance, maternity benefits, and a whole host of others.

It seems to me that, while we have no quarrel with the principles of the Bill, and we are prepared to have the Bill go through in jig time, we have to ask, what was the Government's intention with unemployment insurance?

We remember those intentions very clearly in November, 1984 when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) made his financial statement in the House and announced severe cut-backs to the unemployment insurance program. It was designed to take some $500 million out of the unemployment insurance program. The Government received a considerable amount of flak. As a result, the Forget Commission was established to study the unemployment insurance program. We all saw behind that a sinister move on the part of a Government that was mesmerized by cut-backs and cutting deficits. We saw a sinister move by the Government to get a report that would recommend Draconian changes to the unemployment insurance program.

Sure enough, Mr. Speaker, you could have laid your money on it and you would have got no odds at all, because Claude Forget produced a report that this Government would surely have loved to have taken to its bosom to implement. The people of Canada put heat on the Government, as surely as they will put heat on the government Members in respect of the free trade agreement. They will put their feet to the fire. They will stick matches under their toe-nails and light them. It seems that that is the only way that we can make an impression on the other region of their anatomy. It seems that we must do something extreme to the bottom end to get something in at the top end. That is the only way.

Ms. McDonald: How about sticking their fingers in the toaster?

Mr. Rodriguez: It is more dramatic to put matches under their toe-nails and light them, because that gets them hopping around. In that way they have to think.

Mr. Weiner: We don't smoke so we have no matches.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is what happened in terms of the response of Canadians to the report of the Forget Commission. They pulled the Government up short. It made government Members stop and think about what they were going to do with the recommendations of the Forget Commission.

I saw a scathing attack on the Government by its friend and bosom partner, Conrad Black. He chastised the Government for not having implemented the Forget Commission report. Do Hon. Members remember the article? Can we imagine Conrad Black castigating the Government? This is the Conrad Black who treated his workers at the Dominion Stores so beautifully! He went into the pension kitty and took out the money. Instead of increasing or creating equity, he created a lot of debt for the company and walked away from it. This is the person who castigated the Government in a recent article by saying that it should have put the Forget Commission report into effect. As well, Donald Macdonald recommended changes to the unemployment insurance program which were similar to what the Forget Commission came down with.

Mr. Keeper: Is he a Conservative?

Mr. Rodriguez: I do not know what he is now. God only knows. However, he was in fact a supporter of the Forget Commission report. He wanted it put into effect.

Now the Government is responding to what we have been saying or what we have been suggesting was common sense. Instead of penalizing the poor, instead of picking on the hinterland, instead of punishing the unemployed because there are not enough jobs in their areas, the Government should spend the time and effort to devise employment strategies in the regions. These strategies can only come about—and we have been saying it to this Government and to the previous Government—when a Government is an active Government. This can only come about when a Government involves itself in planning the strategy and in being part of the implementation of the strategy.

One of our fears in respect of the free trade deal is that once it gets on the fast track it will be Amtrak from here to kingdom come, and never shall a government interfere in the economy of the country. It will be running on the Reaganomic fast track. My Party has expressed the fear that that deal will take away from any subsequent Government—

Ms. McDonald: Harmonization.

Mr. Rodriguez: We notice how they use words such as "harmonize". The word "harmony" suggests being in tune.

Ms. McDonald: It suggests harm.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Hon. Member is getting ahead of me. "Harmony" suggests that somehow they are in tune. That is the musical connotation of the word.

Mr. Keeper: What about discord?

Mr. Harris: Whose tune are they playing?

Mr. Rodriguez: They are playing Ronnie's tune from "Sundown".

Mr. Harris: And Brian is singing.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is the musical connotation. The Hon. Member referred to its root word "harm". The guy sings "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling" in harmony or discord with Ronnie in Quebec. There he was singing it up, and the guy thinks that everything else must be on the same note.

We believe that the downside of the agreement will be harmful. Instead of harmonizing Canada, it will be harming Canadians. It will be creating irreparable harm to the country.

It is a justifiable fear that programs like the unemployment insurance program will be sacrificed when the Americans get around to harmonizing—and let us hope that they will not be around for too much longer—what we have with what they lack.

I said that I wanted to talk about the administration of the unemployment insurance program. Over the last year I have seen one of the most frightful administrations of unemployment insurance I have ever seen since I came here in 1972 when the Government announced that pension income would be considered earned income. We had a subsequent backing away from that until Bill C-50 was passed in the House last spring.

What has happened is that many Canadians who should have been entitled to unemployment insurance were told, when they applied in December, 1985 and in January, 1986, to use up their pension income and severance pay and then to come back and file for unemployment insurance. When they came back in April to file, they were told that they did not file a claim before January 5, 1986, so they were not eligible to collect what Bill C-50 delivered.

We have a frightful mess across the country. Thousands of Canadians have been denied unemployment insurance benefits. By my calculation, 30,000 Canadians who were entitled to it did not get unemployment insurance because of the pensions and severance pay they received when their companies closed or when they had to leave the Armed Forces. It was a frightful maladministration of the program. Today we still have thousands of Canadians who are trying to fight with the bureaucracy to establish a claim. We deal with them every day.

The Standing Committee on Employment and Immigration decided that it wanted to take a look at the Department and its administration vis-à-vis unemployment insurance and employment programs. We were led by the Hon. member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) who exhibited some independence from the Government. We had staked out the areas in which we wanted to move. Lo and behold, the Government could not stand that kind of independence, moved in the goon squad, and had him removed. It put in his place a new chairman who promptly got the committee to buy the Malaryk book on the Department of Employment and Immigration. Its second move was to cancel the appearance of witnesses before the committee. The witnesses arrived. The meeting was cancelled. This cost the committee $1,500. This is the kind of action which the Government takes. A soon as we were getting closer to examining the Department, the Government decided it could not stand that, that the bureaucrats, the nabobs in the bureaucracy would be supreme, and their political minions ran in to defend them.

The Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration have to understand that they are elected to make decisions, that they are not the mouthpieces of the bureaucracy. They ought to listen to those who are elected in the House and to the advice they get about what is happening in the country, even from within their own Party, and particularly reports that are unanimous. Several unanimous reports on immigration came out of the immigration committee to the Government, as well as reports on refugees and on unemployment insurance. These have been ignored. I suspect they have been ignored because the bureaucracy at the top has said, "this is too costly, this is impractical, this will not go and that will not go".

What I look for and what most Canadians look for in people who are leaders, and people who are in the Cabinet are political leaders, is leadership and courage. When I look across the floor, there is a vast shortage of those particular qualities. The Department of Employment is an example. One only has to read Victor Malaryk's book which documents the litany of problems within this Department. We mentioned, for example, the problems of unemployed people who are trying to get through to unemployment insurance offices to inquire about their claims, but they could not get through on the telephone because the phone was busy, busy for an hour. We complained about that. One would think that that is a simple, mechanical, administrative question.

People complained to the Government and voiced complaints to members who sat on the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. These concerns were raised along with a whole host of other problems and recommendations for changing the structure of the administration, in other words, reminding the Ministers that money should be put in at the front end where you interface with people who need service. That is where the money should be spent, not on increasing administrative staff here in Ottawa.

What was the Government's response? The Government said that it would pick certain centres and put in a few more phone lines. But we are still waiting. If you put more lines in, it means you have to hire more people to answer the phones. It means that if you say service to the unemployed should be paramount, you have to deliver that service to the unemployed. I found that people have been hired only on term in the employment centres, and, regularly as clockwork, they get laid off and they go on unemployment insurance. Yet there is work there to be done. There is counselling to be done. We raised the matter of overwork of the employees, the competent employees, in those offices across the country who are striving to come to grips with a massive workload of unemployed young people going to employment centres who are given a form to fill in. There is no opportunity to have them sit down and be counselled. There are no opportunities for testing and no opportunities for trying to establish what is the best training program for this person.

I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that there was a time when every woman who went into an unemployment centre looking for work was sent off to be trained as a hairdresser. Similarly all the men were sent off to be trained as stationary engineers. We had hairdressers coming out of our ears and we had stationary engineers we could line up all the way from Sudbury to Toronto. Then it was discovered that there were not enough jobs for them. As long as they were kept in a classroom and in a training institution for a couple of years, it kept them off the unemployment rolls. From that we went on to training people to be heavy duty machine operators.

Why is it that after Canadian Jobs Strategies have been put in place, community futures, the regions of Canada are still experiencing this deadening unemployment rate? Why is it that we still need a variable entrance requirement? In my experience, the unemployed people—as I go across the country and I travel through my own community—want to work.

I had a mother call me on the phone this morning complaining bitterly that her son has been out of school now for two years and cannot find a job. He went to the employment centre and there on the wall were jobs available in certain occupations, but they were only for people who were on welfare. I understand that is progress, but why do we need that kind of program? This mother saw that as clear discrimination against her son. Why is it that we cannot develop a program that creates employment for all people, not only for those on welfare? Why can this not be done? By tying in ourselves into a trade deal that will prevent future Governments in this country from involving themselves directly in planning and implementing programs for the benefit of Canadians, the Government has surrendered.

Mr. Thacker: That is not true, and you know it.

Mr. Rodriguez: It is true. Let me go through the steps again.

One, seven years from now people will sit down and devise what a subsidy is. In that seven-year period, we will have locked ourselves in even more closely to the American economy. That far down the track, there will be no way we can say that we do not like that definition of a subsidy, that we believe UI is not a subsidy and want out. There is no way we will get out.

• (1750)

Mr. Thacker: There will be no unemployment in seven years.

Mr. Rodriguez: Pardon? In that seven years, we will experience all sorts of harassments because the Americans will not have given up the right to countervail. They can continue to countervail, and the mechanism is really designed just to implement American law, not Canadian law.

I do not know where the Hon. Member is coming from. We know that the Americans have always viewed unemployment insurance as a subsidy. They have made that quite clear. They have just taken a breather, and in the meantime, they will be chipping away at it and we will live with their trade harassments.

I wanted to put those thoughts on the record, even though we will support this Bill. We do not want to cause greater hardships for unemployed Canadians than they have experienced already. We must support this Bill. We do not want to delay it, we will expedite it.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have very little time to consider a Bill that is very important indeed. This Bill concerns workers in Canada's remote areas in all our provinces, and it also concerns fishermen in the Maritimes. The purpose of this Bill is to provide an extension for existing legislation introduced by the previous Liberal Government, under which workers in remote areas, where unemployment rates are higher, do not require as many weeks of insurable employment to be eligible for unemployment insurance as workers in larger urban centres where it is easier to find a job. For instance, in Montreal it takes about twenty weeks of insurable employment to be entitled to full unemployment insurance benefits during a certain period. Under the existing legislation, fishermen, for instance, in remote areas like the Gaspé and the Magdalen Islands, were entitled to unemployment insurance after ten or twelve weeks of employment. Considering that job creation in these areas is practically impossible, these people would otherwise have had to go on welfare. In some cases, because the fisherman's spouse had an income or because the family had property, certain assets and a boat, they were not eligible for welfare benefits. So these people would have been doomed to poverty.

At the time, the Liberal Government introduced this amendment to cover a fairly long period until such time as thorough review of the unemployment insurance system had been made.

I understand, and I think it is unfortunate, that the NDP Members disagree with the principle. They would prefer to see everyone treated the same. They do not agree that special measures should be taken to help fishermen and people working in remote areas, but I think that today, at least, they do agree on this Bill. However, we should be concerned about the fact that the Government is asking for a one-year extension only. In 1985 and last year, it was understandable the Government should ask for a one-year extension because it had set up a commission of inquiry to review the whole unemployment insurance system. The House will remember the Forget Commission and several task forces set up by the Department of Employment and Immigration. There was also the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. Nearly $8 million was spent in the course of making recommendations to the Government for a genuine reform of the unemployment insurance system. Unfortunately, everbody remembers that the Government has wasted this money and tossed in the waste basket the recommendations to amend the Unemployment Insurance legislation, including those, quite valid in fact, presented by the Committee on Employment and Immigration, an all party committee.

Mr. Speaker, it was understandable for the Government to seek a one-year extension, because everybody expected a thorough reform and that the amendment before us would become a permanent part of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Today, however, the Government comes up with a one-year extension, when it is about to sign a free trade agreement with the United States, and when we know that the Americans seem to consider the payment of unemployment insurance benefits in remote areas of the country as a sort of disguised subsidy—

Why—and that is the question I should like the Minister of Enmployment and Immigration to answer, and that is one of the amendments we are going to put forward in committee—did he not propose an amendment which would be good for four, five or ten years? If this measure is good for one year, it should be good for the year after. Why, at the very last minute just before the holiday season, did he propose an extension? In view of the fact that the Government has decided not to carry out a global reform of the unemployment insurance scheme, why did the Government not propose amendments to extend for the next ten years this legislation which is important for men and women working in remote areas?

Is it because the Canadian Government expects its American counterpart, following the signature of the free trade agreement, to say: Listen, this is the way competition works, these are unfair subsidies, this unemployment insurance scheme has to go. Automatically, the Government will not table this amendment next year and say to his American friends: Mission accomplished, gentlemen. Mr. Mulroney will tell Mr. Reagan: Yes, I am at your service. Canada's lackey will help you. We will not table again this amendment and fishermen will be penalized because of their incomes from unemployment insurance benefits, and all the other conditions will be affected by it.

Mr. Speaker, I know that I shall speak tomorrow or the next day, as I will have some time left, but I would like to point out that, when we speak about reducing wasteful spending, this Government also cut back the unemployment benefits of older workers. After a fight of 17 months, 46,000 of these workers received their benefits. Unfortunately, the Conservative Members took no part in this fight. In all Canada, 46,000 workers received an average of 10,000. There was 18,000 in Western Canada. These older workers got their money thanks to their own persistance and also thanks to the Liberal Official Opposition. However, some people are still being penalized.

The Government still discriminates against older workers. There are still 9,000 older workers in Western Canada who did not get their money, 3,000 in the Atlantic provinces, 13,000 in Ontario and 15,000 in Quebec, for a total of 42,000 throughout Canada. In addition, 2,000 older workers are in what is called the grey zone having taken an early retirement under the existing legislation before January 5, 1986. The Government then required these people to claim unemployment insurance benefits. Imagine, Mr. Speaker, what happens when someone loses his job because his company is closing down on December 31. We all know that the worker would automatically receive his severance pay on December 31. When this worker goes to the Unemployment Centre on January 7 or 8, the Minister of Unemployment and Immigration will unfortunately refuse to give him his full unemployment insurance benefits.

Mr. Speaker, I know that I shall still have about fifteen minutes left at the next sitting.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It's being 6 o'clock, the House stands adjourned until 11 a.m. tomorrow, pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

PUBLIC EMPLOYEES POLITICAL RIGHTS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-273, an Act respecting political rights of public servants.

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Daubney: Mr. Speaker, Members of the House may know that the issue of political rights for public servants is an issue which has been of concern to me since I had the honour of being elected to this Chamber. I have spoken on the issue a number of times, I think the first occasion was November, 1984.

Today I have the honour to introduce this Bill which deals with the essential liberties of Canadian people, public servants who serve the people of Canada here in Ottawa and across the country. The Bill deals with essential fundamental liberties of these Canadian citizens, the right to free speech, free assembly and the right to work peacefully and lawfully for democratic change.

It seems to me that on the surface, there should be no dispute about these fundamental rights, but the current law which is contained essentially in Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act contains restrictions which in my view are too far reaching to be categorized as reasonable. The law turns the basic rights of a large number of Canadians over to the whims of unelected officials at the Public Service Commission and in various line departments and agencies of the Government.

This Bill will essentially divide the Public Service—

Mr. Speaker: It is very clear that the Hon. Member has a Bill of some importance. I know Hon. Members would want to have some thorough knowledge of its contents, but the practice is that when a Bill is introduced, there is a short introductory statement made on the basic assumption that afterward, of course, all Hon. Members will read with great diligence the Bill that has been introduced and will seek out any further information that they might wish from the Hon. Member. Perhaps the Hon. Member could conclude his remarks.

Mr. Daubney: Mr. Speaker, I was just about to point out to the House in a very succinct closing statement that the Bill would essentially divide the Public Service into three categories: senior managers for whom the status quo would obtain, those in the lower levels, largely unionized employees, who would have full political rights, and a group in the middle who would have some political rights, depending on their particular functions.

I commend the Bill to the House and look forward to its support.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure all Hon. Members will feel that appropriate and adequate notice has been given of the contents of the Bill.

Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

The House resumed from Wednesday, November 25, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard that Bill C-90, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, we were waiting for the tabling of petitions, but we are probably going to skip this item today.

Yesterday, when I began my remarks on Bill C-90, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, I showed that as far as the unemployment insurance scheme is concerned, this Conservative Government has failed miserably. I should like to remind the Government that—The House is aware that as the Holiday season is approaching the Government is second to none when it comes to taking Quebecers and the other Canadians for a ride. Before the Holiday season, last year he had changed the rules of the game and cut 46,000 people from the Unemployment Insurance roles—

Mr. Speaker, are we going to table petitions or—? Then, could I continue my remarks?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With the House's consent, we will revert to the tabling of petitions. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet).

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-51—TOBACCO PRODUCTS CONTROL ACT

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table a petition signed by a number of Montreal voters who object to Bill-51, an Act to prohibit the advertising and promotion and respecting the labelling and monitoring of tobacco products. They are opposed to it because they feel this Bill violates the freedom of expression of Canadians.

OPPOSITION TO TAXATION OF FOOD

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, I have here a bunch of petitions signed by voters from my Papineau riding who object to the Federal Government putting a tax on food, convinced as they are that such a sales tax on foodstuffs would have highly detrimental effects on senior citizens and low income families. They therefore ask the Government not to proceed any further with this unfair tax.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—OPPOSITION TO DISCRIMINATION AGAINST ELDERLY WORKERS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I too would have petitions to present, first from residents of various regions of Quebec who are against the Conservative Government's decision to discriminate against older workers with respect to unemployment insurance benefits.

OPPOSITION TO TAXATION OF FOOD

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I also have another series of petitions from Ontario and Quebec residents who, like my colleague from Papineau (Mr. Ouellet)—and I must point out that 100,000 such petitions have reached me so far—are opposed to the decision of the Government to consider taxing such foodstuffs as bread, milk and butter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Very well, resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard that Bill C-90, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be read a second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to recapitulate what I said earlier regarding Bill C-90, whose purpose is actually to extend an amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act, under which the Unemployment Insurance Commission may authorize benefits in remote areas on the basis of a variable eligibility period.

This is a valid piece of legislation, and it is a measure initiated by the Liberal Party. It gives fishermen in regions like the Atlantic Provinces, the Gaspé and the Magdalen Islands, considering their limited period of activity and the high unemployment rate in those areas, the right to draw unemployment insurance benefits after ten or twelve weeks of employment. In regions where the unemployment rate is not as high, the eligibility period is twenty weeks.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to recall the negative impact that the Conservative Government has had on unemployment insurance. I may remind the House that 46,000 older workers were penalized when the Government cut their unemployment insurance benefits without prior notice. I gave the figures for each province but unfortunately, today there are still people who are being penalized. For instance, when a business announces it is going to close its plant, workers are laid off. All older workers covered by a so-called employee-employer pension plan are not entitled to their full unemployment insurance benefits, while older workers who get the same amount in benefits from a registered retirement savings plan are entitled to draw the full amount of their unemployment insurance benefits.

I think the Conservative Government is perpetuating a flagrant injustice in this case.

I wonder why this amendment is being extended for one year only. Mr. Speaker, I realize that previously, Governments made these changes for one year or for a limited number of years because they were planning to carry out a thorough reform of the unemployment insurance system, which would include this particular aspect. In fact, the committee recommended a uniform period of ten weeks, after which everyone would be eligible.

So today, I wonder why the Government has decided to introduce this amendment for one year only. Is there some connection with the free trade agreement?

We know the Americans consider the unemployment insurance benefits paid to fishermen in Quebec, the Maritimes and Western Canada as a hidden subsidy and thus an unfair trade practice, as they would have it. Isn't it a fact that the Prime Minister is now in Toronto, trying to persuade all the Premiers to accept the Free Trade Agreement, without talking about the contents, and without having seen the final text? And that the Government has introduced a Bill which, to do the Americans a favour, will be effective for one year only, a Bill that deals with how the Unemployment Insurance Act applies to fishermen and maternity benefits and the rest? As soon as this Agreement is signed, sight unseen, the Americans can say: Now you will have to withdraw unemployment insurance benefits for fishermen and for maternity benefits and sick leave, because in companies and industries in our country one cannot do that. It would take a uniform period of twenty or twenty-five weeks. Then the Government would not have to say it had backtracked. And the Government would not table this amendment to extend the principle of variable periods for remote areas.

Mr. Speaker, I am very concerned, but I think all Canadians listening to us today should also be concerned that the Government has decided to introduce this amendment for one year only.

I think we should remember this Government promised a thorough reform of the unemployment insurance system. This Government paid the Forget Commission $6 million to carry out a study, make recommendations and conduct an inquiry. Officials at the Department of Employment and Immigration and other departments worked on draft proposals for changes in the unemployment insurance system.

We had the Committee on Labour, Enmployment and Immigration, and all Members of all parties in this House were unanimous in wanting to propose changes, and everyone, including workers, unions, business, small businesses, corporations, and provincial Governments, everyone agreed that improvements were needed in the existing unemployment insurance system. Unfortunately, and we remember what the Minister of Employment and Immigration said, and in fact yesterday, instead of looking after his Department, he went off to do a little performance on the program Vedettes en direct or Vedettes indirectes. I have the impression that yesterday's performance was as disastrous as his proposals for changing the unemployment insurance system. I think it would have been better that he be here this morning to defend the interests of workers instead of trying to sweet-talk anybody.

In this connection, Mr. Speaker, we all recall that the Government simply threw the reports in the trash can—they cost $7 million, taxpayers' money thrown away. Yet at the same time the Government brought in only one amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act, and that was the injustice towards older workers who were denied full unemployment insurance benefits. Mr. Speaker, I would think that all people are unanimous on this point, as much the Standing Committee on Employment and Immigration, which included a number of Conservative Members, as my colleague from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce who has been active in this case. They all thought amendments were needed. Everybody is still urging the Government to bring in amendments designed to revamp unemployment insurance programs, extend maternity leaves, and make it easier for people to have access to such a good program. Well, Mr. Speaker, after so much consultation we can see today that the Government is introducing an amendment which the Liberal Party will endorse because the basic principle underlying the amendment relates to a decision of the Liberal Party to make it possible for workers in remote regions to enjoy the same privileges as urban residents who have better chances of finding employment.

Mr. Speaker, again I must get back to the free trade deal as it relates to the question of unemployment benefits. If we consider the issue in light of the free trade text now available, if we keep in mind that both countries will have to synchronize their policies, that means—in fact, on the basis of this agreement, will the Americans set up social programs which will be as effective as the ones we have here in Canada?

Will the Americans accept unemployment insurance programs like the ones we have in Canada, or will it be the other way round and will Canadians have to adjust and harmonize with the Americans, in other words, cut down on their social programs? And we must not forget that our unemployment insurance system is also used to cover certain aspects of health care.

Mr. Speaker, there is another aspect of unemployment insurance we tend to forget, which the Government has abolished, and which unfortunately has yet to be reinstated, namely the provisions for older workers.

A year and a half ago, we still had the Liberal Government program that dealt with the needs of workers in the textile, footwear and clothing industry and in specific regions, such as the asbestos-producing area. This employee adjustment program was supposed to deal with the impact of technological change. Workers fifty-five and over, who had worked for a certain number of years in the textile industry in the region concerned would, in case of layoffs, be eligible for the program which was the equivalent of unemployment insurance, namely 60 per cent of their salary until the age of sixty-five. Meanwhile, these people could, after a regular year, draw unemployment insurance benefits. Even if they found another more or less regular job and lost it again, they could come back and still be fully eligible for the adjustment program.

The Conservative Government announced the program would be abolished and said that it would negotiate another program with the provinces which would be called the Older Worker Adjustment Program. That was a year and some months ago, and no progress has been made. The provinces refused to accept the federal Government's proposal. Before, the program was 100 per cent funded by the federal Government, while today, the Government is proposing to have a new program funded on a fifty-fifty basis. At this very moment, the provinces are all very reluctant. Meanwhile, we have about 500 workers in Canada, three-quarters of whom are in Quebec, who would be eligible under the previous program.

I have nothing against the Government wanting to improve the program or offering a new program. But I disagree with the Government abolishing the old program in the belief that the new one would be accepted within six months. At the moment, older working men and women in Canada are excluded from this program, simply because the Government was negligent. As Mr. Paradis, the Quebec Income Security Minister, was saying: The Federal Government should have maintained the old program, which was good, during the negotiations period and after an agreement with the provinces on the new one had been reached, then it could have been abolished.

But today, because of the Government's shortsightedness, some 500 older workers throughout Canada are not eligible for the new program which has not yet been implemented, and they have lost their rights to the old one. If some of these people are forced to go on welfare, the others cannot, because their spouses have no income or some property. And we know that under the social security legislation, people must be almost destitute to be entitled to this type of assistance.

Mr. Speaker, you are indicating to me that I have two minutes left. I hope that this bill will reach Second Reading and committee stage, for the Liberal Party intends to support it. I also hope that when it is called upon to consider this bill, the Committee will accept amendments calling for a five year extension, in order to convince all Canadians that this is government policy . . . The bill will be reconsidered if ever there is a thorough reform of the Unemployment Insurance scheme. I should like also the Government to take remedial action as soon as possible, so that the 500 older workers and the others who join their ranks every month, may become eligible either for the old program or the new one. I should like the Federal Government, when the negotiations are over, to implement a new readaptation program for older workers, making them all eligible to Unemployment Insurance benefits.

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, as Hon. Members have already stated, the purpose of this Bill is to extend the variable entry requirement for unemployment insurance for one more year, until January 3, 1989. Before I deal with the substance of the Bill, I want to say that its handling is another example of a lack of co-operation with the Opposition by the Government in dealing with House business. I was told last Friday that this Bill would be brought forward for debate on Tuesday of this week. I prepared myself for that. However, late Monday I was told it would not be put forward on Tuesday, that Tuesday to be an Opposition Day, and I would be advised later when the Bill would come forward. Late Tuesday I was told that the Government wanted to proceed with it yesterday, and yesterday afternoon was the only day of the week that I could not be here to deal with the Bill because I had agreed to serve on a panel at Concordia University in Montreal to discuss refugee policy with the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) and a representative of the Inter-church Committee for Refugees. The Minister of State for Immigration could not go but he was to be replaced by the Parliamentary Secretary who could not attend either because of the snowstorm.

Nevertheless, the only day this week that I could not be here to deal with this Bill was yesterday afternoon. Despite that, the Government plowed ahead and put the Bill forward for debate.

It is regrettable because I was quite willing to co-operate with the Government in dealing with all stages of the Bill in one day. I simply ask the Government to be more sensitive in these matters.

This Bill extends the variable entrance requirement for unemployment insurance for another year. Let me explain the variable entrance requirement. According to the original unemployment insurance law, individuals in Canada had to work for at least 14 weeks in order to qualify for unemployment insurance. In 1977 the Liberal government of the day recognized that in some regions of Canada the rates of unemployment were so high and it was so difficult to find work that it decided to permit individuals in those high unemployment regions to qualify for unemployment insurance after 10 weeks.

Therefore, we now have a variable entrance requirement of 10 to 14 weeks in order to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits. The entrance requirement depends on the region in which one lives and the rate of unemployment in that region. For example, if one lives in a region of very high unemployment, then one will qualify for unemployment insurance benefits after 10 weeks. If one lives in a region that does not have a very high unemployment rate, one will qualify after 14 weeks. Therefore, the entrance requirement of between 10 to 14 weeks depends on the rate of unemployment.

This is a Liberal measure that was introduced on a temporary basis to deal with regional unemployment problems and has been extended from year to year. The Government is asking us to extend it for one more year, until January 3, 1989. We support that.

There is very good reason for continuing this variable entrance requirement. There is still a very high rate of unemployment in the regions of the country. The official rate of unemployment in Newfoundland for the month of October was 17.1 per cent; 13.7 per cent in New Brunswick; 12.7 per cent in Prince Edward Island; 11.4 per cent in British Columbia; and 11 per cent in Nova Scotia.

The Government is proud to announce week-in and week-out that it is very successful in creating jobs. However, I must remind the Government that nearly all those new jobs have been created in the greater Toronto region in southern Ontario. I must also remind the Government that, despite the jobs that have been created, the national rate of unemployment is still 8.4 per cent, or approximately 1.1 million Canadians who are still unemployed, mostly in the regions of the country. While that unemployment rate of 8.4 per cent is a drop from the high rate recorded during the recession, it is still not down to the pre-recession rate of 7.5 per cent unemployment in 1981.

The Government hesitates to admit this, but it should be pointed out as well that many of the new jobs are in low-wage and non-union occupations. Much of that is due to the new contracting out policies that governments and the private sector have adopted. Rather than utilizing their employees within the company or Government department, their full time workers are laid off and a contract is let to smaller companies to do such things as cleaning and maintenance, advertising and so on. Frequently, those smaller firms operate by using non-union workers at minimum wage, especially in jobs like maintenance and cleaning. In addition, many of those jobs are part-time or temporary jobs that may last from two months to a year. Furthermore, those jobs may entail only 12 to 14 hours a week. This may be acceptable employment in some cases, but there is a growing number of people with part time jobs who would rather work full time.

The number of jobs being created in low-wage, non-union, part-time and temporary employment has led to a widening gap between the rich and poor in Canada. The well trained skilled professionals and unionized workers are being paid well, but there is a growing number of people who are in non-unionized, minimum wage part-time or temporary work.

It was pointed out earlier this year that for the first time in 15 years after the average wage of women and men had considerably narrowed, suddenly the wage gap between men and women workers had widened. As a result of this phenomenon of part-time and temporary work, there is a larger number of what are called working poor.

While part-time work at a fast food outlet may be acceptable to single people who are going to school, it is not enough for those who are attempting to build a home and support a family. While the creation of these types of jobs is better than nothing, it is not the answer and is not something of which the Government should be proud. According to the most recent polls, unemployment is still the greatest concern of Canadians because they feel insecure in the types of jobs that are being created and in the benefits which they provide.

While the variable entrance requirement for unemployment insurance is beneficial, it is not the answer to the problem. There must be a greater commitment to regional economic development by the Government. Since it was elected in 1984, it has cut back huge sums of money from regional economic development.

We also need a greater commitment toward more resources and financing for post-secondary education, especially for literacy training. Without that training and education, one cannot qualify for the well paying permanent jobs, and it is those people with no training or low education who are drifting into these lesser jobs.

I repeat that we support this Bill because the Government is extending a measure that was introduced by Liberal governments in the past. We regret, however, that once again the Government has rejected all serious reform of the unemployment insurance system. It set up the Forget Commission to make recommendations with respect to reform. We did not agree with all the recommendations of the Forget report, especially the key recommendations, when that report was referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, but after studying the report we made 90 unanimous recommendations. These recommendations were supported by members of the Conservative Party, the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party. The Government refused them all. It did not accept one recommendation, and it did not accept any of the recommendations made by the Forget Commission.

By the way, Mr. Speaker, many of the 90 recommendations made by the parliamentary committee, of which I was a member, were similar to the Forget recommendations.

We rejected the Forget recommendation for annualization and for ending regionally extended benefits, but many of our 90 recommendations were similar and supported the Forget Report. Nevertheless the Government rejected recommendations which were unanimous even among members of its own Party.

We regret the lack of commitment of the Government to reform the unemployment insurance system. We must also put on record again our complete—and I have to use the word—disgust with the Government in the way it tried to solve the problem of early retirement. About two years ago it cut unemployment insurance benefits for those people who were forced to take early retirement. After a year of pressure, of lobbying, of marches on Parliament Hill by veterans and by retired members of the RCMP, it decided to rectify its mistake, but only in part. The Government returned the benefits it cut from some of those people, but not all of them, leaving a great sense of injustice in Canada that will remain because of the way the Government handled this matter.

We support this Bill but we regret the Government's lack of commitment to the reform of the unemployment insurance system. We also regret the disgraceful way in which the Government handled the cuts in unemployment insurance for early retirees, only restoring benefits to part of that group of people. I believe the Government's record with respect to unemployment insurance is part of the reason it is still at 25 per cent in the polls in Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments? Debate.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have just a few words to say about this Bill. The Bill says that during a period up until next year, the number of weeks that an insured person has to wait—I presume that is a person wanting to draw unemployment insurance, other than a new entrant or re-entrant to the labour force—shall be such and such. I just want to put on the record that the law itself is discriminatory. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, how silly it sounds to someone trying to get unemployment insurance when the law passed by the Parliament of Canada says, you can collect unemployment insurance but it depends upon whether you are an new entrant or a re-entrant or whatever? It does not matter where one worked, what one did or how long one worked; it now depends on who one is. I notice that 90 per cent of re-entrants are women, and that no one over the years has really zeroed in on that particular aspect, not that I am overly concerned about it.

A re-entrant would need 20 weeks on the Gaspé Coast, the Great Northern Peninsula of Newfoundland or some rural area. That would be a young man or woman who has managed perhaps in a poor area just to get as much work as everyone else. They do not qualify for unemployment insurance. Why? Because they are categorized as a new entrant. The law says they did not collect unemployment insurance before so they have to have double the number of weeks that someone who collected unemployment insurance before has to have. How silly can it get? How silly and discriminatory can the law be?

If one missed a year of work—and perhaps the industry was down in the area for last year— and wants to qualify, one has to work double the period one worked two years ago. How silly the law is. How silly the people of Canada must think are the Parliament of Canada, governments and politicians in general.

We are not talking about people who make a lot of money. What is the maximum UI benefits today? Certainly one would not be making $300 a week. You would not be bringing in any great sum of money. Yet we make these laws. One would have to say that the people who devised the Unemployment Insurance Act over the years had to be a group of people who were trying to complicate the system. Why do we not just give people unemployment insurance benefits when they have been working and have lost their jobs?

For the last two months I imagine most Members of Parliament have been inundated with cases, as I have been, of people who have returned to school. Perhaps it is night school, afternoon school or morning school; perhaps it is a trade school or to a university doing part-time courses. Those people returned to school because they were perhaps out of work and were drawing unemployment insurance only to discover that they are not allowed to go to school if they are drawing unemployment insurance. They have to sit home next to the phone and if they move away from the phone they can be cut off. They cannot go looking for work. They cannot take a course in the afternoon from one o'clock to three o'clock because the Act says that in that case they are not available for work.

I just simply wanted to put that on the record. How silly, how very silly the Unemployment Insurance Act is. It has always been there. We have always tried to figure out ways to track people down and stick them. The Unemployment Insurance Commission now has employees whose job description is to try to figure out how many people they are going to cut off today. It is bad enough to tell someone who has just lost his or her job that they have a two week waiting period. What are they supposed to live on? One other option is to go down to the welfare office, but if they do that they have to sign a sheet of paper saying that it can be taken out of their unemployment insurance when they receive it. If they do not do that they can be charged under the Welfare Act of any provincial Government. We deal with these cases daily.

I think someone, sometime, should sit down with a couple of sensible people and rewrite the Unemployment Insurance Act so it is not so silly and so discriminatory and so that it does what it is supposed to do. In this way the Government would not spend all of its time trying to take people off unemployment insurance. The Government tries to show us a picture by pointing to the Auditor General's Report and saying, "Look at the overpayments to people".

Anyone who has dealt with unemployment insurance problems in the nation knows that the overpayments are as a result of departmental mistakes and corrections. An overpayment results when the Unemployment Insurance Commission overpays someone. An overpayment results when the Unemployment Insurance Commission says, "We found out you helped somebody fix their kitchen two weeks ago so we do not think that you should have been on unemployment insurance two weeks ago". That is an overpayment. Those cases are now piling up before the appeal committees and the Federal Court.

We will soon need to have a whole new group of judges to hear these cases just because of the sheer number of appeals that are underway in the high unemployment areas of the country. It is unfortunate that the Government does not act, sit down with people who have been on unemployment insurance and read the judgments of the Federal Court which hears the appeals. These federal judges were once known as umpires.

One can walk into one of those courtrooms on any day and hear the federal judge read his judgment. There are thousands of CUBs, which are the judgments of the federal judges. Very often the judge points out that there is something wrong with the Unemployment Insurance Act or with the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) who interprets the Act.

Why is the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) bringing in this Bill? I do not know. He is not responsible for what is in the Act. He does not make a judgment on what is in the Act. The Minister of Employment and Immigration has no more to do with the Act than does the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie). So why is he bringing it in?

The Minister of National Revenue determines those sections of the Unemployment Insurance Act which deal with eligibility and determination of employment. It is he who determines whether or not someone qualifies for unemployment insurance benefits. He decides whether or not they have the required number of weeks. When one appeals a ruling against a determination of one's eligibility for unemployment insurance benefits that appeal is made to the Minister of National Revenue.

With those few words, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat. As the previous speaker said, I will vote for this legislation simply because one has to support it. In one respect—one small respect—it continues a system which recognizes that the high unemployment areas have particular problems. However, at the same time, I wish to put on the record how foolish is the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) has referred to some serious failings in the Unemployment Insurance Act, as well as some weaknesses in it. He said in his remarks that someone should sit down to write a new Act in order to correct these matters. Does he realize that the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration spent more than six months doing exactly what he suggested? It drafted a report in which it recommended many of the changes to which the Hon. Member has referred. It was a unanimous report. It was given to the Government and not one of the recommendations was accepted.

For example, the committee recommended that if one was unemployed and collecting unemployment insurance benefits then one should be allowed to take courses in a training school, university, or whatever in order to upgrade one's qualifications. The Government rejected that recommendation. One of the recommendations dealt with these so-called overpayments and the fact that they are often made by bureaucrats and officials. The committee made 90 recommendations to bring up to date the Unemployment Insurance Act in these various areas. They were rejected totally and completely. The Hon. Member has made his plea today. I do not know what else we can do.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is absolutely correct. He referred to people who are going to a trade school or who are in the process of upgrading themselves. These people are sitting at home saying to themselves, "My goodness, I would love to do a course. I want to go to better myself so that perhaps I can get another job. I need those qualifications to get another job". They go to a training school and are cut off from unemployment insurance benefits. The committee recommended that because these people are retraining they should be allowed to collect unemployment insurance benefits.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, certain people are able to do that today. In trade schools anywhere in Canada one finds that half the students are collecting unemployment insurance benefits while the other half is not. Why? Because the one half which is collecting unemployment insurance benefits are in Manpower seats.

I will have to explain what a Manpower seat is. Only someone collecting unemployment insurance who goes through the system knows what a Manpower seat is. It is a seat that is paid for by the Department of Employment and Immigration, but we call it a Manpower seat in our jargon. There are only so many seats which are paid for by the Department and there is a trick to getting one. When one goes to apply for unemployment insurance one must register for a seat. The recommendation of the standing committee in this area was one of the planks in the platform built by the Conservative Party when it ran for election. It was one of those glorious planks that even I looked at and said, "My goodness, they have some sense.

There is some sense there in that political party". I have now discovered that nothing at all has been done about it.

I imagine there are other speakers in the House who might be interested in saying a few words about the entrant and re-entrant to the labour force category and how unfair the unemployment insurance system is. I say that especially when someone can walk into the Unemployment Insurance office today only to be told that his claim is under review. There is no procedure whereby that person can actually sit down and go over the decision not to pay benefits. One can go through the appeal process but that can take up to a year and a half.

I am sure there are other Members who might wish to express an opinion on that matter, especially the Hon. Member for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception (Mr. Johnson) who has approximately the same type of constituency problems as I have in terms of unemployment insurance.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) for what he said. I would say that the silliness about which he was talking should be quadrupled. Some of the regulations in the Unemployment Insurance Act are silly, silly, silly, silly. I am surprised that this administration which has done so many good things since it took office three years ago has not been more determined to bring in more legislation than what is contained in the Bill before us. Although I am glad to see that people in certain regions of the country will still be able to qualify for unemployment insurance with only 10 weeks contributions, in my particular riding, there are many people who are not even fortunate enough to be able to find work to get 10 weeks to qualify for unemployment insurance.

The Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) has already alluded to the situation of Manpower seats in trade schools, and so on. I think that it is absolutely ridiculous that some people can qualify to have their seat paid for and receive a certain weekly fee to attend training, and that more people cannot qualify at all. For instance, some employers are willing to continue to pay wages if the employees are attending school to take certain mandatory courses. Another example is, people going to sea who have to have marine emergency duty courses, and the employer will continue to pay their wages. However, these persons have to pay for the seats in a trade school, in the fisheries college, or the employer has to pay it for them. There are people who have had their seats paid for and are receiving unemployment insurance at the same time. I think that that is wrong and it should be looked into. I am glad that the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate mentioned it. It is time that Parliament took a serious look at the unemployment insurance regulations.

The Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate mentioned that people have to appeal to Revenue Canada. Officials in the Unemployment Insurance Commission will advise people that they are eligible for unemployment insurance benefits, and then a ruling will come from Revenue Canada that states that they are not eligible. In some cases, it takes weeks or months for someone to find out if they are eligible or not.

I know of one person who had worked for years, was laid off, and applied for unemployment insurance benefits. It took so long to get his claim processed before it went to appeal, and then it went to a court hearing, which only occurs in the maritime and Atlantic provinces once a year. That person missed the 90-day period and could not get in to be heard. In the process he lost his house because he could not make the mortgage payments. That is downright shameful.

I noticed that the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate was not partisan, as he usually is, because he blamed it on parliamentarians more so than the Government. I think that it does rest with the parliamentarians, because we should see that the Government makes some changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

The Forget Commission made some recommendations that are probably acceptable in some areas of Canada, but are highly unacceptable in other areas. The same thing applies to unemployment insurance for fishermen. The Hon. Member knows that practically all the witnesses who appeared before the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans did not wish any changes made to the Unemployment Insurance Act, because they were afraid of what might be put in place.

Until such time as the Government is willing to set out a course and advise the people that this is what it would like to implement, and ask if they are willing to accept it, the people will be afraid of changes in unemployment insurance. They are afraid that the changes might be for the worse instead of for the better.

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise today to speak to this Bill. As a new Member looking at this Bill it looks pretty dry. In a way, it is a very simple Bill. It states that we will change the words "twenty-one" to "thirty-three". I do not think that anyone has risen in the House to speak against the Bill. I also rise to support the Bill and the changes in the Act. I wish to take the opportunity to change these cold, plain words and put some flesh and blood into the debate.

As has been pointed out, the mere fact that the Government needs to continue this provision in the Act underscores and underlines the great problem that we have with unemployment in particular parts of Canada. As a Newfoundlander and as the Member for St. John's East, I must pay particular attention to the problems in Newfoundland.

At this time of year in Newfoundland many people are very worried. They are not so much worried about finding permanent jobs, but that they will not be able to get enough work to get unemployment insurance in order to survive the winter. Whether they do or not is the difference for is the difference between unemployment insurance and welfare. That is not a very good choice for an individual in a country that is as prosperous as Canada with, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is so fond of saying, an economic performance that excels in the western world.

As a Newfoundlander, and also as a Canadian, it is a shock and a shame for me to be able to say that the rest of Canada does not know how terrible the situation is and that the Government does not want to do anything that will resolve that problem. Of course, we cannot vote against this legislation. But it is a drop of water where a bucket is needed.

The House and other Canadians need to be reminded that we in Newfoundland have an unemployment rate of twice the national average. When the national unemployment rate goes down the Government gets up and applauds itself and pats itself on the back, and usually at the same time the unemployment rate goes down in Newfoundland. Last year it went up when the Canadian rate went down. But it is always twice the national rate.

That is only part of the story. It is all very well to say that the unemployment rate in Newfoundland is 17 per cent. But when you look at the statistics another very important story can be told, and it is always left out when anybody talks about the unemployment rate and how wonderful it is. A very important figure that goes along with the labour force data is the participation rate. That rate tells us how many of those who are eligible to be in the workforce are actually considered by Statistics Canada to be in the workforce at all.

In looking at Newfoundland, the participation rate is 52.7 per cent. That means that 52.7 per cent of those eligible for work are considered by Statistics Canada to be in the workforce. Before I talk more about that, I will mention all the other provinces. In Nova Scotia the participation rate is 60 per cent; in New Brunswick it is 58.8 per cent; Quebec, 63.6 per cent; Ontario, 68.7 per cent; Manitoba, 66 per cent; Saskatchewan, 66.9 per cent; Alberta, 71.4 per cent; and British Columbia, 65.3 per cent. All across the country the participation rate in the labour force is higher than that of Newfoundland. Why is that? The reason is that there are no opportunities for people to have jobs.

Compared with the rest of Canada there is an unemployment rate that is twice the national average. More than that there are eight, ten, fifteen, twenty points difference in the participation rate of the Newfoundland workforce, which I call the real workforce, from other parts of the country so you have another potential of 15 to 20 per cent unemployment. It is not called unemployment by Statistics Canada because the people in that category are not actively seeking work. They have not had a job interview in the last three weeks.

It does not take much imagination to come to the conclusion that if someone lives in a community where there are no jobs, where the only source of employment may be the town hall, the fish plant or a construction project, that they are unemployed. They do not go from one door to the next asking "do you have a job for me?" If there are jobs available they know by word of mouth. But these people are not in the labour force according to Statistics Canada.

Despite that, the unemployment rate in Newfoundland is at least twice the national average by official standards. There are more than 52 per cent who are interested in working, wanting an opportunity to use their talents and abilities, wanting an opportunity to support their families, to make money, to earn a decent living and have an opportunity to take advantage of the good things which this country is able to provide. It seems that this House, other Canadians and the Government, have to be reminded that Newfoundland and Newfoundlanders are a part of Canada. Newfoundlanders ought to have the same opportunities for employment and be able to use their talents and look after their families as the rest of Canadians. If this were a situation that existed in the Province of Ontario or in the Province of Quebec, there would be a massive government program to do something about it.

The situation in Newfoundland is comparable to the situation that existed in Canada during the depression. When there are national problems of unemployment we do have government action to provide solutions.

What do we have in the case of Newfoundland's very serious problem? We have legislation that says, "we recognize there are problems and if you manage to get 10 weeks work somewhere along the line we will let you collect unemployment insurance while in the rest of Canada people have to work at least 14 weeks. We will vary that rate". Obviously we cannot vote against that because this legislation is desperately needed. Whatever assistance the workers in Newfoundland can get is vital because it is the difference between spending the winter—in many cases, on welfare, or maybe not even qualifying for welfare if you are single and unemployed—and having a few dollars from unemployment insurance. The Government needs to eradicate this problem.

Looking at the Bill, and there may have been changes over the years, it seems that this 33-month period for this 10 to 14 week variable rate started on December 4, 1977. I assume in 1977 this provision was brought in. It is now 10 years later. Since this what has happened to the unemployment rate in Newfoundland, Mr. Speaker? It is still, even officially, double the national average. As I say, by looking at the participation rate it is easy to see, even by the statistics, that the rate is probably three or four times the national rate.

We need legislation to provide massive government assistance based on the unemployment rate that is keyed and geared to reducing that rate or at least reducing the difference between the rate of unemployment in Newfoundland and the Canadian average. Programs should be put into place to carry on until that national average is achieved, and we should compare annually the effect of programs on the unemployment rate. We would then have some recognition by the Government that the unemployment rate in Newfoundland is a national problem. It would give a signal to Newfoundlanders that they can rely on the Canadian Government to address their problems. Unfortunately that is not the case.

It is a source of great concern to me when many of my constituents call me asking if I can find them a job. They tell me they are having difficulty getting in touch unemployment insurance and are experiencing difficulty getting with the bureaucracy. As mentioned yesterday by my colleague, the Hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), people are even unable to get hold of the unemployment insurance office. I have a constituent in Pouch Cove who spent days trying to get through on the telephone to the unemployment insurance office to ask a simple question so he could fill out his forms and collect his unemployment insurance. He spent one entire day on the telephone trying to get through. It was busy, then no answer. Busy, no answer.

The Government's approach and attitude with massive numbers of people unemployed is to set up a system to treat them as statistics, cards in a computer system. I am pleased to see that the Hon. Member for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception (Mr. Johnson), himself a Newfoundlander with many constituents with similar problems, recognizes the inadequacy of the Government's response.

There is a need for a proper unemployment insurance system. What is evident from the necessity of this legislation is the far greater need for economic opportunities for Newfoundland, in the Atlantic provinces and in the regions of this country that are suffering because the Canadian economy and the government policy has left them behind.

We Newfoundlanders have been part of Confederation for getting on to 40 years. It is the whole of the country we look to for standards and leadership on national issues. We also look to Canada as a whole to fulfil our dreams of full participation in the nation. We cannot do that in a situation where the level of opportunity in Newfoundland is less than half, in fact far worse, than the national average. I think it comes down in the end to a question of respect for Newfoundlanders as individuals and as a people. We too ought to have a chance to participate at the same level in the Canadian life. As the Jew, Shylock, in Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice said "If you prick us, do we not bleed?" The unemployed in Newfoundland and those who would like to make it to the unemployment rolls, who are not even recognized by statistics as being unemployed, are human beings. Sadly, our people are bleeding from the lack of policy and action on the part of the Government to overcome these problems.

The Government tries to give us hope with ideas that will not assist. It talks about the Atlantic Opportunities Agency. That agency was announced last June but I am told that it has not spent a cent other than on programs that already existed. For Newfoundlanders who are seeking employment and will have to suffer another winter without jobs, and in some cases without jobs and without unemployment insurance benefits, that is not good enough. We need a commitment from the Government and a commitment from the people of Canada to see that Newfoundlanders are treated equally. This measure is necessary, and I am glad the Government has recognized that. However, it is a very weak response to a very serious problem.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? Debate.

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to say a few words on this Bill. I appreciate the comments of my colleague, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris). I think he has put the case very well. I would like to add a few points if I may.

The Hon. Member talked about the unemployment rate and the participation rate. I would like to add that among young people in Newfoundland, the official unemployment rate, according to Statistics Canada, is 50 per cent. While the official unemployment rate for the population as a whole is one that will not be seen in other parts of Canada as absolutely tragic, although we see it that way at home, the official rate among young people is tragic.

My hon. colleague was quite right in talking about alternatives. Young people will have to have alternatives. What will be their alternatives? There is a whole generation growing up now asking, "What is there for us to do, what is the point in getting all this training, and what is there for us to do when we finish?"

We must emphasize the young people particularly, their unemployment rate, their participation rate and the opportunities that will be available to them when they finish training. That is an aspect of the question I wish to add to the very useful, helpful and accurate summary made by my colleague from St. John's East.

It is too bad that we are here debating the status quo. What a tragedy it is that we are only going that far. The Government is only prepared to keep the status quo going for another 12 months.

We brought in the regional rate of entry in the first instance for 133 months. Will the situation change in 12 months? If so, I would like to know how the Government will change it.

Let me describe for government Members the situation. Official Department of Fisheries and Oceans statistics show that the catch rate in the inshore fishery has gone down consistently over the past six years. Bear in mind that the inshore fishery is fundamental to many communities in my riding, in the riding of the Hon. Member for St. John's East and in the riding of the Hon. Member for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception (Mr. Johnson). There are so many communities that are dependent on that inshore fishery. Yet the statistics have shown that over the past six years the catch rate has gone down. That means that inshore fishermen, fishermen with boats anywhere from 20 feet to 45 feet, are catching fewer fish and therefore can qualify less and less easily for unemployment insurance. They do not make as much money and they do not as easily qualify for unemployment insurance. As well, many women work in fish plants all over the province, not because they want to but because they have to, and many of them will be affected by that decline in the inshore catch.

I am building on the argument made by my hon. friend that there is a lack of opportunity and of alternatives. The only thing the people have to fall back on is the unemployment insurance system. Does the Government have some sort of plan that will change the pattern of fish landings in the next 12 months? What happens after that 12-month period if that does not happen? Do we simply come back here and talk about the status quo again?

The status quo is not good enough. Let me describe some specific changes that should be made. Let us deal with fishermen on the Labrador coast, for example. At least fishermen on the coast of Newfoundland can draw unemployment insurance up until May 15. They begin drawing it on November 15. Bear in mind that in many areas, fish is not caught after October so fishermen have to go from some time in October to November 15 before they can begin to draw unemployment insurance. In most cases, benefits can be drawn up to May 15, but what happens to fishermen on the Labrador coast? The ice remains off the Labrador coast until some time in late June. From May 15 to late June, a six-week period, the fishermen on the Labrador coast have no income at all. They have no unemployment insurance benefits and no opportunities to catch fish, through no fault of their own. They cannot catch fish because the ice is in the bays. There are serious weaknesses in the existing program.

If we have any regard for human rights, fairness and equity whatsoever, specific changes should be made right now. I think we should go well beyond that and put in place the kind of system that was recommended by Forget and by commission after commission, some kind of income-support plan for fishermen. If we do not want to do it only for fishermen, let us go all the way and create a guaranteed annual income. Let us stop fooling around with a system that everyone feels they have to beat. The big game in town is how to beat the system. The system is bad and unfair so people must devise ways every day to beat an unfair system.

Why are we expending our energies, our creativity and our imagination in an attempt to beat a lousy system? Why do we not come up with a plan that would allow flexibility and creativity? If we want to do that, we should be looking specifically at a guaranteed income for fishermen as was recommended by Forget and the House report. In fact, let us go all the way and look at a guaranteed annual income. Let us stop all this nonsense about bilking an unwieldy and inflexible system of money that is owed to people, money they need and money they deserve if they are to have a decent life in Canada. It seems to me that the time has come for us to move in that direction.

There is no reason to do a song and dance about the Government suddenly agreeing in its wisdom to maintain the status quo. Let me return to the young people. A young person, one of those 50 per cent unemployed, must have not 10 weeks of employment but 20 weeks of employment in Newfoundland if he wants to get into the system now. In the short fishing season on the northeast Coast of Newfoundland or the coast of Labrador, where will he find 20 weeks in which to qualify for the system? Again, I make the point that the status quo is simply not good enough. Therefore, I cannot get excited about the Government, in its wisdom, agreeing to keep what is already there.

I think it is a comment on the kind of leadership we have that while the Government is telling Canadians that it wants, through the free trade deal, to give Canadians opportunities for job creation, for hundreds of thousands of new jobs, and it wants, through Meech Lake, to give Canadians equality in Canada, it is saying to the people in Newfoundland that they must be content with the status quo for 12 months. There are no brave words, no imaginative ideas, no plans for revitalizing the inshore fishery in Newfoundland, simply the status quo for 12 months. That is not good enough.

Hundreds and thousands of people are in grave danger at this time. We have a generation of workers in certain areas of Newfoundland in danger of ceasing to work at all. I really have very grave concerns about the future of the inshore fishery in my province. That industry supports not only a lot of fishermen and plant workers, but a lot of communities. Let the Government come forward with a plan to save not only a dying industry and those fishermen and plant workers but whole communities which are in jeopardy at this time.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say a few words about this legislation. The two Members who spoke before me really set the pattern in articulating what needs to be said about the variable entrance requirement. I guess what we first need to say is what it is and then what it says about the kind of Government we have.

In certain regions of this country with significantly higher levels of unemployment people can qualify for unemployment insurance in a shorter period of time than those in other areas. That is only just and we in this Party support the extension of this provision in the Act.

We also must remind ourselves that the reason we have a variable entrance requirement is because a Liberal Government decided to get tough on unemployment insurance. It decided that the qualifying period was too short and it was going to lengthen it. It wanted to make it much more difficult for all Canadians to obtain unemployment insurance. It was only because of a significant rump in the Liberal Party that opposed this move, as well as other Opposition objections, that the Liberal Government of the day backed away. A compromise solution was found, that most Canadians would have to work longer in order to qualify for unemployment insurance but in areas with high levels of unemployment people could qualify in a shorter period of time.

I wanted to take note of that because it is fascinating to see how differently the Liberal Party acts when in opposition compared to when in Government. These days Canadians are demanding more and more consistency from their political Parties. They would like to see the promises implemented.

What does this Bill tell us about the Government? Since the variable entrance requirement is being extended for only one year it can be described as a crumb from the table of the rich, a sop to the unemployed and poor. The Government is saying it will give just enough to keep you quiet. It is not going to do anything to reform the system and make it more adequate, it is just going to extend this sop. The Government seeks to maintain the status quo. Of course, it is Conservative philosophy to maintain the status quo, not to bring about activist Government which will tackle difficult problems and bring about real solutions so that we can build a more humane society. It is simply to hold back the flood and give a little so it can say it has done something.

That is not good enough. We have significant levels of unemployment right across the nation. It is about 8 per cent these days, which does not sound like a heck of a lot because it has been much higher. However, there are other countries that have found ways of providing employment for a much larger percentage of their population. For example, unemployment in Sweden is about 2 per cent. The same for Norway.

Why have Canadian Governments failed to meet the challenge of providing employment for all its people? In short, it is simply because the Government wants to maintain the status quo. It is not willing to ask the kind of questions about its policies and the economic system which need to be asked in order to provide the solutions which would lead to full employment.

Full employment is significant because as unemployment has risen, so has poverty. We have had the spectre of the homeless brought to us on our television screens. We have had much more visible evidence of hunger in our society. We are also reminded on a regular basis that fully one-fifth of our population is functionally illiterate. They do not have the basic reading and writing skills required to hold down a good job in a modern society.

These are significant problems, yet the Government simply says it will extend the variable entrance requirement for one more year. It is a symbolic move and completely inadequate. It reflects a failure to recognize that unemployment, poverty, hunger, and a lack of housing is a serious crisis today.

I want to remind people that over the last five or 10 years we have seen a new political philosophy. It is getting a little ragged around the edges but it has dominated political discourse. What is that? It is because of neo-conservatism or the re-emergence of the attitude that the status quo is good enough. It is resistance to social change. It is the absence of concern about social programs and an unwillingness to take action. That philosophy is significant because it reflects itself in public policy, or a lack of public policy.

I also want to remind Canadians that this is very much the attitude expressed by R. B. Bennett in the depression days. This is the attitude expressed by Herbert Hoover, President of the United States, when the depression began. From that depression, in which the vast majority of citizens were brought to their knees, emerged a new political leadership which was able to give hope to people by using the power they had to tackle the problems people were facing, particularly the problem of unemployment. I am thinking now of J. S. Woodsworth, Tommy Douglas, and Franklin Roosevelt in the U.S. These leaders said that when we face problems as a nation we must take action. By the time Franklin Roosevelt delivered his second inaugural address he had taken significant action, had renewed people's hope, and had begun experimenting with solutions to solve problems. However, he said at that time that one-third of the nation remained ill-housed, ill-clothed, and ill-fed. That was half a century ago and the statement is still true today.

It is time for us to pick up the torch from Roosevelt, J. S. Woodsworth and Tommy Douglas and renew a commitment to activist government, a commitment to fulfilling the basic human needs of ordinary Canadians. Although official statistics say that we have 8 per cent unemployment in this country, there is close to 50 per cent unemployment in Newfoundland and 80 to 90 per cent unemployment on Indian reserves. When we imagine the human devastation of living in a community with 80 or 90 per cent unemployment, we must realize that it is time to act and renew our commitments.

I estimate that the unemployment rate in my riding of Winnipeg North Centre is close to 30 per cent. That is a conservative estimate made on the basis of a survey of the parents of school children. It was only teachers who had the courage to try to find out the actual level of unemployment in the community. The teachers wanted to know why the kids come to school hungry and why they have to move three or four times a year due to inadequate housing as a result of low incomes. These parents do not have sufficient employment to provide for the needs of their children in a modern, industrial society.

It is time for us to pick up the torch and renew our commitment to bring about social change which will allow us to fulfill basic human needs. Only when the basic human needs for food, clothing, and shelter are met can people begin to fulfill their potential. Government and political leadership must be about giving people the opportunity to fulfill their human potential and giving society an opportunity to develop a greater sense of community.

Some people might say that that is a little difficult in these days when budgets are tight and people no longer believe that government can act in the collective manner. That mood is pervasive across the nation, but we must dispel it. We must dispel the notion that the status quo is adequate and that we cannot take action.

I would like to identify one small step which governments could take today in order to demonstrate that action can be taken. I suggest that we study what social democratic governments have done in European countries such as Sweden where they have chosen to intervene in a significant way in the labour market by way of training and providing support for people as they move from one job to another. They have invested in people in order to bring down the level of unemployment.

Although models cannot be transferred from one country to another entirely without change, we know that in Canada one-fifth of our population is functionally illiterate. We must recognize that it will be impossible for us to solve the unemployment problem without doing something about that situation. We should take illiteracy as a challenge and put in place the programs and funding necessary to eliminate functional illiteracy. If we raise the skill levels of our people they could take advantage of employment opportunities and provide for the needs of their children. This is one area in which we could take a significant step forward.

This is not an abstract notion. While knocking on doors in my riding over the last few days I met a young mother at home with her child. This lady is seeking up-grading as a first step toward acquiring the necessary marketable skills.

In this way we could take a first step toward attacking the problem of unemployment, particularly where it is gravest such as in Newfoundland, on Indian reserves, and in the inner cities.

While there are many other issues to be addressed, such as the industrial strategy of the country and challenging the Government to back away from weakening Canadian sovereignty, we must recognize that the legislation before the House today which provides for a one-year extension of the variable entrance requirement is only a sop to the unemployed, the poor and the hungry. It is a commitment to the status quo. It is a reaffirmation of benign neglect. That is no longer adequate.

The time has come to challenge the neo-conservative dominance of the political debate in this country and to recommit ourselves to the value of providing for the basic human needs of all our citizens. We can start by taking the problem of unemployment seriously. We can start by committing the Government to do whatever it takes to reduce the unemployment rate in inner cities, which is now at about 30 per cent, to reduce unemployment in Newfoundland, which is at about 50 per cent, and to reduce unemployment on Indian reserves, which is at about 80 or 90 per cent. We must bring those rates down to at least the national level.

Let us stop this abuse of human beings. We must recognize in our actions and public policy that we are all equal. Let us stop this neglect. Let us get a government in place which is committed to action, can renew the hope of Canadians, and can give pride to all Canadians in the knowledge that we are a community rather than a dog-eat-dog society.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, my colleague referred to the unemployment rate in Sweden and Norway which is 2 per cent. I recently read a study of the unemployment rates of the 15 countries of the OECD and compared them with the rates in countries such as Canada, the U.S., Austria and Japan. The study compared all the factors which might be involved in an unemployment rate and tried to discover what would account for the differences.

After discounting factors which relate to the nature of the labour force, and certain other factors, the study concluded that the reasons for the varied unemployment rates was government policy. Certain governments pursue a policy of full employment and as a result their populations are employed. These countries perform as well or better as the other countries in the OECD but have full employment. It seems that whether we have full employment or not is a matter of government policy. Why does my colleague believe the Government does not pursue such a policy?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, it is important for us to be reminded that full employment is not just an objective or dream, but a policy of some countries in the world. In other words, those countries use the full range of policy instruments available to them to pursue the objective of full employment and therefore bring about that result.

This reminds us that the kind of society in which we live is the result of the decisions we make. It is not like the weather, about which we cannot make decisions. However, these days it seems the climate can be a matter of human decision, as in the case of Brazil where the pollution in the rain forests of Brazil is adversely affecting the climate.

The Government does not pursue a policy of full employment because it believes that the private market is sacred and there should be no intervention. It believes that competition is the only ideology worth upholding. It forgets that the Government should intervene when markets do not work for the people and competition abuses the quality of human life in society. We must take collective action and reinforce the values of solidarity.

The fact is that we are our brother's keeper and when many in our society are suffering because of a lack of adequate employment we must address that problem and take action. It is time to get rid of a Government that is simply satisfied with the status quo and is unwilling to strive for the goal that every citizen's right to a decent job can be fulfilled.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) pointed out that Denmark, Norway and Sweden only have 2 per cent unemployment.

Ms. Mitchell: Good social democrats.

Mr. Shields: I am glad the Hon. Member said that. Why do they not go on to explain that Denmark, Norway and Sweden have conscription? Denmark and Norway are members of NATO. We know the position of the socialist party in Canada as far as NATO is concerned. Are they advocating conscription for all our young people in Canada, because that would certainly bring full employment or at least reduce unemployment to 2 per cent?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that the Hon. Member was able to rise in the House and ask a question of New Democrats without mentioning Shirley Carr or Bob White.

Mr. Shields: We knew that you would.

Mr. Keeper: Every time a New Democratic stands in the House the Hon. Member asks: Where is Shirley?

The Hon. Member asks why we do not promote conscription if we want full employment—

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like my question answered and not repeated erroneously. I asked if that socialist party advocated conscription as it is in Denmark, Norway and Sweden. I am not advocating it. I am asking if they do.

Mr. Keeper: I am pleased that my hon. colleague is getting such good practice asking questions and supplementary questions because he will soon be back in the opposition benches and the Conservatives will need those skills.

Mr. Shields: Answer the question.

Mr. Keeper: I am delighted that the Hon. Member has acted like a Member of the Opposition and treating us as if we are in government. I welcome that eventuality and that challenge. Clearly, this is a further elaboration of the Conservative tactic to distort and misrepresent the New Democratic Party position. Certainly conscription has not been the policy of this Party. We have no intention of advocating that policy. We have taken the stand that we will withdraw from NATO. We have been consistent with that policy and we take that stand because we are concerned about the survival of this planet.

We want people to know that it is important to recognize that while there are regional and global differences, we also share a common humanity. The survival of the planet must be a top priority.

My hon. friend has made an error in reasoning. He believes that there is only one set of policies to follow in order to achieve the objective of full employment. He suggests that we must use the policies of another country to achieve the same objective of full employment. That is not the case. We are Canadians. We will draft a set of Canadian policies to achieve full employment. We will draft a Canadian socialism. We are concerned about meeting basic human needs and ensuring that people have a right to work and contribute to society. We intend to implement a comprehensive set of policies to provide for full employment, and they will be Canadian policies.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties and I wonder if I might have unanimous consent of the House to revert to tabling of documents in order to table a document on behalf of the Minister of National Health and Welfare

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard that Bill C-90, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions with the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) and the Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). I think you will find that there is agreement to pass this Bill in all stages before the lunch break.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon.Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the Chair.

Clauses 1 and 2 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, concurred in, read the third time and passed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock.

At 1.03 p.m., the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

REFORM OF SYSTEM

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, last June there was an important debate in this House and Hon. Members were asked to state their position concerning the reinstatement of capital punishment. I am sure that each one of us found the decision hard to make because of the impact likely to be felt after the debate. Today, in retrospective, I am ever more convinced that we made a good decision.

Still, the end of the debate should not signal the end of concern over the crime issue. When will habitual criminals serve exemplary sentences fully consistent with the seriousness of the crimes they have committed? We must continue our efforts aimed at setting up a court system which faithfully reflects legality and which has every consideration for respect for the right to life as well as for protection of the individual, a court system which through research and new experiemnts will do away with the shortcomings of the present system.

Mr. Speaker, when will the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) make up his mind to act and take all necessary steps to review and improve the present system? Crime is not a problem which concerns only police forces and courts of justice. People fully expect the Minister of Justice to do whatever may be necessary to protect individuals against the criminal element and, at the earliest opportunity, to launch an in-depth reform of the Canadian court system through appropriate measures.

HUMAN RIGHTS

PALESTINIAN PEOPLE—SUPPORT URGED FOR UNITED NATIONS RESOLUTION

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, November 29 is commemorated by the United Nations as the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian people in accordance with Resolution 32/40B adopted by the General Assembly on December 2, 1977. Its objectives are to draw to the world's attention the plight of the Palestinian people and to mobilize world opinion on the need to take action to enable Palestinians to recover their fundamental rights. These rights have been reaffirmed by the General Assembly to include self-determination.

At present approximately 4.5 million Palestinian people are scattered over many countries. I encourage the Canadian Government to recognize and support the resolution of the United Nations on Palestinian human rights.

WELFARE

CALL FOR INCREASE IN PAYMENTS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, provincial and federal Governments refuse to face up to the fact that more than a million children in Canada are living in poverty. One out of six kids goes to school hungry and, of course, does poorly in school as a result. By the third week of the month their parents line up at food banks because welfare rates are so low. Many single mothers are forced into prostitution to supplement their welfare cheques, most of which goes to pay for very high rent.

The recent report of the National Council on Welfare shows that a family of four in a major city now needs over $21,000 to pay for basic family necessities. Yet in most provinces families receive only one half of this amount. I hope Canadians will tell their Government that this kind of deprivation of children cannot continue. Governments can and must act.

The federal Government must insist that provinces implement the Canada Assistance Act which requires that social assistance rates cover basic needs. Provinces must raise welfare rates to cover the real cost of shelter.

I also call upon the federal Government and the Government of British Columbia to support a school food program which has been proposed by the Vancouver School Board. This can be a model for similar programs for poor children across the land.

SHIPBUILDING

URGENT NEED FOR GOVERNMENT TO ESTABLISH TRULY CANADIAN POLICY

Mr. Louis Plamondon (Richelieu): In recent weeks, Mr. Speaker, various federal or provincial Ministers have been making all kinds of contradictory statements which have created dismay among shipyard workers in my riding. The suggestion that the $3.5 billion contract for six frigates might be awarded to one shipyard is an aberration. Given its 50 years of experience in military shipbuilding and know-how acquired through the first frigate program, again this time Marine Industries must be awarded its share of subcontracts, at least two frigates in this instance.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, such infighting among Canadian shipbuilders points to the urgent need to establish a truly Canadian shipbuilding policy so that, once and for all, workers in the Maritime provinces may regain their pride.

FREE TRADE

ALLEGED UTTERANCES OF ASSOCIATE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE—APOLOGIES DEMANDED

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, Monday last, at the annual conference on Eastern Ontario's Economic Outlook held in Ottawa, the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Dick) was selling his Prime Minister's free trade agreement. As reported by Mr. Robert Bousquet in the daily newspaper Le Droit, in answer to a question on the negative impact of the free trade agreement, he had this to say and I quote:

> They had three or five opportunities to modernize under Government programs. Those companies which did not avoid themselves of those opportunities, deserve to shut down.

So said the Minister.

Mr. Speaker, the industries which are victimized by this Prime Minister's trade agreement do not deserve to shut down. Textile workers, like those at the Texturon plant in Hawkesbury, in my constituency, do not deserve to lose their livelyhood. This Tory Government deserves to be defeated in election because of its arrogance. I would therefore invite all Canadians to demand apologies from the Associate Minister of National Defense for his lack of sensitivity and compassion for textile workers. If he fails to do so, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) should fire him. This is all he deserves after all.

AGRICULTURE

SPECIAL CANADIAN GRAINS PROGRAM—IRRIGATION FARMERS—EXTENSION OF COVERAGE ADVOCATED

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, when farm income from the market-place is undermined by agricultural policies of the United States and the European Economic Community, Canadian farmers can count on the Government to provide strong financial support. Last year's Special Canadian Grains Program provided such support, and farmers can expect similar assistance for the 1987-88 crop year.

Because of administrative difficulties and the need to put the Special Canadian Grains Program in place as quickly as possible in 1986-87, farmers who irrigated crops outside designated irrigation districts did not receive the same level of support as their fellow producers in irrigation districts. For example, in Saskatchewan 80 per cent of the irrigated acreage was not eligible for supplementary benefits that reflected the additional yields and costs of irrigation.

The administrative difficulties in treating all irrigation farmers fairly can now be overcome. The Government could find administrative advice from such sources as the provincial Departments of Agriculture, associations of rural municipalities and the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool.

Irrigation helps farmers overcome such recurring problems as drought. It helps farmers to diversify and to stabilize individual farm operations. The Government's support to the farming community therefore should not put some farmers who irrigate at a disadvantage with other irrigation farmers.

I call upon the Government to take the necessary administrative steps to ensure that additional yields of farmers who irrigate outside irrigation districts are recognized in this year's Special Canadian Grains payment.

FISHERIES

GEORGES BANK—CALL FOR POSTPONEMENT OF OIL DRILLING PLANS

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the fishermen of Nova Scotia are very concerned about the plans of Texaco Canada Resources to drill on Georges Bank. This is a very valuable fishery, a prime fishing area, which includes groundfish and a very valuable stock of scallops.

Premier Buchanan of Nova Scotia and the fishing industry of Nova Scotia in general are flatly opposed to drilling. Through Bill C-75 the Government will be implementing the Canada-Nova Scotia offshore resources plan and agreement. In this agreement there is a provision for the establishment of a joint Nova Scotia-Canada board which will make decisions of this nature.

In the meantime, decision making is in the hands of the federal Government. The fishermen of Nova Scotia need a commitment now that, until this legislation is passed and until the board is established to which there will be Nova Scotia input, there will be no drilling on Georges Bank. There needs to be input into such decision making by representatives of the Province of Nova Scotia and the industry of Nova Scotia.

POLITICAL PARTIES

ALBERTA PROVINCIAL BY-ELECTION WON BY PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY CANDIDATE

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, have you noticed how silent the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) has been this week? This silence is deafening after the noise that he made a few days ago about calling an election. Why this change?

Well, this week there was a provincial by-election in Alberta. In spite of all the NDP could do, who do you think won? The PC candidate, that's who, and with 52 per cent of the votes. This fine lady will continue the splendid work of her predecessor as a member of the people's team of Premier Don Getty.

The separatists came in second with 22 per cent of the vote. Albertans are not separatists, and they will fight policies like the national energy policy from within the Progressive Conservative Party. The Liberals, breathing hot and cold about free trade and everything else, came in third with 15 per cent of the vote.

Now, hear this! The NDP came in close to the tail end, huffing and puffing against free trade and every other free enterprise policy, with 10 per cent of the vote. Did you hear me—with 10 per cent of the vote! The NDP had better get used to the tail end, because that is where they will be more and more during the next two years. Viva the PCs!

ROAD SAFETY

INSTALLATION OF VARIOUS SECURITY DEVICES IN AUTOMOBILES

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have received many letters from Canadians who support my road safety campaign. I have now tabled 30,735 signatures of Canadians who want the Government to improve the current legislation.

I have here a letter signed by Mrs. Ginette Beaulne of the Community Health Department of Montreal General Hospital, in which she says:

> I have two young children who travel each day on the back seat of the car, and I assume that they are not sufficiently protected by the vehicule's standard safety devices.
> This letter strongly supports the petition which recommends the installation of shoulder belts which can be adjusted to fit the front seat passenger, of shoulder belts which can be adjusted to fit the back seat passengers and of inflatable bags in the front of automobiles.

She closes by saying:

> From a citizen who is concerned for the safety of her family and Canadian fellow citizens when they travel by car.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

MONTREAL EAST END—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ACT QUICKLY

Mr. Édouard Desrosiers (Hochelaga—Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether it is because I am sitting here today, after having sat on the other side of the House, but I feel somewhat in opposition and I would like to address this House on behalf of constituents of mine who are worried, and I mean people in Montreal east end.

Four or five committees have been set up and have submitted every conceivable type of reports, but nothing is forthcoming for people in Montreal east end. Today I would like to hear a clear answer. What will the Canadian Government do for east end Montreal? Mr. Speaker, I would not want us to do like the Liberals, who are mainly responsible for the situation in Montreal east end.

As we know, 15 years ago hundred of jobs were lost because of the Liberals. But now we have all the reports indicating what must be done, and those reports were referred to responsible people.

Mr. Speaker, I am expecting—not tomorrow but today—a clear answer on the situation in east end Montreal.

EXTERNAL AID

NICARAGUA—CANADIAN AID INCREASE SUGGESTED

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, by resuming bilateral aid to Guatemala, the Government has made a complete farce of its commitment to link bilateral aid to the human rights record of the recipient country.

Nineth de Garcia, the President of the Group for the Support of the Families of the Disappeared, stated "before, there were kidnappings; before, there were murders. Now there are kidnappings and murders. The only difference is that now it is supposed to be a democratic Government".

There are an average of 70 political murders in Guatemala each month. How then can the Government maintain that the human rights record has improved sufficiently to warrant a resumption of bilateral aid?

Two years ago we resumed bilateral aid to El Salvador, a country with a disgraceful, disgusting record of human rights violations, capped last month by the murder of the head of the human rights organization in that country.

• (1415)

On the other hand, Nicaragua, which has the best record for making good, effective use of development assistance of any country in Central America, has not been receiving the kind of support from Canada that its need warrants. It has received a paltry $1 million increase in development assistance, while the Government is promising to increase development assistance by $18 million for Honduras, a country which is providing the base for the Contras who are waging a war against development in Nicaragua, a country whose economy is completely distorted by the militarization from the United States.

Canadians can only object to this distortion of the aid program in the interest of short-sighted, kowtowing to United States foreign policy.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—ELIMINATION OF TARIFFS ON CANADIAN FISH EXPORTS

Mr. Morrissey Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to speak on free trade as it affects Newfoundland. Newfoundland's economy, like that of the rest of Canada, is based on exports. Most of our jobs depend on the province's chief export, fish. In fact fish landings in 1985 amounted to over 450,000 metric tonnes. The processed value of fish products exceeded $400 million from over 120 plants. The United States is the largest buyer of Newfoundland fish products, absorbing exports worth $360 million in 1985.

For many years now there have been high tariffs, ranging from 15 per cent to as high as 30 per cent, placed on secondary processed fish products entering the U.S. market. This tariff means that processors in Newfoundland must export unprocessed fish to the United States, meaning many secondary processing opportunities are lost to the United States. The free trade agreement will mean that these tariffs will be eliminated on all fishery products, the majority over five years or less, with the duty on a few sensitive items being removed in 10 years.

The reduction and eventual elimination of these tariffs will mean an increase in the production of value-added products in Newfoundland and Labrador. What does this mean to the fishermen, fish plant workers, and the whole economy of Newfoundland? It means new opportunities, more jobs, more development and better prosperity for Newfoundland.

This free trade agreement will provide opportunities for Newfoundlanders to expand their capacity for secondary processing. It offers a significant opportunity to add value to many of Newfoundland's resource-based products and to reinforce the growing, self-sustaining development of its secondary manufacturing sector. It will create new investment opportunities. This leads to an increase in business, an increase in jobs and an increase in prosperity.

Mr. Speaker: I regret that the Hon. Member has exceeded his time.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT GIVE EMPLOYMENT TO SHIPYARD WORKERS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the 5 000 workers in Quebec shipyards are fed up with this Tory Government. Even the Hon. Member for Richelieu and the Hon. Member for Hochelaga today are joining Liberal Members in asking for justice for the 5 000 workers in Montreal, Sorel, and Lauzon, near Quebec City.

Mr. Speaker, we even have workers from the Halifax shipyards coming here asking for work.

I would therefore urge all Conservative Members to join the Liberal Party's fight, alongside the Hon. Members for Sorel and Hochelaga, to have this Government guarantee that all the workers in Canadian shipyards will have assured work, because they are qualified workers, quite capable of competing with any worker in any shipyard outside of Canada.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—IMPLEMENTATION OF TREATY—ROLE OF PARLIAMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister was wrong yesterday when he claimed that the federal Parliament has the power to implement a treaty with the United States in matters of provincial jurisdiction.

He repeated that claim again yesterday and said that he had the total right to implement the deal. Indeed, when challenged about this patently false constitutional position by reporters, he was reported to have said that it will all come out in the wash.

Let me ask the Deputy Prime Minister under what precise constitutional provision or jurisprudence has the Prime Minister found his unusual and unsubstantiated position that the Parliament of Canada can implement a treaty in areas falling within provincial jurisdiction?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, first I want to take absolute issue with the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition on the categorical legal opinion which he has just given. I appreciate the fact that he wants to get some assistance from the Government in connection with this legal matter. However, I notice from the same articles which the Leader of the Opposition has perused that, in terms of authorities, so far it is four to two in favour of the Government, according to The Globe and Mail.

I think we are doing very well in respect of people who support the position. Eminent constitutional authorities, trade lawyers, and people who are aware of the position in connection with this particular trade arrangement are simply behind the position of the Government. That is to say, we have, under the trade and commerce provisions of the Constitution, the right to enter into these arrangements with other countries.

To suggest somehow that the provinces can in fact make international agreements is simply not the case. If that is what the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is saying, it is a curious view of Canada.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I know that the Minister of Justice and his colleagues are inclined to poll for every decision they take, but a poll of judicial authorities is not going to help them.

The poll upon which I relied was the unanimous decision of the Privy Council 50 years ago in the Canadian Labour Conventions case, and I recommend that the Minister read it over the weekend when he has some spare time.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF AGREEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we still do not have the legal and final text, and today even Nova Scotia Conservative Premier John Buchanan is asking for the final text.

Why must we Canadians continue the debate without having the final legal text? Why must we Canadians endorse the agreement even before the Americans begin their debate? Why must Canadians complete their study of the agreement, and why must Parliament approve it before the American Congress gets to examine it?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the right hon. gentleman yesterday, of course we are disappointed that the final text is not in our hands at this particular time. As the right hon. gentleman knows, this is a very complex document. It is probably one of the largest commercial transactions that has ever been undertaken by two countries in history.

The fact that there are still some outstanding issues—there has been a lot of progress made and there are a few outstanding issues—should not rush us into conceding any of the important positions that Canada wants to take or the consensus that Canada wants to take in the final analysis of this arrangement.

I have every reason to expect that the document will be completed, hopefully early next week, and, as I said yesterday in the House, it is expected that the final text will be fully consistent with the elements package.

Quite frankly, this debate has been going on for quite some time. There is a debate going on literally in every province, there are committee hearings, and there is the debate that is going on in the House. We have brought forth to the House the information that we have available as soon as it has been attained or achieved, and we will continue to be that forthright as the process proceeds.

DEADLINE FOR SIGNING AGREEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we are faced with a January 2 deadline. It has taken about two years to negotiate this deal. It has taken technical draftsmen two months to put it in draft form. Now, under this timetable, the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister expect Canadians to examine 1,200 pages of complicated legal text in a few days to meet that American deadline. Yet once the agreement is signed, the U.S. Congress and U.S. business and professionals will have months to examine the deal, debate it, and maybe amend it.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Yet Canadians will have only a few days to decide how their jobs, their businesses, and their professions are affected. The same applies to the provincial Premiers.

I ask the Deputy Prime Minister why Canadians have to march to an American drummer? Why are Canadians bound by an American timetable?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I hate to say this to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition but he is dead wrong. I find it very strange that he should take such a position today when his Party, when it was in government and negotiated the Auto Pact, did not see fit to bring that pact before this House for debate. It did not see fit to refer it to a committee or take it across the country because it was an important national issue. It did not go to the Senate. Now we have this sort of double standard and I find it awfully strange.

The fact of the matter is that the right hon. gentleman knows that it will require enabling legislation to effect this treaty. Necessary legislative changes will have to be implemented. There will be debates in this House on Bills brought before it. Those Bills will have to go to their respective committees and be approved and ratified in the Senate. What is the right hon. gentleman afraid of?

AIR CANADA—ROTATING STRIKE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Air Canada rotating strike is already causing enormous inconvenience to air travellers, travel agencies and other businesses. Certainly it would not be an overstatement to say that the Government had advance warning of this one. Even the conciliation commissioner in his report to the Minister some time ago had to admit that he was in no position to make specific recommendations.

Since receiving that report, what has the Government done to try to prevent this strike? Has someone on the government side, either the Minister of Labour or someone in his Department, been in contact with both parties to try to bring them closer together? What other action has the Government taken in accordance with the Canada Labour Code to try to spare the Canadian public from an air transportation strike, especially as Christmas is approaching?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, once again we see the inconsistency in the policies of the Liberal Opposition. I am not sure what the Hon. Member is advocating. Is he advocating back-to-work legislation before a full strike occurs?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We are just asking what you are doing about it.

Mr. Mazankowski: I will tell the right hon. gentleman what we are doing about it. This is a dispute solely between the two parties and we encourage them to get back to the negotiating table. If there is a need for intervention we would be very happy to meet it. At this time there has not been a request, as I understand it. We urge them to get together and hope they can make progress.

At this time the Government stands ready and willing to assist if it would be of use to the two parties to bring them closer to a negotiated settlement. That is really the ultimate manner in which this should be resolved.

• (1430)

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, maybe the Government thinks this one will settle by itself but stranded air travellers think that now is the time for the Government to get involved and try to do something to settle the strike.

APPOINTMENT OF MEDIATOR—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, everyone appreciates the growing importance of air transport, particularly as the holiday season gets closer. Passengers expect their aircraft to take off as scheduled. Canadians want to know what the Government is doing, what measure it is taking in an attempt to settle this strike. That is the question I want to ask and the suggestion I want to make. Does the Deputy Prime Minister believe that time has come to appoint a mediator, or what other measure does the Government intend to take to try to reconcile both parties and urge them to negotiate more positively with a view to signing an agreement? That is what we want to know.

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, of course the Government regrets the inconvenience that will be caused to the travelling public. However, the hon. gentleman knows that there is a bargaining process which must be respected. He has been a stout defender of that process and I would ask him to continue, in a consistent way, to defend that bargaining process.

The Government will stand by to intervene any time that those parties are of the opinion that it would be in their best interests for the Government to do so. Until such time as that request is made, and until such time as there is a genuine effort to get back to the bargaining table to resolve this dispute in the normal collective bargaining process, I think that would be premature.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

SALE OF PERSONAL FINANCIAL INFORMATION BY COMPANIES PREPARING INCOME TAX RETURNS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Some 4 million Canadians have their tax returns completed by tax discounters or tax preparers. During the course of the Principal investigation it was found that personal financial information is being sold like a commodity for profit. Does the Minister find this situation acceptable? If not, what action does he intend to take to change it?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is of concern. The Income Tax Act clearly provides that information which citizens are compelled by law to provide to the Government is to be kept strictly confidential. When one goes to a tax discounter with one's return there is not the same compulsion, so the question of secrecy presumably could be left to the individual. If people do not wish to have their records used they should ensure that that is the case.

Nevertheless, the fact that this seems to be quite widespread is of concern. We are studying the situation to see whether in fact legislative action is required.

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION TO PROTECT CONFIDENTIALITY OF INFORMATION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I am gratified to hear the Minister's answer but I would like him to be a little more specific. Does he not think that this is a sufficiently important matter for legislation? Will he not consult with the provinces and the industry with a view to introducing legislation which would protect the confidentiality of people who avail themselves of this service?

It seems to me that the course of action is clear. I want to know whether the Minister is going to follow that course of action.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member would agree that it is probably advisable for us to determine the extent to which this is being practised and the implications this might have for this industry, the services of which the consumers seem to enjoy, and to make a rational assessment of all of the evidence before bringing in legislation.

I repeat, however, that it is a matter of concern. It is not something which we take lightly. We are monitoring and looking into the situation.

REGULATION OF COMPANIES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, maybe I should re-emphasize that one in three Canadians use this service and I think they expect that confidentiality will be maintained. The vague answer which we heard is nice and comforting, but this matter requires some urgency of action.

Will the Minister act, not only with regard to protecting the confidentiality of records submitted to the tax preparers and discounters, but also to examine the necessity of regulating an industry so intimately involved with the financial matters of so many Canadians?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the answer to the Member's second supplementary question was contained in my response to his first two questions. We do take this matter seriously, but even the article which stimulated the question from the Hon. Member indicates that at least two of the major providers of this tax service do in fact keep the information confidential.

An analysis of that kind of information must be considered before we make the final decision. However, protection of privacy is certainly a priority of the Government. We do not treat the issue lightly.

SHIPBUILDING

HALIFAX SHIPYARD WORKERS' PROTEST DEMONSTRATION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. He will know that 140 unemployed shipyard workers from Halifax protested here in Ottawa today about the way the Government is treating them. In 1984 his Prime Minister promised those very same workers "jobs, jobs, jobs". Three years later the Halifax shipyard workers have no jobs and no shipbuilding policy other than despair and unemployment.

I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works on their behalf whether he could explain to the people of Nova Scotia, and the people of Halifax in particular, why those shipyard workers are being discriminated against with regard to government policy. While he is on his feet, would he tell us when the Government is going to come clean and deliver on its promises of jobs for the Halifax shipyard workers?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I think the creation of more than 1 million jobs in the last three years is very responsive to a campaign promise.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McInnes: That is 1,700 jobs a day in the last three quarters.

I have met with representatives of the Halifax shipyards on five occasions in the last six months. There is obviously a problem, not peculiar to that area, but all across Canada. I and my learned friend, the Minister of State for Finance, met with them today. We indicated that we are going to undertake and deliver a strategy. We are sympathetic to their problem. We delivered the Louis St. Laurent only recently. I think they understand that we are working in co-operation with them.

REQUEST THAT CONTRACT BE AWARDED BEFORE CHRISTMAS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister who sits in Cabinet and is supposed to represent the interests of the Halifax shipyard workers. Consultation is no substitute for action. There have been delays, delays, and more delays with regard to that facility.

Will the Minister of Public Works give an undertaking today to expedite the process and award the contract for the Louis St. Laurent before Christmas? It was supposed to be issued in November, 1987.

If the Minister cannot do that, will he undertake to those unemployed workers that he will put in place immediately, forthwith, an interim Canada Works grant in order to tide them over until the awarding of the Louis St. Laurent? Will he be that honourable and provide that commitment?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it is rather ironical that the Hon. Member, who was part of a Government which sat for years and years without developing a comprehensive national shipbuilding policy, now complains. We have an understanding with the representatives of the union. We met with them five times. We will deliver. Hold on.

Mr. Dingwall: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL UNDERTAKING

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Public Works is so convinced and reassured that his colleagues in the Cabinet will support him, will he put his seat on the line and undertake to those workers to deliver to them before Christmas the awarding of the contract for the Louis St. Laurent? Does he have the guts to stand in the House and to give that undertaking?

• (1440)

Mr. Speaker: The Minister may or may not wish to answer. I think the question is getting very close to being out of order. The Hon. Member for St. John's East.

UNITED STATES EMBARGO ON ATLANTIC CANADA FISH PRODUCTS

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. On October 1 the U.S. Government placed an embargo on the import of certain Atlantic fish products. On October 4 the Government of Canada entered into a comprehensive trade agreement with the United States. We learned yesterday, November 25, that the Canadian Government protested the action by diplomatic note. Why did we hear nothing of this from the Government until it was reported in the press? Why did the Government wait until after I raised this in the House to issue a press release informing the people of Canada of this undermining of the agreement that the Government is trying to sell the people of Canada?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister of Transport answered those questions quite fully yesterday. We have been making very strong representations to the United States administration about what we feel is a very unjust attack on our fishing industry. We will continue to do that.

We will use all avenues open to us to ensure that this industry is not attacked unfairly by our neighbours to the south.

EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister for International Trade states in this press release, which was received in my office this morning, that the Government is awaiting a response from the U.S. administration. She also states: "We will do everything in our power to resolve the issue". In my view, issuing a press release seven weeks later and awaiting a response from the U.S. administration does not amount to much pressure.

Why does the Government not admit that it has been snookered by the Americans in this deal and that it has tied its own hands with this agreement, while leaving the Americans to do exactly what they want under their own laws to attack our exports?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, first, there is absolutely no truth in the preamble of the hon. gentleman's question. Second, we have in no way tied our hands in objecting to what we believe is an unfair and unwarranted attack on this industry, or any industry for that matter.

If we do not receive from the United States a satisfactory answer to our diplomatic note, which was very strongly worded, I believe we have the responsibility to go to the GATT panel and request one, because we feel that it is a very unfair and unwarranted attack on the fishing industry.

We will not give up on the fishing industry at all. As a matter of fact, the free trade agreement is very good for the fishing industry and they know it.

SPECIAL CANADIAN GRAINS PROGRAM—COVERAGE OF IRRIGATION FARMERS

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary.

Last year's Special Canadian Grains Program excluded over 80 per cent of the irrigated acreage in Saskatchewan from receiving supplementary benefits because these acres were not in a recognized irrigation district.

These producers either pay a water tax or a water licence and are recognized by the provincial crop insurance plan as being irrigators. Will the Parliamentary Secretary advise the House if the administrative difficulty in treating all irrigation farmers fairly can now be overcome?

Will the Government make use of the information that is readily available from places like the Irrigation Branch of the Saskatchewan Department of Agriculture to ensure that all irrigation farmers will receive the same level of support in this year's Special Canadian Grains Program?

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the Member for Moose Jaw for his very conscientious efforts on behalf of irrigation farmers in his province.

Let me point out that there has been no announcement of a Special Grains and Oilseed Program No. 2, although I share his hope that there will indeed be such an announcement.

As a result of the efforts of the Hon. Member and some of his colleagues, very serious consideration is being given at the moment to ensuring that those irrigation farmers who live outside organized irrigation districts should be identified through the payment of a water tax or water licence fee and be entitled to share as other irrigation farmers do in any Special Grains and Oilseeds Program, if and when it is announced.

We may want to distinguish between those who are part of a pivot system and those who backflood, but that might be the only distinction.

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

ALLEGATION RAPE COMMITTED BY PAROLEE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the person who is answering for the Solicitor General. The Justice and Solicitor General Committee was told on Monday that an inmate, while on parole in Toronto, and while under the supervision of Operation Springboard, a private agency, committed a rape.

This incident took place on September 18 or 19 this year. It was alleged that the details of this sexual assault were subsequently covered up by officials of the Ministry of the Solicitor General. Will the Government give the House its undertaking to initiate an independent review of the circumstances of this particular incident?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the good work that the standing committee is performing with respect to its investigation of the corrections system and parole system in Canada. It is too bad that the Hon. Member does not want to participate in that.

However, since he has raised this issue, I can assure him that the Solicitor General will obviously look into the matter on the basis of information that has been received.

I will also assure the Hon. Member that, once the investigation is over, the Solicitor General will have a response for the Hon. Member and Members of the House.

ALLEGED ACTION BY BOARD CHAIRMAN

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, we are seeking an independent review of the circumstances of this case. Hopefully it will be an independent review. While they are investigating, will they also investigate the further allegation that the Chairman of the National Parole Board approached the Chief of Police for Metropolitan Toronto, Mr. Marks, and requested that Mr. Marks "not go public" on this particular case?

Will the Minister of Justice give us his undertaking that this allegation will also be investigated?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have two observations. First, I do not accept the veracity of any of the allegations. I think the idea of innocence until proven guilty still applies here.

However, the Hon. Member has raised the matter. The committee itself will have an opportunity to analyse and assess the veracity of these matters. Since the matter has been raised, I am sure the Solicitor General is monitoring carefully the proceedings of this independent committee of the House of Commons which is intensively examining some very vexing problems in our country.

I know that the chairman of the committee will bring to the attention of the Solicitor General the views of the committee with respect to the veracity or legitimacy of any allegations. I will take that matter to the Solicitor General myself, to make sure that he addresses the matter in a proper way.

SPECIAL CANADIAN GRAINS PROGRAM—POSITION OF SASKATCHEWAN IRRIGATION FARMERS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister or the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture. In response to a question on August 31, the Deputy Prime Minister indicated that the Government was investigating why most Saskatchewan irrigation farmers did not receive supplementary payments under the Special Canadian Grains Program while most Alberta farmers did.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister tell us why the discrimination against Saskatchewan irrigation farmers happened in the first place, and whether Saskatchewan irrigation farmers have now received the same supplementary benefits as Alberta farmers?

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as most of us in the House recognize, the much appreciated $1 billion Special Grains and Oilseeds Program that was made available to Canadian farmers last year was allocated as a result of consultations with the farm community right across the country. In fact, that was the first time in Canadian history that this had taken place.

Of course, there is no way we can go back and alter the formula which was resolved upon to meet last year's needs. However, as I indicated earlier in response to a question by the Member for Moose Jaw, as a result of representations made to the Government by irrigation farmers and several Members of the House, I am extremely confident that in any future Special Grains Program the needs of all irrigation farmers, depending on whether they must pay a water tax, water licence fee or use a pivot system, will be adequately served.

LEGISLATIVE LOOPHOLES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the Government has indicated that some changes are to be made in the Special Canadian Grains Program, if there is such a program. In order to be fair to all producers, will the Parliamentary Secretary assure us that the Government will eliminate the loophole dealing with production zones which allows some farmers to gain extra benefits by simply moving their permit books to a delivery point in a production zone with a higher rate than the zone where they actually farm?

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): As the Hon. Member knows, there have been four meetings with Canadian farm organizations during the course of the last few months, the last being in Winnipeg on August 27. There has been a very conscientious effort to work closely with the industry to ensure that some of the loopholes which have existed in the past—because, indeed, this program was unprecedented in nature—would not be there in the future if the Government is able to provide the incredible financial assistance to Canadian farmers it has been able to provide to date.

Certainly we are conscious of the fact that whenever we create a government program, and many of us, I suppose, wish there was no need for such programs, there are people who will somehow or other attempt to manipulate the system to their advantage. What we are trying to do is ensure first that an adequate amount of financial assistance be made available—quite frankly, I wish the provinces would join in on that more than they have done to date—and, second, that it be directed to those who need it most, in a very legitimate and equitable fashion. I am certain the Hon. Member's question will be very much a part of that consideration.

PROCTECTION OF FRENCH FACT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Maire): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns a very important matter. The Deputy Prime Minister is well aware that the overwhelming majority of Quebecers are very sensitive to the French fact and that the Conseil de la langue française has expressed the view that free trade could affect in various ways the status of French in Quebec and the related legislation. I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister why, in this agreement we now have before us in which the Government has protected our health systems, national security and consumer interests, it did not also provide Canadian and Quebec francophones guarantees that the French fact would be protected in Canada and that Quebec would still have the right to legislate in linguistic matters?

[English]

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am only sorry I cannot respond in the French language. I am still not comfortable with it, although working at it. Let me say that there is absolutely nothing in the free trade agreement—nothing whatsoever—that will interfere with the bilingual nature of this country, or the requirements we have in Canada under bilingualism—absolutely nothing. That has been reinforced not only by our trade negotiators but by Ministers from the Quebec Government who have looked at it very, very carefully. I can assure the Hon. Member, and all Francophones in this country, that there is nothing in this agreement that would take away from the bilingual nature of our country.

REQUEST FOR GUARANTEES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Two Quebec Ministers have said that they expect changes to be made to the agreement and that if these include no guarantee of protection, they would withdraw their support for the agreement. What I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary is this. There is of course nothing in the agreement which prevents bilingualism, but why did the Government not ensure that the agreement would include the assurance by the Americans that all products sold in Canada and Quebec will bear instructions in both official languages, and that all documents and instructions for all types of appliances will be written in both official languages? Why did the Government not include this guarantee instead of saying that there was nothing to prevent it? It is essential to have guarantees to make sure that, in ten years, when our children receive an electric appliance from the United States, they will find instructions in both French and English. Why not include this guarantee?

[English]

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I find it passing strange that the Hon. Member would try to make a political issue out of this.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: I want to make it very, very clear that there is absolutely nothing in the agreement that would take away from the bilingual nature of our country. Second, this is a trade agreement. It is not a social agreement. It is not a social policy document. It is a trade agreement. It has to do with trade, trade between the two largest trading partners in the world. There is nothing in this agreement that will interfere with the bilingual nature of this country, or the laws affecting biculturalism or bilingualism, whatsoever.

There is no reason to place that in a trade document which was negotiated, because we are talking about trade, we are not talking about language differences.

MIGRATORY BIRDS CONVENTION ACT

CHARGES LAID AGAINST JAMES BAY AREA INDIANS

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada. The Minister will be aware that charges were laid earlier this fall against 10 native Indians under the Migratory Birds Convention Act. These persons reside in the James Bay area. It is a serious question, because the Minister will also know that native people rely on this hunt for their sustenance and have traditionally hunted these lands in the past.

Could the Attorney General please advise the House whether he has had an opportunity to review the matter, and what he intends to do with respect to these charges?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have indeed had an opportunity to review the circumstances in this case and have decided to exercise my discretion as Attorney General of Canada to stay the proceedings.

The past practice has demonstrated a leniency with respect to the enforcement of this provision of the law with regard to our aboriginal peoples. It is not surprising that the Indian people have thought they were quite entitled to hunt in a way that would provide food for them, notwithstanding the rather straightforward provisions of the Migratory Birds Convention Act. Therefore, while I think it is fair to say that the charges would be sustainable, it seems to me that discretion in this case in favour of staying the proceeding is the appropriate course to take with respect to our aboriginal peoples, and I have made that decision.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

CHARTERED BANKS—INCREASED SERVICE CHARGES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. We have all received complaints from consumers across the country about bank service charges—and I know we can all count on the Commerce—but the fact is that the chartered banks hold a privileged position in our society. Not only do the big five hold virtual control over Canadian finances but they accumulate exorbitant profits and pay very little in taxes. Meanwhile, these banks can impose anywhere from 55 to 160 different charges, at varying rates and increasing at various exorbitant percentages.

I want to ask the Minister of Consumer Affairs to stand up for consumers for a change. Is the Government going to tolerate the banks abusing their virtual monopoly over Canadians' money by imposing service charges at whatever rate they see fit? Will Canadians continue to subsidize the record profits of Canadian bands, and bail them out from bad investments in developing countries?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): That was a fine speech, Mr. Speaker. In answer to what I think was a question buried in that speech, yes, we are concerned about the new fees and increasing charges which are a relatively new phenomenon. In this regard, officials in my Department are examining and monitoring the situation. We are concerned there be adequate and timely disclosure of these fees to consumers. We are in discussions with the Canadian Bankers Association to see if there will be some voluntary compliance in this regard. We are also having discussions with the Minister of Finance in respect to possible amendments to the Bank Act should that be necessary.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt on a short supplementary question.

BANKS—FREEZE ON SERVICE CHARGES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the same Minister.

Service charges levied by the five major banks have gone up by 29 per cent between 1982 and 1986, whereas inflation has increased by 19.4 per cent. Would the Department be prepared to ask the banks to freeze their service charges until public hearings have been held just so consumer groups and the banks might have an opportunity to study the situation?

• (1500)

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Standing Committee on Finance, which is chaired so ably by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, is looking at the issue. I certainly think that it is something that could be examined profitably by the Standing Committee.

As I indicated, we are monitoring the situation. We are talking to the Bankers' Association and having discussions with the Department of Finance about possible remedial action, if required.

IMMIGRATION

NICARAGUA—POLICY CONCERNING MEMBERS OF CONTRA FORCES

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It concerns Canada's proposal for refugee assistance to the Contra rebels toward facilitating a Central American peace plan. Given that this initiative was offered by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in Nicaragua on Sunday, dismissed as hypothetical by the Minister for External Relations in Ottawa on Tuesday, and today rejected outright by this Minister in statements to La Presse, I would like to ask the Minister this.

Why is the Government conducting immigration and, indeed, foreign policy in such a confusing, contradictory and embarrassing manner? Will the Minister with one clear voice clarify and inform the House and Canadians of what the Government's official policy is on any proposed refugee programs for Nicaragua and, indeed, for the Central American region?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that there is any confusion or contradiction. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said that this was a hypothetical question. It is clear, and my friend knows very well, what the policy of the country is in terms of refugees. A case-by-case assessment is performed by the Department. Whoever comes into the country has to be considered on a case-by-case basis.

The Hon. Member knows full well that all those accused of violence, whoever they are, will not be accepted. That is something which will not be decided by the Hon. Member or by me; it will be decided by the refugee determination process. I think that the Immigration Act is good. It is not contradictory. It does not contradict what has been said by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

CENTRAL AMERICA—ARIAS PEACE PLAN—CANADIAN ROLE

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Liberals support the Arias peace plan in Central America. We also believe that any ministerial statements on this very serious matter ought to represent government policy and not reflect personal opinion. Would the Deputy Prime Minister not agree that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is acting in a very bizarre and amateurish way in promoting the idea of troops being used as peacekeepers in that area without first having obtained Cabinet approval?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the best approach would be to wait until the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs returns, since what the Hon. Member is really talking about is second-hand expressions.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Attacking the press again!

Mr. Mazankowski: I think that the hon. gentleman would be interested in what the Secretary of State for External Affairs clearly said and in what the policy is. I am sure that he will articulate that policy in a very clear and concise manner next week.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver East. I would just say to the Hon. Member that, given the time, I hope her question will be short.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

CITIZENS OF CHINESE ORIGIN—PAST INJUSTICES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Last night on The Journal the Prime Minister stated that he wants to be remembered for his tolerance and justice toward minorities.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: More!

Ms. Mitchell: Yet this is the same Prime Minister who refuses to apologize and to redress past discrimination against Canadians of Japanese origin. His Minister responsible for multiculturalism has been prohibited by Cabinet from meeting to discuss the Chinese head tax.

Why is the Government refusing to meet with representatives of the Chinese Canadian National Council about past injustices against elderly citizens of Chinese origin who were subjected to legislated racial discrimination in terms of the Chinese head tax and the Chinese Exclusion Act? What will he do about this?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am going to surprise the Hon. Member by agreeing with part of her preface. I think that the Prime Minister is probably more sensitive to minority rights than any Prime Minister in the history of the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: As a member of a minority group in Canada I am proud to serve under the Prime Minister. I am very proud indeed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition laughs. Does he think that this is a joking matter? I think not.

This is a serious question which has been raised by the Hon. Member. Although I do not have details with respect to the specifics concerning any meetings, I do not accept the premise of the question that somehow there has been a prohibition placed on any meeting. I will take this matter as notice. In fact I am sure a response will be given to the Hon. Member by the Secretary of State when the Secretary of State returns to the House.

Ms. Mitchell: A quick supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry. The Chair, as much as any other Member, is constrained by the time. The last question will be a single question. The Hon. Member for Papineau.

RAILWAYS

COMPETITIVE LINE RATES—EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport my question is addressed to the Deputy Prime Minister. He will certainly remember that Canadian railways saw the competitive line rates in Bill C-18 as probably the single most important threat to their continued viability. In order to deal with this concern the Minister should remember that the Hon. Member for Lachine, on behalf of the Government, introduced an amendment that would allow the suspension of the CLR, if necessary. Can the Minister now confirm that the transportation annex of the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal now totally nullifies that safeguard and renders the amendment of the Hon. Member for Lachine completely meaningless? What does the Minister intend to do about this?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the position of the Liberal Party has always been very clear. When it comes to dealing with transportation inequities it takes the side of the railways rather than the side of the customers. What this Bill has tried to do is to remove freight rate discrimination once and for all. One of the chronic problems that has affected the regions of the country has been high freight rates and tariffs. The Government has acted very effectively and responsibly on both those issues. I invite the Hon. Member to get onside and to start taking the side of the shippers for a change.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members will know that there are some unfinished matters that have arisen over the last day or so. I am prepared to hear Hon. Members at this point. I understand that the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney) wishes to make an intervention, and I will hear him at this point. I know that the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) will also be seeking the floor. I will, of course, recognize him, and there may be others.

Before we get on to those matters perhaps Hon. Members would co-operate with the Chair in allowing me to recognize the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I thought it would be helpful for the orderly dispatch of business, before we got on to the matters just mentioned by Your Honour, if I were allowed to ask the customary question as to what business the Government intends to present for the coming week. I would then ask the Chair to recognize the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) who has a short question about a specific Bill.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, it is our intention to proceed today with second reading debate on Bill C-54, an Act to amend the Criminal Code. Tomorrow will be an allotted day. If Bill C-54 is not finished today then on Monday we will proceed again with it to be followed up by Bill C-87, the customs harmonization Act.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the business of the House question. I would like to ask the Government House Leader to inform the House today, or at the very earliest opportunity, when he intends to introduce for second reading Bill C-30, an Act to amend the National Parks Act, which, as the Minister probably knows, has been languishing on the Order Paper since December 11 of last year. Can he give us an answer to that question?

Mr. Lewis: The House will know that we have recently debated at length the proposed Environmental Protection Act which is an important environmental matter. That is presently before committee. I appreciate that this is another environmental matter. We are attempting to balance the legislation that we put into committee, and we will proceed with that as soon as possible.

JUSTICE AND SOLICITOR GENERAL—VISIT BY THE STANDING COMMITTEE TO MILLHAVEN INSTITUTION

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, as Chairman of the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General, I felt I should intervene this afternoon in connection with the question of privilege raised yesterday by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) arising out of our committee's visit to Kingston, Ontario, earlier this week.

From having glanced at yesterday's Hansard, Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that you intended to adjourn this matter to permit the majority of the members of the committee, who continued the work in Kingston until last evening, to make representations to you.

Hon. Members will know that the justice committee has embarked upon a major comprehensive review of sentencing, parole, and various other forms of conditional release and related aspects of Correctional Services Canada. As part of that review, we agreed to go to Kingston, Ontario. We spent Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of this week visiting various institutions in that region.

As part of our visits to Collins Bay, Millhaven, the federal women's prison, and Kingston Penitentiary, we met with a number of witnesses, inmates' committees, parole officers, wardens at the institutions, representatives of the various unions representing the correctional officers at the various institutions, the John Howard Society, the Elizabeth Fry Society, and many other groups during what was a very hectic schedule this week.

Before dealing with the particular matters raised by the Hon. Member for Burnaby, may I say at the outset that I recognize that it is fundamental to the successful operation of the committees of this place that testimony be as free and frank as possible. To the extent that is humanly possible, committees should be able to get at the truth of the matters they are trying to examine. That is the tradition of this House. I would suggest that it is a tradition given perhaps further meaning by the parliamentary reform that has taken place during the last couple of years.

As chairman of the committee, I have certainly endeavoured to ensure that that objective is reached, and that we obtain the type of candour from witnesses that we should expect. I can tell the House that I certainly encouraged that during all our meetings in Kingston. For example, I insisted on officials not being present at any of the meetings that we held with witnesses. All those meetings were in camera. They were private meetings, the proceedings of which will not be part of the reports of our work. That applied not only to inmate committees and unions, but also to wardens; the idea being to create an atmosphere in which all witnesses could testify in a free and uninhibited manner.

No one from the Minister's office, from Correctional Services Canada, from the National Parole Board, either in Ottawa, or in the Ontario region in Kingston, was present at those meetings. In addition, we made special arrangements to provide an opportunity for parole officers to meet separately from their managers. It was at this meeting that one of the heads claimed by the Member for Burnaby arose, and I will deal with that in a minute.

In short, I wish to make it clear to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the other Members of the House, that we made every effort possible in organizing the meetings, and I would suggest in conducting them, to receive candid, uninhibited testimony.

The first matter raised by the Hon. Member for Burnaby relates to the transfer of a certain inmate, one John Avery, from the federal institution at Millhaven, Ontario, to the federal institution known as Kingston Penitentiary.

I will not repeat the facts as set out in yesterday's Hansard, other than to refer to the account thereof of the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) which can be found at page 11175. Generally, I would adopt that statement as my own, other than to elaborate by pointing out that when it became known to us that Mr. Avery, who is a member of the inmate committee at Millhaven Penitentiary, had been transferred to Kingston Penitentiary two days prior to our arrival, as a group we indicated to the Correctional Services officials present at Collins Bay Penitentiary, on Monday morning that we wished to hear from Mr. Avery, if he was still a member of the inmate committee.

We suggested three alternatives: One, he be transferred back to Millhaven; second, the other members of the inmate committee, and at that point we understand there were two who were then at Millhaven, be transferred to Kingston to join him, if that were a preferable option from a security point of view; and the third option that was suggested was that a telephone conference call occur—when we met with the inmates of the Millhaven Penitentiary on Tuesday that there be a telephone hookup with Kingston Penitentiary to ensure that Mr. Avery could be part of that meeting. In descending order those were the options.

We accepted as a committee—the majority of the members of the committee with the sole dissent of the Hon. Member for Burnaby—that for security reasons we had to defer to the officials of Correctional Services Canada. It was their evidence before us that Mr. Avery posed a security risk and hazard were he to be maintained at Millhaven. I remind Members that for two weeks Millhaven has been in a locked-down situation. The prisoners have been on strike and they are locked in their cells for most of the day. I can assure Members that the situation there is tense.

We accepted the security recommendations of the service and deferred to its recommendation which was made after consultation, at least with their regional office, if not with the head office, that the telephone conference call occur. That conference call did occur the day after as planned, and I would suggest that it worked well. The Hon. Member for Burnaby was not at the meeting other than in the very early part, because he had decided to return to Ottawa at or about noon of that day.

The Hon. Member for York South—Weston took part in the meeting. Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, he indicated to you what took place at that meeting, as found at page 11176 of Hansard. I think it is worth quoting, since he expressed it adequately. I wish to quote very briefly what occurred during that telephone conference meeting:

> Mr. Avery was on the line from Kingston Penitentiary by way of a telephone hookup. He was able to hear what was happening at that particular meeting. He was able to make submissions. The chairman of the justice committee gave members of the inmate committee every opportunity to make submissions with regard to conditions at Millhaven Institution. Mr. Avery was given every opportunity. I, as a member of the committee, asked Mr. Avery a number of questions. I asked members of the inmate committee a number of questions. Documents were in fact presented to the committee by members of the inmate committee.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, I think it is important for you to know that we received from Mr. Avery and the other members of the inmate committee—and I wish to add parenthetically that there were five members in total of that committee, three members having been added to the committee in recent days—what I would regard as full and frank evidence of the state of affairs at the Millhaven Institution at this point in time, as far as they were concerned, what their concerns and particular problems were, not only in terms of the immediate situation, but some recommendations they had to make on the main purpose of our work which, of course, is corrections, parole, and sentencing.

The testimony was not only frank and uninhibited, I would call it brutally frank from time to time. In my respectful submission, were I to be asked for my view, I would say there was no prima facie case of breach of the privileges of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) established by the incident referred to relating to the transfer of inmate Avery from the Millhaven Institution to the Kingston Penitentiary.

If I can deal now with the second allegation made by the Hon. Member, found in yesterday's Hansard at page 11173, it arises out of events which took place at the meeting, to which I referred in my opening remarks, with parole officials in Kingston. I think it is important for you to know that this meeting occurred in camera as well, as did the other meetings. Not only that, at the outset of the meeting there was an indication of concern, if I can put it that way, by representatives of the parole offices, who were represented in part by a member of the union representing them, that their testimony was to be considered confidential. The word "immunity" was used for what they had to tell us. We heard from them in a very full and frank way.

I must say I express some regret that the Member for Burnaby felt that he had to raise an issue that was raised in this confidential manner. I express my disgust that in the Question Period today we heard from the Hon. Member for York South—Weston on other matters raised at that meeting, particularly in light of the fact that yesterday in his remarks, in condemnation of the Member for Burnaby, he pointed out that this was a confidential meeting in which the confidence of the witnesses was to be respected. I find that to be totally distasteful as well as totally inconsistent with his conduct yesterday.

I think it is important that you should know, Mr. Speaker, in connection with the allegation of the Hon. Member relating to intimidation—I believe that is the word he used or implied, and this was made clear I think by the Hon. Member for York South—Weston yesterday—that we obtained no direct evidence on this matter at all. It is, in law, hearsay evidence at best. I have some hesitation in even talking about the nature of it in light of what I view as my commitment to those people not to disclose what took place. We had no evidence on the point raised and upon which the Hon. Member bases his second claim for privilege. No one else was at the alleged meeting to which he refers. No one at the meeting was in a position to provide direct evidence in support of the hearsay evidence of the other witness.

My own sense of this whole matter is that you, Sir, and we as a committee have no evidence of anything more than what I would term the appropriate direction being given to public servants unfamiliar with parliamentary procedure, public servants outside Ottawa who had not appeared before parliamentary committees before. In fact, one of them indicated he had gone to his superiors for advice as to what the parameters were for him to appear before our committee.

It seems to me the kind of direction they got was to set out the customary parameters surrounding the giving of testimony before parliamentary committees by public servants. We know the tradition surrounding that, namely, that public servants do not discuss matters of policy. Matters of policy are to be dealt with by Ministers.

I understand other members of the committee, particularly the vice-chairman, may want to add their own observations on the matter and I hope you will give them an opportunity to be heard because this is an important point and deserves a full airing. I have given you my sense of it as an individual and as chairman of the committee.

May I say as chairman of the committee that I think I am cognizant of my responsibilities, particularly under parliamentary reform, to conduct our hearings and meetings in an impartial and in an even-handed manner. I think I have done that. I want our committee to continue what has been a tradition of acting in a relatively non-partisan manner to try to get at the root of some fundamental problems in the justice system today. We are doing some hard-slugging work of law reform. There are no easy answers to the problems that we are looking at. I hope members of the Opposition will not be deterred by the tough, hard work ahead of us and will try to set aside short-term political gamesmanship to carry on with the work of the committee. I can assure the House and you, Mr. Speaker, that I will continue to remain vigilant to ensure that the image of impartiality is maintained.

May I conclude by saying that I see no case, Mr. Speaker, for you finding a case of privilege arising out of the second incident referred to. We have no direct evidence on it. Let me repeat what I said at the outset. We want to get as complete, full, frank and uninhibited testimony as we can from witnesses as we go across the country. I am not convinced, based on the alleged incident in Kingston, that that basic objective was deterred. Obviously when you are dealing with human nature and human beings there will always be different responses, different levels, at which people will interpret their responsibilities. As far as I am concerned, we were able to do good work in Kingston and we look forward to continuing to do good work as we go across the country.

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, this is the first opportunity I have had to address this matter in as much as being a member of the committee I had a responsibility to hear those individuals and groups that we as a committee agreed to hear. Those hearings did not conclude until 5.30 p.m. yesterday so this is my first opportunity to make comments.

I have to agree with the comments of the chairman of the committee. I think he set out very well the circumstances surrounding the case.

Let me say a few words about the first question raised by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). It concerns the circumstances surrounding the transfer of a Mr. John Avery from the Millhaven Institution to Kingston Penitentiary. You have heard very clearly the circumstances surrounding that. I think those circumstances as set out yesterday by the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) and by the chairman would lead you I believe, Mr. Speaker, to conclude that nothing sinister or untoward has been done. This was strictly a security question. It seemed reasonable under the circumstances.

Coupled with that, I think you should take into consideration that every effort was made to let us communicate with the individual and we did communicate with him by telephone. It is my understanding that one or more members of the committee had met with the individual. Nothing was done in my opinion to stop anyone on this committee from getting an opportunity to discuss anything with this individual.

There was an allegation that there was somehow something sinister, something covered up, something done improperly with respect to the documents. I suggest to the individual in question that if documents were missing or lost he should have reported that to the proper authorities. There is a significant point that I hope you will take into consideration as well. When we spoke with Mr. Avery by phone he indicated that these were copies of his documents, that the originals were with his lawyer and that he would make arrangements for us to have them from his lawyer. Nothing was being kept from the committee and everything that was done was done reasonably.

May I say, as well on the second point raised by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) on the confidential, in camera meeting on Monday, November 23, that the Hon.

Member is asking you, Mr. Speaker, to say that there has been a breach of his privileges because a member in that meeting said that he had been told by his supervisor, who in turn was at a meeting at which he was informed, that something took place. I would suggest that that is not evidence at all; that is nothing. Certainly that would be something the parliamentary committee itself might wish to pursue if it thought it had any basis. However, an unsubstantiated allegation like that is not something of which you, Mr. Speaker, should take cognizance and make a ruling that there has been a prima facie breach of the Hon. Member's privilege.

I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that if it were your role to try to track down and investigate every unsubstantiated allegation by the Hon. Member for Burnaby, the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure would be very, very busy.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear from the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) in due course. The Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Jepson).

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, I just want to reinforce what my colleagues on the government side, as members of the justice committee, have very capably said in addressing the facts surrounding our visit to the various penitentiaries and our meetings with the various officials and inmates involved in the penitentiary system.

I think what I find personally repugnant about this whole situation is the obvious political posturing—

Mr. Speaker: I have listened very carefully to the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney) and the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson), and of course I will hear the Hon. Member for London East.

However, in the interests of moving things along without interrupting, perhaps I exercised some latitude in allowing some of the remarks made by both the Hon. Member for Ottawa West and the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls in respect of the Hon. Member for Burnaby.

Whatever Hon. Members may feel, yesterday in his intervention the Hon. Member for Burnaby put forward facts as he thought they were and, except for perhaps some difference of opinion between himself and the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata), was not making any comments concerning the motivation or the dedication of other members of the committee.

As a consequence I think that the Hon. Member for London East could help me by addressing the question of privilege itself. He, like other Hon. Members, was there and I want very much to hear his point of view. However, I would ask Hon. Members to stay away from impugning in any way the motives of other Hon. Members, especially when the Chair must listen to these interventions and decide legal points of procedure. Obviously there can be more latitude exercised when we are in full swing of debate, but we are listening here to careful arguments on a difficult matter and I know that Hon. Members would want to co-operate.

Mr. Jepson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess what I am trying to say, in synopsis, is that as one member of that committee I had total freedom to meet with any prisoner or any group—anybody involved in the whole process—without management being there to monitor or sanitize those opportunities.

We had opportunities to talk with prisoners in the hole, as they would describe it, or in protective custody, with lifers' groups, inmates' groups, parole officers, case management work officers—virtually everybody involved. There was total freedom.

For the Hon. Member for Burnaby to suggest that this was a fixed arrangement, a sanitized hearing of the various groups, I think is grossly unfair and one which lacks any element of fact.

Mr. Speaker: I know the Hon. Member for Burnaby will resist the temptation perhaps to do other than abide by the very gentle admonitions of the Chair.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly abide by the gentle and sage admonitions of the Chair, as always.

I wanted to respond to a couple of points which were made this afternoon by my colleagues from the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General. Obviously I will not respond to any suggestion as to motives. I think that Your Honour has dealt with those, and I do not think any purpose would be served by indicating that the reason for this intervention quite obviously is my concern with respect to the integrity of the committee process itself.

I will make a couple of points. First of all, it has been suggested—and it seems to be at the heart of the argument that is made by all three of my committee colleagues—that the information which I brought before Your Honour yesterday with respect to the possibility of an attempt to control or manipulate the flow of evidence to the justice committee in some way should be disregarded because it was not in fact direct evidence; it was not evidence that came directly from an individual who was present at the meeting at which the alleged or attempted interference took place.

Surely it is clear why that particular submission must be rejected by Your Honour. The nature of the alleged wrongdoing in this case is precisely the fact that senior supervisors in the Ontario region allegedly were told that if in any way they were critical of their employer, or if they were critical of the Government or of the policies of Correctional Service Canada, that could affect their future career prospects within Correctional Service Canada. That is the context within which this problem arose.

I would submit, with respect, that it is totally unreasonable to argue that, because one of those individuals who apparently was subject to that kind of potential threat did not directly come before the committee and speak to the committee of this threat or this attempted coercion, somehow the matter is not serious.

The individuals in question, the senior supervisors in question, appeared as a group with their manager before the justice committee on Monday evening. They were not in any way in a position to make allegations of that nature at that time without, to the best of their understanding, possibly jeopardizing their job.

Of course one always prefers direct evidence. One always prefers the evidence of an individual who was present at a particular meeting. However, I submit, with respect, that it was entirely impossible, given the nature of the alleged pressure which took place, for that to have occurred.

What happened was that an individual who worked with one of those senior supervisors stood before our committee at an in camera session and said to the committee, recognizing fully the seriousness of what he was saying, that his supervisor, at a meeting with that supervisor, had alleged that they were subject to this kind of pressure, this kind of potential manipulation, what I have called an attempt to gag or muzzle the witnesses. That individual was not challenged in any way as to his veracity or his credibility by any member of the committee. It was not suggested that somehow he might have been misstating the facts, that his memory might have been flawed, or that perhaps he had it wrong. Members of the committee were free to cross-examine him as they saw fit. That was not done.

I suggest the fact that that parole officer, a professional dedicated public servant, saw fit to raise this concern with members of our committee provides grounds for the finding of a prima facie breach of the privileges of Members of the House with respect to the question of evidence and direct evidence.

I now want to comment just briefly on the first allegation I made concerning the transfer of Avery. It has been suggested that everything worked out fine in the end because there was Avery on a conference call from Kingston Penitentiary communicating with members of the committee. It was suggested as well that because I, as one member of the committee, met with Avery there was no attempt at manipulation. There are two key points on that.

First, the remaining members of the inmates committee did not even know, until I informed them about an hour before the meeting took place, that Avery, a key member of that committee, was even going to participate. Second, Avery himself was not even told until I informed him that he would be allowed to communicate with members of the committee.

The final, and in many ways most serious point is that, like any other witness, Avery needed time to prepare properly to make his representations to our committee. He needed his extensive documents. At no point after he was scooped from Millhaven and sent to Kingston Penitentiary did he have as much as one single sheet of paper with him. His documents were conveniently left behind at Millhaven. It was only that morning, when I insisted that his documents be transferred so I could get authorization to see some of them myself, that they were carted over to him. It was literally while he was on the telephone to members of the committee that they brought him his documents in a box. He opened the box, looked inside and, lo and behold, four of his file folders had disappeared.

I suggest that this is a very serious matter and to suggest that somehow he was able to communicate because he was on the telephone with us is just not adequate.

My final point is this. It has been suggested that somehow there has been a breach of the in camera tradition of the committee. To that I respond as follows. I recognize as well as any member of the committee the importance of respecting witnesses who appear before an in camera meeting. For that reason I spoke directly with both the individual who made the specific allegation concerning his supervisor having been in effect threatened, if you will, concerning his evidence, and with other witnesses immediately following that. I told them that I viewed this matter very seriously indeed, as I know all of my colleagues did. I asked whether it would be appropriate to raise that particular matter publicly, indeed in the House of Commons itself. I received the full consent of that individual and the other individual with whom I spoke to make this matter public. Indeed, he said he hoped it would be made public because he was deeply concerned about the implications. I think that disposes of the suggestion that there was any breach of propriety.

I am not in any way commenting on the other matter raised in Question Period today and certain other allegations made about information conveyed to our committee. The Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) can deal with that, it is up to him. However, in yesterday's Kingston Whig-Standard the regional representative of the Public Service Alliance of Canada made some very significant statements on this second aspect of the meeting. I want to close my remarks by bringing this to the attention of the Chair and I will send a copy of this article to Your Honour.

Mr. Bob Boucher, a regional representative of the Public Service Alliance of Canada, told the Kingston Whig-Standard this morning that he had complaints last week, from various people working in a range of positions within the CSC, that senior officials were attempting to control testimony given to the parliamentary committee. The complaints were, and I quote Mr. Boucher:

> "that the people who were assigned to meet with the committee were by and large handpicked, and they were advised they were not to be critical in their comments," Boucher said.
> He said he hoped the committee would "take into account that people are subjected to covert retribution if they were critical".

Despite the fact that he told people to go and tell it as it is, he said:

> God, if we can't even talk to the people who are running this country freely, there is something drastically wrong with our system.

That is from the representative of the officials who were to appear before our committee. This argument that we could ask all the questions we wanted, we had total freedom to meet with anyone we wanted to meet, is naive. The Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Jepson) is suggesting somehow that it meets the concern. Frankly, it is ludicrous to suggest that because we could ask the questions and go anywhere we wanted there was no attempt made by senior officials to shape the nature of the responses. Surely that is the fundamental issue. That goes to the integrity of the committee process.

I know that the chairperson of our committee wants to ensure that as the committee travels across the country, it receives evidence without fetter or restriction. The Hon. Member for York South—Weston has said he does not intend to participate any further in the hearings of this committee. That is the decision of members of the Liberal Party and they can defend it.

I reiterate that my concern is for this committee to do its job properly and there must not be any suggestion, directly or indirectly, of interference in the nature of evidence it receives. We heard a rather pathetic warning from the chief Crown Attorney of Ottawa on the eve of our visit to Kingston, Mr. Andrejs Berzins. He warned us there would be attempts to shape or control the evidence given to our committee and to beware of those attempts. I am afraid that this is exactly what may have happened in Kingston, in the Ontario region, and it is for that reason I believe a prima facie breach of our privileges has been established.

I hope that you rule that a case has been made which at least requires further investigation by the appropriate body of this House, the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure, and as I indicated yesterday, I am certainly prepared to move the appropriate motion should Your Honour so find.

Mr. Speaker: I think I should say to Hon. Members again, in the interest of ensuring that the public knows what this has been all about, that the Hon. Member has raised a serious matter with respect to whether or not certain witnesses working for the Correctional Service of Canada who appeared in front of the standing committee were interfered with in some way by their superiors with respect to what they should or should not or could or could not say. That is the essence of the question the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) has raised, and he cited two particular examples. There has been considerable comment from other Hon. Members with respect to whether or not the facts as suggested by the Hon. Member for Burnaby are accurate.

I will consider very carefully the interventions I have heard. The task for the Chair is to consider this matter carefully, of course, and decide whether or not a prima facie case of privilege has been established. I think it is important to keep repeating that privilege in this place is something which affects the ability of a Member to carry out the duty of being a Member of Parliament. Someone said that, in its simplest and perhaps most dramatic way, it is something that interferes with the right of a Member to exercise his undoubted and ancient right of free speech. There are of course some variations on that scene. The Hon. Member for Burnaby suggests that in this case, if witnesses have in fact been tampered with by their employers, the privilege, not only of the Hon. Member but of all Hon. Members on the committee, has been affected because, if such is the case, they would not be able to get all the information they ought to have.

That is the essence of the complaint. The Hon. Member for Burnaby said that this would be tantamount to contempt of the parliamentary committee. Other Hon. Members have said that they do not have the same view of the facts as the Hon. Member for Burnaby. That is a matter which I will have to take into account.

I shall give this very careful consideration. I might indicate to Hon. Members and to the public that I have given much more latitude in listening to this case than I would ordinarily because the charge is that senior public servants, or middle rank public servants, or some public servants, tried to influence, one way or the other, the evidence that other public servants who were their subordinates would give to a standing committee. That is the charge and it is a serious one and I have given more time to this particular matter than I would ordinarily.

I hope that Hon. Members realize that the general rule is that the Chair is really not in a position to interfere with the affairs of a committee. I hope Hon. Members will not take the extensive latitude which I have extended in this case as normal every time they believe they have some complaint about what happens in committees. I want to re-emphasize that, generally speaking, Members with a complaint should go back into the committee and sort it out there.

However, the charge here is a very serious one and I will have to consider whether there is sufficient evidence for me to rule that there is a prima facie case of privilege. That is what I am charged to do under the rules of the House and that is what I will consider. However, I want everyone to understand clearly that the latitude given in listening to representations in this case will not necessarily be extended in every other case.

I know that Hon. Members who may not be as happy as they might be with what happens in committee have an understandable urge to bring the matter to the floor of the House. However, I urge them, in most cases, to go back into the committee and try to work it out there.

In any event, I thank all Members for their interventions. The allegation is serious and I will give it very careful consideration and report back to the House as quickly as possible because I think a ruling on my part might be helpful to the entire committee which, after all, is charged with very serious responsibilities.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CRIMINAL CODE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved that Bill C-54, an Act to amend the Criminal Code and other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have the honour today to address the House to raise a matter of common interest and fundamental significance. I am talking about improving Canadian legislation on pornography which our Government views as a priority. Bill C-54 reflects the Government's commitment to pass legislation to fight against pornography in an effective manner, and to insert in the Criminal Code the relevant provisions it so badly needs.

[English]

Our legislative response is aimed at ensuring the dignity of the individual in Canadian society. All Hon. Members will agree that we must take the steps necessary to protect our children from gratuitous violence, whether emotional or physical, and must protect individuals from degradation and exploitation.

I do not need to remind Hon. Members of what an insidious and pervasive problem pornography is. It degrades the men, women, and children who are portrayed as well as those who are exposed to it. This problem was highlighted by the Fraser Committee which studied both pornography and prostitution and made more than 100 recommendations. The Fraser Committee called for Criminal Code amendments as well as other steps to deal with these two problems.

All Hon. Members realize that the time has come to amend the Criminal Code to deal with child pornography and with material which is sexually violent, exploitative, and degrading. We all recognize that this material is unacceptable.

Bill C-54 is the result of extensive consultations with interested groups and individuals. Much consultation preceded Bill C-114 introduced by my predecessor in 1986. This Bill has further benefited from the public input received since that time.

I received representations from spokespersons for women's groups, religious organizations, artistic circles, museums and other associations concerned over the proliferation of pornography. In certain cases, I met with these people. Some Hon. Members have also conveyed to me many observations coming from their constituents. I have also received quite a few letters on this issue from the general public.

As a Government we listened to interested people and groups, and we took into account the often diverging opinions they expressed. So we are showing leadership on a question of national interest whose solution is not easy to come by.

[English]

The words "other sexual activity" used in the definition of pornography in Bill C-114 have been deleted from this Bill. We have moved to deal with the worst forms of written and audio pornography which, I emphasize, advocate, encourage, promote or incite sexual acts with children, sexually violent or degrading conduct, bestiality, incest or necrophilia. We have moved to deal with the worse forms of "dial pornography".

At the same time we have responded to concerns of the artistic community by ensuring that a judge shall find an accused not guilty and shall declare that the material that formed the subject matter of the charge is not pornography where the defence of artistic merit is successful.

These proposals represent a very real improvement over the current state of law. Many critics have called the obscenity law vague and imprecise. It may interest Hon. Members to recall and reflect upon the fact that Section 159 of the present Criminal Code defines obscene material on the basis of "undue exploitation", the only test of which is community standards as interpreted by the courts on a case by case basis. The only defence explicitly provided in the current law is that of the public good, on which there is little developed case law. The maximum penalty in the Criminal Code at present for engaging in the production and distribution of obscene matter is two years in prison. This is true even in those cases of the most extreme portrayals of sexual violence and child pornography.

By contrast, Bill C-54 defines pornography as precisely as possible and clearly sets out for the first time defences such as those based on artistic merit or scientific, educational, or medical purposes. The criminal law must be capable of consistent application across Canada. Penalties for dealing in pornography are provided in Bill C-54 to reflect the seriousness of the conduct involved. Ten-year maximum sentences are available where child pornography or pornography involving sexual violence is involved.

This Bill also includes a definition of erotica, meaning visual matter, the dominant characteristic of which is the depiction of certain parts of the body in a sexual context or for the purpose of sexual stimulation of the viewer. This material would be available but controlled in its access to children and its public display.

Those critics and commentators who have equated this definition with nudity are simply wrong. The definition is clear in requiring a dominant characteristic, a sexual context or the purpose of sexual stimulation. Those who have made extravagant claims that cherubs will need to be painted over, clearly do not understand the Bill.

These claims are some of many made by those who have not taken the time to consider this Bill carefully or to follow the current state of the law. For example, there are those who say that this Bill takes the Government back into the bedrooms of the nation. This charge is absolutely false. We are not in any sense proscribing conduct between individuals in private. Rather, we are coming to grips with the public exhibition, trafficking in sexual violence, degradation, child pornography and exploitative material.

Indeed, the recent decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in the Video World Ltd. case, which affirmed a decision of the Manitoba Court of Appeal, shows the ambit of the current law. In that case, certain films were at issue which showed vaginal intercourse, oral intercourse, anal intercourse and masturbation, among other acts portrayed. The court, under the current Criminal Code provisions, had no hesitation in finding this material to be obscene.

Those who claim that the Government is turning back the clock should familiarize themselves with the Video World Ltd. decision. Bill C-54 is in step with contemporary community standards and levels of tolerance. The Canadian public expects a strengthening of the present law, not greater licence to trade in the exploitation of private acts.

While the Government has shown its resolve to deal effectively with this type of material, and has suggested penalties which clearly show that its dissemination will not be tolerated, we have also been vigilant in ensuring that freedom of expression under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms is safeguarded. Canadians expect that creative expression which has flourished in our nation should continue to enjoy an environment which will allow for its further development. With this the Government fully agrees. While Bill C-54 attacks hard core pornography, it also effects many innovative and helpful changes to the law which are meant to recognize the important concerns of the artistic community.

These proposals represent a reasonable balance. There is general agreement on the major objectives of the legislation.

[Translation]

I seek your support for this Bill. Hopefully, Mr. Speaker, this measure will be referred to the legislative committee as soon as possible. I know that both Opposition Parties endorse its basic elements.

[English]

This is a time for Members of Parliament from all Parties to work together to deal effectively with these exploitative, hateful, degrading and dehumanizing representations. Let us work together to send out the signal that we have strengthened the criminal law in order to curtail the trade in pornography while remaining sensitive to the needs of the artistic community and respecting freedom of expression.

I believe the time has come for us to debate this Bill in a serious manner. It is time for Members of Parliament, whether on the government side, or indeed in the opposition Parties, to come forward and let us know precisely where they stand with respect to this particular issue.

We have heard the justice spokesman on behalf of the Liberal Party indicate his support of the major portions of this particular legislation. He has indicated that he has some concerns with respect to the provisions dealing with depiction and portrayal of explicit sexual activity.

We know the position of members of the New Democratic Party. I understand that they do not support this legislation. However, I will want to know during the course of this debate where members of the New Democratic Party stand with respect to the provisions which, for the first time, specifically and squarely address the question of portrayals of damage and injury, cruelty and degradation to women. I want to know where they stand with respect to the question of curtailing the exploitation of children and child pornographic portrayals in Canadian society.

These are important issues that we must address. I will cheerfully accept constructive criticism and suggestions. It will not be good enough for members of the Opposition to say that they are generally in favour of laws with respect to child pornography and enacting tougher penalties with respect to the degrading portrayal of women and the exploitation of women in pornographic terms, but will hijack the Bill and prevent it from going to a committee for thorough study because they are unclear about a certain clause.

I suggest to Hon. Members sincerely that the Canadian public will not tolerate any equivocation. They want to know the criticisms and precisely where the opposition Parties stand on this issue. They will want to know their solution.

I wait with some interest to hear whether or not members of all Parties will have constructive suggestions. I am very interested in the parliamentary process, and this is the time for the opposition Parties to inform us.

I do not believe we can simply rely on the present law. If there are concerns with respect to this legislation, I think one indeed could have some concern about the present provisions of the Criminal Code. The provisions in the Criminal Code with respect to pornography presently come under the general section dealing with obscenity. We have defined and targeted exactly the kind of offensive matters with which we want to deal under the law. I suggest that those who are interested in freedom of expression would want to have a clear definition of what is meant by pornography in a legal sense.

Let me refer to the present provisions of the Criminal Code, and I ask Members of the House to consider whether or not they believe the present law is satisfactory. Section 159(1) states:

> Every one commits an offence who
> (a) makes, prints, publishes, distributes, circulates or has in his possession for the purpose of publication, distribution or circulation any obscene written matter, picture, model, phonograph record or other thing whatsoever, or
> (b) makes, prints, publishes, distributes, sells, or has in his possession for the purposes of publication, distribution or circulation, a crime comic.
> (2) Every one commits an offence who knowingly, without lawful justification or excuse
> (a) sells, exposes to public view or has in his possession for such a purpose any obscene written matter, picture, model, phonograph record or other thing whatsoever,
> (b) publicly exhibits a disgusting object or an indecent show,

● (1610)

Let me interrupt myself in reading these particular provisions to point out that this is now the present law of Canada. The section continues:

> (c) offers to sell, advertises, publishes an advertisement of, or has for sale or disposal any means, instructions, medicine, drug or article intended or represented as a method of causing abortion or miscarriage, or
> (d) advertises or publishes an advertisement of any means, instructions, medicine, drug or article intended or represented as a method for restoring sexual virility or curing venereal diseases or diseases of the generative organs.

The third clause of that particular provision states:

> (3) No person shall be convicted of an offence under this section if he establishes that the public good was served by the acts that are alleged to constitute the offence and that the acts alleged did not extend beyond what served the public good.

This is the defence of public good. As I indicated in my remarks, this does not give us any guidance in terms of what defences are available to the average Canadian citizens, whereas the new legislation deals specifically with those defences. Clause 5 states:

> For the purposes of this section the motives of an accused are irrelevant.

This is the present law and I would like people to dwell on it. I hope the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) is not one of those who wants to stand still and not move ahead. I know she is more progressive than wanting to rely on this particular legislation. She should be the one, speaking as she does on behalf of her own Party, who would applaud the direction in which this legislation is going.

I would like to read clause 8 to give Hon. Members a flavour of what is provided for in the present law:

> For the purposes of this Act, any publication a dominant characteristic of which is the undue exploitation of sex, or of sex and any one or more of the following subjects, namely, crime, horror, cruelty and violence, shall be deemed to be obscene.

I come back to my original proposition that this legislation follows a very intensive examination of the question of pornography by a commission which was established by the predecessor Government, headed by Mr. Paul Fraser, a past President of the Canadian Bar Association and a lawyer of distinction from Vancouver, British Columbia.

The committee travelled extensively with respect to this matter and made recommendations which I think indicated that we should in fact increase substantially the sanctions with respect to offensive material which goes against those levels of portrayal and depiction, including child pornography, the exploitation of children and the degradation of women. That has been the subject of agreement of members from all Parties.

I want to remind Hon. Members of the other provisions in the definition of pornography which deal with the explicit depiction of sexual activity. The Supreme Court of Canada has declared itself at the present time with respect to the law and has found that material to be a contravention of the present obscenity laws. These are the facts that I believe should be kept in mind by Hon. Members when they address this particular legislation.

There has been, as I have said, criticism from a number of critics who have dealt with this particular legislation that this is somehow going to create new difficulties. I reject those criticisms absolutely. I say to Hon. Members that what we now have is an important advance in the law. We have precision in what we are in fact sanctioning as far as public behaviour is concerned. No one in this House is more supportive of the concept of freedom of speech and freedom of expression than myself. That is an important concept and should always be kept at the forefront of all of our points of view in dealing with any legislation. But freedom of expression and freedom of speech do not mean unfettered speech. Where actions of any person in Canada cause injury or damage to their fellow citizens, it is the principle of law which has been in place throughout the history of our country, and continues to be the situation, that this type of behaviour is unacceptable and should be subject to sanctions under the Criminal Code.

Pornography is a form of hate propaganda. It is hate propaganda against the integrity and importance of the individual. That is precisely what we have in this legislation. We say that where there is legitimate purpose, whether it be artistic, scientific, medical or educational, these matters are not covered as far as this particular legislation is concerned. This type of portrayal is absolutely acceptable. Where the main purpose is exploitative and is of itself a degradation of the individual's dignity, where it is a trivialization of the individual or exploitation of the individual, this is the type of portrayal and depiction I think all of us would want to address in the legislation.

I simply say in terms of Bill C-54, that I am interested in having a good examination of this particular legislation in the committee of the House of Commons. I am interested in hearing precisely where Members of Parliament from all Parties stand with respect to this matter. If they feel they have some constructive suggestions, they can rest assured that I, for one, will be listening with great interest. However, if the position of those members is that they are not going to give constructive alternatives, that they will attempt to defeat this legislation, I will work as hard as I can to pass this legislation because I think it is important that we in Canada move ahead in this area.

I look forward to the matter being dealt with in a reasonably expeditious manner on the floor of the House of Commons. I will listen with great interest to all Members. I think it is important for us to move this to committee stage. There are a number of groups and individuals who will want to make their point of view on this particular issue known.

Perhaps I could just say that there has been a good deal of interest from the general public in this matter. I have received a great deal of correspondence which has been in support of the legislation. There has been some criticism with respect to the legislation which I have attempted in each case to address. I have attempted to meet with people. I have responded to correspondence pointing out that many of the criticisms are in fact dealt with effectively by this legislation. I am very anxious to have this matter proceed as quickly as possible. I ask Hon. Members to give this matter serious attention so we can get through the debate as quickly as we can. The Hon. Member from Outremont will have an opportunity to speak. Every time she makes an intervention I think it is another intervention of support for this legislation and I appreciate it.

Mrs. Pépin: No way.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: She only moves me to carry on and plead with the Hon. Member to convince the rest of the members of the Liberal Party to take a consistent view of this legislation. I would be very interested to hear from the justice critic that he supports the general thrust of this Bill. I am interested in hearing his solution as I am interested in hearing the solutions of the Hon. Member for Outremont with respect to how certain provisions should be phrased.

• (1620)

As was pointed out by the Fraser Commission, nothing can be gained from the Government not moving to change the present law. It was a commitment of the Government that we would move ahead with reasonable legislation to attack this odious type of hate propaganda which is in existence in our country. We will do it in a way which respects the freedom of expression of Canadians and which allows Canadians to say that as far as their respect for their fellow men and women in Canada is concerned we have a law that meets the test of reasonableness. It is a law which will be tough on those areas of gross behaviour that are unacceptable to the majority of Canadians. It will say to Canada that we in this Parliament have finally come down to deal with serious questions so that we can go forward and say that we in fact have made Canada a better place in which to live.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I find no pleasure in having to deal with such a repressive law which takes us back to the Victorian era. In order to express my views, I would like to quote from an article that came out in La Presse on May 7, 1987, under the Lysiane Gagnon's signature. This article very well reflects my views and feelings about Bill C-54 now before us. And I quote:

> Here we go again. Straight ahead to the Victorian era, on that old puritan bandwagon of Tories who are back with their anti-pornography legislation.
> A legislation that is just as moronic as it is repressive, that will make Canada the most puritan country in the Western world. Because who ever heard of a country where the visual representation of a couple doing what is done regularly in the most ordinary families, and indeed what our governments are encouraging us to do, since it is the only way to increase the birth rate?
> This legislation introduced by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) is a true reflection of that pathetic exercise by a government which is prepared to do anything, however ridiculous, in order to please the Conservative rightists and the bigot or naive pressure groups who believe censorship will eliminate women and child abuse.

In this legislation the Conservative Government is being overly prudish, to put things mindly . . . it fails to exercise the openmindedness expected by the majority of Canadian men and women.

Material involving scenes of violence and degradation must be banned. But dragging the Government back into Canadian bedrooms, including libraries, book stores, museums and art galleries, I find unacceptable, Mr. Speaker.

Also, normal sexual acts between willing adults have nothing to do with pornography.

Pornography and eroticism are two things quite far apart, a fact which Bill C-54 seems to ignore.

[English]

The flow of harmful pornography across our border must be stopped. Pornography gives us an image of women, children and men sexually so distorted that it warps people's views and actions. The anger, frustration and violence emanating from this material is overwhelming.

What does pornography tell our society? What messages can we take from the existence of this material? Pornography tells us that women and children are instruments for the pleasure of men. It tells us that violence towards women, children and men is socially acceptable, even normal. It tells us that women and children are sexually insatiable, that they accept, even enjoy, physical abuse and degradation. Pornography tells us that sex is power and most fun when one controls and coerces the other person.

To whom are these messages being transmitted? Who are they affecting in our society? The highest users of pornographic materials are boys between the ages of 12 and 17.

It must be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that oftentimes parents pass their problems onto their children, and I explain—since parents are too embarrassed to talk about sexuality, children fall back on pornographic video tapes and magazines.

[English]

This is where many boys get their sex education, and many think that this is normal sexual activity. In a York University study conducted recently 25 of the young men interviewed said that they would commit rape under certain conditions. In women's shelters and among rape victims one will often hear that these victims were forced to imitate Deep Throat or other violent pornography.

In a Queen's University study it was found that one-third of child molesters and rapists questioned used pornographic material to arouse them before and during sexual acts. So pornography is bad. It has an insidious effect on our society. Its availability should be controlled. The problem consists in deciding how to balance an individual right to freedom of expression with the obvious harmful effects of pornography. Where should we make the cut-off? Where should we put our foot down and say, "You cannot watch that or read that"?

The first problem consists of defining pornography. The existing law uses an obscenity standard by which the courts decide what is or is not obscene based on community standards. Everyone pretty much agrees that this is too vague and inefficient and places too much importance on censorship. It is obviously not stopping the harmful pornography from spreading across Canada.

The Conservative Government's Bill C-54 goes to the other extreme. Its aims are honourable and its intents justified, but its method is repressive. Bill C-54 replaces the existing obscenity standard with a very detailed definition of pornography. This definition includes physical harm, sexual violence, child pornography, bestiality, incest, as well as masturbation, lactation and sexual intercourse. Pornography seems to include anything sexual. This puritanical Bill includes sexual intercourse in the same category as bestiality and sexual violence.

Bill C-54 also makes a distinction between pornography and erotica. Since pornography includes every type of sexual activity, erotica seems to be defined as anything depicting nudity. In 1987 does this seem a realistic way of representing our sexual mores? Are we not regressing back to the Victorian age with this Bill?

Is human sexuality that dangerous? Is the Conservative Government saying that human sexual relations can never be depicted as healthy and loving? Is the Government confusing sex with violence and hate? I believe that we need to attack pornography, but that does not mean attacking sexuality.

In a recent poll it was found that 69 per cent of Canadians feel that Bill C-54 is too puritanical and that it goes too far. This Bill is moralistic. Its primary concern is with the effects on the moral behaviour of the population. Is that how the Government proposes to protect society from harm, by introducing legislation that disregards the freedom of expression and the liberties accorded to each citizen under the Charter of Rights?

The artistic community fears that warning signs will have to be posted in art galleries and theatre entrances if this Bill is passed. Many exhibitions and theatrical performances will become 18 and over X-rated. Painters such as Picasso will be for adult entertainment only. Movies such as Not a Love Story and Lolita will be prohibited. Librarians also fear that their shelves will be empty under Bill C-54. There are many classics that include intercourse, masturbation, and sexuality between minors, for example, Romeo and Juliet, that one might be forced to produce age of majority cards to enter the library.

Their fears are not unfounded, Mr. Speaker, because when we realize that the police will have to determine what is pornography and what is art, there are some serious questions we should be asking ourselves. If the police enforce the provisions on pornography like they enforce those on prostitution, this legislation could be dangerous.

I also would like to recall an article that appeared in the media on October 10, about RCMP officers who seized forty-two colour slides from a women's group against pornography, on the grounds that they were showing pornography. In fact, this was simply an educational program these women were putting on across Alberta to demonstrate what pornography is and what the difference is between pornography and erotica.

All these documents were seized, and these women are now waiting for the provincial solicitor general to decide whether the case they will come before the courts or not.

Mr. Speaker, this is an example of the kind of mistakes the police sometimes make, especially when they are asked to do things they are not equipped to do.

[English]

When we are so concerned that our children watch too much television and video, it is ironic that we might turn them away from books if we start censoring strictly. Educational material on AIDS and other sexual diseases is so explicit it could also be banned.

Bill C-54 simply does not meet the needs of Canadian society in the 1980s. I believe that we can stamp out harmful pornography without getting rid of erotica and sexuality. We need a different definition of pornography. The Fraser report of 1985 provided us with a moralistic view on pornography. It is not what the Minister was saying earlier; they have not followed the recommendations of the Fraser Commission.

That Commission proposed three tiers of punishment for pornographic material. The first and most severely punished tier would be sexually explicit material where actual harm was caused to the participants, or material which involves minors. The second tier to be severely punished would be material showing sexual violence, abuse, or degradation. The third tier would deal with sexually explicit material or erotica showing no violence or abuse. Laws would be passed as to how and where it could be made available to those interested. Punishment would only come if it was ever made available to minors.

In my view, anyone manufacturing, distributing, selling, or displaying any material that is harmful, violent, or degrading would be severely punished. But sexual material without violence would still be made available discreetly to those who want it. This position maintains a balance between freedom of expression, and banning harmful pornography. It maintains individual liberties, where Bill C-54 does not.

We must make a distinction here between adults and children. Any pornography or erotica involving or being made available to children must be controlled. But adults must have access to erotica, if they so wish. Individual liberties are guaranteed in the Constitution as long as they harm no one else. Individuals should have access to non-violent sexual material.

Bill C-54 gives maximum penalties of up to 10 years, with no defence available for those involved with the manufacturing, distribution, or rental of child pornography or violent pornography. Is it right to give the same penalty to the manufacturer of child porn and the man at the cornerstore who rents the material? Are police really going to arrest every video store owner who will face up to a decade in prison? I propose that there be different sentences for different levels of involvement in pornography.

Bill C-54 puts the onus on the manufacturer, distributor, or seller to prove that his or her material is not pornographic. Does this not go against our principle of presuming innocence until proven guilty? Is this not against Canada's justice system?

Under Bill C-54 materials displaying masturbation, ejaculation, or sexual intercourse are offences which attract terms of up to two years. Those materials should be discreetly displayed. Municipalities that control zoning and licencing should decide how erotica should be displayed and where it should be made available. In this way citizens will have more flexibility in deciding how they wish to deal with this material in their own towns.

Free trade also becomes an issue when one realizes that 85 per cent of the pornography is imported from the United States. Only 3 per cent of the material is made in Canada. How will we stop pornography from flooding our borders under a free trade agreement? How will we control the magazines, television programs, and the pay-TV and satellite emissions? We already have a problem controlling their access now. I ask the Government to tell the Canadian people how this will stop under free trade. We are talking about a $12 billion to $50 billion business. This is not something that will stamped out easily.

We welcome that portion of the Bill, Clause 3 on page 10 amending Section 281.1(4) prohibiting hate literature against an identifiable group defined by sex.

So far we have seen that violent, degrading and child pornography do have profound effects on our society. We have seen that 69 per cent of Canadians reject Bill C-54. Why? Because Canadians want to prohibit pornography, but they also want access to non-violent erotica which does not involve children.

Let us go back and examine the worthy conclusions of the Fraser report. Let us examine the effect that Bill C-54 could have on cultural, artistic and literary expression in Canada. Let us not be morally subjective when dealing with this issue, but let us clearly stamp out violent and degrading material. Let us bring this legislation out of the Victorian age and back into the 1980s.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention an article that appeared in Le Soleil, which said that the dividing line between pornography and erotica should be defined by the Government, so that more realistic criteria could be set. The legislation creates a dilemma in that it is strict where it should be but at the same time too strict where it should not be strict at all. It is simply not attuned to the present situation in Canada.

There was also an editorial in The Globe and Mail on November 20, which said:

• (1640)

> Bill C-54 is praiseworthy for its attack on violent pornography and the sexual exploitation of children, but it needs finetuning to allow wide public access to sex education, erotic art and expressions of human sexuality.

Creating criminal sanctions against the use and abuse of pornography is necessary today given the point to which it has infiltrated our society. But we should never forget what this material represents. It represents the anger, the frustration, the sexism and the alienation in Canadian society. Until we change people's attitudes toward sex, toward women and children, we will never get rid of the desire for violent and child pornography in Canada.

[Translation]

The Bill is unacceptable in its present form. It must be amended. We must discuss and adopt legislation to deal with violence and degradation, but we must also find another definition for pornography, because at the present time, the only positive point in this Bill is the one that concerns direct exploitation of women and children through pornography. I think the Government would do well to retain only the first part of this Bill. As for the rest of the Bill, I do not think it is worth discussing.

[English]

We need to protect children, not to be treated like children.

[Translation]

I feel the present Bill treats us all like children. I think the federal Government should take a far more educational and preventive stance with respect to the sexual exploitation of women and children, as opposed to the position taken in this Bill. The first part of the Bill is acceptable, while the second certainly is not.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-54, an Act to amend the Criminal Code and other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in debate on what is one of the most significant and important pieces of legislation to come before this House for many years.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) in speaking to the legislation suggested that its purpose was to protect Canadians from violence, degradation, and sexual exploitation of children. No Member of this House would in any way disagree with the fundamental importance of achieving those objectives. But in the guise of attacking violent, degrading and child pornography the Government has brought forward a piece of legislation which is profoundly dangerous and which, in fact, is a significant step backwards for Canadian society.

Bill C-54, instead of focusing as it should on violence, degradation and exploitation of children, represents an approach which is dangerous, puritanical and which is a right-wing obscenity itself.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, pornography as defined in this Bill includes any sexual relation whatsoever. Mr. Speaker, that is the approach of the moral majority in Canada. That approach will make Canada the most puritan country in the Western world. In fact, it is an attempt to please the right wing extremists in the Conservative Party and pressure groups within the right wing Conservative caucus.

Mr. Speaker, what we have here is an effort to give a little gift to the extreme right wing of the Tory caucus.

[English]

I would note that while there has been a great outcry across the country from all sectors of the community against this legislation, there have been one or two voices speaking out in favour. One of those urging the Government to move forward on Bill C-54 is Lynne Scime, National President of REAL Women of Canada. What does she say about Bill C-54? She says:

> Out of the dark shines a ray of hope in the form of Justice Minister Raymond Hnatyshyn's Bill C-54. At long last, a truly conservative Bill from the federal Government!

One of the Conservative dinosaurs to whom I have referred applauds that kind of mentality from REAL Women of Canada. She goes on to say:

> Now that Hnatyshyn has said what we wanted him to say, it's up to us to get co-ordinated and urge him to hold firm.

There are alternatives, Mr. Speaker. We in the New Democratic Party recognize pornography for what it is. It is a form of hate literature directed against women. Pornography tells lies about women. It robs them of their dignity and of their humanity. It reduces women, in effect, to vaginas and breasts. Ultimately it is misogynistic. It is a multimillion dollar industry which profits from the promotion of this kind of hatred. It is one with which we want to have nothing whatsoever to do, and we will do everything we can to discourage and prevent that industry from profiting.

The New Democratic Party has called for some time for tough legislation to deal with material, and I quote now from our policy: "which condones violence, coercion, abuse and degradation in its depiction of human beings". As well we have called for action on the production and distribution of material which portrays or promotes the sexual exploitation of children. We have called for severe penalties for offenders. Indeed, it is in that vein that we will be attempting, during the course of committee study on this legislation, to bring forward amendments to reflect these important policies. Certainly if the Government should have a sudden change of heart and turn its back on the right wing of the caucus, on the extreme zealots in the fundamentalist movement in Canada, on the puritans who are fundamentally anti-sex in their approach to this question, if the Government should buckle up the courage to recognize that there is a distinction between erotica and pornography, we would be proud to stand in our places and support legislation that reflects that policy. But I am not holding my breath, Mr. Speaker.

Imagine what the Government has put before us in this piece of legislation. I want to give an example of exactly what are the implications. An image of a man and a woman, two adults engaging in consensual love-making, will be illegal under the provisions of this Bill. Those who distribute that image or that video will go to jail. They will be subject to a term of imprisonment for two years. An image of two adults making love consensually and equally will be illegal.

However, another image of those same people, only this time the man has a chain-saw in his hands and he is brutally violating the woman, hacking her to bits with the chain-saw, an image of blood, gore, and violence, will be entirely legal under the provisions of Bill C-54.

What utter hypocrisy. What utter dangerous hypocrisy on the part of a Government which says that it is concerned about violence and degradation. It wants to say that if we depict adult sexuality it is a crime in Canada today, yet if we depict violence, murder, or illegal acts there is nothing wrong with it. What kind of twisted mentality is it? What kind of puritan, Victorian, repressive mentality is it that says that it is okay to show a man hacking a woman to bits with a chain-saw, but it is illegal and we go to jail if we show that same man making love to the woman? That is what this piece of legislation is all about.

How many Canadians have asked for that legislation? It was roughly 20 years ago that a former Prime Minister said to Canadians that the state had no business in the bedrooms of the nation. He was right, but what the Conservative Government would do is to take the state, not just back into the bedrooms of the nation, but into the living-rooms, the libraries, the museums, and the art galleries of the nation. To whom is it responding? It is certainly not the witnesses who appeared before the Fraser Commission.

As my colleague from Outremont (Mrs. Pepin) has indicated, many witnesses who came before the Fraser Commission asked for severe penalties for violence, degradation and child pornography. However, the Fraser Commission has recommended to make a fundamental distinction between pornography and erotica.

But, Mr. Speaker, what does a Conservative Government consider as erotica? Erotica is nudity, period. That's all. Incredible, Mr. Speaker! They have completely ignored the recommendations made by the McDonald Commission.

[English]

The Government has brought forward legislation which has caused profound concern in a broad cross-section of the community. The National Action Committee on the Status of Women, a very respected umbrella organization including over 200 groups that are deeply concerned about pornography and the lies that it tells about women, has strongly condemned Bill C-54. It has urged the Government to go back to the drawing-board, to start again and bring forward legislation which reflects our concern about violence, degradation, and child pornography.

At the same time the Government has raised serious concerns in the artistic community. For example, I note the remarks of the artistic director of Toronto's Théâtre Passe Muraille, Clarke Rogers, who recently said the following:

> —all that you do is intimidate artists and encourage self-censorship in the name of economic survival. If you are constantly being threatened by big legal bills, creativity is bound to suffer.

Of course there is a danger of self-censorship in the artistic community.

[Translation]

There is a danger of self-censorship by artists who are not wealthy because in our society artists are often poor, they are needy and they will suffer from this legislation.

[English]

This Government claims to be concerned about violence against women and degradation. Some of the greatest violence which can be perpetrated against women and children is the violence of poverty, the violence of sexual assaults, and the violence of beatings. However, this is a Conservative Government which has cut back on the funding for sexual assault crisis centres. It has cut back on the funding for centres to assist women who are victims of violence. It has cut back on programs to deal with sexual abuse of children, and it claims to be concerned about violence.

Pierre Berton put it well, as he so often does in his eloquent writings, when he said:

> Under the hypocritical guise of saving us all from "kiddie porn", the yahoos and rednecks who run our lives have managed to turn the clock back and inform us that sex is naughty and we must be protected from it.
> This is the thrust of the amendments to the Criminal Code on pornography that have just been placed before Parliament. In order to protect our children, we are all being treated like children. I, for one, resent it.

Well, so do I, Mr. Speaker. So do members of my caucus, so do members of the New Democratic Party.

I was pleased to hear the remarks of the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) in opposing this legislation. She indicated her support for the thrust of the recommendations of the Fraser Commission. However, I must say that I was somewhat surprised to hear those remarks, because the official spokesperson for her Party on justice has taken a very different position. The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) does not agree with the Hon. Member for Outremont. He has said that the undue exploitation of sex should remain illegal in Canada. According to the Liberal justice critic, images of adults engaging in sexual activity should continue to be criminal.

I note that the Hon. Member for York Centre did not lead off the debate on this particular Bill. I am pleased that the Hon. Member for Outremont, the spokesperson on the status of women for that Party, has taken a strong stand. I hope that she, and not the Hon. Member for York Centre, in fact reflects the position of the Liberal Party on this serious issue. If the Bill is passed, it will ultimately make Canada the most culturally repressive nation of the western democracies.

Because time is running out at this stage, I will close by indicating that I intend to propose, at the conclusion of my remarks, an amendment which would call upon the House to decline to give second reading to Bill C-54 because it fails to define clearly pornography as material that condones violence, coercion, abuse, and degradation in its depiction of human beings, or that portrays or promotes the sexual exploitation of children, and also because it does not distinguish pornography from material of an artistic, literary, educational, or scientific nature in a fashion acceptable to the Canadian public including artists.

It puts a burden on artists to defend the merit of their works. It reverses the onus. Surely that constitutes a serious assault on the basic freedoms set out in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

I will be proposing that amendment at the appropriate time, at the close of my remarks. At this point I would like to indicate once again the deep concern which we as New Democrats have with the importance of bringing forward legislation to tackle real, violent, degrading child pornography, but legislation which fails to make that fundamental distinction, we will certainly vigorously oppose.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--BILLS

[English]

THE OFFICIAL DESIGNATION OF NOVA SCOTIA ACT

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley—Hants) moved that Bill C-217, an Act respecting the official designation of "Nova Scotia", be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as some Members may be aware, this is one of my pet personal projects. It has a great deal of significance. It is a simple Bill: one page, one paragraph really. As I made clear at the start, the Bill is for the proper use of proper nouns. It is as simple as that. It is not anti-anything. It is not anti-English or anti-French. It is not negative English or negative French. The fact of the matter is that my province is known as Nova Scotia. It was given by a grant of King James the First in 1621. I do not know, perhaps in those days a lot of people did not speak English or French. To avoid confusing people, they chose Latin. Nova Scotia is a Latin name. Translated to the English you get New Scotland. From New Scotland you get Nouvelle-Écosse.

I have been trying in a quiet way since I became a Member of this House to have the official designation be that of Nova Scotia in federal documents. I am not asking to repeal or change all documents. However, since this Parliament has been looking very much to the future in many ways, be it the Meech Lake Accord or free trade, we should recognize the reality of proper nouns in the proper place. That is, Nova Scotia is Nova Scotia. It is not Nouvelle-Écosse and it is not New Scotland. That is the whole purpose of this Bill.

I may come at this in another way in another session. If we are not going to have the proper use of proper nouns, then I am going to bring in a Bill to make sure that every name is bilingualized. Then we can really corrupt the language, be it English or French. If you are going to accept some of the reasoning I have heard in the past from people who have spoken against this Bill, that you have to be bilingual, then we should do that. I am all for bilingualism. I have voted for every bilingual Bill in this House——and supported French wholeheartedly, and I wanted to speak French today.

[English]

The next time I bring in this Bill I hope to speak all in French. I want to try to get rid of the canard—and I will come back to that word—that this is anti-anything. It is for something. It is for the proper use of proper nouns.

My name is John Patrick Nowlan. That is J-O-H-N, not Jean. The name of my good friend, the Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Jepson), is James Jepson; it is not Jean Jepson. Wolfville is my home town; it is not Ville de Loup. Grand Pré is the ancestral home of Longfellow's romantic Evangeline. That is three miles from my home town. We are proud to call it Grand Pré. We do not call it Grand Meadow. My mother was born on Canard Street. We do not call it Duck Street. You know this better than I, Mr. Speaker, because your fluency in both languages makes me pale by comparison. I commend you for it. However, you have a heritage that perhaps I was not exposed to.

We have a man in the front benches, the Hon. Marcel Masse. If we are going to be bilingual, then let us make it Marcel Sledgehammer in English. That is the way it is. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) comes from a historic place on the North Shore called Baie Comeau. I do not think he wants to see a Bill go through this House which says that Baie Comeau should be Comeau Bay.

In essence, what I have been trying to do here in my own small way is to have my province designated as Nova Scotia, period. Nova Scotia has a rhythm to it, a romanticism. Tourism is a big thing in Atlantic Canada and there is a certain romanticism to Nova Scotia.

This Bill does not penalize anyone who wants to use Nouvelle-Écosse. There are a lot of Acadians from my province and people from la belle province who feel more comfortable using Nouvelle-Écosse. Let them use it. This does not penalize anyone. It is for the proper use of proper nouns. Nova Scotia is Nova Scotia.

I mentioned my good friend the Prime Minister because he and I share many things. Many years ago I worked on the railroad. At that time, long before the Prime Minister had an interest in the Iron Ore Company of Canada, I was part of the survey crew that laid the centre line for the railway which went from a place called Seven Islands up to Schefferville, a brand-new town. During my lifetime, quite properly, Seven Islands became Sept-Îles. The reason I got on to this issue of Nova Scotia was that the then Member for Trois-Rivières would rise on a point of order every time Three Rivers was mentioned. He would hold up the charter of Trois-Rivières.

[Translation]

His name is Mr. Mongrain, I believe. Yes, I am thinking about Mr. Mongrain, the Member for Trois-Rivières.

[English]

Every time an Anglophone mentioned Three Rivers when he was in the House, he would stand and make his point. I got a ticket in Three Rivers many years ago and I was called to the police station. It was called Three Rivers then. Now it is Trois-Rivières. I say that Trois-Rivières is the proper noun in the proper place. Sept-Îles is the proper noun in the proper place. The same thing is true for Nova Scotia.

We have some other beautiful provinces in this land of ours. We do not translate the name Ontario. That is the Iroquois word for "beautiful lake". We do not call it le bel lac or whatever. Quebec is Algonquin for "where the river narrows". Manitoba is Cree for "the spirit of Manitou". Saskatchewan is also Cree for "rapid current". We accept them for what they are, proper nouns in the proper place. We do not try to translate them, and I am trying to focus attention on the fact that I am not trying to be anti, I am trying to be positive with respect to the proper use of proper nouns. I want to maintain the romanticism of Nova Scotia forever. I do not want it diluted by translation.

The Americans coming up here are sometimes confused about a place called Nouvelle-Écosse when we have been advertising Nova Scotia. That is a practical problem, but it is deeper than that.

What about the capital? How many Members appreciate the fact that Ottawa is Algonquin meaning "to trade or barter". A very proper name in view of the fact that the House of Commons is here, and I guess we trade and barter.

I am asking Members not to talk this Bill out this time. I am, I guess, trading and bartering to get this Bill to committee where Hon. Members will come to understand that nothing horrific will occur if we use the proper noun in the proper place. It is as simple as that.

• (1710)

There is a Member on our front benches who used to be a Minister, Roch La Salle. If we want to translate and bilingualize everything, why do not we call good old Roch "Roch the Room"? We could call my good friend, the Minister of Agriculture, John Wise, "Jean Lesage". Let us be consistent.

I am going to continue to bring this before the House as long as I am here. If I cannot get this done one way, I will bring forward a Bill which will put Members on the spot to ensure that every name is bilingualized.

One of our great Speakers was Jeanne Sauvé. I had some problems with her from time to time. I did not think she was a great Speaker, but she is a very fine Governor General. Sauvé is a perfect name for a Speaker. Let's bilingualize it and call her "Jean Saved".

The name Nova Scotia was given to us by the Charter of King James I in 1621. It is in the original BNA Act. We in this Parliament, with some division, have just passed the Meech Lake Accord which brought Canadians together and brought Quebec into the Constitution. It recognizes the distinct society which Quebec is. I understand that. I have some problems with the promotion of it as a province, but I have no problem at all with the preserving and protection of a distinct society. However, what is good for Quebec as a whole in terms of a distinct society is good for Nova Scotia in terms of its name. The name Nova Scotia is distinct.

I ask Members not to talk this Bill out but to refer it to committee. I am not asking that we go to expense or that we roll back all the legislation and regulations. However, I am asking that we recognize the use of proper nouns in their proper place.

I believe I have illustrated the fact that we will have some very oddball situations if we bilingualize every proper noun. A word is a proper noun because it is a name, and it should not be bilingualized. The names of some of the provinces can be translated from English to French, from British Columbia to Colombie Britannique, from Newfoundland to Terre Neuve, or from Prince Edward Island to Îsle du Prince Édouard. I frankly think it is wrong to translate those proper names, but I do not argue that case. However, Nova Scotia is neither English nor French. It is Latin, and Latin it should stay because that is the proper use of a proper noun.

Nova Scotia

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the words of the Hon. Member. Coming from Nova Scotia myself I take great interest in Bill C-217. I understand the Hon. Member's point of view. To most Nova Scotians Nova Scotia is, of course, Nova Scotia. Nova Scotia has a very proud tradition, as the Member said, dating back to the Charter which was granted many years ago. He mentioned the changes of names which have taken place in Canada, Seven Islands to Sept-Îsles and Three Rivers to Trois Rivieres.

We have done the same thing in Nova Scotia. In fact, the oldest permanent settlement in North America was founded in the Annapolis Valley in 1604, four years before the founding of Quebec in 1608 by Champlain. In fact, Champlain was one of the founding group of the settlement which was initially called Port Royal on the Annapolis Basin. They experienced very difficult winters there and established an organization which is still known as the Order of Good Cheer. We have, however, changed the name from Port Royal to Port Royal.

One of the most important French forts and strategic points in Canada was at what is now Louisbourg. Louisbourg was founded by the French to guard against British attacks by both Britain itself and New England forces in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and to guard the entrance of the St. Lawrence River. It was founded in 1713 and captured in 1745 by New England forces and again in 1758 by a British army under the command of General Wolfe. Of course, Louisbourg was not originally called Louisburg but Louisbourg after King Louis of France. We changed that name after it was taken by the English in 1758. It certainly was not called Louisbourg anymore, but Louisburg.

We in Nova Scotia have made our own changes. That situation does not exist only in Quebec. We have French translations for a lot of the provinces in Canada, Nouveau Brunswick for New Brunswick and Colombie Britannique for British Columbia. Therefore, Nova Scotia is not unique in that regard except that Nova Scotia is not English but Latin. There is a distinction in that regard. That is not to say, however, that the French language cannot translate Latin as well as it can translate English. Nova Scotia in Latin, of course, means New Scotland and the French translation is very accurate. Therefore, the French language has not really changed the meaning, only the language and I think it has respected the name.

This country takes pride in having two founding peoples and two languages, and I think it is of paramount importance that all Canadians respect the bilingualism of this country. I believe that to say that we will not allow French-speaking Canadians to call Nova Scotia by the name they have called it for many years is an infringement on their rights considering that they have accurately translated the name since Nova Scotia was founded by the French in 1604.

Perhaps the Hon. Member can tell me exactly what the feelings of the Acadians in Nova Scotia are with regard to this particular Bill because I think that is very significant. If they wanted Nova Scotia referred to as is requested in this Bill, Nova Scotia, that would have a great deal of impact on my thinking. I have not done the research which the Hon. Member has done so I do not know what the Acadians want. However, until I know their thinking on this issue I think that to change it may be a presumption on their wishes, which I would not want to make at this time.

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak on this Bill put forth by the Hon. Member. I find it somewhat strange that the Hon. Member has put so much effort into trying to tell French-speaking people what words to use and how to speak their own language.

• (1720)

The Hon. Member has brought similar Bills before the House of Commons on previous occasions. Apparently he had no support from the francophone Members of the House and, indeed, the Member who just spoke was very interested in knowing what Acadians thought of this Bill. I am pleased to be able to tell him.

The organization of Acadians, known as La Fédération Acadienne de la Nouvelle Écosse say that the choice of what to call Nova Scotia is theirs. Francophones have called Nova Scotia by the name la Nouvelle Écosse for as long as it was known as Nova Scotia by Anglophones.

I do not believe this House should tell people how to speak their own language. It would be very different if this were a long-standing error that the Government had made.

The Hon. Member suggests that since the name Nova Scotia is Latin, it ought not to be translated. I suggest to him that many words in the English language have their roots in Latin. When I consider this Bill, I wonder if it is the terra incognita of the Hon. Member's mind that makes him make such an effort to bring this Bill before the House.

The real problem facing francophones in Nova Scotia does not include the designation of the name of the province, rather, it is getting proper services in French.

The organization FANE and Acadians in Nova Scotia generally, as well as my Party in that province, have made great efforts to obtain services and an official languages policy in that province. While such a designation has apparently been achieved, it is somewhat less than desirable.

I am surprised that the Hon. Member would persist with this type of legislation rather than fight for the rights of Acadians and francophones in general in Nova Scotia. There are approximately 30,000 people in Nova Scotia who have French as their mother tongue, and approximately another 8,000 with French and English as their mother tongue. This represents 4.5 per cent of the population of Nova Scotia, which is a significant portion of the province which has been fighting for improved services and recognition by the provincial Government. That group refers to Nova Scotia as la Nouvelle Écosse.

The Hon. Member states that the BNA Act was written in English, for which there was never an official French translation. That does not matter. We must respect the rights of people who speak any language to choose how they will refer to a province, a river, a company or a country. There are French names for Great Britain, England, Germany and many other countries that are different from the names used by the people of those countries. I suggest it would be very high-handed for this House to consider passing a Bill that would require French speaking people in this House, in referring to Nova Scotia, to use words which are of the Member's choosing and not theirs.

I do not believe there is any reason why the House should pass a Bill that would force Members to refer to an area in a language that is not of their own choosing.

There are many places in my own province that are referred to in English, Basque, Portuguese and French. These places were given those names by the people who travelled to Newfoundland, fished in Newfoundland and worked there. These places are referred to in English and in French.

My province is known as Terre Neuve by the French-speaking people.

This Bill is a waste of time for the House. It is trivial, frivolous and pedantic. It ought not to receive the support of the House.

Mr. Edouard Desrosiers (Hochelaga—Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments about Bill C-217 on the official name of Nova Scotia, which is sponsored by the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan).

The Hon. Member, who is a good friend, told us earlier how certain phrases can be translated from French to English, but I am convinced that he forgot a very important one. Mr. Speaker, I am not taking this example because he sits with the Opposition, but if we were to translate the name of the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) into English, we could end up with something like "bad pig". Unfortunately, there are certain things which can be translated and others which cannot.

Then, there is our friend, the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais), whose name could be translated as "A day was just born". Naturally, we can all play these little word games, Mr. Speaker, but the fact is that, as everyone knows, this Bill has been before the House four times without being approved. I believe that this fact by itself is an indication, and I shall come back to it. Since it has already been before the House three times, the Members who were there had the opportunity to hear many arguments for or against the Bill, and those who were not always have the possibility of reading Hansard.

As we know, this Bill is quite simple. Its purpose is to ensure that the official designation of Nova Scotia remains "Nova Scotia" in legal acts in both French and English. The reason given by the sponsor is quite logical. When King James I gave that land to Sir William Alexander in 1621, the act of transfer designated the land under the Latin name of "Nova Scotia". The Hon. Member pointed out that, while official bilingualism leads us to translate certain geographic names from French to English and vice versa, we have no reason to do so for Latin names, no more than for the many native words which are so characteristic of the geographic designations in this country.

In terms of linguistics, since this is really what concerns us here, I would first like to mention that when the term "Nouvelle-Écosse" is used in French, it is not meant to be a Translation of the term "Nova Scotia". Rather, I would say that it is the manner in which the French language refers to the same reality, just as it does in the case of many other realities, geographic or other. For example, when one uses the term "Germany", also of Latin origin, in English, or the term "Allemagne", which is also derived from Latin, in French with the same meaning, one does not usually stop to think that the Germans themselves call their country Deutschland. Obviously, the same can be said of a great number of other countries and regions of the world. What would be at the root of such a strange phenomenon? I cannot really say and in fact I would rather leave that to linguists and etymologists. However, I believe that even a layman can draw a few useful conclusions in terms of this debate.

The example I have just given shows that if geographic names can be so different from one language to the next it would seem to be mainly for historical reasons, given the fact that the terms "Allemagne", "Germany" and "Deutschland" have absolutely nothing in common except that they refer to the same reality. It seems also that the strength of usage and tradition as well as a certain emotional dimension, which may of course vary from one culture to another, also play a major role. I would even go further and add that the various designations which have stood the test of time are often the mark of the historical fame which those territories have gained. It could be said that cultures acknoweledge one another in this way. Even if we are dealing here with proper nouns, these terms have become part and parcel of a language.

It may also be noted that this is often explained for strictly phonetic or graphical reasons. To use a striking example, the great country that we call in French "Espagne" and in English "Spain" is being called "España" by its own citizens. The same thing for "Italie", "Italy" and "Italia".

Coming back home, I was suggesting earlier that "Nouvelle-Écosse" was the French way of designating the beautiful province of the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants. Secondly, the terms "Nova Scotia", although originally latin, certainly are no longer perceived as such, so much so that latin is a "dead language", but rather as the English name of the same province. Would it be that such a difference between the two languages stem from historical and emotional reasons, or simply from phonetic reasons as I just explained? I am not quite sure about that. But I have a feeling that it is both, which is healthy in a country that is committed to bilingualism.

Official bilingualism indeed is one of this country's basic values and features, and in order to be practical, it implies that all Canadian men and women, with the highest respect for the cultural nature of our two official languages, can make compromises that at times may appear acrobatic if we are to survive as a bilingual nation.

Therefore, I would urge all Members in this House to think about all the implications of this measure if it were enacted. I remind them also, as I said at the beginning, that this House has already considered this Bill on three previous occasions, each time the debate giving rise to an impassioned discussion but the House has fortunately approved a time-honoured use and has thus avoided a storm in a teacup.

We always try of course to be quite rational, but we are politicians by profession and we know very well that in such instances we have to take into consideration human feelings and emotions. Otherwise, it would be useless to convince our fellow citizens to send us here to deal on their behalf with all kinds of issues and reach all sorts of decisions, since we could quite easily today have machines do the work.

Mr. Speaker, this Government four years ago entered into an important process of national reconciliation and the recent Meech Lake constitutional agreement is undoubtedly the most significant phase.

With respect to the proposal made by my friend, the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants, I would say that it is infinitely more important at present to see that the newborn child will survive rather than fight about the name which we would have liked to give him, since it could seriously affect its psychological development.

[English]

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to rise to speak on the Bill of my hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan). He knows as well as I do that usually in this House when a Member of Parliament rises to ask for a change of name, it is the kind of thing which passes very quickly. The Hon. Member has been working very hard on this Bill, I know. I have been in this House not quite as many years as he, but I have watched him raise the subject matter of this Bill a number of times with much sincerity. I have reread those debates with interest.

The Hon. Member has tabled a proposal which would ensure that the current English designation for the Province of Nova Scotia would also be the official French designation. Without a doubt, the Hon. Member is sincere. Hon. Members recognize that sincerity. He has made many contributions to this House as well as to his constituents and to Canada over the years. I have no doubt he proposes this Bill as a concerned and dedicated Canadian. I am sure that he followed his conscience and put forth this idea because he truly believes that it would be in the best interests of his home province.

While I do not wish to go on record as proclaiming that I am not against the proposal—being from Alberta I am not totally understanding of the full reasons behind the Hon. Member's Bill—I do want to enter into the debate. I am opposed to change for change's sake. It is useful sometimes to allow certain changes to go on in society with proper and good reason. There are many reasons for changing the names of places. What we are trying to ascertain here is the nature of the Hon. Member's reason for proposing the said Bill and whether he provides a sufficient case for changing the official name of Nova Scotia. In order for this name change to be accepted in the House there must be a very compelling reason behind it. Canadians will demand a logical and convincing reason to justify the amendment proposed in the Bill.

I fully realize that the Hon. Member has put forward a number of examples. He has attempted to demonstrate that the purpose of his proposal is to deal with the important process of using proper nouns to designate places in Canada. Furthermore, he has argued that his Bill has nothing to do with the bilingualism question, although the Hon. Member has claimed that Nouvelle Écosse is a misnomer. I am sure that many Hon. Members would agree that the term, which has been used for some 300 years, is indeed the proper use of a proper noun.

I would like to review the reasons which the Hon. Member has given to justify his proposal. More specifically, I wish to determine whether they provide a convincing argument in support of his Bill.

The Hon. Member has asserted that Nova Scotia is a Latin term and therefore is not translatable into either French or English. He has also said that if Nova Scotia had been called "New Scotland" under the British North America Act and under its original charter, then in our day of bilingualism the appropriate Translation would in fact be Nouvelle Écosse. Although the Hon. Member's logic flows from the very best of intentions, I am not so certain that it is consistent with historical facts.

Let us assume for the sake of argument that a people, French Canadians in this case, had used a proper noun to designate a certain location for some 300 years and that this name had become an integral part of their history and culture. Let us assume further that this people had a copious quantity of official documents which used that particular expression—the Treaty of Utrecht of 1713 and the Constitution Act, 1982, among others. Would it not therefore be fair and reasonable to assume the name of that place to be legitimately what a people have always called it?

My colleague has also drawn our attention to the Cities of Trois-Rivières and Sept-Îles. Hon. Members will recall that both municipalities had certain problems dealing with the appropriate designation of their towns. Back in the mid-1960s when the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants was a rookie, and I cannot quite remember that because I came here in the 1970s when he was a veteran, the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières, Mr. Mongrain, would rise on a point of order and bring proceedings to a standstill every time an Anglophone Member of the House referred to his home town as "Three Rivers". Similarly, the Hon. Member from the riding which encompassed Sept-Îles at that time, Gilles Grégoire, would also rise on a point of order every time his town was called "Seven Islands". Those points were made and subsequently accepted.

Although Trois-Rivières and Sept-Îles both benefit from the appropriate designation now, the Hon. Member fails to mention that there was strong support in favour of using those designations within the respective constituencies. People from both towns demanded that the proper designation be used. We have heard a number of Members who come from Nova Scotia speak on this matter. They have said that they see no demand either on behalf of the people of Nova Scotia or from the Legislature for changing the province's official designation.

Another thing we must ask ourselves is whether it is within the jurisdiction of the House to impose such a change on the people of Nova Scotia.

The Hon. Member supports his argument by pointing out the designation of other places such as Manitoba, Quebec and Saskatchewan. He quite rightly says that these names are neither French nor English and as such are not translatable. However, he fails to recognize that these names have remained that way because of their widespread use. Would it not be safe to say that Nouvelle Écosse has also benefited from widespread use and that therefore it is perfectly legitimate? After all, the expression does go back nearly 300 years.

The Hon. Member has said before in this House that he takes great pride in Nova Scotia. The province, he says, has a fine Scottish heritage as exemplified by the celebration of the Meeting of the Clans and by the province's own distinct tartan and kilt.

Another reason which the Hon. Member has given for putting forward this Bill is the profound respect he holds for his province. It is my understanding that the Hon. Member thinks that the use of the expression Nouvelle Écosse makes a mockery of bilingualism. My colleague feels that the expression translates a proper noun, which has the strength of history behind it, and that it does so without the popular consent of the people who believe in their heritage, and that it is therefore are improper use of a proper noun. He uses as examples to support his allegation the Charter of 1621 by which King James granted Nova Scotia to William Alexander, and the Proclamation of Queen Victoria which brought Canada into nationhood. Both documents referred to the province as "Nova Scotia" exclusively. I believe, as I have already said, that such arguments fly in the face of historical facts which support the legitimacy of Nouvelle Écosse as a proper designation for the province.

The only practical benefit, I suppose, that the Hon. Member brings forward might be the administrative simplicity of using a single standardized name such as we do for Saskatchewan, Quebec and Manitoba. But it is easy to see that all administrative benefits would be lost when we try to change documents in the future such as maps, legal documents and so forth.

I have very much enjoyed the debate of the Hon. Member on his Bill. I have listened to it a number of times. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to his Bill because I know that he feels strongly about it and that he represents his area and his people very well.

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister responsible for Multiculturalism): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis) did not hear and I should like to give her the floor.

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on the official designation of the Province of Nova Scotia, and I want to thank the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan) for tabling this Bill. The Hon. Member has given us a clear demonstration of the fact that in this Chamber, as in the rest of the country, we are entirely free to express our own views and opinions. I am sure Hon. Members realize how important it is to give this proposal full and fair consideration and to do so as quickly as possible.

In my mind, the purpose of this Bill could be defined as follows: Every time the words "Nova Scotia" appear in any act, regulation, legal document, report, contract, lease, licence or other document, the proper designation of the province in both official languages should be "Nova Scotia". More specifically, the purpose of the Bill is to maintain officially the Latin words "Nova Scotia" in all documents, whether drafted in English or in French.

Although the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants stressed the fact it was a matter of semantics, not of bilingualism, I hardly see how the latter issue could be ignored in this case. Any change in the official designation of Nova Scotia, as proposed in this Bill, could be construed as a discourtesy to that part of the population of this province that is of French ancestry.

Mr. Speaker, the question before the House today goes straight to the heart of Acadian history. To state that the designation "Nouvelle-Écosse" is not proper, is to ignore the political, social and historic reality of Canada. It could also be seen by some as a symbolic affront to Acadian culture.

Furthermore, substituting the words "Nova Scotia" for the words "Nouvelle-Écosse" could be seen as an attempt to rewrite history. If this proposal were approved, French history books containing the words "Nouvelle-Écosse" would become obsolete. Historical, legal and geographical texts would also have to be changed, and the cost would be prohibitive.

There are many considerations justifying the French designation "Nouvelle-Écosse". It is the name we find in the Treaty of Utrecht—my hon. colleagues mentioned this earlier— under which France ceded the province to Great Britain in 1713. In fact, the province was a French colony from 1667 to 1710 and was originally called "Acadie". A French-speaking community still exists and prospers to this day.

I realize the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants has some very sincere and legitimate reasons for tabling this Bill. It is clear this Bill is a pet project. In fact, I believe he initially tabled the Bill in 1977, and did so several times subsequently.

While my colleague is undoubtedly sincere, I would like to bring to his attention that one of the strongest arguments against that proposal is the existence of a large francophone minority in Nova Scotia. As we all know, Mr. Speaker, the French were expelled from their homeland, Acadia, in the 18th century and it was only with the greatest difficulty that some of them managed to come back. As I just said, the French language and culture have managed to survive in spite of all difficulties in what was left of Acadia. Although I recognize that the Hon. Member supports the efforts to maintain the French culture in Acadia, changing the official name of Nova Scotia would make things even more difficult in that regard.

I am sure the Hon. Member has some very good reasons to put forward his proposal. For example, a single designation would have obvious benefits in terms of streamlined administration because it would be immediately recognizable by all and would not have to be translated. However, there is a problem as I have already mentioned. If that proposal went through, one of the official languages would seem to be neglected. I would like to remind the Hon. Member that the designation "Nouvelle-Écosse" has been in official use ever since the King of France gave away Acadia to the British. In the end, what might at first seem to be a good idea would raise more problems than it would yield benefits. I believe it is futile to bring in a legislation in order to change the official designation of a geographical area and to ignore history and traditions.

I feel it is my duty to tell the Hon. Member—and I do not question his sincerity or his motivations—that there is no reason to believe that the designation "Nova Scotia" will be willingly accepted. The French name "Nouvelle-Écosse" has been fixed by usage and is now part of the linguistic heritage that is shared by all francophones across the country.

Over the years, the expression "Nova Scotia" came to be the English designation of the province. It was accepted by the English because of its cultural connotation and also because the Latin language was predominant in the English court in 1621 when King James the First granted William Alexander the Charter for Nova Scotia. Since then, the name of the province could have been changed for New Scotland, but that has never been done and Nova Scotia has remained the official designation of the province in the English language.

Francophones surely prefer to continue using a clearly French name which, as it happens, has been in use for centuries.

I should like to remind the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants that some people do like the French name of his province. It has a familiar ring in all regions of Canada where people speak French, and they certainly would not understand why only the Latin name should be kept. Besides, the French name gives the province a double appellation, English and French, so that Canadians of both cultures feel at home there. Not only would the adoption of the suggestion of the hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants give rise to unsatisfaction in his province, but it would also create a saddening impression among francophones.

For some time now Canadian citizens have been showing signs of a new spirit of agreement and expressing their desire to coexist in harmony. Innocuous though the proposition under study may seem, changing such a magnificent French name as Nouvelle-Écosse might be misinterpreted by certain inhabitants of the province who bear it, not to mention the rest of Canada. I would therefore advise my colleague to reconsider seriously his suggestion to change the official name of the Province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Speaker, I am particularly sensitive to the cause of francophones outside Quebec and I think they might feel harmed by this measure. As I see it, there are enough reasons to reconsider this proposition and withdraw the Bill. Our magnificient country owes its heritage to more than one community, as evidenced by the presence in this House of French- and English-speaking Members, and we must become aware of our cultural diversity and the distinctive character it gives our country. So let us acknowledge the wealth of this heritage and take it into account so that together we may better prepare the future of this country.

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister Responsible for Multiculturalism): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take the few minutes remaining to say a few words about Bill C-217 standing in the name of my colleague for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan). Many things have been said about names that were changed to make them bilingual, but the hon. Member hit a very sensitive chord when he spoke about Roch La Salle and John Wise.

Mr. Speaker, I have the same problem as my colleague who finds it difficult to live with the term "Nouvelle-Écosse" instead of "Nova Scotia". For my part, as a francophone, I prefer "Nouvelle-Écosse", but that is the opinion of a francophone. As for my own name, it changes according to where I am at the time. When I am in Quebec, I am called "Vincent Della Noce". When I am with English-speaking people in the United States or in Quebec, I am called "Vince", and in my own community, I am called "Vincenzo". At times, and this is what I dislike most, often in my own community—

An hon. Member: Vinny.

Mr. Della Noce: —in certain places, I am called "Vinny", and at my parents and grandparents—I never knew why—I am called "Jimmy". It sometimes is a problem for me to know which name to use. However, I must point out to my hon. colleague that there is a body in Canada which deals with geographic designations, and this matter should be left up to them, because to change a name, you need the permission either of the province or of the federal Government.

I know that I have no time left, Mr. Speaker, but I preferred to let my colleagues speak. I would have liked to say more because I had made some notes, but it is now 6 o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

TRADE—SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORT TAX/CLOSURE OF SAWMILLS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity today to raise, under the provisions of this Standing Order, the reply given to me on a question that I asked regarding the softwood lumber tax on October 14, 1987. I am pleased to see that the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid), who made the initial attempt to answer my question, is again in the House. I find that one always gets a better response from a Minister or a Parliamentary Secretary who is forced to come back a second time and defend what he said or avoided saying the first time around.

There were really two parts to the question that I asked on October 14 which the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade did not address. I want to give him the opportunity to address those points clearly and succinctly today and I intend to give him adequate time to do it.

Let me speak about the 15 per cent softwood lumber export duty which the Government agreed—let us use the polite form—with the U.S. Government to impose on Canadian exports of softwood lumber. This was done without any rhyme or reason in the legitimacy of such a charge but simply because this duty was being widely demanded within American lobbying and business circles and within the congressional institutions of the U.S. The 15 per cent export tax that Canada agreed to impose was, as I understood it at the time, imposed as a result of a protectionist measure. It was implemented in Canada at the behest of the U.S. rather than in the United States at the behest of that Government. I understood that the Government had implied clearly to Canadians that the duty would be abolished when a free trade agreement was reached with the United States.

I want the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown to be perfectly clear for the people of Canada, many of whom depend on softwood lumber, which is part of our largest industry, the forest industry, and say whether or not the Government told Canadians at that time that the 15 per cent duty would be removed when a free trade agreement was introduced. That is the first point on which I would like the Member to be very clear with Canadians.

Second is the point raised by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in a speech outside this place concerning adjustments for areas which are negatively affected by free trade. I would like to hear from the Parliamentary Secretary whether areas that depend on softwood lumber, some of which have been affected by the 15 per cent tax—I am sure the Hon. Member will grant me that—are going to qualify for the adjustment program to which the Prime Minister made a reference in a public speech.

Finally, there is a matter which concerns the accuracy of the record of the House. I am, therefore, somewhat reluctant to mention it but I feel it is essential to do so in the interests of clarification. I understood, although Hansard does not show, the Hon. Member to have stated that 14 mills have closed down as a result of the softwood lumber export tax. I do not wish to presuppose his analysis, as a result of something or another. If there were not 14, I would like the Member to say so and if possible tell us just how many there were.

I had the opportunity on November 17 to list some of the mills which had closed down and which, in the opinion of the management of the mills, had been forced to shut down largely because of the impact of the 15 per cent export tax. Those mills are the Terrace Bay mill; the Longlac mill; the Spruce Falls Power Paper mill; the Smooth Rock Falls mill; the Ainsworth Lumber Company in Savona, B.C.; the Kimberly-

There was a clear imputation of inefficiency left on the record by the Hon. Member. I want him to confirm it or to withdraw it. He said:

> Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member were fair and looked into the mill closings, of which I have a record here, he would learn that the mills which have closed down had been operating for quite a period of time at a loss. They were inefficient mills.

I just want to have the assurance of either a confirmation or a withdrawal of that statement, in addition to the clarifications mentioned previously.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has brought some new wrinkles into the original question which he raised in the House of Commons on October 14, 1987. I am glad that he finally got around to continuing his question so that I might briefly answer it.

To my knowledge there was nowhere that anyone at any time said that the free trade agreement, which we were negotiating with the United States, would wipe out this tax. This was a memorandum of understanding which was written back in 1986 and negotiated in late 1986. To my knowledge I do not know of anyone who said that the free trade agreement would wipe out this 15 per cent tax.

Let me refer to what has been said, since the free trade agreement was reached, by legal experts both in Canada and the United States. This matter came up again with the free trade agreement in the binational arbitration or appeal committee, and on a decision of Commerce it was indicated that it would be thrown out, that it would not happen. The Hon. Member knows that the memorandum of understanding was brought about because the United States softwood lumber industry had laid charges against Canada, the same charges which it laid in 1983. The same people made the decision based on the same facts. The only thing is that they made a 180-degree turn, a different decision. The decision at that time was against Canada.

What had changed? It was only one thing—the political protectionist winds in the United States. The Government negotiated a memorandum of understanding where, instead of a tax or a duty being placed in the United States and it getting the money, the money was kept in Canada and returned to the provinces that owned the resources. As a matter of fact, it was a considerable amount of money. That money could be used by the provinces at their discretion. It was our desire that they would use it to enhance the forestry industry with reforestation. If in fact mills were closed down, they could use the money for adjustment purposes to help the workers.

The Hon. Member talked about mills which had closed down. He said that there were some 14 or 15 mills. I know that the records are kept in the Department of the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew). I have seen the latest list recently, and I do not remember 14 or 15 mills. However, when we analyse those mills that have closed down, we find that it was not because of the 15 per cent export tax. That may have been a very convenient excuse for some of them to use, I do not think there is any question about that.

If he takes a look at the reasons they closed down, I think the Hon. Member will find that they closed down for a number of factors—adequacy of supply, corporate rationalization, and internal reallocation of manpower. All these decisions took place in the closures.

Let us take a look at the statistics, at what has happened in the export of softwood lumber in Canada. We have had a record in exporting softwood lumber around the world. In the United States it has dropped about 3 per cent to August 1987, but it has increased 25 per cent to Japan and 60 per cent to the European Economic Community so far this year.

Over all, our exports are up over last year so the softwood lumber industry is having a record year and doing extremely well. It has not lost its place but has gained. Ontario is exporting more this year to the U.S. than it did in 1985 by some 30 million board feet. The softwood lumber industry in Ontario has not been damaged. Our exports have increased. The opposition Parties are always saying we should broaden our exports. We are doing just that, both in Europe and Japan. The Hon. Member should be up on his feet congratulating the Government for the action it has taken in promoting exports around the world.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT—GOVERNMENT'S ALLEGED FEAR OF BACKLASH IN WEST—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION/ALLEGATIONS CONCERNING ACT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise in this debate to ask the Government when this House will be discussing Bill C-72, legislation dealing with the order of the House that proposes significant amendments to the Official Languages Act.

It will be remembered that on March 20, 1987, I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) whether the Government intended to come up with a firm, specific timeframe concerning appropriate amendments to the Official Languages Act.

That question was following up on the numerous promises made by this Government, the Prime Minister and his ministerial representatives. It will be remembered that in the November 5, 1984, Throne Speech, the Conservative Government was committed to enforcing equality of the official languages and recognized the need for progress within the shortest timeframe.

Also, the October 1st, 1986 Throne Speech told us that the Government would be tabling a bill to amend the Official Languages Act enacted by this House in 1969, in order to bring it in line with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms which, as we know, was dealt with and enacted in 1982.

After all those nice promises, Mr. Speaker, in March 1987, as I said, I asked the Government: What is your time frame, what are your proposals?

At that time we still had no actual legislation before us, but there was a certain degree of impatience at the official languages committee level, and some of the Members in this House suggested they were not only impatient with, but perhaps inconvenienced by the lack of action.

However, in June 1987, on June 25 to be more specific, the Government finally came up with a bill, and the three Parties in this House agreed that it was rather positive, that surely some improvements were needed, but generally we were all in support.

Since then, Mr. Speaker, that is since June 25, 1987, we have seen no action whatsoever. Why? There may be reasons. On March 20, when I asked my question, it will be remembered, I referred at that point to Conservative Members, and I had in mind the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Official Languages, the Conservative Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) who was reported in La Presse as having said that the delay was due, to quote him, to "barbarian and dynosaurian reactions" of some Members.

Whether that annoyed some people or not, my friend Charles Hamelin no longer chairs the Standing Committee on Official Languages. He was replaced. All I know is, he and many others in this House are concerned with the delay.

Mr. Speaker, things have to be done, and they must be done with all possible speed.

There are federal-provincial memorandums of agreement that have to be signed with the provinces by June 1988 on educational matters.

Hon. Members will recall that Bill C-72 includes a very important and very well-written preamble which provides, and I shall summarize it very quickly, that the official languages will be not only protected, but also promoted, which provision the Government would not entrench in the Meech Lake Accord. We were told at the time: "Do not worry, the Bill will correct this deficiency by including the obligation to promote for the federal Government." Federal-provincial agreements representing several hundred million dollars are scheduled to be signed before the end of June 1988. These agreements deal with education in the official languages and are important for the minority groups, French-speaking outside Quebec and English-speaking in Quebec, and for all those who take French or English as a second language in primary or secondary school. These agreements are supposed to be signed by next June. Federal-provincial negociations take a long time, Mr. Speaker! If the new Official Languages Act does not receive passage before the end of December or the beginning of January, how can the provincial and federal representatives at the bargaining table come to an agreement?

I suggest that it is important for the Government to announce its schedule, not only because of this very important question of the federal-provincial agreements, but also because of the fact that the experts have to prepare the related regulations after any bill is passed. The regulations related to Bill C-72 will have a very important impact on the behaviour of certain federal agencies and departments.

God knows, Mr. Speaker, that we have discussed this issue at length in this House and that the Committee on Official Languages regularly examines the inertia or lack of positive action on the part of certain departments and agencies in putting the Act in practice. They keep telling us to wait for the new legislation. Not much can be done for the time being because, after all, everything is going to change. Mr. Speaker, patience has its limits. I say to the Government: Do something! Get down to brass tacks! Bring Bill C-72 before the House for second reading so that we can get it over with, get down to the nitty-gritty, establish regulations, and tell the Departments, the agencies and all those people who are marking time to get moving, because something has to be done.

I want to ask the parliamentary secretary—I am not sure who is going to answer for the Government but, in any case, I want to ask the parliamentary secretary to give me the assurance that the Official Languages Bill, Bill C-72, is not being stonewalled by certain groups in the Conservative Caucus that are opposed to the new legislation, and I want him to give me the assurance that because of its concern for Canadian unity and for bringing in amendments that are absolutely essential, this Government will table the Bill for consideration between now and the end of December. I can give him the assurance that after thorough consideration, we in the Opposition will be prepared to expedite the passage of this Bill—I suppose that may sound rather surprising—and to offer our co-operation in helping the Government adopt this legislation as soon as possible, after, of course, giving due consideration to the amendments we wish to propose.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I am asking the Government this evening to give me the assurance that it intends to see to it the Bill is adopted soon.

• (1815)

[English]

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) alluded in the House during Question Period on June 2 to possible amendments to the Official Languages Act and the process initiated by the Government to renew Canada's linguistic policy. The Hon. Member wanted to know when the Bill would be introduced in Parliament and whether the Government's alleged delay stemmed from fear of some sort of backlash. I can assure him that that was not the case.

I was asked by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to provide further explanation in relation to the questions raised by the Member of Parliament about the future policy on official languages in Canada.

I may first say that following the establishment of the committee of Deputy Ministers, including representatives of Treasury Board, Secretary of State, and the Department of Justice, a great amount of work was done. The current official languages legislation as well as related policy and programs were studied in light of the evolution and needs of Canadian society and of the legal consequences of the new obligation prescribed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Ministers responsible for the renewal were regularly informed of the results of the undertaking.

Before adding final touches to the Bill, in-depth consultations were held in January and February with members of the groups representing the linguistic minority communities, the Commissioner of Official Languages and others closely interested in linguistic matters. These persons were witness to the progress that has been made.

Following these very fruitful discussions, some time was needed to look at the comments and proposals with all due care and attention. We pursued this work in a most diligent fashion in order to be able to get on with the renewal, and as the Hon. Member knows, the Bill was introduced in the House of Commons not long after his question in June, 1987.

The Hon. Member knows that the Government's schedule has been extremely busy. The House has been seized with many Bills over the last number of months since this Bill was introduced, including emergency legislation and other very important legislation, as this is.

I am sure the Hon. Member knows full well that the Government timetable is negotiated between all Parties in the House through our House Leaders. They meet regularly, as often as twice a week, to discuss the timetable. I suggest that the Hon. Member contact his House Leader and ask that this be placed on the agenda of the next House Leader's meeting so they can discuss a timetable as to when this Bill might be brought forward in the House.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY—SALE OF CANADIAN COMPANY TO AMERICAN CORPORATION/TRANSFER OF TECHNOLOGY

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, on November 19, I posed a question to the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) with respect to the sale of Cimtech, a small high tech subsidiary of Bata Industries Limited, to Microdynamic of Dallas, Texas.

At issue was the fact that Cimtech had received approximately $1.7 million in support of the development of two kinds of CAD-CAM technology consisting of Digiton and Dexkon technology for the purpose of designing shoes.

The first device is very unique because it permits the three dimensional duplication of shapes and forms. That is not just applicable to the shoe industry but to a number of other areas as well.

Since this research was supported by the IRAP program, we have a situation in which technology developed at Government cost is now being sold to a foreign interest which, under normal circumstances, is excluded by the conditions which pertain when an agreement is entered into between the Government and a recipient of an IRAP grant.

In posing the question to the Minister of State for Science and Technology we were informed that the technology and associated software would remain in Canada, but production would go to Dallas. In spite of the fact that we were told negotiations were still taking place, at least nine people were laid off by Cimtech in connection with this acquisition.

Of course, a number of questions arise. While the conditions do limit the transfer of the technology for a period of time, it does not directly address the issue of a sale to a corporation located in another country. As well, there is the specific question about what conditions have been implemented in respect of this acquisition and whether the manufacture as well as the technology and software remain in Canada. Obviously, it makes little sense for the Government to support the development of technology if that technology, which is presumably intended to produce jobs, is transferred to another country.

Incidentally, IRAP has produced quite a number of jobs at the comparatively small price of $1,500 per job. I should note that Cimtech has over a period of time sold some portions of its CAD system to other manufacturers, three in the United States, one in Japan, one in West Germany and one in Canada. So the serious question is raised of what utility is IRAP if the conditions imposed are not sufficiently secure to ensure that if we develop a technology, theoretically for the production of jobs, these jobs will not be ultimately in another country? What good does it do?

Of course, this raises the general question, what is to be the fate of Government supported technology development and the commodities produced therefrom in the event, under the new investment rules, it is acquired by, for example, U.S. firms? In particular, when one looks at the free trade agreement and finds vastly relaxed acquisition rules, are we not opening up a situation in which the Government invests in technology and the technology is sold to the United States or elsewhere for jobs to be produced there?

It occurs to me as well that there are two still broader issues that should be questioned. First, under the free trade agreement, is an IRAP grant to be considered a subsidy? Is it going to be an acceptable subsidy? And what regulations are going to obtain under that agreement in respect to government support for science and technology? Of course one of the great deficiencies we have to address with respect to the development of manufacturing in Canada is a vastly increased investment in science, research and technology. What are we going to do to protect its growth here? What mechanisms are going to be available to us? How is it going to be possible under the agreement to ensure that whatever technology, however supported, is not merely going to be transferred to the United States? These are quite significant questions, as I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary will appreciate. These are questions that must be addressed.

Let me reiterate and summarize the questions asked. What exactly is going to go on with respect to Cimtech, not only with respect to the technology, the software, but also the actual production of shoes? Are we not in danger of having supported technology development for the production of jobs, and those jobs, as a consequence of the acquisition by Microdynamics, being transferred to the United States?

In general terms, since there does not seem to be a specific rule or regulation applicable, how do we address the situation in which we make an investment to encourage the development of technology only to have that technology acquired by a U.S. firm when it is supported, for example, in this case by IRAP? How are such subsidies for the support of science and technology to continue under a free trade agreement in which subsidies, by and large, are to be removed? Finally, in general, how can government under the free trade agreement ensure science and technology development is going to occur in Canada within a context where all of it can be purchased, and the industries that produce it can be purchased, by the United States firms which will consequently deprive Canada not only of the technology but of the jobs that can be produced from that technology?

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) for raising this question, for it gives me an opportunity to reassure him and describe the guarantees provided under the Industrial Research Assistance Program—IRAP-to protect the interests of the country.

IRAP is a very effective $75 million program administered by the National Research Council of Canada, and $28 million more have been added for the next four years under the InnovAction program. It offers both technical advice and research funding to Canadian businesses, particularly small- and medium—sized. When research work is involved, IRAP pays only part of it.

When a company, including a multinational company, asks the NRC for support, it must ensure that the technology is marketed in Canada. Contribution agreements include several clauses to that effect. Generally, beneficiaries agree that the technology will be used in Canada for at least five years after the end of the research project and that they will have to seek permission from the NRC if they want to market the technology elsewhere. Also, it is indicated in the agreements that the NRC will consider granting an exception only if it is in the best interest of Canada to do so.

Cimtech was owned by a Canadian concern, namely Bata, and has received a grant for a research program for the development of computer software and hardware that could be helpful in the design of shoes; in other words, it was a computer assisted design project.

The project went very smoothly, but ultimately Bata decided not to build the new computer assisted design work stations. Rather, it sold Cimtech to a Texas firm, namely Microdynamics, in return for shares of the latter corporation. Microdynamics is a world leader in the area of computer assisted design work stations for shoes and also has expertise in the area of clothes computer assisted design.

Officials from the NRC have been in contact with the three companies from the start. They have ensured that everybody understand the demands of Canada regarding the development of this technology that was made possible by funding from IRAP. As was agreed, the NRC will examine the matter together with Microdynamics before any final decision is taken as to the production site.

Althought the matter is not yet completely settled, the broad parameters have now been defined and illustrate the advantages yielded by IRAP in the Canadian interest. Cimtech will remain as a distinct subsidiary located in Canada. Its software capacity will be increased and in this area it will take up some of the work now being done in Texas. Cimtech will continue to produce some hardware although the bulk of this activity will now be done in the United States. When customers buy work stations, they buy both hardware and software and Cimtech benefits from the sale of its computer programs. In other words, Cimtech's strong point—its software capacity—will be increased and its capacity to sell that software will be considerably increased thanks to its relations with an efficient hardware manufacturer with an international sales network. The software is not a small addition to these work stations, it is the very heart of the project. So the number of jobs will increase at Cimtech.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, even though the Hon. Member is extremely concerned about the effects of the free trade agreement on the IRAP program, one only has to consider the other side of the issue to see that the IRAP will be beneficial to Canadian industries in enabling them to better compete with their competitors in the United States.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 82—TRANSPORTATION INDUSTRY

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau) moved:

That this House condemn the Government for its destructive influence on the Canadian transportation industry by its impractical and slavish adherence to the ideological myth of deregulation and its inept trade negotiations with the United States, in particular, through:

(1) deregulation of the trucking industry, giving U.S. truckers open access to Canadian markets while 43 heavily regulated American states deny Canadian truckers the same advantage;

(2) introduction in the railway industry of "Competitive Rail Line Rate" provisions allowing American railways free access to Canadian markets while denying reciprocal arrangements for Canadian railways;

(3) failing to seek and obtain in the trade agreement equitable treatment in the United States for Canadian airlines; and

(4) abandoning its legislation on the Canadian coasting trade and failing to obtain any benefits in the trade agreement for Canadian maritime industries.

He said: Mr. Speaker, when the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement was concluded at the beginning of October, not many people wondered about the impact it would have on Canada's transportation industry. It is clear, however, that as far as transportation is concerned, Canada loses across the board. In fact, we have given our trucking industry away to the Americans through our massive deregulation in this country. The competitive line rates mechanism in Bill C-18 on deregulation of the transportation industry in Canada gives U.S. railway companies broad access to the Canadian market.

Furthermore, the air transportation industry, where we could have negotiated certain cabotage rights, has been excluded outright from the Free Trade Agreement. And lastly, after making so many concessions in the other sectors, we were turned down flatly when it came to shipping.

In fact, our marine industries are getting strictly nothing out of the free trade talks. As far as we of the Liberal Party of Canada are concerned, the transportation sector is losing across the board. That is why today, we tabled this motion condemning the Conservative Government.

First, I would like to talk about marine transportation. This is what the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) had to say in an interview with the Canadian press a few days ago.

[English]

He said he's disappointed that the terms of the transportation annex attached to the free-trade agreement don't go far enough in freeing transportation services from protective controls.

Do I have to remind Hon. Members that the Conservative Government's stated motive for entering into this treaty was, after all, to buy exemptions from protectionist U.S. law, an objective that has not been achieved at all?

By reserving the right to review the provisions on marine shipping in the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, the U.S. Senate caught the Canadian Minister of Transport with his pants down. On September 23, the U.S. Senate Rules Committee approved a decision to amend the fast track formula that allowed the U.S. Senate to either accept or reject, but not amend, the Agreement. The U.S. Senate will now be allowed to amend the Agreement's provisions on marine shipping, but only those provisions. Now that fifty-six U.S. Senators and 253 members of Congress have signed resolutions asking that any provisions liable to harm U.S. merchant shipping be taken out of the Canada-U.S. Agreement, it seems their goal is to persuade the U.S. Administration to remove all provisions concerning coastal trade if it wants the rest of the Agreement to stand.

Judging by the second draft of the annex received last week, the Reagan Administration is taking this measure very seriously. It is therefore unfortunate that our Minister of Transport had to admit last Friday that he could do nothing. In fact, the latest document on the transportation industry has revealed that Canadian carriers will be excluded from any new marine shipping program, such as supplies for the U.S. Government and preferential commodities.

The Canadian marine industry had decided to challenge the Jones Act of 1920, the merchant marine legislation which regulates practically every aspect of the marine industry in the United States. The Canadian shipping companies were quite disappointed when they realized that the Free Trade Agreement would not result, as they had hoped, in the drawing-up of a "Jones Act" for the whole North American continent which, according to Mr. Fred Pitre, Vice President of the Canada Steamship Lines, would have combined the openness and flexibility of the Canada Shipping Act with the national security guarantees of the Jones Act.

Speaking on behalf of the Dominion Marine Association, its president, Mr. Norman Hall, would want, in the absence of a global shipping free trade deal, the Canadian negotiators to at least consider the issue of discriminatory investment practices in the United States. An American marine company may now invest up to 100 per cent in a Canadian company and use a foreign built ship to transport goods from one Canadian port to another. On the other hand, a Canadian investor may purchase only 25 per cent of an American shipping firm and must use only ships built in the United States. The competition, therefore, is not fair and is totally disadvantageous to the Canadian economy. That is a blatant disparity which will be confirmed by the Reagan-Mulroney Agreement.

On the other hand, it would be to the advantage of Canadian shipyards and their employees that the Canadian coasting trade be protected just as the American merchant marine is under the Jones Act. Mr. Clarke, President of the Shipyards Association, for fear that a relaxation of the protective provisions would open Canada's door to ships built abroad, wishes to see the Canadian legislation provide the same protection as its American counterpart. Finally, the Seafarers International Union and the Merchant Service Guild, unions which represent some 5,000 Canadian sailors, share these views.

The two unions fear that the Canadian coasting trade will be taken by storm by ships bearing new names, and operated by American equipment and crews.

While the American marine industry was exerting considerable pressure to prevent our merchant marine from gaining access to the domestic market of the United States, the Government of Canada introduced Bill C-52 providing that the coasting trade in Canadian waters would be reserved to Canadian ships.

On the one hand, when the Bill was before the House, we underlined the fact that allowing ships under foreign flags to take part in shipping activities in Canadian costal waters because of a lack of Canadian ships constituted a dangerous concession to foreign, and especially to American shippers.

On the other hand, it was perhaps even more appropriate to state as we did that the Conservative Government had picked a very bad time to propose amendments to the Canada Shipping Act and that it should have dealt with this issue much earlier during its mandate, in 1985 or 1986. A few weeks later, the Minister of Transport confirmed our views when he ordered that the hearings of the Legislative Committee on Bill C-52 be suspended until completion of the Free Trade Agreement.

The problem is now very serious. According to the allegations of the American shippers to the effect that any new legislation or amendment to existing statutes should provide national treatment for the other country, if Bill C-52 receives passage after ratification of the Free Trade Agreement, Canada would have to grant national treatment to American shipping companies.

That is the problem. Thus, through its neglect, the Conservative Government has treatened the plausibility of a reform of Canadian shipping legislation based on national prerogatives and is now running the risk of letting the American companies take over our shipping industry because of its delay in providing adequate legislation for our own industry.

Last Friday, when replying to my questions, the Minister said that the United States had refused to budge on certain points. One of these points was the shipping industry. At the very worst, the status quo would be maintained. I say that the status quo is unacceptable. It represents a total failure on the part of the Minister of Transport, who is well known for his jokes, but it is clear today that the Canadian shipping industry is not laughing. It is horrified by the incompetence of this Minister.

The crux of the problem resides in the fact that the text of the first schedule and of the later version could provide easier access to Canada in the future for American coasting vessels while the Canadian shipping industry could not have access to the American market.

There is no need to remind the House that the Canadian shipping industry is entirely owned by Canadians, and it has been stupidly sacrificed to get a Free Trade Agreement with the United States. This is most unfortunate since, of all Canadian industries, it is the best suited to compete with the Americans. While our shipping industry costs absolutely nothing to Canadian taxpayers, the American industry is strongly subsidized, receiving some $270 million a year.

Following a Free Trade Agreement with the United States, there would be a serious imbalance: First, the Americans will be able to own Canadian companies while the reverse will be impossible. Second, the Americans will be able to sell duty free in Canada ships built for them, while it will be impossible under any conditions to sell Canadian built ships in the United States. Third, ships sailing under the Stars and Stripes will be able to request, and in some cases obtain, exemptions from the Canadian legislation to carry out their operations in Canada, and once more, the reverse will be impossible.

[English]

No wonder Mr. Norman Hall, President of the Dominion Marine Association, asked that negotiations on transportation issues in the Canada-U.S. free trade talks be suspended for 90 days because the current wording is too lopsided in favour of the Americans. Mr. Hall warned that elimination of the duty over a 10-year period as proposed in the free trade agreement would end up wiping out Canadian companies. It would mean Americans will set up shipping companies in Canada with duty free U.S. built 1,000 foot ships offering cheaper rates because of their size compared to the smaller 750-foot Canadian built vessels. Trade on the Great Lakes between Canada and the U.S. is now 90 per cent controlled by Canadian shipping companies, but that will change rapidly in the future in favour of the Americans.

• (1020)

Mr. Hall also fears the free trade deal will negate the effects of the coastal trade Bill, an amendment to the Canada Shipping Act, which would extend the exclusive right of Canadian vessels' access to work offshore up to 200 miles from the current 12 miles. The free trade deal will ultimately give American supply vessels to the oil rigs in those waters too. It is now clear to me that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), our captain, has abandoned the ship.

Now I should like to comment briefly on rail transport. During the hearings on Bill C-18, both CN and CP expressed deep concern over the consequences which the implementation of competitive rail line rates might have on their financial viability in the coming years. Pursuant to Bill C-18, a captive shipper might ask a carrier to take goods to a junction point where he might benefit from a cheaper rate offered by another carrier who would transport such goods to their final delivery point.

The rail companies consider that competitive rail line rates are the most serious threat to their own financial viability. In their testimony before the Standing Committee on Transport the management of both companies raised objections to this open-door competitiveness and to the option Canadian shippers would thus have to deal directly with American rail companies. The way they saw it, such conditions would entail a sharp decline in revenue, and that in turn would make railroads increasingly dependent on the Americans and, more particularly, force them to slash capital expenditures just to stay in business.

Responding to such concerns, the Government went along with a suggestion made by the Hon. Member for Lachine—an amendment which, after review, would allow for partly or totally suspending competitive rail line rates. The amendment, a new clause, reads as follows in Bill C-18:

> Where, as a result of a review conducted pursuant to section 266 or 267, it is found in a report submitted under either of those sections that the financial viability of Canadian railway companies has been seriously affected by the operation of sections 134 to 142, the Governor in Council may, by order, suspend the operation of those sections, either entirely or with respect to such kinds of traffic as are specified in the order, whereupon those sections cease to be in force, entirely or with respect to the specified kinds of traffic, during such period as is specified in the order or until the order is revoked.

At the time we commended the Government for its decision even though we did not feel it went far enough, for we looked at it as being a constructive measure on the part of a government which, throughout the whole debate on deregulation of transportation in Canada, had seldom abandoned its unflexible and ideological approach. The Reagan-Mulroney Agreement would seem to jeopardize the continued existence of this modest guarantee. Should a transportation annex along the lines of the two other texts we have examined so far be implemented, it seems U.S. railway companies would be exempted from the provision on competitive line rates according to Section B of Article 11(2), which reads as follows:

> In case of amendments to, or subsequent adoption of measures pursuant to existing measures, which would increase differences or discrimination against national enterprises of the parties, persons and companies of the other party must be given national treatment in the activity sectors suffering additional discrimination or different treatment.

If the final text contained such provisions, any study concluding that the viability of Canadian railway companies is in serious jeopardy because of competition from American railways as a result of competitive line rates, would in itself be an exercise in futility. In this kind of situation, suspending competitive line rates would actually mean applying a new measure in line with existing measures, which might increase differences or discrimination against the parties' nationals and require the application of national treatment to individuals and companies of the other party.

This is at complete variance with the official position taken in Ottawa, according to which all measures contained in Canadian statutes will remain unchanged. Once again, the Canadian Government has caved in to the Americans, and our conclusion must be that the Canadian railways will lose out under the Reagan-Mulroney Agreement.

In concluding, I would like to comment briefly on the trucking question, where again it is quite clear the Government has abdicated its responsibility, under pressure from the powerful American lobby. We know, since we asked the Minister of State (Transport) (Mrs. Vézina) whether Canadian truckers would be protected under the Free Trade Agreement. This week the Minister of State (Transport) was unable to give us a straight answer: "Yes, the truckers will be protected". She beat endlessly around the bush, without giving us any formal assurances in this respect.

I must say we are convinced, considering the eagerness of the American Trucking Association to see this Free Trade Agreement finalized, that the winners are going to be the U.S. trucking companies.

Interestingly, U.S. public opinion originally thought that the Agreement would give U.S. air carriers and truckers access to the Canadian market, and that in exchange, Canadian merchant shipping would have access to trade in U.S. coastal and inland waters. Now it seems the American shipping industry has thrown a wrench in the works, and that Canada is losing across the board as far as transportation is concerned. It loses in the trucking industry, it loses in the shipping industry, and it is losing in the railway sector. The only sector where it has not lost out, and only because that particular sector was completely excluded from the free trade talks, is in the air transportation industry. However, it can hardly be said to be making progress either. As we know, the present situation in the air transportation sector clearly favours the U.S. companies, at the expense of our Canadian companies.

I may say, in concluding, that the Conservative Government has failed to do its duty in the transportation industry. It is too bad that a Government that has two Ministers—one Minister of Transport and one Minister of State—to defend the interests of the transportation industry in Canada, has been unable to achieve better results. Here we have two Ministers I judge to be totally incompetent, and who should hand in their resignations as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. McDermid: As usual, I enjoyed listening to the Hon. Member speaking through his hat. He always gets his material and authoritative sources from the Americans. He spoke today of the latest version of the transport annex although it was an agreed upon annex. He knows full well that the annex from which he was quoting and which he is trying to convince the Canadian people is the final version was released by the Americans. It is their version of the annex but has not been agreed to yet. It is totally false to say that that is a factual document which indicates what will happen in the transportation annex.

We all know that the United States uses the tactic of releasing things to the public early. They enjoy watching the Liberal and New Democratic Parties grab on to these things. We saw it with some so-called secret briefing notes that were prepared two weeks before the agreement was signed. Of course, the Opposition read them with great fanfare in the House, but they did not bear any resemblance to the agreement that was signed.

The same is true in this case, with negotiations in public and using tactics like releasing the text of the annex. Our approach to negotiation is not to lay out our cards to the public, because it simply does not work. The Hon. Member knows that because he has been involved in negotiations. He did not negotiate in public when he had that responsibility.

He also knows that we have a sectoral advisory committee on transportation which is kept up to date and very much involved in what is happening with these negotiations.

The point I want to make is that the Liberals and New Democrats always take information from the United States as their authoritative source.

Mr. Boudria: Who is kowtowing to them?

Mr. McDermid: No one is kowtowing to anyone at all. As Canadians come to understand the agreement, it is obvious that support is increasing.

We have not kowtowed to anyone. As a matter of fact, I believe that we had in Simon Reisman the top negotiator anywhere in negotiating this agreement with the United States. The Liberals and the NDP attack the man all the time, but he negotiated a pretty good agreement 22 years ago, which the Liberals will admit, and he will not see that agreement jeopardized. The fact is that he has negotiated a very good agreement for Canada.

The opposition Parties continually quote the Americans and talk about the annex as if it had been approved and was in place. Why do they keep doing this? Why do they not listen to Canadians? Why do they not wait until they see the annex before they make these unfounded criticisms?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I will tell the Parliamentary Secretary that the only information we are able to obtain is the information that is made public by the American authorities. The Government has been secretive about this deal. It is absolutely unbelievable. What does the Conservative Government have to hide?

Mr. McDermid: Nothing.

Mr. Ouellet: Why do you not release your documents like the Americans are doing?

Mr. McDermid: Because it has not been decided on.

Mr. Ouellet: The Conservatives have made a bad deal and they are trying to keep it secret because they know the public will realize how bad it is if it comes out.

Mr. McDermid: Not true.

Mr. Ouellet: The Government is the lowest in the polls. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) needed something because it was a question of life or death for him. He absolutely needs this deal. It was the only thing that could possibly salvage his political future, so he made the deal with the Americans.

It is a terrible deal. During the last 20 minutes I dealt specifically with the transportation field and how it is clearly a bad deal for that sector.

The Parliamentary Secretary totally avoided the discussion on transportation. He said it is a good deal and we should not rely on the American documentation because it is not yet finalized.

Mr. McDermid: Exactly.

Mr. Ouellet: Are the negotiations continuing or not? We were told that the negotiations had been terminated.

Mrs. Sparrow: That is not true.

Mr. Ouellet: It is not true? So we do not have a deal, then. What are you bragging about? Do we or do we not have a deal?

On the one hand we have a deal, but the negotiations are not finished. What are the Conservatives talking about? They are trying to mislead the population. Either you have a deal or not. If you do not have a deal, you are misleading the Premiers by trying to make them believe that the deal has been concluded.

There is no doubt that this is a terrible deal in the field of transportation. Neither the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) nor the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Vézina) have been able to articulate what is good for the Canadian transportation domain. On the contrary, the Minister of Transport said that he is disappointed because he has not been able to obtain what he has been trying to achieve.

We know that he already gave up a lot in the railway sector and trucking areas in order to obtain a breakthrough with the abolition of the Jones Act.

There is no doubt that the Parliamentary Secretary does not know what he is talking about when he suggests that people support the deal. The Dominion Marine Association, the Canadian Trucking Association, and the Canadian Bus Association have all come out strongly against the free trade agreement as it has been presented to them so far, and they are asking the Government to suspend the drafting of the annex for 90 days in order for them to have an input in trying to change it.

Mr. McDermid: They have an input.

Mr. Ouellet: If they want to change it, it is certainly because it is no good.

I want the Minister of State for Transport to try to answer the very specific questions I asked earlier and to show us if she knows something about transport.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, as we have just witnessed from this exchange, when it comes to talking through one's hat, the Parliamentary Secretary is a master and champion.

My question to the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) relates to statements made by R.J. Ritchie, Vice-President of CP Rail, who was quoted as saying that competitive line rates are tantamount to one-way free trade with the Americans. Mr. I.B. Scott, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of CP Rail, was quoted as saying that his firm would lose $1.25 billion in revenue over the next five years. Finally, Norman Hall, President of the Dominion Marine Association, was quoted as saying a couple of days ago that the elimination of the 25 per cent duty on 1,000-foot ships would end up "wiping out Canadian companies". Would the Member for Papineau confirm and elaborate on these quotations?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear that half a million Canadian workers are in danger—

Mr. McDermid: Here is the fear-mongering again.

Mr. Ouellet: —from inappropriate gestures on the part of the Conservative Government to give away the Canadian trucking industry—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Tell the truth, André.

Mr. Ouellet: —to give away the Canadian railway industry to the Americans in order to obtain an agreement with the Americans.

Mr. McDermid: He has no faith in Canadians. Typical Liberals.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I want you to realize that despite the noise and reaction of Conservative Members, it is not me who is saying this. It is Canadian businessmen and the transport industry who are saying clearly that the action of the Conservative Government jeopardizes their industry. Clearly that is what it is. Therefore, I want to confirm what the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) said, that, indeed, through the competitive line rates, the American railways are going to get an unjust advantage over the Canadian railways.

• (1040)

I see it is very painful for the Conservatives when we get to specific points. It is painful for them to have to talk specifically about the free trade deal. They would rather make those nice long speeches on the future of the country. But the future of the country is in relation to jobs and security of employment in some sectors. The responsible people in the transport industry are saying that because of this Government thousands of jobs will be lost to the Americans.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Minister of State (Transport) (Mrs. Vézina).

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted with the opportunity the Opposition is giving the House today to consider the question of free trade and the transportation industry. At last the Opposition has decided to drop all pretences. In fact, I think genuine congratulations are in order here.

In the motion before the House today, the Opposition has decided to come clean.

During the past week, they have been trying to scare our partners in the transportation industry and the general public. However, the wording of today's motion is a clear indication they do not really want to talk about free trade. They want to challenge the whole deregulation process started by this Government. I would like to get back to that in a few moments. First of all, I would like to reiterate my congratulations, and I do so as I would to any other person taking part in a discussion on a committee, with a minimum of intellectual honesty.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to stress the very ironic dimensions of what we have seen in this House during the past week. I must admit it is not very easy to understand the position the Liberal Party has taken on free trade. Its ideology on this very important issue is certainly not crystal clear. Once I finally managed to make some sense of their abstruse statements, I reached the conclusion that they were against the Agreement.

However, during the past week, the Opposition has been indignant about the fact that no substantial progress had been made in our free trade talks with United States with respect to the transportation sector. Mr. Speaker, I am looking for a modicum of logic in their position and I cannot find it. I keep telling myself there must be some consistency in their political thinking. But although I keep trying, I have not been able to find any. Unless, Mr. Speaker, this whole uproar is nothing but a lot of crocodile tears. In either case, Mr. Speaker, I find the situation opposite sad and depressing.

Mr. Speaker, in the past few days the Minister of Transport has said repeatedly in the House that we had not yet signed the agreement on transportation, that our negotiators were still working on it and that the transportation industry did not have to worry about its interests being sacrificed. It seems to me that is a as clear a statement as you can get from the Minister of Transport. There is certainly no room for ambiguity here.

However, Hon. Members opposite will not hear of it. They put their fingers in their ears and keep repeating all kinds of nonsense.

As I said earlier, today the Opposition has come clean. It is not challenging free trade but the whole deregulation of the transportation industry we started and which was put into effect by the National Transportation Act, 1986, and the Motor Vehicle Transport Act, 1987, Bill C-18 and Bill C-19.

With his usual sense of style and proverbial courtesy, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) was suggesting last Tuesday that since I was so new to Transport, they should cut my pay.

Mr. Speaker, the most accurate statement made in the House during the past week was that I was indeed new to the Department of Transport and that I had brought with me some fresh ideas.

Fully absorbed in the activities of my other departments, I had not had much time to immerse myself in these issues. I should like to remind him, however, that as a representative of a distant riding, I have a gut knowledge of their importance. In my remarks, therefore, I want to bear witness to a situation.

I am amazed at the quality of the legislation which my Government has introduced in this most vital area of our economy.

Regulations were about to choke our transport industry under the previous Government,—the only one in the history of mankind which had managed to lose money with a lottery,—and we were about to sink. When we came into office 1984, we changed all that.

I refer Members opposite to our basic documents, including Freedom to Move, where we clearly defined the principles behind our action: First, less Government interference. This is a concept which the Liberals and to an ever greater degree the NDPs will never be able to understand. The type of Canada they foresee would be an enormous bureaucratic structure where the Government would control everything in all areas of activities and where, year after year, it would do its utmost to increase the deficit.

The second principle involved in Freedom to Move: Greater reliance on competition and wider range of services to the public.

Again, two notions to which the Opposition is simply impervious. Why on earth should we be concerned about Canadian consumers? Why should we care about Canadian corporations which need efficient transportation services to remain competitive, to preserve existing jobs and create new ones?

Mr. Speaker, the callousness of our colleagues opposite to the needs of consumers is nothing new. I refer for instance to the urea-formaldehyde foam insulation problem. The previous Government spent over six years to try and solve the UFFI problem Canadian consumers were confronted with. At the time, the Liberal Government had done everything in its power to deny is responsibility in this regard. I am told that the UFFI case should be listed in the Guinness Book of Records because it is the one which required the most time to be settled and remained for the longest period before the courts. We, on the contrary, intend to pay very much attention to consumers. We take care of consumers and listen to their needs.

The third principle behind our action is our will to limit restrictive regulation and red tape. Again, this is a principle which is entirely foreign to the daily concerns of people opposite. But we are concerned, because the public expects this type of action.

The Government has incorporated these principles in Bills C-18 and C-19, and I am proud to be part of such a Government. The Opposition is going nowhere with its rearguard fights on legislation already adopted.

I should like now to deal with the various questions raised this week by the Opposition in the area of transport and free trade. Indeed, they are summarized quite well in this motion.

First, Mr. Speaker, you do not have to be Einstein to realize that more trade between Canada and the United States will mean an increased movement of goods, and by extension, more transport. It is therefore obvious that one of the indirect effects of the Free Trade Agreement can only be very beneficial for the transport industry, as well as for all Canadians and all our industries.

Let us now look at each mode of transport seperately, starting with trucking. The Hon. Member for Papineau stated this week that the American transport companies would have unlimited access to the Canadian market while the boundaries of 43 American states would remain closed to our trucking companies. This is unaccurate, Mr. Speaker. Even after looking carefully through all the files of Transport Canada, we were unable to find a single case of a Canadian company which would have been denied the priviledge of operating a branch in one of those states.

Mr. Speaker, the Opposition conjures up ghosts and becomes convinced that they are real, then it begins to get scared and to scare the Canadian public. Mr. Speaker, this is ridiculous, intolerable and unacceptable.

The truth is that all Canadian transport companies have benefitted enormously from the deregulation of trucking in the United States. Over 1,000 Canadian companies now operate with enormous success in the United States. Coming back from Quebec City yesterday, I travelled with an owner who told me how effective our policy is and how he had enjoyed unrestricted access to the United States for several years.

Let us now look at railway transport. The Opposition makes a lot out of a statement by Mr. Ritchie, Vice President of the Canadian Pacific, to the effect that we have implemented a one way free trade system with the United States which benefits only the Americans. Of course, the comment of Mr. Ritchie has nothing to do with the Free Trade Agreement, and everything to do with Section 134 of Bill C-18 on competitive line rates. Mr. Ritchie prefered the lack of competition and captive markets, which is easy to explain. The only problem is that the ones to suffer would be the Canadian workers. We have opened up this sector to the Canadian companies because it was in our best interests to do so. I am very sorry if that does not please everyone. As a Government, we were simply unwilling to sacrifice the interests of the many to please Mr. Ritchie.

Let us now talk about maritime transport. I have a double interest in that sector. First, my region, the lower Saint-Lawrence and the Gaspe peninsula, has always been associated with the sea. Second, when I was with the Department of Supply and Services, I became quite familiar with the difficulties of the Canadian shipbuilding industry.

The maritime situation of our country raises many challenges, including the provision of efficient and economical shipping services to support Canadian trading activities. In 1985, over 325 million tons of goods were moved by ship in Canada, and this volume increased to just under 335 million tons in 1986. Of the $115 billion of goods exported last year, over 20 per cent were shipped by sea.

Protectionism is a threat to international maritime trade and to the position of Canada on world markets. Mr. Speaker, our Government is committed to promote free competition in international maritime transport, in spite of the problems caused by protectionism.

This is why, in the Free Trade Agreement negociations, we have tried to convince the Americans to amend their coasting trade regulations under the famous Jones Act. Under this Americam law any vessel plying American coastal waters must have been built in the U.S., be over 75 per cent owned by American interests, and bear the American flag.

As protectionist measures go, these are hard to beat, and I am sure all Hon. Members would agree. As it stands now the American maritime sector is fully protected. Our situation in Canada is different. Among other things, we do not force Canadian shippers to buy vessels built in Canadian shipyards. They are free to buy abroad, but then there is a 25 per cent levy.

Sad though it may be, the Americans were adamant and would not make any concession. I deplore this fact, but that is the way it is. They are sticking with the Jones Act, and that is their right. We too Canadians had non-negotiable sectors, and Members opposite are fully aware of them. One of the very legitimate concerns of the Canadian shipbuilding industry is of course the fact that under the free trade agreement all tariffs between Canada and the United States will disappear over the next ten years, and that includes the 25 per cent rate applicable to foreign-built vessels.

Because we share the industry's concern, we have announced that the Government will not sign an agreement which might prove to be unfavourable to the national interest. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) and other Ministers have so assured the House on a number of occasions.

In addition, as the Minister of Transport explained last Tuesday, Bill C-52 on coasting trade and commercial marine activities makes it possible for us to offer even more protection to Canadian maritime interests and our own shipbuilding industry. We will not hesitate to use that mechanism should it ever become necessary to do so. Mr. Speaker, I would remind you that the Bill was adopted last May 1, and it is aimed at rationalizing and updating the process of eligibility for coastal trade. Regulatory procedures will be streamlined so that owners of Canadian vessels will no longer have to secure a coastal trade permit.

The Bill also restricts coastal trade activities to vessels flying the Canadian flag and goes on to define the activities covered by these provisions as well as the extent of it application. More specifically, henceforth Canada's coastal trade regulations will apply 200 instead of 12 miles offshore as a result of Bill C-52. A system of exemptions is in place to ensure that adequate maritime services respond to the needs of Canadians.

The Bill has gone through second reading and been referred to committee, and we intend to complete its study and, indeed, have it adopted.

Mr. Speaker, to sum up the situation concerning the liberalization of trade with respect to maritime transport services, I would say there has been no progress. Given these circumstances—and since we cannot even dismiss the possibility of still more protectionism in years to come—the least we expect is to achieve a status quo so that we might resume discussions on free coastal trade at a later date. That is the very difficult question we will have to settle in the near future. Again I can assure the House that we will act in the best interests of Canada as well as those of the maritime transport and shipbuilding industries.

Hopefully, Mr. Speaker, I have managed to convince my colleagues opposite that their fears are groundless. This week the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) commented on my being a young Minister of Transport. Truth to tell, Mr. Speaker, I hope that in months and years to come I will be able to maintain the challenging approach which has been the hallmark of our Government since September 1984. May God spare me from the opposition to change and the resignation of my colleagues on the other side!

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PROTECT BILINGUALISM

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): As I indicated yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I am quite concerned about the impact of the Free Trade Agreement on the Quebec Charter of the French language, and so are a lot of Francophones both in Quebec and the rest of Canada, I can assure you. Quebec's French Language Bureau has provided examples within the European Common Market where France has been obliged to accept products with labelling in Italian only.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the Conservative Government to make sure that the final text states... If the Government has provided for environmental protection, it should see to it that the final text states that in Canada, the English and French languages have equal status and that Quebec has a right to legislate on language issues.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

SYMPOSIUM ON DIALOGUE BETWEEN PARLIAMENTARIANS AND SCIENTISTS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, as you know, leading scientists, scholars, and engineers are today taking part in a symposium with parliamentarians on Parliament Hill. The symposium is organized with the assistance and help of the Royal Society of Canada and the Committee of Parliamentarians, Scientists, and Engineers, at the request of an all-Party group of parliamentarians.

The symposium entitled "Towards an Effective Dialogue between Parliamentarians and Scientists", consists of nine workshops on Canada's changing population, new developments and opportunities in the science of materials, global change, human impact on the environment, the impact of science on the North, space technology, resource management, the AIDS epidemic, the future of biotechnology, and environment and sustainable development.

The Speakers of both Houses of Parliament are supporting this event. In addition to invited speakers, and representatives of many national scientific and engineering organizations, the event is open to the media.

We congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, and with you the Royal Society of Canada and COPSE for making this initiative possible. We hope it will take place every year to facilitate understanding between scientists and parliamentarians for the benefit of Canadians and the global community.

IMPORTANCE OF SHARING EXPERTISE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the Department of National Defense is about to award a contract for the construction of six frigates.

According to the main bidder there should be only one builder with expertise in frigate construction because of lower costs. That is not true! A monopoly situation is always more expensive.

Faced with such a huge order, the main bidder would no longer control its direct or fixed costs. The Government could be forced to give in. A mere 2 per cent budget over run for all the frigates already cancels out the so-called additional costs of $79 million per frigate non built in St-John. Only one frigate building shipyard would mean: a quite inadequate defense industrial base; a total lack of competition for the main marine construction works; an obvious deficiency in marine repair industrial capacity, especially in case of a conflict; an impossibility to maintain at least two alternative sources of shipbuilding, with one located in a protected area in time of conflict, along the St Lawrence River.

That is the reason why this expertise must be shared.

PETRO-CANADA

ETHANOL FUEL DECISION—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, a short time ago Petro-Canada announced that it would not be proceeding with the sale of fuel produced from a possible ethanol plant in Dawson Creek, British Columbia. This has discouraged farmers on both sides of the Alberta border in the Peace country. I wish to make the statement that this is not the time to quit on this issue. In fact, it is the time to press ahead.

Both the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) and myself have been very concerned with this issue. The Government needs to look at it as a high priority. The Government needs to consider a number of things. First there is the value of the fuel itself, and the problems that come with it, but, more important, the advantages that I think exist.

Second, the Government needs to look at the impact it will have on agriculture, both in terms of the use of grain in the area, and also in terms of cash flow for our farmers.

Third, the Government must pay particular attention to research that has already been conducted in this area in countries such as Brazil, and by companies such as Ford, that I understand are experiencing considerable success.

Fourth, the Government must consider the fact that it is mandating removal of lead from fuels, and it has to consider the option of using methanol in that product.

Now is the time for action; it is not the time to sit back and rest.

SHIPBUILDING

DETERMINATION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian shipbuilding industry lingers in a state of crisis dating back to the early 1980s.

The former Liberal Government responded to industry demands in 1984 with a Task Force on Deep Sea Shipping. Appointed in April, 1984, the majority of this task force, chaired by Professor Gunnar Sletmo of Montreal, "recommended that the federal Government not take steps towards the establishment of a core deep sea fleet under Canadian flag". Two members, presidents of Canadian seafaring unions, dissented from this misguided recommendation.

Shipyard workers are now hearing talk about another task force on shipbuilding. A Conservative Government that has stated no policy on shipbuilding knows that it will soon be facing the voters, and it too wants to buy time with talk. It is particularly anxious to do so, because it knows that its vaunted trade deal with the United States contains nothing for the shipbuilding industry.

Canadian shipbuilders become more and more frustrated with the Liberals and the Conservatives. They speak fine words in opposition, but they refuse to develop policies when they form the Government.

Canadian shipbuilders look more and more strongly to the New Democratic Party to form the Government, and to act on our determination to make shipbuilding one of the ways to achieve full employment in a prosperous new Canada.

GREY CUP PROGNOSTICATION—PROPHECY OF ARGOS' VICTORY

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow is an exciting day in Canadian history. Tomorrow is the day that the Argos will win the Grey Cup!

After the eastern final last week I wanted to discuss it in the House, but I fought with myself, not wanting to boast about this great team.

I have lived in the Toronto area all my life, but didn't realize that the Argos could put together such a great team.

I couldn't keep silent any longer. I've tried, but to no avail! I must rise in my place and announce to the Members of the House and to all Canadians that tomorrow is the day. Tomorrow is the day that the Toronto Argonauts will win the Grey Cup!

NEED TO TAKE INTO ACCOUNT SECTION 6(2) OF REGULATION ON PACKAGING AND LABELLING CONSUMER PRODUCTS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, Section 6(2) of the Consumer Packaging and Labelling Regulations provides that all information required to be shown on the label of a prepackaged product shall be shown in both official languages.

In order to ensure that those regulations will not be considered as a barrier to trade or a non-tariff barrier, if and when a free trade agreement is signed with the United States, it is imperative that this Government include in the agreement a provision recognizing those regulations as an integral part of our Canadian cultural identity.

A possible claim under the dispute settlement mechanism would jeopardize the efforts made by previous Governments to further the cause of bilinguism in Canada.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—SUPPORT FROM STORMONT—DUNDAS INDUSTRIES

Mr. Norman Warner (Stormont—Dundas): Mr. Speaker, the citizens of Stormont—Dundas look forward to the new free trade agreement. The chemical producers in my riding are unanimous in their support for this agreement.

Courtaulds-BCL are anxious to continue to have access to the U.S. market which is so important for it, and also the elimination of more than $.5 million in tariffs which it is now spending. Domtar Fine Papers looks forward to continued access to its major market in the United States. Dominion Textile, the largest employer in my community, looks forward to opportunities to expand and renew its plant in Iroquois. That means more employment for the people of Stormont—Dundas.

Ridgewood Industries, a smaller industry in furniture manufacturing, looks forward to continued access to the United States, an expanded market, and expansion of its plant in Cornwall.

IMMIGRATION

LANGUAGE TRAINING POLICY—SITUATION OF IMMIGRANT WOMEN

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the 1981 Census statistics showed that almost 50 per cent more immigrant women than men had no knowledge of either official language. The main reason for this deplorable statistic is the federal Government's policy on subsidized language training for immigrants. This policy clearly disadvantages women. Immigrant women, who may not be working in the labour force, are certainly working in the home and they need to communicate in one of the official languages to function efficiently in their daily lives.

Immigrant women who are seeking to enter the workforce are also often denied access to language training, as it is judged that the few marketable job skills they possess will make them ineligible for employment that requires communication abilities.

The result is that immigrant women, especially those from developing countries, are ghettoized in low-paying menial jobs. We know that this only reinforces the sexist and the racist stratification of our society that keeps women of visible minority groups in poverty, and powerless in our society.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF ONTARIO PREMIER

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to talk about "Ode to an Ostrich". I made a recent trip to Africa, to Zimbabwe and Tanzania, and guess what I saw running by the roadside? I saw ostriches, male ostriches, female ostriches and lots of little ones.

The Premier of Ontario, the proverbial ostrich, has his head in the sand on the benefits of the free trade initiative for Ontario. He demonstrated this very clearly yesterday at the Premiers' conference in Toronto. He is concerned about the Auto Pact. It has not only been retained but it has been enhanced. He is concerned about procurement practices. For 20 years, Ontario has been trying to crack the American procurement market. We finally give it access to $4-billion worth of possible U.S. procurement. He thinks that the Conservative federal Government may be getting snookered by Americans by delaying the legal text. It is not being delayed, we want to get it right so that Ontario will continue to benefit from increased trade.

The Premier of Ontario and others have called this a leap of faith. Of course it is. What major world undertaking in the history of mankind has not been a leap of faith?

I have faith in our young people and in Ontario business people. They will make this a successful leap along with the continued leadership of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

Now that winter has set in, Mr. Peterson's ostrichlike undertaking is frozen in the sands of the past. The Prime Minister is looking to the future.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—SUPPORT FROM BUSINESS AND AGRICULTURAL ASSOCIATIONS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, for the past seven weeks Canada has been subjected to unsubstantiated attacks by opposition Members on the historic Canada-U.S. trade agreement. What do we hear from Canadians involved in all sectors of the economy?

From the Mining Association of Canada we hear reiteration of its strong support for free trade. The Independent Petroleum Association of Canada is very supportive of the free trade initiative. The Business Council on National Issues reacted by referring to the deal as an enormous step forward. The Information Technologies Association says that its industry is pleased with the pact.

The list is long and includes the western Canadian wheat growers who like the increased prospects for sales. It includes the Canadian Cattlemen's Association which says it has nothing but praise for the deal. It includes the Saskatchewan stock growers and pork producers who note the agreement's importance in maintaining access to the U.S. market. That is what Canadians are saying about free trade. Their confidence in their ability to compete and succeed is unshaken by Opposition scaremongering.

Also recognizing the Government's courage in striking this historic enhanced trade deal are the Institute of Research and Public Policy, the Council of Forest Industries of B.C., the Consumers' Association of Canada, the Canadian steel producers' association, the Canadian Petroleum Association, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, the Canadian Export Association, the Canadian Council of Professional Engineers, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canada West Foundation—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to have to interrupt the Hon. Member.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

REQUEST FOR DETAILED DEFINITION OF "MECHANISM OFFERING HELP TO CERTAIN ENTERPRISES"

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago this Conservative Government, through the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret), announced substantial assistance to the construction of the Matane papermill. The Minister in charge expected the Matane project would result in 300 permanent new jobs being created at the plant proper. The Minister was ready to offer help through existing mechanisms.

Although there is indeed within DRIE a mechanism to help businesses that are ready to create jobs through new investments, I would like to be in a position to conclude, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister in charge is ready to extend similar offers to other businesses willing to guarantee a significant number of jobs by means of new investments. If not, I wonder what is meant by "existing mechanism" within the DRIE, and I also wonder on what basis help was offered to the Matane papermill.

Would he be ready to extend the same offer to Consolidated Bathurst in Grand-Mère, which has just announced an important $250 million project for the building of new plant which will guarantee hundreds of jobs in the area?

NATIONAL PARKS

ESTABLISHMENT OF PRINCE EDWARD COUNTY MARINE PARK ADVOCATED

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward—Hastings): Mr. Speaker, off the shores of Prince Edward County in the deep, dark, cold waters of Lake Ontario lies a treasure of untold value. Over 200 ships of every shape and type known in the late 1800s sank in these waters at a time when the lakes, bays and rivers were the main routes of commerce in Upper Canada.

Many ships went down during the barley days, that time in the history of Prince Edward County when every possible acre of land was covered with the golden crop, usually shipped out to make beer and ale.

Deep Quest II, a highly respected voluntary organization, has researched and photographed many of these ships. It now hopes to set up an underwater habitat in the area to further its scientific exploration.

Canada has already recognized the value of underwater marine parks and I have initiated talks along these lines with the Minister responsible for Parks Canada. Unless they are properly protected, these vignettes of Canadian history could be vandalized for souvenirs as happened to the Titanic this summer.

I ask for and indeed look forward to the co-operation of all my colleagues in establishing the necessary facilities to protect these old ships while at the same time making an exciting part of Canada's history available to all Canadians.

TARIFFS

COUNTERVAIL DUTY ON UNITED STATES CORN

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, corn growers are concerned about the Canadian Import Tribunal's recommendation to reduce the countervail on corn to 30 cents from its current level of $1.10. The duty was put in place to protect growers from subsidized U.S. product at a time when the world's largest corn producer was dumping its grain into our bins.

Canadian corn producers take issue with the Tribunal's recommendation since no evidence was presented to suggest that the current duty has injured any user group. After reviewing the document, I conclude that some of the reasons for lowering the countervail were very flimsy indeed.

Growers do not want to see the duty lowered, but they would be willing to accept a lowering of the level to perhaps 60 cents or 70 cents. Putting the duty at 30 cents, the countervail the Import Tribunal is proposing to levy, does not protect farmers at all. In fact the level of the import duty works out to be only about a quarter of what the nominal value is, and 30 cents provides virtually no protection at all.

SHIPBUILDING

SUGGESTED PURCHASE OF SIX FRIGATES FROM SAINT JOHN, N.B., SHIPYARDS

Mr. Stan Graham (Kootenay East—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, the regions of Canada are often thought of in terms of their respective strengths—the Prairies as a great supplier of grain, for example, and Quebec for its electric power. Is not the special contribution of the Maritimes its mastery of the sea? Does it not make sense to allow maritime geography, not to mention special technical skills, to work on behalf of Canada?

The maritime provinces need the opportunity to show the country what they are capable of. Our Budget requires that we spend our defence dollars as wisely as possible. It makes sense, therefore, to save $80 million per ship by purchasing the next six frigates for the Royal Canadian Navy in Saint John, New Brunswick.

I call upon my colleagues in Cabinet to acknowledge the merit of the people of New Brunswick. A high-volume contract for frigates serves them, the navy, and the country best.

HARBOURS AND PORTS

SMALL CRAFT HARBOURS PROGRAM—MAGDALEN ISLANDS—WHARF AT OLD HARRY

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, last week the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) told the House about his efforts to get more money for the Small Craft Harbours Program. We know the Minister is trying to make up for earlier cut-backs.

There are many harbours across Canada that are in dire need of these essential facilities. For example, the wharf at Sea Cow Path in Old Harry on the Magdalen Islands is in terrible condition and needs urgent repairs. The previous Liberal Government allocated $1 million which was used to purchase materials for the construction of a new wharf. Despite numerous requests from the fishermen and the Mayor of the Town of Grosse Ile, the Minister has refused to allocate funds for its completion.

In fact, the Department even tried to haul the materials away from Old Harry. Imagine that! The people had to block the road to stop the Government! What utter hypocrisy on the part of the Government. Nearly 100 fishermen and plant workers depend upon this wharf. I urge the Minister to review this matter immediately and to make funds available to these people.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—EMPLOYMENT ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. On October 5 the Prime Minister told the Canadian Export Association in Ottawa, in his words, that "the Government has undertaken with the provinces to ensure a massive program to assist those workers affected by the adjustment and dislocation" of the trade deal. That statement was in effect contradicted the following day, October 6, by the Minister of Finance.

Yesterday, in responding to the Premiers in Toronto, the Prime Minister said that he would not even set up a private sector advisory committee on adjustment until after the trade deal is completed. What happened to that massive program the Prime Minister was talking about for adjustment for workers as a result of dislocation caused by the trade deal, or does such a program even exist?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have said several times in this House, both in presence of the Leader of the Opposition and in his absence, that employment adjustment is not a phenomenon that came about with the free trade agreement. Over a million and a half Canadians experience permanent job loss each year and yet, the number of unemployed has declined by 250,000 in the last three years, which means that employment adjustment is essentially an ongoing process and that we have several mechanisms that are very effective in this regard; there is the industry adjustment system that works in cooperation with the industry, the unions and the companies themselves, there is the job strategy, the skills improvement programs, and so on.

However, what the Prime Minister said yesterday is that we must seek the most practical means that could be applicable to industries that might be affected. An independent committee will be charged with this study, but I believe the Opposition Leader is honest and would not want to give the impression that nothing is being done presently in the area of employment adjustment. That is not a new phenomenon, it has been going on for a long time and we have all the means to address it and we will continue to do so. The problem of adjustment of workers will not be solved by throwing billions of dollars at the problem.

SITUATION OF WORKERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I will then turn to the Minister who has admitted that we will lose 500,000 jobs in Canada because of this trade agreement with the United States.

In order to try and see through the smoke screen surrounding his last answer, Mr. Speaker, let me say that the Prime Minister's trade agreement will completely disrupt the work force in Canada. And the Prime Minister did not even take into account the situation of Canadian men and women who stand to lose their job as a result of the agreement. Can the Minister explain why the Prime Minister did not worry about the fate of our workers across the country before the agreement was signed instead of after?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I just said that the Government is working on employment adjustment according to the ongoing realities we are faced with. We did not wait for the free trade agreement to be signed, contrary to the usual stand of the Liberal Party who finds the answer before the question is put. One just has to consider the economic situation of the country to understand what you have done for ten years.

We are dealing daily with employment adjustment. The Prime Minister has said and repeated, as well as the Minister of Finance, that following the signature of the agreement, we will have to analyze the various sectors of the economy in order to determine which sectors might be more particularly affected, and my department is already at work on it. We will respond and we are already responding. I challenge the Leader of the Opposition to tell me that we have not in the area of employment adjustment, in the last three years, responded in such a way that we have created one million jobs and that there is now 250,000 less unemployed than there was before. That is what I call employment adjustment!

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON PROVINCIAL OBLIGATIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, let me turn from an irresponsible statement on adjustment policy by the Prime Minister yesterday to an irresponsible statement last night on television by the Minister for International Trade.

Can the Acting Prime Minister tell us what the Minister for International Trade meant when she said last night on The Journal that: "The provinces have already been found guilty of violating the GATT, the international global system; so we have obligations under the GATT."? No one has been found guilty of anything. We have a preliminary ruling.

How could the Minister's colleague undermine Canada's continuing pursuit of these cases involving fish and wine before GATT when she declares the provinces are guilty because of a mere preliminary ruling? With a Minister for International Trade like that, no wonder this country has been taken to the cleaners by the U.S.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I watch the righteous indignation of the right hon. gentleman on the trade deal day in and day out. We know he has to grasp at straws to fight an agreement which is so good for Canada, and so important to all of its regions.

My right hon. friend knows how GATT operates. He knows that the panel brought down decisions against Canada dealing with wine pricing and processed fish. He knows full well that to negotiate out of those decisions there has to be agreement by all 95 of our GATT partners. He knows that process is going on now. However, the GATT panel has made a decision and obviously they found Canada at fault in this area.

We are working extremely hard to negotiate with those countries which brought these charges against Canada, and will continue to do so.

PENSIONS

HOMEMAKERS—PROMISE OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health, I will direct my question to whoever can answer—it concerns homemakers.

We all remember that in 1983, the Advisory Council on the Canada Pension Plan supported the proposal of the then Government to find a solution, in co-operation with the provincial governments, for homemakers to come under the Canada Pension Plan and the Régie des rentes du Québec, both as to contributions and pensions.

It will be remembered that during the last election that was part of the promises made to women by this Conservative Government.

Yesterday, the Advisory Council on the Canada Pension Plan which, may I add, has had new directors appointed to its board, in other words directors appointed by Conservatives—recommended that the Conservative Government forgo the promise made to homeworkers that they would contribute to the Canada Pension Plan and the Régie des rentes du Québec.

I would like to know from the responsible Minister whether this Conservative Government will reject that recommendation made by Conservatives members of the Advisory Council on the Canada Pension Plan, and whether it will allow homemakers in Canada to be covered by the Canada Pension Plan.

[English]

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the Minister of National Health and Welfare is in Toronto at the First Ministers' Conference. Therefore, if I may, I will just briefly point out that, unlike the previous Liberal Government, this Government, when dealing with any matter, particularly one as important as homemakers' pensions, wants to consult with as broad a range of Canadians as possible. This consultation is ongoing in all parts of Canada.

Federal-provincial officials are currently looking at a broad range of options. The report tabled yesterday is just one of many options being considered by those officials. Once that broad range of options has been considered then an appropriate decision to the benefit of homeowners will be taken by this Government.

REQUEST FOR COMMITMENT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I know the Minister once won medals for figure skating on the ice. But as far as this matter is concerned, there will be no olympic medals for his answers to our questions.

The Minister recalls that his Conservative Government misled senior citizens. He knows that this Conservative Government is now misleading homemakers.

Can the Minister answer yes or no? Will this Government honour the commitment made to the 3 million Canadian homemakers that they could contribute to the Canada Pension Plan and the Régie des rentes du Québec? Yes or no? No more figure skating here!

[English]

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, first, I am very proud of having been able to win a gold medal for Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: He won the gold medal for hamburger eating.

Mr. Jelinek: I am not even going to touch that.

I want to point out to the Hon. Member that this Government keeps its commitments and will keep its commitment to try to provide the best possible pension for homeowners. If my hon. friend wants to be positive in this regard, and he has not been in any other regard, he should suggest to his Liberal friends in Quebec and Ontario they be a little bit more co-operative and move in the direction this Government is moving.

QUERY WHETHER CHANGES ARE IN FINAL TEXT OF AGREEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications who is shouldering the Prime Minister's responsibilities today.

In the past, according to the Prime Minister and other Ministers, we had a time limit with respect to the final text of the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement because both governments are busy finalizing the legal wording of this historic accord. They indicated that neither government intends to change the substance of the agreement. Unfortunately, a report has it that today the two governments did make substantial changes, specifically in the automotive sector, and according to a report the governments have changed the level of North American content from 50 to 60 per cent.

My question to the Minister is simply this: True, there have been substantial changes, yes or no?

• (1130)

[English]

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge that report came from a Toronto Star article of a few days ago which reported that the APMA said that it would like to see the content rule changed from 50 per cent to 60 per cent. As far as we are concerned, the 50 per cent North American content which was negotiated for the foreign automotive industry in North America is the fact.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the report was not in The Toronto Star. It was a news report this morning on the CBC.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I know the Conservative Party has trouble with the public broadcasting corporation which its Government established in the 1930s. We understand that.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO COMMITTEE OFFICIAL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have been informed that the news report was based on testimony given before the House committee in western Canada. It was a statement made by an official of the committee. Has the Minister checked this morning with the negotiating teams to find out whether there has been a change? If not, upon what is he basing the report which he is now making to the House?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, a briefing was given to Peter Clark, a committee adviser, by the trade negotiation office. That briefing to Mr. Clark mentioned the 50 per cent rule of origin.

This suggestion was made last Friday in an article in The Toronto Star by the Auto Parts Manufacturing Association. To my knowledge the TNO gave this information to Mr. Clark as an adviser to the committee. He was told that the 50 per cent rule was negotiated.

REQUEST THAT SIGNING OF AGREEMENT BE DELAYED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I will, of course, accept the Parliamentary Secretary's word that there has not been a change in substance. However, I refer to matters which we on this side of the House have raised previously.

The First Ministers are meeting in Toronto, as the Parliamentary Secretary knows. They have not had a look at the final text yet. The parliamentary committee has not had a look at the final text, and neither have the people of Canada nor the Members of the House.

The Parliamentary Secretary is speaking for the Government on this matter today. A number of the First Ministers in Toronto, the Opposition, and Canadians have said that they want an opportunity to study this accord in all its detail, including the final legal wording, before it is signed. Therefore, will the Government finally come to its senses on this matter and ask the United States for at least a two-month delay before it is finally signed?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party has known for two years the timetable of this agreement.

Mr. Broadbent: We haven't seen the words yet.

Mr. McDermid: We know that he opposes the agreement and he is grasping at any straw he can to try to scuttle the deal. That is the name of the game with the Leader of the New Democratic Party and we understand that. However, it will not happen.

We are hopeful that the final text will be available shortly and that Canadians will have an opportunity to look at it. We have heard exaggeration about a 1,200 page document. The Hon. Member and others in the House know that about 800 pages of that are just tariff schedules which go with any agreement.

The Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party has now left his seat and is really not interested in listening to the answer.

Oral Questions

AIR CANADA STRIKE—SHUT-DOWN OF OPERATIONS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I tried to draw the attention of the Government to the grave inconveniences which airline travellers have to put up with. The only answer I got was that the Government is not getting involved, that the bargaining process has to follow its course, although we all know that that is not producing results.

Yesterday Air Canada said that it was doing everything it could to maintain service. This morning Pierre Jeanniot, President of Air Canada, said: "We will proceed with an orderly shut-down of operations".

What does the Government have to tell thousands of stranded travellers today?

An Hon. Member: Fly Wardair.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): They will tell them to fly Wardair. That is a preliminary answer. Let us see whether the Minister wants to confirm this. What will the Government tell them today, what will it tell them tomorrow, and what will it tell them Sunday?

An Hon. Member: Take the train.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Is the Government going to tell them that they have to tough it out because the Government's approach is to let George do it?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): First, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that I do not know to which George the Hon. Member is referring.

Mr. Gauthier: George Henderson. He can't get home tonight.

Mr. Cadieux: But with respect, Mr. Speaker, to the inconvenience which the present dispute is causing Canadians, I can assure this House that we do not need the Hon. Member to underline that. We are fully aware of what is happening in labour disputes throughout Canada. As in other disputes, the Government will take appropriate action at the appropriate time. But we will surely not act prematurely just to please the Hon. Member.

REASON FOR DELAY IN APPOINTING MEDIATOR

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's response is just another example of the fact that the Government's school grades when it comes to preventing strikes are zero. In the case of the strike of mailmen and postal workers, the Government waited until there were violent incidents before reacting. In the case of the rail strike, nothing was done to prevent it. Eventually they had to resort to or-else legislation to force workers back to their jobs. Mr. Speaker, it is as though the Government drew inspiration from the Pontius

Pilate approach of 2,000 years ago when it said: I wash my hands off the whole thing. I want to ask the Minister: What are you waiting for to appoint a mediator? What are you waiting for?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member put his question that way because it gives me an opportunity to remind the House and all Canadians that, in spite of certain instances where work stoppages did take place, last year more than 11,000 collective agreements were negotiated in Canada with the help of the Department of Labour without a single day of strike or lockout. That being so, Mr. Speaker, we are very much aware of the inconvenience and we deplore that. The Canada Labour Code makes provision for the collective bargaining process, and I think my colleague should read it now and then. In conclusion, I would remind him of a single incident between these two parties—it took place when the Party of my colleague was in office—and that strike went on for 30 days, Mr. Speaker.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—REQUEST THAT COMMITTEE HEARINGS BE HALTED

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, this House has just been told that we were aware of the schedule of the free trade negotiations. The House was also told that we would get the final text in three weeks. We have now waited seven weeks. We are hearing over and over again that there are changes in the content and that there is now need for an advisory council for readjustment. We are hearing a variety of things.

Is the Parliamentary Secretary willing to say that the Government will stop all of the hearings and the process until we see the final text? Will the Government stop trying to make the Canadian people buy a pig in a poke?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is so unbecoming for the Hon. Member to deliver a question in that manner. We will continue to listen to Canadians from coast to coast. Our consultation program will continue and Canadians will have an opportunity to examine the agreement. They will have an opportunity to discuss the legislation that will come with the agreement.

The Hon. Member and her Party, and our friends in the other opposition Party, will be able to debate all the legislation that goes with the agreement. As a matter of fact, even her friends in the Senate will have an opportunity to look at that legislation once it is brought into the House of Commons. There is ample time to study and pass judgment on the agreement. I can assure her that it will be well received in Canada.

REQUEST THAT DRAFTING OF AGREEMENT BE STOPPED

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, clearly the Government is not disclosing what is really contained in the Agreement. Will the Minister stop the process until we have a final draft?

[English]

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the same question. It was obviously prepared before I answered the first question.

Ms. Dewar: You did not answer it.

Mr. McDermid: It is exactly the same answer. We will continue our consultation across Canada with the standing committee. When the text is ready, it will be released and there will be ample opportunity for people to study it. There will be a First Ministers' conference and ample time for Canadians to study this agreement because the legal text will put into legal terms what has been agreed to by both parties to the agreement. The agreement was signed on October 3, and was tabled in the House on October 5. I invite the Hon. Member to read it because I do not think she has done so.

GASOLINE TAX REBATE FOR FARMERS AND FISHERMEN

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture refuses to endorse the Government's trade agreement because of certain evident deficiencies, such as problems being faced by poultry and grape growers, while there is no offsetting benefit for agriculture.

It is also apparent that fishermen and farmers will lose their gasoline subsidy as a result of the Government's trade agreement. Will the Minister assure fishermen and farmers that with the final agreement they will be able to keep their gasoline subsidies?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, there are no subsidies. There is a special provision for the fishery and farmers. That is government policy and this agreement does not change that in any way.

Let me deal with the Hon. Member's suggestion that there is nothing in this for agriculture. Has he talked to the Cattlemen's Association, to the pork producers or the grain growers in this country? He mentions the feather industry. The feather industry's marketing board is protected. The underpinnings are still in place.

Mr. Boudria: Not true.

Mr. McDermid: They are very happy with the deal. I do not know what the Hon. Member is talking about.

ENERGY SECURITY FOR PROVINCES

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, what the Parliamentary Secretary is saying is utter nonsense. There are subsidies because the farmers and fishermen have tax advantages. That will not be allowed in the trade agreement as stated in the synopsis.

The Parliamentary Secretary knows that there is now a second round of negotiations and changes are being made in all aspects of the agreement. What will be done to give the provinces energy security which they do not have now according to the synopsis? What will be done to give the energy security to the provinces that has been given to the United States?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, that was quite a flip-flop, from agriculture to energy. I am not sure it was a supplementary question, but I will be happy to answer.

The headline today in The Guardian from Prince Edward Island states that producers in the fisheries industry say the trade deal looks better. They know that, and we understand why.

The Hon. Member asks about energy. Energy is owned by the provinces. Nothing is changed in this trade deal. The provinces control the management of their resources and the conservation aspects of it. They can dictate how many barrels of oil a day can be pumped and how many cubic feet of gas can be pumped. That has not changed, and the Hon. Member and Canadians know that.

If the Hon. Member wants to sing that song, I suggest he go to the energy producing provinces such as Quebec, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and British Columbia and sing it to them, to hear what they say.

CHILD CARE

NATIONAL OBJECTIVES FOR PROGRAM

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. After two years of delay the Government finally has a plan for a national child care program which, according to our information, is far worse than we feared and will make little impact on the child care crisis.

Since this is the first test of the Meech Lake Accord, does the Minister agree that the national objectives for a new child care program must be clearly defined, as indicated in the Meech Lake Accord? Does he also agree that these should require federal funds to be used by provinces to develop quality, affordable, and accessible non-profit child care services?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for that question because it gives me the opportunity to say that in terms of the child care program which is now being developed under the leadership of my colleagues, the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister responsible for the status of women, there will be very significant meetings with provincial authorities who have substantial jurisdiction in this area.

As far as we are concerned, this is a priority item. Once the matter is discussed with provincial authorities, I believe the Hon. Member should be in a position to support fully an outstanding program on a national basis for the first time in the history of our country.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, if the information that is being leaked at this point is in any way based on fact, we will certainly be extremely disappointed, as will working parents who want their kids to be in safe, reliable day care.

Surely this must be a priority of the Government. Why have the Government and the Minister responsible consistently refused to define national objectives for quality child care? Why are they so penny-pinching that they cannot find enough money for child care while easily finding billions of dollars for nuclear submarines?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, those allegations by the Hon. Member are not only unfounded, they are totally unfair. The fact is that within the first three years of our mandate we undertook the most significant social program in this area, which is essentially within provincial jurisdiction.

I have been in opposition for a long time as well. It is easy to take cheap shots and put wrong propositions on the floor of the House. However, when the Hon. Member sees the package she will realize that it is one that she should be proud to support. It will be a comprehensive package that will allow the Government to take a leadership role.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CENTRAL AMERICA—MINISTER'S VISIT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Our Foreign Minister visiting Central America seems to be making one gaffe after another. First, he upsets Canadian aid workers in Nicaragua, then, without consulting Governments in the region or even his own Cabinet, he suggests that we accept Contras as refugees and contribute troops to a phantom peacekeeping force. Yesterday he went shuffling through his papers because he could not answer important questions.

If the purpose of this trip to Central America was to increase Canada's diplomatic profile in the region and assist in the peace process, why did the Cabinet not provide specific policy guidelines to the Minister before he left? Why was he not better prepared?

• (1150)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is carrying out the first indepth assessment of problems in the Central American region, and Canada's reaction to it, by any Foreign Minister of this country. I want to say to the Hon. Member that those of us who have spent some time in that troubled region are indeed pleased with this positive initiative.

What the Secretary of State for External Affairs has undertaken to ask the Government to consider any move that will have a positive influence on bringing that region toward peace, eliminating conflict, and trying to resolve the difficulties and social problems that affect those countries.

I happen to think that is a very positive initiative for this Government to undertake. I must say to the Hon. Member that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is doing something this country should have undertaken a long time ago.

Mr. Allmand: I have also visited the region several times and I am not pleased at all. By the way, the Minister is wrong. In the last Government, two Ministers, the Foreign Affairs Minister and the Minister of Employment and Immigration, visited the region, as did a committee of the House which did intensive work in the region.

CANADIAN AID DISTRIBUTION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, if the Government wanted to distinguish Canadian policy in Central America from American policy, why did it give only $1 million in aid to Nicaragua, a country unfairly ravaged by war and economic blockade, when it gave $13.8 million to Honduras, a country which is receiving considerable aid from the United States and which has not yet complied with the Arias peace plan?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I remember very well that former Ministers went down to that region and they did not accept one recommendation the parliamentary committee, which had visited widely in the region, asked them to consider. Not one thing did they do on behalf of Canada for that region.

An Hon. Member: Answer the question.

Miss MacDonald: The Secretary of State for External Affairs did not go to Central America with the idea that he was suddenly going to say to the people in that region: "Here are all the answers to your problems". He went there to find out what Canada can positively do. He has made some initial assessments. He will come back to the Cabinet and ask for approval for Canada to expand its relations and to take further measures with regard to Central America. That will be the most positive thing we can do in helping to bring peace to that troubled part of the world.

POSSIBLE PEACEKEEPING INITIATIVE

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister as well. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has taken with him experts in peacekeeping from the Armed Forces. In Central America he is actively promoting the peacekeeping initiative by the Government of Canada with Canadian troops. Can the Acting Prime Minister tell this House if Canada will send peacekeeping troops to Central America?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons the Secretary of State for External Affairs is in Central American countries is to find out what we can do to help ease the conflict in that area. I will not say that the Government will do such and such today, because the Secretary of State for External Affairs has to come back and report to Cabinet on his findings. Surely the Hon. Member understands that. Surely he expects a Foreign Minister to go abroad assess the situation and come back and make recommendations.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, to follow the question a step further, the Secretary of State for External Affairs communicated that Canada would be taking Contras. He is communicating now that Canada will send troops. This country, and the people who are listening to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, must know if the Government is or is not going to send troops to Latin America.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has said he will look at the situation in these countries and come back and ask the Cabinet whether or not, in the best interests of Central American countries, either peacekeeping troops should be sent or other measures should be taken. It may be that the Hon. Member is against any effort to send peacekeeping troops anywhere in the world, but Canada, I can assure him, has a very fine record in this regard.

We have shown what we can do in the Middle East and in other parts of the world. I would expect the Hon. Member to understand that the Secretary of State for External Affairs, having assessed the situation, will come back and ask the Government whether or not this is the best way to proceed, and make his recommendations according to the findings he has been able to gather on site and not from second or third parties. He has gone there to find out for himself how Canada can best help this situation.

THE ADMINISTRATION

PARKER COMMISSION REPORT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister or to the Minister of Justice, if he would like to answer. It concerns the report of the Parker Commission Inquiry into the conflict of interest allegations involving the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, the Hon. Sinclair Stevens. We know the Government has received the report, printed and probably translated. Will it give to the House and to Canadians a copy of the report now so we can all read it at the same time, and comment and assess the report? Or will it bury it until Christmas, maybe under some snow bank close to the House of Commons, so no one gets access to it before we adjourn?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the report of the Parker Commission was received by the Privy Council Office on Wednesday evening of this week. It has not yet been studied by the Government. It will come into the hands of Cabinet and there will be a government response very shortly. I can assure the Hon. Member of that.

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I do not want the report to sit somewhere in some back office waiting to be assessed, responses vetted and all that nonsense. Since we know the Government has received the report—it is a public document and millions of dollars were spent by Canadians for it—will the Government make a commitment today that it will make that document public for all Canadians to read and comment upon, and not wait until Christmas to make it then some kind of unwanted Christmas gift to which we will never get access?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the Government will be releasing the document. May I say once again that this document was received on Wednesday evening in the Privy Council Office.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra: Publish it.

Miss MacDonald: I also expect the Hon. Member to recognize that on Wednesday evening the First Ministers' conference got under way in Toronto—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): So what? Publish it.

Miss MacDonald: The Leader of the Official Opposition says "So what". The First Ministers' conference may not mean very much to him, and certainly when he was in the position of First Minister he really did not do very much about it. It seems to me, with all due regard to the Opposition, this report should come to the Government, which it has not yet, so that the Government has an opportunity at least to receive it.

Mr. Ouellet: You have received it.

Miss MacDonald: The Prime Minister has been away. Members of the Cabinet have been away. We will look at the report very shortly—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You are not going to change it.

Miss MacDonald: —and as I have said, it will be released in public.

LEVEL OF FUNDING FOR SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. There are a number of reports in the papers this morning, all of which are consistent in reporting that the Ministry of Science and Technology has ridiculed the proposal by Ontario that the rate of spending for scientific research in this country be doubled to 2.5 per cent of the GNP. Does the Minister of State for Science and Technology agree with the assessment by the Ministry that a goal of 2.5 per cent of GNP as an appropriate rate for scientific research in Canada is unrealistic and silly?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, what I would prefer to identify as a goal is to do everything that is necessary to keep Canada in the forefront of nations which use science and technology as the instruments of growth, expansion and social progress.

I am not aware that anyone has ridiculed the Ontario position. In fact, I understand that the Prime Minister has presented the Premier of the province with the view that, perhaps, if the province feels that strongly about it, as we do, then it should increase its spending, which is presently 10 per cent of what is spent in Ontario.

When we talk about national performance an improvement in the performance of the private sector is required as well. But the provinces have a large role to play. I welcome the commitment of the Premier of Ontario to increase massively the spending that is going on in that province.

Point of Order—Mr. Hicks

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the notion of a ten-year goal for an achievement of 2.5 per cent of GNP is described by the Minister as unrealistic. The answer we just received from the Minister of State for Science and Technology has not told us very much.

Was or was not the promise of the Prime Minister that we would achieve a 2.5 per cent rate of expenditure for science by next year an empty promise never to be met? Was he being some kind of nitwit by making a promise of that sort? Is the Government going to live up to its promises with respect to science and technology which are so fundamental to the economic growth of the country?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, I have heard the Hon. Member say that he himself is a scientist. If he is he should know that the cause of science and technology cannot be advanced by building buildings with bricks and mortar. In order to achieve what we all want to achieve, including what the Hon. Member seeks to achieve, there are a number of measures that have to be taken. We need the necessary highly qualified people to do the research. Throwing money at the problem was the technique used by the former Government. It has not advanced our cause. It has placed us in a position which could well have us fade away into insignificance if we keep on.

What we have done instead is we have identified with the provinces what the national goals and priorities are. We have committed ourselves to a national mission and a thrust that will stimulate research in the private sector. The provinces will be linked to the national thrust. All this is happening. I do not know what the Hon. Member is talking about. He might even want to quit politics to get back into science when we are finished with all that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will end Question Period with two questions from the Hon. Member for Davenport.

AIR TRANSPORT

TRANSPORTATION OF PLUTONIUM THROUGH CANADIAN AIRSPACE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Transport. She will recall that the last time that we broached the question of plutonium overflights in Canadian airspace the Minister of Transport left the door open to the possibility of such overflights. Can the Minister of State today inform the House what the levels of risk are that the Minister of Transport is willing to accept before approving plutonium overflights in Canadian airspace? Can she give us an indication as to that?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice; of course I will confer with the Minister of Transport and we will report to the Hon. Member as soon as possible.

LEVEL OF SAFETY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, this issue has been raised repeatedly by the Opposition, in August, in September, and the last time on November 5. It seems to me that it is not unreasonable to ask the Minister of State to indicate today, after the Minister of Transport has told the House that he does not rule out the possibility of plutonium overflights, what the level of risk is or, if she prefers, the level of safety that she will consider before allowing these flights in Canadian airspace? That is not an unreasonable request.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, there is one thing that I can confirm once again in this House, namely that this Government is deeply concerned about the security of Canadian men and women and we have demonstrated that all steps are being taken to guarantee that security. I repeat that I take note of your very specific question and that we will follow up as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have recieved notice of a point of order from the Hon. Member for Scarborough East (Mr. Hicks).

POINTS OF ORDER

CORRECTIONS TO STATEMENTS

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, life is full of embarrassing moments. In my enthusiasm to announce to Canadians that the Toronto Argonauts will win the Grey Cup, I announced that the game will be tomorrow. Of course, everyone in the world knows that the game will be on Sunday. May I make it clear, however, that it has been a long week and that today seemed like Saturday. Regardless of which day the game is played the outcome will still be the same.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) on a point of Order.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of Order. I would like to make a slight correction to the answer I gave to the supplementary question put by the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault). I got carried away by my enthusiasm in the matter of the settlement of work conflicts in Canada when I said that last year, more than 11,000 collective agreements had been signed without a single day of work stoppage due to a strike or a lock-out.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I should have said that more than 90 per cent of the 11,000 collective agreements that were negotiated in Canada last year have been signed without a single day being lost because of a strike or a lock-out. Which means, Mr. Speaker, that the figure is some 10,000 rather than 11,000.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Minister for correcting the statement he has made. However, I expected that after giving it much thought, he would stand up and tell us what the Government intends to do to help out the thousands of Canadians who are stuck in airports across Canada!

[English]

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I too rise to make a correction to a response given to a question asked by the Hon. Member for Montréal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) earlier in Question Period. When I was referring to homemakers I was using the word "homeowners". Obviously, I meant homemakers.

WAYS AND MEANS

TABLING OF NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 84(1), I have the honour to lay upon the table copies of a Ways and Means Motion to amend the Income Tax Act with technical notes pertaining thereto.

Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 84(2), I ask that an Order of the Day be designated for the consideration of the said motion.

RESEARCH, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

GOVERNMENT'S RESPONSE TO REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to submit today in both official languages, pursuant to the rules of the House of Commons, two copies of the Government of Canada's response to the report of the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology entitled "Canada's Space Program—A Voyage to the Future".

On behalf of the Government I commend the committee for its thorough investigation of Canada's space program. The Government is particularly encouraged by the fact that the committee supports the program as a priority among the science and technology issues facing the country. The Government has long recognized that development of the space program is vital to Canada's economic development and to long-term investment in Canada's future.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table in both official languages the Government's comprehensive response to the Second Report of the Standing Committee on Regional Industrial Expansion.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is it appropriate at this point to comment on the document tabled by the Minister with respect to the Government's response to the committee's report?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Unfortunately, it is not.

Mr. Rompkey: If there were unanimous consent could a comment be made on the response tabled by the Minister?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, we would be glad to examine that issue but since this is an Opposition Day and, if my colleague opposite, a member of the same Party as my friend, wants to get on with the debate, I do not think that it would be appropriate today.

OPPOSITION TO TAX ON FOOD

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have 10 petitions from my riding and points elsewhere. I wish to present all the petitions, but will only read one because they are all on the same matter.

My constituents state that whereas since September, 1984 the federal Government has imposed on Canadian taxpayers 25 new taxes or tax increases, in particular on medical and dental supplies, snack foods, candies, and soft drinks; and whereas the federal Government in its tax reform proposals is studying the possibility of imposing on Canadians a general tax on goods and services including foods; and whereas food constitutes a vital element in the day-to-day life and the imposition of this tax would have the effect of seriously penalizing certain categories of taxpayers such as the aged, families, the unemployed, youth, and low income taxpayers; wherefore, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject all measures that would have the effect of imposing a sales tax on food products, and as duty bound your petitioners ever pray.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, I have 10 petitions in all from across my riding, and indeed some visitors from Montreal and Quebec have signed these petitions, and I ask leave to present the same in their names.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have petitions signed by residents of my constituency of Thunder Bay—Nipigon, by residents of other communities in northwestern Ontario, and indeed by a few visitors to the region from other parts of Canada.

The petitioners note that the federal Government's White Paper calls for changes to the taxation structure of Canada, but those proposals do not change an already unfair tax structure for average Canadian families. They allow wealthy Canadians earning more than $100,000 a year to continue not paying their fair share and to actually receive a tax cut under the proposals. These proposals will also allow 60,000 profitable corporations to continue paying no income tax.

The petitioners call upon Parliament to reject these tax changes, and particularly to reject the proposed tax on food. They call on Parliament to restore full indexation to the personal tax system.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) on a question.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, we certainly give consent for the questions to remain on the Order Paper. However, I would like to point out to the Minister that he started out very well when he was Parliamentary Secretary in answering questions on a fairly frequent basis. Now that he is a Minister he seems to be slipping into the habits of the previous regime.

I see that even members in his own caucus are giving support to my notion that there should be more questions answered. Those questions on the Order Paper are very serious, and they are very important to Members of Parliament and to Canadians. I would encourage the Government to make a very strong and consistent effort to answer those questions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall all questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet:

> That this House condemn the Government for its destructive influence on the Canadian transportation industry by its impractical and slavish adherence to the ideological myth of deregulation and its inept trade negotiations with the United States, in particular, through:
> (1) deregulation of the trucking industry, giving U.S. truckers open access to Canadian markets while 43 heavily regulated American states deny Canadian truckers the same advantage;
> (2) introduction in the railway industry of "Competitive Rail Line Rate" provisions allowing American railways free access to Canadian markets while denying reciprocal arrangements for Canadian railways;
> (3) failing to seek and obain in the trade agreement equitable treatment in the United States for Canadian airlines; and
> (4) abandoning its legislation on the Canadian coasting trade and failing to obtain any benefits in the trade agreement for Canadian maritime industries.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: For questions and comments on the speech by the Minister of State (Transport) (Mrs. Vézina). The Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet).

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I may remind the Minister of State (Transport) (Mrs. Vézina) of the remarks I directed to her earlier this week, on November 23, when I said, as reported at page 11067 of Hansard:

> . . . I would like to put a question to the Minister of State (Transport) as she did not reply to the very simple questions asked earlier by my colleague for Westmorland—Kent.
> I would like to give her an opportunity to prove that she is worthy of her pay and that she knows something about her new Department.

That is what I said, and when I listened to her earlier, she mentioned certain reproaches which I never made. If she would care to stick to the facts as printed in Hansard, the only reproach I made was that she did not reply to the questions put to her in the House. The Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud) asked two questions last week which she failed to answer. I put two questions to the Minister myself, and she did not answer them. Today, we have had another example. The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) asked her a very simple question. Again, she failed to answer the question. She took the question as notice.

I maintain that in the circumstances, it would be normal for the Hon. Member, who has ministerial responsibilities, who has a duty to take part in Question Period and defend the Government's point of view and answer the questions put to her by the Opposition, to do her job.

That was my reproach. I never commented on her age, courtesy or style, and I wish she would stick to what I said in the House.

Furthermore, I would like to ask the Minister whether she had time to consult with her departmental officials, and if so, whether she could give me a straight answer to the question I asked. The question was simple. I told her: All you have to say is yes or no. She has yet to do so. I want to know whether or not, after this free trade agreement is signed with the United States, whether or not the Canadian provinces will have the right to deny a licence to American truckers headquartered in a State which does not give fair treatment to our truckers. That is the question that I put to her. She has not answered it yet. For the third time, I ask whether the Canadian provinces will have the right to deny a licence to American truckers from States which do not grant the same access to Canadian truckers, yes or no? That is my question.

I will conclude by saying that in that part of the text prepared by officials from the Department of Transport that was read by the Minister of State (Transport), I recognize exactly the same criticism that we have been expressing, namely that the Government must admit that American railways have been granted advantages that are denied to Canadian railways. The Minister had to admit that fact earlier this morning.

Secondly, the Minister had to admit that Americans have resisted all attempts to ease the restrictions in the area of shipping and that the status quo will prevail. However, that status quo is not encouraging for the Canadian shipping industry. On the contrary, the status quo—together with the free trade agreement which will grant national treatment to American shipping companies— will favour American shippers companies to the detriment of Canadian shippers.

Finally, spokesmen for various trucking associations in Canada, including Mr. Raymond Cope, president of the Ontario Trucking Association, Mr. Ron Downey, president of the Manitoba Trucking Association, and Mr. Don Norquay, president of Manitoba's Motor Transport Board, have all said that changes should have been made to fiscal laws and immigration laws before we sign a trade agreement with the Americans, and that this proposed agreement will not allow Canada to take effective measures in order to prevent Americans from having total control of the trucking industry. These people are directly involved in the area of trucking and they ought to know what they are talking about.

For these reasons, I cannot understand how the Minister can rise in this House and say that in the area of transportation this Mulroney-Reagan agreement could be good for Canadians.

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I concluded my speech earlier by wishing that, during the many years I intend spending in this House, I will no longer see as much ambiguity, complexity and confusion as in the comments we have bean hearing, especially this week, about the transport industry.

While the truckers know what they are talking about, I must unfortunately say that the Members opposite do not quite know what they are talking about when they ask questions such as those we heard this week in this House.

When I was reviewing this week's activities, I saw quite clearly that the Opposition wanted mostly to speak about deregulation, which they refuse to accept. They ask questions under the pretext of speaking about free trade.

As for me, the question I would like to ask the Hon. Member opposite is this: When will he stop scaring people with his unfounded and unrealistic fears?

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) clearly told us this week that the part of the Agreement which relates to transport has not yet been signed. Our negotiators are working on it. Our transport industry should not be afraid that we might sacrifice its interests. As a responsible Government, we shall evaluate everything and refuse to sign any agreement which could sacrifice national interests.

Let Members opposite really speak about free trade and the transport industry in this House, and we shall reply to their questions. Moreover, when the time comes to speak about deregulation, we shall reply to their questions about that issue as well.

However, we fully realize that all the questions asked this week were aimed at provoking confusion in Canada.

We are clearly preserving the existing situation and unfortunately maintaining the status quo as far as the transport industry is concerned. Our Government had decided on behalf of Canadians that certain sectors were non-negotiable. The Americans had decided not to negotiate and not to accept our offers. They were fully entitled to act as they did. As I have said, we shall always try to protect the interests of Canadians.

I find it very hard to understand that the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) cannot accept a very simple and clear principle: The more trade there is between Canada and the United States, the greater the movement of goods will be, which means more transport.

I have already pointed out that I made some research this week and found that, among the 1,000 companies which already operate in the United States, not a single one had been penalized by the existing mechanisms.

Let the Opposition deal with the free trade issue and we shall reply to their questions!

• (1220)

[English]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) has moved this motion. However, I find it somewhat amusing and ironic that he has done so since his Party is the one that started all this—Mr. Speaker, I wonder if my colleague would be good enough to go over there, sit down and talk with the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Vézina) there rather than—well, I will just sit down and wait until they are finished.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) has the floor.

Mr. Ouellet: I can talk to my colleague.

Mr. Benjamin: Go over there and do it. Quit yacking away while I am trying to make my speech. I did not interrupt yours.

Now you can begin counting my time, Mr. Speaker.

I started to say that I am happy that the hon. gentleman from Papineau has moved this motion, although I find it somewhat ironic and amusing that he has done so since the Party he represents is the one that started all this. It is the one that came out with deregulation. When he was Minister of Transport, the late unlamented Otto Lang started all this in 1975. Of course, there is a perfectly logical reason for the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) not being the transport critic for the Liberal Party. He is the one who started deregulation by drafting such legislation for the House of Commons.

I am assuming that the Liberal Party has had a change of heart about deregulation, particularly as it pertains to the free trade agreement. I find that this motion is accurate and correct and I would like to deal with each part of the motion that has been put by the Hon. Member for Papineau.

The Government refused to listen to representatives of the trucking industry. The Canadian Trucking Association and all its provincial affiliates are not only angry about Bill C-18, the new National Transportation Act, but they are also outraged by the results of the melding of deregulation and the free trade deal.

I respect the Minister of State for Transport and think she is competent. I listened very carefully to her speech. I expected her to reply in detail to each of the points made in the motion, but she did not.

It is true, as indicated in paragraph 1 of the motion, that the Canadian trucking industry is faced, not only with the laws of the U.S. Government and the constitutional authority of the U.S. Congress, Senate and House of Representatives, but it is faced with the regulations of 43 individual states of the United States. I know that the Minister of State for Transport is competent, but I wish she would inform herself on these particular items and respond to them. If we are wrong, she should point out exactly where we are wrong.

I was amused today during Question Period when government Members asked why we had not read the information they had provided. I have yet to receive the transportation annex to the free trade deal from a government Member or from anyone else in Canada. We did get it from the publication entitled Inside U.S. Trade, not an American government publication but a private publication that we were able to obtain in order to read the transportation annex to the free trade deal.

The Canadian trucking industry, railways, airlines and marine industry is faced with exactly what they have been faced with before, only the situation is worse now. They are faced with more than what they were faced with before. Here is a paragraph out of the transportation annex:

> Neither party shall be under any obligation to change existing measures relating to the provision of transportation services that accord persons of the other party treatment that is less favourable than that accorded to its own persons.

I believe you, Sir, were at the committee hearings on a number of occasions when we were dealing with Freedom to Move and Bill C-18 and Bill C-19. That is exactly what we said in the committee then. It is exactly what the Canadian Truckers Association and the railroads said then and are saying now. I tried my best to persuade the Government to accept amendments to those two Bills which would allow Canada to take reciprocal measures or, as I put it in committee: We will do unto you what you do unto us. The Government refused to accept those amendments.

We are now faced with a situation where U.S. truckers can do things in Canada that Canadian truckers cannot do in the U.S. The U.S. truckers have advantages under tax laws, mean labour laws, and individual state regulations, that Canadian truckers have to compete with. When they talk about a level playing field, even if it is level, the problem is that the U.S. has the ball on the 10-yard line with three downs to go. However, it is our 10-yard line!

Dealing with the railroads' competitive line rates and Bill C-18, Canadian Pacific and Canadian National told the committee and the Government publicly that they supported deregulation. However, once they got the fine print and once they got the Bill, they changed their minds, for perfectly good reasons.

Paragraph two of this motion refers to Canadian law providing for competitive line rates. That is not only not provided for in the U.S. on their railroads, it is prohibited. When Canadian railroads say that billions of dollars in revenue are subject to what they call a licence to raid by American railroads and American trucking companies, they are perfectly right. They have good reason to be angry and fearful. We gave away the store in Bill C-18 and compounded it by confirming it in the transportation annex of the free trade deal.

The issue of Canadian airlines failing to receive equitable treatment in the U.S. is long-standing. The free trade deal and the new transportation laws under so-called deregulation in Canada make no move whatsoever to correct that unfair treatment. It is perfectly logical that the U.S. is interested only in flying to five or six places in Canada. Since they have more than 10 times our population, obviously Canadian airlines would like to go to 20 or 30 places in the U.S. However, you can bet your bottom dollar, free trade deal or not, there is no way the U.S. is going to allow it. Anyone who thinks otherwise is suffering from sheer delusion.

The Marine Industry Association and all those connected with marine shipping and manufacturing in Canada initially supported free trade. They bought a pig in a poke just like so many others. They believed the U.S. would agree to apply the Jones Act and all its amendments to Canadian shipping. It has not. Canada is still excluded from fair treatment in the U.S., but the U.S. industry can do things in Canada that ours cannot do there. That is not a level playing field, never was and never will be, under this deal and the laws of Canada or the United States.

Regardless of what the free trade deal says, we need a clause in our legislation which permits the Government of Canada to take reciprocal action, whether it be in the trucking industry, marine industry, airline industry or railway industry. Anything the Americans do to us, we do exactly the same to them. To lay back and enjoy it while leaving ourselves wide open to the siphoning off of transportation revenues to American companies is surely a sell-out of some kind.

At one point the Minister of State for Transport said in her speech that over 1,000 trucking companies from Canada operate in the U.S. She is right. They have anywhere from one truck to a couple of hundred. Yet if it is working, why try to fix it? Since nothing has been achieved in the free trade deal to get rid of the unfair advantages that American truckers have over Canadian truckers, whether it is here or in the U.S., then it is not a fair deal. Why did the Minister not address that?

In response to the Hon. Member for Papineau, she said her Government will not sacrifice transport interests. I suggest to you that the Government has already done that in Bill C-18 and Bill C-19. It has done nothing in the free trade deal to correct the disadvantages that Canadian transporters have in the U.S.

The biggest problem is this outrageous delusion across the country, particularly among the proponents of free trade, but even those worried about it suffer from it as well, that somehow or other the U.S. is going to hold still for Canada, or any other country for that matter, getting a larger share of their market than we already have. We have had countless instances of the U.S. putting in place tariffs, countervailing duties, outright embargoes, or other severe restrictions on our trade and transportation dealings with that country. Now the Government claims that if we get a free trade deal we do not have to worry about that any more. The transportation part of the deal throws that in a cocked hat. The annex says, and I will read it again:

> Neither party shall be under any obligation to change existing measures relating to the provision of transportation services that accord persons of the other party treatment that is less favourable than that accorded to its own persons.

That means that everything in place now in transportation remains in place under the free trade agreement. I do not want to hear the Minister or anyone else in the Government try to tell us that we are getting a good deal in transportation under the free trade agreement, because we are not. At best, the situation remains the same as it has always been, and it is highly likely to get worse.

People suffer from a delusion about the so-called free trade agreement with the United States. They forget that before the United States agreed to the fast-track it received from the President of the United States a complete and unequivocal assurance that any free trade agreement with Canada would in no way impinge upon the constitutional authority and rights of the United States House of Representatives, the United States Senate, or the rights of the individual states of the United States.

When the transport committee was sitting in Vancouver hearing evidence on the deregulation of transportation I spoke to a trucker who told me that he had a licence to move goods to California, Arizona, Texas, and even Mexico. He said that he had fewer problems with the State of California than with the regulatory regimes and harassment he had to undergo in the states of Oregon and Washington in trying to get to California. That is why I find the first paragraph of this motion perfectly appropriate. There are at least 43 states which have separate regulations.

As officials of the Canadian Trucking Association have said, the implementation of Bill C-19 next January 1 will mean at least a year of chaos. The Government's own uniform national safety code, a uniform code of national regulations, is still not in place. It is still being negotiated with the provinces, and we all know what it is like trying to get the 10 provinces to agree on anything. They cannot even agree on the time of day. Saskatchewan and Newfoundland are examples of that. None of that is in place.

Let us take a look at the situation in western Canada. I heard a government Member talking today about the mining association being all for free trade. Tell that to the potash miners in Saskatchewan. Under the free trade deal the tariff of up to 85 per cent imposed by the United States on Canadian potash remains in place. The Province of Saskatchewan was left no choice other than to impose the tariff itself.

At least we salvaged something under the Western Grain Transportation Act which got rid of the Crow rate. The national Government still pays a major portion of the cost of moving grain. The grain companies in Saskatchewan and Alberta which have been selling hundreds of thousands of tonnes of screenings, meal, and pellets into the United States will no longer get the benefit of the Western Grain Transportation Act under the free trade agreement.

I can understand that someone from Ontario, including the Parliamentary Secretary, would not know what that is all about. However, our grain producers will lose the benefit of the Western Grain Transportation Act on exports of screenings, meal, and pellets to the United States.

Mr. McDermid: When?

Mr. Benjamin: That takes effect immediately. When we lose the two-price grain system, western grain producers will lose $260 million. I can understand ignorance in people from downtown Toronto or Ottawa who would not know a bushel of wheat if it hit them in the face, but anyone in western Canada who supports a free trade deal which will cost western grain producers $260 million as a result of the loss of the two-price system is guilty of failing to fight for grain producers in western Canada.

Mr. McDermid: The grain producers love it.

Mr. Benjamin: The grain producers do not love it. I wish my hon. friend had been with me at the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool convention last week because he would have got an earful. That organization represents more grain producers than all the other grain organizations in the country put together. The hon. gentleman should go to the next annual meeting of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. He will find himself welcome and he will find out that the western grain producers do not like the free trade deal with regard to the Western Grain Transportation Act and the two-price system.

We gave away the store on potash and grain under the Western Grain Transportation Act and western Canada will lose. The transportation industry in Canada will lose. Our railroads will lose on competitive line rates which American railroads can have in Canada but Canadian railroads cannot have in the United States. The Minister of State for Transport completely failed to respond to that little problem. She never even mentioned it. Our airlines will not get any better treatment from the United States under the free trade deal. The Minister failed to address that at all.

The Minister completely failed to address the clause in this motion about the treatment of the marine industry. We remain in exactly the same disadvantaged position in our marine sector with the United States as we always have. The free trade deal does absolutely nothing to alleviate that. In fact, it entrenches what the Americans have been doing for decades, and there is nothing we can do about it under the free trade deal. The Minister failed to address that specific problem as well.

In conclusion, I know that my hon. friends are just as patriotic as am I and that they love this country as much as anyone else. However, they must not sign this deal until they have taken it to the people of Canada. They must not sign a deal which decreases our sovereignty, independence, and ability to have a level playing field with the United States. I have cited half a dozen instances in which the playing field is not level. Even if it were, the United States has the ball on our 10-yard line with four downs to go. I predict they will continue to do what they have been doing to us repeatedly in so many ways for decades. With regard to transportation, the free trade deal will not only be meaningless to Canada but will be harmful.

Mrs. Vézina: Mr. Speaker, first a comment and then a question. I urge the Hon. Member to listen very carefully.

Here is the comment: I realize that today is an opposition day where we are supposed to talk about free trade. The opposition has also chosen to talk about the deregulation started by our Government. This is why this debate is so ambiguous and vague, without real answers. We should be concentrating on the Free Trade Agreement.

I do not know in what language we should say it, whether it is French, English, Spanish, but I will repeat it. We would not sign an Agreement detrimental to the interests of Canadians, I should say Canadian carriers.

My question is this: I would like to know how one can be against free trade? How can one question an agreement which maintains the status quo? That question seems very clear to me. We are keeping the status quo and you are objecting. Should I understand that the New Democratic Party is reassessing its opposition to free trade?

• (1250)

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, free trade is like motherhood. One opposes it at one's peril. Who would object to a free trade deal that is free and fair?

The Hon. Member failed to answer the specific points raised. The free trade deal as a result of deregulation in Canada does not address the disadvantages to Canadian transportation in the United States and the advantages for U.S. transporters in Canada. I hope that the content of the final text is different from what is in the transportation annex to the free trade agreement. The transportation annex states that articles 84, 85 and 87 of the agreement shall apply to the provision of transportation services and so on. We do not have the final text, so we do not know what is in articles 84, 85 and 87. That is why I did not mention that in my speech.

Subparagraph (1) of the transportation annex, which I read twice in my speech, means that the advantages U.S. truckers have over Canadian truckers remain in place. The Government refused to accept my amendments that would level the playing field under Bill C-18 and Bill C-19. Therefore, we have no way of counteracting actions taken by the U.S. Administration, the Congress or individual states.

I suggest to the Minister that if the Government addresses these problems in transportation, my opposition to this so-called free trade deal may be somewhat lessened. If she can return to the House before December 18 and show how the Government has renegotiated the transportation annex to cover the four areas mentioned in the motion of the Hon. Member for Papineau, to cover the Western Grain Transportation Act and the two-price grain system, then there will be a fair deal. However, it does not exist now. I hope she can do so but I do not think she will.

Mr. Binns: Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious as the debate proceeds this afternoon that opposition Members, particularly the Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), have a different vision of what free trade is all about.

We in the Government believe that the free trade agreement will provide advantages to Canadian producers, whether they are farmers, fishermen, tourist operators or truckers.

It is unfortunate, when we have this opportunity to make Canada stronger by virtue of those new markets to which we will have assured access, that the Opposition would suggest the opposite would occur. We want to ensure access to a market just next door which has so many opportunities.

It has been suggested in the debate today that deregulation in the transportation industry will not provide that kind of opportunity. I believe that approach is absolutely wrong. The fear expressed about the Canadian trucking industry simply does not hold water.

There are over 1,000 Canadian trucking firms now operating between Canada and the United States. Many of these have started since deregulation in the United States.

Canadian firms have increased their operations to the United States in recent years, and easier entry into the Canadian market could alter or stabilize the balance of market share. However, if barriers are retained for U.S. truckers in Canada, Canadian truckers then risk losing their access to that lucrative U.S. market.

I suggest that it is not likely that U.S. truckers would dominate the Canadian transporter markets because most of this traffic is short-haul. This is a market where the competitive performance of Canadian firms compares well to that of their American counterparts.

American domiciled employees are presently forbidden by our immigration laws from engaging in domestic trucking in Canada. Regulatory reform will not change this situation. Bill C-18 is designed to enhance the competitiveness of Canadian industry in both domestic and international markets, by controlling transportation costs through market forces. Canadian carriers must share in this endeavour by providing efficient, least cost competitive and safe transportation services.

I return to my first comment. If this country is to succeed in the long run it must be competitive. We must have the kind of deregulation that is being proposed in this Bill in order that our industry can compete with any other. We have no fear about our industry being as good as the American industry. This legislation is important to Canada in order to have a bilateral trade deal which will open a market that is 10 times the size of ours.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, that is an example of more of the delusion from that side. The market has been open for all these years, in any event. Even the Government says that the United States is our biggest trading partner.

There has been free trade in cattle, hogs, and a host of items. As a result of that, the Americans have imposed countervails and duties.

I am amused by The Cattlemen's Association in Saskatchewan and Alberta, who suffer from what I call the Texas cowboy syndrome. They believe that the United States cattle producers and the packing industry will remain silent while Canada gets a larger share of the market than we already have.

There were some three occasions in the last 15 years when they shut down the border on some other restrictions. The free trade agreement allows them to continue to do the same thing. What kind of deal is that?

I never knew that Canada exported raspberries, but the same thing happened with raspberries twice in the last three years. Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia ship thousands of tonnes of raspberries to the United States. The Americans countervailed our raspberries. Nothing has changed with the free trade deal.

The same provisions will still apply, whether it is with respect to trucking, airlines, rail or marine shipping. I suggest to my hon. friend that he read the transportation annex. Read what it says. It says that neither party shall be under any obligation to change existing measures—existing measures—relating to the provision of transportation services that accord persons of the other party treatment that is less favourable—I repeat, less favourable—than that accorded to its own persons. So nothing has changed. The competitive line rates we have granted to the United States railroads are not available to Canadian railroads in the United States. No one can tell me that Bill C-18 and the free trade deal does anything about that because it does not. It is another instance where we gave away the store.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate initiated this afternoon by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet). He moved this motion:

> That this House condemn the Government for its destructive influence on the Canadian transportation industry by its impractical and slavish adherence to the ideological myth of deregulation and its inept trade negotiations with the United States—

Mr. Speaker, this kind of preamble in the motion by the Hon. Member for Papineau depicts admirably the ineptitude of this Conservative Government. I see the Hon. Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Vezina) sitting across the way. Mr. Speaker, I like the Minister very much. At one time I had the privilege to be her critic in the House. We got along fairly well. I think that she is damaging her own credibility by condoning her government even when it is wrong. She should be more excellent. It would enhance her credibility which is already very high. But she will loose it if she continues to approve the initiatives of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) who lacks a great deal of judgement in transportation issues and nearly all other issues for that matter.

Mr. Speaker, many Canadians worry about the free trade deal concluded by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States. It has already been said today that the shipping industry is deeply worried. The Dominion Marine Association which represents 14 Canadian shipping companies, or 90 per cent of this industry, opposes the deal. The Government told us that this free trade deal was needed in order to find a way to settle trade disputes between our two countries and also to protect and increase our sales and our markets in the United States.

I ask the Minister opposite: what has been done to change the Jones Act, for instance, an American act which for all practical purposes prohibits any foreign investment or profit in the U.S. marine industry? The Minister knows—she said it earlier—that the Jones Act is untouched, that it is a protectionist measure that is almost airtight. It is impossible to amend. The Minister agreed to that. I suppose she will also agree that the Prime Minister's efforts to increase trade, at least in that area, were a complete failure. This is the only possible conclusion, Mr. Speaker. What access do Americans have to Canadian markets? Everyone knows that Canada allows foreign-built ships and up to 100 per cent foreign ownership of a Canadian marine company. Mr. Norman Hall, president of the Dominion Marine Association, said on November 25 that the elimination of the 25 per cent tariff on 1000-foot ships, that is presently in existence and that will stay until the Government eliminates it with its famous free-trade deal, would ruin Canadian companies.

I note that the Minister answered some other questions earlier, but that she ignored this very important issue.

Mr. Speaker, other Canadian industries in the transportation field will be negatively affected.

[English]

For instance, we could talk about the railroads. We know, of course, that our rail system was deregulated by Bill C-18, a Bill proposed in this House by the Government of Canada. We also know that it is the same Government which proposed another Bill last year, Bill C-97. Under Bill C-97, a Bill entitled an Act respecting rail passenger transportation, there would be a provision in there to permit the Minister to abandon passenger rail lines without even having a hearing process, under certain circumstances.

I bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, a very important issue for the constituency I represent. As you will know, because you are a very knowledgeable person, the CN train line between Ottawa and Montreal goes through the constituency of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. That rail line is commonly referred to, in railway language, as the Alexandria subdivision. One would think that the rail line linking the Cities of Ottawa and Montreal would be pretty safe from being shut down. That is not so. CN released—not intentionally, of course but made public—a document on September 25, 1986, outlining how it was going to proceed to shut down certain rail lines, one being the Alexandria subdivision between Ottawa and Montreal. That would effectively eliminate all passenger and freight between Ottawa and Montreal. I know you have travelled on that train yourself, Mr. Speaker, and so have many other people, but they will not be able to do that if CN gets its way.

The internal document in question was actually slipped under my door by someone. That is how it was released. That does happen every now and then and, incidentally, I may as well take this occasion now to say to anyone who has any such documents that they would like to slip under my door, I would be always ready to accept them as I have in the past.

This document dated September 25, 1986, signed by Mr. R. P. Langlois, states:

> In the context of the rationalization of our rail infrastructure, some lines have been identified as being potential candidates for abandonment in the coming years. A preliminary plan has been prepared and attached you will find the sections affected.

It goes on to say that any effort to attract new traffic on these lines is to be abandoned immediately. In other words, this internal document is telling other functionaries of CN Rail to stop looking for customers, that it wants to shut down. I have the attached list referred to in the letter which identifies each subdivision and the year CN plans to shut it down. The Alexandria subdivision, a distance of 57.7 miles—pardon me for not using metric—is scheduled to shut down, according to this list, in 1990.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the discovery of this document created quite a debate in the constituency I represent, and I know it did to a certain degree in the riding of Stormont—Dundas as well because that is a neighbouring riding to the one I represent in this House. We had meetings with community groups, all wanting to protest this potential closure. We even had a company in my riding which was prepared to construct a brand new building, a company which has now put all of its plans in abeyance. I am speaking of Alexandria Moulding. The building plan has stopped until the issue of whether or not we keep our rail line is settled since the company is not going to spend money without knowing whether or not it can ship its goods.

Over time we managed to get a commitment from the Government that the rail line would be safe until at least 1992. That is small comfort. The only thing that that has told us is that we are being given an extra two years. It is hardly something that would constitute reassurance for an industry in deciding whether or not to establish in our area.

In any case, on April 10, 1987, Lawrence Hanigan, the defeated Tory candidate in the riding of Laval-des-Rapides, who was subsequently appointed to head VIA Rail, wrote a letter to the Hon. Member for Stormont—Dundas (Mr. Warner) in which he stated:

> As I indicated to you on the telephone, VIA has every intention of maintaining service between Ottawa and Montreal. It is, for that matter, a core service, and would be protected in the service network listed in the schedule attached to the proposed National Rail Passenger Transportation Act.

This National Rail Passenger Transportation Act is Bill C-97. In the annex to the Bill the Alexandria subdivision is listed as a corridor service. Under Clause 14(a) of the Bill a corridor service must recover at least 100 per cent of specific costs. In other words, if it does not break even the Minister has the right to shut it down. That is exactly the problem, it does not break even. So in other words what Mr. Hanigan has told us is, "Don't worry because we will shut it down". That is in fact what Bill C-97 states. Luckily since then the Tories have abandoned Bill C-97 and will apparently bring forward a new Bill in a short period of time. We do not know what it will be like. However, we hope that at least that corridor will be protected, and really protected, not the way it was under the transportation legislation of last year.

I wish to speak briefly about the trucking industry in the riding I represent. The largest single employer in my riding is a company by the name of Glengarry Transport. Glengarry Transport has some 2,000 employees.

That industry owns more than 5000 vehicles and, contrary to what might be thought, it is not a big multinational, nor an American company, nor a company from a big city. In fact, the Glengarry Transport Company, or GTL as it is known in the area, belongs to the Lefebvre family from Alexandria. Thus, it is a family business, a big success which the people of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell are very proud of.

Messrs Poirier and Vaillancourt, the managers of Glengarry Transport, told me in June that, if passed, Bill C-19 would cause their company to cut 20 to 30 per cent of its jobs. Imagine, Mr. Speaker, 30 per cent of the 2000 employees would lose their jobs. And why did we pass Bill C-19? Of course, it was to please the Americans, so that they would be willing to sign the Free Trade Agreement. I see a Minister on the other side, and it is interesting to note that that Minister is with us. I hope the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Dick) is not ill-disposed towards the people in the transport industry. For I know for sure, Mr. Speaker, that the Associate Minister of National Defence is very much ill-disposed towards the workers in the textile industry.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to read to you an article by Robert Bousquet, journalist at the daily newspaper Le Droit, which has been published last Monday. Mr. Bousquet interviewed the Associate Minister of National Defence. In particular, he asked the Minister why he favors free trade and so on. He wanted to know whether the Minister was worried about the textile industries. Here is what the Minister replied to those industries: "They had between three and five opportunities of modernizing through governmental programs. Companies that did not seize these opportunities just deserve to close down. It is for democracy: you cannot please everybody. Some will be affected." The article goes on: "Mr. Dick does not see the need for a referendum on free trade. He says: Our mandate was to set the Canadian economy back on foot, and free trade is a means towards that end."

That is the statement made on Monday by the Associate Minister of National Defence. I tell the Minister that his remarks regarding the textile workers, the managers of that industry and the industry as a whole will haunt him from now on because he has no right whatsoever to pretend that his Government has the privilege to decide that some industries are outdated.

This Government, Mr. Speaker, was elected with an overwhelming majority. Yes, we recognize it. It is unfortunate that it was elected with such a majority. Indeed, it is unfortunate that it was elected, period! However, during the election campaign, the gentleman who is now the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) said, and I quote:

[English]

"Don't talk to me about free trade. That issue was decided in 1911. Free trade is a danger to Canadian sovereignty. You will hear none of it from me at election time nor at any other time". Those were the words of the man who is now the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) as stated in 1983.

What are we to conclude? That, once again, the Prime Minister gave erroneous information to the Canadian people? And I am trying to be generous here. What are we to think of an Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Dick) who makes comments about the textile workers such as the ones I have just read from the paper, pretending on the one hand that industries deserve to be shut down while on the other the Government has a mandate to negotiate free trade? One statement is wrong and the other is an outright insult to many constituents, not only those in my riding but in the riding of Lanark—Renfrew—Carleton as well as in the ridings of Montreal and many other communities around the country. In my riding there are over 3,000 people who work in the textile field. I know that I am digressing slightly from transportation but I am still dealing with free trade. Those people do not appreciate those kinds of remarks that have been made.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude by saying in the few minutes or even seconds I have left that 47 American states still have strong restrictions regarding access of Canadian truckers to their territory. For these Canadian transport firms, increased access to the United States will be difficult if not altogether impossible. Given the appendix introduced earlier by our colleague the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), the transport appendix to the free trade agreement proposed by the Americans, it is evident that if the proposed annex is adopted as it now stands the Canadian transport industry has nothing to gain and everything to lose.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the trucking industry was well advised to ask for this 90 day moratorium and I ask again why the Minister has refused the moratorium.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister and his Government owe excuses to the Canadian people for the mess they have just created.

• (1320)

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a short comment in view of the fact that the Hon. Member who has just spoken has consistently misrepresented the truth, but there is nothing unusual in the fact that he does not know what he is talking about.

The Hon. Member did not attend the Eastern Ontario Economic Conference at which I spoke on Monday of this week. But as a Member of Parliament from eastern Ontario, perhaps he should have gone there; he may have learned something. There was a lot of representation from people in the municipalities in his constituency, and many other Members of Parliament were there from eastern Ontario. It was a pity that the Hon. Member did not have the interest in his own constituents.

Not once did I make a reference to the workers of the textile industry. I made reference once to a textile industry, which was brought up as an example. This textile industry had not modernized over the years, and it was pointed out that it felt that it would not be able to compete. I pointed out that it had been given three five-year programs, the first undertaken by the former Liberal administration in which the textile industry was given special consideration in order that it would be able to put itself into a position to compete. If management had been so poor as not to do that, then I felt sorry for the workers in that industry, but I said that we would have to provide some transfer of funds in order to ensure that we would be able to get new jobs for them.

It is a pity that the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) always misrepresents the truth in the House. It is a pity for his constituents whom he does not serve well by not even going to the Eastern Ontario Economic Conference. I feel that he should spend more time being a good Member than picking holes and misrepresenting other people's thoughts.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I will gladly respond to that intervention.

First, I do not apologize for having been in the House of Commons on Monday. I was elected to be here. I was doing my job. I was on Parliament Hill at the time that this conference was going on.

Mr. Dick: The meeting was at lunch time.

Mr. Boudria: Second, the Minister makes this gratuitous comment that that industry in my riding had not modernized. We all heard that comment, and we can read it in Hansard of Monday. Now he cannot say that he did not make that statement. It was made right in this House.

Mr. Dick: I didn't say that industry, I said "an industry".

Mr. Boudria: He stated that the industry in question that he was asked about had not modernized. The industry in question in my riding, the Texturon Mill in Hawkesbury, was only built in the mid-seventies. It is not a question of it modernizing. Had the Minister bothered to find out the facts before making his statements on Monday and today, he would not have got himself into the foot and mouth disease problem that he is in now.

I wish to read the letter sent to me by the industry in question. It states:

> This letter is written objecting to the planned agreement on free trade with the U.S.A. You are familiar with our operation on Cameron Street in Hawkesbury at which we produce textured polyester yarn in a modern plant with excellent high speed equipment. Should total free trade with the U.S.A. be placed in effect, we beyond doubt will have to close our plant in Hawkesbury. We could not possibly compete with firms in the U.S.A., one of which presently produces in excess of 5 million pounds weekly. Our production in Hawkesbury is approximately 200,000 pounds weekly.

It is not an issue of modernization. The fact is that some of those plants in the United States could produce more in their coffee break than this plant in my riding produces in one week. That is the reality. There is over capacity in that plant. It can add a shift, or as I stated moments ago, cancel one break and it would be able to totally ruin and destroy an industry which provides the livelihood of 72 of my constituents. One would think that that being the case, the least that the Government could provide to my constituents is compassion and assistance instead of laughing at them and pretending that those industries deserve to be shut down, and presumably meaning that my constituents also deserve to be put out of work.

That is not good enough for the people whom I represent. Let me remind Members that whatever few votes there were for the Conservative Party in Glengarry-Prescott—Russell have gone with the rest of the votes throughout the rest of the country—out the window for the Tories.

Mr. Warner: The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) covered various areas in his speech, and I wish to touch on a few of them, one being the Alexandria subdivision. The Hon. Member mentioned certain letters received from Mr. Hanigan of VIA Rail, and also indications from CN as to its intention of continuing to provide service on this rail line between Montreal and Ottawa.

You have indicated, Mr. Speaker, that this is the rail line that you use, and a great many people share your concern. I also share the concern that this line continue to be in place in order that operations continue, as the management of VIA Rail and CN Rail intend. VIA Rail's indication was that almost indefinitely passenger service will continue to be provided between Montreal and Ottawa as it is a core service.

CN Rail has indicated that although the line is under review, as a great many lines are from time to time, to see that it is economically feasible to continue full operations, it does assure the people along that line who are using it for freight traffic that it will be continued for at least five years. That is all that it will guarantee any line of continued usage.

Most important is the fact that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), who ultimately has the control in saying that this line will stay in place and continue to be available for Canadians, has indicated that without doubt this line will continue forever and ever. Although he does not put "forever and ever" in his statement, he certainly indicates that as long as he is around, which will be a long time, that that line will stay in place and continue to serve the people who use it, and who continue to want the services in that area.

Another point on the textile industry, Mr. Speaker, I too share the Hon. Member's concern as there are 3,000 constituents in my riding employed by Dominion Textile, which is the largest employer in my riding. Dominion Textile has three plants in my riding, one of which recently received a bronze award from the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion for productivity. I am very proud to stand here in the House and congratulate the employees and management of that company for their extraordinary effort, and perhaps setting an example for other people in the textile industry that they can compete and they will compete, given an opportunity.

This is where opportunity in our riding can be very important. Guaranteed access to the U.S. market is giving an opportunity for another plant of Dominion Textile to modernize and possibly expand. We look forward to a new way of life, and a new, grand market much larger than it is now for the Caldwell Mill in Iroquois. There are 400 people working at this plant, and I am sure that it will admit that its present operation is not as competitive as its operation to the south in the United States. But the opportunity for this expanded market, guaranteed access to a market 10 times larger than the Canadian market, provides an opportunity for it to modernize and sell into that market aggressively.

Dominion Textile is no loser. It is presently aggressively expanding into the United States through acquisition and through continuing to force its way into that market and expand its market, and it will not change. That company will not change. It will continue on with guaranteed access to that market and will be able to supply products from Iroquois and the Long Sault plant to wherever it is able to market. Thank goodness for the free trade agreement because it will have guaranteed access to that market.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I will respond briefly to those points. I thank the Hon. Member for his question. Unfortunately, as much as I respect my distinguished neighbour and colleague, I cannot agree with what he said.

First, he said that we have guaranteed access. I do not believe that that is so. A review done by Blake, Cassels & Graydon, a law firm which did a study for the Government of Ontario, refers to four criteria that were analysed in relation to the agreement. I read the operative paragraph of that report:

> An application of these four criteria shows that the dispute settlement mechanisms contained in the Agreement are flawed in ways that are likely to result in a significant denial of Canadian access to the U.S. markets.

That is far from being guaranteed access in my opinion.

Second, in relation to the subdivision of CN Rail that both you and I, Mr. Speaker, think is very important, as does the Hon. Member for Stormont—Dundas (Mr. Warner), the Minister only gave his guarantee until 1992 and said that it would possibly be there longer than that. He said it would possibly be there much longer than that, to appropriately quote the Minister.

On April 20, 1987, the Save the Line Committee was totally dissatisfied with that answer and wrote a letter to the Editor of the Glengarry News under the heading: "Here we go again!" The first paragraph of the letter reads as follows:

> First of all, I must take issue with your front page headline 'Alexandria rail line safe for five years, says Warner', which may give the uninformed reader the wrong impression. The line is anything but safe!

There is much more information in the letter which I do not have time to read now, but it was signed by Michael Cowley-Owen, the President of the Save the Line Committee of Alexandria. As Hon. Members can see, the information is not quite as it was reported a few moments ago.

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly pleased to take part in today's debate because we have been listening for some time to Opposition Members who spoke about all kinds of other things than the free trade Agreement and, in particular, transportation. A few minutes ago, we heard the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) who claims to be an expert in almost all areas. He should stick to public works and especially underground. I think that is his area of expertise. I do not wish to say any more in this regard.

M. Boudria: No, because you do not have the guts to say what you have in mind!

Mr. Grisé: Once again, Mr. Speaker, he spoke for 20 minutes about almost anything but the matter of transportation and particularly the deregulation of transportation under the Canada-United States free trade Agreement. Instead of reading a few comments, a few letters which he finds here and there, he would do better to consult with the industry at times, not only the various transportation industries but related industries as well.

Obviously, a free trade Agreement with the United States in the area of transportation is a necessary step. Let me explain. If we deregulate transportation in Canada, as the United States did before us, how could there be any fairness on both sides of the border without some trade agreement?

For instance, how could the trucking industry, particularly in Quebec, in Canada, compete with American transportation firms which have just been deregulated, which can get supplies of equipment, material, all kinds of items used for the maintenance of their truck fleet and so on, and which can buy goods to which no taxes or tariffs apply whereas the Canadian industry must carry that burden, Mr. Speaker.

Therefore, we must take these very important points in consideration in that free trade Agreement. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, when we meet with some members of the industry, as I did myself a few weeks ago when I was in Los Angeles to meet with 200 transportation brokers of the Transportation Brokers Conference of America,

[English]

At the Transportation Brokers' Conference of America, 200 people directly involved in broking transportation in the trucking industry from Canada and the United States attended and asked very interesting questions. They are all very interested in getting an agreement on free trade between our two countries as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker, the trucking industry is not the only one interested in the free trade deal. There is also, of course, the passenger service industry. There too the products are different. There cannot be adequate competition where an American or a Canadian business is involved because their products, their production costs and their equipment are different, and there cannot be legitimate and fair competition without a free trade deal in the passenger service sector.

The free trade deal will also bring a fundamental change in the transport industry in general; it will have an increasing impact in the service industry, in manufacturing or tourism. That is extremely important, Mr. Speaker. There will be such an influx of or increase in traffic on both sides of the border that Canadian industries will benefit from a much more interesting potential volume of business than before. Mr. Speaker, this way, they will be even more competitive because our service industries have never been afraid of competition, but they will also be able to gain more customers, increase their potential and improve their services to the population.

Mr. Speaker, there is also a quite related . . .

Mr. Fontaine: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ellis): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) on a point of order.

Mr. Fontaine: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have before us today an opposition motion against free trade with the United States, but there is nobody on the Opposition side to defend it.

Is it only to waste the time of the House that the Liberals who chose free trade as the subject of debate on an allotted day have all left the House? What is going on? Where is their sense of duty, Mr. Speaker?

• (1340)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ellis): It is an interesting point but unfortunately not a point of order.

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, I understand the intervention of my colleague but I wish to mention the presence in the House of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) who has a lot of work to do within his party. There are not too many good Members left on the Liberal Party side, Mr. Speaker, and I understand that their Whip has a considerable amount of work to do. It is understandable that he may have to leave the House from time to time. Mr. Speaker, I firmly believe that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is, in fact, supporting the Government's position over the free trade deal with the United States.

I am also convinced, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier is, like us, considering the importance of the free trade deal, particularly in the transportation industry, for the development of our manufacturing industries. Before Bills C-18 and C-19 and other regulatory measures, our manufacturing industries, particularly in remote areas, often were penalized as they had only access to a single carrier which could freely set its rates as it was the only one to hold a licence. It also could set the scheduling or the frequency of its service to that industry, which could prejudice its development.

Then, how could an industry, particularly in a remote area, become competitive not only with another industry in the same province, located in a large centre, in the same country, but also on the international market? Now, Bills C-18 and C-19 allow a carrier to find customers and to apply for a permit to the Department of Transport which will have to prove that this new carrier would prejudice the economy of the area or, on the contrary, assist the local industry. Once again, this relates perfectly with what might be considered now as a quasi-official free trade deal with the United States. The deregulation of transport allows Canadian industries to compete thanks not only to their productivity, or to the quality of their products, or to their marketing aggressiveness but also to their ability to get a better price, to move their goods at a better cost, which will allow them to become more competitive.

Deregulation, therefore, helps a business to become more competitive, and the Free Trade Agreement with the United States provides for an increase in its productivity.

Mr. Speaker, it is this Conservative Government, thanks to its leader the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), which has initiated this trade policy between Canada and the United States to effectively . . . It is not always to harm Canadian men and women, Mr. Speaker, it is to help them develop and for the first time in the history of Canada, the only country with fewer than 100 million consumers . . . we will have direct access to a market with over 100 million consumers, in fact with almost three times as much, over 250 million.

But what will over 250 million consumers do for our manufacturing companies? They will make it possible for them . . . They will provide them with a huge market which they did not have before. They will motivate them into creating better products, finding cheaper raw materials, as a result of the elimination of tariffs. They will be able to import cheaper raw materials. With greater volumes, they will be able again to increase their productivity, because Canadian men and women working in the manufacturing or processing industry are very aggressive and are not afraid to tackle a competitive market. They will be able to get it. They have already started and will continue to do so over the next few years, thanks to the Free-Trade Agreement with our American friends.

What is most important, besides the increased productivity and renewed aggressiveness of our companies is the fact that there was a shortcoming with regard to the ability to providing services, obtaining those products and delivering the goods whereas they were not competitive in the area of transport.

Now, with deregulation in Canada, our Canadian transportation companies and the American companies also, at the end of the line, will have better rates, more traffic, but with better rates, and at the end of the line, Mr. Speaker, who benefits the most if not consumers generally, and everyone in Canada? This is what the Prime Minister addressed in 1984 when he promised Canadians that we would restore the Canadian economy to a healthy state. This is what it means in my view, Mr. Speaker, giving the people, Canadians and Quebecers, a healthy economy. What does that mean? More subsidies. More social programs. When we can afford it, yes, Mr. Speaker, but it also means lower consumer prices, a larger range of products available to Canadians. Is that not economic health?

Mr. Speaker, transportation deregulation is extremely important. And when they talk about a sell-out, a sell-out of the transportation industry in order to get a free-trade agreement with the United States, they show total ignorance of the industry, Mr. Speaker.

Go and ask the President of CIL, and CIL I assume is also a Canadian company, and not a Toronto-only Canadian company at that. CIL, Canadian Industries Limited, Mr. Speaker, has facilities across Canada for manufacturing various goods. Ask those companies, like SICO Paint for instance, ask them what negative impact transportation deregulation has, and you will see how they will stress the positive aspects. Of course this is not a perfect system, but where on this planet, Mr. Speaker, can perfect systems be found? There may be perfect systems in the NDP lofty policies, but here we do not claim we have developed a perfect system of government management, Mr. Speaker. But we are very much aware of the importance of the manufacturing industry, of transportation, of those service industries. And all this is directly implied in the historic agreement which we are discussing, which the Premiers have been discussing yesterday in Toronto and will be discussing over the coming weeks.

Without this Free Trade Agreement, Mr. Speaker, Canada would remain a small country for us alone, maintaining the status quo which Opposition Members find so precious. But try to move a train when it is stopped on the track. It will not budge. Try to imagine what happens when you are moving ahead and decide all of a sudden to stop to maintain the status quo? You will very quickly realize that others are moving ahead, and you are standing still if you will have a somewhat reverse visual impact. You get the impression of moving backward when you are stopped. This is really the very short term effect of maintaining the status quo for a while: getting the impression that you are moving backward when everybody else is moving forward.

People are concerned about Canada's sovereignty in the Free Trade Agreement. Has Belgium, Holland, or Sweden, which is not even a member of the European Economic Community and which has a free trade agreement with that community, lost its sovereignty? Have the Swedes lost their language, have they lost their culture? Are the products imported by Sweden labelled exclusively in Italian, in Spanish, in German or in French? Yet, this is only a very small country of 10 million people next to a big giant, the European Economic Community which has a population of 300 millions. Have they lost their sovereignty for all that? Did these men and women lose pride in their Swedish citizenship? Of course not, Mr. Speaker. In no way have they lost anything. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker . . .

Mr. Harris: They did not give up anything either.

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, I hear a new NDP Member say that they did not give up anything. Indeed, he should read what is being prepared and learn about the discussions that took place until now. Quite on the contrary, the Conservative Government does not give up anything but is helping development, increasing the production of Canadian men and women, contributing to the opening up of new markets. We are not afraid. We do not treat our adult population like " little boys" and "little girls" because ... No, no, do not go anywherelse because the big bad wolf will gobble you up. Mr. Speaker, we have confidence in our population. Canadian men and women can face any kind of international market. That is why the free trade deal with the United States is so important. We are proud of our population, of our Canadian men and women; we are prepared to defend them and also to open up new potential markets for them, to give them their true place on the international market, and the Canadian population will show that it is in agreement with the Conservative Government.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, in his comments the Hon. Member referred to my presence here and indicated I was in agreement with his suggestions. I would like to assure him that on the one hand I fail to share the views he has expressed, explained or developed. On the other hand, concerning the impact on the trucking industry in particular, I think he could have been modest enough to recognize that there is a problem in the Canadian and the American industries. The heart of the matter, in fact the heart of the dispute is that, according to the shipping industry, the wording indeed of the first annex and the later version may provide for easy access to Canada by American companies, at the expense of Canadian companies which were not given by this Government a firm commitment that we would have, loosely speaking, the kind of new, North American Jones Act that would allow Canadian companies, Canadian transportation workers to reach the American ports, to do on the American side what the current wording of the agreement allows Americans to do on our side here.

That is the heart of the problem, and the Hon. Member knows very well it is not accurate to state that the free trade agreement will have no impact on Canadian trucking. It will have an impact, a serious impact, and he knows it. I would ask him simply to be straight forward enough to admit it.

Let us look for a solution, let us try to amend the agreement. Indeed, this morning, there were reports through someone who knows about the issue, that the Mulroney-Reagan agreement, if there is to be one, may be amended one of the negotiators who stated today that yes, it is possible to bring in amendments. This is one amendment that will have to be made to the agreement, making sure it is fair and just for both sides.

The other question he raised in his conclusion, something I found quite interesting coming from him, is the so-called national pride.

I am asking him the question, because he knows that in Canada we have legislation or regulations providing that anything written on packaged or prepackaged products should appear in both official languages, that is in French and English. Does he not agree with me that it would be advisable to include in the deal a safeguard for that Canadian legislation or those regulations which could be used by the Americans as a non-tariff barrier? Could they use that argument and say: "Listen now, in the United States we do not have two official languages. You are then setting an additional charge and it is unfair to impose Canadian bilingualism on the American manufacturing industry."

I say in all fairness that if it was possible to do it for security, as provided in the agreement, and for all kinds of things such as culture and marketing offices, then one of the most important legislation in the country, the one dealing with bilingualism, should be included.

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, I will respond to the comments made by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (M. Gauthier). It is certain, first of all, that the trucking industry has an impact on free trade, and a very positive one at that, as I have said earlier.

Of course, I am no expert on transport, unlike the members opposite who all have so much to say on the subject. I have only been in the transport business for 20 years, in trucking as well as in passenger transport. So I do not at all consider myself an expert in the field, Mr. Speaker. However, the little I have learned, I do remember well.

I do not believe for a moment a problem exists between the United States and Canada. On the contrary. Deregulation and the free trade deal will be extremely beneficial to the transport industries, particularly those of Canada.

My time ran out before I could mention it earlier, but at the present time, in the passenger service sector, for instance, bus companies from Quebec or Canada, unless they have entirely defined routes, are not allowed on their way to Miami or Chicago or anywhere else to offer bus tours of New York or Washington when they go through those cities because they have no permit to do so and cannot get one either. It is the direct business, the one that is directly involved.

The same applies to Canada. Before deregulation, a group arriving in a smaller centre, in Quebec or in Canada, did not have anyone to handle its transportation needs and the carrier which had moved them from A to B could not do it either, because of the rules. Consequently, this is also, I believe, a significant improvement.

As to the national pride and the question of labelling, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is right to raise that point, but it has already been discussed. The province and the Premier of Quebec would never have agreed to a Canada—United States Free Trade Agreement had the matter of labelling been questioned. Look at the number of countries presently doing business with the United States. A lot of goods manufactured in the United States are imported into Canada. There is certainly a lot of products manufactured in the United States and sold in Canada, and in Japan too.

Some Japanese-made products are sold in Canada bearing French labels and there is nothing in the Agreement ... They have to do it for sure ... Nothing in the Free Trade Agreement compromises ... It is covered and the Prime Minister was very clear at the onset. The Prime Minister of Canada has stated that social programs, marketing offices and culture were not to be touched.

Mr. Speaker, I would conclude on this because I would like to allow another member to put a question to me.

• (1400)

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member spent some time defending the Government against what I believe are legitimate charges in the motion, that the rules imposed in this agreement will not be equal for Canadian airlines, ships, trucks and rail. They will not have the same access to the U.S. market as has been granted to those American transportation modes into Canada.

He talked about fear and how we had to get away from the status quo. I could not help but think of what was said some 300 years ago when doctors used to bleed patients. It became a common practice to bleed people, as this was considered a good practice to remain healthy. At the same time, some religious orders and others engaged in self flagellation. I believe we began to hear the same thing recently with respect to the economic field, with the saying of short term pain for long term gain. It sounds alarmingly like the same kind of methods are being practised on our economy and body politic.

Perhaps it is time to update our economic understanding and theories in this country, rather than to attack the status quo. The ancient doctors were quite convinced that anyone who had not been recently bled was unhealthy. I am wondering whether some of that same attitude has not gone into the political mindset in Canada, particularly when we rush into a proposed deal like this which clearly gives more benefits to the other party than ours in the field of transportation. The rationale is that while it will hurt in the short term, it will be good for the industry.

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, I am not as old as the Hon. Member to be able to comment on the ancient doctors. I have never been close to one and do not know their experience. Perhaps the Hon. Member does, but I am much too young.

As far as fear and the status quo is concerned, the Hon. Member has no trouble coping with the status quo of the Auto Pact. We know that the United Auto Workers are strong supporters of the NDP and they are quite content to be the only ones to have a free trade agreement with the United States.

When we talk about economic bodies, we are not only dealing with high level manufacturers. The first and most important economic body in Canada is consumers. It is Canadians, especially ordinary Canadians as the NDP like to call them. We refer to them as strong and important Canadians.

In 1965, the NDP was opposed to the Auto Pact because it would wash out all jobs in Canada, especially in that industry. However, let us consider the job creation that has taken place and how it has strengthened the economy of southern Ontario.

We are seeking those results not only in Ontario but throughout Canada, for a stronger economy in all regions.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I want to join in the debate on this motion this afternoon which concerns two interrelated matters of Government policy.

First, I want to comment on the observations just made by the Parliamentary Secretary in relation to the comments of my friend, the Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) who pointed out some of the dangers of free trade.

It may be useful to appreciate that the Auto Pact, which Government Members have often raised as an argument for the free trade deal which was negotiated this fall, is by no means a straightforward free trade agreement. It includes some very significant safeguards for Canadian content, continuing employment in Canada, and for a relationship between the number of cars sold in Canada and the production of automobiles in Canada. Those are the kinds of provisions that are very important to an agreement.

We had a free trade agreement in agricultural implements for many decades. That industry was forced to function in conditions under which prairie farmers and others were able to buy equipment made in the United States, without having to pay a duty. When we consider an industry such as that, the horrifying result is that there is precious little production by major producers in Canada.

We can use the example of the great company of Massey Harris as it was known years ago. The companies of Massey and Harris, were combined in the late nineteenth century in order to provide a stronger competitor for Canadian and export markets. This company, which later became Massey Ferguson, does very little production in Canada when we consider where the tractors and combines are made. The majority of its production for the Canadian market takes place in the United States.

While the farmer constituents in the riding of my friend for Humboldt—Lake Centre have benefited from free trade over the years, the results of free trade to the constituents of my friend, the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), where combines were made in the past, have meant the disappearance of that industry entirely.

To think that free trade is going to be some great panacea for the Canadian economy deserves very careful consideration, industry by industry. In that spirit, I would like to take up the motion before us this afternoon, "that this House condemn the Government for its destructive influence on the Canadian transportation industry by its impractical and slavish adherence to the ideological myth of deregulation and its inept trade negotiations with the United States", and there are four paragraphs, and I would like to focus on two of those.

Paragraph 2 states:

> (2) introduction in the railway industry of "Competitive Rail Line Rate" provisions allowing American railways free access to Canadian markets while denying reciprocal arrangements for Canadian railways;

And paragraph (4) states:

> (4) abandoning its legislation on the Canadian coasting trade and failing to obtain any benefits in the trade agreement for Canadian maritime industries.

The Canadian railways provide us with a very interesting instance, again to use a specific example of an industry to focus the concerns we in the Opposition, particularly the New Democratic Party, feel about both the deregulation program and the agreement arrived at this fall. The railways, as I say, provide a fascinating case. Initially we find support for the program the Government was putting forward under its Freedom to Move rubric and in Bill C-18 and Bill C-19, in particular. There was very significant support from CP Rail and CNR for these provisions. When the railways looked more closely at what the Government was proposing to do, and when they focused on this competitive rail line rate provision, they suddenly did an about face.

Why did the railways, which have been so ideologically in line with the Government on its deregulation program, do that kind of about face? They discovered that what the Government was proposing on the Canadian side was a provision under which someone who had goods to ship could turn to the rail line and tell it that if it ships the goods to the border and ties in with an American line going to the vicinity of the market to which the individual wanted his goods shipped—using perhaps the Burlington Northern system across the West—and if the American railways quoted a significantly lower rate, the Canadian railway would be forced to use that particular system. The Canadian railway would not only be unable to quote the higher rate but would actually end up losing the income from carriage of those goods from the market, wherever it happened to be, perhaps in southern Ontario, to a western market.

When the Canadian railways realized that in the United States under its economies of scale, the massive amounts of freight the American railways carry, and under the much more favourable tax laws and the vicious labour laws which have operated there for the last years, this competitive rail line rate provision could threaten three-quarters of the trade the Canadian railways were doing, they did a most remarkable about face. I personally, as the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon, experienced that. Officials from the CP Rail office in Winnipeg arrived in my riding to have a chat with me.

In decades past, the tradition of the CCF and NDP, when officials of the CP Rail came calling, if they ever did, was to have a very, very intensive encounter, indeed. In the mythology of our Party there is that moment when David Lewis said to a CP Rail president at a Rhodes Scholarship Committee, that if he were given the opportunity as Prime Minister of Canada, the first thing he would do would be to nationalize the CPR. That moment in the history of our Party stands in the sharpest contrast to what happened when these gentlemen arrived in my office in Thunder Bay. What they wanted to do was to have a close exchange of views in which they supported the criticism of my friend, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), of the Freedom to Move program and his criticism of what the Government is presuming to do with this deregulation program.

CP Rail became a supporter of our attack on deregulation. CP Rail, which is surely one of the remarkable fruits of enterprise in Canada—not necessarily competitive. There is a lot of monopoly about this business—recognized that what the Government was putting forward was a potential competition out of the United States which could well bring the railway to its knees, which could destroy the railway and employment in Canada, and make impossible the profitable state CP Rail has enjoyed, and which has made it such a producer of enterprise into other industries.

CP Rail enterprises have been the basis of much development in this country in the past, but the Government program of deregulation has every potential for destroying that for the future. There am I as a New Democrat making this odd speech in support of CP Rail at this point, but I am using it to demonstrate that the Government had the support of industry at one time, but after that industry considering the kind of concessions made to American interests on behalf of Canadian shippers, it no longer has that support. That has been mentioned by others.

Of course, Canadian shippers want to get the cheapest rate, but the Government thinks the only employment that counts in this country, the only prosperity that matters, is the production of minerals and chemicals. The Parliamentary Secretary alluded to CIL. Surely we want to ensure that the production of goods and their movement to markets in Canada and abroad are also productive of employment in transportation and communities.

In Thunder Bay, to focus on my own community again, where railway workers have been laid off in significant numbers by both CP Rail and the CNR, I see the proposals of the Government in its deregulation program as really destructive of employment and prosperity.

These proposals as they relate to the railways are reason enough for me to speak in support of the motion put forward this morning. What I would like to do now is to turn from the railways to the marine industries of this country, particularly to the shipbuilding industry. That is one with which I have been particularly concerned as critic in our caucus. I have had much reason to be concerned after conversations with shipyard workers and their managers, after visits to a variety of shipyards from Vancouver to Halifax, and after meeting with shipyard workers here on the Hill. I can appreciate the plight of that industry.

This is another industry about which to put forward criticisms of the Government's actions, actions which underscore the critical attitude in general that has been taken. I might begin with a letter written by the president of the Canadian Shipbuilding and Ship Repairing Association to the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) in the first days of this month. The letter was sent to a good number of cabinet Ministers and to all the Members of Parliament representing shipyards or related industries across the country. The letter states:

> The purpose of this letter is to advise you of the preliminary views of the Canadian Shipbuilding and Ship Repairing Association with respect to the document entitled "Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement—Elements of the Agreement". I say preliminary because this Association's Position will not be formalized until we have had an opportunity to study the completed document and its annexes, particularly the Transportation Annex.

He goes on to say:

> In the interim, however, we would like you to be aware of our extreme dissatisfaction with the Agreement, insofar as it affects ship construction. You will undoubtedly recall that on December 8, 1986 the CSSRA announced publicly its full endorsement of a comprehensive bilateral trade agreement with the U.S.
> This strong support assumed that the application of the U.S. Jones Act, the Burns-Tollefson Amendment, and other restrictive legislation concerning shipbuilding, on both sides, would be extended to cover both Canada and the U.S.

In other words, where the United States has restrictive legislation, or Canada might have some, including shipping interests and shipbuilders in the neighbouring country, those provisions would be spread so that the Americans would be able to take advantage of industries in Canada and Canadians could take advantage of activity in the United States.

That was the expectation. He goes on to state:

> In our dialogue with the SAGIT on Marine, Industrial and Rail Equipment, we received encouraging reaction to this position. We believed at that time, and still do, that such a provision within a free trade agreement would be of mutual benefit commercially and militarily. However, to the extent that we can determine at this stage, just the opposite has occurred. The U.S. Jones Act (and its many amendments and revisions) are exempt from any provision of the Free Trade Agreement; the Agreement is silent with respect to the Burns-Tollefson Amendment; and no mention is made of the shipbuilding industrial sector on either side.
> Thus we learned with some dismay that, apparently, our industrial sector was overlooked. Unfortunately, this does not surprise us, as the Government has been reluctant to consider the interests of Canadian shipyards with respect to national policy for many years.

When he says for many years he clearly recognizes that the failure of this Government to do anything for shipbuilding is a failure that characterized the preceding Liberal Government just as much.

The result of this is that the organization which has been renamed the Canadian Maritime Industries Association, formerly the Canadian Shipbuilding and Ship Repairing Association, put out a release with this letter declaring that the elements of the agreement that have been made public to date cause its members deep concern with respect to the construction of ships. The President in the covering release reiterates the hopes that they had of being able to benefit from American activity by having the restrictions of the Jones Act and other legislation removed. He said that instead the opposite appears to have occurred since the Jones Act governing ships engaged in U.S. domestic trade is specifically excluded from the free trade agreement. No mention is made of the shipbuilding industry.

That is reason enough for me as the critic for shipbuilding in our caucus to strongly support this particular motion. Here we have the failure of the Government to achieve anything in an agreement which members of the government party would declare is now the basic element in their strategy for Canada and their hopes for the prosperity of the country. Here is an industry that has been left out completely. What this reflects is the ongoing crisis of the shipbuilding industry to which I alluded earlier this afternoon in my statement under Standing Order 21.

We have the reality that the Party that now governs promised in August of 1984 to make shipbuilding a prosperous industry in Canada. That promise from members of the Atlantic caucus was surely a fairly considered decision since there were various items on which the Conservative Party promised action before it won election in September of 1984. In practice they have not done so. In practice there has been no action on these items. We have not had any statement of policy on shipbuilding at all.

Initially, people in the industry sought a statement. Eventually, they got to the desperate point of saying that if they had a policy statement saying that there is not going to be any policy even that would be something. What they have had to settle for is a policy which clearly accepts the decline of the industry, a policy that states, "We will assist you in rationalizing". In practice that means that the Government is saying, "Let's reduce the number of shipyards. Let's close them down".

This was most obvious when correspondence from Quebec came to the public eye early in 1985. That correspondence indicated that there was pressure being put on the yards on the St. Lawrence to have some of them put over completely to industrial work. The correspondence indicated that this was being accepted by the owner, by the Versatile interests, as justification for it to ask for more work and for more assistance from the Government for those yards that would continue in existence.

The ironic thing about this is that in the Province of Ontario yards have functioned over many years in St. Catharines, Collingwood and in my constituency at the Port Arthur Shipbuilding Company. As the decline of traffic on the lakes hit these areas very severely in 1984, 1985 and 1986, and as the amount of repair work to be done declined, and as there was no building taking place at all, the bankruptcy of the Government in the area of shipbuilding policy became a basis for companies to close their yards and to consolidate the remaining work.

Thus Collingwood, a yard at which fine commercial work had been done over many years, has disappeared. Never again will ships be built in that yard. What we have seen then and what we saw again this week with a demonstration yesterday of workers from Halifax who came to Ottawa to demonstrate against the Government to demand action on shipbuilding policy is a declaration that here is a government that may yield to political pressure. The next election draws near. We hear about a task force these days. The previous Government used the task force on deep sea shipping as a way to get past an election. This Government is thinking about a different kind of task force.

This Government has failed the shipbuilding industries completely. It is threatening shipping. It threatens the rail operations of the country. Here is a government that deserves the condemnation which this motion before us this afternoon states.

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, when I hear my socialist colleague say that this Government has failed in the area of the shipping industry, of shipyards, etc., I suggest he is not aware of new developments. I think he should look around him and see what is going on across the country. Because Canadian Government orders in the area of defence are very significant in most Canadian shipyards, and if the Hon. Member had not been so subservient to the previous Government, today we would not have to make such an effort for capital expenditures in our defence system in order to buy boats, aircrafts, specialized trucks and so on.

I also have a little comment for my socialist colleague: if he had really wanted to inform this House properly concerning marine activities and the shipyard industry, he would have said that Bill C-52 respecting the coasting trade and marine commercial activities will have a very positive effect on our marine industries. I am anxious to see on what side of the issue the Hon. Member will stand when the final vote is taken on this Bill. But in any event, these people from the Socialist Party always manage to level specific criticism.

Today I had some difficulty understanding exactly what was the message given in this House other than a series of specific criticisms. However, Mr. Speaker, I read today in this week's issue of the Financial Post, a newspaper that they probably never read because Mr. Bob White must subscribe to the P*ravda* and not to the Financial Post. The Hon. Member should go to the library once in a while where he could read the Financial Post for free. I also recommend that paper to the Liberal Members who have been criticizing since this morning during the debate on the motion by the Hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), who have been criticizing our deregulation policy and our free trade policy. So I was saying that in today's Financial Post one can read that the Canadian Pacific, one of the biggest transport companies, has been taking measures in the past few months in order to be ready to tackle the enormous market that deregulation will open for development. And, Mr. Speaker, it says here and I agree, that by giving greater access to more carriers, by allowing negotiations between the carrier and users, this will result in a strong competition which in turn will lower the rates of transport. And when transportation costs are reduced . . . but Socialists are unaware of those things because they have never done any payroll work. They have always sponged on unions. When prices of goods are lowered in Canada as a result of reduced transportation costs, they become cheaper for all Canadians. This is what we do. We reduce consumer prices and thus extend our market abroad. However, you do not agree because you want to protect the free-trade situation that has prevailed in southern Ontario since 1965. Now it is impossible for Socialists to live with the requirements for competition and to have confidence in aggressive and glib Canadian industrialists who day after day are seeking new means of developing new and cheaper services for Canadians, because when everything is running smoothly in the system you sponge around and suck blood like leeches. You cannot understand anything else. This is why, Mr. Speaker, I am suprised at their interventions, week after week, day after day. It does not make sense, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) has give me an opportunity to reiterate some points, and add one or two. I am grateful for that opportunity. As another Member who represents a shipbuilding area, the tone that he takes strikes me as a bit odd. When I was talking about railways, I don't think that he was paying any attention; he was paying as little attention as the Parliamentary Secretary who was packing up his papers and leaving as I made those comments. It would have been useful for him to stay and receive the education of some specific information instead of serving up rhetoric.

What we have received from this Government in the way of activity in the shipyards is no novelty. As it approached an election, the last Government served up a number of contracts to specific yards in order to keep them working. We got this "scrap" program as it was articulated, the special capital recovery program which saw ships built in various yards on government contracts for the Coast Guard and so on. The last Government knew that perfectly well, and this Government has been doing the same thing. As the election draws near, if enough government contracts go into the yards, people will be working.

What we did not have from the last Government, and have not had from this Government, despite the bluster that we were just served, is a declaration that the Government recognizes that by putting enough of those contracts into yards and changing certain provisions, such as the exemption from duty of the largest fishing vessels so that they will not be imported but rather built here, it might be possible to keep work going in most of the yards of this country. We have not had that declaration as a policy, which it could be. Those who work in the yards, and those who own and manage them, would be very pleased to have the Government declare that as a policy.

Construction for Maritime Command was dreadfully neglected by the previous Government. By scheduling production for other services such as the Coast Guard, and determining the bases upon which the work will be distributed, there will not be those unseemly struggles between regions, for example with the St. Lawrence yard and the yard in the Hon. Member's riding working against the argument of the Saint John shipyard people that if the next six patrol frigates were built there, we will save $17 million a vessel—or is it on the whole package? We will not have those particular arguments being made. Those of us representing other yards, and Canadians generally will not be tempted to look through this thing and determine why Saint John Shipbuilding, which was a rather sorry starter, had reached the state of efficiency that might allow it to do that.

The Government has refused to state a policy, although it practises elements of it. It continues to argue that competitive bidding is actually the basis but does not look behind the bids—for example, the one that took the Simcoe to Marystown—without considering the possibility that provincial government assistance is allowing a yard to underbid other yards. People have not been getting into those questions, at least in public, whatever may happen in Transport Canada. There has been a failure to state a policy, and then the Hon. Member has the gall to rise and bluster at me.

Bill C-52 relates to the coasting trade of the country and it might offer something or other, but it is an odd situation. The Bill has been given second reading in the House. I understand the legislative committee is on hold. Is it on hold until after the trade deal is passed in order that we avoid disrupting anything, or why is it that this particular Bill not being acted upon?

If one looks carefully at Bill C-52 and the exemptions within it, one of the most harmful exemptions is for platforms used in the production of hydrocarbons. Those platforms out there are involved in drilling and production, particularly off the Atlantic coast, and they are ships of a sort. They could be built in Canadian yards. This Government has given us legislation that will allow import of them rather than construction in Canadian yards; not that they will be licensed, but they are simply exempted entirely from the Bill. What type of policy is that?

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to have an opportunity to participate in this debate today. The whole question of transportation is extremely important to the West, and that was the perspective I wished to bring to the debate. It is demonstrated by the fact that over 50 per cent of our exports to the United States are handled by trucking; 75 per cent of the imports to Canada are handled by trucking. Already we are seeing Canadian companies competing quite effectively in the United States.

I wish to go into that issue in a lot more detail, but obviously the time is not available.

The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) has western roots, and he was born in the West. As I grew up in the West, there were two things that were particularly aggravating to western Canadians. The first one has always been the high cost of shipping, and the second has been the high tariffs which we have seen as an intrusion to western Canadians rather than an assistance. We have always seen those items as a problem rather than a solution. What I see happening in this motion before us today is a combination of both free trade and transportation.

Will the Hon. Member address for a moment the impact that this has had on western Canada? Surely he would agree with me that through Bills C-18 and C-19 the western Canadian shipper, who has for years been at a disadvantage, as a result of Bills C-18 and C-19 is today moving into a position of advantage and opportunity, which we see as a big chance in the West. The free trade agreement will remove those tariffs which historically have been a real hindrance and burr in the saddle of western Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ellis): Perhaps the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) could condense his answer to approximately 60 seconds.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): If I only have 60 seconds, I will not address the tariffs.

As someone who grew up on a mixed farm in Manitoba with a father who sold grain through Thunder Bay and used the Seaway, I have a very great interest in western shipping and in using rail lines out of the West. We ought to recognize the importance of those lines.

Any fancy economic argument about more efficient use of resources somewhere else should never allow us to forget one brute reality: those communities need rail lines at economic rates in order to continue. The Hon. Member recognizes that fact, and I am sure would not deny it in the least.

My predecessors in the last Parliament who fought for the Crow Rate wanted to maintain low rates. They did not want any deregulation-style arguments or competitive enterprise arguments to be used to reduce this particular rate. The railways have been able to manage. Some subsidies were provided to them. A subsidy that is now under attack had been provided in order to maintain that.

I am sure that you wish me to stop, Mr. Speaker, but let me put forward those items. The Hon. Member's comments seem to be quite consistent with my position, which is at variance with the people who put forward this motion, and the position taken in the last Parliament. I am not sure it is in keeping with what the Hon. Member wants. I feel that he ought to reconsider his own position more firmly in terms of the Crow Rate in particular.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I understand that another Member wishes to say a few words before the debate concludes, so I will try to be as brief as possible.

This particular motion talks about "inept trade negotiations" that the Government has with the United States. The mover of the motion used the word "inept". According to the Oxford Dictionary "inept" means "out of place", so we can say the out of place trade negotiations; "inept" also means "absurd", so we could say the absurd trade negotiations. It also means "silly", so we could say the silly trade negotiations. It also means unskillful.

Most of the speakers who have addressed the resolution today have mentioned in the areas of airlines, railways, and trucking and that the Government of Canada has been inept in dealing with the United States. According to what has been placed on the record today about that entire group of subjects, one could say that the principle of free trade as the Government sees it is inept.

When members of the public are asked what free trade means, they think that free trade means free trade, that countries can trade freely without having any obstacles like tariffs placed in their paths at the border and that products can move freely across two borders, three borders, five borders or 10 borders. That is the way some trade agreements operate. We say that this is an inept pact because there is no free trade deal. The free trade deal with the United States does not provide for free trade.

Today, the Premier of Newfoundland must have eaten something bad or he must not have got enough sleep last night. This afternoon he said that he was in agreement with the free trade deal with the United States. I do not know what came over him.

Under this free trade agreement, a producer in Puerto Rico could say that the Government of Newfoundland has put a subsidy on a product by bailing out a company in Newfoundland and therefore he wants a duty placed on that product when it enters the United States market. Under the so-called free trade agreement with the United States, one producer in the United States of America, even the owner of a corner store if he produces something, has the right to ask for such a duty to be placed against products from Canada.

Countervailing tariffs and anti-dumping legislation are all fancy terms which only mean that a charge, whether it be a tariff, a duty, a countervailing duty or an anti-dumping duty, must be put up when products cross the border. I do not care what it is called, it is all money. This happens when one country believes that another country is bringing products across the border unfairly.

We are saying in this motion that Canada was inept because Canada agreed to abide by U.S. law. Some Hon. Members have said that this will remove tariffs at the border and therefore it is a great thing because now we can move our goods across the border without having that encumbrance of a tariff.

What does a producer in the United States do when computing a countervailing duty? The producer claims that he has been damaged by Canadian subsidies and the total damage is assessed. The American Department of Commerce sends representatives to Canada and, by mutual agreement, goes over the books of the company concerned and holds a hearing at which the company concerned can claim that there is no subsidy or the Government can claim that the American producer is wrong. The total value of the claimed subsidy is taken into account.

Under the free trade agreement, the United States can still say that because Canada is different from the United States, it will impose tariffs. In fact, Canada is vastly different from the United States. Our social programs are vastly different and many people would praise that difference.

There is a big difference between getting sick in Canada and getting sick in the United States. There is a big difference between ending up in hospital in Canada and ending up in hospital in the United States. The difference is absolutely incredible. In Canada, there is social legislation and legislation to help industry. In fact, there are special government Departments in the poorer provinces of Canada that give tax breaks and special DRIE assistance.

Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, the north shore of Quebec and northern Ontario all have access to assistance programs for industry. The Government gives interest-free loans to companies to set up industries in those areas or its gives half loans and half grants to industries to expand tourist facilities and hotels. All of these things assist the poorer regions in Canada, and these are programs that do not exist in the United States.

The United States does not offer assistance to fishermen who own boats. There are no plant-modernization programs for the forest industry in the United States. However, we have such programs in Canada.

The free trade agreement will now become the primary target of this great protectionist attitude in the United States. Producers are blaming their problems on cheap imports. These producers know that the United States has told Canada to sign on the dotted line so that Canada will respect American trade laws, anti-dumping laws and countervailing duty laws. Canada has signed on the dotted line. Canada said: "Yes, for the first time in history, we will sign on the dotted line that says we respect your right to impose a countervailing duty on a product that comes from Canada that you believe has been subsidized by the Government of Canada or by a provincial Government".

That is why I cannot understand the Premier of Newfoundland. In fact, understanding what is in the free trade agreement, I wonder why any premier from any Atlantic province would agree to such a stupid deal, a deal that means that we no longer believe in assisting the poorer regions with special government assistance or programs.

Recently, the Premier of Newfoundland and his Cabinet decided to give millions and millions of dollars in loans to a company from Alberta so that it would move to Mount Pearl outside St. John's, Newfoundland, to grow cucumbers. I do not know whether it was $11 million, $12 million or $13 million which was given to this company to grow cucumbers. That provides a good opportunity for a countervail. We will see what happens when that company tries to export those cucumbers to the United States if they can grow them. There is no government assistance in the United States comparable to that kind of assistance. That is what the Premier of Newfoundland did, but today he has said that he agrees with the free trade agreement into which this Government has entered. Why, I do not know. What other deal was made behind the scenes? Maybe there was another deal made, I do not know.

The Hon. Member who moved the motion is saying that the Government of Canada went to the United States and said that it would sign a free trade deal with the United States that would provide that Canada respects all the American laws and rights to impose duties. Canada has signed an agreement saying that it will respect American state trucking laws and the right of the United States to impose a charge on a product that comes into the United States if a producer in the United States so wishes. That is why we call it inept and all of those words to which I referred in the Oxford Dictionary, particularly the word "silly".

I have never heard anything more silly than calling this a free trade deal. Charges can still be made under GATT. Countervailing duties can be applied. Anti-dumping laws and duties can be imposed when any U.S. producer wishes. So why is it called a free trade deal? Because the Government says it will remove tariffs. Yet it does not go on and explain that countervailing duties could be double the old tariff. In other words, countervailing duties of 20 per cent were applied to saltfish, which has a normal tariff of 10 per cent. That countervailing duty would have been 30 per cent if the tariff was not in place because the damage being done to the U.S. producers was judged to be 35 per cent of the value of the product in Canada. That is basically why we disagree with the free trade deal.

The other points concerning railways, truckers and the marine industries have already been made very well and I should conclude because I believe another hon. gentleman wishes to say a few words.

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank my colleague for giving me a few minutes to make some comments on this Opposition motion dealing with the deregulation of the transportation industry and the free-trade deal.

I think that by criticizing this historic free-trade deal, the Opposition lacks preparation and respect. The simple co-operation of the Liberal opposition with the socialists makes us wonder if the Liberals are opposed to free-trade because they are seeking electoral gains or if they are trying to protect the interests of some regions of the country to the detriment of the others.

In any event, I think that when the Opposition agrees with Bob White, who is the boss of the socialists in this Camber, it lacks respect for Canadians in general and particularly for Canadian businessmen, entrepreneurs and industrialists who export to the U.S. goods and services worth $95 billion, out of our total exports of $125 billion. These are the Canadians whose aggressiveness and capacities developed the U.S. market. These are the Canadians who are attacked by the Opposition today, in this Chamber. What the Opposition is saying is that we must prevent our Canadian exporters from getting access to the U.S. market. This is what they are telling us by attacking free-trade.

Mr. Gauthier: This is absolutely false.

Mr. Fontaine: They refuse to recognize that free-trade exists in Canada, in Southern Ontario, since 1965 in the auto industry. It was the same negotiator, Mr. Reisman, who negotiated the Auto Pact that proved to be very beneficial. These same socialists and their leader of the time, Mr. Douglas, were against free trade. But today, they would like to keep the benefits of free trade for the automobile industry only. They do not want to see similar benefits extended to all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, we should realize that that first free trade initiative in 1965 results today in sales of $33 billion a year for Canadian exporters and 840,000 jobs in the automobile industry. And we have here people who oppose a more national implementation of free trade. I wonder how serious they can be and where is their respect for all Canadians. I wonder where is their respect for the 12 million Canadians, out of a population of 20 million, who have a job and are productive.

Older people do not work, of course, and neither do the young and the sick and those unable to work. But the 12 million Canadians who do work have a production of $500 billion worth of goods and services in Canada. One quarter of that is exported. That means that there are 3 million Canadian men and women who have jobs today because of our exports. And people opposite have the gall to pick on details in the trade deal.

Mr. Speaker, it is important that Canadians understand that we initiated and concluded the deal first of all to secure our continued access to the American market. The fact is that the Americans also have problems and are increasingly being pressured by the business people because of their substantial trade deficit. Recently, they have had a yearly trade deficit of $170 billion. This has an impact on all American companies, whatever their size. This has brought about protectionism and congressional pressure. The congressmen are preparing bills to eliminate and reduce the import of certain products, and as far as we are concerned, the products most affected are those sold by our Canadian business people, whose hability has naturally been questioned by the socialists, and also by the Liberals to gain the favour of the voting public.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask the opposition to stop making negative statements about this historic Free Trade Agreement. I even ask them to support us, because if the socialists and the Liberals opposite go on sleeping together in the big Bob White Hotel, it will mean the end of this country, as they are now concentrating in the central region of this country all the benefits of free trade and telling the rest of Canadians that free trade is bad. As for the Quebec Liberal Members in this House, they are not even able to understand the message of Quebecers as a whole, of the Quebec government and of premier Bourassa, who are all saying that free trade is good and even essential for Quebec. The Liberals prefer to bow down before those who defend the interests of Southern Ontario. Mr. Speaker, I believe that they should also think about what is good for Quebecers and all Canadians. That is my message for them. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ellis): The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, first I want to congratulate you for the brilliant and distinguished manner in which you are presiding over our proceedings this afternoon. But I want to point out to you, on a point of order, that the Hon. Member got carried away and is completely out of order when he says— And I want to make my point of order very clear. I think the Hon. Member is launching once again on his pet subject and tries to accuse everybody of being socialist, to accuse us . . . First, I find it most disagreeable that he could use such anti-parliamentary language as to say Liberals are "sleeping" with socialists. He does not even know what he is talking about. I would like to take part in the debate, but I see there is no time left.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ellis): It may be unpleasant, it may be difficult, but it is also three o'clock.

It being three o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that, pursuant to Standing Order 82(12) the proceedings on the motion have expired.

The House stands adjourned until Monday at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, Question No. 210 will be answered today.

ENVIRONMENTAL QUALITY STRATEGIC REVIEW

Question No. 210—Mr. Caccia:

Has the government taken action in response to the options set out in the "Environmental Quality Strategic Review: a follow-up report of the Task Force on Program Review", published on February 21, 1986 and, if so, for each option, what action has been taken?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Yes. The "Environmental Quality Strategic Review: a follow-up report of the Task Force on Program Review", was one of a number of task force reports that made recommendations on the programs of the Department of the Environment. No specific point by point response to the options set out in the "Environmental Quality Strategic Review" document is being planned but as a result of all the reports, the government has adopted an Environmental Quality Strategy which involves a number of initiatives. These include the new Canadian Environmental Protection Act; improvements in the management of federal efforts in the environmental sciences; the establishment of a federal "state of the environment" reporting system; and the further integration of environmental and economic decision making.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The question enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

The House resumed from Thursday, November 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-54, an Act to amend the Criminal Code and other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, in the time remaining to me I want to bring to the attention of the House the extent of opposition to this legislation by a broad range of groups across Canada. During my opening remarks last Thursday, I indicated that certainly we in the NDP are prepared to accept legislation, indeed have called upon the Government for it, that would recognize the concern of Canadians particularly with respect to violence, degradation and child pornography. However, this legislation goes far beyond that in its attempt to control the depiction of imagery which involves neither violence, degradation nor child pornography. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) in his remarks last Thursday said:

All Hon. Members realize that the time has come to amend the Criminal Code to deal with child pornography and with material which is sexually violent, exploitative, and degrading.

This Bill does not deal just with that material. It deals with a broad range of other material as well. I pointed out that images of two adults engaged in consensual love-making would henceforth be illegal under the new regime in this legislation.

Who are some of the groups which have expressed concern about this Bill and what is the nature of their concern? The groups include ACTRA, the AIDS Committee of Toronto, the Canada Council, the Canadian Committee against Customs Censorship, the Canadian Conference of the Arts, the Book and Periodical Development Council, the Canadian Librarians' Association, Coalition for the Right to View, Media People for Social Responsibility, the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, the International Rights Organization PEN, and the Writers' Union of Canada, and indeed, a wide range of other organizations.

The Attorneys General of Canada have indicated their concern that the Bill is too sweeping. They are worried, as was suggested by the then Attorney General of Manitoba, Roland

Penner, that "to include the portrayal of normal, healthy sexual activity along with sexual violence and kiddie porn seems to indicate a misplaced sense of values". He said:

> Every provincial minister who spoke advised the federal minister of justice that they thought he has problems with that bill and he ought to take a closer look.

The Attorneys General of Canada are asking the Minister of Justice to take another look at this important piece of legislation.

We have as well the position of the Canadian Library Association in addition to that of the British Columbia Teacher-Librarians' Association. The Canadian Library Association, a national non-profit organization representing some 4,500 librarians, indicates that it is deeply concerned about the provisions of Bill C-54. It states that Bill C-54 would require a radical reorganization of library services and operations.

It give some examples. It suggests that library collections would have to be separated into materials for clients over the age of 18 and under the age of 18, that substantial changes to material selection policy and screening processes would need to be undertaken to ensure that libraries are not criminally liable, and that library staff under the age of 18 could no longer be employed in an "adult library". Those are the general concerns of the Canadian Library Association.

I have also received, as has the Minister of Justice, a more detailed letter from the British Columbia Teacher-Librarians' Association. They say that a great deal of the teenage and young adult fiction and a great deal of our educational material would become suspect under this new Bill. They go on to indicate that many teenage and young adult novels deal in very real ways with the problems facing young people today, whether it is coming to terms with their own sexuality, dealing with sexual abuse, living in an alcoholic family, or attempting to establish a positive self image. They have information on venereal diseases such as AIDS, and on dealing with sexual abuse, rape, incest, and violence. They suggest that much of this material in their school libraries could become open to question under the Bill and that teacher-librarians could face criminal charges under the provisions of this legislation.

The onus under this Bill with regard to artists is on the artist to prove to the courts what is referred to as "artistic merit". It has been pointed out by a number of artists that it is a very dangerous proposal to put the burden on an artist to prove in some way that his or her art work has merit. Instead, surely the test should be the same as that for educational, scientific, and other works, and that is the purpose of the work rather than the extent of the merit of it. Judges are not in a position to evaluate the merit of artistic imagery. I suggest that the courts should be looking at the purpose of that work.

The implications of a test of merit are very different. If a judge does not find the artistry to be of top quality, although the work clearly had no purpose of a pornographic nature, he could find those who distribute that art criminally liable under the provisions of this legislation.

The Bill before us already appears to be having some effect in school districts in British Columbia where groups such as Citizens for Human Dignity, are coming into schools, acquiring materials which they perceive to be pornographic, and threatening teacher-librarians and school boards with charges and lawsuits. Is this what we will be facing in the future under the provisions of this legislation? Will we see the kinds of attacks on literature that were made on the works of Margaret Laurence in a rural school board in Ontario? That is the kind of mentality which seems to be encouraged by this legislation. It is a very dangerous and Draconian approach to legislation.

The Canada Council, through its chairperson Maureen Forrester, has indicated that it has concerns about this legislation, particularly because of the possible implications under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The council points out that putting the onus on an artist to prove the merit of his or her work is very likely in breach of the provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Miss Forrester indicates that she knows how worried artists and arts groups are about the implications of this Bill for their work. She says that the Canada Council shares their concerns.

The Planned Parenthood Federation of Canada has pointed out that this legislation appears to confuse healthy sexuality and disordered sexuality. They say that the legislation is fundamentally anti-sexual. It purports to include a definition of erotica which is nothing more and nothing less than nudity in a sexual context. However, the minute that there is any form of sexual contact it suddenly becomes pornographic and thus illegal. The Planned Parenthood Federation of Canada states that the proposed legislation will have a chilling effect on sexuality and reproductive education and research in Canada. That group has an excellent record in the area of sex education and promotion of more effective and better sex education and research.

Concerns about the scope of this legislation have been raised by a number of groups working with people with AIDS across Canada. The AIDS Committee of Toronto, for example, has stated:

> We believe that Bill C-54, if passed in its present form, will have a devastating effect on the ability of our organization and of other AIDS and sex education organizations in Canada to provide the information which is vitally needed in the fight against this disease.

They are saying that if this Bill is passed it could have a very serious impact on preventive steps in the area of AIDS. They note as well that the great bulk of pornography as defined in this legislation depicts legal sexual activities, and that many of these materials are an important element of the preventive safe sex approach which is taken by groups such as the AIDS Committee of Toronto.

The AIDS Committee of Toronto is active in advocating safer sexual alternatives. The depiction of many of the alternatives which are advocated could be illegal under the provisions of this legislation. As the AIDS Committee of Toronto points out, it should be evident from its submissions that any realistic attempt to reduce the spread of AIDS must include frank discussion of sexuality. Under the provisions of this legislation those kinds of discussions could be illegal and subject to prosecution.

Why should those who are working on the front lines against this terrible disease have to take the time, energy, and resources to prove that they have an educational or scientific defence for their work? That is the implication of this legislation.

Mr. Blenkarn: Nonsense.

Mr. Robinson: There are Conservative Members opposite who say that that is not the case. They will have an opportunity to stand and defend this legislation. However, the reality is that that is exactly what the implication of this legislation could be. We have heard it said in the past that legislation of this nature will not be abused. We are told that we should trust that the Crown will not be abusing it. However, it was not that long ago that the Supreme Court of Canada only narrowly ruled that the great work, Lady Chatterley's Lover, was not obscene.

As well, the AIDS Committee of Toronto and other individuals and groups making submissions have pointed out the particularly harsh impact of legislation of this nature on the gay and lesbian community in Canada. We have seen the extent to which Canada Customs has been prepared to single out periodicals directed to the gay and lesbian community and many of the bookstores which service that community. L'Androgyne bookstore in Montreal, the Glad Day bookstore in Toronto, and Little Sisters in Vancouver all have had to fight debilitating and expensive court battles merely to obtain the right to distribute materials which in no way fall into the category of abusive, violent or degrading materials. Under this legislation, it is quite likely that similar materials would come under attack as well.

One of the concerns that has been raised by the periodical marketers of Canada is that this legislation will still leave unclear exactly what is and what is not subject to criminal sanction. They point out that there are many areas of the legislation that are confusing and unclear, leaving responsible marketers in the position of being unable to determine whether action would be brought against them for handling certain material.

The bottom line on this legislation is that it falls far short of what we as New Democrats have called for, which is strong and effective legislation to deal with violence, with degradation and with exploitation, and to deal with the sexual exploitation of children. That is not the scope of this Bill.

The scope of this Bill indeed would go well beyond that, as has been pointed out by Pierre Berton and many others who have had an opportunity to examine the legislation. Indeed, the Toronto Public Library Board, the largest library system in Canada, has indicated that it is so outraged over the provisions of the Bill that it plans to shut all of its libraries in protest for one afternoon early next month. As the chief librarian states: "It is a move to try to publicize our concern about this very bad law, but it is also to give us a chance to have a public meeting to explain the implications to both staff and the public".

Considering the failure of this Bill to respond in a serious way to the concerns of the country, to respond to the kinds of recommendations that were made by the Fraser Commission and to make the fundamental distinction between erotica and pornography, I move:

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word 'that' and substituting the following therefor:
> "This House declines to give second reading to Bill C-54 because it fails to clearly define pornography as material that condones violence, coercion, abuse and degradation in its depiction of human beings or portrays or promotes the sexual exploitation of children; and also, because it does not distinguish pornography from material of an artistic, literary, educational or scientific nature in a fashion acceptable to the Canadian public, including artists".

I have consulted with the Chair as to the procedural acceptability of the amendment. I understand that it is indeed within the scope that is allowed in the area of reasoned amendments.

In conclusion, I want to repeat what I said last Thursday, that if this legislation is adopted it will make Canada the most culturally repressive nation of all of the western democracies. It is an attempt to pander to the extreme right wing of the Conservative caucus. It is legislation which fundamentally violates the provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms in Canada in terms of freedom of expression. It fails to make the distinction between imagery which portrays sexuality and imagery which portrays violence, degradation and sexual exploitation of children.

It is a fundamental step backward for Canadian society and I hope the House will adopt the amendment which I proposed and tell the Government to go back to the drawing board and bring before the House legislation which reflects the true concerns of Canadians and does not reflect the very narrow concerns of the moral majority element in Canadian society.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The debate is now on the amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): A point of order, Madam Speaker. I have a copy of the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), and the first thing I want to do is commend him for distributing his amendment in both official languages. I would suggest this gesture is fully appreciated by Hon. Members, unlike what often happens with the Government which is wont to introduce its amendments in only one language, as we all know. What I wanted to say on this point of order, Madam Speaker, is that I think the Chair has accepted the motion and we are now debating the amendment, not Bill C-54.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): That is precisely what I just said. The motion was considered and deemed to be in order. Debate is now on the amendment.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to correct the record. I am sure the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) did not want to accuse the Government of providing this House with amendments in one language as a matter of common occurrence. I think it has occurred once or twice, due to the exigency of the particular situation, but certainly it is the common practice of the Government to submit proposed amendments in both official languages. Either the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier was misspeaking or maybe he intended to mislead the House, I am not sure. However, it is common practice for this and every Parliament to propose amendments in both official languages.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair does not feel that the Hon. Member was trying to imply that the Government normally does not present amendments in both official languages. I took his intervention to be congratulations to one of his colleagues, noting the fact that the amendment was presented in both official languages. Debate is now on the amendment.

Mr. Grisé: Questions and comments?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): There are no questions or comments following a 40-minute speech. We are now on the amendment.

• (1130)

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, of course we will be giving very serious consideration to the amendment to Bill C-54, because indeed we must now debate the NDP amendment motion which reads as follows:

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor: "This House declines to give second reading to Bill C-54 because it fails to clearly define pornography as material that condones violence, coersion, abuse and degradation in its depiction of human beings or portrays or promotes the sexual exploitation of children; and also, because it does not distinguish pornography from material of an artistic, literary, educational or scientific nature in a fashion acceptable to the Canadian public, including artists".

Madam Speaker, when the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) introduced his motion he may have forgotten that there has been a parliamentary reform since the Conservative Government was sworn to office in 1984, and I would suggest his motion is completely out of order. As I see it, the first thing to do is to accept the Bill as drafted and refer it to a legislative committee, as was the intent of the parliamentary reform and as was the wish of the three political Parties when it was decided to change parliamentary procedure so that as many Members as possible would be able to express their views and be party to the decision-making process. Madam Speaker, I suspect the purpose of parliamenraty reform was not to promote filibustering even before a bill has gone through second reading, even before the Opposition Parties have had an opportunity to debate it.

Madam Speaker, I am pleased to take part in the debate on Bill C-54 designed to amend the Criminal Code with respect to pornography. I believe that all individuals interested in Bill C-54 ought to take time to study Criminal Code section 159 concerning obscenity. Although many private citizens and groups have criticized Bill C-54, they do not seem to understand the present law in Canada. Many correspondents have qualified our existing obscenity laws as vague and lacking in guidance. A publication is deemed to be obscene if its dominant characteristic is the undue exploitation of sex. It also mentions sex connected with violence and cruelty, among other things.

What is undue exploitation? The courts have tried to define this expression on the basis of community standards. Obviously, our penal code should be as clear and specific as possible so that citizens will know what acts are criminal and what the penalty is for this behaviour. Bill C-54 proposes a specific definition of child pornography, degrading pornography and pornography involving criminal acts or violence.

Madam Speaker, Bill C-54 must reflect the concern of all Canadians for putting an end to the alarming escalation of the availability of violent, degrading and increasingly explicit pornographic material, as well as material depicting child pornography. Hon. Members are aware that at the present time, our Criminal Code prohibits the production, publication, and distribution, and the possession for those purposes of any obscene material, written or otherwise. A publication is deemed to be obscene if its dominant characteristic is the undue exploitation of sex or of sex and any one or more of the following subjects, namely crime, horror, cruelty and violence. The Canadian courts have adopted a test reflecting "common moral standards", to determine what should be considered undue exploitation, based on what the Canadian public as a whole is prepared to tolerate.

Judgments handed down by Canadian courts have shown that the present provisions of the Criminal Code dealing with obscenity are difficult to apply. The result is a lot of confusion and concern among the public, retail merchants and distributors, and also among the police, Crown attorneys, counsel for the defence and judges. The present uncertainty about the law and how it is to be interpreted has helped to modify the character of pornography today and expand its market. In recent years we have seen a disturbing increase in the availability of pornographic material. In addition, the format in which such material is available has also become increasingly varied: video recordings, films and satellite telecasts have been added to the traditional media such as books and magazines.

All this material is now available in an increasing number of stores and boutiques.

The public has expressed its concern about the use of children in pornographic material and about the availability of this kind of material to young people.

We are all aware of the excellent work done by the Special Committee on Pornography and Prostitution, chaired by Mr. Paul Fraser. In its report tabled in the House of Commons in April 1985, the Special Committee recommended a complete review of the Criminal Code's provisions on obscenity.

This Government has held extensive consultations across the country with groups of experts, and the public has made it very clear it expects the Government to adopt appropriate legislation to deal with the problem of pornography.

Madam Speaker, in my view, the aim of Bill C-54 is to provide a solution to this problem. The Bill provides a clear and precise definition of pornography and erotica, something no previous legislation has done. The new definitions will make it easier for the courts and the public to determine what kind of sexual material may not be produced or distributed.

The Bill creates a new offence, that of dealing in pornographic material, with penalties depending on the nature of the material. In addition to visual matter depicting child pornography, violent sexual behaviour and sexually degrading acts, the definition of pornographic material includes everything that encourages or advocates such activities.

However, Bill C-54 also tries to strike a balance, since it is not solely concerned with creating new offences. In fact, it provides for new defences by excepting pornographic and erotic material used for educational, scientific and medical purposes or having artistic merit. I may point out to those who are so hysterical in their criticism of this Bill that these defences are an improvement, since they are not explicitly provided in the present legislation.

Madam Speaker, I would now like to comment on what was said by the Hon. Members for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) and Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). It was suggested that the Bill would not only allow the Government to interfere with what goes on in the bedrooms of the nation, as the Hon. Member for Outremont remarked, but also with this country's museums and art galleries.

In my opinion, these remarks were entirely ill-disposed. First of all, Madam Speaker, the Bill does not deal in any way with the sexual behaviour of people or what Canadians do in the privacy of their bedrooms. Even a most superficial interpretation of this Bill would lead us to this conclusion. As far as museums and art galleries are concerned, it is true that the Bill makes it an offense to display erotica in a way that is visible to a member of the public in a public place, unless the public must, in order to see such erotica, pass a prominent warning notice advising of the nature of the display. However, when there is such a prominent warning notice, there is no offense.

It should be emphasized that this Bill provides for a defense based on the fact that the erotica has artistic merit or an educational, scientific or medical purpose. If the accused, therefore, can establish that erotica has artistic merit or an educational, scientific or medical purpose, the Court will have to find him non guilty.

It has been suggested that the literature on AIDS and other sexually transmissible diseases is so explicit that it could be forbidden. This again is a remark which ignores the defences provided for in this Bill and which are based on its scientific or medical purpose.

Some have also criticize the Bill because of its very wide scope, including visual representations of sexually explicits scenes between consenting adults. I must be clear on this point. The Government had no intention of amending the Criminal Code concerning the explicit representations of sexual relations.

This type of representations is already considered as obscene under Section 159 of the Criminal Code. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has referred to the R.C. Video World Limited case, where the Supreme Court of Canada confirmed a ruling by the Appeal Court of Manitoba to the effect that the depiction of vaginal, anal or oral sexual acts, as well as masturbation were obscene. In my opinion, Bill C-54 does not amend the gist of that ruling.

Some have felt that the Bill is much too tough on those renting pornographic material involving children, suggesting that they should be liable to lighter penalties then the producer of such material. In my opinion, we should not yield to this type of reasoning. Child pornography is certainly what we find most awful and most repulsive. The producer, the distributor and the renter of this type of material are guilty of a most criminal act and none of them should be punished less severely than the others.

Madam Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to make the fight against pornography more efficient and to give the necessary precision to the law.

Madam Speaker, I come back to the motion of the Hon. Member for Burnaby asking that Bill C-54 not be read for the second time. In his own statement and in that of the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin), we find that it is extremely important and even essential to do everything possible to eliminate child pornography and to remove violence from erotic or sexual material.

Now, once more, Madam Speaker, we are faced with what, since parliamentary reform, could nearly be an unparliamentary amendment, as we are discussing a Bill and we have mechanisms such as the Legislative Committees to propose amendments—

Mr. Gauthier: You are questioning the Chair!

Mr. Grisé: No, no! Madam Speaker, you have heard the comments of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: The Hon. Member has just made a value judgment on the amendment by saying that it is unparliamentary. Those are the words that he used.

I would ask him to withdraw these words because the Chair has accepted this amendment. The amendment is quite in order and in no way unparliamentary. I ask that he withdraw his comment.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Parliamentary secretary said that, in his opinion, the amendment might be nearly unparliamentary. I think that he can express in this way the fact that he does not quite agree with the decision of the Chair to accept this amendment, but he did not question it. There is no point of order.

The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Grisé: Madam Speaker, I in no way questioned the ruling of the Chair. A while ago, Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier rose on a point of order to say that the Hon. Member for Burnaby had tabled certain papers in both official languages and he blamed the Government for not doing the same thing regularly. For the information of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), Madam Speaker, I should like to emphasize that his comment was not referring to an amendment when a Minister had tabled a document, but simply a matter of information and a document to be laid on the Table.

Madam Speaker, I should like to deal once more with the highlights of this Bill on pornography which guarantees the freedom of expression as provided for in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, while defining a limited category of materials which will be forbidden because of their pornographic nature.

The Bill reinforces and clarifies current legislation on obscenity through new provisions on pornographic material and erotica. It clearly defines the forbidden pornographic material. First of all, any visual matter that shows children or young people involved in sexual activity, extreme violence in a sexual context, sexually violent conduct, degrading acts in a sexual context, bestiality, incest or necrophilia, as well as explicit sexual behaviours.

Also, any matter or commercial communication that incites, promotes, encourages or advocates any conduct which I have just mentioned. These definitions of forbidden material take into account the current legislations dealing with obscene material which reflect our social standards.

The Bill proposes a new offense, in the case of a person who deals in pornography and who is involved in making, importing, selling or renting pornographic material. Such a person is liable to various penalties depending on the nature of the pornographic material. Every person who possesses pornographic material involving children is guilty of an offense punishable on summary conviction.

The Bill provides for special defences based on the artistic merit of the material or its educational, scientific or medical purpose. The accused will not be able to use these special defenses in the case of the most baneful pornographic material involving children or violent acts in a sexual context.

Whenever the defender successfully uses the artistic merit of a document as a defense, the Court will declare that such document is not pornographic. Erotica include explicit depiction in a sexual context or for the purpose of sexual stimulation of the viewer, of certain parts of the human body. Erotic material can be displayed behind a barrier showing warning about the nature of the material, or it can be covered by an opaque wrapper, and it must not be sold or rented to young people. Performances with children or youths and involving sexual acts or any pornographic representations are prohibited. Under the provisions on hate propaganda, the groups which can be distinguished by sex will now be protected against hate pornography, which will be an offence under the customs tariffs, as will be the importing into Canada of pornographic material.

Madam Speaker, the Government consulted several groups when preparing Bill C-54. I asked myself serious questions earlier when I heard the Hon. Member for Burnaby say that librarian groups, for instance, object to this Bill because they will have to reorganize certain documents, books and publications in certain areas of their library. What should be the most important in our society today? Not to change anything, or to impose certain standards and restrictions to our librarians to protect our young people and teenagers when they go to the library, and we know that an increasing number of young people go to the libraries, which is certainly a good thing! Is it not normal to want to keep such material away from our young people and to require that there be a special section in libraries for erotica which will not be acessible to young Canadians? I believe that this is much more important.

Then, there is the issue of access to certain types of publications and films for young people under 18 in the stores. For instance, there are many video stores where young people can take out movies themselves with their video club member cards. It is now quite easy for young people to rent cassettes depicting bestiality, violence and sexual acts between youngsters. It is important to remove access to such products from our youths.

Madam Speaker, it has also been suggested that Bill C-54 will prevent our medical researchers from developing products against AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases. Making that kind of comments is totally absurd, as if medical progress would be at a standstill if pornography could not be used as a tool. That is what the Opposition Parties have been saying. How can anyone imagine that in 1987, if medical science were deprived of pornography, no progress will be made to fight against sexually transmitted diseases!

Madam Speaker, nor do I think—

An Hon. Member: That is not what was said.

Mr. Grisé: Read the blues and find out what my colleague opposite, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), said a few minutes ago, and you will realize that I am not changing the gist of the comments made by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

I am about to conclude, Madam Speaker. With respect to sexual education, today we have a training or educational system which enables our children—

Mrs. Pépin: In Quebec, nowhere else.

Mr. Grisé: But it is not by allowing ready access to pornography that we will improve the sexual education of our children. It is obvious that with the proposed amendment, and this will be my last comment of course, we are against the proposed amendment. I would urge Hon. Members to adopt Bill C-54 as quickly as possible and refer it to a legislative committee so as to give better protection to the Canadian population with respect to sexuality, child pornography and pornographic violence.

Mrs. Pépin: Madam Speaker, I would like to make some comments and conclude with a question. I think my Conservative colleague is to some extent misrepresenting the purpose of a Bill that is supposed to deal with pornography. The words pornography and sexual conduct are now mentioned in the same sentence, so it is very easy to say that people are in favour of violence and pornography, while completely neglecting to mention that, since sexual conduct is mentioned in the same sentence, all kinds of sexual conduct and erotica are prohibited.

The Hon. Member said earlier that Opposition Members were hysterical in their criticism of the Fraser Report. I think he knows perfectly well this Bill does not in any way reflect the Fraser Report's recommendations. I invite him to read the Fraser Report and the speech I made in the House last Thursday, in which I referred specifically to the Fraser Report.

Women's groups that are campaigning against pornography and violence have condemned this Bill, their comment being that it was all black and white. And regarding what my Conservative colleague said about doctors and that it was ridiculous to expect works of art or colour slides that were not pornographic to be confiscated, I gave him an example of an incident that occurred in Calgary, in October 1987, when three RCMP officers confiscated forty-two slides belonging to a women's coalition group that was giving presentations to demonstrate what violence was, the dangers of pornography and the difference between pornography and erotica. The RCMP officers confiscated the lot and said: You are doing a pornographic presentation.

So we protest. And since the police will be defining what is art, what is medical and what is pornography, then this Bill will have to be rewritten because the way it is worded now, you are making no distinctions at all.

In concluding, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question. As it stands now, the Bill criminalizes sex. Read your definition of pornography and tell me why you want to include something that is not criminal. Today, a sexual act is not criminal, and you want to make it a crime in this Bill. Explain the difference between pornography and sex and why you want to criminalize a sexual act?

Mr. Grisé: Madam Speaker, first I should like to point out to the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) that women's groups are not opposed to the Bill itself, they are against certain definitions. They want explanations and more information, but they are not directly against the Bill. So there is a slight difference between the comments of the Hon. Member for Outremont and what the various women's groups are saying about the Bill.

Madam Speaker, I should also like to refer to this Bill in light of the existing legislation about which the Hon. Member for York Centre, I believe, said:

• (1150)

[English]

"Taken with our proposal on sexual violence and degradation, we think this provision of the present Criminal Code is worth preserving".

When we read the text of the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) who is saying that the existing legislation should be repealed altogether . . . In the Bill we are saying that that part of the Bill will be kept, as a result of the Supreme Court ruling concerning the Manitoba court. The Hon. Member for Outremont is saying that anything in Bill C-54 which relates to what is already in the existing legislation should be deleted.

So with respect to pornography and sexuality I think that Bill C-54 specifies quite clearly what we are deleting, what we are trying to prevent in pornography, and we are not by any means undermining the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms as far as sexuality is concerned.

Mrs. Bourgault: Madam Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to commend the Hon. Member for his contribution and for recalling certain facts dealt with in this legislation with respect to the definition of pornography.

Madam Speaker, I have as a woman, for years, of course, in private and public life, been fighting with other people and making representations to all levels of government in the hope that one of them might stand up and do something to stop the degradation of women and children. And, finally, Madam Speaker, I can now proudly claim I am part of a government that has the political courage to push matters one step further.

I would like to suggest to the Hon. Member that, as we must remember, as far back as 1978 the previous Government has attempted . . . It is easy for the Hon. Member for Outremont to speak from the other side of the House, because when they were on this side, Madam Speaker, as the situation was getting worse, as public patience was running out—because there was so much degrading material, it had come to the point where children were actually murdered for the sake of having films getting more pornographic, and closer to real life. It is easy to suggest from the Opposition benches that the legislation does not address the issue.

Madam Speaker, when the Leaders took their stand during the 1984 elections, they clearly stated they were going to do something. We came up with Bill C-54 and we of course deal with the definition.

Madam Speaker, I for one know when something is erotic and when it is pornographic. And it is my view that the justices of the Supreme Court, the judges of the lower courts, know when something is erotic and when it is pornographic. It is written down in the Bill. My view is they are playing party politics, which is really out of place here. For partisan reasons, they come up with fiddlesticks in order to suggest that the Bill is bad, that we should throw it away! Come now, that is absolutely ridiculous!

I would like to suggest to the Hon. Member for Chambly that women in my view agree with this Bill. They had one reservation as to the definition, but I think that if they read Bill C-54 carefully, they will realize it is clear and precise as to what is erotica and what is pornography.

Mr. Grisé: Madam Speaker, I want to thank my colleague the Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau and Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Bourgault) for these very relevant clarifications. Indeed we must stop playing partisan politics with such an important measure concerning child pornography. As Members of the House holding a mandate from the population, how can we tell the Government: Your Bill is no good, scrap it and go back to square one! How can we do that? Madam Speaker, for too long already we have been letting people condone violence through the youth pornography trade.

Madam Speaker, again I repeat, it is unbelievable that a motion be introduced to reject the Bill. They are giving short shrift to this measure, supposedly because their Party has no use for it. It does not matter whether Canadians want it or not. Opposition Members on the other side have decided there is no rush, not to worry, we can afford to put off dealing with child pornography and pornographic violence for six months, a year or even longer. And we as Government are supposed to accept that!

I conclude, Madam Speaker. As my colleague the Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau pointed out, what women's groups want—and I think they are directly involved in this issue, when we talk about pornography, a legislative measure on pornography—they have shown quite clearly that they do have reservations about some of the definitions, but at no time did they ever object to the principle of the Bill.

• (1200)

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Madam Speaker, as a Member of Parliament and as a very active feminist, I am very concerned that we get good pornography legislation; so I am supporting an amendment which I think will take us somewhere in that direction.

We want tough legislation, but it must be carefully drafted. It must distinguish very clearly between what we want to ban— that is, violent, degrading, coercive pornography and child pornography—and what may be objectionable to some people but on which there is not a great deal of consent within Canadian society that it is at the level of being pornography to be banned. We must make it very clear. We might want to have some restrictions on this kind of material, for example, that it not be freely available everywhere where it would offend people and that it not be available to children. We must have very, very tough laws on pornography.

I think Bill C-54 is an attempt to go in the right direction. At least I give the Government credit for wanting to bring in tough and careful legislation, but unfortunately it makes a lot of mistakes. However, they are mistakes which can be redressed. Definitions can be redrafted. Careful work can be done. We could sit down with experts, with representatives of the women's movement, with representatives of the churches, and with representatives of art groups, to come up with something that would have broad Canadian acceptance. I am quite confident of that, but we do not quite have it in the Bill before us. We do not have it yet. It could be done at committee, but there must be agreement on the part of the Government to make real amendments.

Let me make very clear that my Party wants tough legislation. I want to read into the record a resolution that was passed at an NDP federal convention which is absolutely crystal clear in terms of the kind of legislation we want. It reads:

> WHEREAS women's groups throughout Canada are deeply concerned about the avalanche of pornographic material which condones violence, coercion, abuse and degradation in its depiction of women and children;
> WHEREAS such images are demeaning and destructive in their effect on the social fabric of Canada; and
> WHEREAS there is growing evidence of a causal link between such pornographic material and the increase in violence towards women and children,
> THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED that the federal New Democratic Party:

1) defines as pornography material which condones violence, coercion, abuse and degradation in its depiction of human beings and condemns the production and distribution of such material whether in film, video, print, or any other form;

2) condemns the production and distribution of material which portrays or promotes the sexual exploitation of children and calls for severe penalties for offenders;

3) calls for a strengthening of Section 159 of the Criminal Code of Canada to reflect these concerns;

4) calls for amendments to the Broadcasting Act to prohibit the broadcasting of such pornographic material, with severe penalties for violation including the possibility of revocation of licence;

5) calls for amendments to Section 281 of the Criminal Code of Canada to add sex as a prohibited category, and to strengthen the penalties and provide a clear method of enforcement under this section so that pornographic material which degrades the human person can be prosecuted as hate literature;

6) calls on the New Democratic Party to participate in actions across Canada to develop public opposition to pornography as a form of hate propaganda, and to seek solutions to the problem.

That is tough, that is what we want, and I hope we will get it.

I want to commend the many people who worked on this issue. I particularly want to thank Mrs. Ulma Lee and Korean Christians in Toronto who have worked very diligently to bring forward petitions with literally thousands of names to protest pornography and to ask for a strong Bill C-54. I think the work was excellent. I was pleased to see it, and I fully support it.

Where will we go from here? We have proposals from many people, groups, experts, and so forth asking for careful redefinition. I should like to refer to a brief from the United Church of Canada, a very large church within society. It wants tough legislation. It wants amendments to the Bill. It commends the Government for bringing it in, but it asks the Government to work on amendments. The brief reads:

Bill C-54 distinguishes between erotica and pornography in terms of degree of explicit activity.

It asks for the qualitative, not the quantitative, difference to be taken adequately into account. It continues:

We believe the difference between erotica and pornography is a matter of quality of relationship rather than mere quantity of activity or inactivity.

We submit that the difference between unhealthy pornography and erotica cannot be measured in degrees of explicitness, but rather is determined in terms of context. Explicit sexuality in a context of commitment, mutuality, free choice, and non-violence is a good gift of God.

Pornography, in contrast, is the depiction of sexuality cut off from its full human context. Pornography loses sight of the whole person, focusing only on his/her ability to sexually gratify.

Women are reduced to vagina and breasts and men to the size of their genitals . . . By portraying human persons, usually women, as sexual playthings eager to respond instantly to male, female, sexual demands, human persons, usually women, are turned into sexual objects, degraded and robbed of their humanity.

I think that is all too true. The United Church asks for amendments to take into account, in a very careful way, what these differences are. The church shows where it supports the Bill and where it needs to be amended.

There is an extensive Bill from the committee against pornography which documents the way the courts have been dealing with the existing legislation. It goes to show the liberalization in our society and the growing acceptance of pornography as it becomes more and more available and harder and harder to fight. It shows also how the definition proposed in Bill C-54 is inadequate in both directions, namely, it includes some material which the vast majority of Canadians would not want included.

There are many ways in which Bill C-54 itself is not tough enough. There are loopholes that would allow some material to go through as erotica which most of us in a common sense approach would say is thoroughly offensive, degrading and humiliating normally to women and children. We need to have amendments in both directions. It shows, for example, a wrinkle which I had not thought of where the visual image may not be pornographic in and of itself but, with the text, the impression conveyed is one which is thoroughly degrading, humiliating and invites violence and degradation toward women and children. We have to take into account the whole effect. The present wording, by focusing on a dominant part of the image, may be very, very pornographic in its intent and result, although what makes it so may not be dominant in the quantity of the portrayal. Here we have a loophole.

There are pages of recommendations for careful amendment, but I cannot go into them in detail here. We need to pay attention to them. I hope the Government will look very carefully at the recommendations of this organization and that people will be active at the committee stage working for good amendments.

The question of the arts and pornography is a very difficult one. We have had representations from many arts organizations. They are afraid they will go into jail, that individual artists will be prosecuted, or they will have to censor themselves out of fear of prosecution. Artists, with very few exceptions, do not have very much money. They will have to hire lawyers to protect themselves. Clearly we need to have a law which does not include in pornography artistic, scientific, literary, educational work and documentaries. That is not the intent of the Government, but we have to make very clear that that intent is adequately reflected in the legislation, and I do not think it has yet been done adequately. The Canadian Association of University Teachers has proposed over the years amendments to ensure that that is the case. I think the Government has attempted to respond, but it has not done well enough so far.

Unfortunately, some artists are not helping by saying they do not want to have any pornography legislation whatever, that their creative spirit should be allowed to have full play without any law interfering with what they want to do. I do not believe artists ought to be above the law, and I would invite them to sit down with legislators and experts to see that we get a law that is fair. We do not want to prosecute artists. We want to distinguish between what is largely the pornography business, the billion dollar business coming from the United States, mass produced and schlock from California, which is what this Bill is all about, and artistic and literary works. This is what the women's movement is addressing when they say they want tough legislation on pornography, but we do not want to cast the net so wide that we include artistic and literary works.

Artists have to work and be constructive in proposing amendments. It is not good enough to say that they want nothing whatever.

I recall being lobbied by an artist who said he did not want to see any limits at all on his freedom of expression. I asked him about the extreme case of snuff movies where someone is actually killed in a pornographic setting, normally a woman. He said there should be a classification of films, to which he would agree. That kind of film would get a classification of a double X or a snuff movie classification, but he added that there ought to be no prosecution of the artists involved. The person committing the murder could be sought for murder, but the film would be shown. This would be a work of art and people would analyse it and deal with it as a work of art, a film in which somebody is actually killed, which is preposterous. I am shocked to hear this sort of proposal and to hear that actors and directors would ignore the violence taking place in order to pursue artistic endeavours.

Artists have to ensure that there are limits on pornography leading to violence against women and children, women being forced to re-enact pornographic scenes in magazines, videos and so forth and children being abused in more imaginative ways. Artists are sensitive members of society, but they are members of society with responsibilities to their neighbours. They have to have it on their conscience that violence against women and children is something to which we must put an end.

What about the hate literature aspects? This Bill would include sex as one of the categories for prosecution, and pornography is included here. That is desirable, and the New Democratic Party resolution to which I have referred also specifies that. However, our resolution goes much further and says it must be made applicable. Right now the hate literature sections of the Criminal Code are virtually unenforceable, so that merely putting in the word "sex" is entirely a political endeavour. It is something that will not have any practicality in making it possible to prosecute. By all means add sex to that list, but make that section enforceable, otherwise it is only window dressing and hardly good enough for the real problems.

We need to get experts and people from women's organizations to sit down and constructively work out something better. There is no doubt that the pornography issue has been a difficult one for the women's movement. After all, women have a very wide variety of concerns, expertise and interest, and political views go from one extreme to the other as to what should be included and excluded in the Bill. There is a strong body of opinion in the women's movement to have tough laws, but they must be carefully nuanced. We have major organizations—not just extreme organizations—for example, the United Church, which asked for precise amendments, and we must look at those.

Let me raise one difficulty which comes from the United Church brief. Erotica, the sexual explicitness which is not coercive, which is consensual between adults—which does not include or involve abuse or exploitation of a child—is desirable and good. Yes, in principle, obviously it is so. If a man and a woman want to make home movies of their sexual activities, why not? Whose business is it apart from their own? However, once you get into commercial exploitation, on stage, film, television or video, you have a different set of problems. It is not so easy to deal with the question once you get into hiring someone to take on these roles.

How would you portray a consensual relationship between an adult man and a woman within a relationship? The United Church and other groups say that so long as there is consent and it is part of a relationship, it is not a degrading act, one person acting on another. Sexuality is part of human relationships and it is good to show that. Yet how do you do it in a film? Are you going to show the people as married? Are you only going to allow actors and actresses married to each other or who have a long-term relationship with each other to perform in these roles? The sex act can result in procreation. Do we really want children to be conceived in an act done for commercial purposes?

We are not just talking about ordinary events, we are talking about something that is qualitatively very different. I do not think people have looked at those aspects. It is all very well to say, yes, this is a healthy relationship and there is no reason why it should not be portrayed. However, once you get into hiring people to perform these roles, then you get into really serious problems, such as sexually-transmitted diseases. Should an actor or actress get a sexually-transmitted disease, including AIDS, as a result of taking on one of these roles?

There are a lot of questions which have not been adequately gone into. Experts have to sit down and consider these questions. They have to get out of this land of principle and high position which says that we are in favour of this because it is consensual, not exploitative. How is it going to be realized in a practical sense when actors and actresses, directors and so forth, are engaged professionally to perform roles of this sort? That is a much more difficult question.

I do not have very much time left so I want to conclude by suggesting that we need to have the Bill withdrawn, hold consultations with experts, and do some serious redrafting. Or, if the Government uses its majority to pass this Bill at second reading, it should go into committee and the various concerned groups and experts should be invited to work on redrafting it at that stage.

I want to assure members of the Government that my Party will support the Bill at third reading if we get a good Bill back, and there are reasonable amendments which take into account the kinds of criticism we have raised. We want a practical response to a real problem. We have been waiting for this Bill for a very long time. We had the Fraser Commission back in 1984 and Badgley dealt with child sexual abuse before that. We really want to get moving on this.

The Government will have our full support, as I said, if it deals very carefully with this legislation. I hope this is not just a political gesture where the Government will be able to say it tried to get a pornography law through, but the Opposition would not let it. I hope it is not just a public relations effort to appeal to a certain amount of political opinion. It should be a serious endeavour to address a serious problem affecting the life and health of women and children in particular, and the dignity of everyone. I hope we will have serious amendments so we will be able to put in place a law which responds to the real situation where we have a lot of pornography, a lot of degradation, and in which women and children for the most part are suffering as a result. Let us get on with that task.

Mr. Stackhouse: Madam Speaker, I want to express appreciation for the Hon. Member's speech. I always listen to her with great interest and usually with great benefit. I was very encouraged by the support she gave for the principle of the Bill and the Government's initiative in introducing it in this House. However, all of that led me to wonder why she would support her Party's amendment to the Bill. What she wants in the way of a further careful review is surely possible at committee stage. Why else do we have a committee stage? Why prejudge it? Why assume that we are not going to have a serious assessment of the legislation by a committee which will include members of her own Party? When she urges a careful review, she is not simply urging it on members of the Government but also on members of her own Party.

In view of the reasoning contained in the Hon. Member's speech I wonder why we need the amendment? This is especially true in light of her conclusion, which was that we have waited a long time for this Bill. We are certainly going to wait a long time because it will need careful examination in committee. Therefore, why does she want us to wait longer still by supporting this amendment? If it passes, and I trust it will not, it will simply cause extended and, I have to say, futile delay.

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, I suggested in my remarks that there are two possible ways of proceeding. One is for the Government to withdraw the Bill and redraft it right now. The Government could agree to do that and, in an informal and speedy manner, work on redrafting. The other possibility is to have the Bill go to committee. At that stage it could redraft it.

The reason for the amendment is to propose the speedier way of working. Redrafting can be done more efficiently in a more informal setting. Committees take time to meet. Their meetings depend upon the schedule of Members of Parliament, what happens during the Christmas holidays and other break periods. Committees meet only three days a week at most. If this were turned back to the Government for redrafting, the work could begin today. Consultations could take place on an all-day basis. One could assign people to work on the Bill without having to follow the sometimes cumbersome formalities of a committee.

I think we might be able to work more expeditiously by withdrawing and redrafting, but I certainly assure the Hon. Member that if the Bill is passed at second reading, we will work on it in committee. It may take a bit longer and be a bit more cumbersome, but we will certainly work constructively in committee if that is the way the Government chooses to go.

Mrs. Bourgault: Madam Speaker, I agree with my colleague for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) that the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) has, in all her time in this House, always shown her concern about the problems related to child pornography, the degradation of women, and so on. Madam Speaker, as for young people today, about two weeks ago, I was invited to the CEGEP de l'Outaouais where the students had organized a discussion similar to those on the program Parler pour parler with Janette Bertrand. The students invited me to play my own role of Member of Parliament. The subject being discussed was pornography and the pornographic material available everywhere. From what they said, the situation seems very clear to young people. They pointed out that some young Canadians have said that there should be specialized stores for purchasing pornographic or erotic material as exist in the United States and in other countries.

They say that when they see movies showing acts of violence, if there has not been that much open discussion in their own families, they are traumatized by this type of material. They believe that the Government was right to introduce Bill C-54. The Hon. Member says that it would be easy for the Government to withdraw this Bill and to rewrite it, but she knows quite well that it is not that easy in Parliament. As pointed out by my colleague for Scarborough West, why does the Hon. Member not ask her colleague for Burnaby to withdraw his amendment and to tell the House Leaders: Refer this Bill to committee as quickly as possible because there will be representations by the groups concerned about the definition. Everyone knows that it is not easy to define sexual issues. It is an extremely complex subject. Why does the Hon. Member not suggest that to the House immediately? It would be more logical and quicker. We could adopt the Bill and put an end to the degradation of women and children.

[English]

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, with regard to speed, we have been waiting a long time for this. This is the third year of the Government's mandate, and I think it could have proceeded very much more quickly. We have had the Badgley and Fraser reports for some time. The Government has been very slow to act. I have explained why I think that objective could be best achieved by redrafting.

The difficulty is that if we pass a Bill which contains a lot of mistakes we will be in a lot of trouble. There will be charter cases. The law which exists right now is very bad and is not very enforceable. The courts are starting to chip away at it because it does not have adequate support. If this Bill is passed without significant amendment there will be a lot of objections. People will fight it. The courts have gone in a very liberalizing direction. They have been allowing more and more pornography. You cannot enforce a law which people do not support. There must be tightening up in that area.

It is also true that there are some loopholes. The violent and degrading pornography which we are against is not included. Therefore, the law errs in both directions. In some respects it is too lenient and in other respects it is not lenient enough. This Bill needs very careful redrafting or we will be in a lot of trouble. We have a lousy law on the books. Let us take the time to ensure that we have a good law on the books which will be enforceable.

Mr. Robinson: Madam Speaker, I was interested in the remarks of the Hon. Member with regard to national women's organizations. I wonder whether she would elaborate on some of the concerns which have been raised by these groups. At its last annual general meeting it adopted a resolution that the NAC reject the proposed legislation on pornography and lobby the Government to ensure that any new legislation focus on violence rather than sexual acts, not affect the distribution of sex education material to people under 18, and not reinforce heterosexualism, and that the NAC lobby the Government to ensure that any legislation puts the onus on the Crown to prove that material does not have artistic merit rather than, as is the case now, putting the onus on the artist to prove this, which is very likely in breach of the provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The Hon. Member is a former President of the NAC. Perhaps she could elaborate on some of the concerns which have been raised by respected national organizations, such as the National Action Committee for the Status of Women, with regard to this legislation.

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, the National Action Committee is Canada's largest such organization. It is an umbrella organization which includes groups from the extremely conservative to the extremely unconservative. There is, therefore, a division of opinion within NAC itself on how to proceed. There is certainly near unanimity on having tough laws. Concerns have been raised as to bias in the laws and the onus on artists to defend themselves. I think there would be a great deal of support for that.

I keep in touch with NAC executive members. They are keen to have a well-worded Bill passed. They are prepared to appear before the committee. Their position may be a little like mine. I believe that there are two routes to follow. The Bill could be withdrawn and redrafted. However, if the Bill goes to committee, they will be there to suggest practical and constructive amendments. We can certainly count on their support and expertise in achieving the objective of having a very carefully drafted Bill on pornography.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Madam Speaker, I was prepared to speak on Bill C-54 and welcomed the opportunity to do that. However, I understand that in the last few minutes an amendment has been moved that we not now give second reading to this Bill. I strongly disagree with the mover of that motion and with his reasons for it.

I would like to confine my remarks mainly to why we should proceed with Bill C-54. I believe that this Bill is a guide for the future use of the Canadian public. Guidelines have to be set by Parliament. Therefore, it behooves every Member in this Chamber to accept the responsibility which we have been elected to perform, that is, to help set those guidelines.

Both the Fraser and the Badgely reports clearly pointed out the magnitude of the problem of pornography and child abuse in our society today. Upon reading these reports one must open one's eyes and recognize that even in what we like to think of as "civilized" societies atrocities are occurring to children and families, atrocities which can be tied to the availability of hard and soft core pornography.

The committee examining the sexual offences against children, commonly referred to as the Badgely Committee, found that there are two main sources of child pornography in Canada; importation and private individual production. The Fraser Commission concluded that 85 per cent of all pornographic material in Canada comes from the U.S., 12 per cent from Europe, and 3 per cent is made up domestically. Whatever the source, the people of Fraser Valley East and, undoubtedly, many other areas of Canada, want pornography stopped. Pornography offends our standards and demeans, degrades and abuses the persons involved.

Even the word "pornography" incites an emotion, the scope of which depends on the outlook of the person using it. I tend to believe that if Canadians knew the degree to which pornography was available, or in fact what pornography is, each and every one of us would stand up and shout, "We are not going to take it any more".

Bill C-54 has some very positive points. For the first time a definition of pornography will be added to the Criminal Code. The definition is clearly written in the Bill, so I will not get into it at this time. However, we are clearly cracking down on child pornography and violent behaviour. I am pleased to see that other Members of this House do agree with that part of the Bill.

I strongly support the Bill as it now stands but would like to see it go even further. Specifically, I believe that there are too many ways out by proving artistic merit or educational, scientific or medical purpose. This leaves too much to interpretation. If the courts are to determine in each case whether a piece of work has artistic merit, we need to know the parameters for this term. It seems obvious that one person's idea of what is artistic is not another person's. "Artistic merit" will become the gateway for pornographic material to enter Canada and be circulated. This could become a major flaw in the Bill.

There are theories which suggest that a direct causal link exists between violent pornography and violence against women, although others state that this connection is somewhat difficult to prove. The Fraser Commission report concluded, albeit reluctantly, that available research is of limited use in demonstrating that pornography is linked to the causing of actual physical harm, but it strongly submitted that there is definite harm associated with much of what is pornography.

Arthur Gary Bishop, convicted of sexually abusing and killing five young boys in the U.S., once stated:

> If pornography material would have been unavailable to me in my early states, it is most probable that my sexual activities would not have escalated to the degree they did.

He further stated that pornography's impact on him was devastating and "was a determining factor in my downfall". I find this statement absolutely frightening.

• (1240)

The final report of the Attorney General's commission on pornography, published in the United States in 1986, serves to show us that there are acts that need to be seen not only as the cause of immorality but as manifestations of it. Even though it may be difficult to find a causal link between pornography and violence or abuse, this report makes a very good attempt. It is well worth reading.

Let me briefly outline the highlights of the chapter entitled "The Question of Harm". Two categories of harm are identified. The primary category of harm is not where the act leads, but simply what it is, such as murder, rape and assault. The second category deals not with what the act is, but where it will lead. We can fit pornography into this category.

Even though no cause is exclusive, the report states that pornography is harmful because it causes some people to commit acts of sexual violence, because it:

> causes promiscuity, because it encourages sexual relations outside of marriage and because it promotes so-called unnatural sexual practices which lead men to treat women as solely existing for the sexual satisfaction of men.

There may never be conclusive proof that a causal connection exists, if "conclusive" means that no other possibility exists. However, the Attorney General's Commission on Pornography states that there are multiple causes, that is, if they were to identify one cause and eliminate it, while having all the other factors remain the same, the problem would at least be lessened.

This is a very important point. Why must we wait for empirical evidence to point out one causal link between pornography and violence? Instead, it is time to acknowledge that if we correct the causes we have identified we will at least help alleviate the problem.

My constituents believe that the link I have been discussing does exist. Pornography not only causes physical harm in many cases, it causes social harm in all instances.

In today's fast-paced world, it is difficult enough to raise and protect our children. When we must constantly be on the look-out for negative external influences, the battle is even more uphill. More and more school boards are integrating a program for teaching our children to say no in an effort to prevent child sexual abuse. This is a sad statement on the way our society is heading.

Could we not prevent a lot of this abuse of our children by working hard to stop those who make or import pornography? Bill C-54 will be a start, a framework, from which I hope we can continue to take a stand against pornography, particularly as it relates to children.

The 1984 Badgley report stated that child pornography is a direct product of child sexual abuse. It states: "It comes into existence, and can only come into existence, through the base and coldly premeditated exploitation of a young person's sexual vulnerability". This is very clear. It is not the children who should or can be blamed because they are but the tools used by exploitative individuals for their own end.

The report states further that: "Where a young person has been used in the making of visual pornographic material, it is irrelevant whether some view the material as having literary, artistic, or aesthetic value". The point is that it is permanent abuse of the children and perpetuates the warped idea that children are available for such purposes.

We must also worry about the availability of pornographic material to our children. Municipalities can only regulate the pornographic industry by the way they determine how such material can be displayed.

This fall referendums were held in some of the municipal elections in Fraser Valley. Citizens clearly pointed out their abhorrence of pornography. I am proud of the stance that they took on this important issue.

It is difficult to decide what is pornography and what is artistic merit. The U.S. Attorney General's Commission on Pornography attempts to separate pornography into four levels or categories. The first and most serious is sexually violent material. This type of pornography features actual or unmistakable simulated or unmistakably threatened violence presented in sexually explicit fashion. Conclusions from clinical and experimental research clearly indicate an increase in the likelihood of aggressive behaviour toward women as a result of exposure to this type of material.

This is not to say that everyone watching this type of pornography will become violent, but let me remind the House of Arthur Gary Bishop, the murderer whom I quoted earlier. It is not surprising that the images that people are exposed to bear a causal relationship to their behaviour.

The second level or category of pornography is non-violent material depicting degradation, domination, subordination or humiliation. This type of material bears some causal relationship to attitudinal changes. For example, rape will be viewed as less serious and the victim as more responsible. We may become somewhat numb to the reality of the crime.

The third level or category is non-violent and non-degrading materials in which the participants appear to be fully willing participants. These activities affect our perception of promiscuity. Therefore, the ultimate harmfulness of much of this type of pornography reflects individual views. This type was found to be particularly harmful when it fell into the hands of children because this is not the way that children should be taught about normal sexual relationships. This type of pornography separates sex from love, commitment and marriage, and it is that effect that is negative.

The final category of pornography as defined in the U.S. Attorney General's report is nudity. This raises the problem of trying to establish when nudity stops being mere nudity and begins to have sexual undertones. Most of us would not find certain types of nudity harmful, such as that meant plainly for educational purposes, but certainly we must agree that nudity in other cases, and in the wrong hands, can be harmful. This brings us back to the question of what pornography can do to our children.

The Badgley report gave some startling statistics with regard to the access of children to pornographic material. It found that 540 different pornographic magazines were being sold in Canada and that six of seven retail outlets surveyed displayed these well within the reach of young children. Clause 159.7 of Bill C-54 states:

> Every person who displays any erotica in a way that is visible to a member of the public in a public place . . . must (in order to see the erotica) pass a prominent warning notice advising of the nature of the display therein or unless the erotica is hidden by a barrier or is covered by an opaque wrapper, is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

This is a welcome amendment, but is tempered by the next clause which gives the accused a way out, that being artistic merit or educational, scientific or medical purpose. Again, this is too subjective.

Bill C-54 also includes an amendment to the Customs Tariff Act by adding pornography as defined in this Bill to the list of items not allowed for importation. Since over 80 per cent of all pornographic materials come from the United States, tightening our laws may help prevent some material from coming into Canada. I only hope that this goes far enough.

I realize that there are many responsible groups who believe that this Bill is not definitive enough, and that even some libraries are stating the opinion that some of the material they have for educational purposes could be interpreted as pornography. However, I believe that this Bill goes a long way in helping us to get to the root of the problem.

Finally, I would like to compliment the Government for the Bill as it has now been initiated to try to curb pornography. By helping to curtail the openness of pornographic material, Bill C-54 will have a positive influence on the family, and any laws the Government makes are to be used as guides for society. I can assure the House that this Bill will receive my support. I would urge all other Hon. Members to vote against the amendment before us and to support the Bill as it now reads.

Mrs. Finestone: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask my hon. friend whether or not he finds there is some displacement with respect to concerns around this Bill, for instance, the description of erotica and erotic material versus pornography and pornographic material? I can well appreciate that we have a need for this kind of Bill which will address the concerns of violence and pornographic material and its impact on men, women and children. However, I fail to understand the section on erotica. I also fail to understand not only the definition of erotica but the clause which deals with the display of erotica and exhibition of erotica to persons under 18.

Does the Hon. Member plan to take his children or his nieces and nephews to the museums of our country to show them the creative arts our artists see and which we display and enjoy? If so, what does he plan to do with some of the very beautiful nudes which are presently on the walls of our museums? How does he expect to handle that particular aspect of the Bill?

Mr. Belsher: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her question. Yes, I have taken my family to these museums and have found the artistic merit and composition of the art forms indeed very enlightening, but I think the Hon. Member is missing the point of what we are trying to accomplish in the Bill. We are trying to get at the publications and advertising, trying to set some guidelines and standards for what we will accept to be displayed in the open market. While I firmly believe that when parents take their children to museums to see art it is a good thing and it is the right thing, by the same token, I believe there must at least be an attempt on the part of the Government to get at a very crucial issue. I am happy to see that the Hon. Member does acknowledge the fact there is a problem in our society with which we have to come to grips. This is only an attempt to come to grips with the problem.

If we can improve this Bill in committee when going through the clause by clause study, I am sure Hon. Members will welcome that. But I come back to my original premise, that this is a start, it is an attempt to try to correct something that is very harmful to our society. I am sure the Hon. Member agrees that this has to be done.

Mr. Robinson: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question with respect to the kinds of imagery to which he has referred which would in fact be illegal under the provisions of this legislation. The Hon. Member has said he does not want in any way to tolerate imagery that might promote promiscuity. However, does the Hon. Member not recognize that the approach which the Government is taking, and which the Hon. Member seems to be taking, judging from his remarks, is a very dangerous and dictatorial approach? While his own personal standards may be those which he has outlined in the House today, and he is certainly entitled to those standards, what he is suggesting is that the police should enforce his conception of morality on all other Canadians, and if his perception of what should be allowed to be seen is somehow different from other people's perception, even if they are in the minority, they should be subject to criminal sanction. That kind of heavy-handed Victorian approach to sexuality is surely dangerous in Canada today.

Why would the Hon. Member make illegal, as would the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) who has just entered the Chamber, this kind of imagery? Why would he subject those who wish to have images of adult consensual activity not involving any violence or degradation, why would he make the distribution of that kind of material, a subject of criminal sanction?

Mr. Belsher: Madam Speaker, I do disagree with the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) as to what should be the guidelines for our society. It is the responsibility of this House to talk in terms of what are our freedoms and responsibilities. Too often in a very free society we have to come down so far on the side of freedom that we fail to assume the responsibility for the harmful nature and effect of certain things on our society.

While we can talk in terms of what consenting adults will do, nonetheless we do not have to have it in explicit form displayed on the shelves of our newsstands and put into our theatres. I see this as a start at getting at that very harmful influence on our society.

If the Hon. Member would be perfectly honest, he would agree that there have been harmful effects to our society from the hard-core pornographic material that is out there on our bookshelves nowadays, and at long last we must come to grips with this.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I want to congratulate my colleague on his remarks and say that I wholeheartedly support action taken now rather than a delay on this matter which is so crucial to society. I also want to pass along compliments to the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) for a very thoughtful address. She said in her remarks that the New Democratic Party will vote on third reading, in any event, for a Bill to curb pornography. Therefore, I would ask the Hon. Member, in view of the comments made by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) and the question just asked by the Hon. Member for Burnaby, if those are not precisely the kinds of questions that should be asked in committee, which is the reason parliamentary committees are set up? Why should we even consider a nonsensical amendment to withdraw this Bill when everyone in this Chamber agrees it is high time we got around to dealing with this critical issue of pornography? Why should we agree with the amendment? Why would Hon. Members not agree right now to send this Bill to committee where it belongs?

Mr. Belsher: Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member for Hamilton—Wentworth (Mr. Scott) brings up a very valid point. He was even better at expressing that point than myself. I want to re-emphasize that it really behooves Hon. Members to set the guidelines. We are the ones who are responsible. That is what the law is all about. It is the guidelines for the type of society we want to live under and be part of. While I uphold freedom in the truest sense of the word, nonetheless I want to take the responsible action we must. Therefore, I wholeheartedly say that we have to defeat the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Burnaby and pass the Bill.

HEALTH

HELP FOR VICTIMS OF CRIME—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT CONTINUE PROGRAM TO ASSIST VICTIMS OF VIOLENCE

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, millions of dollars are spent every year on rehabilitation programs and mental health services for criminals. Victims of violent crimes, however, suffer long term mental problems as a result of these violent acts. It seems terribly unfair that criminals should receive mental health services while their victims must be personnaly responsible for the expenses of the psychiatric help they need.

The Department of National Health and Welfare has just cancelled its "Victims of violence" program which was established in 1984 with a view of getting a greater understanding of the mental health problems of these victims. I wonder what the Government is prepared to do for these victims and why it has abolished this modest but useful program.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the Government will realize that although it is important to provide our criminals with psychiatric help, it is even more important to help the victims of these crimes. I ask the Government to reimplement as soon as possible its assistance program.

TAX REFORM

REQUEST THAT FLOW THROUGH SHARE RATE REMAIN THE SAME FOR NEXT THREE YEARS

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the tax reform will be upon us very soon and we are well aware that the flow through share scheme has not been abolished. But the people living in Abitibi, Témiscamingue and other Quebec mining areas want to make sure that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson)'s tax reform goes in the right direction, insisting that now is not the time for reducing the 133 1/3 rate of the flow through shares.

Faced with free trade, it is vital to protect investment capital formation in the mining industry.

Mr. Speaker, Quebec prospectors and businessmen, the mayors of Abitibi and Témiscamingue, the elected representatives of these ridings in the House of Commons, and especially the whole population want this 133 1/3 rate to remain the same for the next three years.

Now, in the Abitibi-Témiscamingue region, the unemployment rate is 7,4 per cent, down from the 24 per cent and 27 per cent it was previously. Private industry has often been a very good partner in our region's economic recovery. Today, the junior members of the mining sector deserve this support from the Government of Canada for the next three years.

EFFECT OF MANAGED PRICE SYSTEM IN BRITAIN

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, during the federal-provincial conference of First Ministers, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and Premier Grant Devine indicated that any economy that gave up free trade for some form of managed prices was doomed to failure. Yet consider the experience of Margaret Thatcher's Britain where changing from a free trade grain market to high domestic prices under the managed pricing of the European Economic Community resulted in unprecedent rural prosperity in Britain.

How can the Prime Minister and the Premier explain the great leap forward rural Britain has made under the common agriculture policy? Was that rapid progress not the result of going to $8 per bushel wheat instead of buying cheap imports? Was the rejection of the cheap food policy not the chief engine of growth for rural Britain?

Given the obvious success of the British experience in abandoning free trade for agriculture, why are Conservatives here forcing this option on the people of rural Canada?

DIALOGUE BETWEEN PARLIAMENTARIANS AND SCIENTISTS

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on Friday a day-long dialogue took place in this institution between parliamentarians and the science and engineering community. It was organized by COPSE, the Committee of Parliamentarians, Scientists and Engineers, and the Royal Society, and was intended to bring parliamentarians up to date on an array of current social and economic issues with scientific overtones.

The symposium started with a remarkable presentation by the Speaker of this House in which he outlined how important it is for parliamentarians to be familiar with modern science because of its importance in the solution of many pressing global problems.

Some of the topics discussed included Canada's changing population, new developments in material science, global change, the impact of science on the North, space technology, the AIDS epidemic, bio-technology, the environment and sustainable development. The symposium ended with a creative presentation by John Polanyi, Nobel Laureate, on the importance of basic science and its eventual linkage to the market-place.

Parliamentarians who participated found the day remarkably informative, and we want to thank you, Mr. Speaker, and COPSE and the Royal Society for your and their contribution and support of a positive, historic, and creative day. It is dramatically important that parliamentarians like myself become more aware not only of the importance of research and development but of the manner in which it can be used to solve in a political way the very complex problems with which society is confronted.

BILINGUALISM

ALBERTA—DECISION ON USE OF FRENCH IN LEGISLATURE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the decision by Premier Getty to ban the use of French in the Alberta Legislature, without prior approval, is more than regrettable. It is a shameful betrayal of Canada's policy of official bilingualism.

Moreover, in light of the recent Meech Lake Accord, it serves to depict the Premier's weak and unacceptable definition of bilingualism.

[Translation]

To him, official bilingualism is but a Quebec regional policy. His endorsing of the "distinct society" clause was very convenient for him because it enabled him to play Pontius Pilate to Alberta's 60,000 Francophones. He should at least recognize French as a working language in the legislature, otherwise his signing of the Meech Lake Agreement was but a hypocritical charade. Mr. Getty should not hesitate to immediately reverse that shameful and ill-advised decision.

CENTRAL AMERICA—REPORT ON VISIT BY PARLIAMENTARIANS

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, last week a Canadian delegation visited Central America in the cause of peace.

As part of that delegation I was privileged and happy to meet hundreds of Canadians who have been working for humanity in that region for many years. Typical of them is Joseph Gunn of the riding of Scarborough West who has been serving the Save the Children Organization.

Some of them have been there for a complete career, such as Bishop Corriveau and many of his clergy in south Honduras. Others have made a recent career change, for example, two Salvation Army captains who conduct a clinic for treating alcoholics and drug addicts in the city of San Jose, Costa Rica.

Whatever be their work, whatever be their background, they are still Canadian citizens who value their citizenship and remember their country with happiness and gratitude. I speak of them today in order that they can know Canada remembers them and that they are honoured within its Parliament.

STATUS OF FRENCH IN PROVINCIAL LEGISLATURES—RESPECT FOR LINGUISTIC DUALITY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, as M.P. for the Canadian constituency with the largest number of French-speaking people outside Quebec, I greatly deplore the decision made by the Alberta Legislative Assembly to treat French as any other language except English. In my view, it does not make sense to require that a French-speaking Member, in any province in this country, beg permission from someone else in order to speak in his mother tongue at the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I myself had the privilege and honour to serve as M.P.P. in a province where the use of French was not officially recognized, but at least in the Province of Ontario we had the right and privilege to speak in French if we so desired at the Legislative Assembly, although there was no simultaneous translation. I urge Alberta's Premier to reconsider that decision made in his Assembly recently and I also urge the Canadian Government, whose responsibility it is to look after official languages in Canada, to take a stand on that most important matter for all Canadians and to uphold this country's linguistic duality.

TRIBUTE TO CANADIAN ORDER OF THE AMERICAN HELLENIC EDUCATIONAL PROGRESSIVE ASSOCIATION

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, this evening the Canadian Order of the American Hellenic Educational Progressive Association is hosting a special banquet to honour the hard work and dedication of Canadian parliamentarians. However, I wish to commend AHEPA for its dedication to the assimilation and education of Greeks within their country of immigration.

AHEPA was formed 65 years ago. It is a philanthropic, socially conscious organization which not only operates within its original mandate but also participates in the broader social, political, and civic life of its community.

The AHEPA family of Ottawa has honoured Dr. Wilbert Keon for his remarkable achievement with heart transplants, and Dr. George Mintsioulis for his equally remarkable ability to restore sight with precision eye surgery.

The Ontario Special Olympics were singled out for special recognition since they produce real winners and give mentally handicapped individuals a true sense of their self-worth.

All Canadians can be proud of the contributions made by the Canadian Order of AHEPA, for its promotion of tolerance and co-operation, and for its dedication and commitment to build a better Canada.

HAITI—CANCELLATION OF GENERAL ELECTION—MILITARY COUP

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, democracy in Haiti lies a bloody tattered corpse, struck by many mortal blows delivered with impunity as the governing National Council averted its eyes from the horror precipitated by its own refusal to act.

To those who have observed the tragedy of Haiti as it has unfolded there can be no doubt that the governing National Council has engineered a coup for which it had long prepared. Once again a brutal military with easy access to modern arms has used them to brutalize its own people.

Canada and other Governments should act now to signal their utter and complete rejection of the junta, and explore within the Council of the United Nations how nations of the world may effectively intervene to give democracy another chance in Haiti.

Canada should oppose any unilateral intervention which will inevitably replant the seeds of colonialism which lie at the roots of Haiti's tragic history.

INACCURATE PORTRAYAL OF THE LATE BILLY BISHOP, V.C.

Mr. Stan Graham (Kootenay East—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are by now aware of the deliberate negligence displayed by the National Film Board of Canada when it produced and released "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", the wildly inaccurate portrayal and betrayal of Billy Bishop, holder of the Victoria Cross, and the most decorated Canadian serviceman ever.

I ask the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) to join me in opposition to Ms. Joan Penefather, the vice-film commissar of the National Film Board and the currently the leading critic of Billy Bishop, and request from the Chairman of the National Film Board the immediate removal from circulation of the film "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", which really should have been called "The Film That Missed Badly". POLITICAL PARTIES

NDP QUEBEC CONGRESS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate my friends of the New Democratic Party in Quebec who, as a result of their excellent weekend convention in Montreal, have shown that the NDP now has strong roots in Quebec. In three years, NDP-Quebec membership went up from a few supporters to nearly 8,000. Associations have been established in 90 provincial counties and two thirds of Quebec's federal ridings. Some 360 delegates attended one of the best NDP convention I have ever seen.

There can be no doubt that the NDP will rally socio-democratic supporters and that it is becoming the real voice of most Quebecers, men and women alike, at both the federal and provincial levels, while remaining an autonomous provincial Party.

I congratulate Mr. Rolland Morin for having been elected leader of the NDP-Quebec, and I expect that in the very near future we will see true NDP Members from Quebec in the Parliament of Canada and in the National Assembly of Quebec.

GRAIN STABILIZATION PROGRAM—PAYMENTS TO FARMERS

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, for the first time in history I believe we have a Government which is expressing firm leadership in placing agriculture on the top of the priority list.

As recently announced under the Grain Stabilization Program, all member farmers will receive their final payment by early December. Approximately $1.4 billion has been committed for the 1986-87 crop year. Saskatchewan alone will receive $377 million, bringing the level of assistance under the program up to $759 million this year in our province.

As well, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has assured farmers that a deficiency payment will be made before Christmas to assist farmers who, through no fault of their own, are in an extreme cost-price squeeze.

In addition to current assistance for farmers, the Government is working at providing a long-term solution for eliminating subsidies at the international level. Our Government worked very hard to place agriculture on the agenda for discussion at the new round of GATT talks in Uruguay and at the Venice and Tokyo Summits.

Long gone are the Trudeau days under which the then Prime Minister asked farmers in Saskatchewan: "Why should I sell your wheat?"

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the question is relevant: Where is the solidarity? What about the Meech Lake Accord? What about the commitment of the provinces to maintain both official languages?

Mr. Speaker: Order! I am sorry but this is not Oral Question Period yet. I asked whether the Hon. Member had a statement under Standing Order 21. Does he have a statement. He does? . . .

• (1415)

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, what happened to the Meech Lake spirit? What happened to all these provincial undertakings to preserve the duality of Canada? What happened in the Alberta Legislature for it to ban the use of French and for it to insist that those who want to speak French would have to ask permission of the Speaker to do so?

I ask Members of this House where is the spirit of Meech Lake? I fail to see how provinces which have signed the Meech Lake Accord cannot stand behind their commitment to let Canadians express themselves in the language of their choice.

What about Canadian unity? Where are we going when we balkanize languages, making it impossible for people to use English in Quebec or French outside Quebec? That is not the type for Canada that I am looking for.

FORTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF FIRST ELECTION TO HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, 45 years ago today a young United Church Minister, Stanley Knowles, was elected to the House of Commons for the first time.

Mr. Murphy: As someone who grew up in the city of Winnipeg in those years I know what Stanley Knowles meant to many people of our province. He was not only a symbol of someone fighting for pensioners and democracy in the House of Commons but he was someone who represented the House of Commons to all of us.

I congratulate the people of Winnipeg for electing Stanley Knowles for so many years, and I congratulate Mr. Knowles himself for the service he has given to all Canadians.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

ALLEGED TAPING OF MANITOBA PREMIER'S CONVERSATIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Will he explain what one of his officials was doing taping the private conversations of Howard Pawley, Premier of Manitoba, during the First Ministers' Conference? Does this practice conform with the Prime Minister's theory of ethics in government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no one from the FPRO from the federal Government was taping anybody's private conversations.

What takes place at the First Ministers' Conference is a continuation of FPRO practices that have gone on in the past. Simply when Premiers, during the course of scrums, are giving public comments a representative of the federal Government is there, only in regard to public comments, to bring to the attention of the federal Government the extent to which these comments might impact on the ongoing federal-provincial conference. All of these were done publicly and pursuant to past practice.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have checked with the previous administration and that practice was not followed.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Hon. Members laugh. It is symptomatic of how they view the public conduct of business in this country.

QUERY CONCERNING INSTRUCTIONS GIVEN TO OFFICIAL DOING TAPE RECORDING

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, Premier Pawley is reported to have said that the taping took place not only of scrums but of private conversations and informal receptions.

On September 20, 1985, in this House when the Prime Minister was confronted with a leaked government communications strategy relating to the trade negotiations with the United States, suggesting a campaign of dirty tricks against opponents of the deal, including the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, myself as the Member for Vancouver Quadra, and the Member of Parliament for Saint-Henri—Westmount, the Prime Minister gave us his assurance that that practice would not be followed. I quote what he said:

I give that assurance—because we stand for individual rights and liberties.

Why then was a public servant taping Premier Pawley's private conversations? Who instructed the official to tape Premier Pawley's conversations? Was Premier Pawley singled out, or were other Premiers having their conversations taped at the same time? What kind of sneaky, sleazy operation is the Prime Minister running in this country?

• (1420)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are running the same kind of operation that was in full force pursuant to directives of the previous Liberal Government in 1978 and 1982. I am informed that a similar process was in place at the 1978 and 1982 First Ministers' Conferences on the economy and the 1981 constitutional conference.

Information officers of the FPRO were assigned to record public comments, at scrums, made by Premiers which related to the agenda of the First Ministers' Conference. That is all that was done and it was quite proper and pursuant to practices of previous Governments. If my right hon. friend has any information at variance with that, please share it with the House.

STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO MANITOBA PREMIER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have checked previous practice and it does not accord with what the Prime Minister is saying. The Premier of Manitoba said his conversations were being taped not only at scrums but in private conversations at cocktail parties and informal receptions, and he was being shadowed and tailed throughout the conference.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I ask the Prime Minister how often this practice has occurred? Is it an official dictum of his Government that First Ministers should be surveyed, taped and followed while at First Ministers' Conferences? I would also ask if it is his policy to tape only those Premiers who oppose the trade deal, and are those of us opposed to the trade deal supposed to be engaged in subversive activities?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. The private conversations at cocktail parties and this kind of stuff that my right hon. friend seems to have some knowledge of— perhaps he could share the specifics with the House. The information I received from the FPRO indicates exactly what I have told the House. No one was shadowed or tailed. In fact I suspect that if anyone in this country was going to be shadowed or tailed, Mr. Pawley would be among the last.

EXTERNAL AID

HAITI—CANCELLATION OF GENERAL ELECTION—REQUEST FOR SUSPENSION OF CANADIAN AID

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. I think he will share the incredible sense of disgust and reprehension most Canadians felt over the spectacle in Haiti this weekend involving the squashing of the first light of democracy and the reinstitution of government by torture and intimidation that we witnessed on our television screens.

In the Government's official response to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade Committee's report on foreign aid, the Government says that where violations of human rights are systematic, gross and continuous, government to government aid is denied or reduced. The basic principle is to ensure that repressive regimes are not legitimized through Canadian development policy.

Considering that the situation in Haiti clearly violates the standards set out in that statement, is the Government prepared either to suspend or reduce government to government aid to Haiti until such time as the innocent people of that country can return to the polls without being threatened by death squads running loose in that country, as they were this weekend?

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the Hon. Member that of course the Government was shocked, and disappointed when it first heard about yesterday's events in Haiti.

I must say, however, that our aid program is very specifically directed to the neediest groups in Haiti and that at this moment, we do not think it would be appropriate to withdraw from these people, who really need Canada's help, their very means of survival.

I can assure Hon. Members that our aid to Haiti does not go directly to the government. It is not a blank cheque for the government. Generally speaking, it always goes through non-governmental organizations and provides some support for institutions, in order to help the people to help themselves.

• (1425)

GOVERNMENT POLICY—REQUEST FOR ACTION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I will address my supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. His colleague says that the Government will not do anything about aid, but the question clearly is what the Government is going to do in terms of a statement or action on behalf of Canadian people against this regime.

I would like to remind the Minister of clearly stated government policy. Where there have been repression and a denial of rights, there has been a clear and unmistakable contradiction of these principles.

Will the Government not take action commensurate with those standards to show that this country will not stand by and allow democratic rights to be snuffed out and that kind of intimidation to continue?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we stated the policy which the Hon. Member quoted. We are, as my colleague said, shocked and deeply disappointed by the developments in Haiti and particularly, as she indicated outside the House, by the questions relating to the role of the Government of Haiti itself in these developments.

We do not have all the information which we require in hand. The Government and the House would certainly not want actions taken by Canada to disrupt the flow of aid to those people who are most needy which would, consequently, impose a double hardship upon them.

However, if it is clear that the authorities in Haiti have been contributing to the disruption and destruction which we saw yesterday, as may very well be the case, the policy which was referred to by my colleague and which was stated by the Government in response to the standing committee will be followed. I think the House would share our desire to ensure that we have all the relevant information in hand before we take action of that kind.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—REQUEST THAT GENERAL ELECTION BE HELD

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister knows that the Government of Canada did not have a mandate to negotiate a free trade deal arising from the election of September, 1984. It is now too late to have one before the proposed date of signing on January 2.

In an interview on the weekend the Prime Minister seemed to rule out having an election before January 1, 1989. The Prime Minister knows that complex legislation has to be passed by the Parliament of Canada, by the provinces of Canada, by Congress, and by many States in order to implement such an agreement some time during the course of 1988.

Does the Prime Minister not think that the most responsible thing to do, both in terms of getting a democratic mandate and in terms of being conducive to good Canada-U.S. relationships, is for the Government of Canada to have an election sometime early in 1988 so that the people of Canada will have an occasion to demonstrate their views on this important matter?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Government has a mandate to engage in and provide economic renewal for Canadians. Within three years we have created a million new jobs. I think that is exactly what the Canadian people want.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Economic renewal finds expression in many changing and challenging ways. One of them is to innovate, to be daring, and to provide leadership in the world of new trade, new technologies, and new economic prospects and possibilities for all Canadians.

Pursuant to the creation of a million new jobs in three years this is exactly what we have done. We hope to be able to do this on a regular basis. At an appropriate time the Canadian people will have an opportunity to express their views.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, many Canadians would think that to be daring, innovative, and responsible would be to get a mandate from the people of Canada before acting.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I would like the Prime Minister to consider the serious implications for Canada-U.S. relations of proceeding in 1988 without an election. At this time he has the support of only five of the provinces. Three provinces are opposed and two are undecided. Both opposition Parties in the House of Commons are against.

• (1430)

Does the Prime Minister not think that the responsible thing to do in terms of his obligations to the people of Canada and the implications for Canada-U.S. relations in the future, is to go to the people of Canada in 1988 with his message and let them decide between him on the one side and those of us on the other?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people know that both opposition Parties are against. They are waiting to find out what you are for.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Call an election and you will find out.

Mr. Mulroney: With regard to our obligation to provide for economic renewal, my hon. friend seems to discount very quickly the creation of one million new jobs within the space of 37 months. The first 10 months of this year have brought about the creation of some 375,000 new jobs, which is a very important record.

My hon. friend will be interested in the quality of these jobs. Ninety per cent of the jobs created are full-time as opposed to part-time job creation, and 55 per cent of these one million new jobs have gone to women. That is economic renewal at its best, and we plan to continue this program of economic renewal.

Mr. Broadbent: I would even add that when the Prime Minister began the negotiations we had a $20 billion surplus. We have about a $7 billion surplus now. If the Canadian economy is so strong, why is the Government rushing headlong into one of the most complicated deals in Canadian history? That is the issue that has to be faced.

FREE TRADE—DEMOCRATIC PRINCIPLE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): If the Prime Minister wants to make his decisions as a man who supports democratic principles, why does he want to deny Canadians the right to say yes or no to the proposed trade agreement with United States? Why not make this a democratic decision?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there will be a democratic decision at the appropriate time. If I am not mistaken, the Canadian Constitution gives us a five-year mandate, and it is up to the Government to act responsibly during that time. There is also parliamentary tradition, and we still have one year to go before we finish our fourth year. We still have to deal with some important issues. I think that what we have achieved today should be reassuring for my hon. friend. If he is at all serious, and I know he is, he must be very happy with an almost unique job-creation record, more than one million new jobs, with the job-creation rate in Quebec seven times what it was under the previous Government. That is good news for Canada and Quebec. At the appropriate time, Canadians and Quebecers will have a chance to express their opinion, and I am sure the Hon. Member will regret the outcome!

AIR CANADA STRIKE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, Friday last, the Minister of Labour skated around the question I asked him. I wanted to know whether he intended to appoint a mediator in the Air Canada dispute. Since Friday, the situation has worsened—16,000 employees are now without work by reason of the lockout. Thousands of Canadians are deprived of services. In the meantime, the parties to the dispute are not even negotiating and the Government is doing nothing to try to bring them back to the table. Here is my question to the Minister: Does he not believe he should himself meet separately with both parties, to try and convince them to resume negotiations, or else does the Minister prefer to sit on the fence, hoping the dispute will be resolved by itself?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as the Right Hon. Prime Minister indicated a few moments ago, the skating artists are on that side of the House rather than on this side. As to the specific question asked by the Hon. Member, my position has not changed. The parties have a responsibility to show to the Canadian public that they are capable of coming back to the table, and at least to try and solve the issues between them, taking into account the negative impact the dispute has on Canadians.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER APPOINT MEDIATOR

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, one of the answers the Minister gave me last Friday was:

> —the Government will take appropriate action at the appropriate time. But we will surely not act prematurely—

Surely this slow moving Minister was pulling my leg when he said that he would not act prematurely. We all know that he would not be able to do that in any event. Why does the Minister not believe that now is the right time for someone to talk to both parties and try to bring them closer together? For example, someone like Bill Kelly could act as a mediator or in any other function to try to get the parties to negotiate again. Or is this simply a tactic in another grand plan, preparatory to trying to privatize Air Canada?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): With respect to acting prematurely, Mr. Speaker, if I understand my hon. colleague's question, I presume he's changed his mind since the last conflict because in the last conflict he was telling me I was acting too quickly.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I never said that.

Mr. Cadieux: With respect to this particular case, Mr. Speaker, the Government will act at the appropriate time with the appropriate action.

ALLEGED TAPE RECORDING OF PREMIERS' CONVERSATIONS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Premier of Manitoba,

Howard Pawley, has said that he was taped. Will the Prime Minister confirm the statements of his officials that they taped every one of the Premiers of this country in their private and public conversations? Is that what the Government did?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is an absolutely false statement, that anyone in the federal Government properly acknowledged having taped private statements of Premiers.

The information of the Government is the information that I imparted to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. Pursuant to past practice, public scrums being given by Premiers during the course of the First Ministers' Conference were recorded in much the same way as they have been in the past, for exactly the same reasons.

Mr. Murphy: I think the Prime Minister had an option. He did not have to follow what he calls past practice.

REQUEST THAT PRACTICE OF TAPE RECORDING BE STOPPED

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, not only has the Premier of Manitoba said that he did not know he was being taped, we also have information from the Premier of Prince Edward Island that he did not know he was being taped. Will the Prime Minister cease and desist this practice? Will he destroy the tapes and apologize to the Premiers of this country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I regret that the Premier of Manitoba and the Premier of Prince Edward Island did not know that their conversations were being taped when every time I saw them there were about 40 microphones stuck right in front of them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murphy: Tell the truth, Brian.

Mr. Mulroney: Let me tell you, they were not running the other way.

Mr. Murphy: What happened to civility in this country?

Mr. Mulroney: I am just explaining to my hon. friend that it is part and parcel of the First Ministers' process, and it is agreed upon in advance that the First Ministers will comment to the large media contingent during coffee breaks and luncheon breaks in terms of their views of what is happening.

Premier Pawley was giving interviews, as did all of the First Ministers. There were literally dozens of journalists recording their every public word and they were volunteering regularly to provide this information to the public. The FPRO was simply part of this large horde of people trying to record their information for the purposes of accuracy so that when the federal response was prepared, or a new item was raised by a Premier, we were able to respond in kind and in an appropriate way. There is absolutely nothing improper—

Mr. Murphy: It is immoral.

Mr. Mulroney: If it is immoral, then my hon. friend has just indicted every journalist in this country, or anyone who believes in freedom and access to information.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

HAITI—MASSACRE OF CITIZENS—CANADIAN REACTION

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Minister for External Relations. It refers to the shameful massacre of innocent people in Haiti, which must have created revulsion throughout the entire civilized world. I, therefore, ask the question: what initiative can Canada take, through the United Nations or other international body, to show what passes for a Government in Haiti the absolute horror with which the world views both that Government and the action that was taken yesterday?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, as indicated earlier by the Secretary of State and by myself, all Government Members of course are very concerned about the situation in Haiti. We are worried and also concerned about the apparent lack of action by the authorities in the face of the escalation of violence yesterday during the elections, and also the day before the elections. We will need explanations from the authorities as to the reasons why yesterday's elections were cancelled, so that we may knowledgeably appraise the situation. We are, therefore awaiting explanations on the situation that developed yesterday in Haiti and will consider later what position should be taken with respect to that Government.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF FORMER U.S. RESERVE BOARD OFFICIAL

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, Paul Volcker, former head of the U.S. Reserve Board, in his keynote address last night to the fortieth anniversary of GATT in Geneva said that while he had to support any new trading arrangement between Canada and the United States, he went on to warn: "Trade deals, such as the Canada-U.S. deal, are a threat to the system of multinational trade and could degenerate into regional trading blocs". What is the response of the Prime Minister to these statements? Does he not feel that such criticisms delivered to almost 100 nations in the world can do irreparable damage to Canada's stature in the eyes of our international trading partners, both present and future?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the negotiations into which we have entered with the United States are explicitly authorized by the GATT and are entirely consistent with the GATT. More than that, other trading nations in the world know as we do of the force and destructiveness of protectionist pressures in the United States.

I have spoken, if the Hon. Member has not, to Trade Ministers and Foreign Ministers of other countries, all of whom welcome this initiative, both because it demonstrates to the protectionists in the United States that there is a way to deal in the world other than hiding behind walls, and because it is breaking new ground that will be important to the whole GATT in terms of the new issues that have been dealt with in the negotiation between Canada and the United States and that can serve as a model for the world, establishing trading rules in matters like services, investment, and other fields where there are not now good enough rules.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in response to the seemingly endless criticisms and weaknesses of this trade agreement, the Prime Minister on the weekend had one soothing, sweeping, cleansing message. He said: "Don't worry, it will all come out in the wash". Does the Prime Minister feel he can really go ahead with this deal when the vast majority of Canadians are either totally opposed to it or want more information?

Some Hon. Members: False!

Mr. Baker: And, by the way, where is the final text? When will it be released? It will all come out in the wash all right, after Canada has been put through the wringer and hung out to dry. The only wash the Prime Minister knows about is a whitewash.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport, the Hon. Member for St. John's West, is absent today so my hon. friend will have to await perhaps a direct answer.

Meanwhile, the Hon. Member refers to the weaknesses of the free trade agreement. If that is so, this will come as a great surprise to countries such as Korea, Taiwan, Japan and Israel, all of which, having been apprised of the realities of the Canada-U.S. trade agreement, want to negotiate a similar agreement for themselves because they think it is such a fine trading instrument.

PANEL'S RULING—EFFECT ON WEST COAST FISHING INDUSTRY

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is in regard to the GATT panel ruling which stands to ruin the West Coast fishing industry. Since this item is on the agenda for this week's GATT meeting in Geneva, and is to be handled by officials from the Department of External Affairs who are presently in Geneva, will the Minister assure this House that he has directed those officials who are now in Geneva to oppose the panel ruling?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member, I think, knows, the panel's report has no legal status in the GATT until it is formally adopted. This requires the consensus of all GATT members. The first discussion of the report in GATT will not take place until tomorrow. We have representatives there who will be making representations on behalf of the Government at that meeting.

CANADIAN RESPONSE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): My supplementary question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Surely some Minister has directed those officials who are in Geneva as to whether they are for the panel report or opposed to it. My question is very simple to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has he directed his officials to oppose the contents of the panel ruling?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we are very aware of the importance of this issue to the West Coast processing industry. We have been working closely with the industry, with the unions and with the Government of British Columbia with respect to this. We are engaging in detailed consultations on our options in responding to the GATT panel.

Mr. Fulton: When are you going to make up your minds, at midnight?

TRADE

UNITED STATES ACTIONS AGAINST FISH IMPORTS FROM CANADA

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister or to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Since the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Henderson: —our fishing industry has been harassed through a series of trade actions by the United States, for instance, the British Columbia salmon and herring harassment, the fresh cod fish harassment where all cod under 19 inches in length have been banned from going into certain parts of the United States and, of course, last week we found that whole lobsters packed in brine and over 6,000 pounds of groundfish has been seized by the Americans upon entering that country. This was fish which had been packed in my own Province of Prince Edward Island.

In light of these facts, what serious action is the Prime Minister going to take against the Americans to stop this harassment? Is he going to continue to allow the Americans to impose their fish management regulations on our Canadian fishing industry?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we share the concern of the Hon. Member for this harassment to our fisheries by the United States. We have made very strong representations to the United States with a diplomatic note and we are waiting to hear its response. We are also examining all avenues we can follow within GATT against this type of harassment by the Americans which we feel is totally unwarranted.

I want to make very clear to the hon. gentleman that this is what this Government has been talking about for a very long time, the problems with protectionism, with the non-tariff barriers, and the harassment our trade with the United States has been going through. That is why we have been negotiating a free trade agreement with the United States of America.

REQUEST THAT CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT BE TORN UP

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I want to address my supplementary question to the Prime Minister because here is one area where the Prime Minister clearly has an option. Will the Prime Minister tell the President of the United States, and his Government, to halt this trade harassment, withdraw the regulations they are putting on our Canadian fishing industry, forthwith? And, if they do not do that, will the Prime Minister tear up the free trade agreement that has been signed by the Prime Minister and the President?

• (1450)

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): To answer the last question first, no, we are not going to do that. That is not the problem, that is the solution to the problem, so we are not going to tear it up.

We will be doing everything within our power to stop this harassment of our fisheries, which we feel is totally unwarranted. We will take any action possible to stop this harassment.

UNITED STATES OFFER TO SELL SUBSIDIZED GRAIN TO U.S.S.R.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

On Friday the United States offered the Soviet Union another highly subsidized sale of grain. That is the third offer this year from the United States to the Soviet Union, and the second since the signing of the trade deal with our Prime Minister and President Reagan.

In light of the fact that a few weeks ago in the House the Secretary of State said that this was at least a violation of the spirit of the trade agreement and that he would talk to Mr. Shultz in Brussels, I wish to know now from the Secretary of State for External Affairs why the Government is so ineffective, incompetent, and inept, that despite talking to Mr. Shultz on Friday of last week, the United States made another offer to the Soviet Union, which is an important market for Canadian grain, using a subsidy that violates the very deal signed by the Prime Minister and the President of the United States?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, just to be precise, and I know that the Hon. Member would wish to be precise, what I said and what I believe is that this is inconsistent with the spirit of the deal. I do believe it is inconsistent with the spirit of the deal. I think it makes bad sense in trade law, and I think it makes bad sense in terms of promoting the acceptability of the trade arrangement that has been negotiated between Canada and the United States. I do not think it serves the interests of Canadian or American farmers, but it is part of the trade war in agriculture that is going on between the European Community and the Government of the United States. We are victims of that war.

As was indicated in a statement made by a Member of this House earlier this afternoon, we have been among the leaders in the establishment and functioning of the Cairns Group to try to bring an end to that type of costly conflict between two massive Treasuries.

No one regrets more than I do that the United States is carrying on that type of program. So far, the reality is that, despite those programs, the quality of the production and reputation of Canada have meant that we have been able to maintain and even increase our share of world markets, but that does not make what the United States is doing acceptable.

UNITED STATES EXPORT ENHANCEMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): I mentioned the offer of last Friday, but according to the press today China has accepted to buy some 265,000 tonnes of wheat under the U.S. Export Enhancement Program of subsidies.

What on earth is George Shultz telling the Secretary of State for External Affairs? Why are we so ineffective at putting the message of Canada across when it is a direct violation of one of the sections of this trade deal that the Prime Minister wants to sign with President Reagan? Why are we so ineffective?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, what he is telling me is that the Export Enhancement Program is not a policy that the United States administration mounted, nor one that it likes, but is part of the law of that country. Particularly in the circumstances of an election year, I am afraid that we will face more of those types of actions under the Export Enhancement Program.

I will continue to oppose and protest them. I would hope that instead of trying simply to make this a partisan matter in the House of Commons, there would be a common action on the part of Members of this House who want to stop this type of practice which is damaging to our farmers and distorting international trade practices, and that there would be a common determination on the part of all of us here to try to persuade the Americans to leave aside that type of destructive subsidy.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

NIAGARA AREA STUDY—REQUEST FOR RELEASE

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. It arises out of a report in The Ottawa Citizen this morning which states that an Environment Canada study completed over one year ago will soon be released.

The report indicates that the over-all death rate from cancer in the Niagara area is 5 per cent for men and 3 per cent for women over Ontario's average, with an approximately similar infant mortality rate.

I wish to ask the Minister of the Environment when the report will be released, if it was not this morning? Since the report calls for major initiatives now, what corrective or remedial action will be formulated or planned to accompany that release?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is referring to a study that was conducted by a sociologist and an economist on contract with the Department of the Environment. It synthesizes much of the existing information on the effects of toxic chemicals in the Great Lakes.

Because the report cut across many different disciplines, the scientists in my own Department established a panel to vet the study from a scientific point of view. That panel found the study wanting on grounds of scientific rigor, and recommended to me that it not be published with the imprimatur of either my Department or the Government of Canada.

However, because it did contain a lot of useful information that would stimulate debate, the scientists recommended that the study be released in the name of the two authors. I have accepted both recommendations. The report is being released today, and it is available upon request.

PARKER COMMISSION INQUIRY REPORT—REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, talking about reports that have been suppressed, I wish to ask the Government a question on the Parker Commission Inquiry into the conflict of interest allegations involving the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

Why is it taking Cabinet longer to study the Parker Commission Inquiry Report than it expects Canadians to study and assess the so-called Reagan-Mulroney trade report?

Why is the government taking so much time? You have had it for five days, it has been printed, translated—

An Hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member, who is an experienced Member, is getting a little out of order. I am sure that he would want to put the question appropriately.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, why is the Government hiding the report? Let us read along with it what is in the report, and let it tell us when the report will be made public.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Privy Council received the report on Thursday while I was in Toronto for the First Ministers' Conference. Immediately upon my return, I began to consider the matter today. I will meet with my cabinet colleagues. It is a substantial report where recommendations are made that warrant legal analysis by the Department of Justice, which is presently ongoing. As quickly as the matter is complete, it will be fully released.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TABLE REPORT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): So, Mr. Speaker, the Cabinet has had the report of the Inquiry Commission for five days. I am informed that it has been printed and translated as expected.

Why does the Government not table that report in the House today? Why not allow Canadians to read it along with the Cabinet? Will there be a report on the substance, the content of the inquiry, and another one with recommendations? Does the Government hesitate because there is more than one report?

The Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member seems to be suggesting that it is somehow peculiar that a report containing several hundred pages which was received last Thursday, while the Prime Minister was presiding a First Ministers' Conference in Toronto, has not been tabled yet on the next Monday. There is nothing unusual in the fact that my colleagues and I started to consider it . . . First of all, we have to read it, to examine it.

And when the Government will have well considered and analysed it along with its recommendations, it will be tabled in due time . . . Yes . . . Yes, and a Member as serious as the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier knows full well that his question is trivial. There is absolutely nothing improper here.

ACID RAIN

REQUEST FOR DETAILS ON POSSIBILITY OF AGREEMENT WITH AMERICANS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Environment who is aware that an American team is now in Ottawa either to negotiate or to discuss a treaty on acid rain. Will there be a real treaty with the Americans and, if so, will it provide for concrete and specific acid rain reductions or only reseach, discussions and publicity? Are we to expect real action or propaganda?

• (1500)

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that on April 6 last the President of the United States committed himself to a negotiation process which might well lead to a bilateral accord between Canada and the United States similar to the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement.

On May 22 Canada put to the American negotiators a specific program proposal which would see acid rain-causing emissions reduced on a targeted and scheduled basis on both sides of the border.

There have been meetings between Canada and the United States at the officials' level, both in Washington and today in Ottawa, toward that end. The negotiators are in fact meeting even as we talk. We will know later today, I hope, something a little more about the American response to our specific proposal. I will keep the House and the Hon. Member informed.

CONTENT OF POSSIBLE AGREEMENT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister know that Canadians would rather have a treaty on acid rain than any trade deal?

Will he come clean with us about what we are going to get? Will there be real reduction standards? Will there be real spending on the part of both countries? Or is this just another exercise in public relations as I am afraid the last one was?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada want a trade deal and an acid rain deal, and I hope we will get both.

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT OPPOSED APPEAL OF LUC PAQUETTE TO HAVE CRIMINAL TRIAL PROCEEDINGS CONDUCTED IN FRENCH

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice, I will direct my question to the Prime Minister with regard to the status of our other official language in Alberta.

According to an Appeal Court ruling, a person accused of a crime, in this case Luc Paquette, is not entitled to have his criminal trial proceedings conducted in French.

Could the Prime Minister explain to us why, notwithstanding the claims of the Federal Government in favour of minority linguistic rights, as in the Meech Lake Accord, the Federal Government, in this case, opposed Mr. Paquette's request to have his trial conducted in French? This is terrible, I must say!

The Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says it is terrible, when in fact this Government has never failed to promote both our official languages. Terrible, you say, when talking about a ruling that I have not seen. The Minister of Justice is absent. He will study this decision and report to the House.

To a Government which has negotiated the Meech Lake Accord, which has moved major amendments to the Official Languages Act, which has always looked after the interests of minorities . . . you have the audacity to talk about a terrible situation? Come on!

RIGHT TO HOLD CRIMINAL TRIAL PROCEEDINGS IN FRENCH IN ALBERTA—POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): This was a Federal case. The Federal Government has won, at the expense of minority rights!

Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister agree to find out about this trial and change his policy of denying the right of people accused of criminal acts in Alberta to have their trial proceedings conducted in French?

The Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Absolutely, Mr. Speaker! If my Hon. friend had listened to my reply, he would know that I will be delighted to do so! I do intend to do so. The Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada will give careful consideration to this ruling and report to my Hon. friend and the House, with all necessary clarification.

HAITI—POSSIBILITY OF CANADIAN INITIATIVE AT UNITED NATIONS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Could he tell the House whether Canada intends to take any action at the United Nations in respect of what the United Nations may be able to do to restore democracy to make free elections possible in Haiti?

This would be another avenue through which the people of Haiti might be able to have their tragic situation addressed. Does the Secretary of State for External Affairs have anything to say about the Canadian position on that?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that is a very helpful suggestion. We will take a look to see if some initiative can be taken through the United Nations after we have received the fuller information which, as my colleague indicated, we are seeking from our authorities and from others in Haiti.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Abitibi. This will be the last question.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

THE CHILDREN OF WASWANIPI—BUILDING OF SCHOOL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Since 1979, Cree children in the Waswanipi reserve in Abitibi go to school in old mobile homes and old houses. A new school was to be built in time for the beginning of 1988. Plans and specifications are ready, tenders have been called, the contractor has been chosen and his bid is valid until December 6. But the Department of Indian Affairs now blocks the project. Mr. Speaker, my question is this: Would it be possible for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and his officials to meet this week with Chief Abel Kitchen of Waswanipi and Great Chief Mathew Coon Come in order to solve this problem which is causing hardship to the children? At the beginning of 1988, many of the future pupils in Waswanipi will have to stay home if no solution is found. Mr. Speaker, all Abitibi residents want this school built soon in the interest of these children.

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development I should like to tell my hon. friend that the Minister is not only aware of the Hon. Member's interest in this issue but also of his desire to advance education on the reserve.

It is my understanding that within a certain fixed budget there was a possibility to build a school, but additional funds might be needed.

The Hon. Member's suggestion to meet and to resolve those differences is a helpful one. I will pass it on, but it is my understanding that the Department would have a similar view to trying to resolve it in that way.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions among the Parties, and I think Your Honour would find unanimous consent to revert to the introduction of Bills to permit the introduction of the Bill presently on the Order Paper in the name of the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds, intituled: "an Act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act".

May I say in advance that I appreciate very much the co-operation and understanding which I received from the opposition House Leaders in this matter.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion of the Minister of State. Is there agreement?

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, we sometimes try and help the Governement correct some of its mistakes—

Mr. Gauthier: Not too often, though.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Having been consulted this time, we will help the Minister introduce his bill.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Frank Oberle (for Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-92, an Act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

POINT OF ORDER

QUALITY AND SPEED OF TRANSLATION SERVICES—RULING OF MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: I should like to advise Hon. Members that I have a question of privilege and a point of order upon which to report to the House.

On September 22, 1987, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) raised a question in relation to the Translation services required by Members of Parliament. A point of order of a similar nature was also raised on November 18, 1987 by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). The Chair has carefully considered both matters and, because of their similarity, will deal with both of them in the ruling.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon referred specifically to two occasions when, to put it in his own words, "the translation services of the House of Commons and of the committees of the House have been hard pressed to fulfill their obligations, and to enable Members of Parliament to complete their work and carry out their duties".

• (1510)

In the first instance, the Hon. Member argued last spring that the work of the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism was impeded because the translation of documents was not always available at the time the committee was considering various drafts of a report. In the second case, the Hon. Member referred to the one week delay in the presentation to the House of the report of the Special Joint Committee on the 1987 Constitutional Accord because of difficulties encountered in completing the Translation work. The Hon. Member suggested that the problems facing the Translation Bureau are the direct result of staff reduction in recent years and the policy of contracting out translation work since 1978.

In his contribution on the issue, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) most appropriately reminded the House that, when requiring translation services, the House of Commons is merely a client of a Government department, namely the Department of the Secretary of State. The Chair also appreciates the good words of the Hon. Member regarding the exceptional quality of the translation provided by the Translation Bureau, despite the recurrent difficulties.

The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) was right in talking about the sensitivity of the whole issue and the frustrations felt by some Members when unable to benefit from the necessary services in order to function adequately in their own language.

[English]

Last November 18, the Hon. Member for Regina West apprised the House of the fact that two meetings of the Standing Committee on Transport had to be cancelled because its report, sent to the Translation Bureau three weeks earlier, had not been translated. The Chair had this matter investigated and it was discovered that the Translation Bureau had negotiated with the research branch of the Library of Parliament, which is preparing the report, an extension of its deadline to complete the translation. This was done without the committee's knowledge. Although this is clearly an administrative misunderstanding, and not a point of order, it nevertheless shows again how the operations of the various committees of the House can be frustrated.

In relation to the question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon, the Chair would like to indicate at the outset that, in order to establish that there exists a prima facie case of privilege, the Speaker must be satisfied both that privilege appears to be sufficiently involved to justify giving the matter precedence over all other matters before the House, and also that the matter is being raised at the earliest opportunity, as specified in Citation 81(1) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition.

While considering the matter, the Chair consulted the precedent of November 5, 1968, to which the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon referred in his intervention. At the time an Hon. Member complained about the insufficient number of translators and interpreters available to meet the needs of the House and its committees. Speaker Lamoureux did not find a prima facie case of privilege, but acknowledged the merits of the Member's grievance.

The Chair cannot conclude otherwise in the present matter raised by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon. Neither the House nor the Members were prevented from actually performing their duties, although I would admit that access to some of the working tools was not made easy for some Members. Therefore, the Chair must find that the matter raised by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon does not constitute a prima facie case of privilege.

But, as was the case with Speaker Lamoureux in 1968, the Chair finds the matter of the utmost importance and is thankful to both the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon and the Member for Regina West for raising it in the House. It is, indeed, very distressing to realize that some Members and, in particular, francophone Members, do not have the same immediate and ready access to documents and files as other Members have. It creates an unfairness which is simply not acceptable.

As indicated by the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis, the Chair has been very sensitive to this issue. While one understands the problems facing the Translation Bureau in the management of its operations, the House, as a special client, is right to express its concerns to the Department of the Secretary of State with respect to translation delays. The Board of Internal Economy has examined the matter in the past and officials of the House have approached the Translation Bureau on many occasions in order to improve the situation and to see that the level of service provided fulfilled the best expectations of the House of Commons.

We were assured by the Department of the Secretary of State, last April, that every effort would be made to avoid delays, but in the light of the comments of Hon. Members, it appears that in some areas the time taken to provide translations is still unacceptably long. The solution ought not to be to ask the committees of the House to delay their work while unduly waiting for a translation to be completed; on the contrary, the Department of the Secretary of State must be made fully aware of the particular needs of legislators so that the required resources are made available in order to meet the translation requirements of the House.

[English]

The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) suggested that a mandate be given to the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services to consider the matter. But may I be permitted, with respect, to indicate to the Hon. Member and the House that the standing committee may already have that power in its general mandate, as provided in Standing Order 96(3)(c), to review:

> —and report to the Speaker as well as the Board of Internal Economy, on the administration of the House and the provision of services and facilities to Members—

The fact that the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon and the Hon. Member for Regina West chose to bring their concerns to the attention of their colleagues is a good indication to the Chair that the question of translation services continues to be viewed as fundamental by many Members. Again, I must thank both Hon. Members as well as the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis for sharing their views with the Chair.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-54, an Act to amend the Criminal Code and other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Madam Speaker, I rise today to address Bill C-54, an Act to amend the Criminal Code and other Acts in consequence thereof.

I want to begin with perhaps a look at the injustice and the imbalance of the scales of justice inherent and implicit with the application of the Bill. What we have here is an unbalanced view by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) being presented, to try to counteract the very serious concerns that we have with child pornography, obscenity and violence toward men, women and children. We have as well concerns about human sexuality and its normalcy in society. We have all those groups who have looked at the Bill and see that it is contrary to the basic principles of law that say a defendant is innocent until proven guilty. We can find it no longer acceptable to have this kind of repressive and regressive legislation within our laws.

With respect to that aspect, often there have been individuals who have said that this Bill is right, that it is on target and that it is a response to what the community is asking for. But this Bill has raised a tremendous furor in the artistic and the legal world. There are serious concerns about its propriety. The legislation has not been overlooked in international circles either. I have been told that the fiftieth Congress of the International Writers' Organization, PEN, meeting in Lugan, Sweden, passed a resolution on May 15 expressing concern about this proposed law, especially the section dealing with artistic merit which shifts the burden of proof from the state to the defendant.

One talks about obscenity, pornography and kiddy porn or child porn in this Bill but at the same time we are addressing the issues of erotica. There is an intrusion by the state into the life of people within their own homes. I suggest that adult Canadians expect their legislators, their Government and their police to treat them as adults. I suggest also, Madam Speaker, that the conduct of consenting adults in the privacy of their homes is a personal affair and is not the affair of the state. While saying that, Liberals are concerned with recent trends that demonstrate an increase in violence, battering and the number of pornographic books, magazines and literature which depict an untrue picture of sexuality to our young people. Child pornography, violent pornography, and human degradation need tougher legislative sanctions of the type proposed in Bill C-54. I suggest that concern has been raised about the long-term effect of this violent and degrading pornographic material. There are studies to this effect which were conducted on prisoners.

The public needs to be educated against violence to men, women and children, but success depends on how you go about it and how the attitude of Government is reflected in the law. I suggest that pornography needs a much more clear definition. The Government should be prepared to re-examine its definition of erotica and pornography. The Bill tries to cover a garden variety of sex, and that is totally repressive and regressive.

As far as I am concerned, what is really at issue is child pornography and violent pornography, and the definition of erotica. Because of the broad definition in this Bill, erotica is reduced to covering mere nudity; when it is associated with sex, it becomes illegal. I find that unacceptable in today's society. If you read the definition of erotica, it is really enough to blow your mind. It says:

> "erotica" means any visual matter a dominant characteristic of which is the depiction, in a sexual context or for the purpose of the sexual stimulation of the viewer, of a human sexual organ, a female breast or the human anal region;

That is a pretty broad definition of the normal facts of life. Under pornography we have a long list of no-nos, many of which I agree with. Yet when you get down to Clause 1(a)(vi), it includes:

> masturbation or ejaculation not referred to in sub-paragraph (iv), or vaginal, anal or oral intercourse,

I suggest it all depends how those normal daily functions, in many cases, are defined. This is a rather broad sweep to cover what I think the legislation wants to cover, which is undue exploitation. That has been covered in previous legislation but not defined as accurately as one would like. I suggest that this is not the place for that particular definition. I hope that when this Bill goes to committee, this particular clause will be examined much more closely and put in the right place. There should, in any case, also be some improvement in the definition.

I suggest that the obscenity legislation in Canada has been ambiguous, and this is what we are trying to clear up. That is the whole point at issue. Two provisions in our Criminal Code have been employed to prosecute alleged offenders in the past. There was the antiquated "disgusting object" provision, and the obscenity code modified in 1962 as a result of a Supreme Court ruling which called for the inclusion of a community standards test. Then the obscenity provision was amended by Bill C-58 in 1959 to qualify "obscene" as any publication the dominant characteristic of which is undue exploitation of sex. Again that term left considerable room for defence against prosecution, as did the indefinable nature of community standards. These provisions, coupled with Customs and Excise restrictions on obscene materials, and provincial legislation, have helped create a climate of subtle repression of artistic freedom. Yet the lack of definition accorded the terminology used has provoked the Government to outline in sweeping terms what it has deemed pornographic.

The Government seems to have a very difficult time in making definitions. We have seen it in the copyright legislation and we see it again in this Bill. The definition of pornography and erotica is too narrow and vague. That results in the criminalization of sexual activity among consenting adults. I hope all Members of this House plan to have a criminal activity of this sort at some point or another in the near future.

The dominant characteristic in an artist's mind is symbolism. It is character study. It is theme, or other artistic development or expression. Sexual stimulation or the naked body are essential conduits for this artistic intent. Whose perspective decides whether sex is the end or merely the means to an end?

If you read Clauses 159.4, 159.5 and 159.6 you have to ask yourself, what did the Department of Justice have in mind? They are regressive, repressive and unbelievable. I call them the fig-leaf clauses. They are talking about exhibition of erotica to persons under the age of 18 years of age, yet they define erotica as normal sexual behaviour. I am not talking about violence and other than tender loving care, as we think about it in today's world. That is not what the intent was, but that is the way they wrote the Bill. It talks about the exhibition, or sale or rental of erotica to persons under 18 years of age. Then it talks about what the offences are going to be and how they are to be defined. You have to prove that the accused took all responsible steps to ensure there was no erotica in the thing sold, rented or offered for sale, and that it has artistic merit.

Having to define and defend artistic merit, and being guilty until proven innocent, is a rather strange concept in British common law and certainly not what we are used to. I suggest that when you have to prove your innocence, it becomes a strain, a drain on time and dollars. Lord only knows that our artists are not exactly the best paid in our society. Yet it is not enough to prove that the purpose is artistic merit. If the art falls below what is called the artistic merit threshold—and who determines that—there is no defence. It is not up to the Crown to prove there was no artistic merit. The accused must establish that there is artistic merit once the Crown has proved that the work falls within the broad definition of erotica. This definition is too narrow, excludes the act of love between two consenting adults, and all the normal parts of the body, which are in themselves, as well as the act of making love, legal. There is something rather strange in the whole approach.

The erotica clause has an interpretation which now classifies intercourse as pornography. The definition of pornography is thus made to stand on depictions that may simply be offensive to some members of society. I hope, first, that it is not offensive to most of us and, second, that the legislators will clean up their act in terms of that wording. I do not think that was their intent.

The reverse onus provisions of Bill C-54, which require artists to prove artistic merit, place an unjustifiable hardship upon the artistic community. Where they have to prove that the consumer is under the age of 18 there is no artistic defence. The following example used by Pierre Berton demonstrates the silliness behind some of these definitions.

If the Charlottetown Festival revived Johnny Belinda, it would have to plead artistic merit in order to enact the rape scene. The same would apply to Les liaison dangereuses. It would not matter whether the actor or actress in these instances were fully clothed or whether the rape was clearly simulated. Moreover, if there is a single 17-year-old in the audience at a family festival, artistic merit goes out the window as a defence and it is pornography.

Therefore, if you show any sexual activity on the screen or on the stage which involves anyone who even looks as though he or she is under 18 years of age, there is no defence. You cannot say that it is educational or artistic even if the part of a teenager is played by a 25-year-old. You are still guilty of depicting pornography. Do you think that is the purpose of this legislation or is it only that they did not understand what they were writing?

The Actors' Equity Association believes that such provisions intended to prevent child pornography would effectively prohibit productions of coming of age material and material dealing with the topic of sexual abuse and exploitation of children. For example, the internationally acclaimed play by Dennis Foon, Feeling Yes, Feeling No, concerning sexual abuse prevention would be in jeopardy.

Not only are live theatre and movies affected, but so are art galleries and museums. For example, the painting now presently hanging in the National Gallery of Canada by Paul Peel entitled After the Bath might well be in contravention of Bill C-54 as it shows naked children clearly under the age of 18. It would be hard to imagine the Crown charging the National Gallery, but this might well arise if the Bill remains unaltered.

We may be able to prevent that by putting up a sign indicating that the painting is erotica or if we wrap it in an opaque material. Of course, we would then have to peek behind the opaque material to find out what the erotica was. There are things in this Bill which I find absolutely mind blowing.

I believe that the defence of artistic merit is unworkable in its present form. It represents a significant departure from the normal approach to criminal sanctions contained in other parts of the Criminal Code. It is a sort of looking glass approach which creates a philosophic and legal bias in favour of the Crown against the rights of the defendant. Long ago Canadians elected to follow the British tradition which prefers to allow a few guilty people to remain free rather than deprive an innocent person of liberty.

Clarke Rogers, artistic director of Toronto's Theatre Passe Muraille, sums up well the feelings of many creators on this point with the following statement:

> The inability to distinguish between works of art and gross pornography is a social failure, not an artist's problem. Yet we become the scapegoats. All that you do is intimidate artists and encourage self-censorship in the name of economic survival. If you're constantly being threatened by big legal bills, creativity is bound to suffer.

I am sure that all Members of this House would agree with that. Theatre and art gallery owners will be wary of presenting any work which may appear to violate pornography laws as interpreted by the local law enforcement authorities.

I would like the House to give serious thought to some of the concerns which are being expressed by other groups. The Canadian Artist's Representation association believes that they have been placed upon the fringes of society, unable to enjoy freedom of expression through Bill C-54. They said:

> —it is a part of our function as artists to question society; to hold a mirror up to society; to analyze our own shortcomings; and to explore the more remote territories of human experience. We rejoice in our senses. We do not create "pretty pictures" or amuse. Because we are not society's clowns and because we are vitally important to our society's well-being any restriction placed upon freedom of artistic expression will be a serious jeopardy to us and our society as a whole.
> We believe that such restrictions upon our rights and freedom of artistic expression are not demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society. Have we as a society elevated moral and political censorship to the status of a social idea?

I think not, Madam Speaker, and I know that my Party does not think so and we are looking toward proper amendment.

I would like to bring to your attention an exchange which I had in committee with Mr. Macerola, the Director General of the National Film Board. I asked him whether he thought that we could make and show Le déclin de l'empire américain under the new pornography Bill. As you know, that film won all kinds of awards.

[Translation]

Do you think that the new legislation on pornography would allow you today to produce and show the movie The Decline of the American Empire? No, replied Mr. Macerola. Did you point it out to the Minister? Yes, said Mr. Macerola. Did you discuss the matter with the Minister of Justice? Yes and not only with respect to The Decline of the American Empire. We are now drawing up a list of motion pictures taken out of our catalogue to be in a positiom to advise the Minister that it would be impossible to produce such movies with the new bill.

We went on dealing with various findings which show that the contents of some of the provisions of the bill should be amended.

[English]

Mr. Pelletier, the Acting Secretary General of the National Museums, said that they saw an earlier version of the Bill and that it had been changed somewhat recently. A document was prepared within the corporation by their policy people examining the implications and they were worried. They brought that to the attention of the Minister.

The Canadian Independent Record Production Association said that it is are concerned that the present Bill may be akin to using a sledgehammer to crack a nut and may well result in creating more anomalies and abuses than it cures.

Objections come from Brick Books, the League of Canadian Poets, the Toronto Arts Council, the Playwrights Union, Harry Cuff Publications, the Canadian Library Association, the Association of Canadian Booksellers, the Photographers Gallery, and the Royal Canadian College of Organists. I could go on and on. I plead through you, Madam Speaker, with the Government to amend the Bill and section off the part on erotica which is totally unacceptable, regressive, and repressive in today's modern society.

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Madam Speaker, the Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) and I, I am sure, agree on how difficult the problem of pornography is. She and I were members of the Special Committee on Child Care. I remember having a very serious discussion with her on some of the difficulties in prosecuting pornography cases. We discussed the case of Penthouse magazine which, depending on your point of view, is soft core pornography. However, in at least one instance it was convicted. It was very difficult to get a conviction because, as I am sure the Hon. Member would agree, the present provisions in the Criminal Code are inadequate. They are vague, in some cases to the point of being almost unenforcible. Therefore, all of us share the problem of what to do with this very difficult problem. The Government has made an attempt to do so in Bill C-54, with which I am pleased and proud to be associated. It defines for the first time in the Criminal Code exactly what pornography is.

If the Hon. Member and her Party and Members of the New Democratic Party do not like the definition, I suggest that it is incumbent upon them to give us their definition of pornography. It has been my experience on the justice committee for a couple of years that while everyone agrees there is a problem with street soliciting, pornography and sexual exploitation, whenever the Government attempts to come to grips with the problem and put a definition before Parliament, the Opposition states they do not like it because it is either too narrow, too broad, too vague or too regressive.

I suggest to them, as I have suggested to witnesses who have appeared the committee, that if they have a better definition, let us see it in the committee. I sit on the legislative committee with the Member for Mount Royal. Let us see their definition and have an opportunity to compare. We are all trying to control the same problem.

I have heard comments in this debate that the definition is too repressive, too vague or too narrow. Let us see what the NDP and Liberals have to propose. I think that is only fair. If they have as many reservations as they say they do about what I believe to be an excellent piece of legislation, let us see what they have to offer.

Mrs. Finestone: Madam Speaker, I think that is a constructive observation. I recommend that the Hon. Member reread the Fraser and Badgley reports which contain some definitions that I believe all three Parties could address.

I believe that the present provisions are inadequate. One can see on the cover of Hustler magazine a woman's legs sticking out of a mincemeat grinder, with other parts of the body coming through, or the picture of a woman bound and hanging on a Christmas tree. I do not believe that is very appetizing or what Canadians want.

I agree with the Hon. Member and I stated in my speech that we need change. I also recommended that we need to consider other changes. I sincerely hope we can agree upon a description that will remove the particular reference to masturbation, ejaculation, vaginal, anal and oral intercourse. I think those are totally unacceptable and out of place.

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, I am concerned about the comment of the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson). He is trying to pretend that there have not been constructive and specific alternatives put forward, which have attracted broad support from women's groups, the artistic community, others who are concerned about censorship, human rights, and people concerned about pornography, particularly against children.

The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) just mentioned the Fraser committee report. This report came to grips with the issues and the Hon. Member is being deceptive and misleading in suggesting that constructive proposals have not been put forward not only by Members of my Party and the Liberal Party, but from what appears to be a much broader basis of support than the proposals being put up by the Government which seem generally to be put before the Conservative Party by REAL Women and a few other groups that are excessively right wing and do not represent the mainstream of Canadian society.

My question to the Hon. Member is related to her comments on the film The Decline of the American Empire. That is an award-winning, commercially successful film and it represents part of the coming-of-age of the Canadian cinema. I agree with her view that this film would not in fact be able to be shown in any way in Canada according to Bill C-54.

The lovely film entitled Lies my Father Told Me dealt sensitively and evocatively with Montreal some 60 years ago. It is based on Mordecai Richler's book. I presume that scenes which involved children learning a bit about life by finding out that the woman down the street made her living as a prostitute because of the Depression would not be allowable according to the Bill. As I understand it, even a chance depiction of a female breast in a television production which came to us from France, the United Kingdom or other countries that do not have the puritan standards which the Conservatives want to impose upon us would in fact be treated as erotica and could not be shown to children, meaning people up to the age of 18. Therefore, a whole range of television productions, including drama, science, and art from other countries would effectively be banned from Canadian television.

Is that how we are proceeding into the 1990s with the Conservatives? Are those the kinds of standards that a repressive minority is trying to impose on a majority who are concerned about pornography but do not at the same time want their ability to function as adults to be seriously impaired by such a ridiculous restriction?

Mrs. Finestone: Madam Speaker, my hon. colleague is right on target. Not only will it affect the choice at the film theatre and the selections on our TV screen, it will also affect those of us who go to the public libraries for books. It will certainly have an effect on the paintings in our museums. I hope the Minister of Justice will not be insensitive to this restrictive and repressive Conservative view and will make the necessary changes.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I respect and fully understand the importance of the arguments that the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) has been making. As a former journalist, may I associate myself with her argument that the definition of undue exploitation of sex is far too ambiguous. One could drive a legal transport truck through its passages, as most people have since this particular definition came out.

Since school children, including my 16-year old son, are returning home at this hour, I respectfully request that we defer all of the explicit references such as those which have been made by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal and the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), until we get to committee. I believe that is where we can iron out some of the real problems, including the definition of undue exploitation of sex.

Would the Hon. Member not agree that the House is in agreement that this matter should be referred to the committee at once and dealt with there in the more informal surroundings that are not within ear-shot? I would respectfully suggest that Hon. Members please refer this matter to committee at once and let the committee deal with the more lurid details.

Mrs. Finestone: Madam Speaker, in acknowledging my hon. colleague's concerns for the nebulous aspects of the present Bill, and also respecting his sense of personal discomfort with some of the wording referred to in the Bill, I would, however, bring to his attention that as a mother and a grandmother—and, by the way a grandmother of my third grandchild—I have always referred to the parts of the body by the way they are defined. I have not used itsy bitsy cutesy phrases. I do not know what is wrong with using natural and normal phrases. Human sexuality is a beautiful part of life. Without it we all would not be here, nor would we have a future. I would suggest it is not an aberration and it is not difficult to discuss with one's children. I would hope that the kind of books which would be accessible in the libraries and schools of this land, and the kind of films we will use, will be such that our children can protect themselves and be able to make an intelligent decision as to how to handle themselves. I hope that will be carefully and clearly thought through in the legislative committee.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-54, an Act to amend the Criminal Code and other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and on the amendment of Mr. Robinson (p. 11291).

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Madam Speaker, I am participating in this debate because I am concerned that Bill C-54 is just a clone of Bill C-114, which was presented by the Government a year or more ago and which was found so seriously wanting, it had to be quickly withdrawn. It had to be quickly withdrawn because there was a general feeling in the community of Canada as a whole that the views of the narrow so-called moral majority were in fact not acceptable views to be imposed upon Canadians as a whole when it came to the question of pornography.

My Party, as our justice critic has already indicated, has in convention considered the matter seriously. We have devoted a lot of time to this particular question and we have indicated that we do believe there needs to be changes in Canadian law. Quite specifically, we have said that the law should be changed to define as pornography, material which condones violence, coercion, abuse and degradation in its depiction of human beings and this should include the production and distribution of such material whether in film, video, print or any other form. We also said that the definition of pornography should include material which portrays or promotes the sexual exploitation of children. We called for severe penalties for offenders. In response to the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson), therefore, the New Democrats have at the very least been very specific.

What we are debating right now is a reasoned amendment on second reading of this particular Bill which was proposed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). The amendment states we should decline to give second reading to Bill C-54 because it fails to clearly define pornography in the way I have just mentioned. It does not distinguish pornography from material of an artistic, literary, educational or scientific nature in a fashion acceptable to the Canadian public, including artists. I suppose part of the reason I am participating in this debate is to say, let us be sensible and relax a bit while at the same time recognizing that new laws on pornography, particularly on child pornography, are needed.

There is something that is deeply troubling to me. If I turn on the television some evening when I am rather tired, in the course of that evening I can see 8, 10 or 15 acts of extreme violence, the kind of acts which lead people to think that we live in a violent society and older people to think that they are hardly safe to walk on the streets at night, something which, at least in Canada, is certainly far from the truth. Yet those kinds of depictions of violence, which are quite out of sorts with what actually happens in our daily lives in a country which is relatively peaceful in relation to violence and which has a low murder rate, and so on, go unpunished. At the same time, the least passing look at a female breast on television will, according to this law, be considered erotica and because it is shown to children, there will be no artistic defence, as I understand, and in fact might lead to up to two years of imprisonment. In certain cases, some of the definitions of pornography can lead to up to 10 years in imprisonment.

The way in which artists help to perhaps define societies and what societies might become is interesting to me. I would draw to the attention of Hon. Members and to the attention of the viewers who are watching this debate, including some of the 16-year-olds referred to by the Hon. Member for Hamilton—Wentworth (Mr. Scott), Margaret Atwood's recent novel, the Hand Maid's Tale, which I read a few months ago. It depicts a society in the 1990s with severe sexual repression, and what happens when a society has severe sexual repressions along those lines. People who are rich, powerful and well connected then go and do on the side what they are telling the population as a whole it cannot do.

It is equally ironic that we should be discussing this Bill not that long after the collapse in utter disarray of the moral majority in the United States. We find out that this is not just something that happens in fiction but in real life. People like Jimmy and Tammy Bakker were playing around in all kinds of ways, rather similar to the kinds of things that occur in soap operas on daytime television, which those two condemned so roundly. To put it mildly, they failed to live up to the standards of sexual conformity which they were seeking to inculcate in their followers.

The entire right wing in the United states showed a total incapacity to live up to basic standards of ethics and laws and indulged, condoned or were involved in such things as Irangate and the various kinds of shenanigans which went on there. They showed themselves totally unprepared to live up to the most basic of constitutional law as it is understood in the United States. To bring us back to the debate here, as you are about to do, Madam Speaker, these are the same people who have been passing messages to the moral majority, to the new right wing in Canada, saying we need the kind of legislation which is represented in Bill C-54. If we have that kind of hypocrisy taking place, we are going to get lousy results. At the same time, excessively repressive legislation, I believe, is going to backfire in all kinds of unpleasant and undesirable ways.

My colleague, and former colleague in the Press Gallery, the Hon. Member for Hamilton—Wentworth, suggested he was concerned about what his 16-year-old son might see on the way home from school. Some years ago I took two or three of my teenage sons, at that point in their mid-teens, to see the movie Fame in Toronto. That movie, for people who have not seen it, is a movie about young men and women at the high school for the performing arts in Brooklyn. It is not about just growing up artistically but growing up as human beings. Some make it and some fail. One of the scenes which I can depict without trouble on daytime television is of a young girl who wants to be in films and is tricked into going for what is said to be a film test. In fact, some cruel adult makes her strip in front of a camera for a so-called film test when in fact it is just erotic exploitation of a young person. I ask myself if it would be better for a teenage girl living and growing up in Toronto who wants to get into films to learn the lesson to watch out for that kind of thing by seeing a film or to have it happen to her in person. The answer is obvious.

During the course of that film there was the scene where the boys in the school happen to find a way of looking into the girls' washroom. In what I thought was a rather innocent and amusing way they saw one or two of the girls changing. Again, that is something which happens in the life of every teenager, I would assume. It happened in my life and I am sure it happened even in the boyhood or teenage years of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn). That, too, would attract the attention of the moral protectors under Bill C-54.

In fact, we could not get into the film Fame. We could not take our teenage kids into that movie despite the fact it had a very solid, positive message about growing up in all kinds of ways, and in ways which are real to teenage men and women. Later, as a consequence, we sneaked our children into the film. We broke Ontario's film censorship laws and took our children into an unrestricted movie that was part of a double-header, and when the first film ended they stayed and watched the second film and received the types of benefits—

• (1600)

Mr. Oberle: Breaking the law?

Mr. Cassidy: The Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) states "breaking the law". If there are bad laws, sooner or later people will start to find ways of changing them.

I wish to cite another example. The Tin Drum, an artistic film of the highest merit, one of the finest films that I have seen from continental Europe in the past 15 or 20 years, was banned by the Ontario film censor. As Leader of the Ontario New Democrats, I took a group, we defied the law, and attended a special screening of that particular film. As someone who had spent some time in post-war Germany, I was astonished at how effectively that film, using all types of literary and artistic devices, transmitted the terrible and awful things that had happened in Germany before, during, and after the war. Because the central character in that film is an adult with only the growth of a child, it would not be permitted under Bill C-54.

I would venture to say that a reasonable number of Conservative MPs from the Toronto area have seen the production of O Calcutta. I believe it has been running in Toronto for seven or eight years. I think that it is a silly production, but I am not sure whether the moral fibre of Toronto has gone permanently to the dogs because of a stage production which features nudity and which is essentially preoccupied with sex.

In all of this, I look at the Bill and ask myself, what is really different from Bill C-114? The Library of Parliament has kindly prepared a summary which I have looked at. I wish to read the definitions of simple pornography.

In Bill C-114 was outlawed pornography which was defined as visual matter showing vaginal, anal, or oral intercourse; ejaculation, sexually violent behaviour, bestiality, incest, necrophilia, masturbation, or other sexual activity. That was particularly criticized because of the reference to "other sexual activity" which could presumably mean giving your cousin a kiss.

However, Bill C-54 is almost the same. It refers to bestiality, incest, or necrophilia; it refers to masturbation or ejaculation, and then it refers to vaginal, anal, or oral intercourse.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton—Wentworth stated that the details will be fixed up in committee. Let us address the principle involved. The fact is that the Bill is a clone of the previous Bill. The Bill means that a great deal of normal—let us put it quite bluntly—human activity, which I venture to say every Member of Parliament has taken part in, and hopefully with a great deal of pleasure, anticipation, and fond remembrance is dirty. That is true of the adult population. Members of Parliament, our constituents, and all of us would not have been here if it had not been for human sexual activity. We must be careful before we turn around and say to our children and everybody else that somehow everything in this area is dirty. It is not.

Activities which involve violence and sex are dirty. Activities that involve brutality and degradation of one human being by another are dirty and should be stopped. Activities which involve the exploitation of children in a sexual sense are dirty and should be outlawed. But for goodness sake let us have some sense of proportion in all of this.

I find it astonishing that a Government could have brought in a Bill which responded to widespread concerns about pornography, and then narrowed the definition and made it so restrictive, repressive, and objectionable that virtually every important group representing women, as well as the artistic community and people concerned about censorship, has spoken against Bill C-54.

ACTRA, the AIDS Committee of Toronto, the Canada Council, the Canadian Committee Against Customs Censorship, the Canadian Conference of the Arts, the Coalition for the Right to View, Feminists Against Censorship, the International Women's Day Committee in Toronto, Media People for Social Responsibility, the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, the Ontario Association of Art Galleries, the Ontario Coalition for Abortion Clinics, the Ontario Film and Video Appreciation Society, the International Writers' Organization, PEN, the Periodical Marketers of Canada, the Toronto Arts Council, and the Writers' Union of Canada. That is one range of groups. What about the media? The Globe and Mail, La Presse, Le Devoir, The Ottawa Citizen, the Toronto Star, The Toronto Sun, and The Vancouver Sun have all spoken out against the legislation in Bill C-54.

What is being done in this Bill will mean, among other things, I suppose that the police can come along and either if by hazard or with a search warrant can go into my library and look and see if I have any documents which I made about 25 years ago which are deemed to be child pornography.

Mrs. Bourgault: That is an exaggeration.

Mr. Cassidy: I am not exaggerating, Madam Speaker. The Hon. Member suggests that I am exaggerating. A book which involves children in one part of the book and which talks about intercourse in another part of the book could be deemed to be child pornography, and I could probably be jailed for having that book in my library, even though I inherited it from my father who bought it 30 or 40 years ago. That is the situation.

Some Hon. Members: Nonsense.

Mr. Cassidy: If it is nonsense, then we should change the Bill so it is not a possibility. I speak with passion. A former Prime Minister said that the state had no place in the bedrooms of the nation. I wonder if the state has a place in the libraries or the book rooms of the nation, along the lines of what are presently suggested.

Would a book which talks to children about sex in a positive and sensitive way, for example, Show Me, be permissible or not? Will we be in a situation where every work of art and every work that touches upon sexual subjects and which has been published in Canada over the last 50 years will risk being taken before the courts? Many of those books are still in circulation, if they are not in first printing, perhaps they are in used bookstores. Used booksellers and booksellers in general and people like myself who have a substantial library will have to look through all of our books to see whether or not they are all right.

What about Arabian Nights? Could I be taken to court because I have a copy of Thousand and One Nights in my library, and which certainly involves sex? It involves young people under 18 or apparently under the age of 18.

An Hon. Member: Read the Bill.

Mr. Cassidy: The Hon. Member says to read the Bill. I will read the Bill. They will know that the test of artistic merit is not a test which has to be proven by the Crown, it is the defence which has to be proven by the accused. I could be dragged through the courts and forced to pay thousands of dollars in legal fees in order to prove that Arabian Nights had artistic merit, and therefore—

An Hon. Member: Absolutely not.

Mr. Cassidy: The Hon. Member states "absolutely not". Well, let him change the Bill.

In addition, if somewhere in Thousand and One Nights there was a concubine in a harem, who, according to the book might have been less than 18 years old, then there would be no defence of artistic merit. That is what is in the Bill.

Now I simply say to the Hon. Members opposite in the Conservative Party, is this the ridiculous type of thing that they are trying to suggest? They will make this country into a laughing stock around the world when people look at what is being put forward in Bill C-54. I do not think that I can accept that.

I repeat that I believe, as my Party believes, that it is necessary to have a redefinition of pornography. What we have now has proven to be inadequate and unacceptable. I have no problem saying that. However, it is crazy to put a legitimate artist in a situation where, for example, he or she may have to go to court and with limited resources defend whether or not a work of art has artistic merit. We are all put in a situation where the entire Bill will inevitably be challenged under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms because of its restraints on freedom of expression. I believe it incontrovertibly goes far beyond what is necessary in a free and democratic society concerned about pornography as the degradation of women, about pornography where violence and sex are linked, or about pornography where perhaps males are being encouraged to indulge in acts which are demeaning to the human dignity of another person.

This is why I endorse and support the reasoned amendment moved by my colleague. I hope Hon. Members will join with me in saying to the Government, as many in the media have said, "You blew it again". The Fraser and the Badgley committees have come up with some positive alternatives. Let us go back to those and come up with a Bill which will have broad consensus support, particularly from mainstream organizations representing women across Canada.

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, I have looked at the definition of pornography, and I have heard the allegations of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) that Members of the House were engaged in activities which would be wrong under the Bill. The Hon. Member felt that it was common for Members of the House to be involved in degrading acts in a sexual context, including a person who treats any other person as an animal or object, who engages in acts of bondage, who penetrates with an object the vagina or anus of the person, who defecates, urinates, or ejaculates on to other persons, or who is involved in bestiality, incest, or necrophilia which, for the information of the House, is intercourse with a dead body.

I thought that we had honourable people in the House, but it may be that we are going too far in this Bill, because the standard of conduct of the Member opposite and his colleagues in the NDP would treat these matters as ordinary matters. Would the Hon. Member like to tell us which Members of the House are involved in defecating and ejaculating over other people, in bestiality, incest, or necrophilia?

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member knows that in the first place the acts to which he has just referred have always been illegal. I would hope that no Members have indulged in such acts.

However Clause 6 of the Bill indicates that any visual matter which shows vaginal intercourse is pornography. In addition, if it is done or is associated in any way with a person under the age of 18 years, not only is it then child pornography but also the defence of artistic merit is not admissible in the courts. For example, an actor involved in a stage presentation which was deemed to have met those particular criteria could be subject to a jail sentence for simply having participated.

I must assume that that is what the Government intended when it included that in the Bill. As a consequence, between that and the very restrictive rules relative to erotica, the Government has included an important area of human expression in which presumably all Members or almost all have engaged with pleasure and certainly without which none of the Members of the House would be here, except for perhaps a few members of the Conservative Party who may have been the products of virgin birth. To suggest that that is not part of normal human expression and to treat it as dirty is wrong.

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, I wonder whether the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) could expand a little on a point which he made earlier in his speech regarding—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, Hon. Members on the government side seem to have a lot to say. I hope they will rise to speak on the issue.

Prior to being elected I was involved in the field of corrections, probation, and parole. I happen to know something of what I speak in terms of those persons who unfortunately have serious sexual deviations and problems resulting in all cases from childhood and childhood training. They are not instinctual behavioural problems associated with human sexuality.

I wonder whether the Hon. Member would expand for a moment or two on the value, not only to young people but to humanity generally, of learning from film and literature about human sexuality.

It is only through these kinds of learning experiences that standards of acceptable sexual behaviour can be learned. Sexuality in terms of what is acceptable sociologically in Canadian society and elsewhere in the world is only learned through film, literature, and so on. I should like to hear further remarks from the Hon. Member, because I think Canadians generally are interested in what kind of law is most appropriate to provide the kind of peaceful and sane society in which we would all like to live and raise our children.

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, I thank my colleague for a good and sensitive question.

I have three sons. The youngest is now 19 years of age. I have watched them and their friends learn about life. They have always seemed to choose the hard way, but that is their affair. I have watched them grow up and gradually begin to make friends with young women. Some of them have now reached the point of adulthood where they are sharing their lives with young women.

One does not suddenly become a sexual being the moment one turns 18, which I believe is the essential picture suggested in the Bill. Communications between parents and teenagers, as I well know, are not always easy. Often it is difficult, no matter how much we would like it to happen, for parents to be the only source of information and guidance for our young people.

This is why we have story-tellers, and we have had story-tellers in society since the days when a few savages sat around a camp-fire half frozen in the northern nights of Canada. Today our story-tellers are novelists. They produce pictures, films, and plays. They are the story-tellers of our times.

As we said in our Party resolution, material which promotes the sexual exploitation of children and is violent or degrading in a sexual context toward children is clearly inadmissible. However, what about sensitive material dealing with children reaching out as they begin to recognize that they are sexual beings or dealing with the difficulties faced by young girls who menstruate these days at the age of 12 or 13? It may be as many as 10 years or 12 years in society today before they decide to get married. They must contend with a whole range of feelings, responsibilities, potentials, and risks, as we increasingly have a more egalitarian society which more equally understands the obligations of men and women in terms of preventing conception and in terms of raising children. These kinds of things must be felt by boys as well once they reach the ages of 12 years or 13 years. Through older brothers and sisters they cannot help but be aware of burgeoning sexuality. These are the facts. We cannot take away those facts by pretending they do not exist.

I have a friend who teaches in a school with a very repressive, may I say, religious point of view under which only religion teachers are entitled to talk to 14, 15, and 16 year old kids about sex. This does not stop the fact that they are brimfull of hormones and that they are trying to learn about these things. It is a very difficult matter which needs to be approached sensitively. It does not require the sledge-hammer approach which I am afraid we find in Bill C-54.

It is a difficult area. Although I welcome changes in the law, I do not welcome these changes because I do not think they adequately come to grips with what is needed in terms of helping young men and women on their way to adulthood in sexuality as well as in other things.

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to deal with this major Bill aimed at correcting a situation which has existed for the past 20 years and which has been deteriorating year after year.

Madam Speaker, I must admit it is not easy for a person raised in a very conservative family and under a rather puritan system to deal with such issues as sexuality, pornography and bestiality. When I was attending school, we simply did not talk about those things, and although my father and mother were very good parents, they always had a lot of difficulty talking openly about sex.

Ever since we came into office three years ago, Madam Speaker, it is clear that each time legislation was introduced, NDP and Liberal members have always whined about the new calamity which was being visited on the Canadian public. They always exaggerated, describing any new piece of legislation as terrible and frightening. Whether it is the famous Bill C-22 or other Bills which they claimed would result in hundreds of thousands of jobs being lost, while on the contrary they created a great many. In short, Hon. Members opposite always find Government legislation terrible, but in the end people adapt to it. A Government certainly cannot hope to please the Canadian people 100 per cent. I do not believe that those who make money selling pornography exploiting children and, of course, women—as women, we have always been victimized by this somewhat uncommon moneymaking exercise—will be pleased with this Bill. That is understandable.

Madam Speaker, I remember that, not so long ago, when the Government introduced Bill C-49, we heard exactly the same arguments from hon. Members opposite. I realize today that municipalities finally got over it and people involved in prostitution have changed their attitude. I suggest that people will do like- wise with Bill C-54.

First of all, the House should remember that in 1978, the Liberal Government of the day introduced a similar Bill—I do not know what it did with it—but nothing came of it. It is easy to be a Liberal today and speak against Bill C-54—after having been in office for 25 years and unable to come up with legislation to curb prostitution and the pornographic plague from which, as I see it, stem other types of violence on which I will be commenting later on.

In 1981 or 1982 ex-Minister of Justice McGuigan had also made an attempt to introduce a minor amendment to the Criminal Code, but he finally came to the conclusion that dealing with this kind of issue was not a popular endeavour within his own Party, so he opted for commissioning the Fraser committee. Madam Speaker, we have to be honest enough to admit today that after so many years—I think this need to be said—there was a lack of leadership in governments, and the situation has degenerated to such an extent that Canadians can no longer tolerate what has happened and is still happening today in society.

Madam Speaker, I am glad to see that a Conservative Government which has more faith in traditional and family values has had the courage to introduce this Bill which is the logical complement of Bill C-15. At long last we have found ways to make sure that in future our Canadian society will show respect for the dignity of women and the integrity of our children.

Madam Speaker, the Bill sends a crystal-clear message to men and women who exploit children: such behaviour will no longer be tolerated. Our children have the right to be protected against such exploitation and such prejudices. All of us here in the House must see to it that children are sheltered from degradation and sexual violence.

Madam Speaker, very often, the movies, pornographic material and other disgusting things being showned to men and women who view this kind of material will cause a simple fantasy in the mind of these people to degenerate into an act of violence or even murder. One just has to read newspapers that specialize in murder stories, for instance Allo Police or Photo Police, to see that very often there is pornographic material involved in cases of murder or sexual assault on children or women. One can easily imagine how a person who has access to this violent material, especially if that person is young and unarmed, if I can use that phrase, how a teenager can be traumatized and how this type of material can encourage him or her to do the same thing.

Personally, Madam Speaker, I would like all pornographic material including movies and any other kind of pornographic material to be accessible only to adult persons. In other words, one should not be able to view or buy any of these things in book stores, not even the so-called adult movies. It is so easy nowadays to rent a videotape. And when one tries to draw the line between pornographic movies and so-called erotica, it is easy to make up definitions that do not mean anything in reality.

What we have here is an amendment to the Bill that doesn't mean anything, because the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), who is the official critic of the New Democratic Party on the matter of justice, provides for . . . actually, it does not provide anything. If the amendment is passed, it will mean that nothing more will be done and that the Bill would have to be reintroduced and studied all over again. This would bring about confusion to no end and ultimately there would be no answer to the Fraser and Badgley Committees.

Madam Speaker, the Bill provides for innovative and useful changes. To start with, it gives a clear and detailed definition of pornography that contrasts with the present legislation. That is important and must be underlined. The present legislation defines an obscene publication as follows: any publication a dominant characteristic of which is the undue exploitation of sex or of sex and one or more of the following subjects, namely violence, etc.

Presently, artists and writers must deal with a very vague definition of the word "obscene" and they have but one available defence, that is to serve the public interest. Although the artistic value is taken into account upon determining whether there has been undue exploitation, it is not by itself an excuse. At that level, Bill C-54 is a significant and genuine improvement.

Madam Speaker, a number of observers have suggested that Bill C-54 goes too far on the grounds that writings can encourage or promote sexual conduct involving children or for that matter any degrading or violent sexual behaviour. Some librarians believe that the provision in the Criminal Code dealing with obscenity does not apply to writings, as against Bill C-54.

I submit, Madam Speaker, that those people although they may be well meaning are mistaken. That provision of the Criminal Code clearly and specifically applies to written material. There is no doubt about that, Madam Speaker. Librarians and authors should not only realize that writings have been subjected to the Criminal Code for a number of years, but also appreciate that this Government is dealing with the matter of writings in a more subdued way.

Finally, anyone with artistic or literary concerns should note the improvement in Bill C-54, as against the legislation introduced by the former Minister of Justice in June 1986.

Madam Speaker, it is my view that for partisan reasons they are indulging in hairsplitting. It is my very honest belief that we must trust Canadians. I am sure, Madam Speaker, that you and I know very well the difference between erotica and pornography. I am also sure that any judge who would have to rule on that is quite capable of drawing the line between a movie that depicts normal sexual activity for educational purposes and a movie that depicts a sexual act for pornographic purposes, in other words that deviates from the normal sexual act in order to make it attractive for viewers, that goes further and uses some kind of violence, performing the sexual act in such a manner that it be not viewed as a normal sexual act. That is clear in Bill C-54.

Suggesting, as they do, contrary to the Bill, that erotica and pornography are ill-defined amounts to running with the hare and hunting with the hounds. In fact, it means opposing the legislation while being in favour, but this is something we have known for a long time, Madam Speaker, since 1984 the Opposition parties do not know where they stand. As for us, we know where we stand; Bill C-54 states our position. The Liberals and the New Democrats do not know where they stand. They agree with the Bill, but they do not agree with it. They move amendments which would have us withdraw the Bill and begin the entire process all over again, and it is long and difficult and would involve negotiations and discussions which would not achieve anything.

In my opinion, Madam Speaker, the arguments of the women's groups are being used inaccurately. Some have said that the women's groups are against the Bill. It is not true. They are not against the Bill. Quite the opposite. The simple fact is that, like other groups, certain women's groups have expressed an opinion about the definition. The committee to which this Bill will be referred will certainly be able to make recommendations about the definition which concerns the opponents of this Bill. However, they are not opposed to the provisions on child pornography or to the provisions dealing with other matters. They do not even oppose the Bill because of the definition. They have simply expressed their concern about the definition of pornography and erotica.

Madam Speaker, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) should be congratulated for having finally introduced Bill C-54. As the Hon. Members will certainly recall, Bill C-15, which also dealt with sexual offences against children, was passed by this House last June. If Hon. Members are honest, they will recognize that the Conservative Government has responded adequately to the recommendations of the Fraser and Badgley commissions. If they want to be honest intellectually and otherwise, they will also admit that the Government and the Minister of Justice deserve our congratulations for having finally adressed this issue.

Madam Speaker, I am looking at my colleague for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson). I shall never forget that, when I was a member of the committee considering Bill C-49 on prostitution, the mayor and pressure groups from Niagara Falls came before the committee to speak about the ills of prostitution. A question was asked of the mayor of Niagara about pornographic material. In his mind and in the opinion of the groups that appeared before the committee examining Bill C-49 on prostitution, pornography was the starting point for all kinds of violence. Any way one looked at it, some pornographic material, a film, a magazine, articles, could always be traced back as the source of violence.

Madam Speaker, I do not think there is any Member who does not recall the horrors inflicted on some children by maniacs, as they are called, because they are very sick people. At the hearings or trials, it was once again clearly demonstrated that those people got the idea of committing such acts of violence from something they read or from viewing pornographic movies.

Something had to be done since we are in 1987. That issue has gone on for the last 20 years. It was about time a government stood up and came up with a bill that is not one hundred percent perfect, of course, but that takes into consideration the public concerns at large. And I am sure, Madam Speaker, that Canadian men and women will give credit to the Governement for having dared speak up, in this piece of legislation, and bring forward a bill that will deal with and, hopefully, put an end to the degradation and violence inflicted upon women and children, and will lead to greater dignity for our country as a whole.

Ms. McLaughlin: Madam Speaker, I found the Hon. Member's speech very interesting. I agree with her that this is an important issue and needs to be discussed now. Like my colleague from Broadview—Greenwood, I think it is good that the Government has brought this issue forward for discussion. I can definitely say that the Conservative Party is bold in bringing this forward. My hon. friend is a feminist and I am sure she has fought to have this issue brought forward. We are all very concerned about it. However, there are a couple of things I would like to raise with her.

She mentioned that she knows what eroticism is. She knows what pornography is. She also mentioned that Madam Speaker knows, but I will not ask her to comment. She mentioned that the courts know. Given that she knows the definitions, which seems to be the heart of the dispute, why would the attorneys-general, who will be in part responsible for dealing with this question of definition, raise such serious concerns? They will be involved with those courts which my hon. friend says should be so clear on the definitions.

[Translation]

Mrs. Bourgault: Madam Speaker, my thanks to my colleague from Yukon (Mrs. McLaughlin). Of course, like all the women who sit in this House, we are the first ones to be interested and concerned by that question since we have been the models, we are the persons who have been exploited over all those years. Now my colleague is saying that the Attorney General will be responsible for the definition. Somebody has to be responsible. The role of Parliament is to legislate, courts are there to interpret the laws, and I think I can safely assume that Parliament could amend the definitions if it ever becomes clear that the Attorney General is unable to define clearly a precise problem. As I have said earlier, I have faith in our court system, and in Canadian men and women. I am sure that we will eventually agree upon a definition of erotica and pornography.

[English]

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Madam Speaker, I would like to congratulate my colleague on the very fine way in which she articulated the problem and the challenges which the Conservative Government faces. She gives the Government full marks for being bold in this area as should the entire Parliament and as do, I believe, the people of Canada.

I have to take exception with comments which I have heard made by members of the New Democratic and Liberal Parties that this measure is not finding wide support among the people of Canada. That is absolutely wrong. Much of the support for this Bill, I admit, is not coming from lobby groups but from individual Canadians who recognize pornography when they see it in the corner store and who want something done about it.

When I heard the allegation that this concern about pornography and the Government's response to it was only something which the Tories had dreamed up and that it did not have widespread support, I checked my mail of the past week on the subject of Bill C-54.

A Mr. Ed Woodman from Niagara Falls concludes his letter to me of November 10 as follows:

> I hope and pray, sir, that you will throw your whole weight behind this 100 per cent.

I also received a letter this past week from Mary Beasley of Shakespeare Avenue in Niagara-on-the-Lake. She said:

> I would like to state my support for the passage of Bill C-54, as I am strongly opposed to pornography. This legislation is long overdue.

Among other things she says:

> I wish my voice to be heard and to count in this battle.

I can tell Mrs. Beasley and other constituents such as Phil LoForti and Erwin Huisbrink that they are being listened to in this debate. The Government is again bringing forward the kind of legislation for which the people have been asking. We are not passing the buck as has so often been the case in justice-related issues.

My colleague referred to the prostitution Bill which was before the House. That is another example of where the buck was passed. The previous Government talked and talked about how concerned it was with the subject. However, it was the Conservative Government that finally did something about it. It gave tools to the law enforcement agencies to do something about the problem of street soliciting. The same is true in this case. Anyone can criticize, saying that they do not like the definition or that it is too narrow, too broad, too vague, too this, or too that. However, as my colleague has said, we have had the courage to go ahead and try to do something about this problem.

The people who are not part of lobbying groups, who are not being financed by the Government, are being listened to. This legislation is a response to the very genuine concern of people about pornography. I would again like to congratulate my colleague and invite any further comment she might have.

Mrs. Bourgault: Madam Speaker, my colleague is right. The great majority of Canadians have been waiting too long for this Bill. I have received many phone calls from constituents who were sick and tired of being obliged to take pornographic videos away from their young children. The 15 or 16-year-old children do not understand why these videos are available at the store if they are harmful.

During the leaders' debate in 1984 the three leaders agreed that the Government of Canada had a responsibility to stop the illegal entrance of pornography and the degradation of women and children. The Government has decided to act and I am proud to be a member of the Government which has addressed this problem. The women and children of Canada will finally regain dignity in our great country.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Madam Speaker, I rise to speak on this most important Bill dealing with a most important subject. When Calvin Coolidge was President of the United States he was asked by his wife who was unable to attend church that morning, "What did the Minister say, Cal? What did he talk about?" Coolidge, who was known as a man of very few words, said, "Sin". She asked, "What did he say about it, Cal?" Coolidge's reply was, "He's agin it".

I think we are all against sin. We are certainly concerned about the recent avalanche of pornographic material, especially as it becomes harder and harder in its depiction of violence, whether on television, in magazines, or what have you. We are alarmed and horrified by the pornographic and sexual abuse of children.

Various things have been said about one party and another. However, in order to counter the deluge of material which has been increasing over the years we must ensure that we pass legislation which will stamp out the proliferation of violent and degrading sexual material, especially that which applies to women and children.

Brutality, bestiality, degradation and violence are regarded by us all as abhorrent. We must try to prevent that which will educate or in any way influence people to perform violent acts or to accept them in a human and decent society. We are, therefore, in agreement with those steps which will move in that direction.

We must ensure that in doing this we do not create legislation which achieves the goal we want while bringing those goals into disrepute and making the Bill itself an objection.

That is the task of every Member of the House of Commons. It is not merely the goal of the Opposition, although it is certainly our special role to study legislation and pick it apart in an effort to ensure that it is good legislation. There are parts of this Bill which concern librarians and the artistic community. There are parts of the Bill that concern churches and religious leaders. They are not happy with aspects of this Bill. It is their responsibility to communicate their concerns and make sure that the Bill is good. Personally, I must call attention to the clause which deals with the subject of erotica. Clause 1 of the Bill states:

> 'erotica' means any visual matter a dominant characteristic of which is the depiction, in a sexual context or for the purpose of the sexual stimulation of the viewer . . .

• (1650)

It then lists certain parts of the anatomy.

Clause 159.7 then states:

> Every person who displays any erotica in a way that is visible to a member of the public in a public place, unless the public must, in order to see the erotica, pass a prominent warning notice advising of the nature of the display therein or unless the erotica is hidden by a barrier or is covered by an opaque wrapper, is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

It is provisions such as these which concern the libraries, the religious community and the artistic community. They ask whether we are dealing with those things such as hard core pornography that we want to stop, or also including in the Bill such an omnibus list of concerns that it will create a backlash and a loss of respect for this legislation.

I hope the committee will examine this Bill very carefully and make sure that the objectives I have outlined will be achieved and, at the same time, eliminate those concerns so that, by being so puritanical or unenforcible in its nature, this Bill will not earn derision rather than respect.

We all know the dangerous results of the Bill that was passed in the name of temperance. That Bill which in effect imposed prohibition did not cease the use of alcohol as hoped, or bring about temperance in alcohol, but stimulated its use in the United States far beyond anything it had been before. That Bill brought about waves of crime, gang wars, smuggling and tax evasion. That Bill which was supposed to bring temperance left in its wake a whole way of life that was violent. It brought about total disrespect for the law. That is certainly what we must avoid. We must not pass legislation that will bring about such a backlash from the general public that it will be merely regarded as a joke.

We must deal with this matter with respect and great care. For example, we must recognize that 5 per cent or less of the pornographic materials to which we all object is created here in Canada. Over 95 per cent of it is created in the United States or transshipped through the United States. When we consider free trade, let us hope that this will not be more of the free trade that we want. I hope we will remember that not all blessings come from the south when we think of what it means to have open borders.

We also must consider whose responsibility it is to prove someone's innocence or guilt. The committee must carefully consider the question of responsibility for proving whether or not this law has been contravened. There must be due process and respect for the ancient rule and view of British common law that a person is innocent until proven guilty. We must not create a situation in which it is up to the artist, for example, to prove his or her innocence. I do not know that anyone could regard themselves as artists and feel free in any society if they were afraid there would be laws in this country making one guilty until proven innocent.

I hope the House will make a radical examination of these matters when the Bill goes to committee, to ensure that mistakes are not made again.

I refer to Bill C-114 which was known as the Crosbie Bill. The Government presented this Bill to the House for passage. However, not only did the Opposition and many people throughout the country object to the Bill, Members of the Government benches, in private and in caucus, urged that the Bill not be passed because it was bad legislation.

It is not necessarily correct that the Government has taken positive action simply because it has brought forward a Bill to finally deal with a subject. If the Government is so incompetent in drafting a bill to deal with a particular problem that it cannot get the support of its own benches, obviously it had better take a hard look at this Bill.

There are many people who definitely want to stamp out every form of hard core pornography, which is evil, and at the same time want to make sure that our freedom of speech is maintained. Our artists must not feel that they live in a country where they cannot create a society that will bring about sensitivity and respect for the love of people and their relationships. We must ensure that that legislation does not attack love, sexuality or the artistic depiction of love in some way.

I believe the committee should analyse some present forms of art that are acceptable to Canadians to see whether this Bill will pass the test. Let the committee be absolutely sure that the language will eliminate what we want while respecting the values of our society, especially for education.

Let us also be sure that our children will be educated safely and adequately due to the dangers of AIDS, sexual diseases and so on. We must pass legislation that does not merely supply a platform for someone to make a point. Let us have legislation that is worded in a way that good educational material for children about sexual behaviour, sexual relationships and explanations will not be ruled out and make us in the House of Commons look absurd.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap) moved that Bill C-268, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act (non-listed electors), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Madam Speaker, I would like to begin my comments by suggesting that often many Canadians take our democratic privileges for granted. When one considers the turn-out in federal, provincial, regional and local elections, one is somewhat disappointed by the relatively small turn-out which would indicate that many Canadians simply do not take the opportunities presented to them to cast their ballots for the candidates of their choice. We have been reminded of the precious value of what we have in Canada, what we have known for many decades, by the recent developments in Haiti. For years and years its people have not had an opportunity to express their views of those who would govern them. The attempt at a return to democracy in Haiti has resulted in terrible bloodshed and harassment of voters by armed thugs and we have seen the democratic process which was attempting to reawaken in Haiti set back for some time.

It is interesting, when we consider that the United Nations identifies about 165 countries in the world, how many of these countries actually practice a democratic way of government as we do in Canada. How many of these countries actually hold free and open elections based on the principle of universality and on the right of an election to be called regularly so that the people of these countries have an opportunity to evaluate those who govern them and decide whether they want to change or continue with the status quo? Out of those 165 countries, less than 30 countries actually practice a democratic system as we know it in Canada. That really brings home to us just how precious is our democratic way of life.

Today's Private Members' Bill is really two-fold. It recognizes this precious way of government in our country, and it offers three changes to the way people cast their votes so as to make our system perhaps more equitable and able to provide a fair opportunity to more electors.

I want to begin by reminding Members that in the last federal election, at the last minute, so to speak, 510,000 people had their names added to the voters' list. This gives us an idea of how accurate and thorough the normal procedure is for assembling those voters' lists. For one reason or another nearly one-half a million Canadians found themselves off that list and had to take steps at the last minute to have their names placed on the voters' list, either successfully or unsuccessfully.

This modest Bill attempts to do three things. It attempts, first, to allow urban voters to be sworn in and be able to vote on election day. This is a privilege, of course, that we have had in rural Canada virtually from the very beginning because in times past it was recognized that as high as 80 per cent of the residents in Canada were rural dwellers, and the assumption was that it would be difficult to find everyone at home, or to make the necessary calls to place everyone on the voters' list. In order to provide a sense of fairness, on election day, if one was living in what was designated as rural Canada, one could be sworn in, have one's name placed on the voters' list and be able to place one's ballot. Such is not the case in urban Canada. With more than 80 per cent of Canadians living in urban centres, it is time, I feel, that that same opportunity be offered to urban voters.

I suppose in sociological terms, one can make the case that the modern city often makes it difficult to enumerate voters because of the transient nature of the population. People are regularly moving, particularly in some parts of our cities, and I am thinking primarily of those living in rented accommodation. There are incredibly high levels of transition with apartment dwellers. I know from talking to some of my colleagues in the House of Commons that there is 100 per cent turnover from one election to another for a lion's share of their constituents which indicates the rather transitory nature of many of our voters.

The days when everyone knew their neighbours and could offer suggestions and assistance to help urban voters get on the election rolls are unfortunately passed for many Canadians who now live in virtual anonymity. They do not even know the person in the next apartment, in the next condominium or, in many cases, in the next house. In sociological terms one could make the case that the same opportunity ought to be offered to those living in our urban areas as traditionally provided to those living in the rural areas.

A second provision in the Bill allows candidates and canvassers to have entry to apartment buildings, condominiums or hotels which have in place a "no soliciting" policy. I recognize that a number of provinces through various pieces of legislation, usually respecting the Landlord and Tenants Act, provide this opportunity and in a sense prohibit owners of apartment blocks, hotels and condominiums from stopping canvassers and candidates from entering buildings to go door to door in order to offer the traditional presentations that we find during a federal election campaign. However, there are some provinces where this provision does not exist and I feel that because of the federal Government's constitutional control over the electoral process, it would make sense to complement what some provincial legislators have already done in the past, and that is to provide this access. I think in the tradition of the federal electoral process, it ought to be part of our Act as well.

I think we have all encountered, and it is actually prohibited by law, harassment of canvassers and candidates from certain apartment blocks where the owner perhaps simply does not like the individual involved or does not want to present any kind of harassment to his or her renters or those staying in the apartment, hotel or condo. This would simply make it impossible for one to deny the access of a candidate or canvasser to that particular building.

Although I do not see this as a significant problem, I think we have all encountered it, this would simply set the record straight so that every Canadian, regardless of where they live in a community, will have access to canvassers or to candidates. This information, of course, is necessary. We assume that in the democratic process, the voter will cast his or her ballot as a result of informed decision making. That requires them to have access to canvassers and access to candidates. It is also important for the canvasser or candidate to have access to all of the voters for their files and to complete their information and, of course, to present themselves face to face with the person who will eventually be casting the ballot. It is an attempt at fairness in order that all Canadians, regardless of where they live, will have access to that same level of information.

The last part of the Bill is to allow travellers and students who are temporarily resident outside of Canada to vote in federal elections. Canadians are among the most travelled people in the world. On a per capita basis we are the world's travellers. In the summertime Canadians are well known for travelling abroad. During the cold winter months the mass exodus into the sun belt is now a Canadian phenomenon. If an election is called in the summer, as was the last federal election, or in the depths of winter, large numbers of Canadian travellers will be outside the country, to say nothing of the students involved.

One of the most positive aspects of our student population is the increasing numbers of Canadian students, young and not so young, who are taking the opportunity to pursue their studies outside of Canada, to spend a year or two at other institutions of higher learning and take advantage of opportunities in schools and institutions abroad. We ought to take steps in order that we do not deny those people the opportunity to cast a ballot on election day.

In the Canada Elections Act steps have been taken to provide that opportunity to those serving in the Armed Forces, and those working abroad in External Affairs offices. They are able to register and cast their ballots in a federal election. This Bill suggests that the same opportunity ought to be provided to Canadians who can swear their residency in Canada, indicate and demonstrate that they are citizens of the country, and if they are students studying abroad or Canadians who are travelling abroad, that they will not be disenfranchised or lose their right to cast their ballot in a federal election.

In a nutshell, that is what Bill C-268 is all about. It is an attempt to remedy three problem areas. As parliamentarians those areas are not particularly new to us. On a number of occasions the Chief Electoral Officer of Canada has brought these and many other problems to the attention of parliamentarians. When one considers that hopefully a winter election is in the offing, the Government will see fit to call an election on the free trade, and that will mean a winter election when a lot of Canadians are outside of the country and a lot of students will be caught outside the country.

Mr. Blenkarn: Which winter?

Mr. Riis: I hear that other Members are listening. If it is not a winter election, possibly it will be a summer election. But at whatever time, there will be large numbers of Canadians caught outside of the country and denied the right to cast their ballot.

I hope that Hon. Members will see fit to send this Bill to a legislative committee for thorough examination and study. Hopefully it will be passed at the following sitting, and we can get on with removing some of those more obvious inequalities and injustices when it comes to casting our votes in a federal election.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I think that the House should be indebted to the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) for bringing this Bill to the House. It is an important Bill. It deals with issues that the House must from time to time deal with, and that is the Canada Elections Act. As the Hon. Member pointed out, there will be an election one day. We would not want to have that election without adding four people to the representation from British Columbia in this House. I am surprised that the Member pointed to a winter election. Any election would have to be after there was an opportunity for a representation to the extent of the way it ought to be bearing in mind the last census.

I wish to address the issue in Clause 2 of the Bill which deals with the question of canvassers for a candidate or the candidate himself being able to enter rented or condominium premises. The Bill also mentions hotels. I point out to the House, and my friend, that in a number of provinces that right has already been given. The reason it is given is that under our Constitution the provinces are responsible for the property and civil rights in the province. The provinces of Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and British Columbia have provided that not only in provincial elections or municipal elections which are within the purview of the province, but also in federal elections, candidates and canvassers are entitled to enter and bring forth the necessary messages to let people know that an election is on, and present their candidate's viewpoint. That is a very important right.

Obviously, apartment houses are private places. To give someone the right to break in or enter private premises and wander the corridors and do the things that candidates or canvassers do in an election, knock on doors and disturb people and ask for a vote, to some extent is interfering with privacy. But it is an important interference of privacy. I think the House would agree that it is important.

The House would also agree that perhaps we do not have the right constitutionally to insist in the Canada Elections Act that we can break down the privacy of private property, as that property is within the jurisdictional confines of the provinces.

If, in bringing this Bill to committee, we find that we cannot go ahead with Clause 2, perhaps we can use the pressure of the House to persuade the provinces of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, and Alberta to extend the rights that other provinces have given people who are campaigning in federal elections.

I wish to point out that the Province of Alberta extends that permission to people who are campaigning in provincial elections, but not in federal elections. It would not be much of an extension to extend the benefit for federal elections.

The question of whether canvassers should be able to enter hotels is another matter that ought to be looked at very closely, and if people in hotels should even be enumerated. Normally hotels are places where people stay for a short period of time. There are certain requirements of being resident at the time an election is called, and actually being resident in the hotel and not just temporarily staying there. The question boils down to how is a hotel defined. Perhaps the Bill is deficient in that definition. Surely, it is not the right to enter any hotel. Surely, it is not the right to enter the Westin Hotel and wander up and down the halls knocking on every door and saying, "I want your vote". That hotel is there for people who come to this city to do business, and it is not a residential hotel where people stay week after week or month after month and use it as their permanent residence from which they will vote. There must be some definition work done on this Bill, or perhaps the word "hotel" removed from the Bill. Certainly, the committee can do that.

I do not wish to take up a great deal of time on the matter. I think it is good that the Hon. Member has brought the Bill to the House.

• (1720)

Turning to the section dealing with the special voting right, I think that matter has been before the House previously. Certainly it has been brought to the attention of the House by people studying the Canada Elections Act. Of course the question is: What about people travelling abroad or who are only temporarily abroad? It seems that to extend the voting ability to people who are just temporarily abroad would be most improper and most difficult. Perhaps proxy voting systems might better solve the problem. However, to have some provision where people could register their vote with an embassy or consulate would seem to be very difficult, particularly people who are away from the country on holiday. Clearly people who are away on a long-term stay, temporarily no longer resident in Canada or staying outside Canada on a posting, ought to be given some special right to vote in our elections.

Having made those few comments, I commend the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap on a good Bill. I hope that it will go on to committee.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Madam Speaker, I would like to join the previous speaker in thanking the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), since the Bill is in his name, for introducing this Bill on October 6, which means we now have an opportunity to consider his Bill this evening.

Madam Speaker, we know it is only a matter of time, and I hope it will be very soon, before the Government tables Bill C-79, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act and other Acts in relation thereto. First reading was on June 30, 1987, and I think the Government will be bringing in the Bill for second reading very shortly. I intend to take a very active interest in the proceedings when we consider this Bill.

Meanwhile, the Hon. Member has submitted a number of proposals to the House, and at first glance,—and with my experience of election campaigns, both my own and the campaigns of others, which should total about 100, with at least eight of my own—I believe there are a number of items here to which we can say yes immediately. I hope that if we do not reach some kind of agreement this evening, we will be able to reconsider the Hon. Member's suggestions when the Government brings in its own Bill very shortly.

I agree it is very annoying when you get people who arrive at the polling station on election day who, the day before, suddenly realized they were not on the voters' list. I must admit it is very frustrating, both for the elector and often for the political organizations who urged these people to get out and vote during the election campaign. But there is also the question whether this has to be left until the very last day, until election day.

It works all right in small urban centres and in rural areas. Then there is no problem. However, in our cities, many people would think twice about giving this kind of last chance to someone who comes in under the wire, at a time when everybody is busy processing hundreds of voters. Someone will have to decide who is and who is not a voter and swear them in. I think that would unduly delay the process and would also discourage some electors who are already on the list. However, I do feel positive about this proposal.

I know that Bill C-79, the Bill the Government intends to table very shortly, contains a reference to this problem, since so far, we can add electors to the list up to the seventeenth day before the election. I believe the Government is proposing in

Bill C-79 to extend the revision period until the 12th day, including a specific clause that provides for the registration of a voter. That is in Bill C-79. Now, with this Bill, we could . . . and I am all for it, not that I am against what the Hon. Member is offering us, but the Government goes so far as saying that until three days before, that is until the Friday before the vote, it will be possible to go to the office of the returning officer in order to add to the electoral list the name of the people who might have been left out during the revision and who might come up at the last minute.

So I think the Hon. Member, who is a reasonable gentleman, will be interested to discuss it further when we deal with Bill C-79, an act to amend the Canada Elections Act and other acts in relation thereto.

To this day, I am satisfied that there is at least a disposition to act. I wanted to put forward an amendment myself but there we have a proposal by the Government to extend the period until Friday. That is a considerable improvement, especially for people who live in urban areas. Because my colleagues and I, during the electoral campaign, we keep finding people who are not on the list and it is very frustating not to be able to have them added. At least, we know that we will be able to have them added to the list up until the Friday before the election. So whether it is the Friday before or the very same day, I believe there is not much difference between what the Hon. Member is proposing, what we have been requesting for a long time and what should be done. There will be a possibility when the day comes to combine all the various proposals.

The second proposal of the Hon. Member would also be a source of difficulty as some building owners forbid any entry because the tenants are senior citizens, people who are afraid of seeing so many visitors circulate in their building, as the previous speaker pointed out. There also, I am rather inclined to agree with my colleague. However, I would like us to be able to examine all implications very carefully.

We all know what it means and how difficult it is to visit certain large apartment buildings in Montreal, Toronto or Vancouver. There could be twelve candidates coming once, twice or three times. This could mean up to thirty-six visits by people, either by themselves or with others, to campaign in a building. There are problems, but it is always possible to find solutions. For my part, I am an optimist. We can look at all that later on when we examine the legislation which the Government should bring back very soon. The Hon. Member is certainly better informed than I am about that as he is the House Leader of his party. I imagine, however, that Bill C-79 will be referred to a committee in the near future. If this Bill does not pass today, I hope that he will be in the House then to go over all his proposals.

Therefore, there are no major objections except for the fact that this will create difficulties. We shall have to look at a way to appease the fears that many people may have in seeing all kinds of visitors in their buildings, especially in the major centres, where people have a greater tendency to be scared. I do not blame them. It is a major problem in the downtown areas where there are big buildings in which no strangers are admitted. But how can we defend democracy if we cannot talk to people? It would be appropriate to have a lengthy debate on this issue.

The third proposal of the Hon. Member, the last one, after which I shall sit down and let others speak as provided by our rules, aims at allowing travellers and students who are temporarily residing abroad to vote in a general election, just like the members of the Canadian Armed Forces and public servents posted are allowed to do.

However, I forsee problems in this regard also. For twenty years, we have been looking at ways to make it possible for the greatest number of Canadians to vote. How can we do that? Members of the Armed Forces are registered annually, and so are public servants on foreign postings, but it would be difficult to do the same for students and travellers.

I am certain that our discussions will be lengthy when the Government Bill is being considered. In fact, the Bill includes a whole section on the right to vote of others than the military and public servants. This raises enormous difficulties. The Hon. Member is aware of that. Where will we stop? Students in Canada, that's understandable. Students abroad, that's also understandable, but is their status permanent? We always have much sympathy for students. As for Canadian citizens travelling abroad, we do not know. Once you open the door in the case of travellers, the next time you probably would want to open it for . . . As a matter of fact, a provision in the Government's Bill makes it possible to extend the right to vote to people temporarily residing outside Canada without losing their citizenship. But as you know, their situation is similar to that of people coming to Ottawa to work for a while. If you keep talking long enough about the people who are in Ottawa on a temporary basis, you suddenly realize that they are here on a permanent basis. This will create difficulties.

I know that in the Bill introduced by the Government, it is difficult to decide when to say yes or no? Personally, I have no final opinion on this for reasons which I will explain when we deal with this Bill. I prefer not to indicate my final opinion, because I intend to be very actively involved when the House considers Bill C-79. The reason I wanted to speak to this Bill was to show the difficulty we will have to face, but there is no doubt that it will be possible to follow through with our colleague's number one proposal.

As far as the second proposal is concerned, we will have to decide how we can assure the safety of people living in a building while carrying out our duties during an election campaign in a democratic society. I share the concern of my Hon. friend on this.

As to the third proposal, we will consider it more thoroughly soon, because it represents something which I feel is new, complex, but we want to extend the right to vote to the greatest number of Canadians. With his proposal, therefore, our Hon. friend has given us food for thought.

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) is tabling today Bill C-268 to amend the Elections Act in order that we may have a greater number of registered voters on the voters lists during an election. First, I must commend him for his work because I believe there is a genuine problem there. Whenever there is an election and an enumeration is made, there is always a number of persons—that may be quite high in some cases—whose names do not appear on the voters list. This may be due to two things: first, people are not enumerated, either because they are not home when the enumerators call and their names cannot be entered. Second, during the revision process names are omitted from the list. And in order of course for a voter to have his or her name on the list, he or she must meet that requirement.

Therefore, Madam Speaker, the Canadian Government in Bill C-79, an Act to reform the Elections Act, indeed had that in mind and provided for a mechanism to revise voters lists so that a greater number of persons may have their names entered, and there is a mechanism as my colleague from Saint-Denis (Mr. Prudhomme) stated earlier, for unregistered people to have their names added to the lists. But there is another one also, for those whose names were written down but were omitted from the list itself.

On voting day, those people can apply to the electoral officer to have their names entered on the voters lists because they were omitted. They must of course submit evidence of having been enumerated. That is the main requirement. If they cannot submit such evidence, of course, they are not listed but if they can, they may then go back, with a permission or a chit from the electoral officer, to their own polling stations in order to register and exercise their most basic right.

Now, let us turn to the way the Bill now before us is submitted, Madam Speaker, and I will deal with Clause 1 only which provides that a person whose name does not appear on the voters list could do so, if this Bill is passed, provided he or she is vouched for by a voter whose name appears on the voters list, who is known there and who can testify to the identity of that person whose name is not on the voters list. I can see some danger in that. The danger might be minimal in rural constituencies, but in urban areas where there may be as many as 300 polls in the same riding a person resorting to that principle could make arrangements with other people in various polling stations and vote about ten times on the same day.

Madam Speaker, I can still remember—and I am sure you do as well—the way elections used to be held in the old days in the great Province of Quebec where they would use that same principle: a person was substituted for another of one's own choice and asked to vote. That happened time and time again. Thank God we had election legislation to do away with that kind of things. But if we follow clause 1 of Bill C-268 to the letter, I have the impression we will go back in time and once again defeat the purpose. I do not think we can afford to do that in 1987.

I believe the basic problem as such is real and as the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) said earlier, we will have to try, at the second-reading and committee stages of Bill C-79, to foresee everything so that will never happen again. I know it is not easy. I know there are cases, as considered by the Hon. Member in his bill, where people cannot be contacted in apartment buildings, hotels, for instance. That is obvious. But could there be a mechanism flexible enough so that all those people could really be contacted and enumerated? That is what we will have to do.

The Hon. Member alluded earlier to the possibility of a winter election on free trade. I must tell him that in an election campaign on free trade people will be so eager to come and vote for it that there will be much fewer names missing on electoral lists.

[English]

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to speak to Bill C-268, an Act to amend the Elections Act presented by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). Having recently experienced a by-election, I think the problems addressed in this Bill are more apropos for me than others. There are serious problems which I personally have experienced.

Just subsequent to the by-election, I received a number of phone calls and communications from constituents most concerned because, in their words, they were disenfranchised. I quote briefly from one of my constituent's letters which reads in part:

> I was born in Canada and have lived here all my life. For the past six years I have been a resident of the Yukon Territory residing at the same address. I have voted in previous federal and territorial elections in Whitehorse. When residents of the territory were enumerated, apparently the whole apartment block I lived in was missed.

When this person phoned the returning officer it was too late to register and so she could not vote. A number of other people raised the same question.

It is extremely important to support this Bill. I cannot speak so much for the provinces, but in the Yukon territory the issues which my colleague addresses in his Bill are already contained in our Territorial Elections Act, for example, being able to be sworn in at the polls. In a territorial election one can be sworn in at the polls, as is being proposed in Bill C-268. In the past federal election this was not possible. This is confusing because the general public will not make these distinctions. People assume election procedures are similar.

Because one could be sworn in at rural areas but could not be sworn in at Whitehorse, there was a lot of anger, confusion and frustration during the recent by-election because people thought they could be sworn in at the polls. This Bill will go a long way to putting consistency into the regulations as to who can and who cannot vote. In many ways, Whitehorse is a rural area to many people. In our riding many people work out of town, particularly in the summer.

Although the previous speaker said the proposed amendments would address this problem because you could be registered on the Friday previous to the election, I am afraid I cannot agree. For example, I have seen many construction workers and highway workers who live in lodges out of town and do not even come into town until perhaps the Sunday prior to election when their employer has allowed them some time off. It is quite possible that they would be left off the lists. The amendment proposed would not address that issue. I do not believe this is strictly a regional problem. I am sure many people in many Canadian towns work outside of those towns and simply are not there to be registered at enumeration time.

This Bill rightly addresses a very serious problem for many people. I realize, as the previous speaker said, that there are always problems of abuse. There are those problems the way it is now. An enumerator comes to your home and you can say you are John Smith, I suppose. Yet we rely on the honesty and integrity of our citizens to make the system work. It will not work if we do not operate from that assumption. Therefore I believe this Bill will not occasion any further abuses but will in fact address a very serious problem of disenfranchisement. I feel very seriously about this issue, having witnessed many of the problems this summer, and harmonizing territorial and provincial legislation with federal legislation simply makes good sense.

On the second issue of access to condominium apartment buildings and hotels, I recognize there are some problems with that. However, again in territorial legislation at least, and I understand it is in the legislation of many provinces, it is possible to enter apartment buildings and so on for this purpose. Generally speaking, the person entering the building must have a letter to show that they are legitimate workers for the Party or the candidate. I appreciate that this can cause some concern but if everyone entering the building has the proper documentation, I do not see it as a great problem. Again, this conforms with existing territorial and in many cases provincial legislation which allows entry to apartment buildings or condominiums during elections.

As to the question of hotels, I quite agree that going to a hotel down the street from this House may not be necessary in order to enumerate and canvass. Yet in many areas of Canada, and I suggest many urban areas, certainly in my own area, many people reside in hotels. On every enumeration list numerous people appear as permanent residents of a hotel. That is not unusual. For a variety of reasons people choose to live as permanent residents of hotels. I do not think one can make a sweeping statement about hotels being a non-legitimate residence for election purposes. It is a residence for many people in my riding and I believe in other ridings in which I have canvassed and worked for other political candidates.

With respect to those two issues, in particular that of trying to bring about consistency between territorial, provincial, and federal legislation so that people understand what they can and cannot do with respect to swearing in at the polls and access to apartment buildings, I think they are very important and would lead to greater democratization of the system.

As to the third issue, that of allowing overseas visitors and students to register to vote, I presume at an embassy, again I cannot see that as particularly contentious. Obviously if you are abroad you must have legitimate documents as a Canadian citizen, some travel documents, and so on. It seems to me it is not particularly hard for such a person to register abroad and vote.

In conclusion, I very strongly support the points made in this Bill. It is very important that it receive support and go forward because the issues it addresses will unfortunately not be addressed, at least at this point, by the amendments in Bill C-79.

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Madam Speaker, like other speakers in this debate, I want to support the intent of the Bill which I think will redress serious problems affecting many electors in our country.

I think of the provision in Section 2(89)(1) as affirming the rights of the elector rather than giving any advantage to the candidate or the Party or the campaign worker. It affirms the right of the tenant in the apartment, the owner of a condominium, or a permanent long-term resident in a hotel or apartment hotel to have access to the candidates among whom he or she must select. That right has been denied in many parts of this country on the assumption that if you are living in an apartment, condominium or hotel you somehow do not have a residence. There is an assumption in our country that unless you own a house, you do not really have a home.

Increasingly we find that people make their homes in the kinds of domiciles to which this legislation refers. I raised my children in a house. We now live in an apartment. I have owned a condominium. They are all great, but the assumption that a house is what everyone must have is no longer viable. Different kinds of accommodation suit different kinds of people at different stages in their lives. At all stages of their lives, regardless of condition or circumstances, they should have an equal right to participate in democracy.

Thank God we live in a country where voting does not put us at risk. I certainly want to endorse what the Hon. Member said in introducing his Bill, that to contrast the deplorable and savage situation in Haiti with the rights we have in this country is to make a statement which will drive home to everyone the great privileges we have in a democracy like Canada. However, always we have to make the system work more effectively. I believe that is the intent here and I hope the Bill will have an opportunity to be considered and find its way into legislation, particularly with reference to the provision that will extend the right of people travelling or living temporarily abroad to have an opportunity to demonstrate that they are still Canadian citizens.

Earlier today I made reference to some of the volunteer workers I met just last week in countries of Central America. They had been there perhaps one year, five years or 25 years and were still Canadian citizens. They prize their citizenship. They bring honour to Canada. I have to wonder why we should not extend the provisions of this amendment to include those people who are working abroad for the objectives of the Canadian people and Canada in another part of the world. I am thinking of the clergy, social workers, aid workers, all of whom stay out of this country for a long time. Do they cease to be Canadians? I was privileged to meet so many of them, young, old, middle-aged, male and female, of different religions and political ideologies, but all with two things in common: Their dedication to the good of the human race, and their love for their native land. I hope that at some point in committee study and further examination of this legislation, it will be possible to provide for them.

When I read the explanatory note with regard to Clause 3 of this Bill which indicates that this provision would allow travellers and students temporarily resident outside Canada to vote in general elections, I thought that there ought to be some provision for the teacher as well as the student. There are many people who are temporarily outside this country as teachers. There are junior faculty members at colleges and universities in other countries who intend to come back here when there is an opportunity for a long-term teaching position. Must they lose the right to vote?

I hope there will be an opportunity for us to consider the many Canadians who go out of this country for different periods of time in order to practise their professions, take employment, serve in service organizations or whatever, who have a great love for their country and a great sense of belonging which they can manifest most effectively by casting their vote.

I want to take that a step further, namely, to provide for the Canadian traveller. I like very much the way in which this legislation refers to those travelling abroad because more and more Canadians today have the opportunity to do just that. I think of people who take early retirement, who have perhaps put away a little money during their working years with the hope of taking a long-postponed trip. They may find that their trip takes place just at the time when an election has been called.

I once checked into the dating of elections and found that elections have been held in this country in every one of the 12 months. There is no reason to assume that an election will not be held in any particular season. Must people who are fulfilling a perfectly legitimate and admirable desire of taking a long trip lose their vote?

I can recall being in a position where I would have lost my vote but for the provision of an advance poll. However, a person who is away on an extended trip of the kind I described when the advance polls are held has no opportunity to vote. I am pleased, therefore, to join the Hon. Member who introduced this legislation in pleading that there be some recognition of this need.

In conclusion, this Bill points out the great opportunity of Members of this House. There are so many human needs which, to use the colloquialism, fall between the cracks. There are needs which no government Department or Minister has thought of, needs which have not found their way into the policy statement or election platform of any Party. However, they are important needs. It is then up to the private Member to recognize them and seek redress of them in legislation which he or she can introduce. Such a Bill as that has been brought before us today. I know that in principle it receives the general approbation of this House. I trust that at some time it will find its way into the statutes of the country.

Mr. Morrissey Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to join in debate on Bill C-268, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act. This Bill makes a number of interesting suggestions on how we might improve the framework and procedures for voting in federal elections. It is, indeed, a timely subject.

The Government has taken a close look at the Elections Act, taking into account various recommendations made by the Chief Electoral Officer in his annual reports, recommendations made in the past by Members of this House, particularly those on the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure, and recommendations based on the experience of the last general election. The Government has also suggested changes to bring the Act into line with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

There is an overlap between some of the proposals made by the Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) and amendments which the Government is proposing to make to the Canada Elections Act through Bill C-79. One example of this is contained in Clause 3 of Bill C-268 which we are presently debating. As Members know, the present Canada Elections Act provides the means for people in the Armed Forces and the public service and their dependants who live abroad to vote under special voting rules.

The Member who sponsored this Bill now suggests in Clause 3 of the Bill that this category of voters be broadened to include Canadians who are travelling abroad or living temporarily outside Canada at the time of a federal election. He goes on to suggest that these Canadians should use the same voting mechanism as that which is now in place for the Armed Forces, public servants, and their dependants who live abroad. I can say that I support this proposal in principle, although not in detail. In principle it is consistent with reforms proposed by the Government in Bill C-79.

The issue of overseas voting has a long history. The Government's White Paper on election law reform points out, for example, that a recommendation to extend the franchise to Canadian citizens living abroad for voting in general elections was made by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections as long ago as June 30, 1981, and again on June 26, 1984.

The Government announced its approval of the extension of the franchise to overseas voters in the White Paper. Further, it provided detailed proposals for a complete revision of the special voting rules contained in Schedule II of the Canada Elections Act. It is these amendments, with some additions, which are contained in Bill C-79.

The proposal made by the Member for Kamloops-Shuswap for extending the right to vote to more Canadians abroad is a good one, but it is not complete. For example, there is no provision to indicate how voters already abroad would make a statement of ordinary residence to indicate where their vote should be assigned. This step is now done automatically for Armed Forces and public service personnel and their dependants living abroad.

Under the present special voting rules the small number of Canadians now eligible to vote abroad do so at their base if they are in the Armed Forces, or at their respective unit or post if they are diplomats or other public servants living abroad.

This special voting procedure is adequate for the present population of Canadian voters abroad. In fact, under Bill C-79 it will be continued for Canadian Forces personnel overseas. However, the administrative difficulty of handling the much larger population of Canadian voters abroad who will soon be enfranchised through the present voting system would be too great.

According to estimates by the Department of External Affairs the number of Canadians residing abroad in 1983-84 was approximately 2.3 million. That represents almost 10 per cent of Canada's population. It is for this reason that a new system of voting by mailed ballot is proposed to replace the present special voting rules for all Canadians other than Canadian Forces personnel living outside of Canada.

Canadians will be eligible to register for voting abroad up to 10 days following the issue of the writ under the proposed Bill C-79. The voters' lists for Canadians abroad will then be closed to ensure that there is ample time for the sending and return of mailed ballots. To accommodate the procedure of mailed ballots there will be a longer voting period provided to overseas voters.

• (1800)

In essence, I think Bill C-268 is unnecessary because Bill C-79 will deal with what the Hon. Member has in mind.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1), the order is dropped from the Order Paper.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

IMMIGRATION—SENATE COMMITTEE'S REPORT ON TERRORISM

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Madam Speaker, during this past summer I had a visit to my constituency office from a delegation representing the survivors of the Air-India crash that occurred over two years ago. They wanted to point out to me their concerns about the fact that under our current immigration laws they believed it was easy for known terrorists and potential terrorists to enter Canada and cause us problems.

That was an understandable concern on their part, bearing in mind the fact that the Air-India crash had occurred years ago now and, in spite of at least two investigations and an ongoing investigation by the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, no one has been convicted of the bombing of that aircraft, no one has been arrested or even charged in connection with the bombing of that aircraft. Therefore, the feelings of the survivors of that Air-India crash are certainly understandable.

They are not the only ones who expressed their concerns to me about immigration and refugee laws and procedures with respect to terrorists and potential terrorists. Many other people expressed those same concerns to me last summer. In fact, one of my good friends, a leader of the Italian community in Toronto, Sabastiano di Lorenzo, expressed those same concerns. In fact, on the day before Parliament was recalled for its emergency session, he indicated to me that he expected to see and hear me speaking out on this issue on his behalf and on behalf of all his friends and neighbours who felt the same way.

That is also not surprising in view of the fact that at that time 174 people had just landed on the coast of Nova Scotia. Many of them did not have any identification papers and there was evidence that those who apparently had identification papers at one time destroyed them when they landed. Therefore, there was a concern growing out of that situation.

Furthermore, the concern was also being expressed because of a report that was released at that time. It was the report of the Senate Special Committee on Terrorism and public safety. That report, which was released in July of this year, outlined the problem of international terrorism and pointed out that in Canada between 1960 and 1985 there were some 351 acts or threats of violence by terrorist groups in Canada against Canadian targets. At the same time, between those years 1960, and 1985, there were another 48 acts or threats of violence by terrorist groups in Canada against other countries.

The report went on, as you will remember, Madam Speaker, to outline the legal framework in which we operate with respect to terrorists. It outlined the organization which was in place to try to deal with terrorists. It had some comments on the role the media should be playing with respect to terrorists and, on top of that, it dealt at considerable length with the whole issue of our Immigration Act, procedures and policies. It expressed the concern that those policies had been developed prior to the rise of international terrorists. It expressed concern as well that the system was now buckling under the weight of the numbers of people coming to this country, perhaps as applicants for landed immigrant status, perhaps as refugee claimants, or perhaps just as visitors. It pointed out that in 1986 some 80 million people entered Canada and there was in fact no way to identify these people properly, block the entry of terrorists, detain them or deport them.

Since that time we have had Bill C-84 and Bill C-55. I see that the Parliamentary Secretary is here tonight and I would like to ask him if those two Bills meet the recommendations of the Senate Committee on Terrorism. If they do meet those recommendations, why is the Senate holding up the passage of those two Bills? If in fact they have met the exact recommendations the Senate made to the people of Canada with respect to immigration procedures dealing with terrorists and potential terrorists entering this country, why is it holding up the passage of those Bills?

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure to be back in the House and to respond to the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway). I would like to give a little history. First, let me deal with the Air-India situation. Investigations are proceeding. At the point in which evidence is gathered that will enable prosecution, I think the Hon. Member can rest assured that the Government will move as quickly and thoroughly as possible to do what can be done to right that very grievous wrong which was perpetrated on so many innocent people.

The Hon. Member may or may not realize that in June of 1986 the House of Commons committee on immigration presented a unanimous all-Party report which certainly expressed our concern about the security issue. It was a departmental report that was subsequently caused to be put together interdepartmentally really, to look at the security concerns related to immigration. The Senate in the meantime conducted its investigation into the issue of terrorism.

The two reports have really led to the two pieces of legislation, at least in part. The Government introduced in May of 1987—which was really rather quick for the Government; it was about 10 months time—Bill C-55, which dealt with part of the problem that had surfaced to that point. In August, after releasing the Senate report, the Government responded very quickly indeed with a piece of legislation tabled in the House shortly after we came back on August 11. Those Bills are in the Senate.

The Hon. Member asked why they are not proceeding quickly through the Senate. I think he might have to ask the Senators. Certainly, Members of the House, the elected people of this country, have expressed their concern not only with the issues which are dealt with in the two pieces of legislation, but we have also had the ruling of the Speaker that the matters are urgent. Time is going on. Months are passing in the other place and so far it has not returned the Bills or approved the Bills.

The problem which was identified through both investigations had many facets and features to it, but today, under current legislation, until the Act is changed, we have no assurance that we can in fact detain people whose identities are unknown or who are suspected of being terrorists. The thrust of the two Bills would give the Government the powers to do that, always safeguarding the rights of the individual in terms of the provision of council, moving to use the federal court system instead of the CSIS body to make final determination so that it is done under Canadian law.

Much more could be said, Madam Speaker, and perhaps we could have a debate on another day.

HEALTH—ACID RAIN—HEALTH HAZARD QUERY/REQUEST FOR STRICTER POLLUTION EMISSION STANDARDS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Madam Speaker, usually when we talk about the effects of acid rain, we talk about the physical environment and the destruction of lakes, rivers, farms, maple forests, buildings, and monuments in our cities.

Recently I raised a question with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) respecting the health consequences of acid rain. There are basically two types of health consequences. One is the immediate, and those are consequences which are largely in the respiratory system and the effect, for example, on asthmatic children. There have been some studies which show that lung functioning is not as good in children who live in areas with a large amount of acid rain, compared to children who live in areas with very little acid rain. This is certainly cause for concern.

There have been some American studies recently published in the newspapers respecting acid rain pollution killing 4,000 people. There was reference to death rates for different forms of cancer. For example, breast cancer and colon cancer may be affected by acid rain. We do not know the exact numbers for Canada, that is an estimate of 4,000. In the United States there have been estimates of up to 50,000 premature deaths a year. That is very serious.

Incidentally, comparing those rates to tobacco related diseases, 4,000 for Canada is much less than the 35,000 people who die from tobacco related diseases who are directly smokers, but it is a lot more than the people that we have been able to document, which is in the hundreds, who are dying from the indirect consequences. This is a very serious problem, probably affecting a substantial number of people in Canada.

We cannot approve the association of acid rain and health consequences in an experimental fashion, which is in a way similar to the fact that we cannot prove a connection between tobacco smoking and lung cancer or heart disease deaths. It is a statistical association. There will never be more than a statistical association, because morally speaking we could not separate people at birth into groups who will be exposed to acid rain, or tobacco smoke, and people who will not be exposed, or who will be minimally exposed and in years later see what rates of cancer they get. Cancer takes a long time to develop; respiratory ailments usually take some time, although in the case of asthma there may be immediate consequences. It would be unconscionable to do that type of thing, and totally impossible to think about it. So the statistical association must be investigated.

That would help us considerably in our fight for acid rain in the United States. That is where at least half of our fight for acid rain controls has to take place, because half of our acid rain in Canada comes from the United States. American Congressmen and Senators would be much more keen on tough measures if they could see the health consequences, and not only the effects on the environment. Given their legislative programs and the atmosphere in which they work, that would help our American friends who are concerned about the environment and give them useful ammunition in the struggle for good, strong laws and programs.

Unfortunately, that is not what our Government has been doing. I am sorry to say also in the case of the recent conference in Geneva on emissions of nitrogen oxides of various sorts, our Government's representatives took a very complacent attitude indeed. What they asked for was simply not adequate. We need tough emission standards for cars and trucks. There needs to be real reductions. Instead, Canada opted for a freeze which is not to come into effect immediately, but after some years. In the meantime, these pollutants are increasing in quantity. I suspect in our very approach to the question of so-called critical loadings, that the Minister likes to talk about, that in the case of the nitrogen oxides each country would set its critical loads, how much the environment can take and still survive.

I suspect that these amounts have not been estimated correctly. We do not know what are the consequences of these kinds of emissions year after year. We do not know whether the effects in areas where there has already been substantial destruction have been reversed.

The same goes for health consequences which were not considered when the critical load numbers were decided upon. It became a much more political exercise—what can we get the Americans to accept, not what are the health consequences or how can we protect the Canadian natural environment and the health of Canadians?

We need to go a very long way in pressing our case with the Americans. I am sorry that the opportunity in Geneva was not taken for Canada to be a leader in the reduction of emissions. Canada took the same position which the Americans have been taking on acid rain in our bilateral discussions, that is, that the case has not been proven, that we can be complacent, and that we do not have to worry about it.

We have a long way to go to clean up our own act. I urge the Government, when it looks at the issue of critical loads, to consider the health consequences, to look seriously at what is happening to the health of Canadians, and to look seriously at what is happening to our waters, forests, and farms.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the Government shares the Hon. Member's concern about the potential linkage between acid rain and health consequences. However, I do not think the Government shares the Hon. Member's view that scientific data are irrelevant, can be ignored, or can be taken on one side of the fence.

It is clear from scientists in a number of countries that the link between particular health hazards and the presence or absence of acid rain cannot be proved or disproved.

I think the Hon. Member knows that the Department of National Health and Welfare has been actively engaged in research and attending international symposiums around the world because of the concern that there might indeed be a link and that steps might have to be taken if those links are at all demonstrated. She mentioned the studies on lung function, particularly in children, conducted by Health and Welfare Canada in terms of areas where acid rain pollution was high and areas where acid rain pollution was low. There was a 2 per cent impact in high pollution areas on lung functioning, but certainly no correlation was established with lung disease. In fact, when children were removed from the pollution, lung functioning returned to normal. I think that is the scientific evidence.

Similarly the Department has conducted studies in the cottage areas of Canada where water is sitting around in cisterns and in tanks of one kind or another. There are elevated levels of chemicals associated with acid rain, but a flushing of the systems tends to remove the contaminants, so they are relatively easy to get rid of.

A major study is under way, sponsored by the Government of Canada in collaboration with American environmental scientists. It is a five-year population based study which may provide us with more answers down the road. It is just another indication of the Government's concern for this issue.

Also the Hon. Member mentioned the association of sulphur dioxide with colon and breast cancers. That study more clearly showed that the presence or absence of Vitamin D might be associated. There is some sense that indeed acid rain pollution might affect Vitamin D levels because of its impact on ultraviolet radiation. However, it is a bit of a leap to come to the conclusion that acid rain is indeed responsible for those increases in cancer. Scientifically it is a very difficult proposition to make and to hold on to.

In fact, just two short months ago an international symposium on the health effects of acid aerosols reviewed adverse health effects studies in many countries. It clearly concluded that more research was needed, because none of the results to date have anything more than a very tenuous link to the phenomena identified by the Hon. Member.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—VICTIMS OF BRAINWASHING EXPERIMENTS FUNDED BY CIA—REQUEST FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE IN SEEKING LEGAL REDRESS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, it was a little over seven years ago that nine Canadians, all victims of terrible brainwashing experiments by the late psychiatrist Dr. Cameron at Montreal's Allan Memorial Institute, launched a $9 million lawsuit against the CIA of the United States. Indeed, both the CIA and the Canadian Government, particularly the Ministry of Health and Welfare, funded these experiments which were not only unethical but brain damaging, resulting in permanent damage to the victims of the experiments which took place in the 1950s and early 1960s.

For seven years, these Canadians have been seeking justice in U.S. courts. Unfortunately, they are also seeking support from the Canadian Government but to date, at least, that support is sadly lacking. Nine victims have sued the CIA for its part in these grisly experiments, alleging that the CIA was criminally negligent and reckless in supporting Dr. Cameron's brainwashing experiments. One of the victims has died since the suit was launched. We can only hope that more will not die before justice is finally done in this matter.

What we are talking about here is a horror story in which both the Canadian Government and the CIA were implicated. As one of the victims, Velma Orlikow—incidentally, the wife of one of our colleagues in the House, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—said:

> —get off your horse and help us. We need some help from our government. We're innocent victims of something that happened that should never have been. You can't put us back where we were, but at least do something to help us now. Do something to stand up and say this can't happen in Canada.

The lawyer who was working tirelessly and courageously on behalf of these victims cannot understand why the Canadian Government will not stand up for nine Canadians who were victims of terrible experiments. He says:

> I keep asking Canadians why your Government is acting this way. Some say it is the usual Canadian fright of the Big Brother to the South. Others say it is Canada's, now admitted, involvement with Dr. Cameron. I still do not know. But one thing I do know—it's a hell of a note when a 75 year old U.S. civil liberties lawyer cares more about these injured Canadian citizens, now in the twilight of life, than their own Government.

What did the Conservative Government do in response to this tragic situation? It appointed a former Conservative Member of Parliament who was defeated in the 1984 election to conduct the study, a Mr. George Cooper. Cooper came to the conclusion that there was no moral or legal responsibility whatever on the part of the Government of Canada to the victims of these experiments. Cooper suggested that there was perhaps no permanent harm done and that the involvement of the CIA was simply, in his words, "a red herring". All of this without Cooper even interviewing a single one of the victims of these experiments and without examining any of their medical files or reviewing any of the records of the CIA offered by the U.S. Government.

Approximately a year ago I asked the then Minister of Justice what action he would take to assist these individuals in their lawsuit against the CIA in Washington. The Minister of Justice stated at that time that the Government has assisted and will continue to assist the plaintiffs. Nothing has happened so far. On June 3, 1987 I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn):

> In view of the commitment over a year ago by the then Minister of Justice to consider seriously assisting these people financially, when will the Conservative Government finally move to assist these victims of these terrible experiments in their pursuit of justice against the CIA.

The Minister of Justice said:

> I can only say to the Hon. Member that I am in a process of consulting and looking at this matter . . . I hope that we will be able to come forward with some concrete results in the very near future.

How much longer must the victims of these brainwashing experiments wait before getting action from the Canadian Government? What about a simple offer of assistance of legal aid or access to all documents which might help them in their court battle? This same Government was very eager to assist the Hon. Member for York—Peel (Mr. Stevens) in spending hundreds of thousands of dollars on his legal fees. Why will the Government not do the right thing in this case and assist the victims of these brainwashing experiments as well? Joseph Rauh said:

> If I were a Canadian I'd be ashamed of my own government.

• (1825)

I am ashamed of a Government which has so far refused to do the right thing and assist the victims of these experiments. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will rise in his place tonight and give some concrete support to the eight individuals and the estate of the ninth, and some assurance that they will not be doubly victimized. They were victimized by these terrible experiments by Dr. Cameron and now they are being victimized by their own Government. The time for action and justice is long overdue.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam

Speaker, sometimes the Hon. Member makes me somewhat ashamed to be in this Chamber. He is somewhat loose with the truth where the reputations of others are concerned. I would simply point out that he said Mr. Cooper was defeated in the 1984 election. Mr. Cooper was a Member between 1979 and 1980. He has first rate credentials in the legal profession extending over at least 20 years. This attempt to paint him as something less than perfect as a political appointment is unworthy of the Hon. Member.

It is also unworthy of him, in a situation so serious and one about which this Government cares so much, to attempt to paint the Government as a do-nothing Government. In 1977, long before we became the Government, this case was brought to the attention of the Canadian people. Since the late fall of 1984, when we became the Government, we escalated concern about this matter by bringing it up directly between our Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and his U.S. counterpart, Mr. Shultz. They have had top-level political discussions on this issue.

The Hon. Member mentioned in a denigrating fashion the Cooper commission. That legal investigation by a reputable member of the Canadian Bar was brought about by this Government for the purpose of determining whether there was any possibility of legal liability on the part of the Government of Canada.

Mr. Robinson: It was a whitewash.

Mr. Hawkes: He calls it a whitewash. He uses inflammatory language and attempts to turn a very serious human problem into political advantage for himself and his Party. He cheapens himself in the process.

This Government is still considering the possibility of financial assistance under current laws for this group of people. We have provided not only all of the information available in Canada to the plaintiffs for use in their U.S. court action, but insisted that we be allowed to turn over to the plaintiffs' counsel all the information provided to us by the U.S. government counsel. That has been done.

The Government is in touch on a regular basis with the plaintiffs and their lawyer. To try and characterize that as doing nothing is to cheapen the Member's intervention, his question, and put in doubt the sincerity of his commitment to these nine people. I think this Government has shown more commitment to the human dimension of this situation than the Hon. Member has.

CANADIAN MULTICULTURALISM ACT

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-93, an Act for the preservation and enhancement of multiculturalism in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Minister shall have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, it is with a great sense of pride that I rise to table an historic Bill in the House today, the Canadian Multiculturalism Act. The Bill enshrines in statute the recognition of Canada's multicultural reality, sets forth the multicultural policy of Canada, and contains a firm government-wide commitment to implement it. It provides a legislative base for multicultural programs which will assist cultural preservation, combat racism, and promote institutional change.

This legislation will establish the freedom of Canadians of all origins to maintain, enhance and share their cultural heritage. The Bill recognizes all Canadian citizens as full members of the Canadian community.

[English]

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I thought the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) was making a statement when he started to speak on the introduction of his Bill on multiculturalism. I am told that it was not a statement, but it is not usual for Ministers to make statements of that nature when introducing Bills. Is it going to be the new practice that when Ministers introduce Bills they explain what is in the Bill?

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, I hope we are not going to get into a procedural problem. My advice was that if I wanted to rise to indicate what was in the Bill within 60 seconds, it would not be a statement. If, on the other hand, there is need for a statement to be made or someone else wishes to make a statement, I have no difficulty with that. However, that was my advice with respect to the procedure in the House.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I have no problem with the Minister's 60-second statement. I know that the Minister's Department was probably working overnight to prepare the statement and the news release which will accompany his press conference. However, it would be appreciated if at least the critic for the proposed piece of legislation were given notice of at least an hour or an hour and a half as is the tradition of the House.

I received materials at about 10.15 or 10.20. It is difficult for the official critic to read and digest the legislation as well as to prepare our position in order to offer Canadians the position of the Official Opposition on the legislation on such notice. I think that 40 minutes is cutting it very close.

I have brought this to the attention of the Chair on previous occasions when Ministers with responsibility for immigration have been negligent. I have no problems with the Minister's statement. However, I would appreciate it if the Minister and the Government would keep the traditions that we offered them when they were in the Opposition.

• (1110)

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, in the last few years I believe I have introduced some four or five Bills in the House. I am well aware of those traditions. Indeed, if time permitted I usually walked over to the critics and handed them the material I was able to provide within the procedures of this House. I have done that on each and every occasion.

Indeed, this morning, in keeping with the traditions the strict procedures of the House, I made that available to both critics, with a handwritten note stating that this was the material I was able to give them.

It is impossible for me to give them the Bill before it is tabled in the House and when I have lock-ups in the rest of the city.

As always, I appreciate the comments of my hon. friend, but I say to him that I do not accept any suggestion that this Minister or the Government has not observed both the spirit and the technical aspects of the traditions and procedures of the House. I sent a letter to the critic of the Official Opposition and the critic of the New Democratic Party with all the materials save and except the actual Bill which, of course, I am not allowed to do. As I said to the critic this morning, I hope we will be able to proceed with this historic Bill in a way which would at least match the sense of expansiveness and future that this Bill itself engenders. I think it will be unfortunate if my hon. friend wishes to bog this down unnecessarily.

Mr. Gauthier: I am not bogging it down. I am asking a question of the Minister. I think that is unfair.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to the Chair that the Bill which was introduced has, at least in principle, support on both sides of the Chamber. Unless any Hon. Member feels a terribly burning urge to make further comment, perhaps the Chair could settle this matter by reminding Hon. Members of Standing Order 107(2) which states:

> A motion for leave to introduce a bill shall be decided without debate or amendment, provided that any Member moving for such leave may be permitted to give a succinct explanation of the provisions of the said bill.

The Hon. Minister said that he had an indication that he had some 60 seconds. I want to assure the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) that the message I sent to the Minister was that he had 30 seconds.

However, it is important to note that it is the case that any Member introducing a Bill can speak succinctly, as the rule states, and I shall be very firm in making sure that it is succinct.

I believe the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) is only expressing what Members on both sides of the House, depending on where they sat at different times, have always wished to be the practice. I think the Hon. Minister has given some explanation for that.

Again, as always, I would urge Ministers to do everything possible to be sure that information is given as soon as possible, especially to the opposition critics. I think it was made quite clear by the Minister that he understands that tradition and does in fact honour it.

MANDATORY INSTALLATION IN CARS OF AIRBAGS AND THREE-POINT SEATBELTS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to present to the House 553 petitions signed by residents of Canada. They are to be added to the 30,735 petitions already tabled.

They are signed by petitioners from Gaspé, Dolbeau, Gull Lake, Kipling, Torguay, Grenfell, North Battleford, Meadow Lake, Simpson, Kindersley, Carnduff, Eston, Lafleche, Quill Lake, Stonehenge, Kenaston, Davidson, Medston, Unity, Weyburn, Swift Current, Richard, Welwyn, Lodewood, Regina and Saskastoon.

These petitioners are calling upon Parliament to institute mandatory airbag restraint systems for the driver of passenger cars and are calling for the installation of three point adjustable lap-shoulder seatbelts for rear passengers.

OPPOSITION TO TAX ON FOOD

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is also my duty to table in the House over one hundred petitions from residents of Sackville, Grande-Digne, Cap-Pelé, St. Anthony, Cocagne, Ste-Marie, Fox Creek, Port Elgin, Moncton, Richibucto, St-Charles, St-Joseph, Memramcook, Ste-Anne-de-Kent, Buctouche, and many other communities in my riding.

My petitioners are very concerned about the fact that the Government, which has already introduced twenty-five new taxes or tax increases, is now considering, as part of its tax reform proposals, a Bill that would include a tax on food. They humbly pray Parliament to reject any measure that would have the effect of putting a sales tax on food products.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, Question No. 196 will be answered today.

[Text]

PROMOTIONAL ACTIVITIES AND DONATIONS BY TOBACCO COMPANIES

Question No. 196—Ms. McDonald:

> 1. In the past five years, by year, did any tobacco companies claim promotional activities and/or sponsorships as allowable business expenses and, if so (a) in what amounts (b) what amount was claimed for promotional activities and/or sponsorships for (i) amateur sport (ii) professional sport (iii) arts (iv) others?

2. For each of the same years, did any companies claim donations to registered charities and/or organizations, as defined in the Income Tax Act and, if so, in what amounts for (a) arts (b) sports (c) health (d) others?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): I am informed by the Department of National Revenue and Statistics Canada as follows:

1. Revenue Canada, Taxation is unable to provide the information requested. The Department's data gathering systems do not capture this type of information. It would be necessary to audit the income tax records of each company to obtain the information requested.

2. Data for the past five years are not available. However, the following information is available.

(a) A special study done in 1983 covering corporations with assets of $25 million or more and charitable donations claimed for tax purposes of $75 thousand or more gives the following results for the tobacco products industry.

General Purpose (Arts and Culture)	1978	1979	1980	1981
Dance/Ballet	0.9	3.8	2.0	3.6

General Purpose	1978	1979	1980	1981
	Thousands of Dollars
Welfare	226.5	258.5	351.1	453.7

Total Donations	733.9	738.4	952.5	1354.5

Notes concerning the data given in 2 (a) and 2 (c) and (d)

Only charitable donations claimed for tax purposes are available. Corporations which did not have positive taxable income may have made charitable donations which could not be claimed for tax purposes.

Charitable donations can be carried forward from one tax year to another. Therefore donations claimed in a tax year may not relate to actual donations made in that year.

The data do not include donations made by charitable foundations which are themselves non-taxable corporations.

Gifts to the Crown have been included in these data. Where they occur they are included with "community benefits".

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CUSTOMS TARIFF

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-87, an Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters and to amend or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty to report to the House and rule with respect to the report stage of Bill C-87. I understand that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has had discussion with the Table Officers with respect to his amendments.

Bill C-87 is an Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters and to amend or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof.

There are 19 report stage motions standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre on today's Notice Paper in amendment to Bill C-87, the customs tariff. I have had an opportunity to review the motions and I am now ready to make a ruling. After extensive discussion between Officers of the Table and the Hon. Member, I have agreed that Motion No. 1 will be debated and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10 and 11, which relate to parliamentary approval by either resolution or legislation, shall be debated together and a vote on Motion No. 2 will apply to Motions Nos. 3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10 and 11.

Motions Nos. 4 and 12 will be debated together with a vote on Motion No. 4 applying to Motion No. 12.

Motions Nos. 8, 11A, 12A and 13A caused the Chair some procedural difficulty. I would refer Hon. Members to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition at Citation 523. However, because some doubt existed in these instances, I am prepared to allow the Hon. Member the benefit of that doubt. Therefore, Motions Nos. 8, 11A, 12A and 13A will be grouped for debate and a vote on Motion No. 8 will be applied to Motions Nos. 11A, 12A and 13A.

Motions Nos. 13, 14, 15 and 16 will be debated separately and voted on separately.

I should say to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre that I appreciate his co-operation in the discussions that took place in making this ruling and I trust that he and other Members will be satisfied with the decision of the Chair.

The House will now proceed with Motion No. 1.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre) moved:

Motion No. 1.

That Bill C-87 be amended in Clause 15 by adding, immediately after line 26 at page 4, the following:

"(3) Notwithstanding any regulation made under subsection (2), goods wholly or partly produced in Mexico shall not be deemed to originate in the United States."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I put forward a number of amendments on Bill C-87. The first one happens to deal with Clause 15 of the Bill, which allows the Governor in Council to make regulations that deem goods produced outside a country to have originated in that country for the purposes of the Customs Tariff Act. That does not, perhaps, come directly to the intent of many of my amendments, but it certainly comes there indirectly.

The problem we have with this Bill is that a Bill which in general would be seen as being innocuous—it is a combination of a number of years of work, consultation internationally and consultation with the trade community with respect to the harmonization system of tariffs—also covers a lot of matters which have been revealed as being, perhaps, wanting in the former Customs Tariff Act in the circumstances we face right now.

The circumstances we face now, as the Hon. Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) is well aware, is that the Government is using its executive powers to take Canada into a free trade arrangement with the Government of the United States without effectively any detailed reference to Parliament or to the Canadian people. Therefore, we have been put in a position where, lacking a detailed text of the trade agreement, lacking an understanding of what the Government intends to do, and facing a deadline by which this deal will be signed, sealed and delivered a month and a day from today, we simply have to try to anticipate some of the problems which the Government's headlong rush toward this trade agreement is likely to create for Canada, and try to head it off by use of the undoubted powers of Parliament to exercise control over the executive. That is specifically what is being done in the amendment to Clause 15 and the other clauses.

Just the other day in Edmonton the writer and economist, John Walston Saul, made a presentation to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade which referred specifically to the fact that the United States now has agreements with Mexico which allow the duty free import from Mexico into the United States of goods produced in Mexico, provided they are made with raw materials or components which come from the United States.

In the so-called Maquiladora industrial program which began in the 1960s, this has led to a rapidly increasing amount of trade between Mexico and the United States in which multinational corporations, U.S. based corporations, establish warehouses on American territory but then build factories on the other side of the border. What meaning does that have for Canada? At present none, because those goods if they are imported and treated by the Americans as being American goods are then subjected to Canadian tariffs, most favoured nation tariffs, if they come into Canada. Under the free trade agreement, however, as it will stand, we have a situation where a government may—I do not know if it will, but it may—deem that these goods, which in fact are produced outside of the United States, actually originate in that country. We also have a situation where there may be no effective means of determining that the bulk of the value added on goods coming from the United States into Canada in fact was value added in Mexico and not value added in the United States of America. That is the purpose of my amendment.

I will read the amendment. It states that, notwithstanding any regulation made under subsection (2), notwithstanding the power of a government to deem goods from outside a country to actually come from that country, goods wholly or partly produced in Mexico shall not be deemed to originate in the United States. The purpose of that is just to ensure that that particular loophole, of which the committee and this Parliament were unaware before the limited, truncated hearings began a few days ago, is not either exploited by the Americans or left available to the Americans in the negotiations which are now taking place.

Had we the text of the agreement by Hallowe'en, as was promised, then perhaps this particular matter would not have had to be brought forward. I have no choice now, as a member of an opposition Party which is strongly opposed to the agreement between the Canadian Government and the Government of the United States, as I understand it right now, but to put forward this kind of amendment.

It is not meant to inhibit Canada's trade with Mexico. I believe Canada should be seeking to expand its trading and economic relationships with Mexico. However, I feel we should do that on a direct basis, on a shared basis or possibly on a trilateral or multilateral basis, and not under a situation in which goods created at very low labour rates in Mexico will come into Canada surreptitiously and be labelled as American goods.

American manufacturers are already taking advantage of this. One of the consequences when industry fled the northern tier of states in the United States to go south, has been a rate of economic growth in those states bordering Canada a great deal lower than the economic growth in Canada over the course of the last 8 or 10 years. Some of those industries have not gone to Houston or Alabama, they have gone to Mexico. I have to ask myself, if we enter into an agreement which puts our industries on the same basis as those in the northern tier of the U.S., whether we are not going to suffer that same fate.

I ask myself, indeed all Canadians, do we really want American social services? Do we really want an economy with a 28 per cent growth rate over seven or eight years, such as that enjoyed by the border states, which of course have full free trade with the rest of the U.S., compared to the 48 per cent that we enjoy in Canada? The Government considers that this should be the case.

However, with respect to this particular Bill, if Canada wishes to make special arrangements with Mexico, it should do so directly. We have provisions in our tariff schedule, and they are included in this Bill, which allow Canada to charge lower rates all the way down to zero on goods coming from developing countries, less developed countries and least developed countries. If we want to make that arrangement with the Mexicans, then let us do so, but let us do it directly. I do not believe we should be put in a position where, because of a special trading relationship which now exists between the U.S. and Mexico, these goods are bootlegged into Canada as though they were American goods.

That is an example of the kind of problems I believe we are getting into because of the situation we face on free trade. We are essentially being given a deal on the basis, as the Montreal Gazette indicated yesterday, where the salesman says: "Buy now, you will never get another chance, and don't bother to look at the fine print". I believe that in this, as in many other respects, we ought to be looking very carefully at the fine print.

I would welcome some assurances from the Minister on this point. I see the Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall) is here as well. I hope they both indicate exactly what the situation is. I know that when the Minister worked on Bay Street, she would not have dreamed of counselling a client to whom she was giving financial advice to buy a business without taking a thorough look at the details, the financial statements, the balance sheet, legal encumbrances and so on.

Mrs. McDougall: Did you read the text of the Kennedy round?

Mr. Cassidy: I am sure that when he was teaching at the University of Western Ontario, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin), if approached by an academic colleague who said he wanted to buy a house at the better end of town even though it is a bit expensive, would have advised him to look at his own financial status. Can he afford it? He would advise him to look at his goals and objectives and review the contract very carefully to make sure there is no urea formaldehyde insulation in the house, or mortgage problems, or things like that. If the Minister would give that advice to someone buying a house, and the Minister of State for Privatization would give that advice to someone buying a company, why is this Parliament asking Canadians to buy, sight unseen, a deal which may mean Canadian jobs being lost in favour of jobs in Mexico?

Mrs. McDougall: Hogwash.

Mr. Cassidy: I hear the Minister saying "no, no". Then she should get up and say exactly what this means and why we do not need to close the loophole? If she agrees there is a loophole, then let her agree to the amendment and let us pass it.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I, for one, want to rise and support the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Mr. Hockin: I cannot believe that.

Mr. Tobin: It seems to me to be almost impossible to entertain the notion that this amendment would not be supported by members of the Government. While I am not in the habit of heaping praise upon members of the perennial third Party—although you never know, they could end up in second spot the next time around if the Government keeps going the way it is going—I have to compliment the Hon. Member for identifying what could be a major problem for Canada.

Let us talk about more than just the potential nature of this problem. If anyone were to take even a cursory glance at trade between Canada and Mexico today, they would discover a very startling statistic. Mexico sells more auto parts to Canada today than the value of all of the products Canada sells to Mexico. In addition, we are running a trade deficit with Mexico of about three to one. Yet traditionally our trade has been fairly evenly balanced over the last decade. The deficit we are now experiencing, a deficit which is growing, is attributable almost entirely to the rather dramatic increase in the export of Mexican auto parts to this country.

How did that happen? The single major initiative of the Government of Mexico, quite understandable from their point of view after the collapse of oil prices and the subsequent loss of income from their oil company Pemex, was to establish new industries along the border with the United States whose prime reason for being was cheaper labour costs. We have now seen the rapid development and growth of an auto parts industry in the northern border states of Mexico. Many of those industries use some parts from the U.S. and some from Canada, but the major assembly operation is done in Mexico.

I was in Windsor last Friday and visited a Canadian company called Tri-Way Machine Ltd. It is in the business of manufacturing or building assembly lines primarily for Ford, GM and Chrysler for use in auto plants in Canada and the U.S. Lo and behold, there on the floor of the plant was a huge assembly line. It is built there, taken apart, shipped to where it is going to be used, and then put back together. A very fine gentleman by the name of Joel Jones runs this first-class company, and I asked him where that assembly line, designed to make auto parts, was going. He said it is going to Mexico.

Therefore, when the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre moves an amendment to make clear that under the terms of Bill C-87 any goods wholly or partly produced in Mexico shall not be deemed to originate in the U.S., he is not dealing with a concern which may or may not be realized one day. He is addressing, and I presume he realizes this, a problem which currently exists.

There has been a dramatic movement by the auto parts industry out of the U.S. and into Mexico. American business interests want to take advantage of very cheap labour rates. American industry is establishing new plants in Mexico to take advantage of very cheap labour rates.

Under the free trade pact that we have agreed to enter into, the auto part content rule is no longer defined as a Canadian content rule, it is defined as a North American content rule. Therefore, we are no longer required to have 50 per cent of parts from Canada in Canadian vehicles, but rather a North American content rule, and the Canadian requirement is no longer present. What happens? Auto parts that are built by American industry in Mexico using cheap labour and brought back into the United States, because of that cheap labour component—which is peanuts compared to the rates paid in this country, and that is a shame—will suddenly become part of the North American content rule. That is happening now. There will be a substantial displacement of both Canadian and American auto parts manufacturers in the content of North American vehicles that are produced on both sides of the border. That is what will happen.

I do not know to what extent the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre realizes the importance of the amendment he proposed today, but I concur with it. The Hon. Member is not talking about a hypothetical situation that may arise. He is not talking about a danger in terms of displacement of Canadian jobs in manufacturing that may occur. In fact, through this amendment he has addressed a situation that is occurring today.

When today's trade is measured between Canada and Mexico, it will be discovered that the value of Canada's direct import of Mexican-made auto parts—not imports through the United States—exceeds the value of all Canadian products of every description that are exported to Mexico, and we are running a dramatically increasing trade deficit with Mexico.

I submit that unless this very sensible amendment is made to Bill C-87, and I cannot conceive that at least this one amendment would not be accepted by the Government, we will see an escalation in the amount of Mexican-made auto parts that are displacing Canadian jobs and Canadian manufacturing effort. I concur with what the Member has said. If there is to be, and there ought to be, a healthy, vibrant trading relationship with Mexico, which is an important country on the North American continent which has a right to participate in world trade, let it be on the basis of arrangements made between Canada and Mexico and let us not have this indirect, back-door, sneaky way of displacing Canadian manufacturing effort and jobs, without the knowledge of the Government, the industry, or the people of Canada.

I hope that the Minister will rise and show that he is above partisanship. I have not attacked him for this Bill. Will he show that he appreciates a problem being brought to his attention when it is brought properly and intelligently, and inform the House that this amendment will be accepted as drafted because it does a service to the House of Commons, the people of Canada, and particularly those people in the auto parts manufacturing industry who, more than ever before, are at risk because of the initiative of this Government with respect to free trade? The Government has been done a favour, and I hope that it has the good sense to recognize it.

Mr. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): I wish to respond to the comments made by the two Hon. Members, and to speak to the motion.

This is one of the most important pieces of legislation that this Parliament will deal with, that is, harmonizing our tariff system for the decade ahead and beyond. It is an historically important document which has been worked out with all the other trading countries in the world. There has been almost 10 years of preparation behind this harmonization. It is one of the most important non-partisan Bills that Parliament will deal with, and it is being held up by this motion, which I will speak to shortly.

The comments of the Hon. Member for Humber—Port-au-Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) are important to make if the motion were necessary, but it turns out that the motion will be unnecessary to accomplish what the Hon. Member wants.

This legislation is doing something massive, and it must be put in place by January 1. We are harmonizing our whole tariff system with our trading partners.

Mr. Cassidy: The Americans are not doing it by January 1.

Mr. Hockin: The Americans will probably have it done by January 1.

Mr. Cassidy: The Americans will not.

Mr. Hockin: The Hon. Member wants me to follow the lead of the Americans. We are not going to follow the lead of the Americans. What the Canadians want us to do, we will do. As a matter of fact, the Hon. Member also wishes the detailed free trade document. The reason that some extra time is required to work on that document is that we have some views that are different from those of the Americans.

Mr. Cassidy: It was all signed on October 3.

Mr. Hockin: What we wish to do with those changes is to make it tighter and better from our point of view.

This Bill takes our whole tariff classification system, which has mostly been based on end use, and to classify tariffs as to the nature of the product. Conceptually, this is a big change for this country.

In fact, Canada's Customs Tariff Act has been one of the more cumbersome, and perhaps one of the more anomalous regimes in the industrialized world. A great deal of work has been put into improving the system, perhaps more than other countries, but starting on January 1 we will be in a position to harmonize with other countries.

Does the Hon. Member have any idea what this would mean to the importers and exporters of Canada if this were not in place by January 1? Therefore, I regret the motion.

Let me speak to the motion. The Hon. Member's suggestion is that this Mexico-Canada import problem is not dealt with properly in this legislation.

Mr. Tobin: It is not.

Mr. Hockin: It is our contention, and there is no doubt that this is the case, that among the many positive things the free trade agreement we are putting together with the United States is designed to achieve, is to make this motion by the Hon. Member absolutely unnecessary.

Mr. Tobin: How?

Mr. Hockin: The rules of origin will be stated in detail in our trading agreement with the United States, and will completely rule out the possibility of the concerns and the phantoms produced by the Hon. Member for Humber—Port-au-Port—St. Barbe.

Mr. Tobin: You said that the fine print is not important.

Mr. Hockin: The Hon. Member knows that the principle of rule of origin will be part of this free trade agreement, and it will outlaw the particular phantoms produced by Mr. Saul in his article last week. I think if the Hon. Member asked Mr. Saul, he would agree that this is a red herring.

Mr. Cassidy: No. The power is there and it should be stopped.

Mr. Hockin: There is a second problem. It is not only designed to deal with an alleged loophole, which does not exist and will not exist in the free trade agreement, the amendment of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) is intended to prevent U.S. goods which have undergone outward processing in Mexico from qualifying for duty-free entry under the free trade agreement. These goods will not qualify under the rules of origin negotiated under the agreement, and hence there is no need for the amendment.

Second, such a provision in Canadian law, the provision that is suggested in this amendment, would be totally contrary to our GATT obligations. I think that the Hon. Member knows that. It would discriminate against goods which incorporated any component from Mexico, and thus indirectly discriminate against Mexico.

As far as I can tell, the result of this amendment is that even a bolt, a nut, or a screw that was in a machine if it was made in Mexico would be banned from being placed in Canada. That is incredible. It is a highly discriminatory provision which is totally against our GATT provisions. It would be challenged by Mexico, which is a GATT member and entitled to the application of the same rules of origin by Canada as are applied to imports from other countries.

In summary, this is an important piece of legislation which is being held up as a result of a motion which is based upon a chimerical allegation that the free trade deal will not deal with the problem and that the wording—

Mr. Tobin: Show us the fine print.

Mr. Cassidy: Where is it?

Mr. Hockin: —uttered by the two Hon. Members must be dealt with.

We have an important piece of legislation which is nothing more than an agreement which we have put together with all other industrialized countries. I think every other Parliament will deal with it in a non-partisan manner. However, these Hon. Members have projected partisanship into stopping the proper progress of the Bill. I must ask, from the point of view of parliamentary procedure—

Mr. Cassidy: That is what happens when you try to run over us. You have no mandate for what you are saying.

Mr. Hockin: If the Hon. Member really believes in what he is saying, why did he not raise these points in committee? He uses a classic technique. He does not raise the points in committee. He trucks them all to Parliament to raise them here and waste the time of the House, when he could have got satisfaction and the answers he wanted and needed in committee.

I am looking forward to disposing of these motions in rather quick order, because they are all based upon a false premise.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, in his remarks the Minister accused us of wasting the time of the House. I think it is important for people who are watching the proceedings of the House of Commons this morning to realize that report stage debate just started 40 minutes ago.

No one is against the intent of Bill C-87. We believe in harmonizing trade; there is no question about that. However, we do not want to see the Government, through this legislation, moving toward its free trade agenda, the Mulroney package, with the Americans.

We have certain fears about what will be in the final fine print of the agreement with the Americans. Over the last couple of years we have already had a variance in what the Government was saying with regard to the Auto Pact. At the very beginning of the negotiations with the United States, we were told that the Auto Pact would not be touched. We had the assurances of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and other cabinet Ministers that it would not be affected one iota. Yet we know that the Government has already thrown in the towel with regard to the penalty clauses and that, in the negotiations which are still taking place with the Americans, the Auto Pact, tariffs, and penalties topics are still matters of contention.

The so-called free trade deal signed on October 3 is not ready and is not before the House. It would be irresponsible for the House to pass legislation, which could have a direct effect on the trade deal, before we actually have the fine print of the final copy before us.

In part, the motion of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) reads:

> Notwithstanding any regulation made under subsection (2), goods wholly or partly produced in Mexico shall not be deemed to originate in the United States.

If the Minister, as he indicated in his speech, has some problem with the amendment—maybe he thinks that it goes too far—he or some other member of the Government has the ability to put forward a subamendment. However, for us to give the Government through Order in Council the complete freedom to deem that cars almost completely produced in Mexico will be considered American cars for the sake of the Auto Pact is a threat to thousands of jobs in Canada. We do not believe that we should give a blank cheque to Cabinet when it comes to the future of our auto parts industry.

For us to do that in advance of having the final copy of the trade deal would be irresponsible. We need to know what is in the trade deal before we can pass this piece of legislation. We cannot be faced with a situation where the House of Commons passes the legislation and the Government makes all sorts of regulations which are going to cost Canadians jobs, without the benefit of having a finalized copy of the trade deal in front of us.

I am not speaking about some idle threat. As a previous Hon. Member mentioned, the situation is such that hundreds of plants are being built in Mexico at the present time for the sole purpose of exporting goods back into the United States. A major area in which this is happening is that of auto parts. As was also mentioned earlier, we already import from Mexico more in cars and auto parts than all our exports to that country. We already have a deficit on that one item, and that deficit would increase if we allowed the Government, through Order in Council, to count as United States products all cars and auto parts produced south of the United States-Mexico border. It is a serious concern, and it is something with which we must deal.

We are in a situation where the House of Commons will be denied any real debate of the Canada-U.S. trade deal before the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) signs it on January 3. Today is December 1, and here we are in the House of Commons and we do not have the agreement before us. We do not have any enabling legislation or a debate on the trade deal, yet we know that as soon as possible the Prime Minister will run down to Washington to sign the deal. It is unacceptable that that should happen. No responsible Government would allow the Prime Minister to sign an international agreement when we have not even seen its final wording or have not had the benefit of a debate based upon its final wording. The Prime Minister is committing not only his Government but future Governments to a certain course of action without consulting the people of the nation.

The Prime Minister campaigned prior to 1984 against a trade arrangement with the Americans. He said that it would be wrong. He admitted that it would be dangerous. He knew that it would cost us jobs, yet he has made a 180- degree reversal. Now, in approximately 33 days, the same Prime Minister wants to sign a trade arrangement or deal with the Americans which none of us has ever seen.

The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) rose in the House of Commons and said that it was good enough for us to have the elements of the trade deal. She said that that was all we really had to know because it was the basic package which we were able to debate if we wanted. She also said that the committee travelling across the country right now would be hearing from witnesses and would have copies of the elements of the deal. If that is good enough, why is it that two months after the elements were signed it has been impossible for the Canadian and American negotiators to come up with the final package? If the elements of the deal are so good and so complete, then obviously the final draft could be signed and it should be in front of this House.

There are major considerations and difficulties with which the Canadian and American negotiators are dealing. For the House of Commons committee to be travelling and for witnesses to be making presentations without a final package is irresponsible. We certainly cannot, in this House of Commons, pass legislation which will give the Government a blank cheque on the trade deal. Certainly the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) goes in the direction of helping to prevent the Government from getting a blank cheque which we cannot trust it with.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): We, Mr. Speaker, in the Official Opposition support the amendment. We are also deeply concerned about the Government bringing forward this piece of legislation at a time when Canadians cannot judge it, as they must, in the light of what the free trade agreement will mean for the opportunities opened in Canada for Mexican production.

Why the Government would take this time—if I may say so as the justice critic, when we were moving well on the obscenity legislation, which is important—to bring forward Bill C-87 and suspend the obscenity legislation can only make us very suspicious, as the New Democrats are.

The Government wants to get this legislation passed before exposing the fine print which may reveal a weakness that will make us want to refuse to pass Bill C-87. Seeing the fine print will make it clear whether or not products produced in Mexico, mostly produced in Mexico or partly produced in Mexico and then finished in the U.S., will get the benefit of free trade entry into Canada. This is an issue relating partly to ownership but mainly to labour.

We know that most of the auto industry production that goes on in Mexico is subject in Mexico to a requirement of Mexican ownership or largely Mexican ownership. We also know that Mexico, in some very far-sighted moves to encourage job creation in that country, has created zones in which the automotive industry can be owned by foreigners, even 100 per cent by foreigners, to take advantage of world market opportunities. There is nothing wrong with that and it is nothing for which you can criticize Mexico. From Mexico's point of view a lot of jobs have to be created in Mexico.

It is all very well for the Government to be satisfied, as it may be, that a lot of Canadians own businesses in Mexico producing auto parts, but the important feature for us, and about which we must be concerned in Canada, are Canadian jobs. Now we are being asked to support legislation, which may well have the effect of giving Mexican companies, whether Canadian owned or not, and Mexican-produced equipment and parts for the automotive industry, access into the Canadian market-place because they will be classed as North American production. What will the fine print say about the free trade opportunities for goods produced partly or largely—whatever the definition will be—in Mexico introduced into the North American market?

The amendment provides clearly:

> (3) Notwithstanding any regulation made under subsection (2), goods wholly or partly produced in Mexico shall not be deemed to originate in the United States.

There is a concern which may be allayed when we see the free trade agreement. I believe, Mr. Speaker, you yourself expressed some reservations about the propriety of this amendment, but it would be a very important amendment if the free trade agreement permits Mexican produced goods to become part of the North American production that can enter Canada under the so-called free trade agreement.

A committee is at present travelling across the country getting opinions about the free trade agreement. It has been accurately observed that the Government is wrong in saying that what is happening now is that lawyers are settling what the fine print will be of the agreement. One member of the Government characterized it as the period between signing an offer to sell your house and the final closing that takes place sometimes half a year later when the fine print is settled. I do not think that is a proper analogy. This is not a case of lawyers knowing what their job is and sitting down to do it. The fine print is taking a lot of time to settle, and my guess is that many important issues—be they technical or complicated—have not yet been resolved, and that is why the fine print of the free trade agreement is not available.

The Government has had a considerable amount of embarrassment seeing one deadline after another in producing the final text not met. Canadians would be very foolish, and I do not think they are, to believe that it is only a matter of sitting down to draft a deed or a covenant. That is not the type of issue responsible for the delay in this case. There are serious differences to be resolved that I am sure are being considered at a high level between the Governments of Canada and the United States. One must surely be the amount of content of a foreign-produced product, a product partly produced outside the territory of Canada and the United States, and what proportion of it will qualify the good as a Canadian good.

There are similar problems in the clothing industry. We have clothing manufactured in Canada. The fabric may be manufactured in Canada but perhaps the lining or the thread is imported from the U.S. or from some third country. You need to have a value-added or a foreign content rule to assist you in determining how much of a coat made in Canada has actually to be created in Canada for it to be considered a Canadian product for the purposes of the free trade agreement. Very small differences can make a very big difference in production. What about the case of a coat where every single component, the lining, the buttons, the thread, and the fabric were made in Canada? You could not compete in the American market with that coat because lots of coats in the American market are made totally from foreign content. Some coats are imported directly from a third country like Hong Kong, France, Italy, et cetera. There are others finished in the U.S., but like a coat finished in Canada it has a certain amount of foreign content.

When you talk about the automotive industry you are talking about one of the key industries responsible for the trade surplus that we enjoy here in Canada. Knowing that the Mexicans have made a top priority out of getting automotive production in Mexico and have been prepared to do it in a variety of ways by relaxing tough foreign ownership rules or relaxing the rules of company ownership establishing free trade zones, it becomes critical that we know whether these products will be competing directly with products now made in Canada. Unless this amendment is included, Canadian industry will be at the mercy of the free trade agreement, whatever it will provide when it comes out. The link is obvious.

The decision of the Government to hoist the obscenity legislation and bring Bill C-87 before us before the fine print is available can only make us very suspicious. I urge government Members, and particularly those who come from areas of Canada where automotive production takes place, to insist on this amendment.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, it is well known that the Liberals and the NDP, those opposite, are a pretty timorous bunch. However, today we have witnessed the spectacle of them quaking in their collective boots and trembling in fear before the economic might, not of Japan, West Germany or the United States, but of tiny little Mexico. Wee timorous beasties they certainly are.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I was hoping that the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) would have participated in this debate as opposed to simply making an interjection. After all, it has become perfectly clear this morning that while Canadians have been requesting an opportunity to participate in a debate on free trade through their elected representatives, such has not been the case, with the exception of opportunities provided by opposition days.

On the most important trade deal in Canadian history, and as the chief trade negotiator, Simon Reisman, indicated, the most important trade deal in the world, the Government has not seen fit to set aside any parliamentary time for debate. Canadians are expected to buy a pig in a poke. They are expected to have faith that the Government will introduce legislation that is in the best interests of the people of Canada.

I think it is rather sad that today, when the Government has provided an opportunity for government Members to debate Bill C-87, no one on the government side seems to be interested. So far, we have heard almost exclusively from members of the Opposition. This is unfortunate, but I suspect that it may be—

Mr. Cassidy: Deliberate.

Mr. Riis: I would not like to think it is a deliberate move on the Government's part not to participate in a debate on free trade but that it simply stems from the fact that those who would participate are busy at committee meetings and will be here later today. We will be awaiting their return and are anxious to hear their comments on the free trade debate.

We are now debating the first amendment put forward by my hon. friend from Ottawa Centre. I believe that this amendment is absolutely necessary. As Hon. Members know, Bill C-87 which the Government wants to pass as quickly as possible really provides that goods produced in another country can be deemed to be produced in the United States and therefore, under a free trade deal, could be traded as American products in Canada without any duties or tariffs. More specifically, if the United States, in a free trade zone with Mexico, were prepared to use very cheap Mexican labour to produce goods at an extremely low cost in Mexico or along the border, those goods could be deemed to be American products, which would then be allowed into Canada duty-free to compete with our products here in Canada in a so-called free and fair trade situation, though obviously such would not be the case. These goods, which would not even have been produced in the United States, would be considered to be American in origin.

We are interested in having a fair trade situation with the United States. We feel that if we are to be trading in a head-to-head way, the situations on both sides of the border ought to be the same. Both countries ought to have the same input costs, and then whichever country is the most productive or the most sophisticated in terms of marketing would probably come up with the sales.

My hon. friend from Ottawa Centre has moved an amendment that reads as follows:

> That Bill C-87, be amended in Clause 15 by adding, immediately after line 26 at page 4, the following:
> "(3) Notwithstanding any regulation made under subsection (2), goods wholly or partly produced in Mexico shall not be deemed to originate in the Unites States."

That is about the purest form of an amendment that I have ever seen in the House of Commons. I would think it would get the unanimous support of all Hon. Members. If we do not support it, we are saying that goods produced wholly or partly in Mexico shall be deemed to originate in the United States. We are simply trying to clarify the situation so that if the Government proceeds to bulldoze ahead and jam the free trade deal down the throats of Canadians, we will agree that goods produced in the United States must be produced in the United States.

As many people have warned us, we will find that goods produced in Mexico will be deemed to have been produced in the United States and then will be traded into Canada as American products. That is wrong, unjust and unfair. It is an unfair trading practice. We are simply saying that it should not be allowed. I think any fair-minded person would agree with that.

It seems to be rather odd that opposition Members would even have to suggest such an amendment. It would seem to be in the best interests of Canada and Canadian manufacturers that the Government itself would put this in the legislation. Such, apparently, is not the case.

I listened with interest when the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) said that this legislation ought to go through quickly and that the Opposition should stop debating it. We have just begun to debate it. That is what we are here for. Our job is to debate in the House of Commons. The Minister of State for Finance has told us not to debate this legislation, but I say that this is one of the only opportunities we have to point out the folly of the present system as we move toward this so-called free trade deal with the United States.

Today is December 1, and in four-weeks' time this agreement with the United States will be signed. I ask myself if this particular Bill is covered by the deal. I suspect you are asking yourself that question, Mr. Speaker, as are many other Members of the House of Commons.

Under the free trade deal with the United States, will goods produced in Mexico be allowed to be considered American products for trade? That is a reasonable question, but we do not know the answer because we have not seen the agreement. It is a bit like asking someone to sign a will, a contract or a mortgage without reading it. It is like asking management and labour to sign a collective agreement without looking at it.

Mr. Tobin: It is like buying a used car without checking that there is a motor under the hood.

Mr. Riis: My hon. friend says that it is like buying a used car without checking to see if there is a motor under the hood. This is really peculiar. I cannot imagine how Members of the House of Commons could ask Canadians to sign an agreement that no one has seen. It seems illogical and kind of humorous. It is as though a joke has been played. Maybe someone will wake up and say: "Hey, April fool's, we've been fooling you all along". However, that is not the case. Four weeks from tonight, we will be getting ready to sign that agreement which no one has seen yet.

My friend from Ottawa Centre is an opposition Member who is obviously very concerned about this trading arrangement and about Bill C-87 which harmonizes customs definitions. He has asked if goods produced in Mexico will be allowed to be deemed American goods. Presumably government Members are saying yes to this. If they are not saying yes, then I suppose they will rise shortly to explain what they mean by their presumed opposition to this amendment.

I can only say with increasing frustration that as January 2, the day we are to sign this agreement, draws closer I wonder when we will see the agreement. As a matter of fact, I recall the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) saying on many occasions that by the end of November, we will all have seen the agreement and Canadians will then have a whole month to evaluate it. Well, November has passed and it is now December. To be fair, some of us would probably like to spend a few days around Christmas not debating or thinking a whole lot about the free trade agreement. However, we may not have the pleasure of that break.

Mr. Tobin: We'll get our holiday turkey on January 2.

Mr. Riis: Well, we will get something on January 2. I expect that there will be all kinds of interesting animals coming at us as a result of this.

In all fairness, Mr. Speaker, has a government in the history of this country ever said that it is entering into a fantastic major contract with another country but was not going to tell anyone what was in it, that it did not even know what was in it because it was still being negotiated, yet asked people to support it before anyone saw it?

My hon. friend, the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), has moved a most reasoned amendment which recommends that we pass legislation to say that goods which are partly or wholly produced in Mexico shall not be deemed to originate in the United States. I have seen a lot of amendments, and this is probably the most logical and sensible one I have seen in a long time. With regard to the implications which free trade will have for Canadian manufacturers, large, medium and small, we would be well advised to pass this forthwith and get on with the discussion of Motions Nos. 2 and 3.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) is very straightforward. It simply says that under this Bill no goods which are manufactured or partly manufactured in Mexico shall be deemed to be made in the U.S. The Minister objects to that. He says that this is discriminating against Mexico. We could implement a subamendment providing that no goods originating outside of the U.S. are to be deemed to be made in the U.S.

The Minister says that the question of the rule of origin will be part of the free trade agreement. To make it even simpler, why not have a definition of the rule of origin right in this Bill? Why wait for the so-called free trade agreement which we have not seen? The Minister is very good at telling us that Bills are simple and technical and that we should trust him that all will be well.

I was Chairman of the Canada-Europe Parliamentary Association during a two-year period when the access of Greece and Portugal to the Common Market was being negotiated. It was fascinating to watch the process of product-by-product negotiation, with clear examination of economic impact at every step and a real commitment to raise the standard of living in the poorer countries.

The Government is not negotiating publicly. We do not know what is on the table and what is off. We have seen a 30-page agreement in principle, but we are waiting for the fine print. The Minister has brought in this Bill and said, "Don't worry, just pass it. It's technical. The fine print of the free trade agreement will settle everything". That is not a very satisfactory way to proceed.

I invite the Minister to bring forward a counter amendment which would give a definition of rule of origin which we could all support. That would probably be a very simple way of bringing this matter to a close.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity to speak against some of the aspects of Bill C-87 by supporting the amendment of my colleague, the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). The response of the Government to the amendment has been that we should trust the Prime Minister. According to all the evidence, 75 per cent of the Canadian people do not trust the Prime Minister, and I am happy to be counted among that 75 per cent.

I would like to explain this amendment and point out how it affects things which I have encountered during the last year. The clause which we are amending says:

> For the purposes of this Act, goods originate in a country if the whole of the value of the goods is produced in that country.

That sounds reasonable. However, it then goes on to say the opposite. It says:

> The Governor in Council may make regulations
> (a) deeming goods, the whole or a portion of the value of which is produced outside a country, to originate in that country for the purposes of this Act—

In other words, the Governor in Council may secretly wipe out the essential meaning of Clause 15(1). He can say that an entire product made in country A will be considered to come from country X. We may think that that was just a funny joke if we did not know of certain things that are happening.

We know that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is rushing indecently to move this Bill through Parliament before he has even signed the free trade agreement which he is asking all Canadians to support. I was an observer last Thursday and Friday at the First Ministers meeting in Toronto. It was rather sickening to hear the Prime Minister pour scorn on anyone who was not prepared to buy an agreement which he himself has not yet seen fit to sign. It is not fit for him to sign, yet he condemns everyone who does not give it support in advance.

We do not have the exact text of the agreement. A few minutes ago the Minister said that we should not worry about this point, that the agreement will make it clear. Maybe it will make it clear, but we want to know how it will do that. Almost two months after the so-called agreement was reached we still do not have the text. We were told scornfully that 1,000 or 1,800 pages of the text will be tariff information. The implication was that we would either not want to read it or would not be able to understand it. Yet, that is exactly the sort of thing that is involved in this Bill which the Prime Minister is trying to rush through before he has to tell us the truth of the agreement which he will sign.

This Bill is part of the so-called free trade deal, the Prime Minister's deal with the President of the United States, which will not be free trade but fettered trade. It will not be free for Canada although it will be free for certain corporations, mainly American ones.

This morning I telephoned one of the major unions in Spadina, the International Ladies Garment Workers Union. They are unaware of what the Government is planning to do to them through this Bill in combination with the free trade agreement. In other words, the Government is trying to sneak it through.

As has been pointed out before, there is what might be called a free trade or export zone in Mexico along the American border in which American corporations have established plants. American corporations are shutting down their plants in the United States where they might pay workers $9 an hour. They are doing the work across the Mexican border where they pay workers 65 cents an hour and where there are no unions. As far as the companies and the Government are concerned, there never will be.

The deal is that the goods made in Mexico under slave labour conditions, for which the United States is responsible, are to be imported into Canada under the so-called free trade arrangement with the United States. That is what has clearly opened up in Clause 15 of the Bill. It is a disgrace.

A little over a year ago, one of the major clothing manufacturing plants in Spadina shut down suddenly, with one month's notice. It was a big plant employing 200 people, and was manufacturing Adidas basketball shorts on King Street. When I phoned the manager to ask why it had shut down, he gave me some vague talk about the market dropping. He did not say whether it was because their basketball shorts were no good or they oversold.

I learned from others that they had just opened a plant in Mexico to produce the very same Adidas basketball shorts. It is no wonder they wiped out 200 jobs in Toronto. That is the kind of deal which will become more popular with large corporations like Adidas if the Government is able to put Bill C-87 into law.

It is clearly intended to accelerate what is already being done in a few cases. It amounts to an attempt to legally smuggle goods that would not be acceptable if the deal were put before this Canadian Parliament and put openly to the Canadian people.

The Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) ducked in, made a wisecrack, then ducked out again. Of course, he did not want to be held responsible for his remark. He said that we are afraid of Mexico. I am not afraid of Mexico, but I have healthy respect for the power for multinational corporations like Adidas, General Motors, Ford and Chrysler. It is not Mexico against whom this amendment must be directed, even though we are forced to name Mexico; it is corporations like General Motors and Adidas who are exploiting Mexico and the Mexican people in order to damage the employment prospects of American and Canadian workers.

The matter will probably not stop at Mexico. When I visited El Salvador in May, I asked the vice-minister of planning what he was doing about unemployment there. The lowest rate of unemployment which the Government estimates there is 50 per cent of the workforce. He speaks very good English and told me: "We want you Canadians to invest in our cheap labour". He obviously was not talking to the garment workers in Spadina or the auto workers in any of the Canadian auto manufacturing locations.

He thought he was talking to a well-to-do Member of Parliament, perhaps a colleague of another Member of Parliament who has often visited El Salvador because of his interest in shoe factories there. He invited me and my friends to invest in their cheap labour. He is not kidding that it is cheap labour. According to the Star, it is $4 a day for labour. Those who attempt to organize unions are shot, and those who complain about the shootings are shot as well. The Government has never brought any of those murderers to justice. It is the death squads in places like El Salvador and it is corporations like Adidas and General Motors which I fear in Clause 15 and against which I believe the amendment of the Member for Ottawa Centre is very reasonable.

The Prime Minister sneers at those who oppose the deal that he is writing with the President. I heard him in Toronto on Friday sneer at those who compare the deal to sleeping with an elephant. However, the Prime Minister himself said four years ago that free trade with the United States is like sleeping with an elephant, it is terrific until the elephant twitches, and if it ever rolls over you are dead. It is a sad day when the Prime Minister of Canada sneers at what he himself said when he was running for the leadership of the Party that now governs the country.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to address the reasoned amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) to the horribly permissive clause which the Government has inserted in this Bill.

Whenever we read a clause that says the Governor in Council may make regulations deeming goods, the whole or a portion of the value of which is produced outside a country, to originate in that country for the purposes of this Act, I think we have a right, indeed a duty, to be suspicious. This clause flies in the face of reason, in the face of geography, and in the face of history. It is an Alice in Wonderland situation whereby the Government abrogates to itself this right to say that things are not in fact the way things actually are. Surely that is not the purpose of legislation within a democratic society that believes in the rule of law.

We should not give the Government the power to make a deeming decision that is on the level of saying that night should be day, black should be white, or up should be down. However, that is the import of the permissive legislation the Government is bringing forward in this instance.

We are discussing the trading relationships of the United States and Mexico that would be implied in the application of the free trade agreement which the Government believes it has signed with the United States.

This amendment is not directed toward Mexico supplying certain assembled goods to the American economy, nor is it aimed at Mexico selling these assembled goods into the Canadian market. I believe we have had a history of allowing access to our markets for manufactured goods generally and a history of at least showing some openness toward the products of the Third World.

Frankly, however, such a policy has been rather by way of indifference than policy. Canadians should be looking much more carefully at this record in terms of the interest we should take toward the economic development of the Third World and the use of our markets and buying power to promote that economic development while ensuring the survival of a healthy and strong Canadian economy.

We are not opposed to entering into a direct trading relationship with Mexico. Indeed, we should actively promote such a program to act as a counterbalance to the excessive dependence on the United States markets for our raw materials and semi-manufactured goods. However, the power conferred upon the Government by Clause 15 would essentially allow the Canadian Government, at the behest of the U.S. Government, of course, to allow Mexican goods produced in the free trade zone, known as the Maquiladora zone, to be imported into Canada as American goods.

Clause 15 would essentially endow the Government with the power to delegate to the Americans a sovereign power of government that has not previously been given away. This would, in effect, provide a back-door for entry into the Canadian market of goods that are produced at Third World wages, at Third World working conditions, with Third World levels of virtually non-existent benefits and safeguards for health and work safety.

The problems caused North America, particularly the United States, by the weakness of the economic system of Mexico, are problems that should be addressed as such and not in a proxy fashion. Canada, after all, permits the less developed countries to have their goods enter Canada free of tariffs, although there are some quotas. That, however, is a direct relationship, and those direct relationships, I believe, should be a prime preoccupation of the Canadian Government, because I believe they are worth expanding and that Canada can improve its assistance to economic development in the Third World by so doing.

As the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) pointed out, why would the Government want this excessive deeming power unless, frankly, it is to satisfy the demands of the multinational corporations and major national corporations, or unless it is to facilitate the way in which corporations play off workers in one country against those in another.

Ever since the advent of the production line system, ever since the advent of multinational corporations, it has sadly and regrettably been a dream of the executives and investors in multinational corporations that there would be complete substitute ability of the labour component, that it would become totally fungible so that a product could be produced in any given country for a market, no matter where, and it could be produced under the most favourable—simply, the least costly—conditions and that workers could be treated with the same interchangeability, the same casual acknowledgment, as the dollar bill that goes with so many others to make up the capital investments required.

That is surely not something Canadian Governments, particularly faced with the economic power of U.S.-based multinationals, should be subscribing to. That surely is not the model of democracy, not the model of an economy that Canadians should be subscribing to. The model of democracy that we have heretofore ascribed to, is a model in which the people, by the exercise of their vote franchise, select governments to represent their interests. It is a model in which governments have the power to control the activities of corporations.

What is being promoted by Clause 15 in its present form, and what is being promoted, regrettably, by the Government's trade deal with the United States, is a model in which decision-making and power are shifted away from democratically elected governments into the arena of the boardrooms, the stock markets and the corporate decision-making investing processes.

While none of us deny the need for power in those fields to accomplish necessary economic development in a free society and a mixed economy, what we are saying, and what we have to say at every point, is that we will not allow those powers to override the powers of Government, either by subverting them or by openly abrogating them, which this will be part of.

The raising of economic standards in the Third World is not something—and here we include Mexico—that is going to be accomplished by the simple provision, whether deliberate or by neglect, of loopholes through which Third World products can flow. It is only going to be accomplished, in terms of long-term economic development and in terms of a democratically based economic development, by deliberate policy and strategy initiatives taken by the wealthier countries.

That is the ultimate tragedy of the Maquiladora industrial program. It is not something that has come about because of American goodwill towards Mexico, because of a wish of the Americans to help, although, heaven knows, it would be in its own economic interest to help. It has not come about because of that. It has come about because of these loopholes and because those American corporations have seen the loopholes and have started moving the jobs out of Michigan and Ohio and down into the northern provinces of Mexico.

It irks me when I hear the Minister complain that the New Democratic Party wants to debate amendments like this in the context of a tariff harmonization Bill. What are we to debate if the Government will not put its free trade measure before the House of Commons for debate? We will debate whatever we are given to debate. And we will talk about free trade because the Government cannot have it both ways.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Debate.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister when he spoke a little earlier today said something about this amendment not being necessary, that when we see the details of the so-called free trade agreement with the United States we will see that this amendment was irrelevant, redundant and unnecessary. If that is true, if the Minister knows now what is in the final text, surely it is incumbent upon him to have one of his colleagues stand and read that portion of the agreement he seems to now know makes this amendment unnecessary or redundant, whatever words he used.

If the Minister knows that much about it, surely he owes it to the House of Commons to tell us. Without that, I do not believe him. One must accept the Minister's word. I will accept his word, but there is a difference in accepting it and believing it. I hope the Minister will see to it that one of his colleagues tells us forthwith what is in the agreement that makes this amendment unnecessary. I feel ashamed as a Canadian that we would take part in aiding and abetting what the United States wants to do by the back door that we would not allow it to do by the front door.

I have always believed that Canada should make a direct trade agreement with Mexico. I notice that the price of a head of cauliflower is now $3. The price went up by about $1.50 in one week in the City of Ottawa. These are vegetables brought up from Arizona and California. Let us make a deal with Mexico for vegetables. It is up to here in vegetables. Let us send Mexico what it needs from us in technological assistance, in breeding cattle, and all the things it needs from us, and get vegetables in return. However, what we are doing is allowing this 18th century or 19th century exploitation by the United States, allowing it to do through the back door what we would not let it do through the front door, under the guise of trade harmonization. It may try to have some harmony, but in that harmony the name of the tune will be the Star Spangled Banner.

The Americans pay in northern Mexico 65 cents an hour. That is economic tyranny. It is economic imperialism of the worst kind. For the United States to tell us that that kind of production in the northern part of Mexico, within a few miles of the Rio Grande River, is considered to be made in the United States, is the worst kind of economic chicanery. Canada should not be a party to that. It should not aid and abet that kind of imperialism.

I do not understand the drive of the Government for a free trade arrangement. It will go to any lengths to get it. It will do so, not only at the expense of Canadian industry and Canadian citizens, but at the expense of citizens in a third country. Canada makes special arrangements for tariff concessions to developing and Third World countries, but we do it directly. There is no going behind anyone's back, no behind the scenes negotiations between Washington and Ottawa. I do not believe this country should be party to that kind of nonsense.

I am a very strong believer in the principle enunciated by a world famous historical figure who said that "labour is prior and superior to capital. Without labour, capital cannot function". Yet when we, not only allow this kind of exploitation by multinational corporations, some of whom have branch plants in Canada, but aid and abet it, we are not deserving of very much credibility in the eyes of the rest of the world, particularly the under developed and developing nations.

Surely there is not a single Canadian who would not be willing to pay more for a product from Mexico produced at a labour cost of $3 or $4 or $5 an hour instead of 65 cents an hour. I do not know of any self-respecting Canadian who calls himself civilized or Christian who would be in favour of saving a few pennies at the expense of a fellow human being in a country like Mexico.

Neither should the Cabinet have the authority to do these things by itself. It should have to present a Bill to Parliament every time it wants to make changes. Every time it wants to resort to something like this, it should be subject to public scrutiny and examination. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), at the First Ministers' Conference, said he did not believe in government by committee. We have too darn much government by committee in this country as it is, and have had for many years. That committee is called the Cabinet, the Governor in Council, that does things that in many other countries have to come before a legislature. Why should we broaden even more the power that the Governor in Council has?

This is not a routine regulation or a simple change in procedure. This is an attempt to pacify and satisfy the U.S. Government and accept goods from them, under our law, which they consider made in the U.S.A. The fact that this stuff is made in Mexico by an American company paying 65 cents an hour does not qualify it as made in the U.S.A. Whatever deal Mexico has made with the U.S. is Mexico's business. We should not be party to this kind of economic imperialism. I find it disgraceful that Canada would sit back and make changes in its law that would allow this to happen. I find it incredible.

I would be willing to give my consent to have the Minister speak a second time on this motion. If other Members agree, he can get up and tell us what the final agreement contains that makes this amendment unnecessary.

Mr. Hockin: It will be there.

Mr. Rodriguez: When?

Mr. Benjamin: If he cannot give us the whole thing, and we will be lucky to get it by December 7, he can fish out that paragraph or two paragraphs or whatever it is to prove to us that what he says about this amendment is true. Until he can do that, we consider it a most necessary amendment and we will debate it and many others because this Bill goes beyond simply harmonizing our tariff arrangements with the rest of the world. The main reason for the Bill, and the reason the Government feels it should be passed as quickly as possible, is that it will fit in with the requirements of the U.S. administration.

We have here another example of Canadian law being made in Washington, not in Ottawa. This is supine acquiescence by the Government. We have seen this in its predecessors as well. When the Americans holler, jump, and my friends across the way ask: how high?

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment will prove acceptable to the majority of the House.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I want to address this amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

and say that the Liberal Caucus and the Liberal Party are very concerned about the fact that the Government, which has yet to table the final text of the Agreement, would have us adopt, more or less sight unseen, a proposal that would very substantially change the way Canadians trade or do business with the rest of the world.

The amendment before the House seeks to exclude from this market certain foreign products, products that are manufactured in Mexico.

[English]

I want to read Clause 15 very carefully. It says:

> 15(1) For the purposes of this Act, goods originate in a country if the whole of the value of the goods is produced in that country.
> (2) The Governor in Council may make regulations.
> (a) deeming goods, the whole or a portion of the value of which is produced outside a country, to originate in that country for the purposes of this Act;—

In simple terms, that means that the Americans could have products made wholly or in part in Mexico, declare them to be American products, and bring them into Canada under a so-called free trade agreement. I invite the Minister to clarify that clause of the Bill because it addresses the rule of origin and our preoccupations with respect to clarifying the Bill.

Mr. Speaker, the areas covered by a trade agreement between two countries are usually discussed beforehand and submitted for serious debate. The Government keeps telling us we should accept, without argument, the Mulroney-Reagan proposal for free trade between . . .

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt, but the Hon. Member will have seven minutes remaining when we again call Orders of the Day.

It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

PRIVATE ENTERPRISE

TRIBUTE TO MR. VINCENT CACCIATORE

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, last Sunday, on November 29, the brand new Pie IX agro-food complex was officially opened, representing a twenty-million-dollar investment and 600 new jobs for Montreal East. The organization responsible for the success of this innovative venture is the Société de développement immobilière COIMAC Inc., headed by its president, Mr. Vincent Cacciatore.

Mr. Cacciatore is Canadian entrepreneurship incarnate. He started in a small shop, and today he owns the most modern agro-food complex on the North American continent.

Today, in this House and in the presence of all Canadians, I wish to pay tribute to his success.

ABORTION

ONTARIO—PROPOSED OPENING OF CLINICS CONDEMNED

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, the Province of Ontario is about to condone the opening of 12 free-standing abortion clinics. Those clinics will be nominally attached to certain hospitals in order to become quasi-legal. This action is flouting and is in direct violation of a federal law by providing abortion on demand.

By its actions the Ontario Government has been flouting and ignoring the federal law that prohibits abortion on demand. The medical profession, by and large, has been masking abortions on demand by calling them therapeutic abortions, knowing full well that only in two instances can an abortion be truly called therapeutic—when there is cancer of the reproductive system, or when a pregnancy occurs in the fallopian tubes.

Sixty thousand unborn human beings are killed in Canada each year under the guise of so-called therapeutic abortions. This cannot be allowed to continue. The federal Government has the responsibility to see to it that federal legislation is carried out by the provinces, and that federal statutes are enforced.

How many more thousands of unborn babies must die before this carnage is legally brought to an end? This is the question that Canadians must ask themselves and come to grips with, if we are ever to get rid of this scourge and the condonation of abortions on demand.

OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY

HAZARDOUS MATERIALS INFORMATION REVIEW ACT—NON-APPLICATION IN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, once again the safety of Canadian workers is jeopardized by the haphazard implementation of legislation that is meant to protect them.

In June of this year the House passed the Hazardous Materials Information Review Act, with the support of all political Parties. This legislation was introduced in order that Canadian workers would be informed of the types of hazardous materials that were in their place of work. The development of the legislation involved all concerned groups. Business, labour, provincial Governments and the federal Government were consulted as the legislation was formulated in order to ensure the uniformity of this legislation throughout Canada.

We now discover that this is not the case. Nova Scotia has arranged for its claims to be processed outside the framework used by the rest of the country. This decision was made late last year at a meeting which did not involve the Official Opposition, the NDP, or the Canadian Labour Congress. No one was informed until after the Bill was passed that Nova Scotia was to be exempt. Now the workers of Nova Scotia have been left without the protection enjoyed by their brothers and sisters across the country.

Why has this happened? Why did the Governments of Canada and Nova Scotia make such an unusual and secret arrangement? Is it because of the influence of the Michelin Company in that province? It would not be the first time that Michelin has been able to affect the legislation that would protect workers in Nova Scotia.

I call upon the Government to ensure that Nova Scotia complies with federal legislation, and ensure that there is a national agreement program in that province which falls under the same jurisdiction and requirements that the rest of Canada has agreed to follow.

U.S.S.R.—PLIGHT OF YURIJ SHUKHEVYCH

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of the House the plight of Yurij Shukhevych, a Ukrainian political prisoner being held in the U.S.S.R. In 1948, at the age of 14, Mr. Shukhevych was arrested and sentenced to 10 years in prison because he was the son of General Roman Shukhevych, the Commander-in-Chief of the Ukrainian insurgent army, who was killed in 1950.

When his sentence expired in 1958, Mr. Shukhevych was arrested again by the KGB and sentenced to an additional 10 years for refusing to renounce his father. He completed that sentence and was again arrested in 1972 and sentenced to a further 15 years' detention. It was alleged that Yurij Shukhevych was involved in anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda.

The deprivation and isolation which Mr. Yurij Shukhevych has endured over the years have taken their toll. His physical condition has declined seriously, and he has suffered partial loss of vision. His captors have denied him access to any medical care and, therefore, his health continues to deteriorate.

In the spirit of Canada's commitment to human rights, I urge the Department of External Affairs to work in conjunction with immigration officials in Canada and in the U.S.S.R. to assist Yurij Shukhevych's efforts to obtain proper medical attention here in Canada.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—ABSENCE OF FINAL TEXT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, Canadians find it rather odd that we have not yet seen the legal document on which the trade deal is to be implemented. We all know the importance of the small print when we sign an agreement, buy a house, et cetera.

In addition, two years ago when the Government of Canada set out to get an agreement on trade with the U.S.A., we were told that Canada was going to seek a bargain, an exemption from U.S. trade laws, in order that we could sell our steel, potash, fish, lumber, et cetera on the American market free from the danger of being hurt by countervailing duties or other penalties.

Unfortunately, if we read carefully what has been announced so far by the Government, we did not get the bargain and the exemption we were seeking. Instead, we got a review panel which will decide whether U.S. laws, not ours, are fairly applied in the case of a dispute. When there will be one, whose opinion do you think will win? The opinion of the bigger or of the smaller partner in the dispute? History is full of examples where in the end the bigger partner always wins.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

TRIBUTE TO LUC GRAVEL AND EMPLOYEES OF CIPH IN ALMA, LAC-SAINT-JEAN, QUÉBEC

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, in Alma in the Lac-Saint-Jean area, a business where both management and employees are either physically or mentally handicapped has been operating for four years.

The business consists of a service station, without a machine shop but with a carwash, a convenience store, a truck and fishing-boat rental outlet, a video rental club, a photocopy service, a soft-drink outlet and a fire extinguisher sale and service outlet.

This enterprise, the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean Corporation d'intégration des personnes handicapées, is unique in Canada. The CIPH, as it is called, is a business without a boss, where managers work from their wheel chairs and where junior employees, who were still in institutions not long ago, are today participating in a unique experiment in two-fold community integration.

Luc Gravel, a special education teacher and head of external services at Villa du Lys, masterminded this undertaking. Mrs. Hélène Perron is chairman of the board of directors. Today, they want to persuade Petro-Canada to set aside one of it service stations in each region in this country as a potential CIPH.

Congratulations to Luc Gravel and all employees!

OPPOSITION TO CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, over the past three weeks I have received more than 100 letters from residents of my constituency on the Reagan-Mulroney trade deal. They are still coming in at a rate of 10 per day, and to date all but five oppose this trade give-away. I want to share with the House some of the concerns of citizens of northwestern Ontario.

Mr. William Blyth of Dryden states that the deal is not for Canada. He states, "It's up to you, John, and your Party to have this Government out before our country is in a greater mess".

Mr. Harry Brigden of Ear Falls says that times are difficult in the forest industry, especially for small logging contractors. He states that the trade deal "would make matters worse".

Mr. Lawrence De Gagne, a small businessman from the Fort Frances area, writes, "I have spoken with many business people and some general citizens about free trade. I have yet to hear one of these people agree with it". He adds, "I wonder where Mr. Bulloch got the news that small businessmen want free trade".

A man from Balmertown writes about the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), "I think he is selling us out for big business interests—typical Conservatives".

Mr. Roger Woods of Sioux Lookout states that he has doubts about the credibility of the Government to even negotiate a fair deal.

Time does not permit me, Mr. Speaker, to share the concerns of other northerners right now, but the message I am getting is that this trade deal is a bad deal and that it belongs in the same scrap heap as the Tories' attempts to deindex seniors' pensions when they first got into office.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

DISCREDITING REPUTATION OF THE LATE BILLY BISHOP, V.C.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, over the past three or four years there has been an increasing outcry of protest over the release of a National Film Board film, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss".

More recently it has been discovered that the director of the film, Mr. Paul Cowan, has taken deliberate liberties with the truth in that film in order to discredit Billy Bishop, the holder of the Victoria Cross. Even after Mr. Cowan's fraud came to light, his employers at the National Film Board refused to remove the film from circulation.

• (1410)

I call upon the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) to launch an inquiry into why such a film was made, despite the overwhelming evidence to the contrary that its theme was erroneous, and why, when the truth behind the director's intent became known, the National Film Board did not step in immediately—indeed, it still has not done so—and retrieve this monstrous waste of taxpayers' money.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND POTATOES—INCREASED INSPECTION FEES

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the potato farmers in Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick are fed up with the Government.

As of today, Agriculture Canada is doubling the inspection fees to 6 cents a hundredweight at shipping points. We realize that potatoes must be inspected before they can be shipped out of a province, but our P.E.I. producers must export about 60 per cent of their tablestock potatoes whereas Ontario and Quebec growers sell nearly all of their potatoes in their own provinces.

The doubling of these inspection fees blatantly discriminates against our P.E.I. farmers. To make matters even worse, the Government has also increased the inspection fees at the destination points by 2 cents to 12 cents a hundredweight.

Our farmers have been hard hit in recent years and the current tablestock prices are still below the cost of production. The higher inspection fees will be a terrible burden for our farmers. Why does the federal Government treat our potato growers with utter contempt? I urge the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Government to reverse this decision immediately.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

LEGAL FEES INCURRED BY WAR AMPUTATIONS OF CANADA

Mr. Stan Graham (Kootenay East—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, in November, 1986, the War Amputations of Canada launched an action in the Supreme Court of Ontario requesting an injunction against the distribution of "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", a National Film Board film. The National Film Board declined to defend the film and instead announced it would delay the action on procedural grounds.

I call upon the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) to invoke Section 21 of the National Film Act and request from the NFB an accounting of its decision to try to pass on to the War Amputations of Canada $10,000 in legal fees for an action which never occurred. I ask the Minister to prevent a gross travesty of justice perpetrated by the National Film Board of Canada.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CHILD WELFARE PROGRAMS—CALL FOR SECURE FUNDING

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, there is a crisis in funding for the delivery of quality native child welfare programs in Canada to which the Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs (Mr. McKnight) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) seem oblivious. The combination of poverty, housing shortages and chronic unemployment in native communities across Canada places excessive demands on existing child welfare agencies.

In Manitoba, native child welfare agencies are carrying case loads double the level acceptable within the province, and this Conservative Government has failed to make any attempt to remedy the situation. Instead, the consistent record of underfunding continues with no scheduled negotiations in sight.

Social development groups across Canada, including the Canadian Council on Social Development, the Catholic Pastoral Centre, the National Association of Friendships, and family services groups from every province join with me today in calling on the Conservative Government to make this issue a priority and work with the agencies in Manitoba to devise a plan to secure funding so that our native children will not be faced with futures shrouded in a cycle of poverty and despair.

Of course, on-reserve housing shortages aggravate the child welfare crisis. The Minister must wake up to this reality and seriously look at increasing the level of funding for housing generally and the Bill C-31 housing program.

Adequate housing is a prerequisite to improving the quality of life for all peoples. The Minister has displayed an incapacity in grasping this somewhat important fact.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PLIGHT OF NEWFOUNDLAND AND LABRADOR FISHERY WORKERS

Mr. Morrissey Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, for several months now I have been keeping various Ministers informed that there are hundreds of fishplant workers and fishermen who have not had sufficient earnings this year due to low in shore fish landings to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits at this time.

I make the request again, and I beg the Government to institute a program immediately to alleviate the financial hardships these people are suffering, not only in my own riding but in other areas throughout Newfoundland and Labrador.

NATIONAL HIGHWAY SAFETY WEEK

NEED TO EMPHASIZE COLLECTIVE EFFORT

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, this week is National Highway Safety Week. The theme of this thirty-second annual campaign is particularly well chosen: "You can improve highway safety", and it puts the responsibility for highway safety squarely on the shoulders of each one of us.

In Canada last year, 3,123 motor vehicle passengers died as a result of highway accidents, while 258,808 people were injured. Although the statistics are depressing, people still think it can't happen to them. I know from personal experience, Mr. Speaker, that highway accidents can happen to anyone, and that is why I would urge all Canadians to practise defensive driving, to abide by the traffic regulations and to buckle up, because we must make a joint effort to reduce the number of accidents on our highways. I want to congratulate all organizations and individuals who are actively promoting highway safety, and I maintain that by keeping up this joint effort, we will be able to say, truly, that it will not happen to us.

MULTICULTURALISM

SUPPORT FOR NEW CANADIAN MULTICULTURALISM ACT

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, it is not often that one has the chance to participate in an event which will clearly be of great significance in parliamentary history. I believe that the introduction of the Canadian Multiculturalism Act in the House of Commons today is such an event.

The message of this Act is strong and very clear. It affirms the multicultural reality of our society. It says that cultural diversity enriches the communities of this land. It says that this diversity makes us more interesting and compassionate people while providing opportunities for our future prosperity in a global economy.

It is interesting to note that Canadian communications expert Marshall McLuhan first coined the term "global village". Canada is that global village, welcoming people from all parts of the world and making them part of our unique Canadian family. Now we are going beyond that early definition to become not a global village but an international nation.

The sights and sounds of our multicultural identity can be found not just in the vibrant neighborhoods of our cities but in towns, villages and remote hamlets throughout Canada. We are a people of many different origins, traditions and heritages. Therein lie the strength of our country and its greatness.

I take great pride in supporting the proposed Canadian Multiculturalism Act, and I applaud the Government, which has worked with diligence and vision, to prepare this very important and timely legislation.

PARKER COMMISSION REPORT—CALL FOR PUBLICATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has finally admitted having received the long awaited Parker Commission Report concerning the allegations of conflict of interest against the Member of Parliament for York—Peel (Mr. Stevens).

Yesterday the Prime Minister stated that the Justice Department is now reviewing the 500-page document. As interesting as this may be, it is not a justifiable reason to delay access to this document by Members of Parliament. If it is a substantial report, as the Prime Minister says, then let all Members of Parliament see it and let the Prime Minister table it in the House of Commons today. The integrity of our parliamentary system is something which interests all Members of Parliament and all Canadians, not just the Prime Minister and his Cabinet colleagues.

Could it be that the Government is preparing a package on reform of public sector ethics before tabling the document in the House? If this is the case, then I suggest that the Prime Minister and his colleagues should have thought of the consequences before getting themselves in trouble, not after the acts were committed.

MULTICULTURALISM

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to congratulate the Government on the introduction today of an historic Bill. The proposed Canadian Multiculturalism Act has been with us in spirit for many decades, yet we have lacked the legislative base which makes this Act so important not only for what Canada is today but for what our country can become tomorrow.

The Act will ensure that we continue to be a country in which Canadians of all origins have equal opportunities, in which their heritage is enhanced and shared, and in which social and working relations are based on mutual respect and understanding. In addition, the principles espoused in this Act will become part of the mandate of all federal government institutions and ministries.

This country enjoys a rich and dynamic cultural diversity. That diversity can contribute to our education system, to our scholarship, to international exchanges of scientific research and artistic achievement, and it can contribute to increasing global diplomacy and international trade. Using the knowledge and the skills of Canadians whose roots create a world-wide network of communications, this country can only be greater than it is already.

I believe that I voice the sentiments of all my hon. colleagues in offering my wholehearted support for the proposed Canadian Multiculturalism Act.

AIR SAFETY

AIRPORT SECURITY PROCEDURES—COMPUTERIZED BAGGAGE MATCHING SYSTEM

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Transport. Since the Air India disaster of June 1985, the question of airport and passenger security has continued to be a major concern of Canadians. First, a CBC reporter in Montreal got through security with a fake pistol and fake dynamite sticks; then it was learned that half of Pearson International's 1,500 security guards failed a written test on national security standards; then Transport Canada's own personnel reported that some 25 per cent of fake weapons deliberately carried through airport screening checks went completely undetected. Now we learn that there are yet more serious flaws with a new computerized baggage matching system at Pearson Airport.

Can the Minister explain why the new security measures his Department announced in April of last year are flawed and do not seem to offer proper security to airline passengers?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I suppose one should ask first where the Hon. Member learned about these tremendous security lapses. If he learned anything at all, it must have been from CBC Radio which this morning had an entirely inaccurate report on this very subject. That is what he says he learned it from.

Mr. Assad Kotaite, the President of the Council of ICAO, the International Civil Aviation Organization for those who do not know what the initials mean, noted last August that Canada now leads the world in airport baggage screening security. That is the state of security.

I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that since the terrible incident involving the Air India aircraft which occurred in June of 1985, the Government has authorized and is spending a total of something like $60 million on improving and enhancing civil aviation security at our airports. We have authorized in excess of another 100 person-years. A series of nine steps have been taken, including doubling the number of RCMP officers who are now located at our various airports. At the 10 major international airports, including Vancouver and Gander, Toronto, of course, Ottawa, Mirabel, Halifax, Winnipeg and Calgary, we have spent $24 million on enhancing security.

I will tell you this, Mr. Speaker, our system will stand up to that of any other country in the world. I quote the President of ICAO for confirmation.

CBC REPORT ON BAGGAGE HANDLING

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, we are not disputing the fact that certain measures have been taken. We are only saying that there are major flaws in those measures.

Some reports claim that the new computerized baggage-matching system used for domestic and international flights is ineffective against terrorist bomb attacks. The CBC reported this morning that over 50,000 pieces of luggage per day are placed on board domestic and international flights with no security whatsoever. In this case, what is the Minister doing to correct this major flaw and to reassure the travelling public?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, what I intend to do in this case is to correct CBC Radio, that is what needs the correction.

In October, 1986, Canada instituted a complete baggage match system for all international flights from Canada to the rest of the world. This was a requirement that ICAO said should start by December 19, 1987. As the Hon. Member can see, we are a year and several months ahead of ICAO's schedule. As a matter of fact, western European countries have called upon ICAO to give them some more breathing time and to delay this request until April of 1989. However, we have now had it in effect for a year and several months.

In addition, the situation with domestic flights is that, once baggage is checked into the system, the passenger cannot get access to it. If there is a risk situation or threats phoned in, special measures need to be taken and then the passenger match system or an x-ray system goes into effect. However, in the ordinary course of events, that is the security procedure taken on domestic flights. We are working on a baggage match system for domestic flights but we are not able to start that until we get computer systems that can handle it because of the chaos that would otherwise be caused.

SYSTEM'S TWO WEAKNESSES—INQUIRY AS TO WHAT MEASURES GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO TAKE

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, the security problem is not the CBC but the airport baggage screening system. In fact, the computerized baggage matching system can be circumvented in two ways: first, a passenger who becomes ill at the last minute fails to board and does not withdraw his baggage; second, a passenger on stand-by may be turned down at the last minute while his baggage goes off with the plane just the same.

What kind of measures does the Minister intend to take to correct these two flaws in the system?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there are no weaknesses in the system. The baggage match system is in full effect on international flights.

There are two situations in which exceptions are made.

Mr. Benjamin: Bull Durum.

Mr. Crosbie: It may be Bull Durum or it may be anything the hon. gentleman wants to make it. He should know better than to sit there fuming away about Bull Durum.

On international flights, two exceptions are permitted. If someone is taken ill at the last moment, the baggage may remain on the aircraft. Sorry, that is for a trans-border flight. If the person is an employee of an air carrier and does not get on the flight because it is full and the employee has a bag on it, that is permitted, as it is if a passenger has been denied boarding because of stand-by status. These are the only exceptions for international flights that are allowed when the baggage match system is in effect.

X-RAYING OF BAGGAGE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister and is on the same subject. Canadian air passengers assume that they are being protected by the Government of Canada. The facts seem to suggest otherwise.

I would like to ask the Minister whether all baggage, both national and international, is x-rayed before it is boarded onto aircraft, and if not, why is it not?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that is just the point. The Government has chosen to follow the recommendations of the International Civil Aviation Organization. Rather than having a system of x-ray examination of baggage, we have chosen the baggage match system as being the best system. Therefore, on international flights there is no longer an x-ray of baggage. If there were to be a special risk situation, that would be different, but in the ordinary course of events there is a baggage match. The baggage is matched up with the passengers.

By the way, that is why the union official quoted by the CBC story is so eager to speak. He represents the persons who are employed to do the x-raying. There are fewer of them now doing the x-raying because of the baggage match system. They naturally prefer the x-ray system to the baggage match system, but we are going by what security experts and the International Civil Aviation Organization advises to do.

SECURITY MEASURES—PROVISION OF PERSONNEL

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Minister will agree that the baggage match system is flawed in that if a terrorist wanted to bring a bomb on board, he could under the baggage match system. However, if the x-ray system were utilized with all baggage being x-rayed before being boarded on aircraft, security would be enhanced.

In September of 1985 a secret report which reviewed airline and airport security in Canada stated the following:

> It could however, be argued that DOT rather than the carriers should provide the personnel necessary to operate the security measures for checking passengers, baggage, and cargo.

In light of the serious problems over the last few years, why did the Government not adopt this policy proposal?

• (1430)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we are following the system which was followed by our predecessor Government. Apparently it thought that the present system was in order. Its supporters are now having second thoughts.

I will point out once again to the hon. gentleman that which has been said by those who should know, not those who listen to CBC Radio at seven o'clock in the morning waiting to pick something up for Question Period so they will have something with which to fill their empty little minds and to ask about.

The aviation industry in Canada and the Canadian Government have taken the lead role in the development of a passenger baggage match system and have more than fulfilled their international commitments. We lead the world in airport baggage screening security according to the President of ICAO. I will take him over CBC Radio, lock, stock, and barrel, any day of the year.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—DELAY IN PRODUCING FINAL TEXT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. He will recall that when he initialled the trade deal on October 4 he said that we would see the final deal in a matter of two or three weeks because only the legal wording was being worked on.

We see in news reports today that Simon Reisman indicates that the main areas of disagreement which exist include maritime shipping, energy, textiles, autos, and the dispute settlement mechanism. These are, in a sense, the major portions of the entire agreement.

Will the Prime Minister of Canada please explain to us just what is going on and when we can expect to see the final draft?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that the Hon. Member can show us anything that says that Mr. Reisman said this is what they are talking about. I read the same story from which the Hon. Member is reading. It says "apparently" this is what is holding them up.

They are down to the final stages in solving the interpretation problems with the agreement as they are putting it together. We are hopeful that it will be available for this House and the Canadian people in the very near future.

Mr. Cassidy: You've been saying that for weeks.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, we have been hearing about these final stages and that it is 99 per cent complete for weeks on end.

PROJECTED DEADLINE FOR PRODUCTION OF FINAL TEXT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. After the initialing of the agreement, "the most important trade deal in trade history", in the words of the Prime Minister, the Prime Minister promised the people of Canada that they would see the completed text by the end of October.

That time has now come and gone. He then promised the people of Canada that the final text would be available by the middle of November which would allow ample time for evaluation. That did not occur. He then said that it would be available by the end of November. That did not occur.

Will the Prime Minister indicate what his most recent promise is as to when the people of Canada will see the final text so that they can make a fair, total, and accurate evaluation of the deal?

Mr. Cassidy: Answer, Brian. Don't chicken out.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister did not make those statements in the way in which the Hon. Member said that he did. That is very unfair and he knows it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cassidy: He did and the people of Canada know it.

Mr. McDermid: The Prime Minister said we hoped to have it in three weeks time. He did not promise it in three weeks time.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap has asked a question and the Parliamentary Secretary is replying. I know that the Hon. Member would want his own colleagues to give the Parliamentary Secretary a chance to reply.

Mr. McDermid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member has been misrepresenting what the Prime Minister has been saying.

That Party has been saying that we should rush into things. We want to make sure, on behalf of Canadians, that this agreement is done rightly and properly. We are making sure that every i is dotted, that every t is crossed, and that it makes absolute sense.

Ms. Mitchell: Scrap it.

Mr. McDermid: It will be released very shortly. We are confident of that. It will be a great agreement for Canada. We are really confident of that.

REQUEST THAT DATE BE GIVEN FOR PRODUCTION OF FINAL TEXT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says that the Government wants to take the time to ensure that all the i's are dotted and all the t's are crossed. We want to have time to evaluate the total agreement. We want to see the agreement before that evaluation is made.

I will direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Committee hearings are being held today. Monday is the last day for hearings. From reports today it looks as though we will not see this agreement until Monday at least, if not beyond that.

The Prime Minister has indicated time and again that we would have enough time to evaluate this particular deal. It was the end of October, then the middle of November, then the end of November. It is now the beginning of December and reports today indicate that the final agreement is still a number of days away. There are only a handful of days left between now and the parliamentary Christmas recess. There are only 30 days left before the deal is to be signed.

Will the Prime Minister of Canada indicate clearly when the people of Canada and their elected representatives in the House of Commons will have an opportunity to evaluate the completed final draft? We have been waiting through a number of promises. Will he not promise us, in a clear and distinct way, when we can expect that draft?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am totally surprised at the concern of the Hon. Member and the Liberal Party. The Liberal Party said that it will tear up the agreement. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre said the other day that if his Party had anything to do about it they would tear up the agreement. Why is the Hon. Member concerned about seeing it? He has already made up his mind.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cassidy: You're unbelievable. This is a democracy. This isn't Haiti, this is Canada.

Mr. McDermid: The Canadian people will have ample opportunity to examine the final agreement and this House will have ample opportunity to examine legislation that arises from the agreement.

Mr. Cassidy: Nonsense.

Mr. McDermid: There will be all kinds of opportunity for Canadians and parliamentarians to examine this deal very carefully.

Mr. Riis: After the fact.

Mr. Cassidy: Where's the Prime Minister? Why won't he answer? He's afraid. He chickened out.

Mr. Grisé: Who's afraid of you?

Mr. Nystrom: Where's the Gucci boy?

REQUEST THAT SIGNING OF AGREEMENT BE POSTPONED

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a further supplementary question to the Prime Minister since the Parliamentary Secretary has totally missed the point, that is, that Canadians want to see the final deal before it is agreed to and initialled.

The Commons committee will complete its public hearings on Monday. Those public hearings will obviously be finished before the final text is available. Can the Prime Minister, therefore, indicate that he will change his own timetable and postpone the signing of the agreement from January 2 to a later date in order to give the Commons committee proper time to hold public hearings based upon the final document so that Canadians will have a right to participate? After all, this is a democracy and people do have a right to participate in important decisions.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there has been an agreement or policy of any Government in this country on which there has been such wide consultation with the Canadian public.

Mr. McCurdy: Oh, get off it.

Mr. McDermid: I can cite chapter and verse of the consultations which have taken place, continue to take place, and will continue to take place with the affected parties. Canadians will have ample opportunity to examine this agreement. There is no doubt whatsoever about that in our minds.

REQUEST THAT COMMITTEE HEARINGS BE EXTENDED

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary knows better. He knows that as a result of testimony before the committee women's organizations, social organizations, labour organizations, and consumer organizations have all been denied any opportunity to consult on this agreement before it is signed.

• (1440)

Now we are faced with a situation in which the Prime Minister's word to the House is being denied once again. He is once again breaking a promise to the Canadian people giving them a right to participate in this decision.

The Parliamentary Secretary has not answered. Considering the terrible delay in providing a final document, is the Government prepared to give the Commons committee an extension of its time so that it can hold hearings based upon the final document? Will it set the signing date back so that Canadians can participate? That is the point of these questions. Will you give Canadians the right to participate in making this decision before you sign this country away?

Mr. Speaker: The Chair hesitates at all times to interrupt any Hon. Member when asking a question. But I must ask Hon. Members not to use personal pronouns in addressing other Hon. Members. The reason is very clear. It leads to disorder. I would ask experienced Members especially to keep that in mind.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would simply invite an experienced Member of the House who has been here for some time to compare the consultation in this particular process with anything that has taken place before. There were 15 SAGIT'S created that involved consultation with the industry across the country. There were nine First Ministers' meetings, some lasting up to eight or nine hours, to discuss the matter.

Mr. Cassidy: All in secret.

Mr. Mulroney: There were full-day debates in the House of Commons—

Mr. McCurdy: What about the people?

Mr. Mulroney: —and ample debate at committees and in Question Period. There were parliamentary committees of the Ontario Government and the Quebec Government. There had been prior consultation and analysis in Royal Commissions such as the McDonald Royal Commission.

Mr. Gauthier: Still no document.

Mr. Cassidy: You do not care about the people.

Mr. Mulroney: There will be further opportunity to discuss—

Mr. Cassidy: What about the people?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Shut up!

Mr. Cassidy: What about the people, Mr. Prime Minister?

An Hon. Member: You do not represent the people, Cassidy.

Mr. Grisé: Where is your majority?

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, this is a pattern of consultation with the Canadian people through parliamentary committees, through debates, through their Members of Parliament, that I believe is probably unprecedented in its thoroughness. There can be further debate and further consultation as time goes on.

To put it into perspective, I invite my hon. friends who are being so critical of this degree of consultation to compare it with the last time the federal Government concluded a major trading initiative, which was 23 years ago when the Government of Canada concluded the Auto Pact. The Liberals concluded the Auto Pact without so much as a "by your leave" to the Government of Ontario and without a single reference to the Parliament of Canada. There is the difference between our approach of consulting with the people, and the Liberals and the NDP who cared not for it to be raised.

ICAO REQUIREMENT FOR CHECKING BAGGAGE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have a series of questions for the Minister of Transport. He and his predecessors have repeatedly avowed that there will be no compromise in safety and security in air or any other mode of transportation. I wrote to the Minister on November 5 and gave him five cases of airlines violating the ICAO requirement for baggage sequencing. I have seven more cases which I will give to him.

Employees are being put through the wringer by being subjected to fingerprinting, credit rating, loyalties, police records and questioning on sexual proclivities, all of which applies to their spouses as well. If the Minister's security is so good under ICAO, will he explain the case of Air Canada flight 870 on November 13, Mirabel to Charles de Gaulle, when a bomb threat was received after the flight took off and the decision was made for the flight not to stop in Gander? Who made the decision and why did someone not overrule it?

What about the case of the Toronto to Puerto Vallarta flight, one passenger was a no-show, bags not removed. I have seven more for him.

Mr. Speaker: Of course the Minister can answer if he wishes. I point out that the Hon. Member is getting into a series of detailed questions that, strictly speaking, might more properly be placed on the Order Paper. However, the Hon. Minister may answer if he wishes.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my answer has to be that I am surprised the hon.

gentleman would try to raise fears among the travelling public by getting up in the House of Commons and giving these detailed examples of certain things that he alleges occurred, when the way to proceed would be to ask for them to be examined to see if they ever happened.

Mr. Blaikie: You never answered him.

Mr. Crosbie: I will answer the hon. gentleman as soon as I can get a chance to answer him. It is possible to get around any security system occasionally. No one in the world will claim that they have a perfect security system. It so happens that Canada has one of the best security systems in the world. However, we all know that there are occasions when someone might be careless or it might not be observed, or whatever. It is possible that there was one of those instances. If so, I would certainly see that action is taken against those who have offended.

The rules are in place. There are just two exceptions to baggage match on an international flight. When an employee who has loaded his bags on a plane discovers all the seats are filled, the plane is allowed to proceed in any event. The other case is where the same thing happens to someone who is waiting on a standby basis. These are the only two exceptions allowed.

Mr. Benjamin: I find it strange that the Minister does not know. I would like to know who is in charge.

AIRPORT SECURITY—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT CONTROL

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, Air Canada Flight 856 on October 24, Toronto to London—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: —flight released before security checks were completed.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: I very much regret interrupting the Hon. Member for Regina West, but the questions are very detailed. The reason that our rules do require that detailed questions of this nature be put on the Order Paper is so that they can be dealt with in a detailed response. I must ask the Hon. Member to put his question, but I will have to rule him out of order if he insists on completing a series of detailed matters. I know that it is his intention, and certainly a laudable one, to point out that he has some information which may indicate that there have been lapses or otherwise. However, I ask him to put the question and stay within the rules.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, since the Minister was so anxious to blame it on the CBC, I was just trying to reverse the situation.

Will the Government agree to take over all airline and airport security, operate it by employees of his Department, regional, provincial, or Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and not leave it to the whims of airlines which want to do it on the cheap and take shortcuts with airline safety and security? Will he take all this over and operate it himself? If not, he better have his resignation ready if anything happens.

• (1450)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that I offended the Hon. Member when I dared to utter a word of criticism about the sacred CBC. If I have offended, oh, Lord, please forgive me.

First, the hon. gentleman gives certain detailed cases and he says it is all my fault. I am supposed to be at 10 international airports and 50 domestic, checking every piece of baggage that goes in every plane in Canada. Then, after having criticized me heavily, he suggests that I take it all over.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: We are not going to take it over, Mr. Speaker. We think we have a satisfactory system. The people who now do the security checks have been through special courses. I saw one at the airport the other day when I was boarding a plane. You could not get your thing through the little pipe business and, by golly, that was it, you were not allowed on. So I believe we have people there who can do the job.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SALARY OF NURSES

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board who will know that nurses working for the federal Government are concerned about the impact of a recent decision of the Canadian Human Rights Commission which has resulted in nurses earning less than nursing assistants who work for them. I wonder if the Minister could indicate what steps he is prepared to take to resolve this inequity?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are certainly aware of this difficult problem that has been caused by the decision of the Canadian Human Rights Commission.

Ms. Copps: You didn't do anything when you met with them.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member for Hamilton East wants to answer the question, perhaps I can sit down and let her do it. Either that, or extend the courtesy to allow us to answer. It is a very important question.

There have been a number of meetings on this issue between members of the Treasury Board and representatives of the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada. A fast-track approach has been established. A substantial interim pay adjustment has been put on the table to try to go part way in resolving this issue.

I should remind the Hon. Member that it is a matter that is within the domain of the collective bargaining process, and together with adjustments and the collective bargaining process we would hope that a satisfactory resolution could be achieved.

I should also say that a meeting was slated for November 24, which was unfortunately cancelled by the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada. As the employer, we stand ready and hope we can sit down and negotiate this in a satisfactory manner.

STATUS OF BILL C-33

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. It concerns the area of public service compensation issues, namely, Bill C-33, which was introduced in the House almost a year ago.

Ms. Copps: Order!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton: I wonder if we can get an indication from the President of the Treasury Board of when the Bill is going to have second reading in the House so it can then go to committee—

Ms. Copps: Come on!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): —for public input?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for that question. We hope to proceed with this very quickly. It is an important Bill that provides a new mechanism for ensuring indexation. We hope that we can work out some sort of arrangement with House Leaders that we might be able to proceed with this in a very expeditious manner.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

TERRA NOVA TELECOMMUNICATIONS—POSSIBILITY OF PRIVATIZATION

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, Terra Nova Telecommunications, commonly known as TNT in Newfoundland, a federal Crown corporation, sent letters to 400 employees in Newfoundland saying that their company could be up for sale as early as next week. The 400 employees who received these letters live in Gander, St. John's, and Cornerbrook. I ask whatever Minister is responsible for this atrocious decision by what logic did the Government of Canada decide to sell this company, which is making money for the people of Canada and employs so many Newfoundlanders, when a sale to its biggest competitor, Newfoundland Telephone—that happens to be, by the way, in Ottawa having meetings—would cause a substantial lay-off of people in the very province that has the highest unemployment rate in the nation?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I suppose it is hard for members of the Opposition to understand that it is extremely hard to sell companies that are not making money. That is one of the reasons for selling them, when they do make money, if you have other reasons for such activity.

The situation is that Canadian National is actively considering the sale of Terra Nova Tel, which is a telephone company subsidiary in Newfoundland, and its other non-rail assets, because it has a huge debt. I think it amounts to something like $3.4 billion. That is why it is deciding whether or not, depending on the prices it can get, it should sell any of its non-rail assets so it can concentrate on its main business, which, of course, is the rail business.

If it does reach a decision that it should sell Terra Nova Telecommunications, it is going to proceed by ensuring that full commercial benefits accrue to the corporation, that the employees are fully protected, that established levels of service are maintained, and that the interests and concerns of any communities involved are protected, including the town of Gander. It will use a commercial bid process, and among the conditions of sale will be a requirement for the new owner to honour all existing labour agreements and assume all pension obligations now in place.

If you want to spread a false rumour, Mr. Speaker, there are three ways; telephone, telegraph, or tell-a-Baker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CN TOWER—FATEFUL PROSPECT

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Minister says that non-rail assets of CN are under consideration for sale. All right, the CN Tower, the tallest free-standing structure in the world, is an non-rail asset. So I ask the broadest free-standing structure in Cabinet, the Minister of Transport, who, if he went to the CN Tower perhaps it would no longer be the tallest free-standing structure in the world, is the CN Tower now under consideration for sale?

Is CN Explorations, with considerable oil and gas holdings in western Canada, also under consideration for sale? Is Northwest Telephone in northern British Columbia also under consideration for sale?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I have pointed out all non-rail assets. Now, unless the CN Tower can go choo-choo-chooing along, it is a non-rail asset, and presumably—well, the Hon. Member knows what he can do with the CN Tower.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I think, given the time, we will move on.

TAX REFORM

FLOW-THROUGH SHARES AND SPECIAL ALLOCATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Last week, l'Association des prospecteurs du Québec asked that flow-through shares and the earned depletion allowance be maintained. Does the Minister realize that this request was supported by a long list of municipalities, by the Quebec Union of Municipalities, metal workers, the Employers Council, the Montreal Stock Exchange, the Quebec Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian association of cities, and so forth? Considering this request, what does the Minister intend to do to maintain an active mining sector in remote areas of Quebec and Canada, when this incentive is taken away?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do want to assure the Hon. Member that I am very much aware of the comments that have been made on flow-through shares. He mentioned a number of representations that have been made. They also were the subject of a recommendation in the report of the Finance Committee, of which he is a member. Quite frankly, as I have said on many occasions, I am not going to be able to comment specifically on these until I present my Ways and Means Motion later on this month, which will make clear where we stand on a number of these issues.

Quite frankly, I thought the Hon. Member was going to ask me a question on the announcement this morning of the real growth in GNP of 4.3 per cent—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —where business investment is up 21 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINING EXPLORATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I intended to ask a question about the economic situation in Schefferville, a town that was closed by the Prime Minister and where the unemployment rate was around 30 to 35 per cent. Last year, thanks to flow-through shares, $19 million was invested in mining exploration in this community. What does the Minister intend to do to maintain this level of exploration after 1988? Or does the Minister of Finance intend to close Schefferville again, after it was closed the first time by the Prime Minister?

• (1500)

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I responded to that question quite clearly in my first answer.

There was something else. Housing investment is up 12 per cent. Machinery and equipment investment is up 28 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

HOLDING OF TRIALS IN FRENCH IN ALBERTA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Yesterday, I asked him why his Government pleaded before the courts in Alberta against the trial proceedings of Luc Paquette being conducted in French. The Prime Minister admitted he was not aware of the facts, but he added nonetheless, and I quote, "this Government has never failed to promote both our official languages."

Today, he must know that my statement was correct, and I ask him: Why is his Government against that trial being conducted in French in Alberta?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, as I said yesterday, I had not read the whole judgment and unfortunately, the Minister of Justice is not in the House today.

But allow me to tell the Hon. Member this about the Paquette decision that is divided in two parts—

[English]

In the first half of the decision in that case, rendered on September 11, 1987, the Alberta Court of Appeal upheld the position of the Attorney General of Canada that the French language can be used as of right in criminal proceedings in Alberta because Section 110 of the former Northwest Territories Act is still in force in that province with respect to criminal matters.

In the second half of the judgment, rendered last Friday, the Court of Appeal decided that Part XIV.1 of the Criminal Code, which gives an accused the specific right to be tried before a judge or a judge and jury who speak his or her official language, is not yet in force in Alberta. However, Bill C-72, the Official Languages Act, introduced by this Government and the Minister of Justice on June 25, 1987, will amend the Criminal Code to confirm language of trial rights for everyone and to ensure that Part XIV.1 comes into force no later than January 1, 1990, in all provinces across Canada.

The provisions that will shortly be before the House with respect to the Official Languages Act will correct a historic problem and do honour to all Members of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister then tell the House why his Government has not begun discussions with the Province of Alberta, and will it now do so, to bring Part 14(1) into effect so that when this Bill is brought forward, if it ever is, people like Mr. Paquette will be able to have their trials in French?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the situation which my hon. friend refers to was not created last year. It has persisted for many years and throughout the long reign of my hon. friend's Party in government. This Government is now acting, and I think quite swiftly, to correct it. If my hon. friend waits just a little while, he will have the opportunity to support amendments to the Official Languages Act to correct something which ought to have been corrected under previous Governments many years ago.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—TERMS OF AMNESTY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and concerns his recent visit to Central America. Can he tell the House whether or not he raised with the leadership of El Salvador, specifically President Duarte, the question of the charges made against that country's amnesty program to the effect that it would permit the murderers of the four American nuns and the murderers of Mr. Anaya, head of the Human Rights Commission there, to go free? If he did, what was the response and what is the Minister's response?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when I was in El Salvador, and indeed elsewhere during my visit to Central America, I raised questions relating to the amnesty. I think everyone understands that there is bound to be, in any successful peace accord in that region, some very rough justice. There is bound to be controversy over the granting of amnesty to people who have committed or are alleged to have committed crimes. I think it is the general conclusion of the Governments and observers involved that it would be difficult to have general acceptance of an amnesty program without that occurring.

I raised the matter particularly with the Government of El Salvador. As the House knows, there have been two explicit exceptions to the application of the amnesty in question. One had to do with the death of the bishop, and the other had to do with the death, I believe, of the humans right leader to whom the Hon. Member made reference.

Some days ago, before my departure, the Hon. Member asked me if I would report to the House on my trip to Central America. I am going to accept that suggestion and I look forward to making a report here tomorrow.

Mr. Blaikie: I appreciate the Minister's answer and I hope he also appreciates that there is a difference between rough justice and injustice.

HONDURAS—PRESENCE OF CONTRA FORCES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, did the Minister have an opportunity to press the Government of Honduras with respect to its position vis-à-vis the Contras now on its territory, and what was the response?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, on November 5 the Honduras Foreign Minister spoke to the Organization of American States. He set forth a quite detailed proposal that would allow action by both the Government of Honduras and the Government of Nicaragua regarding the use of their territory. There has now been an informal response by Nicaraguan authorities to that proposal.

My understanding is that there will be initially informal discussions to see if an agreement can be worked out by the Governments of both countries that will allow the kind of compliance that would not only deal with the question of Contra bases or Contra activity in Honduras but also with problems of a similar kind which might be occurring on Nicaraguan soil.

Mr. Speaker: I should bring to the attention of the House that I have received a notice of a question of privilege from the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James) and I will hear him now.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGATIONS AGAINST COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I have reference to a question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) on November 25, 1987. The Hon. Member asserted that I, as chairman of the legislative committee studying Bill C-204, acted in a biased manner. After careful perusal of Hansard and other documents, I believe my rights as a Member of the House of Commons have been called into question and I would like to speak to that point.

The Hon. Member indicated there was a delay of 12 sitting days after second reading before the first meeting of that committee was held.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has been given the floor to respond to an application made a few days ago by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood on a question of privilege. I know Hon. Members are leaving the Chamber for other duties and I ask that they extend the appropriate courtesies to the Hon. Member so he can make his presentation to the Chair.

Mr. James: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The date of second reading of Bill C-204 was May 29, 1987. By letter dated June 9, 1987, I was appointed by you as chairman of that committee. I received that letter of notification on Wednesday, June 10, 1987. My schedule for Thursday, June 11, through Monday, June 15, was totally booked, and so the first meeting of the committee was held on the following Tuesday, June 16, 1987. The first witnesses were from the Departments of Labour and National Health and Welfare.

In point two the Member indicated there was a 19 sitting day delay between the third and the fourth meetings. The date of the third meeting was June 26, 1987; the date of the fourth meeting was June 17, 1987. The days do not compute, so I do not exactly know.

I would like to advise you, Mr. Speaker, that on that particular day, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood stated in committee, "Yes, Mr. Chairman, I do not think we can realistically plan any future meetings before the end of June. What I think we should do is plan to start work right promptly when the House resumes". That was under the assumption that we would reconvene on September 14, as the House calendar indicated. We then established a work schedule based upon that situation.

Additionally, the Hon. Member indicated in her accusations that there was active obstruction in the committee during the period of June 26 to October 6. During that period, I as chairman of the committee was given instruction by the committee, as the minutes will indicate, to contact the witnesses who might want to appear before the committee. I was also given authorization by the committee to advertise during the summer, if it was so advised. That was done during the summer. The House was recalled on August 11 for a special emergency session to deal with the refugee legislation. The House was originally to be reconvened on September 14.

I was then appointed the chairman of the committee on Bill C-55, on August 14, 1987. That committee met for 55.5 hours, heard over 30 witnesses, and reported to the House on September 15, 1987. On September 17, 1987 the meeting of the committee on Bill C-204 reconvened.

I wish to notify you, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood who has raised the allegations was not in attendance at that meeting. At that meeting we discovered from communication that the clerk had with the witnesses that there were certain problems in receiving from the witnesses the specific proposals, résumés, and briefs that we should get from them. At that meeting of September 17 it was decided by the committee that we should write to all those who had been suggested by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood and other members on the committee, and advise them of specific dates to reply by, and hear back from them. That was decided then to be September 15 and September 30 respectively.

Following that, the committee then carried on and had meetings on October 6, 8, 13, 15, 20, 29; November 3, 5, 17, 19, 24, and 26.

Another allegation brought forward by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood was that the chair had acted in a biased manner. I submit to the House the letters that I have written to my constituents wherein I stated, "As chairman of the legislative committee on Bill C-204 it is essential that I perform my duties as the chairman in an impartial and neutral manner". That is the manner in which I carried out my responsibilities as chairman. Nowhere in the minutes do I find an allegation by the Hon. Member who has brought forth these allegations challenging the chairman or the members of being biased.

I have instructed the clerk to work closely with the Hon. Member's office, as she is the author of this Bill, in ensuring that all the witnesses were received and given the opportunity to be heard. I challenge the Hon. Member to find and produce any evidence that I have operated in a biased manner. I am seriously concerned over those allegations, and they certainly impinge upon my privileges as a Member of Parliament who has attempted to act in an unbiased manner, hopefully with good management, to hear and deliberate upon this very important legislation.

I appreciate the opportunity to be able to rebut the allegations made.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I would like to reply to the concerns raised by the Hon. Member. When I raised the issue of privilege and felt that the work of the committee was being held up, I did not at any time state that it was the exclusive responsibility or the actions of the chairman. I raised a whole list of problems that had occurred, and I think the responsibility must be shared among a number of members.

I raised the question of the obstruction in the committee work, and the fact that at some meetings there were as many as five Conservative Members who were opposed to the Bill, and raising preposterous questions—

Mr. Speaker: The other day the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) gave a full explanation of her grievances. Unless the Hon. Member has something specific to add to what the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James) has stated to the House and to the Chair, I do not think there is any particular need to go forward.

In reciting her grievances, the Hon. Member has stated that she was not blaming the chairperson, the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton alone, but was blaming others. That is helpful to the Chair, but it is not helpful to the Chair to receive a repetition of the extensive points raised by the Hon. Member the other day.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, on the question of the dates for the third and the fourth meetings, if I have the numbers wrong and they are the fifth and the sixth or the fourth and the fifth, that can be checked. But I was referring to the very extensive period of time over the summer. An alternative way to proceed would have been to appoint another chairperson, given that the chairperson of this committee was not able to act—

Mr. Speaker: I have heard the Hon. Member, and I am presently considering the comments that she made, as recorded in Hansard. As soon as possible, I will return to the House with a response to the application of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood.

The Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton has risen on one specific item. He claims that it was alleged that he was biased. He has put on the record certain facts which he asks the Chair to consider and decide that, under those facts, the charge of bias is such that it affects his privileges in that he is not able to do the job that he has been elected to do. I will consider that.

Unless the Hon. Member has something which is new and that I have not heard before, I must ask her to bear with the Chair. I do have her comments. Of course, I will hear the Hon. Member, but I ask her to keep in mind that it is not appropriate at this time to restate that which was stated before.

If we are going to become involved in an argument about what dates were what, unless I am persuaded that it is very important, we are getting into an argument of fact, and that is not the easiest thing in the world for the Chair to solve.

• (1520)

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I was replying to new information brought forward by the Hon. Member today, not repeating arguments of the previous session.

The Hon. Member made quite a to-do about timing and his availability. I was replying to that. I feel very frustrated that I am not permitted to reply to that aspect. I thought he was raising a number of concerns, but it appears that you wish me to deal with only one of the ones he raised, namely, the question of bias.

I think the record will show, and you can have a look at the proceedings of the committee meetings, that I was frequently interrupted in the course of questioning witnesses, for example, by the chairman. Other Members were not interrupted or not frequently interrupted. Other Members changed the subject of the discussions. Other Members strayed completely from the health aspects. They were not interrupted, but I was interrupted. I am the author of a Bill. In effect, as a private Member I am a Minister in that capacity. I would have expected the co-operation of the Chair. Co-operation was, indeed, received with regard to scheduling witnesses, but in many things I did not receive any co-operation.

The question of the swearing of witnesses is another point. You may be aware, Mr. Speaker, of a situation in the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, when a Member asked to have witnesses sworn in and the chairperson of the committee facilitated in that. In this situation, I alerted the chairman of the committee of my desire to have witnesses sworn in. Whether or not he supported me, I do not know, but when the substitute chairman appeared there was this business of Conservative Members not appearing until my motion could be defeated. I do not know if the chairman spoke to the deputy chairman in favour of my request to have witnesses sworn in or against the person acting in his behalf—

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate again to interrupt the Hon. Member, but I heard this earlier. I have to remind Hon. Members that this is not the place to go into a long argument over and over again about what did or did not happen in the committees.

The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) has made her point and stated her grievance. I will have to consider whether it is privilege, but she has made it with great vigour and she has made it extensively.

I have listened to the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton who has responded basically to the charge of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood that his conduct was improper. He has put his facts on the table. Unless the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood is to rise and say that any of the facts which the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton put forward are wrong or that she disagrees with them, then anything else is of very little assistance to me. It may well have been that other Members did all kinds of things within the committee. It is not for the Chair to do other than listen to the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood, and she explained her grievances, as I say, with great vigour and extensively, and the Chair listened very carefully. The Chair cannot take up the time of Members to listen to them again.

I know the Hon. Member from Broadview—Greenwood feels very strongly about this matter, and the Chair is very cognizant of it. I would ask her to consider carefully what I am saying because I am also bound by procedural rules.

If the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood disagrees with anything that was set out by the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton, of course I will hear her. It is not the role of the Chair to allow this argument to go back and forth because some Member will get up, undoubtedly, and respond to some of the things the Member from Broadview—Greenwood is saying, and then we will have no end to it. The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, one very particular area where I disagree with the presentation by the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James) concerns the scheduling of witnesses in September. There was a break over the summer. The committee chairman was directed to schedule witnesses as soon as possible in September—and he referred to that in his remarks today—but it took two organizational meetings to get the scheduling done. There was a great deal of obstruction. I did not blame the Hon. Member from Sarnia—Lambton for this obstruction. I recited it as one of the facts that impeded the work of my committee.

It should be clearly understood that his response today is an incorrect one. The record will show clearly that there was agreement that witnesses be contacted and a schedule set up. That was not done, which has impeded the work of my committee. I did not say that the Member bears exclusive responsibility for the fact that that work was not done because many Members bear responsibility for that, Conservative Members who were obstructionist in committee meeting.

I think I have been responding to the concerns that the Member raised. I conclude by saying that at no time did I state that he was the only person responsible, but I cannot agree with his presentation of the facts and I urge you to look at the proceedings for the committee meetings in question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton now. I hope that he will take into account the comments of the Chair and direct his remarks solely to the issue which he is raising, which, as I understand it, is a question of privilege with respect to what he says is an allegation of bias.

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, I think any indication, if it is not personal, is an indication of the Chair's responsibility in managing the committee.

As you deliberate on this matter I do not think you will find in the committee minutes any time where I have been challenged as being biased. In the management of the committee when there are interruptions of the witnesses, I think it is the responsibility of the chairperson to keep order.

I want also to bring to your attention a mistake in facts. It was stated that on five occasions a deputy chairman was substituted for the chairman and mention made of a Member in particular who has bias. I would like to advise you, Sir, that at the point in time as of November 24 only three instances are recorded when the chairman designated another Member to act as chairman, namely, on November 15, 17 and 24. I want to notify the House unequivocally that the Member named by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood was never designated as chairperson of this committee. That is another incorrect statement.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood but I would ask her to be as brief as possible.

Ms. McDonald: I will be very brief, Mr. Speaker. I do not have the dates in front of me but I attended committee meetings. My recollection is of a number of instances. Perhaps the proceedings of the committees do not show a substitution. I am referring to who was actually sitting in the Chair, not just who is designated for an entire period of time. The designation of a chair for part of a meeting certainly counts as a problem if that chairperson acts in a particular fashion and if it is a person who, for example, is in a conflict of interest situation on this subject.

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-87, an Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the international Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters and to amend or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee, and Motion No. 1 (Mr. Cassidy, p. 11346).

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Before the House took recess at 1 p.m., Mr. Speaker, I was speaking to the Bill and dealing more specifically with the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) which would somewhat limit access to the Canadian market of goods coming from the United States, which had been wholly or partly produced in Mexico.

Clearly the Hon. Member is trying to change Clause 15 of Bill C-87, and I should simply like to indicate that we agree on the proposal, because not having seen the final text of the Mulroney-Reagan free trade or so-called free trade agreement, many claim that Canada would come out the loser on a deal such as this, because it is quite possible that the Americans, having gained access to the Canadian market, could export to this country goods with "Made in the USA" labels but which in fact would have been wholly or partly produced outside the United States, more specifically in Northern Mexico.

We are concerned about this, Mr. Speaker, because such experts as Economist Writer John Ralston Saul, who appeared before the House Committee considering the whole free trade issue, raised the possibility that Mexican goods could be exported to Canada under the guise of an American label or as processed there, as originating in the United States.

• (1530)

Mr. Saul, in testimony before the committee, made clear to all those interested that indeed we may be entering into a deal which could allow Mexican products produced with cheap labour to be distributed in Canada, thereby giving our Canadian products a very bad deal in terms of jobs, permanency and production.

I would like to remind Hon. Members that the United States has a virtual free trade pact with Mexico or at least with the northern parts of Mexico. Apparently, there is a region of Mexico which contains 1,200 U.S. factories employing some 300,000 Mexican workers, mostly teenagers, non-union labour of course, earning about 65 cents per hour. These so-called Maquiladora industries are expanding at a phenomenal rate and constitute the second largest industry in Mexico, second only to petroleum and larger than tourism.

This economist is telling us to be careful because we may be entering into a deal which exploits cheap labour. God knows that we do not want to enter into any deal which would exploit human resources, and especially not to the detriment of Canadian jobs and the Canadian economy.

We asked the Government to make sure, in the final legal text which we have yet to see, that there is a provision preventing this kind of product from entering Canada. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) put such an amendment to the House. His motion is very clear and would amend Clause 15 by adding the following:

> "(3) Notwithstanding any regulation made under subsection (2), goods wholly or partly produced in Mexico shall not be deemed to originate in the United States."

The motion is clear and logically follows Clause 15 which describes the country of origin. The motion specifies that notwithstanding any regulation under the power of the Governor in Council, these recycled products made by cheap labour are not brought into our country and that we will be protected from the abuse of such trade.

Just to put the debate in perspective, in 1969, only 2 per cent of manufactured goods imported by the United States came from Mexico. Now it is 40 per cent. Mexico, not Canada, is the largest exporter of manufactured goods to the United States. The Hon. Member's amendment suggests that in the final text of the free trade agreement, we ensure that no cheap labour products are recycled through the American economy and distributed in Canada. Such products would be unwanted and it is more than morally wrong to exploit cheap labour.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak in favour of the motion put by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). The Bill that is before us certainly has implications as far as free trade with the United States is concerned. In fact, this Bill provides for a harmonization of commodity descriptions and the coding system.

The motion that has been proposed by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre amends Clause 15 by adding the following:

> "(3) Notwithstanding any regulation made under subsection (2), goods wholly or partly produced in Mexico shall not be deemed to originate in the United States."

It has been asked why the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre put that motion forward. That is a good question. Certainly it is not because this Party of which the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre is a member wants to put the brakes on a country that is developing and developing rapidly. It is not that we want to prevent other countries in the world from having a share in economic development. The reason for the presentation of this motion has to do with what we were told by an economist, John Ralston Saul, who appeared before the parliamentary committee that is dealing with international trade and particularly the free trade agreement.

It seems to me that we owe Mr. Saul some thanks for having pointed out what appears to be a gap in the free trade agreement. In fact, from what I understand, when Mr. Saul raised this question before the parliamentary committee, the chairman scurried off, got on the telephone and spoke to Mr. Ritchie, the under-secretary in the free trade negotiations. The chairman finally came back and said that he was assured by Mr. Ritchie that in fact the question that was raised by Mr. Saul does not pose a problem for the free trade agreement.

What was it that Mr. Saul raised which may have been overlooked by Ambassador Reisman in the negotiations on the free trade agreement? It is something which goes back to the 1960s when Mexico and the United States reached an agreement that the area which runs along the Mexican-American border for 3,000 kilometres, several kilometres deep, would be called the Maquiladora industrial program. It was basically an attempt by the United States to compete effectively with Asian industries. It was, of course, in the interest of Mexico to ensure that jobs were created for Mexicans. That is a legitimate interest for Mexico.

In the Maquiladora corridor factories and plants were established which were originally designed as labour intensive operations. The raw materials came from the United States to these factories where they were manufactured into final products. Without the imposition of any tariffs or duties they were returned to the United States and sold as American products with only a slight value-added tax put on them.

The wage rates in the Maquiladora corridor are 65 cents an hour and there are presently about 300,000 employees who work there. They are mostly teenagers. They are now moving into the production of high tech equipment.

One of the main arguments for entering into a free trade agreement with the United States is that Canada can get an entree into the American market and compete with Americans in finished products. In fact, Canada will be competing against products which are manufactured in the Maquiladora corridor. There is no possible way that Canadian-manufactured products can compete against wage rates of 65 cents an hour. The original design of that program from the American perspective was to compete with low-cost Asian products coming into the United States.

The only question I have about the amendment moved by the Member for Ottawa Centre is with regard to identifying a product coming into Canada. How would we know that the components in a radio, for example, were not manufactured in the Maquiladora corridor industries? There is apparently no way to determine that the components of a finished product were made in the United States. We would need a horde of agents. With such a highly complex economy as that of the United States, it would be very difficult to track down a component from the Maquiladora corridor which is put into a product in the United States.

This, therefore, has serious repercussions for Canadian finished products going into the United States under a free trade agreement. The basis of the Government's argument for this free trade agreement is that it will create all sorts of new jobs and that Canada will gain a lot of new industries. Evidence is now coming out which shows that the agreement will not be all it was made out to be by the Government.

One would hope that the Government is addressing this issue but we cannot be sure because we do not have the final text of the agreement before us. We heard in Question Period today that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised the text in October, then for the middle of November, then for the end of November. We are in the first week of December and still do not have the final text. Yet the agreement is scheduled to be signed on January 2.

Although the Government says that we can compete with American finished products, the fact is that there is a gaping hole in the deal. In fact, Canada will not be competing with the United States but with Mexican products which have been produced with very cheap labour. Is this what the Government means by harmonization? In order to hold onto our small share of the manufacturing sector in the United States do we have to reduce our wage rates? Is the Government saying that we have to harmonize our standard of living with that of the Maquiladora corridor? That is, of course, what the Government is saying.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre has proposed a safeguard which should receive approval from all Members on all sides of the House.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-87, an Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters and to amend or appeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee; and Motion No. 1 (Mr. Cassidy, p. 11346).

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the honour of being recognized by yourself and of having an opportunity to speak to the matter brought forward by the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) with regard to the so-called Mexican connection.

This matter was brought before the Standing Committee on External Affairs last week at its hearings in Edmonton by Mr. Saul, who is a novelist and an economist. That is a wonderful economist indeed. It means that he can make economic matters almost lucid. The impact of his presentation was quite dramatic and profound on all members of the committee. I think it fair to say that even the Conservative members of the committee took the matter seriously. They did not see it as a partisan jab but more as an indication that this particular aspect of our trade relations could have a very major bearing upon the proposed agreement on trade with the United States. It could put many of the supposed benefits in real jeopardy.

I believe Members have already heard how this particular process works under Section 806 and Section 807 of the U.S.

Tariff schemes. Perhaps it could simply be described by using the example of someone who will ship the fabric for making bluejeans in North Carolina across the border to Mexico for the assembly of that particular garment and return it to be stamped "Made in America". While a minimal duty is imposed by the Americans on the cross border shipment for the value added based upon the labour, the fact is that it is accepted as a "Made in America" product. Therefore, there is an assumption that once those articles are in circulation they can find their way into the trade flow into Canada.

While the research staff of the committee and the trade negotiators office gave certain assurances that the proposed trade agreement with the Americans takes this problem into account, they were not prepared to answer serious questions about how the enforcement of this mechanism would work. Unfortunately, the motion I made at the committee to have Mr. Reisman or Mr. Ritchie appear before the committee was not heeded by the majority.

However, it is important to point out to Members of the House that this matter will be examined by the committee next Tuesday. Mr. Ritchie has agreed to appear before the committee a week hence, to try to describe the way in which the free trade agreement that was initialled last October will be capable of enforcing this particular and very dangerous tariff-free movement of basically Third World goods into Canada.

I think it would be irresponsible for the House not to delay voting on this matter until we have had an opportunity to hear the trade negotiators themselves explain their position. I compliment the Member for Ottawa Centre for introducing this amendment. If nothing else, it brings to our attention that we should not agree to the initiatives in this clause, and certainly in the free trade agreement, until this Parliament receives a proper explanation.

I caution the Government about proceeding with this initiative because the trade negotiators office is still deeply concerned about this aspect of it. The Government is really caught in a dilemma. The Government may say that the rules of origin section of the trade agreement provide it with the legal right to keep the Maquiladora products out of Canada. That implies two things: First, that all U.S. exporters will work on good faith and would never believe that they would commit a fraud by shipping to Canada a product clearly labelled "Made in America" as something that has been manufactured totally and completely in the United States. Certainly we have enough experience with various trade problems to know that one cannot always rely on 100 per cent good faith and honesty of those who are selling goods into this country or, for that matter, our selling goods to other places. There is always a degree of chicanery involved in these efforts.

The second implication is that in order to enforce this, it would require a host of customs agents at our own borders conducting the most extensive examinations possible.

The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) has suggested to consumers and all Canadians that the proposed free trade agreement would basically be a recipe to open our borders. People can imagine themselves coming to Winnipeg from Fargo with their arms loaded with VCRs and TVs that are totally tariff-free. We know that will not be the case.

There would be a legion of customs agents at the border who would essentially have to dismantle every item to ensure that it was not manufactured in another country. If anyone believes that it is difficult to get across the border now, wait until the agreement. Customs agents will be required to conduct incredibly detailed investigations. Surely the Conservatives can understand that. Even those simple-minded champions of free trade will realize that they are caught in a hell of a dilemma on this matter.

If these requirements are not strictly enforced Canadian businesses will be faced with unfair competition. Rather than a level playing field, it will be very tilted because of the opportunity to totally undermine the input costs into many materials, including clothing, electronics and machinery. These are items now being manufactured with American components in that area of Mexico.

I want to refer to a report in the United States which has clearly indicated that this particular procedure is not without controversy in its own country. Opposition in the United States has come from organized labour, which contends that the Maquiladora investment by U.S. firms has the effect of exporting jobs. That is what would happen here.

Either a large number of Canadian manufacturers would lose out under this system, or we would be forced to begin trying to compete with these low cost manufacturers. That would mean a substantial decrease in wages, social and health standards and other basic infrastructure that Canada has prided itself on building up over the past several years.

The Conservatives are not telling it as it is when they say that matters of social policy will not be affected by this agreement. They are not describing the real situation. They know that even without the Maquiladora process the low minimum wages and the low standards in the right to work states in the south will result in uneven competition. When one adds the aggravation of having products being made under the wage scale of 65 cents an hour, who in Winnipeg, Saskatoon or Halifax will be able to compete without fundamentally changing the kinds of wages our workers are paid or changing the standard we apply to our environment, health and labour? That is the dilemma facing the Government and for which it has yet to answer.

There must be an answer to this particular dilemma. Therefore, I suggest that at least until Mr. Ritchie appears before the committee next Tuesday morning to address this problem, the House should recognize the validity of this amendment or at least delay a decision until Parliament and the country knows exactly how the Government proposes to contend with one of the most serious challenges facing Canadian manufacturing in centuries.

• (1600)

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prolong the debate, but I would certainly welcome the suggestion of the Hon. Member for the Liberal Party. If in fact the Government wished to simply defer this section until the hearings take place next Tuesday, that might be a constructive suggestion. I wonder if the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), or some other responsible Minister, is prepared to make that suggestion here in this House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member might want to negotiate that with the House Leaders. I will recognize the next speaker. The Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young).

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to have an opportunity to say a few words about the amendment to this particular clause which was put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

When I first looked at Bill C-87 and read its title, I was quite fascinated, if not confused. Intimidated, perhaps, is a better word. I will take a moment just to read it. It describes Bill C-87 as an Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity description and coding system, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters and to amend or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof. Even, as I read it again today, I nearly fell asleep. It is one of the most convoluted descriptions of any piece of legislation.

When I actually read the legislation itself, I can understand why not only the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre, but other Members who have spoken on this Bill, have raised some serious concerns.

These concerns are indeed tied into what may happen under the free trade agreement at some time in the future. The implications are described under Clause 15 of Part 1 of the Bill. The clause reads as follows:

> (1) for the purposes of this Act, goods originate in a country if the whole of the value of the goods is produced in that country.

Subclause (2) however, makes an exception to this. It states:

> The Governor in Council may make regulations
> (a) deeming goods, the whole or a portion of the value of which is produced outside a country, to originate in that country for the purposes of this Act, and
> (b) respecting the determination of the origin of goods.

On the one hand the Act talks about any goods originating in a country can come into Canada as long as they are identified as being produced in that country. However, it is then totally reversed. It says, however, exceptions may be made if the goods, the whole or a portion of the value of the goods which is produced outside a country, can be deemed to originate in the host country. That is absolutely ridiculous, and I think we owe a debt of gratitude to Mr. John Saul who appeared before the House of Commons committee which is looking into the free trade agreement. He spoke about the dangers of that very thing happening under the free trade agreement. His concerns were expressed because of the very real situation occurring in the United States at the present time with cheap goods produced in Mexico which are in effect considered to be produced in the United States.

You may wonder how that could possibly happen, Mr. Speaker, and rather than go into detail on the comments Mr. Saul made before that committee, several days following his appearance he wrote an article on this very same subject, which is found in The Globe and Mail, which I would highly recommend for reading because it sets out the arguments very well and very clearly.

In recognizing these dangers, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre has moved an amendment to protect Canadians from the same kind of thing which is happening in the United States. We could be saved from the same experience if this amendment were adopted. What the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre is proposing is that this clause in the existing Bill be amended by adding the words:

> Notwithstanding any regulation made under Subsection (2), goods wholly or partly produced in Mexico shall not be deemed to originate in the United States.

In putting forward that motion, the Hon. Member is not saying we should not enter into any trading partnerships with Mexico. In fact, to the contrary. I remember several weeks ago the Leader of my Party making the same argument to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), that rather than throwing all our eggs in one basket by entering into a free trade arrangement with the United States, what Canada should press for is a trading agreement between not only the United States but also Mexico. He used the argument that Mexico has in fact proven itself to be a stronger negotiator with the Government of the United States on trading matters than the Canadian Government.

I think if one takes a look at what the Mexicans have managed to do in their trading relationships with the United States, the commentary of the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) is absolutely right on. I want to give a perfect example of the industry I came out of. The electronics industry, at least the section I worked in, used to produce vacuum tubes for radios. These vacuum tubes were the subject of great competition from the U.S. parent company, of which ours was a subsidiary, and from the American subsidiaries located offshore. The end result was that the U.S. owners decided that even though the Canadian plant continued to be profitable, it did not make enough profit, however "enough profits" was defined. In any event, it decided that the Canadian company, which employed at that time some 650 workers, was not making enough profit to keep the head office in Syracuse happy. So it started laying people off. We ended up with a workforce of about 50 people who no longer produced vacuum tubes in that plant. Their job was to receive bulk shipments of the vacuum tubes that Canadians used to produce. Their job was to unpack the tubes from the bulk cartons and repackage them in cartons that were stamped "Made in Canada".

Mr. Heap: That is disgusting.

Mr. Young: The cartons with the vacuum tubes which were produced offshore went into stores and Canadians bought them thinking they were buying made in Canada products.

Mr. Heap: Is that not illegal?

Mr. Young: I thought it was illegal, and when we caught onto it, we went after the Government of the day, making the argument that some 600 Canadian jobs had been lost as a result of this multinational corporation which, by the way, had profited quite handsomely over the years by being allowed to exploit the Canadian market-place by selling these tubes. We told the Government this did not look right to us and asked it to investigate. It took months to persuade the Government of the day that perhaps it should be doing something about it, so we went after the parent company. It was told that at the very least this smells of deceptive advertising, that it cannot have a tube made in Japan in a carton printed and stamped "Made in Canada" going onto store shelves where Canadians think they are buying Canadian products and in doing so they are contributing to the Canadian economy and are helping to create employment for Canadians.

• (1610)

Finally, the multinational company decided this could be an embarrassing situation. What it ended up doing was to have the 30 or so workers in this plant grind off the stamp "Made in Japan". There was then no country of origin on the tube and it would then go into the "Made in Canada" package.

Mr. Blaikie: Was the package made in Canada?

Mr. Young: That is another interesting point. I remember the story about the Japanese producer who decided to form a company town and call it Ontario. That company produced a product made in Ontario but it forgot to mention that this Ontario happened to be in Japan, not in Canada.

When John Saul raised these very serious concerns, I understand that people involved in the free trade negotiations were not even aware of this gaping loophole. Therefore, I highly recommend that the House seriously consider the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre. Even though certain weaknesses would remain in the legislation, it would at least close that one gaping loophole and we would all be better off for it.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to join the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade last week when it went to western Canada. I was in Edmonton when Mr. John Ralston Saul made his presentation, which was identical to the article that appeared in The Globe and Mail, and I can tell you that I think all members of the committee were concerned as to whether or not there was a gaping hole in the trade agreement. Despite what one might otherwise think of the agreement, and obviously members of the committee quite strongly disagree with each other as to its over-all wisdom, all Members were concerned about this accusation.

Some of us argued that we should have Mr. Reisman and/or Mr. Ritchie appear before the committee immediately to answer these charges. We were unable to bring that about but we received a communication from the office of the trade negotiators and Mr. Ritchie to the effect that they had taken this matter into account, giving us a number of reassurances in that regard. I do not find those reassurances particularly all that reassuring, I might say, but to be fair, the negotiators claim to be on top of it. Of course, the question is whether or not you can ever be on top of this kind of situation when unscrupulous manufacturers and distributors have available to them the kind of procedures just described by the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young). There is also the question of even if we have rules of origin which allegedly cover products from this Mexican free trade zone, would Canada not be required to have a rather financially burdensome army of inspectors at the border and elsewhere in order to make sure that the increasing number of goods produced in that zone are not coming into Canada as American goods?

As I understand it, one of the features of the agreement between Mexico and the U.S. is that these goods will be considered as American goods in a way that other goods coming from other countries into the U.S. and going out again are not. It is in the very nature of the agreement between the U.S. and Mexico that these goods will not be as distinguishable as other goods coming from third countries.

I see the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) is here. Even though we may disagree on the trade agreement per se, I hope the Government is making sure that the negotiators are covering this concern in the last minute negotiations which we know are going on at this time.

Mr. Saul's presentation dealt with the Mexican free trade zone, but he also dealt with some of the issues implicit in the kind of agreement we are now about to enter into with the U.S. as a result of the Prime Minister's intention to sign an agreement with President Reagan on January 2. In doing so, he dealt with the whole notion of competition in a way which is not articulated often enough in this House. I would like to quote not at great length but to a certain extent from the article. He says:

> The word "competition" is used enthusiastically by those in favour of North American economic integration, as though there existed one universally accepted definition. In reality, each country understands something quite different by competition. And when intelligent agreements are struck to remove tariffs between countries, they are invariably based upon a prior agreement covering the nature of competition; in particular, the standardization of social policy.

He said these kinds of agreements are generally based upon a prior agreement covering the nature of competition; in particular, the standardization of social policy.

What we have before us is the agreement first and then a process whereby we and the U.S. will come to terms over the next five to seven years with respect to standardization, not only or even necessarily, of social policy, but health standards and various other non-tariff concerns on which there is an expressed intention to harmonize, hopefully over the next five years, but if not, over the next seven. We are doing exactly the opposite of what other countries which have reached this kind of agreement with each other have done in the past. They have agreed on all the non-tariff issues, first, if you like, so that when they enter into the elimination of tariffs in a true free trade agreement, they are not exposed to the shenanigans, if you like, or the policies of the other with respect to non-tariffs. What the Government proposes is to do it just the opposite way around.

It is clear, if you take Mr. Saul's argument seriously in this respect, that standardization of social policy is something which should precede any kind of agreement.

The present relationship between Canada and the United States is certainly not one of standardization of social policy. Indeed, I think that all Canadians would agree that not only is there no standardization of social policy, but it is generally agreed by Canadians that our social policies are superior to American social policies. The worry is that if we enter into this agreement, there will be pressure for standardization, but that the pressure will be for Canada's social policies to become more like American social policies.

I know when this is stated it generally irritates proponents of the agreement, but it is a fact that was recognized even by proponents and supporters of the agreement in the course of our hearings throughout western Canada last week. A member of the British Columbia business community appeared before the committee, a Mr. Matkin, and during the course of a discussion with me on social policy, he admitted that this would eventually come to be one of the things that would be calculated, as to who seemed to have a competitive advantage over another country, in this case between Canada and the United States.

The origin of that discussion was when he stated in his testimony that one of the reasons he was not worried about investment leaving Canada was that one of the advantages we had was that investors liked to locate plants here because they did not have to deal with all the social security, health, and other hassles involved in being an American employer. The reason that some companies locate here is because of our social programs, medicare, unemployment insurance, and others.

In response to that evidence I said to him, if that is the reason why people locate here and not elsewhere, is it not conceivable that some day, particularly when we are entering into this five to seven year debate about which non-tariff policies of each country could be construed as giving one country a competitive advantage over the other, the Americans might argue that our social policies give Canada a competitive advantage over the Americans and, therefore, we ought to change them. He stated he would have to admit that, although in his opinion, entering into this agreement would tend to protect us from that type of argument. We disagreed there, but the point is that both of us agreed that social programs and social policy are part of the calculus in this type of negotiating. It could happen in a number of other ways.

Depending upon the circumstances, Canadian companies could argue that they were being made uncompetitive because they had to pay the higher taxes required to pay for medicare, or that they were having to pay unemployment insurance premiums that their American competitors did not have to pay. There are a number of ways in which our social programs could enter the debate.

This is what we have meant all along, Mr. Speaker, when we have stated that there is a threat here to our social programs. It will not happen overnight, or the day after the agreement is signed, perhaps not even a number of years after the agreement is signed, but over time. This is a legitimate argument.

I see that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) is present, and I think that this is an argument that the Government has to take seriously, particularly if it is going to proceed, and particularly if it is going to be the tough negotiator that we wish it to be in that five to seven year period, if the agreement goes ahead.

I see that you are expressing that I am out of time, Mr. Speaker. In winding up, I wish to make a few comments. Time passes so fast when you are having fun!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Speak for yourself.

Mr. Blaikie: I can understand why the Minister of health is not enjoying this.

I wish to close with a further quote from Mr. Saul, and then I will sit down.

We often hear comparisons between what has been done in Europe and what is being done here. In a manner that should enlighten us all, Mr. Saul states:

> The key to Europe's success, for example, and the explanation for its slow, careful evolution, has been a determination to force a raising of standards toward those of the more advanced countries, not a lowering toward the more backward. No European nation could succeed in open competition against Korea or Thailand, both of which maintain nineteenth-century labour conditions. The European Community therefore limits that competition to its own definition of the word. To do otherwise would be to lose an unequal combat and, in losing, to subsidize and encourage an unjust social system. To accept the Asian definition of "competition" would be to destroy European society.

There is a second socially undeveloped industrial zone, and that is the southern part of the United States. It is precisely by accepting the notion of competition which exists in that part of the world in the United States that this Government endangers the social policies and the level of economic justice that we have attained in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member, who was quite a football player in his old days, knows that this sign means time out, and that this sign means two minutes. I do not understand why he did not realize that I was requesting that he wind down.

On debate, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus).

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, perhaps it is because he is from Winnipeg, and the way that the Blue Bombers went this year, they do not understand the signals either.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): A point of order, point of privilege, point of everything, Mr. Speaker. There are certain things I cannot take here.

Mr. Angus: I am a supporter of the Blue Bombers, but it is an eastern team now.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): You really know how to hurt a guy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I know the Chair is impartial, but today I am happy to be able to crow about the fact that I came from the city which is the home of those fine bunch of boys who won the 1987 Grey Cup against Toronto in Vancouver on Sunday.

I congratulate Commissioner Douglas Mitchell and the Edmonton Eskimos on a great game.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder how long you have been sitting there with that note to yourself looking for an opportunity to inject that into the debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I was waiting for someone to bring up football.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, it was you who brought up football.

Bill C-87 before us, among other things, is an Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has moved an amendment to Clause 15. Clause 15 states:

> 15(1) For the purposes of this Act, goods originate in a country if the whole of the value of the goods is produced in that country.
> (2) The Governor in Council may make regulations
> (a) deeming goods, the whole or a portion of the value of which is produced outside a country, to originate in that country for the purposes of this Act; and
> (b) respecting the determination of the origin of goods.

The amendment moved by my colleague is that there be a new subclause (3) which would state, "Notwithstanding any regulation made under subsection (2) goods wholly or partially produced in Mexico shall not be deemed to originate in the United States".

The reason my colleague put forward that motion is because of his concern, and that of the New Democratic Party caucus, that in effect it is a back-door free trade agreement with Mexico. Without that wording or preventative clause, it is conceivable that goods produced in Mexico, using extremely low wage rates, non-unionized or almost child labour, would be able to come freely into Canada and compete unfairly with products produced in Canada, let alone products produced in the United States.

During the hearings in Edmonton of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade a gentleman by the name of Mr. John Ralston Saul stated:

> The United States already has a virtual free-trade pact with Mexico; or rather, with a strip of Mexico, several kilometres deep and running the full length of their 3,200-kilometre shared border. This official trade zone contains more than 1,200 U.S. factories employing some 300,000 Mexican workers, mostly teen-agers, non-union of course, and earning about 65 cents U.S. an hour.

● (1630)

Mr. Saul went on to say:

> These "Maquiladora Industries" as they are known, are expanding at a phenomenal rate. They constitute the second largest industry in Mexico. Second only to petroleum. Larger than tourism.

We do not think it was the intention of the Government to allow for such a free flow of goods. That is why we want to give the Government the tool to prevent Bill C-87 from being used to undermine further the ability of Canadian manufacturers of all kinds to compete and sell their products to Canadians. We also see it as part and parcel of the over-all trade agreement, initialled by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of Canada and the President of the United States not too long ago, on which we are rushing forward to finish waiting for the dotting of the i's and the crossing of the t's. We can then go from the 35 or 40 pages of principles to see what the nuts and bolts are, what the real benefits are, not the suggested benefits, what the real detractions are and what the negative impact will be on Canada in the short and long term.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House, at least within this Party, are very concerned about that agreement. We feel that it will change the very nature of the country. We will no longer have the ability to make the kinds of decisions that we feel are appropriate, the kinds of decisions that started very soon after the commencement of the country when we decided that we wanted to be an east-west nation, not a north-south one. We developed our transportation infrastructure in such a way as to connect British Columbia, in particular, with central Canada, which just prior to that was known as Upper and Lower Canada.

Now we have a Government that is intent upon shifting that direction, forging greater north-south links, supposedly because of the belief in the free enterprise system which means, in a nutshell, that if you can compete you can win. In some cases the private sector can compete fairly both within Canada and on the world stage. But there are times when it cannot. There are times when fledgling industries need some extra protection to allow them to develop their product line and their markets to the point where, because of the volume and the quality, they can produce a product at a per unit cost that is competitive. There are some that may never reach that point. We, as a country, have decided over the years that it is important to have those products produced in Canada by Canadians, sold primarily to Canadians, and, where possible, sold to individuals in other lands. That is the nature of our country. We on this side of the House want to keep it that way. A button I have seen states "We want to buy from our brothers and sisters, our neighbours and our friends, our friends and neighbours in Canada".

Whether it is an automobile produced in southern Ontario or Quebec, or components thereof, whether it is a by-product of wheat on the Prairies, or whether it is a McDonald's hamburger bun, we would prefer to use our earnings to reinvest in our country not in someone else's. Sometimes it means that we have to pay a little bit more because we have a smaller population, a smaller consumer group, than our neighbour to the south and, therefore, we are not able to maximize our distribution systems and our volumes because that consumer group is spread across a very narrow corridor, at least the bulk of it.

There are other parts away from that corridor which are even more expensive to reach than the grid system in the United States where a plant in almost any area is within a reasonable distance of a fairly large consumer base. Our neighbour to the south also has regional disparities. The Americans have differing laws that have drawn their industrial sector from the northern fringe of their country, the industrial heartland of the United States, into the deep south where the wages are $3 less per hour, fringe benefits are lacking and there are very few, if any, unions. That is what will happen here if the trade deal goes through. We do not have a Bill or a resolution yet. We do not even have an agreement and we have no details.

Mr. Cassidy: What do we have?

Mr. Angus: We have a lot of fluff and a lot of wishful thinking, Mr. Speaker. We are concerned that this headlong rush into a deal that will last for many years will do to Canada what Alabama has done to the United States, namely, draw off the work, the jobs and the creation of wealth. We hear people say "They will be able to invest in Canada", but what will the Americans do? They will come here, buy a few more branch plants, close them and move south, transferring the jobs away from Canada.

I have taken the opportunity in the last little while to speak to my constituents specifically about this agreement. I made a point of talking to individuals, whom I know personally, but are committed to parties other than mine. I have spoken to Conservatives, Liberals and New Democrats. When I raised the question of the trade agreement and asked them "What do you think about it", their answers were identical. 'I am scared of it" and I agree with them, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 1 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Motions Nos. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10 and 11 which relate to parliamentary approval by either resolution or legislation shall be debated together and a vote on Motion No. 2 will apply to Motions Nos. 3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10 and 11.

(8) For the purposes of subsection (7), a day on which either House of Parliament sits shall be deemed to be a sitting day."

Motion No. 10.

That Bill C-87, be amended in Clause 60 by striking out lines 9 to 45 at page 20 and substituting the following therefor:

"(3) Where an order is made pursuant to subsection (1) on the basis of a report of the Minister of Finance, an inquiry made by the Canadian Import Tribunal under section 48 of the Special Import Measures Act or an inquiry made by the Textile and Clothing Board under the Textile and Clothing Board Act, the order ceases to have effect on the expiration of the sixtieth day from the day on which the order is made if Parliament is then sitting or, if Parliament is not then sitting, on the expiration of the fifteenth sitting day after that day, unless before the order so ceases to have effect it is approved by a resolution adopted by both Houses of Parliament."

That Bill C-87, be amended in Clause 60 by adding, immediately after line 27, at page 21 the following:

"(9) Where an order is made pursuant to subsection (7), the order shall cease to have any force or effect with respect to any period following the sixtieth day after the date on which it becomes effective or, if Parliament is not then sitting, the fifteenth day next thereafter that Parliament is sitting, unless, not later than that day, the order is approved by resolution adopted by both Houses of Parliament.

(10) For the purposes of subsection (9), a day on which either House of Parliament sits shall be deemed to be a sitting day."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would ask for a bit of leeway because I would like to explain briefly for viewers what those motions mean in a very simple language. Right now, Clause 60 of the Bill allows that in the event imports are causing injury to Canadian producers, the Government can order a surtax but that surtax must be approved by resolution of Parliament within 180 days or it can be in force for up to three years under recommendations from the Imports Tribunal. Therefore, Bill C-87 contains the selective idea that certain actions relating to tariffs by the Government are subject to parliamentary approval by resolution.

This series of amendments makes that selective approval into a general approval. Motion No. 2 which amends Clause 19 will require that no regulation or order relative to tariffs can remain in force if it is not ratified by Parliament and I have suggested that it be ratified by Parliament within 60 days.

Motion No. 3 amends Clause 22 and requires that no most-favoured-nation country can get lower tariff rates than most-favoured nation rates without an Act of Parliament. I will return to that very important clause because that is essentially what the Government intends to do with the United States.

Motion No. 5 which amends Clause 36 requires the approval of Parliament within 60 days if there are changes to extend or withdraw the general preferential tariff to developing countries. In other words, it offers a principle of accountability even on a tariff matter that does not cover the United States. Motion No. 6 amends Clause 38 and likewise requires approval within 60 days by Parliament if there is a granting or withdrawal of a free rate of tariff to least-developed countries. Likewise, Motion No. 7 which amends Clause 54 covers the withdrawal of free rate of duties to countries in the Commonwealth Caribbean.

Motion No. 9 amends Clause 59, a very major clause of the Bill. It allows retaliation against trade discrimination by means of a surtax, higher tariff rates or import controls. In effect, what is suggested is that that should be laid before Parliament in the same way that a surtax under Clause 60 is required to be laid before Parliament and approved.

We are dealing with a very basic principle of accountability here. I referred particularly to Clause 22, one of the clauses to which we have proposed amendments, which amendments require that no country benefiting from Canada's most-favoured-nation tariff like the United States could get lower tariffs than the most-favoured-nation rates without an Act of Parliament. That sounds very simple, but in fact the reason this is required now while it has not been required in the past is because in the past, it has not been an issue.

Governments with a certain amount of credibility acted responsibly on tariff matters. We have now a Government that has no credibility, is down to 25 per cent of public support and did not have a mandate for free trade in the last election. That Government is now moving to sharply cut rates of tariffs to the United States, our greatest trading partner, without an Act of Parliament.

I suggest that because the Government has violated the trust Parliament has put in previous Governments to deal with customs matters, this Bill which might otherwise be a routine one has become an extremely important Bill. It is important because it enshrines basic principles about parliamentary accountability. I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) during Question Period earlier today: "What about the people?" The Prime Minister suggested that there had been ample consultation about this and cited the Macdonald commission report. No one knew the Macdonald commission report would recommend free trade until it had reported.

The Prime Minister suggested that there had been consultation with various industry groups. That is true, but the members of those sectoral advisory groups have all committed by oath not to share information with anyone in the public sector and I presume that even means other people in their own industries. What they are doing within their own trade groups I do not know, but trade unionists, workers, consumers and citizens of the communities in which those companies operate have had no information through that form of consultation.

When it comes to consumer groups, trade union groups and the opposition Parties, which I remind Hon. Members represent half the population according to the last vote in Canada and which today represent something like 75 per cent of the electorate according to the opinion polls, there has been no consultation at all.

Why do we suggest that there should be parliamentary accountability and that no reductions in MFN tariff rates should go forward without an Act of Parliament? It is because the Government is violating the trust of Parliament.

I listened with concern to some of the statements that were made both today and at other times. The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin), for example, rose in the House a few minutes ago and said that it was unfortunate that this most important piece of legislation which is historically important was being subjected to what he called delays. He spoke in the forty-fifth minute of debate, hardly a lengthy delay in my opinion.

This matter has been discussed by the Government of Canada in consultation with the trade sector since 1981. The Government has been in power for more than three years. It chose not to bring this legislation before Parliament until the beginning of October and now it suddenly says that it is rush, rush, we must put it through. In addition, the Minister of State for Finance said that the legislation is needed by January 1 because Canada has made a commitment. I would suggest that he misleads the House because in the—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Order!

Mr. Cassidy: His comment is misleading. During the seminars and information sessions which were held with brokers and importers by the Department of National Revenue over the course of the last few months, the commitments which were made were quite specifically otherwise.

• (1650)

I have a document which was distributed to importers about two and one-half months ago which indicates, as the Minister of State has indicated, that Canada has been committed to a change-over to the harmonized system of tariffs for some years now and began to develop the Canadian tariff based on this system in 1981.

It says that in early 1986 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) confirmed the adoption of a new system for January 1, 1988, under the condition that our major trading partners, i.e., the U.S. and Japan, adopt the harmonized system at the same time. That is what was being told to importers only two months ago, just before this Bill was published.

We have taken care to find out the situation of our major trading partner, the United States. Are they in fact putting this harmonized system into force? Given the degree of interchange between the two countries it would make sense for computerization, record keeping, and so on that the two countries move to the same system at the same time. Contrary to the statements made by the Minister of State for Finance, and contrary to what was said to the brokers and importers, that is not taking place.

We talked to the head of the trade division of the Department of External Affairs last week. He indicated that there is "still some uncertainty" as to whether or not the United States will move to this new harmonized system on January 1. The information of External Affairs was that the harmonized system was part of the omnibus trade Bill which is as protectionist and objectionable a Bill as we can imagine. According to our officials, the Americans have now removed their Bill from the omnibus Bill and introduced new legislation. However, it remains uncertain that the Americans will deal with the legislation prior to January 1.

That was the American story. When we talked to the American trade representatives here in Ottawa, the American story which we heard was that the American Bill for the harmonized system is still part of the larger and objectionable omnibus trade Bill which I think all Canadians hope will be vetoed by the President if it is in fact adopted by Congress during the next few weeks.

However, Congressman Gibbons plans to introduce separate legislation next week, that is, some time after December 7, to deal with the harmonized system. The American House, like this Parliament, can move quickly when it has to, but at the very least uncertainty reigns and there is clearly no guarantee that the Americans will keep their side of the bargain despite what Canada is being asked to do.

I read reports in the papers over the weekend of the Prime Minister saying that consensus reigns on the issue and it is, therefore, okay to go forward. There is certainly not consensus in the House of Commons, as must be evident to the public from this debate and many other debates which have taken place. My Party believes that Canada should not get locked into a trading deal with the United States unless there is a general election first.

The Prime Minister himself, the Minister of State for Finance, the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) and the Minister of Finance have all said that this is the most important commercial arrangement being made by Canada within a generation. The President of the United States says that it is a new economic constitution for North America. Despite all that, we are being faced with a fait accompli, with a bunch of snake oil salesmen and saleswomen on the Government side trying to stampede Canadians into a deal without our knowing whether it is really a deal for Canada and without our knowing what the fine print says.

We have seen the elements of the agreement. I have a copy here which I read from time to time. Every time I read it I find new areas which raise questions in my mind rather than satisfying them. We have received Overview on the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement. However, to put it mildly, Overview is misleading and deceptive, if not intellectually dishonest. If I could say it lied in the House of Commons and be parliamentary, I would use that phrase too. However, in deference to your authority I would not use such a phrase.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Order, order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I think the Hon. Member realizes what he has just done. I hope he will withdraw before he carries on.

Mr. Cassidy: Since I did not say it lied I do not think there is anything to withdraw. However, I will nonetheless defer to your authority and withdraw any remarks which you may have found to be unparliamentary. I think it is fair to say that this, like the speeches made by the government Ministers, is intellectually dishonest.

I will give you an example. The Government has been saying that $2 billion of tariffs will disappear and that that will mean money in consumers' pockets. The Government has not said how it intends to make up the $2 billion in lost revenues. That is an example of the intellectual dishonesty.

I will return to the basic point of these seven or eight amendments which is that, given the actions and irresponsibility of the Government, it is imperative that Parliament take the authority, that the Government be accountable, and that major trade and tariff actions of the Government not be undertaken without prior approval by Act of Parliament or resolution of Parliament. That is a fundamental principle in a parliamentary democracy. This is not Haiti yet. This is still Canada. I hope Hon. Members will support these amendments.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to have a chance to support the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). The point of his motion is to insist that the Government cannot change regulations regarding reductions or other changes in import duties in response to some deal with another country without referring it to Parliament.

The question has been raised as to why we want this amendment in the law. The answer is that the times demand it. In the past Governments of the day have made such changes by regulation. However, we were now faced with a secret and massive document which may run to a couple of thousand pages of which the majority, according to the Government, is tariff regulations. The Government has said that approximately 1800 pages would be composed of tariff regulations. We have not yet seen those regulations. The Government has promised again and again to show them to us but has not brought them forward.

The Government wants us to give it a blank cheque to change the customs regulations. Such changes have, in the past, wiped out sections of the garment industry and the electrical appliance industry. The Government is asking for a blank cheque to do that in any industry on which it may make a secret deal with any other country, particularly with the United States, which can import products made with cheap labour in order to export them to Canada, not for the benefit of the people who gave that cheap labour but for the benefit of multinational companies based in the United States.

We are asked to trust the Government. We are asked to trust Mr. Reisman, the chief negotiator of this deal, in spite of the fact that a year ago Mr. Reisman said that he would never recommend an agreement to the Canadian Government that did not make substantial progress in limiting and constraining the unilateral right of the United States to use retaliatory measures against Canadian trade. He said that he would never recommend a deal which did not give us the power to defend ourselves against those.

A year later, on October 25 of this year, he said that to suggest that this agreement should provide us with an exemption from American trade remedy law is just the silliest proposition he had ever heard of. Well, he was the author of that proposition. That is just as unsatisfactory as the spectacle of last week to which I have referred of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) sneering at people who used the very words that he used four years ago. We cannot accept a trade deal based on this kind of misrepresentation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved that Bill C-208, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (abortion), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it was some 12 years ago that Parliament took the last steps in an attempt to examine the operation of the abortion provisions of the Criminal Code of Canada. In 1975, the Badgley Commission was appointed to study the operation of the abortion provisions of the Criminal Code. Since that time, no government, be it Liberal or Conservative, has recognized the fundamental inequities existing under the present provisions of the Criminal Code. No Government, be it Liberal or Conservative, has displayed the courage to move forward with the only appropriate response to these inequities, which is the repeal of Section 251 of the Criminal Code of Canada.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My name was cited as being the seconder of this motion, whereas I believe it should be my colleague, the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) who is the seconder.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Spadina will be the seconder of the motion.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, the Badgley commission which conducted investigations in most hospitals throughout Canada concluded that the law was not working and the provisions of the Criminal Code which, in theory, provided access to safe therapeutic abortions for women were in fact not working.

The Badgley commission stressed that women did not in fact have equal access to therapeutic abortions for various reasons. One was that the numerous provincial directives or regulations governing the establishment of a therapeutic abortion committee in hospitals, and the attitude of hospital boards of directors and members of the medical profession often lead to limited interpretation of the provisions of the Criminal Code.

The second is the reality that it is only a very few hospitals in Canada which have indeed established therapeutic abortion committees. I believe the most recent figures indicate that fewer than 15 per cent of all hospitals in Canada have therapeutic abortion committees. Indeed, many of those hospitals with committees do not perform abortions at all.

There has been a deterioration in Canada in the number of hospitals providing safe therapeutic abortions.

[Translation]

The deterioration of abortion services in Canada is such that several provinces are faced with a real crisis. In 1984, for instance, out of the 244 hospital clinics which existed in Canada, 18 per cent performed no abortion and 42 per cent performed only a limited number, from 1 to 100 for the whole year. That is why Mrs. Sylvia Gold, President of the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women, has urged the Federal Government to take action and to reiterate its position on the abortion issue. The Council's recommendations in this regard are as follows: recognition of abortion as a medical process which need not be carried out in a hospital; approval by the Federal Minister and the Provincial health services of subsidies to birth control clinics, independent from the hospital network, and finally the removal from the Canadian Criminal Code of the section dealing with abortion.

That is the purpose of my Bill today, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

That is precisely the purpose of my Private Members' Bill which is before the House today. It would implement the principle of child birth by choice.

Child birth by choice means freedom of choice in the planning of one's family. It means that a woman should not be pressured to bear a child against her will and similarly, it means that a woman should not be pressured to have an abortion against her will. Pro choice simply means that women should have the freedom to choose for themselves whether or not to continue an unplanned, undesired pregnancy.

This position is very much in line with that which is taken by the International Conference on Population and Development at Mexico City in August, 1984, which said that: "Major efforts must be made now to ensure that all couples and individuals can exercise their basic human rights to decide freely, responsibly and without coercion the number and spacing of their children and to have the information, education and means to do so".

I and my colleagues in the New Democratic Party were very pleased when earlier this year a motion that would have entrenched in the Constitution of Canada a denial of this fundamental freedom of choice was brought before the House and defeated resoundingly.

The policy of the New Democratic Party is clear. As a Government, we would remove Sections 251 and 252 from the Criminal Code. We would pardon all qualified medical practitioners convicted under Sections 251 and 251 and drop prosecutions under those sections. In that context, I pay tribute to the leadership and courage that has been shown by Henry Morgentaler in leading the fight for access to safe therapeutic abortions in Canada. We are all awaiting the outcome of his challenge to these provisions of the Criminal Code.

Finally, the NDP would provide adequate facilities in hospitals or special clinics for sterilization and abortion procedures.

In that context, we support the campaigns which have been launched by coalitions in Ontario, Manitoba and my own Province of British Columbia recently, and elsewhere, to establish free standing medical clinics which provide a wide range of gynaecological services, including birth control counselling and abortions, fully covered by provincial health insurance plans.

It is shameful that in Canada today there is still a lack of access based upon the location of a woman. The present provisions of the Criminal Code harshly discriminate particularly against women in rural communities. They discriminate particularly against young women, teenagers, women immigrants, working class women and women of colour.

Indeed, during the hearing of the appeal from Dr. Morgentaler's acquittal on abortion charges, one of the justices of the Supreme Court of Canada, Mr. Justice Willard Estey said that a person would have to be affected with "legislative blindness" not to see that there are areas in the country where there is no access to abortion. He pointed out: "You've got whole provinces that are carved out of the process". He asked: "Is this some kind of local option which has slid into the Criminal Code?". While the question may have been rhetorical, the answer tragically is yes, that is exactly what has happened.

For example, there is no access whatsoever to safe therapeutic abortion in the Province of Prince Edward Island. It was in June, 1986, that a vote of the hospital board resulted in the deletion of the therapeutic abortion committee from the Prince County Hospital, which was the only hospital that was even theoretically providing abortions.

Since 1982, the hospital had not even allowed for any abortions whatsoever. What does this mean? It means delays which result in the risk of complications. This is particularly serious in the case of teenagers and young women. In many cases, these teenagers are afraid to tell their parents that they are pregnant.

Some time ago, June Callwood wrote very eloquently in an article about a 14-year old girl who was 10 weeks pregnant before she summoned the courage to tell her mother. She pointed out that this is not uncommon and that in some cases teenagers keep hoping that what has happened to them is merely an irregularity in their periods. However, because of the delays as a result of the provision of the Criminal Code, in too many instances complications will arise.

The same Government that refused to take any action to eliminate these inequitable provisions of the Criminal Code has been cutting back on funding for the Planned Parenthood Federation of Canada and on funding for other programs which would help to reduce the number of abortions in Canada.

The Planned Parenthood Federation has called on governments in Canada to follow policies which would ensure universal access without financial barriers to the complete range of educational counselling and medical services relating to human sexuality and reproductive health. I might say in passing that the Planned Parenthood Federation has noted that one of the implications of the legislation on pornography, which is currently before this House, may very well be a reduction in access to information about sex education and that, in turn, could lead to an increase in the number of abortions. Too often it is the same right wing element in our community calling for a denial of choice to women which is pushing for this kind of legislation that would also deny access to information to teenagers and others who are concerned about preventing unwanted pregnancies.

The situation in Alberta is grim, indeed. The Alberta Conservative Government, in a vicious attack against women's rights, has pulled reproductive counselling, IUDs and sterilization off the list of medicare services entirely. What this means in practical terms is that far too many Canadian women are forced to leave the country in order to obtain safe therapeutic abortions. The figures are staggering. For 1984, for example, over 400 women from Prince Edward Island had to go to Maine in the United States for abortions. From Ontario, 1,200 women went to New York. From Manitoba, 680 women went to North Dakota and 700 women from Alberta went to Washington State. That is a clear indictment of the system in Canada of access to safe therapeutic abortions.

I want to take this opportunity as well to commend those organizations in Canada that have been courageously waging a tireless battle, with very limited resources, for freedom of choice for Canadian women. I speak, of course, of CARAL, a national organization that has been leading this fight, and the provincial coalitions which have been active in seeking to achieve provincial free-standing clinics.

[Translation]

I am referring to the Coalition québécoise pour le droit à l'avortement libre et gratuit. It is this coalition which was responsible for an action taken on October 18 and 19, just before—at any rate, it was felt that it would take place just before the Supreme Court's ruling on the legality of abortion. Women, everywhere in Canada, demanded that this Federal legislation on abortion be rescinded and insisted on obtaining open and free access to abortion services. As Mrs. Denise Larochelle, representative for the Coalition québécoise pour le droit à l'avortement, was reported as saying: We will continue to fight until this abortion legislation is removed from the Criminal Code. We must fight to obtain free abortion services if we want to guarantee its accessibility to women from all social and economic strata.

[English]

That is one of the grave concerns of those of us in the New Democratic Party. There must be access to safe therapeutic abortion. It must not be denied on the basis of economic considerations. Those who would deny access to safe therapeutic abortions, those who are anti-choice, are in fact denying a fundamental matter of choice and integrity for the women involved. In some cases it is argued, why does she not have the child and give it up for adoption. That is an insult to the woman because, of course, the reality is that carrying a child to full term and then giving that child up for adoption is more traumatic in many cases than an abortion itself. As well, it denies the right of a woman to make that fundamental decision about her own body. Surely, we must recognize the unfairness and harshness of that.

It is time that we as a society recognize that we should be placing more emphasis on the role of men. It is about time we recognize that men must accept their responsibility. Why is it that contraception in too many cases is only spoken of in the context of women? When contraception fails, it is the woman who must bear the burden. I think we have to recognize that as a problem that we as a society must address as well.

I want to say as well that this is not the first time I have risen in this House to promote free access to safe therapeutic abortions in Canada. It is not the first time I have pointed out the fundamental harshness and inequity of the current provisions of the Criminal Code. I must say that I very much regret that the Liberal Party, the Official Opposition, has chosen to remain silent. It has chosen to refuse to take a stand on this fundamental question. Time and again when the Liberal Party, the Official Opposition, is called upon to take a stand, it is silent. It refuses to indicate any support whatsoever on this very important and sensitive question. Oh yes, when those Members are out around the country and talking to groups which support freedom of choice, then it is a different story, but when it comes to the crunch and the Liberals are asked to take a stand here in the House of Commons, they are silent. They say nothing. They cop out. I very much regret that. At least Conservative Members, even though many of them are opposed to free choice, are prepared to stand in the House and indicate exactly where they stand on this fundamental question of choice.

The situation in Canada today is desperate for far too many women. The provisions of the Criminal Code are harsh, unjust and inequitable. They deny access to safe therapeutic abortions. Those provisions should be repealed and we should put far more resources into organizations such as the Planned Parenthood Federation and others. We should promote the development in Canada of reproductive health centres which will deal with the full range of reproductive health concerns for women.

At the time when the only Newfoundland hospital with an abortion committee had to shut down its facilities because the one doctor who provided abortions took sick leave, the medical director of the hospital said: "I think it is disgraceful myself, to be frank with you, disgraceful bordering on the unethical". I want to ask how much longer will elected representatives of the people of Canada, including some 52 per cent of the population who are women, continue to deny to the women of Canada that basic freedom of choice which is theirs? How much longer will we continue to maintain on the books laws which in effect drive women from their own communities, from their own provinces, out of their own country, in order to have access to safe therapeutic abortions?

I hope during my tenure in the House—obviously, it will not be while this Government is in power—that it will be an NDP Government which will have the courage and integrity to move forward and repeal the provisions of the Criminal Code with respect to abortion and to provide for true freedom of choice for the women of Canada.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak against Bill C-208, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, the abortion section.

This Bill would abolish therapeutic abortion committees and allow qualified medical practitioners to perform abortions without having to get the prior authorization of these committees. I must speak out against any Bill which encourages abortions, unless, as I have stated in this House before, the mother is in danger of losing her own life as a result of continuation of the pregnancy. This Bill will make abortions even easier to obtain and I find this appalling, to say the least.

The number of abortions performed in Canada in 1985, over 60,000, prove that abortion is no longer a medical necessity but undertaken for elective, socioeconomic reasons. Further, the argument that a woman has the sole right to control what happens to her body assumes that the unborn child is just an extension of the woman.

Genetically the child is unique and separate from the mother. Even at his or her earliest development, the unborn child is just at one special stage of life. There is no difference between the existence of that child two weeks in the womb after birth, or at 2 years, 10 years, 40 years or 80 years. The only difference is the stage of development. By assuming that you become a "person" only when you are full-term or capable of sustaining life independent of the womb makes me wonder how we view a full-term infant who is incapable of sustaining life independently due to some physiological problem. Do we have the power to say, then, that this is not a life? The same holds true for the unborn child.

If we were to make an analogy, we can compare the child in the womb to an astronaut in a spaceship. Both require that specific environment to shelter them, provide nourishment and warmth, but neither are "part of" the environment. The child is not an extension of the mother anymore than the astronaut is an extension of the spaceship.

The Member who introduced this Bill is from my home province and should be aware of the abortion statistics for B.C. We do not have a record we can be proud of. In fact, the figures are frightening. B.C.'s abortion rate just two years ago, in 1985, was over 50 per cent higher than the national average. That means that for every 100 live births in B.C., 26.1 abortions are performed. In 1984, 11,509 infants were killed by abortionists in B.C. Since 25 per cent of abortions in B.C. are repeat abortions, no one is going to convince me that all these women were in grave danger as a result of their pregnancies. What is now termed "therapeutic" abortion is nothing short of murder of unborn children.

Even pro-abortion advocates agree that abortion is not necessary to preserve the mental or physical health of pregnant women. A leading proponent of abortion, the late Dr. Alan Guttmacher, wrote: "Today it is possible for almost any patient to be brought through pregnancy alive, unless she suffers from a fatal illness, such as cancer or leukemia, and, if so, abortion would be unlikely to prolong, much less save her life".

The 1969 changes to the Criminal Code led to induced abortions becoming a deliberate decision to terminate the life of an unborn child. The changes recommended in Bill C-208 will have even greater repercussions.

I am now talking about the effects of abortion on the woman herself. I can certainly see that an unwanted pregnancy could create psychological stress for a woman or girl, but I believe abortion can only result in permanent irreparable damage to the mother's conscience and health. If a woman can just go out to her doctor for an abortion as soon as she finds out she is pregnant, without any counselling, she will have had the abortion in a moment of panic. Instead of encouraging this "aloneness" we need to give these women our support and encouragement.

We must not let Bill C-208 pass. The unborn child deserves the protection all Canadians can give. Only in situations where the mother is in actual physical danger should an abortion even be considered.

I want to reiterate that abortion in Canada today is an elective procedure, mainly chosen for socio-economic reasons. It is no longer a medical service. This attitude must be stopped, and Bill C-208 does just the opposite. Our children are our future and they deserve our protection.

[Translation]

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Brome—Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-208 introduced by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) deals with an important and delicate issue.

I am not without any opinion on the question of abortion, on the contrary, but like my fellow citizens, recent events such as the legal proceedings launched against Dr. Morgentaler, have led me to ponder over it.

To understand how this question of abortion stands, it is necessary to consider more generally the response of Canadians to that issue. The Canadian way of life has in the past few years undergone several major changes which have altered the fundamental traits of people. Those changes relate to the number of desired children, sexual behaviour and the use of contraceptives.

While this country was evolving from a rural community to a highly industrialized society, different social expectations and the improvement of the standard of living have resulted in fundamental changes in individual activities, in what is expected out of life and in the attitude towards induced abortion.

Many changes have occurred in this area with respect to ideas held in the past, and there is no unanimity as to the current situation or future actions to be taken, far from it.

Abortion is a human concern with a high risk of personal and collective prejudices, which influence one's attitude towards facts, as to their interpretation and their use. Abortion is one thing in a group of issues which involve sexual behaviour and the family while including family planning, genetic consulting, extramarital birth and social security programs, that seldom have been rationally considered in that wider context.

Since abortion can become an almost explosive issue, it seems to me there is a certain segment of the general public which has chosen to ignore it. Efficient and direct solutions to serious differences have not been sought. One of the attitudes has been: "If you ignore it, it will fade away sooner or later." Other people with different views had this to say: "This is what is happening, this is what has to be done". Between those two positions, there is a range of deeply felt but not always easily expressed opinions that are held according to region, religious persuasion, political affiliation, culture or other social circumstances. Those views reflect on the one hand a determination to preserve the life and the physical health of mothers, and on the other hand a concern for the whole social environment of women and their family situation. Each of those two attitudes, respectively shared by a number of Canadians, is based on a different view of family ethics and the changing role of women in our Canadian society.

That issue deeply involves standard principles and professional ethics, and is therefore fraught with emotion. It will remain so because there is and there will be no easy solution. As in the cases of other major issues involving the concepts of life and death, abortion is a concern of many people who would have preferred avoiding the issue. But it is one of the difficult choices that any woman capable of becoming pregnant may have to face some time or other in her life. The large number of women who have resorted to abortion have been ostracized and have experienced some kind of stress that has left them in a permanent state of anxiety. They are concerned about the long term effects of that operation on their health and are in constant fear that their anonymity might not be preserved.

Mr. Speaker, for all those reasons, this in my view is an issue that has been there for years and that will remain with us. But we should not forget that although this Parliament, is responsible for the drafting of the Criminal Code, the responsibility rests with the provinces to enforce that Code. I would therefore consider it very much ill-advised to support the Bill at this point, because it must be kept in mind that enforcement is a provincial responsibility, and I do not believe at this point it would be appropriate to get involved in the debate.

[English]

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Bill C-208, which we have before us today, is essentially to recognize that the decision to terminate a pregnancy fundamentally belongs to the woman concerned in consultation with her physician. This Bill would abolish therapeutic abortion committees and allow qualified medical practitioners to perform abortion without having to obtain prior authorization from such committees.

• (1730)

I welcome the opportunity to add a few words to this debate which was introduced by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). This Bill proposes to amend the Criminal Code and make abortions available on request to any pregnant woman.

I do not think that Private Members' Hour is the appropriate place to be considering an amendment to the Criminal Code on such a significant issue. I would like to tell you why, Mr. Speaker.

I wish to stress that it is essential that we ensure that any decision to amend the Criminal Code as proposed will be taken only after full examination of all the issues, and with full understanding of what is involved.

In 1955 the federal Government appointed a committee to study the operation of the abortion law, to conduct a fact finding study to determine whether the procedure provided in the Criminal Code for obtaining therapeutic abortions was operating equitably across Canada. Federal and provincial government Departments co-operated with the committee and provided assistance in assembling and analysing existing information. The committee and its research staff undertook several surveys and made a large number of site visits.

For example, the committee visited 140 Canadian hospitals of various sizes both with and without therapeutic abortion committees. These site visits enabled the committee to obtain information on the operation of the abortion procedure, and the reasons for decisions not to establish therapeutic abortion committees from more than 1,000 individuals connected with the hospitals. Information was obtained on the operation of hospitals with and without therapeutic abortion committees in order to analyse their role in the abortion procedure.

The completed questionnaires returned to the committee represented 77.4 per cent of the hospitals which were considered to be eligible in terms of provincial requirements to establish therapeutic abortion committees. Surveys were also conducted of hospital staff, as well as physicians and patients. A total of 4,912 interviews were conducted with patients in the period of February to May, 1976, in 24 hospitals, in 8 provinces; all 1,196 obstetricians-gynaecologists were included in a survey because of their direct involvement in the abortion operation, as well as a random sample of 3,839 family doctors. Gallup polls were also conducted to obtain insight into the public attitude toward the topic. The committee made a number of findings on matters with and related to its terms of reference.

First, and this is very important, it found no consensus for major changes in the existing Criminal Code provisions with respect to the abortion law in Canada. There was no consensus for major change.

Most Canadians were neither in favour of removing abortion from the Criminal Code, nor of refusing therapeutic abortions under any circumstances. Further, the Badgley report observed that the law was not operating equitably throughout Canada. There were sharp disparities in the distribution and accessibility of therapeutic abortion services, and unreasonable pressure on some physicians in hospitals. The burden of the equitable operation of the abortion law was seen to fall on women who were less well educated, who had lower incomes, and who lived in smaller centres of rural areas with no direct access to abortion services.

The committee found that the 1969 amendment to the abortion law had resulted in a sharp reduction in illegal abortions. In addition, there was a substantial reduction in deaths resulting from attempted, self-induced, or other illegal abortions. Provincial regulations, and the practices of hospitals and the medical profession rather than the abortion law itself were observed to have led to the inequities of its operation. The issue of abortion causes divisions within the Canadian populace like almost no other issue today.

I am a member of the justice committee, together with the Hon. Member for Burnaby. I respect the concern of the Hon. Member that he evidently bears for this issue, and I commend his effort in this area. But I must reiterate that I believe that this is not the proper occasion for bringing forward an amendment to the Criminal Code dealing with such a sensitive issue.

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity this afternoon to speak on Private Member's Bill C-208. At the outset, I wish to state that I certainly do not support the position put forward by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). In my remarks, I intend to give the reasons why I do not support this position.

Abortion is an issue on which fundamentally differing and opposing views are strongly and genuinely held by many Canadians. There is definitely a lack of consensus supporting any major change in abortion law. Because of the opposing views held by many Canadians, I believe that it would be premature to bring forth such an amendment.

I would like to spend a few moments putting forward my reasons on this very sensitive and divisive issue. A therapeutic abortion is a matter of fundamental concern since it involves human life. Attitudes to human life inevitably affect all society and each of us individually. Some consider that this is one of the many changes in social attitude and must be considered dispassionately. However, many of us stand firmly against abortion; but we must remember to be charitable in our attitudes to those who hold opposing views. All too often we see deep divisions develop, particularly in areas that involve controversy, and we become rather hostile toward those who have differing views. A free discussion rather than polarization of opinions would seem to be the preferred approach.

Consideration of the matter of abortion can be made from differing aspects including moral, legal, and medical aspects. I wish to touch on some of the points in the area of morals. From the moral standpoint, I feel that since a human conceptus is a human being from the moment of conception, it should receive the same respect as any other human being. Therefore, direct therapeutic abortion which removes it from its environment and therefore causes its death should not be contemplated except for the most serious reason.

That reason was stated a few moments ago by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher) when he stated that only in the event of the death of the mother could one even consider an abortion. I would certainly support that position.

The conceptus contains all the genetic material which will constitute his or her person to the end of his or her days from the very moment of formation, that is, when the sperm unites with the ovum. He then has the indelible imprint of his individuality with the determination of such things as his skin and eye colour, approximate height and body build, ability in athletics and intellectual pursuits. He is a human being with potential from the moment of conception. He is not simply a potential human being, as some would lead us to believe.

During this discussion regarding the time of the actual beginning of human life, we consider the newborn baby to be human and by his nature have all the rights of a human person. Similarly, just before delivery the foetus, or the unborn baby, which is not essentially changed by the process of delivery, really has all the same rights to life. As we trace the development of that foetus day by day back to the time of its conception, there is no time at which we can say that today he is a human, yesterday he was not. Therefore, complete respect for his life must be maintained at all times.

Some would say that true human life does not begin before the time of implantation in the uterus, about six days after conception. Others would say that it cannot be said to exist until the possibility of twinning has passed which may occur until as late as day 20. These matters may be settled in the future, but possibly no definite decision will ever be made. Regardless of this decision, the point remains that abortions which are covered by the law, are performed at a much later date, and almost certainly are dealing with human life in the form of the conceptus. It is an accepted scientific fact that the conceptus is human with its unique genetic structure and is living as a distinct individual. Understanding this fact is fundamental to the whole discussion.

We have heard a good deal during the debate today and also in the unending debate that goes on regarding abortion concerning the pro-choice and the freedom of choice which individuals must have. With choice and with freedom comes responsibility. Any time that we are in any way diminishing that respect for life, and it certainly is done through abortions, then we, as a human race, are losing something.

Respect for life is one of the cornerstones of our civilization. Any assaults on humans who are already born result in severe penalties on the perpetrators. Yet many in our society condone the barbaric acts inflicted on unborn human beings. I invite anyone who doubts this to view some of the films that are available today—I will not go into naming them—dealing with abortion and watch the horror of abortion recorded in living colour. If a person can watch that film and maintain that there is no human being involved, then I think that person's mind is already closed to the facts. We cannot have a double standard. Either life is accepted as sacred for all society or society runs the risk of cheapening the value of human life.

There are some other very interesting arguments that have been brought forward. I would like to refer directly to some information made available from the Surgeon-General in the United States dealing with the post-abortion syndrome in that country. For years it has been thought that the unborn child was the only victim of abortion. We are finding out now from recent studies released that women who have abortions are also victims. There is an increasing body of evidence that now shows the post-abortion syndrome is fast becoming the most serious mental health issue facing women. The symptoms of post-abortion syndrome include denial, anger, guilt and depression. These problems in turn can lead to substance abuse, sexual dysfunction, relationship dysfunction and a general decrease in coping skills. Research has shown that up to 82 per cent of American women suffer from acute symptoms of post-abortion syndrome for up to three years following the abortion. Latent symptoms can manifest themselves five to 10 years following the abortion.

The Surgeon-General of the United States has recently authorized a study of post-abortion syndrome in the U.S. In Britain, the effects of abortion on women will be studied by a bipartisan Conservative-Labour committee. This is a new area about which we are only beginning to hear and it is one with which we must deal.

In summing up my remarks I strongly support the pro-life position. In fact, I have had this conviction throughout my entire life. There is no doubt in my mind that the unborn child, the foetus, whatever term you want to refer to it, is simply that term. It is the same as referring to a pre-schooler, an adolescent, a teenager, a middle-aged person or a senior citizen. It just happens to be a time at a particular stage of development. I feel very strongly about this issue because the unborn cannot speak for themselves. It is incumbent upon those of us who are elected to represent the people of our areas to stand up and proclaim the necessity to respect all human life and to oppose any change in the abortion laws and any change in making abortions more readily available.

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I too welcome the chance to speak on Bill C-208 sponsored by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). I have great respect for his judgment in a number of areas but on this particular Bill we differ totally.

Let me read again the purpose of the Bill:

> The purpose of this Bill is to recognize that the fundamental decision to terminate a pregnancy belongs to the woman concerned in consultation with her physician. At present, the Criminal Code requires the establishment of therapeutic abortion committees and in most parts of Canada accredited hospitals have refused to set up such committees thus, in fact, denying many women access to safe legal abortions.
> This Bill would abolish therapeutic abortion committees and would allow qualified medical practitioners to perform abortions without having to obtain prior authorization from such committees.

The previous speaker, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Gottselig) stressed respect for life. That is my theme also. I do not think anyone is totally comfortable with the laws as they now stand. I for one would greatly regret it if the current laws were liberalized.

Speaking very personally, in our own family some 20 years ago—we had three children at the time—we decided that a fourth child should be an adopted one. We adopted young John Fraser. He was 11 months old. His mother was a young woman who had one other child and who was unable financially to handle an additional child. We brought that 10 pound youngster home, blond hair at the time—our other three were redheads—and we were so proud to love him, hug him and bring him along. It struck me so many times over the last 20 years that if abortion laws had been a lot more liberal then his birth mother might very well have sought an easy means from whatever was in her heart and mind at that time and we would not have had the privilege of raising that young man who is now 20 years old. There are many other families like this.

My sister who resides in Peterborough and her husband were not able to have a child and adopted two many years ago. They are both in their twenties now. Many members of our church have done the same thing. If for hardship or for other reasons a mother does not want to go through with her pregnancy, there are Canadians who would welcome a baby and be very joyous to have it. The one major qualification I put on the whole process, and I think it is inherent in our current laws, if the mother's life is at stake, then I think the mother's life comes first. Everyone does not share that particular view, but it is one I share.

I wanted to speak on this Bill to share personally why I could not support further liberalization of the whole process. I could go on with other points but perhaps in the interests of other Members who want to speak on this Bill I will end my remarks. It is with some regret that in a way I differ with my colleague but I do so from the bottom of my heart on this particular issue.

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure and an honour for me to speak about Bill C-208, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (abortion), sponsored by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

Of course, Mr. Speaker, this a topical issue, and will always be so, and it is also extremely sensitive because it is so personal. Without being directly related to any other debate in this House, such as the debate on the death penalty, it remains a matter of personal definition, attitude and psychology.

Discussing a Bill such as that introduced by the Hon. Member for Burnaby is something I find essential not only for each of us as Members of this House, but also for the Canadian population and especially for the couple or the woman who has to decide whether to have an abortion or not.

Before making such a decision, Mr. Speaker, we also have to look at the situation in which such a decision would be made and at the personal, psychological, emotional and economic context.

Mr. Speaker, how many women, how many young couples, how many young women would have opted for an abortion had there been therapeutic abortion clinics at every street corner? Because of their economic situation, it is often young women of 17, 18 or 20 without much financial resources and whose spouse or partner is still in school who would have decided to go immediately to the nearest abortion clinic. But then, they decided not to do so, Mr. Speaker. Then, when the child is born, there is a radical change in the life of both parents. The birth of the child brings a new awareness and new responsibilities as parents. How many of these parents are happy because they now have what is most precious in this world, a child? These men and women accept their responsibilities as parents in spite of all the obstacles and difficulties they will have to face in life, especially when they are young. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, it is not easy at 20, 21 or 22, when you are still in school, to face responsibilities and take care of a child. They nevertheless possess something even more precious than all natural resources in the world, a child.

In that context, Mr. Speaker, it is much more difficult, and how many more examples . . . There is no problem when the mother's health is at risk, but there are so many cases, so many different examples. How can we generalize readily when confronted with something like that and in particular, Mr. Speaker, make that operation even more easy to obtain. How many young girls who discover through their doctors or with a simple drugstore test that they are pregnant would go right away to an abortion clinic, without even telling their parents and supposedly to save their family honour, with possible consequences, Mr. Speaker, traumas for the rest of their lives!

I could go on for a long time, but I want to allow other Members of this House to speak on that question. And I think, Mr. Speaker, that this Bill, however commendable, is still premature, and each one of us must examine his or her conscience and consult again even more closely with the Canadian people on that very serious subject.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am please to rise on Bill C-208, especially at this time when our values, the values that we have inherited from the previous generation, are questioned by many. Personally, I would be inclined to vote for this Bill. However, I find that it would be very inappropriate to do so at this time because, while there are many statements being made concerning the sanctity of life, and the respect of the individual what is at stake here is justice. I believe there is presently a case being heard before the Superior Court and I believe the judicial process must be respected as well. Mr. Speaker, when the motion introduced by the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) was debated in this House, I have stated that I was against that motion because we do not have the right as legislators to turn our children into criminals, or rather to put in our statute book legislations that will make it a criminal act to decide whether or not one want to have a child. And we do not have a right to introduce in our society a double standard, that is those who have the money to obtain an abortion abroad and those who do not have any money and who must put up with the situation or stand to be prosecuted.

So in the name of justice I would like to indicate that yes, I would be favourable to this Bill. I would like the procedure to be made simpler, but I think that the present legislation is the result of a compromise, a compromise that is difficult to live with and I believe we have examples of this everyday in our daily life. That compromise... You know, the teacher in school would dearly like all the students to be at the same level. However, sometimes one must be humble enough to take people as they are and not as one would like them to be. The apprenticeship of freedom is an ongoing process.

So in that context I believe the compromise that presently exists deserves to be lived with and to be debated and after that, there will be an opportunity to discuss it further.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1), the order is dropped from the Order Paper.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

RELIGIOUS PERSECUTION—IRAN—IMPRISONMENT OF BAHA'I LEADERS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, on November 17, 1987, I questioned the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) with regard to Canada's efforts to halt the persecution of the Baha'i community in the Islamic Republic of Iran. Since that time I have received more information to indicate that the fate of the Baha'i community in general, and of 17 individuals in particular, is in grave danger.

The evidence I have received seems to indicate that the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran is engaging in a long-term plan to terminate believers of the Baha'i faith. Over 200 Baha'is have been murdered or executed since 1979. There are currently over 10,000 homeless Baha'is in Iran who have been terrorized through the seizure of their properties and the dismantling of their educational and religious organizations. Indeed, the Baha'is have been described by the highest levels of the Iranian Government as being "unclean infidels, worthy of death for their beliefs".

The Baha'i faith was established in the 1840s and members of this faith have lived in Iran since its formation. The Baha'is have been the target of severe discrimination and persecution under all regimes in Iran. I am extremely concerned, as are many of my colleagues in the House of Commons, with the situation of the Baha'is in Iran since the current regime came to power in 1979 after the revolution. The statistics I have seen are staggering.

There are approximately 300,000 members of the Baha'i faith in Iran yet their Government refuses to recognize them as a religious minority. As a result, Baha'is are denied every human right. According to documentation I have received from the department of public affairs of the Baha'i community of Canada, the Baha'i religious minority has no protection under Iranian law of their personal status. They are routinely deprived of their inheritances, business licences, and education solely because of their religious beliefs. The denial of any individual's human rights is something which Canadians find repugnant. The situation in Iran is particularly distressing because, although Iran is a co-signator to the international covenant on civil and political rights and has stated that the covenant is compatible with Islamic law, it is guilty of severe violations of guaranteed rights.

The Baha'i community in Iran suffers terribly because of its religious beliefs. All of their holy places and religious sites have allegedly been confiscated and many, including the holiest Baha'i shrine, have been totally destroyed.

The Secretary General of the United Nations presented an interim report dated October 12, 1987, on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran. This report was prepared by Reynolds Galindo Fahl of El Salvador in accordance with Paragraph 6 of the Commission on Human Rights Resolution 1987/55 of March 11, 1987.

I want to quote some excerpts concerning the treatment of members of the Baha'i community as follows:

> All the persons appearing before the special representative stated they had spent periods of various duration in prisons in Iran and consequently they described in detail the circumstances of their arrest, their interrogation methods, their trial and the conditions prevailing in the prisons in which they were held. Several of them affirmed that they had close relatives or acquaintances who were executed, or had themselves witnessed executions.

With regard to right to life I quote from page 7 as follows:

> Mr. Javad Keshavas stated that he had witnessed numerous executions in Vakilabad Prison near Mashad. Among those whose execution he witnessed were a 16-year-old youth, Akbar Adalatian, and a woman together with her young son. Another youth from Mashad was executed in the prison by hanging from a crane.

With regard to the right to freedom from torture or cruel, inhumane or degrading treatment or punishment, I quote from page 7 as follows:

> All the persons who appeared before the special representative alleged having been subjected to ill treatment and to physical and psychological torture.
> Beating often started upon arrest. It was, however, during their interrogation that these persons allegedly suffered the most severe forms of torture, including flogging with cables on all parts of the body, denial of food and sleep, torture of one's spouse before one's eyes and mock executions.

With regard to the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion and to freedom of expression I quote from page 12 as follows:

> Baha'i cemeteries allegedly continued to be desecrated and closed. In many cities, including Tehran, Rasht, Tunikaban and others, the Baha'is had difficulty burying their dead.
> The right to leave Iran legally was allegedly still denied to Baha'is who were allegedly required to recant their faith in order to obtain a passport and exit permit.

It is interesting to note that the Iranian Government has denied all the allegations in the 22-page report without specifically referring to any of them. As you can see from the excerpts of the interim report at the United Nations, the situation in Iran is urgent.

• (1805)

Since 1979, an average of 700 Baha'i have been imprisoned annually. According to the most recent information, there are currently over 250 Baha'is imprisoned in Iran. Prison conditions are reported to be horrendous. Many prisoners are tortured physically and psychologically. They are all in grave danger.

On September 28, 1987, in Tehran, two Baha'is, Amir-Husayn Nadiri and Ardishir Akhtari were executed. Both of these men were dismissed from their jobs and imprisoned in 1984 because of their religious beliefs. They are the most recent of over 200 Baha'is executed under the current regime for refusing to recant their religion.

On October 21, 1987, five Baha'is were arrested and imprisoned in Tehran. Their names have been added to a list of 12 others who are believed to be in imminent danger of execution.

Two of these men, Mr. Jamalu Din Khanjani and Mr. Hasan Mahbubi were members of the former National Spiritual Assembly, the elected national governing body of the Baha'i community in Iran, which was banned by the Islamic regime in 1983.

The Baha'i followers are a tolerant, loving people who want to practice their faith without persecution. I want to quote some remarks written by Mr. Khuzayn of Hamadan from prison before his execution on June 14, 1981:

> It is now 11 p.m. We have been transferred from the prison to the court premises. They are about to execute all seven of us. Praised be God, we are all in the utmost submission to His will and we are most content.

He went on to say:

> I beseech your prayers. I hope that our insignificant blood will water the blessed tree of the cause of God, that the faith will soon gain its independence and the Baha'is of Iran their freedom, and that our future generations will be able to serve the cause with the greatest comfort.

I am pleased to report that this United Nations resolution condemning Iran, which was co-sponsored by us, was passed with a strong majority of the third committee. Fifty-eight members voted for the resolution. It is expected that the General Assembly will vote on this important resolution later this week.

There are over 20,000 members of the Baha'i faith in Canada and they have expressed their deep appreciation for the continued efforts of the Government on behalf of their sister community in Iran.

It is interesting to note that one-quarter of Canadian Baha'is are native Indians and Eskimos.

We must make every effort to ensure that all Baha'is in Iran are granted their full rights and urge that the 17 individuals' lives be spared. The discrimination, persecution and execution of the Baha'is solely for their religious beliefs must stop and Canada must continue to speak out vigorously to condemn the human rights violations occurring in Iran.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to respond to this additional question. In fact, in my capacity of Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, one of the first chargés d'affaires I received happened to be the Iranian chargé d'affaires, who wanted to ask Canada to reopen its embassy in Teheran, which had been closed as a result of certain events which I am sure those who were in the House of Commons at the time will remember even more vividly than I do. The answer was no, because Iran's condition was that we would apologize for our actions at the time, which was of course unthinkable. One does not apologize for saving lives.

Mr. Speaker, the situation in Iran today is indeed of great concern to Canada. We have had reports of arrests without cause, cases of torture and arbitrary executions, and also of discrimination against this community over there.

Mr. Speaker, we are taking action on two levels. First of all, and the Hon. Member has already mentioned this, we are sponsoring a resolution before the United Nations on human rights in Iran. The fact we are sponsoring this resolution proves how seriously we are taking this matter.

Second, we are sending firm and clear messages, which have been communicated twice during the past month to the Iranian chargé d'affaires, to the effect that human rights should be respected.

Mr. Speaker, in the same vein, Canada is now urging Iran to abide by the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights of which that country is a signatory. Canada is appealing to the Iranian authorities to show compassion for the members of the Baha'i faith who are now being held in prison.

CANADA POST CORPORATION—RURAL POST OFFICES—REQUEST FOR HALT TO CLOSURES/COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, on October 26, I asked the Minister responsible for the Canada Post Corporation whether he would order the Corporation to stop all closures of rural post offices.

• (1810)

For about one year, we asked many questions about this and were always told that the Canada Post Corporation had a ten-year plan to close rural post offices. This plan was finally made public not too long ago. There is even a manual on how to close a rural post office which clearly indicates that Canada Post will avoid any participation in public assemblies and consultations on the eventual closing of post offices.

A committee of this House has examined the whole issue. I sat on this committee and we heard many witnesses from various parts of this country. These witnesses clearly underlined the importance of rural post offices. They are a means of communications and 80 per cent of the people who work in these post offices are women. Rural post offices are a major source of employment for women, and we all know how much money the Canadian Government spends on job programs each year. If we have permanent jobs which must be protected and which provide an essential service, why are we at the same time eliminating jobs and creating an awful fear in our rural communities?

Last week, I visited the rural constituency of Portneuf, in Quebec, where the post office is not being threatened by closure, but there was still a public meeting where people came and expressed the fear that their office would be closed one day or another. The Canada Post Corporation was not represented at the meeting. The Corporation is incredibly arrogant, which angers the population. The committee to which I referred earlier had specifically recommended that, before closing post offices, there be real consultation, and that if the local population, including the elected representatives, concludes that the post office must remain open, the Canada Post Corporation respect the will of the community.

The committee also said that, during the minimum 90-day consultation period, the Canada Post Corporation should listen to the various solutions proposed by the local population instead of saying: Your post office will be closed and here is what you will get.

We therefore have a serious national problem, Mr. Speaker. The Canada Post Corporation is following its own plan, simply informing the public without having consultations, and the Minister still lets the Corporation do as it pleases. I cannot accept this, Mr. Speaker, and this is why I wanted to say this evening that I disagree with the way the Minister is letting the Canada Post Corporation do whatever it wants. We have a Minister responsible for the Canada Post Corporation and he should see to it that all Canadians have the postal service to which they are entitled.

[English]

I know, Mr. Speaker, your home town is Edmonton. I have here a copy of the Edmonton Examiner. There is an article entitled "Supermailbox angers residents". It concerns a resident who bought a house two years ago because he was sure he would have door to door mail delivery. Now, all of a sudden, he finds out he has to go to a supermailbox to pick up his mail. That man and his wife feel like second-class citizens. They pay the same taxes as everyone else. They invested their money to buy a new home, and created jobs by buying a new house. They are being penalized by this Canada Post plan.

• (1815)

The same article says there is no consultation. All of a sudden people wake up in the morning and see someone digging a hole for the supermailboxes. I have the same problem in my own riding. Everywhere there is new residential construction, we are facing what is almost a revolution. How long is the Government of Canada going to allow Canada Post to act with arrogance and install the supermailboxes anywhere it wants to, whether it is in front of a garage, a house, on private property or municipal property? This is incredible. We have to stop it, and soon, because Canadians cannot take any more.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon.

Member should check a study carried out by Canada Post which shows that 93 per cent of its customers are satisfied with the super- boxes. That something!

I think that the Hon. Member who sits in the Opposition is doing his job, but the fact remains Mr. Speaker, that times have changed and the services of ten years ago are no longer required today.

Today, Mr. Speaker, life for couples is made easier especially when both spouses are working. Therefore business hours must reflect this new factor which alters the situation which existed previously when we had to go to the Post Office between such and such business hours.

Within most communities, Mr. Speaker, there is a post office operated by Canada Post employees and, in several cases, the locations of these post offices were selected sometimes 10, 15 or even 20 years ago. Today, the needs of the market place and all of that have changed.

The operating costs of some of these offices may absorb nearly all their revenues and even more, which leaves practically no funds to cover other costs.

Mr. Speaker, we should remember that it is the Liberals when they were in power who created the Canada Post Corporation and they should show some consistency. The policies put forward by the former Liberal Government are those which the present Government is trying to implement, since the Marchment Committee insisted that it should go ahead with the Canada Post Corporation.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I can say that in all the regions where the Canada Post Corporation has made changes, it was done after consultation with the communities, their elected representatives and the people who now really enjoy their superboxes and could no longer do without them.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—HAITI—MASSACRE OF CITIZENS—CANADIAN REACTION

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I directed a question to the Minister of State for External Relations concerning the tragic incidents in Haiti, and I am glad to see that the departmental Parliamentary Secretary will answer me today.

[English]

The whole world was repelled by the stark tragedy that beset the island of Haiti last Saturday night and Sunday morning. We are told that 34 people were killed, 60 injured, for no greater offence than making their way to the polls to cast their franchise in an election that they thought would give birth to democracy in their long exploited, tyrannized republic.

• (1820)

When polling began at 8.30, little could they know that murder was about to strike, and that a scant 30 minutes later the polls would be closed.

We have just concluded an hour debating abortion. A social political abortion took place in Haiti when an embryonic democracy was torn from the womb of possibility and left to die. The blood of men and women was flowing in the streets literally without exaggeration.

This calls for immediate action, because it was not done by criminals alone; there seemed to be a conspiracy of at least silence and indifference, if not more.

For example, General Namphy, the head of the Provisional Government did nothing to stop the campaign violence that had been directed against candidates, members of the electoral council, and random citizens. He refused to provide protection or assistance to election workers to ensure a fair enumeration or the proper distribution of ballots.

The army did not support the election, did not provide security for candidates or election officials, and reneged on a promise to provide helicopters to deliver ballots. It roamed the streets not to protect, but to cast the shadow of a callous indifference upon those who were under attack, until the murder was finished and the pathetic body of democracy in Haiti lay dead.

The United States immediately cancelled aid to Haiti. I have asked for this adjournment debate because we in Canada should be responding with the same action and concern, not necessarily with the specifics, but effecting our aid program and using it to at least demonstrate as a country through Parliament and Government that we join the civilized world in both expressing our revulsion and in taking any action open to us.

We have been told in the House that we must wait, that we must seek further information, and then we can appraise the situation. I asked for this brief adjournment debate because I have to renew the question, what are we waiting for? How much information does the Government need? Is there any doubt that the people are dead? Is there any doubt that the elections were cancelled? Is there any doubt that the military are still on top?

Via television we have seen with our own eyes the bodies prostrate on the ground, prostrate in the streets, prostrate in the polling booths. How much more do we need to know? Along with those dead bodies democracy is dead. Can we be silent? For example, must we not go to the United Nations to express and call upon it to express the revulsion of the civilized world for this is indeed a crime against humanity. It would not be an idle gesture for no government, not even the Government of Haiti, can totally ignore world opinion. The UN should show that the November 29 massacre will not be accepted in silence. This crime against humanity will not go unjudged. These murderers will be punished.

I asked for this debate for a further opportunity to bring to the floor of the House of Commons, before the highest court in the land of Canada, this crime to be judged, to call forth from this Parliament, from this Government, an action that is appropriate to us.

It has been suggested with sincerity and with some reason that we should endeavour to seek new elections, to use the arm of the United Nations to establish such new elections. I submit that such a gesture would be premature until the security of candidates and voters can be assured. A jungle is no place for an election. That is precisely what Haiti wants this weekend with wild beasts in the form of men roaming the streets, devouring those who went about the business of trying to give birth to a democracy.

• (1825)

Once more I bring before this House of Commons the plea that the dead shall not have died in vain but that their blood may call forth the entire civilized world to join together in putting pressure on what passes for a Government in that sorry land and to demand that steps be taken to secure what was aborted.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Of course, Mr. Speaker, the two questions which have been raised this evening during this additional question period are very topical, and I have to say that we are deeply concerned over current events in both Iran and Haiti. The situation is dramatic since the Haitian election was cancelled, and department officials are now keeping a close watch on this drama.

As I am speaking, the Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Landry) is waiting for a detailed report from our ambassador in Haiti who earlier today was in touch with the President of the National Council of the Government of Haiti. The ambassador is expected to report at the earliest opportunity.

Our ambassador had been asked by the Minister for External Relations to convey to President Namphy, in no uncertain terms, our deep deception as a result of the cancellation of the election, as well as our indignation with respect to the circumstances which brought about this decision. The ambassador was to remind the president how imperative it is to honour his commitments, as defined during his intervention late Sunday afternoon. The president did promise he would act quickly and take the measures required to hold another election by February 1988 at the latest.

The Canadian Government wants to voice its concern with respect to the individuals who set up the interim electoral council or lent their support. In light of the first reports sent by our observer mission, Canada believes that the interim electoral council had lived up to the challenge of finalizing the organizing of election based on the most democratic criteria, in the particularly difficult historical and social circumstances in Haiti. It is therefore imperative that these people be able to return rapidly to normal living conditions if they so wish and at the forthcoming election, and our ambassador has expressed this message in the clearest terms.

Mr. Speaker, should the legally constituted Haitian government fail to take constructive steps to restore the situation, there might be a possibility, as the distinguished Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) indicated yesterday, that Canada, along with other nations, would refer the matter to the international courts involved. Keeping in mind Haiti's tormented history, already bearing the scars of colonial times and foreign interventions, Canada still expresses first and foremost the sincere hope that a solution may indeed be found within the Haitian community itself.

Mr. Speaker, there has been a lot of talk about suspending our assistance, and the suspension of American assistance has been cited as an example. I would remind these people, with full respect for our fellow Canadians of Haitian origin, that the American assistance is military assistance. Ours is strategic assistance designed to help the Haitian people restore the kind of unblemished democracy they deserve.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.29 p.m.

TRADE

EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, what is the price we will have to pay for the so-called free trade agreement? It could be staggering. First there will be job losses. No one knows the exact number but some estimates run as high as 500,000 jobs, as indicated by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) himself. We will then lose our ability to shape our own economy and to develop our own economic, social and environmental policies.

In the case of energy, we give the United States guaranteed access to our resources without getting guaranteed access to U.S. resources. Furthermore, we will give away the power to set our own prices for our own energy. Our own decision making powers in energy matters will be seriously diminished. Of course, these conclusions are based on the information available so far. Believe it or not, Mr. Speaker, we have not yet seen the final text of the trade agreement.

There is, of course, an alternative. We could liberalize trade between provinces and liberalize trade internationally, not just in North America. We are better suited for an international trade policy. We must reverse the decline in Canadian trade with other parts of the world. What we want first and foremost is not to give away our ability to determine the future we want for this and future generations of Canadians.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

OFFICIAL OPENING OF CANADIAN INSTITUTE OF INDUSTRIAL TECHNOLOGY IN WINNIPEG

Mr. Léo Duguay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, last week the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) and I officially opened the Canadian Institute of Industrial Technology in Winnipeg—a world-class show piece—federal Government, universities, and the private sector working together—a new era of computer integrated manufacturing and industrial technology.

Almost since its inception, nattering nabobs of negativism have been hounding the institute. First they predicted the $26 million project would be cancelled. When that did not happen they predicted the Government would build it and then sell it. When the centre was completed and open for business in early 1986, the critics began describing it as a white elephant, then as an empty or half empty building.

Well, Mr. Speaker, last week a miracle occurred. Critics finally got the message that 40 per cent empty is 60 per cent full. In a year, organizations will be on a waiting list to grab up the little remaining space. Nattering nabobs of negativism, go to your graves!

PROPOSED SALE OF CN TOWER

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, the Government of Egypt selling off the Pyramids, the Chinese people placing the Great Wall on the auction block, or the Eiffel Tower turned over to the private sector? Only in Canada we say "sell the CN Tower"! And what is the CN Tower to be called; Alpo Dog Food Heights, Loblaws Skyscraper, Pizza Pizza Peak or perhaps Ronald Reagan Lookout?

I find it astounding that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) measures the value of a structure by whether or not it can go choo-choo-chooing along. The CN Tower doesn't do that, but then, again, it's never late.

The Tower was built with $57 million of Canadian money. It does serve 15 media centres. It does accommodate two million visitors a year, and it does bring a sense of pride to Canadians. All of this, and the Tower turned a tidy $5 million profit last year.

If the Government insists on bequeathing the CN Tower to the private sector, it should at least attempt to secure a guarantee that the purchaser will find a small place for the Government's epitaph to be displayed for all Canadians to see.

PORNOGRAPHY

PASSAGE OF LEGISLATION URGED

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support Bill C-54, an Act to control pornography in Canada. I urge all Members of this House to pass it as quickly as possible and send the legislation to committee.

Not a week goes by that someone from my riding of Niagara Falls does not write to me to urge quick passage of this legislation. They know that the present provisions governing pornography in the Criminal Code are so vague as to be almost unenforceable. Pornography has become a gigantic industry, one that exploits and degrades people, particularly women and children.

I reject comments from groups who say that the definition of pornography is too restrictive. I challenge them to appear before our committee and suggest a better definition. I believe that is only fair.

In the meantime, people everywhere are getting tired of those individuals who continuously want to postpone a crackdown on pornography. As it relates to this piece of legislation I am determined that that will not happen.

MONTREAL EAST END—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, after fifteen months the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology has decided to respond to the Picard Report's eighty-six recommendations this morning in Montreal. The people of Montreal were expecting concrete proposals but unfortunately, the Minister's response was just a lot of bluffing. I would like to know, and so would the people of Montreal, why the Minister failed to announce the establishment of a space agency in Montreal. Why didn't the Minister announce that a real banking centre would be set up in Montreal? Why didn't the Minister announce that $130 million would be provided to fund development of the Old Port in Montreal, as was done in the case of other Canadian cities? Why didn't the Minister announce that $25 million would be made available to the Montreal East development board? And finally, Mr. Speaker, why didn't the Minister announce that jobs would be created in Montreal East? I repeat, after fifteen months, this morning the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion failed to provide the people of Montreal with anything tangible.

WELFARE

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF WELFARE—SUGGESTED COMMITTEE STUDY OF REPORT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the just published report of the National Council of Welfare which provides advice to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) is appropriately entitled "Welfare in Canada—The Tangled Safety Net".

It points out that the current social assistance system, although it has some good points, very often reinforces poverty and engenders continued dependence upon welfare. People can get caught in the net rather than being saved by it. The report addresses issues such as simplification, accessibility, equity, adequacy, and due process.

The House of Commons Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare ought to make a thorough study of the report to see which of its recommendations might successfully be implemented.

INDUSTRY

WINE INDUSTRY—ELECTION PROMISE

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of the pledge he made to the grape growers of the Niagara Peninsula when he was campaigning during the 1984 election campaign.

During that campaign the Prime Minister vowed to 'revitalize the industry and keep our farmers farming". He said that the wine industry was "in a state of crisis caused in great part by the unfair trade practices of offshore wine producers". Then he vowed that a Conservative Government would promote Canadian wines and related products and adopt other protective measures because that would be "far less costly to the public treasury than to allow this vital Niagara industry to literally wither on the vine".

If the free trade deal goes through, the wine industry will wither on the vine. The Prime Minister who promised to protect the industry, who had a clear mandate to protect it, has instead betrayed it.

FREE TRADE

EFFECT OF AGREEMENT ON AGRICULTURE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, members of the Union des producteurs agricoles are having a convention in Quebec City.

Since the president, Jacques Proulx, will take advantage of this opportunity to continue his disinformation campaign, I would like to inform the House of the positive impact our free trade agreement wil have on agriculture. This Government has earmarked $1.5 billion for the dairy industry over the next five years. Subsidy policies will continue to apply to farm producers, whatever their president may say to the contrary. Our subsidy policies and quota systems which are so important for farmers will continue to apply. Our marketing boards will not be effected by the free trade agreement.

I may add that our major processors have not spoken out against free trade, that Lactantia, a company that buys 40 per cent of Quebec's milk production, is in favour of free trade, and that agricultural by-products such as beef will find additional markets in United States.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, if farm producers have any business sense at all, they should not protest against free trade. They should challenge their president, Mr. Jacques Proulx!

ROAD TRANSPORT

ROUTE CANADA—CLOSURE OF OPERATIONS IN SYDNEY, N.S.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, Route Canada, formerly CN Route, formerly CN Express, closed its operations in Sydney. The federal Government sold what is now Route Canada for less than its value on the understanding that all the closing of the terminals would be done by the new owner, thereby sparing the federal Government from giving the bad news.

Route Canada, the federal Government, and the union took away protection the workers had under the Canada Labour Code. The men in Sydney were dismissed with only two weeks' notice, and the 17 dismissed in Sydney had a range of service between 16 and 46 years. Route Canada has made it look like it just dismissed the individuals when, in fact, it closed the terminal.

The federal Government offered benefits to those workers if they resigned prior to June 1, 1987. But the workers in Sydney were dismissed only five months later, which shows that there was collusion between the federal Government and the company because the workers only received a fraction of the federal benefits that the company had to give.

I ask the federal Government to extend the benefit package which expired on June 1, 1987, to the workers who were just dismissed at CN Route.

MULTICULTURALISM

SUPPORT FOR NEW CANADIAN MULTICULTURALISM ACT

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, the introduction in the House yesterday of the proposed Multicultural Act was a milestone in Canadian history.

Wrapped up in the word "multiculturalism" are many different concepts. Of course it means the right to retain one's culture, heritage, and language. But it also includes the concept of getting to know and understand each other better, the concept of equal opportunity for all, and the concept of full involvement and participation in wider Canadian society. It means that you can be proud of your background and that of your ancestors, and at the same time be fiercely proud to be a Canadian.

Multiculturalism is a Canadian creation. It has helped us to achieve stability and social harmony in spite of our great diversity. In doing so, it is the envy of the world.

Multiculturalism is a vital part of what makes Canadians different, a vital part of our Canadian way of life, a vital part of our national sovereignty. The Multiculturalism Act will help to reinforce and strengthen our national sovereignty.

POLITICAL PARTIES

ALLEGED REFUSAL OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVES TO DEBATE ISSUES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, it took the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) weeks to make up his mind, but last week I finally received his official refusal to follow up on his offer, or bluff, shall we say, of debating me in Edmonton on his grant to Fantasyland, and his defence of it here in the House. The Deputy Prime Minister's bluff was called, and he chickened out.

This is part of a growing Tory pattern of refusal to debate, while at the same time talking a lot about being open to such events. The Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) is another good example of this. He states that he wants to debate free trade with Premier Pawley. He can do that after he stabs Gary Filmon in the back and becomes Manitoba leader, having fled the sinking Tory federal ship. In the meantime, he is still an MP, yet he refuses to debate other Manitoba MPs, turning down an invitation to such a debate even in his own home town of Steinbach.

The Tories are afraid to debate the NDP in western Canada. They prefer to indulge in the political equivalent of hate literature, perversely insulting western Canadians by claiming that if they are for the NDP they are against the West. Western Canadians know that the Tories have no monopoly on speaking for the West. The CCF was electing western MPs when, as John Diefenbaker used to say, only the game laws protected the Tories. They are on their way to becoming an endangered species once again.

THE ECONOMY

THE ECONOMIST'S REPORT ON CANADIAN ECONOMY

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York—Peel): Mr. Speaker, the current issue of The Economist, perhaps the most respected financial journal in the world, has bad news for the Liberals and their socialist partners in the House. The Economist has given Canada a glowing report card.

The Economist states that "Canada's producers are thriving". Those are its words. "Our output", it says, "is up 6.1 per cent to August this year", better than any other country it reviews. That 6.1 per cent for Canada compares with slightly more than 4 per cent for the United States and Japan, a negative return for West Germany, and less than 2 per cent and 3 per cent for France and Great Britain.

The figures show without a doubt that our Government is on the right economic course, that indeed our policies are working and are good for Canada, and that they are certainly good for Ontario. Freer trade with the United States will make it even better.

I invite Hon. Members to read The Economist for this week and to take a look at page 107 for themselves.

SCHEDULED RELEASE OF PARKER COMMISSION REPORT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the House of Commons and the country have been waiting patiently for a long time for the Parker Commission Report into allegations of conflict of interest against the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

The Government has had the final copy for several days, and I understand that it has announced today that it will be made public tomorrow at three o'clock.

I have been told that the usual courtesy will not be extended of giving an advance copy to opposition Parties or to the media. I rise to express the hope that that will not be the case and that the usual courtesy of an advance copy will be extended.

The Government has claimed to introduce civility into the House of Commons. Failure to give advance copies, as is the usual rule, will be a demonstration of hypocrisy on the part of the Government. I hope that it will give the usual advance copies.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—CURRENT STATUS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on October 5 when the Prime Minister tabled in the House of Commons a document purporting to be a trade agreement between the United States and Canada, he said:

> I am advised that there may be a minor typographical error in this document, but that the document itself represents the fundamentals of the agreement arrived at by the parties.

Now we learn that that typographical error has become a renegotiation of the trade agreement.

The parliamentary committee studying the so-called agreement has been travelling the country and will be concluding its hearings in the next five days, yet it has been dealing with a document which is nothing but a sham. No wonder the final legal text is delayed when the fundamental deal has not been reached.

Is the Prime Minister going to explain why, if in his view Canada cut such a good deal, he is renegotiating it? Just for once will he level with the Canadian people and tell us what is going on at the current moment in these negotiations?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend refers to the renegotiation of the trade agreement. There is no renegotiation of the trade agreement whatsoever. He asks why we are renegotiating it. We are not renegotiating it.

We are doing precisely what I indicated to the House when I tabled it. Clearly, as would not surprise any reasonable person, there are some approaches on isolated matters or details that may be mutually advantageous and, if required, may be considered by the parties. However, the fundamentals are in place and will remain intact.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I have no less an authority than the chief negotiator for Canada who said, "Well, if you call that a negotiation, then call it a negotiation".

REQUEST FOR DETAILS ON AGREEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, does the Prime Minister—he is the main spokesman for this Government, does the Prime Minister really know what is going on? Canada's chief negotiator has stated that he is renegotiating the agreement, and today in the House the Prime Minister keeps telling us that the agreement was concluded on October 4. Considering that the whole process has been characterized by incompetence, stupidity and even dishonesty, will the Prime Minister stop kowtowing to the Americans to schedule a signing ceremony for January 2? Will he give Canadians both time and opportunity to study the agreement if ever a final text is produced? Will he explain to Parliament why he tabled an agreement which cannot be considered as being one? Why did he mislead the people of Canada and the Parliament of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question is basically unworthy of the Leader of the Opposition. He is talking about consultation with Members and the people, he who belongs to a Liberal Party which negotiated a very important agreement with the United States 23 years ago and which never did have the decency to submit it to the House of Commons for consideration by Hon. Members. That kind of behaviour is unworthy of the Leader of the Opposition.

As far as we are concerned, Mr. Speaker, the basic elements which were negotiated are still valid, contrary to what my friend is quoting. Speaking to a journalist, Mr. Reisman is reported to have said:

[English]

"If you call that a negotiation, call it a negotiation. Call it whatever you want."

[Translation]

But as far as we are concerned there has been no changes in the basic elements or in the Government position. Mr. Speaker, there has been a radical change in the approach of somebody here in the House of Commons: the Leader of the Opposition used to say that he would tear up the agreement, but now he is telling the media that he will not tear it up, that he will go to Washington to renegotiate. That is the radical change on the part of the Leader of the opposition.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if we do not have an opportunity of a general election in defeating this agreement then we will be caught with the dynamics as we find it, but we are not bound by this agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We will not be bound by this agreement.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What are you going to do next week, John?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The chief negotiator says that they are renegotiating the Auto Pact. The chief negotiator says they are renegotiating the shipping clauses. The chief negotiator says they are renegotiating the dispute mechanism, so, Mr. Speaker, I ask the Prime Minister why should we trust this Government, why should we trust this Prime Minister when he deposited a document with this Parliament that is not a final document and does not represent the complete agreement between the parties?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the chief negotiator did not say they were renegotiating the Auto Pact. He did not say they were renegotiating the shipping arrangements. He did not say they were renegotiating the dispute settlement mechanism. He said no such thing, and the Leader of the Opposition is consistently misleading the House of Commons and all Canadians by repeating statements like that.

The only change that has taken place is by the Leader of the Opposition who stood up in this House, I think on October 3 or 4 and said, "I am going to tear up the agreement". Now he is saying "I can't tear it up. I may have to renegotiate it".

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We will.

Mr. Mulroney: Let me relieve you of any worry. You will never get the chance to renegotiate it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

By way of introduction we know how often it has been that the Prime Minister and the chief negotiator have had to contradict one another. Here Mr. Reisman is quoted as saying that the Maritime Shipping Act is something that is on the table being renegotiated and the matter will have to be taken to Cabinet for further advice.

Why is it that this negotiating team is prepared to accept further negotiations on a matter which the Americans want to entrench further and protect, namely, their maritime industry, while at the same time the Canadian trucking industry, which just last week before the Commons committee said that this trade agreement will put that entire industry in jeopardy why are we prepared to negotiate American demands when a major transportation industry is going to go down the drain along with many others, data processing, food processing and agriculture which have all said the same thing? Why is the Cabinet further protecting American interests and totally ignoring a number of Canadian industries that are being put in jeopardy by this stupid agreement?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think we can count the Hon. Member as undecided.

The Hon. Member knows full well that Mr. Reisman said to the press yesterday that the negotiating teams are translating into law the agreed elements initialled on October 3. That is the basic position. That is what is going on now. It is not renegotiation.

• (1430)

The mandate of our negotiator has not been modified one iota. All this hype that the Hon. Member is yelling across the floor of the House is totally wrong.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, we know that in 1984 a new vocabulary entered into Canada. It is called newspeak; in other words, do not tell the truth to anyone. That is the problem we got in 1984.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that while technically what he has just said perhaps does not quite go over the bounds into unparliamentary language, it gets awfully close to creating disorder. I would ask the Hon. Member to call upon his own experience and good will and to refrain from that.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I will redefine the concept of newspeak. It means rearranging the facts to suit one's interests.

REQUEST THAT SIGNING OF AGREEMENT BE DELAYED

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): I again ask my question of the Prime Minister who finds it convenient to duck the real questions in the House of Commons. In the report that was released—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has accepted the gentle admonition of the Chair. I am sure Hon. Members would want to give him the courtesy of being heard.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, on November 7, the U.S. Trade Office released a report entitled The National Trade Estimate Report giving a survey of all trade negotiations going on in the United States. The report clearly states that a number of the issues related to the trade agreement with the United States will give Americans the right to challenge a whole host of Canadian programs in telecommunications, culture, agriculture and data processing. In fact, it goes on to say very clearly that the United States retains the right to retaliate in the cultural field when measures taken in these sectors impair benefits to the United States. That clearly contradicts all the guarantees and assurances given by government Members in the House.

We want to know if the Government will revise its program in Parliament to ensure that the Commons committee and Parliament will have a full opportunity to examine the new negotiations that are going on and the rights of Americans to retaliate on these programs. In other words, will the Prime Minister delay the signing of the agreement, extend the mandate of the Commons committee and ensure we are not simply signing away Canada once again on the bland and misleading assurances of the Government?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to a report that was provided to the Senate Finance Committee. I believe that report is mandated each year. The United States looks at all countries and, as a matter of fact, I believe the report refers to 40 countries in which there are what they consider trade irritants.

It may come as a surprise to the Hon. Member to know that when we were negotiating the free trade agreement, lo and behold, the Americans had some subsidies as well that they did not want to give up.

The Hon. Member mentions culture. Culture has been excluded from the agreement. That is indicated right in the free trade agreement and the Hon. Member knows that full well. The report to which he is referring is simply an annual report that is submitted to Congress each year. All this huffing, puffing, and blowing is for naught.

UNITED STATES POSITION—POSSIBLE BROADENING OF SCOPE OF AGREEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Government has assured us from the time it negotiated this abominable deal that there would be no change in the substance of the agreement, that there would simply be changes in the legal wording. The Minister for International Trade said that, and less than a week ago the Parliamentary Secretary said that to me in the House. The Prime Minister repeated it again this afternoon.

Yesterday, before a committee of the House, Mr. Ritchie had something to say, and I want to ask the Prime Minister if he was describing reality or not. Mr. Ritchie said that the United States is "seeking some broadening of the scope of the agreement". Is the United States seeking a broadening of the agreement or is it not?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member what was said in the House this afternoon by the Prime Minister and by me, which is that they are—

Mr. Broadbent: Yeah, I heard that.

Mr. McDermid: I am glad the Hon. Member heard it. Then I do not have to go any further than that.

AUTO PACT—NORTHERN AMERICAN CONTENT QUERY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, for once the people of Canada would like to see the Government be clean, straight and truthful with the people of Canada.

I want to ask a question of the Parliamentary Secretary since the Prime Minister, who, I suppose does not specialize in this subject, has decided not reply. Is the auto trade item, the changing of the North American content provision from 50 per cent to 60 per cent, now being negotiated? Is it or is it not? Is there a proposed change in the wording of the dispute settlement mechanism? Have the Americans requested that the Jones Act be put on the table? Will the Hon. Member please give us a clear-cut, honest answer to that question?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, by innuendo, I have been called a liar by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry this afternoon and now by the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, no.

Mr. McDermid: Oh, yes, he has. He has made those accusations and I think they are totally unfair.

The Hon. Member knows full well that the Government has been open and honest with the people about this agreement right from the start—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: That's why you're 25 per cent.

Mr. McDermid: I will remind the Hon. Member, if he can get his trained seals behind him to quiet down—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Okay, Mr. Speaker, they are not trained.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa will put his next question.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT SIGNING OF AGREEMENT BE DELAYED FOR TWO MONTHS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a last question for the Prime Minister.

Looking at the comments made by Canadian negotiators on the Canada-US Agreement, our two countries are now discussing changes in competition regulations concerning the automotive industry and a few others.

If that is true, would the Prime Minister now consider postponing for another two months the signing of the final Agreement, in order to give Canadians a chance to look at the final version?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the Leader of the Opposition, the parties are now putting into a legal, final version the elements of the agreement that were tabled in this House early in October.

Of course, we are also discussing implementation procedures. That is a highly technical, very complex document that requires a tremendous amount of attention and care from the negotiators.

Of course, as in any negotiations or discussions of this kind, either party may raise a question, and the other of course has an obligation to listen.

But no formal negotiations are now involved. If at some point in the discussions there arose a situation of mutual benefit to both parties, well now, we would be in a position to consider it!

But we are in the process of approving the basic elements already submitted to this House, and I can assure the Hon. Member that contrary to one other trade deal, this time Hon. Members will have ample opportunity to discuss it.

[English]

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Canadians will recall that during the First Ministers' Conference, the Prime Minister gave the assurance to Premiers and particularly Atlantic Premiers that regional development programs would not be negatively affected by this economic union agreement between Canada and the United States. They will also recall with some alarm that those assurances were not acceptable to Atlantic Premiers, including the Premier of Nova Scotia, who said that he leaned toward this agreement but wanted to see it in writing.

This morning in Prince Edward Island, the Atlantic Provinces Chamber of Commerce refused to endorse the Government's economic union agreement unless regional development programs are clearly exempted in the final text of the Canada-U.S. economic union agreement.

• (1440)

Is the Prime Minister prepared to tell this House today, and be consistent with what he said last week on television during the First Ministers' Conference, that when the final text is released next week, if it is, it will contain language that will provide a clear and unambiguous exemption for regional development programs from U.S. trade law? Can he give us that commitment today?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will give the following commitment. The language will clearly ensure that this is not, and I am quoting my hon. friend, "an economic union agreement". It is no such thing. It is a commercial agreement with the U.S. It is a trade agreement. It has absolutely nothing to do with economic union of any kind.

As to regional development, the Government has already provided the Premiers with assurances in this regard. Indeed, during the course of the summer the Government created the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and the western development initiative and infused $1 billion of new money into each of those regions. In all cases it was greeted with great favour by the Premiers of those provinces.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry if I have offended the Prime Minister by insisting on using the words of one of the two partners to this deal, the President of the U.S., who described it as economic union between Canada and the U.S. Those are his words.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF EXEMPTION FOR REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, to go back to the question, because the Prime Minister has not answered it, is he prepared to give the House the assurance today, consistent with his commitment on television last week before all the people of Canada, that the legal text will contain words that provide a clear and unambiguous exemption for regional development programs from U.S. trade law?

Can he give us that assurance today, or were last week's First Ministers' Conference and speeches by the Prime Minister nothing but a piece of puffery, a charade with which to subdue the people of Canada and put them to sleep while their birthright is being sold out by a Government desperate for some kind of political success?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it appears that my hon. friend is clearly offended by successful demonstrations of the working of Confederation, and the First Ministers' Conference was just that. I know it is deeply offensive to a Liberal to see a federal system working in harmony, but that is the objective of this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend says he is offending me. He was not offending me at all. If he wants to refer to the term "economic union", he can. I am just telling him that it is a falsehood. It is not economic union; it is a commercial trade agreement. If he wants to persist in calling it that, let him go ahead.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques)): That is what Reagan said.

Mr. Mulroney: President Reagan is not infallible.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: When he was here he referred to the hon. gentleman as Mr. "Tubin".

DISPUTE SETTLEMENT MECHANISM

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. On a number of occasions he has indicated one of the most important aspects of this agreement is the dispute settlement mechanism. Mr. Reisman is reported today as saying that he will be seeking Cabinet advice on the possible inclusion of judicial intervention in the dispute settlement process.

Mr. Broadbent: Requested by the Americans.

Mr. Riis: Which of course was requested by the U.S. We are attempting today to find out whether or not renegotiations are taking place. The Prime Minister has said formal negotiations are not under way, but indeed informal negotiations are.

Will he now do the honourable thing and simply admit that, while formal negotiations are not taking place, informal renegotiation of critical components of the agreement is in fact taking place?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the exercise of translating the elements of this deal into legal language is very complex. Both teams have been working very hard at eliminating all possible differences over interpretation in order to get as clear a text as possible. That is exactly what is going on at this time. The Prime Minister fully answered that question before.

STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO CANADIAN NEGOTIATORS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a very straightforward question to the Parliamentary Secretary. Mr. Ritchie has said there is now an effort by the United States to broaden the agreement. Mr. Reisman has indicated that he will be going to Cabinet to change, if you like, the process of settling disputes. That is what he said and that is what his assistant negotiator said. Who is telling the truth? Is major renegotiation taking place? In other words, is the agreement being substantially changed or is it not? The negotiators say it is, and so far the Prime Minister and Parliamentary Secretary have said there are no changes at all.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): No, there are not major changes being made, as the Hon. Member would say. I cannot answer it any plainer than that. He knows full well that Mr. Reisman always came to Cabinet for direction. The negotiators were supported by the International Trade Advisory Committee, by 15 Sectoral Advisory Committees, by the Premiers and Trade Ministers of the provinces. There was more input into this agreement than the Hon. Member could ever dream of, and that continues.

Mr. Reisman comes back to Cabinet for direction all the time. He has not yet come back to Cabinet for direction on that.

AIR SAFETY

AIRPORTS—TRANSFER OF BAGGAGE FROM DOMESTIC TO INTERNATIONAL FLIGHTS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday the Minister of Transport said there were two exceptions to a passenger match when baggage is put on board aircraft. Today we learn from people involved in baggage transfers of another exception. When baggage is transferred to a connecting international flight from a domestic flight it is not x-rayed or verified so as to ensure complete security. In some cases baggage match is only done in the case of a phoned-in threat. Does the Minister expect terrorists to call in their intentions?

What will the Deputy Prime Minister do to correct this serious security lapse and put an end to this unverified interline baggage transfer?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport responded to a number of questions raised yesterday with regard to airport security and pointed out the vast improvements over the last year or so. That was acknowledged by the International Civil Aviation Organization which indicated Canada had one of the best security systems in the world. I think he indicated there is no absolutely foolproof security system, and that Canada was working on a baggage match system for domestic flights. However, we are unable to start the system until an adequate computer system can be put in place.

While the Hon. Member has raised an important issue, it is also important to recognize that solid progress has been made. Whenever these kinds of discrepancies are drawn to our attention, Transport Canada certainly investigates, as it is investigating a number of allegations made in this House yesterday.

OBLIGATION TO X-RAY ALL BAGGAGE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, although an effort has been made, we know there are still some serious flaws. We were promised that everything would be done to ensure that passenger safety would be first-class.

Today, we heard about an American carrier that has asked to have all baggage X-rayed before loading.

Is the Deputy Prime Minister prepared to ask Canadian carriers to do the same? Don't Canadians deserve the same protection Americans get on U.S. flights? Is the Deputy Prime Minister ready to take action?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what qualifications the Hon. Member has as an expert on airport security but I can—

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): What are yours?

Mr. Mazankowski: What are mine and this Government's? We have heeded the advice of the International Civil Aviation Organization. It has strongly recommended that the baggage match system is much more effective than the x-ray system, and that is precisely why we are following the advice of the experts in the field.

• (1450)

I believe that the International Civil Aviation Organization has many experts in the field and they are part and parcel of the world organization in which all member countries work together in close harmony to deal with the whole problem of international terrorism. I think the Hon. Member should applaud Canada for the progress it has made over the last two years.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—REFERENCE TO BROADENING SCOPE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns the American attempt to broaden the scope of the agreement, as Ambassador Ritchie has said. If this new context has been created in which the Americans can seek to have at least three items reconsidered, why did Canada not seek to have some items reconsidered? Did Canadians say what they wanted to broaden or renegotiate on the basis of the many charges which have been made against the agreement, or did we simply let the Americans dictate the agenda once more?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, if he is honest with the House, I think the Hon. Member will admit that the Americans did not dictate the agenda and that the Canadian team went into this with support from the sectoral advisory committees and people from the International Trade Advisory Committee such as The Consumers' Association of Canada. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre keeps yelling: "What about real people?" I am not sure to whom he is referring as real people.

I can tell the Hon. Member that his assertion that the agenda was set by the Americans is just not true. As a matter of fact, in setting out its goals in the free trade pact Canada reached every priority that it hoped to reach.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, the Americans are dictating the timeframe in which this must be decided and dictating what will now be up for renegotiation. The Parliamentary Secretary speaks of The Consumers' Association. The Consumers' Association appeared before the committee and was very critical of this agreement.

UNITED STATES EXPORT ENHANCEMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who indicated in this House that the American Export Enhancement Subsidy Program violated the spirit of the agreement. Why is this not an item that the Canadian Government brought back to the Americans as something that they must stop doing? Why are we always submissive? Why are items like this not raised in this new climate of renegotiation?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons for getting into the negotiations was because of the protectionist mood in the United States. That is exactly why we are into this process and why we have initialled a very good agreement. The Hon. Member says that the United States wins all these, but just last week a GATT panel came down in favour of Canada against the United States on customs user fees. The theory of the Hon. Member is all bunk.

MULTICULTURALISM

PROPOSED LEGISLATION—REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF SEPARATE DEPARTMENT OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Multiculturalism, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday's Multiculturalism Bill comes on the heels of a Liberal Bill in 1984, three different Conservative Ministers of Multiculturalism, three years of promises and consultations on this Bill, and an all-Party committee which unanimously recommended to the Government that it introduce a comprehensive forward looking Bill that would go far beyond the general principles.

Why did his Government simply introduce a piece of legislation that is rooted exclusively on general principles and past laurels? Why did he not entrench a separate line Department or a Commissioner for Multiculturalism so that it would meet the aspirations of communities? Canadians are simply getting tired of your fine speeches on your summer ethnic picnic circuit.

Mr. Speaker: Ministers may reply if they wish, but I must point out that the Hon. Member is out of order, certainly in the last words he used. I invite him to put his supplementary question. There does not seem to be any response from the Government.

Mr. Marchi: I do not know what was out of order, Your Honour—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will probably remember that he was using the personal "you" and, to the degree that that is used, it evokes a response which creates difficulty. I would ask him not to do that.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker—

Mrs. Finestone: Thank you, Your Honour.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchi: I do not know why the Government finds it so funny.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Listen to Sheila.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has put a question. The Chair has corrected the last few words and the Hon. Member has accepted that. The question is certainly in order, except for those words, and I remind Hon. Members that the reasons we are strict about this is that it leads to disorder. However, the Hon. Member has the floor and is putting his question. He is entitled to the appropriate courtesies. The Hon. Member.

Mr. Marchi: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister again, considering the political effort put into bilingualism during the sixties and the seventies, why he failed to incorporate in this Bill the energy and political will of the 80s to enhance multiculturalism, with the same government mechanisms used many years ago to support the policy on bilingualism, instead of expecting ethnic groups and all Canadians to swallow a bunch of platitudes.

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister Responsible for Multiculturalism): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister I would like to answer on his behalf, and I want to thank the Hon. Member for giving me this opportunity. Since yesterday, Canada has a Bill on multiculturalism, and I think Canada is the first country in the world to table legislation of this kind. It was not only a special day for Canada and Canadians of other ethnic origins like myself, it was an historic moment. Canada is the first country in the world to do something like this, and as a Canadian I am very proud.

[English]

COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary expects that this is a big Christmas gift to the ethnocultural communities. Let me tell him that it is gift wrapping and those communities expected something meaningful inside.

My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Given the fact that your Government has consulted far and wide—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Marchi: Given that his Government has consulted far and wide and knows what those consultations were, why did he reject the unanimous recommendations of the committee that reflected the aspirations of the community to have a multiculturalism Bill that legislates principles but also addresses the hard fact realities of the here and now, rather than patting people on the back for what happened yesterday?

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister Responsible for Multiculturalism): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite, and with him, those who have done nothing for multiculturalism, is challenging the partnership the Minister has proposed to be able to administer the new legislation. Perhaps I may repeat, for the Hon. Member's benefit, that yesterday was a great day for Canada. The whole world will come knocking at our door to ask us how we managed to accomplish this excellent piece of work.

CHILD CARE

PROPOSED NATIONAL PROGRAM

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I know that working parents who desperately need reliable child care are anxiously looking forward to the details of the national child care program which he will report tomorrow.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Mitchell: Will the Minister assure us today that news reports are wrong and that billions of dollars for child care will not go toward regressive tax exemptions but will be used to increase substantially the spaces for quality affordable child care that are so urgently needed across Canada?

• (1500)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is as anxious as I am to see what the statement will be tomorrow. It is ready, and I invite the Hon. Member to be there tomorrow.

TAX DEDUCTIONS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister as a matter of principle today, does he not agree that any program that doubles the child care expense deduction will not increase much needed child care spaces and in fact will benefit upper-income Canadians at the expense of average and low-income families? Does the Minister think this is fair? Is this fairness for Canadians?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the principles of today are valid principles for tomorrow as well. I want to tell the Hon. Member that I have said continuously that when we come forward with a national child care plan, which the Prime Minister said would be brought forward by this Government and which is another area in which the Government is delivering on its promises, the Government will bring forward a plan which will give parents choices. It will not fit one mould which the New Democratic Party, with its blinkered approach to life, feels is the only way to go with these things. I am not going to accept an NDP way of life.

U.S.S.R.—PLIGHT OF LEV AND MARINA FURMAN

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Just a few days ago, Lev and Marina Furman were again denied their exit visas to leave the Soviet Union. I met this couple when I was in Leningrad in May of this year. For 16 years Mr. Furman and his wife have been trying to leave the Soviet Union. They are so distraught that yesterday, I understand, they began a hunger strike. I know Marina's health is very fragile. She just about lost her life in giving birth to their daughter Bayla Alyia.

Surely Canada can be of some help in a tragic and sad case such as this?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his continuing interest in this case and others of its kind. I am familiar with the case. The Hon. Member will know that I make it a practice in meetings with Soviet officials to raise cases of this kind, and I will continue to do that.

The matter has been raised by the Embassy in Moscow. We will continue to raise those kinds of pressures. I believe the Hon. Member himself intends to be part of a large demonstration of persons from across North America who are interested in issues of this kind and who will be making their views known directly when General Secretary Gorbachev is in Washington. I think these kinds of efforts also help to underline the broadly based concern for questions of human rights in the Soviet Union.

REQUEST THAT QUEBEC SHIPYARDS BE SAVED

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday, the Quebec Minister of Industry,Trade and Commerce, Mr. Daniel Johnson, stated that the Quebec Ministers in the Tory Government are less inclined to keep their promises concerning the future of our Quebec shipyards. Moreover, Mr. Johnson said that the Minister of Energy,Mines and Resources, the Minister of Immigration and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion do not understand the needs of Quebec shipyards and are not delivering the goods.

This is my question to the Prime Minister. Can he tell us whether the Tory Government intends to respond to Mr. Johnson's request and save our three Quebec shipyards?

[English]

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I should point out to the Hon. Member that I believe the shipyards in Quebec presently have more orders than any other shipyards in Canada. In dealing with the frigates, we are naturally looking at all the defence infrastructure across the country before making a decision. When the decision has been made, we will be glad to announce it.

AWARDING OF CONTRACTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Mr. Daniel Johnson, Quebec's Minister of Industry and Commerce, has indicated that this would mean the end of the shipyards, and the unemployed Vickers workers in Montreal will let the Minister know he is wrong. Again, my question to the Prime Minister is simply this: Could the Prime Minister tell the House what other contracts the Federal Government intends to award to Quebec shipyards if they don't get any part of the frigate building contract? What other contracts are being considered to make sure that these shipyards will not close and that the Conservative Ministers will fulfill their commitments?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as the honourable member knows, the people involved in the shipbuilding industry a few years ago acknowledged the need to streamline this industry both in Quebec and elsewhere in Canada. As the Quebec Minister and the Hon. Member himself will remember, the Federal Government contributed last year to a large extent to the purchase of the Eastern division of the MIL. When referring to Quebec shipyards, the Hon. Member could remind the House and our colleagues that their order books are filled for a number of years, that the planned restructuralization will take place and that the Federal Government will continue to help this industry both in Quebec and elsewhere in Canada, as it has tried to do since 1984.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—FINAL TEXT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On October 5 the Prime Minister made a commitment to this House that the House committee would have the final document to study before the agreement was signed. He said, and I quote from page 9632 of Hansard:

> —I shall table the complete text of the Agreement as soon as the wording is finalized. It will then be referred to the appropriate committee of the House for analysis, study and debate.

Does the Prime Minister stand by that commitment? Will we have the final document? Will it be sent to a House committee for study before it is signed?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, this issue has been discussed on many occasions in the House, and I think the Parliamentary Secretary responded quite fully to that. Of course we are disappointed that the final text is not in place. However, that has not prevented this House from debating it, and the committee, and debate has taken place in the provinces and across the country. As soon as the final text is available it will certainly be brought before the House of Commons and every ample opportunity for debate will certainly be provided.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is again directed to the Prime Minister because it was his commitment to the House. Is that commitment still valid? Will the people of Canada have the finalized document? And will it appear before a committee of the House before the Prime Minister signs the final document?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, that is the same question and it is the same answer. There will be lots of opportunity to debate this issue in full, in the House, in committee and probably in the country.

PRIVILEGE

RELEASE TO OPPOSITION CRITICS OF ADVANCE COPIES OF DOCUMENTS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the question of privilege on which I rise, and of which I have given you notice, arises out of a matter I raised under Standing Order 21 before Question Period and on the evident position taken by the Government in heckling while I was speaking.

I rose following the announcement this morning by the Government that it would finally be making public the Parker Commission report into allegations of conflict of interest on the part of the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. As you know, Mr. Speaker, and as I submit, there is a well established practice of a courtesy being extended to the media, on which I do not insist as a question of privilege, but which has been an established practice, and to members of the Opposition concerned, of advance copies being provided of difficult, complex and lengthy documents, as it has been indicated this one will be. It is necessary in order to have informed debate. It is necessary in order to permit Members of Parliament who are called upon to respond and comment on the report to have an advance copy in order to discharge their proper functions as a—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hesitate, of course, to interrupt the Hon. Member because he is an experienced and senior Member in this place. He may have a grievance, but I have to make it very clear to him that it is not a question of privilege.

No Government, certainly in contemporary times, has ever been obliged to put out a document in advance. Sometimes it is done and sometimes it is not. In any event, while it may be a matter of complaint on the part of the Hon. Member, I have to advise him that it is not a point of privilege.

However, the Hon. Member has made his point and, of course, members of the Government are here and perhaps there will be some further action, but that is certainly not for the Speaker to say.

• (1510)

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows, this commission was established by the Government under the Public Inquiries Act. I am informed that the document will be released tomorrow through a briefing which is taking place under the auspices and control of the Royal Commissioner. Chief Justice Parker is in control of the briefing and will be dealing, at ten o'clock I think on the day of the tabling, with those parties which had standing before the commission.

I have heard the Hon. Member and I propose to get the direction of the Chief Justice with regard to the request made. I would explain to the Hon. Member that this is not a government briefing but a briefing and release, with an embargo of course, to those parties which had standing before the commission. I think that includes the party of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, that is quite different from the understanding that I had arrived at from various rumours and statements made by the Government. I accept the Minister's word that it is not a document being put out by the Government. Therefore, I withdraw the criticism which I was proposing to make of the Government for failing to do so.

It is most unusual that a report of a royal commission is released by the commissioner. It is normally the Government which has commissioned it that releases it. That is the reason for the misunderstanding that arose.

With regard to advance briefings by the commissioner, I confirm what the Minister said, that I learned through counsel that documents were going to be made available in Toronto to the counsel to parties which had standing before the royal commission. I was not aware, and I gather that the Minister is not certain, that there will be an opportunity for counsel to be informed on, ask questions about, or see the report in advance of it being made public. I will look into that through the channel of the royal commission.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) for his gracious comments. I also want to thank the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn). Although it was not a question of privilege, as I said, this has perhaps helped resolve a difficulty.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TABLING OF DOCUMENT ON PEACEKEEPING IN CENTRAL AMERICA

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 67(2) I rise to table, in both official languages, a discussion document relating to the Central America peacekeeping observer organization.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PEACEKEEPING IN CENTRAL AMERICA—STATEMENT BY SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to report to the House upon my conversations and meetings last week in Nicaragua, Guatemala, El Salvador, Honduras and Costa Rice and, in particular, to discuss the peace process agreed to unanimously by the five Central American Presidents in their August meeting at Esquipulas.

That agreement seeks to achieve "the climate of liberty that democracy ensures", and it sets forth conditions with which all five Governments must comply. Two characteristics invest this agreement with unusual promise. It is unanimous and it is indigenous. It is not a prescription from outside but a commitment made deliberately by all five Presidents.

It is my impression, after talking to each President, that all intend to keep the word they gave. Indeed, a strength of this agreement is that no one—no Government, no guerilla force, no outside power—will want to stand accused of making this agreement fail. It is, therefore, of unusual importance that, in addition to whatever help countries like Canada might offer, we seek to create a public opinion that is informed and dispassionate about this process so that compliance can be fairly judged and pressure for compliance fully maintained.

No peace is simple. Countries which are serious about contributing to the success of this process must begin by understanding the complexity of the conflicts and the history of Central America and understanding also the relative frailty of the democracy which this accord seeks to promote.

Only eight years ago, in 1979, Costa Rica was the only democracy in the region. The Government of Nicaragua then was an oppressive, almost feudal, regime, a regime which invited revolution. The tradition in the region, again excepting Costa Rica, has been for crises to be resolved by force and military rule. There are, therefore, no deep roots for the democratic parties and institutions which can guarantee civil liberties and human rights as we Canadians have come to understand them.

The region is still torn by extremism—extremism of the right, extremism of the left—and it is marked by poverty, injustice and exploitation. Its economy is hobbled by debt, low commodity prices, frequent inefficiency, and the spectre and reality of war which drive growth away and distort domestic priorities. Even nature has been cruel. The capital cities of Managua, Guatemala and San Salvador have all been struck visibly by earthquakes. Those, Sir, are the circumstances in which the five Presidents seek peace.

Moreover, despite their unanimity, there are deep suspicions among them—doubts that the civil authorities in El Salvador, Guatemala and, to a lesser degree, Honduras, will in the end be strong enough to control the army, to control the police, to end the tradition of repression. There is also a profound skepticism as to whether the Sandinistas will let real democracy threaten the revolution which their constitution describes as irreversible.

In addition, each Government which signed the agreement must deal with combatants and refugees who have not been parties to this accord and whose views only become known in piecemeal fashion. That is to mention simply the complexities of the region itself which are complicated further by the extension to Central America of the competition between the United States and the Soviet Union.

There are, Sir, plenty of obstacles, but there is also a genuine commitment to the peace initiative and a recognition that the alternative is hopeless; continued bloodshed, economic stagnation, the withering of young, democratic institutions, and the consequent rebirth of coercive forces of the right and of the left.

[Translation]

Canada's interest and involvement in Central America is relatively recent, but our standing is high. Over the last five years we have tripled our bilateral aid to over $105 million, and, on a per capita basis, our aid to Central America is second only to what we do in the Caribbean. In that period, total direct Canadian assistance amounted to nearly $170 million, including support for Canadian non-governmental organizations who are active throughout the region.

To get some better sense of the people and, the countryside, we visited a Farmers For Peace workshop in Nicaragua where farmers are trained to repair machinery.

We visited also two NGO projects in southern Honduras, one where Horizons For Friendship helps educate orphans, and the other, a rural clinic operated by Canadian church workers.

Members of our delegation visited different CIDA projects—with purposes ranging from purifying water to providing daycare for single parents, to improving dairy production, to building houses, and meeting other practical needs.

Some of our delegation also met with human rights groups, womens' associations, artists, and refugees in the camp at Limon. We saw for ourselves the good reputation of Canada, which gives us credentials to contribute to the peace process.

The Accord asks "the respect and support of the international community for our efforts. We have plans in Central America for peace and development, but we need help to make them a reality."

I had planned to visit the region sometime before the Spring of next year to provide a visible signal of Canada's support. I sought to meet, in seven days, as broad as possible a representation of the people and organizations who, because they are involved in the conflict, must be brought into the process of peace. I had meetings with the five Presidents; the five Foreign Ministers; other Ministers and commandantes; the two clerics, Cardinal Obando y Bravo and Archbishop Rivera y Damas who are charged with leading reconciliation in, respectively, Nicaragua and El Salvador; leaders of the political wing of the guerrillas in El Salvador; a contra representative in Costa Rica, Alfredo Cesar, who was once the head of the Nicaraguan Central Bank under the Sandinistas; the Miskito Indian Leader Brooklyn Rivera; Opposition leaders in Nicaragua including Pablo Antonio Cuadra, the noted poet and co-director of La Prensa, and groups preoccupied with human rights.

[English]

In addition, our delegation included Lieutenant-Colonel Don Ethell and Lieutenant Colonel Gerald Thompson, two Canadian officers who have commanded international peacekeeping operations elsewhere in the world. They had detailed discussions with Central American authorities about the practical challenges of designing and operating verification and peacekeeping mechanisms.

I have just laid upon the Table of the House the basic document that was used by those two representatives of our military in their discussions in Central America.

The Esquipulas plan proposes procedures of verification and follow-up, but I told each President of Canada's concern that they were underestimating the complexity of putting such mechanisms in place. A peacekeeping operation must fit precisely the conditions in the regions where the peace is to be kept. You cannot simply shift a model that might work in Cyprus to the very different conditions of Central America.

Our experts believe that it could take up to six months to design and mount a mechanism that would prove effective in Central America. I said that Canadian expertise would be available for all or part of that work, if the five Presidents agreed unanimously that they wanted Canadian help. I emphasized, Sir, that we were not seeking an invitation, because we want the decision on this vital question to be taken by Central America for Central American reasons. I indicated that there were general conditions of unanimity and authority that Canada requires before becoming involved in any aspect of any peacekeeping operations.

I should tell the House that I do not think it would be appropriate to attach new conditions in this case, since the problems in Central America are already complex enough. As a result of our conversations, I believe the five Governments now have a greater sense of the urgency of getting on with the design of the mechanisms that they will need.

Peace and the peace plan are the overwhelming preoccupation in Central America now. Naturally, other issues arise. Let me deal with two of them, the question of the conditionality of aid, and the resumption of our program in Guatemala.

There has been a suggestion that, in the special circumstances of Central America, Canada should abandon the principle of not using our aid for political purposes. Part of the reason that Canada is respected in the world is precisely because our aid has been designed to help the poorest, to help the most needy. Other countries, including the United States, use aid for political leverage, and their reputation reflects their practice just as our reputation reflects our practice. If we make an exception in Central America, we would begin to discount that distinctive, valuable Canadian principle.

I discussed the question in Central America, including with President Arias, who understands and accepts Canada's policy. I make the point, Sir, that it would be consistent with our practice to consider help to special multilateral mechanisms which the five Presidents might jointly establish to promote democratization or compliance or other specific purposes in the region as a whole and as part of the evolution of the peace process.

[Translation]

We are maintaining active development projects in Nicaragua, Honduras, Costa Rica, and El Salvador, and have announced our intention to resume bilateral aid to Guatemala. We will follow in Guatemala the precedent established two years ago in El Salvador, which allows control of our aid to rest in Canadian hands, at least until the program is well launched. That system has proven very effective in El Salvador. Some critics in Canada believe Guatemala should continue to be left out of bilateral programs, because of their human rights record. Unquestionably, abuses of human rights continue. The questions are first whether the democratically-elected government of President Cerezo has made enough progress on human rights to justify resumption of aid and second whether it is now safe for Canadian aid workers to deliver that program. The Gatemalan Human Rights Commission in exile, the Inter-American Human Rights Commission of the OAS, the U.N. Special Representative for Guatemala, and Amnesty International have all noted signs of improvement in Guatemala under the civilian government while indicating, as we would agree, that abuses continue. My judgment is that there has been progress, and that bilateral aid relation with Canada will encourage further progress on human rights in Guatemala.

[English]

Obviously, another question in Canada concerns the public position we should take regarding the support by the United States of the Contras, and the support by the Soviet Union and Cuba of the Sandinista Government and of guerrilla activity in El Salvador. We oppose third party intervention in Central America, whatever the source, and have made that position clear to both superpowers.

Some Canadians argue sincerely that our Central American policy should focus more on public criticism of the United States. I believe that such a policy would reduce, and not increase, whatever real influence we might have in Washington on this question. It could, in addition, impede our ability to play other, more active roles in support of the peace plan. The five Governments of Central America are in no doubt about the difference between Canadian and U.S. policy, and our conduct should be guided by what makes us most effective in Central America itself.

The issue of compliance with the peace plan is most acute in three countries—Nicaragua, El Salvador, and Honduras.

In Nicaragua, real commitments have been made to democratic reform—the formation of a National Reconciliation Commission, the reopening of La Prensa and Radio Catolica, the readmission of exiled clerics, and the release of almost 1,000 political prisoners. Earlier this month the Government also expressed a willingness to enter into indirect dialogue with the Contras, through the mediation of Cardinal Obando y Bravo. These commitments are real and they are encouraging. However, we should recall that by some estimates there are still between 7,000 and 8,000 political prisoners held in Nicaraguan jails, that some clerics remain in exile, that Radio Catolica was prevented from broadcasting its first newscast, and that the dialogue with the Contras is narrowly defined and still in very preliminary stages. There has been no complete amnesty.

In El Salvador, a full amnesty has been granted for political prisoners. Two prominent leaders of the political wing of the guerrilla movement have already taken advantage of this opening to return to that country's legitimate political process. The Salvadoran Government has also formed a National Reconciliation Commission and was quick to reopen talks with the guerrilla opposition. As well, El Salvador accepted the repatriation of some 4,300 Salvadoran refugees from camps inside Honduras. However, the violence continues in that country, and the Government-guerrilla dialogue was suspended after the assassination of Herbert Anaya, the head of the non-governmental Human Rights Commission. Unfortunately, neither side seems prepared to take the serious initiatives needed to resume the dialogue.

Honduras is a country which does not have an internal conflict but is plagued with the problems of the Contra presence in the south, as well as the influx of enormous numbers of refugees from both Nicaragua and El Salvador. The Government has formed a National Reconciliation Commission to help deal with these problems. On the refugee side, as I noted, the Government co-operated fully with the UNHCR in the recent repatriation of Salvadoran refugees from Honduran camps. They have also asked the Contras to leave Honduran soil, though to date there has been no measurable movement. I was advised in Honduras that informal discussions may begin soon between Honduras and Nicaragua to move toward concrete compliance with the Esquipulas agreement respecting non-use of territory.

I remind the House that the notion of simultaneity, so central to this accord, means that implementation of the basic provisions of the accord must occur in lock-step. The Contras must be removed from Honduras at the same time as a ceasefire is negotiated between the Nicaraguan Government and the Contras. Neither objective has yet been reached, and each relies on the other.

I expressed at the outset my view of the importance of creating an active, informed, and dispassionate Canadian public opinion, whose interest and judgment might encourage compliance with the peace plan. I think it appropriate that the House of Commons pursue more formally the interest several individual Members have already shown in the region and the process.

At the Government's request, House Leaders have begun discussions on the appropriate parliamentary committee to allow this House to monitor and encourage the peace process in Central America. I would place before that committee, on a monthly basis, a report on the current compliance with the plan and would seek to arrange other briefings and background. It might be useful for the committee to review the discussion paper on peacekeeping, which was just tabled and was the basis of our conversations last week, and to examine other ways by which Canada can contribute constructively to achieving peace. Officials of External Affairs, CIDA, and other Departments would be available to provide information.

Those of us who criticize the superpowers' involvement in Central America often unconsciously commit the error we condemn and see the region not by its own lights but in the shadow of a superpower. The initiative of the five Presidents is more than an attempt to resolve their own problems. It is an assertion of their distinct destiny. These are five countries with histories, aspirations, and identities of their own. Their development has been blunted by repression, poverty and conflict. Trade and tourists shift away from a region known as a war zone. Economic strategies are displaced by military strategies. Children, who should be in families, are orphaned. Youngsters, who should be in school, are at war.

The real issue in Central America is not Marxism, nor is it death squads, nor even is it the abuse of human rights. Those are symptoms. The root problems are economic and social, and Central America needs peace to resolve them.

Five different Presidents, with courage and uncommon unanimity, have launched their own initiative for peace. The issue now is whether the five Presidents who signed the accord will respect its principles, will keep moving toward peace, and will keep moving toward what they call in their own document "the climate of liberty that democracy ensures". I believe the House would agree that Canada should encourage and help them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, like the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), I recently had occasion to visit Central America, to witness many of the same events, and to pay witness to the very courageous and important initiatives being taken in that region by the five Governments. I concur with the Secretary of State for External Affairs that the most important development in that region or that hemisphere is the incredible and historic effort of those countries to become independent for the first time, to escape from the surrogate wars which have been fought in their territories for generations, to escape from the economic embargos of large powers in the horizon which still plague that country, and to escape from the criss-crossing of their territories at will by marauding mercenary bands, which is still part of their effort.

In one sense I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs falls short of the mark when he says that the problems are basically economic and social. Those may be the consequences, but I believe the problem has been the sense of imperialism, colonialism, or domination under which they have suffered. They have not lived in a world where there is a rule of law or where there is a recognition of the sovereign right of those countries to decide for themselves their own destiny, what kind of government they want to have, or what kind of economic and social systems they want to create. They have been dominated, manipulated, and pushed around. That is a cause that has inspired various countries and regions, not just for generations but for thousands of years. This is why I think that the opportunity for Canada to associate itself and to ally itself with that incredible historic initiative is something all Canadians support.

There is an understanding out there in the country. The Minister talks about trying to develop Canadian public opinion. It is there. It is amazing the number of churches and groups across the country that have sent people into Central America. It is amazing the number of people who have worked in co-ops in Nicaragua or Honduras and have direct experience from working in the most basic conditions. Canadians understand and recognize that they have a certain affinity for a small country trying to retain its independence in the looming shadow of a great power. That is why I looked forward to the Minister's visit. I really believe that when Canadians ask the question where we can play a role, here is a place for Canadian interest, Canadian affinity and a Canadian opportunity to do something meaningful, not by imposing our will but by providing many of those countries with the skills and support they are so desperately looking for.

One of the conversations in Nicaragua that I recall quite graphically was with one of the secondary Ministers. He told me that they were accused of being allied with the Soviets. What could they do, he said, when the Americans turned them down, started supporting the Contras and put an economic embargo on? Who did they have to turn to? Where else could they get support? It was only the Soviets and their bloc, he told me, who were prepared to come forward with the oil and sufficient economic aid to keep them alive. The Minister said, "Please, when you go back, tell your Government and country that we do not want to be associated with the Soviet Union. We want to be independent, but we need countries like Canada and others like you to give us that kind of support".

I have to express some disappointment with the Minister's remarks. I do not question or quarrel with his emotional sentiment. I think that he has been bitten, in a sense, by the same bug we all have when we go to Central America and we see the kind of struggle with which we all identify. But the Minister went there without a Central American policy and he has come back without one. We still do not have a policy as to how Canada will organize its various economic, diplomatic and political initiatives to meet the historic significance and the historic challenge that greets us in that region of the world.

Where I perhaps take quarrel the most, and I do it in all good intentions, is on the assertion the Minister makes that Canada should not speak out against U.S. aid to the Contras. That is the central issue in Central America. If the peace plan will work, aid to the Contras must stop. There is no other issue. All the rest of it is prelude and prologue. That is the central issue. Until that incredible, disruptive and immoral action comes to a halt, there will not be a peace plan. I believe sincerely, and I say it to the Minister, that Canada could play an important role in helping that aid to be halted.

When we visited Washington after our trip to Central America, the group that I was with met with a number of Congressman to talk about what would happen if Canada said no to Contra aid, specifically, clearly, directly, not in vague language of third party intervention, but clearly. They said that right now the issue is in the balance, that Congress must decide within a matter of months one way or the other. It is not the Reagan administration that will decide. Ultimately, it will be the Congress of the United States that will decide. There are people in that Congress fighting desperately to stop that aid on both sides of the House in both Parties. They said that if a country like Canada, with the kind of legitimacy and credibility that we have, seen as a good ally of the U.S., were to take the stand that the peace process is paramount and that the stoppage of aid is the priority, then that message would be heard in the halls of Congress. It might change 10 or 15 votes. I do not know the numbers, but they said it would have an impact and it would make a difference. We would add credibility.

Charges often heard in that kind of political debate about those going against aid to the Contras being soft on communism or something, the kind of rhetoric you hear from the right wing in the U.S., could be stopped if allies like Canada, the European countries and others took a stand. The American Congressmen told me that if we took a stand, then maybe some of the Europeans would take a stand, and all of a sudden the Americans would see it as the international community saying, "Stop this immoral practice". We could make a difference, Mr. Speaker. This Government could make a difference by saying in a forthright way, not in anger, not with vitriol, but by saying that if the peace process is to work you cannot have a surrogate war being sponsored by a great power which is designed to upset and overturn one of the partners to that peace process. That is what it is all about.

If I might be allowed a moment of anecdote, let me say this. Mr. Reagan does not know what he is doing. I believe he has no idea of the kind of inspiration that is in the hearts of many of those people in Nicaragua. I visited a farm village that had been attacked by the Contras five days earlier. As I walked into the village and watched the farmers and their families with rifles on their backs, I saw the destruction, the burned tractors, huts and granaries, and a little girl about seven years old approached. The translator told me that she wanted to show me her prize possession. It was a reading exercise book. She was the first one in her family to learn to read. That is what the revolution is about. As the Minister said, it is about children learning to read and proper health care. Her father said to me—I will never forget his words as he stood there—"You go back and tell Mr. Reagan that if he thinks he is going to take this away from me and my daughter, I will fight to the death to stop him". That is what is going on in that region. That is why it is so central for Canada to make its voice heard in a way that I think will ring not only through the Congress but throughout the corridors of Government in all parts of the world.

I realize there are dangers. I do not diminish the sense of caution of the Secretary of State for External Affairs', but if I may, through you, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the Secretary of State for External Affairs that this is a rare chance for a Canadian voice to be expressed in a way that would make a difference. I hope that this statement will not be the last word in our Central American policy. I hope, before the timetable of the peace process comes to an end, that we will say to our allies in the United States, "Stop aid".

In the next few minutes I would like to go beyond that. We should also tell the Americans to stop the economic embargo. This is something which the Minister did not mention in his statement. He spoke about poverty, economic difficulties and injustices. How would you like to be a country in which the largest power in the world is using its diplomatic influence to stop all trade, Mr. Speaker? Farmers for Peace, the Canadian aid project, send tools from Alberta, but they have to ship them to Costa Rica up a very difficult highway into Nicaragua. Inflation is 1000 per cent. When I arrived in Nicaragua, it was 55,000 cordobas to the dollar. When I left, it was 60,000 cordobas to the dollar. How can there be any kind of stability in that circumstance? The economic embargo is a large cause of that. We could be speaking out on that issue as well. If the process will work, you have to allow these countries to have some input into economic exchange. This is a Government that is talking about free trade, yet we are condoning a total blockage of trade of one of the countries in Central America.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): No.

Mr. Axworthy: I am sorry, not condoning. I do not want to use the word condoning, but we are not speaking out against it. That subject was not in the Minister's statement and it should have been.

Equally on the question of our own aid, I know this is a difficult issue, we wrestled with it at the External Affairs and International Trade Committee, but once again I believe the wrong signals in part were sent. While we were there we were offering new aid to Honduras and Guatemala and really no new aid to Nicaragua. I would like to debate this with the Minister, and when we get to committee maybe we will have a chance—

Mr. Friesen: No contest.

Mr. Axworthy: I do not know whether the Parliamentary Secretary is being facetious, but I am trying to make a point and I wish he would take it seriously.

In this question of the use of economic aid—I think this is a special circumstance because of the peace process—we will have to be careful. If we do business as usual and offer an extra $14 million in aid to Honduras when it is still harbouring Contras, does that signal to some of the other countries that we are implicitly supporting that practice? In the discussions which the Secretary of State for External Affairs had with the President and the Foreign Minister of Honduras that subject should have been raised. We are the second largest donor in Honduras. We have clout and leverage. Our economic aid is not being given in a heavy-handed manner. The Americans, as the Minister probably recognizes, are tramping in and using their military aid as a way of trying to stop Honduras from making a change in its policy. The Reagan administration is clearly using its economic and military aid in Honduras to try to disrupt the peace plan. We should provide an alternative to that by saying that our country and others believe that, with the right gestures, we can do more.

• (1550)

In this case, I endorse fully what I believe was a commitment from the Minister. I do not want to put words in his mouth, but I do endorse the idea that there should be a Central American reconstruction plan and that Canada should take the lead in helping to pull that together. That is very important in allowing the other Central American countries, especially Honduras and El Salvador which are very dependent upon American aid, to know that if the peace plan succeeds and military aid is withdrawn, the economic vacuum will be filled.

One of the fears of those countries is that since American aid is such a dominant part of their economy, if it is pulled out, there will be nothing left. There must be a substantial contribution made by other countries of the world to fill that vacuum. I would hope that we could even go beyond that. I would hope that that would be an issue which the standing committee would address as well. It should address the question of whether or not Canada should take leadership by helping to organize, through the United Nations, NATO, the OECD and the various other multilateral groups to which we belong, a substantial reconstruction plan for Central America in order to provide a foundation for the peace plan.

A gesture that Canada could make immediately, even tomorrow, is to provide direct aid, perhaps through the auspices of the Red Cross, to help those countries carry out the amnesty. That costs money. If Contra rebels are to be persuaded to come from the hills back into the villages, they will need houses, training and farm tools. Those countries cannot afford that.

When I was there, members of the Nicaraguan Assembly asked us if we could find $50,000 in Canada to help them print their Constitution. They have no money with which to do that kind of work. An amount of $1 million in aid, an amount that is very small in terms of the CIDA budget, to help the resettlement of rebels and Contras, would have an enormous and magnifying impact on those countries. The money would not have to be given to the Governments. The Red Cross is already carrying out those kinds of functions, and aid targeted specifically at this early phase of the peace process would be a salutary and beneficial move.

I am not trying to fight the Minister's policy but I am saying that there are many elements that could go into that policy. There are elements of it that we could be implementing right now. This is not a condemnation of what the Minister saw and reported on, I am simply saying that there is a lot more that could be done.

Although my time is almost up, there is much more that I would like to say. I appreciate the fact that the Government will be establishing a committee, but in order to make that committee's work meaningful, the Government should place before it a clear statement of policy initiatives which we will be prepared to follow. Let the committee then debate and agonize over the issues and come to grips with them in a very quick and effective way. This should be done within a week or two, and my last message is that there is no time to waste.

The process is moving along. In some ways it is evolving, in some ways it is unravelling. Because the process is so crucial and historic and because there is an opportunity for Canadians to play a positive, beneficial and constructive role in it, we must take action immediately. We cannot wait for spring. That is why I urge the Minister to come forward with a policy, set up the committee and take the initiative.

I now return to my central point. Most important of all, we must be prepared to say clearly and without equivocation to our allies, using our influence, that after a proper assessment and judgment, the Government of Canada, with the support of the Canadian people, with members of the Opposition fully in accord, believes that the most important contribution Canada and the United States could make to peace in this world, to resolving the conflicts, would be to make a decision as quickly as possible that we will no longer support aid to that surrogate war that is going on in Central America and that it must be prepared to withdraw its military presence. That is the one most important ingredient in making the recipe for peace in Central America work.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, before I begin my remarks, I would like to make a brief comment. It breaks my heart that Parliament has come to the point that a major statement on Canadian foreign policy contained in the report of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) on his visit to a very troubled region of the world should be made in the presence of—how many Members are present? I suppose the rules do not allow me to comment on that, but I think it is a sad comment on the state of affairs in Parliament. I will not say any more than that because I do not want to use up any more of the time I am allotted to speak to the Minister's statement.

First I would like to say, on behalf of a great many Canadians, how glad we are that the Secretary of State for External Affairs decided to go to Central America. It was a very important thing for him to do and I hope that what the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) alleged of him is true, and that is that he has been bitten by the bug of Central America and that his level of concern for that area will be heightened as a result of his visit.

I thank him as well for making a statement to the House in spite of the fact that there are so few Members present to hear it. The Minister himself has had something to do with the partial renewal of the practice of making statements in the House. Perhaps some day we will gather together Members of the House in ways that they no longer gather together for these kinds of things.

I was moved, as I always am, by the sincere rhetoric and the analysis of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, but I am also moved to a rage which I will suppress when I recall the timidity with which the Government to which he belonged dealt with this question in the early days of the Sandinista revolution. At that time, different Canadian policies might have made a difference in the evolution of the situation this Government is now trying to address.

I should begin by saying that I support the major Canadian procedural recommendation made by the Minister in his statement with respect to the formation of a committee. I would hope that the House Leaders would see their way clear to form a special committee with full powers and full flexibility, rather than a subcommittee of some other committee.

I am not sure I agree with the idea of putting a policy before the committee. I would like to think about it more before I decide whether or not it is a good idea. Perhaps giving the committee some time, although time is short, to make up its own mind would be a good idea. I am worried that government members of the committee might feel beholden to any policy that would be put before them by the Government, and I would rather have them have an independence of mind at the beginning so that the committee itself could form a view on the situation. However, in order for Canada to be helpful, we will have to take steps in the very short run. Whatever the committee does will have to be done with that in mind.

My problem with the Minister's statement is that, over-all, I find it to be too timid and imbalanced in ways that I hope I will be able to articulate in the time remaining to me. It is timid in its analysis of the superpower relationships in Central America and it is timid about obvious Canadian interests.

I would have thought that when the Secretary of State for External Affairs made a statement on Central America, he would have had some sharp words of protest to register against the attacks on Canadians and Canadian-sponsored projects. I thought that this would be an opportunity for the Canadian Government to send a strong message of disapproval to the American Government about what people supported by that Government are doing to Canadians and Canadian-backed projects.

The Minister said that the peace plan is unanimous and indigenous. These are of course what recommends the plan to everyone. We hope it is respect for those two characteristics of the plan which will cause everyone, including the U.S., to avoid trying to impose their own will on the plan or the region. I am glad the Minister made that statement.

He talks about the need for informed and dispassionate Canadian public opinion about this process. I say to the Minister that the Canadian public is already very well informed on Central America. In fact, I would say the average church-goer in the mainstream churches of this country is probably more informed about Central America than the average Member of Parliament. It is very difficult to walk into the lobby of a United Church, a Roman Catholic Church, an Anglican Church, a Mennonite Church, or various other churches, without finding in front of you an array of literature and material on Central America. So I would just warn the Minister not to be too paternalistic with respect to the Canadian public. There is already a large body of well-informed Canadians who have experience in Central America and have related that experience to other Canadians. On occasion the Minister has chosen to ignore the advice of those Canadians, most recently with respect to the resumption of bilateral aid to Guatemala.

I was glad to hear the Minister referring to pre-1979, say that the then Government of Nicaragua was an oppressive, almost feudal regime which invited revolution. Indeed, that was so, but would it not have been more historically informative, accurate and balanced to have noted that that very regime was put in place and supported by the U.S. for decades? This is part of the problem. It is one thing to say the problem is social and economic, but those problems cannot be divorced from the politics of superpower domination in that area. The fact is that the superpower domination we are talking about when we talk about Central America is American domination going all the way back to the Monroe Doctrine of 1823. It did not originate with Ronald Reagan; it originated in the 19th century and an American commitment to domination of that area of the world.

The Minister displays this imbalance, if you like, in the analysis on page 5 of his statement when he talks about profound skepticism over whether the Sandinistas will let real democracy threaten the revolution which their Constitution describes as irreversible. Why the sarcasm about democracy in Nicaragua and not about elected Governments in other countries of Central America? All the observers of the election in Nicaragua came to the judgment that it was valid. There are opposition Parties and there is an Assembly. I just think the statement would have been much stronger if he had left out the word "real" and posed a legitimate question about whether the Sandinistas would allow a democratic process to threaten their revolution. That would have been a legitimate question, but to insert this cute adjective of "real" before "democracy" it seems to me, weakened it.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I will give you the word.

Mr. Blaikie: Besides, I recall it was the Minister himself, at a banquet here for Vice-President Ramirez, who used the word "irreversible" in the French portion of his speech to describe the Sandinista revolution.

What I am saying is that throughout this statement there is this sort of double standard with respect to burden of proof, and that a much harder case is made against Nicaragua than some of the other countries. That is a weak spot in the Minister's analysis and it is no coincidence, of course. It comes from an over-all willingness to be critical of those elements in Central America which might irritate the Americans.

With respect to peacekeeping, the Minister says on page 10:

> You cannot simply shift a model that works in Cyprus to the very different conditions of Central America.

I agree, but did the Nicaraguans or others ask for a model off the shelf? They probably did not, so I think it should be clear that they probably were not in the market for a Cyprus model. It may be that we will not have the six months or eight months that the Minister is talking about to work out that kind of peacekeeping plan. It may be that Canada will have to be part of a much more urgent process. I hope the Minister is at least open to that. I would also like to have seen some mention of how the Minister sees UN involvement. Does he see such involvement in any peacekeeping structure in which Canada would participate? It would have been good to have had that illuminated for the House.

With respect to aid, the Minister says Canada should not abandon its policy of not using aid for political purposes. I agree in the pejorative sense of the word "political", but it is nevertheless a fact that the choice of whom we give aid to and whom we do not is a political act. The resumption of aid to Guatemala was a political act. It will have political effects, even if it did not have ostensible political purposes. That was one of the criticisms made of it. It would send the wrong signal to the Government of Guatemala that perhaps the Canadian Government and people were satisfied with the progress made so far.

I know the Minister has a different view in that he feels this will encourage respect for human rights. However, no matter what side of the argument you are on, there is a political dimension to aid. I hope the Minister is not trying to pretend there is not and that therefore debate about it is illegitimate.

One of the things the Minister could have done in making this announcement was to announce some support for human rights institutions, commissions and the like in Central America. That certainly would have strengthened the perception that human rights are central to the Canadian perception of the problem there.

I want to go back to the analysis, if you like, because this is crucial. The Minister made a good announcement with respect to the committee, but there is an ongoing problem with the analysis. On page 16 he says:

> We oppose third party intervention in Central America, whatever the source, and have made that position clear to both superpowers.

He says that as if there were some equivalence to the involvement of the United States and the Soviet Union in Central America. That is like talking about superpower intervention in Afghanistan, as if there were no difference between what the Soviet Union is doing there and the aid that the Americans are giving to the Afghanistan rebels. There is an obvious difference, one that I am sure he would maintain.

That difference exists in Central America. The Contra army, which is basically a proxy army, not a guerrilla army, would disappear minutes after U.S. funding stopped. It is supported by the American Government. It is an extension of long-standing American policy in the area. I just say to the Minister, anyone who knows anything about the situation is not going to accept an analysis which tries to equate the involvement of the two superpowers in the area.

It would be very helpful if just once the Government would condemn outright U.S. funding of the Contras. I can understand the Minister's tactical claim that there may not be that much good to be achieved in persistently haranguing the Americans about their funding of the Contras. I am not sure the tactic works; I am not sure anything works with the U.S. However, if just once, on principle, the Minister or the Government would say that we condemn outright U.S. funding of the Contras and then proceeded from there, that would be so much more helpful. It would clear the air and be helpful to our allies in the U.S. Congress who want to resist the attempts by President Reagan for further funding of the Contras. It is the same tactical debate all over again.

I see the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) is in the House. As a result of being too nice in dealing with President Reagan's policies on acid rain, the Government undermined our real allies in the Congress who wanted to be able to refer to international criticism.

The same mistake is being made with respect to Central America. It would be more helpful if the Minister were able to make a strong statement about Central America, because, whether we like it or not, the U.S. funding of the Contras will have to stop if the peace plan is to succeed. Nicaragua will be unable to meet the standards it has set for itself as long as it is in a permanent state of mobilization. It cannot demobilize until it is no longer under attack, which will not happen until the United States decides to stop funding the Contras.

It is very difficult indeed for the Minister to have an analysis of Central America without addressing that very crucial point.

I return to the imbalance which is finely woven into this analysis. We are told that Radio Catolica was delayed one day in presenting its first news broadcast. One day! There is no mention that this was due to a bureaucratic foul-up with respect to licensing, and that they were able to broadcast on the second day. That should not have been contained in the analysis. There is no mention of all of the opposition newspapers that have been shut down over the years in El Salvador and do not have a hope of ever reopening. Those newspapers were not just censored; the editors were shot, the presses were destroyed and the premises were bombed. Many of those countries do not even bother with censorship, yet acts such as these do not receive the same kind of attention as the shutdown and the reopening of La Prensa, the opposition newspaper in Nicaragua.

The Minister said that there has been no complete amnesty in Nicaragua. The plan does not call for complete amnesty. For instance, the plan does not call for the release of national guardsmen who were prosecuted for crimes committed before the Sandinista revolution. This question of imbalance in the analysis by the Minister is certainly something that I hope the committee could address.

We must be careful in regard to the peace plan. The Arias peace plan is the actual written peace plan. There is also the peace plan as it is perceived by the world through the influence of the United States and the international press. That plan, which does not bear any strict relationship to the actual text, is the one which the United States is interested in fulfilling in Central America. That unofficial plan requires compliance essentially from Nicaragua alone. While this does not mean there will be no benefits to other countries, a double standard applies in this unofficial plan. Nicaragua will have to live up to the letter, the spirit, and the additional interpretation put on it by the United States in this case.

I hope the Canadian Government and this committee can be useful in separating those two plans, between the actual collective judgment of the five central American nations with respect to what was required for peace and that which will come from the White House and the Pentagon about what Nicaragua must do in order for the U.S. to cease the funding of the Contras. That is what is so crucial in the first place, because Nicaragua will not be able to live up to the peace plan as it wishes so long as it is mobilized. No one can expect it to do so. Canada would not be able to live up to those kinds of commitments if we were under attack from an army on a daily basis. We had the War Measures Act over our heads when all that we had was a supposed apprehended insurrection.

We must attempt to avoid the double standard with respect to Nicaragua. I propose that the Government should make a clear statement about the crucial nature of the U.S. role in the funding of the Contras and the need for it to stop. While the Minister's statement today represents progress, such a clear statement by the Government would represent a much greater step forward. I hope the committee will be able to give good advice to the Government, and I look forward to our participation in that committee.

REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA, 1985 ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-94, an Act to bring into force the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867, AND RELATED ACTS

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-274, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867, to amend the Criminal Code and to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act (contempt).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, the Ontario Court of Appeal recently acquitted lawyer Harry Kopyto on the offence of scandalizing the court, and a majority of the court found the offence to be in breach of the guarantee of freedom of speech in the Charter of Rights.

The purpose of this Bill is to abolish this archaic offence of scandalizing the court, in addition to conferring upon the Houses of Parliament the right to impose a fine in cases of contempt of Parliament.

The time for abolition of this archaic and repressive offence of scandalizing the court is long overdue. Certainly I want to congratulate Harry Kopyto on having spearheaded this important initiative.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-275, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code (postal services).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Jepson: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to declare the Post Office an essential service, taking away the right to strike of all postal workers and subjecting both the corporation and the postal workers to binding arbitration.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO WHITE PAPER ON TAX REFORM

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition properly certified which has been signed by residents of the City of Thunder Bay, resident both in my riding of Thunder Bay—Nipigon and in my colleague's riding of Thunder Bay—Atikokan. These persons are protesting the federal Government's White Paper which proposes changes in the taxation structure of Canada. They protest the fact that these proposals do not change an already unfair tax structure which is experienced by average Canadian families but will give wealthy Canadians earning over $100,000 a year, who are presently not paying their fair share, a tax cut.

These proposals will also permit 60,000 profitable corporations to pay no income tax at all and threaten a levy on food and other essential items. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these tax changes, to reject the tax on food and to restore full indexation to the personal tax system.

The House resumed from Monday, November 30, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-54, an Act to amend the Criminal Code and other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Robinson (p. 11291).

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to enter into the debate on Bill C-54 and the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) representing the New Democratic Party. The amendment reads, among other things, that the House decline to give second reading to Bill C-54. This would, as you can appreciate, Mr. Speaker, have the effect of killing the Bill on pornography which is something I believe very important to the people of Canada. It is an amendment which I feel is unfortunate and I would hope the New Democratic Party would consider withdrawing it.

I have had a continuing interest in Bill C-54. I congratulate the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) for bringing forward the Bill. I believe it is a mark of this Government's commitment to fighting pornography that this Bill has been brought forward. I think it will help in the fight against pornography in a very effective manner. I am pleased that the Parliament of Canada is finally debating an amendment to the Criminal Code which, I might say, is badly needed. The present wording in the Criminal Code, I would suggest, is so vague as to be, for the most part, unenforceable. There is no definition presently of pornography, and I think it is unfortunate.

I congratulate the Government for bringing this Bill forward because one of the things which has motivated me into entering public life is a well-founded belief on my part that too often the Parliament of Canada has passed the buck on important subjects such as this. I think pornography is just one example. We all know what a difficult problem there was with street soliciting. For years, throughout the early 1980s, the Government said again and again to different groups and delegations which came to Ottawa how concerned it was about this subject, and we hear today from the opposition Parties how concerned they are about pornography. In the case of street soliciting, it was this Government which acted because it was properly within the jurisdiction of this Chamber, just as is the subject of pornography. It is not acceptable, I would suggest, that we leave it to city councils, liquor control board regulations or others to do the work which should properly be done by the Canadian Parliament.

Let me say that I do not believe we should leave it up to the courts either to decide what is pornographic. It is a difficult topic, one about which people have strong opinions. I believe it is important that this Chamber tackle the subject and try to define it as best we can in an effort to control it. All of us have seen the proliferation of pornography. It is a gigantic industry. There seems to be no shortage of individuals who would push to the limit and beyond society's tolerance for pornography. I might add that those individuals always seem to be well financed and well organized. For those people who feel strongly about trying to control this, I think it is one fact we should always keep in mind.

When we talk about pornography, I think we should be very clear what we are talking about. We are talking about the exploitation of human beings, and very often the targets of pornography are women and children. I suppose one of the saddest things about the whole pornography industry is that very often it is the people who are least able to protect themselves who are the victims. These are the people, I would suggest, who are the most deserving of the protection of this Parliament and any protection Bill C-54 would afford them.

Bill C-54 attempts to settle a definition of pornography. It sets out as well the defences. I have read in the paper and have received letters by various lobbying groups indicating concerns. I suggest to them that the defences based on artistic, educational, medical or scientific purposes are well set out. I would suggest to them that their fears are unwarranted. I might say that the fears were unwarranted in the street soliciting Bill as well. I remember groups and members of other political Parties saying that we should not pass Bill C-49 because with just a wave of the hand, the next thing we know we could be charged with participating in prostitution and find ourselves in jail. The same arguments are made here and they are all predicated on the same thing. They are all predicated on the belief that our law enforcement authorities will act in an outrageous and irresponsible manner. I do not accept that. I did not accept it with respect to Bill C-49, the street soliciting

Bill, and I do not accept it with respect to Bill C-54, the Bill to control pornography.

It has been suggested as well that there are very few people who want this Bill. With that I disagree. I indicated a couple of days ago in the House that a week does not go by but someone in my constituency of Niagara Falls writes to me about this problem. Not a week goes by that someone does not indicate to me that they do support Bill C-54. They support the attempt to try to control pornography which, I believe, exploits human beings.

• (1630)

When I explain to individuals the attempt that we have made to define pornography, most of them, even those who have some concerns about this Bill, can accept the definition of pornography, among other things, as:

> —a degrading act in a sexual context, including an act by which one person treats that person or any other person as an animal or object, engages in an act of bondage, penetrates with an object the vagina or anus of that person or any other person or defecates, urinates or ejaculates onto another person—

It continues, Mr. Speaker. I can live with that definition of pornography as can the people who have called me or written to me. I have to agree that this is not a perfect definition of pornography. However, at the same time, I know of nothing on this earth which is perfect. However, those who do not like this definition should come before the committee to tell us how to make it better.

Some of my colleagues will remember the occasion when a very respected individual appeared before the committee and told us that he did not like the wording of a particular piece of legislation, that it contravened his idea of civil liberties. I challenged him to tell the committee what it should say in order that the committee could study it and decide whether it was better wording. He laughed and said that his job is to look at the Government's wording and tell us whether it meets his standards, not to tell us what the wording should be.

With all due respect, that is not good enough. Individuals who say they are concerned about pornography and want to do something about it should give us a definition which the legislative committee can study in an attempt to improve the legislation.

I believe that most people think this is a pretty good definition of pornography. Most people think the defences are reasonable. However, I am not saying that it cannot be improved, and I would certainly hope to do that.

Some very unfortunate characterizations have been made of Canadians who do support this. I have followed the debate and read some of the articles of journalists and lobbying groups. They seem to characterize people who support Bill C-54 as prudish and narrow-minded individuals who would trample on the civil liberties of others. There is no end to the criticisms which are directed against those individuals. That is unfortunate and it is wrong.

I have spoken with many individuals who feel very strongly about this. They see the proliferation of pornography in 1987 and do not like the portrayal of sexual acts on television. Without criticizing anyone else, I believe that the individuals with whom I have met who support this, some of whom I named in the House a couple of days ago, are very fine Canadians. They are the kinds of individuals upon whom Canada can count and has counted in the past. They are concerned about the atmosphere in which they are raising their children. They are concerned about instilling in them the proper values. These people are still the backbone of this country. They are not part of a lobbying group and no one is paying their way to Ottawa. They rely upon their Members of Parliament to bring forward their very legitimate concerns.

I have the same concerns. I take my seven-year old into the local candy store and see garbage on the shelves. What has happened in Canadian society is ironic. Twenty-five years ago when I was a child in Niagara Falls I remember hearing discussions about the bad effects of comic books. I am sure that some Members in this Chamber will remember that. I remember articles in the Reader's Digest and the local newspaper on the effect that comic books were having on children. It was said that they were not learning the best version of the English language, that the vocabulary in comic books was simplistic. I believe that parents today would be happy to see comic books in the corner milk store if they could get the garbage out.

The New Democratic Party has moved an amendment which would kill this Bill and further delay any attempt by Parliament to come to grips with this problem. That is unfortunate and I hope they will withdraw the motion. I hope that in the end we can all join together to do what we can by passing this legislation to end the exploitation of children and women. Let us get this legislation into committee and see if we can make any improvements.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening with interest to the comments of the Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson). He suggested that alternative definitions to the one proposed in the Bill with which we are dealing critically this afternoon are difficult to get. He told us about one person who had come before the committee to criticize these proposals who had been challenged to propose an alternative and had declined to do so suggesting that he was there as a critic, not as a drafter of legislation. That does have some legitimacy. It is the law officers of the Government to whom we look for the drafting of legislation.

The Member has been calling on the New Democratic caucus to withdraw this motion and allow the Bill to go forward. Does he mean to suggest that there are no alternatives? Does he mean to suggest that there are not ways of defining pornography different from the ones the Government has put forward which are on the public record and were available to the law officers of the Government, to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and his officials when they prepared this Bill, and to the previous Minister when they worked on the predecessor Bill which set us on this unfortunate course?

Surely as a result of the work of Mr. Fraser and his committee and others, and even in the very words of the amendment put forward by my friend, the Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), there are alternative formulations which could be used. To suggest that we are left with no alternative except to accept the Government's wording is not what the Hon. Member really wants to put forward in the House this afternoon.

• (1640)

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I would not for a moment suggest that I underestimate the difficulty some individuals might have in composing definitions, whether it relates to pornography, sexual exploitation of children, prostitution, street soliciting, or any of the difficult things.

It is sometimes frustrating to me that, instead of working together to come up with better definitions, there are many people in society who sit back and say, "I am concerned about these subjects, and I don't like what you are doing", period. All I am suggesting, as I suggested in the committee, is that I want them to go further. I say that out of a sincere attempt to get help on some of those things, so that it is not only, "We don't like what the Government is doing here". I want to get as much as possible from witnesses who appear before the standing committee on justice, or the legislative committee.

With respect to the motion of the NDP which I have before me, it states in Hansard of November 30, 1987, "This House declines to give second reading to Bill C-54 . . . " If the House declines to give second reading to Bill C-54, we are back to square one.

All I have suggested to Hon. Members is that I believe that the definition of pornography—in fact, I am somewhat uncomfortable reading it. One of the Hon. Members stated that this is on television in the afternoon and perhaps thousands of children are watching and hearing the description of some of these acts. I think it is fairly comprehensive, but at the legislative committee stage I think we should be open to improving what we have here.

I am the first to admit that it is not perfect. I think most Canadians will say that we are finally making the attempt at doing something after many years. We have all known for years that the present definition of pornography is no good, that it is difficult to enforce, that it is arbitrary, and it varies from region to region. Most Canadians appreciate the fact that we have brought it forward. Many would appreciate the opportunity to appear before a legislative committee. I can tell the Hon. Member that this will not happen if we accept what members of the NDP are saying. They are saying to go back to the drawing board. We have heard this on all those subjects. On every piece of legislation we have brought forward in the justice area they have said, "Give it the six month hoist. We will discuss it some other time. It is brought in too quickly; it is too vague, too narrow, too restrictive. We do not like it".

All I say to Members is, let us work together. This is a difficult subject. Let us get it into the legislative committee and consider the amendments from the New Democratic Party, the Liberal Party, or from members of my own Party. I know the Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Jepson) has been a crusader in the area against pornography, and I commend him for that. He also may have amendments to help us zero in on those individuals who want to exploit other people in society. I for one would look forward to what he has to offer. I am suggesting that we consider all the amendments. Let us get it into committee, which is what I think Canadians want us to do.

Mr. Jepson: Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson) who likewise has worked diligently on this very important subject and is doing everything he can to protect those values, particularly of the family, and to protect the real victims of pornography.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member if he agrees with the Opposition, in particular the NDP, that this takes us back to mid-Victorian times, bearing in mind that we are moving forward in this day and age of science and technology. Does the Hon. Member agree that in matters of morality and dealing with issues such as pornography it takes us back to what they would call the days of Pat Boone and white bucks, or mid-Victorian days?

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): I do not think this is regressive. There are people in 1987 who are uncomfortable watching sexual acts on television, or seeing them on magazine racks staring at them. I believe that is important, and I am sensitive to it. A belief that women and children should not be exploited through pornography is timeless, and not something that is out of date. Perhaps it is a mark of how far our society has gone that there is a recognition of this terrible problem.

People are becoming rich from the exploitation of those individuals who are least able to protect themselves. This is the main thrust of this Bill. It is an attempt to codify in the Criminal Code protection for those individuals. It is something I feel very strongly about, and it has nothing to do with whether it is 1965, 1976, or 1987. It would be my hope that these values have always been cherished by Canadians, and certainly ones I hope we always will cherish, and that they are very much part of the fabric of Canada.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief comment and question for the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member has suggested that there would not be any abuse of this legislation, and that we should trust the law enforcement authorities.

I would remind the Hon. Member of the recent situation in Calgary where a group of women concerned about the proliferation of pornography in Canada put together a slide show illustrating some of their concerns. They were charged under the provisions of the obscenity provisions of the Criminal Code. His suggestion that there will not be those types of abuses is utterly without foundation.

The Hon. Member is a lawyer and a respected member of the justice committee. I wish to ask him how he can defend the provision in the legislation which imposes a reverse onus on artists to prove the merit of their work. It is not the artistic purpose, but actually imposes a burden on them to prove the merit of their work. The Canadian Bar Association has urged that the onus be placed on the Crown in this important area. Why is it that the Hon. Member supports a provision that imposes an onus on artists, who are already some of the poorest members of our society, to prove the merit of their work before the courts?

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I have heard the arguments of the Hon. Member for Burnaby both here and in committee that, because there may be abuse by the police, or there is an example of abuse, a documented case, therefore we do not act. I do not buy that. I do not buy it with respect to the street soliciting Bill. The Hon. Member will remember that he was one of the ones with all types of warnings to us about how this would be abused by the police—

Mr. Robinson: It has been. How many customers have been charged?

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): No, it has not been. It has been enforced responsibly. I can speak from experience in Niagara Falls. The Hon. Member asks how many customers have been charged. The last time I checked, 40 per cent of the arrests in the City of Niagara Falls were of the customers.

Mr. Robinson: Not in Vancouver.

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Regarding the Hon. Member's comment with respect to artists, let me just ask, what type of position are the artists in right now? They do not know what pornography is, because it is not defined. I have had individuals ask me to tell them what is pornography, and they will not put it in their story. This is what the Bill does. Most people would welcome it. Now they know. They also know that if they contravene that, there are certain defences set out. The present situation is intolerable, because it is anybody's guess what is pornography. This is a tremendous improvement.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. On debate, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to this amendment because I think it is important that it be supported. This subject is not new to me, because I have certainly been very much involved in the whole process of what we could do. As a feminist, I abhor the type of pornography available to our children, our young people, and adults in society. It seems to me that the Bill is not attacking any of those areas. My major concern is that after the Bill is passed it will still be possible to demonstrate violence against women.

• (1650)

If we are talking about amendments, we are talking about a major rewrite of the Bill. We are also talking about the ability to bring forward legislation which indicates that we will not accept the fact that children and women can be looked at in a demeaning way. If we want to deal with that problem, we cannot do it with this legislation.

I am saddened to think that, as a result of the Bill before us, artists will have to defend themselves before the courts. I would like to think that society has progressed to the stage today where we understand, welcome, and love the whole human body and the sexuality of the human body, which can be something very beautiful and wonderful.

It seems to me that the Bill is attacking the beauty, not really attacking the demeaning parts of the multimillion dollar pornography industry. For a pornography Bill to be a positive one, it must look at what happens in society and how we feel about violence. Do we really think that it is okay to watch people being cut up or blown up? Is it okay for that to become a constant diet for our children and our teenagers? Those areas would not be touched if this Bill were passed.

Really it was women who got together and started to raise the consciousness level of society and to do something about it. They were not saying, "Set up a censor board for librarians". They were not saying, "Stifle and stop creative artists". They were not saying that they did not appreciate and love what they were all about, what the whole human being was all about. What they were saying is that they object to the kinds of things that were happening in society with violence being portrayed every day on our television screens, movies, and videos.

Many Members of the House do not seem to be aware of the constant diet of violence and real degradation of the human being to which people in society are subjected on a daily basis. We really want a Bill which will address that area.

I have heard much discussion about the fact that the essence of the Bill has not been adequately defined. Why is the Government bringing forward a Bill when the essence of it has not been defined? If the Bill has been brought forward only to say that it will control, we must ask what it will control. Will it control the freedom of expression in society? Will it stifle people who want to address—and I am talking particularly about librarians—the creativity of authors, of visual artists, and of musicians? We should be encouraging these kinds of things. If this Bill goes forward, it will stifle much of that and it will say to our artists, teachers, and librarians, "Be careful; you might be breaking the law". Surely that is not the kind of society we are trying to build.

Earlier the Hon. Member referred to the women in Calgary who got together and tried to show the effects of pornography on society—how it demeans women, human beings, and the human family. They were arrested. They were told that they were not allowed to do that. We will never be able to raise the level of consciousness and have people do positive things in terms of what community values are all about if this kind of legislation goes through.

Another concern is the fact that we have been told that amendments can be made to the Bill before us and that those amendments will help us work together. Why is the Bill in front of us? It is not a new issue. It has certainly been before the public for at least five years or six years. Why did the Government not consult and bring forward a Bill earlier? I have no confidence in the ability to amend and get something positive that goes in a direction we would like to see it go. I certainly do not think that potential is there. My experience has been that when we bring forward amendments which we think go in a positive direction, very often the majority on the committee votes them down. If they had been sincere about having a positive Bill, I think consultation would have taken place ahead of time. If there had been broad consultation, we would not be getting the kinds of letters we are getting from a variety of communities. I am talking now about teachers, librarians, visual artists, actors, and musicians. We are also hearing from feminist groups that wanted to have some kind of control over the demeaning material which is out there. Instead, what they got was a Bill which does not mean anything. It does not mean anything as far as the priorities which they put forward are concerned.

I would also like to say how dangerous a Bill like this one can be. If we go back to mid-Victorian times, many things happened which were very serious. This kind of legislation puts forward in our community a value sense that we must be frightened about being total human beings. Actually, it says to youngsters that human sexuality is negative, is something they must be afraid of, is something that they do not talk about, and is something that they hide. Lo and behold, the law could tell teachers that the material they are looking at in trying to teach could be confiscated. Surely to goodness, in 1987, we are looking at a more positive attitude about what we are all about.

There was some discussion earlier this afternoon about violence in Central America. It seems to me that we can look around the world and ask ourselves how we feel about sexuality in human beings. How do we feel about innocent human beings who are being destroyed through no fault of their own? Yet the majority of the House appears to be willing to pass a Bill which says to people, "We will control what you look at, even if it is in an avenue of education, creativity, or beauty". That is what the Government is doing with this Bill. It does nothing to prevent the horrible violence which is out there now, violence which shows women in chains, being tortured, and put in trunks. That is the reality of the pornography out there. It is not acceptable. Certainly it is what women's groups and many other people in the country want to stop, and it will not happen with this Bill.

We are talking about much more than some gentle amendments. We are talking about a redraft of the Bill if we really want to get to the heart of the situation, and the heart of the situation is really important.

I have worked with groups in this municipality and in other municipalities across the country. Certainly we want to stop violence against men, women, and children. We do not want people to be used as commodities. We want people to be seen as the creative, beautiful beings they are. These kinds of things are not being addressed in the Bill.

If we returned to the drafting-board and did some broad consultation, I think the people who drafted the Bill and the Government would find inspiration from the groups who have really looked at the issue. I do not think the issue has been addressed in the Bill before us. Certainly more and more people recognize that we are not looking at censorship. We want to see something that will stop violent material.

This Bill addresses itself much more to censorship. We know that the cut-backs in the Canada Council have been detrimental to Canada's art community. More and more we are asking the same artists who appear before the courts to prove that they are innocent. They are not innocent until they are proven innocent, according to the draft of this Bill. The onus is on them to defend themselves and their work. We know how artists struggle. We recognize how difficult things are for them. I know you yourself, Mr. Speaker, are very conscious of the artistic communities struggle. Your partner has demonstrated wonderful art. It would be very negative for her to be seen—and I am not suggesting that her art would be seen as pornographic—having to come before a judge to defend her art. This does not make any sense at all. The public outcry has been one of looking at rational distribution of material and addressing ourselves to what is unacceptable to everyone.

Another thing that I believe has not been addressed in this Bill is to look at what happens to the victims of sexual assault. There is no suggestion that the Government wants to address itself to positive programs to help people have a sense of their own dignity again. The Government, with a sledge-hammer, is saying "We will stop everything that we think is not very good". Part and parcel of a lot of that concerns the human body. The human body is something in which we should find beauty. It is part of our creation and it is something to celebrate and enjoy. How can we have a society that has that kind of principle and value system if we attack people attempting to express beauty? We should be attacking those who are destroying the elements of our society those who go after children, who demean women with violence and use them as commodities. The Bill does not address itself to that. If the Government is sincere about wanting to reflect what the public is asking for, the Government should withdraw the Bill. It should consult with those who have done a lot of research. Many voluntary and professional hours have gone into this issue.

Last weekend I was in Edmonton at the NAC meeting. Many women's groups have looked at the issue and at this Bill. They unanimously asked that the Bill be withdrawn. They said the very concerns they have had are not the concerns to which this Bill addresses itself. We want a Bill, they said, that says women should not be treated as commodities, nor should they be put in demeaning circumstances. Children should not be used in pornographic situations and we should outlaw bestiality. We think legislation can be drawn to stop all of that. We do not want restrictions on our artists, teachers and librarians thus stopping the beauty of our own creation. That is not what we are attempting to do, at least I hope that is not what the Government has in mind, but it appears that is what is coming through in this legislation.

I urge the House to accept the amendment in good will and recognize that there is another way of being able to address this subject. Canadians want to see some strong legislation with a real good bite to it which addresses people's priorities. I ask the Government not to attack, for political expediency, a whole lot of values that are precious to us. People will be frightened to express themselves. People have asked whether there are some works of so-called art that are not acceptable. I do not think we are afraid to say that at all. There are many kinds of visual depictions that are totally unacceptable. Things that show violence against children, women and men is pornographic. People become numb if they see these things every day, and pornography becomes acceptable, another aspect not addressed in the Bill.

More and more women's groups are asking us to look seriously at the legislation we are bringing in. Women's groups have never asked us to stifle creativity or beauty. They have asked us to stop some of the depicted violence and the demeaning situations into which people are put. Those are the things that people want to see cease completely.

If we look at some of the recommendations and read what some of the groups have objected to about this Bill, there is a sincerity in wanting to work with the Government to be able to bring in positive legislation. That is not possible at this point. We need to redraft this Bill. I do not understand how a Bill like this came into the House of Commons for debate. I have heard members of the Government saying they wanted to bring in control, but they have allowed a Bill which does not control the kind of violence people have been talking about. No longer is it acceptable for women to be seen as objects that one can do with what one wants in circumstances that are so despicable that it is nauseating to think about it. These depictions are being sold by a multi-million dollar industry. That does not mean we are getting at artists, librarians, teachers and those types of people.

I appreciate the fact that the Government says it wants to address this particular subject but I ask the Government to withdraw the Bill, quickly consult with people and bring back a well drafted Bill. If that happens, we can give it support. If not, we will be going to committee and we will have a long hassle about amendments which probably will not get passed. Maybe it is political expediency for the Government to say it brought a Bill forward, but Bill C-54 is totally inoperable. Perhaps the Government wants to say that Liberals and New Democrats would not let it pass, but that is not true. We are looking for something operable and something that addresses itself to the values of our community and what we want.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member's comments. I understand and accept her sincerity. I have spoken to many women across this country and many in my own community, including women's groups, who feel very deeply about this issue. I agree with the Hon. Member when she points out that women are interested in seeing some legislation which controls the exploitation of women and children and which controls the depiction of violence against women and children. There is no question about that in my mind as there appears to be no question in the Hon. Member's mind.

However, what concerns me is the fact that the amendment before the House today, in support of which the Hon. Member spoke, does not seek to change the Bill to accommodate the concerns of the Hon. Member and the concerns of the women for whom she speaks but is rather to decline to give second reading to the Bill and simply kill the Bill all together. If she truly believes what she has said, surely she has an obligation to the House, to the women for whom she speaks and to the people of Canada to bring forth a substantive amendment at this time, an amendment which incorporates her beliefs and the beliefs of the women of Canada.

Ms. Dewar: Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring forward such a comprehensive amendment in consultation with the women's groups across Canada. However, procedurally I cannot do so at second reading. If I could and if the Government would accept it, I would then feel that there would be some honesty in addressing the problem through the Bill.

Over the years, I have not always taken the populist stand on prostitution. We must realize that prostitutes too are very much victims of society. It is part and parcel of the Government's unwillingness to address the heart of the situation. The heart of the situation is that women do not have dignity and are not total human beings along with the rest of society.

We are dealing with a Bill designed to deal with pornography but I would suggest that there is a great deal of pornography directed at violence in men, showing violence in men as an heroic virtue. Surely that is not the way we want to see society evolve.

Being regressive and simply stifling any kind of creative expression does not really attack the value system in which multimillion-dollar industries are allowed to destroy the dignity of women and children. The women's groups have been asking for a Bill that really deals with the people who make the millions, not with the small artists who have to defend themselves. That does not make any sense at all and I do not think it is what Canadians are looking for.

[Translation]

Mr. Grisé: I have a question for the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mrs. Dewar), and I also have a few comments, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) is supporting the amendment put by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) but at the same time, we in this House are well aware of the fact that her predecessor, the former Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, worked toward and supported very strongly parliamentary reform. Parliamentary reform is designed to deal with the kind of Bill that is before us today without scrapping it like the Hon. Member for Burnaby has suggested we do. Parliamentary reform would bring such Bills to committee, and that is what the former Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain worked so hard at achieving just before he left the House.

We now hear that the present Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain is supporting the motion of her colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby, which would scrap the Bill and go back to square one.

Mr. Speaker, at the same time she says we must protect people against sexual violence, against the violence involved in child pornography, but that is exactly what the Bill does. It clearly defines the pornographic matter that is prohibited: any visual matter that shows children or young persons engaging in sexual activity, extreme violence in a sexual context, sexually violent conduct, degrading acts in a sexual context, bestiality, incest or necrophilia, and certain specific types of sexual conduct.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mrs. Dewar) also pointed out that artists should be defended on the grounds that their work is creative. Are we going to defend a thief who robs a bank on the grounds of creativity, because he found a new way of robbing a bank that is unknown to the police? Is that an excuse? Is that a defence? Then it will no longer be a crime. Mr. Speaker, we defend artists and we protect society. I have nothing against defending artists. It makes sense when we are within the law. But after all, when new legislation is passed, for instance when the various provincial governments decided to set speed limits and make seat belts compulsory, weren't these restrictions as well? And didn't Canadians learn to live with them?

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question. Would the Hon. Member go along with what was said by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. Mcdonald) yesterday, who commented she was willing to bring the Bill before a legislative committee and would probably propose amendments? Does she go along with the proposal made by her colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood?

[English]

Ms. Dewar: Mr. Speaker, there was a lot in that question. As an outsider at the time it was being discussed, I was quite excited about parliamentary reform. I thought that the work of the committee would give all Members of Parliament the ability to address things like this. Since I have been here, however, we dealt with an immigration Bill through very quick hearings at which no amendments were accepted and we are now having hearings on free trade when we have not even seen the final document. It is hard not to be cynical when talking about parliamentary reform.

We must still work toward parliamentary reform and we must try to make the committees as functional as possible. The Hon. Member has criticized the Opposition for saying that we do not think that comprehensive and substantive amendments could be brought forward, but we are saying that with some experience. There has been a certain amount of arrogance demonstrated and I think that is counter to what parliamentary reform was all about. Certainly Members who supported parliamentary reform supported it in good faith.

I said that I thought the most expedient way to get a Bill before the House to really address the heart of the subject would be to withdraw this Bill and bring forward another one that had been properly drafted. If this Bill goes to committee, I would be very interested in seeing how many amendments will be accepted by the majority of the committee. I am not very hopeful that very many will.

I wonder if there is a hidden agenda here which would allow this Bill to die. If government Members really wanted to bring forward a Bill that addressed the problem, they would withdraw this one and redraft it in consultation with many people across the country to address the problems that exist. That is why I support the amendment put by my colleague. I think it is the quickest way to get legislation that will deal sincerely with the kinds of things we think are unacceptable in Canadian society and amend the Criminal Code to reflect that.

• (1720)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Resuming debate.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I will begin by begging your indulgence for a second time in a matter of hours and ask you to once again lend an ear to my comments on a crucial matter before the House. I think the Chair will recognize that the debate this afternoon is of such importance that it demands the honest participation of all Members.

I have been listening to the debate quite carefully and there is a phrase which recurs in the words of Conservative Members spoken in defence of the Bill. They say: "it is not perfect but we had to do something". That will go down in history along with other great statements such as: "I am only following orders". Or: "I had no choice" and others.

An Hon. Member: That was a good one!

Mr. Redway: All from the Liberals.

Mr. Axworthy: "Sacred trust" is another one, perhaps the most abused phrase.

This Bill is far from being perfect. In fact, it is quite imperfect and that is not a proper defence for government Members to offer. They had in front of them a better solution but they rejected it. That is partly why there is a degree of skepticism on the part of members of the Opposition about whether the Government would have an open mind to amendments. Government Members had in front of them the report of the Fraser Commission and a reasoned, fairly-well argued set of proposals to deal with the problem.

The previous Government and Members of the previous Parliament recognized that the old obscenity standards did not apply. They also recognized that it was important to get a fairly broad reading of individual points of view. That was the reason for the royal commission. The Fraser Commission set out three different tiers of pornographic description which I believe established a reasonable framework for argument. Somewhere along the way those definitions were twisted, distorted, shrunken, reduced and manipulated to the point that they no longer bear any resemblance to the proposals in this Bill.

Look at the Fraser definition of the third tier. It would penalize a public display of sexually explicit erotica where there is no warning or where it is made accessible to persons under 18. Now look at the definition in this Bill. It will attack simple pornographic material showing non-violent sexual acts and that would be punishable by up to two years of imprisonment. The gap between what was originally proposed and what we have in this Bill is the gap between night and day.

Someone in the Government, presumably the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and the Cabinet, made a conscious choice to reject those proposals and it is therefore the height of sophistry to argue that if we only have second reading we can introduce amendments that would more nearly accommodate the proposals in the Fraser Commission. Who are you trying to fool?

As the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) just reminded the House, we have had many examples of the Government, wearing steel-studded boots, tromping on any attempt to move amendments. The immigration Bills are the prime example. The Canadian Bar Association, Amnesty International, the UN High Commission for Refugees all said the Bill contravened treaties, and they suggested amendments. Did the Government listen and respond? Of course not. It just ramrodded the Bill through because it was trying to appeal to a certain constituency with which it thought it could gain some political favour. Why should this Bill be different? Why should the public that we represent assume that somehow all of a sudden there will be a change of mind when we have had so many examples of the opposite? We get legislation put before us with a political spin to it, devised in the curious mind of Dalton Camp or whoever is advising the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and that is the way it is going to be.

When I use the immigration Bills as examples, I do not do so capriciously. Over the last year we have seen legislative initiatives by the Government which are quite clearly designed to suppress a broader, more tolerant, more liberalized society.

What we are really arguing about is the principle of the Bill. That is, will the measures introduced, presumably to combat the serious problem of pornography, in fact end up being a form of suppression? It is quite curious that a Government which daily applauds the free market as the best way to allocate the economic pie seems to be deathly afraid of the free market of ideas and expression. That is a very curious contradiction.

I was in western Canada last week with the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General. In Saskatchewan a United Church minister reminded the Conservative members of the committee about how far their Government has gone toward getting rid of the traditional values of conservatism in this country. I think those values have honestly and legitimately been on the side of broadening individual liberties, yet they have been traded in for some kind of theology, perhaps borrowed from our neighbour to the south, which believes the way to appeal to conservatism is through this kind of repression.

You, Mr. Speaker, are a long-standing veteran of this House. Do you really believe that John Diefenbaker, a champion of civil liberties, would support legislation of this kind? He fought for a Bill of Rights, for individual rights and liberties. I think it is highly doubtful that he would support a Bill of this kind. We are hearing the sound of a strange melody, and I am sure it is a source of embarrassment to members on the government side who remember those traditions but who now find they are part of a Government going in the opposite direction.

What the Government is really saying is that the preoccupation and concern broadly shared in this society over extreme forms of pornography and their impact on human behaviour is such that the best way to deal with it is to suppress virtually all forms of expression dealing with human sexuality, human behaviour, and imposing heavy penalties for violators.

I listened carefully to the speech of the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson). He says he is a lawyer and a member of the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General. I take all that at face value. He referred to numerous letters written by people who said they are deeply concerned about pornographic material in drugstores and other places. I do not quarrel with his objection, but has he examined the means he is supporting to achieve his goal?

We live in a pluralistic society that is composed of wide ranging tastes, interests, views and opinions. There are almost as many as there are Canadian citizens. Has he asked himself whether this is a piece of legislation that will express the attitude of only one part of that population and will be denying or restricting opportunities for many other Canadians? Has he considered that what he is really suggesting is that one set of values will prevail, one point of view, and one set of opinions, and that the legislation that will apply to all Canadians is based on the views of only one element of our society? That is what is happening.

I recall an interesting editorial which described how this legislation embodies almost a fear of the human body, yet one can see on the beaches of Europe in the summer how nudity is a natural, functioning part of the society. If this legislation is passed, adult Canadians will have to view a photograph or piece of art in the privacy of their own bedroom for fear that some prude will report them to the police and they will be subject to two years punishment in jail.

Can Members of Parliament honestly accept that we should somehow put ourselves in such a potion? Are we going to tell Grade 12 students in Manitoba high schools that they can no longer read Ulysses? Are we going to put a librarian in danger of a severe jail penalty by making that book accessible on the library shelf?

The mind boggles when one considers how far this legislation could go. Suddenly, the courts and police forces will be required by law to exercise their judgment about simple, so-called pornographic materials which may simply be the depiction of a human body.

I am not arguing that all Canadians must look at nude art forms. It is their privilege not to do so and when it is displayed in an exhibitionist fashion, there should be some penalty as the Fraser Commission recommended. However, as artists suggest, it is suppressive to dictate that there be no opportunity to display such material and to put the onus of proof on the creators of this material.

I have talked to people in the artistic community who are being dismissed in this debate by Conservative Members of Parliament. They are being described as a lobby group. The only reason they are coming to Parliament Hill or writing letters is that they are afraid of what this legislation will do to their right to create.

Normally, artists are the last group to become involved in political matters. They have a certain indifference to the whole system, as perhaps they should. However, they are suddenly being faced with legislation that attacks them directly. Not only does it attack them, it attacks all of us.

There is another twist to this matter which I find somewhat of an anomaly. The House is also preoccupied with the proposals on free trade. Those proposals include opening the border to the distribution of all kinds of materials. As we saw today in the report from the U.S. trade representative, the United States will retain the right to retaliate if they believe their commercial interests are being affected.

How will we determine whether that mass of material that crosses our borders contravenes our pornographic laws? Will the Government hire thousands of customs officials to sift through every magazine, whether it is Esquire, Gentlemen's Quarterly, Good Housekeeping, Vogue, Elle or others because apparently there is an occasional picture of a model who is not wearing a dress or is in disarray.

The consequences of this legislation boggles the mind. Yet, according to the Member for Niagara Falls I suppose we will close our eyes, hold our nose, and plunge straight ahead. He is adopting the philosophy of the charge of the light brigade. It does not matter what is destroyed, as long as something is being done. That is a fallacious argument to be using on the floor of the House of Commons.

Surely legislation which deals with such a delicate and sensitive area requires the best of thought, the best drafting and the best intelligence that can be brought to bear on these matters.

Let me say that there are parts of the Bill with which I believe most Members agree. For instance, I suggest those portions of the Bill on child pornography would have unanimous support in the House. Why does the Government not consider separating the Bill and putting those elements of it, such as child pornography, into law as quickly as possible? Let us remove those other parts of the Bill that are in dispute and redefine them rather than commit itself to this kind of egregious suppression of rights in this country.

This question is not a matter of all or nothing. The purpose of Parliament is to point out the problems, and there are innumerable precedents to show how governments have demonstrated flexibility in their approach and shown some subtleness in their attitudes. Governments have split Bills in order to proceed with certain portions which can be supported and revised those portions with which there is disagreement.

I suggest to Conservative Members who remember the traditions of their Party and the legitimate battles they fought in the past to broaden the sense of an open society, to use their persuasion in their caucus to have the Government revise its stand on this Bill and split it between those parts on which they can agree and those parts which are so divisive that they must be redrafted.

I suggest that that would be a very important role this Parliament could play. The Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé) talked about parliamentary reform. That would be a demonstration of Parliament working as it should, and Parliament working at its finest.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) on a very lucid and clear statement of the position of the Liberal Party on this legislation. Since I did not have the opportunity to do so earlier, I must say that I was certainly most impressed and moved by his comment with respect to the Central American situation as well.

• (1740)

I want to ask the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry a question with respect to the recommendations of the Fraser Commission. The Hon. Member has spoken favourably about those recommendations. Is it in fact his position on the so-called third tier of the Fraser Commission report, in other words, material which depicts explicit sexuality which is in no way violent or degrading or involves child pornography, that that material should not be subject to criminal sanction, that rather there could be controls in terms of public display or availability to children? I thought I heard the Hon. Member suggest that that was his position. Certainly I think the Fraser Commission made a compelling argument to that effect. I wonder if the Hon. Member could clarify his remarks on that point?

Mr. Axworthy: First, I must declare that I have what one might call a conflict of interest in this because Mr. Fraser was a long time friend of mine in college and I was the best man at his wedding. Therefore, I may be unduly influenced by his wisdom, judgment and perspicacity when it comes to this matter. I would also say that I consider him to be one of Canada's finest jurors. As a former president of the Canadian Bar Association, I know he was able to call upon an incredible broad range of legal, social and public opinion for his report.

Our justice critic will speak more directly to the issue but from my point of view, I think the third tier recommendation of the Fraser Commission does make sense. It talks about the fact that there is a normal, healthy depiction of sex which is part of our society and which should be recognized, but where it is made accessible to minors, certain warnings should be provided or a screening should take place. I think that is a fair admonition. Therefore, I endorse the report. I felt it made sense at the time. What I was expressing in my speech is that I do not understand why members of the Government could not read it in the same way.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to hear support of the senior member of the Liberal caucus of the position for the Fraser Commission. I will certainly look forward with interest to the remarks of the justice critic for the Liberal Party on this issue because, of course, he has in the past, at least, differed on that particular issue but perhaps, with the passage of time, he has seen the light and will in fact support that recommendation. However, we will find out presumably during the course of the debate later today or when this debate continues.

The Hon. Member spoke about the impact of this legislation on the artistic community and the concerns raised by the Canada Council, the Writers Union of Canada, ACTRA, and by many others, about the devastating impact legislation of this nature could have. We are dealing with a community which is certainly, in many cases, not exactly the best paid community in Canadian society. Perhaps the Hon. Member might just elaborate in terms of another implication of this legislation which has been raised by a number of artists, that is, the whole element of self-censorship. One of the very dangerous possible implications of this legislation is that artists who simply cannot afford the risk of a court challenge, of having to go before a judge to defend the merit of their works, might be put in the position in which they just back off, in effect, and impose a form of self-censorship upon themselves. Would the Hon. Member care to elaborate on that particular point as well?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, let me say, first, that the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) cites a number of distinguished organizations. My contact in part has been constituency based. I represent in part of my riding an area called Osmond Village which is a part of the city where a large number of visual artists, particularly those working in pottery and sculpture, but also a number of writers and film makers in Winnipeg, live and work. It is only natural if one goes down there on a Saturday afternoon, or has lunch there, that one will talk to these people. The number of sidewalk pleadings I have received has been quite stunning to me. These are not the Pierre Bertons and Margaret Atwoods, these are young men and women who are starting out and creating a very active artistic community in our city.

They say that this will become a form of intimidation mainly because of the uncertainty. They will be faced with a whole set of question marks as to what they can do. They will not know. So, in a sense, the way in which the legislation is designed will create almost a more oppressive form of censorship than if it had been defined. There will be all kinds of speculation and hypotheses about what is or what is not acceptable. They might even be forced to go to court, putting the onus of proof on themselves to defend that their work has some artistic merit.

Many of these people cannot afford to do that. They do not receive the backing of huge organizations. They are not multinationals. They do not have the fees for fancy lawyers. They are poorly paid and are in this form of vocation because they love it. They do not make much money from it. Therefore, they are simply saying that they will not know what to do.

The self-censorship that will take place will be in part because of what is in the Bill and because, in part, what is unstated, and the fact they do not know whether they will meet a judges definition of artistic merit. So in a way, certainly in the early stages until there is jurisprudence built up within the next 40 or 50 years, we are creating a real stultification of artistic activity and merit in this country.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I was interested in one point in the comments of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Gary when he referred to the possibility that in a free trade setting, the opening of the borders to American products—which seems to be contemplated by the present Government whatever its consequences might be—as far as the export from the United States of literature of all sorts, could well, if the Government is bent on carrying this Bill through, run into the barrier of a new prudery in Canada. There are various consequences, but I wonder whether the Hon. Member, with his closer involvement with trade matters, might venture any thoughts about whether there is intent to this? At a time when American influence seems to be a marvellous thing—of course, there is always the hope that we will be similarly active across the border—is there any thought that out there in one quarter or another we still have to protect Canada against some of the things in the United States that are not so marvellous?

Is American freedom of the press going to be met firmly at the Canadian borders by a prohibition of the import of these items into Canada and their sale here? What are the consequences of all of this for Canadian trade relations with the United States?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry has exactly one minute to try to answer that.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, at least 60 seconds is better than the 30 seconds clip we are normally allowed.

Let me just say that if one was approaching this matter purely from the perspective of an international trade lawyer, one could say that the new laws on pornography are a form of non-tariff barrier that is being introduced into the Canadian system. Therefore, under the definition of the free trade agreement as it is being proposed, where the Americans have retained the right to retaliate based upon any cultural matter that affects its commercial interests, it might be subject to take retaliation on this matter. One can speculate for a long time about that.

I think what will probably happen is what we have seen often times. The Minister of Justice is doing something the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) has probably never looked at or vice versa. I would suggest to the Hon. Member that what could become part of the ongoing confusion is not only what the trade agreement would bring about but what this Bill would bring about, because it could end up being a matter of dispute. The Prime Minister talks about jobs, jobs, jobs. Perhaps what he had in mind, really, was the hiring of thousands of new customs inspectors at the border to keep this material out.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate.

• (1750)

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) for bringing forward Bill C-54 to deal with the problem of pornography. With this Bill and Bill C-15, which dealt with the sexual abuse of children and which this House passed in June, the Government completes the legislation which responds to the recommendations of the Fraser and Badgley Commissions. The Badgley Commission dealt with sexual offences against children and youths. The Fraser Commission dealt with pornography and prostitution. Together they made more than 100 recommendations. Many of those recommendations are being dealt with today. Others were dealt with in Bill C-15.

The Fraser Commission called for a more precise definition of what is to be considered pornographic. Both commissions called for higher penalties for the worst forms of pornography. This is precisely what Bill C-54 provides. Both commissions called for a special offence to deal with those who collect child pornography. Bill C-54 provides that the possession of this type of material will become an offence punishable on summary conviction.

I would like to spend a few minutes dealing with sexual degradation, which is such a large part of this issue. Bill C-54 sets out a clear definition of what constitutes a degrading act in a sexual context. Visual matter which shows such acts is prohibited as is written matter which advocates, promotes or incites degrading sexual acts. Surely that is something which all Members can accept and support. It is certainly what Canadians want and expect.

I will review the portrayals of which we are speaking. This legislation outlaws acts which show one person treating another as an animal or an object; bondage; defecation, urination or ejaculation onto another person; et cetera. The present law dealing with obscenity does not have a specific provision dealing with degrading acts.

Many concerned groups have called for this matter to be specifically dealt with in the law. This provision of the Bill deals with the fundamental matter of human dignity and respect. Men and women should not be depicted in ways which clearly degrade them and their worth.

My constituents are among those Canadians who are frustrated with the continual inability of our justice system and legal system to severely curtail the dissemination and communication of these acts to which they object so strongly. This Bill provides appropriate penalties for dealing with degrading pornography. A maximum penalty of five years is set out. This maximum penalty is also available for those who engage in degrading pornographic performances.

The Fraser Commission called for effective action to deal with pornography generally and degrading pornography in particular. Bill C-54 responds in an appropriate manner. It takes a tough stand against the proliferation of degrading material. I ask Hon. Members to support these initiatives which are demanded by Canadians.

Does this Bill deal with the issue of child pornography in a manner acceptable to all Canadians? Material which exploits children is among the most harmful pornographic material available. Studies have shown that child abusers use child pornography. No one in this House can disagree that this material must be eradicated to the fullest extent possible and that the criminal law must deal with it clearly and effectively. Both the Fraser and Badgley Commissions called for higher penalties for this worst form of pornography.

In fact, Bill C-54 goes further. It says that the possession of child pornography will be a summary conviction offence. Bill C-54 sets out a clear definition of child pornography. An offence of dealing in child pornography, that is, importing, making, publishing and distributing it, will be punishable with a maximum of 10 years imprisonment. The same maximum will apply to those who use or coerce a young person to participate in the production of child pornography and to those who use children in pornographic performances.

The message which this Bill sends to those who trade in the exploitation of children is very clear. Such conduct will not be tolerated by Canadians. Our children deserve to be protected from such exploitation and harm. All of us in this House have a duty to ensure that children are not exposed to sexual degradation and violence.

I want to spend a few moments discussing violent pornography. We would all agree that there is no place for the depiction of violent sexual conduct. In defining pornography Bill C-54 prohibits the depiction of a person causing, attempting to cause, or appearing to cause in a sexual context permanent or extended impairment of the body or bodily function. The dealing in such depictions is punishable by a maximum of 10 years imprisonment as is the advocacy or encouragement of such serious sexual violence in writing. As well, the depiction or advocacy of sexually violent conduct, conduct in which physical pain is inflicted or apparently inflicted in sexual conduct, is prohibited and punishable by a maximum of five years imprisonment.

Surely these are provisions which this House can support and which all Canadians want. Bill C-54 prohibits violent pornographic performances. Parallel penalties, a ten-year maximum for violence involving physical harm and a five-year maximum for other violence, are provided for those who engage in the production of such performances.

The Government has acted effectively to clarify the law and to send a signal to those who trade in sexual violence which degrades those who are portrayed and those who are exposed to it. Sexually violent material debases human dignity. This Bill deals with hard core sexually violent material head on.

The Fraser Commission which studied the proliferation of pornography in our society recommended firm action to deal with sexual violence. Bill C-54 provides such action. Gratuitous sexual violence has no place in Canada. We must, to the extent reasonably possible, act to eradicate it. I ask again for all Members to support the thrust of this legislation.

In response to the comments about the implications of free trade for the flow of this kind of information across our border, I would say that there has never been any suggestion that the criminal laws of our country will not apply as a result of a trade agreement with the United States. In fact, I do not think you would find a lawyer anywhere who would suggest that Canada's criminal laws would be somehow altered by the Canada-U.S. trade agreement any more than the importation of drugs, which is illegal in Canada, could be made legal if it were legalized in the United States. There is no change in Canada's sovereign right to pass criminal laws of general application. There will be no threat to the laws which we are discussing as a result of the Canada-U.S. trade agreement.

My constituents want an end to the proliferation of material which depicts sexual violence, child pornography and violence against women. My constituents do not see any constructive purpose served by the communication and dissemination of this material to Canadians. We believe that the greater public interest is served by passing legislation such as Bill C-54. We believe that the greater social interest demands that there be fairly strong measures taken to control the exploitation of women and children and that there be severe measures taken to curtail pornographic material by which no social purpose is served.

My constituents want something done about it. They are satisfied that this Bill takes a strong step toward dealing with this issue. It is not an easy issue to address, and it never has been. For the past two decades in every law school in the country there have been discussions of cases dealing with the definition of obscenity and the courts having to decide community standards. The law professors have had a field day pointing out the inconsistencies from one jurisdiction to another.

It is also a difficult issue in 1987, but we must deal with it as a Parliament. There is no easy way to deal with it. A decision has to be made. Canadians clearly want a balance in competing interests to take place and a judgment to be made. As reflected in this Bill, it is a judgment that I can support and that my constituents can support.

It is my view that the existing criminal law which prohibits the advertisement of abortion clinics and services should be retained and no measure should be adopted by Parliament to facilitate the advertising of abortion clinics. Abortion clinics are not legal. Abortion services are available under the law only in very rare circumstances. I will object, and I do object to any legislation which purports to withdraw that prohibition against advertising of abortion services.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, it has been an honour and a pleasure to speak on this important topic on behalf of my constituents.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the comments of the Hon. Member, particularly with respect to the views of his constituents. It is obvious from his comments that he has been listening to his constituents and has received a good deal of input from them on this particular issue.

The Bill before us is subject to an amendment put forward by the NDP. Apparently, from the comments that I have heard today that is supported by the Official Opposition, the Liberal Party. The effect of that amendment would be to wipe out this government initiative, this Bill to deal with pornography in all forms. It is not a question of whether some parts of it may be good or bad, the amendment is suggesting that the Bill should be wiped out altogether.

I have heard members of the Opposition actually indicate that they feel there should be some legislation in this area. It strikes me as passing strange, confusing, and shocking that the response from the Opposition would be to wipe it out and get rid of a Bill aimed at trying to stop the abuse, the depiction of violence, and the exploitation of women and children.

I wonder if the Hon. Member could tell us if his constituents believe that there should be legislation in this area, or whether they agree with the two opposition Parties, the Liberals and the NDP that we should wipe it out and forget about it altogether?

Mr. O'Neil: First, there is no question that my constituents support the initiative contained in this legislation. They want to stop these sexual matters and depictions of violence against other people in our society.

I will say that this is an issue that requires a judgment to be made. Sometimes political Parties and politicians do not want to make decisions and say that we must rule that this material will not be available, or that this material is pornographic. Sometimes in politics the easy decision cannot always be made and everybody kept happy. There has to be a balancing of the greater social interest against sometimes more specific interests.

That is what makes it difficult for the opposition Parties. They rise and state that they are against child pornography and violence against women. But when there is an opportunity to do something about it in this legislation, there are people who say that this is not a perfect Bill, that they will wait for the perfect Bill, but that they do support all this motherhood stuff against pornography and violence against women. They are trying to be on both sides of the issue. But a Government has to govern and make judgments. That is precisely what is done in this Bill.

Mr. Robinson: The Hon. Member has suggested that his constituents want tough action with respect to imagery which depicts violence, degradation, and involves children in pornography. Certainly, that approach is one that we support. Indeed, I take it from the remarks of the Hon. Member that he will be supporting the amendment which has been put forward by my Party at second reading which calls for precisely that.

I wish to ask the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil) whether it is his belief that his constituents are not only calling for legislation to deal with violence and child pornography, but whether he seriously believes that his constituents are calling for legislation that makes it totally illegal to depict images of two adults engaging in consensual love-making? Does he believe that that is the type of legislation that his constituents want?

Mr. O'Neil: My constituents are very clear in their message to me and to Parliament. They want something done about sexual degradation, violent pornography, and child pornography. They want the trade in material depicting sexual activity stopped. They do not want to make any more millionaires who are selling videos or magazines that should not be on the racks. They want that stopped.

The amendment that the Hon. Member speaks about is an attempt to jettison and torpedo this Bill and throw it out of the House. That would result in nothing being done. They are trying to be on both sides of the issue at the same time. We have to make a judgment. Everybody cannot be pleased. Canadians want something done about this material, that is clear. Two commissions have recommended that aggressive and strong action be taken in these matters. The Minister of Justice and the Government are doing precisely that. But the NDP, in their traditional way, are being consistently inconsistent. They cannot have it both ways. They cannot say that they are the great liberal parliamentarians in this country, everything goes, and at the same time say that they want to protect women and children against violence and violent depictions. Judgments have to be made. Until we are prepared to make judgments, a great disservice is done to the constituents we all represent.

Mr. Robinson: The Hon. Member totally ignored the question. I will repeat it, because perhaps it was not clear enough the first time.

• (1810)

Does the Hon. Member believe that constituents in the communities, towns, and villages of his riding of Cape Breton Highlands—Canso should be subject to criminal prosecution if they are involved in any way in the distribution of adult material which is non-violent and non-degrading, material that does not involve children in any way but solely involves the portrayal of adult consensual sexuality? Does he really believe that his constituents should be going to jail for being involved in the distribution of that kind of material? That is not what the Fraser Commission recommended. It said that that was nonsense.

The Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) said that we should read the definition. Well, I will read it.

> —any visual matter that shows
> (vi) masturbation or ejaculation not referred to in subparagraph (iv), or vaginal, anal or oral intercourse,—

If that kind of material is distributed, one goes to jail for two years. Who on earth is it in his constituency that is asking for that kind of legislation?

At the same time I might ask what clause of the Bill in fact allows for the advertising of what the Hon. Member referred to as "abortion clinics"? He has suggested—and I have received a number of letters from people—that there is something in the Bill which deals with that issue. I would ask him what specific provision in the Bill touches on that question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated, but I will allow a very short rebuttal in answer to that question.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the Hon. Member wants the commercial trade. He wants people to get rich from selling the depictions of sexual activity and violence against children and women. That is what he wants. He wants people to get rich by selling films about sexual activity. He wants entrepreneurs to exploit women and to sell these depictions to the public.

Clearly my constituents do not want that. This is what I have said repeatedly today. That is what the Bill says. This is what makes our Party different from his Party.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to join in the debate this afternoon on Bill C-54. I particularly appreciate the opportunity to refocus the debate after some of the confusion cast on the matter by the comments of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil) in the last few minutes.

Viewers who are joining us particularly late in the day and after a hard day's work and who are curious about what we are about in the House, may be interested in knowing that the amendment under debate has the following wording in its important section:

> That this House declines to give second reading to Bill C-54 because it fails to clearly define pornography as material that condones violence, coercion, abuse and degradation in its depiction of human beings or portrays or promotes the sexual exploitation of children; and also, because it does not distinguish pornography from material of an artistic, literary, educational or scientific nature in a fashion acceptable to the Canadian public, including artists.

The amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) attacks the Bill or criticizes the motion the Government has put forward because the legislation does not distinguish between erotica, in terms of consensual activity between adults, and pornography. It should be focused on violence, coercion, abuse, and degradation or that involving the portrayal or the promotion of sexual exploitation of children.

The legislation the Government has put forward has not done that. It is for that reason we are asking that the Bill not be given second reading and that the Government redraft the Bill properly for the third time. This is the second time the Government has made an attempt in this area, and it is not much better than the first attempt.

In order to clarify the potential threat which faces Canadians generally from the legislation the Government wants us to accept, I would like to take some words from a well recognized Canadian, an industry by himself in his writing capacities, author Pierre Berton. Writing last spring on this subject he had the following to say, and I break in at one point in his recognition of what would be the impact of Bill C-54 if it became law:

> Blue Velvet is now by definition pornographic, or will be as soon as the new law goes into effect. In the year of our Lord, 1987, we adults have been told that we cannot see a work that's been hailed as the breakthrough film of the year. Why? Because the plot hinges on a teenager watching a sexual act.
> Never mind Blue Velvet; we can't even see Blue Lagoon, which is now, by legal definition, a blue film in more ways than one. It shows teenagers having sex. That's pornography and no one has a hope in hell of defending it in court.
> I can hear people mumbling: "Oh, well, they won't go that far!" But they will; they always have. I can remember the day when they went that far with the century's two great classics, Ulysses and Lady Chatterly's Lover. It took years of expensive court actions before these seminal works were freed from the bondage imposed on them by men with Victorian minds.
> Now we're again back in the hands of the amateur censors: policemen, customs clerks, yes and librarians and teachers. What librarian will dare to stock Show Me, the pictorial sex education book for children? or The Joy of Sex, the pictorial sex education book for adults? The first is clearly pornographic and has no defence; to simply have it in your library can get you 10 years. The second might—and it's a big "might" get off on educational or artistic grounds, but only after an expensive trial; otherwise it's five years.
> The new laws fly in the face of common sense for they deny the sexuality of teenagers. We adults, at least, are flung a tiny bone: we are allowed something called "erotica", in the government's narrow definition of that term. We are going to be allowed to look at pictures of naked people as long as they don't touch themselves or each other. Whoopee!
> But the teenagers aren't allowed to view any nudity, even if they've reached puberty. Any theatre owner, for instance, who presents anything narrowly defined as "erotica" in the presence of anyone under the age of 18 is in for it. So is any magazine dealer who exhibits such erotica or tries to sell it to anybody under 18. That means, Playboy, folks.
> It also means Time and Life, if they show naked people—or even naked breasts or buttocks—unless they're prepared to defend themselves in court and prove that no sexual titillation was intended and also that they are artists and educators pure and simple. It only takes a couple of nuts on the witness stand to say that they were stimulated to throw defence into disarray.

Those comments were from a very well regarded Canadian author who presumably has the resources to defend himself, although I am sure he would not want to squander them in that kind of battle. How many artists or writers in Canada would not have the resources to undertake that? How many humble librarians and teachers will shudder as they have already in their protests across the country by letter and by other means, calling on parliamentarians to stand back and asking the Government to take back this Bill and do it properly?

I would like to consider for a few moments, in contemplating this Bill, the nature of law and its role in our society. I want to use a different prohibition drive early in this century as a way of drawing some wisdom from the Canadian past, from the historical past, and applying it to this particular situation.

Undoubtedly we have a good deal of concern. I heard one colleague earlier this afternoon refer to the maintenance of the family or the protection of the family. Who of us does not want to do that? We New Democrats are concerned about social programs which will make the family better and make it easier to maintain it than it is in the present context, particularly with a Government which, in its tax provisions and other laws, has not done very much for the family. We would like to maintain the family.

It is very much like the kind of prohibition drive which led people in the churches and across the country to undertake a temperance movement to persuade people to draw back from indulgence in alcohol, to be temperate in their use of alcohol if they used it to some extent, to ensure that the head of the household was not squandering his earnings and making it impossible for him to maintain his family, and so on and so forth.

The temperance movement was an admirable moral movement in many ways. It is not to say that it was pure through and through but it was a worthy endeavour. Late in the 19th century people in the churches and in the movement generally began to turn from moral suasion, from attempts to get people to sign the pledge and turned to the possibility of using the law against others, so the idea of prohibition developed. It was a situation of why not use the means that Government might have and pass laws to make alcohol unavailable, only to be used in the medicinal context.

When it was finally done Stephen Leacock, among others, lampooned this quite effectively. In the midst of the First World War of 1914-1918 in province after province, in fact most of Canada—Quebec had better sense—laws were passed and alcohol was ruled out. Prohibition came into effect and what followed on that in Canada as it followed on in the United States was not some sort of purification of the body politic, or some improvement in social life. Instead a general movement took place to find ways around the law, a movement that brought law itself into contempt, a process of corruption of customs officers.

By the middle 1920s this had produced a scandalous situation and helped to bring down a Government of Canada as a result of the bribing of customs officers and as corruption of police forces took place in many border communities of Canada. Crime was strengthened by that process. That provides us with some lessons on using unwise laws to prohibit activity and, in the process, to bring law into contempt, creating very unhealthy tendencies in society.

We face a similar situation here. Here we have an attempt by the Government acting on prudish motivations. We have an attempt to restrict publication and depiction of situations. In the process we run the very same risks of bringing the law of the land into contempt, feeding criminal elements as far as the production of materials is concerned and threatening in various ways the social fabric which Conservative Members say they are concerned about maintaining.

We recognize that there is a significant diversity of opinion on this particular matter. It runs from those who are opposed to any kind of censorship to those who want the most rigid kind of censorship, the people who triumphed when the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) brought in this Bill. It is striking that among those who are opposed to the censorship of any adult material, including even violent pornography, is the Canadian Civil Liberties Association and some very prominent feminists.

We have the writer June Callwood and another writer, Varda Burstyn, who has edited a book on the subject, both of whom are opposed to any censorship at all. They think that pornography serves very nicely to provide some people with a means to get ahead. Of course, the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, which is involved in trying to protect civil liberties, has joined with them in saying that when we are dealing with material involving adults and for adults, let us have no censorship at all. That is an extreme position. It is just as extreme as the prudish one that has triumphed coming from the other side, the position taken by people in some of the churches of Canada—by no means all—and by various other movements, including the so-called REAL women movement, who take just as extreme a position. Our position reflected in this amendment is at neither end of those extremes. We have attempted to address the chief concerns by which the Government supposedly is moved and which many Canadians have expressed.

Since it may be useful for people watching us to appreciate the extent to which this is true, I would like to read at least part of a resolution from the Federal Council of the New Democratic Party of 1983 into the record. It makes it quite clear that we feel concerned about the pornographic materials that circulate and can be obtained in Canada. We think something should be done about them. This resolution, which is now four years old, says the following:

> WHEREAS women's groups throughout Canada are deeply concerned about the avalanche of pornographic material which condones violence, coercion, abuse and degradation in its depiction of women and children; and
> WHEREAS such images are demeaning and destructive in their effect on the social fabric of Canada; and
> WHEREAS there is growing evidence of a causal link between such pornographic material and the increase in violence towards women and children,
> THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED that the federal New Democratic Party:
> (1) defines as pornography material which condones violence, coercion, abuse and degradation in its depiction of human beings—

I add the word generally, women, men and certainly children. It continues:

> —and condemns the production and distribution of such material whether in film, video, print, or any other form;
> (2) condemns the production and distribution of material which portrays or promotes the sexual exploitation of children and calls for severe penalties for offenders;
> (3) calls for a strengthening of Section 159 of the Criminal Code of Canada to reflect these concerns;

There in a resolution of our federal council and expressed in the amendment before us this afternoon is the New Democratic Party's concern about pornography. Do not let anyone think that there is no concern at all. We want to deal with materials that everyone agrees are offensive and should not have any part in a human society in which we value good social interaction. They should, in fact, be proscribed.

Let us take action on matters on which there is agreement, Mr. Speaker, rather than making the law so broad that the millions of Canadians—many of whom voted for Conservative Members of Parliament in 1984 to their regret, of course, in more ways than one—who enjoy the products will no longer be able to because this Government will run them off the market if the Government has its way.

Considering the diversity of materials that we have before us and considering the diversity of positions that have developed, our concern is about the really offensive materials. Our concern is to ensure that artistic activity and education, in particular, should not suffer from the kinds of laws that will be put forward. It is in a realistic way that we want to come to grips with these matters.

I was impressed by the position put forward by the AIDS committee of Toronto. I will not take the time to read the presentation made on Bill C-54 but when we recognize the importance of a situation of an epidemic for which there is no cure, the only response is education, namely, to persuade people to behave differently and use other kinds of sexual expression than they have used before. If health oriented educational efforts in support of that become impossible and are pursued by the courts or the police, as the police in Calgary pursued those who were fighting pornography by gathering evidence to get people fired up, if that kind of stupidity is brought to bear on efforts to save lives in the AIDS epidemic, what can we say?

I want to take up the theme which the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) raised before and on which I commented already. With the prospect of free trade between two countries which the Government is seeking—we are not in the way the Government has made or is making the deal—in that context, what are we to make of the Government's determination to remove from the market such a wide variety of materials? We will have an army of customs officers required to screen materials to satisfy the requirements of this law, if it becomes law. There will be the possibility of the growth of a significant cottage industry that will carry out this bowdlerization that will be required of printed materials. There another of those 19th century notes is to be struck.

The study of Shakespeare was affected though not destroyed in the 19th century by the attempt to remove from the text phrases and references which were offensive to the Victorian sensibility. The lustiness of the 16th century which Shakespeare expressed in his plays was not suitable for children so Bowdler did his work.

If this Bill is to become law, we will require someone to carry out the same activity. It is possible that one of the industrial adjustments the Government actually has in mind is the establishment of a Canadian cottage industry that will bowdlerize texts, books and magazines to make them acceptable to the Canadian eye and to the Canadian morality. That coming from a Government which seems oriented to opening the door to the market is a very odd reaction. Of course, it is possible that since the Government is involved in selling the country out through free trade, it may want to satisfy some of its supporters by bringing forward a Bill like Bill C-54.

It is a pleasure to speak to the amendment opposing this Bill. The amendment is a passionate call for the Government to take the Bill back and do the job right. The Government has received more than enough advice from the media, from editorials, from librarians and teachers, from civil libertarians and from feminists, though I say that without having read the resolution of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women. In fact, there has been no shortage of advice.

In conclusion, I might ask what Canadians are to make of a Government that is so deaf to good advice, so set on its own repressive course as this Government seems to be. The Parliamentary Secretary laughs. Canadians are not laughing. They are worried about what they will do in court and where they will find the money to defend themselves if this Bill becomes law. Many worry about what will be lost to them when the Government puts this Bill into the hands of the police and lets the authorities go to work on individual Canadians.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest as I always do to my hon. friend. This time, I was shocked when I heard his remarks.

I found it to be somewhat inconceivable that the Hon. Member was speaking in support of an amendment which would in effect kill this Bill. The comments of the Hon. Member certainly indicated that he and members of the New Democratic Party support some sort of legislation to control pornography.

I ask the Hon. Member if members of the New Democratic Party could support, for instance, the part of the definition of pornography in the legislation which provides that pornography is sexually violent conduct including sexual assault and any conduct in which physical pain is inflicted or apparently inflicted on a person by that person or any other person in a sexual context. I would also ask him if he and members of his Party could support another part of the definition of pornography which includes bestiality, incest or necrophilia.

If I heard the Hon. Member correctly, I would assume that he would support those parts of the definition of pornography. Instead, he is supporting a motion not to send the Bill to committee where he could discuss all the various aspects of it and put forward amendments which he thinks are appropriate and in line with the recommendations of the various organizations to which he has referred but rather to kill it, wipe it out and eliminate it altogether.

In all seriousness, how can the Hon. Member support a motion of that sort when he said quite clearly that he does support some form of restriction on pornography as does his Party?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the question is quite a good one. It is obvious that the Conservative Members who are upset by this motion would like very dearly to paint us as some sort of a licentious caucus.

I am sure the Hon. Member is aware of the wording of the amendment because he went looking in the Bill to see what might relate to it. We propose that the House decline to give second reading to the Bill because it fails to clearly define pornography as material that condones violence, coercion, abuse and degradation in its depiction of human beings. There are suggestions for what should be regarded as pornographic.

Why should we vote the Bill on to committee when, as others have said this afternoon, we know perfectly well what this bunch does with most amendments that are put forward in committee? We have received abominable treatment. One of the very few exceptions to this abominable treatment of amendments put forward in committee came on the emergency measures Bill. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty), when presenting the Bill, recognized that there were significant criticisms of it including criticisms from the Canadian Civil Liberties Association. He gave his commitment that he would be open to amendments which would improve the Bill.

It is not my responsibility to bargain on the details. It is the responsibility, I would suggest, of the Minister of Justice. If he is paying any attention at all to the voices across Canada which want an end to this dangerous legislation, it is up to him to indicate which clauses he is prepared to drop and how he is planning to amend the Bill if it gets to committee.

Let the Minister of Justice rise in the House and open up the possibility of amendment to the Bill. That could change our attitude toward it. I am not the key person who would determine that, but I suspect that it might. I see my friend, the Hon. Member for Burnaby, nodding his head. It could open such possibility, but let the Minister of Justice indicate that amendments have a chance.

The Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) is suggesting that we send the Bill to committee and then see what chances there are. That is the sort of thing we have heard before. We know that we do not get very far with the Government's overwhelming majority, though we will get them in the next election.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I have some difficulty understanding members of the New Democratic Party. They purport to be concerned about pornography. The Hon. Member went on to talk about some resolution they passed at some NDP convention not so long ago. I suppose it was passed at the same time they passed resolutions about pulling out of NATO, nationalizing banks and nationalizing cable companies. We know all about NDP resolutions.

Members of the NDP have mastered the art of speaking out of both sides of their mouths. This seems to be an example—

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a short and succinct point of order. I wonder if the Hon. Member might just clarify whether these resolutions were adopted at the time he himself was in fact a member of the NDP.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member knows that that is not a point of order.

Mr. Nunziata: As I was saying, this is a classic example of how members of the NDP have mastered the art of speaking out of both sides of their mouths. They have been accused in the past, and I have been one of the accusers, of being hypocrites. Their attitude on Bill C-54 is an example of how hypocritical they are.

The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) comes from British Columbia, the province of my birth. At times, I am somewhat ashamed to say that I was born in the same province as that Hon. Member, but nonetheless, he is causing British Columbians shame by moving an amendment the net effect of which is to kill the Bill completely, as pointed out by the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway).

The Hon. Member who just spoke expressed concerns about certain forms of pornography. Does he not believe that it would be more constructive to make his points here in the House at second reading stage? The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) will be expressing his concerns about this Bill in a few moments. We will go to committee and move constructive amendments. Does the Hon. Member not believe that would be a more appropriate and responsible course of action than trying to be obstructionist at second reading stage? He knows we are simply adopting the legislation in principle and the committee will have the power to make amendments.

I ask the Member that, and also to explain the hypocrisy of the NDP on this occasion?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) has two minutes.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether to thank the Hon. Member for that question or not. I do not think there is hypocrisy involved here. I said that you are walking into a trap if you let that bunch take a Bill to committee unless they have committed themselves to amendments.

I served on the legislative committee dealing with the shipping conferences exemption Bill last spring. We heard statement after statement expressing concern. I do not want to overdo it because there were those who supported it. However, a lot of concern was expressed about its consequences for people who work in the ports of Atlantic Canada and so on. Only very gradually did it become clear that the Government would accept an amendment or two. Then the committee had to go on hold while the Parliamentary Secretary took the amendments to Cabinet for approval before we could approve them. I have seen the amendment process so it is not hypocrisy for us to put up a fight to get the Minister to indicate that amendments will be accepted.

As far as the Hon. Member being unhappy about our amendment is concerned, instead of looking at our hypocrisy he should do a little checking into the possibility of contradiction in his own Party.

Mr. Nunziata: There is none.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): I believe the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry were quite supportive of the amendment. I realize there are right-wingers in the Liberal Party and I guess I just heard from one. However, that is a different kind of contradiction from the hypocrisy he accuses us of.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

Mr. Nunziata: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. As you know, Hon. Members are permitted 20 minutes to speak. It is now approximately 6.45. I was wondering whether you would seek unanimous consent to call it seven o'clock so as not to interrupt my colleague's speech?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent?

An Hon. Member: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There is not unanimous consent.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to participate in this debate as the justice critic for the Official Opposition. I would like to indicate at the outset that the Official Opposition opposes this Bill which contains a radical, far-reaching and unacceptable definition of pornography. That definition characterizes virtually all sexuality as pornography and we will be voting against it on principle. I must also indicate, since I am rising on the amendment, that we also oppose that. We do so for the reason so cogently presented by my colleague, the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata), namely that it is an NDP motion whose only logic is that they are satisfied with the status quo on pornography. If their view prevailed there would be no legislation amending the present law on pornography. That is unacceptable to the Official Opposition. We think there should be amendments to the law, but that the Government's legislation is very seriously flawed.

We take the Minister at his word, that he will be receptive to amendments at committee stage. We have many amendments to propose because from east to west this Bill has been condemned in its definition of pornography. I hope the Minister will think twice about the far-reaching nature of the definition he attributes to pornography.

This is not the first effort by the Government to amend the law. I remind the House about Bill C-114 brought forward by the former Minister of Justice, now the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie). That Bill frightened every Canadian who saw it. The definition of pornography was so vague that it really became a matter of police discretion as to what was and what was not pornography. If they said it was, there was a very great risk that a court would agree under the definition given in that law. We opposed that law and the Government withdrew the Bill and did not proceed. We did not want a police state over the question of defining pornography.

Now we have Bill C-54. The one thing you can say about it is that it is not vague. It makes very clear what is to be characterized as pornography. It is that clarity which shows us how far-reaching was the Government's intention to prevent freedom of speech and expression in this country, and we are not going to accept the very broad definition presented.

I have in the past characterized this Bill as being tough where we want tough laws. It is tough in places where we support tough laws. Yet it is also tough in areas where the criminal law should not even intrude. We are going to seek to change the definition of pornography so that we move away from the idea in this Bill that sex is dirty and any presentation of sexuality should be qualified as pornography. We will try and move to a definition where certain forms of sexuality are to be covered by the criminal law. For the rest of it, that law should not cover it.

It is important, when we are enlarging the criminal law as we are in this Bill, to remind ourselves that any new law on pornography limits free speech. Things which might otherwise be said, expression which might otherwise be permitted, is no longer to be permitted. You have to ask yourself, when such a fundamental human right is being dealt with, what is the justification? Why should Parliament limit free speech in the area of pornography?

I think there is a very good answer for that in part of the Government's Bill and I want to deal with that. I could refer to so many studies in the U.S. and Canada but I will present an anecdotal explanation of why the restriction on freedom of speech is justified with some types of sexual expression. Every human being has a sexual appetite at birth. It develops during the course of the person's life and that development is defined and influenced to a certain extent by society. People are influenced, particularly young people, by the way sex is presented in society. There are very disturbing trends in that regard not only in Canada but throughout the world today.

There is an increasing involvement by young people in pornographic and sexual exhibitions and displays. This is unacceptable. It violates our sense of the protection our young people should have from that kind of exploitation. That is a value worth protecting. The criminal law is needed to prevent pornography of that type. Not only that, we see an ever greater identification of sexuality with violence. Young people pick that up. Adults pick it up as well.

I can think of one occasion when I met with battered wives in a women's shelter in my riding. They said that the kinds of things that their husbands or lovers saw in magazines was what they wanted from these women. This also involved violence.

A third kind of pornography that we must condemn and that we are entitled to use the criminal law to protect ourselves from is a kind of sexualization of power. More and more in literature we see the women degraded, treated as an object and humiliated for the satisfaction of a person. One cannot say that young people are not affected by that type of literature and sexual expression in the environment. As I have indicated, even adults are not immune to being affected by that. We are entitled to use the criminal law to prevent it.

Let me cite an anecdote from a related area. It is a story that reflects values in our society. An eight-year old child comes home from school one day and finds her mother and father looking very sad. They take her to her room to tell her that they have very bad news for her because her grandmother had died that day. The little girl pauses for a moment and asks: "Who killed her?" That is a normal thing for a child in our society to wonder when she learns that someone has died. Death is presented as a violent act in so much of our literature that young people grow up seeing it as normal.

The moral of that story can be transferred to these areas that I have discussed, child porn, violence, power over women and power over others, that is becoming defined more and more as normal sexual activity in society. We are entitled to stop that. We support that part of the Bill. These laws are tough in that area and I agree that they should be tough. The Official Opposition, unlike the NDP, would like to see the Bill move forward to see those objectives achieved.

However, when the Government goes beyond that to say it will limit people's freedom of speech in areas of sexuality that are not violent, not degrading or do not involve power or the exploitation or abuse of young people, one must ask what the Government is doing. How can it justify constraining freedom of speech where there is not an evil?

Of course, some people say that there is an evil and believe that this type of sexual expression is threatening to them. Perhaps some people are threatened by the presentation of sexuality and I think they have a right to be protected from it in a classification sense. People who want to wander through the streets of their city should not have to see explicit acts of sexuality displayed in front of their eyes. That is reasonable. However, to use the criminal law and make it a crime to present that type of sexuality is not acceptable. Children should not be allowed to see it and that can be covered by the law. It is not acceptable to go further to say that the presentation of any form of sexuality is to become a criminal act.

A couple of weeks ago I was on a panel where one of the participants said that with all the nudity one sees in movies now, she always thought it more erotic when people were dressed. That is her opinion, to which she is entitled. But should that opinion be validated by the criminal law? Surely it is going too far to criminalize the presentation of sexuality because some people feel that it is in bad taste. I know there are people who believe that, and they are the ones whose support the Government is seeking. They are the ones who want this law exactly the way it is.

I have listened to many of their arguments. They have no justifiable claim to prohibit that type of sexual expression in this society. They are entitled to have it classified and not to be exposed to it on the street or not have their children exposed to it on the street, but surely it is going too far to say that it should be a crime to display sexuality that does not involve children, that is not violent, not degrading or involving power as I have explained.

I hope we will be able to persuade the Government in committee that it does go too far and it should not use the criminal law to enforce a certain standard of taste of some people.

It was my hope that the Government would have taken note of the tremendous reaction against this Bill. The women's groups who were very supportive of a good pornography Bill and wanted the elimination of this degradation and downgrading of women in society called on the former Government to bring forward legislation. We set up the Fraser Commission which made sensible recommendations. These very women's groups are against the effort that the Government has finally produced, and for a very good reason. The Bill goes much too far. I hope the Government will listen to the women's groups. They are not saying that anything goes and everything in free speech should be permitted. They are not against censoring pornography. They are in favour of it. However, they are against censoring all sexuality, which is what this Bill does.

According to the Toronto Star on May 29, 1987, the Attorney General of Manitoba said that every provincial attorney general advised the federal Minister of Justice that they had problems with the portions of the Bill about which I am complaining. The Attorney General of Ontario, Ian Scott, observed that to include the portrayal of normal, healthy, sexual activity along with sexual violence and kiddy porn seems to indicate a misplaced sense of values. I adopt that position. I hope that in committee all Members will see the light and recognize that the Bill goes too far.

The booksellers of Canada opposed this Bill at their convention. The Canadian Music Centre wrote to express their opposition to the Bill. The Canadian Actors Equity Association, some of whose representatives I met, have opposed this Bill. Admittedly, some of these groups oppose all forms of censorship. I am not agreeing with that total unwillingness of theirs to see the other side, but they are right in this area which I have talked bout, where the Government's measures simply go too far. The artists representative group has opposed this Bill.

I understand that I have until three minutes after seven, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): At seven o'clock, the Hon. Member would have five minutes in his speech and 10 minutes for questions and comment. If he wishes to carry on until 7.03, that is perfectly fine.

Mr. Kaplan: I was counting on that, Mr. Speaker.

I am not saying that the Official Opposition agrees with the full argument that nothing should be censored. I have stated our case.

The librarians have made the point that if this Bill goes through they can become criminally responsible for those things which young people come to see in the normal Canadian library. The same thing can be said about average Canadian art galleries. One of my colleagues indicated, and I want to endorse that view, that where it comes to the defences of artistic merit, scientific value, education purposes, and so on, we feel that that should not be put to the defence to prove. It should be part of the prosecution's case, and I will be moving that amendment. That burden of proof lies with the prosecutor.

• (1900)

In many ways we need a tougher pornography law. I want to say that again. We reject the idea of the New Democratic Party that we should be satisfied with the status quo. However, going to committee with this Government does expose us to the risk it may hang tough. It may play to that very small minority of Canadians who feel threatened by sexuality and who do not want to be reminded of it, who want to try to interfere with freedom of expression on the simple grounds of taste. They want to make people criminals because their taste is different from those who have convinced the Conservative Party to make their case into the criminal law.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in concluding, I just want to say that we are 100 per cent willing to co-operate with the government and make some changes in order to have more effective legislation against pornography, but we reject the concept that sexuality as such may not be depicted. That, I believe, goes against the sensibilities of practically all Canadians, and as far as we are concerned, we want a Criminal Code with which Canadians can identify and which they can respect. Let us not go back to the values of bygone days in this country, to an era of sexual taboos and all the problems that ensued.

"(3) Where an order is made pursuant to subsection (1), the order shall cease to have any force or effect with respect to any period following the sixtieth day after the date on which it becomes effective or, if Parliament is not then sitting, the fifteenth day next thereafter that Parliament is sitting, unless, not later than that day, the order is approved by resolution adopted by both Houses of Parliament.

Motion No. 7.

That Bill C-87, be amended in Clause 54 by adding, immediately after line 31 at page 16, the following:

"(3) Where an order is made pursuant to subsection (1), the order shall cease to have any force or effect with respect to any period following the sixtieth day after the date on which it becomes effective or, if Parliament is not then sitting, the fifteenth day next thereafter that Parliament is sitting, unless, not later than that day, the order is approved by resolution adopted by both Houses of Parliament.

(4) For the purposes of subsection (3), a day on which either House of Parliament sits shall be deemed to be a sitting day."

That Bill C-87, be amended in Clause 59 by adding, immediately after line 4 at page 19, the following:

"(7) Where an order is made pursuant to subsection (2), the order shall cease to have any force or effect with respect to any period following the sixtieth day after the date on which it becomes effective or, if Parliament is not then sitting, the fifteenth day next thereafter that Parliament is sitting, unless, not later than that day, the order is approved by resolution adopted by both Houses of Parliament.

(8) For the purposes of subsection (7), a day on which either House of Parliament sits shall be deemed to be a sitting day."

Motion No. 10.

That Bill C-87, be amended in Clause 60 by striking out lines 9 to 45 at page 20 and substituting the following therefor:

"(3) Where an order is made pursuant to subsection (1) on the basis of a report of the Minister of Finance, an inquiry made by the Canadian Import Tribunal under section 48 of the Special Import Measures Act or an inquiry made by the Textile and Clothing Board under the Textile and Clothing Board Act, the order ceases to have effect on the expiration of the sixtieth day from the day on which the order is made if Parliament is then sitting or, if Parliament is not then sitting, on the expiration of the fifteenth sitting day after that day, unless before the order so ceases to have effect it is approved by a resolution adopted by both Houses of Parliament."

That Bill C-87, be amended in Clause 60 by adding, immediately after line 27, at page 21 the following:

"(9) Where an order is made pursuant to subsection (7), the order shall cease to have any force or effect with respect to any period following the sixtieth day after the date on which it becomes effective or, if Parliament is not then sitting, the fifteenth day next thereafter that Parliament is sitting, unless, not later than that day, the order is approved by resolution adopted by both Houses of Parliament.

(10) For the purposes of subsection (9), a day on which either House of Parliament sits shall be deemed to be a sitting day."

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, you have grouped Motions Nos. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10 and 11 for debate. These are on a number of clauses which basically deal with the same subject.

We have expressed our concern about the way the Government has been dealing with the whole issue of its trade deal with the Americans.

Presently, the House of Commons committee studying this question is hearing witnesses from all across the country without having the final text before it. We are in a situation where the promise made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in the House on October 5 has been ignored by the Government. At page 9632 of Hansard, the Prime Minister stated:

Mr. Speaker, I shall table the complete text of the Agreement as soon as the wording is finalized. It will then be referred to the appropriate committee of the House for analysis, study and debate.

On October 5, the Prime Minister promised the House and the people of Canada that the House of Commons committee would have the finalized document before the committee hearings in order that the committee could hear from witnesses from all parts of the country who had the document in front of them before he rushed off to Washington to sign the final trade deal.

● (1120)

It is now December 3, two months after the Government signed the Elements of Agreement, and we still do not have a finalized copy. Negotiations may or may not be taking place today to try to get a final copy of that document ready. It is now less than a month before the Prime Minister wants to sign a document which not one of us in the House has seen. This document is not even ready. Yet we know that it is a document which will fundamentally change the economy of this nation.

Mr. Jelinek: Improve.

Mr. Murphy: Some say it will improve, some say otherwise. But the problem is that we do not have the document. There is presently a committee of the House in Halifax, and it does not have the document. There are witnesses appearing before that committee, and they do not have the document. It is not acceptable for us in the House to pass any legislation at this time which gives the Government a blank cheque when it comes to trade deals and tariff reductions. We will do nothing to make it possible for the Government through Order in Council to do what it should be doing through proper legislation, debate, our committee system, and through the House itself.

As I stated in an earlier speech, we will not expedite the passage of Bill C-87 because it helps the Government move along the road to its trade deal. We do not believe that, in any sense, passing legislation in a legitimate and orderly process is happening at this time.

If the Government was able to negotiate a deal with the Americans, as it claims it has done, all that had to be done was the following, to use the Prime Minister's words when he stated:

I am advised that there may be a minor typographical error in this document, but that the document itself represents the fundamentals of the agreement arrived at by the parties.

These elements are the agreed basis for the agreement and will be translated into a legal document, as agreed, in appropriate time frames by the negotiating teams.

The trade negotiators met late into last night and it is obvious that they failed to come to some finalized wording, and we are not talking about "minor" amendments. We are talking about negotiations which are ongoing and which could fundamentally alter the Elements of Agreement that we were shown two months ago. Obviously, the people of this country are very concerned about the agreement, regardless of whether they are for or against it. The Government has boasted how important it is. The people recognize it is important and we need a process, not a three, four, or five day debate prior to the Christmas recess, which the Government wants, a debate where the people of Canada will be excluded because they will not have seen the document, a debate which will occur after the committee has held hearings but without a final document in front of it.

When minor pieces of legislation are passed through the House of Commons, there is first reading one day, second reading later, a debate in the House, and then the Bill goes to committee. A finalized version of that Bill goes to committee, even if it is a minor piece of legislation. Witnesses are allowed to appear, pro and con, and then amendments can take place.

The Bill comes back to the House of Commons, as does this legislation that we are dealing with today, with other amendments being possible at report stage, as we call it. Following that there is third reading. Even for minor pieces of legislation, we are in the situation where the public has a final document, and they have the time to appear in front of a committee. In some cases even what we may call minor pieces of legislation have more witnesses appearing in front of a committee than is happening in the case of the trade deal.

I repeat, at least the witnesses who appear have a final document in front of them. The House of Commons at report stage, and later at third reading, is in a position to debate the merits of the legislation and to try to make amendments to it. Quite often ordinary legislation, some of it minor, some more important, takes a long time to get through the House of Commons. It is very seldom that we circumvent that route.

When it comes to the trade deal, the House of Commons cannot allow the Prime Minister to break his promise that we would have the finalized document and that that document would then go to the committee for study. The Prime Minister made a promise on October 5 and during later speeches he implied that it would be fulfilled some time during the month of October and there would be a final document. Therefore, when the committee travelled that final document would be in front of it.

October passed and we did not have a finalized document. November passed and we did not have a finalized document. It is December and still there is no finalized document. Obviously, the committee which is scheduled to finish its work next Monday, will never have a finalized document in front of it. How can the Government, as it is doing at the present time, say that there will be a few days' debate just before the Christmas break, and it wants then to allow a vote on free trade so that our Prime Minister can go running off to Washington and say that he has the consent of the House of Commons? We do not do that for minor legislation. We certainly do not do it for major legislation. We will certainly not do it for the Prime Minister's trade package. The people of Canada deserve to have the information in front of them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to bring to the attention of the Hon. Member that there is such a thing as relevancy. I hope that he is returning to the relevant part of the Bill. The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) has the floor.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with a customs matter; the amendments before us deal with restricting the ability of Cabinet to act without the consent of Parliament.

• (1130)

In introducing these amendments for debate on Tuesday of this week, we stated that the intent of our amendments on Bill C-87 was to restrict the right of the Government to implement any part of its trade deal through any Order in Council mechanism. Therefore, the amendments which are before us are part of a deliberate strategy by the New Democratic Party caucus to ensure that the Government, which has already broken its word to the House of Commons with regard to the trade deal and in terms of us having a finalized document, does not use Bill C-87 and other pieces of legislation to get around full parliamentary approval or disapproval.

In talking about these amendments, I am talking about why we have presented them to the House of Commons. It was to make clear to members of the Government and members of the Opposition why we believe they are important. It is because we do not trust the Government when it comes to the trade deal. It is because we have already been told something by the Prime Minister in terms of our having the finalized document, which he has not been able to deliver. It is because we know that there are still ongoing negotiations on the basis of what the Americans want to do to improve the deal as far as they are concerned.

We have a Prime Minister who denies that the negotiations are going on, yet we know that they are happening. We also know that the House of Commons committee is in Halifax today and does not have the final document. In many cases the witnesses are wasting their time.

We want to make abundantly clear—and I know that my time has run out as far as this debate is concerned—that the procedure the Government is trying to foist on the House of Commons is unacceptable. We will certainly make sure, through debate on the motion, that we do not allow the Government to do through the back door what it is afraid to do through the House of Commons.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, Tuesday I heard what Members opposite had to say about Bill C-87. Unfortunately, not one actually spoke to Bill C-87 and the motions tabled in this House. Attempts were made to discuss free trade, although Bill C-87 is a strictly administrative measure. It is really unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, and I will start with Motion No. 2—

Mr. Cassidy: That is absolutely false!

Mr. Vincent: I will start with Motion No. 2, Mr. Speaker. They don't like to hear the truth on the other side of the House, but what do you expect?

Motion No. 2 demands parliamentary approval for increases and reductions of certain tariffs. Mr. Speaker, I am sure you realize this motion would be disastrous for the administration and development of this country. In certain cases, decisions must be taken quickly, including decisions on increases or reduction in tariffs and that are vital to the development of this country and its individual regions. That is how things are done, Mr. Speaker. It has always worked that way, and the public interest has always been protected. So I think Motion No. 2 should be rejected on those grounds.

Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 3 would deny the Governor in Council the right to reduce rates or give certain developing countries lower preferential rates. Mr. Speaker, to vote in favour of this motion might distort international trade, and I want to say that I am speaking strictly about the substance of Bill C-87 and not about free trade.

Motion No. 3 refers to developing countries, and when I heard the debate on the motion this week, Hon. Members were talking about free trade. I do not think the United States is a developing country.

Motion No. 5 would prohibit the Government from quickly taking a position when imports are harming our Canadian producers. That is what the motion intends to do, Mr. Speaker. That motion was presented by the socialist party that wants to prevent quick action to help our Canadian producers when they are harmed by imports.

Mr. Cassidy: That is just not true! There is no restriction.

Mr. Vincent: This is the position of the New Democratic Party: Kill our Canadian businesses as soon as possible! That is their position.

Mr. Cassidy: That is absolutely false!

Mr. Vincent: That is their position. That is what the motion is about. If the Hon. Member would care to read it and understand it, that is what it says.

The same thing applies to Motion No. 6. Again, they want to restrict government intervention with respect to imports that are harming our Canadian producers. That is what Motion No. 6 is about. Read it carefully—

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), on a point of order.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but the Hon. Member made statements that are absolutely untrue. There is no interference with a government's authority to adopt motions to block imports—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order. It is a point of debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants the floor, he will have his chance. Now perhaps he should find out how the system works. If certain goods arrive in Canada tomorrow morning which could harm our businesses, and if we have to get parliamentary approval, and if the Opposition Party acts up as usual and tries to obstruct the proceedings, even when the issue is urgent, I do not think the motion proposed by the socialist party would be a good thing for Canadian business. The truth always hurts, and I notice that at least the Hon. Member was not asleep and that he listened to what I had to say.

Motion No. 7 boils down to the same thing. Here again, they want to prevent Canada from acting quickly in case of imports from the Caribbean Commonwealth.

Mr. Cassidy: That is a lie, that is absolutely false!

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, Tuesday I listened to him and I did not interrupt. I trust he will have the courtesy to do the same.

Motion No. 9 is intended to keep the Government from conducting its foreign policy in a sensible and orderly fashion while protecting Canada's interests. Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 9 does not consider the fact that the Minister of Finance must advise Parliament of what he has done within two weeks. So I think, Mr. Speaker, that the interests of Canadians and the interests of this country are well protected, while Canada has requisite flexibility to apply its foreign policy.

Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 10 suggests setting up a tribunal. Another socialist invention that will harm Canadian business. Mr. Speaker, here again, and this is a very important point, when imports are dumped on our market, we must have ways to deal quickly with the situation. Motion No. 10 would merely make existing procedures take much longer.

As for Motion No. 11, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could give you a quick summary. They simply want to paralyze the administration of this country and with it, Parliament, by demanding that purely administrative work should be submitted for parliamentary approval. Briefly, Mr. Speaker, I would invite all Hon. Members to vote against Motion No. 11 as well as Motions Nos. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10 and 11.

• (1140)

[English]

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the last 10 minute presentation of the Parliamentary Secretary. That same argument has been used many times in history to defend the divine right of Kings, to defend the courts of Star Chamber, to defend enlightened despots, to defend the Inquisition, to defend various forms of bodies to make judgments on the basis of efficiency, to keep the country running, to keep the trains running, and all those wonderful slogans that have been used to defend ways of making decisions without recourse to democratically elected bodies and legislatures.

It would be important for Conservative Members of Parliament to recognize why such amendments are necessary. Let us presume for a moment that you were Jonathan Swift and you had the opportunity to pick a subject in the contemporary world of satire and you wanted to find a particular object which could bring out the absurdity and ludicrousness of the world. What would you choose, Mr. Speaker? Probably number one on the agenda would be a government that signed a deal that is not yet a deal, that got down to that finger-lickin' good Kentucky fried chicken summit meeting in Washington on October 4 where all the Ministers got together and announced with great fanfare and flourish, "Hey, we have a deal". Two months later to the day, on December 4, the American negotiator said, "We may have a deal and we may not have a deal". This gang still has not decided two months later on the most significant initiative within decades. This gang, who cannot shoot straight, still has not got itself a deal. To compound the problem, the Government has the incredible gall to initiate a parliamentary committee to consult with Canadians about a deal not yet made.

Jonathan Swift would have a wonderful time this far by asking "How can you comment on something that is not yet completed?" By some great leap of imagination, Conservative Members of Parliament are able to visualize what may be in the deal, not that they are going to tell anybody else, but it is that leap of faith that implies, "You have to believe what we believe" in order to agree with them.

Then the Government sends a committee across the country for public hearings, one day per province. The million people in the Province of Manitoba get to make six representations on a deal they have not yet seen. Nine million people in the Province of Ontario get to make six representations on a deal they have not yet seen. The committee is asked to report its findings to this Parliament on the basis of a document it has not seen, on the basis of presentations that are not relevant because—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not wish to interrupt the Hon. Member because I enjoy listening to his debates in the House, but I must bring to his attention the fact that we are dealing with Bill C-87, an Act respecting imposition of duties, customs and other charges to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding system. I would appreciate very much a slight bit of relevancy to the Bill. I do not wish to interrupt the Hon. Member because I sincerely appreciate his debates, but I would appreciate also, so that other younger Members in this House will be able to take into effect exactly what he is saying, if he were a little more relevant as far as the Bill is concerned.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, this type of Bill is ordinarily, as you have indicated, technical and fairly routine, but it is the contention of opposition Members on this side of the House that we are dealing with an entirely different situation because the free trade agreement signed between the Government of Canada and the President of the United States changes the whole trade situation in fundamental ways. Therefore you cannot discuss this without discussing the implications of free trade.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I appreciate what the other senior Member of this Chamber is saying, and I am also looking forward to his participation in the debate, but the Bill now being debated goes into the matter mentioned by the Hon. Member. Nevertheless, I would like the Member to come back to the meat of the Bill, please.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, in order to be of assistance to the Chair I would draw your attention to Clause 22 of the Bill which is one of the clauses amended in the series of amendments currently under debate. Clause 22 reads:

> Subject to Section 23 and 24, goods that originate in a country listed in Schedule III as a beneficiary of the Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff are entitled to the rates of customs duty set out with respect to those goods in the Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff in Schedule I.

That allows in a subsequent section—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have no problem with that. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) has the floor for debate.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I would only say in response to your suggestion of relevance that the argument I am attempting to build in 10 minutes is somewhat akin to building a cathedral. One must lay the foundation and the flying buttresses before one completes the superstructure. Therefore, if you will bear with me for a moment or two longer, I will then complete the full structure of the case to be made.

I am alluding to the document we have not yet seen which will contain within it a number of annexes setting out a series of tariff rates. We do not know what is in it. We have not seen it yet. We do not know which commodities, goods or services will be given a series of tariff reductions over the 5 or 10 year period. As the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has pointed out, we have in this particular Bill a very clear indication that most-favoured-nation treatment, which is based upon the principle of non-discriminatory tariff rates for other countries, may run contradistinction to the kinds of proposals being made under the trade proposal with the Americans. We are concerned about the manipulation of those different rates, which could take place without any public understanding or recourse to this Parliament, to determine whether a change is in the public interest.

The harmonization of rates that were agreed to under the previous GATT round, to which this Bill is giving implementation, is based on what I think is a crucial, fundamental principle of Canadian trade policy, that is, the application of non-discriminatory tariffs to all countries, and one of the unfortunate and debilitating effects of the proposed agreement with the Americans will be to set out discriminatory trade tariff rates that will work against that basic principle. Therefore, we would put ourselves in danger, I believe, of not only undermining our own trade relations with other countries who all of a sudden will wake up to find that countries which have been good customers of Canada are now treated to a discriminatory set of tariffs and that the Americans will get preferential treatment to the Japanese, the Russians or the Europeans.

This Parliament itself has not had the opportunity to comment on that to determine whether that version of trade may be a serious danger. Aside from our own specific trade relationships, I believe this dichotomy that we now have presents an erosion of the international trade system.

I would cite for Your Honour the statements made just last Sunday night by Paul Volcker, probably one of the most highly respected financial analysts in the world and head of the U.S. Federal Reserve Bank for close to eight years. He said very clearly that the emergence of regional trading blocs in North America, Europe and other places will undermine the international trading system through discriminatory trading practices.

That is the contradiction in this Bill when compared to the free trade agreement. You are saying to one class of customer that they will get preferential treatment. If that happens we will be back to where we were in the 1930s. Rather than having individual countries raise tariff barriers or treating one country differently from the other, we will now be doing it on a regional basis. We have brought the jungle-like atmosphere of the 1930s into the 1980s and 1990s and with the same effect, that is, trade wars on an international level between regional trading blocs.

The problem we have in this Parliament is that it is hard to get at the issue, which is what I was saying earlier. How can we raise these kinds of problems when we are subjected to a flying circus approach to the whole deal? We do not have an agreement, but we have a committee going through a farcical exercise of holding hearings. Yet there will be no opportunity to raise these very relevant questions.

We have in front of us an important Bill which deals with harmonization of international trading rights, which the Government wants to pass before we have an opportunity to determine the impact of the free trade agreement. We cannot do that because we have not seen the final agreement. That agreement will contain all the tariff rates and schedules. When I referred to an absurdity, that is the point I was trying to make. We are once again facing a legislative conundrum. We do not have an opportunity to look at an important piece of legislation from the perspective of how it will be affected by the free trade proposals now being made because they are still up in the air.

In conclusion, I can only say that, contrary to what the Parliamentary Secretary was saying, these are important amendments and should be supported.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the basic purpose of this Bill is to establish a new harmonized system of tariffs between major trading nations, including Canada. There is no country for whom the question of tariffs and their effect on trade is more important than Canada. To a large extent we live by our ability to trade. Unfortunately, in recent years we have been faced by large groups of countries that are using tariffs and non-tariff methods to improve trade between themselves and restrict trade with other countries.

The European Economic Community has been extremely effective at removing tariffs between countries that belong to the community, and making it more and more difficult for other countries, including Canada, to sell to that community. The U.S. has followed a similar policy. Japan, that country to which we are urged to look as an example of how a free enterprise economy operates, has the most efficient and effective system of tariff and non-tariff barriers in the world. These include impossible standards which have to be met before one can sell to Japan. This has created tremendous difficulties for us.

A whole new set of difficulties will be created when this so-called free trade agreement with the U.S. is finally signed and put into effect. In the period before the 1984 election, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) derided the possibility of a free trade agreement with the U.S. On one occasion I think the Prime Minister compared it to an elephant dealing with a rabbit. That was the relative strength and power of the two countries as the Prime Minister saw it at that time.

During the election campaign, there was not a single mention of the possibility of a free trade agreement with the U.S. Then, because the Government saw that for more than a year it had been down at the bottom in support, based on polls done by Gallup, Angus Reid and The Globe and Mail, and looking for an issue which might bring it back, suddenly it brought forward the concept of a free trade agreement.

No one in this country, no Member of Parliament, is opposed to improved trade arrangements between Canada and the U.S. or any other country. In October we had a lot of publicity—

Mr. Hawkes: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It has been a long-standing tradition of this House that debate at all times should be focused, but particularly so at report stage when we are considering amendments moved by the Party to which the Hon. Member belongs. I think it is incumbent upon us to speak to each of the amendments. Some of them are grouped for debate. We on this side are having a great deal of difficulty understanding that the Hon. Member is speaking to the amendments proposed by his Party.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I appreciate what the Hon. Member is saying. I know the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) will be coming to the point.

Now we have another point of order from the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, we have eight or nine amendments in this particular grouping. They all encompass the principle, according to the amendments, that these important tariff and trade actions taken by the Government of Canada should be subject to parliamentary accountability, just as a number of other matters in the customs and tariffs are subjected to parliamentary accountability. However, as I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary will realize—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. McDermid: Order, Mike!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) realizes what the amendments are and I think he will be coming to the relevant point.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the reason I am discussing, quite briefly and in a general way, the effects, as I see them, of this free trade agreement is that I will go from that to show how the agreement will actually have an adverse effect on various groups in Canada. It is for that reason that we are opposed to giving the Government the ability to change tariff schedules by Order in Council.

As I said, this agreement was signed on October 3 and we were assured repeatedly that it would only be a few days or a week or two before we saw the final text. It is now almost two months since the agreement was supposedly signed and there is still no text. Our partners, the Americans, have continued to bring up important issues on which they want amendments. According to reports we have heard in the last couple of days, they want to change the section on the Auto Pact. They want their shipping industry excluded from the provisions of this agreement. They are calling on Canada to change its procurement policies.

They say that both the federal Government and provincial Governments of Canada give provincial suppliers an important advantage over others, including American suppliers. The fact is that the American Government and 49 of the 50 American States do exactly the same thing. The Buy American Act provides that American companies will have an advantage over foreign companies when the American Government is making purchases. The American Government makes purchases of hundreds of billions of dollars. Every state in the United States gives an advantage to companies in its state over companies in other states when making purchases. If they do that, they will obviously create difficulties for Canadian companies which want to make sales to the American federal or state Governments. We do not hear our negotiators talking about that.

The Montreal Gazette today reported on the issue of agriculture. The Prime Minister the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), and our chief negotiator Mr. Reisman, have been asked repeatedly what effect this agreement will have on our farmers. Mr. Reisman said that it will not have any effect because our agricultural marketing boards and our supply management system are not even mentioned.

Mr. Reisman is a very able, clever, knowledgeable, and aggressive negotiator. I will not say that when he made that statement he was lying because, first, it would be unparliamentary and, second, because I do not want to say anything here to which he cannot reply directly. However, I say here, as I will say outside the House, that when Mr. Reisman said that agricultural producers will not be affected because supply management and marketing boards are not mentioned—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Chair has wisely chosen to group several motions for debate. I wish to address the principles of these motions today. I hope to be able to address as many of the motions which are before us as possible.

They all reflect a continuation of the struggle which began between the people and the monarchy as long ago as 1215 when King John was forced by the Lords of the day, who acted on behalf of the people, to sign the Magna Carta, which gave the very basic right for which we are fighting today with these amendments, that being the basic right of the Parliament of the country to establish what the rules should be with regard to the collection of taxes, the collection of government funds.

Under this particular Bill, approximately $2 billion worth of government revenues is at stake. The Government is proposing to do away with that revenue. Canada spends in the neighbourhood of $110 billion to $130 billion per year and has incurred a deficit in each year for the past three years in the neighbourhood of $30 billion. We are, therefore, not in a position to be giving away $2 billion worth of revenue.

Even more at issue is the fact that under Bill C-87 the power to reduce the amount of funds coming into the government Treasury by way of customs tariffs and other such revenues is being left essentially with the modern-day representative of the monarch, the Prime Minister and his Cabinet. We are seeing the age-old attempt under a constitutional monarchy by representatives of the Crown to make decisions with regard to the collection and expenditure of taxation without reference to the House of Commons which, under our system, is supposed to represent the people.

The principle which we are trying to establish with this series of motions is that within 60 days of the signing of an agreement which changes the procedure for the collection of tariffs, that agreement shall be submitted to the House of Commons for ratification. One would not think that this is a terribly radical initiative until you see the horror with which Members on the government side react.

We are attempting to continue a practice which was set in motion in 1215 and has been slowly and painfully continued through the centuries since then of putting the power to impose and collect taxation back into the hands of the House of Commons, which is the true representative of the people, rather than leaving it in the hands of the representatives of the monarch, namely the Prime Minister and his Cabinet.

We are not in any way restricting the monarch and her representatives, the Prime Minister and Cabinet, from undertaking initiatives by way of international treaties or by proposing changes to the amount of taxation which they will be levelling at or within our borders. We are simply asking for the maintenance of the ancient right that once decisions are made they cannot continue after 60 days without the approval of the House of Commons. This is not even as strong in some ways as that which the Lords demanded at Runnymede. We are saying "within 60 days" which seems to me to be a very reasonable request.

Two or three of these motions already in the first draft of the Act indicate that the Government is prepared to do so, would deign to do so, after 180 days. We are simply saying that we should speed up that process. This is consistent with some of the proposals made by both the McGrath commission and the Cooper commission, if I could call it that, two parliamentary groups which studied the activities of the House of Commons. The McGrath committee made proposals to strengthen the power of the back-benchers and of the Commons itself. The committee under the chairmanship of our friend, the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper), dealt with the question of parliamentary oversight and how Parliament could continue to build control over the budget and expenditure systems of this Chamber.

These proposed amendments which we are now discussing would force the Government to present such changes to our tariff laws, the amount of tariffs being levied at our borders, within 60 days for approval by the House. This follows through with the initiatives the committee, chaired by the Hon. Member for Peace River, was attempting to impose on our processes in this Chamber. We were attempting to make the budgetary process more reasonable, to have the Chamber itself deal with government Bills. We were attempting to force the Government to come forward with government Bills in fact very closely in concert with the presentation of the Budget so that we could avoid the spectacle we often go through in this Chamber of imposing taxes, collecting taxes, income taxes and other taxes, long before the law actually passes this Chamber.

What we are trying to do from now on is to keep our procedures a little more tight and a little more proper in the administrative sense so that this Chamber does get a chance to do its job of overviewing the expenditure plans of the administration of the executive branch of the Cabinet itself. This Bill proposes to give away close $2 billion in Government revenues, and because the Government is already in a deficit position of around $30 billion per year, this money will have to be made up through the tax system by some other means. We think that because there are a host of possibilities before us at the moment with the clauses mentioned in this Bill. There are potential changes to the tariff rates with Great Britain, the United States and various Commonwealth countries, some of the nations which have already been granted most-favoured-nation status, and a great long list of others who may in fact be granted such status to the point where they may eventually pay zero tariff from the current high level of 35 per cent tariff.

We think that before the Government makes permanent such arrangements by treaty, which it has under our constitutional monarchy every right to do, that treaty or those obligations should be transferred in front of this Chamber within 60 days so that this Chamber could have the opportunity to reject or ratify them. We presume that in virtually all cases the Government will be a majority Government which will be assured of its taxing proposal, or its proposal to give away tax revenue. But the principle should remain constant. This Chamber, and this Chamber alone, should make the final decision as to whether or not that should be ratified. That is what these amendments are attempting to do. I would urge all Members of the House, whether in government or in opposition, to see the extreme importance to this Chamber and to the representative system in this country for that to be strengthened and to continue.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have a word to say on motions Nos. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10 and 11. This essentially gives the responsibility to the Government for any changes in customs duties or tariffs to be brought before the House for consideration by the House within 60 days. I think that is especially desirable at this time. We know that even though there has not been a firm agreement made between Canada and the United States with regard to the free trade agreement, we believe that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will plunge ahead and sign this document on January 2 or January 3. It has long-term implications for all sectors of the Canadian economy, but clearly none more important than for the dairy industry.

Under the treaty which the President and the Prime Minister will sign, tariffs on dairy commodities will be reduced by 17.5 per cent, and many groups like the Dairymen's Association are demanding that the Government impose quantitative tariff quotas on dairy commodities such as liquid milk, yoghurt and ice-cream. It has been promised by the Government that marketing boards and supply management would not be in the deal, but in fact they are in the deal, because the whole supply management marketing board system we have depends on the imposition of tariffs, quotas and supply management. In this case the Government is removing these tariffs, and that is how this motion becomes paramount.

The Canadian dairy farmers have recognized that the Government is playing fast and loose with the truth. It put out a statement on November 26 in which it was stated:

> "The removal of tariffs therefore provides access for U.S. products into Canada while an expansion of the exportation of Canadian dairy products to the U.S. remains an impossibility", stated Mr. Waardenburg. Dairy Farmers of Canada is seeking an amendment to the Import Control List which would ensure full coverage of all dairy products, before the signing of the Agreement on January 2, 1988.

Mr. Waardenburg goes on his press statement:

> Dairy Farmers of Canada did not oppose the trade negotiations with the United States because the federal government had clearly indicated its commitment to ensure that all the "underpinnings" required for the maintenance of an efficient milk supply management program in Canada would be unaffected. However, unless the federal government now demonstrates its sincere willingness to live up to this commitment Canadian milk producers will strongly oppose its initiative in the free trade agreement.

Yesterday it carried out that commitment. It met the Associate Minister of Agriculture in full force in Quebec. The headlines of the report of that meeting are pretty devastating. It was reported in the Montreal Gazette this morning. The headline reads: "Angry farmers scorch Minister for 'lying' about pact". The secondary headline from the inside page reads: "Farmers scorch Minister for 'lying' about pact". Clearly the dairy farmers of Canada are going to carry out the challenge they made to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) in their press statement of November 26.

The Gazette goes on to report that dairy farmers, especially those in Quebec, feel that the Government has tampered with the truth. The press reports indicate that the Associate Minister of Agriculture was pilloried yesterday by 2,500 angry farmers who accused him and the Conservative Government of lying about the Canada-U.S. free trade deal. The Minister came under heavy fire at the farmers' union convention, after trying to convince the audience that the proposed agreement would not hurt farmers.

Clearly, the Government has lost the trust of the farmers of this country. It should simply pass those amendments to the import control list. It may not regain the trust of farmers generally, but it will help. The Americans have that in place now, so why is the Government not prepared to put similar restrictions in place with regard to milk and milk products, especially yoghurt and ice-cream?

This morning I asked the Deputy Minister of Agriculture if he has prepared amendments to the import quota list. He indicated that this was not before the Cabinet presently and he did not even indicate whether or not they would be put forward. He certainly gave the indication that they would not be put before January 2, as requested by the dairy farmers of Canada.

This mass demonstration against the Government will continue. It is reaching a fever pitch in the Province of Quebec, with the UPA presenting the junior Minister of Agriculture with a white rabbit, symbolic of what Canadian farmers got from the deal, compared to a horse which the Americans got from the trade deal. They did not open up their markets and have full quota restrictions on milk products going into the United States. Canada has granted extra quota throughout the dairy industry.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Would the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) please remove his coat?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member just returned from the farmers' meeting in Quebec yesterday where he saw the junior Minister of Agriculture being pilloried by the UPA representatives.

Essentially, this is an amendment to the changes to the Tariff Act as will be made by the Government and the trade agreement which will commit the Government to making those changes, which could have a devastating impact on dairy farmers. It simply asks that these changes be brought before the House within 60 days.

The same would apply if a tariff were being increased. Once a treaty is signed, the Government is committed.

Mr. McDermid: You said you would tear it up.

Mr. Foster: Rather than the Prime Minister signing the agreement on January 2 and introducing legislation months later, why can those amendments to which the Government will be committed not be brought before the House within 60 days? I do not think the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. McDermid) would see anything wrong with that. He is a strong believer in the parliamentary system and surely he would want to see tariff and trade-related items brought before the House and approved by the legislative body within 60 days, as proposed in this amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Motions Nos. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10 and 11, which relate to parliamentary approval by either resolution or legislation, were debated together. A vote on Motion No. 2 will apply to Motions Nos. 3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10 and 11.

The question is on Motion No. 2 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Negatived on division?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Motions Nos. 4 and 12 will be debated together, with a vote on Motion No. 4 applied to Motion No. 12.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre) moved:

Motion No. 4.

That Bill C-87, be amended in Clause 32 by striking out lines 13 to 16 at page 10 and substituting the following therefor:

"to sections 23, 27 or 28, the order shall cease to have any force or effect with respect to any period following the sixtieth day after the".

That Bill C-87, be amended in Clause 61 by striking out line 3 at page 22 and substituting the following therefor:

"sixtieth day from the day".

He said: Mr. Speaker, I acknowledge to my colleagues that I was a bit confused about the vote that was just taken. Rather than intending to oppose what the Government was doing, I wound up temporarily in error by opposing my own amendment. However, I will vote in the appropriate way when the deferred division is taken.

I think that speaks to the complexity of these tariff matters. It proves that they are well worth considering by Parliament in its role as a place where there should be a certain amount of sober second thought on important matters which can have such far-reaching implications.

Presently, some 2,000 pages are being negotiated in the agreement between Canada and the United States at white-hot speed. Who knows what is happening behind closed doors, and in terms of parliamentary scrutiny, a matter such as this would normally go before a parliamentary committee. The committee and its staff, on behalf of members of different Parties, would be able to study it. There would also be opportunity for the general public to examine it as well. Of course, those things will not occur because of today's news that once again there has been a delay, and the goodwill that existed at the bargaining table seems to have disappeared. The negotiators have gone away feeling sour and sore at each other.

I do not know when we will see the agreement. Certainly, the Government's credibility in suggesting when it will come out is totally shattered. It seems to be an ever receding target as to when this will come out—at Hallowe'en, in mid-November, or on December 1.

Mr. Orlikow: January 1.

Mr. Cassidy: Now it might come out on December 10. Or my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), suggests that it may not come out until January 1, or even after it is signed.

Let me return to Motions Nos. 4 and 12. Motion No. 4 refers specifically to Clauses 23, 27, and 28. I was a bit surprised when the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Vincent) rose and stated that Parliament would obstruct actions taken by Canadian officials, by the Government of Canada, when it came to important trade actions, for example, the need for surtaxes or retaliatory actions in the case of some trade dispute with another country. Surely the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary knows that that is not the case. That is why I indicated to him in interjecting that what he said was absolument faux, it was absolutely untrue.

It is not the actions that are being dealt with here, it is the question of the accountability to Parliament. Clause 32 already requires approval by Parliament within 180 days. In other words, the principle of parliamentary accountability is there with respect to changes in the tariffs under Clauses 23, 27, and 28 of the Bill.

That means that if Canada extends or withdraws a most favoured nation tariff to another country for any or all goods—that is covered in Clause 23—that that must now be submitted for approval by Parliament by resolution within 180 days, or it lapses. It means that if Canada extends or withdraws a British preferential tariff to another country for any or for all goods, the Government must get approval from Parliament within 180 days, or else it lapses. It means that if Canada gives to any country that is presently under the British preferential tariff a more favourable treatment—that would be a less developing country, probably in Africa—then there too that is subject to parliamentary approval within 180 days. The principle of accountability to Parliament is an important one. The question referred to in my amendments in Motion Nos. 4 and 12 is simply whether the approval should come within 180 days or within 60 days.

I would argue that, on the basis of what we know about the Government's lack of trustworthiness and its lack of credibility in terms of making promises to Parliament, and through Parliament to the Canadian people, it is incumbent upon us to review the question of whether 180 days is an adequate time, or whether Parliament should not be called upon to act sooner, in other words, in these particular and important clauses and actions, whether the accountability to Parliament should not be tightened up and reaffirmed.

Why is it 60 days? Would that not create a problem if Parliament does not happen to be sitting? The present legislation already covers that. It states that, if Parliament is not sitting within the 180 day period, then the resolution has to be affirmed by Parliament by the fifteenth sitting day after Parliament's return. For example, that might be during an election year. That would in fact apply in the case where we shortened the approval time to 60 days.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance suggested that this would interfere insufferably with the working of Parliament. I would point out that, under Clauses 23, 27, and 28 those resolutions are already covered by Parliament or are required by Parliament, so there is a form of accountability.

I do not recall these matters ever being treated as anything but routine. Therefore, I would judge that if we decided, for example, to give most favoured nation treatment to Albania, which I believe is now under the general tariffs, or withdraw MFN status from some other country because of a trade dispute, I do not imagine that if it were a routine matter it would take any parliamentary time at all. It would be a resolution passed in a minute or two. If there were some desire to discuss the matter, it could be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs or the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade.

The experience in the recent past would indicate that my contention is an accurate one. The problem is that we now have the Government seeking powers in this Bill which would allow it to enter into a fundamental change, a Bill or agreement which would wreak fundamental change in our trading relationship with our largest trading partner. And through the back door, by means of this Bill, whose primary purpose is the harmonized system of tariffs, it is seeking to confirm for itself powers to do this without reference to Parliament. The Government's behaviour is reprehensible, and I believe it should be put on a short leash until it can demonstrate once again that it is worthy of the trust of the Canadian people, and it has some credibility in this particular area.

I heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) state in the House yesterday that no negotiations are taking place. But then on television I saw Mr. Murphy—Mr. Reisman went away by the garbage elevator—obviously rather emotional, upset and teed off at the situation, having come away from something which can only be described as a very tense and difficult set of negotiations.

We don't know whether they were negotiating the entire Auto Pact back, or down the drain, or whether they were negotiating in perpetuity that Canadian ship owners and sailors will never be able to serve American ports because of a perpetuation of the powers of the present Jones Act. But what I do know is that the issues must be pretty darned important that we got to 98 per cent of the deal being put into text some three or four weeks ago, and have gone no further than 1.5 per cent in the ensuing three or four weeks. This is where accountability comes in. In such a matter as the Canada-U.S. trade agreement, which goes far beyond the routine, parliamentary accountability begins to have an impact.

I would draw to your attention as an analogy, Mr. Speaker, the situation that prevails with the new procedure about the reference of nominees to Order in Council appointments to the relevant standing committees of the House of Commons. The analogy is not perfect, because there is no power for the committees to actually confirm or refuse to confirm those appointments. Nonetheless, those appointments are referred to the relevant committee, and they lie on the table in that committee for a period of some three or four weeks or some shorter period, and the committees have the power, and I think it is accepted that the majority will not be used to stop that, actually to consider those appointments and whether or not they are appropriate.

One of the reasons that that procedure came in was to ensure or seek to ensure that political favouritism and patronage would not be the governing principle in making important Order in Council appointments.

Last night I had a few minutes in my office and I was going through my desk and came across a list of approximately 10 appointments referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. There were appointments to the Canada Development Investment Corporation of a Deputy Superintendent of Financial Institutions, and to Canada's associate or alternate Governor to the International Monetary Fund.

I looked through the biographies appended and the people appeared to be able. One was an East Indian Canadian who came from Uganda in 1972. It is noteworthy that someone who settled in this country should, in 15 years, have achieved the stature and respect in the community that he would be appointed to the Canada Development Investment Corporation. There were three able women appointed to different positions, something that I welcome. I made a note to my staff simply to say that I do not think we need to worry about these ones, and we do not need to call those people before the committee.

Likewise, the same applies to the power of resolutions. Normally those matters will not require any parliamentary time. But where the situations are abnormal, such as in the Canada-U.S. trade agreement, and where we are kept in the dark while vital decisions affecting every Canadian are made behind closed doors, under that situation, we have to reaffirm the principle of parliamentary accountability.

In Motions Nos. 4 and 12, which cover a broad range of tariff-making powers and of different trade and tariff status given to different countries around the world, we are saying that these should come before Parliament for resolution within 60 days rather than within 180 days, bearing in mind that when Parliament is not sitting it would be the fifteenth sitting day after Parliament resumed.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I support the position taken by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). As he indicated, and as I said a while ago, we are not dealing with a normal situation. We are not dealing with a time when these changes in tariffs were fairly routine or when a great deal of discretion was left to the Government to change the schedules by Order in Council with little discussion in Parliament. It is our contention that the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States has changed the situation in a very fundamental way. For a few moments I will continue with the points I was trying to make with regard to how that changes the situation for Canadian farmers.

When Mr. Reisman said that agriculture was not affected because supply management and marketing boards were not mentioned, I meant it when I said that in my view and in the view of many farmers he was, to say the least, not telling the whole story. He was, to say the least, shading the truth. While supply management and marketing boards are not mentioned, the fact is that another part of the agreement removes the tariffs which Canada has traditionally put on processed foods.

Our chicken, turkey, egg, and other dairy producers operate under a supply management system through marketing boards. They are guaranteed, in return for agreeing to produce within a quota system, a price for their products which permits them to continue. It gives them the ability to continue. American producers do not have that system. Because American producers of chicken, turkey, and eggs have better weather, a larger market, subsidies for grain, and so on, they can sell their product cheaper than can Canadian producers. Their chickens, turkeys, and eggs can be processed into TV dinners, chicken pot pies, and chicken fingers for shipment to Canada and sold at a cheaper price than Canadian products.

I have checked that assertion or claim with leaders of the marketing boards in Manitoba and with the leaders of Keystone Agriculture, who are very cautious, conservative, good business types. I have also checked it with senior economists in the University of Manitoba Faculty of Agriculture. They agree with my description of how the system will work after the free trade agreement is signed. It is just one illustration of the importance of the agreement and the absolute necessity for Canadians to know what is in it.

I think it is ominous that we are in December and we still do not have the text of the agreement which was signed and announced with such fanfare and joy by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in October. A couple of days ago we received a circular telling us that we could have the various documents when they were available. We are talking about hundreds of pages, perhaps several thousands of them. They will be very detailed, technical documents. How can Canadians, who will either benefit or be affected adversely, judge what will be the effect on them when they do not have the relevant documents?

I talked about the effect it would have on some farmers. Despite the fact that the Americans signed an agreement back in October, they are apparently insisting that the protection of their shipping industry under the Jones Act—and it has been given a great deal of protection against shipping industries of all other countries—shall continue. Talk about government procurement. They have innumerable laws which protect American companies and corporations in the area of procurement by the federal Government of the United States and by state Governments.

As far as we know, there is nothing in the agreement which will restrict their rights. I am told that when American negotiators were challenged on this point, they made very clear that they had no legal authority to restrict the ability of American states or American cities to adopt procurement laws and regulations which give advantages to American producers.

One criticism of Canadian practices which was discussed—and we were made to look bad, as if the things we were doing were improper and immoral—was the assistance given by the Conservative Government and by the Government of Quebec to General Motors to modernize and upgrade its plant at Ste. Thérèse. Somehow we were doing something that was improper. However, there has not been a new automobile plant built in the United States in the last four years or five years that has not been built with a contribution of hundreds of millions of dollars by the state or city in which it was built.

Mr. McDermid: So? What is the point?

Mr. Orlikow: The Parliamentary Secretary asks, "What is the point?" The point is a precise one, and I wish the Parliamentary Secretary would take the opportunity to deal with it. We are being criticized by the Americans for our regional development policies and told that we must change those policies—

Mr. McDermid: They have their own.

Mr. Orlikow: Exactly.

Mr. McDermid: They cannot touch ours.

Mr. Orlikow: I have yet to hear the Prime Minister, the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), or the Parliamentary Secretary say publicly in Canada to the American Congress, to the American negotiators, or to the American people: "Look, you are asking us to change our regional development policies. You have the same kinds of policies and you have to change yours".

I challenge the Parliamentary Secretary to put on record one statement which he or any other government representative has made that criticized or challenged the Americans on the basis of the fact that they are doing precisely what they are calling on us to stop doing. I see my time is up, Mr. Speaker.

• (1250)

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, this debate today is on amendments to the customs Bill. The Liberals and the New Democrats, the socialists, are trying to turn it into a free trade debate.

Mr. Orlikow: It is.

Mr. McDermid: An entire couple of days have been spent discussing the free trade issue. I would dearly love to get into this debate but it is not a free trade debate.

Mr. Orlikow: Go ahead.

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member challenged me about whether we ever made a public statement on regional disparities, subsidies and so on that has taken place in the United States. Certainly, that is what the entire negotiations were about. When the Americans said, "Well you do this, this and this", Mr. Reisman and the people in the trade negotiation office were able to go right back and say, "Yes. But you do this, this and this."

Mr. Orlikow: Publicly?

Mr. McDermid: That is what negotiations are all about.

Mr. Orlikow: They say it publicly, we do not.

Mr. McDermid: Yesterday in the House I said—this is pretty public because it was Question Period—as reported in Hansard at page 11402:

> It may come as a surprise to the Hon. Member to know that when we were negotiating the free trade agreement, lo and behold, the Americans had some subsidies as well that they did not want to give up.

That was in the House yesterday. The Member challenged me to point out where it was said publicly and I have just pointed it out to him.

Mr. Orlikow: Once.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on debate.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): I would willingly defer to the Parliamentary Secretary, but since I am being invited to speak to this amendment I will gladly do so. This is an amendment to clause 32 of an Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity System, and so forth. I will spare you the long title of the Bill.

Mr. Speaker, clause 22 has to do with the accountability of the Government or the public administration and Parliament. This clause relates particularly to the ratification of any resolution or any decision under which certain imported goods would be subject to duties.

[English]

The purpose of the amendment, if I understand it properly, is to cut from 180 days, which is I think the present situation, to 60 days the time government orders relative to tariffs can have effect before they require ratification by a resolution of Parliament. These deal with accountability. It does not deal—and I agree with the Parliamentary Secretary—with anything to do with the present Canada-U.S. relations in regard to free trade or the so-called Mulroney—Reagan trade deal. It does deal with accountability. That is why I stand up, because I think over the years I have made the point that we should receive from Governments, on a regular basis, accountable reports as to how Ministers run the country.

[Translation]

Under the proposed amendment, Mr. Speaker, the Government would have only 60 instead of 180 days, and we suggest this would make for stricter control, better accountability, greater participation of the House in the administration of the country, and would provide Hon. Members with an opportunity to become familiar with a very complicated process.

[English]

Clause 23 allows the Government to extend or withdraw what was called most-favoured-nation tariffs. These tariffs are applied to any goods that originate in a country to which the general tariff applies. Normally it is set at about 35 per cent, which is a pretty high tariff. It applies to few countries that do not have essentially a very important trading relationship with Canada. The 35 per cent rate of tariff is so punitive that very few goods can get into Canada. Therefore, in order to gain access, these countries must negotiate for most-favoured-nations status for the goods they wish to sell in Canada or, alternatively, give Canada some reciprocal concessions. Hence this section does not deal strictly with the Canada—U.S. free trade negotiations. Nonetheless it permits the principle of parliamentary accountability to be argued.

I believe strongly that this is a well intentioned amendment. It is one that I think is done in the spirit of trying to get the Government to be more responsive to Parliament. I think it is what one might call a friendly amendment in trying to get parliamentarians more interested and, possibly through them, the public more involved in deciding what will happen with our tariffs and how we exclude or allow certain goods to be imported into this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this proposition is supported by another amendment, amendment No. 12, and if I got it right amendments Nos. 4 and 12 are being debated together. Amendment No. 12 deals with another subject. It reads as follows:

> That Bill C-87, be amended in Clause 61 by striking out line 3 at page 22 and substituting the following therefor:
> "sixtieth day from the day"

It is almost Greek to me. If we read this in the context of the amendment it is difficult to understand, so during the few minutes I have left I will try to find the page and the clause involved so as to put all this in simpler terms.

Clause—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Maybe the Hon. Member will find it after one o'clock.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON FISHING INDUSTRY

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government has called the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) trade deal a panacea for our fishing industry. The facts tell a different story. The industry did not get unfettered access to the United States, by far our most important market. The American fish lobby is alive and kicking, and our industry still faces the threat of future action under American trade remedy laws. The status quo remains.

The Fisheries Council of Canada says there has been no change. Some spokesmen have said the trade deal gives us enhanced status quo. When the dissatisfaction with the status quo is enough to cause this deal, then I question the merits of "enhanced status quo". The recent embargo on our fresh fish exports is ample proof that the trade deal has no protection.

Little wonder then that the Government is playing games with fishing groups appearing before the parliamentary committee studying the Canada-U.S. free trade deal. Yesterday, in Charlottetown, Walter Bruce, President of the Prince Edward Island Fishermen's Association, accused the Tory majority on the committee, in the absence of the final deal, of trying to manipulate organizations such as his into a position where it would appear they are in support of this free trade deal. Mr. Bruce called it "sleazy political manoeuvring". These hearings are an absolute sham, and I am sure Canadians will not be misled by such a charade.

WILDLIFE

ALBERTA WILDERNESS ASSOCIATION—CONCERN FOR KANANASKIS MOOSE AND ELK

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Wilderness Association has launched a court action against the Alberta Government to stop it from keeping open this winter a section of Highway 40 south of Mount Allan. Highway 40 runs through the Highwood Pass, a wintering area for elk and moose, and has always been closed to traffic after December 1. According to Diane Pachal, Executive Director of the AWA, there are no other areas for the moose and elk to go because a substantial area of wilderness habitat has been lost through development of Kananaskis country. The traffic will scare the elk and moose away, and in addition the highway could provide access for poachers.

Wildlife should not be put at risk because of the Olympics. We urge the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) and the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) to intervene and direct the Olympic Transportation Group to develop a traffic plan that will not require keeping Highway 40 open this winter through the Highwood Pass area. This is the least that must be done to protect the moose and elk of the Kananaskis.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

INUIT CIRCUM-POLAR CONFERENCES—POSSIBLE PARTICIPATION OF INUIT FROM U.S.S.R.

Mr. Thomas Suluk (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, much comment has been made recently regarding the demilitarization of the Arctic. Overtures made by the Soviet Union to ensure no military build-up there are commendable. However, let us remember that Canada does not now have the capability to navigate its Arctic waters, both through and under the ice, for most of the year.

I would also like to point out that there has recently been co-operation in the polar sciences as shown by the exchange of experts between the U.S.S.R. and Canada.

As well, it is my understanding that the U.S.S.R. may in future allow its Inuit to attend the Inuit Cirum-Polar conferences. The Inuit of Canada, Greenland and Alaska will be pleased to hear of this, but must exercise extreme diplomacy in ensuring that they do not become involved in the fruitless ideological debate that can result from living under different political systems.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

RETENTION OF INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT DIVISION URGED

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the people of Cape Breton Island have been hearing rumours for some time that the Government plans to disband the Industrial Development Division of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. Such a move would be a terrible mistake.

The division has played an important role in helping diversify the economy of Cape Breton. That is why the 250 people who attended a meeting on Tuesday night in Sydney unanimously passed a motion calling on the Government not to scrap the division. Employers who attended the meeting acknowledged that without the division they might never have come to Cape Breton. Mayor David MacDonald of North Sydney called it "the vital component for the continuing search for success in Cape Breton".

The role of the IDD should be increased, not ended. Its work cannot be shifted to Enterprise Cape Breton. That body has too narrow a mandate for the job. I urge the Government to follow the wishes of the people of that island and retain a body which has done so much to help Cape Breton.

MULTICULTURALISM

LEGAL STATUS OF MULTICULTURALISM

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister responsible for Multiculturalism): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, December 1st, Canadians witnessed the implementation of yet another promise made by the Conservative Government with the introduction of the Bill on Multiculturalism, as promised by our Prime Minister in 1984, as well as the creation of a Parliamentary Committee on Multiculturalism.

This legislation reaffirms the freedom already enjoyed by Canadians from all ethnic origins, to maintain, improve and share our cultural heritage. It acknowledges that all Canadians are equal partners.

To those who want a separate department, I will say: "Beware lest you create a multicultural ghetto!" To those who want a commissioner for multiculturalism, I will say: "Beware of sterile duplication!" The Human Rights Commission as well as the Parliamentary Committee on Multiculturalism already are adequately filling the bill.

To conclude, multiculturalism affects all Canadians and promotes harmony and stability in this country. I take pride in being a citizen of the first country in the world to pass a legislation on multiculturalism.

December 1st, Mr. Speaker, was not a symbolic but an historic day.

Well done and thank you Canada!

SHIPBUILDING

NEED FOR GOVERNMENT TO AWARD CONTRACTS IN QUEBEC

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, today, another 450 workers from the yards at Lauzon near Quebec City have come to ask for work. Last week they came from Halifax, and the week before they came from Vickers in Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, workers from the Davie Yard at Lauzon, Quebec, want two frigates to go to Lauzon near Quebec City.

My advice to the Conservatives is as follows: This Government must award shipbuilding contracts to yards in the Maritimes and Quebec. If Quebec yards are not going to build frigates, they must have other work because these are very skilled workers.

ENERGY

FEDERAL INITIATIVES TO ASSIST ECONOMY OF ALBERTA

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, the Alberta economy will resume real growth this year, and expansion will continue in 1988. A 1 per cent increase is forecast by the Investment Dealers Association of Canada in its November report.

In 1985 this Government removed the Liberal National Energy Program which devastated the west. In 1986 this Government removed the unilaterally imposed federal Petroleum Gas Revenue Tax which raped Alberta of $56 billion. When world energy prices fell, we implemented the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program to assist small and medium-sized producers.

These federal initiatives, provincial royalty holidays, and drilling incentives, plus the recent stability of crude oil prices, have renewed investor confidence. Three times as many oil rigs are working today compared to one year ago. Deliveries of natural gas are expected to increase.

Livestock producers have benefited from higher cattle, hog and milk prices, plus lower feed and oil prices. Calgary is hosting the 1988 Winter Olympic Games which will contribute as much as $800 million and 19,000 person-years of employment in Alberta.

Free trade provides an even brighter future. We must secure our export markets. The red meat, petrochemical and petroleum industries in Alberta all support free trade. The prospects for Alberta look excellent and will contribute to the well-being of this whole country.

POSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, Canadians would like to know the Liberal Party's position on the Mulroney-Reagan Trade Agreement.

On October 26 this year, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) said in the House and I quote: "We will not live with it." He also said: "We are going to tear the deal up".

After two years of hesitation, many people thought the Liberals were finally going to deal with an issue that is so fundamental to the future of our country. Unfortunately, they were wrong.

Last Monday, the Leader of the Opposition told the newspaper La Presse that he was in favour of the principle of free trade and would like to reopen negotiations with the Americans to improve some of the terms of the Agreement.

Does the Leader of the Opposition really believe the Americans will make concessions to Canada, once the Agreement has been signed, sealed and delivered? And does he believe that a few superficial changes can nullify an agreement that is fundamentally bad and that challenges our sovereignty?

Clearly, the Leader of the Opposition has no intention of providing any serious opposition to the Free Trade Agreement. He is clearly in favour of a bilateral trade agreement with the United States and can hardly claim otherwise.

The Leader of the Official Opposition is a continentalist who has come out of the closet. Only the Members of the NDP are truly in a position to oppose a trade agreement that is an outright betrayal of Canadian interests and Canadian autonomy.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

PROPOSED PENSIONS FOR HOMEMAKERS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the Government recognizes the value of work done in the home and the contribution which homemakers make to society. Homemakers need better protection under our pension system and the Government is committed to finding a way of providing this.

In its recent report "Building Benefits for Homemakers" the Canada Pension Plan Advisory Board re-examines its previous "deemed earnings" approach in which it now finds inconsistencies related to the "earnings-benefit" link. The Board now favours a system of annual credit splitting between spouses.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has described the report as timely and valuable, and it will certainly contribute to a better understanding of this very complex problem.

CHILD CARE

NATIONAL STRATEGY—UNDERFUNDING OF NATIVE CHILD CARE AGENCIES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, the federal Government's national strategy on child care, which was announced today, fails to give sufficient recognition to the priority needs of native families and children.

Across the country over the past few years First Nations have assumed the responsibility for delivering child care and child welfare services. However, their ability to provide these services comparable to non-native agencies has been hampered due to underfunding by the federal Government. The strategy announced today does not respond to the serious underfunding problems of native child care agencies.

In Manitoba, for example, negotiations on a renewed child welfare agreement have yet to take place. I remind the Government that the 1983 unanimous report of the Special Committee on Indian Self-Government identified child welfare as a critical area for Indian control.

The responsibility, ability, and jurisdiction of Indian Governments and their agencies to provide quality child care and child welfare services on a par with other Governments must be recognized and adequately assisted by the federal Government.

BILLY BISHOP, V.C.—PETITION SEEKING WITHDRAWAL OF DEROGATORY FILM

Mr. Stan Graham (Kootenay East—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, further to the ongoing saga of Billy Bishop, holder of the Victoria Cross, Distinguished Service Order, Military Cross, Distinguished Flying Cross, Croix de guerre, and a host of other honours, I would like the House and his character assassins at the National Film Board to be aware of the fact that as of November 27 of this year there had been received on Parliament Hill 16,365 names on a petition asking that the film "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss" be removed from circulation.

In addition, there have been representations from various organizations representing 57,312 Canadians who still believe that Billy Bishop is a national hero, even if the National Film Board does not.

CHILD CARE

NATIONAL STRATEGY—OMISSION OF REFERENCE TO PARENTAL LEAVE

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, today the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) tabled his report on child care. It is unfortunate that that child care report mentions not a word about parental leave even though witness after witness appearing before the Special Committee on Child Care recommended it. In fact, one of the recommendations of the Special Committee was on parental leave.

There is not so much as a whisper or a tittle in the report about parental leave. This does not provide parents with any flexibility in meeting their child care needs. It is a blot on the escutcheon of Parliament that the Government has refused to respond to an obvious need, namely, parental leave, under the child care program.

AWARDS AND DECORATIONS

BISHOP CROWLEY AWARD WINNER SISTER MARGOT POWER

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, every year the English-speaking Catholic community in Montreal unites to review its accomplishments and commitments in our city. The occasion becomes the more special because, in the name of Bishop Crowley, leadership is cited and acknowledged.

At the Bishop Crowley Awards Night last Tuesday, following an exhibition under the theme "Crossroads, Where We Meet", and a musical and dance review put on by the students of the D'Arcy McGee and Pierrefonds Comprehensive High Schools, the awards committee announced that Sister Margot Power had been elected for the Bishop Crowley Award.

Sister Margot, best known for her role as principal, teacher, and friend to the students of Sacred Heart School, was also Superior of her Order from 1965 to 1973. After her official retirement Sister Margot became an advocate for the underprivileged in the lower section of Montreal and helped many to understand their rights under social legislation.

For her work as a teacher, for her leadership, and for her witness to love in a very real world, we salute Sister Margot's extraordinary contribution. She sets an example for all of us.

SHIPYARDS

CONSTRUCTION OF FRIGATES—AWARDING OF CONTRACTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, why is the Government putting off its decision about awarding the frigate contract? Why is it not making other decisions which could provide work for the other Quebec shipyards?

Mr. Speaker, we know that the Government has had the figures for quite a while, but it is still reluctant to make a decision, and this creates conflicts between the regions. The more we wait, the more tension there is.

We also know that the price of St. John's Shipyard is closed until the end the December, after which the negotiations will have to be reopened.

Mr. Speaker, is this what the Government really intends, to reopen the contract and create even more tension between the regions?

CANADA POST CORPORATION

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION CREATED BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, Canada Post is closing rural post offices and installing superboxes for new residential projects, thus creating second class citizens.

At the same time, the Minister responsible for the Canada Post Corporation is allowing an increase of up to 42 per cent in postal rates while denying home delivery service and rural post offices to thousands of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, this Government does not believe that Canadians are entitled to equal services for equal prices.

How can Canadians be asked to pay the same price for stamps while denying some of them services that other Canadians have always enjoyed?

This Governement is creating discrimination among Canadians.

DAY CARE

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF FUNDS GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO ALLOT TO DAY CARE SYSTEM

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Based on the rate of increase in the amounts allocated to daycare centres, which is 22 per cent a year, the federal Government would have spent $5.1 billion over the next seven years without the program announced this morning.

The Government has announced today that it will invest $5.4 bilion of new funds in child care.

Mr. Speaker, this is a gross distortion of the facts. The Government will invest only $250 million, or $35 million a year.

I would like the Minister to tell us why the Government says that it will invest $5.4 billion in new funds when the fact is that it would have spent about the same amount without this program.

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Government has come forward with a massive expansion of subsidized child care. At present about half of the 220,000 spaces in Canada are subsidized. The program brings in 200,000 additional subsidized spaces over seven years.

• (1420)

I will try to be as kind as I might, but the Hon. Member should realize that what we are spending as a Government of Canada on child care per year right now is $140 million. If she looks at $140 million a year times the seven years, it gives her about $1 billion. If she takes that $1 billion against the $5.4 billion, she will find it is an increase of $4.4 billion over seven years.

The Hon. Member is also wrong in that she has to add an additional $1.7 billion annually which is in child tax credits and which is in income deductions allowed by the Minister of Finance. Once the Hon. Member puts all those figures together she will find, for example, that there is in fact a 400 per cent increase rather than a reduction.

Mrs. Pépin: It's a shell game.

QUERY WHY PRIME MINISTER BROKE PROMISE ABOUT MAJOR DAY CARE SERVICES PLAN

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He had promised us a major day care services plan. He broke his promise. With the program unveiled this morning by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, 1.8 million children will have no place in day care centres.

Mr. Speaker, I would like the Prime Minister to tell us what he intends to do for these children, for this million children who will have no place, and why he broke the promise he had made to the parents of these children?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has fulfilled his promises to the children of Canada. The Prime Minister has fulfilled his promises to the families of Canada. Again, I do not mind a good debate, but I wish the Hon. Member would look into the exact figures.

First, she talks about 1.9 million children. She is taking for granted, as did other researchers, including Katie Cooke, that every family, every parent wants their children in child care. That is not the case. What we came in with was a choice, a choice to expand the spaces. It is a choice to increase into capitalization, 75 per cent—25 per cent, which never existed, and her Government did not even think about. In all the years it was around, it only used CAP.

Not only are we bringing in subsidization on the spaces, but also on the operating, the initiatives fund, and an increase of families who can afford to keep their children at home. I say to the Hon. Member that, when I analysed the Liberal paper, I found we went way beyond anything that Party was going to do in opposition and, generally, it used irresponsibility even along those lines.

SCOPE OF PLAN

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is again directed to the Prime Minister. Nearly two million children will still not have proper child care. There are no tax breaks for the people who cannot afford child care. For those parents lucky enough to find child care for their children, there is no national standard of quality that we demand for our children.

Why is the Prime Minister content with a plan that will take seventy years to solve the day care problem of 1987? Why is he content with that plan?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member puts the very same question in English. She again bases her argument on the fact that every parent and every family wants to be fitted into one mould of child care. That is not the case. That is the first point.

Second, if she takes a look at the number of spaces in Canada, 220,000 spaces, of which half are subsidized by the Government of Canada, she will find that not only are we now on a 75 per cent—25 per cent basis helping on the capital side, but also on the subsidy side. The other point that is so interesting is that the provinces, which also want to expand the child care system, thought, both last night and when they looked again at it this morning, that it is an excellent program. They know and we know this is an excellent day for women, families, and especially children.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—TIMETABLE FOR PRODUCING FINAL TEXT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last October when the trade agreement with the Americans was signed, the Prime Minister and his Minister said there were just a few small legal points that needed clearing up. Last night when the talks broke off, Mr. Murphy, the chief U.S. negotiator, was reported as saying: "Hopefully, we can come up with a decent deal". I thought there was a deal made two months ago, so I have to ask the Prime Minister what is the timetable the Government now has for this very critical economic document?

Will there be a final text before the committee of the Commons has completed its hearings next week? Will there be a final text before the Prime Minister signs an agreement on January 2?

Are we going to ask Santa Claus to come down the chimney with a deal as part of a Christmas present? What are we waiting for? What is the hold-up? Will the Prime Minister please explain to this Parliament and to the country what is going on with this document? And why have the talks broken down?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we had a good deal on October 4 and we have a good deal today. We are in the process of translating that into a legal text. Just as quickly as the legal text is available, we will make it available to my hon. friend.

As we have indicated many times, contrary to the tradition of the Liberal Government in dealing with important commercial transactions, there will be ample opportunity for all Members of the House of Commons to debate and consider this matter in a very exhaustive way. So my hon. friend, if he is just a little more patient, will no doubt have a final text and no doubt, given the spirit of fairness which has motivated him throughout, he will want to read it carefully and decide whether he is in favour or against.

REQUEST THAT SIGNING OF AGREEMENT BE DELAYED

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would be more than pleased to have the opportunity to read it. I am not just sure if there will be anything to read before the Minister signs the deal. That is the question we want to ask the Prime Minister.

Does he really think it is fair and proper to go ahead and sign an agreement on January 2 when we do not yet even have the final text, and when there is no apparent timetable to have a text before the agreement is even signed? Does he not think it would be proper for him to be in contact with the President of the United States to ask for a delay in the signing of the agreement for at least another month or two months so that the Canadian House of Commons will have an opportunity to read and review that document properly, and the Canadian people in all the sectors throughout this country who will be affected will have the same opportunity?

Is it not in the principle of fairness that the Prime Minister should delay his proposed plans to go to the California ranch and sign this deal, so that Canadians can have a chance to participate fully as is proper under a democratic system?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): With respect, Mr. Speaker, January 2 is a day of no great significance to Canadians or to the House of Commons.

Mr. Broadbent: Right!

Mr. Tobin: Right on!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: This is a date of some significance in American legislation. The Government of Canada will do what it has to do with regard to an international trade treaty when it is fully satisfied that that treaty is completely consistent with the objectives and the agreements of October 3 and October 4. That is the manner and the time frame during which that will take place, not a minute before and not a minute after.

NATIONAL STRATEGY—CREATION OF CHILD CARE SPACES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. His Government has allocated $5.4 billion for a child care program which promises only to double the number of services for young children within seven years. Yet child care spaces doubled between 1974 and 1980 and again between 1980 and 1986. Does the Prime Minister really think that a program that merely stabilizes, or even reduces the rate of growth of child care, is what Canadian families have been waiting for since the Prime Minister made his strong promises of action in 1984?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is again using figures that are not correct, and I want to explain them to her.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Oh, thanks a lot, Teach.

Ms. Mitchell: I can read, thank you.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I thought you might like that. If the Hon. Member takes a look at the doubling of spaces in the period mentioned by the Hon. Member, she will find that what she is looking at is a doubling of spaces in total, subsidized and non-subsidized. When we take a look at the 220,000 spaces now in place, we find that approximately half of those spaces are subsidized. The 220,000 additional spaces over seven years are an increase from roughly 100,000 subsidized spaces to 300,000 subsidized spaces. That is the extra commitment of the federal and provincial Governments.

• (1430)

In addition to that there is always the possibility and likelihood, as I believe will happen, that other additional spaces not subsidized will be created in exactly the kind of period and configuration, even if you look over the last two years. The point I am making to the Hon. Member is not to mix up subsidized and non-subsidized.

Right now there are 100,000 spaces on the subsidized side, and we are moving to 300,000 in seven years.

Ms. Mitchell: Thank you for the arithmetic lesson, but the Minister is not very sharp if he does not know that 200,000 spaces will not meet the needs of Canadian families.

CHILD TAX CREDITS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, with deindexation of family allowances and child tax credits the federal Government will have removed from families the amount of $1.5 billion per year by the year 1991.

Will the Minister acknowledge that even with this child care program in place, families will still lose over $500 million a year which his Government has taken from families? What kind of fairness is this for Canadian families?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada is roughly doubling the spaces in seven years. I have given you the subsidized figure and you might as well accept it because that is the way it is.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I apologize, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member should recognize that presently the Government of Canada is paying $1.7 billion to families, which will be increased by another $2.3 billion over seven years. You have to add that, $1.7 billion and $2.3 billion.

She should also remember that in this whole program, $4.4 billion of the $5.4 billion is new money, federal plus provincial. That is a massive increase in this area.

If she believes that somehow there should be additional money within the capacity of the Government and taxpayers of Canada and that we should use only the one model which she has always used, I suggest to her that parents in Canada do not accept that.

CONFLICTS OF INTEREST

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION ON STEVENS AFFAIR

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and has to do with the conflict of interest guidelines. On September 9, 1985, the Prime Minister wrote Hon. Members, and I quote: "—the ultimate responsibility for the ethical standards of the federal government rests with the Cabinet and, more particularly, with me." In light of today's media reports that the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion allegedly breached the conflict of interest rules on 14 occasions, is the Prime Minister now prepared to admit that he did neglect his duty by failing to ensure compliance with the conflict of interest guidelines and, in addition, can he tell Canadian taxpayers that they will immediately be reimbursed the $650,000 they paid in lawyers' fees? Is he prepared to promise to do that?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, rather than rely on media reports, the Parker Commission Report will be tabled at three o'clock or thereabouts. The Hon. Member will be able to read it—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Don't be too sure of that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: —after which there will be a statement released by the Prime Minister in response to it.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York South—Weston on a supplementary.

PAYMENT OF FORMER MINISTER'S LEGAL FEES

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. After the Minister's resignation, the Prime Minister said: "It is my belief that Mr. Stevens will be fully vindicated and will return to Cabinet where he has served with such distinction and competence". Based on that belief, the Prime Minister approved of the payment of the former Minister's legal fees in the total amount of $650,000.

In view of the fact that the Parker Inquiry has found the former Minister guilty on 14 counts of breaching the conflict of interest guidelines, will the Prime Minister explain to the people of Canada why the taxpayers of Canada should be paying the former Minister's legal fees?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it would be a breach of the traditions of the House to respond to that question. The report will be tabled at three o'clock. There will be lots of opportunity for questions and debate after that.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—DISPUTE SETTLEMENT MECHANISM—MARITIME TRANSPORTATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Despite what Mr. Ritchie and Ambassador Reisman said yesterday, the Prime Minister denied that the two countries are now renegotiating the trade agreement.

Considering that Mr. Murphy, the trade negotiator for the United States, repeated today that negotiations are now taking place and he is hoping to get a new deal, is the Prime Minister prepared to be frank with Canadians and say that negotiations have once again resumed on something we thought was settled? More specifically, will he confirm to the House that they are bogged down on two specifics, changes the Americans want in the dispute settlement mechanism on the one hand and changes in the agreement as it affects maritime transportation on the other?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I stand by the statement and the explanation which I gave my hon. friend yesterday in regard to the status of the discussions. I refer the Leader of the New Democratic Party to a statement to Canadian Press this morning by Ambassador Clayton Yeutter who said that continuing problems in drafting the final text of a trade deal should not jeopardize the accord. He made clear that Peter Murphy has no mandate to negotiate substantive changes in the deal and he expects the final text to mirror the deal reached early last month. That is exactly our position as well.

Mr. Broadbent: If the Prime Minister read further he would have discovered that Mr. Yeutter also added that he hopes the deal is still there.

WORDING OF AGREEMENT—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my understanding of that wording is exactly what Mr. Reisman, Mr. Murphy and Mr. Ritchie have been candid enough to say, that there has been a reopening of the substance of this deal. All Canadians understand that, whether or not the Prime Minister wants to agree in public.

If the Prime Minister is going to stick to what he is saying, that there is no negotiation on substance now, will he give us the assurance that there will be no change in the wording as it pertains to the dispute settlement mechanism and substance, and as it pertains to maritime transportation? Furthermore, as it is two months today since the Government of Canada was cornered into the last bad deal it made, will he give us assurances that no Canadian politicians will be going to Washington in the next 48 hours to confirm once again a bad deal for Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the NDP asks whether we can confirm the reopening of the substance of the deal, as he asserts. That has been formally denied by the American administration and by the Government of Canada. I hope that would satisfy my hon. friend.

He asks me to read a little further. Ambassador Yeutter, who is responsible for international trade policy for the Government of the United States of America, said this morning: "Simply because there are differences in the drafting process does not mean that the agreement is in any way jeopardized". He also said: "Ambassador Peter Murphy has no mandate to negotiate substantive changes in the deal".

I know that my hon. friend has reluctance in accepting Canadian explanations and has been dealing mostly with American news. Perhaps he will endorse the view of his American friends.

Mr. Broadbent: I know that the Prime Minister is always meticulous about his use of words. He will have noted that Mr. Yeutter said that Mr. Murphy has no mandate to negotiate change. Of course, if any final change is made it must be agreed to by the responsible politicians on both sides of the border.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER GIVE GUARANTEE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister is telling us that there will be no substantive change, will he guarantee that there will be no change in what has already been agreed to on maritime transportation and the dispute settlement mechanism? If he offers that unequivocal guarantee then we on this side will be prepared—dare I say it—to accept what he says in relation to that. Will he give us the guarantee that there will be no substantive change? If he does, then we will be in a position to verify it when we see the final words.

• (1440)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we know full well that we have not the slightest opportunity or capacity of persuading my hon. friend to endorse a free trade agreement, notwithstanding—

Mr. Broadbent: Not endorse.

Mr. Mulroney: —notwithstanding the tremendous benefits that it has brought to regions of this country, including, for example, his own riding which has benefited greatly from foreign investment, from free trade in the Auto Pact, and from liberalized trade.

Mr. Broadbent: Just be honest for once. I thought we were talking about free trade.

Mr. Mulroney: He is opposed to it for Canada, but he wants it for his own riding.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, with the usual solicitude and concern that my hon. friend says he has for the truth, I refer him, inasmuch as he asked me and Members of the House to deal with Mr. Yeutter's statement, I refer him to Mr. Yeutter's statement and I quote, "Yeutter also made clear that U.S. chief negotiator Peter Murphy has no mandate to negotiate substantive changes in the deal—"

Mr. Broadbent: Right!

Mr. Mulroney: "—and he expects the final text to mirror the deal reached early last month—"

Mr. Broadbent: He "expects".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: You blew it, Ed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—DETENTION OF CANADIAN CITIZEN—PHYSICAL MALTREATMENT

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and it concerns Balkar Singh, a Canadian citizen under arrest in India.

Can the Minister confirm that in the presence of a consular official and a doctor from our High Commission in New Delhi, allegations were made of torture to the feet, electrical wires to the face and genitals, hanging by the wrists, and beatings with a lathi stick, and that our doctor was able to see visible evidence of maltreatment?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly confirm that in the presence of both a consular representative of Canada, and a medical doctor, there was evidence given by Mr. Balkar Singh of physical abuse. It was the view of the Canadian doctor present that he had indeed been seriously physically mistreated.

We have protested that matter to the Government of India, and moreover have demanded that there be the immediate provision of adequate medical care and attention to Mr. Balkar Singh.

CANADIAN PROTEST TO GOVERNMENT OF INDIA

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): In view of the fact that Indian government officials today have both denied receiving a protest from the Canadian Government, and that there was any evidence of torture found on a medical inspection, can I have the assurance of the Minister that he has indeed lodged the strongest formal protest, and indicated to the Government of India that, should another such episode occur to any Canadian citizen, Canada would have to consider revoking the extradition treaty with India?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I was surprised to see press reports today indicating that the Indian High Commissioner thought that there had not been a protest lodged. A protest was lodged.

In order that the Indian High Commissioner could be in no doubt about it, I had him brought in this morning and we lodged it again. This is unusual diplomatic practice, but I wanted him not to underestimate the extent of the concern of the Canadian Government.

We also expect medical treatment to be made available immediately and adequately.

With regard to the question relating to the extradition treaty, it is at this stage hypothetical. But certainly one of the matters on which the extradition treaty is based is an understanding that both sides will respect the application of their law against people affected by that treaty.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—DEADLINE FOR SIGNING

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister keeps insisting that the only people who are concerned about this economic union package between Canada and the United States are the people of Oshawa. Obviously, he pays no attention to the farmers of Quebec, or to the members of the Atlantic Provinces Chamber of Commerce who yesterday refused to endorse this package.

We have had Mr. Reisman saying, "This economic union package is being renegotiated"; we have had Mr. Murphy saying, "Hopefully we can come up with a decent deal, however it is difficult to make a determination". We have had Mr. Yeutter in his attempt to clarify matters, I am sure at the request of the Office of the Prime Minister, saying, "Hopefully we will still have a deal".

Why does the Prime Minister insist on sticking to the January 2 deadline for signing this deal when, in fact, that January 2 deadline is being used and can be used by the Americans to hammer the Prime Minister and his Government into capitulating once again when there are differences of interpretation in negotiating the final text of this economic union package? Why does the Prime Minister do that?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, first I think it should be made very clear that there is no economic union. This is a trade deal. That is an absolutely false statement that the Hon. Member is making to the House.

Second, we got a terrific trade agreement on October 4. We got a tremendous agreement. It is great for Canada, and it will be great for Newfoundland, and the Hon. Member knows that.

The lawyers are still meeting; the negotiators are consulting their principals at the present time. As Clayton Yeutter said very clearly this morning about Peter Murphy, "His instructions are to try to put the agreement of October 3 into the necessary language". That is what is going on right now.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, it is apparent that the only thing that is going on right now is that Canada's negotiator, Mr. Reisman, who told us the truth two days ago, has been gagged, and that the United States negotiator, Mr. Murphy, who told us the truth last night, has been gagged this morning by Mr. Yeutter. The people of Canada are not interested in gag actions, they are interested in the truth.

If the Parliamentary Secretary and the Prime Minister are so sure that this package is as good as they say it is, I will repeat my question of two days ago to the Prime Minister, a question he refused to answer.

Can he give this House an assurance today that when the detailed language is released, presumably next week, or at least that was the case yesterday, there will be words contained in that language that will clearly and unambiguously exempt regional development programs from U.S. trade law as part of this economic union agreement? It is a simple question, and I would like a simple answer. Yes or no?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): The Hon. Member will have to wait until the final agreement comes out to see what is in that final agreement.

Mr. Tobin: You don't know.

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member likes to quote people chapter and verse.

Mr. Tobin: Answer the question.

Mr. McDermid: Let me quote a former Minister in the Liberal Government by the name of the Hon. Gerald Regan who stated, "When I was Minister of Trade—in Mr. Trudeau's Government . . . I recognized the importance of obtaining better guarantees of access to the vital American market to which Canada sends the lion's share of our exports. I sought to move in that direction by initiating free trade talks with the U.S. on a sector by sector basis. The defeat of the Liberals ended that effort—but I have come to the conclusion that the present free trade project is a more meaningful—courageous—and important undertaking than our more limited negotiations".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT—PROTECTION OF CERTAIN AGRICULTURAL SECTORS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister of Canada. Yesterday, in Quebec City, some Quebec farmers accused the Minister of State (Agriculture) of being a liar. They said that he had lied concerning the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States. My question is this:

In view of this situation in Quebec, could the Prime Minister certify to Quebecers and other Canadians that no farm subsidy will be affected by this agreement and that our marketing boards will keep their existing powers? Finally, Mr. Speaker, can he certify that poultry farmers will be protected in spite of the Canada-United States Agreement?

[English]

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the marketing boards are in place. As a matter of fact, one of the interesting things about this agreement is that we can create new marketing boards, if the producers so desire, because the underpinnings are there.

I felt very badly about the attack on the Minister of State for Agriculture yesterday in Quebec. He was quoted as saying that he can take the abuse but he did not appreciate being called a liar because he is not one. I think anyone who knows that Minister would agree with that.

• (1450)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Nystrom: Not only the farmers in Quebec, Mr. Speaker, but those in Saskatchewan, Ontario and the other Canadian provinces are also against this agreement.

As our Whip has reported, Mr. Speaker, in Saskatchewan they voted last week against this deal by a vote of 75 to 64!

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF IMPORT QUOTAS TO PROTECT CANADIAN ICE CREAM AND YOGURT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The Minister of State also said that he had asked the Minister for International Trade to use import quotas to protect Canadian ice cream and yogurt against American imports. Could the Prime Minister indicate now whether his Government has adopted its Minister's suggestion? After Quebec farmers gave yesterday the Minister a piece of their mind, does the Government now believe that this is a fair deal, giving the United States a horse in exchange for a rabbit?

[English]

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, one is very tempted, after listening to a question like that, to refer to a certain part of the horse. However, I will resist that.

I can say that there are options available within the free trade agreement to add products to the import control list which would require quotas. That still exists, but the Hon. Member is saying we should do it right now when an agreement has not yet been signed and the agreement would not come into effect until January 1, 1989. The Hon. Member may find out, and I think he will, that our agricultural industry will do very well under this agreement.

TAX EXEMPTIONS QUERY

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance who stated in his White Paper of June 18, 1987, that the conversion of tax exemptions to credits was a key element in achieving a fairer income tax system and that "converting exemptions to credits would direct more resources to those in need and reduce the after-tax value of benefits to higher-income Canadians". Would the Minister tell the House how he reconciles that stated goal with the fact that today's release on child care showed the bulk of the assistance going to middle-class families by way of tax exemptions and only tiny increases in tax credits for low-income families?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in both the tax reform paper and the policy that was released today, I have said throughout that we had to give parental choice. That was a hallmark of the program. We as a Government and, I think, as a society do not want to dictate to people the manner in which their children should receive care.

The Hon. Member will be aware the Minister of Finance increased the child tax credit which is now approximately $480 per year maximum to $525, I believe, next calendar year. Additionally, in calendar 1988, $100 will be added to the child care tax credit and it will go to $200 per year thereafter.

The Hon. Member has asked a valid question on the deductions. She is a serious Member of the House. Perhaps the Hon. Member would look at what would have happened to middle-income women in the workplace if the only option they had was to put their children in child care centres or to give external child care and if they had lost their deductions they would have been worse off than they are under this program. That is why we came up with that choice and configuration.

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON TAX CREDITS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I agree that the $4,000 in tax exemptions will be helpful to middle-class parents. However, I repeat my question. What happened to the commitment to assist low-income people? That commitment was supposed to have been a key objective in the review of social transfers and related tax provisions that was launched in the February, 1986, Budget. I repeat, has the Government changed its policy? Is it no longer proceeding with the move to increase the move toward tax credits?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, no, the Government has not changed its policy. I do not want to be repetitive. I would ask the Hon. Member to examine the need to maintain an expense deduction in order that women in the workforce may have care for their children. As well, what is so important to the program is the subsidized spaces, and I wish to emphasize that.

There are only 100,000 subsidized spaces today. The new program will give us another 200,000 subsidized spaces over a seven-year period. Those subsidized spaces will give families in the lower and lower middle-income levels access along with the increase in the child tax credit. It was for that reason, to try to meet all those needs, because obviously families are not alike today, that those changes were brought about, and that is the explanation.

SHIPBUILDING

DIVISION OF CONTRACTS BETWEEN ST. LAWRENCE AND ATLANTIC SHIPYARDS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Parry (Kenoray—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence.

Considering the Government's inability to formulate a genuine merchant shipping policy, the frigate contract is synonymous with survival for Canadian shipyards. Could the Minister give Canadians the assurance that the Government will let fairness prevail by announcing that contracts will be equitably divided among St. Lawrence and Atlantic shipyards?

[English]

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have on two previous occasions answered that question in the House. I have told Hon. Members that the Government will take into consideration the defence based industries across Canada. When a decision has been made on whether further frigate building will be announced, we will announce it.

QUERY WHETHER JOBS RESULTING FROM CONTRACTS WILL REMAIN IN CANADA

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Considering that the Government failed to use the trade agreement as an opportunity to table a Canadian shipping policy, could the Government give Canadians the assurance that the jobs involved in these contracts will remain in Canada?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member ought to know, and we have said this many times, that most of the present activity in our shipyards in the result of contracts awarded by the federal Government. These contracts have been awarded across the country, from British Columbia to the Atlantic. All our shipyard workers have been able to benefit, and the Government has no intention of changing its policy or having its ships or equipment built outside our shipyards here in Canada.

SHIPYARDS

REQUEST FOR DETAILS ON FRIGATE CONSTRUCTION CONTRACT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, to the Minister of National Defence or to the Minister for Small Businesses.

Yesterday, as the House will recall, Quebec Minister Daniel Johnson asked that his province be allowed two frigates as its share of the frigate contracts.

This morning, the frigate committee, 450 employees from the shipyards at Lauzon near Quebec City, came here to demand work and a fair share of the contracts, in other words, two frigates for the shipyards in Quebec.

Understandably, the people in Saint John, New Brunswick, want all the frigates to be built there. The Minister of Employment and Immigration said to let Saint John do it all and to give nothing to Quebec. It was too expensive!

My question is quite straightforward, and the people of Quebec and New Brunswick want to know the truth. Does the Government intend to split construction of the six frigates, in whatever way? Is there going to be a split, yes or no?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, to be perfectly honest, this is just putting words into the mouth of the Minister of Immigration. They say they are so frank and honest, Mr. Speaker. Hon. Members opposite are full of their own honesty. They act like they have a monopoly on truth, and then they put words into the mouth of the Minister of Employment and Immigration. He never said that.

At the present time, the Minister of Supply and Services is meeting with these workers to inform them of the Government's position. As we have said so many times, first of all, the Government will have to decide whether it intends to proceed with construction on the other frigates. The Government will then decide where they will be built. As soon as those decisions have been made, there will be an official announcement.

DISTRIBUTION OF WORK BETWEEN SHIPYARDS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the same Minister, belated though his decisions may be. The Minister of State (Transport) has already announced last July that the main frigate contract would be awarded to St. John's. It may be that the Minister of State (Transport)—now leaving the House—lied to Minister Daniel Johnson, but I take her word for it.

Second, the Minister has just said that officials are meeting with the workers to tell them our decision.

Can you be honest, frank and sincere? With respect to frigate building work-sharing, will the six frigates be built at the New Brunswick shipyards? If so, what shipbuilding contracts will be awarded to Quebec shipyards? What will the Government decide?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I should think that if the whole thing boils down to a question of honesty, one is honest when one is ready to make and announce a decision. We will not make an announcement—

Mr. Malépart: When?

Mr. Valcourt: When the Government is ready, Sir!

INDIAN AFFAIRS

NATIVE PEOPLE'S LAND CLAIMS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I am sure he is aware that British Columbia is a signatory to the 1982 Constitution Act and to the Meech Lake Accord. Could he advise the House and the native people of British Columbia what steps he has taken, either directly with Premier Vander Zalm or with the Government of B.C., to get comprehensive claims moving in British Columbia, particularly those of the Nishga tribal council in the Nass Valley.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the comprehensive claims policy of the Government which was announced gives ample opportunity for a conclusion, hopefully a successful conclusion, of the comprehensive claims. We are having discussions, as the Hon. Member knows, in which he has been involved, with the Nishga people. A negotiator has been put forward by the Government of Canada and hopefully the claims process will proceed.

The Member is right that there is a responsibility on behalf of two levels of government to enter into these discussions. We hope that will come to fruition as we continue the negotiations. The negotiations have not stopped, Mr. Speaker. They are ongoing.

SOUTH MORESBY—SETTLEMENT OF TITLE ISSUES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. Could he advise whether he and his Cabinet colleagues have arrived at a position where they can state publicly now that negotiations will take place in regard to the outstanding title issues in South Moresby with the council of the Haida Nations? It is something that Miles Richardson has discussed with the Prime Minister and his staff and also with the Minister of Indian Affairs and the Minister of the Environment.

Is the Prime Minister determined to move forward so that South Moresby can, in fact, become the reality he had started moving it toward?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we all recognize the importance of South Moresby. The steps taken by my colleague, by the Deputy Prime Minister and the Prime Minister, in the negotiations which led to the creation of the national park reserve on South Moresby, the steps taken by the Government of Canada and the Government of British Columbia to provide for economic development with the South Moresby National Park Reserve, are well known to the Hon. Member.

The Hon. Member is also fully aware of the comprehensive claim policy which establishes that only six claims can be under negotiation at one time. Hopefully we will have successful claims negotiations where we have a mandate, and then new claims that are recognized by the Government of Canada will come forward.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question. The Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

INEQUALITY OF SERVICES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. I think he just left, so in that case, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. By closing rural post offices and installing superboxes in new developments, Canada Post is creating second-class citizens. How can the Minister authorize postal rate increases of up to 42 per cent, when he is denying thousands of Canadians home mail delivery and rural post offices? Does he believe Canadians are entitled to equal service for equal rates?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, nobody is happy with postal rate increases but inflation makes that a fact of life. The fact that the rate increase of 1 cent a letter is less than inflation is a tribute to the management of the Post Office.

Incidentally, to do what the Hon. Member is requesting and to have door to door delivery to every home in Canada, would require a stamp price of 60 cents a letter. Is it the position of the Liberal Party that it wants stamp rates to go up to 60 cents a letter in order to reach the goals about which the Hon. Member spoke?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Provide more service and you wouldn't have to raise it.

COST OF STRIKES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister tell this House and Canadians if the proposed increase going up to 42 per cent will be used to pay the strike-breakers in the last two strikes as well as the cost of the advertising campaign during the strikes? Will the Minister deposit in this House the cost of the two last strikes?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the cost of operating the Post Office is available from its annual report which every Member receives.

The Member will know that increased costs have been met, in part, by a rate increase of, I think, about 40 per cent, in part by productivity increases of about 30 per cent, and in part by increased business of the Post Office. The Post Office has been operating in an efficient and effective fashion and I think we ought to congratulate it on that.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties. I think you will find that there is unanimous consent to revert to Tabling of Documents to allow the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) to table the Parker Commission report.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the proposal of the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis). Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the customary question that we ask on Thursdays as to what business the Government has to call for the coming week.

At the particular request of the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) I again want to ask when the Government might be bringing into the House Bill C-30 and, at the particular request of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), we would like to know when the Government will bring in Bill C-33 on public service pensions.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the House that we are working to complete Bill C-87 at report stage and third reading. We hope that Bill C-87 and perhaps Bill C-54 at second reading might be completed by tomorrow.

We have discussed a package of Bills at both second reading stage, report stage and third reading with the opposition House Leaders with a view to completing a reasonable package by the Christmas recess. We will continue those discussions with the opposition House Leaders and try to arrange a timetable which is of most convenience to all Parties, including the critics, and also to provide as much notice as possible.

With respect to the two specific questions, I would advise the House that we have made considerable progress, thanks to co-operation from all Parties, throughout the fall. We have reached a point, however, where there are some 13 Bills at committee involving some nine different areas of jurisdiction. We also have the external affairs committee travelling on the free trade question and, therefore, I have tried to organize the debate in the House so as not to load up committees presently considering Bills.

With specific reference to Bill C-30, my hon. friend will find that we presently have Bill C-74, which is an environmental Bill, before the appropriate legislative committee. Since many members on that committee are considering that Bill, we have not pushed to get Bill C-30 through.

Mr. Caccia: Come on.

Mr. Lewis: What is the point of having two environmental Bills at committee?

I welcome the support of my hon. friend from Ottawa—Vanier on Bill C-33. We are considering that and I believe that we will be bringing it forward in the very near future.

• (1510)

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I want it to be clear that I never gave my support to Bill C-33. It is a bad Bill, but I want to know what the Government is going to do with it because Members have been raising the matter in the House in Question Period. If the Government thinks it is a great Bill, when is it going to act on it?

Mr. Lewis: Sorry, I thought my hon. friend was definitely interested in pushing the Bill forward. I misread his keenness. We are trying to fit the menu to the situation and we will be bringing it forward as soon as possible.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I must have missed something. I heard the Liberal House Leader ask what the Business of the House would be next week. We heard a very long answer from the Minister, but he did not deal with the business of the House for next week. What is the business of the House next week?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to negotiate with other House Leaders on the floor of the House. We have had discussions with the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) with a view to trying to co-ordinate the Bills in which we and others, including him, have an interest, and meet the convenience of the critics.

My hon. friend will know that I, on behalf of the Government, am going to give consent to motions in the name of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) being moved by someone else in his Party. We are doing that in an effort to co-operate because he has another engagement and we understand that. We are trying to do the same thing with the Business of the House for next week.

Mr. Benjamin: That was a lot of help.

Mr. Gauthier: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, and maybe a question of privilege. You will remember that this morning I tried to get a copy of the child care document when it was tabled in this House. It took some time, but with your intervention we got one.

The report of the Parker Commission was tabled a few minutes ago in this House. I asked for a copy of that report but I could not get one because, I was told, it had been delivered to my office. I happen to be in the House of Commons. The document was tabled in the House of Commons. I ask that you intervene and get the document for all Members of this House.

Mr. Speaker: It is true that the Hon. Member asked me this morning if I could produce a document, and within a minute it was in fact produced.

Mr. Frith: He is trying it again.

Mr. Speaker: However, to do it twice in one day may be more difficult.

I have listened carefully to the Hon. Member. I also have asked for a copy of the report. I know there are people busily trying to accommodate not only the Chair but other Members, and I shall pursue it with diligence.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CUSTOMS TARIFF

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-87, an Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters and to amend or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee; and Motions Nos. 4 and 12 (Mr. Cassidy, p. 11449).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) had the floor for three minutes, but since he is not here, is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are now dealing with the third grouping of proposed amendments to Bill C-87, which we were discussing earlier today. The point at issue in these amendments is that of time, and the role the Parliament of Canada should be playing with respect to changes to customs and tariffs agreements made between our country and others.

While dealing with previous groupings of amendments this morning, we discussed why it is so important, indeed vital, that the House of Commons be involved in the decisions made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Cabinet concerning tariffs. I pointed out that this Bill covers some $2 billion worth of tariffs. I will not go over the implications of that again, but the two clauses to which we propose amendments today refer to the government proposal that those decisions it might make on an interim or ad hoc basis must come before this House within 180 days of their being made. To some people that may sound reasonable enough. It appears to be only about six months. That would give plenty of time, one would think, for the House to debate it, think about it, and deal with it properly.

However, I remind you and the House in general, Mr. Speaker, that when we talk about 180 days in Parliament, we are talking about 180 sitting days. This House seldom sits much over 180 days per year, so in this legislation we are granting authority to the Government to decide either to impose or to drop tariffs for virtually a year before this House will have a chance to look at it and decide whether or not it acceptable.

That runs completely counter to the principle that the House of Commons is the Chamber that makes decisions on whether or not people should be taxed, corporations should be taxed, or importers should be taxed on their goods sold in this country. This takes away the decision-making role of Parliament. It sets it aside for virtually one year, making it all but useless. Our amendment, which would change that 180 days to 60 days, is again being offered to both Clause 32 and Clause 61.

There are a couple of things I wish to say about Clause 61, but first I want to point out that there is a provision in Clause 32 which makes it clear that there will be times during the 60 days proposed that the House will not be able to sit because of an election and perhaps the Senate would be sitting during that time. I do not know why, but perhaps there will be some reason for the Senate to be sitting after the House has closed down before an election, and the sittings of that House are to be considered equally with our own in computing the 60 days we are proposing. Clause 32 says, among other things, that if something like that occurs and there is an election in progress, or the House cannot sit for some other reason, within 15 days after the resumption of that new Parliament a Bill would have to be presented and dealt with by the House of Commons. In that way the will of the people will be known on this particular item dealing with revenue and taxation.

Clause 61 has a slightly different slant to it. It deals with a period of time when the Governor in Council, which is the Cabinet, on a report of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that Canada's external financial position and its balance of payments are such as to require special measures respecting Canadian imports, may, by Order, subject any goods that originate in any country or any class of those goods to a surcharge over and above the customs duties imposed pursuant to this Act. We are talking about a special circumstance, a near financial emergency, in which the Minister of Finance would suggest to the Cabinet that a special surcharge on the import of a particular good or class of goods would be imposed.

It is my opinion that if the emergency is of that extent, it only makes sense for the House to be apprised of it and have dealt with it within 60 sitting days after the so-called emergency is brought forward. It is very critical for the role of the House of Commons that it be the place where decisions to impose extra charges are made. As I have pointed out, this has been fought for almost 800 years.

It is very difficult for us to know for how long we should continue to fight on this issue. Due to the grouping of motions and the decision to delay votes until all motions have been dealt with, we have had no response from government Members on where they stand on these particular proposals. We can, therefore, only continue to put the argument forward on each amendment because we have no idea whether our words are having any effect and whether the amendments will be accepted by the government side. As a consequence, I somewhat regret having to take this time to reiterate the point since we have not yet had a clear indication of what the backbenchers who are currently resident on the government side think about this issue.

All Members come to the House of Commons to represent their constituents and to be their voice in taxation matters. This particular Bill deals with the raising of revenue by way of import taxes, levies and duties. The proposal before us today would, in effect, do away with as much as $2 billion of revenues. That is an extremely significant amount if the Government intends eventually to balance the budget. Deficits have been running in the neighbourhood of $30 billion to $35 billion per annum. Therefore, we cannot easily throw away $2 billion without thorough consideration. This issue deserves the immediate response of the House of Commons.

We do not think that 60 sitting days puts undue pressure on the government of the day, whatever the era in which it may affect the Government. It is consistent with the principle of the report of the Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) who earlier recommended the swift passage of government financial Bills in order that back-benchers can have a proper and clear role to play in this Chamber. We therefore recommend to government Members these amendments in which we are proposing the reduction from 180 days to 60 sitting days of the House of Commons.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, we are presently debating Bill C-87, an Act respecting a harmonized tariff system and, in particular, Motions Nos. 4 and 12. Our concern with this Act is much greater under the circumstances surrounding the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement than it would ordinarily have been. Ordinarily this type of Bill, which is fairly technical and routine, would be dealt with in a superficial manner in that it suggests that we are getting ourselves into line with all the other countries of the world in the harmonized coding system for trade. However, the Bill becomes much more important under the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal because it will have a much greater impact than it would under ordinary circumstances. It therefore requires much closer scrutiny than would ordinarily have been given it.

As a result of the trade agreement certain tariffs will be put into effect almost immediately upon the signing of the agreement. Things which were routine in the past must now be questioned as a result of that agreement. Motions Nos. 4 and 12 are aimed at greater accountability of the Cabinet to Parliament. At present the Government can impose a tariff and ask for ratification of it by Parliament 180 days later. The barons faced King John because they wanted to go before the King more than once every two or three years to hear how much money he needed and what he needed it for.

The Government can now impose a tax on the people of Canada and need only ask Parliament for permission to do so more than a year later. The recommended changes in Clauses 32 and 61 would increase the responsibility of Cabinet to Parliament. Rather than being able to impose taxes and collect them for a year before having them ratified by Parliament, these amendments suggest that we reduce that time period to 60 days.

The Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement has brought the need for the accountability of the Cabinet to Parliament to the forefront. At present such an agreement can be signed by the Prime Minister, and the Government can bring forward a Ways and Means motion to impose or remove tariffs. That decision to impose or remove such tariffs will remain in effect for an entire year and, quite often, more than a year.

Our present year is 177 days. This Bill, at present, allows 180 days to be used up before the Government must come back to Parliament and have it ratified. Therefore, more than a year, at least 15 days into the next year, will be required before it is necessary to pass it. It seems wrong, in the view of democrats all over the world, to have a treaty signed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States, to be put in place and negotiated by people who are not Members of Parliament, nor representatives of the people, a treaty which will abrogate the laws not only of the Parliament of Canada, because those tariffs were put in place by the Parliament of Canada, but also the laws of the legislatures of the provinces.

This treaty about which we are talking, or any kind of treaty or any Ways and Means motion which changes taxes, customs and excise taxes, does so without compunction and can do so, leaving those changes in place for a whole year before they have to come to Parliament for ratification. A treaty does not have to be accountable to Parliament. It can take off a tariff which was put in place by Parliament, and it can be established technically as the law of the land just by the Government presenting the House with a motion which says that this is the action it intends to take.

Sometimes this motion is not even in the form of a Ways and Means motion, but in the form of a little line in a statement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) as to what he is going to do in the next year in his Budget. However, it has the effect of law before it is brought before the House and ratified.

The 180 days really means that the will of Parliament has been sidelined. If we establish that tariff in Parliament, it is the will of Parliament that it be there. If it is eliminated, it is eliminated for a whole year without the will of Parliament. The will of Parliament has been sidelined for a whole year. I suppose some people will say that is part of the sloppiness of Parliaments because they are democratic and take a long time, but the point we are attempting to make in this particular motion is that we do not think it is necessary to sideline these issues for 180 days. In fact, I have often wondered why Ways and Means motions were presented and then no action taken for such a long time. Perhaps it is the sloppiness of doing business in Parliaments, but it is not good democracy.

It makes one wonder if perhaps we should not take a good hard look at the process by which we make treaties part of the fibre of the country. A treaty is signed by the Prime Minister and it becomes part of the fibre of the country. It does not have to come before Parliament, as the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement does not have to come before Parliament, to be accepted. All that is required is for the Prime Minister to have it approved by his Cabinet, but Cabinet does not represent the will of the people. It might think it does because three years ago approximately 50 per cent of the people voted for this Government, but just before the Government was elected the Prime Minister said in a statement that he would never touch free trade. Perhaps we have to look at the structure under which treaties are carried into law by this Government.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is going to be very short. I think it is important to speak to Motion No. 4, tabled by the New Democratic Party, which would shorten the 180-day period we have now to sixty days. Mr. Speaker, I would like to stress that first of all, this goes against all legislation now in effect. The system has operated for many years under the 180-day period, and it works very well. The same applies to Motion No. 12, Mr. Speaker, especially this motion which concerns our balance of payments and any surcharges it may require. Reducing the period from 180 to sixty days could have a very negative impact on our economy.

Mr. Speaker, a while ago I heard Opposition Members wondering how Conservative Members would vote on these motions. I can assure them we will vote against the motions because, as I said in my comments on the initial motions and on the two I just mentioned, if they want to improve the Bill, I find it astonishing that this debate should be about anything but the motions in question. In any case, if Bill C-87 is not passed, the present legislation remains in effect. This would mean we did not deal with the problem of harmonization. So bearing this in mind, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be wise to stick to the subject of this debate and refrain from trying to widen the circle to include trade relations with the United States, among other issues.

[English]

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to join in this debate on Bill C-87. I might be quite prepared to do what the Parliamentary Secretary has just suggested and stick to the issue here and not express the concern about the Canada-U.S. trade deal that so many of us feel. However, let me leave that item and turn to Motions Nos. 4 and 12.

We are dealing with a Bill to provide for the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, and so on. We are debating a measure which will make changes in the way in which we operate our customs tariff system. We are proposing a change in the time limits with respect to two of these clauses, namely, that the time limit in both Clause 32 and Clause 61 should not be 180 days, as it is, but should be reduced to 60 days.

I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) and the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo). The argument my colleagues and I have been making is that this is a principle of parliamentary accountability. These motions address the importance of having Parliament, the ultimate court of this land, the representatives of the people gathered together to make the law of the land, presented with these changes, which have been negotiated by the executive of Government with other countries at a much earlier point than the Bill would allow. That argument is one that can be addressed from various perspectives. Some of my colleagues have argued from the perspective of our current concern about negotiations between Canada and the United States. One can equally make that argument in national, political, and historical terms and, for that matter, not just national historical terms but in terms of the history of Parliament of England, the Parliament of the Commonwealth and of the British Empire Dominions in times past.

My friend, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert, alluded to King John and that famous encounter with the Barons. He was a monarch whose fault may in fact have been efficiency, a desire to increase his power, even more than it was a matter of his tyranny. He was greeted by the Barons who demanded that his Government not be solely a Government of the executive, of the King and his advisers doing what they thought made sense, but to respect the powers of the people. Of course, given the status-ridden society that prevailed in England and other countries of feudal Europe at that time, the Barons saw themselves as the people who counted. They wanted the King to respect their position rather than act in an autocratic or arbitrary way.

• (1540)

The principle they were enunciating for King John at that time has come to be recognized by historians as a very important development in the history of Parliament. The principle that began in the time of King John stands today. The parliamentary Government in which we take pride is one which is government in the name of the Crown which must act here in Parliament.

It is completely inaccurate, indeed inadequate, for politicians who are sworn in as Ministers of the Crown to believe that what they initiate with their Departments and officials is inevitably right because it makes sense to them. There can be absolutely no doubt in the history of parliamentary Government in Canada that the executive brings its decisions here to ask for parliamentary approval.

Proposals in the form of Bills do not become the law of the land until they have been debated through several stages, considered in committee, and given the kind of detailed examination as we are involved in with Bill C-87 at the moment. It is simply a reflection of the traditions of Parliament to suggest that the decisions of the executive should be closely examined by Parliament long before 180 days, in the case of these tariff changes.

Many senior members of the Government are exactly those persons who made these arguments when they were in opposition. They are very familiar with the traditions of Parliament. Tragically, when they become Ministers, they forget those traditions and their back-benchers simply parrot the same line. They leave us with the impression that what makes sense to them is God-given insight on which one must act. It is nothing of the sort. Those decisions must be brought here and approved by Parliament.

Of course, given the political reality of their majority, they know that if they choose to press ahead with their policies, they can bull them through. However, they should have regard for history, tradition, and the nature of our Constitution to recognize the wisdom of having parliamentary consideration of these matters as early as possible.

If Members opposite are going to object to these two motions, as the Parliamentary Secretary just suggested, it is to their shame that I remind them of a long-serving Liberal Prime Minister of this country who is known to have uttered the phrase "Parliament if necessary, but not necessarily Parliament". He was known to believe he could proceed on his own and, if he could avoid debate on foreign affairs and policy relating to other countries, he would do so. There was a lack of debate on these matters for a number of years.

In that respect, let me allude to yesterday's statement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) who presented a report on his journey to Central America last week. Our critic, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), in responding to that statement, thanked the Minister for having made this report and giving us an opportunity for some consideration in the House of this very important aspect of External Affairs in this area of the new world of the Western Hemisphere, particularly Central America, where the United States has been involved for many years. Such a gesture only underscores the importance of Parliament.

I express intense regret at the Parliamentary Secretary's suggestion that the Government plans to oppose these motions. It is not true to the traditions about which they spoke eloquently and vehemently, and with profound conviction and passion when in opposition. Unfortunately, when the Government receives such a large majority, all that is forgotten and it simply uses the weight of numbers to do what it believes makes sense. That is regrettable, and Canadians who watch this debate will join with me in expressing regret that a Government would become arrogant even in its first term and not bother with Parliament.

It believes that a period of 180 days, half a year or more, is a sensible proposition. We are suggesting that 60 days is a reasonable period for a motion to be presented and debated. We could deal with these Ways and Means motions with the sense of importance they actually have in the affairs of Canada and our relations with other countries.

I strongly support Motions Nos. 4 and 8 and call upon members of the Government to join with us in passing these amendments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I put the question, may I just say that Motions Nos. 4 and 12 were debated together, with the vote on Motion No. 4 applying to Motion No. 12.

The question is on Motion No. 4 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Motions Nos. 8, 11A, 12A, and 13A cause the Chair some procedural difficulty. I would refer Hon. Members to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 523. However, because some doubt exists in these instances, I am prepared to allow the Hon. Member the benefit of the doubt. Therefore, Motions Nos. 8, 11A, 12A, and 13A will be grouped for debate. A vote on Motion No. 8 will apply to Motions Nos. 11A, 12A and 13A.

Motions Nos. 13, 14, 15, and 16 will be debated and voted on separately.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre) moved:

Motion No. 8

That Bill C-87, be amended in Clause 59 by adding, immediately after line 4 at page 19, the following:

"(7) The powers conferred by this section may not be abrogated by any treaty between the Government of Canada and the government of another country except by an Act of Parliament."

Motion No. 11A

That Bill C-87, be amended in Clause 60 by adding, immediately after line 27 at page 21, the following:

"(9) The powers conferred by this section may not be abrogated by any treaty between the Government of Canada and the government of another country except by an Act of Parliament.

Motion No. 12A

That Bill C-87, be amended in Clause 61 by adding, immediately after line 14 at page 22, the following:

"(6) The powers conferred by this section may not be abrogated by any treaty between the Government of Canada and the government of another country except by an Act of Parliament."

Motion No. 13A

That Bill C-87, be amended in Clause 62 by adding, immediately after line 28 at page 22, the following:

"(2) The powers conferred by this section may not be abrogated by any treaty between the Government of Canada and the government of another country except by an Act of Parliament."

• (1550)

He said: Mr. Speaker, this set of amendments gets to the core of the problem we see in the sections of the Customs Act which have been brought into this new Bill relative to the harmonized system of tariffs.

Through you, Mr. Speaker, I thank the official Mr. Speaker for his flexibility in giving me the benefit of the doubt in this particular case. There are four amendments and each of them indicate that the power conferred in the relevant clause should not be abrogated by any treaty between the Government of Canada and the Government of another country except by an Act of Parliament.

I recognize the Speaker's concern about that amendment. However, the essence of the position that is being put forward here is quite simply that by treaty we should not have a situation where Canada abrogates or loses the power to take trade action through retaliation under Clauses 59, 60, and 61, which provide for a form of retaliation, for a surtax, or for a surcharge. We should not be in a position where that type of power is taken away by a treaty. Obviously I am not thinking of a treaty between Canada and Upper Volta. I am thinking of the treaty which is currently in negotiations, no matter what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) says, between Canada and the United States on a freer trade arrangement.

If I had to rewrite the amendments in Clause 62, I perhaps may have changed them a little, but but the essence there is that we should not see a situation where Canada basically takes action to cut tariffs with the United States without reference to Parliament by means of an Act of Parliament. This is because the particular treaty which is currently being negotiated is of such fundamental importance to our two countries.

I wish to draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the extraordinary powers that now exist in Clause 62 of the Bill, powers which have existed in the past under the Customs Tariff. It reads:

62. The Governor in Council may, on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance, by order,

(a) reduce or remove customs duties on goods imported from any country by way of compensation for concessions granted by that country or any other country, subject to such conditions as may be specified in the order; and

(b) extend the benefit of any order made pursuant to paragraph (a) to any country as may be required by Canada's international obligations, subject to such conditions as may be specified in the order.

Subsequent to this debate there was another amendment which stated that Clause 62 may not be used in reference to Canadian duties against the United States, in other words, to prohibit the Governor in Council from exercising this power.

In this particular case, the amendment is that the power shall not be abrogated by means of a treaty which Canada signs. People say that that is very hypothetical, and they have never heard of it happening. The fact is that Canada is now embarked on a trade negotiation in which major elements of our sovereignty and our ability to make future arrangements to protect, enhance, or develop our industries in our economy are being taken away by means of treaty. In other words, we will not be able to act independently in the future.

While this does not bear directly on Clause 62, for example, I cite the granting of national treatment to American service industries which we understand is a part of the free trade agreement. In future, how the devil can the Parliament of Canada act to develop the services industries, which account for 70 per cent of our economy, if we have signed away our right to do so by a solemn commitment between Canada and another nation and if in fact this country has essentially told the Americans that we will not legislate in that area except that we first abrogate the agreement? After many years, the agreement will become increasingly solidified and increasingly hard to shake away, and it will increasingly dictate the way our industrial structure is created.

This is why we are looking for a change here to recognize that the Government has moved us into a new type of situation, a situation where in a major way treaties can affect Canadian powers. Treaties did so in the past, but on a multilateral basis and in a minor, phased and graduated way. I would contend they did so in a way which was generally acceptable to Canadians who welcomed a freer trading environment which has been created on a multilateral international basis between Canada and other great trading nations over the 30 years or 40 years since the war.

However, if we get into trade disputes with the United States in future, disputes where in the past we had the power to impose increases in duties, surtaxes, or surcharges under Clauses 59, 60, or 61, we will be in a situation where the right of Canada to retaliate will have been signed away. Instead, that right will adhere in this new disputes resolution process and nowhere else.

How we will use that is something that I am not sure about. It seems to me that we will lack the weapons, because we will have tied our hands behind our backs. I would contend that we are dealing with a country that is grossly and gravely irresponsible in its use of trade actions as a weapon to hit at other countries that are smaller or economically weaker than it.

Unfortunately, despite the long-standing friendship between Americans and Canadians, and between our two great countries which has gone on for 150 years, it is nonetheless true that American industry has learned in a very fine way how to harass imports from other countries, including imports from Canada, and that the American Government either condones or encourages those types of situations.

The behaviour of the Americans since October 3 and over the course of the free trade negotiations does not give me a great deal of optimism that they have changed their tune and manners in this particular regard.

What has happened is that the Americans have continued to do such things as selling subsidized wheat into major markets that were traditionally Canadian, and imposing countervailing duties, for example, the 85 per cent on the potash industry, and generally trying to make life difficult for Canadians who were doing business in the United States. The Americans seem to have a rule in these things which is, "heads we win, and tails you lose".

In a situation where Canada has a natural advantage, for example with a particular natural resource, the Americans turn around and say, "The Canadian Government is not charging enough economic rent in order to counteract the natural advantage Canada has in the North American market, therefore those industries are being subsidized", which is what happened in softwood lumber, and, "We will put a countervailing duty against Canada". That was the type of position the Americans took in that particular case.

The United States has natural comparative advantages in terms of trade with Canada in many different areas. For example, in the worst months of our winter there is more sunshine and warmth in Florida than there is right across Canada, except perhaps in Victoria where I come from, Mr. Speaker, and where you and I may meet after we retire. You may go there first though, Mr. Speaker; I expect to be around here for a while.

The Americans have advantages in terms of the economies of scale for certain industries, such as main frame computers, large scale machine tools, and certain other high-tech equipment. We will never overcome that advantage completely because our industries are smaller than theirs. Our niche is to find ways to do smaller, custom-made production runs efficiently using automation and computerization. These are our potentials.

• (1600)

The Americans take the view that their natural advantages, be it climate or economy of scale, should be allowed but that our natural advantages should be ignored. They have been using harassment techniques against Canadian goods in a very consistent way.

I suggest that the reason for these amendments is that Canada should not have its hands tied. If we find that the Americans are acting in bad faith after we have been dragged into a trade deal by the Prime Minister and his Government, we should not be unable to fight back if the Americans keep a loaded gun under the table. That is why we feel that these motions should be supported.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, these four motions which actually contain one amendment applying to four different clauses would allow the Parliament of Canada to have some power over treaties signed between the Government of Canada and the Government of any other country. These amendments follow directly upon the amendments we have suggested to Clause 59.

The amendments provide that the powers conferred by the relevant sections may not be abrogated by any treaty between the Government of Canada and the Government of another country except by an Act of Parliament. That gives the Parliament of Canada, and consequently the people of Canada, a bit more security.

The Government of Canada has negotiated such treaties in the past. For example, about seven or eight years ago, Canada negotiated a treaty with the United States on the Grand Banks fisheries. When the treaty was signed and approved by Cabinet, it became law in Canada. However, the process it followed in the United States was somewhat different. The American administration signed it but when it got to Congress, Congress turned it down. Consequently, the agreement which we had signed in good faith and thought was settled turned out not to be so.

There is no process in Canada allowing the Parliament of Canada to approve a treaty. If this were to be done on a blanket basis, it may to some extent require a constitutional change. However, in these four motions, we are suggesting that Parliament will have the power the U.S. Congress has as a matter of course in these particular areas. Consequently, these motions are worded almost identically and will amend Clauses 59, 60, 61, and 62 to provide the Parliament of Canada the power to decide whether or not a particular treaty signed by Cabinet affecting a particular product or tariff should be accepted.

This power becomes more important in light of the scenario established under the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement. We must be concerned about how such treaties are put in place. There is now not only a great disparity between how Canada approves a treaty and how the United States approves a treaty but added to that is something which greatly affects the powers of treaties. In the free trade agreement, there is a dispute-settlement mechanism which allows U.S. law to be applied to Canadian products.

In the process of accepting this treaty or any future treaty, we will, because of the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member who has been here for a number of years realizes that he is not to use the Prime Minister's name. I have heard this phrase a number of times today. There is no such thing as a Mulroney-Reagan treaty; it is the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and Mr. Reagan.

Mr. Hovdebo: I accept your admonition, Mr. Speaker.

The trade agreement puts in place a dispute settlement mechanism which allows U.S. law to apply to Canadian products that go to the United States. Trade disputes on countervail and anti-dumping that have been initiated by American companies against Canadian exporters are decided under U.S. law, and the decision then affects Canadian exporters.

There has already been a good example of this in the exports of softwood to the United States. The Americans put a countervailing duty on softwood and we reacted by putting a tax on the softwood that was to be exported from Canada. Consequently, the citizens of both nations are now paying more to build their houses. This has occurred because U.S. law was applied to this trade question.

With these motions, we are attempting to ensure that Canada, through Parliament, can have a say when it finds that it is being wronged by U.S. law under the treaties signed by the executive branch of the United States and the Cabinet of Canada. The motions provide that we have some recourse, the recourse being that the decisions made under U.S. law cannot affect Canadian decisions without passing through Parliament.

The motions would also give Parliament more of a democratic grasp on the establishment of the kind of country in which we want to live and the kind of relationships we want to have with other Governments. If the Government of Canada through a treaty gives up its power to establish tariffs—that is what happened in the past—then we have to have some way in which to limit that power. These amendments will attempt to do that.

Maybe what we need is to take a good look at the process of treaty establishment in Canada. Maybe we need to change the tradition and make all treaties referable to Parliament instead of the way it is now. When a decision is made for a treaty it is accepted as being complete when signed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and approved by Cabinet. If these amendments are put in place, we will at least have some of the treaties sent to Parliament or approved by Parliament at some stage before they become the law of Canada.

The trade agreement between the United States and Canada has been based on, or at least the rhetoric which the agreement is based on, the requirement for a level playing field. I suggest that a level playing field requires the same kind of approach to the ratifying of a treaty as we have for organizations and the law to be applied on both sides of the border. That has not been done.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired. I gave him an extra couple of minutes because I thought maybe I had taken the time away from him. The Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse).

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the amendments of these five different motions that appear in different parts of the Bill which are trying to establish the same principle throughout the Bill. We have here as important a proposition as that in the Lord's decision to approach King John and force him to permit the Parliament of the day to approve any changes to the taxing and spending power of the Government. What we have here is an attempt in a constitutional monarchy to change the way that our Government conducts itself in international affairs with regard to the signing of international agreements and treaties.

What it says is very straightforward. The amendments we are proposing in the five places in the Bill where it is appropriate to move them very clearly say: "The powers conferred by this section may not be abrogated between the Government of Canada and the Government of another country". This would make Parliament supreme in the functions of any Government, regardless of what stripe that Government might be. The Government would have to take changes to the treaty—in this case an abrogation of the treaty—back to the House of Commons, the Parliament of Canada, before the Government could change or abandon the treaty.

This would be of interest to Members on the government side. Knowing past history they will realize that they will not be on the government side forever. If the Government changes, which the current status in the polls indicates as a foregone conclusion, one or the other of the opposition Parties will form the new Government. If we can believe the leaders of each of those Parties, they have every intention of abrogating this Canada-U.S. accord we have been discussing this afternoon.

Government Members would, I am sure, were they on our side of the House, be quite concerned that they have some say in a decision about the treaty. I presume they think the matter should be brought to the House of Commons by way of an Act of Parliament before any changes or a complete abrogation of the treaty were made. I presume we would get full support of government Members, particularly those who have been attempting to change the role of the back-bencher in the House of Commons. I see the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) is in his place. I presume that he will be supporting this amendment because it increases and clarifies the role of the House of Commons and gives it a role in the finalization of treaty obligations that any Government may make on behalf of the country. This is extremely important. We have followed 800 years of British parliamentary practice, namely, whoever is the Government represents a majority of the people and, therefore, speaks for them. Because of that majority, it has every right to sign an international treaty.

However, we are at the point right at the moment, if I can divert from the Bill itself just to make an example, where the Government is proposing an international treaty with the United States, a Government that no longer has the backing of the majority of Canadians. In fact, if we can believe the opinion polls, about one Canadian voter in four supports the Government. The henchmen of the agreement, the Premiers, allegedly behind the Prime Minister's attempt to go forward with this agreement, are in similar disarray. The Premier of my province, Grant Devine, is reported to be running 25 points behind the NDP's Roy Romanow, but Grant Devine is one of the leading advocates of this particular agreement. He does not have a majority of support in his own province yet he is attempting to speak for the whole of the country, which is his right under our system. But he is not speaking for a majority and he is not representing a majority. In fact, his Government got 2,000 votes less than the Official Opposition. The Premier of British Columbia is currently running 11 points behind the NDP in that province and even that rock of Conservative solidarity in your own province, Mr. Speaker, of Alberta, is seeing Premier Don Getty falling in the polls as his support for this agreement is recognized.

Mr. McMillan: What are the polls in Manitoba? Where does Howard Pawley stand?

Mr. Althouse: He is not doing that particularly well.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Althouse: He is at least equal to the Conservatives in his province. The rural areas in Manitoba, I might point out, in the last poll were up 6 per cent over the previous one. But there is some concern about what the Government is proposing to do with this country. I raise that point to reinforce the argument I am trying to make, namely, that it is important to refer back to Parliament before we rely wholly on the executive branch of any Government.

I do not care whether it is a Government our Party would form or one of the other Parties might form. The principle should be changed so that Parliament has the right to deal with international agreements of this nature. Whether it is an agreement to harmonize tariff rates, or to form an economic union with another country, Parliament should be consulted. It should be considered as a new principle of democratic Government that such agreements have to have the approval of Parliament before they come into place.

This is necessary because opinions change and the direction of Governments change. There is no clearer example of that than the current Government. During the leadership campaign of the government Party, we were told by the man who eventually became Leader that free trade with the U.S. was something he would hear no more of, that it could lead to a loss of sovereignty and so on. We also know that in November, 1984, shortly after becoming Prime Minister, that same gentleman said: "We have only been in power for two months but I can tell you this: Give us 20 years, and it is coming, and you will not recognize this country." A few years later, on October 22, 1987, just after the deal was signed with the Americans, Clayton Yeutter, U.S. trade representative, said: "The Canadians don't understand what they have signed. In 20 years they will be sucked into the U.S. economy." I wonder if the Prime Minister is not keeping one of his promises, the one he made on September 7, about giving him 20 years and we would not recognize this country.

That is one of the reasons I think Parliament has to have an opportunity to review trade agreements, international accords, and changes to tariff rates such as we have before us today. It is extremely vital to the continuation and modernization of the democratic process that these amendments be made.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will not say it is encouraging to hear Opposition Members but at least it is an education. Perhaps I may take this opportunity to educate them as well. In Quebec, they say that ideas are like socks. If you never change them, they start to smell. Mr. Speaker, I think there is a lesson here we should apply from time to time.

Motion No. 8 infers that the provisions of a treaty might abrogate the provisions of existing legislation. That is more or less what the motion appears to say. Mr. Speaker, you know as well as I do this could never happen anyway. No provisions of any treaty can change or abrogate existing legislation. I think that even if there is some discussion on the other side of the House, it shouldn't take long. The motion should be rejected. We don't need the amendment because the situation is purely hypothetical.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Debate. Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Nice try, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If the Hon. Member does not rise, I am not going to be able to recognize him. Now that he has, I will.

Mr. Althouse: He just does not get that much taller when he stands.

Mr. Angus: I thank my colleague. See if we move any more of your grain.

It is one of those days, Mr. Speaker, but I am rising to speak particularly to Motion No. 8 put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). It reads:

> "(7) The powers conferred by this section may not be abrogated by any treaty between the Government of Canada and the government of another country except by an Act of Parliament."

This motion should be accepted, and I encourage the Government to do so. It is very similar to provincial planning laws and municipal zoning laws which establish a set of rules with respect to how a community is to be developed. If one wants to change those rules, one has to go through a public process. One just cannot sit in a community room or cabinet room or council room and redraw the lines and it is done. One has to go through a public process. What we are saying in this motion is that if this and other amendments are put in place, the Government would have to bring in a specific piece of legislation for a specific commodity or component in order for the tariff to be changed. What we are trying to do is maintain that opportunity in the public forum.

In general we are concerned that this Bill, and that clause in particular, will open the door for implementation of the trade agreement reached between the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States. We want to prevent that. We want to put this clause in so that the normal ability of a Prime Minister to sign a treaty is taken away from him. If he wanted to do something like that, he would have to come back and change this particular Bill based on that agreement. We think it is very appropriate to put that kind of power in the legislation and ensure that the people of Canada, through their elected representatives, have the fullest opportunity to debate the impact of changes.

Yesterday I had the opportunity, along with my caucus colleagues, to meet with two individuals who were very concerned about one of the industries to be directly affected by the trade agreement. They were representatives of the Ontario Grape Growers Marketing Board. They explained to us the implications for grape producers in Ontario. Even though they did not represent them, the same holds true for grape growers in British Columbia. This would have a devastating impact on the business, their families, and their employees. They said the impact was not going to occur in 1989; it was going to be in 1988 because of the growing season in that industry. They will have to begin now to remove from production those vines that will be producing in 1989. Already they will have to down size their production.

They pointed out that whereas Canada was giving up its industry, particularly the wine industry which uses these grapes, they were not getting guaranteed access to the U.S. Americans can sell their wine and juices in Canada without any financial impediment. However, Canadian producers do not have the same access to the United States markets primarily due to the concentration of ownership in the distribution system. In most of the United States the distribution system is controlled by one of the biggest wine producers in the country. I believe that more than three-quarters of the States are controlled by that one company.

It is clear that Canadian wine producers have not had a fair shake. They have not had access to the market equal to that which American producers have been given in Canada. That is assuming that the provinces, particularly Ontario, will go along with the deal. Unfortunately it seems that the Province of Ontario, in spite of the strong show during the last provincial election about vetoing this deal if it is bad for Ontario, will not live up to its word. I think that in time the people of Ontario will realize that they were sold a bill of goods by the Liberal Party of Ontario.

The trade agreement is an extremely important matter for Canadians as well as for Americans. The Canadians to whom I have spoken, Canadians of all political stripes, have expressed real concern about what they perceive to be the implications of this agreement which allows our very large neighbour to the south to come in at will, with no protection for Canadians, to sell their products. In some cases we can sell our products in their market, but they do not see the balance.

Some people think it will be great to be able to go to the United States and pick up a VCR or a television set for $99.99. They do not realize that those things are not made in the United States. They are made elsewhere and would not be included in the agreement.

Granted, there will be a reduction in the price of some items which people will be able to purchase in the United States because they will be able to bring them back to Canada duty-free. However, they will still have to pay provincial and federal sales tax. They also forget that the merchants in their communities will no longer have the same volume of sales and will have to charge more per unit, in order to maintain their standard of living and ensure that the return on their investment is appropriate.

There are two implications of that. Thunder Bay is 190 miles from its major neighbours in the United States; Duluth, Minnesota, and Superior, Wisconsin. People will not be able to go there every week. But enough people will go there to cause a serious decline in the revenues of retailers in Thunder Bay. The times they are not able to go to the United States they will have to pay more at home. The people who do not have the ability to travel to Duluth or Grande Marais, which is a smaller community closer to Thunder Bay, will not benefit by that and will have to pay more. In addition, fewer small businesses will be able to survive in an already fragile situation.

Although the idea of free trade sounds great, as though we will be getting something for nothing, there is no such thing as something for nothing. When we study the details of the agreement we begin to understand that it is not such a great deal. That is why we have been demanding the right to see the details. We want to examine the nuts and bolts in order to determine what it means to commodity x, y, and z, what it means to British Columbia, Atlantic Canada, and northern Ontario. As a result of the softwood lumber deal northern Ontario was hit hardest. For that reason we believe that Motion No. 8 in particular should be accepted by the Government in order that it cannot automatically implement the trade deal.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to lend my support to the amendments proposed by my colleague. I do so because we believe in the principle that Parliament, through the majority of its Members, should have the right and ability to make decisions which are of importance to Canadians and will have very serious effects on them. That is why we moved this amendment.

In our view the Government, which has a large majority in this Parliament, did not get a mandate to negotiate a free trade deal with the United States. As I indicated in debate earlier today, and as my colleagues and others have frequently made clear, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) never at any time told the people of Canada that he believed that a free trade agreement with the United States would be beneficial to the people of Canada.

Indeed, in 1983 and 1984, before the election, the Prime Minister made very clear his rejection of the idea of free trade describing the relationship between Canada and the United States in very clear and very correct terms. He classified the United States as an elephant and Canada as a rabbit. I have to agree with him in terms of the relative strength of Canada and the United States as he described it then. During the election campaign he never dealt with the question of free trade at all.

We have estimated that the Prime Minister and his colleagues made over 200 promises during the course of that campaign. One would have thought that they had covered every possible aspect of Canadian life, but there was not one mention of free trade during the entire election campaign. Suddenly, as I said earlier, because of the low standing of the Conservative Party in the polls, the low standing which has continued for 16 to 18 months, the Government, looking for an issue which might gain it the support of the Canadian people, seized on this. One can accept the attraction of free trade, if there was a genuine agreement for free trade between these two countries. One could understand, although I happen to disagree with the recommendations of the Macdonald Commission of a free trade agreement between the United States and Canada. There is a world of difference between what the Macdonald Commission was recommending as a free trade agreement between Canada and the United States and what we have now, or at least what we know about what we have now, which is very little. It is like comparing night and day.

What we have here is an agreement which gives the advantages to the United States and all the drawbacks and disadvantages to Canada. We know from watching Mr. Reisman and the United States negotiator, Mr. Murphy, that the Americans are not satisfied with the fact that in the October agreement they took us to the cleaners. They now want another kick at the cat.

Mr. McDermid: It is the other way around.

Mr. Orlikow: The Parliamentary Secretary is again interjecting, saying' "It is the other way around". I would be very happy to sit down right now if the Parliamentary Secretary would rise and tell us how it is the other way around. We understand, and the Parliamentary Secretary can correct me if I am wrong—

Mr. McDermid: I will correct you when you are wrong.

Mr. Orlikow: I wish the Parliamentary Secretary would keep his cool and wait until I am finished.

Mr. McDermid: You are always saying wrong things.

Mr. Orlikow: I would then be prepared to listen to him. I will not interrupt him, and his interruptions do not bother me. We understand that the American negotiators are now saying they want the agreement to spell out the fact that the very restrictive legislation the American Congress has passed, and which the President has permitted to be enacted, the Jones Act with respect to shipping—

Mr. McDermid: It is 200 years old.

Mr. Orlikow: Well, 200 years old, or whenever it was passed. The fact is that the Jones Act gives rights to American owned and registered shipping which no other country, including Canada, has, and they want that to continue. We understand that the Americans are insisting on changes to the Auto Pact Agreement. We understand that there are a number of other issues on which they are insisting on changes.

I say it is pretty obvious that the Americans, not satisfied with the tremendous advantages they have received as a result of signing the agreement in October, are now back demanding more. We can see how desperate the Government is to get an agreement regardless of the price. I remind Members that just a few days before the agreement was signed in October, our negotiator, Mr. Reisman, picked up his hat, coat, and briefcase and walked out, saying no way was he going to agree to the demands the Americans were making. A few days later he was back and he did agree on behalf of the Government of Canada. Why did he agree? Because he received his marching orders from the Prime Minister.

Mr. Reisman is an able, experienced negotiator.

An Hon. Member: That is his job.

Mr. Orlikow: Of course, that is his job. That is how the democratic system works. Part of the democratic system that is not working in this present debate is that the people of Canada, Members of Parliament, and the provincial Governments are being asked to buy a pig in a poke. We are being asked to accept that the federal Conservative Government, which never talked about free trade, should now be able to sign an agreement, the final text of which will run into several thousand pages, without the agreement of Members of Parliament, the Premiers of the provinces, or various economic and cultural groups which have a vital interest in what the agreement will contain because they will be so enormously affected either for good or for evil. No one knows what is in the final agreement. No one knows what is involved in the 2 per cent over which they are still haggling and discussing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I take it we are on Motions Nos. 8, 11A, 12A, and 13A. I want to speak in support of those motions.

It has always been my view, if you do not mind, Sir, that the ratification of treaties and international agreements must in the present context, be carried on by the Government of the day—not just by the Prime Minister, Cabinet, or a combination of both—and ratified by the House of Commons and only the House of Commons.

Our amendments say that any treaty or portion thereof cannot abrogate any section of this Bill without the consent of Parliament. I admit right away that that may be a back door way of going about it. However, we are left with no other choice. What we are faced with is that in our parliamentary democracy we are permitting a foreign administration to tell a supine, money hungry Government of Canada what kind of laws we must have. We are dealing with a law that calls for the harmonization of tariffs and duties and so forth.

As I said the other day on an earlier amendment, the Government wants us all to get into harmony, and the name of the tune will be the Star Spangled Banner. Obviously our amendments to this Bill—and we have done the same on other occasions on other Bills, some of them long past—indicate that my Party would bring to Parliament any international agreement or treaty for debate, discussion, and ratification whether or not it required a constitutional amendment. I think it should be a requirement. If the House of Commons chose not to approve or ratify a treaty, be it a trade agreement or any other kind of international treaty, the Government of the day, particularly if it was a Government of my Party, would have to go back to the negotiating table of the country or countries concerned.

My friends opposite continue to suffer the delusion that the United States administration or Congress, or the individual 50 states, will hold still for Canada obtaining a larger share of any market in any commodity than we presently have. In my own part of Canada many suffer from the same delusion, specifically the Cattlemen's Association and some hog producers.

We have learned enough lessons from free trade arrangements in the past, when they closed down the border, countervailed, established duties or tariffs in spite of a non-tariff arrangement. As I read the agreement, there is nothing that prevents the United States from doing the exact same thing again.

While I will not say it is a sell-out, the Government is prepared to go to almost any length in a desperate effort to obtain a treaty. I received information this morning from a senior federal bureaucrat that the Americans have in fact thrown new flies in the ointment, and the negotiations on matters which we were assured by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) were completed are still going on.

We find it necessary to move these kinds of amendments because the Americans have thrown new wrinkles into the present discussions. We are in the dark about negotiations at the moment, and we have no other choice but to put forward these amendments which say these powers cannot be abrogated by any treaty or portion thereof.

This morning in the transport committee I tried to raise questions concerning the transportation annex. If and when the Government brings in legislation amending some of our transportation laws, it will have to answer some questions about the present agreement. Section 4 of the transportation annex speaks of the making of amendments to existing measures or future measures taken pursuant to existing measures, subject to the test of unfair subsidy. It was impossible to get an explanation from senior officials in the Department of Transport about what constitutes an unfair subsidy.

It states that new measures in areas not addressed by existing measures are subject to the test of an unfair subsidy.

How will an unfair subsidy on a transport rate or program be defined? They were unable or unwilling to tell us.

Is a government payment a necessary condition to define a subsidy? What if a transportation operation cross subsidizes among its traffic? Will an unfair subsidy be based on variable cost, short-run and long-run, constant cost, or fixed cost?

More important, if we were to index fully the western grain freight subsidy against inflation, would that be subject to the test of an unfair subsidy under the transportation annex to the free trade agreement? No one in the Government, including the Prime Minister, will respond to that question. That is another reason for these amendments.

Let us assume, for the benefit of my friends from Atlantic Canada, that we want to change the percentage of rate of subsidy on goods shipped out of the Atlantic region. Would the new subsidy be subject to the test of an unfair subsidy as laid down in the free trade agreement and the transportation annex? Could the rates consequently be affected?

Would the subsidized construction of a new rail line or air cargo terminal be subject to the test of an unfair subsidy? Could the rates be affected? These concerns are another reason for these amendments. Anything in this Bill could not be abrogated by the treaty the Government is presently negotiating, without coming to Parliament. Surely the Government would accept such a proposal if the deal is so good.

The U.S. Jones Act restricts domestic cargo to American vessels. Will there be an amendment to the trade deal to give us the same right, should we ever decide to use it?

Mr. Binns: Yes.

Mr. Benjamin: I invite my hon. friend to show me what is in the agreement or the transportation annex that allows him to say, "Yes". If he knows what he is talking about, I expect him to get up and tell us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has more than expired. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) as the next speaker.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill S-14, an Act to authorize Cooperants, Mutual Life Insurance Society to be continued as a corporation under the laws of the Province of Quebec, to which the concurrence of this House is desired.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Thursday, December 3, consideration of Bill C-87, an Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding system, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters and to amend or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee; and the following motions of Mr. Cassidy:

Motion No. 8.

That Bill C-87, be amended in Clause 59 by adding, immediately after line 4 at page 19, the following:

"(7) The powers conferred by this section may not be abrogated by any treaty between the Government of Canada and the government of another country except by an Act of Parliament."

Motion No. 11A.

That Bill C-87, be amended in Clause 60 by adding, immediately after line 27 at page 21, the following:

"(9) The powers conferred by this section may not be abrogated by any treaty between the Government of Canada and the government of another country except by an Act of Parliament."

Motion No. 12A.

That Bill C-87, be amended in Clause 61 by adding, immediately after line 14 at page 22, the following:

"(6) The powers conferred by this section may not be abrogated by any treaty between the Government of Canada and the government of another country except by an Act of Parliament."

Motion No. 13A.

That Bill C-87, be amended in Clause 62 by adding, immediately after line 28 at page 22, the following:

"(2) The powers conferred by this section may not be abrogated by any treaty between the Government of Canada and the government of another country except by an Act of Parliament."

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, we have had some talks with the Government House Leader. I understand that someone else can move these amendments on behalf of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). He could not be here today because he has other commitments. I just want to make that clear.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond. We appreciate that people have other commitments and we have agreed to allow these motions to be moved by another person.

We also have an informal understanding that we will have full and complete debate on these motions but that the debate at report stage on Bill C-87 will wind up today.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I take it we are pursuing debate on the motions before the House, specifically Motion No. 8. That motion has not been disposed of as far as I know, so debate is continuing on that motion. After that there is the agreement that, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) not being here, his motions can be moved by someone else, with the undertaking that the Bill will go through complete report stage today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments on this motion, because I think it is important. We are talking about a proposal to reduce or abrogate certain powers conferred by the clause in question. The main thrust of the motion was that in the case of a treaty between the Government of Canada and a foreign administration or government, Parliament should be involved in the process of accountability. As we know, Canada is now engaged in trade negotiations, in which major aspects of our sovereignty and our ability to take steps to protect ourselves are at stake, and these negotiations are about to be finalized. I am referring more specifically to the Mulroney-Reagan Agreement on so-called free trade, and we have a number of problems with this.

Mr. Speaker, we all know that agreements between Canada and the United States cover over 80 per cent of our trade in goods and services, providing for duty-free entry. This leaves 20 per cent of our trade that is subject to tariffs and levies, on both sides, to protect the service and manufacturing sectors.

Although this is a relatively small area, Canadians should realize that we must try and retain our control over these tariffs to the greatest possible extent. And I think the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr.

Cassidy) would give the House of Commons and the Parliament of Canada a chance to take a really close look at such matters. I think it is a very sensible motion.

Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 8—and this applies to the various amendments in the group—would amend Bill C-87, an Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, and so forth. The proposal is therefore:

That Bill C-87, be amended in Clause 59 by adding, immediately after line 4 at page 19, the following:

"(7) The powers conferred by this section may not be abrogated by any treaty between the Government of Canada and the government of another country except by an Act of Parliament."

Mr. Speaker, what is being proposed here is that whenever tariffs are imposed by the Canadian Government, an Act of Parliament will be required to implement the measure. For the time being, on the basis of what we know about the free trade agreement—which is not much because the final document is not yet available—the purpose would be to reduce tariffs to a bare minimum.

In other words, the present Government has confronted us with a new situation. The purpose is to eliminate tariff barriers and to open the door to so-called free trade. There are of course a number of exceptions in the proposed agreement, but it is not yet clear what goods are affected, how this agreement is structured and what the powers will be of the mechanism for settling disputes. There are so many documents going around that I think it would be a good idea to have a debate on this question before the agreement is signed, so that we can take a closer look and understand the exact extent of the commitments the Government would have us undertake.

Mr. Speaker, the motion is quite simple. It means that when a Customs tariff is applied or proposed, a Bill would be tabled in the House and Members could consider the question. That is basically what the amendment is about, and I think we will support it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question on Motion No. 8?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As the Speaker had ruled, Motions Nos. 8, 11A, 12A, and 13A have been grouped for debate, and a vote on Motion No. 8 will be applied to Motions Nos. 11A, 12A, and 13A.

The question is on Motion No. 8 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

Motion No. 13 will be debated and voted on separately.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (for Mr. Cassidy) moved:

Motion No. 13

That Bill C-87, be amended in Clause 62

(a) by striking out line 19 at page 22 and substituting the following therefor:

"goods imported from any country other than the United States of America by way";

(b) by striking out line 26 at page 22 and substituting the following therefor:

"other than the United States of America as may be required by Canada's internal-".

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to lead off the debate on the motion originally placed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), who is unable to be here today.

We see this clause as a key one in the legislation. We also see this amendment that we have put forward as crucial to ensure that the Government of Canada is not in a position to implement a trade deal with the United States through the back door. By that I mean that if this House is not in a position to pass the resolution on the deal itself, or in some subsequent enabling legislation, the Government of Canada could use the existing Clause 62 as a means of implementing that trade deal without resorting to approval by Parliament.

Clause 62 allows the Government, on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), to reduce or remove customs duties on goods imported from any country without reference to Parliament.

Clause 62(a) indicates that such a reduction has to be by way of compensation for concessions granted by that country or any other country. This clause allows Canada to negotiate at the GATT and to agree to multilateral tariff cuts without having to take them before Parliament, although I am told that the practice has generally been that they do come before Parliament. This clause also allows the Government of Canada to agree to and put into force tariff cuts to the U.S. without reference to Parliament.

We believe that this clause means that it will allow the Government which was stalled in Parliament to implement free trade with the U.S. without bothering to ask for permission.

The amendment that we have before us would restrict the ability of the Minister of Finance and the Governor in Council from going ahead with any tariff reductions with the United States. If this amendment passes, then the Government would be required to come before Parliament to have debated a particular piece of legislation that would implement any reduction in those tariffs between Canada and the United States.

Because this trade agreement, that perhaps is still being negotiated, is so important to Canada and our ability to control our destiny, we feel that it is extremely important that Cabinet, which really is the Governor in Council, not be given the power to implement automatically tariff reductions with the United States. We feel it is of prime importance that the duly elected representatives of the people of Canada, this Parliament and the House, have the opportunity to review publicly and debate publicly the merits of any such tariff reductions. As we have seen, anything that this Government has negotiated has not lived up to the initial image that was created by the Government. It has not ended up being the panacea that we were led to believe. We think Parliament has the responsibility to debate these issues to ensure, whether it is softwood lumber, shakes and shingles, or energy, that the Government be forced to come before Parliament to get permission.

As I stated yesterday, this procedure that we are trying to put in place is very similar to the procedures at the local planning level which establish rules for how a community shall look, and if anyone wants to change those rules, they have to go through a public process. So it is a trigger mechanism, instead of what exists in Clause 62 where the Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance, can say, "We have this deal, and let us implement it", without any of us having the opportunity to go through the ramifications of it, and finding out after the fact what has happened.

In a nutshell, those are basically the concerns that we have. I know that some of my other colleagues wish to make some comments on this Bill, so I will leave it at that.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to vote against this motion. The proposed amendment is unacceptable since it is an obvious attempt to discriminate and make representations against the United States. This particular motion is basically the same as Section 11 of the present Customs Tariff. There is no valid reason for including provisions that would discriminate against a specific country and would probably be unacceptable to GATT. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, we are here to pass laws that are not only fair but fair to everyone.

• (1020)

[English]

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons this motion has been put forward is not perhaps as clearly altruistic as the previous motions we have moved which, as you will recall, attempted to bring more control back to Parliament. This motion does that, but it is also clearly and unabashedly aimed at forcing a debate on issues which we may not, as a House of Commons, get to debate concerning the proposed Canada-U.S. trade deal.

This particular motion, if adopted, would force that deal to come before the House, something that current practice does not do. We do not have a clear opportunity to discuss and debate this deal except by way of opposition motions. Apparently the Government has the intention of putting a motion before the House to discuss the principles of the deal, but we will not be able to debate the proposals clause by clause and see the dotting of the i's and the crossing of the t's. This is just an attempt to demonstrate to the Government that there is another way of going about this.

If we are going to be harmonizing all of our practices with other countries, we should be looking at the practices of some of those other countries to see whether they adopt the practice that we are proposing of sending back national agreements on duty, customs and tariffs as well as larger trade deals to their particular national assemblies, Congress or whatever. If we are going to participate fully and completely in a harmonization process, we think that the process should include harmonization of procedures in the home country, and this amendment would attempt to do that. It would provide the Canadian Parliament with a similar oversight and review provision to what the U.S. Congress has. It would mean that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) would have to present these proposals, which do affect revenue and taxation to the House because they are in the legitimate purview of the House and of Parliament. Our amendment would encourage that process being adopted in Canada.

I think I have said it so many times that I do not want to repeat it, but this process is one that was put in train by the McGrath review of the role of the back-bencher, carried on by our friend, the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper), who looked at the methods Parliament uses for controlling the budgetary and taxation process. We have attempted to move amendments throughout the Bill to put some of those ideas into place. This particular amendment goes somewhat toward that as well.

I admit that this amendment is aimed quite directly at the United States with the specific purpose of drawing attention to the fact that we have a very large trade arrangement being proposed between Canada and the United States, an arrangement which the Prime Minister has very modestly referred to as the greatest trade deal in the history of Canada. It is, therefore, likely to have quite an impact on the future history of Canada, so much so that I pointed out to the House yesterday—some Members may not have been here at the time—the assessment of Clayton Yeutter who felt that in 20 years Canada would not look at all like it is now because it would be much more integrated with American society.

Members of this House were elected to be given an opportunity to review that kind of revolutionary change. This amendment is one effort to allow it an opportunity for debate on the merits of the initiative. We are proposing that the House have an opportunity to look at such initiatives. Previous amendments we have proposed, if they are adopted, will mean that the House will have, after 60 sitting days, to decide yea or nay whether or not the initiatives are acceptable. It is not a great imposition on any Government. Governments in our system have to operate from the basis of majority. A Government would simply use its majority to push the proposal through, but the House would be carrying on its traditional, long established role of having a full opportunity to review taxing and revenue measures, something which our current practice does not give us.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question on Motion No. 13?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 13 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11) the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Motion No. 14 will be debated and voted on separately.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (for Mr. Cassidy) moved:

That Bill C-87, be amended in Clause 101 by adding, immediately after line 37 at page 41, the following:

"(4) No remission of duties of a value of more than twenty-five dollars may be made unless it is approved by resolution of both Houses of Parliament."

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 14 is in the name of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), but moved on his behalf by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Basically, Clause 101 allows the Government to remit duties which, at times, is done for routine purposes but can also be done as a back-door way of cutting tariffs if a Government is blocked in Parliament. The purpose of the amendment is, therefore, to allow for routine remission of duties to go forward but to require, when remission is of a value greater than $25 million, that there must be action by Parliament.

We believe that there is a potential loss of revenue for Canada as a result of the trade deal. The value of Canadian tariffs on U.S. imports is about $2 billion a year. The Government insists that consumers will benefit under free trade through lower prices because that $2 billion in tariffs will no longer have to be paid. The question then arises, who will pay it? Will this loss be met by cuts in welfare spending? Will it be met by increased taxes on corporations? Or will it be met by the same average Canadians who were meant to benefit from lower prices?

In line with the principle of parliamentary accountability, we are taking the view that if the Government wants to spend more than $25 million, it should require the approval of Parliament and not by Order implement a major reduction in federal government revenues of which Canadians would be almost unaware.

I think the motion clearly speaks for itself. Once again, we are trying to ensure that the actions the Government takes are taken through the House of Commons and not taken in the cabinet rooms. When decisions are made in the cabinet rooms, we do not have access to the documentation or the justification for the decisions. Here in the House we can sometimes get that kind of information.

At this point I will sit down and allow my colleagues to add their comments should they wish to do so.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think there has been a slight error in the printing of this motion in the Order Paper of December 2. It describes the motion as saying that no remission of duties of a value of more than $25 may be made unless it is approved by resolution of both Houses of Parliament. The intention was that that be $25 million. There is some difference.

With the approval of the House, I would ask that the motion be posed as it had originally been intended.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Very well, it is $25 million, not $25.

The motion reads:

That Bill C-87 be amended in Clause 101 by adding, immediately after line 37 at page 41, the following:

"(4) No remission of duties of a value of more than twenty-five million dollars may be made unless it is approved by resolution of both Houses of Parliament."

Amendment (Mr. Althouse) agreed to.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, in view of that correction, I am now happy to support the motion. I must say that when I looked at it, I had visions of both Houses being tied up examining items worth $25 each.

The first reason I have for supporting this motion is that under normal circumstances, many powers are given to the Government of the day through Order in Council, but the circumstances now are not normal. This Bill which affects tariffs will itself be affected by the Canada-U.S. trade agreement, the contents of which we still do not know because they are under negotiation at the present time. That being the case, I think it is incumbent on us to require that as far as possible, all decisions made under this Bill are brought back to the House for ratification.

There is a further problem with the use of remission orders. While the Financial Administration Act requires that remission orders be published at year end in the Public Accounts of Canada, the costs should also be published. This has not been happening. The Department of Finance has frequently said that for one reason or another, it has been unable to assess the costs accurately and it does not wish to estimate a figure. Therefore, one finds remission orders appearing in the Public Accounts of Canada without any figures attached to them, even though that breaches the Financial Administration Act.

This is something that the Public Accounts Committee has made recommendations on and we are awaiting a government response. We have recommended that rather than publish no figure, the Department of Finance produce its best estimate and clearly identify it as an estimate rather than a firm cost. The problem continues. Members of Parliament are being kept in the dark, both at the time the remission order is made and even up to a year afterwards, since costs are not published in the Public Accounts of Canada. Therefore, I think remission orders should be used as sparingly as possible.

I will therefore support this amendment which provides that any remission order which involves costs of $25 million to the Treasury must be brought before the House and not simply dealt with by Order in Council.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the proposed amendment would ensure that all remission orders recommended by the Minister of Finance or the Minister of National Revenue are tabled in Parliament for approval.

In fact, this was already possible in nearly every case where paying duty would be unfair or a major financial burden for manufacturers, and also to correct anomalies in the Customs Tariff.

Last but not least, the proposed amendment would affect a large number of orders annually and needlessly burden Parliament with this administrative task.

[English]

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I too wish to say a few words on this motion before the House, Motion No. 14. We have unanimously accepted a very sensible amendment to this motion put by the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) and it is also very interesting that——in the French version, about the $25 million, it says and I translate: "No customs duties refund exceeding twenty-five million dollars shall be allowed without prior ratification by a resolution of both Houses of Parliament."

[Translation]

[English]

I am not really wed to the figure of $25 million, though the figure is probably appropriate. When dealing with that amount of money, there should be a resolution of both Houses of Parliament. We do believe that at a certain point, there should be some parliamentary approval of and accountability for what is happening.

I am sure you would agree, Mr. Speaker, that in many ways this little motion before the House is a great Conservative motion. I have been a Member of the House for a number of years and, time and time again, I have seen the Conservative Opposition, led by that great Finance Minister, talk about accountability. They said that those terrible Liberal Ministers of Finance were not accountable to Parliament and that we needed accountability. They said that if elected, the Conservative Party would be accountable.

The same is true of conflict of interest guidelines. I recall that Ged Baldwin, one of the most thoughtful Members ever elected in the history of Canada, campaigned for years on effective conflict of interest guidelines. Those guidelines were accepted by the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) when he was Prime Minister, but now the boy from Baie Comeau is the Prime Minister and he has breached all the past history, rhetoric and traditions of the Conservative Party on that issue.

When the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was in opposition, he made many speeches about accountability. He said that Parliament must be accountable to the taxpayers for their money and that we could not trust the bureaucrats and Cabinet to pass Orders in Council. It is really quite irksome for me to have to defend a traditional Conservative position because the Minister of Finance no longer has the ability to do it himself. I can refer to speech after speech in which he said what I am saying now.

I could go on to talk about how power changes people. The Minister of Finance is a prime example of that. Now that he is a government Member, he is acting like a traditional Liberal bureaucrat. He has to hide things from the public, from Members of Parliament and from his own back-benchers. That is one reason why this Government is so unpopular. The Minister of Finance has undergone many changes, a bit like a chameleon. He is one of those great guys who helped us in Saskatchewan nationalize the potash industry.

• (1040)

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): No, Sir.

Mr. Nystrom: That was when he was in private life. So you can see he has undergone many changes.

Seriously, I want to recommend to the House that we accept this motion. It would mean that when there is to be a remission of more than $25 million, the Government must come back to this House. Members of Parliament, representing the taxpayer, must vote to approve or not to approve such remission. That is democracy. That is accountability. I am sure all members of the Conservative Party will, in the tradition of Sir John A. Macdonald, John Diefenbaker and Joe Clark, agree with me.

It is very sad that they have to defend a Minister of Finance who does not want to be as accountable or democratic as he was when in opposition. In the tradition of parliamentary reform, how about a little rebellion on the back benches? How about these Conservatives standing up for some of the traditional values they used to spout in opposition? I know the Minister of Finance would like to make this speech, but he is afraid of losing his job. I hope some back-benchers will stand up and tell us how they really feel with respect to defending traditional Conservative values.

[Translation]

I see one of my colleagues from Quebec. He ran as a Progressive Conservative candidate, because he believed in the Party. He believed that the Progressive Conservative Party supported Member participation and a democratic Parliament, and that it was against the Cabinet principle.

[English]

—where you have all kinds of secrecy and control exercised by a few people. They should get up and support this amendment. It does not mean the Government is going to be defeated, but it would have to be a little more sensitive to the wishes of ordinary Members of Parliament, let alone ordinary Canadians.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I must say I was provoked to rise at this point to—

Mr. Nystrom: You are all wet.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) should be very careful about where he throws his water. It landed on the desk of his Leader.

The Hon. Member said I have changed colours, that I am a chameleon. He knows that when this Government took office, we were bound and determined to develop the most open form of Government imaginable. That is what happened, and let me just comment specifically on tax reform and the process we have been going through in that respect.

I am meeting in about one hour's time with the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. I have been meeting with all sorts of organizations, a social policy group yesterday, business organizations the day before, labour organizations next week. This is part of the open Government we brought in and to which we are very much committed. It is one of the reasons that the record of this Government is as good as it is. I can repeat the same process on trade, indeed the whole range of policy we initiated.

The Hon. Member said I will not stand up and make a speech today because I am afraid I might lose my job. On the day that unemployment has come down to 8.2 per cent, and on the day we announced 1,035,000 jobs have been created since we took office and instituted our economic program, why would the Hon. Member say I would be afraid I might lose my job if I make a speech? I walk along Sparks Street here and people are slapping me on the back saying, "It is great to see you. It is going up from a million jobs. This is the best open and effective Government we have had". That is why this motion on the Table today is totally specious. It is not grounded in fact whatsoever.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak after the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who says he is not a chameleon and does not change his thoughts or direction. Yet he has been defending a bilateral trade agreement with the U.S. At least I presume he has. He did not particularly do it in his most recent intervention. However, I go back and look at some of the things said by that same Hon. Minister when he was a candidate for the leadership of his Party. To quote from Maclean's magazine of June 13, 1983, on the subject of bilateral trade, he said:

> Bilateral free trade with the United States is simplistic and naive. It would only serve to further diminish our ability to compete internationally.

Those are the words of the Hon. Minister who does not change his spots or direction.

Mr. McKenzie: Tell us about Pawley's position.

Mr. Althouse: We are now listening to a Government which has decided to approve a bilateral trade agreement with the U.S. which the Minister said was simplistic, naive and would not serve this country well.

It is reassuring to hear that the unemployment figures are down slightly to 8.2 per cent. I wonder if the Minister still believes his initial assessment, which is the same as ours, that the proposed deal will diminish our ability to compete internationally. I wonder what he will be able to report to the House after January 1, 1989, when our economy begins to change to fit in to that new pattern.

It sometimes helps to listen to the advice of the poet Burns who said that the Lord should give us the power to see ourselves as others see us. When we look at the way others see us on this trade deal, we see President Reagan said:

> If past is prologue, we know what the results will be. Almost two hundred years ago, trade barriers vanished in the United States' part of this continent after the new constitution took effect. Almost immediately a stagnant economy began to boom. The U.S.-Canada free trade agreement is a New Economic Constitution for North America. It will, I believe, inaugurate a similar continent-wide economic expansion.

He does not say who will benefit from the expansion, but he is quite certain there will be one. The New York Times, in its headline of October 6, 1987, summed it up about as well as it can be summed up from the American point of view. It read:

> Today Canada: Tomorrow the World

We have as well another assessment by William Randolph Hearst Jr., Editor-in-Chief of The Hearst Newspaper Syndicate. On October 11, 1987, he said:

> The momentous move towards uniting the two countries economically is very gratifying to me. For more than a decade my Pop urged in his newspapers that Canada become part of the U.S.

Very briefly, that is what the U.S. saw and sees in this deal. Quite frankly, that is how we see it as well. That is why we propose to make some changes to this particular initiative dealing with the harmonization of trade. We propose in this amendment that any trade-related initiative taken by the Government with respect to duty remission or tariff changes which will have an over-all impact on the income of the Government of Canada beyond $25 million be referred to this House for study and debate within 60 sitting days as proposed in previous amendments. We think this only makes sense. It provides an opportunity for the House to be part of decisions which affect the revenue-generating capacity of the country and tax initiatives which the House of Commons is supposed to hold sacred. We therefore urge Members to consider a $25 million level for such initiatives.

• (1050)

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in support of this amendment because I think it is an important amendment. As we have heard this morning, the Government talked many times about accountability in the House of Commons. Although we are not wed to the figure of $25 million, we think that tariff remissions of a substantive amount should be brought before the House of Commons.

In debating the free trade agreement we have not taken into account that there will be about $2 billion less national revenues collected. When revenues are not collected, they become an expenditure. We ask that such an expenditure be brought before the House of Commons. We are not asking the Government to take a giant step. We are only asking it to implement the values it said it stood for.

It is ironic that New Democratic Members are putting themselves in the position of the Conservative Government in that we are quoting that which the Conservative opposition said so often. The House of Commons should have the ability to decide where a $25 million tariff remission will be taken from. Will it be taken from social services, child care programs or even nuclear submarines? I do not know what the priorities of the Government are because it has never been very clear on that.

If such initiatives are not brought to the House of Commons the Government will be following the old traditions which allow the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) the authority to spend that amount of the money of the Canadian people. Under the American-Canadian free trade agreement remissions can be allowed with a simple signature and there is less and less accountability. I do not think that is what Canadian people are looking for. The Government, which campaigned on accountability and openness, should realize that the Canadian people are getting pretty fed up with the constant turn-arounds on all its programs. A simple amendment such as this does not destroy the Bill. It only implements the kind of value system about which the Conservatives talked so often.

We have heard nothing about how the billions of dollars in revenues which will not be collected will be replaced. In response to questions asked in the House we are told that there will be less spending for consumers as prices will be lower. However, no one talks about how the Canadian Government is going to operate with less revenue. I believe that a government which keeps talking about fiscal responsibility should be accountable. It should be able to tell the House of Commons that when a tariff is remitted, x, y, and z methods will be implemented to replace the revenues. There is nothing in this legislation which says that.

Through this amendment we are asking that any substantive remission be brought before the House of Commons. Our intention is not to obstruct the business of the country. If smaller amounts need to be remitted, we have no problem with that. However, we believe that when it gets to a certain level, the House of Commons should be able to examine it and find out which programs are being cut back or cut out because revenues are not available due to the tariff remission.

I do not think that is too big a step to ask the Government to take. Ordinary Canadians have asked for that kind of accountability for a long time. As I said before, the Government campaigned on that kind of accountability. I do not understand why they object to this now. I believe that it would facilitate the operation of the Government of the day. It would enable Canadians to know exactly what is happening under international agreements. Huge amounts of tariffs would not be remitted without the people of Canada, through the House of Commons, being aware of it.

I, therefore, urge the Members of the House to support this amendment because I believe it will help the operation of the Government of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 14 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion No. 14 (Mr. Nystrom) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that I call it eleven o'clock and we proceed to Statements by Members?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PESTICIDES

PEST CONTROL PRODUCTS ACT—CALL FOR AMENDMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Law Reform Commission has released a study entitled "Pesticides in Canada: An Examination of Federal Law and Policy". From it one learns that Canadians are changing their attitude toward the use of chemicals and pesticides.

The study recommends that the Pest Control Products Act be amended to: one, require consideration of groundwater contamination potential when pesticides are proposed for registration; two, provide for public access to health and safety tests relied on in support of a registration application, a 60 or 90-day comment period, and a right to require a hearing before a board review; three, set up a system of priorization for pesticide re-evaluation reviews and to screen registered pesticides to identify those registrations which are based on old or incomplete safety data and for which new evidence suggests they may endanger human health or the environment; four, increase fines under the Pest Control Products Act substantially; five, require that a substantial share of the pest control research budget is spent on research into non-chemical alternatives to pest control.

These are some of the recommendations found in the report entitled "Pesticides in Canada". The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) should launch a public review of the Act using this report as a foundation.

FERRIES

IMPROVED SERVICE BETWEEN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND AND NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Pat Binns (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the level of ferry service between Wood Islands, Prince Edward Island, and Pictou, Nova Scotia, will increase substantially next year. I am pleased to advise the House that the Minister of Transport, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), has approved 400 additional round trip crossings for the spring and fall months of 1988.

This is great news, not only for the trucking industry but for all people travelling between the Provinces of P.E.I. and Nova Scotia. The people in my riding are particularly pleased because they depend upon this ferry crossing to move goods and services throughout the spring, summer, and fall months.

With a total of some 6,600 round trips expected next year we will see additional employment created at Northumberland Ferries Ltd. and, of course, more goods and services will move between the Provinces of P.E.I. and Nova Scotia.

• (1100)

That will assist our economy greatly and demonstrates the Government's commitment to upgrade and improve this ferry service. As well, Cabinet is considering the provision of new vessels for the Northumberland ferry service.

I expect that we will soon have a positive decision in that regard. I can tell the House that it is great news for Prince Edward Island.

MINES AND MINING

QUINTETTE COAL MINE IN NORTHEASTERN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada and the Government of British Columbia better wake up fast to the reality facing Quintette Coal in northeastern B.C.

The 10 Japanese steel mills that purchase this coal are predictably playing hardball over price. Quintette was originally paid $102 a tonne and over the past four years has shipped 17 million tonnes, for a total of $1.62 billion, through Prince Rupert. Now the steel mills are paying $95 a tonne and are demanding that the price be lowered to $57.85 a tonne. In fact, southeastern B.C. producers are now receiving only $56 a tonne.

Reports from B.C. indicate that shipments to Japan are now 300,000 tonnes behind schedule, threatening closure of the mine because Quintette has run out of room to stockpile coal.

The difference between the price being paid Quintette and the world price for coal has reached $180 million a year. The Japanese have asked for arbitration to determine whether or not the buyers have the right to terminate the coal purchase contract.

The taxpayers of Canada have put up hundreds of millions of dollars to float this project. Someone in the Government had best wake up to the fact that the Japanese are trying to torpedo it.

DEVELOPMENT OF MONTREAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, earlier this week the Minister responsible for the development of the Montreal region made a statement pertaining to the Picard report which was tabled in this House over a year ago. As if a reminder is necessary, it so happens that this Government has been in office for three years already. Before the election the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had said that he would do everything possible so that Montreal might regain its role as Canada's great metropolitan region. Well, the first move right after the election was to transfer the air transport investigation office from Montreal to Ottawa. First loss of responsibility for the city of Montreal.

Since then the Picard committee was set up and its report included a series of 70 recommendations. The Government took a whole year to act on it, and here is a newspaper article published after the Minister's statement: "Federal commitments in principle were Mr. de Cotret's general response to the recommendations of the Picard report. There was some confusion about which specific aspects of the report had been taken under consideration, so much so that after the Minister's briefing spokesmen for the city of Montreal and the Chamber of Commerce asked for a written summary of commitments made. In a number of cases it is just a matter of continuing studies and consultations about carrying out such or such project. Mr. de Cotret did not make any financial commitment."

This situation is totally unacceptable and, as my colleague from Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) put it, the Conservative Government took a whole year to produce an utterly meaningless document: nothing but pious wishes, nothing concrete for Montreal East, nothing specific to create jobs in the city of Montreal.

MINES AND MINING

ASSOCIATION'S SUPPORT FOR CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT AND TAX REFORM

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I was delighted to learn during a recent briefing by the Canadian Mining Association that the Canadian mining industry has been operating financially in the black for the last two quarters and that global metal consumption is at near record highs. This follows six years of depressed global metal prices.

More important, I want to report to the House that the Mining Association of Canada completely supports the enhanced trading relationship with the United States. The background of this is that this industry vital to Canada was facing major import restrictions on potash, uranium and steel products, together with trade barriers being threatened for the base metal industry. The health of these industries is vitally dependent on trade relationships across the North American markets.

Furthermore, the Mining Association supports the White Paper on Tax Reform and, in fact, urges the federal Government to move as quickly as possible to Phase II of tax reform at an early date.

It is reassuring to know that the Canadian mining industry, which is so important to Canada, is returning to economic viability and supports the economic policies of the Government.

AIR TRANSPORT

UNITED STATES-JAPAN AGREEMENT ON PLUTONIUM AIR SHIPMENTS—HAZARD TO CANADIAN NORTH

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, the United States and Japan signed an agreement on November 4, 1987, which proposes to have plutonium flown over Canada. The Government has consistently said not to worry about this cancer causing substance being flown over our North because the transport route has yet to be selected.

Yet in a letter dated April 30, 1987, Secretary of State George Schultz said: "On the question of routing, it requires only that the aircraft returning plutonium from Europe to Japan must take a polar route or another route that avoids civil disorder and natural disasters." Given this information, the only possible route is across our North.

I will put money on it that if attempts were made to fly the plutonium powder across the 48 lower States, civil disorder would definitely be provoked.

The Government also said that it would be premature to take action to block these flights because no official request to permit such overflights has been received. If anyone cares to read the agreement, they will see that it is contingent upon air transport of plutonium. In other words, the agreement specifically requires air transport.

Another very important concern is that the Government keeps saying it will only agree to the shipments if safe casks are to be used.

What is the Government's definition of safe? Currently, Canada officially adheres to the International Civil Aviation Organization guidelines. For the air transport of radioactive material, ICAO in turn defers to the International Atomic Energy Agency guidelines which require a cask capable of withstanding a 50 kilometres per hour impact test. We are concerned with air transport, not automobile transport. The Government must say no to plutonium overflights now.

GOVERNMENT PERFORMANCE

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, this morning Statistics Canada released the new unemployment figures in Canada. Unemployment is down to 8,2 per cent, the lowest level in six years.

Mr. Speaker, this clearly shows that the efforts made by our Government have brought concrete results, even if Opposition Parties have constantly and fiercely attacked our policies; they are using exactly the same approach with the Free Trade Agreement with the United States.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the months and years to come will do justice to this Government and its great Prime Minister. Deals such as the Meech Lake Accord and the Free Trade Agreement with the United States are historic and extremely profitable for Canadian men and women in general.

AEROSPACE INDUSTRY

LOCATION OF PROPOSED SPACE AGENCY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Last Fall, Mr. Speaker, the Government announced substantial cuts in the budget of the National Research Council as well as major capital expenditures in a new space agency in Canada. In an atmosphere of total confusion which we are getting accustomed to after three years, the Government announced that the space agency would become a major research instrument. At the same time, it was announced that Canada would not participate in the greatest space research program, namely, the United States' Strategic Defense Initiative.

Since then, nothing! We do not know when or where the new space agency will be established; the promised research resources have not materialized; in short, utter "Mulronian" uncertainty and confusion prevail.

Will the new agency be based in Ottawa? Will it be based in Montreal? Will it be based partly in Ottawa and partly in Montreal? Nobody knows! As a matter of fact, the Minister himself has recognized to the media that the Prime Minister is the only one who knows. He has informed us that he has detailed information, and that it would be a political decision on the part of the Prime Minister.

What really concerns me, Mr. Speaker, is the admission by the Minister responsible for Science and Technology that this will be essentially a political decision of the Prime Minister. We do not need a political decision, but a decision based on good sense applying effectiveness and productivity criteria.

Unfortunately, since coming to power, this Government has not come up with many rational decisions. Mr. Speaker, in my opinion this space agency should be established in the National Capital region.

CHILD CARE

NATIONAL STRATEGY WELCOMED—TAX DEDUCTIONS AND CREDITS

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Yesterday, I, like millions of Canadian parents, was delighted by the announcement of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) with respect to a new national strategy on child care.

The $5.4 billion program over the next seven years will not only double the number of child care spaces in Canada, but will provide a much more realistic tax break for families with young children. Increasing the tax deduction to $4,000 per child for receipted child care expenses for children six years of age and under, will really be a boon to millions of middle-income families across Canada. The $200 a year refundable tax credit recognizes the role of parents who stay at home with their children or use informal baby sitting arrangements.

Most important, this new policy reinforces the rights of parents and provinces to choose the child care arrangement most suitable to their needs. The 75 per cent assistance for non-profit day care centres will certainly expand their activities and their spaces. The new arrangements with the provinces for cost sharing will help the provinces shape programs most suitable to the regions.

For the first time after years and years of discussion and debate, it is this Government that has taken real action on child care needs. As a woman, I know that this will ensure that women across the country finally have a chance to reach the goal of economic equality. As a parent, I know that parents as well will now, for the first time, have realistic choices and opportunities to meet their child care needs.

SPORTS

WORLD CUP SKI JUMPING COMPETITION AT THUNDER BAY

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, the eyes of Canada and the world will be on Thunder Bay this weekend. Big Thunder, the home of the National Sports Training Centre, will be host to 93 competitors, representing 17 countries, at the Molson World Cup of Ski Jumping, the kick off event for this year's international ski jumping circuit.

Canadians will be watching our own team, Horst Bulau, Colin Capel, Tod Gillman, Ian McGrath, Ron Rautio and Ron Richards as they take on the world. We will also be watching young Steve Collins, our Ojibway jumper, as he returns to the World Cup circuit. We all want to wish them good luck.

Thanks go as well to the hundreds of volunteers and the staff of Big Thunder for making this event possible. But the Government of Canada can make it even better. It can announce before this weekend that it has agreed to support Thunder Bay's bid for the 1991 or 1993 World Nordic Games. That would be the cap on an excellent weekend ahead.

I encourage all Canadians to tune into the World Cup this weekend to watch Thunder Bay host the world.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REDUCTION IN RATE OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the accomplishments of the Conservative Government of Canada are legion. The record shines with promises fulfilled and an ever improving national economy.

Unemployment, which had continuously increased under the Liberals, in line with their high interest rate policies and constraints on Canadian enterprise, is now being brought under control. Under our new enlightened Government, Canada has seen the creation of over one million new jobs. Today the unemployment rate stands at only 8.2 per cent, the lowest since 1981. In many regions of the country it is virtually zero, and even in hard-core areas people are finding more jobs are available.

The success of Conservative economic policy is evident to the hundreds of thousands of Canadians who were thrown out of work by the Liberal-Socialist coalition but who are now gainfully employed and making good money under the Conservative Government.

HEALTH

TOXIN TAINTED MUSSELS—PUBLIC ANNOUNCEMENT TIMEFRAME

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, this morning I received a telephone call from a woman whose father is in intensive care in the Montreal General Hospital. Much to my surprise, I also received a press release from the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) which shows that his Government hid the information about the tainted mussels for at least two days before releasing that information to the public.

It is possible that not only did the Government try to hide the information for two days, but we have information that the mussel tainting may have been hidden for up to seven days, a situation which has put the industry at risk and, more importantly, has put Canadians at risk. This particular woman's father ate those mussels during the period when the Government, in making a public announcement about the situation, could have prevented more Canadians from being hospitalized.

I call upon the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who issued a statement which clearly showed that for at least two days he did not make a public announcement when he knew about the tainted mussels, to come clean with the public and, in particular, to report to this House why he did not tell Canadians that eating mussels could possibly put them at risk.

BANKS AND BANKING

CHARTERED BANKS—HIGH INTEREST RATES AND CHARGES

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, the high interest rate charged by Canadian banks is a serious contributor to the cause of our national debt, our farm and small business debt crisis, and the slow growth in our national economy. Not only do chartered banks pay very little income tax but their high interest rates are the reason many self-employed people do not have to pay income tax themselves.

Banks are also ripping off the public by charges to an account, from taking money out of one's own account to depositing money into one's own account, plus many, many more charges. I was glad to hear the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) say that those charges are going to be investigated.

There is now a 6 per cent spread between some interest paid to customers and interest charged to a borrower.

Banks must be made responsible to the public and must share some fiscal payment to reduce the deficit of the federal Government. Banks should not be looked on as loan sharks but rather as respectable businesses in our society. This can only be attained if they change their ways.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST CODE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I know it is extremely unfair to quote the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) using his own words but I will do so anyway. On September 9, 1985, the Prime Minister sent a letter to Members of Parliament in which he said about conflict of interests:

> We have taken great pains to ensure that the new Code leaves no doubt that the ultimate responsibility for the ethical standards of the federal Government rests with the Cabinet and, more particularly, with me.

He said further:

> In carrying out that responsibility the Government is directly accountable to Parliament and through Parliament to the people of Canada. You will find no quasi independent agencies in this Code that will allow the Government to shirk its responsibility by saying that the problem belongs to someone else. Nor will you find anything which will relieve me and my colleagues of the necessity of exercising judgment.

Very clearly, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has failed to exercise judgment when he has maintained in the past that there was no conflict of interest in relation to the issue involving the Member of Parliament for York Peel (Mr. Stevens). Very clearly the Prime Minister has misled the people of Canada—inadvertently probably, of course.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member just saved himself, I guess, by saying it was inadvertent misleading. But whether that "inadvertent" came out as the Speaker rose, I will never know.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CHILD CARE

NATIONAL STRATEGY—INCREASED TAX CREDITS AND EXEMPTIONS

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in this House the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) tabled the federal response to the report of the Special Committee on Child Care, of which I was a member. I would like to compliment the Minister on his announcement. The strategy acknowledges that Canadian parents should have the choice of child care for their own children. Tax assistance initiatives will respect their choice.

Many low and middle-income families who care for their children at home, or who have a friend or relative care for their children, will be eligible for a new supplement to the refundable child tax credit. This will be increased by $200 a year for a child six years and under. This increase will be phased in over the 1988 and 1989 tax years.

The existing deduction for receipted child care expenses will increase to $4,000 for a child aged six and under, or a child with special needs.

This strategy in no way usurps the provinces' authority but is done in concert and to augment the provincial Governments' child care policies. The National Strategy on Child Care recognizes that parental choice is paramount by offering to families a policy which will help all Canadians.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

PARKER COMMISSION REPORT—CONFLICT OF INTEREST CODE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On April 30, 1986, I asked the then Deputy Prime Minister about the conduct of the Hon. Member for York—Peel. The Deputy Prime Minister in that Question Period made the following statement:

• (1120)

> —the responsibility of the Prime Minister to the House and to the country is to ensure that there has been full compliance with the code of conduct which has been established for the guidance of Ministers of the Crown. That responsibility has been discharged. The Prime Minister, the Government, and I are satisfied that there has been full compliance with the code of conduct by the Minister.

That was in April, 1986. I think it is important, on the day following the close of a sorry episode in the life of this Government, the expenditure of over $3 million, the disgrace of a Minister, that we find out here what the Government and the Prime Minister have learned from it all. Does the Prime Minister acknowledge his own responsibility, that his assurance to the House was false that the Hon. Member for York—Peel had done nothing wrong—

Mr. Speaker: The House will understand the difficulty that the Chair can be in with respect to this particular subject.

Hon. Members have every right, of course, to ask questions concerning the general issue. However, I wish to make it very clear that the Chair will not allow questions or preambles to amount to a charge of any type against any Member in this place.

If it is the desire, or if there is some reason why any charge should be made against anybody, whether they are members of the Cabinet or outside the Cabinet, then there is a proper way to lay that charge, and it is not in Question Period by way of a preamble.

The Hon. Member for York Centre is a very experienced parliamentarian who has occupied positions of high importance and trust in the country, and he knows the rules as well as the rest of us do.

I am not stopping him from asking questions about conflict of interest guidelines, or what the Government may or may not have known at the time, but I will not permit Hon. Members to use preambles to make charges against people. If that is what they feel they must do, there is another way to do it.

The Hon. Member will continue his question and keep in mind the Chair's admonishment.

Mr. Kaplan: I will do so, Mr. Speaker.

Does the Prime Minister acknowledge that the guidelines that I referred to, and that he has introduced, were not respected, that the guidelines were not policed at all, and that the Prime Minister had no basis whatsoever for claiming that that Member would be back in Cabinet?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the assurance that I and the Deputy Prime Minister gave to the House was complete and forthcoming, was based on all of the information that we had at that time, and was secured in a proper and appropriate way. That information was shared with the House.

Clearly, when the article first came out, there were meetings between the Deputy Prime Minister and the Assistant Deputy Registrar General, there were meetings between the Deputy Prime Minister and the Minister, and there were meetings between myself and the Minister in respect of each and every one of those allegations.

Based on the assurances that we received, the Deputy Prime Minister and I spoke to the House in the manner in which we did. I take back not a word of what I said, because that was based upon information imparted to me and to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Clearly, the Parker Royal Commission, having interrogated and examined this matter very carefully for some 18 months, has adduced new evidence which is before the country. I acknowledge that we accept that version, and will be acting upon it.

ENFORCEMENT OF GUIDELINES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): The Prime Minister says that he takes nothing back; the Member for York—Peel says that he takes nothing back and did nothing wrong. I began by asking what had been learned from this experience.

I wish to ask the Prime Minister, in light of all that has happened, has he changed? Are the guidelines going to be enforced? For example, in light of everything that has happened has the Prime Minister taken any steps to assure that those guidelines are now being respected by his Ministers?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I want to be very clear, and I know that my hon. friend would want this not to be subject to any misinterpretation.

When I stated that I take nothing back with regard to what I said, that dealt with the information that I supplied to the House pursuant to an examination of the material and discussions and questions submitted to the Minister by me, by the ADRG, by the Deputy Prime Minister, and conveyed to the House that same day. It is in regard to that that I ask my hon. friend to understand my use of the phrase.

In regard to the conflict of interest guidelines and problems, I appointed an impartial Royal Commission, and a Chief Justice of impeccable character to conduct this investigation fully, which he did. As evidence unfolded before the commission, which only came out in the course of using the instruments available to a Royal Commission and not available to an ordinary Member of the House or even to the Prime Minister, in light of this I instructed the Associate Secretary of the Cabinet, Mr. J. L. Manion, to review personally with each Minister his or her situation under the code very carefully, and advise me in regard to that interrogation.

I received the advice from the Associate Secretary of the Cabinet that, in his opinion, all the principles and the procedures were being complied with in all cases of members of the Cabinet. I share that information with my hon. friend.

PRIME MINISTER'S TELEPHONE CALL TO FORMER MINISTER

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): The Prime Minister was reported by the Member for York—Peel yesterday as having made what was characterized as a "call of encouragement". In the light of the revelations today, it is interesting that the Prime Minister had discussions or exchanges with the Hon. Member for York—Peel, and in spite of that he was prepared to give him a call of encouragement.

In light of the press release and statement put out yesterday, what was the tenor of that encouragement? Given that the Member for York—Peel does not accept the judgment, he indicates that he is considering appeal, I want to ask whether the encouragement of the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: The difficulty here is strictly procedural, and that is whether or not that question pertains to the administration of the Government. I do not want in any way not to give the Hon. Member the appropriate opportunity to ask questions, but I have some considerable doubt as to whether the private conversation between the Prime Minister and the Member of Parliament relates to the administration of the Government.

I am wondering if the Hon. Member for York Centre might find another way to place his question.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, let me come directly to the public policy aspect. Does the Prime Minister's encouragement include an intention that the taxpayers of Canada should pay for any legal actions now that the Member for York—Peel might take?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the telephone call to which my hon. friend refers took place after the tabling of the report in the House of Commons.

It was a call on behalf of my wife and myself to another human being, to express the sadness that any Member of Parliament would feel at the plight in which he found himself.

It in no way detracted from the statement that I issued wherein we accepted fully the recommendations and the judgments issued yesterday by Chief Justice Parker.

As a human being I would feel the same sadness for any Member of the House irrespective of the Party that he represented.

PRIME MINISTER'S DISCHARGE OF DUTY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister on the same topic.

On September 9, 1985, the Prime Minister appointed no less a person than himself to ensure that Ministers complied with the conflict of interest guidelines. Judge Parker concludes in his report that the Minister broke the rules no less than 14 times in his tenure as Minister of the Crown and demonstrated what has been referred to as complete disregard for the rule of conflict of interest.

• (1130)

Will the Prime Minister now admit that he has failed in the discharge of his duty of administering the conflict of interest guidelines in the way he said he would himself? What will he do to ensure that he and his Cabinet colleagues follow the rules now and from here on in?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on September 9, 1985, I took the guidelines that had been set out by Mr. Trudeau, we typed them up, improved upon them, we believed, and conveyed them to all Members of the House. Clearly as I have acknowledged, and as anyone would know, the guidelines are not perfect. They were good in type but clearly imperfect and the judge has referred to that in his Royal Commission Report and we accept that judgment.

I draw the Member's attention to an important statement by the judge at page 361 of his report where he says this:

> It is important to remember that no conflict of interest system can, by itself, guarantee ethics in government or prevent dishonourable conduct on the part of cabinet ministers or other public office holders. Ultimately, public trust and confidence in the integrity of government depends upon the integrity of individual public office holders and their individual sense of honour.

That is the responsibility upon all of us. While we can and shall act further to improve the Code of Conduct and tighten up even further, as the judge suggests; in respect to conflict of interest, ultimately in the end it is our responsibility as individuals to the House of Commons and to the country.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the last comment of the Prime Minister. Improving guidelines is one thing but changing the attitude of Governments and members of a Government is another.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): And of the House.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, considering the fact that the Prime Minister has failed in his task to administer the conflict of interest guidelines, as pointed out by Judge Parker, is the Prime Minister prepared to ask a more competent person to administer these guidelines? Is he prepared to legislate these guidelines and is he also prepared to include penalties, since obviously a code of ethics was not sufficient as far as this Government was concerned?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no question of anyone failing in his task to administer conflict of interest guidelines or the like. As Judge Parker pointed out in his sizeable report, it is ultimately the Member's responsibility to behave in accordance with the guidelines at all times. The most fool-proof system in the world is useless unless the Member decides to abide by it. There is the basic issue of human nature. As far as we are concerned, we have carefully read the judge's recommendations, and we will make further improvements and provide even stricter criteria for the guidelines that will be submitted very shortly.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION IN APRIL, 1986

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. On the morning of April 29, 1986, knowledge of Mrs. Stevens' loan from someone dealing directly with her husband's Department became publicly available. From that moment on, in the words of Judge Parker, surely there was what he described in the following words:

> The mingling of private and public business—that clearly involves a conflict of interest and is wrong by any measure.

Is the Prime Minister saying today that he still believes he was carrying out his responsibilities at that time in not asking then, promptly and immediately, for the resignation of the Member for York—Peel?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Member asks me whether I was carrying out my responsibilities. This is the article that appeared that morning in The Globe and Mail, the morning of the twenty-ninth. When it appeared—and this is on the record—I immediately instructed the Deputy Prime Minister to meet with the Assistant Deputy Registrar General to examine this matter. I instructed the Deputy Prime Minister to meet with the then Minister. I met with the then Minister myself. I fully reported to the House in that regard.

On the basis of information and responses provided to us, the decisions we took at the time were appropriate. Clearly in the light and with the benefit of an 18 month royal commission, the evidence adduced during the life of that commission is different from the information imparted to us and of which we had knowledge that morning.

The article appeared when we arrived at the office and at two o'clock we were providing this House with the information that we did. The information that we provided the House with was all of the information that I think any reasonable person could have been expected to acquire in those time frames and with the instruments available to us.

Obviously there has been a change in the perception of a conflict of interest. I do not disagree with the assessment of the judge, given the benefit of his power of inquiry and the opportunity that he had to reflect upon this evidence, to bring down a value judgment in the course of an 18-month inquiry. But I am satisfied that I acted promptly and properly in advising the House as I did at that time.

MINGLING OF PUBLIC AND PRIVATE BUSINESS—TIMING OF REPORT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I deeply regret the Prime Minister's answer. I am not referring to information that Judge Parker brought out in the course of his inquiry. I am not referring to any facts that came out after the twenty-ninth. I am talking about facts that became publicly available, particularly in this instance, that Mrs. Stevens had stated she had made this loan with someone with direct business dealings with her husband's Department. The Minister then admitted that he was aware of that loan on that day.

Given Judge Parker's very concise and, I think, accurate description of what a conflict of interest consists of and his talking about a co-mingling of private and public concerns, surely at that moment when it became public knowledge that that loan had been made to the wife of the Minister, the Prime Minister ought to have understood in the most basic sense that a conflict of interest existed from then on, and he ought to have demanded the resignation of the Minister. Why did he not demand that resignation then?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should not get exercised. The question deserves an appropriate response. He asks why. The answer is that the public official charged with ensuring compliance of the conflict of interest guidelines, the ADRG, provided the Deputy Prime Minister that very morning with the assurance that the Minister in question was in full compliance with the guidelines.

Subsequent to that, in regard to other allegations in the story, there was a meeting between the Deputy Prime Minister and others and the then Minister for a careful examination, as there was with me, prior to coming to the House. I conveyed to the House all of the information imparted to me and to my colleagues, and the view of the ADRG.

I acknowledge, with the benefit of this Royal Commission's 18-months work, I can tell my hon. friend without reluctance that if I had had this kind of information available to me, or any semblance thereof, clearly I could have come to a different conclusion. On the basis of the evidence provided to us that day when I spoke to the House, prior to my departure the next day for the Far East, I gave my hon. friend and colleagues in the House all of the information that was made available to us, together with the value judgment expressed by the ADRG that the then Minister was in full compliance with the conflict of interest guidelines.

JUDGE'S FINDINGS—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, for whatever reason the Prime Minister is simply missing the point. I am talking not about what Judge Parker revealed. Judge Parker was well aware that he had no mandate to pass judgment on the Prime Minister in terms of his exercising his responsibility. Some of us wanted that included in the terms of reference, and the Prime Minister knows it was not included, but I want to give the Prime Minister Judge Parker's comments and ask him now if he thinks it was pertinent to the public knowledge that he had at the time? Judge Parker says:

> The mingling of private and public business . . . that clearly involves a conflict of interest and is wrong by any measure.

Since the Prime Minister knew on the morning of April 29, 1986, that Mrs. Stevens had in fact obtained this interest-free loan from a person doing direct business with her husband's Department, does the Prime Minister not agree that Judge Parker's precise description of a conflict of interest applied then and there to the Member for York—Peel? If the Prime Minister does agree with that, why did he not demand his resignation then?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says that I knew something, presuming that I knew for certain that that was the truth. I did not know. What I did know was that there was an allegation made in a newspaper, and in political life there are many of these. It is incumbent that while we act thoroughly, we act with prudence, and that people at least be given the benefit of some degree of the presumption of innocence.

The newspaper allegation appeared the first thing in the morning. I immediately instructed the Deputy Prime Minister to meet with the ADRG who is responsible for ensuring compliance with the conflict of interest guidelines and received the assurance that there was full compliance. I went further and instructed the Deputy Prime Minister to meet specifically with the then Minister and received further assurances. I met with him myself and received the assurances that I conveyed to Members of the House of Commons.

My hon. friend says in his prefatory remarks that he wanted a certain question included in the terms of reference. I beg to differ with my hon. friend. My recollection is that opposition Parties did not want an impartial Royal Commission at all; they wanted some kind of a parliamentary group. We are the ones who established an impartial Royal Commission to get all the truth out because we had absolutely nothing to hide and we wanted Canadians to have all the truth via an impartial Royal Commission.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR ETHICAL STANDARDS OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Canadians want honesty and morality to be the practice of the Government of Canada. Morality can begin to be restored if Mr. Justice Parker's recommendations on conflict of interest are followed. I believe that honesty can begin to be restored if the Prime Minister accepts today his personal responsibility for the failure of the conflict of interest guidelines authored by the Prime Minister.

In that regard I would ask the Prime Minister if he stands by his words of September 9, 1985, in a letter to all Members of Parliament, in which he said that the ultimate responsibility for the ethical standards of the federal Government rested with the Cabinet and more particularly with him.

If the Prime Minister stands by those words, is he prepared to acknowledge today in light of the findings of the Parker Commission Report that in fact the Prime Minister did not take all the action necessary to enforce his conflict of interest guidelines?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question is do I accept responsibility for what happens to members of my Government and the answer is yes. That is the responsibility of the Leader, the Prime Minister, and I say that without any hesitation.

If my hon. friend wants to be fair in a sensitive matter that applies to all Members of the House, I would refer him to what the Chief Justice said. He said:

> It is important to remember that no conflict of interest system can, by itself, guarantee ethics in government or prevent dishonourable conduct on the part of cabinet ministers or other public office holders. Ultimately, public trust and confidence in the integrity of government depends upon the integrity of individual public office holders and their individual sense of honour.

Having said that, I will say that I think we had what many people would consider to be a good set of conflict of interest guidelines. The judge thinks that they are less than adequate and he has made some recommendations for full disclosure and other matters that I have accepted, and we will be acting upon them quickly.

I think, in the circumstances, the appropriateness of appointing an independent royal commission to examine fully the conduct of the Minister represented a substantial departure from past practice in regard to allegations made in this House. I think it was helpful to the political process in Canada and provided the beneficial rule changes that have been suggested which the Government will be dealing with very quickly.

PRIME MINISTER'S ACCEPTANCE OF RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Prime Minister for his answer but I believe, with respect, that he missed the point. There have been many occasions when the Prime Minister rose in the House with respect to allegations that had been made, either outside the House or inside the House, and gave the House his personal assurance upon his personal investigation that there had been no problem, no conflict of interest or no wrongdoing.

The Prime Minister is telling us today that in the case of the Member for York—Peel he was wrong in retrospect. That calls into question the process that was followed on the many other occasions the Prime Minister had given similar assurances in the House.

My question is simple. The process of restoring the public's confidence in the morality and honesty of Parliament and the Government of Canada can only begin if the Prime Minister rises in his place today and accepts his personal responsibility for failing to impose a set of conflict of interest guidelines authored by the Prime Minister himself because adequate measures were not taken to investigate and ensure those guidelines were being followed. Will the Prime Minister admit that today?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I have already indicated, I accept at all times the responsibility for what happens to my Government and my Party and their members. That is a fact of political leadership. One ought never to shirk that responsibility and I am not seeking to, under any circumstances.

My hon. friend is asking whether the conflict of interest guidelines were appropriate. I believed they were when I brought them in. I think many Members on both sides of the House thought they were demanding and exacting when compared with those of other jurisdictions, but clearly that is not a view that is shared by Chief Justice Parker who, having examined this matter, recommends full disclosure and the enactment of legislation in regard to conflict of interest.

Conflict of interest is an extremely complex and difficult human problem. As the judge has pointed out, and I am not trying to hide behind anything the judge has said, the best system in the world will never function unless all Members of Parliament want to live by the spirit and the letter of that law.

The best system in the world cannot exist unless human beings agree to be bound by it and to honour it at all times.

I thought we had made major improvements in past conflict of interest guidelines. I think there is general agreement that we had. Clearly the judge feels that we can improve further on them. In light of the comprehensive review he has made and the seriousness of his recommendations, and indeed the requirement for greater disclosure, I have commended the judge for the thoroughness of his inquiry and the seriousness of his recommendations, and I have indicated publicly the intention of the Government to act quickly in regard to them.

ACTION TAKEN BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister. During today's Question Period the Prime Minister is making it appear that if he had the report of the Parker inquiry on April 29, things might have been different. I think Members of the House view the situation somewhat differently.

This is not just a matter of available information. What we do know is that the Member for York—Peel admitted to the knowledge of the interest-free loan on April 29 and Judge Parker has said that from April 29 on there was a conflict of interest by any measure, not just by the measure of the guidelines that were in effect then.

Was it only political pressure that brought the Prime Minister to take action, because the action was not taken on the basis of information alone?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the action I took was the appointment of the independent Royal Commission with full and complete access, something which is most unusual pursuant to actions in this House of Commons.

The reason I took this action was because I felt it was right and appropriate and in the interests of Canada and the Public Service of Canada and those of us who seek to serve the public that this be done. I appointed a royal commissioner and we gave him complete freedom to select as counsel whomever he wished, and to conduct his inquiry in the manner in which he wanted to, and he did a professional job. He brought in a major series of recommendations for improvements. That is why it was done, because it was in the national interest that it be done, and that is what motivated it.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I think many of us in Canada felt, as we listened to the Hon. Member for York—Peel yesterday, that we were having a replay of Richard Nixon.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Come on, Jim.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the Hon. Member, especially on this subject, would stay away from argument in the preamble, set the facts and ask the question.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I think all fair-minded Canadians now know that two people failed in understanding the trust of public office.

After knowledge of the interest-free loan became public on April 29, 1986, the Hon. Member for York—Peel knew and the Prime Minister knew. As he left for his trip to the Orient, the Prime Minister said: "Don't worry about it. We are leaving the country. In a few days nobody will be talking about it." Why did he say that?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is not at all either the spirit or the approach that motivated me as my hon. friend can see from my appointment of the independent commissioner. The day after this allegation appeared, I left for Vancouver en route to Tokyo for the Economic Summit and an official visit to Japan. From there I went on to China and an official visit to Korea, and then back home. The day after this appeared I was effectively out of the country for some two or three weeks representing Canada at the Economic Summit and on these official visits.

During the course of that trip, information was provided to me as it arose from time to time. On the basis of new information, I felt that the appointment of a completely independent commissioner was appropriate. It was for that reason that I acted in a manner which I think was clearly in the national interest.

PAYMENT OF FORMER MINISTER'S LEGAL FEES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister. He failed to answer a question from the Hon. Member for York Centre in this respect. Agreeing that the Prime Minister said he accepts the findings of the Parker Commission, we saw the spectacle of the former Minister thumbing his nose yesterday at the commission, thumbing his nose at Members of Parliament thumbing his nose at the media, aided and abetted by his lawyer who challenged the credibility of the Royal Commission.

Was Mr. Sopinka, in his capacity as legal counsel at the press conference for Mr. Sinclair Stevens, paid by the Government of Canada? In addition, will the Government continue to underwrite the cost of this incredible claim by the Minister that he has absolutely nothing to hide and he is going to appeal this decision? The Prime Minister cannot say he agrees with the findings of the inquiry and continue to pay the legal bills of the person who claims those findings are false.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, first let me say that I am sure the Hon. Member is not suggesting that, notwithstanding the fact there has been a finding by the Royal Commission, the Hon. Member for York—Peel is not able to state his legal position and pursue that position which he thinks is appropriate? That right is respected by all Canadians and should be respected by the Hon. Member.

With respect to the payment of legal fees, that was announced some time ago and is in accordance with precedent.

Finally, while it is a rather hypothetical question because I do not know the intentions of the Hon. Member for York—Peel, there is no intention to pay any further legal costs. Our commitment was with respect to the Royal Commission.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I accept the commitment by the Minister of Justice that no further legal bills will be paid in the former Minister's attempt to cloud this issue.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO FORMER MINISTER

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he will repudiate Mr. Stevens' statement, quoted in this morning's Globe and Mail, in which he said he was a victim of an atmosphere of hysteria whipped up by the news media and Hamilton Liberal MP Sheila Copps?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: Will the Prime Minister repudiate that statement by his former Minister?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think that question is totally inappropriate and has nothing to do with the very important issue we are dealing with here today at great length.

INTEREST-FREE LOAN QUERY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The House knew and the former Minister admitted on April 29, 1986, that there was an interest-free loan. Since the Prime Minister knew about it then, why did he not act at that time?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have responded fully and completely to all matters relating to that question.

ENFORCEMENT OF GUIDELINES IN FUTURE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, if he has responded fully to all matters relating to that question, what confidence can the people of Canada have, when there is another situation like this in the future, that the Prime Minister will carry on a proper and full investigation and enforce the conflict of interest guidelines? What confidence can we have that this will not happen again?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the confidence my hon. friend seeks should be restored by the fact that he is looking at a Royal Commission report. He is a veteran Member of this House. Perhaps he can tell us how often Prime Ministers in the past, when confronted with allegations of conflict of interest, have appointed a Royal Commission to investigate the matter fully? I think he will find they were few and far between. This report indicates we have absolutely nothing to hide and we did exactly the right thing on behalf of all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CHILD CARE

NATIONAL STRATEGY—CREATION OF DAY CARE SPACES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that day care spaces have been growing at the rate of 19 per cent per year, and if that rate continued for the next seven years there would be almost one million day care spaces in Canada, why does the Minister's plan aim at only 400,000 spaces by 1994?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we have 220,000 day care spaces now, approximately half of which are subsidized. There is a legitimate point of view that we need more subsidized day care spaces accessible to low-income families. The plan we put forward, keeping in mind the plans of provinces like Ontario and Quebec just to name two, was for a 200 per cent increase in subsidized spaces over seven years.

I am not saying for a minute that the Hon. Member is trying to play with the figures, and the percentage she uses is correct. However, that was outside the Canada Assistance Plan. She has to keep in mind that we are talking about subsidized spaces for low-income families. I believe very sincerely that, with the subsidies now available as the provinces decide, for profit spaces will grow possibly at the same percentage rate we have seen in the past. My obligation was to provide a mix, and to provide spaces for low-income families, because that was the requirement.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, even accepting the Minister's explanation there is still a shortfall of numbers. With two and a half million children in single-parent families or families where both parents work, 200,000 new spaces over the next seven years do not begin to meet the need. Can the Minister say if he is trying to limit the natural growth, or if he has another plan which has not yet been made clear?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not trying to limit growth at all. I am trying to build in another factor to increase the growth. What I was trying to explain to the Hon. Member and the House was that we were not seeing a sufficient growth on the subsidized side. The committee very clearly pointed that out.

So I am looking for a 200 per cent increase over seven years in that sector.

• (1200)

Additionally, the provinces have responsibility in this field. I listened to what they said, looked at their reports, and looked at the trend lines which they projected. We believe that with those trend lines and our money we can meet their requirements as well.

The Minister from Quebec said:

> My first reaction is I think it's a good program. It's very flexible and it respects the jurisdiction of the provinces. With the help that we are having from the federal Government, it will help Quebec to develop and also diversify the choices.

Mr. Sweeney from Ontario said:

> It seems the kind of things we wanted to see in our program in terms of who we wanted to fund and the dollars look to be appropriate.

With respect, I know that this is an emotional issue, but there has to be an understanding of both capacity and fairness. I have tried to be as fair as possible keeping in mind that I had a bottom line. I wanted to increase spaces, and I am not going to impose upon parents one system for taking care of their children.

FINANCING OF NATIONAL STRATEGY

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Minister's use of 40 per cent of the child care money through tax measures offers an insulting $17 a month to low-income women rather than licensed quality child care services, while by 1991 he will have grabbed one-third of their child care benefits through deindexation.

Will the Government be fair and honest with Canadians for once? Will it put child care dollars into child care?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am being honest and very straightforward. Through the Canada Assistance Plan we are putting $140 million per year into child care spaces and the subsidization of them. We will increase that on an annualized basis over a seven-year period to $600 million plus. By any measure that is a substantial increase and is in addition to what the provinces are putting in.

I ask the Hon. Member to be honest for once and to recognize what I have done.

AVAILABILITY OF CHOICE TO PARENTS

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the Minister says that his program gives choices. I would like to know what kind of real choice a low-income person has who does not pay income tax and is now paying $800 a month for child care. She has absolutely no choice. Will the Minister tell her what choice she has?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to answer that question. I have analyzed the NDP response to the Special Committee on Child Care. Our system will provide for 200,000 subsidized spaces. Dividing that by seven we arrive very quickly at a rate of growth of roughly 28,000 spaces a year. The Hon. Member and her Party were willing to put in 21,000 spaces a year.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I wish to advise Hon. Members that there will be a question from the Hon. Member for Richmond—Wolfe followed by a question from the Hon. Member for Mackenzie. That will close off Question Period.

TRADE

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON QUEBEC AGRICULTURE

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

The UPA held a convention recently in Quebec City, where farm producers had an opportunity to express their profound concerns.

Also, Minister Pagé has said he is very concerned about the fact in the Agreement, Section 11 of the GATT is not mentioned or even referred to.

Could the Minister and the Prime Minister provide assurances that a specific reference to Section 11 will be included in the Free Trade Agreement and furthermore, could the Prime Minister give us the assurance that there will be no negative impact on Quebec agriculture as a result of this enterprise?

[English]

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can give that assurance. I think the free trade agreement is excellent for all of agriculture, not only Quebec agriculture. The marketing boards are in place.

I saw that they were concerned about hatching eggs, for example. I met with farmers in the egg-hatching industry. Twenty-five per cent of hatching eggs now come across the border from the United States. There is a 3.5 cents a dozen tariff on them which will be reduced over a ten-year period. They admit that that has no effect on importation.

That is one of the concerns which was raised at the meeting and I could go on to list many more. It is still protected under the quota system. I believe that Quebec agriculture is treated very well in this agreement.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION CONCERNING SECTION II OF GATT

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, first of all, the Parliamentary Secretary did not answer the question. It is simply this: Will Section 11 of GATT be included in the Agreement or will there will be a reference to this Section?

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, in recent weeks farmers have repeatedly accused this Government of not telling the truth. Instead of constantly making excuses, why doesn't the Government make an effort to prove it is telling the truth?

Mr. Speaker: the Hon. Member is of course asking a very serious question. I also think the Chair has allowed him a very substantial preamble. The Parliamentary Secretary.

[English]

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the accusation that the Government had not been telling the truth on this stems from the statement by the farmers' union that the Government said that agriculture would never be on the table. The Government never said that.

Right from the beginning there were some very important agricultural issues which had to be negotiated which have been very good for Canadian farmers. The Standing Committee has heard all kinds of testimony to that effect.

In response to the Member's other question, this agreement operates under the guidelines of the GATT. We negotiated the agreement under Section 24 of the GATT. GATT rules still apply. We are still a member of the GATT as is the United States.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

SITUATION OF SELF-EMPLOYED PERSONS

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Self-employed people who pay into CPP do not make any money in some years and, therefore, cannot contribute to CPP in those years.

Would the Minister explain what happens to those individuals' accounts when this happens? Has the Department considered allowing these individuals to contribute in poor years?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, there will obviously be an effect on the amount of pension benefits received at the time of retirement by Canadians who are contributing to the Canada Pension Plan whose earnings fluctuate from one year to the next, whether they take early retirement at age 60 to 65 or wait until the age of 70.

The plan provides that 15 per cent of the years of lowest contribution are dropped for purposes of calculation. This does help to remove some of the years of lowest earnings. It increases the pension benefits for those individuals.

TRANSPORT OF PLUTONIUM OVER NORTHERN CANADA

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present petitions from residents of Yukon Territory who wish to express their deep concern about the proposed plutonium overflights over northern Canada. In view of both the environmental hazard and the risk of hijacking where this plutonium could fall into hands for military use, these petitioners ask Parliament to say no to the transport of plutonium over northern Canada.

OPPOSITION TO TAX ON FOOD

Hon. André. Obviously, my constituents object to a measure that would have a very harmful impact on the elderly, large families, the unemployed and low- and middle-income Canadians who are already forced to spend a substantial part of their income on food. They are asking the Government not to go ahead with this proposal.

CIPW STRIKE RELATED COSTS

Question No. 217—Mr. Caccia:

1. During the postal strike from September 30 to October 16, 1987 what were the costs incurred by Canada Post Corporation for (a) salaries paid to scab workers (b) helicopters (c) buses for transporting scab workers (d) purchase of food for scab workers who had to remain in plants longer than regular shifts for safety reasons?

2. What amount did Canada Post Corporation pay regular workers for overtime over the first seven days following the end of the strike?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The Canada Post Corporation informs me as follows:

The information requested is currently not available. Information relating to expenses incurred during the postal strike from September 30 to October 16, 1987 will be reflected in the Corporation's next Annual Report which will be released at the end of the 1987-88 fiscal year.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CUSTOMS TARIFF

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-87, an Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters and to amend or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (for Mr. Cassidy) moved:

That Bill C-87, be amended in Clause 39 by adding, immediately after line 6 at page 54, the following:

(3) Where a tariff and Schedule I is charged as a consequence of an order or regulation made under this section, no additional amount of tariff shall be levied on any good which is imported between the date of coming into force of this act and the date of the order or regulation made under this section.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Motion No. 15 is to eliminate the retroactivity component in the Bill.

Because the harmonized system has been developed over a number of years and is complex by its nature and may well have some adverse and unforeseen effects on certain industries, the Government is giving itself the power, through Clause 139, to change the new tariffs in Schedules I and II for a period of 18 months on a retroactive basis until January 1, 1989.

Some importers continue to complain that this may mean that they could retroactively face a significant increase in tariffs after they have, in good faith, imported goods, paid the tariff that was in force at that time, and then sold those goods at a price which was based on the tariff that was in force at that time.

The purpose of this is simply to ensure that if a tariff is retroactively increased, then an importer who brought in goods in good faith is not unreasonably penalized.

I understand that the Government has established an interdepartmental review board with respect to tariffs that may need to be reviewed under Clause 139. The Government will probably argue that this is sufficient. However, our argument still is that where retroactive action increases a tariff, it would be unreasonable to penalize importers who had acted in good faith. The Government's response is useful but does not obviate the need for our amendment.

Most affected by this clause are small businesses that have not had the time or the money to seek out the new system as did multinationals.

I encourage the Government to give consideration to this amendment. We must ensure that the legislation does not adversely affect smaller businesses or people who operate quite clearly in good faith.

One can think of many examples of how companies would not have the ability to recover those costs. For example, a company that imports a widget with a 10 per cent tariff would add that cost to the retailer who, in turn, would add his mark-up when selling it to the consumer. If the Government informs the company a year and a half later that it has increased the tariff to 25 per cent, the only source of that increased cost will be the operating capital of the company. Such a situation could put companies at risk.

I am certain the interdepartmental committee would take that into consideration, but I would rather see an error made on the side of caution in this matter and provide protection by eliminating the retroactivity.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I want to join my colleague, the Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus), in support of this amendment. The decisions of the Government in regard to tariffs and the prospect of future changes to tariffs are so uncertain that my constituents have difficulty in taking orders for imported products which they sell. They have difficulty putting in orders because they do not know what rate of tariff they will have to pay, if any tariff at all. Since they are unable to quote a price to a prospective customer, they are in no position to make an order in the country from which they hope to import the product.

Let me deal for a few moments with some comments made earlier today by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). He talked very proudly about the fact that substantially more people have found jobs since the Government took office, and that the rate of unemployment is at its lowest in a number of years.

While that is true, it is reported in the Ottawa Citizen today that Ottawa, one of the most prosperous cities in the country, expects an increase of 9 per cent in the welfare rolls in the coming year. The same report has come from Toronto, probably the most prosperous city with one of the lowest rates of unemployment in the country, as well as from my City of Winnipeg.

Let us keep in mind what that means. According to the National Council on Welfare, in every city and province in this country, people on welfare are living substantially below the poverty line. In fact, it has been estimated that in 1986 people receiving social assistance lived from 20 per cent to 53 per cent below the generally accepted poverty line. In some cities such as Toronto, 70 per cent of the benefits they receive goes for payment of rent. That is not supposed to be the case, but the fact is that the price of rental accommodation in major cities such as Ottawa, Toronto, and Vancouver is substantially higher than the rent calculation in the monthly welfare cheque made by the provinces.

The Minister also boasted about, as he calls it, his plan to reform the tax system. I remind the Minister that the parliamentary committee that looked at his White Paper, a committee of nine members, seven of whom were fellow Conservatives, said that the federal Government's changes to the standard tax deduction for dependant children will slash benefits from middle income families and do nothing for the poor taxpayers. The proposed changes, coupled with other measures introduced by the Conservative Government since 1984, will cut real child benefits by half or more for upper and middle-income families by 1991. In other words, the people who will really gain from the Minister's proposed tax changes will be precisely those who—I see a Member opposite shaking his head, indicating that what I am saying is not correct. Let me put on the record some of the facts with respect to income distribution and who gets what. In 1981, the top 20 per cent of income earners enjoyed 45 per cent of the national income. The bottom 20 per cent enjoyed just 4 per cent of the national income. If we look at the wealthy, it is even worse. The top 20 per cent income earners enjoyed 68 per cent of the national wealth, while the bottom 20 per cent owned less than 1 per cent of the national wealth. Indeed, it is even worse than that because the top 10 per cent of income earners owned more than 50 per cent of the wealth.

Among the 20 western industrialized countries, Canada has the lowest over-all tax on wealth. Canada is the only industrialized country that permits large amounts of wealth to be accumulated and to be passed between generations without tax liability. I remind the Member who disagrees with me that it was the present Minister of Finance who proposed a year or so ago that there be no tax on the first $500,000 of capital gains.

Canada does not have an annual net wealth tax as do countries such as Germany, Austria, Norway, Sweden, Belgium and Denmark. In 1985, one in six Canadians lived in poverty. In 1986, the top 1 per cent of high-income Canadians, 63,000 families, had average incomes of $212,000 a year. I also remind the Member that 258 Canadians with incomes over $100,000 paid no income tax at all.

Let us look at corporations and the way the corporation tax system operates. I remind Members that the last major tax change to benefit the wealthy, introduced by the then Liberal Government—

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We are at report stage debate on a specific amendment. The facts presented by the Hon. Member may be interesting but in what way are they relevant to the specific amendment we are debating? I think that should be clear or he should not be allowed to continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) has the floor and there are two minutes left in his time.

Mr. Orlikow: I would put to the Hon. Member, and to you, Mr. Speaker, that customs tariffs bring in revenue, several billion dollars worth of revenue, and when decreases are made, revenue is lost. I am discussing that kind of thing and comparing those changes with the kind of tax losses we have when Governments give away tax concessions to individuals or corporations. To illustrate, the former Liberal Government brought in the scientific and research tax credit system. It believed it would cost the tax system about $300 million. In fact, it cost the taxpayers of this country $3 billion. When the Conservative Government took office, there was plenty of evidence that this had developed into a tremendous boondoggle which would benefit the wealthy and those who legally, and sometimes contrary to the law, were able to rip off the system. But what did the Government do? It said it was going to stop it but, instead, it grandfathered it so that more than half of the $3 billion was lost while the Conservatives were in office.

Through key deductions, including the three year tax holiday for new mines and the incredibly generous write-off and depletion provisions, the tax rate for resource industries was 20 per cent versus the tax rate of 42 per cent for other corporations. Four mining companies alone saved $250 million because of the three year tax holiday, and these operations had assets of $11 billion. So I say that this amendment is more than necessary and I intend to support it.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will ask my colleagues on this side of the House—the best side—to vote against this amendment, because we have no intention of proposing tariff increases that will be retroactive to the effective date of the Bill. There is therefore no reason for amending Section 139 as requested by the Hon. Member.

In response to what he said earlier, at least about the issues before the House, he is using statistics to prove that there are people in the highest income bracket who do not pay taxes. He referred to a taxation system, to a position taken by the Economic Council of Canada, and I may remind the Hon. Member that the same Council said that Canada had shown the highest growth percentage in GNP. He did not mention that. He did not mention the present drop in the unemployment rate, as proven by this morning's statistics. In the Ottawa-Hull area it is 6.2 per cent and in Winnipeg, 7.1 per cent, not what other people were saying. These factors are also important for the development of our economy.

Some people would like a society where everybody earns the same salary and everybody pays the same price for goods. Not long ago, I was visiting countries where everybody earns the same salary and everybody pays the same price. You can't even buy stamps!

[English]

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would therefore challenge the spokesperson for the Government at his word. He says the Government has no intention of using the retroactivity sections of this Act. Is it then prepared to simply delete Clause 139, which is very clear in its ability to tax retroactively? It reads very clearly:

> Any order or regulation made pursuant to this Act may, if it so provides, be retroactive and have effect with respect to any period before it is made but no such order or regulation may have effect from a day earlier than the day on which this Act comes into force.

• (1230)

Subclause (2) of Clause 139 states:

> (2) Subsection (1) ceases to have effect eighteen months after the day on which this Act comes into force.

Therefore, there are 18 months after the coming into force of Bill C-87 during which time the Government can go back to whatever is date of the coming into force of this Bill and impose additional tariffs.

The effect on small businesses, the chief importers of goods into this country, could be phenomenal. The assurance of the Hon. Member who spoke on behalf of the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) that the Government has no intention of using this clause is not very reassuring. If it has no intention of using the clause, why is it in there? If it is going to be in there, we think it needs a third subclause, which is what our amendment is, stating that the retroactivity portion of this could not come into effect.

As Members of Parliament we constantly hear from importers who are generally small businesses complaining about retroactivity on tariffs. It means that they can face significant increases in tariff costs after they have, in good faith, imported the goods, paid the tariff in effect, and oftentimes resold the goods based on their cost including the tariff. The ability for the Government to come in with a retroactive tariff and impose it after the fact could very easily and effectively put many of those small importers out of business, if this rule were used improperly or without good recognition of the problem.

Retroactive taxation is not something that the House likes to indulge in. Retroactivity in regard to the imposition of tariffs and duties is something that makes it impossible for importers, who are often small businessmen, to continue to exist.

If the Government has no intention of using it, I say that it should withdraw Clause 139 in total. If not, it should accept the amendment that we have made which takes the teeth of retroactivity away from the Government.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I am as astonished as my colleagues at the remarks of the Hon. Member from the government side who stated that the Government has no intention of using this clause.

We have proposed an amendment that would effectively stop or severely restrict the application of retroactive tariffs or duties. As a result of the statement made from the government side, it looks as though we do not need this amendment, but we need an amendment that states that Clause 139 should be deleted. The Government has stated that it has no intention of using it. What the devil is it doing in there?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Ask the bureaucrats.

Mr. Benjamin: It is suggested from the other side that we should ask the bureaucrats. That is their job on the other side, they are the Government, not us.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): We did.

Mr. Benjamin: You got an answer that said they had no intention of using it. I do not understand why any Government would put such a clause in the Bill.

As has been pointed out, often by the time a retroactive tariff or duty is put on, the importer has imported the goods into Canada, they have gone from the importer to the wholesaler, from the wholesaler to the retailer, and they have all charged prices related to their costs including whatever the duty was, if there was one, and then up to 18 months after this Bill comes into force the Government can institute a retroactive tax. Surely that flies in the face of natural justice.

If an importer, a wholesaler, or a retailer brought goods into Canada surreptitiously without paying a duty, then of course they would be subject to the laws of the land, would be taken to court, receive heavy fines, and perhaps even jail terms. The Government has that recourse against those who would try to smuggle goods into Canada without paying a prescribed tariff or duty.

Therefore, it is totally unfair and improper to have a clause allowing retroactivity. We have moved this amendment, and we hope that the Government will accept it in light of its own statement that it has no intention of using that clause.

Otherwise, Mr. Speaker, would you accept a subamendment that deleted all the words in Motion No. 15 and substituted therefor the words "That Clause 139 be deleted"? I would like to ask, Mr. Speaker, if that is permissible under the rules?

The Government has stated that it has no intention of implementing Clause 139, obviously the clause should be deleted. I do not know if it is a proper thing to do. We would need the advice of the Chair. I or perhaps a government Member would be willing to move such an amendment to Motion No. 15, and we can get it cleared out of the way and settled very quickly.

I would appreciate your advice on this matter, Mr. Speaker. Since the clause is so outrageously bad, unfair, and improper, no wonder the Government states that it has no intention of using it.

I would like to ask that you advise us, Mr. Speaker, as to what action we can take at this particular point at report stage. I also ask that the Government itself move the appropriate amendment, for which I think there would be unanimous consent, to delete Clause 139 and get it over with; or failing that, to accept the amendment that we have moved to Clause 139.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the Hon. Member wishes to move an amendment, would he move it in writing, give it to the Chair, and the Chair will make a ruling on it.

Mr. Benjamin: Could we allow Motion No. 15 to stand and proceed with Motion No. 16 to allow a couple of minutes to send a note up to the Chair, in the hope that it will prove acceptable to the Chair, and then acceptable to the Government? Would that be the proper way to proceed and let this stand for a few minutes?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there consent to stand Motion No. 15 and to go on to Motion No. 16?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no consent.

If the Hon. Member wishes to move an amendment, he would have to do it now. However, the Chair will give the Hon. Member time to write the amendment. The Chair must regretfully inform the Hon. Member that the proposed amendment is out of order as it is a substantive amendment which would have required prior notice.

• (1240)

Is the House ready for the question on Motion No. 15?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11) the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (for Mr. Cassidy) moved:

That Bill C-87, be amended by deleting Clause 141.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, one of the bases for the total Bill is an international agreement. The Canadian companies were assured by Revenue Canada that Canada would move to the new harmonized system on the condition that our major trading partners, including the United States, move to the new system on January 1, 1988. In fact, I have a copy of what looks like a replica of an overhead slide which Revenue Canada used in some seminars with brokers and importers throughout Canada in describing the new system. Let me quote from it:

> In early 1986, the Finance Minister confirmed the adoption of the new system for January 1, 1988 under the condition that our major trading partners, i.e. the U.S. and Japan, adopt harmonized system at the same time.

We understand that things are not moving as fast in the United States as they should. Feet are being dragged. As of December 2, the harmonized system legislation was still part of a large omnibus trade Bill that is moving slowing through Congress. According to the United States trade representative, Congressman Sam Gibbons will be introducing separate legislation governing a harmonized system next week. There is little assurance the Bill will be dealt with before the January 1 implementation date.

Officials in the U.S. trade division of External Affairs have confirmed that there remains a great deal of uncertainty about whether the Americans will move to the new system and when they will do so. In fact, at committee, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) conceded this.

We think implementation of the Bill itself should be delayed until such time as our major trading partner is in a position to implement its side of the bargain. For that reason we have moved to delete the implementation clause. I would suspect that if that motion passes, the Government of Canada would be required at a future point in time to bring in a one clause Bill that would provide for the implementation.

Given the fact that quite clearly people who are directly involved, the brokers and the importers, were told that it was conditional on our major partners being ready as of January 1, the Government should either accept our motion or bring forward its own to provide some flexibility. Certainly we should not be locked into the January 1, 1988, date. Clearly there will be an imbalance. If the American legislation is not through then, once again our people will be treated unfairly and be at a disadvantage. It makes a lot of sense to delete the coming in force clause so that we are not locked into it for January 1, 1988—which is not too far away. It is amazing how close Christmas and New Year's is, and I hope we are away from Ottawa at that time. I hope the Government will give consideration to the amendment so at least we can have some balance between Canada and the United States in the harmonized system.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on this amendment. The amendment talks about the coming into force of the whole Bill or the denying of this Bill coming into force. I think, therefore, that I am at liberty to speak about the whole purpose of the Bill given the intent of the clause in question.

I sympathize with what the Hon. Member has just expressed to us. I would like to support the thrust of the amendment, but let me say that the amendment would probably have been more acceptable to the Government had it said something to the effect that the actual coming into force would be on proclamation. The House could have indicated to the Government that it wished not to proclaim this Bill until the Americans had done the same thing. Had this been so, the amendment would have stood a better chance at passing than it has in its present form because we have created a eunuch Bill which, with this amendment, will virtually have no power at all. I do sympathize with the mover of the amendment because the United States has not moved to harmonize its tariff in a similar manner to ours, but there could have been a better way to word that amendment.

Throughout the debate on this Bill, we have seen a number of amendments basically trying to curtail the possibility of the Government changing many of our customs duties without the consent or an Act of Parliament. I have concerns with going that way. I know that most of those amendments will not pass anyway, nevertheless, I have to express reservation about bogging the House down with passing minor Bills in the future because we did not give proper and sufficient power to the Minister by regulation to do what Ministers should be doing.

I will give an example, Mr. Speaker. I have a textile factory in my constituency—I have several actually—but the one I am thinking of is Texturon in Hawkesbury. The Associate Minister of Defence (Mr. Dick) knows about it. He was commenting about Texturon the other day in not such a complimentary way, but that is not what I want to talk about now, Mr. Speaker. This company which is located in my riding has applied to the Tariff Board to have the general preferential tariff on polyester textured yarn changed to the most-favoured-nation tariff. These products come in from a number of countries including Mexico, Brazil, Romania and Korea. Unfortunately, the company was not successful in its attempts at the Tariff Board, but I did write to the Minister asking the Minister to intervene in this case. I note that the Minister is actively studying the file.

This factory in my riding is now forced to compete against factories in Mexico and elsewhere. The imports of products similar to those manufactured by this factory have increased. Over-all imports of these products have increased from 482 tonnes in 1985 to 657.3 tonnes in 1986. In the specific case of Mexico, the import of such products has increased from 122 tonnes in 1985 to 623 tonnes in 1986. There has been a dramatic increase in import of polyester textured yarns. This is having a negative effect on an important industry in my constituency.

This one factory now employs 72 people. Of course, as the Associate Minister of National Defence will know, if free trade passes, it will not employ any people because it will have to shut down. The Minister says that it deserves to shut down, but I disagree with that. I do not think it deserves to shut down because of free trade or because of any other reason.

I have written to the Minister asking him to effect some of these tariff changes. I am sure Members of Parliament have requested similar changes on a number of occasions, as have the industries themselves. The Government has been able to make such changes through regulation, notwithstanding the fact that Parliament must have authority to make decisions.

If too much of Parliament's time is taken up making minor decisions, it will not have time to deal with more substantive issues. I am concerned by the tone of some of the amendments which would in fact deny Parliament its right to deal with important issues for the reasons I have outlined previously.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, according to the example I gave a few minutes ago, if the preferential tariff had been removed, for instance in the case of Texturon, a company located in Hawkesbury, the price of imports would increase from 13 cents to 15 cents per kilogram, thus giving the industry in Hawkesbury and other companies like Ambertex in Brantford, Ontario, Celanese in Millhaven, Bermatex in Beaconsfield and probably many others, a chance to regain their previous prosperity.

I give this example to demonstrate that we should not, by adopting or proposing amendments to this legislation, make it impossible for the Minister to make future changes, which some of us may find desirable at some time or other when we are approached by our constituents. As I said earlier, it is important not to propose amendments that, on the face of it, would give more power to Parliament but might ultimately paralyze Government operations and prevent us, as parliamentarians, from making representations or even prevent industries from approaching the Government with requests for changes that may be necessary. I am thinking of a situation, for instance, where the Minister might wish to change a tariff and would have to wait until his Bill is adopted by Parliament. There might be a delay of several months, and meanwhile, jobs might be lost in several ridings.

I wanted to express my concerns about a number of amendments to this Bill, and I also would like to point out that although there is some good in the last amendment, Motion No. 16, it might have been better to word it a little differently, for instance, by suggesting that the Government have the Bill ratified as soon as the United States has harmonized its own tariff, otherwise there would be no justification for the Bill's existence and it would of course be useless.

[English]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, Revenue Canada and the Government of Canada have received promises or commitments from other nations, particularly the United States and Japan, that they will pass similar legislation at the same time as we pass this legislation. I am not sure what Japan is doing on this matter, if anything. Certainly the American trade representatives, while they knew of the commitment that the new system would only be adopted if our trading partners, including the United States and Japan, adopted the harmonized system at the same time, have bogged it down in an addendum to a major trade Bill which is before the U.S. Congress.

The U.S. Congress will be recessing very soon for its Christmas and New Year's break. I believe that break lasts until the end of January. The omnibus trade Bill is moving very slowly through the U.S. Congress. In fact, according to Congressman Sam Gibbons, he will be introducing separate legislation governing the harmonized system next week, but there is little likelihood that it will be dealt with before the January 1 implementation date.

How can it be that our Bill comes into force at a time when our largest trading partner has not lived up to its commitment? I do not understand the logic of the Government in its desire to proceed at this time.

The Government has no assurance or guarantee of which I am aware that the U.S. Congress will act on this matter before January 1 or that it will act on it at all. When one watches the goings on in the U.S. House of Representatives and Senate and sees the protectionist atmosphere that pervades every sector of the United States economy as well as the Congress, one can only have nothing but extreme doubt that the U.S. Senate will pass legislation like this very quickly if at all. That is why we want to delete the coming-into-force clause in this legislation.

I do not understand the Government's logic. It says that it will never use Clause 139, but it has refused to delete it. It received a commitment that the United States would pass the same kind of legislation at the same time as we do, but it did not. The Government insists on proceeding anyway. That also seems illogical.

It is about as logical as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. McDermid) who today claimed that the trade deal will be good for agriculture.

Mr. Malone: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: My hon. friend says: "Hear, hear". I want him to go and tell that to the grain producers of western Canada. Tell that to the 60,000 members of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool who do not like losing the two-price wheat system which will cost producers $260 million.

• (1300)

Mr. Belsher: What about the consumers?

Mr. Benjamin: I do not understand the logic. The Government says it is a good deal for agriculture, but we are going to take $260 million from grain producers under the two-price system.

Mrs. Mailly: Wrong again.

Mr. Benjamin: That is what the deal calls for.

Mr. Malone: No, it does not.

Mr. Benjamin: Yes, it does.

Mr. Malone: You get the same amount of money.

Mr. Benjamin: The Government should tell the western grain producers about losing the benefits of the Western Grain Transportation Act on exports of rape-seed meal and grain screenings to the western U.S. Under the deal those grain companies will have to pay the commercial rate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is not convinced this matter is relevant to the clause in question.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I was just pointing out how illogical the Government is when it tries to say that this is good for agriculture. Tell that to the agriculture producers of Quebec. Ask the Minister who was booed and heckled by those farmers the other day. They and the Government of Quebec have come forward with 10 demands which must be in the trade deal if the Government wants to keep the support of that province. Yet the Government says it is good for agriculture. Even though there is a clause in this Bill which the Government says it will never use, it will not delete it. The Government has a commitment that the U.S. will pass a Bill like this at the same time as we do, yet they are not doing so. I do not find any logic in any of those matters.

The commitments and assurances Canada has received, particularly those from the U.S., are not worth the paper they are written on by the Department of National Revenue. I would be surprised if the U.S. Congress follows through. Even if it did, it may not be for another year. In the meantime, Canada is committed to implementing the harmonization system next January 1. That leaves us out there by ourselves.

When you are dealing with the Yankee trader, as the saying used to go many years ago, you keep your back to the wall and your gun loose in your holster. The Government has failed to do that. I do not mean that literally, of course. You had to do it literally a hundred or more years ago, but at this point it is just figuratively speaking.

The Government is being had again for the umpteenth time, and we have a classic example contained in a statement from the Department of National Revenue itself. That is why there should be nothing in this Bill which specifies when it comes into force. It should only come into force if, as, and when our trading partners, particularly the U.S. and Japan, have passed the same kind of legislation. Then we can go ahead and bring ours into force.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the new tariff was proposed following a close public consultation which began several years ago. We were involved in an harmonization process. We shall deliver the goods.

The Canadian business community, including importers and exporters, is looking forward to this Bill and has taken many steps to ensure its implementation. This legislation will be extremely beneficial to businesses, because it will increase their effectiveness and reduce their costs. Both the Government and the private sector have devoted considerable time and effort putting this Bill together.

Mr. Speaker, I have here letters suggesting that it would be a disaster not to make these tariff changes, because everybody is now ready. Delaying their implementation would cost millions of dollars and we have the backing of such major organizations as the Council of Forest Industries of British Columbia, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Association of Customs Brokers, the Canadian Importers Association, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Motor Vehicles Manufacturers Association (BIG 4) and so on and so forth. This list also includes the Canadian Textiles Institute.

Moreover, effective January 1, our main trading partners will adopt the same Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System and expect Canada to play its part in the area of international development, and that is what we are dealing with this afternoon.

I therefore urge my collegues in the House to vote against this motion.

[English]

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the point in introducing this motion is that the Opposition does not have the right to propose a motion which says that an Act shall be proclaimed at the appropriate time. That impinges on the royal prerogative. The only option left to us is to make some complaints about this Bill having a clause which indicates that it will come into effect on January 1, 1988. That may not be an appropriate time given that our major trading partner has not yet shown any indication it will produce similar legislation of its own. The latest information we have is that Congressman Sam Gibbons may be introducing something next week. The harmonization system is still apparently a part of the large omnibus Bill, but it is moving very slowly through Congress. The Government and other sources tell us they are banking on Congressman Sam Gibbons initiating companion legislation on the other side of the border.

If that does not happen, this legislation puts our importers and brokers at somewhat of a disadvantage. We will have complied with the harmonization scheme, and our exporters will have to work under a different set of rules than the Americans. This will continue until both sides are willing and able to implement the agreement which they have been working on since 1981. We think it only makes sense for Canada to not implement its side of the bargain until the other side is ready as well.

Since this is the last clause of the Bill, we are making this point as part of the over-all argument we made in presenting improvements to this Bill. I remind the House that we have attempted, throughout the course of this debate, to give Parliament more rights and a faster overview of any trade legislation affecting customs tariffs and imposition of duties so Parliament again regains its traditional role.

• (1310)

We believe that, until such time as the other countries which are supposed to be partners in this agreement are ready and able to meet the requirements of the Bill with regard to harmonization, this particular section should be withdrawn. We urge Members of Parliament to see the advantages to Canada, in keeping equitable and economic relationships with our trading partners, of not putting this harmonization program into effect until both sides are prepared to do so, until our largest trading partner is able to reciprocate with effective legislation permitting the harmonization of collective duties and tariffs. In that way, our exporters and their importers will benefit equally and equitably by the imposition of this system.

We believe that implementing our side of the bargain on January 1 while we await American action is neither an equitable nor effective way of conducting trade relations with a neighbour, whether a good neighbour or not. It is just not an effective way of doing business. We urge the Government to delay the implementation of this until both sides are able to do so.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I gather the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) seeks the floor on debate. The Member has moved the motion and is therefore deemed to have spoken. The only way for him to speak would be with unanimous consent.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I thought if the Hon. Member was not in the House another Hon. Member had to be named as moving the motion.

Mr. Nystrom: He used me.

Mr. Benjamin: Were you in the House?

Mr. Nystrom: Yes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 16, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Normally at this time the House would proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions at report stage of the Bill now before the House. However, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 13(5), the recorded divisions will stand deferred until six o'clock, Monday, December 7, 1987.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Wednesday, December 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-54, an Act to amend the Criminal Code and other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Robinson (p. 11291).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker—

Miss Mailly: He doesn't even know what Bill it is.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the Member says that I do not know what Bill it is. In fact, I was not certain that we had finished with the other Bill and I was just looking at my notes.

I want to speak on this Bill because it is a tremendously important issue. The Government is proposing legislation which has been criticized and condemned by a larger group of individuals and organizations than I have seen react to any other Bill brought forward by the Government.

I have always been of the view that in a democratic society we ought to permit the greatest possible range of freedom to speak, write, publish, and broadcast. I have always been very skeptical about any attempts by governments or individuals to restrict the rights of any individual, publication, or organization to express their views.

The reason for my position is very clear. We have seen many successful attempts in the past to restrict these rights. During my time in Parliament, the Supreme Court of Canada, by a very narrow margin of five to four, ruled that the book Lady Chatterley's Lover, written by an author considered to be one of the greatest writers in the English language of this century, D. H. Lawrence, was not pornographic. This book is now considered by most people who are knowledgeable about literature to be a classic. I give that as an illustration of why I am a believer in the right of people and organizations to express their views on every subject with as little restriction as possible.

However, one must be realistic. I am a grandfather. I have two grandchildren, a granddaughter who is eleven and a grandson who is six. Albeit as a believer in free speech, I must admit that I am appalled at some of the material which is now available in print, on film, and through other media. I have faced reality and am now prepared to agree to some restrictions to which some years ago I probably would not have.

Mr. McDermid: Changed your mind, did you?

Mr. Orlikow: Like anyone who has any sense, which excludes the Parliamentary Secretary who just interjected, I try to face reality.

Mr. McDermid: Yet you criticize the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for changing his mind. Double standard.

Mr. Orlikow: I am very happy to support the resolution on pornography which was passed by the Federal Council of the New Democratic Party in 1983. It reads in part as follows:

> Therefore be it resolved that the Federal New Democratic Party:
> (1) defines as pornography material which condones violence, coercion, abuse and degradation in its depiction of human beings and condemns the production and distribution of such material whether in film, video, print, or any other form;
> (2) condemns the production and distribution of material which portrays or promotes the sexual exploitation of children and calls for severe penalties for offenders;
> (3) calls for a strengthening of Section 159 of the Criminal Code of Canada to reflect these concerns;—

It goes on to give some detailed suggestions for amending the Broadcasting Act and so on.

This proposal with which we are now dealing was first brought forward in a Bill by the then Minister of Justice, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), was criticized very severely. Calls were made by a large number of very responsible organizations for the Bill to be withdrawn.

• (1320)

Now we have the second version of the Bill that was brought forward by the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn). The reaction of very responsible groups and individuals has been one of criticism. The Bill has been criticized by editorials in The Globe and Mail, La Presse, Le Devoir, The Ottawa Citizen, The Toronto Star, the Toronto Sun and The Vancouver Sun. I never thought I would live to see the day when The Toronto Star and the Toronto Sun would agree on anything, but both have criticized this Bill.

I am sure that this is by no means a complete list of the newspapers in Canada that have criticized this Bill and called for its withdrawal or major revisions.

Organizations which are opposed to the Bill include the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, the Canada Council, the Canadian Conference of the Arts, and ACTRA, which represents most actors, writers and film directors.

Let me put on record the views expressed by The Globe and Mail in an editorial on Tuesday, December 1. The title of the editorial is: "The Bluenose Bill". I will only read part of it:

> Ottawa's anti-pornography Bill is an unjustifiable intrusion into freedom of expression, sloppily drawn and meanly defended. It seeks to criminalize taste in the guise of defending morality and expresses a rigid intolerance of human sexuality and eroticism. It panders to prudery with reckless disregard for justice. It denies Canadians access to harmless and pleasurable materials. It demands a regression in time that will spark a revolt in practice. This is a gratuitous and clumsy piece of work that should be withdrawn and replaced with common sense.

Let me put on record the views expressed for the Canada Council by its chairman, Maureen Forrester, one of the best known Canadians who has sung with every major opera company in the world.

In a statement on November 27, the Canada Council indicated:

> The Canada Council has been on record, since January 1985, in opposing censorship of the arts. Since Bill C-54 received first reading in May 1987, the Council has made representations to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice to express its concern at the negative effect Bill C-54, if passed in its present form, would have on the legitimate creative activity of professional artists. The Council fears that Bill C-54 will result in an unreasonable limitation of the freedom of expression of Canada's artistic community, as guaranteed in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.
> A large number of artists' organizations, representing a majority of the Council's clientele, have stated that they find Bill C-54 to be not acceptable as drafted. The Council agrees with this position and will communicate its concerns directly to the legislative committee in the strongest possible way.

Like other Members of Parliament, I have been receiving letters from people expressing their concerns about the large quantities of pornographic material which they say is available. They have been urging support for legislation, and I am not opposed to legislation. I have already indicated that I am not opposed to legislation which will limit material that is clearly pornographic, whether it be in print or on film.

This Bill does not do that. This Bill will put severe limitations on much more than pornography because, according to people like Maureen Forrester, Pierre Berton, and many other individuals who have expressed opposition to this Bill, it goes much further than simply dealing with what is clearly pornography.

This Bill would put restrictions on any erotic material, whether it is in books or films, on television or tapes.

Sex is a part of life. One cannot ignore it or legislate against it. One cannot prohibit it by law.

If this legislation is passed, the depiction of any form of sexual activity will become illegal. The only legal images will be those defined as erotica, or those determined by a judge to have artistic merit or an educational, scientific, or medical purpose.

I recall sitting at home in Winnipeg watching a movie on television. This film had been shown at all first-run theatres across Canada. My wife and I found that the movie was rather dull and switched to another channel. About a half hour after we switched channels I received a telephone call from one of my constituents who expressed his shock at what he was watching, which turned out to be the film that I had turned off. He was protesting that there was a scene in that film being shown on television which showed a woman naked to the waist. He said that he had young children and did not think they should see such films. I told him that he has every right to choose what he wishes to watch and, if he believes that film is one that he or his children should not see, he could have changed the channel.

This film had been shown in movie theatres in every province of the country. Manitoba is the only province that does not have censorship, but simply a classification system. All other provinces which censor films screened this movie before it was shown.

I said to him: "Do you really think this film should not ever be shown in movie theatres in this country?" Some people really believe that, but but I do not believe the Parliament of Canada should be expected to pass a Bill which has been endorsed, promoted, and pushed by certain groups in society who have such restrictive views. Believing as I do in free speech and democracy, I agree they have every right to promote their views. However, to try to impose a set of morals on this country which would take us back to the Victorian or pre-Victorian days, I certainly cannot accept that.

As I indicated, the artistic community is particularly worried about the effects of both the definitions and the defences provided in this Bill. The onus has been clearly placed on the artist or writer to prove the material is not pornographic, thus creating legal obligations on them that they can ill afford. It seems that provision is completely contrary to the basic fundamental principles of our system of justice. Under our system of justice a person is considered to be innocent until proven guilty.

What this Bill says is that if there is a complaint that an artist has painted a picture which might be classified or considered to be pornographic, or if a writer has written a novel which someone considers to be pornographic, they can be charged. The usual procedure is that someone can make a complaint to the police. The police will look at it and, if they believe the complaint is justified, they take their evidence and views to the Crown prosecutor. The Crown prosecutor, as senior legal official in this kind of situation, decides whether that charge is justified. If the Crown prosecutor believes that the material alleged to be pornographic is in fact pornographic, then he or she proceeds to lay a charge, and the charge will eventually be heard in court before a judge or a judge and jury. The Crown prosecutor will give the evidence. Then the artist who has been charged, has the opportunity, together with his or her legal counsel, to enter a defence.

The provisions of the Bill turn that procedure on its head. The Bill says that if there is a claim that some material is pornographic, such as a novel, a film, or movie cassette, it is for the artist to prove it is not. I believe that kind of concept is so contrary to our whole system of law. By that provision alone, we are making a major change in the way in which our system of justice operates. I believe it would be a mistake which will lead to tragic consequences.

That kind of provision, along with many others, is completely unacceptable to me and to other individuals and groups, as well as writers, some of whom I have quoted. For that reason, and for many other reasons, a few of which I have tried to put on record, I and my colleagues intend to vote against this Bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the comments made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), and I realized that the Hon. Member was taken unawares at first and had a lot of trouble because he did not have enough information, and in fact that was obvious throughout his presentation. The Hon Member for Winnipeg North may not be aware, Mr. Speaker, that we are now considering the motion by his colleague from Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), the effect of which would be quite simply—

[English]

—to scrap the Bill. I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) a question. Is the president of the Canada Council, Maureen Forrester, saying in her letter that we should simply ban the Bill, just as the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) is stating in his motion that "this House declines to give second reading to Bill C-54 because it fails to clearly define pornography as material that condones violence", and so on?

Does the Hon. Member believe that Maureen Forrester believes that we as Government should not address pornography in which children or young people engage in sexual conduct, extreme violence in a sexual context, sexually violent behaviour, degrading acts in a sexual context, bestiality, incest, or necrophilia?

Does he believe that we should not address those kinds of sexual conduct? Is it the intention of Miss Forrester to tell the New Democratic Party to scrap the Bill, or is she saying to pass the Bill on second reading and refer it to a legislative committee for amendment by Members of the House of Commons in line with parliamentary reform?

Where does the New Democratic Party stand on parliamentary reform? We present a Bill in the House on second reading, and those Hon. Members say, "Oh, no, we will not send it to a legislative committee. We want the Bill scrapped". What is the Hon. Member's response to this?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I did not deal specifically with the amendment moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). Obviously, I support it.

The Parliamentary Secretary is suggesting that if we oppose this Bill and support the amendment, somehow we are accepting the freedom of individuals, groups, or organizations to promote the kind of material he listed. Nothing could be further from the truth. I thought I made it very clear in my remarks that I am prepared, as are my colleagues—and as the resolution passed by the Federal Council of the New Democratic Party made very clear—to vote for legislation which deals with the problem areas. However, the point is that editorials have been written in newspapers, some of which I have put on the record opposing this Bill, and organizations have opposed the Bill as it is drafted at the present time. Individuals such as Pierre Berton and a host of others also oppose this particular Bill.

Let me deal with the question with respect to the Canada Council and what Maureen Forrester said. I put on record in the course of my speech, the full text of the statement. I will read the relevant part which I think answers the question put to me by the Hon. Member. It states:

• (1340)

> A large number of artists' organizations, representing the majority of the Council's clientele, have stated that they find Bill C-54 to be not acceptable as drafted. The Council agrees with this position and will communicate its concerns directly to the legislative committee in the strongest possible way.

I have been here for quite a number of years, much longer than the Member who asked me the question. When we vote on Bill C-54, if the vote carries, which given the Government's majority I am sure that it will, the House of Commons is approving the provisions of this Bill in principle. The amendments that would be considered in committee, or back in the House at report stage, can only deal with a certain few of the clauses.

We are saying that this Bill as drafted is bad, wrong, and dangerous, and we want this Bill withdrawn. This is version number two. If we can go from version number one to version number two, there is no reason we cannot go to version number three. Therefore, if the Government withdraws this Bill and brings forward a Bill with provisions that deal with the question of pornography in a realistic manner, a Bill which would get the support of the newspapers which have opposed it, would get the support of the organizations which have opposed it and called for its withdrawal, and would get the support of the people who are knowledgeable in the area, then we in the New Democratic Party would be very happy to support it.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a point of agreeing with the Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé) in his characterization of the NDP's position as identifying themselves with those who oppose any form of regulation of pornography.

I spoke on the Bill and indicated our grave reservations about this Bill which seriously encroaches upon freedom of speech. This Bill shows an insensitivity on the part of the Government and a characterization of all sex as dirty, something which is ridiculous in contemporary society and which is way out of tune with the feelings of the Canadian people as we in the Official Opposition understand them.

On the other hand, there is a lot wrong with the present pornography law. The former Government commissioned a royal commission which came out with very sensible recommendations which we would have liked to have seen implemented. I am afraid the position the NDP is taking, if it is accepted by the Government, will result in nothing happening. The Bill will disappear in the first round, which is what Members of the NDP state that they would like, and what will follow? Perhaps nothing.

Therefore, on behalf of my Party I have put forward a strategy which I would urge on the NDP of expressing our views on the repressive features of the Bill, but trying to do our work as parliamentarians to make it better.

I can understand why Maureen Forrester is very worried that this issue has been entrusted to a Government which has shown such a lack of understanding of human sexuality and of the right of free speech. She is correct about that. But they are the Government. I would urge that after a full debate on second reading, we allow this Bill to go to the committee. Let us be sure that we consider the sensible advice of Maureen Forrester, and the position taken by the NDP National Council, the position taken by my Party, and the position taken by public opinion polls which show a fair consistency across the country in approving sexuality in literature as long as it is not violent, degrading, capitalizing, and exploiting children. We do not want that. I urge the Hon. Member to change his opinion on the amendment, to let the Bill go forward, and see what we can do to make it into a sensible piece of legislation.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) knows that even if we wanted to prevent this Bill from going forward, we cannot do so, because the Government has a huge majority.

The debate will end within a reasonable time; we will vote against it; the Liberals, who know how bad it is, will vote for it—

Mr. Kaplan: No, we are voting against it.

Mr. Orlikow: —to get to committee. When it gets to committee, our members on the committee will be making reasonable amendments, just as I had hoped the Hon. Member would.

I want to say to the Hon. Member that we would have been happy to support a Bill which would have been based on the recommendations made by the Badgley commission. The trouble with the Hon. Member for York Centre, not only on this issue, is that he is afraid to take a stand. He wants to be able to say to people who are opposed to this Bill and other Bills that he is on their side, as well as being against them. He wants to be on both sides of the question on every question.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate this afternoon on a very important Bill, and I am of course referring to Bill C-54.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my disagreement with the amendment proposed by the NDP. This amendment says, and I quote:

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:
> "this House declines to give second reading to Bill C-54—

In other words, the New Democratic Party is offering us the alternative of not having the Bill exist at all. I suppose we are to assume that according to the NDP, Parliament should not pass legislation on pornography.

Mr. Speaker, I have to say I entirely disagree with a motion that one would not have us legislate at all in this area.

I have received several letters from my constituents urging me to support Bill C-54. I must say I also had some reservations about Bill C-54, and I want to say that I would not be able to support this Bill unless it is substantially amended. However, Mr. Speaker, there is a difference between wanting to amend an imperfect Bill and wanting to drop the Bill outright and thus presumably reject the proposal to legislate in this area.

Mr. Speaker, I want to read you a letter I received from one of my constituents, Mrs. Cécile Clément, of Embrun, Ontario, who writes: "As a parishioner of Embrun, I am committed to the fight against violence and child pornography which degrades women and children." Mrs. Clément asked me to support her campaign against pornograghy.

A priest, Father Paul-Yvon Ménard, of Embrun, also wrote to me on November 21, 1986, asking me to support a Bill that would either stop or control the pornography around us today.

I have another letter here from Mrs. Thérèse St-Amour of Embrun, also asking me to join the fight against pornography. Father Lucien Charbonneau sent a similar request on November 28, 1986. Mr. Speaker, I have many other letters from many communities in my riding, all asking me to adopt legislation on pornography.

I have before me another letter—

[English]

I have here another letter from a Mrs. Betty McDonald of Green Valley, Ontario. She writes:

> I am a concerned citizen and grandmother who has four grandchildren growing up in the '80s.
> I would urge you to encourage and support the necessary changes to the Criminal Code that will eradicate pornography in our society.

Very clearly there is a will and a desire on the part of the population that we legislate in this matter. Pretending that one can just move a motion to delete the Bill, or to have the Bill disappear from the Order Paper, is not what I consider to be a viable solution to this very important problem.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Minister tells us that his Bill is aimed at responding to public worry, to ever growing concern over the proliferation of violent and debasing pornography, and pornography in which children are involved. Hon. Members will recall that this is the Government's second attempt at enacting legislation in this field. Sure enough, the former Minister of Justice, the Hon. Member for St. John's, once tried to get a legislative measure through the House of Commons but it proved to be a major failure because his bill went too far and was unacceptable to a contemporary civilization. Victorian is the label which certain Canadians would put on Bill C-114, the first measure.

The Government has now introduced its new Bill, Bill C-54, and it is certainly not as Victorian, dated and unacceptable as Bill C-114, it is admittedly better but it still goes too far in certain fields and arbitrarily enforces the law. This is why my colleagues in the Liberal Party have no intention of unduly delaying the second reading of this Bill, although we will be voting against it in principle as a way to indicate that the Bill needs to be amended. Still, in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, if the Government is prepared to make the necessary amendments as soon as possible when the Bill gets to committee, I can assure you that I would be prepared to support this Bill on third reading, provided major amendments are made to it.

One of the aspects of the Bill which worry me, and I must tell you this, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that Bill C-54 makes it an offence applicable to pornographers, preventing any individual from importing, making, printing, publishing, selling or renting pornographic material. Sure though most of my constituents and I may be that distributing pornographic material has to be stopped, I think it would be important to make a real distinction with respect to sanctions meted out to those who make such material—a highly-paid profession, as some people have suggested—and, for example, a convenience store owner in my riding who rents videotapes and gets maybe 50 cents in commission on each such rental. The Bill does not seem to make any distinction between various categories of people who might break pornography laws. I think it must be said that these two individuals whom certain people might call pornographers ought to be treated differently under the law.

We know that Bill C-54 contains new provisions dealing specifically with pornography involving children.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure all Hon. Members are supportive of a Bill aimed at curbing child pornography.

Under the Bill, a person would commit an indictable offence and be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years, or so I am told, when inducing, inciting or coercing a person who is or appears to be under age 18 to produce pornographic movies or material.

I think it is important to underscore the words "person who appears to be under age 18" because some people enjoy making pornographic material, perhaps in certain cases with individuals over 18, but they show or attempt to show that these individuals are much younger, they try to show them as being perhaps only 12 or 13 years of age.

I realize that in some cases it will be difficult to decide whether a person is shown as being younger than he or she actually is. But in certain cases, for example, how can one say that someone aged 19 is shown as being only 17? These are difficult cases. I am sure that those who will be responsible for dealing with these cases will use their judgment in such circumstances.

Still in most cases we see something really different. For instance, we see a young woman dressed and with her hair done to look as though she is 11 or 12, an attempt to show that she is much younger. In such cases I think the Bill should contain specific provisions to deal with these people, including indictable offences applicable to people who radically change their age or appearance in an attempt to appear much younger that they are.

Mr. Speaker, here is the position of our Party with respect to this Bill. First, in terms of principles, we agree that legislation is needed and that time has come for Parliament to take action in this field. It is no longer good enough to say that we reject any attempt to pass legislation, and this is why we want this Bill referred to a legislative committee as soon as possible.

Still it must be noted that we want to amend certain provisions, for example those which relate to erotica, for often there is confusion about what is erotic and what is pornographic.

We are also concerned about the great severity with respect to sexual relations which, in this Bill, are purely and simply forbidden. I would suggest that if there is no violence, and so on, showing a sexual relation in a film is not always necessarily pornographic.

Mr. Speaker, in the few moments I have left I should like to conclude by simply telling the House that I hope this Bill will be referred to the legislative committee as soon as possible so we can make the necessary amendments. I want the Bill to go ahead once the required amendments have been made.

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO INCLUDE PROPERTY RIGHTS

The House resumed from Thursday, October 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. Reimer:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Constitution Act, 1982, should be amended in order to include property rights and, that the Governor General issue a Proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada to amend Section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms so that it reads as follows:
> "7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice."
> and this House urges that the Legislative Assemblies of all provinces and the Senate pass similar resolutions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The last time this matter was debated, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) had the floor.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak. I have not had the occasion to participate in debate for such a long time.

The last time we discussed this motion, the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) had moved a motion suggesting that we consider amending our Constitution by adding the right to own property. I suppose that as a general principle, if I were to ask anyone for his or her initial comments on whether or not people should have the right to own property, the first answer would obviously be yes. However, looking at the issue a little further, one sees that the so-called right to own property does not in fact always exist. Perhaps there is good reason for this.

I bring to the attention of the House, for instance, the fact that a number of provincial government agencies have the right to expropriate property. That, of course, is necessary for the good functioning of Government in a civilized society.

There must be good and proper expropriation procedures to ensure that individuals are reimbursed in cases where expropriation is necessary. There must be evidence to suggest that such expropriation itself is necessary. Once those criteria have been met, expropriations can take place.

I recall that during my days as a Member of the Ontario Legislature this issue came up from time to time. Interestingly enough, one of the greatest opponents of property rights during the time I was there from 1981 to 1984 was in fact the Progressive Conservative Government of the Province of Ontario.

Sometimes people associate Tories with being great defenders of property rights. That, of course, is totally erroneous. Tories have no monopoly on virtue, as we all know, nor should we compliment them for anything they are doing in this regard.

I could be partisan and say that we should not compliment Tories on anything at all, but far be it from me to raise an issue with that tone. I would never want to do that, even if I should.

Let us recall expropriations of the past. As far as I know, the biggest expropriation ever to take place in Canada was the expropriation of assets relating to the Crown Trust, Seaway Trust, and Greymac Trust companies by the Government of Ontario. That is interesting, considering the fact that a Conservative Member is proposing this property rights amendment, pretending that Tories are the great defenders of that issue.

Mr. Mitges: What about Mirabel?

Mr. Boudria: The Hon. Member across is talking about Mirabel. I am glad he is trying to draw a parallel between those whose property was purchased in an expropriation and those whose property was expropriated in the Crown, Greymac, and Seaway Trust matter and whose assets were never reimbursed. If that is a parallel, the Government across is even more frightening than I thought it was.

In that largest expropriation I have described, people's life savings were taken away. People who had invested their life savings in those corporations were left with nothing. Sure, those who had put their money on deposit managed to get their money back with the assistance of the federal Government through the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, but those who owned shares had their property expropriated, and the Government of Ontario said that it was necessary. It dealt with the issue for years and, as far as I know, it is probably still not all resolved even though it happened some four years ago.

Obviously the point I am making is that Conservatives are not totally virtuous and cannot claim virginity as it pertains to expropriation without due compensation.

There are other things about property rights that merit our attention. For instance, we know that in some jurisdictions property rights have in the past been interpreted by courts of law as meaning that someone who owned a factory could actually have the de facto legislative power to prevent workers in the factory from unionizing or associating. If a property rights clause were entrenched in the Charter, it would do more than simply protect from expropriation those who own real estate. It would do more than protect those whose property had been expropriated without due compensation by Conservative Governments of the past. It could be interpreted in many ways that would deny other rights based on the fact that property rights would supersede those other rights.

Although many people are in favour of the entrenchment of property rights in our Constitution, I must say that I am very concerned about its possible effects.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity this afternoon to speak on the motion moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer). The motion states that property rights should be included in the Constitution.

Canadians from all across Canada support the idea of including property rights in the Constitution. Like my colleague from Kitchener and many others, I believe that it is extremely important to amend the Constitution so that property rights are protected.

It has been a long-standing policy of this Party that property rights should be well protected. We tried to get it into the Constitution, but the Liberal Government, dealing with the NDP, did not want to protect the rights of Canadians during the historic Constitution debate.

Property rights were included in the Magna Carta of 1215, the English Bill of Rights of 1627, the fifth and fourteenth amendments to the American Constitution of 1791 and 1868 respectively, and in 1948, the United Nations saw fit to include property rights in the Declaration of Human Rights. In 1960, the Canadian Bill of Rights also included the protection of property rights. In 1972, the U.S. Supreme Court confirmed once again the need to have this right entrenched. It declared that property does not have rights, people have rights.

A fundamental interdependence exists between the personal right to liberty and the personal right to property. Neither could have meaning without the other. That property rights are basic civil rights has long been recognized. The UN Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which Canada signed in 1948, stated that everyone has the right to own property individually as well as in association with others. It also said that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his property. It is therefore important that we amend the Constitution to let the world know that Canada offers everyone his or her basic rights.

At this time provincial Governments may pass legislation which, in most people's minds, violates property rights, and our judges would be powerless since that would not violate a protected constitutional right.

History has shown that property rights mean more than simply a right to own land. It is not impossible to conceive the idea that social programs like social assistance, chattels, personal property, and patents could be challenged. At this time our Constitution does not protect us, and the courts may find it difficult to disregard one type of property yet allow another.

Some in this House would not want this type of protection for fellow Canadians. It is interesting to note that at this very moment in the Soviet Union, citizens are being given the opportunity to own enterprises, albeit a limited amount. Nonetheless, they are moving in our direction.

Since 1981 this Government has been seeking changes in the Charter of Rights. Unlike the previous Government, the Conservative Government sees its responsibility and it would be dishonest, morally and intellectually, not to seek changes that will ensure our rights in all facets of life, including the enjoyment of property. It should not be left to the whims of arbitrary interpretation. It must be entrenched in the Constitution.

Let me state again that the individual must have a right to not be deprived of his or her property except in accordance with the principles of natural justice. However, we need as well to ensure that someone will receive fair compensation should the need arise, and public interest overrides private interest. At this time we have no safeguards against unjust compensation. In the case of expropriation, we need to make sure that people displaced because of the public interest are treated fairly.

The previous Government at times forgot its responsibility to the people in a mad dash to erect white elephant airports like Mirabel and Pickering. We need to ensure that these problems do not occur again. In the case of Pickering, we are all well aware that the airport was eventually cancelled and somewhere down the road the property owners were given a chance to repurchase their property if they were interested in doing so.

Recently the Real Estate Association of Canada commissioned a Gallup poll which indicated that a great majority, 81 per cent, of those questioned believed it was fairly or very important that we amend the Constitution in order to protect our property rights. I suppose I must declare more than a passing interest in that subject since I have been a real estate broker for 40 years, give or take, and am therefore well aware of how important it is that a purchaser have clear title to the property. Certainly they would have a lot more peace of mind if they know that their property cannot be expropriated by any level of Government.

This right should be in the Constitution. This Government, in its ongoing endeavours to provide Canadians with responsible Government, will ask the House to vote in unison to accept this motion.

Again let me commend the Hon. Member for Kitchener on bringing forward this motion. I hope this House gives very serious consideration to voting in the affirmative because people do not want to be subject to the will of any Government with respect to owning property, no matter at what level.

I am aware, as the previous speaker said, that there are times when one level of Government will have its eye on a particular piece of private property. Of course, it could be for something that was in the public interest, but in those cases I feel the owner should be well compensated for having to give up his property.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, as I listened to the Hon. Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka (Mr. Darling), he reinforced my understanding that what we have here is the setting up of a straw man by the supporters of this Bill so they can knock it down. No one questions the right of individuals or companies in Canada to own property. We have now come to a point where the majority of Canadians own their own house. They may still have a mortgage on it, but they own it, and no one questions that right. It is because no one questions that right that we believe there is absolutely no need to amend the Constitution or put a clause in the Charter of Rights guaranteeing people the right to own property.

When property is purchased or expropriated by a federal or provincial or municipal Government, it is not done on a whim. When they believe it is necessary—and I will indicate some of the reasons why it may be necessary—they either reach an agreement with the property owner, or there is legislation which outlines the way in which a public body can move to expropriate the property it wants or needs. The case will be heard by a court which will rule on the validity of the move or on the amount of compensation, or anything else.

As the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) indicated—and I wish the Hon. Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka had listened—the Conservative Government of Ontario, when this matter was being discussed in Parliament, advised us of its opposition to entrenching property rights in our Constitution, as did most of the other provinces, as would most cities, and as would any federal Government which was realistic and honest.

For example, suppose Ottawa grows to double its size and it becomes necessary to extend the length of the runways at the airport. They may well have to expropriate some land now owned by a farmer which abuts the Ottawa airport property. In Winnipeg the airport is right in the city and, if the runways have to be extended, property may have to be purchased. If this proposal is entrenched in our Constitution that may be very difficult. A court may rule that the federal Government does not have the right to expropriate the land.

In my Province of Manitoba there are repeated proposals, requests, and demands that the highway from Winnipeg to the American border be widened to four lanes. If that proposal is approved by a Government of Manitoba, of whatever political stripe it may be, such a clause as this in our Constitution may create tremendous difficulties or even make it impossible for the province to do that.

During the time of Conservative Governments in Ontario, Highway 401 was almost doubled in size. I am sure that a great deal of property had to be purchased. I have no direct evidence of this, but I would be very surprised if there were not property owners who were dissatisfied with the offer made by the then Government which required the Government to take measures through expropriation. The ability to take such actions is needed by cities as well which also have to improve roads and bridges and build new schools.

With such a clause in our Constitution we may see a time when the courts would strike down the initiative of Governments to improve safety in the workplace or to make technological change. Inspectors from relevant departments may tell a factory owner that the heating system of his building does not provide the necessary quality of air and that he has to make major or minor changes. However, under this kind of clause an owner may say that he is not prepared to make such changes and that to be forced to do so is an infringement on his right to own the property and deal with it in the way in which he wants.

This could interfere in a marked way with the ability of a province to implement pollution control systems. These are only a few of the reasons we should not pass this resolution.

The Government prides itself in its determination to deal fairly and co-operatively and to consult with the provinces. To include a clause such as this in the Charter would be a massive intervention in the rights of the provinces. Under our Constitution the federal Government is given certain areas of jurisdiction as are the provinces. One of the major areas of provincial jurisdiction since Confederation is over property. To put property rights into the Constitution would interfere with the right of the provinces, as spelled out in our Constitution, to deal with property and property rights.

I have seen no evidence that the rights of individuals or corporations to own and manage their property has been unduly interfered with by Governments at any level. The present laws protect property rights in a legitimate way. This proposal is not only unnecessary but would create very dangerous and difficult problems for Governments at the federal, provincial, and municipal levels. Therefore, we ought not to pass this Bill.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed an honour for me to speak today on the motion which the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) has placed before the House. The motion seeks to amend Section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms to include the enjoyment of property.

I am in support of this motion as are several of my colleagues on this side of the House. Even though the Canadian Bill of Rights includes the enjoyment of property, it is only a statement of general principles and does not confer real rights. In the final analysis, this right in the Bill of Rights remains an ordinary common law principle which is incapable of actually protecting property rights.

The Charter of Rights and Freedoms has been accorded a constitutional status capable of overriding federal and provincial legislation. Unfortunately, it is deficient in the field of property rights. The deletion of the right to property in the 1982 Charter of Rights may have been a Liberal Government side-step to avoid an issue which was so strongly opposed by the New Democratic Party and the provincial Governments whose legislative authority from the 1867 Constitution Act could have been affected.

Even today the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) alluded to how his Party is still against the legitimate right of individuals to be the owners of property.

It looked for a time in 1982 as though the Government of the day would have the sense to include the Conservative amendment to add "the right to property and the right not to be deprived thereof". The Liberals withdrew their support of the amendment on January 26, 1981. They caved in.

I am happy to say that the Government of the Province of British Columbia passed a motion on September 21, 1982, which authorized the amendment of Section 7 to include the enjoyment of property. However, that is but one province.

Having spoken to many people on this issue over the past three years, it is obvious to me that many Canadians want the right to enjoy property entrenched in our Charter at a national level. One can compare the situation of not having this specific right in the Charter with the notion that someone has the ability to print a newspaper without having the right to own the printing press. We need the assurance of this right.

Ownership is conducive to an individual's independence, freedom, and happiness. A man's house is his castle. However, what happens when he does not have the right to own that castle? From earliest times property has been defended. Aristotle expressed a strong defence of property and advanced the idea that private property is ordained by natural law and that ownership is conducive to progress. According to this famous philosopher, ownership of property promotes the growth of character because two important virtues result from it—self-control and liberty.

• (1430)

Property is a source of pleasure. Throughout history those supporting absolute democracy, such as Jean-Jacques Rousseau, considered property necessary for the well-being of individuals and society, and thus should be protected by law.

The motion we are discussing today must go through the process of constitutional amendment, if it passes the House. The process might be lengthy. Nonetheless, the process is necessary.

The right to property is a prerequisite for incentive and human progress. It has the support of a great many Canadians, and I hope that we in this Chamber have the foresight to pass the motion and get on with entrenching our right to the enjoyment of property in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Again, I compliment the Hon. Member for Kitchener for bringing forth this motion. I support it whole-heartedly.

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise and support the motion proposed by the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) to install property rights in Section 7 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

This is a very important concept and one which most Canadians believe is already theirs within the Constitution. When I talk to people at public meetings they are very much surprised that they do not have this right. The overwhelming majority want to ensure that such a right is entrenched in the Constitution quickly.

Of course, there are many precedents of countries establishing the right to own property as a basic right. Indeed, the United Nations has established such a right. In our common law history, this goes back to the Magna Carta in 1215 and was reconfirmed in 1627 in the English Bill of Rights. It was one of the early amendments to the U.S. Constitution and has been a fundamental right in the United States for well over a century.

In 1948, Canada implicitly recognized the right by signing the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Article XVII of that Declaration reads:

> (1) Everyone has the right to own property as well as in association with others.
> (2) No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his property.

As I said, many other countries have formally recognized the right to own property in their Constitution. These include the United States, Australia, West Germany, Italy, Finland, and Sweden. Many national organizations, including the Canadian Bar Association, have stressed the need to add property rights to the Canadian Charter of Rights. Other organizations include the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and the Canadian Real Estate Association.

Canadians have been polled on this issue. In addition to my personal experience, a national Gallup poll shows that 81 per cent of Canadians feel that it is either very or fairly important to them that this right be added to our Constitution.

Some people say that we already have property rights in the Canadian Bill of Rights. That is true. The Canadian Bill of Rights, proposed by Prime Minister Diefenbaker, was an important landmark.

However, the Bill of Rights is simply a statement of general principle. It does not in itself confer or create real rights. The Charter of Rights which this motion is seeking to amend indeed overrides all other laws in the country, subject to reasonable limitations.

Indeed, property rights were almost in the Charter of Rights in 1981. On Tuesday, January 20, 1981, the Conservative Party introduced an amendment seeking the inclusion of property rights in the Charter. On Friday, January 23, the then Solicitor General, in his capacity as Acting Minister of Justice for the Government, accepted the amendment on behalf of the then Liberal Government. However, that Sunday evening, the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), having conferred with his caucus and provincial counterparts in Saskatchewan, informed Canadians on national TV that the NDP would withdraw its support for the Constitution if property rights were to be included.

The following Tuesday, Prime Minister Trudeau told Parliament that the property rights amendment had to be dropped. I can understand the NDP opposing property rights since it appears to be part of their national platform to expropriate property without reasonable compensation.

Mr. Benjamin: Go to hell! You have got to be kidding. If you believe that, you believe in the Easter bunny.

Mr. McCrossan: There are certainly sections in their national platform about nationalizing banks.

Mr. Benjamin: That is an insult. It is not without compensation.

Mr. McCrossan: It certainly is there. Furthermore, if they do believe in the principle of expropriation with reasonable compensation, they should be the first to be up to support this motion, because the only thing that this charter privilege conveys is indeed that absolute right to have reasonable and full compensation for property.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) said in his speech that no one questions the right to own property in this country. The point is that Parliament itself has questioned the right to own property in this country, on several occasions.

I am sure all Members are aware of how property has been expropriated without proper compensation in establishing national parks. Certainly there has been a case in the media within the last few weeks about a person in the Maritimes who has been holding out for proper compensation because an Act of Parliament deprived him of his property without proper compensation.

The National Energy Program was an Act of Parliament, supported by the NDP, which expropriated property in the gas and oil sector in the North and in Hibernia without proper compensation. The point is that without charter protection, Parliament itself can and has acted, supported by the NDP, to expropriate property without compensation.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North suggested that somehow it will not be possible to extend a runway or carry out the necessary expropriation for a municipal or provincial highway. That is simply wrong. Everyone knows that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms states:

> The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

I do not think there is any doubt that any court would rule that the Government had the right to expropriate where there was a legitimate government need. The question is one of compensation when the property is expropriated, and whether Parliament itself can legislate to expropriate without proper compensation.

Similarly, I think the Hon. Member's suggestion that we cannot bring in pollution standards or air control standards if we pass this motion is the reddest of red herrings. The United States has this right in its Constitution, and it does not seem to stop that Government from building airports or interstate highways. It does not seem to stop it from bringing in pollution controls.

These arguments that somehow government will be ground to a halt if property rights are conveyed on Canadians are absolutely specious.

I believe the will of Canadians deserves to be heard in this case. Canadians want property rights. Property rights are viewed as a fundamental right by Canadians and should be entrenched in our Constitution. I will support the motion when it comes to a vote.

• (1440)

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose this motion. Because of the record of the CCF and the New Democratic Party on human, civil, and property rights since 1933, I take it as something of a personal insult.

I ask my hon. friend opposite—who was it when not a single Liberal or Tory would speak up, who stood in the British Columbia Legislature and in the Parliament of Canada and opposed what was done to the Japanese Canadians in 1942? Every single Grit and Tory said their land, property, and machinery could be seized, and most of them did not get any of it back. Where were these "enjoyment of property" Tories then? They were the ones who stood and supported a Liberal Government. If it had not been for Harold and Ernie Winch in the British Columbia Legislature, and J. S. Woodsworth and Angus MacInnis in the House of Commons, no one would have said a word. Yet those Hon. Members have the gall and the nerve, without the courtesy of blushing, to talk to us about the enjoyment of property!

I invite my hon. friends to examine the record of CCF and NDP Governments in Saskatchewan, British Columbia, and Manitoba, on having the best and fairest of expropriation laws with compensation anywhere in the country. We do not need these fatuous insults from the hon. gentleman about our record on human, civil, and property rights. It was the people in our movement who fought against the grasping, racist activities of governments of past years. We were the only ones who stood up to be counted.

Who opposed the War Measures Act in 1970? The War Measures Act allowed the takeover of property, the search of persons and property without warrant, arrest without warrant, and incarceration without charges. Every Tory who talks about the enjoyment of property has the unmitigated gall to come into this Chamber and tell us how they want the enjoyment of property. I can go back to the not too distant days when I was a kid, the days of R. B. Bennett. I challenge my hon. friends opposite to start some move with all the Tory Governments in Canada, federal and provincial, to do something about expropriation laws, and we have a mess of them, right across the country. In some provinces they are unfair and mistreat people and do not do what the motion calls for except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

Mr. McDermid: Why don't you support the motion, then?

Mr. Benjamin: Just wait for it. The changes in expropriation law and compensation, and who pays the legal costs, is where there is a denial of fundamental justice. No self-respecting Government, whether it is school-boards, municipal, city, provincial, or the national Government, can allow a private or individual interest taking priority and precedence over the public good or the public or national interest.

I resent these guys with the Texas or Oklahoma cowboy syndrome who import ideas from the great U.S.A. to the south. The next thing we know, they are going to talk about the right to bear arms. By the way, some of them have. I have run into some of these Neanderthals in various parts of this country. They want to imitate, copy, or ape what has been put forward by the Neanderthals south of the 49th parallel. Well, this country is different. It is something more than and better than the kind of nonsense that goes on to the south of us, or the kind of nonsense they want to provide here.

"Enjoyment of property" is a neat little phrase. When I received my last tax notice I was not sure whether I was enjoying my property very much.

Mr. McDermid: You can sell it.

Mr. Benjamin: I would not sell it to what could be called the atypical used car dealers I find seated opposite. I would not deal with them.

Mr. McDermid: What have you got against car dealers?

Mr. Benjamin: Let us go back to 1867. Had there been such a clause in our Constitution then, every time a school-board, city, province, or the federal Government had to do something in the public or national interest, it would have been faced with litigation at every level of the courts, right up to the Supreme Court. It would not have been faced by the little homeowner who could not afford to go to court. Every Government at every level would have been faced with the likes of those who want this kind of amendment to the Constitution.

The oil companies like it. These barefoot boys from Bay Street think it is great that the oil companies like it. They think it is great that the Real Estate Association likes it. They think it is great that big property developers like it.

The Government of Saskatchewan prohibited the development of a housing development beside the Regina airport, because those guys who were going to make a fast buck building homes would have put the houses right at the end of the runway if they could get away with it. We had to move in to overrule the city and the real estate developer and say, "No, you are not going to build. You are not going to enjoy your property if it means putting up a housing development at the end of a runway at the Regina airport". Any responsible Government has to have the authority to put the public interest and good ahead of the grasping, greedy investors who speculate in property, buying, selling, and putting up developments.

We could ask the people of Prince Edward Island who opposed this. I do not know if they still have the law on their books, but they did have a law which opposed foreign ownership of land in their little province.

Mr. Gass: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. For the clarification of the Hon. Member who is speaking, anyone who lives in Prince Edward Island can own land in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Benjamin: But, according to its law as I understand it, anyone who does not live in Prince Edward Island cannot. If this amendment went through, Prince Edward Island would not be able to implement its own laws.

Mr. Gass: Point of order.

Mr. Benjamin: That is not a point of order. The hon. gentleman can get up and make his own damn speech.

Mr. McDermid: Then quit telling untruths.

Mr. Benjamin: He can get up and correct me if I am wrong.

Mr. McDermid: That is what he is doing. Let him.

Mr. Benjamin: He cannot do it on phoney points of order.

• (1450)

Mr. Gass: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. gentleman just stated that the people who do not live in P.E.I. cannot own land there. That is totally untrue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There will be one minute left on the speech of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I recall the objections of the Government of Prince Edward Island in 1981, perhaps my hon. friend has a short memory. But this applies to every province.

We could not have forced the CPR and the Hudson's Bay Company in Saskatchewan to develop the mineral rights on which they had the leases. We prevented them from enjoying their property. They hauled us into every court in the land, but we beat the buggers anyway!

We could not have brought in a land-bank. The day will come when it comes back. How could we have got some of our national parks if there had been this type of clause in the Constitution? What difficulties would a province or a national Government have had through every court in the country?

The laws that we have are somewhat inadequate. The protection of individual ownership of property is there, but it is not good enough. If I were in the ranks of my friends opposite—heaven forbid—they would do something about improving expropriation laws in order that people were treated more fairly and equitably, and quit trying to ape the United States in our Constitution.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I will never be able to understand how the brain works of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), if indeed it works at all. The Hon. Member has presented some of the best arguments that I have ever heard in favour of putting property rights in the Constitution. For example, the dispossession of the Japanese Canadians during wartime, and the imposition of the War Measures Act and what that did to the property of people in Quebec at that time.

These are the best arguments we have had in favour of the proposition put forward today by the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer), but the end position of the Hon. Member for Regina West is that he will vote against it. That is completely unimaginable.

I wish to give a little lesson in pre-history. At one time in the history of the human race on this planet—

Mr. Benjamin: Are you a member of it?

Mr. Nickerson: Like all good Conservatives, Sir. I have some doubt about some other people in the House.

Years and years ago property rights might not have been as important. I am talking about ownership of real estate, land, and buildings more than personal possessions. When people made their living by hunting and gathering, when they were engaged in nomadic herding, even to the stage where people were engaged in agricultural endeavour but moved from place to place and without permanently founded acreages, property rights probably were not thought about. The concept of ownership in land probably did not exist, because it would have no reason to exist.

When I talk to some elderly people in my constituency, it is sometimes difficult for them to understand the concept of ownership in land. As soon as society went to fixed agriculture, and later when we became a industrial society, that is the time when property rights probably became the most fundamental and important of all the human rights that we enjoy.

Today, whether or not we believe in property rights is the determinant of whether or not we believe in the freedom of the individual. People who own property and cannot be dispossessed therefrom are pretty irdependent people. It is difficult for the state to kick them around. For this reason, the idea of dearly held property rights has not been looked upon as being desirable by people in the employ of government, the professional bureaucrats, for want of a better word. They do not like the idea of independent people who cannot be easily persuaded to do one thing or another as the state might wish them to do, because they have that independence, they can make a living for themselves and are not dependent upon government. This is what property rights mean.

In the part of Canada that I represent, which is one of the most highly governed areas anywhere in the world, that lies in the back of the mind of the people who administer us there. They are very reluctant to let Crown land be sold, or even on occasions to let it be leased. They want to keep it in the collectivity, so to speak, instead of allowing individual ownership, knowing full well that once people become property owners they will demand that degree of independence.

Property rights are notoriously absent in the constitutions of Communist countries. That has not prevented people in those countries from still having that inherent desire to own something. I remember on several occasions talking to people in Moscow, and other cities in the Soviet Union. Their greatest pride and joy was their dacha in the countryside. They are not able to actually own it, but they can get some title or lease. They told me that what they liked to do more than anything else in the summer was to go out there and sit in their dacha. But they would really like it to be theirs, and not belong to this great collectivity. So even in countries where they have tried to stamp out property rights, it still keeps surfacing again and again.

Why is it not in our Constitution? It is not there primarily because of the opposition from the NDP. I understand that when we were discussing these matters in 1981 the Liberals might have been in support of the motion that was put forward by members of the Conservative Party to enshrine property rights in the Constitution. But after what I assume was reflection, they decided to go along with our socialist colleagues.

Of course, if the fundamental element of party philosophy is that the means of production, which is of course largely land and buildings, should be owned by the state and not by the individuals, as if the individuals are not to be trusted to own this, then of course one would not want property rights in the Constitution.

In closing, I notice that British Columbia, New Brunswick, and Ontario have now passed resolutions along the lines suggested by the Hon. Member for Kitchener. Thus, despite the efforts of our Liberal and socialist friends, it looks like eventually we in Canada will also enjoy these fundamental property rights.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2), the order is dropped to the bottom of the list of the order of precedence on the Order Paper. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until Monday next at 11 a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

At 3 p.m. the House adjourned.

PETITIONS

TRANSPORT OF PLUTONIUM OVER NORTHERN CANADA

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present petitions from the Yukon Territory from a number of communities, including Whitehorse, Teslin, and Watson Lake. The petitioners are expressing their objection to the proposed plutonium flights over the North. Because of the environmental dangers, and the dangers from the risk of hijacking, the petitioners are asking the Parliament of Canada to say no to the transport of plutonium over northern Canadian territory.

GONZALES HILL OBSERVATORY—TRANSFER OF PUBLIC LAND

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and pleasure to present petitions filled out and signed by 377 members of the Canadian public. The petitioners pray and call upon Parliament to transfer to the City of Victoria the entire parcel of public land surrounding the Gonzales Hill Observatory heritage site in order to officially create a park, and thus preserve the scenic, irreplaceable land for the benefit and enjoyment of present and future generations of all the residents of Victoria, British Columbia. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

SHELTER FOR THE HOMELESS—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, the petitions I am tabling today were signed by 158 residents of Canada from London, Niagara Falls and Whitby, Ontario, and Victoria, British Columbia. Your petitioners deplore the fact that more than 100,000 people were without shelter in Canada during 1987, that the number of homeless young people, women and families is increasing steadily, that the number of affordable housing units is still decreasing, and that the Government has yet to take steps to deal with this problem.

Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray that Parliament take immediate action so that all Canadians can have access to decent housing and that social reintegration programs be established to help these needy Canadians find their place in Canadian society.

OPPOSTION TO TAX ON FOOD

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, today it is again my duty and my privilege to table petitions from my constituents, and more specifically from residents of Buctouch, Harcourt, Ste-Marie, St-Louis-de-Kent, Balmoral—which is not in my riding—St-Ignace, Richibucto, Pointe-de-Butte and Port Elgin.

Mr. Speaker, your petitioners humbly pray Parliament to reject any mesure that would have the effect of putting a tax on food.

REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA, 1985 ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Speaker: I am informed that apparently there is unanimous consent that this matter be referred to Committee of the Whole. Is that the understanding of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved that Bill C-94, an Act to bring into force the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this Bill, an Act to bring into force the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985, concerns the current general revision of the Statutes of Canada, the first since 1970 and the sixth since Confederation. It gives Parliament's sanction to the new Revised Statutes, which reflect the law found in the public general statutes of Canada on December 31, 1984.

The contents of the Revised Statutes were approved earlier this year, in accordance with the Statute Revision Act of 1974, by the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General of this House and the Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs of the Senate. Both committees approved the revision and recommended that this Bill be introduced. The committees made several other recommendations relating to future revisions and recommended, as well, the inclusion in the present revision of the Geneva Conventions Act. That Act had been omitted from the revision, although it would have remained in force as law, by the Statute Revision Commission as being an Act not of current general interest. Following the recommendations of the committees, that Act is now included.

The Bill before us deals with technical subjects such as the coming into force of the Revised Statutes, the repeal of the statutes they replace, and the rule that the revision does not change the substance of the existing law. The Bill also provides for the preparation of the supplements to the Revised Statutes containing the Acts passed since the end of 1984, in a version adapted to numbering and terminology of the statute revision. Finally, it contains transitional provisions deeming references to the old law that are found in the present text of the Acts passed after 1984 and of existing regulations to be written as if they were references to the revised law.

What these technical provisions do not highlight is the advances the revision will make to important areas of government policy to which I wish to draw the attention of the House. These are advances in the area of accessibility of the law and in the area of equality of and respect for both official languages.

Respect for the law depends to a great extent on the accessibility of its text. As all Hon. Members know, it is not always easy to piece together the present text of a frequently amended Act by consulting the last Revised Statutes and what has become, since the last revision in 1970, nearly 20 volumes of subsequent legislation. I therefore decided to publish, beginning with this revision, a loose-leaf edition of the Statutes of Canada that will be updated regularly. Bound volumes will also remain available.

Let us now deal with the Government's second objective which in this case relates to the official languages.

Until about the mid 1970s, that is long after the previous revision, federal laws were drafted in English, more often than not without any consideration for the genius of that language. Thanks to a qualified and mostly bilingual staff, lawyers and draft revisers seconded by a linguist, the Commission prepared a new or almost new French version of the 200-odd laws which most needed it. Needless to say, this was the best time to standardize the wording and improve the text coherence.

[English]

The present statute revision has greatly improved the two versions of most public Acts. I am confident that, with the statutes henceforth available in both an updated loose-leaf edition and the yearly bound volumes, the quality of the presentation of federal legislation is now approaching what I believe to be the quality of its substance.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Madam Speaker, I am happy to indicate first that indeed the Government has unanimous consent of the House to proceed with this Bill in all three readings in one session and to refer it to Committee of the Whole.

I was a member of the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General at the time when reference was made for the Bill, in its course as required by the statute through which the Bill has been brought forward, to be brought before our committee. It came before our committee, and we had an excellent briefing. Mary Dawson, to whom I want to pay personal tribute, was the chief person responsible for the drafting. It was good to see her. I had some professional relationship with her when I was Minister and she was doing drafting in the Department. I was glad to have her there to answer questions and to see that effort had been made to use this occasion not only to bring forward the legislation but to make improvements to it to which I want to refer.

However, one must begin by wondering why it took so long from the last revision, all the way from 1970 to 1985, to bring forward this legislation. Although I did not press the officials to give us the explanation of why it took 15 years to do something in principle which perhaps should be done every 10 years, probably the reason was that they were very busy in the 1970s and the 1980s with the Liberal Government which was always needing important legislation from them on an urgent basis and with reforms which resulted in this particular reform being put on the back burner.

When a Conservative government came to office the Order Paper and Notices was practically empty and hardly any matters were brought forward for consideration by Parliament compared to what was more characteristic of the Liberal Government. The Conservatives had the time to devote to the revision of legislation which is more characteristic of Conservatives than Liberals.

This legislation will largely be of interest and help to lawyers and I am pleased that it is being brought forward. As a lawyer who was in practice, I can say it is a considerable advantage to have the legislation updated as it will be. I think the loose-leaf revision is a reform. I hope the Minister will have some other achievements in his career as Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) that one can call reforms. Indeed, he is the Minister responsible for the loose-leaf version of the Revised Statutes of Canada. He will go down in history for it. Perhaps it will not be such a large item in the history of Canada but it is an important one.

One wonders why the bound version is necessary anymore. I phoned to find out how much one will cost. I learned that it will be about $700 while the loose-leaf version will be something like $600. For my part, I would buy the loose-leaf form and have the update. Perhaps we could save the Government some money down the road by discontinuing the bound version of the statute.

On the subject of timing, perhaps the Minister can tell me in committee why the cutoff date is December 31, 1984. We are already in 1987 and 1988 will be here in a few weeks. One would have hoped that with the benefit of computers, organization and so on the Government might have been able to pick a cut-off date closer to a current date. There have been very few legislative amendments since December 31, 1984 with a Conservative government in office. Perhaps there is less that people who buy the bound volume will have missed than before. Madam Speaker is nodding in agreement, or is it disagreement? I do not want to characterize the intervention of the Speaker but I am glad to see that she is listening so intently to my remarks.

Some of the points made in this revision are worth looking at. The Minister has focused on one. There was one other but let me deal with both.

The French versions of a number of statutes are immeasurably improved.

[Translation]

True enough, past tradition was to prepare the English draft and have it translated, a translation far removed for the original version. So 20 years ago when Canadians began to be serious about bilingualism in this country and in the national Parliament, we had very nice pieces of legislation which they could take as examples of good French and good English.

As to earlier statutes, those which are being revised but were enacted decades ago, doing a good translation proved to be quite a challenge. I did note a number of fundamental improvements, and the Minister deserve commendation not only for his French, for the speech he made, but also for the talent and creativity he and his officials have shown in the translation of hundreds—I do not know the exact number—hundreds of statutes which now look like French statutes, not only obvious translations of the English version.

Therefore we should congratulate those responsible for the translation and the support given by the Government to this endeavour.

The other area where there has been a major reform is that of the English pronouns of masculine or feminine gender, usually of the masculine gender. There is a problem in English which does not exist in French, for we must take the gender of nouns into account if we want to write sentences which are grammatically correct.

[English]

In French, as francophones know, the sex of a pronoun is taken from the noun that it modifies and not from the subject of the sentence. One does not run into problems in French with having to carry forward the gender identification of the subject. In English there is only a choice of masculine and feminine and it matters a lot. I regret to say that one has to come to the conclusion that you can only go so far in eliminating gender pronouns. You cannot eliminate them 100 per cent without, in some marginal cases, having very complicated, lengthy and tortured language. Of course, in a statute where clarity is important and where clarity to the layman should always be our goal, we have to be reasonable in deciding where to draw the line on eliminating completely the word "his" and pronouns like that.

We raised the subject with the draftsman. I think we had an effect on them because they did some more work to try to remove the word "his" and other similar gender pronouns. We ended up with a smaller number than we would have had before. In any event, the draftsmen were conscious of this problem and did a much better job. The draftswomen as well—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The draftspersons.

Mr. Kaplan: Yes, the draftspersons did a lot better job on this than on the last revision. This is an achievement of this legislation and I wanted to acknowledge that.

My final point on second reading is that the revision does not include all of the public acts of Canada. The Income Tax Act has been left out. Since December 31, 1984, it has been changed much. The Government has brought in a lot of legislation concerning the Income Tax Act with which we have disagreed over the last three years, but because it is so often amended it is better left out of revision. Anyone who wanted to look at it by consulting the Revised Statutes of Canada would probably be misled by not having amendments which seem to come out every few months.

There are other public acts considered to have a lesser public interest. The two identified in the committee to be discussed were the Geneva Conventions Act and the War Crimes Act. It was my feeling with the interest in bringing war criminals to justice that Canadians might like to have those two statutes ready at hand. It would be helpful to Canadians to see them in the books. The Geneva Conventions Act, as the Minister indicated, has been put into the Revised Statutes and that will be appreciated by Canadians. The War Crimes Act is of considerable interest, but perhaps with the amendments which the Minister of Justice has brought forward to the Criminal Code dealing with war criminals for the first time this may make the War Crimes Act of less interest. It is still a statute of Canada. It may well be referred to in some of the criminal trials, if there are any, which could result from the Criminal Code amendments on war criminals.

I want to indicate our support for this process. It may be that if the loose-leaf versions of the Revised Statutes of Canada take hold that further revisions of acts like this may be unnecessary. Computer changes may develop in such a way that hard paper Revised Statutes every 10 or 15 years may never again be required. In that sense, we would close a chapter in our history by putting forward what could be the last Revised Statutes of Canada that will ever be needed in the formal paper sense. I am very pleased to be here for that occasion, providing something that I know is useful to all Canadians.

• (1130)

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise to speak in this debate on behalf of my Party. I am probably the only person who is not a lawyer who will speak on this matter today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Dewar: I must say that I am quite comfortable speaking to the Bill because I think this legislation does concern me as a Member of Parliament, as a woman and as a New Democrat.

First, I would like to deal with the lack of sexist language in the Revised Statutes of Canada. There is a need to include gender-neutral language in the statutes of Canada. I think sometimes we take this need lightly, but it is very important.

We are talking about societal changes here. When talking about those societal changes, we know that we are talking about changes in the attitude toward women. It is very important that the language in the statutes remain gender-neutral. I think the Minister has certain done an excellent job in this regard, and I do appreciate that.

A few years ago we went through a process of changing the definition of rape to sexual assault. This made quite a difference in the attitude of society.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), our spokesperson for justice, has been urging the Government to work in the direction of non-sexist language provisions in the statute law of Canada for many years. Recently he was a member of the legislative committee dealing with Bill C-53, an Act to amend the Supreme Court of Canada Act and other Acts in consequence thereof. The Bill was debated in the House at second reading and referred to a legislative committee on September 14, 1987.

It was in committee that my colleague pointed out to the Government that it was continuing to put forward legislation which included sexist language. I would like to quote from that committee report as I believe what was discussed is very relevant here today. In committee, the Hon. Member for Burnaby said:

> Why is it that the Department of Justice is still not capable of drafting in non-sexist language? I had hoped, Mr. Chairman, those that were brought before this House could by now be drafted in non-sexist language. We go through this each time bills appear before the committee. We amend them. Surely to God it is not that difficult to prepare legislation in non-sexist language.

The Minister replied by saying:

> It is a good reminder. You are the watchdog on sexist language. The Department of Justice has failed and I take responsibility for that. However, you will be there with your amendments to ensure that there is not . . . The message is received. My deputy is here. We will take it into account.

The Government took the criticism and provided for amendments to the legislation when it was reported back to the House on October 7. My colleague from Vancouver—Kingsway then spoke to those amendments on October 23. He thanked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn), as I do now, for recognizing the problem and for going about correcting it.

What I find most surprising about this recent example is that today we are dealing with legislation that will correct past anomalies and errors. This legislation will deal with some elements of sexist language but it does not end the job. The recent amendments to Bill C-53 provide a very specific example of how even today there is a need to maintain vigilance in this area. The drafters of legislation must always remember that there are subtle ways in which sexism is promoted.

In passing Bill C-94 today, I would like to remind the Government that the work to remove sexist language from the statute law of Canada and in fact from all areas of the law must not stop until the job is complete. An important first step will be to begin drafting legislation in non-sexist and gender-neutral terms. If the legislation is drafted without such glaring errors, there will be no need to correct and amend legislation in the future. I would encourage the Government to seriously consider ways in which such problems could be avoided in future.

I would now like to turn to the question of consultation on the Revised Statutes of Canada. I have spoken with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby, who has indicated that the process involved in the adoption of the Revised Statutes could certainly be changed in the future. I would suggest on behalf of my hon. friend from Burnaby that Parliament receive the Revised Statutes ahead of time in future. Instead of being presented with a fait accompli here today, it would have been useful to have seen the Revised Statutes in advance in order to discuss them with interested groups. I am thinking particularly of the National Association of Women and the Law which has expressed some interest in this legislation but will not have had any further consultation beyond discussion with our justice spokesperson.

I have just spoken on the question of continued inclusion of sexist language in recent legislation and have now commented on the need for increased consultation with Members of Parliament and the justice community before passing such legislation in future. I would point out that the Government has more than once been caught drafting legislation without gender-neutral language, and in order to avoid this specific problem in the Revised Statutes, I would encourage the Government to broaden the consultation process. By doing this, the problem of sexist language can be more fully addressed. Increased consultation would also allow for any other concerns to be raised well before the passage of such housekeeping legislation.

Again I would like to commend the Minister for bringing forward the Revised Statutes. In closing, I would like to indicate that the New Democratic Party will be allowing this legislation to pass in all three stages today. The time has finally come for dealing with the Revised Statutes of Canada, and after many years I am happy that this legislation will pass.

I would like to briefly mention the work of the many people in the bureaucracy who have worked hard and tirelessly to bring about this important consolidation. The implementation of the Revised Statutes will not only help those who use them on a regular basis but will also, I hope, make them more accessible and understandable to people who are not lawyers such as myself. The two concerns I have spoken of are very important and I would encourage the Government to consider them closely.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, I will be very brief. I too would like to congratulate the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) on this matter. As the former Solicitor General said, it is true that on the day these volumes are to be published they will already be three years out of date. I wonder if in future it might be possible to do this without such delay.

I also wonder about the Consolidated Regulations of Canada. I understand that it has been quite some time since these were brought up to date. I wonder if the Minister of Justice is considering a new publication of the consolidated regulations.

It is true, as the former Solicitor General said, that the most use of these volumes will be made by lawyers, but of course they are also of interest to people in law enforcement of one kind or another and the general public at large. For those who live in remote areas away from up-to-date legal libraries, it is sometimes prohibitively difficult to find out what the law and regulations are on many subjects. One must write away for the statute and three weeks later receive by mail what one thinks is the correct statute, but then it refers to something else and one must send away for another publication.

Would it not perhaps be possible to have a computerized system where, if you want to know what the statute is on a particular subject, or the regulations because they are often as important as the statute, you could punch in certain numbers or letters and have it at hand? I commend that matter for the attention of the Minister of Justice and the people in his department.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mrs. Champagne in the chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-94, an Act to bring into force the Revised Statues of Canada.

Shall Clause 2 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 2 agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 3 carry?

On Clause 3—

Mr. Kaplan: Madam Chairman, I wanted to ask the Minister about that three-year period which was of such interest to a Member of his own Party. Why is the cut-off date so far in the past?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Chairman, I have listened with interest to the remarks of the Hon. Member for York Centre as well as those of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic concerning the cut-off date for the Revised Statutes. I think it is fair to say that this is purely a consequence of the administrative work required to bring the Revised Statutes into place at a particular point in time. Officials have required that amount of time in order to complete the work.

I remind Hon. Members that not only have we been dealing with a very large volume of legislation, a lot of work has been done in preparing the legislation in its French version which is so important to the equality of the two languages. That added an additional dimension. It is the old story; we could have set it for a subsequent date but that would have delayed the whole process.

My hon. friend made reference to the fact that the new Government has perhaps not passed as much legislation as the previous Government. I am a bit ambivalent about that observation because, as you know, the traditional Conservative philosophy is the less law, the better. Less intrusive government is better government. Freedom of the people is our main concern and we do not want government telling us what to do at every step, but I do not want to get involved in a philosophical discussion with the Opposition which I would necessarily win.

In 1985 we had 63 new chapters enacted in law. In 1986 it was 55. To date in 1987, 43 have been passed. That does not include Private Members' Bills. What can I say? The average number of Bills passed by our predecessor Government between 1980 and 1984 was in the vicinity of 43 per year. We hope to emphasize quality over quantity and we have some repair work to do. Maybe in our next term we will get down to a more appropriate number.

That is a bit of a long answer but the fact is that the time has been required. There have been improvements to the text. There was the work on the French version. There was work as a result of the observations made by Hon. Members with respect to the loose-leaf form which will be of assistance to the general public. All these considerations, innovations and improvements augur well for accessibility of the statutes of Canada to the general public. After all, that should be pre-eminent in our thinking. We want to make sure we are serving the public in the best way possible.

Mr. Kaplan: Madam Chairman, I would like to give the Minister the opportunity to discuss revision of the regulations. Is that process under way and what sort of a date are we looking at?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: As my friend from York Centre will appreciate, regulations flow from statutes. The sequence is to bring the statutes into line and up-to-date and then turn our attention to the question of the regulations under those statutes.

In all candor, we have not yet entered into that area, which is very important, but once we get this out of the way I intend to have discussions with my officials in order to canvass the options available to us so we can bring some appropriate response to the mounds of regulations we have in this country.

In that connection, the Hon. Member for York Centre is in the very important position of co-chairing the Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. I am very familiar with that committee, having served on it for many years. It does excellent work and I want to take this opportunity of expressing my appreciation to the Hon. Member. When I was appointed to it I thought it was a form of punishment, but over the course of attending meetings it becomes quite a fascinating committee where you really get a chance to understand the volume and importance of regulations in our society. I know the Hon. Member has a legitimate interest in this subject and I appreciate any suggestions from him and members of his committee.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Chairman, approximately when does the Minister think the statutes will be available? Will all Members be provided copies in our offices as has been customary in the past upon publication of new statutes?

I was amazed when I was elected in 1984—

Mr. Keeper: That was amazing.

Mr. Boudria: Maybe that in itself was amazing given the Conservative tide. Perhaps the Member for Winnipeg North Centre is correct.

However, I was quite amazed when I asked for a set of statutes and a set of regulations after being elected and was told that I could not get either. I thought it was a bit much for a legislator, upon asking for a publication of the laws which Parliament has passed, to be told that they were not available. I hope that when they are printed, they will be printed in sufficient quantity to ensure that, in the unlikely event that any Member of this House is defeated in the next election, the new Member will have available to him or her a copy of the statutes in order that they can discharge the duties they are elected to perform with the most basic of tools.

I realize that one of the reasons we stopped publishing them some time ago is we were awaiting this fresh consolidation. However, I was elected on September 4, 1984. It is now December 7, 1987 and we do not yet have the statutes. I realize that practically all of the work is done by the time this Bill comes into the House. The Minister is looking for authority to publish work which is probably complete.

I wanted to raise those few points with the Minister and would like to take this opportunity to bring forward a similar issue, that is, that it is almost as difficult to get a copy of the revised regulations as it is to get the statutes. I believe it should be a policy of the Department of Justice, after new Members are sworn in, to provide them with an up-to-date set of statutes and regulations. I am not saying that a Member who is re-elected should be given a second set, but each Member should have available to him or her the most up-to-date statutes in existence at that time.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Chairman, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his comments and observations. The Publication of Statutes Act does specify those individuals who are entitled, as a matter of right, to receive the statutes of Canada. My hon. friend will be pleased to know that Members of Parliament are included along with such other luminaries as the Section 96 judges.

I cannot explain why the Hon. Member has not received the statutes. It is very likely because of the revision which is now going forward. I am sure that we will have this relatively up to date revised set of statutes by March of the coming year, provided that the matter is dealt with expeditiously by the House.

In addition, three supplements will be published of subsequent enactments of the House which will bring it up to date as of the end of the last session. Our target date for that is September, 1988.

I have been Minister of Justice for only a year and a half—tempus fugit as we say in the Department of Justice. I believe that I have acted with some vigour and authority with regard to the Revised Statutes of Canada. There have been some delays but I hope that we can get this Bill through in order that all Members of Parliament will have the most current version of the laws. I hope that the improvements that are manifest in these amendments will be of assistance to Members. Let us say that in March of 1988 the Hon. Member will have the new, improved Revised Statutes of Canada. If he wishes, I will personally autograph his copy.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Chairman, that last remark really makes it all worth while. It will be a precious set of statutes which has the Minister's autograph.

I would like to ask him in little more detail about publication and availability for the future. I assume it has always been the case that upon publication every Member gets a copy. However, I am really asking whether any new Member elected at the next election will be provided with that as a matter of right. I believe they should be.

If the Minister's answer is that that is automatically done, there was then a breach of the Act last time because I did not get one and I am quite sure, Madam Chairman, that you and any other Member who was elected for the first time in 1984 did not get one either because we were told that they were out of stock at that time.

I am looking for the assurance that the statutes and regulations will be provided automatically, not only at time of publication but between publications, to any Member who is elected in the interval between the date of publication and distribution of these statutes and the next date of printing.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Chairman, the people who are entitled to receive, as a matter of right, the statutes of Canada include the Governor General, the Lieutenant Governors of the provinces, the Speaker of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Commons, the Prime Minister, the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, the Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons, Ministers of the Government of Canada, Members of the Parliament of Canada not otherwise included on this list, members of the judiciary of Canada including provincial court judges and magistrates, Attorneys General, Ministers of Justice and Solicitors General of the governments of the provinces, the chief or senior legislative counsel of each province, chief librarians of court houses in Canada, chief librarians of law schools in Canada, members and officials of the government of any foreign country and persons holding positions in universities and other institutions in that country if reciprocal arrangements exist for similar distribution without charge in Canada or if the Minister of Justice, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the National Librarian or the Parliamentary Librarian recommend the free distribution.

With regard to the dilemma faced by the Hon. Member when he was elected and found no statutes of Canada, I am informed that Members of Parliament are expected not to keep their copies when they resign or retire but are supposed to hand them to their successors. I cannot recall the Hon. Member's case exactly, but if he goes to the Livestock Review Board he may find his own personalized version available for him. His distinguished predecessor has probably forgotten to hand it over to him.

Mr. Thacker: Madam Chairman, I would like to ask a question of the Minister vis-à-vis the future. This is a historic day, not only for lawyers, law students and judges, but certainly for academics, civil servants and any of our citizens who work with the laws of Canada. It is a pleasure to be in the House today.

• (1200)

As well, as former chairman of the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General, I want to thank the drafters. People do not generally appreciate that the Revised Statutes of Canada are probably six feet in length, consisting of small print in big volumes. It is an enormous job to write all the English statutes into the new modern English phraseology, as well as revising from whole cloth the French version of the statutes to be equally authoritative so that anyone reading the French would know that it is not a translation from the English, word for word, but written from whole cloth. That is a wonderful development in this country.

I believe that the standing committees of the House and the Senate also deserve our appreciation. It is an example of the amount of work that goes on behind the scenes for which no one ever gets credit. Certainly, Members of Parliament from all Parties who spend many hours at committee stage sitting on these committees get very little credit.

We found that during the first meetings of the standing committee the process had gone to such an advanced stage that it was very difficult for the standing committees here and in the Senate to recommend very major changes. Under the old process, during the previous administration, standing committees did not play as great a role as they do now. Since the House agreed to the new standing orders, the standing committees play a larger role.

Since this will be an ongoing process, which is another new and novel feature, will the Minister give his assurance that the standing committee will be brought in on more frequent occasions to give its advice?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Chairperson, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills, as former chairman of the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General, as well as all Members of the committee who worked so diligently and effectively with respect to this matter.

This is the first time that Parliament has been consulted about the Revised Statutes of Canada. It is as a result of the law revision legislation of 1974, which I understand provided for parliamentarians to become involved, that this process was undertaken.

I think it poses a bit of a dilemma inasmuch as the officials who are responsible for assembling the material are obliged under the existing law to bring it forward at a point when they have in fact revised and perfected the statutes of Canada. In this particular instance there was some creativity involved because, as the Hon. Member pointed out, for the first time the French version was developed not as a translation but as an original text in French which, as I said in my remarks at second reading, reflects the evolution of the equality of the two languages in our country. I suggest that all Members would want to applaud this development.

While we will examine the provisions of the Act, I suspect we will be faced with the practical matter that we must have something to present to the committees. Whether or not we can involve Members of Parliament at an earlier stage is something that we could examine. Once we finish this revision, I suppose it is the beginning of the consideration of the next revision which will take place later.

I wanted to address the point about loose-leaf and bound volume versions of the Revised Statutes of Canada, which was referred to earlier. The only official version of the Revised Statutes of Canada is the bound version. As yet, we have not sanctified the loose-leaf version because these are rather more of a convenience to the people of Canada, including lawyers, legislators and the general public.

The bound volumes are still the official version. The original bound volume was signed by myself, Her Excellency the Governor General, clerks of the Parliament. They are deposited with the clerk of the Parliament in the other place as the official text.

Therefore, at this point in the development of our approach to the statutes, the bound volumes are the official versions. The loose-leafs are a convenience and something that I as a practising lawyer have long awaited. In order to research any particular statute one had to become rather agile in running up and down shelves of statutes and juggling two or three volumes on one's lap, ultimately having to inscribe little notes in statutes as to what was the final version of a law at a particular time. In any event, I am sure that people probably now know more than they care to about the Revised Statutes of Canada.

It is an important date. I share the view of the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills that this is a historic day because it has not happened very often since Confederation. With improving technology, I share the view of the Hon. Member for York Centre that we may be entering into an era when we will be able to perfect this revision to the point that we will not be required to go through the process of having to come back periodically to pass Revised Statutes. It will become an ongoing, continuous procedure. I think that would certainly be a happy day as far as the officials of my department are concerned, if not the Minister.

Mr. Kaplan: Madam Chairperson, I have a brief question that one of my colleagues wanted to ask. How many copies of the Revised Statutes does the Government intend to print? The Member for Ottawa—Vanier, who wanted to ask the question, would probably be content to receive an answer as soon as the Minister has one.

Perhaps I might raise another point. I did not raise it in committee, but one of the things that might be considered in this revision, and which would be very welcome to the profession, would be to have the section number clearly indicated on each page. In a long statute with long sections, it often happens that a section will run over a number of pages. The Minister himself made me think of it when he reminded me of sitting down with about two volumes on one's lap trying to track a statute from the RSCs through a number of other volumes where it may or may not have been revised. It causes the problem of not being able to easily find what section of the statute one is looking at on the page and having to turn back, very often a long way, to find the actual section. Perhaps the Minister has already thought of this or perhaps it is already in the plans of the revision drafters to identify the section on each page. I would be interested in the Minister's reaction.

• (1210)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I think, Madam Chairman, that the suggestion is an excellent one. Unfortunately, it is too late to be of any effectiveness because the statutes have been printed. However, the Hon. Member's point is well taken and there will be a note made of this in the annals of the Department of Justice so that when the next revision comes down it will become known in the history of our country as the Robert Kaplan suggestion with respect to the numbering of statutes and the clear identification on each page of long and involved sections or amendments.

My recollection of a statute which has a long and involved section is the Income Tax Act. While these provisions are required to be long and so on for technical reasons, by and large they are as incomprehensible to most Canadians who are literate. The Hon. Member's suggestion is a very good suggestion, indeed. We have not revised the Income Tax Act, so this may be a good chance to use the Hon. Members's suggestion, for which I will give the Hon. Member full credit.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When shall the Bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn moved that Bill C-94, an Act to bring into force the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985, be read the third time and passed.

He said: Madam Speaker, I will be brief.

I just want to thank Hon. Members for their co-operation with respect to Bill C-94. This co-operation had been indicated during the course of debate on the floor of the House and in committee, and has been extended by Members of Parliament and members of the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General who were good enough to receive the proposed Revised Statutes and give them their consideration under the new provision of law, the Law Revision Act, 1974, with dispatch. This allows us to meet the deadline of having the Bill passed in the House of Commons and in the other place before Christmas, thereby meeting the deadline required in order to have the statutes as of December 31, 1984 published as the Revised Statutes of Canada.

There is one point which was raised during the course of committee of the whole as to the number of volumes of the Revised Statutes. A number of Revised Statutes of Canada will be published. I do not have that information now but I will ensure that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) receives that figure as soon as I am able to ascertain it from the Department. I know it will be making provision to meet reasonable demand. Not only on the basis of those which are obligatory, of course, but also on the basis of experience, they will have sufficient numbers of statutes printed. Virtually every law firm in the country will require a new copy and there are a number of other agencies which will want to have copies available to them, in addition to those required to be given sets by statute.

In conclusion, I would say that this is a very large task that is undertaken from time to time. The reality is that we are passing more laws in our country. There is more legislation involved. I believe it is a sign of the times. It is something that one occasionally reflects upon, whether or not we need all the laws that are in fact dealt with in the House. Perhaps some of these provisions could be dealt with in other ways. However, the fact is there has been an evolution, as I tried to indicate by giving some of the statistics as to the number of statutes passed each year over the course of the last few years. We see this as not diminishing. In fact, it is increasing. Society is more complex and perhaps that is something we cannot avoid. On the other hand, I think we in this Chamber are all devoted to the principle that quality of law is more important than quantity.

As I indicated in my opening remarks, this process of Revised Statutes will assist with a very important element for Canadians, that is, the accessibility of the law to the average citizen. The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) pointed out that sometimes people in remote areas have difficulty getting access to the statutes, not only of the country but of the provinces, and ordinances of the territories. There is a legal axiom that a citizen of our country is deemed to know the law. Therefore, I think it is incumbent upon us to do what we can in terms of various programs, and I am proud, certainly during the time I have been Minister, that we have given a high priority to programs involving public legal education. We have taken the step during the time I have been Minister to get the Revised Statutes in place, and to give the French text a new and more meaningful presence in terms of Canadian law.

For the spirit of co-operation shown today, I thank Hon. Members, and I pledge to them that I, as Minister of Justice, will do those things which will assist in the accessibility of the law and the understandability which was referred to by the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan). These are matters that are important, and I share the enthusiasm of all Members to get this matter through before the lunch hour.

• (1220)

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to rise on third reading to indicate my appreciation of the Minister's kind remarks about myself. This is an important matter. It is not his only achievement, as I might have implied in an earlier comment that I made, but it is an important achievement. I look forward to March when Canadians can see the result of our work here, and when they will receive their copies of the Revised Statutes of Canada, with all the improvements that we have already discussed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Yes!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on the following motion: Mr. Hnatyshyn, seconded by Mrs. MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands), moved that Bill C-94, an Act to bring into force the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985, be read the third time and do pass.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, December 4, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-54, an Act to amend the Criminal Code and other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Robinson (p. 11291).

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) had the floor.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, last Friday I was commenting on Bill C-54 in the House, and I understand I have a few minutes left in which to conclude the remarks I was making at that time.

[Translation]

As I was saying last Friday, Madam Speaker, the Bill as proposed by the Government is certainly not perfect, but I suggest nevertheless that the House should carry on with its consideration of it, and once it is read the second time, it should then be referred to a legislative committee where amendments could be put forward which, I hope, would improve this Bill dealing with pornography.

Madam Speaker, the House is aware that this is a controversial issue in Canada. As a matter of fact, altough Canadians do not want to lose their freedom of expression, on the one hand, they feel it is very important to protect women and children who could be victimized by pornographic material, on the other, and it is a fact that this pornographic material is often blamed as one of the causes of violence against women and children. Although this Bill is not perfect, and I intend to express my concern about it by voting against it on second reading, I should like the House and all Canadians to know that, if major improvements were made by the legislative committee, and if the Government is prepared to listen to our proposals, I should be quite willing to vote for Bill C-54 on third reading.

In concluding, I repeat that I disagree totally with the motion presented by those who say we should ask the Government to drop this Bill. We realize the New Democratic Party tabled a motion in the House to terminate Bill C-54 because it felt it was unsatisfactory. However, although the Bill does need improving, I sincerely believe we would be seriously mistaken if we were to decide to drop the Bill altogether because it is not perfect.

I agree that the previous Bill, Bill C-114, contained errors so serious as to make it unacceptable to most Canadians. Bill C-54, which is itself an amendment and an improvement on the previous Bill, is better, though not perfect, and I think we should go ahead and make the necessary amendments to make this a Bill that is realistic and gives Canadians the kind of protection and the kind of legislation they want against pornography.

Madam Speaker, in concluding I want to say that I hope the Bill will be referred very shortly to a legislative committee so that the requisite amendments can be made.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I would like to start by congratulating the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) on his speech which I read carefully today, and since I had the advantage of having Friday's Hansard, I also had a chance to read his comments on the weekend.

The Bill contains no distinction, at least no clear distinction, between what is meant by pornography and erotica. This is probably one of the most difficult provisions in the Bill, because while pornography implies violence, exploitation and many other degrading activities, erotica may be entirely acceptable and even pleasing to certain people. I would ask the Hon. Member whether he has considered this question and whether it would not be preferable to make a distinction between pornography, which is bad, and erotica, which may be acceptable, and to clearly explain to Canadians that there is a difference between pornography and erotica.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is right. We do need a far clearer definition to distinguish between erotica and pornography. In Bill C-54, one might say that the only definition of erotica it seems to give is nudity, and the rest appears to be pornography, according to the Bill. I think contemporary views would dictate that this is certainly not the case and that certain acts, gestures or publications may be considered erotic without being pornographic. However, when we refer to films or advertising that advocate violence or depict violence associated with sexual acts, it is obvious that in that case, that we are talking about pornography, and it is exactly the kind of pornography Canadians want stopped.

We have all seen in corner stores, convenience stores and elsewhere video cassettes for rent or for sale and we certainly see from the ads that the material concerned in some cases is related to violence and sex. This is the kind of thing which this House unanimously want to bring to an end as soon as possible. And I am sure that all Members share that view, or at least I think they should share it.

There are other shortcomings in this Bill which should also be considered by the legislative committe. For instance, no distinction is made between the penalties for producer, and importers of pornographic material. Thus, under this Bill anyway, the owner of a convenience store who sells or rents a cassette and probably makes a few cents profit would be treated just like the producer or importer of pornographic material. We know that those people make big profits, etc..

I think that it would be necessary to make such distinctions in addition to those we suggested a while ago.

However, this being said, I think that the best forum for discussing those details would be the legislative committee and I hope Parliament will decide in a rather near future to defer it to such a committee where it will be submitted to a detailed consideration and will be improved as much as possible.

• (1230)

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, can I take it from the Hon. Member's last comment that he intends to vote against the amendment? If the Hon. Member has specific changes in wording to suggest, I wonder whether he could share them with the House. Are they changes which accord with out legal history and experience which would do the job better?

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I am not entirely clear what is Hon. Member's the question. If he is asking whether I support the NDP amendment, I made a fairly lengthy speech both today and on Friday explaining how I thought that proposition was unreasonable.

Notwithstanding the fact that perhaps we can disagree on the content of legislation, I think we are unanimous, or we should be, in agreeing that our constituents expect us to adopt an anti-pornography Bill.

The Hon. Member asks what specific wording should be included in the amendments. For instance, when we talk about the fact that promoters, importers and so on, of pornographic material will be penalized according to the present Bill in a similar if not identical way as someone operating a small corner store, renting a video cassette, and realizing a 50-cent profit, distinctions should be made in terms of penalty. That is a concrete example of a modification to the Bill which is possible.

I indicated to the Hon. Member that if our Party can obtain a number of such amendments to ensure that the Bill is a little more in tune with contemporary society and that other deficiencies in the Bill are straightened out at third reading stage, such as the penalty clauses to which I have just referred, then I for one would be prepared to support the legislation. If it has been amended in that way, it can be supported by the critic of our Party and by Members of Parliament generally.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I have a very short question for my hon. friend. I point out that the reasoned amendment of our justice critic which is before the House dealing with the Government's pornography legislation reads as follows:

> That this House declines to give second reading to Bill C-54 because it fails to clearly define pornography as material that condones violence, coercion, abuse and degradation in its depiction of human beings or portrays or promotes the sexual exploitation of children; and also, because it does not distinguish pornography from material of an artistic, literary, educational or scientific nature in a fashion acceptable to the Canadian public, including artists.

I was somewhat surprised that my hon. friend said that he would not support that resolution. Surely the Government has gone too far and lacks a definition of pornography. A definition of pornography should include the kinds of concerns which are raised in our reasoned amendment.

Could the Hon. Member elaborate on why he fails to support the direction in which we have pointed?

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I will gladly respond to the Hon. Member's question. Notwithstanding the nine or ten lines of that "reasoned" amendment, one should remember that the two first lines read as follows:

> That this House declines to give second reading to Bill C-54—

The rest of the amendment contains the details. The fact is that by adopting the amendment the House would kill the Bill. I say to the Hon. Member that Canadians expect us to pass a Bill. Yes, it needs to be improved. I agree with that. Let us bring it before committee and provide amendments which will make the Bill acceptable to a larger number of Canadians than it is now.

The original Bill—I guess it was Bill C-114—was totally unacceptable in my opinion. I feel that the one before us can be salvaged with amendments. Let us do it, let us send it to committee, and let us try to improve it. If we can improve it in a good and appropriate manner, I would like to vote in favour of the legislation at third reading.

It is not in a state now with which I would like to be associated. I indicate publicly that it needs to be improved, by voting against it at second reading, but I will not support an amendment which indicates that we should kill the Bill, because Canadians do not want us to kill the Bill and to forget about the issue. They want us to adopt legislation, and they expect us to do it now.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I rise to speak today on the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) to Bill C-54, an Act to amend the Criminal Code. As we have been discussing, basically it deals with the very difficult issue of pornography.

First I should like to say personally that for about eight years I have been very involved in the particular issue as one—and I believe it is the case with probably all Members of the House—who finds violent and degrading pornography extremely abhorrent and unacceptable. I believe that most of us are attempting to focus on that area here.

Similarly, one could have no disagreement with provisions which attempt to deal with the very serious question of child pornography. As a former child welfare worker, I saw a number of situations which involved the exploitation of children. It was certainly one of the reasons that I worked on the issue and felt extremely emotional and strongly that something must be done.

Not only is violent pornographic material degrading to women, but it reflects a society that is not healthy, a society in respect of which many of us would not like to be a part. In terms of child pornography, certainly no one in this House would support that. With that caveat let me say there is no disagreement about amendments directed toward controlling child pornography.

• (1240)

This issue is a very difficult one because it raises questions of censorship, freedom of expression and, in particular, definition. What is the difference between erotica and pornography?

I remember several years ago working with a group through the National Action Committee who had put together as an educational tool a slide show of some clips from some of the really violent kinds of pornographic videos that we are discussing. It was extremely effective. A criminal element was involved in the sale of these pornographic videos, et cetera, and it was a multi-billion dollar industry. People were also not aware of the kinds of threats and intimidation which these women who put together this educational material were under. These women and their spouses were threatened. That was almost as shocking as the material. I suppose I led a very naive existence and did not realize that this was the kind of multi-billion industry that it is.

The problems one finds with this Bill are exemplified by the fact that with this legislation the group who put together that educational material, which was to tell church groups, politicians and many others that this is what is happening, that they had better see the reality so we can all do something about it, would now not be able to use and show it.

I would like to address the lack of clear definitions for erotica and pornography, and the lack of clarification about what can be used for educational purposes. I must question as well that the innocent or a defendant is presumed guilty until he or she is able to prove himself or herself innocent. Not being a lawyer I do not profess to be an expert, but I do believe that the basic tenet of our justice system is that one is innocent until proven guilty and not the reverse.

One of the areas that is so difficult in this legislation is the definition. Let me quote a few sentences from Pierre Berton who wrote in The Toronto Star on May 16, 1987. He identified one of the difficulties which many of us have. He wrote, "I can turn on the television news and see dead bodies strewn all over Nicaragua. I can see films, photographs and TV crime shows in which men and women shoot each other, knife each other, blow each up and burn each other alive as long as they don't do it in a sexual context".

Those of us who have children and attempt at times to do a bit of censorship of our own of the television understand how detrimental that kind of violence is. When it is then put in a sexual context it is all the more serious.

Bill C-54 is, in my view, retrogressive. It will not necessarily address all of the kinds of issue. It, indeed, misses some very pertinent issues that I believe it is the intent of all people in this House to address. I am sure that most people are not even talking about erotica. They are trying to address what is often colloquially known as hard core pornography which is violence in the sexual form. To call it pornography is, in many ways, misleading and obscuring the argument.

There is, however, in this Bill—and why we proposed the amendment—a rather big brother aspect. In order to deal with a fairly specific problem, there is now sweeping legislation which will catch in its net, as it were, a lot of other material which is considered literature in our society, and is not seen, I believe, in any way as pornographic by the ordinary community standard. Most of us can remember when books such as Margaret Laurence's were under great criticism from individuals who felt that her books should not be in high schools.

One is very sensitive to the fact that being discreet in the legislation and being specific is extremely important. Otherwise you end up restricting not only the freedom of expression of artists but the freedom of individuals to read material which I believe is not the kind of material that perhaps the drafters of this legislation hope to reach.

As I mentioned earlier, I am sure there is certainly unanimous agreement about attempts to address the very serious question of child pornography. Let me also state that the New Democratic Party has been extremely involved in discussions on the issue of pornography, recognizing the very serious and detrimental effects that such violent and degrading pornography can have. I would like to read into the record the New Democrats policy on pornography. I believe this in essence addresses the issues as we would feel they would be best addressed. The federal New Democratic Party:

> (1) defines as pornography material which condones violence, coercion, abuse and degradation in its depiction of human beings and condemns the production and distribution of such material whether in film, video, print, or any other form;
> (2) condemns the production and distribution of material which portrays or promotes the sexual exploitation of children and calls for severe penalties for offenders.

In that case we are in agreement with this legislation. The New Democratic Party:

> (3) calls for the strengthening of Section 159 of the Criminal Code of Canada to reflect these concerns.
> (4) calls for amendments to the Broadcasting Act to prohibit the broadcasting of such pornographic material with severe penalties for violation including the possibility of revocation of licence.

We have attempted to be very clear about the issue that we are trying to address.

I would now like to say a few words about some of the problems with the lack of clarity in the definition between eroticism and pornography. The United Church of Canada, for example, in June, 1987, in a letter to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn), expressed its concern. I know that particular church has been very involved and concerned about the issue of pornography. These are concerns not by someone who has a vested interest but a church which very clearly has a deep concern about the issue. Basically the United Church of Canada is asking for changes to distinguish between erotica and pornography in terms of a degree of explicit activity. The Church writes:

> The difference is simply one of quantity, more or less sexual activity. We believe the difference between erotica and pornography is a matter of quality of relationship rather than mere quantity of activity or inactivity. We submit that the difference between unhealthy pornography and healthy erotica cannot be measured in degrees of explicitness, but rather is determined in terms of context.

• (1250)

What bothers me is that in this particular Bill, we have gone much further in attempting to redress the wrong but have not really been specific about how those distinctions could be made. We have left the distinctions to be made by customs officers, judges and the like.

This legislation could mean that classics such as Romeo and Juliet, for example, could be classified as pornographic and distributors of it subject to criminal prosecution. While this seems unlikely, I mentioned earlier the example of one of Margaret Laurence's books. I believe, alas, that it is not as unlikely as it may seem at first glance.

The other issue I mentioned earlier and would like to say a bit more about is the fact that the onus of proof of what may be of artistic merit is on the artist or the writer. Unfortunately, many artists and writers in our society are not well off, and proving artistic merit could be a considerable expense. More importantly, perhaps, this challenges Canada's fundamental assumption that a person is innocent until proven guilty by placing the burden of proof on the individual. Surely this is not a precedent we wish to see enshrined in law at this time.

I mentioned earlier that I had worked with a number of groups concerned about pornography. As we know, many groups express opposition to this legislation, from the group which clearly wants to see no kind of limitation or restriction on material at all, to that which wants to see some censorship of violent or degrading material but not of erotica, to the third group which wants to see censorship of all sexual material. The National Action Committee on the Status of Women would fall as does the New Democratic Party into that second category. We do want to see restrictions on violent and degrading sexual material but not on erotica.

The National Action Committee has criticized this proposed legislation and has called on the Government to ensure that any legislation focus on violence rather than on sexual acts and that any legislation put the onus on the Crown to prove that the material does not have artistic merit.

An article in The Globe and Mail of May 27, 1987, underscores again the concern regarding the legal aspect of this legislation. The article says that, unlike the existing obscenity provision in the Criminal Code which obliges the Crown to convince a judge that the accused has unduly exploited sex, the proposed law places the burden of proof on the defendant who may be found guilty without the Crown having to say a word unless he can convince a judge that has duly exploited the subject.

Other comments have been made about this legislation by many other groups as well as members of the media. The Toronto Sun has said that the Bill is clouded by silliness. The Toronto Star said that the Bill has been widely perceived as a cynical attempt by a prudish Government to appease its most extreme adherents, authoritarian individuals and interest groups which are only too anxious to deny others their fundamental rights.

The Globe and Mail argues that this repressive view of the world is at odds with the existence of human beings as sexual creatures. Keith Spicer has explained that he feels that this legislation indicates that the Government has fallen head first into a puritan quicksand of trying to define official standards of love and beauty and that every judge, every policeman and every customs officer in the country will have to be an art critic, a literary critic and an arbiter of taste.

Many others have expressed the same kind of concern, from artists to members of the media and a variety of other groups. One particular group with which I am quite familiar is the Committee Against Pornography. This group is composed of women with legal, social, psychological and educational backgrounds who have made a very comprehensive review of this Bill. As happens so often, these kinds of issues are quite incorrectly defined as women's issues. I think they are society's issues, not women's issues.

This group, to which I have referred, along with the National Action Committee and the United Church have certainly worked very hard on a volunteer basis in analysing this kind of legislation. These groups do this because they are so committed to and concerned about the issue. This particular review is extremely long and comprehensive.

The group has made a number of recommendations, but I will not go into all of them. Suffice it to say that even this group, a group of women who have studied the issue and are very strongly and vociferously against the kind of degrading pornography to which I have referred, makes a number of suggestions for changes and expresses, interestingly enough, some concern that because of the lack of definition there may in fact be some material which would not be restricted under this legislation which should be restricted. The group has made a number of major recommendations which have been substantiated by considerable material.

I have not quoted the artist groups a great deal, though perhaps they have been the most vociferous in the media, because they could be seen to have a vested interest. However, a number of concerns have been expressed by groups of librarians, for instance. I mentioned earlier an example of the use of educational materials that might depict people in situations that could, under this legislation, be identified as pornographic. However, if all of that were censored, it would simply have no educational value whatsoever.

We all know that it is extremely important to clearly explain the seriousness of these issues in order to ensure that people can clearly see for themselves what are the problems. The AIDS Committee of Toronto, for example, in the context of education, has expressed the concern that this Bill would have a very serious effect on its ability to provide sex education and information which is vitally needed to fight this very serious disease. That is an extremely serious effect that this Bill could possibly have. It is for that reason that we feel this must be redressed and that my hon. colleague proposed the amendment.

In conclusion, I would like to say that all of us recognize the need to address something which has become an extremely serious issue in society in the last 10 or 15 years, that is the issue of child pornography. I believe there is absolutely no dispute about the fact that that is a problem.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member's time has now expired. We will proceed with questions and comments when the House resumes Government Orders after Question Period.

It being 1 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CFB SUMMERSIDE—CONSTRUCTION OF NEW COMBINED MESS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, once again I stand in this House to ask the Government to keep its commitment to our Armed Forces personnel at CFB Summerside. On January 24, 1985, a headline in the Summerside Journal-Pioneer read:

> New Combined Mess Slated for CFB S'Side
> —Actual Construction By Fall 1986—

The news story went on to say:

> Senator Orville Phillips said this morning he and Malpeque Member of Parliament, Mel Gass, have been advised by Defence Minister Robert Coates the Department of National Defence will be awarding a design contract for the project.
> It is expected the contract for actual construction of the mess will be awarded by October, 1986. Construction is expected to take about 18 months, with an April 1988 completion date projected.

This is December 7, 1987. I am now told by reliable sources that the working drawings are not expected by DND until this time next year, and construction will not start until 1989, if then.

With these kinds of misleading announcements, is it any wonder why Canadians have lost all trust in the Government? I call on the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) and the Government to stop their procrastination and get on with this worth-while project at CFB Summerside. This facility for Armed Forces personnel is long overdue and construction will mean a badly needed boost for P.E.I. construction workers.

ABORTION

POST-ABORTION SYNDROME—CALL FOR STUDY

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, abortion is a matter of grave concern to Canadians who abhor the destruction of human life. For many years the Pro-Life Movement has attempted to make known to all Canadians the humanity of the child killed in the womb by abortion. However, the unborn child is not the only victim of abortion. Women are victims as well.

An increasing body of evidence now shows that post-abortion syndrome is fast becoming the most serious mental health issue facing women. Symptoms include denial, anger, guilt, and depression. Those problems can in turn lead to substance abuse, sexual dysfunction, relationship dysfunction, and a general decrease in coping skills.

Research has shown that up to 82 per cent of American women suffer from acute symptoms of post-abortion syndrome for up to three years following abortion. Latent symptoms can manifest themselves five to ten years following the abortion.

The United States Surgeon General recently authorized a study of post-abortion syndrome. In Britain the effect of abortion on women will be studied by a bipartisan Conservative-Labour committee. The Canadian Pro-Life Movement is concerned not only for the unborn victim of abortion, but for the women who are also victims. It would welcome a study by the federal Government on the devastating effects of post-abortion syndrome in Canada.

DAY CARE

APPARENT FLAWS IN PROPOSED SYSTEM

Mrs. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the real assessment of the Government strategy concening child care centres will be based on results obtained. Will there be more spaces for our children in day care centres? Will service quality be guaranteed? Will costs be reasonable?

The Government has proposed to create 400,000 spaces in Canadian centres, but some 2.5 million children do need day care. That is the first failure of the Government.

[English]

Operating grants to child care centres work out to $1.85 a day for each child at the end of seven years. This will ensure that high standards are starved out and caregiver wages will remain exploitively low. This pitiful amount will be further diluted into profits for commercial day care chains. Strike two on quality.

Finally, diverting funds to regressive tax deductions will deny many lower-income families any government aid on fees. Those primarily discriminated against will be single-parent working mothers such as waitresses, office workers, and store clerks. Strike three on affordability.

After spending millions of dollars studying this issue, after keeping Canadians waiting three years, after solemn promises by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), Canadian families and children deserve a national child care policy. How tragic that they have been presented with this scattered, piecemeal bust.

DISARMAMENT

PEACE—POSITION OF YOUNG PEOPLE

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Brome—Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, today Washington is the scene of the opening of a historic disarmament summit between the heads of the two major powers, the United States and the Soviet Union. I take this opportunity to say to my colleagues and remind them that young Canadians are very much aware of the problems created by wars and violence in the world.

Last October 30, International Peace Day, I was the guest of two schools in my riding—Knowlton's Saint-Édouard and Farnham's Polyvalente Jean-Jacques-Bertrand—where I listened to these young people and answered their questions.

They talked to me about disarmament, nuclear weapons, and anything to do with violence, including toys found on store shelves and TV programs.

Mr. Speaker, in this world faced with wars, famine and violence, it is important to highlight the initiative of these young students who have sought to make their elders and elected Members more aware of the great theme of peace. My response to their concerns was to try to convince them that there is peace only where freedom prevails, and that in that respect our country, Canada, stands as an example to the rest of the world.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF FARM GROUPS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, there is a rising tide of opposition among farm groups throughout Canada to the Government's trade deal with the United States. Fruit and vegetable producers and grape growers in British Columbia are opposed to it, the majority of Saskatchewan Wheat Pool delegates opposed it, the Ontario Federation of Agriculture is opposed to it, many Maritime farm producers oppose it, and the UPA in Quebec is opposed to this deal. It went further and accused the junior Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Blais) of lying to them about the trade deal.

The Quebec Government has demanded that the Government of Canada enshrine Article XI of the GATT in the trade agreement which provides for farm commodities to be put on the import control list that are under supply management and marketing boards.

The dairy farmers of Canada are demanding that dairy products like ice cream and yoghurt be placed on this control list before the agreement is signed on January 2, 1988. I call upon the Government to take at least these two actions before the trade deal is signed.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—REMOVAL OF TARIFFS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the free trade agreement with the United States is a trading arrangement through which tariffs at the border will gradually be removed. This means that extra money that Canadians now pay for food, goods, and machines which come from the United States will no longer have to be paid. Canadians will benefit and save many dollars each month.

The NDP and the Liberals know this, but instead of telling it as it is they are trying to pull the wool over the eyes of the people who will benefit, by alleging that Canada will lose its sovereignty. Stop and think. How can a trading arrangement result in lost sovereignty? If you buy a sack of potatoes from your neighbour, does he then run your household? Of course not, and the Americans will have no part in running Canada after the trading arrangement is completed.

But, the NDP and the Liberals keep alleging that Canada will lose its sovereignty. "We are selling Canada" the NDP allege; "We will lose jobs" the Liberals allege. Well, I deny the allegations and I defy the "alligators".

NUCLEAR ENERGY

NUCLEAR POWERED VESSELS—CONSEQUENCES OF ACCIDENT

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, 70 years ago between 2,000 and 3,000 Halifax residents died in a devastating naval explosion. More than 10,000 people were injured and about 200 blinded. The December 6, 1917, collision in Halifax Harbour between the munitions carrier Mont Blanc and the Belgian ship Imo levelled more than 1,600 buildings within a 25-kilometre radius, and 12,000 buildings were seriously damaged.

Recent research explores the possible results of an accident which could happen at any time involving nuclear powered or armed vessels in a Canadian harbour. The horror of this scenario which, for the study, was set in Esquimalt Harbour, makes the Halifax explosion pale to near insignificance. The potential aftermath—latent cancer, severe genetic defects, environmental damage, and economic dislocation—is even more horrifying.

Canada has no adequate plans to deal with an accident of these proportions. The Government of Canada refuses even to insist on knowing whether or not visiting ships are nuclear armed. What will it take to make the Government realize that it is playing fast and loose with the lives and safety of Canadian citizens?

TRADE

FREE TRADE—CANADIANS' INTERESTS

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of those who are opposed to the Free Trade Agreement, I would like to quote part of what was said by Professor Bernard Landry, former Quebec Minister of Trade and International Relations, in his testimony before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade. I quote:

The first point I want to make is that this 35-page agreement drawn up by the Canadian and American negotiators is the envy of almost all Western countries. I do not think that has been stressed enough. The main client of most countries in the world, both in the East and the West, is the United States of America. This is true of the Federal Republic of Germany as well as Japan, France and Italy. They have to make do with multilateral negotiations. They all have to sit down at the GATT table. The EEC countries must first get together for negotiations among themselves and settle their own business before dealing with the United States of America in Geneva or wherever the GATT negotiations are taking place.

Here we have the United States' main trading partner, Canada, managing to obtain an agreement that establishes its particular position. Out of all the countries in the world it is the one that trades most and is the most closely linked economically with the United States, and here we have that status taking a legal form.

Mr. Speaker, this kind of achievement will serve the interests of Canadians of all ages and will serve them well.

TAX REFORM

SOCIAL SECURITY—POSITION OF SENIOR CITIZENS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, this morning, together with my colleagues, the Finance critic and the Hon. Member for Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic (Mrs. Killens), I had the pleasure of meeting with representatives of senior citizens' groups, the Coalition du troisième âge du Québec, which represents 400,000 senior citizens. They came to share their comments on the tax reform proposals made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). They say no to fiscal injustice. Pensioners condemn the Conservative Government's tax reform. Mr. Speaker, according to these people, the Conservative Government failed to learn a lesson when it was forced to backtrack on de-indexation of Old Age Security pensions. These people are asking that companies pay their fair share and that pensioners no longer be sacrificed.

Second, they want investment income to be maintained and converted into a tax credit, and they want full indexation of the personal income tax system.

Mr. Speaker, all these representatives of Quebec's senior citizens' groups were disappointed when they left their meeting with representatives of the Minister of Finance, and they wondered what the Minister of State (Finance) (Mr. Hockin) was doing to defend their interests. Was it all a lot of bluffing or was it real?

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF MANITOBA PREMIER

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, guess what Howard Pawley's NDPers are doing now to convince Manitobans to oppose free trade? You guessed it, he is forcing his Ministers into Manitoba public schools, proclaiming a military invasion of Canada by the U.S. Marines.

On December 3, at Daniel McIntyre School in Winnipeg, Business Development Minister, Al Mackling, said: "If the Americans don't like part of the agreement, they will just send in the marines and take what they want anyway".

If you think that is comical, let me tell you what Jerry Storey, another NDP MLA, said in Arbourg in my riding: "I would hate to see, because of this free trade agreement, a person in northern Manitoba freezing so that someone in Arizona can have their air conditioning on".

Now, before you buckle over in your Chair with laughter, Mr. Speaker, I want to inform the House and the constituents of Manitoba that it is Mr. Pawley and his Government, and in all likelihood this free trade agreement, that will allow the sale of Manitoba hydro to Arizona to run the air conditioners. Manitoba schoolchildren prefer Mother Goose and her stories to this NDP nonsense.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) can reply.

Mr. Rodriguez: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, but I have other fish to fry.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF LIBERAL PARTY

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, Canadians want to know where the Liberal Party stands on the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement. Back on October 26, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) wrapped himself up in the Canadian flag and proclaimed: "We will not live with it", and "We are going to tear the deal up".

After two years of wrangling on the issue, the people of Canada thought the Liberals had finally made a firm commitment on an issue which is of fundamental importance to the people of this country. But lo and behold, just last Monday the Leader of the Opposition told the newspaper La Presse that he was in favour of the principle of free trade and that he wished to improve some parts of the agreement.

Does the Leader of the Opposition believe that the Americans will make concessions to Canada once the deal is signed, sealed, and delivered? Does he believe a few superficial changes can dress up an agreement which is fundamentally bad for Canada?

Clearly, Canadians cannot depend on the Leader of the Official Opposition to provide serious and effective opposition to the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal. He is a leopard whose spots are continually changing. In fact one can now detect shades of red, white, and blue.

Only the New Democratic Party has consistently stood up for Canada and is in a position to oppose a trade agreement which blatantly betrays Canadian interest and Canadian sovereignty.

DAY CARE

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the new national strategy on child care is to give Canadian parents a choice for child care services and ensure that there will be a greater number of more affordable and better child care services. The measures proposed in the new strategy aim at making the very legitimate choice of a woman to work at home or outside the home more valid, and at providing easier access to child care services for Canadian families. With this program, the Government will create 200,000 child care spaces and up to 40,000 new jobs.

Mr. Speaker, since 1984, over 500,000 women have found work in Canada and our new national child care strategy will benefit children, traditional families and single parents.

According to Statistics Canada, there were under two children per family in 1986. Our policy aims at increasing this number by helping Canadian families and providing more child care facilities. Investing in our children and families shows that we believe in the future of this country. This is what our Government has done and will continue to do.

INDUSTRY

CLOSURE OF FORMER CANADIAN PORCELAIN COMPANY IN HAMILTON

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, last week we saw the final legacy of the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens). In the city of Hamilton there is a company once called Canadian Porcelain which the City, the region, and the workers attempted to buy two years ago. The City, the region and the workers were refused by this Government which said it would prefer a takeover by an American company.

At that time I predicted that if the American company took over Canadian Porcelain it would not be long before the doors were shut and the jobs were eliminated. In fact, last Friday, the company, now called Lapp Insulators, announced it is closing its doors in the city of Hamilton. It is pulling out.

I think it is because of the Government's refusal to investigate foreign investment in this country that we are now seeing the closure of Canadian Porcelain and the loss of over 200 jobs in the city of Hamilton. What a legacy from a Government which is not prepared to protect Canadian jobs. What a legacy from a Government that actually refused an offer put forth by the workers of that company to purchase the company, but instead chose to sell it off to an American company which is now closing the doors.

EMPLOYMENT

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, on November 8, 1984, our Minister of Finance tabled his economic statement in this House. The Leader of the socialist party immediately predicted that Canada as a whole would lose 100,000 jobs. In May 1985, the Minister of Finance tabled his Budget. The Leader of the Liberal Party then said that the budget would cost Canada between 100,000 and 125,000 jobs.

As usual, Mr. Speaker, the two Opposition Leaders were both wrong. Since 1984, Canada has not lost any jobs; on the contrary, the Conservative Government has created 1,042,000 new jobs.

Thanks to this Government, unemployment across Canada has gone down by 3.5 per cent to reach 8.2 per cent, the lowest it has been since November 1981.

The two Opposition Leaders are predicting hundreds of thousands of jobs lost because of free trade. This will not happen, Mr. Speaker, because the Free Trade Agreement will bring about the creation of over 350,000 new jobs. Indeed, free trade will create employment, reduce the cost of living for Canadians and provide our productive business people with a much larger and more reliable market.

It is time for Canadians to compare the statements of the two Opposition Leaders with our achievements. We have shown that we can deliver while the Opposition Parties can only criticize without justification.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

SOVEREIGNTY

ARCTIC WATERS—CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In response to the Opposition's attack, and public outcry following the voyage of the Polar Sea through our Arctic waters, the Secretary of State for External Affairs told this House of Commons on September 10, 1985, the following, and I am using his words. "The exercise of functional jurisdiction in Arctic waters is essential to Canadian interests. However, it is no substitute for Canada's full sovereignty over the waters of the Arctic . . . Full sovereignty is vital to Canada's security . . . It is vital to Canada's national identity . . . We will accept no substitute . . . Any co-operation with the United States—will only be on the basis of full respect for Canada's sovereignty".

• (1420)

Those were the Minister's words. The Secretary of State admitted yesterday that a secret deal has been signed between Canada and the United States which allows the Americans access to our northern waters, waters which we claim as national waters, but does not recognize full sovereignty of Canada over those waters.

I ask the Deputy Prime Minister why did the Government of Canada conclude a secret deal which makes a mockery of the Secretary of State's undertaking to the House of Commons?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Pat Carney (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should point out that the Right Hon. Member—

Mr. Foster: Part of the trade deal.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, this is the lead question and answer. Surely the Opposition will give us the opportunity to respond to the question of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

The Leader of the Opposition was quoting from a statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who is presently in Europe.

It is a leaked document that the Right Hon. Member is dealing with, so I will not comment on the allegations of a leaked document.

However, the House may be interested in the proposals which are under discussion. The issue with the Americans has been the passage of ice-breakers like the Polar Sea. The House will be happy to know that the proposals under discussion will ensure that there could never be another incident like the Polar Sea. For that, I would expect to have the congratulations of the Opposition, and not the catcalling that they are now doing.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It may or may not be a leaked document, Mr. Speaker, but the Secretary of State has admitted the existence of a secret deal with the United States.

[Translation]

APPARENT RENUNCIATION OF SOVEREIGNTY OVER ARCTIC WATERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External affairs also stated in this House, that same day, September 10, 1985, that the Government would immediately enact a bill empowering it to apply Canadian law in our Arctic waters.

Now, two years and three months later, the House has yet to see that legislation.

Instead, we have a secret deal with the United States that does not expressly recognizes our ownership of those waters, our sovereignty over the Arctic, but instead that gives the Americans access to our Arctic waters. The United States are not asking Canada for permission to send their ships into our waters, they tell us when and how they will be using our Arctic waters.

Here is my question to the Minister: Why does the Government of Canada accept to give up our sovereignty rights over Arctic waters?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am perplexed by the Right Hon. Member's repeated statement that this is a secret deal. Our negotiations with the Americans have been known and have been ongoing for some time, and have been made public on many occasions by the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs. There is no secret deal. There are ongoing discussions. When we come down to the point of consent, that is precisely what the current proposal would achieve. The Americans have never, ever conceded the Canadian demand that we have to consent to passage through the Northwest Passage.

In the proposals regarding ice-breakers, which are being discussed, the Americans would have to seek and get Canadian consent before ice-breakers could traverse the Northwest Passage. That is what Canada has been trying to achieve, and that is an exertion of our sovereignty.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister cannot have it both ways; the document can't be leaked, and yet not have a secret deal. The Minister can work that out when she has the opportunity.

I have always said that the trade agreement between Canada and the United States put Canadian sovereignty at risk. It is ironic that before the ink is dry on the final text of the trade agreement, if there is a final text, that the Government of Canada was secretly negotiating away our sovereignty in the Arctic. It has not escaped the attention of Canadians that the Arctic sell-out was being negotiated at the same time as our trade sell-out.

• (1425)

I want to ask the Minister, and perhaps it is not coincidence that she stands to respond to the question: was the price of this trade deal, a final text for this trade deal, the selling out of our sovereignty in the Arctic?

Hon. Pat Carney (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Right Hon. Member that I am speaking in my capacity as Acting Minister, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

I can assure him, once again, that the proposals which are being discussed and to which the Member has referred assert our sovereignty. They exercise our sovereignty. They would require the Americans to acknowledge that they have to seek our consent before sending a Polar Sea through the Northwest Passage.

I know something more about the Northwest Passage than the gentleman opposite, Mr. Speaker, and I can assure you that what is being proposed by the Canadians, that before the Americans could ever send an American Polar Sea through our Northwest Passage they would have to seek and they would have to get our consent, is the exercise of sovereignty, not the benign neglect that the former Liberal Government gave to our North.

TOXIN TAINTED MUSSELS—RELEASE OF INFORMATION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Last Friday the Minister of Health tried to explain his gross negligence in delaying a public alert to the poisonous mussels by saying that he was awaiting tests from his Department. Now we know that lab animals actually began dying on November 27, four days before the Government issued a public alert.

Why did the Minister place the health of Canadians at risk by keeping the real mussel story secret?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I did not keep any story secret. I have been very up front about this issue. I have all the details here, day by day, hour by hour, but for brevity in the House let me put it this way.

On Sunday, a week ago yesterday, the Government, through the Department of Health—

Mr. Tobin: Goodbye, Jake.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I hope Hon. Members think that this is serious enough, especially the Hon. Member from Newfoundland, that they would want at least to give it the attention it deserves.

On Sunday—I can give the exact date and I can make all this material available to the House—November 29, after preliminary reports a decision was made by the Bureau of Field Operations, HPB in Ottawa, to stop distribution of any further product from P.E.I. At 10.15 a.m. it was discussed with fisheries officials. At 10.30 a.m. the Atlantic Region of HPB advised headquarters of further arrangements. Then on Sunday the sale was stopped, not because of a health link, but what the Department through its experience calls, "the sale was stopped on the basis of reason to believe".

On Monday, the tests continued. I got my first briefing on Monday. I said to the Department: "Give me every piece of information". I got the information at approximately on Tuesday of last week, 5 to 5.30 in the evening. We developed the health alert, and I believe at 6.55 on that same night I was already in front of national television on this.

An Hon. Member: You were late.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): No, I was not late at all, Mr. Speaker. It is important that Ministers and the Government have the right to put information like this forward. I think it is responsible for the Opposition, as well, not to throw out allegations such as they do unless they have proof, and understanding in this place that some people have to be believed when they put out the information.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have here a telex from B. C. Williams, Bureau of Field Operations, Health Protection Branch. It was a health issue, and he states that "HPB was first notified of an illness in Montreal on November 25, 1987. Further investigations. On November 25, DFO Moncton Inspection Office was also informed".

We had two separate health incidents that were relayed to the Ministry of Health on November 25. In fact, the Minister thought that it was serious enough that he told all companies to stop shipments on Saturday morning, at 10 a.m. It was not until Monday night, at 7 p.m., that he informed the public, and I would suggest that the only reason the Minister can explain for the delay, contrary to the untruths that he told outside the House on Friday—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1430)

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that the Hon. Member knows that what she wants to say outside this Chamber about what anybody else said outside the Chamber is any Member's responsibility, and he or she, of course, takes the risk under ordinary common law to which that person would be subjected if the individual chooses to do that.

The Hon. Member may very well not agree with what the Hon. Minister said, but perhaps she could put it in ways that say something to the effect that she does not agree with what he said. I think in the interests of order we could do without the other allegation.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, why did the Minister make misleading statements on the issue last Friday? Why did he not come forward with the information to the people of Canada at the same time that the information went forth to the shipping companies? Didn't the Minister really put the health of Canadians at risk? Doesn't he think he should resign?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe I should resign. I do not believe I should resign because I followed the position of the health link very carefully. The instructions I gave to the Department are that on every issue we will err on the side of safety. I did not interfere with the Department, with its professionals, with its scientists or with its toxicologists.

What the Member is trying to put forward is something before health links could be established and that is what the Department establishes. In fact, scientists and toxicologists were dealing with a new toxin not related to shellfish poisoning, and the Department got the co-operation of the Prince Edward Island mussel growers to pull back the shipment. We have to do lab work. Despite that, the pull-back took place.

If the Member wants to take her partisan shots, she can. The Member is entitled to that, but I would like to think that Canadians, officials, toxicologists, scientists in Health and Welfare are as interested in the health and safety of Canadians as anyone else. They were not trying to protect an industry. There were trying to protect the health of Canadians. I think it is about time that the Member and others looked very seriously at the work that was done, rather than making allegations which the Member likes to throw out hoping somehow that they might stick to someone.

SOVEREIGNTY

ARCTIC WATERS—REPORTED CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister for International Trade which also pertains to the concession which the Government has made once again to the United States involving a question of Canadian sovereignty.

Just a moment ago the Minister indicated that the Government of Canada believes it is exercising its sovereignty in this accord. Will she now admit to the House that there is no reference whatever to sovereignty in the agreement that has been signed? Will she answer that?

Second, will the Minister concede that in the agreement, the secret agreement that has been signed, there is a specific clause that allows the United States to continue to challenge our sovereignty in the disputed territory that the Americans alone want to dispute?

Finally, will the Minister admit that the Government did sell us out once again as a last concession in the free trade deal?

Hon. Pat Carney (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, we did not sacrifice anything in the free trade deal with respect to our sovereignty. We exerted and exercised our sovereignty in the free trade deal. The Hon. Member should be ashamed to so impute our motives in this House.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I simply join with 20 million other Canadians in making that imputation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CANADIAN POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister now whether she will answer the question. With specific reference to the commitment made by the responsible Minister in the House on September 10, 1985, who said:

> The policy of this Government is to exercise full sovereignty in and on the waters of the Arctic Archipelago and this applies to the airspace above as well. We will accept no substitute.

The Minister has not conceded yet that there is a clause which leaves it open to the U.S. again to challenge the sovereignty question. Will she comment on that?

Second, will the Minister acknowledge that this commitment made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs has specific reference to the notion of U.S. submarines in the territory and that the secret agreement revealed on the weekend once again excludes that?

Will the Minister tell us what procedures, if any, U.S. submarines will now have to follow if they want to go through this water?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is possible to answer that smorgasbord of questions which cover a wide range.

Mr. Broadbent: Try.

Miss Carney: Let me please just re-assert that the discussions which are taking place, which involve the exercise of our sovereignty over the Arctic, are seeking a major concession from the U.S., namely, that the Americans have to seek our consent before the passage of ice-breakers through the Northwest Passage.

There are other arrangements in place in terms of defence matters. There are other arrangements in place through our environmental laws for merchant shipping. The issue which the Member is addressing deals with ice-breakers. We are trying to avert another Polar Sea incident. Should we accomplish our objective of getting the Americans to acknowledge that we must give our consent, there will be no more Polar Sea incidents. That is the exercise of our sovereignty and that should be acceptable to all 25 million Canadians. I do not know the 20 million Canadians about whom the Hon. Member is speaking.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I was flattering the Minister by saying that only 20 million Canadians were opposed to the Government. I gave the Government credit for having some five million on its side. That was done in a mood of abundant generosity today or I would not have done it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

SUBMARINES IN ARCTIC WATERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, since it is a very serious matter, since it is clear that the Secretary of State for External Affairs in his commitment to the House was talking about ice-breakers and submarines, and since the agreement signed by the Government of Canada and signed by the United States simply refers to two Arctic neighbours—it says nothing about Canadian sovereignty—is the Minister telling us now, with the immediate answer she has just given to me, that there is a secret agreement between Canada and the United States that is pertinent to submarines? Or, will she admit that the Government got nothing at all in terms of controlling access to the waters by submarines. Once again, was there another capitulation by the Government to the United States?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as Acting Minister of Defence let me respond to the question of the Leader of the New Democratic Party about submarines in the Arctic.

I recognize his Party does not approve of the relationship we have with our NATO allies in sharing resources, assets, and information about the deployment of those assets. The reason we belong to NATO is to enhance the security and sovereignty of Canada. That is why we continue to belong.

It is not in the interests of Canada's security or sovereignty to go into details about that kind of information on submarines in our Arctic.

HEALTH

TOXICITY OF MUSSELS—MINISTER'S RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and deals with so important a matter that the stakes are the health and lives of Canadians, and his role on this matter is most important.

The Minister will recall that the department was informed as early as the 25th . . . And on the 27th, clinical tests started showing animals were dying. But the Minister only decided to act and inform the Canadian public on the evening of the 29th.

Can the Minister explain why it took him that long to inform the public about toxic mussels that could cause serious illness, and does the Minister not believe that he failed in his duty as a Minister to protect public health in waiting that long before telling the public?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, what the Hon. Member said is not correct. I was not informed on the 25th. That is absolutely incorrect, and I want to repeat it. I was not informed on the 25th.

• (1440)

I would like to explain again to the Hon. Member and to the House what happened. Regarding the linkage between the illnesses in some Montreal hospitals and what the cause might be, information was given to the Health Protection Branch and the linkage had to be established. Officials were working through those details. Keep in mind that my officials and others say that it was a new toxin and a new illness.

Even without having the formal links on which the Department generally works in removing a product from the market, because there was reason to believe, without the scientific link, the shipments from the two suppliers were pulled on the Sunday. That is the fact. On Monday and Tuesday officials worked further on lab linkages and I gave the details Tuesday night. For the Hon. Member to say that I knew about this on the 25th is simply not true.

QUERY WHY MINISTER DID NOT ALERT PUBLIC PROMPTLY THROUGH COMMUNIQUE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the thirty people who are now ill in hospital are surely not satisfied with the Minister's reply that shipments of mussels have been stopped in Canada. Why did the Minister of Health and Welfare not rise to the defence of consumers and immediately publish a release, not four days after the notice, to advise shoppers in grocery stores, people in restaurants and at home that eating mussels was dangerous for their health? Why did the Minister fail to inform people for their own protection? Does he not feel that his failure and his incompetence force him to resign since people have lost all confidence in him?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, obviously I cannot put out a health warning until we at least have some evidence of the reason for the warning. Even before we had the scientific linkage, shipments were stopped.

I am not trying to hide behind anyone, but I am dealing very directly with the manner in which we handle these health issues. Let me remind the Hon. Member that on Tuesday, within the hour after receiving the information, I gave the CBC crew that was waiting, the information. I can say—

Ms. Copps: That's why you brought it up.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): No, I did not. On the news of that evening, Dr. Hoey of the Montreal Urban Community, not a member of my staff, said the following:

> I am actually astounded that we were able to move this quickly especially as we were dealing with a disease which to our knowledge has never before been described.

I simply say that even before the health alert came out on Tuesday night, the shipments had already been withdrawn without even having the full health linkage.

I would say to the Hon. Member that he may do what he wants in terms of partisan actions, but do not frighten Canadians, and stay with the truth.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—COMPLETION OF FINAL TEXT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade and deals with the announcement made late last night or early this morning that the final text of the trade agreement was apparently completed this morning but that it would be another 48 to 84 or 86 hours before it becomes available to the public. Therefore, the text of the agreement will not be available to the public before the conclusion of public hearings by the Commons committee which will be concluded today. That ludicrous result will mean that no group and no witness will be able to comment on the text of the agreement before the Government signs it on January 2.

Are there many changes agreed to in the final signing of the agreement last night since October 3? Does the Minister believe that barely one week of public study by Parliament of the agreement, beginning late this week until late next week, will be sufficient for a commercial agreement which can affect this country for the next half century and which will see the sell-out of Canada to the United States?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the House that we have occasion to mark an historic agreement which the negotiators concluded on the weekend. The process that will be followed is that the lawyers are taking a last look at the language of the agreement. It will go to the respective Governments to be ratified, and it will be released as soon as it can be published.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the process is a total shambles and the Minister knows it. What she says is happening now should have occurred some time before the end of October so that Canadians would have had an adequate chance to look at this agreement.

PROTECTION OF QUEBEC FARMERS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): My supplementary question to the Minister is this: The Quebec Minister of Agriculture has indicated that the Quebec Government would no longer support the trade agreement with the United States if the interests of Quebec farmers were not recognized in the final text of the Agreement, insisting that Canada should retain in its trade deal with the United States its power to impose quotas on farm products under the GATT.

Does the Agreement take into account the wishes of Quebec farmers? Or is it another example of the Canadian Government ignoring a Canadian industry?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, if my friend the Hon. Member from Ottawa Centre had taken the trouble to check the statements which I personally made to Quebec farm producers last week—when I reiterated that their interests would be fully protected especially under the GATT and the other relevant clauses.

I have not yet had an opportunity to meet an NDP Member with enough intestinal fortitude and courage to tell the truth to Quebec farm producers. When the time comes, I will not be afraid to challenge any of you, friends, on the hustings!

CANADA LANDS COMPANY

SALE OF EXPROPRIATED MIRABEL LAND—REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister in the absence of the Prime Minister. It concerns the operation and disposition of lands by the Canada Lands Company at Mirabel. I have in hand a copy of documents in a lawsuit dated September 2, 1987, which has not yet reached trial stage so I understand that under the rules of sub judice I can raise the issue. In this lawsuit, an expropriated property owner, Mr. Gerard Poirier of Mirabel, is suing 2434-3972 Quebec Inc., the Canada Lands Company and others, alleging that he was coerced into giving up his right to buy back his own property.

In view of the fact that this incident is the second in two months questioning the practices of the Canada Lands Company, a Crown corporation directed by a relative of the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) and former Minister of Public Works, will the Deputy Prime Minister now do the right thing and appoint a Royal Commission of Inquiry into the operation and the disposition of properties by the Canada Lands Company at Mirabel?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Solicitor General I would like to acknowledge the question of the Hon. Member who has in his possession a copy, certified, I suppose, of the proceedings in a court. I understand that the matter is before the court so I do not want to comment with respect to that matter. As the Hon. Member's Leader has said, I would not want to prejudice the case by making any comment either in or outside the House.

The RCMP has also indicated that it is involved in an investigation with respect to the matter. Therefore, using the exact words of the Hon. Member's Leader, I would like to caution the Hon. Member about raising the details of the matter and trying to do anything that might jeopardize any investigation that is taking place.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, it appears now that the Minister is confirming that there is an RCMP investigation and that is something we had not yet been told officially.

MIRABEL—INQUIRY WHAT GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO DO TO REDRESS SITUATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): My supplementary question also deals with the Canada Lands Company at Mirabel. I have in hand another document which is a promise or a bid to purchase signed by 2434-3972 Québec Inc. and Mr. Gérard Poirier in which Mr. Poirier states that pressures were exerted on him and that as a condition he was required to keep his bid to that numbered and secret company for quite a long time. Considering that not more than two months ago, the media were referring to another transaction which could be considered as fishy, and involving, I think, the Canada Lands Company at Mirabel, what does the Deputy Prime Minister intend to do to put an end to that kind of scandal which is a scourge for his Government? What is he going to do to redress such an inequitable situation?

• (1450)

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, possibly the Hon. Member would like to read Hansard of November 30, 1984, where his Leader, at page 771, talked about:

> —reinstating the practice that used to apply in this House, and I believe still should, reflecting the principle of presumption of innocence until proven guilty?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You have already admitted there is an investigation.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I suppose the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition wants to take another position on the presumption of innocence.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): There is an investigation.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: There is an investigation and I think it would be inappropriate for any member of the Government to comment on that investigation. We should allow the matter to go ahead, uninterrupted and uninhibited by outside influences. That is a principle of justice in this country, and I do not think any off-the-wall allegations by the Hon. Member should be tolerated by his Leader.

Mr. Boudria: Can I have a further supplementary, Mr. Speaker?

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Speaker: I do not think a supplementary would be appropriate at this time, but I want to say something not only to Hon. Members but also to the public.

The questions put by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell were, as I think Hon. Members will know, especially experienced Hon. Members, extremely careful. The rule is that a civil action is not sub judice at least until a trial starts. While that has been a long-standing dictate of Beauchesne to which Speakers have referred on many occasions, it still would not prohibit the Chair from making a contrary ruling if, in the total context, the Chair felt the question was about to prejudice the rights of either of the litigants. I did not believe that was the case. The Hon. Member quoted from pleadings, which, by the way, Hon. Members and the public should know, are all public documents.

The inquiry was on a serious matter. The Government, through the Minister of Justice, as is its right, said it does not want to comment on the merits of the case because it feels it might be prejudicial. The Government has stated there is an investigation going on. We have had carefully drafted questions and we have had replies.

I interrupt Question Period only to make this explanation so Hon. Members and the public understand what is appropriate in the Chamber, and that sometimes there is a fine line where something may not be appropriate. I allowed the questions because they were careful and appropriate.

NATIONAL REVENUE

FARM FUEL TAX REBATE—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF PROGRAM

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. The off-road fuel tax rebate program for primary producers ends on December 31, 1987. Does the Minister intend to raise the price of farm fuel and other fuel for primary producers by 30 cents a gallon on January 1, 1988, or will he be extending the rebate program for at least another year?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to inform my hon. friend that this matter is under close review. I think he can be certain that the present program will be continued. That is my present understanding.

REQUEST FOR EARLY ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for that answer. The producers will be glad to hear it.

There is concern that this program might be a casualty of the free trade deal. Can the Minister assure the House that the announcement of this extension would be a little earlier than two years ago when a considerable amount of concern was caused because it was so late and many farmers had already purchased their fuel?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to take that as a representation. I want to assure my hon. friend that this has nothing whatsoever to do with the free trade negotiations and that farmers, in that regard, will be very pleased when these negotiations are finished and the agreement inures to their benefit.

CANADA LANDS COMPANY

RESIGNATION OF FORMER MINISTER

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I want to return to the subject raised by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. I understand a lawsuit is under way. I understand there is now a criminal investigation under way. However, I want to ask questions about the enforcement and policing of the conflict of interest guidelines which are the responsibility of the Prime Minister.

Were any inquiries made by the Prime Minister, when the Hon. Member for Joliette left the Cabinet, into possible fall-out in the matters that were heavy around him at the time he left? Was the former Minister spoken to? Were officials spoken to about the fall-out of his departure and the matters for which he was responsible?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to answer that question, I understand that the Hon. Member for York Centre has carefully crafted the question with respect to circumstances surrounding this whole matter. I am sure, as a former Solicitor General, he will understand that where there is an investigation it would not be appropriate for us to comment with respect to the fact situation surrounding any transaction which may be under investigation. To do so may have implications for free and unfettered examination by the RCMP.

It is not from the point of view that the Deputy Prime Minister, or indeed any member of the Government, refuses to answer specific questions. It is just that I think the Hon. Member himself would want to make sure the police have an unfettered opportunity to come to their own conclusions, uncomplicated by versions of facts given on the floor of the House during the course of debate. They should be allowed to come to their own conclusions without being influenced by anything said on the floor of the House.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am not rising to investigate the Hon. Member for Joliette. I am rising in my responsibility as a member of the Official Opposition to hold the Government to account for the conflict of interest guidelines it introduced.

The Minister will recall that the Prime Minister told us, when the Hon. Member for York—Peel left in a totally different situation, how limited the investigation into that matter was by the Prime Minister. He spoke only to the Minister and officials of the Deputy Registrar General who had spoken only to the Minister themselves. I want to ask if anything more was done in this case with the allegations that were around when the Hon. Member left the Cabinet. Did the Government, the Prime Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister do anything at all to assure the integrity of the Government?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, number one, I think any sensible and reasonable Canadian would expect that before any decisions are made on conflict of interest or any other matter, we would want a clear exposition of the facts. That is why the RCMP, a truly independent law enforcement agency, should be given the opportunity to get all the facts and bring them to light. Following that investigation, conclusions can be drawn.

To stand up at this point in time and make answers with respect to the activities of a Member of Parliament or former cabinet Minister would not be helpful and would probably be inappropriate on the part of the Government.

LABOUR

ISSUANCE OF WORK PERMITS TO EMPLOYEES OF PERUVIAN COMPANIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

On November 30th, the Department of Employment and Immigration issued a dozen work permits to employees of Peruvian companies to fly domestic runs which are normally the responsibility of Air Canada. Since last Thursday, they have apparently made two flights a day between Vancouver and Hamilton.

A memo from his Department clearly indicates that temporary work permits may not be issued to foreigners if these permits are to be used to replace Canadian workers involved in a strike or lock-out situation.

Could the Minister explain why his Department has ignored this memo and allowed this Peruvian airline to fly domestic runs in Canada while Canadian workers are in a lock-out situation?

Hon Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that, under the circumstances, Air Canada had to ensure transportation services especially to the Vancouver destination. And the policy of first offering to Canadian workers the jobs in question has been followed. In view of the fact that we are dealing with Canadian companies, I suggest that the conditions as far as immigration is concerned have been met, and that the work permits were issued according to our usual procedure.

• (1500)

WORK PERMITS GRANTED TO PERUVIAN PILOTS

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, Chapter 17 of the Manpower Directive says:

> —temporary work authorizations cannot be issued to people from outside of Canada to take the jobs of striking workers.

I wish the Minister would tell the House why they have granted temporary work permits to pilots from Peru when there are 1,200 pilots in Canada who have been laid off. We cannot get refugees in but can get temporary workers in to break strikes.

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think that my Hon. friend should check her figures. As is usually the case whenever NDP Members make assumptions, they must be verified.

I will repeat what I said earlier: The policy concerning work permits for foreign workers is quite clear. The jobs are first offered to Canadian workers, and then to foreign workers employed by Canadian companies.

I think my Hon. friend should have read the legislation before raising such issues in the House.

HEALTH

TOXIN TAINTED MUSSELS—PUBLIC WARNING

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I see that he has just left the House so I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

I want to return to the matter of the tainted mussels. The Minister of National Health and Welfare told us that lab animals first died after being tested with the tainted mussels on November 27. They continued to die on November 28. On the morning of November 29, apparently with the knowledge of the Minister, shipment of the mussels was stopped at the request of the Department, but public warning was not given until December 1, two days later.

Why was the public not informed of the danger of the mussels in question at least as soon as the industry was asked to stop shipments? Why this delay? How many people are in hospital now because of the negligence of the Government in not telling the public to stop eating these mussels at the same time as it told the industry to stop shipping them?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, without agreeing in any way with the premise of the question I will take it as notice. I am sure the Hon. Minister will respond tomorrow. He has responded in some detail—

Ms. Copps: He is sneaking out.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is not a cop-out or sneaking out. He has responded in a very comprehensive fashion to the questions which were put. I am sure that the Minister will do so again. I will certainly ask him to do so tomorrow.

AVAILABILITY OF MEDICAL EVIDENCE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, if a sufficient medical link was established to show the connection between the mussels in question and the illnesses sufficient for the Department to tell the industry to stop the shipments in question, why was this same medical evidence not good enough to allow the public to be warned? Why the delay?

There is still no answer to this simple question. This is something important enough for the Deputy Prime Minister himself to know the answer to. Why does he not have the answer?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it is, of course, an important issue. Any time an Hon. Member uses the word "if" to preface his question there is hypothesis involved. This could very well be a hypothetical situation.

While in no way agreeing with the premise of the question, as I indicated, I will ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare to respond fully tomorrow.

CORPORATIONS AND LABOUR UNIONS RETURNS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (for the Minister of Supply and Services) moved that Bill C-91, An Act to amend the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. Hovdebo: I cannot hear you.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion? Order. I apologize, I cannot speak any louder than I am right now. Has the House heard the motion? The Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy).

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise to speak on Bill C-91, an Act to amend the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. I now realize that the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary meant to speak on behalf of the Government on this Bill. If the House would allow, I will give the floor to the Parliamentary Secretary. However, the hon. gentleman did not rise. I did ask the question three times and, if I heard him correctly, he even said "yes" to the question instead of rising and advising me that he wanted to speak. Do I have unanimous consent to give the floor to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary?

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to say a few words about the situation in which we find ourselves. It is indeed not your fault, Madam Speaker, that we are confused. Some of us thought that we would continue with the Bill which we were studying before Question Period, that is, Bill C-54. Others knew that we were going to proceed to Bill C-91. That created some confusion.

As you know, Madam Speaker, we have a speaker who wants to speak to Bill C-91. I take it that the Government will explain the Bill to us and to Canadians. We can then proceed with the normal routine.

We will comply with your wishes and cede to the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Rodriguez: Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. You called Bill C-91. The Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) stood up. He was recognized and he started his speech. We are not going to start playing these games and reverting. If you wanted to speak, you should have been up.

• (1510)

Mr. Greenaway: I was up.

Mr. Rodriguez: They should have their act together. They should have been informed that there was a switch from Bill C-54 to Bill C-91. They obviously do not have their act together over there—

Mr. Greenaway: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Member has been recognized and I believe he should continue with his speech.

Mr. Greenaway: Same point of order.

Mr. Rodriguez: Go back to sleep.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I think informal discussions were held earlier this day with all three Parties, about the rhythm of business for the day. The Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is correct in saying that some people understood that and perhaps some others were not fully informed. It was the intention of the Government to move to Bill C-91 as the second order of business today, followed by Bill C-54, however, upon the request of the Opposition, concurred in by the Government, we agreed to move to Bill C-91 after Question Period and then return to Bill C-54 if time permitted.

As you were reading the motion there were many people in the House shouting "agreed". I know that the Member for Cariboo—Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway) stood on at least three occasions, but it was not clear as to when the debate was going to begin and perhaps at the critical moment he was not on his feet because he had been up and down several times.

However, I think in the spirit in which we agreed to change the order of business for today it would be helpful if Members of the New Democratic Party were to give unanimous consent to hear the explanation of the Bill, to be followed by the Hon. Member you had previously recognized. That would certainly be in keeping with the spirit which was established earlier this day, and the spirit with which the Government entered into rearrangement of the business. Failure to do that would send a different signal to the House and perhaps to the Government as well.

Mr. Greenaway: Madam Speaker, I just want to make it clear that I was standing in my place on at least three occasions. If you people cannot see that, that is your tough luck. Get some glasses.

Mr. Rodriguez: You were sleeping.

Mr. Greenaway: I was not.

Mr. Rodriguez: We do not recognize the Members, the Speaker does.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order.

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: Madam Speaker, on the same point of order. When you referred to the motion in question, the Parliamentary Secretary was certainly not on his feet. I could see that from here. Sure, he is a friend of mine, but he was not on his feet. He just said: Question. Meanwhile, the Member for the New Democratic Party was on his feet to be recognized.

[English]

Mr. Keeper: On a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I think all the different avenues have been—

Mr. Keeper: On a point of order, Madam Speaker. We on this side of the House would like to see the work of this Chamber proceed in an orderly manner.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down, then.

Mr. Keeper: If I am going to hear catcalls from that side of the House, perhaps I will not say what I intended. I intended to say that in order to facilitate the business of the House we would like to hear from the Government side, in spite of the fact they were asleep at the switch. Then we will respond to what the Government has had to say.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I understand there is unanimous consent to revert to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. I wish to extend my appreciation to all sides of the House and hopefully from this point we will have a pleasant afternoon.

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Forestry and Mines): Madam Speaker, Bill C-91, an Act to amend the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act, known as CALURA, has received second reading today. This legislation which was passed in 1962 involves the reporting of ownership and financial information relating to corporations and labour unions operating in this country.

The information collected under CALURA has been reported to Parliament annually and has proven to be a unique and highly valuable reference on the extent and effects of foreign ownership and control of corporations in Canada, and on the affiliation of Canadian unions with international labour unions.

Its prime objective was and is to provide the Government and the general public with objective information on corporate concentration and the extent to which parts of the Canadian economy are owned and controlled from abroad.

When recent amendments to CALURA came into effect in 1983 corporations were required to report on a calendar year basis and to file financial data directly with the CALURA administration. This amendment, which removed the use of tax data for CALURA financial purposes, imposed a 16-page financial questionnaire on about 8,500 corporations. Many corporations were obligated to incur significant expense to meet these requirements. In addition, these same amendments introduced a complex four-page questionnaire on technology transfers.

At that time there were frequent and numerous requests to both the CALURA administration and to this Government to alleviate the paper burden imposed by this legislation on the corporate sector of the economy. This Government swiftly took action, which was warmly received by the business community. On October 8, 1985 the Minister responsible for Statistics Canada announced sweeping regulatory measures designed to reduce paper burden with respect to CALURA and to fulfil the Government's commitment to business to let the private sector operate more efficiently.

The regulatory changes exempted all corporations from filing financial returns under CALURA, whenever similar information is provided under the Income Tax Act or the Statistics Act. In addition, the complex four-page questionnaire on transfer of technology was streamlined from four pages to a few key questions. As a consequence of these initiatives, the Canadian business community has saved about $6 million annually.

During more than two decades of existence, CALURA has provided the most consistent, complete and detailed information source on the financial structures and degree of foreign ownership of the Canadian economy. This is information that has served royal commissions, government departments and the academic and business communities. Its ownership series have been the basis for virtually all Canadian reports and articles, both public and private, on corporate concentration and foreign ownership of the Canadian economy.

The CALURA reports have made it possible for us to have better knowledge of the structure and behaviour of the leading 500 non-financial enterprises in Canada. The reports show clearly how these enterprises have accounted for more than half of all sales, two-third of all assets, and almost three-fourths of profits. Of the 500 leading enterprises, just about half are foreign controlled. The United States controlled corporations account for 75 per cent of the sales and 85 per cent of the profits of foreign controlled, non-financial corporations. These facts are essential to any discussion of the corporate sector in Canada, including competition policy and trade negotiations. They can only be established from CALURA annual reports.

CALURA ownership information is available to the public through the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Due to widespread demands, Statistics Canada has regularly produced a highly popular directory entitled Inter-Corporate Ownership, which shows who owns and controls business in Canada. This publication has served many executives, market managers, investors, journalists and economists studying and writing on the corporate structure of the Canadian economy. Ownership data is distributed electronically by private enterprise to banks, financial institutions and other corporations across Canada.

I am told that in a previous federal budget a proposed corporate loss transfer system could not have been analysed without the CALURA ownership data. In many respects the business community itself is an important user of CALURA data, and is a prime beneficiary of this unique and valuable information.

There are other areas of CALURA where the business community has expressed concern. With this amendment the Government is taking the appropriate action to allay those concerns.

When the Act was amended in 1981 a provision was made allowing federal Government policy analysts access to financial and technology data. Since that time the business community has expressed strong concerns that this very sensitive information collected under CALURA should not be accessible outside Statistics Canada. This amending legislation will ensure the strict confidentiality of this data and reinstate a corporate fiscal year for CALURA reporting purposes. Consequently, business will be allowed to operate even more efficiently with less reporting burden and feel reassured with respect to the confidentiality of sensitive information.

The Government has already taken regulatory initiatives to significantly alleviate the burden imposed on business by CALURA, and is initiating the necessary legislative action to further reduce costs while reassuring the business community of the confidentiality of sensitive information.

In summary, this Government has fulfilled its commitment to let the private sector operate more efficiently, while protecting the public interests, by maintaining the unique information supplied by CALURA.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam, Speaker, it is my pleasure to speak on behalf of the Liberal Party as the critic for Statistics Canada with respect to Bill C-91, an Act to amend the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act, commonly referred to as CALURA.

The Government has wanted to amend this legislation for some time. In May of 1983 the previous Minister, the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes), had written to me suggesting at that time the changes he wanted to make to the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act. I should perhaps take this opportunity to thank the Minister for giving me the general outline of what he wanted to do at that time in terms of amending the legislation.

Subsequent to receiving that letter from the Minister I conferred with a number of people in the academic sector, and others as well, in order to ascertain the effects of making these changes to the Act in question. The Minister indicated he did not foresee any objection at all to the changes he wanted to institute, and I must report the Minister was correct. In fact, by and large, people were supportive of the initiative. However, I should take a minute, nevertheless, to indicate, through the Parliamentary Secretary opposite, to the Minister and perhaps to the Minister's predecessor that I appreciate the advance notice given to me in describing in general terms the proposed amendment to the legislation.

The CALURA program was initiated in 1962 to determine who owns and controls businesses in Canada. The program gathers data on the degree of foreign control in the Canadian economy as well as the location where Canadian enterprises are concentrated.

This legislation provides on the one hand for the reporting of ownership and financial information for the corporations, while on the other hand provides for the reporting of membership and financial information for labour unions. The annual parliamentary reports of CALURA are a unique reference material. It gives the extent of foreign control of corporations in Canada and the affiliations of Canadians to international labour unions. That report, tabled with all Members of Parliament every year, a copy of which I have in hand, has been a very useful tool to me as a Member of Parliament in terms of determining what control foreign ownership has in our economy, and, of course, in our labour unions.

In 1983, the previous Government made a number of amendments to the legislation. It established at that time calendar year reporting. This was at the request of certain government Departments, particularly the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, which felt it would be more useful to it to have the information on a calendar year basis. Another feature of the 1983 Bill was the imposition of a 16-page financial questionnaire on corporations and labour unions. That was in addition to a 4-page questionnaire on technology transfer which again has proven to be a useful tool.

Notwithstanding those useful changes, it soon became apparent that the requirement of filing on an annual basis was not convenient for corporations and labour unions simply because it is not the way in which a large number of them operate their enterprises. Most people operate their fiscal year based on whatever is more convenient to them in their own business, having regard for the period of the year when they are less preoccupied with other things.

The Government some years ago also provided a number of regulatory changes to the Act. The Act does provide for the Minister to order certain procedures to be performed by regulation. Some of those regulatory changes made in 1983 concern corporations whose financial information can be obtained under the Income Tax Act or the Statistics Act. Therefore, the 1983 amendment made it possible to get the information elsewhere, saving some individuals from having to comply with the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act.

I understand that through the amendments that were made recently to the regulations, and with the passage of this Bill, the Government estimates that it will be able to save some $6 million annually for the business community because the majority of companies will now have been exempted from reporting financial information.

We do have a few concerns and I want to express them briefly, just to bring them to the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary and, through him, to his Minister.

The proposal in the Bill stipulates that the data collection be made on a fiscal year basis as opposed to the present calendar year collection. While I have no objection to that, because it will save money for corporations and possibly for labour unions, I think it is important to note that those changes should be done in such a way as to ensure that during the first year of change the information provided to Parliament in the annual report of CALURA remains as exact as possible. When we are transferring from calendar year to fiscal year there could be a certain degree of inaccuracy in the first year of change. I have met with officials of Statistics Canada. They have informed me that in fact the calendar year they had was really a "modified" calendar year. In other words, it did not operate purely from January to December. The present legislation provided that there could be a two or three month flexibility in terms of the reporting period. In view of the fact that a large number of corporations already have a year-end in November, December, January or February, there will be a certain degree of accuracy built in, because the existing system was not the pure calendar year, but a flexible or modified calendar year, as Statistics Canada has recently called it.

• (1530)

Therefore, there are provisions to correct that. Notwithstanding that, I am looking for the assurance from the Minister or the Parliamentary Secretary that the accuracy of the results in the transitional year will be as good as it has been in the past.

I wish to refer to the second part of the Bill, which is to amend the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act. It is an extremely valuable source of information in regard to foreign control of the Canadian economy, and we have all acknowledged that fact. The Parliamentary Secretary did so in his speech, and so did I a few moments ago. It is reassuring to know that part of the Act referring to the mandate of CALURA will not be affected by the new Bill in question.

We must recognize that there has been very little demand from policy Departments for the confidential data. That was part of the existing legislation, and I am told that the last time any government Department requested confidential CALURA information as opposed to the one that is published, was in the years 1983-84 when the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources sought information for a survey that the Petroleum Monitoring Agency Canada was carrying out. I understand that there also could have been a request made by the International Trade Commission in the preparation of the so-called free trade negotiations that are under way, or perhaps just terminated.

Under the present system, I am told that the confidentiality of the information is ensured by requiring that the Minister of the policy Department make a formal request for the data and state the reason he requires or his Department requires the information.

It is not too clear to me why the Government is restating the objective of protecting confidentiality, when that is already there under existing legislation. Nevertheless, if it is a double assurance and it makes people feel a little less apprehensive about sharing their information, so be it. It is important for those who are providing information for statistical purposes to have all types of assurance and whatever assurance they require in order that the information we receive will be as accurate as possible.

It was the previous Liberal Government in 1981 that fought quite hard with the business community in particular to give a policy Department access to that information. It did raise some controversy at that time. The initiative that was taken then did raise the ire of some people. I think it has been proven through the last six or seven years that there has been no abuse of that system. I suppose, apart from everything else, it does highlight once more the confidence that I have in Statistics Canada in carrying out its mandate and keeping information confidential.

As I stated previously, the regulatory changes to CALURA will yield somewhere in the order of $6 million to the companies involved, because of the paper burden that will be removed from them. Those changes were made possible because of recent regulatory changes. I am told that, as a result of Bill C-91, there could be another $1 million saved by companies. We would also have to add to that the savings by Government. It is very important that all of us who are custodians of the public purse ensure that taxpayers' money is not squandered uselessly, particularly when some of the information is not used.

The last comment I wish to make is perhaps a little more in the area of a recommendation. We think that this matter should be taken up at a legislative committee rather than being dealt with by Committee of the Whole of the House. Sometimes when non-controversial Bills such as this come up, we do agree among ourselves to deal with the legislation in the House in Committee of the Whole rather than to send it to a legislative committee.

Although the Government has not made a request at this time, I wish to go on record as indicating that it would be important for this Bill to be dealt with at a legislative committee. The reason for that is, in the event that there are concerns by the academic community and by the users of CALURA generally that those changes could cause anyone hardship, that it would give us an opportunity to hear those grievances and to amend the legislation accordingly, if amendments are necessary.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, I would like to use the time I have left to reiterate the confidence that I imagine all Members of this House have in Statistics Canada, a federal Government agency that, in my opinion, does a good job. I am thinking particularly of a document Statistics Canada published a few years ago, which contained information on demographic, social, financial and other conditions in our respective ridings. All Members received a copy of this publication in the fall of 1984, only a few months after the election, and I found it very useful in my work.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank those who took the initiative of drafting this document and having it distributed. The document contains different information for each Member since our ridings are different, and can be very useful to those who are anxious to provide satisfactory representation for their constituents and to know what kind of impact Government legislation and measures have on our respective ridings.

At this point, perhaps I may suggest that now we have the data on the 1986 Census, perhaps Statistics Canada could provide Members with an updated version. Considering the fact that as of July 13 next year, electoral boundaries will be changed, I think it would be appropriate for Statistics Canada to make arrangements now for providing Members with a document on their electoral districts that would be updated in terms of the new boundaries we will have to cope with if elections are held after July 13, 1988.

As I said before, I want to take this opportunity to congratulate Statistics Canada on an initiative that has proved very useful. Madam Speaker, you may be wondering whether this last statement has any connection with the Bill before the House at this time. I am inclined to think so, because the document in question, which is quite detailed, probably uses some of the information provided under the Bill or the legislation we are now considering.

In any case, Madam Speaker, I would like to say, in concluding, that at least in our Party, we see no reason for preventing this Bill from going through the usual process and being referred to the appropriate legislative committee, and that is why I would like to encourage Hon. Members to take the same line so that proceedings on this Bill will not take any longer than necessary and the Bill can be referred to a legislative committee as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to speak on second reading of Bill C-91, an Act to amend the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act. Let me say at the outset that my Party does not have serious difficulty with the piece of legislation, on the contrary, in that it simplifies the reporting requirements particularly for some 2,000 to 2,500 smaller corporations, we certainly support any initiative that will cut down on the degree of expense and inconvenience that small companies must bear.

As other speakers have indicated, of course it is important that the information be made available. The Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act provides information in respect of ownership and international relationships among companies and unions in Canada. I was interested, I would have to note in passing, that according to the information being used by politicians or the peoples' representatives, the press, academics, and so on in respect of establishing the extent of foreign ownership of Canadian corporations, the Parliamentary Secretary indicated that some 500 major corporations in Canada are approximately 50 per cent owned by concerns in the United States. I should like to note in passing that these 500 companies are the only ones which will be substantially excluded from the new investment rules which will come into force as a result of the trade agreement with the United States. We are faced with a situation at the very outset in which half of the 500 corporations which will be excluded from the new rules are already owned by external interests. Of course, this is of great interest to us in terms of recording and being able to identify the extent of the ownership of Canadian industry.

CALURA will be of a great deal of significance a future time when it might be anticipated that there will be broader and greater ownership of Canadian industry and services as a result of the free trade agreement.

That being said, the legislation before us is relatively simple in that it proposes to amend two aspects of the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act. As matters now stand, the reporting period is roughly the calendar year. In fact, what it says is that reporting will be done between October 30 and January 31, and that that period of time should be a time during which the reporting period reported upon will be no less than 12 months and no more than 53 weeks.

As matters presently stand, larger corporations can submit the information provided in the income tax and Statistics Canada quarterly reports. The changes which are being introduced here establish that the reporting period will be the fiscal year. There will be provided 90 days subsequent to a fiscal year during which the reporting is to be completed.

Of course this means that there will be no necessity for duplication of income tax returns, as an example, with CALURA reports. Inevitably that will mean considerable savings and simplification for the smaller companies which I cited at the outset. This seems rational.

There may be those people who may wonder whether this might somehow disturb the correspondence of information among various reporters in respect of the gathering of good and useful statistics, as my colleague in the Official Opposition indicated. However, it has already been found that the October to January period has not been very helpful in providing specific comparative analyses of performance. That objection need not be examined as having a very severe effect on the adequacy of Statistics Canada information.

The second amendment involves the removal of the rights of policy developers in the federal Government to access privileged information submitted by corporations in respect of balance sheets, statements of assets and liabilities, investments, retained earnings, and so on, and in respect of transactions involving the movement of technology from persons not resident in Canada.

It has been argued that this is not a power which has been used with great frequency and that, as it is of considerable concern to corporations that certain kinds of information be kept confidential. It is preferable from their point of view to make these changes. However, it occurs to me that some caution might be exercised in respect of this amendment.

Of course I think of what is happening with profits earned by foreign companies operating in Canada, what kinds of investments are being made, where those investments are being made, and where and by whom earnings are being retained. It is of some considerable significance to Canadians whether profits earned in Canada will be reinvested in Canada. In respect of what we think is an appropriate exercise of authority by Investment Canada, it would seem to us that that kind of information should be available to us.

In respect of technology, an area of some considerable importance, one must wonder whether or not we are putting ourselves in a position where we will not be able to evaluate the extent to which technology is gained by Canada through a specific corporation and to what extent technology is shipped out of the country, as it was by Bata Limited in an incident that I quoted not very long ago, in which technology developed in Canada was shipped outside Canada. If that is supposed to be beneficial to Canadians in a net way, surely it must be predicated upon the extent to which reciprocal transfer of technology into Canada has benefited us.

This is an area which I think requires more thorough examination, just as in general I think it is important to take note of the tendency on the part of the Government to attempt to know less and less, and therefore for Canadians to know less and less, about what is going on in the corporate world in respect of investment, ownership, how in fact Canadians benefit from such foreign owned companies, and where, having been provided that information, there needs to be some regulatory imposition on such companies to ensure that their operations here are to the benefit of Canada and Canadians.

However, we certainly support the simplification of the reporting regime which, as I indicated at the outset, will help small business more than any other group. We think small business has too much of a burden already and, to the extent that that can be lessened, we certainly support this legislation. I presume those other matters which I have raised will be considered in committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-54, an Act to amend the Criminal Code and other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mr. Robinson (p. 11291).

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When debate was interrupted at one o'clock p.m, the Hon. Member for Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin) had completed her speech. As the Hon. Member is not in the House, the period for questions and comments cannot take place. The Chair is now prepared to recognize Hon. Members for debate. The Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly).

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on Bill C-54 and on the whole question of pornography, which is not an easy topic for any Member of this House to address. I think, however, it is very important for us to try to deal with it, but I do not believe that Bill C-54 is necessarily the best or the most appropriate way to address the question of pornography. I have received many letters from constituents both pro and con. To a lesser extent people are against this Bill, but I have received a considerable amount of correspondence from people who are in favour of it.

Bill C-54 would amend the Criminal Code by deleting the present sections dealing with obscenity and adding new laws relating to the production, distribution, sale and possession of material which the Bill defines as either erotica or pornography, namely, visual or other material relating to various forms of sexual activity.

The concepts of erotica and pornography are fairly recent ones. The Oxford English dictionary indicates that the word "pornographer" was first used in 1850 about someone who wrote about prostitutes. The word "pornography" was first used in a medical dictionary in 1857 and defined as a description of prostitutes or of prostitution as a matter of public hygiene. The word "pornographic" was first used in 1880 in The Guardian which said:

> The excess of the French press designated as "pornographic" have become such as to compel the authorities to adopt strong measures against them.

While the use of the word "erotic" goes back to the 1650s, the specific use of the word "erotica" dates from the 1850s. These, therefore, are comparatively recent concepts but, of course, attempts to use law to control material about sexual activity go back much further.

I want to suggest to the House that erotica and pornography present problems to our society and in our society because sex itself is problematic in our particular society. We have a whole constellation of meanings and attitudes which cluster around accepted sex. On the one hand, physical pleasure, procreation, love, communication and sharing. On the other hand, there is a great deal of attitude surrounding sex dealing with power, dominance, frustration, impurities, sin and disease. So we have some very confusing attitudes and emotions when we start talking about sex.

D. H. Lawrence, who was falsely accused of writing pornography and suffered from censorship, wrote in one of his poems:

> Why were we crucified into sex? Why were we not left rounded off and finished in ourselves?

As a society, we are not very successful in dealing with sex. Probably we are more successful in dealing with it in the 1980s than we were in the 1940s and 1950s when I was growing up. Certainly we are more successful in dealing with it now than we were in the Victorian or puritan ages which were very repressive on an official basis but where the double standard reigned supreme.

The sexual revolution of the 1960s and 1970s had some very positive values that I think we need to recognize as a society. At the same time, in some other ways,—and feminists have pointed this out, which I think is very important—the sexual revolution of the 1960s and 1970s reinforced sexism, and the proliferation of both soft-core and hard-core pornography is a symptom of that reinforced sexism. In turn, as a symptom, in a kind of cyclical concept it becomes a cause of further sexism.

The Fraser Commission on prostitution and pornography points out that the per capita circulation in Canada of 17 different magazines that dealt with so-called adult material between 1965 and 1981 increased 3.5 times. However, as the Fraser Commission pointed out later on, we still do not have much information about the actual patterns of the use of this kind of pornographic material.

It is important that we look at what some of the people told the Fraser Commission about the impact of pornography. I would like to read first from the brief of the Manitoba Advisory Council on the Status of Women in Winnipeg which said:

> All pornography degrades women. The spectrum of soft to hard core is often alluded to, with the implicit or explicit connection that hard core pornography is dangerous, while soft core pornography is not, or at least, not so dangerous. We dispute this. All pornography is dangerous to women, because it robs us of our dignity, the right to be treated with respect as complete beings, and it squanders our needs as men and women to engage with others as equals.

The Ontario Advisory Council on the Status of Women in Toronto told the committee:

> Pornography is unacceptable not because it portrays explicit sex but because it promotes hatred, violence, degradation and dehumanization. Pornography is sexist material that portrays women as a distinct sub-human species that does not feel pain or humiliation in the same way as men, and which desire violence and degradation for sexual pleasure. Pornography advocates, encourages and condones coercion, sexual violence and battering and portrays these activities as normal behaviour. As an expression of sexist ideology, pornography promotes a climate in which acts of sexual hostility directed against women are not only tolerated but ideologically encouraged.
> Women are—terrorized by the message that male violence and power is so prevalent and menacing. Pornography alienates women and men. In no way does it foster healthy sexual or human relations any more than other forms of hate literature would foster healthy relations between races or religions.

The provincial Advisory Council on the Status of Women from St. John's, Newfoundland said:

> —exposure to pornography leads to an increase in violent sexual crimes and aggressive anti-social behaviour. The person exposed to pornography is being conditioned to think that not only is violence socially acceptable but that it is sexually stimulating and that the person who is unwilling to be the recipient of the violent act will enjoy if forced to submit—
> Pornography suggests that a woman's value lies in her physical appearance and her ability to sexually satisfy a man. All other capabilities are trivialized . . . Pornography undermines values that are important to our society because it dehumanizes the participants, desensitizes the viewers to the sufferings of others, and distorts mutual, caring expression into a base act committed by a powerful figure upon a powerless object.

It is important that we recognize the impact of pornography upon the economic status of women. The economist Carl Beigie told the committee:

● (1600)

> —it is pornography, the most visible and virulent symptom/ form of sexism that may continue to segregate women's abilities from the economic mainstream long after legislation protecting equal pay for work of equal value, or prohibiting sexual harassment, or even encouraging affirmative action is in place and is being practised . . . (Pornography is) as much to blame for the slow integration of women into our economic framework as any other manifestation of sexist attitudes.

I believe that is an extremely important statement for this House to consider. By taking a generally derogatory approach to women, pornography makes it easier for our society to relegate women to a lower economic status than would otherwise be the case.

Of course, child pornography is a blatant exploitation of children that is absolutely, completely unacceptable in our society. I would like to refer to some of the things the Badgley Commission on sexual offences against children said in its report. It said:

> Child pornography is a direct and palpable product of child sexual abuse. It comes into existence, and can only come into existence, through the base and coldly premeditated exploitation of a young person's sexual vulnerability . . .
> First, child pornography is produced directly through the sexual abuse of young persons.
> It is a manifestation of that abuse which is sufficiently distinct and unacceptable to warrant separate treatment by the criminal law.
> Second, child pornography constitutes a permanent record of a child's sexual exploitation and the harm and humiliation to the child are exacerbated by the circulation, distribution or sale of such materials.
> Third, materials which depict children engaged in sexual conduct are often solicited by adults who use the material to persuade other children to engage in similar conduct or who are themselves child molesters. The Committee's findings in this regard bear out this fact.

The commission went on to say:

> The availability of child pornography also constitutes a message to the consumers of this matter that children are available for these purposes. Where a young person has been used in the making of pornographic visual material, it is of course irrelevant whether some view the material as having literary, artistic or aesthetic value. Plainly, the offences relating to obscene publications are based on different policy considerations than those which operate in the context of child pornography.

It is important for us to recognize that, quite apart from any artistic merit that anyone might want to recognize in child pornography, the pornography itself, the creation of visual child pornography, involves the exploitation of children and therefore cannot be condoned.

The committee went on:

> The Committee's recommendations concerning child pornography are restricted to visual pornographic depictions of persons under the age of 18. Paedophilic literature and visual pornographic depictions involving persons 18 or older would be subject to the general obscenity provisions in . . . the Criminal Code. In the Committee's judgment, a special child pornography prohibition attacks, not the legitimate expression of ideas, but rather a form of criminal conduct that is clearly inimical to the well-being of young children and youths.

Unfortunately, Bill C-54 does not focus on this kind of specific child pornography. Instead, it paints with a very broad brush. It ignores the recommendation made by the Badgley Commission that child pornography is deserving of and requires something specifically addressed to it.

The Fraser Commission, time and again, pointed to the lack of adequate research on the whole question of pornography, including research into the extent of its use in Canada and the extent to which its use affects individual and societal behaviour. However, I think the burden of proof is on the people who are using and producing it at this time. We are talking about an apparent connection between the use of pornography and the growing violence against women and children. There is a great deal of concern in society about this link, even though it cannot be statistically established.

The question we need to ask in this House is how effective the law can be in dealing with the problems posed to society by pornography. As I said, the issue of child pornography as outlined by the Badgley Commission is different. The value of law in dealing with a question such as pornography is limited at best. Any legislation must walk a very narrow line, perhaps a non-existent line, between a law that will not destroy the freedom of speech and the freedom of artistic expression, which is so important to society, on the one hand, and a law that will be effective in controlling the most objectionable aspects of pornography on the other. The more effective the law is in dealing with the question of objectionable pornography, the more violence it does to civil liberties.

As we all know, the present obscenity laws are largely ineffective and almost somewhat of a joke. I recall that about 30 years ago, some of my friends and I had the equivalent of a theological wild weekend in Seattle. We decided we would buy some books in Seattle and bring them back across the border, declaring them to be religious, because religious books could be brought into Canada at that time without paying any duty.

We bought four books. I forget what the fourth book was, but the first one was St. Augustine's The City of God, and it was to carry the freight for the other books because it was very obviously religious. No one could dispute that. The second was a collection of the writings of Sigmund Freud, and we were able to explain to the customs official that Sigmund Freud was very important in the modern theological world, which of course he is, and that therefore this should be categorized as religious.

Where we got into difficulty was with a collection of stories by Dostoyevsky. These stories were told by a group of travellers on different nights. Unfortunately for us, the chapter headings of these stories were: "The First Night, The Second Night, The Third Night" and so on. When the customs official saw this, he became very upset and agitated. He swore a mild oath and said he could not decide if this book was religious and should be let in duty-free or if it was pornographic and should be banned.

Mr. Bumble in Dickens' Oliver Twist said: "the law is a ass". Never more is the law an ass than when it is trying to deal with questions of pornography.

Mr. Keeper: If it's naked, its pornographic.

Mr. Manly: Right.

Anne Cameron is a well-known writer from British Columbia. Her most recent book is called the Dzelarhons, and it is a collection of Indian legends from the northwest coast of British Columbia. One of these stories concerns a woman who mated with a bear.

Last summer, a Vancouver bookstore called Little Sisters ordered this book from its U.S. distributors instead of from the Canadian publishers, which it could have done. As the book came through Canada Customs, it was held up at the border because this story of the woman mating with the bear was considered to be bestiality. I would like to read the passage that was so offensive. I do not think it will offend anyone in this House. It reads:

> But then all the others went to bed and left her alone with this young bear man who was now her husband. As we all know, or if we do not know we can certainly imagine, animals are not built the same way as people and it was never intended by creation that they mate together. The bear sat with his legs apart, and he grabbed the young woman, and he sat her down, almost, but not quite, on his lap. She wept, again, and she did not like the smell of him, nor the feel of his hairy body, and she certainly did not like the way he handled her. And when the bear finally lay down and went to sleep, the Muddlehead was exhausted and aching from his rough embraces.

That is hardly the sort of material that we need a law to prohibit from coming into Canada. The bookstore that was attempting to import this is called Little Sisters. Perhaps the fact that the bookstore attempting to import this specializes in gay literature and has been a constant target of harassment by customs officials explains the reason for holding up this material. Gay literature is often made a target for censorship.

In conclusion, is Bill C-54 any different from other obscenity legislation? Unfortunately, the definition of pornography is too broad. It says:

> "pornography" means
> (a) any visual matter that shows
> (iv) a degrading act in a sexual context, including an act by which one person treats that person or any other person as an animal or object,—

We can all agree that it is not desirable to treat another person as an animal or object, but how can we define material like that? The definition talks about bestiality. Leda and the Swan is one of the founding myths of western society. The definition talks about incest. We have the biblical story of Lot sleeping with his two daughters to ensure survival of the race. We have the biblical story of the rape of Tamar.

I would give this Bill my reluctant support if the definition of pornography could be cleaned up and there could be some assurance of continued freedom of expression. Unfortunately, in its present form, I cannot support it.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I noted on page six, Clause 159.6(a), the defence that:

> (a) the accused took all reasonable steps to ensure that there was no erotica in the thing sold, rented, offered for sale or rental,—

What the legislation is saying is that someone accused of engaging in pornographic activities could use as a defence the fact that there was no erotica involved. It appears on first reading that there is no distinction made between erotica and pornography. Can my colleague comment on the fact that everything that could be described as erotica seems to fall within the purview of this legislation? Should there not be some distinction between erotica and pornography here?

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, the Bill does draw some distinction between erotica and pornography, but it is not clear enough. Some material which I think most Canadians would define as erotica is defined in this legislation as pornographic.

What we need to recognize when we are dealing with this question is that while erotica is something many Canadians, perhaps a majority, would see as being a desirable element of our society in culture, pornography is not. Yet by attempting to clamp down on pornography with this kind of legislation, which uses such a broad brush, we are confusing the line between the two. We are going to open the door to court challenges. I am sure all kinds of artists who will want to challenge this will be presenting material. Some of it will be very mediocre, but because it is artistic, it will require that the rest of the arts community defend it. We are setting ourselves up for a challenge in ways that this legislation will not be able to stand up to. Therefore, it will not do what it is intended to do and deal with the underlying questions of pornography, violence against women, and the sexism which continues to prevail in our society. We need a different approach.

If we can have a better and tighter definition of pornography, if we can have the kind of protection of freedom of expression and freedom of speech which our society wants, then I am prepared to give my reluctant consent to this. I say "reluctant" because I think any kind of legislation restricting human expression is a confession of failure. This legislation is a confession of the failure of our society to deal adequately with the question of sexuality. It is a reflection of our failure to deal with the question of violence.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I just want to be clear. I think what I heard the Hon. Member saying is that he prefers the present situation, which provides little if any protection to women and children from the kinds of things we are all concerned about, to the alternative of moving this Bill to committee, holding public hearings, considering amendments, and changing things to create the kind of world he talks about. He prefers a process which will stop us dead in our tracks. That means he prefers the present situation which provides little if any protection to women and children. Is that what I am hearing clearly from the Hon. Member? Is he saying, let us stay where we are instead of moving to a parliamentary committee to hear witnesses and have the chance to amend the Bill?

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, absolutely not. The Hon. Member is completely distorting my position. The Badgley Commission suggested that there be separate and distinct legislation, for example, dealing with child pornography. I endorse that stand and I would like to see the House move on that. It could move very quickly if legislation were brought in.

With regard to the broader question of pornography, I believe that in the present situation it is necessary to have some restrictions. I feel that very reluctantly but I believe it is necessary. Yet this present legislation is too sweeping. It goes too far. I prefer that the Government take this Bill back, sit down and consult with the arts community and the people who are concerned about pornography, reread the Fraser Commission report and the Badgley Commission report, and bring in legislation acceptable to Canadians. Let it bring in legislation that would deal with this situation, rather than something that is unacceptable and will probably not stand up in court. It will just make a farce of the whole procedure.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, we are debating an amendment which would stop this legislation dead and continue the current situation. I thought I heard a speech in support of the amendment. Does he intend to vote for the amendment or against it? If he votes for it and it succeeds, it stops the legislation dead and the present situation continues. Which is it?

Mr. Manly: I have been very clear. Certainly I will be voting for the amendment. We say this Bill is unacceptable. We would like the Government to bring in the kind of legislation I just referred to. First, it should deal specifically with the question of child pornography. That will get very quick and favourable treatment if it follows the recommendations of the Badgley Commission.

Second, we want legislation which will deal with the question of pornography and violence but not that which will confuse the boundary line between erotica and pornography. We do not want legislation that will not stand up to the scrutiny of the Canadian people. This legislation will not work. We are simply doing our duty by saying that it is not acceptable and that the Government should take it back to the drawing board.

We are not rejecting an attempt to deal with a very serious situation in society. I have outlined my position on that very clearly. We want the Government to deal with this situation in a way which will not trample on the rights of Canadians of free speech and artistic expression, in a way which will not create a law which will give added weight to the old saying of Mr. Bumble that "the law is a ass".

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I have a further question for my hon. colleague. A good part of his speech dealt with the shortcomings of this legislation, which is quite legitimate. I recognize that my colleague is saying that there is need for action in the area of pornography. I am convinced of that argument, particularly given the greater distribution of violent pornography as it affects women.

Would my colleague be prepared to elaborate on the impact of pornography, particularly the portrayal of violent sexual activity as it affects women? Would he elaborate on why there is a need now for effective legislation in this area?

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, as I mentioned earlier, the Fraser Commission pointed out that it is difficult to draw direct connecting links because a lot of the base research has not been done. However, there is a great deal of circumstantial evidence that violence toward women is promoted and encouraged by this kind of pornography.

Material which shows violence against women desensitizes people until they think that this kind of conduct is acceptable. It sets up a model of an acceptable way in which men will treat women. Even the so-called soft-core pornography portrays women as being "bimbos", to use the word of Jessica, as less than fully human. That in turn encourages some men to treat them as being less than human.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to enter into debate on this legislation. I think we are at an historic turning point in the public debate on pornography. There is a reshaping of the debate on pornography to deal with the emergence of equality between the sexes, with the new demand that women be treated on an equal footing with men rather than as objects, the victims of society, and second-class citizens. The whole debate on pornography is rightly being reframed in order to achieve equality between the sexes.

I want to make it clear that I believe there is some need for legislation with regard to pornography. However, I believe there are a couple of extreme points of view on pornography which have entered this debate. There are two opposite points of view on how we should deal with the matter. The first point of view may be called an extreme civil libertarian point of view. It is that there should be no censorship whatsoever of any adult material including violent pornography. This position is taken by the Civil Liberties Association, a respectable organization, and by some feminists including June Callwood and Varda Burstyn.

On the other hand, there are those people who say that there should be censorship of all sexual material. The position that all material including sexual acts should be censored is taken by fundamentalist religious groups such as the Inter-Church Committee on Pornography, Canadians for Decency, the Canadian Coalition for Family Values, REAL Women, and right-wing members of the Conservative caucus. Those are the two opposite points of view with regard to pornography which, of course, cannot both be sustained. One must prevail over the other.

I do not share the point of view that all sexual material should be censored. I believe that there is a need for balance in our approach on pornography as well as a need for a modern perspective. I, my Party, and, I believe, the majority of Canadians, take the position that there is a need for censorship of violent or degrading sexual material, but not of erotica. There is a need for a distinction to be made between violent and degrading sexual material on the one hand and erotica on the other. Violent and degrading material should be censored.

This position is shared by the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, many women's groups across the country, and large numbers of the public. It is also the position of the federal New Democratic Party.

We need a balanced and modern perspective on pornography. The debate is no longer limited to freedom of expression on the one hand and the banning of all materials describing sexual activity on the other. The original debate on pornography was framed in that way, and those with the point of view of freedom of expression won the day.

Society has changed since then. Women have become equal partners in society. They are equal partners in the decision-making process of society and have raised their voices to indicate that they are not prepared to tolerate the violent and degrading depiction of sexual activities, which has become an $8 billion industry on this continent that sells violent activity under the label of sexual material. In fact, the essence of it is violent activities with a sexual aspect only as a backdrop to what is taking place.

This enormous industry lives off the profits from selling violent and degrading depictions of women in sexual activity. While this industry flourishes and defends itself under the rubric of freedom of speech and expression, it is being challenged by women who are demanding to be treated as equal members of society. These women are also challenging legislators and citizens to redefine the debate on the whole question of pornography. We must recognize that the depiction of sexual activity in a violent manner and the depiction of women as the willing victims of violence is unacceptable in our country.

As my colleague said, it may be too early to conclude whether these depictions of violent pornography have an impact on human behaviour and encourage men to engage in rape or other violent activity toward women. Obviously, there are studies that indicate that these images have such an impact, but there are other authorities who claim that these images do not have such an impact.

Personally, I want to see more evidence before I am persuaded that images of violent sexual activity do not have an impact on human behaviour. I have three children aged 10, 8 and 6. I have observed them as they watched violent images on television during a Saturday morning program of cartoons. In spite of my best parenting efforts, they of course act out those images in the stories they see on television. As a layman, I think that is prima facie evidence that theatrical or video portrayals have an effect on human behaviour. Unless there is some sound scientific studies that overwhelmingly lead to the conclusion that people can watch such images without having any impact on their behaviour, I have serious concerns about an $8 billion industry which continues to show violent sexual activity with women and portray women as victims.

I am prepared to take a new, balanced approach toward the question of censorship of pornography from a perspective which recognizes the freedom of expression on the one hand and the desire to eliminate the negative impact that results from the degrading and violent portrayal of women in sexual activity on the other. It is no longer acceptable to permit anything for the sake of freedom of expression. I believe that the majority of Canadians want to reconsider such a philosophy and take a balanced approach in which we preserve freedom of expression on the one hand while attempting to reduce and, hopefully, eliminate the violent and degrading portrayal of women in a sexual context.

We need legislation that will curtail the pornographic industry while preserving freedom of expression. It is not enough simply to take the approach of ridding the pornographic industry and its products regardless of freedom of expression. I do not believe that reflects the value of ordinary Canadians, and such an approach will simply result in the legislation being challenged in the courts and rendered ineffective. The disturbing aspect of the Government's legislation is that its definition of pornography is so sweeping that it invites a challenge in the courts under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The Government may want to appear that it is taking decisive action on pornography, but unless such action is effective it will be a waste of time. Not only is this legislation a facade with regard to pornography, it is also dangerous with regard to freedom of expression. The lack of definition of pornography leaves such sweeping powers in the hands of the police and courts that much of the literature we want to continue to be available will be threatened. This legislation makes it entirely possible that classic literature and even sacred Scriptures could be threatened. Even the Bible could be brought into court according to this legislation. It is obvious that it does not contain a precise definition of pornography. It does not make a distinction between pornography and erotica.

If the Government is serious about dealing with the problem of pornography, it must begin by making some distinction that will allow for freedom of expression and effective action against pornography in this country.

I wish to point out some specific critiques of the legislation. I wish to make it quite clear that while I feel there is a need for effective legislation regarding pornography in this country, this legislation is not it. This legislation before us falls short and is too broad in its impact.

For example, this legislation places the onus for proving material is not pornographic on the back of the artist. We all know that, from a financial point of view, artists are struggling members of our community. An artist is lucky to make a few dollars and very fortunate to make a living in this country. If thrown on top of the necessity of producing art is not only the making of a living but also the financial burden of taking on court challenges with regard to the artistic material, then this is an unfair burden to place on the back of our artists. We all know how expensive a day in court can be, certainly a day in Supreme Court can be very expensive. Artists are struggling to survive and to be active members of our community. That is one of the negative aspects of this legislation that I wish to mention.

Another aspect is that the defence of artistic merit for educational, scientific, and medical purposes, does not apply to any depictions of sexual activity in the presence of or involving persons who appear to be under the age of 18 years. That means that fundamental aspects of teaching of human sexuality to young people in books such as Show Me, which has a graphic depiction of matters related to sexuality, could be outlawed under this legislation; or the police could step in and the courts could indicate that this type of material, such as that contained in the book Show Me, which is intended to educate children in the area of sexuality, would no longer be permissible. Obviously we want our children to receive good education with regard to sexuality. We want them to receive the facts and solid information. We do not want them to be learning about sexuality on the streets. We want them to learn at home and to be able to have solid information.

There are serious problems with this legislation. The fundamental and key problem with this legislation is its lack of a definition of pornography. The impact of this legislation is far too sweeping. It takes into its swath too much, and it will not only hit pornography but educational materials, scientific materials, and artistic materials.

We do need action in the area of pornography. We do need to be able to balance the concern about freedom of expression with the concern about taking effective action against the violent and degrading portrayal of sexual activities and of women, but this legislation is not it. It is far too sweeping in its lack of definition of pornography. It fails to make a distinction between pornography and erotica. We cannot support this legislation. That is why my colleague moved the amendment that:

> this House declines to give second reading to Bill C-54 because it fails to clearly define pornography as material that condones violence, coercion, abuse and degradation in its depiction of human beings or portrays or promotes the sexual exploitation of children; and also, because it does not distinguish pornography from material of an artistic, literary, educational or scientific nature in a fashion acceptable to the Canadian public, including artists.

We call for effective legislation that will attack the pornographic industry, and will allow for freedom of expression. This legislation simply does not fill the Bill.

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, I wish to ask a question of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper), who is, among other things, the Post Office critic for the New Democratic Party. I wish to ask him specifically what types of risks I or any other Canadian might be facing because of material which is perhaps passing through the post, or material which I may have in my home, as a consequence of the very broad definitions that are in Bill C-54.

As I suggested the other day, as I understand it, for example, a copy of the Arabian Nights, which I have had in my book shelves for many years without apparent ill effect, would in fact be illegal to be possessed by me and in my house because of the fact that certain of the pictures might be deemed to be erotic pictures and involving persons apparently under the age of 18, and as a consequence no defence on the basis of artistic merit would be admissible.

In fact, the thought police from the Conservative Party could come into my study in my home and start picking through the books which I happen to have in my library, and in their view decide which books were pornographic. They could then take me into court and deny me any defence, simply because I bought a book 25 years ago. Having that book could render me liable to being put in jail, or to some other type of conviction.

If I were to be sent material in the post, or received material in the post, or ordered a book from a legitimate American or British bookseller in New York City or London without knowing exactly what was in the book, but ordered it because it was of interest to me, and the book was a work by a famous novelist and it was found addressed to me and having been chosen by me to come to me in the post, there again I could be jailed for having that material.

For example, if I happened to communicate with a bookseller of used books and asked for a copy of Vladimir Nabokov's novel Lolita, which, among other things, is a profound criticism of the nature of American life and society as it developed in the 1950s and 1960s, I believe that I am correct in stating that the possession of that book would be an offence for which I would be liable to penalties which are not much different from those meted out to someone who burgles, breaks into a shop, or in some other way commits a violent act such as an assault.

I wish to know from the Hon. Member if that is the case, and if he considers it is reasonable to put people in such jeopardy? Should we allow conservative thought police or people who are prurient in their interests and their views to the point of being ridiculous to be able to go into every public library across the country and to leaf through every book until they find the so-called "dirty" bits, and then, having found those, to salivate at the look of them, and then to rush off to the local police station in order to have the police come in to have book burnings, and those types of things because, in their view, those books happen not to fall within this permissible expression under Bill C-54? Are these the types of nightmares into which this country is liable to fall? Is almost any form of written expression liable to be put under those types of restrictions?

Are we going to see the situation where Canada will be the laughing stock of the western world in terms of what is permitted? Are we going to get into a situation, where under glasnost in the Soviet Union, books permitted in the Soviet Union will be banned in Canada because of the conservative thought police? Is this what we are getting into?

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I want to refer my colleague to the legislation, which is Bill C-54, and thank him for raising the alarm, because I think that people should be concerned about this legislation.

• (1650)

Let me point out that Bill C-54 is an amendment to the Criminal Code so that anyone who contravenes the legislation will be subject to a criminal sanction. It is not civil legislation. It is not a slap on the wrist. It will be a criminal sanction. The broad sweep of the legislation has real implications for people, not only in terms of what is in their libraries, but also what is in their homes, as my hon. colleague pointed out. The legislation makes no distinction and fails to recognize the British notion of a man's home being his castle. However, I would like to refer to Clause 159.6 on page 6 of the Bill which deals with defences. For example, if someone goes into a person's home, finds the Bible and does not like the rape scenes in it, and therefore confiscates the book and charges the person with possession of pornographic material, the person will have to get a lawyer and seek to defend himself. One permissible defence is listed under subclause 159.6(a), which reads:

> —the accused took all reasonable steps to ensure that there was no erotica in the thing sold,—

It goes on and on. The person must be able to prove that there was nothing erotic in anything he possessed in his home.

The Bill does not adequately define what erotica means, but the caution I have heard is that we must make a distinction between what is pornographic, what is dirty and degrading, and what is a healthy portrayal of human sexuality, which would therefore fall under what I would consider to be erotica.

Under this piece of legislation, I say to my colleague, he would have to demonstrate to the police, sent to his home under authority given to them by a massive Conservative majority, that there was no erotica in whatever literature he had in his home, including the Holy Scripture.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I should like to make a short comment. We have now listened to close to eight hours of debate on this amendment, and I believe there has been an attempt to deceive Canadians about the import of voting for the amendment. It must be crystal clear to every Member of the Chamber that support for the amendment would kill this legislation for the term of this Parliament. It would create a situation where it would very easily take us into the 1990s before we could bring forward a piece of legislation to deal with what Hon. Members keep saying they want to deal with.

They keep trying to stand on two sides of a picket fence, and the lower they sink, the more uncomfortable it gets. They talk about book burning. They talk about Conservative "thought police".

Since 1984 the Government has brought parliamentary reform and freedom of speech to the Chamber and has put decision-making in the hands of parliamentarians in a way totally unlike that which occurred in my first five years in this place.

The House is being asked to complete second reading debate and to move a piece of legislation, designed to stop the exploitation and abuse of children and the exploitation and abuse of women, to committee where the most expert people in the land can be called as witnesses to the fine print.

Perhaps Hon. Members opposite have a point; perhaps they do not. Maybe the words are correct; maybe they are not. However, they try to stand with one foot on the side of democracy and the usefulness of people in making legislation, and with the other foot on the side of voting for an amendment which kills the legislation and makes it impossible to bring back the subject matter until we have had an election, the opportunity for a different government and all processes which go through Cabinet. Rather than light and truth, which can come through committee examination and the democratic process, the Opposition wants to kill the Bill and continue the situation where we would have an absolute minimum of three more years of exploitation of women and children.

The Government and Hon. Members on this side of the House say that it is time to take what has already been a long process to committee for examination, possible amendment, and report stage back in the House. Time after time they stand, but they do not deal with the reality of their amendment which would kill not only the legislation but at least three years. It is totally unacceptable. Does the Hon. Member admit that his Party is in favour of a continuation of the status quo for at least three more years, and that is why his critic brought forward the amendment?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): A short, final comment from the Hon. Member.

Mr. Keeper: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to respond to that accusation. Clearly that kind of accusation cannot be left without a response.

I point out to the Hon. Member that the legislation came before the House previously under a different number. There was public outcry at that point, alerting the Government to the necessity to make a distinction between erotica and pornography and asking the Government to bring in a balanced piece of legislation. The Government retreated at that point and brought forward the legislation before us today without any substantial change in it.

How can he expect us to have any confidence that, when the legislation goes to committee, they will be open to substantive and real amendments to bring about the kind of legislation that is needed?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time for questions and comments has now expired.

According to the rules, at this point the length of speeches will be 10 minutes.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, the Government has suggested on many occasions that we let Bill C-54 go to committee and that it can be fixed up there. That sounds like a fair and reasonable suggestion, but we have a considerable amount of experience with the Government and the way it keeps its promises. I could give a very reasoned example back in June when the Government tabled an immigration Bill which resulted in a considerable amount of reaction from the people. It promised that it would withdraw the Bill and come back with a better one. In August we were presented with the same Bill, or practically the same Bill, with no major changes. It was still as unacceptable as it had been in June.

We have had experience with the Government, therefore we are suggesting in the particular amendment before us that the Government should take a look at the Badgley report and at the Fraser report and bring in legislation that will deal with degrading pornography and violence. We would allow it to pass through the House very quickly, but we do not think the Government is ready to do it. Therefore, we are suggesting that it go back to the table, divide the Bill, if necessary, and bring in a Bill which takes cognizance of degrading pornography, child pornography, and violence, which I suppose are part of our civilization.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is with regret that I must interrupt the Hon. Member.

It being 5 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

ORGANIZED CRIME

ESTABLISHMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

The House resumed from Friday, October 23, consideration of the motion of Miss Nicholson:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of appointing a Royal Commission to investigate organized crime in Canada and to include in its report observations and recommendations on:

1. the extent to which organized crime is present and active in Canada, particularly in such activities as drug trafficking and loan-sharking;

2. the extent to which organized crime is connected to the institutions of Canadian society;

3. action taken by the governments of other countries to investigate and curtail organized crime activity;

4. legislation to enable the government to identify and appropriate the proceeds of organized crime;

5. effective and appropriate punishment in instances of organized crime murder conspiracy; and

6. possible guidelines for enforcement agencies in dealing with witnesses against organized crime.

And the amendment of Mr. Kaplan:

That the motion be amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"and that the Royal Commission report within six months of its appointment".

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When the motion was last before the House, the Hon. Member for Huron—Bruce (Mr. Cardiff) had been given the floor. I will recognize other Members. On the amendment, the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson).

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Madam Speaker, I have already spoken on the main motion on March 12 when I introduced the motion. Today I would like to speak on the amendment of my colleague, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan). In the four days this motion was debated, March 12, May 14, August 13 and October 23, there have been some very thoughtful speeches from all sides of the House. There have also been some speeches read by government supporters, which presumably represent the government's position. Summarized this would be: One, there is no need for a royal commission because the law officers of the Crown and the police are already doing everything that needs to be done. Two, a royal commission would take too long to report. Three, a royal commission would be expensive.

On the question of a royal commission taking too long to report, my colleague from York Centre moved his very helpful amendment which would require the commission to report within six months of having been appointed. That would certainly shorten the period to the minimum and that would keep the costs down. The royal commission, which has just reported under Mr. Justice Parker, I believe cost $3 million, if we exclude the payment of legal fees for the person mainly involved, which added almost another million dollars. That ran for perhaps 18 months.

The third question, on the issue of a police investigation being adequate and that everything possible is being done, misses the point of Item No. 2 in my motion which reads:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of appointing a Royal Commission to investigate organized crime in Canada and to include in its report observations and recommendations on:

2. The extent to which organized crime is connected to the institutions of Canadian society.

That, Madam Speaker, is not part of the mandate of our normal policing. I would like to read into the record an extract from James Dubro's Mob Rule in which he makes the most persuasive case for the establishment of a royal commission direct with a mandate to examine the extent to which organized crime is connected to the institutions of our society. I quote:

—a federal royal commission into organized crime would be one of the best ways to expose and effectively get at the business, the official and the political connections of organized crime across the country, for all the nation to see and evaluate. Corruption of public officials and businessmen is one of the most pernicious areas of organized-crime activity, and the most difficult to uncover. Without corruption, organized crime could not thrive, and the efforts of the mob to corrupt police, judges, politicians, lawyers, and government officials are probably more deleterious to society than any other activity in which it engages. For the moment, the level of corruption in Canada lags some years behind that in the United States . . . , but this gap is closing. A commission could focus on this crucial area.

If our society is to effectively fight organized crime, the public must be fully informed, and the government and the police must have laws that give them the proper tools for the battle—without taking away the civil liberties of law-abiding Canadians. This can only be accomplished through a federal royal commission, which is the one thing that all major mobsters fear because of the inevitable public exposure and the concerted effort against them that would result. The time has come to put—organized crime in Canada on notice that their criminal activities are no longer to be tolerated and that they face very serious consequences if they continue, as they have for all of the twentieth century in Canada, with murder, extortion, drug trafficking, assaults, and other major organized crime activities.

The time has come to take a strong stand against the ongoing menace of organized crime. Mob rule should not be allowed to continue in Canada without a major counter-offensive.

I commend James Dubro's Mob Rule to all Members of the House.

In the couple of minutes I have left to me, I appeal to the Government to reconsider its decision. I know the Government has made a decision to defeat this motion. I do not know how the Government can do it on the basis of cost and on the basis of time. The cost of the human misery in our cities is incredible, and the cost to the economy is incredible. We are paying the costs. Every time organized crime becomes involved in legitimate business, costs go up. We see all kinds of competitive counter activities. Inferior products are used. The consumer is paying every step of the way. Then there are the human costs. In my own riding I have seen nice, decent family neighbourhoods where people are harassed and frightened by drug abusers and drug sellers on the streets.

Members opposite have made the point about the improvement in upcoming legislation and about how efficient our police are. This is all very true. The royal commission would not take away any resources from our police. It would, on the contrary, by shining the white light of publicity, focus on the need for more resources, and an informed citizenry would be pleased to support increasing the powers of the police to cope with this serious threat to our society without, of course, infringing upon civil rights of law-abiding citizens.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, I take this opportunity to speak on the motion of the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) and I congratulate her on her motion.

I have in my constituency a maximum security institution, a medium security institution and two correctional institutions for men and women. I often wonder how many of those inmates in those institutions are actually there because they have taken part in some kind of organized criminal events or action. The Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker, my predecessor in Prince Albert, used to say that there is a larger percentage of people of commitment in Prince Albert than in any other city in the country because we have this large preponderance of institutions which have grown up in the area.

• (1710)

Returning to the discussion on organized crime, my guess is that many of the people who are incarcerated in these institutions are there, not because of their involvement in organized crime, but because of their involvement in casual crime. However, after they have been incarcerated for a while, they are prime recruits for organized crime. Their second or third terms spent in these institutions are quite often a result of being part of the organization which has brought them into organized crime. The process of recruiting Canadians is a real concern of this motion. We need to find out more about organized crime. We need to know how it operates in Canada. We need to find out how recruitment is done and, as I have suggested, federal institutions are prime recruiting areas for organized crime. We need to know how organized crime launders its money and how many of the businesses which we support innocently are actually businesses which exist for the purposes of laundering money which had been received in the first place through crime.

Bill C-61 deals with the profits of crime, at least to some extent. However, it is like closing the barn door after the horse has been stolen. The only profits that can be easily traced by Bill C-61 are those which are the direct profits from the activities of organized crime.

The Hon. Member for Trinity has outlined some areas of concern. The members of my Party and I agree with her that there is a real need to take a good look at the basis of organized crime and how it operates and grows. We would even suggest that there is possibly a need to expand the inquiry further so that it may look at crimes which may not be so organized, like white-collar crime, corporate crime and crimes against the environment. These crimes should be part of an investigation.

We would support this motion recommending to the Government that it look into and find out a little more about organized crime. It is not as if this has not been done before and its effectiveness is not known. In the area surrounding New York, a considerable amount of time and effort has been spent over the last few years looking at organized crime in the United States. This has not had the result of wiping it out, but it has forced the people involved in organized crime to back off from certain industries which have laundered their money and from certain kinds of crime which are more easily traced.

I found very interesting an article on organized crime which appeared in The Toronto Star. The article provided a résumé of the kind of things organized crime has got involved in. That makes me recognize that there is much more to it than appears on the surface. Therefore, the kind of investigation suggested by the Hon. Member for Trinity is appropriate and should be allowed to go ahead and be supported by the Government.

The article suggests that tactical crimes such as assault, blackmail, bombing, bribery, coercion, extortion, monopoly, murder and weapons are common tools of the trade of organized crime. The article suggests that organized crime even operates businesses which are available to the public in general but are in themselves illegal. As an innocent from the West, I suppose I was very surprised to learn that one can find someone to burn down one's neighbour's house or one's own house, I suppose. This business exists.

I suppose the illegal business that we most often associate with organized crime is the drug trade. However, things like insurance fraud, the pornography which we have been discussing in the House, prostitution, smuggling and income tax violations are other areas in which organized crime takes an active role. These things have almost become part of the structure of our society.

The other areas in which organized crime is involved listed in this article include bankruptcy, alcohol, bookmaking, cards and dice, loan sharking and counterfeiting of bonds and jewellery. However, the most interesting third of the article deals with certain legitimate businesses which, because of their structure, provide prime methods of laundering money. We know something about this structure, but we do not know how it operates well enough to take action against it. Consequently, sectors like construction, entertainment and insurance are involved.

The insurance business seems like a very legitimate business upon which we all depend. We do not realize, however, that it is also the kind of business that allows organized crime to show profits which, if investigated thoroughly, would be shown to be laundered profits. Hotels, auto sales, video games and vending machines are all methods by which the people involved in organized crime can hide money and then have it appear as the profits of legitimate business.

I recommend that we support this motion and that the Government go ahead with the kind of investigation suggested.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, I would like to make a few comments because later this day we will reach a decision on this proposal.

First I would like to deal with the amendment. I have a great deal of respect for the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) for bringing this motion forward and for much of the good work she does in the House. She mentioned the recently completed commission report which took 18 months to examine a limited range of the affairs of a single individual. It is not abnormal for royal commissions to have time frames of at least 18 months. The royal commission on the economy took three years and cost considerably more than $3 million.

• (1720)

First, I would urge Hon. Members to defeat the amendment which says first the commission should report in six months. We are dealing with an international phenomenon. Organized crime transcends not just provincial boundaries but national boundaries. Much of it originates in other countries. I just do not think there would be any point in approving an amendment that would restrict the commission to reporting in six months. There may be a time frame which is too long, but six months is far too short. It just does not make sense.

The main motion puts individual Members on the horns of a dilemma. Probably no one in this Chamber would fail to agree that we want to do something about organized crime, its reduction and elimination. If we have a common goal, then we have to identify the most effective and efficient means of achieving that goal.

Much of this debate has centred on the belief that increased publicity would be helpful. Indeed, the findings would be helpful, but much of the debate has centred on publicity. What we are really saying is that we are to make a priority expenditure decision to appoint a royal commission which would be, if not the most effective way, certainly a very effective way of helping to get to the root causes of the problem and find some solutions. I am not sure that that is as defensible as it might sound at first blush.

We talk about costs in dollar terms. Although I think taxpayers would like to be spared the burden of dollar costs wherever possible, the more significant reality is that we have been through a very lengthy period of what charitably could be called benign neglect of the criminal law, not to mention other laws. For the last three years this Parliament has been perhaps the most productive in our history in the sense of changing laws. The reason for that is simply that so many things were neglected for so long. With support from all corners of the House, not on every occasion but on many, we have been changing the criminal law in substantial ways. We have dealt with legislation to confiscate the proceeds of crime. We passed changes to the Immigration Act, currently in the other place, which provide a better sense of security for Canadians because of its deterrence and detention provisions. Today we spent hours debating Bill C-54, dealing with problems of abuse of women and children. In other words, what we found in September, 1984, was a shared concern for the reduction of crime.

Yet we have been discovering in bits and pieces, from committee to committee, subject matter to subject matter, that we do not have the statutory provisions or tools in place which will allow our enforcement agencies to investigate and go to court, obtain convictions, and have sentences handed down.

We have involved people in the criminal justice system as witnesses before committees, as people who helped draft the legislation in the first instance, for a great many hours in the last three and a half years. We needed their help on occasion after occasion after occasion. To deflect them to a very high profile exercise which would eat up their time is the real cost. I suggest we have been on probably the most sensible course up to this point and we should continue it for the life of this Parliament, which may be as short as six months or as long as a year and a half.

We should complete the work we have started, and then I suggest we might want those changes in place for a year or two before we could get maximum benefit out of a commission or some other form of inquiry. Statutes have to be put in place, you have to have experience with them and see if indeed they are helping with the problem or not before you move too quickly to change them. I am afraid that if we were to appoint a commission today it would be dealing with history rather than the emerging reality of the new tools and new methods which the House is voting for.

I would like to make one other comment. There seems to be an acceptance in the debate of the notion that a commission of inquiry would benefit society the most from being public. I have sat here and tried to visualize if people from foreign Governments involved in the fight against crime would come before a television camera in a public inquiry and share their experience with the commissioner. Would those inside the world of crime behave in like fashion? Would they feel comfortable, or would they be worried about their own lives or the lives of their families? I suggest they would not feel comfortable.

We are dealing with a very dangerous area for the people who wish to help us. Much of the help they would be willing to provide would be better provided in secret. Therefore, as an individual, I urge the House to be very careful about suggesting that the best way for Canada to reduce organized crime would be through the method of a very high profile public commission with television cameras and so on. There are better ways, perhaps less costly and more effective, and therefore it is my intention to vote against the motion.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Madam Speaker, it is with a great deal of pleasure that I take this opportunity to speak on the motion of the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), whom I respect very highly. She has done an awful lot of good work in this House. She is a thinking and conscientious Member who does not bring motions like this frivolously. This is a very important motion. As the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) said on March 12, we knew she was an expert in financial matters but now we realize the insight she brings to criminal matters and the concerns of the country in this regard.

It would be wrong for the Government to deal with this motion lightly. We have an opportunity here to correct an awful lot of ills. We have just received the report of the Stevens inquiry at a cost of approximately $3 million. It was an important inquiry.

• (1730)

There is another inquiry going on in my constituency, the Marshall inquiry, looking into the reasons that Donald Marshall spent 11 years in prison for a crime he did not commit. These are important matters which need to be brought before the public. These are two incidents in which the Government believed that the public had the right to know how crime is dealt with and whether the proper penalties are assessed to people accused of crimes.

What better reason for a royal commission on crime than to inform the public of what is going on? Is the Government saying that what the public does not know will not hurt them? Organized crime costs the country billions of dollars in lost revenues and in other ways every year. For example, we do not know how money is being laundered through financial institutions, yet we know that it must be done for organized crime to succeed.

As the Member for Trinity says, it is not only a question of crime but a question of how our business and political institutions are involved in this social cancer. How are clients of financial institutions dealt with with regard to computer crime? I never hear of any cases of computer crime in financial institutions being brought before the courts. Is it happening? Is it not happening? If it is happening, is it being passed along to consumers as an additional cost?

These questions must be answered. The public has a right to know. Surely the Government did not mean for organized crime to be a means of foreign investment in the country. If the Government is honestly concerned about this problem, as are Canadians, it will appoint a royal commission on this very important issue.

As the Member for Trinity has stated, there are certain objections. One is that it would cost too much. I believe that the Government would recover more than tenfold what such an inquiry would cost through revenues it would be able to collect.

I agree with the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Hawkes) that the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) may not be in the best interests of such an undertaking. Six months is a very short period of time. We need a detailed study. We do not want to embark on something which will not provide the answers we need. We, on this side, can be constructive if the Government is prepared to appoint this royal commission.

I believe that we must pursue this. We cannot allow this to go unanswered. What about the victims? We think about the crime and about financial institutions. Let us also think about the victims of teenage prostitution, which is being quarter-backed largely by organized crime. Let us think about the young people who become involved in drugs. What does it do to them? We see a successful case now and then of a young person who has been rehabilitated. However, everyone in the House knows that for each one who is rehabilitated there are many who are not fully rehabilitated. They may be able to hold jobs in society, but there are scars from their experiences. Many will never be able to take their rightful place in society.

If we believe that one of our principal roles is to give each person in this country the best opportunity to live lives that are as full and rich as possible, are we not turning our back on that commitment if we turn our back on the problems of drugs and prostitution as they affect our young people?

I hope that the Government will not deal with this in a frivolous way. We can say that the police are doing all they can. No one is blaming the police. The day of the underworld figure in a long trench coat carrying a violin case is gone. These criminals are using sophisticated means. It is a business for them. They are becoming increasingly more difficult to catch. We must pinpoint the problems the police are having.

One of the main concerns of the police is that the public does not realize the problems that exist. How can the public realize the extent of a problem if we do not make them aware of it? We cannot always give the public good news. Sometimes we have to point out the problems which exist.

There must be the political will to deal with this very serious problem which permeates our whole society. This is no time for trite excuses for why this royal commission cannot be put in place. The public deserves to have this question investigated. The public deserves answers. Our young people deserve answers. We are constantly putting this problem off but it is getting more serious all the time.

I ask the Government to form a royal commission as requested by the Member for Trinity. This is an important resolution which will become more important for the country as time passes. If we let it go, the problem may become almost impossible to deal with. If we do not do this, we will send a message to organized crime that the Government is turning away and will give them a free rein. We cannot leave this to the police alone. They need our help. The country deserves to be informed. I ask the Government to approve the establishment of royal commission.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I would like to speak in support of the motion before the House which is in part as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of appointing a Royal Commission to investigate organized crime in Canada—

This motion deserves the support of all sides of this House. We can debate whether the commission needs longer than six months to carry out its investigation, but the usefulness of having a royal commission to investigate organized crime in Canada is something which we should all support. I and, I believe, most Canadians are mere innocents with regard to organized crime. The movie released a few years ago, The Godfather, was a portrayal of organized crime in a rather flattering way. That was an American film set in an American context.

I think most Canadians consider organized crime to be something that happens south of the border in the big American cities. We have no appreciation of it being among us. I think that if you asked people in Winnipeg, from where I come, whether there was organized crime in their city, most of them would be unaware of it or have no knowledge of it. I believe most Canadians are not aware of what is happening in this whole area. I think that is a dangerous situation which calls for attention.

• (1740)

Let me refer to an article in the Toronto Star issue of March 3, 1984. It dealt with organized crime in this country and made three points that I believe are good arguments for the establishment of a royal commission in order to become more knowledgeable about organized crime and how to deal with it.

First, the article states that profits from organized crime in Canada are estimated to be $10 billion. Most of it is earned from drug smuggling, gambling and prostitution. Surely a statement such as that in a major daily newspaper calls for investigation. We require more than newspaper reports to evaluate what needs to be done.

Second, the article states that anyone in Metropolitan Toronto having clothes dry-cleaned, who is shopping on Bloor Street or buying a pizza could be contributing to the underworld coffers. Customers may not realize it, but some of the businesses they patronize have mob connections.

If this article is accurate, as interviews with police who investigate these matters would indicate, ordinary Canadians who buy goods and services may be supporting organized crime. Surely there should be a formal investigation because I am sure every Canadian does not want to be used by organized crime to make its profits.

Finally, the article states: "The number of killings, robberies and scams linked to organized crime in the last decade is staggering".

Not only must we recognize that organized crime is a large industry in this country which is corrupting our society, and that we can unknowingly be used by this industry for its profits, it involves murder not only of those connected to organized crime but also of innocent victims. This article documents some of those innocent victims as well.

It is time for us to remove our rose-coloured glasses and take seriously some of the press reports that indicate the size of the criminal sector in Canada.

I am sure that every Canadian would support the objective of investigating organized crime in order to do away with it or at least control it. The Government should not only act on what is on the front page of The Globe and Mail each day or respond to what is dealt with by The Journal each night, it should respond to other serious problems that arise and need investigation and attention.

The motion of the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) states that the Government should consider the advisability of appointing a royal commission to investigate organized crime in Canada. I think it is time that we had a thorough investigation of organized crime. I am confident every Canadian would want us to do everything within our powers in order to reduce and eliminate organized crime in this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on the amendment standing in the name of the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the amendment please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the Members.

• (1810)

And the division bells having rung:

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In keeping with our practice this session when dealing with recorded divisions in relation to Private Members' Business, and after having discussed this matter with my colleagues in the other Parties, I think you will find that there is unanimous consent to proceed with the taking of the vote by rows.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House in agreement with the division being taken by rows?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. At this point I should like to remind Hon. Members that the voting will begin with those Members in favour of the motion in the rows to my right, and I ask them to rise row by row. Those Members in the rows to my left will then rise. Later, I will ask those Members who are opposed to the motion in the rows to my right to rise. Finally, those Members who are opposed to the motion will rise in the rows to my left.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Kaplan), which was negatived on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think you would find a disposition among all Members to apply the results of that vote just taken to the vote on the main motion, and that the vote be recorded as taken.

Mr. McCurdy: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want my vote recorded in the affirmative on the main motion.

Miss Carney: Madam Speaker, I would like to vote in the negative on the motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is so ordered.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CUSTOMS TARIFF

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Friday, December 4, consideration of Bill C-87, an Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters and to amend or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (without amendments) from a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 13(5), the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred division at the report stage of Bill C-87, an Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters and to amend or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof.

Shall I dispense with the ringing of the bells?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I presume the predisposition is to use the normal course of voting on government legislation which would be different from that which we have just used for Private Members' Hour. I think there is also a predisposition to dispense with each of the amended motions.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I do not agree with that at all. We would like to vote on the amendments and, if the House so decides, we may apply the results of the vote taken in a few minutes to the others, but before we do so, we would like to proceed with the vote on the first amendment as deferred.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The first vote will be on Motion No. 1.

Mr. Cassidy moved:

Motion No. 1.

That Bill C-87, be amended in Clause 15 by adding, immediately after line 26 at page 4, the following:

"(3) Notwithstanding any regulation made under subsection (2), goods wholly or partly produced in Mexico shall not be deemed to originate in the United States."

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of order, Madam Speaker. I think you will find there is unanimous consent to apply the results of the vote just taken to the remaining amendments, and reverse the results for the motion to concur in the Bill at report stage.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I agree with what the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) says, except that the Official Opposition would like to concur with the Government in the Bill.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre) moved:

Motion No. 2.

That Bill C-87, be amended in Clause 19 by striking out lines 43 and 44 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"other Act of Parliament.

(3) The rates of customs duty set out in Schedule I and section 46 and the customs duties imposed by this Act are further subject to such increases, reductions, removals or other exceptions as may be specified in any regulation or order made under this or any other Act of Parliament, provided that no such regulation or order shall have effect for more than sixty days unless it is adopted by resolution of both Houses of Parliament."

COMMUNICATIONS AND CULTURE

PRESENTATION OF TENTH AND ELEVENTH REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present the tenth report of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, in both official languages. The report is entitled "Accomodation Requirements of the National Archives of Canada". Our study and recommendations stem from the committee resolution adopted on June 19, 1987. Pursuant to Standing Order 99(2), the committee requests that the Government table a response to this report.

[English]

Our major findings are as follows. First, the Archives is short of space to store its archival holdings and government records. Second, the space now available for storage, laboratories, and offices is spread over 14 different buildings in the National Capital Region. The third and most important finding, in the committee's opinion, is that the available storage space does not meet acceptable, recognized environmental standards for the long-term preservation of our national heritage.

The unacceptable environmental conditions in which archival holdings and government records are kept accelerate the process of deterioration of Canada's archival heritage and, in some cases, have threatened their survival.

We found that 100 per cent of archival holdings, and not only 75 per cent as the National Archivist stated in June, are stored in substandard facilities with insufficient or no environmental controls, and that important records of government Departments and ministerial papers were threatened with serious damage.

[Translation]

In our estimation, the archival heritage, the nation's collective memory, is in danger because our national archival treasures are kept in inadequate accommodation. With a view to preserving them properly and with all the care they deserve, and so as to show future generations that we are concerned over their heritage, it has become imperative that we provide adequate accommodation.

[English]

The committee has considered a variety of options to rectify this unacceptable situation. The committee therefore recommends that priority be given to the construction of a new facility which would meet the accommodation needs of the National Archives of Canada until the year 2010.

Aware of the Government's policy of fiscal restraint, the committee also recommends that the Government consider entering into a lease-purchase agreement with a private sector developer for construction of the new facility.

I have the honour as well to present the eleventh report of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture on the Order in Council appointment of Mrs. M. Elizabeth Burnham as a director of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

[Translation]

The committee considers that this person has the titles, qualities and qualifications to discharge the duties of the position for which she was appointed.

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-64, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, a related Act, the Canada Pension Plan and the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, when the committee reported the Bill, there was an error in one of its amendments in connection with a date. I would like to move a motion which I think will be carried unanimously by the House, perhaps seconded by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

I move:

That Subclause 3(7) of Bill C-64 be amended by striking out line 10 on page 4 and substituting the following:

"1987 and subsequent taxation years."

This is a highly technical amendment, Madam Speaker. It just corrects an error made in committee in recording a year.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On the same point of order, the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson).

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order we were contacted a few minutes ago—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair had just recognized the Hon. Member for Trinity and I will recognize the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) right after. The Hon. Member for Trinity.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Madam Speaker, about 20 minutes ago I received a call from the office of the Minister asking if I would agree to unanimous consent for this amendment to be introduced even though there was no notice.

Because the matter is important, I have said on behalf of my Party that we would give consent to the introduction of the amendment but naturally we would expect fuller discussion of it in the Minister's opening statement.

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, the intervention of my colleague from Trinity (Miss Nicholson) has allowed me to have a word with the chairman of the committee. I understand the proposal increases rather than reduces tax revenues. It is a technical amendment and it does not nullify changes which, as I recall, were made to the Bill by the Hon. Member for York—Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan). I was concerned that the proposal might be an attempt to have unanimous consent for the House to undo what my colleague, the Hon. Member for York—Scarborough, had succeeded in doing in committee. I am assured that this is not the case, and under those conditions we will allow the amendment to come forward with unanimous consent. I understand it will still have to be considered in the House, but it can be brought forward with unanimous consent, which we offer.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, to clear up some misunderstanding here in my own mind, there is an amendment at concurrence stage. There could be debate. We are not at this time expecting debate but that the Minister will incorporate in his remarks at third reading why the change and why the amendment. If that is the understanding, we accept that concurrence be given at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready to accept the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): On division.

Motion (Mr. Blenkarn) agreed to.

Hon. Tom Hockin (for Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-64, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, a related Act, the Canada Pension Plan and the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, as amended, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When shall the Bill be read a third time, by leave now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hockin (for Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

He said: Madam Speaker, I am very happy to give the explanation requested by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson).

Having regard to the amendment to subclause 3(7), we were faced with a need for some grandfathering of shorter debt instruments than was accommodated originally. Subclause 3(7) provides the effective date for the extension of the grandfathering from the interest accruals for debt instruments acquired before 1982. The motion changes this effective date from, as it read, 1990 and subsequent tax years to 1987 and subsequent taxation years. This change ensures that the additional grandfathering will benefit debt instruments having a term of less than 10 years as well as those having a term of 10 or more years. It is a technical change. I think all Members of the House will want to accomplish this grandfathering so I will not speak any further on the motion.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Madam Speaker, on a point of clarification now that we have passed the motion, is the Minister proposing to open third reading debate or are you prepared to recognize other speakers? I am not sure what is happening, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Hockin: Madam Speaker, in the interests of time and the importance of this, I will forego my opportunity to speak at the beginning of third reading.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Madam Speaker, the Bill before us is a major tax Bill. the government has handled it in a very unusual fashion or, shall we say, attempted to. On June 30 there was an attempt to get agreement between the Parties to deal with all stages of this Bill in one day. That was totally unprecedented approach to a major tax Bill. The Official Opposition took the view that a major tax Bill of this kind should be referred to a standing committee where witnesses could be heard and the Bill receive the normal examination. The Government acceded to that and also agreed to refer it to the finance committee, whereas the plan had been to send the Bill to a legislative committee after the negotiations to get it passed at all stages in one day failed. The next was to send it to a legislative committee.

With the new rules in the House, it has often been the case that Bills should go to a legislative committee which would deal with them promptly. However, the underpinning for that was that the standing committee would have done a pre-study of all the major issues and heard witnesses.

• (1120)

As I said, following the objections the Government did agree to send the Bill to the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. At the finance committee I had a long list of witnesses and the Chairman then made the proposal that, since we would be hearing from many of these witnesses on the White Paper on tax reform in any case, rather than bring the witnesses twice, we might deal with the White Paper first and then return to Bill C-64. That suggestion was accepted.

In that event, we examined this Bill for two days without witnesses other than departmental officials, but we had by that time received the benefit of many witnesses on closely related issues.

Bill C-64 is a mixture of income tax measures from budgetary papers, technical notes and press releases dating back to the February 18, 1987 Budget. Clause 10 acts as the fulfilment of a government election promise to increase the status of two key cities.

The Bill has proposed a change to the investment accrual rules which would allow the owners of 1981 Canada Savings Bonds to defer reporting their interest income until the bonds have actually matured. People who bought bonds on a different basis prior to 1981 would otherwise have been forced to pay tax on their interest before they had any cash in their hands.

This clause in the Bill received a good deal of discussion in committee because, although the Government was moving to remove an inequity from holders of Canada Savings Bonds, the holders of Quebec Savings Bonds were not being covered by this and an amendment put by the committee dealt with that.

There are several very complicated problems in relation to retirement compensation arrangements. A number of the Bill's clauses were meant to remove the tax benefits of off-side pension plans. The committee found it necessary to do a good deal of questioning on who was covered and who would stand to gain. It really seems as though the main group to be excluded were deputy ministers. Some questions were raised about special treatment of people by people who were designing that same plan. This is an issue that still warrants further attention. Presumably, when we return to deal with the pension Bill we can look further at it.

To revert back, in June the Government was all for rushing this legislation through and I would point out that at the committee stage the Government, not individual members of the committee, introduced about 69 amendments designed to clarify matters or to remove inconsistencies between this Bill and other legislation. In other words, last June the Government was not ready with this legislation. It had not done its drafting properly. It had not done its homework properly. If we had agreed to pass the Bill through in the stage it was in then, indeed the Government would now be coming back with amendments. As it is, 69 of the amendments were brought by the Government itself to committee.

Two of these Government amendments applied to Clause 15 and dealt with the Saskatchewan Pension Plan in particular. These are technical amendments and I will not take the time of the House to go into them. However, I will say that they were necessary because of numerous government oversights in the original drafting of the legislation. That is yet another example of why this Bill should not have been rushed.

Clause 18 also posed some difficulties for the committee. It was meant to deal with successor corporations in the resource sector. The effect of the clause was to prevent companies from renouncing their flow-through rights up to parents, and parent holding companies to further renounce them and then be able to issue shares on an exchange basis. There was some suggestion that it was not within the scope of the committee to deal with this amendment but, in fact, an amendment was passed in committee.

There were further changes to Clause 38 concerning the ways in which an individual can generate a taxable benefit from an employee stock option. The clause was passed on division and it remains an issue to which we might want to return.

Clause 66 deals with the question of source deductions. This has been quite a contentious issue. The Government, in an effort to improve its cash flow problems, has twice increased the rates at which employers remit the compulsory deductions for income tax, for Canada Pension Plan and for unemployment insurance. Originally we saw the requirement to remit these being moved up from monthly to fortnightly. More recently they have been moved up to weekly.

This is a nice bit of smoke and mirrors. It makes the government books look better by over $1 billion in each of two successive years. However, it is not a real answer to the question of the deficit or to the question of reducing expenditures. It is causing problems for employers. It is an additional expense in their payroll operations.

Moreover, in this Bill, we now find that the Government also has plans to garnishee employers who do not meet with this requirement to remit promptly. There was a considerable amount of discussion of this clause in committee. The Crown gets a super priority over all other creditors in the case of unremitted source deductions. Correspondence was received by most Members from the Canadian Insolvency Association and the Canadian Bankers' Association which took exception to this super priority. However, at committee, officials took the line that the Crown was not looking for a super priority over other creditors except in the case of unremitted deductions. Therefore, money which did not belong to the employer, money which in effect belonged to the employee, should have been remitted. While I do not think that members of the committee were entirely satisfied that the clause was drafted tightly enough to exclude abuse, that clause was also passed.

There are a number of other areas addressed by this Bill. Regarding co-operative corporations, the classification of co-operatives eligible for meeting the 90 per cent co-op membership and share ownership rule has been broadened to include farm corporations and partnerships. Co-ops have been given increased flexibility in paying dividends to their Members.

The Bill has also taken some steps to prevent double taxation in the operation of Canada's tax treaties.

The Bill allows interest owing on late or deficient tax installments to be calculated using an interest offset method. This lets taxpayers eliminate interest charged on a deficient tax installment by prepaying or overpaying other instalments. The administrative burden of master trusts has been lessened by easing some tax rules. In addition, master trusts may use the three-for-one small business investment provision. When that provision was introduced in this House, I think many of us had reservations about it, and those reservations continue. The rules allow pension funds three dollars of additional investment in foreign property for every dollar invested in small business in Canada. The program is not moving very fast and probably for good reasons.

Then there were several proposals in Bill C-64 concerning RRSPs and registered pension loans. The foreign holding property rules are changed so they are not subject to penalty because of corporate transactions they are unable to influence. The Bill also provides for the prorating of resource deductions when a corporation has a tax year of less than 12 months. This step was taken because some companies, due to takeovers, mergers or start-up dates, found themselves in unusual situations with a short tax year.

The Bill introduces a number of measures to reduce tax avoidance. Rules for the federal sales tax are tightened so that only one person may use credit for a particular dependant. It is very interesting that at the same time the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) criticizes the federal sales tax, calls it a silent killer of jobs and says he intends to remove it and reform it and move to some form of consumption tax, we are seeing increased reliance on the federal sales tax.

There are a number of amendments in this Bill which will prevent companies from getting preferential capital gains tax treatment by distributing profits as a capital gain rather than a dividend. There are also some changes relating to venture capital corporations, and stricter measures concerning the forgiveness of employee debt in order to ensure that the full face value of what is owing is taxed. The rules concerning treatment of income interest in a trust are tightened to restrict such deductions to testamentary and certain commercial trusts. Scholarships, fellowships and sales achievement prizes are still subject to tax, although something called "widely recognized prizes for meritorious behaviour" are given a tax exemption.

I think this is probably a matter that should be studied further and would have been had there been the normal climate of calm, reasonable examination of an important tax Bill. What we saw was not such a normal climate. We saw something that we have not seen since reform of committees. We saw the membership of committees changed. We saw additional committee sessions being planned without consultation with opposition Members because the Government was so desperate to pass one particular clause, Clause 10. That clause sets up the international banking centres. This one clause in a major tax Bill became the Government's be-all and end-all and seriously interfered with the normal calm, reasonable scrutiny of a major tax Bill.

I would like to talk now a little bit about the history of international banking centres. In the 1970s New York banks feared that they were being closed out from the Eurocurrency market. They had a number of reasons for their concern. First there was their lack of familiarity with the market, the competitiveness. Second, they felt that in New York City they were limited by the very high city taxes, the very high state taxes, and certain regulatory requirements of the Federal Reserve. So the New York banks at that time thought that the establishment of international banking centres would help them compete in Europe. It was the bankers who began the movement for international banking centres in the U.S. That was not the case in Canada. Canada did not have to feel closed out for the same reasons as the U.S. In fact, our banks are really quite competitive in international markets.

As part of the effort to persuade New York City and the State of New York to reduce their taxes, and as part of the effort to get the federal banking regulations changed, those banks in New York City started a very impressive public relations campaign. All kinds of estimates were floated about the number of jobs that would be created and the economic benefits that would accrue. Last year a banker told me about his experience at the time this effort was at its height. He was asked to go on a television program describing the advantages that an IBC would bring to New York. He was being coached for his interview by someone from a public relations firm. One of the questions he was told to expect was how many jobs this would create. He said he had no idea and the PR person said the figure that is being used is 150,000. You can use that figure safely, he said. Here is an example of a figure pulled out of the air and people being encouraged to use it.

In actual fact, what the banks really wanted they got because the federal regulations changed, which was their main wish; local taxes were reduced; then the question of the economic activity that was to have followed was just quietly dropped.

The chronology was dealt with rather well in an article by Mr. McKie, a very well-known bank tax expert. I will quote from Mr. McKie's paper in a minute. From my own recollection I know that twice in the last Parliament the Government was requested to approve international banking centres. The request originally came from Montreal and later from Toronto and, I believe, Edmonton. On both occasions the Government studied the proposal and decided that it would result in no significant advantage to Canada but might result in tax loss. Therefore, on both occasions the Government refused to establish an international banking centre.

However, when the present Government came to power, and even before it came to power, it made some promises. In 1984 or 1985 Mr. Louis Rasminsky, the former Governor of the Bank of Canada, was commissioned by the Department of Finance to do yet another study on international banking centres. I will quote from the last paragraph of that report as follows:

> —IBFs are not going to generate the large increase in employment in New York or elsewhere in the United States that some earlier advocated. Suggestions that they would create, directly or indirectly, 5,000 to 6,000 new jobs have turned out to be substantial overestimates. The experience has been that moving even large amounts of Euro-dollar business from the books of one bank office to another involves very little movement of staff.

The final conclusion of the Rasminsky-Lawson report released in 1986 was that there would not be significant benefits to Canada but there was the risk of loss of tax revenue. Nevertheless, IBCs in Montreal and Vancouver are what we have in this Bill before us. Studies were done for the previous Government as well before it declined to go ahead with IBCs. The conclusion of those studies was that the benefits would be marginal and the risk of loss to the treasury quite high.

Another interesting factor is that when the present Government decided to go ahead with international banking centres it did not consult the banks which, incidentally, had never asked for this. The Government did consult with chambers of commerce in a number of cities but these negotiations went on for months before the banks were ever made aware of them. When the banks were made aware of them they pointed out that they could see no great advantage to this proposal.

Unlike the U.S. banks the Canadian banks were not inhibited by banking regulations in their international transactions. Also the Canadian banks were not complaining about income tax or asking for changes at that time. If the Government were serious about bringing new business to Canada it would move in the direction of changing withholding tax.

I would like to refer to evidence which was received by the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs in January, 1987, from the President of the Canadian Bankers' Association. Mr. MacIntosh stated:

> It should be stated at the outset that the chartered banks have never asked for legislation to create international banking centres. However, we have said also that we are prepared to go along with the government's initiative, provided that two basic conditions are met. The first condition is that the implementation of any IBC proposal must not cause banks to be worse off than they are now from a taxation and business operating point of view.
> The second condition—is that market forces should be allowed to determine the location of IBCs.

In the measure before us there is no question of market forces determining the location of IBCs. The IBCs are to be established in Montreal and Vancouver only. No other country in the world has limited the development of banking facilities on the basis of geography in this way.

The session of the committee on January 29 was long and very interesting. It gave some quite interesting history. As far back as 1981 the City of Montreal approached the federal and Quebec Governments to consider an IBC. The federal Department of Finance carried out an internal study which concluded that such centres would be of little benefit to the Canadian economy or any particular region of the country. At the same time, the proposal eventually would lead to a significant erosion of the federal tax base.

As I mentioned, after the change of Government the new Minister of Finance requested Mr. Louis Rasminsky and Mr. Lawson, the former Governor and Senior Deputy Governor of the Bank of Canada, respectively, to re-examine the issue.

During the Rasminsky-Lawson study representatives of the Canadian Banking Association met with them on several occasions. The study was delivered to the Government in May, 1985, but not released until March, 1986.

The study concluded that Canadian efforts to develop an international banking centre would meet intense competition from the existing centres and from other places with potential as great as ours, and that it would be unwise to force the issue by vigorous tax competition. If the view is taken that rich priorities should be given to increasing Canada's role in international financial affairs, it was their opinion that the way to pursue that goal is to take care that the tax arrangements in Canada are no less favourable than they are in the major international banking centres and that foreign banks in Canada are given as much flexibility for their international operations as they are given in those centres.

Following on that point, many observers have suggested that if Canada really wants to increase the activity of our banks in foreign affairs and if some of the business now done in the Caymans and such places is to be brought back to Canada, the real answer is to make some changes in the withholding tax. There is no mention of that in this measure before us. It is a very simple, limited measure that will give a tax break to Canadian banks in respect of deposits from or loans to foreign customers, transacted in an international banking centre. It is a measure that excludes most of the paper, where the real activity is at the present time. In fact, it is a boondoggle, not any kind of enhancement of the roles of those two cities.

The measure before us will not enhance the role of our banks in international banking. If the Government really wanted to bring back offshore business, it would negotiate the bilateral tax treaties providing for exemption from source country taxation on commercial loan interest payments flowing between the two contracting states.

Let me quote from the expert I mentioned before, Mr. McKie. In a recent interesting article on European taxation, he also gives the history of IBC's. Let me quote a little of the history to point out how different the situation in New York was before the establishment of international banking facilities there, and our present situation. Mr. McKie refers to the efforts of New York state bankers between 1978 and 1981 to obtain legislative authority for the creation of a free banking zone in the state so they could compete with the so-called cubicle banks abroad. He said:

> Under the proposal, banks would be allowed to establish special facilities in New York to conduct foreign transactions without paying state franchise taxes or being subject to federal reserve rules or deposit interest ceilings.

I would emphasize that those were the key changes that the American banks wanted at that time, but the proponents were not seeking any federal income tax concessions. Somehow, with this strange measure before us, we find federal income tax concessions being offered to banks who do not want them, and never asked for them, as an encouragement to do a very limited amount of business which is very finite, while there is no incentive here to do the really profitable business.

I return to Mr. MacKay's account of what happened in New York:

> Persuaded that these international banking facilities would generate jobs and spillover benefits, even the state's tax commissioner became an advocate of the proposal. The inevitable outcome was that in December 1981 appropriate legislation was enacted, bringing IBF's into existence, not only in New York but in many other states as well. Foreign banks, including Canadian banks, created IBF's in the U.S. The development and growth of U.S. IBF's is interesting, but it is generally agreed that the great expectations of the advocates have not been realized.
> That, however, is another story which seemingly escaped the notice of the Canadians who were enthusiastically advocating international banking entities in Canada using all the U.S. hyperbole that so soon proved to be illusory.

Mr. McKie goes on to discuss various meetings in 1981 and so on. The banks continued to be less than enthusiastic about the IBC proposals. The requests for IBC were coming from chambers of commerce and others. People who had heard all the New York estimates of job creation naturally wanted this good thing for their communities.

According to Mr. McKie, as far back as 1983, the banks explained that:

> —unlike the U.S. banks, they were not inhibited by banking regulations in their international transactions, and that freedom from Canadian income tax on an IBC's profits would not be any great incentive when the major hurdles to handling international operations from a Canadian permanent establishment were Canada's foreign tax credit procedure and the gross withholding taxes imposed by foreign countries on loan interest flowing into Canada.

That was the position which the Finance and Economic Affairs Committee took. The finance committee examined the whole issue of international banking centres. We went to New York, where we had extensive consultations with bankers, with people in various commercial institutions, and with the New York tax authorities. The finance committee's unanimous report was that this measure before us, which gives federal income tax concessions to banks, which either in Vancouver or Montreal make loans to or take deposits from foreign customers, is unlikely to do very much to bring back offshore banking business to Canada or unlikely to do anything to enhance economic activity in those two cities.

Montreal and Vancouver have very interesting geographical positions; Montreal in relation to Europe, Vancouver in relation to the Pacific Rim countries. They are both cities with high rates of unemployment. I am sure that every Member in the House would support the Government's desire to help those cities revitalize their economies and create jobs. This measure will not do it. This is a boondoggle which has been sold to people in Montreal and Vancouver as a job creator, which it is not. The Government has set city against city, region against region, for no reason whatsoever.

There is a long list of people who advised the Government that this measure would not do anything constructive, but did advise the Government on ways to bring international banking business to Canada if it wanted to do so. All this advice has been ignored.

It is understandable that municipal associations and boards of trade want more economic action in their cities. What is not understandable is that the Government is selling and misrepresenting the program which will result in tax leakage without any compensating benefit.

• (1200)

Among the inconsistencies in the Government's position, we have recently had a White Paper on Tax Reform which proposes to reduce corporate taxes by broadening the base. Base broadening is being done by eliminating or reducing tax expenditures. Yet with this IBC measure the Government is introducing new tax expenditures, and it has failed to provide us with costs or even forecast the costs. No one knows what the benefits, if any, will be. The Government has been unable to produce evidence of benefits. This is a wide open program; it is demand driven. We have no idea what we are getting into. It affects banks, but the banks do not want it and have not asked for it.

During the whole year that this matter has been before us, the Department of Finance has failed to come up with any benefit cost analysis. We do not know how much these international banking centres will be used; perhaps they will not be used at all. It may be that the banks will continue to do what the Government says that all businesses should do, which is make their business decisions on a business basis, not on the basis of tax incentives.

Interestingly, quite some time ago one of the Ministers announced an IBC in Vancouver as part of a regional development plan. If any economic impact studies were done, they were never made available to Members. Someone described the international banking centre proposal in Clause 10 as the "bankers' relief act". Indeed, the banks do stand to gain a lot from such an open-ended measure, if they use it creatively.

In fairness to the banks, I should say that they have never asked for the legislation. But up to now the evidence has always been that when the Government designs an open-ended demand-driven tax incentive, the tax lawyers and the tax accountants are much more ingenious than the Government at finding ways to get maximum use out of it.

What do we know about IBCs and job creation? The banks say that they might create 25 jobs. The Department of Finance say that they might create 11 jobs. What do we know about costs? The Department of Finance estimated the cost to the Treasury at $100,000 maximum. Nevertheless, it became very worried at the thought of our putting a cap on it. In committee, amendments to hold the cost to the treasury to $100,000 were met with great panic. An amendment that would hold the cost to several million dollars was met with similar panic. Obviously, the Government does not know what are the costs. In New York State they suspect, but they had not completed a full audit when I talked to them, that there had been a leakage in the amount of $200 million.

Let me repeat the three essential points about the international banking centres. They are being sold as a benefit to Montreal and Vancouver, and there is no proof that there will be any benefit whatever. Montreal and Vancouver, with high unemployment rates, could certainly benefit from government assistance, but why not do it in a logical fashion with export development assistance, or in other ways. This is a sham. There is no cap on the program, there is no assessment, and we have no idea of what are the costs. There is no guarantee that it will not run out of control. The Government has badly mismanaged this whole affair. The IBCs have been introduced as a regional development measure. They are not. It is a boondoggle, but it is not regional development.

How does the legislation fit with the Government's Canada-U.S. trade agreement? We are told the financial institutions will be wide open; there will be full reciprocity. How can the Government justify that position with a measure that is attempting to introduce banks to doing certain types of business in one city or another? It cannot. The Government keeps prattling to us about the importance of market forces. Yet the Government attempts to get banks to do certain types of business in two cities only. There is no other country in the western world which has produced this type of geographical limit.

We will watch with great interest. If I am wrong and this measure does bring prosperity to Montreal and Vancouver, nobody will be happier than I. But the onus is on the Government to produce some facts, and up to now it has totally failed to do so.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Madam Speaker, I would like to participate in the debate on Bill C-64. I must say that I am a bit surprised at the Minister. Bill C-64 is largely a technical Bill, but it also includes some measures on which the Government has been priding itself. In fact, the other day in Montreal the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had a great deal to say on Clause 10 which provides for the international banking centres.

[Translation]

According to the Prime Minister, international banking centres would bring prosperity to Montreal. The plan would benefit everyone in Montreal. It would absorb unemployment which is still at 11 per cent in the Montreal area, and so forth. I wonder why the Minister of State (Finance) failed to mention the advantages of this Bill and why he apparently instructed his Conservative colleagues to refrain from taking part in this debate and defending a measure that would not be effective, would be very expensive, would not provide any benefits in terms of jobs and which, I repeat, legitimizes the efforts of our Canadian chartered banks to avoid paying taxes to the Canadian Treasury.

[English]

The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) might have been more forthcoming, given the proud boasts of the Prime Minister that this single measure will bring prosperity and banking jobs back to Montreal. I am sure he probably said that thousands upon thousands of banking jobs would be moved, despite all the evidence to the contrary.

First, I wish to comment on some more general provisions related to Bill C-64. It is an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Canada Pension Plan, and the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971. It is the annual hodgepodge or grab bag of different measures that have to come forward in order to stop tax avoidance and to put into force a number of technical measures announced at the time of the Budget in February, 1986.

One of the things that I feel strongly about now, in terms of the Department of Finance playing fair with people in the tax field, is that there should be a better means of handling legislation that relates to tax avoidance, which may well be necessary—it often is—than ministry press releases which may or may not be adequately reported across the country, in many cases followed some months later by legislation.

Where these measures are taken, and often there is no choice but to move very quickly, they should be gazetted, tabled in the House of Commons, or there should be some other means to officially notify those taxpayers who may be affected.

I do not wish to defend those particular taxpayers. Many of them are wolves, sucking the Canadian taxpayer and the Treasury dry with all types of elaborate schemes which, although legal, are certainly designed to take money out of the pockets of average Canadians and put them into the pockets of well advised rich Canadians.

I must say as well that there are a number of sections in the Bill which at least deserve some attention. The Bill perpetuates the refundable sales tax credit at a level which is fairly inadequate. It is meant to compensate people for what they spend in terms of sales tax if they are very poor, but the amount of credit is reduced by five cents for each dollar of family income in excess of $15,000. Therefore the effect of that is that by the time the family gets just above the poverty level it gets no more refundable sales tax credit at all. In fact, I believe the present level is $50 per adult and $25 for each child. If we reduce that by five cents for each dollar of family income, this means that by the time a family reaches an income of $16,000, which is far below the poverty line, there is no sales tax credit.

We all know that the sales tax is a regressive tax. We know that it bears more heavily on people who have to spend all their income on consumption than on people who are able to save part of their money because they are well off. Nonetheless, the sales tax credit remains inadequate.

The Government is also continuing the 3 per cent surtax which came into force in the 1986 Budget. That particular surtax of 3 per cent a year applied to all taxpayers and, as a consequence, it had the impact of being a tax increase of $104 per year for an individual earning $30,000 per year, a tax increase of $177 per year for a $40,000 income earner with a wife and two children, and a tax cut of $450 for the same individual if he happened to earn $100,000.

Once again an unfair tax measure is being perpetuated by a Government whose tax policies are unfair and whose tax reform proposals which will come before the House in a few days, will be unfair. It is a Government that does not understand what fairness is all about, which is one of the reasons it stands so low in the opinion polls. It is a matter of shifting the burden from rich to low and middle income Canadians.

The Bill also has a number of other measures which are at least interesting. Clause 57 it provides for advance tax on corporate distributions of corporate surplus. This is an anti-avoidance measure. It interests me that the Government has stated that it is opposed to the advancement of the margin tax which was proposed by the finance committee in its recommendations to the Government and in its report tabled about a month ago, yet, at the same time the Government is not above using a refundable tax on corporate distributions. In other words, it is not the instrument to which it objects. It objects to a tax which would start to collect adequately from the banks that only pay 1 per cent or 2 per cent of their profits in tax right now, because of the inadequate tax policies of the Government and because of the inadequate tax policies of the former Government headed by the Hon. Member from Bay Street, who also happens to represent Vancouver-Point Grey. He and his adversary, who is our adversary as well, the Hon. Member from Cleveland or the Hon. Member for Manicouagan worked together to ensure that Canada's banks pay next to no tax. As the finance committee pointed out, they only pay 1 per cent or 2 per cent of their income in tax. That has been the picture over the last few years.

This year the banks are incurring a loss, but in one year they will be able to offset almost all the hit they are taking at the direction of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions because of bad loans which were made to Third World and developing countries. In fact the banks, in their annual reports, are priding themselves on an exceptionally high level of operating profits, which would have resulted in record profit levels had it not been for the need to accommodate and write off some of the foreign loans that have turned bad.

At the same time Canadian taxpayers will be paying their taxes for 1987, and that means the shipbuilders in Lévis, if they have jobs; the fishermen on Vancouver Island whose jobs are now threatened, or fish processors whose jobs are threatened because fish may be sent in raw form to the United States under the recent GATT ruling; and the farmers in western Canada who can barely survive because of the situation of the agricultural industry. Those taxpayers will be paying tax for 1987 at the same time as the banks are being allowed to have their profits written off against bad debts because of imprudent loans which they made a few years ago.

Of course if those same taxpayers turned around to the bank and asked for consideration because they have had trouble, we know what would happen. We can tell that from the number of forced bankruptcies and forced seizures of farm property by banks in western Canada.

I should like to focus now on the question of banking centres. This is mainly a technical Bill, but the IBCs are in fact a very costly tax break which may be of great benefit to financial institutions in Vancouver and Montreal that make use of it, but will be of little use to the economies of those two cities. Like many other corporate tax preferences, the cost of the measure is unknown. When the Department of Finance, through its Assistant Deputy Minister, came before us we asked for it to justify this IBC measure. Members of the committee from all Parties said, "we have questions about this matter". That was not because my Party is opposed to looking for ways to develop banking and financial business in Montreal or Vancouver. We are not opposed to that. We are looking for ways by which that could be done, but we are questioning this particular measure because it is an open-ended tax measure with questionable benefits in terms of jobs.

We asked the Finance Department how many jobs might be produced, and in the end it came up with an estimate which was equivalent to approximately 11 jobs in Vancouver and Montreal. I see the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) who is looking rather questioningly at me. I think that is to be questioned as well.

The Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) has just come into the House, because he presumably thinks that this might be a good arrangement for his community. When he goes back to his constituents in the 1988 election campaign he should explain to them why the major measure for job creation and economic development in Vancouver, for which he voted, was a measure which gave Vancouver maybe 20 per cent or 25 per cent of 11 jobs through international banking centres. That was all he was able to do for his constituents. At the same time the unemployment rate in Vancouver remains at a level of 10 per cent or 11 per cent, or some such level. It has not come down appreciably to levels that would have been seen to be tolerable in Vancouver and in British Columbia. The Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody should answer that kind of question, because it is the ridiculous kind of thing we are facing, but at what cost?

When the finance committee looked at the particular measure we looked at the tax implications because of what could happen if the banks were to transfer funding into Canada from just their Bahamian branches. We did not touch the business of Canadian banks in other tax havens or other paradis fiscal. It was clear that the excess of Canadian tax that would be paid, over the foreign taxes paid in The Bahamas, amounted to $32 million in 1985 and $20 million in 1984.

The banks may have avoided paying that tax for other reasons, but they incurred a Canadian tax liability through those foreign branches, just in The Bahamas, of $32 million in 1985 and $20 million in 1984. This does not count elsewhere.

We pointed out to the Finance Department that we could see a very natural incentive for the banks to transfer enough business to Montreal and Vancouver that they would in fact be able to extinguish Canadian tax liability on the business which now takes place in The Bahamas. However, business would still be sought and marketed abroad. Any decision about the business made in Canada now would continue to be made in Canada, but there would not be new jobs created to manage the particular business. It would be mainly just a bookkeeping entry. It was pointed out—and the banks and the Finance Department agreed—that foreign business in The Bahamas does not create any substantial amount of economic activity by those banks in The Bahamas. Their branches are just that. They have a handful of employees. There is no big deal about it and only a portion of that business might be moved back to Canada.

• (1220)

What will be get, Madam Speaker? We will not get any money for Canadian purposes. We will not get any additional liquidity to be used for investments in Chicoutimi or in the Fraser Valley or places like that. By definition the money which is put into banking centres has to be relent abroad. The rules laid down in this Bill are so narrow that the only money which will come into banking centres will be money in sovereign risks, money in the giltest of the gilt edge investments in which there is absolutely no risk at all and in which the margins tend to be extremely limited.

What will the tax loss be? As I say, $32 million is a good estimate. What other estimates are there? We asked the Department of Finance and it was not able to tell us. What we have is a precedent. The Department of Finance was asked to estimate the cost of the scientific research tax credits back about five or six years ago. That program was brought in by the Liberals and perpetuated for a while by the Conservative Government. The department said the cost would be about $200 million, but it wound up being some $2.5 billion to $3 billion in tax expenditures. Most people understand that concept now. Instead of sending a cheque to an individual, a tax expenditure allows that individual to save the equivalent amount through not paying tax that would otherwise be payable. The Finance Department underestimated by a factor of 10 times the loss on the SRTCs. The Department was unable to tell us what the tax loss would be, but we had an estimate of $32 million.

Suppose that $32 million was a correct estimate. Suppose we got 11 or maybe 25 jobs, which is what the bankers estimated. You are talking about $1 million to $3 million of lost tax revenue every year in order to create a handful of jobs in Vancouver and Montreal under a banking centre concept which, regrettably, will have no spin-off effect that I can imagine or that anyone else can imagine in those particular communities. If we wanted to create 11 jobs it would be a heck of a lot cheaper to have a budgetary item in the House of Commons dealing with that creation. These are bankers so let us give them a salary of say $50,000 on average a piece, a substantial salary according to most Canadians. That cost would be in the order of $500,000 or $600,000 a year. If my hon. friends from Montreal and Vancouver want to see 12 jobs created in those communities at much less cost to the taxpayer, then let us do that and save most of $32 million a year which will be the cost of creating those jobs according to the proposals that we have from the Government right now.

It has been pointed out that the Canadian Bankers' Association does not want this particular measure. In fact, the bankers have had a bit of a conversion about tax expenditures and tax deals that benefit them. I think they shed crocodile tears because they have benefited from the biggest tax boondoggle this country has seen in its history in basically exempting banks from tax over most of the last decade. Alas, the banks are now saying "Gee, we really have too much with those tax exempt shares and the various other deals that allowed us to avoid tax. We do not want that again. In terms of our public relations, it is not good." This they have begun to recognize after having pocketed huge amounts of taxpayers money.

The bankers' reticence on this measure has not cut any ice at all. The Government has decided to go forward. It has provoked what can only be described as a nasty little fight between the three communities that are mainly affected, Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver and, frankly, as a Canadian who has worked in Montreal, grew up in Toronto and was born in British Columbia, I do not think that that kind of thing is good for national unity.

[Translation]

Many times, in discussions with the banks and chambers of commerce in the three communities in question, I suggested and I said so in committee when witnesses came to testify, that there should be a better distribution of jobs in our economy, specifically in banking and financial services. This is a very important point. If the Governor of the Bank of Canada during the seven years preceding the appointment of John Crow had been doing his job, perhaps the banks would not have abused the system and would not have been allowed to abuse the system the way they did.

Madam Speaker, if we had had a governor and a government worth their salt, they would have insisted on having a better distribution of jobs in the banking sector than is now the case.

[English]

The situation we have right now is that financial jobs have been migrating to Toronto in large numbers. The banks have been moving different sections and so on there, even if they have kept a shell of their head office operations in Montreal. Efforts to establish regional banks in western Canada have not been particularly effective. Vancouver has also seen financial activity migrate to Toronto.

I would like to see a task force established between the Chamber of Commerce and the municipal authorities in Vancouver. Maybe some Members of Parliament from the banking industry and the Department of Finance could look at ways of developing financial and trade related service activities in Vancouver in a way that will be far more effective than a small proportion of 11 or 12 jobs which is all that this measure proposes to us.

[Translation]

I would like to see a similar exercise for the Montreal area, Madam Speaker, where chambers of commerce, municipal authorities, even Members of Parliament, private citizens, companies involved in world trade and the Government, the Department of Finance, would work together to try and create the climate for the kind of financial service that does not exist at this time.

[English]

I regret with relation to this particular measure the degree to which the Government has, for reasons which I believe are inadequate and unjustified, subverted the parliamentary reform process. Our committee recommended against this measure. Perhaps my colleague would like to ask me about the committee. I think this is a matter which should be laid on the record before the House during this debate on third reading.

We will oppose the Bill for the reasons I have given because we think the Government is wasting taxpayers' money with no discernible benefits. It is unfortunate.

Mr. Baker: Madam Speaker, could the hon. gentleman enlighten the House on the committee?

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, that is a very intelligent and perceptive question. I will be brief because I know other Members want to speak.

The finance committee has been a pioneer in parliamentary reform. Our work on tax reform demonstrates that; for example, our work on credit card interest rates and on the banking centres. We went to New York and prepared a report, which we knew the Government would not like, but it represented the collective judgment and wisdom of the committee. In addition, the committee has shown that you can have a solid group of Members of Parliament from all Parties who can develop the technical competence and expertise to handle extremely difficult legislation. That is why we have insisted, and it has been accepted, that rather than having legislative committees deal with financial legislation the finance committee does.

The other day when Bill C-64 came before the committee, instead of allowing the committee to do what it would have done—because we know what the report had been on this measure—the Government packed the committee. The Government sent in a number of Members whom we had never seen before. They subverted the integrity and the ability of the committee to work together in future under the reform process to get a positive vote on the measure in Clause 10. They got it, but the cost, I suggest, is a very high one.

If the Government were really committed to the parliamentary reform process, it would be prepared, as say the British Government has been prepared to do from time to time in the House of Commons, to accept that the wisdom of the parliamentary committee, which has studied a matter very closely, is greater than the wisdom of a Prime Minister who has made a silly promise, or of one or two officials in the Department of Finance, or of political advisors who have made a particular recommendation which does not wash in the light of close scrutiny. I regret that the committee's advice was ignored and that it was subverted by a bunch of parachutists who came to the committee at the last minute in order to ensure that it voted the way the Government wanted it to do. Perhaps the Hon. Minister would like to justify those actions. He has been notoriously silent on the IBC question during the course of this debate.

• (1230)

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, it is an unfortunate turn of events that the committee has been manipulated to facilitate the Government's policies as opposed to the implementation of the recommendations the committee worked so long and hard to develop.

My question to the Hon. Member deals with his suggestion of a task force that would be made up of the obvious players who are interested in improving the banking and financial facilities in both Montreal and Vancouver. Perhaps my hon. colleague could elaborate on what might be some of the avenues that Montreal and Vancouver could pursue to develop a more comprehensive financial community, particularly recognizing the need for taking steps to initiate an increased trade function as well as a financial function for both these Canadian cities.

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, some of that, of course, will come from those communities if they are consulted. I know from my contacts with members of the new municipal administration in Montreal that they are anxious to develop many new initiatives in order to solidify the position of Montreal as the trading centre for Canada, the centre that can provide services for trade with Latin America, Africa and of course particularly Europe. Perhaps, in the near future, if the summit talks in Washington this week go well, it will increasingly provide services for trade with Warsaw Pact and Soviet Bloc countries in eastern Europe.

It seems to me that we need to work systematically through the services in terms of factoring, financing, export and trading information and market intelligence. I learned the other day that there is a franchise service called the World Trade Centre which is trying to establish itself here in Ottawa. I am afraid it is just a kind of a club where a few people meet from time to time.

When we talk about a world trade and financial centre in Montreal or in Vancouver, it seems to me we should be talking about something much broader than that. I believe that a wide range of interests in Montreal are able to contribute toward developing that as they are in Vancouver as well. I find it ironic that at the time we are entering into this legislation for international banking centres the Government is introducing a trade deal with the American Government which will allow the Royal Bank of Canada centered in Montreal to be 100 per cent American owned. It will allow—

[Translation]

This means that the Bank of Montreal would be 100 per cent directed and controlled by American interests. In the past, we insisted that our chartered banks be headed by Canadians and that not more than 25 per cent of Canadian banks should be controlled by foreign interests. Now this is going to change, and it is a strange about-face. How can the Government both insist on creating small international bank centres in Montreal, for instance, and make it possible for chartered banks such as the National Bank to be controlled by American interests as a result of the Free Trade Agreement between the Prime Minister and U.S. President Reagan?

[English]

It is a very curious kind of contradiction, but this Government has been intent on adopting American standards and selling this country to the Americans ever since it came to power in 1984.

Mr. Parry: Madam Speaker, I would like to hear a bit more of the Hon. Member's analysis on the use of the goon squad by the Government in committee. I think this is something worth putting on the record. Perhaps the Hon. Member would go into a little more detail about what happened on the committee.

Does the Hon Member think that the public disputes between members of the Government on a regional basis was simply an opportunity the Government offered its own backbenchers to get themselves some good publicity back in their own ridings where of course it would be their comments and their opinions rather than those of their colleagues which would receive attention?

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, what I noted was the number of members we had never seen who suddenly popped up. For example, I believe that the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher) was substituting for another Member. I also believe that arm-twisting took place.

Members who could not be present but were regular members who participated very actively in the committee were absent, including, for example, the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin). Did he have his arm twisted? Did the Government tell him that he is an up-and-coming Member, there is still hope the Government will stay in power for a bit longer and a Parliamentary Secretaryship or some other glittering prize would be his provided he did not rock the boat on this particular issue? Of course, the Government understood that he had signed the finance committee's report, but perhaps he could make himself absent on that particular day in order for the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East to take part.

Is that what took place? I am not sure what exactly happened because I am not privy to the things that happen on the back-benches of the Government.

The Hon. Member for Beauharnois—Salaberry (Mr. Hudon) has never, in my three years in this House, shown the slightest interest in matters which touch upon the finance committee or on any economic matters at all. I am not permitted to comment on whether or not he is in the House, but I am sure if he is he will pop up to explain his sudden attendance at the committee and his sudden insistence at the time the vote was taken on replacing some other member on the committee.

The Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) popped up as well. I am not sure if she was recently appointed to the committee or not, but she too had not been involved with the committee until it came time to vote on this particular measure. Since she represents many people from the Chamber of Commerce and the banking community in Vancouver who live in her constituency in West and North Vancouver, she hastened to vote the way the Government wanted her to vote. So it went.

I say that that was a shameful day in the life of the Commons finance committee and I say it is shameful that the Government packed the committee in the way it did.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Madam Speaker, I have a few words to say concerning this Bill. I was surprised to hear members of the New Democratic Party talking about the goon squad. I would like to have listened to more of the information the hon. gentleman was imparting. The only goon squad about which I thought he would talk was the goon squad that some people say will exist in a section of the Unemployment Insurance Act which is to be amended by this Bill under which persons are identified as collecting unemployment insurance when they are not supposed to be collecting it.

The title of the Bill is an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, a related Act, the Canada Pension Plan and the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971. This big Bill is supposed to create jobs in Montreal and Vancouver. I think it is supposed to create 26 jobs. No, according to the Deputy Minister for Tax Policy Division, Department of Finance, 11 jobs will be created. That is so, but Mr. MacIntosh, the President of the Canadian Bankers' Association, estimated that some 26 jobs would be created, not 11.

I imagine that more than 26 jobs were required to print this Bill. I suppose the purpose of the Bill is to create 26 jobs. I do not know where the jobs will be. How many jobs will be created in Montreal and how many jobs will be created in Vancouver? I imagine that will be the subject of the next cabinet meeting. Will 15 jobs be created in Montreal and the rest created in Vancouver? Where will the jobs be? According to the Canadian Bankers' Association, there will be 26 jobs, but there will be 11 if we accept the word of the Assistant Deputy Minister and the word of the hon. gentleman who spoke a few moments ago.

One would expect this Bill would deal with the Unemployment Insurance Act and the Canada Pension Plan. It does. It makes more amendments to more sections of the Unemployment Insurance Act than I would have time to mention.

If we are going to amend the section of the Unemployment Insurance Act that deals with eligibility or overpayments to recipients, one must wonder where the priority of the Government is. Those sections of the Act are being amended here today. If you were to say to someone affected by the overpayment section of the Act that it is being amended today in the House of Commons, somebody would say, my goodness, is it being amended so that at least I get a chance to appeal the decision made by the Government on my unemployment insurance? You say no, that is not what is being amended. Well, they say, what is being amended, because that is what it deals with?

If you said to someone else that the section that deals with undue hardship is being amended today in the House of Commons, somebody would say, my goodness, it is being amended today! That section of the Unemployment Insurance Act says that a person will not have to pay monies back to the treasury if it creates undue hardship to that person. Somebody would say, my goodness, that is a very good thing to amend to make it clear at least that the Government would be able to give us more of a break. I mean, we have not seen the Government of Canada use that section for ages, perhaps simply because the Minister or the commission did not want to forgive the debt.

Let us not forget, we have a system in place in Canada today where all of the bureaucrats, all of the managers, all of the fellows receiving big salaries can receive a big Christmas gift now if they cut back more, and collect more money for the Government of Canada.

If you were to say to somebody that section is being amended today in the House of Commons by Bill C-64, somebody would say yes, that is what Members of Parliament should be talking about today in the House of Commons. That is, to give us a break so that perhaps we will not have to pay back as much.

After all, they did not make the mistake under this section that is being amended. The people who made the mistake were the employees of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. The computer made the mistake. It was not their error but they have to pay it back. Well, it is nice that the section is being amended today. Perhaps the Government of Canada is doing what we want it to do, and that is to say, look, this is unfair, you should not have to be the ones who have to pay that back. However, if they do not pay it back, they go to jail. Perhaps somebody would say the Government of Canada is amending that section so they do not have to go to jail. In other words, if they owe money to the Unemployment Insurance Commission, if they owe money to a bank or a loan company, they could quite conceivably end up in jail under our system if the right levers are pulled and if the right things are done. The hon. gentleman who is talking should have a few words to say after me because I imagine he has individual cases as well.

I suppose you will find similar sections of the Canada Pension Plan Act that are being amended. If you said to someone collecting that pension, my goodness, this section or that section is under review and is being amended today in the Parliament of Canada, someone would say, hurrah, because perhaps something useful is being done. Perhaps the Government of Canada has now changed its tune for the first time and is saying those sections are wrong, the law is wrong, it is unfair to those people to say you must do this and you must do that when it is not their fault in the first place that they are in the situation they are in.

That is why I decided to have a few words to say today. Instead of doing these things, the Government of Canada has embarked on another policy. Yes, it will change the Act. It will change a whole whack of sections today. Yet it has nothing to do with benefits to the people of Canada. It is to make sure that the changes the Government of Canada has made as far as increased taxation is concerned are carried through into the various other Acts that relate to it. In other words, to make sure again that the recipient cannot get away with what is already in the Act.

One would question as well the intent of the Government of Canada in this particular Bill to extend the 3 per cent surtax. One would question the intent and purpose of the Bill to create jobs on the principle that has been used many times throughout this country; that is, to have an area of the country set aside in which something would happen because you have set it aside for a particular purpose, either for taxation purposes or trade purposes.

The Bill will accomplish very little as far as what the Government has said it will accomplish. It is very discouraging to see Acts such as the Unemployment Insurance Act amended by the Government in this way when it could be doing so much, and when it is acting in a manner to further penalize the poor in this country and to take whatever it can out of their pockets.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member who has just spoken so eloquently mentioned the 3 per cent surtax. That tax was announced in February, 1986, and made permanent by this Bill. I wonder if the Hon. Member would care to comment on some of the other taxes introduced by the Government.

For example, if you add up the income tax on individuals and sales taxes they find an astonishing $36.8 billion which is expected to flow to the Government. Looking at the effects on a married couple, two wage earners, two children, earning $15,000 a year, their total tax increases add up to $470 in the taxation year 1987. I wonder if the Hon. Member would care to give the House his views on the taxing record of the Government since it has been in office.

Mr. Baker: Madam Speaker, that is an excellent question because it gets to the very heart of the matter of the general direction of the Government. One would have to wonder whether there has been an intentional effort by someone behind the scenes to scuttle the Government of Canada ever since it came to power in 1984. Some of the measures which were introduced to increase the recovery of money from Canadians were absolutely incredible. We recall the measure which was brought in to charge a fee if you telephoned the weather office. That was pure insanity. There was a measure to lay off tour guides in national parks and other such things.

• (1250)

Those measures are ill-advised for anyone trying to run a government sensibly. In order to collect money from the people of Canada a government should not tax popsicles, potato chips, and ice cream bars which young people purchase in the corner store at recess time. That all-important treat for a young child should not be taxed. With all the big banks, financial institutions, and cozy millionaires, the Government need not tax the snack foods of little children, but that is what the Government did.

In response to the Member's question, the over-all impact of the government charges has been to alienate ordinary people. After seeing the Government's sneaky summer snack attack they believe that the Government does not care about them.

The Government of Canada is now considering a tax on groceries. I suppose since they are taxing individual Granola bars which you purchase in the corner store they believe they should tax the large packages of Granola bars which you buy in the grocery store. I suppose that is the rationale. The Government even taxes popcorn. If you want to alienate a whole group of people you put a tax on popcorn, and that is what the Government did.

Therefore, one would suspect that there is someone behind the scenes who is advising the Minister of Finance to impose taxes such as that on little children's snack food which will destroy this Government for all time. It will never get past the next election if it follows such advice. However, that is what the Government of Canada did. I believe that there is someone behind the scenes scheming and conniving to destroy the Government of Canada with tax policies.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point or order. I want to advise the House that Thursday will be an allotted day.

Mr. Parry: Madam Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to speak on Bill C-64, although it is always difficult to follow the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) whom I admire—

Mr. Brisco: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understood that questions and comments were permitted and that there was still time for them. I am not sure whether the Hon. Member is speaking on debate or is speaking on questions or comments.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): There were two minutes remaining for questions and comments. I recognize the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) on a question or comment.

Mr. Parry: Madam Speaker, I had risen on debate and I would be perfectly willing to yield the floor to my hon. friend if he has a question or a comment.

Mr. Brisco: Madam Speaker, I will seek an opportunity to expand upon concerns which I have arising from the contribution to debate of my colleague from Newfoundland. I suspect that he is having a "Mac attack" and not a "snack attack". I believe he is in league with the dentists, some of whom are delighted to see children eat junk food to contribute to their cavities.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Brisco: Well, I am stretching the point not quite as far as my colleague stretched his.

My colleague should consult with the NDP which as a matter of policy some years ago said that all junk food should be taxed out of existence leaving available to young growing children only those foods which have a healthful contribution to the diet.

I would like to asked some technical questions of the Hon. Member. However, other speakers from his Party will probably be making the same kinds of supportive comments in terms of trying to cover the backside of the City of Toronto on behalf of their Leader. Therefore, I will raise my questions later.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The period for questions and comments has now ended. Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Madam Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to speak on Bill C-64 which, as has been remarked upon by other speakers, consists in part of the rearrangement of some tax loopholes, principally those which refer to corporations, and in part to the institution of the notion of international banking centres within Canada.

There are numerous other amendments of a consequential and a detailed nature. I had to admire the ability of my colleague, the Member for Gander—Twillingate, to bend the subject under discussion to his desired theme, that of the turpitude of omnibus Bills, something, I think we should point out, which was not invented by the present Government.

Our tax system is complex. This Bill does nothing to simplify it. In my view in the long run complexity equates to unfairness in Canada's tax system. There is complexity to such a degree that the ordinary accountant or lawyer has absolutely no chance of understanding the Income Tax Act. Rather than further rearranging loopholes, shuffling deductions, and complexifying what we have, we should be lending all our efforts to the simplification of the tax system.

The amendments foreseen by this Bill as they relate to the refundable sales tax credit have been condemned, and I believe rightly so, by the National Council on Welfare. The refundable sales tax credit threshold is too low. The sales tax credit disappears too fast at the rate of 5 cents on the dollar above that threshold. The 3 percent surtax which is perpetuated by this particular Bill is, of course, an inequitable tax measure which has no degree of progressivity.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure the Hon. Member will want to continue his exposé after Question Period.

It being 1 p.m., I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

AEROSPACE

SITE OF SPACE AGENCY—URGENT NEED FOR GOVERNMENT TO DECIDE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa Vanier): Mr. Speaker, according to a headline on the front page of the newspaper Le Droit today, the space agency will be located in Ottawa. As everyone knows, in the hesitation waltz, the heart of the Prime Minister is swinging between Montreal and Ottawa and the location of the space agency changes according to his humour. While the Prime Minister wallows in uncertainty, the National Research Council is working. Tired of waiting for the Prime Minister, the NRC began last weekend to recruit the scientific and administrative staff for the space program by placing a full page ad in the newspapers.

The NRC published in Ottawa and Montreal newspapers a hiring advertisement giving full details on the number and designation of positions, the qualification and hiring criteria, job descriptions, position classifications and even linguistic requirements. Everything is there; everything is ready. Only one detail is left out, namely where the candidates will work, in Ottawa or Montreal. Yet, this is a major detail!

The uncertainty of the Prime Minister is becoming ridiculous. Make up your mind, Mr. Prime Minister, because, by the time you do, those responsible for the program will probably have put the space agency in orbit somewhere between Ottawa and Montreal!

SIGNING OF U.S.A.—U.S.S.R. AGREEMENT

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, the eyes of the world are on Washington today and the visit of the First Secretary of the Communist Party of the U.S.S.R. to that city.

The event is the signing of a treaty to ban intermediate nuclear missiles. Some people see it as a move in the direction of nuclear disarmament. Who would quarrel with that proposition?

The only problem is that the United States, a democracy, is signing a treaty with the biggest colonial power of the twentieth century. The record of the Soviet Union in respecting treaties is dismal. Let us mention just a few. Yalta is an agreement to hold free elections in Poland and other satellite countries. We are still waiting 40 years later for those free elections.

What about the Helsinki Convention on Human Rights and the free flow of people between countries? The Soviet answer to this question is the continuing maintenance of the Berlin Wall.

What about the presence of the Soviet Armed Forces in Afghanistan, and the killing of innocent villagers, including women and children, by attack helicopters?

Let us put the signing of the treaty in its proper perspective.

EMPLOYMENT

AIR CANADA STRIKE—ISSUANCE OF WORK PERMITS TO NON-CANADIANS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, in answer to a question raised by the Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar), the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) said that he was authorizing non-Canadian workers to do the work that is normally done by people who are on strike at Air Canada because no Canadians applied.

S. O. 21

Again the Minister of Employment and Immigration is refusing to enforce the laws of the land. Manpower directive, Chapter 17, states that temporary work authorizations cannot be issued to people from outside Canada to take the jobs of striking workers. The manpower directive is very clear. Chapter 17 is very clear.

It is obvious that the Minister of Employment and Immigration is refusing to live by his own regulations. I call upon the Minister to stop this illegal act and to enforce the laws and regulations of this land.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

U.S.S.R.—QUOTATIONS FROM SOVIET LEADER'S BOOK

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, in a book written by Mikhael Gorbachev entitled Perestroika, the Communist Leader says:

> We want freedom to reign supreme in the coming century everywhere in the world—

In the same book he states that:

> We are not going to change Soviet power, of course, or abandon its fundamental principles, but we acknowledge the need for changes that will strengthen socialism—

As one reads these words, remember that the Soviets signed the Helsinki Final Act in 1975 which pledged to protect human rights and fundamental freedoms. Just two years later the Communists marched into Afghanistan and ruthlessly killed children, women, and men, and they are still at it. Remember also that one of the fundamental principles of the Communists is the domination of the world.

It will be time enough to believe Gorbachev's "freedom to reign supreme" talk after he takes his army out of Afghanistan, after he permits the Ukrainians, the Poles, the Yugoslavians, the Hungarians to have free elections, after he removes the Berlin Wall, and stops persecuting the Jews in Russia. Until then, let us keep our powder dry.

REAGAN-GORBACHEV MEETING IN WASHINGTON—OPEN-MINDEDNESS OF SOVIET UNION

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to say a few words, if only to balance the first three statements we have just heard about the summit meeting in Washington. I find the opinions just expressed so negative that I would like to have more time to say that, for my part, like millions of other human beings, I rejoice at the fact that the two most powerful men on this earth can come to an agreement.

I publicly applaud the open-mindedness which now exists in the USSR thanks the new Soviet leader Mr. Gorbachev. I hope that this openness to new ideas will meet a corresponding attitude in the Western world.

[English]

I hope that this would only be the first step toward the real summit of total disarmament, the real summit toward better comprehension and a better world.

By being negative that we will not help bring sanity to this planet that we want to see survive. We must concentrate first on disarmament. I do not think it is fair to be negative, negative, "niet, niet", when Gorbachev says he would like to restructure his country and show openness to the West. Some say it is a bluff. I say let us it and see how far we can go in co-operation at this most important time.

I can assure my colleagues who spoke before me that millions of young people see this as a hope. When there is a hope, I join in sharing that hope.

POSITION OF HAITIAN COMMUNITY IN MONTREAL

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, November 29, more than 700 people lost their lives in Haiti. The Front national de concertation, consisting of members of the Haitian community of Montreal, has asked me to speak on their behalf today in the House.

The Haitian people have lost all confidence in Colonel Namphy's National Council and ask that he be immediately replaced by a national coalition government consisting of the five major opposition leaders.

Furthermore, the Haitian community in Montreal asks that the nine-member Provisional Electoral Council that was dissolved by Colonel Namphy be reinstated. Only then will our community in Montreal be able to trust our Government and have faith in its firm resolve to promote and work out a democratic solution to defuse the present crisis in Haiti.

The Government of Canada is asked to terminate all financial aid to Haiti until it is convinced this aid is not being diverted by the present government to purposes other than originally intended.

Furthermore, the Haitian community has lost confidence in the Canadian Ambassador, Mr. Laverdure, and prefers to see the political situation in Haiti assessed by grass roots groups and the Church, and it wants the Canadian Government to demonstrate its clear intention of supporting these organizations.

SIGNING OF U.S.A.—U.S.S.R. AGREEMENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would have thought that today would have been a day on which we could all join together in welcoming and celebrating what is happening in Washington. I remind those who want to keep their powder dry that there are still enough nuclear weapons in the world to kill us all 10 times over.

I was to begin by saying that I hoped I spoke for all Members of Parliament. Perhaps I should revise that by saying I hope I speak for most Members of Parliament when I say that we join with people all around the world who today are looking to the meeting between Ronald Reagan and Mikhael Gorbachev as the beginning of a new day in Soviet-U.S. relations and new hope for the future of the world.

The agreement to be signed is a first, in that it eliminates a whole class of nuclear weapons, but it must become the building block upon which future agreements to rid the world eventually of nuclear weapons are built. Otherwise, it will have been an occasion for false hope.

Congratulations are in order to both leaders, both of whom seem to have transcended, hopefully for good, the traditional thinking which has so imprisoned them and their military industrial complexes. I hope Mr. Reagan will be able to transcend his current view on star wars as well.

I am not a fan of the President, as is well known, but give credit where credit is due. It is in the recent attacks by the maniacal American right against President Reagan for signing this agreement that we see the "evil empire" that still lurks in far too many American hearts and minds. President Reagan should pay no more heed to them than General Secretary Gorbachev should pay to those who oppose glasnost or perestroika.

SLED-DOG RACING—PRE-OLYMPIC EVENT IN CANMORE, ALTA.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, one of our fastest growing sports is sled-dog racing. Canada has an enviable reputation, both for its dogs and the athletes who contest the events.

Top Canadian racing dogs are in demand not only in the United States but also in European countries such as Germany and Switzerland.

An international circuit of important races is being developed in North America.

Sled-dog racers, wishing to encourage better support and recognition for their sport, are organizing a major race at Canmore, Alberta, just prior to the Olympic Games. The hope is that within the not too distant future sled-dog racing will itself become an Olympic sport.

THE ARTS

QUEBEC DANCE GROUPS—OPPORTUNITY FOR GOVERNMENT TO GIVE GRANTS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, this morning, there was a demonstration in Ottawa in front of the National Arts Centre. It was a joint demonstration by three Quebec dance groups: Eddy Toussaint, Ballet Jazz and Les Sortilèges.

These groups are asking for more generous grants from the Canada Council. All three are nationally and even internationally known. They are loved and appreciated by everyone except, it seems, the Government of Canada. The Government, through the Canada Council, has refused to increase their grants. This, while we so often hear about the need for preserving our Canadian culture!

Well, gentlemen, here is your chance! Considering the Conservative Government's interest in the arts, Mr. Speaker, I would ask this Government to listen to these Quebec dance groups and meet their requests, to help promote Canada's culture and the arts through the medium of dance.

WINTER OLYMPIC GAMES

OLYMPIC TORCH—DECEMBER 16 ARRIVAL ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, may I remind all Hon. Members that Parliament Hill will welcome the Olympic Torch on the morning of December 16.

I urge all Members, people from the other place, and staff, to take an active part in the planned festivities. Most of us have received an invitation from the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) to a unique reception that will take place on the evening of December 15 in honour of the Torch.

I look forward to sharing the spirit with the Minister, and meeting members of Canada's national sport governing bodies, Olympians past and present, Torch carriers, and many other interesting personalities.

In Edmonton we are very excited that the Torch will be arriving on February 10, one of its last stops before reaching the Fifteenth Winter Olympics in Calgary.

I congratulate the Minister on the success of the relay to date. The Torch has given Canadians an issue around which to rally. We all want the Calgary Winter Olympics to be the best of all. It is simply a matter of national pride!

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON CANADIAN WINE INDUSTRY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) in a letter to Mr. Alan Brock, the Chairman of the B.C. Grape Marketing Board, indicated that the Government was providing assurances "that changes arising from a Canada/U.S.A. Trade Agreement would not be implemented overnight". She went on to say that "full consultation" with the industry would occur.

In a letter to the growers from the British Columbia Grape Marketing Board, the Chairman said the following:

> What we now have in this agreement bears absolutely no resemblance to the recommendations put forward by our provincial trade negotiators. We do not have an adjustment period here; we have the premature death of an entire Canadian industry. There is no doubt in our minds that the Canadian wine industry was used as a bargaining chip by our federal officials in their attempts to cut an eleventh hour trade deal. Either that, or we had already been sold out long ago to President Reagan and his powerful southern California wine lobby.
> The Canadian wine industry has undoubtedly been singled out in this trade agreement. We are the hardest hit industry within the Canadian economy and we grape growers are by far the most vulnerable segment within this industry.

The British Columbia Grape Marketing Board further states that an immediate compensation package must be structured to provide compensation for literally every grape grower in Canada who, by this agreement, will be out of business within two years.

THE ECONOMY

POSITION OF LIBERAL PARTY LEADER

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, in 1976, the present Leader of the Liberal Party (Mr. Turner) resigned from his Party because in his opinion its policies were leaning too much towards socialism and were contrary to the basic principles of a healthy economy. He left because he considered that the Government was intervening far too much in the economy, was accumulating too much of a deficit and was showing an obvious lack of respect for the free market forces.

From 1976 to 1984, Liberals kept on increasing governmental control of the economy, making Canadians more and more dependent on interventionist policies, resulting in the private sector getting discouraged when faced with ever rising interest rates and increasing unemployment.

In 1984, Canadians saw the light and gave us the mandate to reduce the deficit, to put the economy back on track, and we are doing well. However, the Liberal Leader is now changing his mind again. His new creed is that the State must take charge of the management of the economy.

The Liberal Leader is afraid of the Socialists. If you cannot beat them, join them. He will embrace them, Mr. Speaker, the better to stifle them, hopefully.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON ENERGY INDUSTRY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the Government is not satisfied to give away energy in the trade agreement, now it wants to deregulate energy sales to the United States.

At the present time energy has to be offered to dependent provinces at a comparable rate before it is sold to the United States. To do away with this system would leave quite a few of the provinces dependent on energy without an assured supply.

Why is the Government doing that? The Province of Prince Edward Island will be the hardest hit. It will not have that assured supply. Why is the Government abandoning its responsibility and taking away the power of the National Energy Board? Why is the Government again abandoning its powers to the provinces?

DISARMAMENT

SIGNING OF U.S.A.—U.S.S.R. AGREEMENT

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, in spite of concerns about the Soviet Union, all Canadians yearn for peace. Because of that, we warmly welcome the Intermediate Nuclear Arms Reduction Treaty signed today, and we look forward with anticipation to further discussions taking place this week that are aimed at reducing long-range arms by 50 per cent.

The credit for this obviously goes to Mr. Gorbachev and Mr. Reagan. But credit is also due to millions of Canadians and others around the world who continue to press for peace and balanced multilateral nuclear arms reduction.

Three years ago no one would have predicted that any agreement was possible. However, it is interesting to note that when the Government took office three years ago Canada's approach to defence and disarmament changed significantly. That change obviously did not hurt the disarmament process. I personally believe that process was helped when Canada started putting pressure on the United States privately instead of berating it publicly, as was done in the past.

Hopefully very soon more progress will be made in our quest for peace on earth to men and women of good will.

HEALTH

TOXIC MUSSELS AFFAIR—QUERY WHY MINISTER DID NOT INFORM POPULATION PROMPTLY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have reviewed in detail the answers made yesterday by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I was present in this House when he was trying to explain his action concerning the problem of toxic mussels that poisoned Canadians, and I am appalled.

Mr. Speaker, here are the facts: His department was first notified of poisoning evidence on Wednesday, November 25th. Laboratory animals died on Friday when poisoned by mussels. Mussel shipments have been stopped on Sunday. However, the Minister only issued a public alert on the following Tuesday, almost a week after the existence of a problem was first suspected.

Why did the Minister not recommend to the public to stop eating mussels on Friday? Why not on Saturday, on Sunday, on Monday? Why did he wait until Tuesday before alerting the public? How many Canadian men and women were hospitalized because of the Minister's negligence?

• (1420)

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I gave the details to the House and to the country in very specific form yesterday. Those details were accurate yesterday. Those details are accurate today.

I said yesterday in the House that on Sunday, November 30, I had not been informed when the Department, with its experience, with its scientific knowledge, still did not have a health link but had what they referred to as "reason to believe" and they stopped the shipments. The laboratory tests continued.

I think the right hon. gentleman should accept that toxicologists and scientists have a responsibility to develop a knowledge base, based on their experience and their scientific abilities.

On Tuesday, when the evidence was clear to them, they came, very clearly, to me and recommended a medical alert, and I said: "Give me a medical alert and I will put it forward immediately", which I did.

I know the right hon. gentleman wants to stay with facts. His Members, again yesterday, said that I had known, and they gave the date of November 25. That is simply not true.

[Translation]

QUERY WHY POPULATION NOT NOTIFIED AT SAME TIME AS PRODUCERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have just related the facts as the Minister himself explained them yesterday. Public health must always have priority. Mussels producers were made aware of the problem Sunday morning, November 29, but no warning was issued to the Canadian public before Tuesday evening, December 1. Two and a half days went by between the times when producers and the Canadian public were told about the toxic mussel problem. Why? Does the Minister not realize that hundreds of thousands of mussels were on sale during those two and a half days? Why did he not immediately warn Canadians about the danger, at the same time as the producers?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have said in the House, both on this issue and on other issues, that I will always err on the side of safety and health. I have done so.

Additionally, I say to the right hon. gentleman that I think he should understand that the scientists have a responsibility to give me scientific facts. I have not questioned that. I have not tried to change that. I have not tried to influence that. I have spoken to nobody in the industry. Every time that a fact was given to me appropriate action was taken.

I say to him that surely he has to understand, as do Canadians, that some time is needed to establish a health link, whether it would be shellfish poisoning or a toxin other than the traditional ones with which the Department was familiar.

NATURE OF AVAILABLE EVIDENCE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, during the period in question, hundreds of thousands of mussels were sold to the Canadian public. We are not talking here about food which looks bad or about food which smells bad. We are talking about food that was poisonous.

My question is quite simple. If the evidence was sufficient to tell the producers to stop shipping, why was that evidence not sufficient to warn the Canadian public? That is a very simple question.

I want to ask the Minister: in view of this negligence on the part of his Department, and on the part of the Minister, why doesn't he seriously consider resigning that portfolio?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Department was not negligent. My scientists were not negligent. The doctors were not negligent. The toxicologists were not negligent. Any information that I received—that's why the medical alert came forward on the Tuesday, as he is aware, and I was not negligent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I would like him to understand very clearly that on Sunday, where there was not a clear medical link established for a health alert, as a precautionary measure the Department put forward the "reason to believe" and stopped shipment. Surely any reasonable, fair-minded person would understand that and then expect scientists to put the information forward.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, quite surely the caution should have been to tell Canadians to stop eating the mussels, not to tell shippers to stop shipping them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Copps: This afternoon we hear another contradiction. The Minister now says that he learned about it on Sunday, November 30. Of course Sunday was not November 30, and I would like to ask the Minister how can he deny a telex from his own Department in which his Department had first notified of an illness on November 25, 1987? Quite clearly, if the Minister did not personally find out about the illness until Monday, he was negligent. If in fact the Department had known Friday mice were dying, Saturday mice were dying, and Sunday morning the shippers were told to stop shipping, how can the Minister possibly stand in the House and claim that he should not have told consumers until Tuesday night?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, again if you take a look at the chronology which I have here and which I made available yesterday, the Hon. Member persists in saying something that isn't true. She persists in saying that I knew. The answer is that I did not know.

Mr. Gauthier: You should have known.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Surely somebody has to understand what we are dealing with in respect to this issue, that is, that there are food inspectors with Health and Welfare across the country. In terms of illnesses, for example a person accessing a medical clinic in Quebec or Moncton or Prince Edward Island, the Department of Health would not necessarily be notified instantaneously.

For example, a Member of the House could be ill tonight. Surely the Health and Welfare Department would be notified tomorrow morning because of something he might have had for lunch today.

I am just asking Members to think through what they are saying, and what they are saying is that somehow every time the Department of Health and Welfare, with its inspectors across the country, is looking for an issue, immediately I have to put forward a health alert or that immediately I would know, as Minister, of every matter they are inspecting.

The point that I make to the Hon. Member is this. The facts I gave her yesterday were accurate yesterday. Those facts are the same today. I suggest to her, stay with the facts.

[Translation]

QUERY WHY MINISTER DID NOT WARN PUBLIC EARLIER NOT TO EAT MUSSELS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the fact is that on November 25 his Department was aware of problems associated with mussels and that people in Montreal, Moncton and Charlottetown were sick. The fact is that, according to the Minister's own words, the matter was serious enough Saturday morning to ask all companies to stop mussel shipments. On Saturday morning, the moment it became clear that it was serious enough to stop mussel shipments, why did he fail to warn consumers? Being responsible for consumer health, why did he not tell Canadians not to eat mussels?

• (1430)

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the answer is the same in both languages. The Member talks about Saturday. Dr. Todd received those samples from Prince Edward Island at 8.15 p.m. upon which testing began that evening, Saturday. Yet the Member stands up in this House and says somehow that I should have an alert on Saturday.

On Sunday, after the testing through that night—again not fully established as a medical link—the shipments were stopped, an additional medical examination took place, and the alert on Tuesday. I say to the House and to Canadians very clearly that every step was followed by the Department. My Department did everything correctly, and as the Minister I support what the Department did.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

WEST COAST FISHERY—RULING ON SALMON AND HERRING EXPORTS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. There are reports that, in the final text of the trade deal, Atlantic fisheries have the recognized right to require that their fish be processed in Canada before being exported. No such protection exists for Pacific fisheries which have been hit—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands is taking the lead question for the New Democratic Party. I would think that he is entitled to far more courtesy than has been exhibited so far. The Hon. Member.

Mr. Manly: No such protection exists for Pacific fisheries which have been hit by a GATT ruling which discriminates against Canada and prohibits us from having restrictions on the export of unprocessed salmon or herring, Mr. Speaker.

Why didn't the Government insist on the same protection for Pacific fisheries as it did for Atlantic fisheries? Why didn't it protect 6,000 shoreworkers' jobs in British Columbia?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that the West Coast salmon and herring problem is not related to the free trade agreement. As the Member points out himself, it is involved in the recent GATT panel report which finds our measures inconsistent with the GATT provisions.

Therefore, the solution to that problem must be found within the context of the GATT itself. That is what my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries, and myself are pursuing.

THREAT TO JOBS OF WORKERS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. He knows that when this issue was first raised two years ago he said on Prince Rupert radio that this would be a good issue to be resolved in the trade talks. He knows that he made that link himself—not I, but the Minister.

Last December 9 the Secretary of State for External Affairs said that these export restrictions:

> —are essential to the effective conservation and management of the fishery. We have made it clear that the Government does not intend to terminate these restrictions.

Last month the Minister of Fisheries said:

> I give my assurance those jobs aren't going to be jeopardized in any way.

Does the Minister still stand by that assurance, and can he tell the House how he will carry out that commitment?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Of course, Mr. Speaker, I stand by that assurance. I want to point out to the Hon. Member, as has been stated by my colleague, the Minister for International Trade, that whatever is the situation with respect to provincial processing regulations in Atlantic Canada it is quite a different situation on our West Coast where many forms of unprocessed fish are exported from British Columbia, including groundfish and some forms of salmon.

The Hon. Member also knows that there are a variety of considerations here involving other nations, in particular, the whole question of the herring roe fishery and the important ability to maintain certain processing standards in Canada before the roe is exported to Japan.

This is, indeed, a multilateral issue and is to be properly dealt with before GATT, which is the course of action we are taking in order to ensure that our processing standards in Canada are maintained.

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON ISSUE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is again for the Minister of Fisheries. Obviously the Americans think they have the GATT decision already in the bag. That is why they refuse to make any concessions on the Pacific fishery.

The primary consideration is the 4,000 to 6,000 shoreworkers' jobs that are in jeopardy. In light of the fact that the Government has betrayed their interests in its desire to get a free trade deal with the United States, can the Minister give any reason that Canadian workers from one end of Canada to the other should put any trust in the Government? Why shouldn't they completely reject the Government and why shouldn't they have their request granted now for an election before this deal goes into effect?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): That is an easy one for you, Pat.

Mr. Riis: Yes or no.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the reason that Canadians may not believe our claims that we will deal with this before the GATT, where this problem initiated, is because of the extravagant claims made by the Opposition, glooming and dooming over other issues, such as the shakes and shingles industry which they said was going to lay off hundreds of thousands of people, and the softwood industry which was going to lay off hundreds of thousands of people.

Mr. Riis: What about the Okanagan grape industry?

Miss Carney: People will equate what we said about job creation, our 1 million new jobs, against what the Opposition said about the loss of jobs, and people will make up their own minds.

CANADA LANDS COMPANY

SALE OF EXPROPRIATED MIRABEL LANDS—REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It concerns the management, operations and dispositions of properties by the Canada Lands Company at Mirabel. Today the media report that there may be as many as 50 expropriated owners in the Mirabel area whose properties were subsequently flipped. There are also reports that the Crown corporation in question has failed to file its financial statement pursuant to the Financial Administration Act.

Given this new information and the issue that I raised in this House yesterday and, given the transaction involving the industrial park in Mirabel that I brought to the attention of the House in October of this year, will the Prime Minister now do the right thing and appoint a Royal Commission of Inquiry into the functioning, management, operations and the disposition of properties by the Canada Lands Company at Mirabel?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Government instructed the Mirabel corporation to return to the original owners of the lands in that area those which had been expropriated and which were surplus to the needs of the corporation. That has been done and that procedure has been followed. All of the original farm owners have been contacted and been given the option to purchase the land. That procedure was universal.

With respect to the filing of the statements of the corporation, the documents were presented to the Auditor General. He questioned some of the items. I immediately asked the special audit team of my Department to make further inquiries. Those inquiries have almost been completed. There is a meeting of the board in the next two days and I will be able to report more fully to the House then.

[Translation]

NECESSITY FOR COMPLETE INQUIRY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. I have here the Public Accounts of Canada, and at page 73, where the Corporation's audited financial statements for 1986-87 should have been, there is only a blank space. The Minister informs us that a special team in his Department is making inquiries. Perhaps he could report to the House on the nature and scope of these inquiries. In fact, why doesn't he say outright that it will take a full scale investigation of the dossier—not just the financial statements but the functioning, management, operations and disposition of properties at Mirabel? That is what we need and that is what we want.

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, what is involved is how certain overhead expenses should be profiled. There has been some disagreement between the Auditor General and the Mirabel corporation. I have pursued that and we will have a response in the next two days.

TRADE

EXPORTS OF WEST COAST SALMON AND HERRING

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Minister in Prince Rupert suggested that the West Coast herring and salmon regulations issue would best be dealt with between Mr. Reisman and Mr. Murphy. Why wasn't it?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I do not remember making that observation. I would be pleased if the Hon. Member could produce a quote to that effect because I do not believe I made such an undertaking.

Mr. Fulton: I will produce it later today, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1440)

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, it was in an interview the Minister gave on CBC and it will come much quicker than the text of the free trade deal.

PROCESSING OF FISH—CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. On October 28 the Prime Minister said that the Liberal and New Democratic Parties were opposed to the interests of western Canada. Since the new trade text stipulates that Canada can ensure that fish caught in Atlantic waters must be processed in Canada and that the same rate is not extended to the West Coast fisheries, placing a $750-million industry and 6,000 jobs at risk, should not a right in a free trade agreement that applies to Atlantic Canada apply to the Pacific West Coast fishery?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have already explained to the House that the specific issue of the West Coast fishery in salmon and herring is presently before the GATT where it has been decreed that our practices are not GATT consistent. Since the problem we have arises within the GATT, the solution must be found within the GATT as well.

I find it very strange that this Party which wraps itself in the GATT, says that GATT is the only way to go, and wants to say no to the free trade agreement because we will live up to our obligations to GATT, is the very same Party which is disputing our right to deal with this issue in the GATT and resolve it in the GATT.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

PRESENCE OF DIOXIN IN PAPER PRODUCTS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare and concerns reports in today's press that dioxin has been found in Canadian paper products, including facial tissue and paper towels. In September, the Minister advised me in the House that his Department was doing a detailed assessment of this problem, but today's reports indicate that there have been no government tests conducted in connection with the situation.

Will the Minister advise the House whether or not there are tests going on and what steps the Government is taking to protect the health of Canadians?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to reply to the Hon. Member. In October of this year I commissioned an interdepartmental committee with representatives from Health and Welfare, from Consumer and Corporate Affairs and from Environment Canada, to address the issue of dioxins in products. That committee has begun its work. Once we have determined the parameters of the manner in which a study should be conducted, a detailed study will go forward as well.

I know what the Hon. Member is referring to when he refers to studies of dioxins in paper products. I am concerned that we have as much of a multidisciplinary approach to the question as possible, and that we have Canadian data.

CANADA LANDS COMPANY

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE FINANCIAL STATEMENTS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works and is about those financial statements. There are lots of disagreements between the Auditor General and the Government about proper accounting and about matters that are reported in financial statements. I would remind the Minister that that does not mean that the Department or agency is not obliged to file its version of the financial statements of its operations. That happens all the time. That is no excuse for not filing or tabling in the House the financial statements of this Crown corporation.

Apart from the disagreement with the Auditor General, where is the Crown corporation's version of its financial statements? Will the Minister undertake to table them now, whether or not the dispute is resolved with the Auditor General?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, what is involved is the profiling of certain overhead expenses, and there is a meeting of the board of directors on Thursday of this week. My Deputy Minister will be in attendance. There is to be a meeting on Friday of this week with the Auditor General to review the situation and to see if the format proposed is acceptable to the Auditor General.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, if it is not acceptable to the Auditor General, I hope it will be tabled anyway. Lots of the financial statements of this Government are not acceptable to the Auditor General. That is normal.

A matter that concerns Canadians is what makes this Government tick on these questions. When did the concern of the Minister of Public Works about the unfiled financial statements begin? Did it begin when the matter appeared in the newspapers the other day, or did it begin when the corporation failed to file its financial return as it was its statutory duty to do?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, by way of global response, I think it appropriate that I indicate that the Auditor General indicated that the performance of this Government during the past year was the most optimistic he has had the occasion to comment on in a very long period of time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McInnes: I think it also relevant that the Auditor General be seized of the same information that the corporation wishes to present. There must be a common denominator so that he can properly comment. That is the information we are trying to get and we will get it. I have advised him that he will have it in three days.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SITUATION IN HAITI—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the two Ministers responsible for this dossier, my question is directed to the appropriate Minister.

Considering the atmosphere of violence that still prevails in Haiti; considering the Haitian people have lost all faith in the National Council and Colonel Namphy, and considering that 30,000 people belong to the Haitian community in Montreal, I would like to know whether the Canadian Government has identified ways of bringing the situation back to normal in a country where violence is still the order of the day.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for her question about this important matter.

We have called back the Canadian ambassador to Haiti. He will arrive in Canada this evening. In the absence of the Minister, I intend to meet with him tomorrow morning for a more detailed report on the events in Haiti.

Through the Minister we have already made known our profound disapproval of the actions and intentions of the Government. After meeting with the ambassador, the Canadian Government will signal very clearly what its intentions are with respect to our bilateral relations and our presence in Haiti.

We profoundly disagree with certain positions taken by the Haitian government and we shall be making a statement very shortly.

Some Hon. Members: Here, here!

CREATION OF COUNCIL PRO TEMPORE

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Right Hon. Prime Minister for his very clear answer which will provide some encouragement to the Haitian community in Montreal.

May I ask the Prime Minister whether he would promote the solution suggested by various groups in Haiti and supported by the Haitian community in Montreal to the effect that a council pro tempore be created consisting of the five main opposition leaders, which would reassure the Haitian community in Montreal and the population of Haiti itself?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we noted with interest the suggestion of the Haitian leaders in Montreal about the creation of a council pro tempore. It still remains that there is a government presence—and I choose my words carefully—in Port-au-Prince which we must accept for the moment.

However, recent actions and events in Haiti have given rise to serious objections, not only from the Canadian Government, but from all Canadians as they are a direct denial of the democratic action of the population.

HEALTH

TOXIC MUSSELS AFFAIR—QUERY WHY MINISTER DID NOT INFORM PUBLIC PROMPTLY

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare and concerns the problem with mussels.

On November 28, the rats died. The Minister was informed on November 29 and stopped deliveries. Consumers were informed only on December 2.

Since the Minister had the information required to stop deliveries, why did he not warn the consumers at the same time?

• (1450)

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's statement had details in it which were not accurate. We received samples from Prince Edward Island at 8.15 p.m. on Saturday, November 28. At 10 a.m. on Sunday, November 29, based on very preliminary reports a decision was made by the Bureau of Field Operations HPB in Ottawa to stop distribution of any further product from P.E.I. At 10.15 a.m., 15 minutes later, HPB discussed the decision with BFO officials by phone. At 10.30 a.m., 15 minutes later, we notified the HPB, Atlantic region.

I was not informed about the "reason to believe" and the "stop shipment" on the Sunday. I was informed of the problem on the Monday. I told the Department to get me every detail and "we are going to put out a health alert at the first moment we receive any scientific medical information". The minute I received that on Tuesday the health alert went forward.

TIME BETWEEN STOPPING SHIPMENTS AND INFORMING PUBLIC

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, this is an extremely serious situation.

Mr. Crosbie: We know that!

Mr. Rodriguez: After all, no one got sick or was hospitalized over tuna, but they are certainly getting sick and being hospitalized on this mussel deal.

Since the Minister had "reason to believe", and on that basis he stopped the shipments, then the "reason to believe" should also be exercised in favour of consumers. My point is, why was there a lapse between stopping the shipments and informing the public that they ought not to be purchasing this stuff?

Mr. Gauthier: Same question.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, now that the Hon. Member has accepted the facts I gave him, let us go to the Monday and Tuesday, November 30 and December 1. On the Monday we injected into mice and rats the material which could have a toxin in it. On the basis of our past experience, the size of the animals, and the amount of neurological and other damage observed, decisions can be taken. The Hon. Member must realize that the medical detective work takes some time. That was the time that was used on Monday and Tuesday.

TESTING OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND MUSSELS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have a short supplementary question for the Minister. Is he telling the House that no tests on those mussels were made on Friday, November 27, by Dr. Todd? Is he trying to tell us that no tests were made and no mice died on that day?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker, that is not what I said. What I say to the hon. gentleman is that even at this moment the exact source of toxin in the Prince Edward Island mussels has not been determined scientifically or medically. We are not dealing with a traditional toxin. It could have been from dredging. It could have been from algae bloom. The toxin secreted by the mussel is to ward off any bacterial activity in the mussel. It is that toxin which is damaging to human beings. Let us keep the details very straight.

MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE OF EVENTS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, once again, the Minister knows that mice died on November 27. That has been established. Does he not think that the serum from the mussels which was injected into these mice and killed them would be a health hazard to humans? He knew that on Friday night.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member is someone who likes to stay with the details. No, that is not true. I go back to exactly when this Minister knew. This Minister knew there was a problem with mussels on the Monday.

Ms. Copps: He was not in control of his Department.

Mr. McKnight: Get control of your mouth, Copps.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): During the week tests were being done by the Department. The Hon. Member knows various tests are done on various foods by the Department on a routine basis. I am not informed of every one of those tests. I was informed on the Monday.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

DIOXINS—PAPER PRODUCTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare and concerns the presence of dioxins in paper products. Is the Minister aware of the studies showing that dioxins do not always stay in the paper, but in the case of paper coffee filters, for instance, that they also go into the coffee? At what risk are Canadians being put by the presence of dioxins and what is the Minister doing in co-operation with the Minister of the Environment about this problem?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the details the Hon. Member has raised. It is referred to as dioxin migration. When the Hon. Member for York East asked me questions about this earlier in the fall the interdepartmental committee, which I mentioned again today, was struck, and studies are being developed. There have been studies in the U.S. as well and I believe a report is due to be released on the 15th of this month.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT USE UNBLEACHED PAPER

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware that this problem is being dealt with better in other countries by changing the industrial process used in making pulp and paper? As well, in Sweden, for example, the Government set an example by using unbleached paper. Would the Minister get his Government to set an example, and you, Mr. Speaker, for the House, so that as consumers we could be helping the process by switching to natural unbleached paper that would be dioxin free?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am aware of that. However, the Hon. Member should go back to the answer I gave earlier in the fall on this issue. I said at that time I was not questioning whether there were safer methods. That evidence has yet to come forward. That is why studies are being done, to verify that.

She should also understand, obviously, that there is scientific thought on both sides of the question. We want to opt for the safest method and that is why the interdepartmental study and the need for that data.

TRADE

WEST COAST FISH EXPORTS—GATT PRELIMINARY RULING

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister for International Trade and concerns the second round of negotiations just concluded with the U.S.

On the question of the West Coast fishery the Minister said in the House today that matter is before GATT. She well knows that under the GATT rules, after a preliminary ruling, it is open to the parties to the dispute to withdraw, negotiate, or change the application. In other words, it was possible, and certainly desirable, through negotiations to have the U.S. withdraw its application to GATT.

Given that, why did the Government of Canada not explicitly ask the U.S., referring to the stand-still provision and others, to withdraw its application to GATT? Under the rules that is perfectly permissible, desirable, necessary, and encouraged. Why did the Government of Canada neglect to make that demand or request of the U.S?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member will have to wait until we get the final text to see in what way this issue has been resolved. The final details and the actual wording and is being addressed by the lawyers today. We hope to have their report before us.

• (1500)

It strains the credibility of anyone on this issue to think that the Americans, having won this case in the GATT, would be prepared to give it up in the GATT. We are following the solutions in the GATT. Since the Hon. Member is such a fan and supporter of the GATT and believes to the depths of his soul in the GATT, he should be happy that the two parties are dealing with this before the GATT in the context of the rules which are in force.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, we support the rules of the GATT when those rules are applied. Considering that the Government did not follow those rules on softwood lumber, that would be a useful precedent of which to remind our American neighbours.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—DEADLINE FOR SIGNING

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. Last week the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and the Chairman of the Finance Committee in the United States wrote to Secretary of the Treasury Baker saying that they do not intend to deal with the legislation dealing with the Canada-U.S. trade pact until June and will, in fact, be considering the omnibus trade Bill prior to consideration of the trade agreement between Canada and the United States.

Why are we signing, on January 2, a commitment by this country to a trade arrangement with the United States before we know what is in the omnibus trade Bill, knowing that that omnibus trade Bill contains many discriminatory, punitive trade measures against Canada which will be entrenched in the trade agreement if it is passed prior to Congress accepting the Canada-U.S. trade deal?

Why are we committing ourselves on January 2 to entrenching that kind of discriminatory trade legislation forever as part of the commercial relations between our countries?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the softwood lumber issue, I would remind the Hon. Member that the timeframe with which we were faced did not permit us to seek recourse through the GATT. That is a fact which he should know because the average GATT case has been taking as long as 14 months to resolve, which is an improvement. The timeframe we were faced with at that time did not permit us to deal through that route. If we had taken it to the GATT we would not have had a decision in time to be effective.

With regard to his question about January 2, the President of the U.S. and the Prime Minister of Canada have to sign the free trade agreement on January 2 because the authority for the U.S. President to sign under the fast-track provision runs out on January 2. After that date the free trade agreement could go ahead but it would be held ransom by everyone in Congress to make every possible change, and to do all the log rolling possible to unravel the agreement.

That is why the fast-track agreement is in place. January 2 is important because the U.S. mandate to use the fast track runs out then. I have explained that to the Member many times and I will give him a further briefing should he so require.

SOVEREIGNTY

CANADIAN ARCTIC—NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES—LACK OF CONSULTATION WITH INUIT TAPIRISAT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister and is with regard to the impending agreement between Canada and the United States with respect to the Canadian Arctic.

There has been government rhetoric with regard to sovereignty in the Arctic, a word which was apparently left out of the agreement, and also with respect to the environment and the native peoples of the Arctic.

Could the Prime Minister tell us why the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada and other native peoples, to whom the Government of Canada has often wanted to attach the Canadian flag for sovereignty purposes, were not consulted, so that the Government could have the benefit of their advice and the Americans could have the benefit of their participation, which would be needed in order to protect the environment in the North?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, our proposals involve the exercise of Canadian sovereignty on an ongoing basis. These are presently being discussed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Secretary of State of the United States. At the appropriate time upon his return to the House the Secretary of State for External Affairs may indeed have something to say in this regard. It would be a step toward the strengthening of the exercise of Canadian sovereignty which has been gravely neglected in the past.

NORTHWEST PASSAGE—QUERY CONCERNING POSSIBLE SHIPMENTS OF OIL

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I asked the Prime Minister a question about consultation. I asked him why the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada have not been consulted. If he is not prepared to answer that question, perhaps he would give a commitment that they will be consulted.

Can he assure the House that there is no connection between this agreement on the Arctic and the free trade agreement? Can he assure the House that there is no intention, pursuant to this agreement, to use the Northwest Passage to ship those 50,000 barrels of Alaskan crude through the Northwest Passage? Is this the prelude to that sort of an affair? Can we have an assurance on that? If it is so funny, give us an assurance.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the free trade agreement is not responsible for the common cold either.

With regard to the first part of my hon. friend's question, I think he knows that the exercise of sovereignty is the responsibility of the Government and the Parliament of Canada. While we have engaged in many consultations, it is for the Canadian Government to assert and exercise that sovereignty.

That is why, with regard to the important matter of sovereignty raised by my hon. friend, the Government is in the process of expending some $500 million in Vancouver to build a Class 8 ice-breaker so that we can assert our sovereignty for the first time in that vital area. That is why the Government has made an important commitment with regard to nuclear submarines to ensure the exercise of sovereignty over Canada's North which has been so badly neglected by previous Governments.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: What about the Inuit?

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise that that is the end of Question Period. I know that some Hon. Members were seeking the floor and I will try to recognize them tomorrow.

POINTS OF ORDER

WEST COAST FISH EXPORTS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have been able to confirm that on October 27, 1986, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) was interviewed by CBC Prince Rupert in the person of reporter Christine O'Gryzlo and that he said the following: "If we are talking about liberalizing trade and if we are talking about free talks maybe we should be talking about the free flow of fish between the two countries, especially B.C. and Alaska. We are discussing with industry whether this should be put on the table in free trade talks".

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. Of course there were a number of options at that time. Discussions have taken place with the industry on this issue. One of the prime pieces of advice from the industry, including the United Fishery and Allied Workers Union, was that this matter should not be resolved in the context of the free trade talks because it had implications extending far beyond the context of Canada-U.S. relations.

CORRECTION TO QUESTION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, when asking my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare about the mussels issue this afternoon, I asked the Minister why he warned the companies on Saturday and the public only on Monday evening. In fact, the sequence of events is that he warned the companies on the Sunday morning and the public only on the Tuesday evening. I would like the appropriate correction to be made.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for making that correction. That will be helpful.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties. I think you will find that there is unanimous consent to dispense with the adjournment debate today. Therefore, when Private Members' Hour is completed today the House will stand adjourned until two o'clock Wednesday, December 9, 1987. I would like to thank the Opposition Parties for their courtesy in this matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Do all Parties agree?

Mr. Gauthier: We agree, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

[English]

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe there is a problem. Perhaps you could give us a few seconds to consult on that.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I had a question on the late show and cancelled. Another Member on the opposition side had a question on the late show tonight and he cancelled it as well because of the party of the government side tonight. We respect that. We expect that they will do the same for us tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-64, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, a related Act, the Canada Pension Plan and the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be read the third time and do pass.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the House rose at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) had the floor.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, before lunch, I had just embarked on a short critique of some of the provisions of Bill C-64 that do not relate to the establishment of international banking centres. I want to make some further comment with regard to the omnibus character of this tax Bill.

Frankly, this omnibus Bill is an adjustment of the edges of the tax system and has nothing to do with tax reform as such. Even in those adjustments to the details on the periphery, the Government has not shown any willingness to implement some of the principles to which heretofore it has been giving lip service by way of the White Paper on tax reform.

This legislation does not envisage any indexing of the sales tax credit, nor of the turnover point. Therefore, with the normal operation of inflation, the value of this sales tax credit will diminish year by year and the point at which it will be clawed back through the tax system will also diminish in terms of real income. Surely, those measures could have been indexed if the Government was really committed to over-all tax reform.

The non-indexation of the threshold will mean that Canadians will see this sales tax credit clawed back at a progressively lower level of income, whereas the level at which this claw-back starts is already approximately 25 per cent below the poverty line as defined by Statistics Canada, in terms of a family of four in an urban centre. Even those who are just on either side of the poverty line will be subjected to a marginal degree of taxation that will be higher than the people who are in higher tax brackets because of the operation of this particular claw-back provision.

The Government often states, when discussing those higher marginal rates of tax, that they constitute a disincentive to attempting to earn more income. That disincentive will be doubly present for those who are on either side of the poverty line, particularly those at that 75 per cent of the poverty line where this claw-back provision comes into effect.

While the measures dealing with international banking centres are perhaps the most interesting and intriguing part of Bill C-64, they will have less effect in the long run than some of the minor detailed changes to unemployment insurance and to the question of sales tax credits and thresholds.

However, It is of particular interest because it provides such a telling paradigm of the way in which the Government is prepared to go to such lengths to express its basic economic philosophy, whether or not that philosophy will have any beneficial effects for Canadians.

This is an example of the Government pursuing two themes. One theme is that enterprise should be freer. However, it is very difficult to think of that particular term in regard to the banking system in Canada. The second theme is that tax considerations should be diminished in the formulation of business decisions. A third theme is that there should be some advantage given to sectors of the economy which the Government believes are beneficial to the entire economy.

What sacrifices is the Government prepared to make in pursuit of those objectives? First, it is prepared to allow inter-regional strife and hostility to break out within the business community and its political surrogates on the Government side, to the point of dividing its own back bench. It is prepared to allow abuse to flow back and forth between the financial communities in Vancouver, Montreal and Toronto which is, of course, the predominant one in this country and which has almost unanimously opposed this legislation. Canadians should know that in doing so it is prepared to allow action that essentially compromises whatever value or effect this legislation might have had.

We heard testimony in the finance committee that seems to border on the absurd in its naivety. We heard testimony that 26 jobs might be created, and testimony from the Department of Finance that only 11 jobs might be created. The Government is taking the time of Parliament, taking hearing time and the expense of travelling across the country, using the efforts of Members of the House, in pursuing a plan that might create 11 to 26 jobs. Surely, any of us could conceive numerous legislative measures that would have five or tenfold the effect on job creation with a similar expenditure of time and money which the House might have more profitably used.

The purpose of this legislation is for the Government to align itself with the Reagan and Thatcher economic view of the world as well as with the so-called free enterprise philosophers. It is to align itself with the mullahs of the economic new right in the pursuit of objectives which, while they may have very little use or effect in themselves, nevertheless have an important philosophical underpinning that can be communicated to those who want to hear the message.

What is the cost? Department of Finance officials have suggested that there is no cost because all of this is happening offshore. It would be a very dangerous assumption to accept that view. While there may be no financial cost, we must consider the political cost to Canada in the institution of international banking centres. We must consider the measures that correlate with international banking centres.

Of course, we are talking about the free trade zones which have been established in different countries of the world to assist in industrialization. Of course, these are the darlings of the economic right because they enable the concentration of wealth and the substitution of cheap labour for labour that earns a decent wage. They allow the internationalization of products to subvert Government controls on rules of origin and to undermine national economic planning. They allow the treatment of labour and capital as if they are completely interchangeable and they allow the subversion of safety legislation, environmental legislation, health protection legislation and the tax system.

• (1520)

One of the principal themes of my leader and of this Party has been the misuse of the tax system, and what is left out of the tax system by way of economic policy. Although it may be useful and beneficial to the country, and beneficial in certain areas itself, we should be very careful about adopting a measure that is so susceptible to harmonization in an international economic order that does not empower individuals or communities, that does not permit the development of Third World countries in a democratic fashion, and that essentially leads to the concentration of wealth, capital, and power in the hands of a few.

The Eurocurrency reserves, as they are sometimes called, which the international banking legislation is designed to accommodate, are an example of that phenomena which has been described as——"money without a country", there are huge monetary reserves, billions of dollars throughout the world, thousands of billions of dollars indeed, money called eurodollars.

[English]

The notorious hot money flows which can lead to runs on the currency of a particular country are an example of the operations of the Eurocurrency and of the Eurodollar market. The existence of numerous tax havens and tax shelters, convenience banking islands such as The Bahamas and the Cayman Islands are manifestations of that same system, and of the degree to which international finance is adapting to accommodate those Eurocurrency transactions and those Eurocurrency reserves.

It is unfortunate that there have been comparisons with the American experience, because the reserve requirements and the restrictions on interstate banking in the United States render Canada's situation very different from that of the United States, to the point where it would be unwise to draw comparative conclusions. Our fear is that loans that have a significant risk element will continue to be put through the normal channels, and only the safe loans will go through those international banking centres.

In looking at this legislation we have to ask the following questions. Will there be any real economic benefits in the form of jobs to the centres of Vancouver and Montreal, or is the federal Government simply undertaking a measure that is designed to stroke the leaders of those two financial communities and convince them that they are getting something for nothing when, in fact, they are not? What will be the real size of the tax expenditure involved, particularly at a time when we are looking at tax reform and when there is $28 billion of other federal tax expenditures out there, essentially unaccounted for, although we have an idea of their order of magnitude?

Given the profit picture of the banks, should we be doing anything to benefit institutions of that size? I say this not to call down the banking industry, but to point out that over the past years job creation has almost exclusively been the preserve of small and medium sized business. The job creation record of Canadian banks would not bear comparison with that of small business as a whole.

I could on at some length on this whole question. It brings into play the matter of the free trade agreement. I want to hold my fire on the free trade agreement until the Government can state with confidence, and produce the evidence before the House, that it really has a free trade agreement.

I simply wish to point out that the three centres around which discussion has hinged in this debate are those of Toronto, Montreal, and Vancouver. The whole problem that I see with the operation of a free trade agreement is the danger of centralization of the Canadian economy. It is not that the legislation to create international banking centres is inequitable; it is obvious that both Vancouver and Montreal are far more in need of economic stimulus, even in the financial industries, than is Toronto. But what we will see under the move to a free trade environment, which undoubtedly this international banking legislation is designed to harmonize with, is a centralization of the Canadian economy that will lead to a reduction in jobs, and a reduction in economic opportunities in the smaller communities of Canada, and quite possibly in most communities in Canada outside of those three centres.

Yet we should never fall into the trap of believing that because there may be job creation, and certainly centralization of industry in those three centres, that the people who live there will actually benefit from the results. I believe that when there is excessive centralization of an economy, the benefits of productivity and job creation are extremely vulnerable to being outweighed and overburdened by the simple physical strains expressed as financial constraints that occur in the major areas of centralization.

Thus it is today that we have situations such as that in New York City where I was told by one of our own civil servants if I was looking for a nice pied-à-terre I could perhaps view the penthouse in his apartment block. The owner had just reduced the price by $1 million, from $5 million U.S. to $4 million U.S. in the hope of getting a quick sale.

I hope that we as Canadians never adopt the measures that will lead us to the type of future where those real estate prices combine to gut cities of their population, force people ever further out into expanding remote suburbs, and eventually deteriorate the quality of life for the majority of people who live in the major centres that will benefit from free trade legislation, as they plan to benefit from this legislation.

Mr. Layton: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the opportunity to participate in this debate. I feel it is important that the House realize that reports and impressions that have been given to the public over the past day or two by the press are both incomplete and incorrect. They have been filled with comments from one side of the argument and the proposition that we are discussing today as part of Bill C-64.

Many years ago the international banking centres idea was first advanced from the community of Montreal and endorsed and reinforced by the community of Vancouver. It has been studied and analysed. The Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs conducted a major study of this concept. Our visits to New York developed a wealth of information that concluded under the limited circumstances that would be allowed for those banks that there would be a limited opportunity, and therefore a limited number of jobs. That did not change the fact that when the committee came to its final statement, its recommendation clearly established that it was a good idea, it just was not developed far enough; the Minister should consider other ways of increasing and improving the success or the effectiveness of this idea.

Mr. Cassidy: Not true.

Mr. Layton: The committee report went on to state that one particular requirement, our second recommendation, was that we should negotiate withholding tax agreements with other countries to make this idea more successful. Under those circumstances, the banks would be more competitive. This committee, of which I was a member for more than a year, clearly was in favour in its majority of supporting the Montreal and Vancouver initiative. There were those who were against—

Mr. Cassidy: That is not true.

Mr. Layton: —and they are the most vocal members of the committee, Mr. Speaker, and they will give the impression to the press that their views stand as the opinion of the committee. However, I stand here and assure the House that there was a majority of us on the committee who felt that it was a good idea.

• (1530)

Mr. Cassidy: That is not true.

Mr. Layton: All we have to do is to ask members of the committee. The truth is that this concept will continue the feeling or the impression that it is a very major concern to Montreal, as all of us who live there know. We have watched our role and our opportunity as an outlet for Canadian skills and international services diminish in favour of points west, in particular Toronto.

Along comes an idea, the Government recognizes that it is a good one and promotes it. We in Montreal are very pleased. However, I would certainly want to correct the idea that the committee was stacked. If one thing should go on record, it is that both opposition Parties were divided on the issue. It might surprise the Hon. Member to know that in a vote his Party was divided, as was the Official Opposition. It was also divided on the government side.

It was recognition of whether or not regions like Montreal and Vancouver would have certain opportunities and rights in the future. A vote could have come at any time, and it came at committee in the absence of those from the Opposition who supported this particular motion. Maybe that was a surprise. Maybe it was well planned. However, I can only assure the House that at any time when that vote would have been taken, a majority of the finance committee would have been in favour of it, as was shown in the final announcement of that election.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, to us Montrealers and to our fellow Canadians in Vancouver, opening banking centres is an element, a symbolic indication of the special values of these two international cities in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member I must say that perhaps he did not observe the degree and intensity of some of the conflicts which I was able to identify in just one appearance at the finance committee on this particular matter. I can assure him that there will be no kudos in our caucus to any degree about the division on this particular legislation. However, I must recall to the Hon. Member the very words of the Chairman of the committee, which I believe he heard, when he indicated on a particular vote that he had to cast his vote with the Government.

I am not too sure of the direction in which the intervention of the Hon. Member is proceeding. If he wishes simply to demonstrate his dedication to the interests of the business community of the city which he calls home, I am sure that all of us would accept it as a given and that none of us would wish to challenge it, as he would certainly not challenge the commitment of other members of the Progressive Conservative Party to the business interests of the cities they represent.

However, I would have to point out that in the divisions which I saw at this particular committee, the divisions by way of vote and the divisions by way of opinion, I felt that the basic purpose of the committee was being undermined in some sense when the Chairman declared that his function was to vote with the Government. To me that was a notion which almost reached the point of absurdity, particularly since at the other committees before which I have appeared there had always been declarations of the Chairmen that they were in fact the masters of their own procedure.

I commend to the Hon. Member a careful study of what happened in that particular committee, before he commits himself to such a drastic and dramatic degree of revision in the rewriting of the history of the committee hearings. I commend to him the committee record and a brief conversation with his colleague from Scarborough on the particular interests involved in the formulation of the report on this matter.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I recall the Chairman of the finance committee making a comment when the matter of banking centres was discussed—and it was reported in the press—that the whole proposal belonged in the waste-basket. When the vote came on the proposal, there was a complete turnaround and the spirit of reform, which is supposed to permeate the finance committee, went out of the window. The Chairman did docilely what the nabobs in the Department of Finance wanted. He did what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) wanted. He fell in line. He did the bidding. He sat up and wagged his tail, voted, and broke the tie.

I think that needs to be explained to the Hon. Member who just presented the view that somehow or other the divisions which may exist in caucuses of the House were extended to a committee which, in the spirit of reform, is supposed to look at a proposal and make a decision on the basis of what it feels is beneficial to the country as a whole. I think the committee fell down in that regard.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) have a rebuttal, or should I recognize another Hon. Member on debate, because there are only 30 seconds remaining?

Mr. Parry: Fine.

[Translation]

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have the opportunity to rise in this debate and to speak of Bill C-64.

[English]

In speaking to this Bill I intend to raise issues which go to the heart of the credibility of the Minister and of the Government. The Bill contains certain elements which point, if I may say so, to a lack of candour, a lack of frankness, or almost a disdain for the public which by and large is ignorant of fiscal matters.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I recall that on a number of occasions during the 1984 leadership campaign I was compared with the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), who was not Minister of Finance at the time. He was the Opposition critic. I was not offended at all. I would not say I was all that flattered, but I was not offended. I felt enormous respect for him and for his integrity.

[English]

I think I would have to say that when the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was named to his functions I, along with other members of my Party and probably members of the NDP, looked to this man as being solid, as a man who would not provide a flamboyant leadership in the Ministry but who would be solid, dependable, and reliable. We felt that he was a man who would not try to fool Canadians into believing something other than the reality with respect to the fiscal position of the Government of Canada and with respect to the contents of any particular piece of financial legislation.

That image has been irretrievably damaged by a series of events during the course of this Minister's stewardship. Whereas I once thought the Minister was solid, the most I can say today is that he is stolid. Even that I suppose is flattering. I have just thought, if I may take poetic licence, Mr. Speaker, that he is stolid compared with the Government, of which he is a member, that indeed is squalid. That is not too bad; I am sure that could be turned into a limerick by you, Mr. Speaker. I would not go so far as to say that the Minister is squalid, far from it, but he has been a profound disappointment. He has lowered his standards, and he has fallen in the esteem of Members of the House and of the public.

I fear the Minister has become an advocate of that philosophy of Phineas T. Barnum, namely that there is a sucker born every minute. Thank God, Mr. Speaker, there are no suckers in the Opposition in this House, and I do not believe there are suckers in the Canadian public either.

Before I come to the specifics of linking this lack of credibility to the context of Bill C-64, let me offer a bit of an overview of how I see the Minister's performance to date. First, I would remind you that after this Minister assumed his functions, he came forward on national television. In Question Period I raised this matter, but it has to be raised again. In March, 1985, and in response to a question as to how he intended to get at the deficit, which he considered to be a major problem and allegedly still does, he said:

> I don't want to increase taxes. I think we have a good deal of scope on the expenditure side to deal with the deficit problem. A tax increase, certainly a general tax increase, puts a dampening effect on the economy and I don't want to see us do that.

We are aware, and you are aware, Mr. Speaker, that, having made that declaration, the Minister then proceeded to increase taxes at a rate and of a magnitude never seen in peacetime in Canada. Let me offer you a couple of examples. Taxes on individual Canadians, namely, income taxes and sales taxes, increased from 1984-85—you will recall that that was the year the Government assumed power—until 1988-89 by an estimated $22.2 billion, an increase of 93 per cent. This comes from a Minister who on national television said, "We don't believe in a general increase in taxes".

Despite five years of economic growth, which we have realized—

[Translation]

And I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that we achieved this strong economy, not as a result of the Minister's policy but indeed in spite of his policies.

[English]

Imagine what this economy could have been like without an increase of 93 per cent in personal income taxes, an increase of $22 billion, Mr. Speaker? It would be all right if the Minister could turn to us and say "Yes, but the deficit has now been taken care of. It is now under control". But despite those taxes and economic growth, the deficit is still in the neighbourhood of $30 billion. Some attack on the deficit. Some way of getting at it through the expenditures of Government. It is incredible that the Minister has been able to get away with this chicanery. To go even further, the Minister now tells us we are going to have tax reform. "We are going to make the tax system equitable. We are going to widen the tax base and do all these things".

Tax reform is necessary in order to correct the inequities, the increased tax burden and the complexity that the Minister himself has put into the Act. Sure, tax reform is necessary. It was necessary in 1984, but it is much more necessary today by reason of what the Government and the Minister have done. It is reminiscent of the woman who, when convicted of murdering her husband, sought clemency on the grounds that she was now a widow. That is what we have in terms of tax reform under the Minister of Finance. If he gets away with this, indeed Canadians will justifiably be regarded as suckers, and if we, on this side of the House, let the Government get away with it, we should properly be regarded as suckers as well and also incompetent in not doing our job. Our job here is to ensure that Canadians are not horn-swaggled by this master horn-swaggler.

I never thought the Minister of Finance, whom I knew when he was on this side of the House, would become such a first-class snake oil salesman. He has been successful because he has enjoyed the benefits of strong western economies, and the Canadian economy has followed suit. I say, as I said a moment ago in French, this is not because of the policies of the Government; it is in spite of the policies of the Government. For all of that, in these areas with which I take issue, namely, raising taxes to lower them and telling us that the deficit will be through expenditure cuts and then trying to do it through massive tax increases, failing on both counts, I never expected the Minister to stoop so low as to tinker with accounting procedures in the name of management practices simply to get at the deficit artificially. He was not able to get at it, as I pointed out, through massive tax increases. The Minister obviously did not get at it through expenditures which, initially, he said he would do. Instead, what has he done? He has tried to get at the deficit through tinkering, if you like, with bookkeeping procedures under the Income Tax Act. We will not let him get away with that. In other words, creative arithmetic seemed to be the only vehicle left.

The first hint that we would be faced with this kind of activity by the Minister and his Department was in the first Budget of 1985. In that Budget, Mr. Speaker, you may recall that in the name of new management and initiatives, the Government expected in 1985 and 1986 to realize savings of $1.2 billion. That was called a plan of improved cash management. You may recall this because we discussed it in the House. It ties in very directly to what I have to say today about Bill C-64. Most of that better cash management, a total of $336 million, was to be saved in 1985-86. Those funds were to come from stripping Crown corporations of their surpluses. In other words, by taking dividends out of Crown corporations and bringing them up into general revenues, the Government was saying, "We are providing better cash management and, of course, in this fashion we will be reducing the deficit". That is like moving your funds from one bank account to the other and saying, "You see, I have no deficit now in my savings account", but you still have depleted your other account. The Minister just moved funds from account A to account B and put that procedure forward as some magical way of getting at the deficit through that wonderful name of better management initiatives and improved cash management.

Worse still is what we see in Clause 67 of Bill C-64. This is stooping even lower than what the Minister did in 1985. Specifically, the Minister decided to get at his deficit by a one-shot $1.2 billion move of tax remittance from 1988-89, I believe it is, to 1987-88. Let me make sure of that. Yes, it will indeed. By obliging employers to effect withholdings on salaries paid to employees twice a month instead of at the end of each month, a block of withholding funds of approximately $1.2 billion will be moved from April of 1988 to March of 1988. That has been estimated to bring an additional $1.2 billion into the 1987-88 fiscal year.

Of course, this removes that same $1.2 billion from the following fiscal year of 1988-1989. What kind of sound financial management is that?

I could go further. When the Minister presented his Budget and his Estimates for the deficit, he did everything possible to get it below $30 billion, the magic number he had in his head. Of course, by changing the payroll withholding date from April to March, he in fact was able to get his deficit below $30 billion. Had he not done so, the projected deficit at that point would have been $30.5 billion.

Let us think about that. If I am wrong about it, I stand to be corrected. I wish I were wrong about it and I wish the Minister would tell us that it is not true. However, in order for the Minister to have this $1.2-billion increase in revenues in 1987-88, this one shot at $1.2 billion, employers across the country have to change their accounting systems forever to provide bi-monthly rather than monthly remittances to the federal Government of Canada.

Imagine the increased costs and increased paper burden on those employers, simply to accommodate the Minister's deficit which he promised in 1985 he would get at through expenditure cuts. As I said, despite the $22-billion increase in taxes on individuals, he has been unable to get at it through tax increases.

What has the Minister done instead? He has moved to artificial, creative arithmetic, imposing a burden on employers right across Canada, simply to move $1.2-billion worth of receipts in the federal coffers ahead by 15 days. I think that is shameful. I think it is scandalous. In my judgment, the Minister has tarnished that image of fiscal management and fiscal integrity, if it is not in tatters when people understand what is taking place.

When I saw this bit of sleight of hand, I became very concerned. I thought that the Minister had found something else. He discovered the coffers of Crown corporations back in 1985, and now he has discovered the concept of accelerated payments.

Where will it end? Will I be invited to accelerate my income tax payments over the next several years in order to bring more money into the coffers of the Government of Canada and basically reduce the deficit of the current year? The Minister has effectively set out a lot of chickens which will come home to roost.

Let us look at the initiatives of this Government across the board. If I can coin a phrase used by the former Minister of Finance on that side of the House who had a very brief tenure, you may recall quite painfully, Mr. Speaker, back in 1979, it is short-term gain for long-term pain. This is a first-class example of short-term gain for long-term pain. The pain will be felt by employers forever and the gain will be realized by the Minister simply for the current fiscal year.

The same is true of so many other initiatives the Government has taken since it came into office. There have been so many ill-conceived initiatives that when those chickens start to come home, I promise that the sky will be dark. It is our successors in many cases who will have to deal with those chickens. Short-term gain for long-term pain has become one of the principles by which this Government conducts its affairs; that and the principle of Phineas T. Barnum I enunciated at the outset: a sucker is born every minute.

I never believed that particular principle. Clearly the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Government does. Let us set any doubt about that to rest by ensuring that the Canadian public is not suckered on this particular provision.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I may not have heard the Hon. Member's remarks on the subject, but one of the important aspects of this Bill is the question of international banking centres. I wonder if the Hon. Member could tell us if he believes that the Bill should be amended to include the area of Metropolitan Toronto as an international banking centre.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, what an interesting question in light of my comments. This gentleman and other Members of the House who are so caught up with the notion of international banking centres also believe in the principle that a sucker is born every minute.

[Translation]

In French we say it is good, that is the idea of such a centre, it is a label on an empty box. There in nothing there.

[English]

There is nothing there. All the puffery and exaggeration about international banking centres has been created by the Government, but it knows full well how minimal the economic activity is that can be associated with such centres. It is simply ridiculous. It did not merit any comment in my remarks because I did not want to obscure some of the fundamental issues which are at stake in this Bill, such things as accelerating the remittances of employees' deductions.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I understand from the Hon. Member's response that he does not feel that the question merited any comments in his remarks. However, he did not answer my question, and I put it to him again. Does he believe that the Metropolitan Toronto area should be included as a banking centre, and if he does not, does he believe that the provisions in the Bill with respect to banking centres should be struck out?

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I thought I had made it perfectly clear. I think the whole thing is silly. I just do not think that the Government should be allowed to get away with creating visions in Canada that there is some great thing here.

[Translation]

There is nothing there, Mr. Speaker! What good is it going to do, be it located in Montreal, Vancouver, Toronto, Winnipeg, or Halifax? What good is it going to do? Just exactly what kind of fallout can we expect from such a centre? Perhaps the Hon. Member might tell me, perhaps he might convince me there is something there? But, the way I see it, there is nothing there. As I said, it is a label on an empty box.

[English]

Mr. Layton: Mr. Speaker, as this debate winds down, I would like to respond to my colleague from Montreal and from the business community which we share. It has been our community from the outset that has felt that there was an advantage, an opportunity and a contribution to be made to the image of Montreal as an international city.

The recent Picard report, which was presented and responded to in only these last few days by the Government, indicates that if Montreal is to regain its stature in the world of commerce and in the world of industry, there must be certain strong bases, among them aerospace, biotechnology, international commerce and international banking. This is a step in the right direction for Montreal. I think that most of the Montreal business community supports it. I know that a financial representative from his community and from his Party, the Official Opposition, supports this. I am rather surprised to find this great division in the Official Opposition.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to respond to my friend from Lachine East, and friend he is and has been for many years. He touched upon at least two issues. One is the international banking centre about which I said that there is nothing there. Putting an international banking centre into Montreal will not change the face of Montreal. Montreal is an international centre.

Let me deal with something else he said. He referred to biotechnology. Let us compare those two notions. You may recall that I was responsible for placing in Montreal the Institute of Biotechnology under the Special Recovery Projects Program back in 1983. I had the pleasure of visiting that facility, situated on the northwest side of the city, at the end of Royalmount Avenue which has now become an industrial park. Paramax and Canada Cement Lafarge Ltd. have established themselves there. Each company creates many skilled technical jobs. In the biotechnology centre, just commissioned last May, there are something like 650 employees already. Companies are coming from the U.S. to take advantage of that facility. People will be coming there from all over the world. I am assured by the National Research Council that it is a world-class facility, and may indeed be the very best of its kind in the world.

• (1600)

That is the kind of initiative I want to see for Montreal. Compare that to the concept of an international banking centre. There might be a dozen people working on computers in some office in the city. Sure, we have the etiquette "international banking centre". That is form, and the Government has been very strong on form. However, the biotechnology centre is substance. There are real jobs, real spin-offs. New industries are being created in a technology which is at the leading edge of the new wave industries.

I am glad my hon. friend mentioned those in this context because it simply indicates that when I say——it is a label on an empty box, there is nothing there.

[Translation]

[English]

—exactly that, but not so with biotechnology.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to both thank and congratulate the Hon. Member for his remarks. I presume he has a substantial number of people from the Montreal Chamber of Commerce who have been pressing him on this issue. I respect their concerns, but I commend the Hon. Member for his courage in indicating that the proposal sounds attractive and looks good but when you examine it carefully it is very costly in terms of lost tax dollars. It might cost as much as $3 or $4 million per job created and will not contribute in any material way to the development of Montreal as a financial services centre. I take it what he is saying is that other proposals such as R and D and the biotechnology centre, for which he was partly responsible, make an awful lot more sense. If we were able to do this in the area of biotechnology—

[Translation]

—it can also be done with the financial services industry to ensure a greater involvement of the Montreal banking establishments in international finance without at the same time having to pay an enormous price for the meagre benefit which may result from the proposed legislation.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, it might be somewhat difficult to thoroughly examine the issue in a few sentences. It is clear, however, that every elected representative will seek to promote the interests of his or her region, just as I do promote the interests of the city of Montreal. That is why I managed to convince my Cabinet colleagues at the time to set up in Montreal a biotechnological centre.

What would a financial centre bring Montreal? It is very important, if we want to sell this project to Montreal businessmen, that they should know exactly what it is all about.

As someone who has a lot of expertise in that area, I fail to see any benefit being derived from such an institution. While I remain dedicated to the promotion of my city's interests, I feel that the main concern of Montrealers, whether they are businessmen, workers, or ordinary citizens is to have good jobs requiring better training which will contribute to the economic development of the region.

When I compare the scientific centre with a financial centre which will provide about a dozen jobs for computer operators—that is what I am told; if I am wrong, so be it, but this is exactly what I have been told to this day—I cannot see any great advantage to it. I think the Government is promoting something without a thorough knowledge of what is involved. As we say in English, this may not be a pig in a poke, but this is certainly not the greatest windfall of the century either, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments is over. Debate. The Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway).

[English]

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for the opportunity to say a few brief words, I hope, in connection with Bill C-64, and to express my own personal grave concerns about the provisions of the Bill relating to international banking centres. Those provisions are found in Clause 10, particularly subclause (3), which designates only two cities, the metropolitan area of Montreal in the Province of Quebec, and the metropolitan area of Vancouver in the Province of British Columbia, as those in which international banking centres can be carried on.

Coming as I do from a riding in Metropolitan Toronto, I have had great concern over this particular provision. I feel that concern is best expressed in a letter I received from the Chairman of the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto, Dennis Flynn. I would just like to quote a very small portion of that letter. He says:

> This proposed legislation is not in the best interests of Canada, and our concerns are based on the following reasons:
> The financial services industry is undergoing rapid and dramatic changes. Canada cannot afford legislation that restricts its number one financial centre from competing on an equal basis for international business.
> Clearly, Metropolitan Toronto is recognized throughout the world as a major financial and business centre. If Canada ignores this reality by arbitrarily excluding Toronto from IBC designation, it will change the perception of Toronto in international markets.
> In its report to the Commons, April 30, the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs cited three potential sources of loss in tax revenue for Canada if the current IBC proposal is pursued, and indicated a "minimal" positive impact on employment.
> The IBC proposal is already creating interprovincial friction with the Province of Ontario threatening to "neutralize" federal action. It is not in Canada's interest to introduce a policy that will generate a tax war between provinces—particularly at the outset of discussions on sweeping tax reform proposals.

Those comments incorporate the gist of my concerns with this particular legislation. It seems to me the reports referred to by Chairman Flynn underline that fact.

The only real argument I have heard for this legislation, and for excluding Metropolitan Toronto and including only Metropolitan Montreal and Metropolitan Vancouver, is based on the fact that, hopefully, the legislation will create jobs and stimulate economic activity in those areas. That seems to me to be refuted very effectively by the report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. I refer to the sixth report of that committee to the House which refers to the issue of employment creation. I quote from that report as follows:

> Since the fiscal provisions of the IBCs are restrictive (narrow definition of eligible transactions, no bad debt deductions against regular income, and daily matching obligations at arm's length) and the international tax environment is not favourable (withholding tax abroad), transfers of assets and new business conducted through the IBCs will be quite small. Any positive impact on employment will therefore be minimal. Solicitation and negotiation of transactions currently take place abroad, where the business is located, and will continue to do so.
> Management can be done partly in the offshore centres at present and a portion of that activity could be repatriated in Canada. The part that is in Canada today—certainly at the more senior levels—will continue at its present location. The same applies to credit analysis. Therefore, a small number of people required under the new legislation will work in the IBCs. Most probably the banks will only transfer existing positions and will certainly not create many jobs. Thus, the job impact of the IBC proposal appears modest.

I have heard that at the very most this may generate 20 to 30 jobs. As the committee indicates, those jobs are likely to be the transfer of existing jobs as opposed to new jobs. Therefore, if the basis for proposing this sort of legislation, which I think is clearly discriminatory, is to create jobs, no case has been made for that.

That brings me to the concern which I have as to what position I should take with respect to this Bill, bearing in mind that I find it extremely difficult to support. I must bear in mind at the same time, however, that there are other important financial provisions contained in Bill C-64. They include, for instance, the right to postpone until actually received in 1988 Canada Savings Bond interest which accrues in 1987 on series C-36 bonds. They also include the important provision that taxpayers can reduce or eliminate interest charged on deficient tax instalments by overpaying other instalments or paying other instalments before their due date.

In addition to that, bearing in mind the amendments which have been made to the Canada Pension Plan, the Bill provides that when an individual applies to split his or her pension with his or her spouse the portion going to the spouse will be taxed in his or her hands. Finally, the other important provisions are with regard to the child tax credit and the federal sales tax credit.

The Bill does not only deal with the issue of international banking centres but with a number of other very important tax aspects. Because it is a tax Bill and is in fact a Bill to implement the Budget, it is quite likely that the Government, in its wisdom, might consider a vote against this Bill to be a vote of non-confidence in the Government. I certainly have a great deal of confidence in the Government, notwithstanding my concerns with and objections to the provisions relating to international banking centres.

As you can appreciate, Mr. Speaker, while I do not believe that a vote against this Bill would be a vote of non-confidence in the Government, I can understand why you might believe otherwise. That puts me somewhat on the horns of a dilemma. I intend to resolve that dilemma by voting neither for nor against this Bill. I hope to be in the House when the Bill is voted on at third reading. I shall not rise in support of it but I will ask to be recognized by you, Mr. Speaker, so that I can indicate that I am present but will not be voting for the Bill.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate being recognized to participate in this important debate. It is our intention that this debate be relatively short. However, I do want to make some comments because I think that a great deal of mythology has built up surrounding the international banking centres which this legislation addresses.

During the time leading up to the committee's examination of the impact of international banking centres on various communities and after the concept was introduced by the Government many people thought this was a major step toward significant job creation, particularly in the Cities of Vancouver and Montreal. If you were to ask people about this in Vancouver even today they would say that they are looking forward to this designation because they need the jobs and the economic activity in western Canada and, more precisely, in the port city of Vancouver.

Unfortunately, the evidence shows that that assumption is not accurate. In 1984 the United States General Accounting Office did a thorough examination of the establishment in the United States of international banking centres. In 1984 they stated in their report: "Significant increases in employment and other real activity associated with IBCs—only 55 to 67 new jobs". In other words, after a number of years in one of the major centres of world commerce, the number of jobs that a small restaurant would create is all that resulted.

Some analysis has been done on what this will mean in terms of jobs in Vancouver and Montreal. The Canadian Bankers' Association studied what international banking centres had done in other places and applied that to Vancouver and Montreal. They factored in the extent of financial activity which takes place in those centres now. They concluded that between the two cities we may expect an increase of 26 jobs. The finance officials applied their analyses to the two centres and concluded that only 11 jobs would ultimately be created in Montreal and Vancouver combined.

The evidence which we have seen indicates that this is not the best way to create jobs. As a matter of fact, it is a very expensive way to do so. Studies which have been done to date indicate that about $32 million would be lost to the federal Treasury as the result of the creation of these international banking centres. If we are to lose $32 million to create 11 jobs, that works out to about $2.9 million per job. That is a very expensive job creation program. If job creation is our aim, we can do much better. The point I am trying to make is that the aim is not to create jobs in international finance. There must, therefore, be some other purpose.

What is the purpose? People have assumed that the creation of an international banking centre would result in all kinds of money flowing into Canada which we could use for investment purposes. That is not the concept of an international banking centre. An international banking centre does in fact attract offshore money, but only for investment offshore. In other words, it is a depository for a short period of time while overseas investments through that financial institution and its affiliates are being determined.

The creation of an international banking centre in the City of Vancouver would possibly attract funds which are presently going to the Cayman Islands or others of the rather peculiar tax havens. Those funds would not, however, be used for investment in Vancouver, British Columbia or Canada, but in offshore locations. There would be no direct benefit to Canada whatsoever through economic activity which would flow from the moneys in international banking centres. However, there are people who would benefit. Of course, the major beneficiaries would be the banks themselves.

This legislation creates an international banking centre where the profits generated in that centre would not be taxed. When we consider examples in the Cayman Islands and other places which we recognize as international tax havens, we see that substantial profits that are generated would be tax-free. At a time when we are expending a lot of energy and money deciding how to restructure our tax system to make it more equitable, fair and just, the Government is taking a rather peculiar step by creating an international banking centre and giving another break to the banks.

I do not fault the banks for this. As a matter of fact, the banks have made it quite clear that this step is probably not a good idea in terms of the financial system in Canada and its reputation in the financial circles of the world. They are simply going along with what the Government passes.

A number of bankers have told me not to blame them for taking advantage of tax laws that the Parliament of Canada creates. Last year I believe that not one of the big six banks in Canada paid any income tax. They have said that they should not be blamed for not paying taxes because they are only following the laws that the Government of Canada makes. If the Government wants them to pay taxes, it should change the laws. In a sense, they have a point. The fact that they will be the main beneficiaries raises questions. It would make it very difficult for me to support this legislation on those grounds alone.

This legislation will designate Vancouver and Montreal as international banking centres. I think we can do a great deal more as a Parliament to enhance the financial services available in Vancouver and Montreal, as well as in cities like Edmonton, Calgary, Winnipeg and many other Canadian centres where I believe we should be doing what we can to enhance the availability of financial services, particularly to the small and medium-sized businesses operating in those jurisdictions.

Many Members meet small and medium-sized business people in their constituency who have ideas and concepts they want to act upon but have difficulty obtaining financing to do so. They are hindered by the ability to obtain that financing.

As my colleague, the member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) indicated, it is time to set up some task forces in centres where the appropriate boards of trade and chambers of commerce could meet with urban officials as well as provincial and federal officials and representatives of the financial community to identify ways and means of enhancing the level of financial services in those centres. That is what people want.

Unfortunately, I believe the impression has been created that the designation of Vancouver as an international banking centre will present a host of new financial opportunities for local business people, industrialists, entrepreneurs and others. However, that is not the case.

The identification of Vancouver as an international banking centre is only symbolic. While it may send a certain message to some people in the country that we have identified Vancouver as an important West Coast city and port, no one who understands international banking will be fooled by this designation. They will realize that the critical decisions on national and international finance will be made in Toronto or New York, no matter what designation we give to centres around the country.

We are talking about a very sophisticated, effective and complicated international community of financiers. These trained and experienced individuals understand that to designate an international banking centre means very little, other than being a symbolic effort. They will know where the real, important and critical financial decisions will continue to be made.

While I am in favour of the concept of applying an international banking centre status to a city like Vancouver, I think it is somewhat of a smokescreen. It gives the illusion that something is being done and gives the people of Vancouver, and perhaps the people of western Canada, the impression that they have been given a significant designation, according to this Bill. Such is not the case.

It is important for us to recognize that we should not only do something of significance but also be seen to be doing something of significance. Unfortunately, only the latter is the case. The life of the average Vancouverite, British Columbian and Canadian will not significantly change as a result of this legislation. It is essentially a waste of our energy.

If anything, this legislation has made Parliament and the finance committee recognize that we must take steps to provide better financing vehicles for Canadian investors and business people. If this debate has moved us a step in that direction, I think we have made some progress. But let us not be duped into thinking that this will make a major difference in terms of the economic activity that is generated either in Vancouver or in Montreal.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? Debate.

Hon. John W. Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I intend to be brief. This has been difficult legislation, particularly for those Members who come from Toronto. I want to elaborate on some of the concerns raised by the Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) and the Member for York East (Mr. Redway).

It seems that there is no one who seriously believes that Clause 10 is reasonable or sensible. Certainly, no one in the banking community believes that to be the case.

Some Members believe that a symbolic gesture with regard to Vancouver or Montreal perhaps makes sense. That may be easier to accept if either of those centres were being considered on an experimental basis, but that is not the case. We are being asked to accept permanent legislation which no tax expert believes makes sense.

On that basis, as an honourable Member, I do not think I can do anything but vote against the legislation. While I suspect that no one will believe me, let me make it clear that I do not intend to vote for this legislation because I believe it is unnecessary.

If this were reasonable banking centre legislation, I would then be arguing that Toronto should be included. I cannot believe that anyone would not contemplate anything called international banking centre legislation in this country and exclude the place where 80 per cent of the banking is done.

• (1630)

The Hon. Member for York East has raised his dilemma, and I simply wish to say to him that under the spirit of reform, the only way that individual Members will ever be able to make their points to a Government will be on third reading. In the end, that is where we will have to stand up, even though you and I know, Sir, and the Member for York East and I both know that we will lose this fight. Sometimes it may be necessary, when it seems appropriate, because that is what this Government in absolute legitimacy said, that when Members want to vote against Bills, they should do so. Well, I intend to do so, Sir.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (for Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-87, an Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters and to amed or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak to Bill C-87 which was debated in the House recently. This is an important measure which is designed to finalize existing economic agreements and which Canada needs to ensure uniformity between our files and those of other countries. Such is the main purpose of Bill C-87, Mr. Speaker, and you will recall that it was debated at certain levels, but unfortunately they did not focus exclusively on the issue. Bill C-87 ought to be adopted as soon as possible because it is an excellent measure which will solve some of the minor problems we have with respect to customs tariffs between various countries.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any need to go over what has already been said about Bill C-87. I am sure Hon. Members are aware of that and know the Bill ought to be adopted at the earliest opportunity. Mr. Speaker, all I can ask Hon. Members of the House is to pass the Bill as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak a little on Bill C-87, because it covers two things. It is a revision and an updating of the Customs Act, and it also provides for a harmonized tariff between Canada and its major trading partners. The major trading partners of Canada include a number of countries, among others, the United States of America with which Canada has approximately 80 per cent of its trade.

When we are putting into place a harmonized system of tariffs for Canada, what is taking place, as the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has stated, and as the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) stated the other day, is at one level a matter of government routine, which is important for trade, important for exporters and importers in Canada, and is a necessary updating. Among other things, it will allow Canada to move to a system which is computerized, and a system which is more efficient and more effective. It will also mean that some of the unfortunate disputes on the amount of trade between the two countries and over trade statistics and so on will come to an end. Both countries, for example the United States and Canada, or Canada and Japan, or Canada and another trading partner, will be dealing with a common description.

The new tariffs which are laid out in the very substantial document under Bill C-87, which has been worked out over some time with close consultation with the industries affected, are more detailed, they are put on to a different base, and they do allow for a better reporting and a better understanding of what Canada's foreign trade is all about. Being a trading nation, that is extremely important to us.

When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) rose during report stage of this Bill and indicated how unfortunate he thought it was that anyone would even comment at report stage because the Bill was historically important, but then stated that we must have this by January 1, it raised some questions in my mind. I have given some serious thought to those questions since then. On third reading, I think it is important and appropriate perhaps to raise some of those questions with you, Mr. Speaker.

In Bill C-87 there are a number of very important clauses and powers. Those powers include a power to levy a surtax, a power to put import controls, and a power to suspend trading rights which Canada has granted by agreement with other countries. It includes a power to levy surcharges on certain types of imports. Most of all, it includes a power given to the Governor in Council, which I consider to be extremely important. Clause 62 states:

> The Governor in Council may, on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance, by order,
> (a) reduce or remove customs duties on goods imported from any country by way of compensation for concessions granted by that country or any other country, subject to such conditions as may be specified in the order; and
> (b) extend the benefit of any order made pursuant to paragraph (a) to any country as may be required by Canada's international obligations, subject to such conditions as may be specified in the order.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the first sub-paragraph of Clause 62 is particularly important since it provides that the Governor in Council, in fact the Cabinet, may, on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance, reduce or remove customs duties on goods imported from any country by way of compensation for concessions granted to Canada by that country or any country.

Mr. Speaker, what we have here is a clause that restates a section that existed in the former Customs Tariff, under which the Governor in Council or Cabinet may, without the approval of Parliament, reduce or eliminate tariffs between Canada and any other country, by way of compensation for concessions from the other country.

Mr. Speaker, as an intelligent man with considerable political experience, you are of course aware that we have at this time a situation that is being handled exactly in the manner described in Clause 62. It's the truth, Mr. Speaker. We have a situation where Parliament is being asked to authorize the Government to approve new tariffs for use by Canada in its trade with United States.

[English]

As I am sure you realize, Mr. Speaker, those powers raise some important questions which go to the very heart of the principles of this rededication of the Customs Tariff which is found in Bill C-87. Those principles relate both to Canadian sovereignty and to democracy. It is important that, in the past, Governments of various stripes, both Conservative and Liberal Governments, when reworking the Customs Tariff have always felt that certain trade actions were sufficiently important in Canada that they should be referred to Parliament.

• (1640)

It is curious that those trade actions do not include the power to reduce or eliminate tariffs under Clause 62 of the new Bill. Nonetheless, certain trade actions require reference to Parliament. In fact, surcharges, surtaxes, import controls, and such things cannot be maintained for a period longer than 180 days, or a bit longer if Parliament does not happen to be sitting throughout the period of time. Basically it is about six months, without even having a resolution of approval from Parliament.

I believe that it is a valuable move and that it is important because of the degree to which Customs Tariff is an important instrument of trade policy and therefore an important instrument for a trading nation of industrial and government economic policy.

If we decide to remove $2 billion worth of tariffs, as apparently the Government is now intending to do, I believe some consequential questions are properly raised which really should come back to Parliament as the body ultimately responsible for control of the purse. As you know, Mr. Speaker, control of the purse is something which is perhaps more an illusion than a reality under a parliamentary system of government and under majority government. The fact is that, as the system goes, the majority tends to control these things. Nonetheless, the unanswered question in respect of the power of the Government to take away or remove substantial amounts of tariffs is: Where is the money going to come from? Who will pay? Of course the answer is that we do not know. The problem is that we have not had the opportunity to ask those questions and to get those answers from the Government.

During the course of earlier stages of the Bill, members of my Party, myself as the proponent, moved a number of motions essentially designed to try to re-establish parliamentary control over the whole process. We gave, quite explicitly, our reasons for so doing.

The reasons we gave were the following ones. We said that in the past the power to exchange most-favoured-nation tariff treatment with a country under the general tariff before was relatively minor. We might have a trade exchange of perhaps a few million dollars a year. It was relatively routine for Canada to reach an agreement with another country to go ahead and exchange most favoured nation status or some other type of privilege. Therefore, there was not a loud cry for Parliament to be required to approve.

We said then—and I believe it is correct—that the situation has changed quite fundamentally. This is because of the determination of the Government, despite very broad and deep concerns raised by an increasing number of Canadians, to use the executive power to enter into a trading arrangement, possibly under Section 62 of the Act. I cannot say that for sure because I just do not know.

However, over the course of the next 24 days, with the Christmas and New Year's holidays along the way, the Government intends to take us helter-skelter into a binding trade agreement with the United States. One of its most important features comes squarely under the powers given under Bill C-87.

Earlier in second reading debate my colleagues debated that fact at length. It is our feeling that a Bill which would normally be routine is no longer routine in this case because of the circumstances surrounding it. Possibly the Government, which very few people in the country trust any more, is thinking that if it cannot get what it wants by means of action in Parliament, if Parliament quite possibly finds it difficult to get work done when we come back sometime in mid-January, it would then use executive power not just to sign the treaty with the United States of America but to implement a treaty which will have fundamental effects on every aspect of Canadian life.

This is why I say that I believe the fundamental principles which are at stake in Bill C-87 are principles related to sovereignty and to the question of democracy. Should Parliament have the power, which is quite clearly laid out in legislation, to ensure that the Government cannot do by the back door what it perhaps does not dare to do or might not be able to do by the front door?

I assume you would agree with me, Mr. Speaker, that it is not right for a Government to be able to do something surreptitiously when it refuses to, does not want to, or is blocked by Parliament from doing it in an open and overt way.

You may recall, Mr. Speaker, since you were a Member of the House at the time the Liberals were in power, the degree to which you and members of your Party fought valiantly on a number of occasions for the principle that Parliament should in fact continue to be sovereign. That does not mean that the majority should not have the right to decide in the end. I have a problem with that. However, we face a real problem in terms of what is happening now. The majority is seeking to make a decision on the basis of an election result in 1984 and on the basis of not having proposed and not having a mandate for the major changes in tariffs and other measures apparently anticipated in the agreement which will be made public over the course of the next two days or three days.

Until now we have had no word at all on exactly how the Government intends to proceed in terms of legislative approval of the details of the free trade agreement.

I ask the many Canadians who are increasingly concerned about it whether the Government of Canada is being adequate and fair in relation to average Canadians by publishing a document of some 2,000 pages in length on a Thursday and taking it to Parliament for three days or four days of debate the following week, debate which inevitably will not be able to get down to all the details and all the fine print of an agreement. Dare I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that it is some 200 pages long, has substantial numbers of pages of annexes that contain God knows what, and on top of that has some 1,500 pages of detailed tariff schedules.

I do not know how I could even read and absorb that material over the course of the three days or four days between its publication and the time that it actually comes up for debate. I must say that the democratic process where Parliament should have the right to consider major matters in a serious way will be a joke and a sham, if in fact we do not get any chance to consider in detail or in a more adequate way what will be proposed to us before then.

In a general way, as I am sure Hon. Members will point out, the intention of Bill C-87 is to have a harmonized system. When consultations were taking place between the Government of Canada and the trade community—exporters and importers—it was quite clearly indicated by the Department of National Revenue in hearings that took place across the country early this fall that the implementation of this harmonized system of tariffs would take place on January 1, 1988, under the condition that our major trading partners, that is the United States and Japan, adopted the harmonized system at the same time. Therefore, I was very surprised when I had my office talk to the American Embassy and to sources in Congress in order to find out whether the Americans, who after all are our major trading partners, were in fact on track in terms of bringing this new system into force.

In fact, what is happening is that Canada is harmonizing its tariff system with an American system which will not be harmonized under the new scheme as of January 1, 1988. It appears that the Americans intend to bring in their harmonized system in conjunction with the omnibus trade Bill. You may recall that the Americans have now cooled off on some of the protectionist elements of that. They have perhaps cooled off because of the threat by President Reagan that he intends to veto the omnibus Bill and, therefore, legislation is apparently to be introduced separately by a member of Congress.

• (1650)

That legislation, at last report of just a few days ago, has not yet been introduced. As you know, Congress is taken up this this week by the visit of Secretary Gorbachev of the Soviet Union. There is absolutely no certainty that the Americans will deal with this legislation prior to January 1. They too, of course, are also about to come up into their Christmas break.

Canada will harmonize with an American system that will not be harmonized. In Bill C-87, the Government will have the power to allow the Cabinet, at the stroke of a pen by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), to sign $2 billion worth of tariff cuts with the United States without any further reference to Parliament.

I want to talk a bit about that because to allow that kind of latitude in making decisions about Canada's tariff structure without reference to Parliament is wrong.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I say there is no justification for the Government of this country to have the power to cut Canadian tariffs on goods from the United States to the tune of $2 billion, without any reference to Parliament. The Minister of State (Finance) informed me I had no grounds to raise this question. Mr. Speaker, I read Clause 62 three times, and it is crystal clear the Government has the power to reduce tariffs on goods from the United States by way of compensation as defined by the Government, without any reference to Parliament.

[English]

As I said, the Government does not have a mandate for that. The Government is taking this action despite the fact that it does not have support in the polls. The Government is taking this action despite the fact that half the country opposes it. The Government is taking this action despite the clear opposition from the Premier of the largest province who has a mandate from the last election in Ontario when he won a rather overwhelming majority.

The Prime Minister has emerged from the First Ministers' Conference on the economy just the other day indicating that he had a consensus, that there was an emerging consensus. But the consensus of which he speaks consists of the support of four or five provinces, no more, and those provinces in turn have not had a mandate from their citizens. I know that in Quebec, for example—there is a coalition against free trade supported by all kinds of grass roots groups and by all the major unions in the Province of Quebec, with strong support from the Union des producteurs agricoles which represents 42,000 Quebec farmers. At its convention the other day in Quebec City, the UPA declared it was totally opposed to the Bill proposing these tariff reductions and the proposed Free Trade Agreement with the United States.

[English]

I would also point out that two of the provinces, which are part of the so-called consensus which has been raised by the Prime Minister, are in fact provinces where their leaders claim and purport to speak for their populations, yet the opinion polls indicate that they do not do so. Quite the contrary. Mr. Devine in Saskatchewan is far behind the New Democrats and Roy Romanow in popular support. Mr. Vander Zalm in British Columbia is in the same position. We had an example in the House of Commons today. Mr. Vander Zalm is supporting a measure of free trade with the United States despite the fact that the Government, behind closed doors, has just negotiated protection for the East Coast fisheries to ensure that processing would take place on the East Coast and that raw fish could not be exported from there, but the same protection is not given to the equally important fishery on the West Coast.

I find myself also at a loss to comment on Bill C-87 because the powers it gives relate to a very substantial reduction in tariffs and relate to certain tariffs being eliminated effective in one year from January 1, 1988. They also relate to other tariffs being eliminated at a very rapid rate over five years. Since the text of the agreement has not been released and the details of the tariff cuts have not been released, I have not had an opportunity to talk to my constituents to find out what their reaction would be. I suppose, since we are being asked to look at the harmonized tariff schedules part of this Bill, that I could comment in some detail on what is being done, except that I have not seen the detail and it is impossible for me to comment in any knowledgeable way.

If I can go on I would like to talk in more general terms about what all this means. The Government has demonstrated through a number of different actions that it is not a Government which is credible to average Canadians. It is not a Government which can be trusted by average Canadians, whether on pensions, the tuna deal or now on the outrageous behaviour of the Hon. Member for York—Peel (Mr. Stevens), by refusing to take appropriate action after the report by Mr. Justice Parker. This Government has lost the trust of Canadians. Yet when it comes to the question of tariff cuts which it can take by the powers of Bill C-87, the Government is simply saying, "Trust us and we will do the right thing". When they say "the right thing", Mr. Speaker, it is becoming clear to me that "the right thing" is those things that are demanded by the political right.

The Business Council on National Issues originally proposed that we should have free trade, supported by a Bay Street lawyer, Donald Macdonald, a former Liberal Cabinet Minister who headed the Macdonald Commission. He indicated that he too thought Canada should have free trade. Many business spokespeople have advocated that we go to the kind of tariff cuts and the other arrangements that so fundamentally affect Canadian sovereignty involved in the free trade agreement. But when it comes down to average Canadians, the situation is the opposite. Farmers, trade unionists, auto workers and people in the cultural industries, who are concerned about the survival of Canada's soul and culture, are overwhelmingly opposed. It is ironic that the Government should claim it has a consensus when the consensus it has is a view of the world which may be held by Mr. D'Aquino and his friends in the Business Council on National Issues, which may be held by the major corporations in Canada but which increasingly is not a view held by average Canadians.

In the last two or three weeks there has been a dramatic shift in opinion in Ontario against the free trade deal. I believe that we will find very shortly that a dramatic shift is taking place in other parts of the country as well. Yet the Prime Minister and his Government are threatening our country with a trade deal which will hurt those average Canadians, and people are beginning to realize it.

I would like to go on, but I believe it is five o'clock. I intend to continue when this debate resumes tomorrow or whenever it is called again.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's order paper.

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

ADVISABILITY OF ESTABLISHING GUIDELINES FOR ANNUAL REPORTS OF FEDERAL DEPARTMENTS AND CROWN CORPORATIONS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of establishing uniform guidelines and an evaluation procedure similar to those presently in use in Australia, upon which Government Departments, Boards, Crown Corporations and Agencies should base their annual reports and thereby establish a system by which those reports which have most effectively complied with these guidelines may be acknowledged.

He said: Mr. Speaker, if you are like me, and I suspect that at least to some extent you are, you receive dozens and dozens of annual reports every week of the year. I do not know what you do with those annual reports. Perhaps you sit down deep in the recesses of your office and read through each one in careful detail, starting off at the beginning of the year and working your way toward the end of the year. Perhaps you stay up burning the midnight oil, trying to get those reports read from cover to cover.

I can see by your motions, Mr. Speaker, that that is in fact the way you treat these things. I thought that maybe, just maybe, you might have filled your garbage basket with quite a few of these reports. If you do not fill up your garbage basket with these annual reports on a regular basis, I venture to say that you have a hard time battling your way through the front door of your office after you have been in it for a year or two. So many of these reports are received all the time. I know that you must have the same problems I do.

Reports are issued on just about every conceivable situation and every conceivable body seems to send out these reports. The Freshwater Fish Marketing Board does. I know that if our hon. colleague from the Western Arctic were here, he would rise to shake his fist after hearing about the Freshwater Fish Marketing Board. We receive annual reports from the Dairy Commission, from Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and from the Bank of Canada. I see my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) shuddering when I mention the annual report of the Bank of Canada. That is one of his favourite subjects, and I hope he will have a few things to say about the annual reports from the Bank of Canada.

We receive annual reports from just about everyone. In fact, we received one today, and you probably read it already, Mr. Speaker. The report we received today was from the Department of National Revenue, Customs, Excise and Taxation, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1987. Does it not strike you as a little strange, Mr. Speaker, that today is December 8, 1987, and we are just receiving the annual report of the Department of National Revenue for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1987? It should strike you as strange. However, it should not strike you as being any stranger than the way we receive all these other annual reports.

As the House knows, we receive annual reports from Departments, boards and commissions. Sometimes we get them from Crown corporations and sometimes we do not because they are not all under the same obligation to report.

As you have gone through all these annual reports, Mr. Speaker, you may have been impressed by them. I see you shaking your head, and I know that, like me, you were not really impressed by them. In fact, if you were not, you are in good company. You are in good company because not many Members of Parliament, I suspect, are impressed by them, and certainly the Auditor General of Canada has indicated that he is not impressed by them at all. In fact, I am sure you read his annual report from cover to cover. It is a thin little volume in which he says specifically that he is not impressed with the quality of the annual reporting that goes on by all these boards, commissions, Departments and corporations.

One of the reasons the Auditor General is not impressed is the very reason I pointed out when I mentioned this annual report from the Department of National Revenue. The legislation which sets up these Departments, boards, and agencies usually provides that these bodies must file annual reports. The annual reports must deal with the fiscal year, but the bodies do not have to file their annual reports until some time after the end of the calendar year. The fiscal year ends on March 31 of each year while the calendar year ends on December 31 of each year.

It is astounding that information that is compiled as of March 31 would not get into the hands of Members of Parliament or the public until after the end of the calendar year, and in fact well into the new calendar year. It is that sort of thing that causes the Auditor General, me and I know you, Mr. Speaker, to be unimpressed by the annual reports we are receiving.

While the legislation creating these Departments, boards and commissions does specify that there must be annual reports and when they must be presented, it does not specify what is supposed to be in the annual reports. It does not identify in any way, shape or form to whom the annual reports are supposed to be addressed. Are they supposed to be addressed to you and I as Members of Parliament, Mr. Speaker? Are they supposed to be addressed to the public? Are they supposed to be addressed to the Government? Are they supposed to be addressed to the employees or the management of these organizations? Who knows?

In fact, these organizations can virtually do their own thing. They do not have to worry about it at all because there is nothing in the legislation that says that they have to do anything other than send us a piece of paper entitled annual report. They do not even have to do that until after the end of the calendar year.

As the Auditor General has said in his report, there is a good chance that the information contained in these annual reports is completely irrelevant. In fact, it can often be months and months old and sometimes we get these annual reports just a month or so before the next annual report should be compiled.

Another thing the Auditor General points out in his report is the fact that very often these Departments do not meet the statutory deadlines they are required to meet when filing reports. Sometimes, annual reports are not filed at all in some years and sometimes, as in some cases about which I have read, Departments have to go back and reconstruct the facts so that two or three years later, they can produce annual reports to comply with the requirements of the legislation that set them up.

It seems ludicrous to me that we should operate in this way. As you will recall, Mr. Speaker, because I know you read it thoroughly and probably committed it to memory, the Auditor General in his report said that the Comptroller General of Canada should re-examine the very need for these reports in the first place, but if they are to be continued, there should be some minimum standards as to form and content.

I wonder what sort of procedure we might put in place to provide those minimum standards. Shall we leave it to the Government to put in place some new minimum standards? I would be interested in hearing, when the Government responds to this motion, if it will do that or not, but I suspect not. In fact, while inquiring around, I was enlightened by the Principal Clerk of the House of Commons, Mr. Michael Kirby, a good friend of yours, Mr. Speaker. He usually sits at the Table, but unfortunately he is not there tonight.

Michael Kirby pointed out to me that there is a better way and that there are other jurisdictions that use this better way. In fact, our sister Commonwealth country, Australia, has devised a better way of dealing with the reporting system.

Australia has guidelines or minimum standards like those spoken of by the Auditor General. It has a method for evaluating the reports that come out and it has a system of rewarding Departments, boards, committees, commissions and Crown corporations for turning out good reports. That makes a lot of sense to me.

Apparently Australia has set up a panel of judges to evaluate these reports. The panel consists of five people who come from a variety of backgrounds, and those backgrounds make sense to me. One of the members of the panel is a retired senior public servant, someone who has had some experience putting together these reports. Another is a university professor of public administration, someone who is usually critical of the way reports and other things in government are put together. A third is a member of the Press Gallery.

My gosh, no one is in the Press Gallery tonight. However, we know that members of the Press Gallery are all listening to every word of this debate on television. Whenever we ask them why they were not sitting in the Press Gallery, they tell us not to worry, they were back in their offices watching us on television. We know they are doing that tonight. I know at least one member of that illustrious Press Gallery would love to sit on a panel like this and be able to judge the information they are always critical of. They are always trying to utilize the freedom of information system to get more information. This would be their opportunity to produce quality information.

Another member of the Australian panel is a chartered accountant because a good deal of this information is financial. Lo and behold, another member is a politician, someone like you. Oh, no, not like you, Mr. Speaker, but like some other Members of the House. You are a little cut above that, but the rest of us fall into that category. That is not a bad perspective to bring to bear on a panel that judges the quality of these reports. That is the sort of system they have in Australia, and it makes sense to me.

What are the criteria set up by the Australians? They require the report to answer the following question. Note this: They have questions which the report has to address. First of all, what are we here for? That is an interesting question. If some Crown corporations addressed that question they might not be able to come up with an answer.

The second question is: What do they do? They are supposed to detail the sort of things they actually do.

The third question is: Who is it that does it? They have to tell us who is involved in the process. Have you ever seen that in one of those annual reports that you read? I can see you shaking your head. You have read them all from cover to cover, but I bet you do not know who actually carries out the functions. They do not tell you what the functions are anyway. Yet that is the sort of thing we would have if we followed the Australian system.

They also have to give us some sort of idea of how well they perform. Is that not interesting? They have to actually evaluate and assess themselves. That is putting a pretty heavy burden on a Department or Crown corporation, committee, board or agency. We would be asking them to actually tell us how well they think they are performing. That is incredible because it might be embarrassing. Instead of having a happy face on some of these reports, we would perhaps have a red face. That might be bad for them, but I suspect it would be good for the rest of us.

As well as those things, they actually require information like the names of people who do the jobs and their telephone numbers. Can you believe that? The public would actually know who it is they want to get hold of to deal with a particular problem. That is inconceivable, but that is what the Australians would have you put in a report. To me it makes sense.

Then there is the question of timeliness. Does the report actually get filed on time? The Auditor General tells us a lot of them in this country do not, but in Australia they rap your knuckles if you do not get it in on time. You do not get a gold star on your work book the way you would in Grade 1 or 2. In Australia it is important that this be done, and I think it should be important here.

Then we have financial information. I see the Hon. Member for Québec-Est (Mr. Tremblay) over there. I know he is most concerned about Part III of the Estimates each year. They contain some expenditure material, but only of a minimal nature. The same thing with respect to the Public Accounts. We could be getting relevant, detailed and important information in that annual report if we followed a system like the Australians are.

I know that the Government in its response, because I was told ahead of time, is going to say that in fact it has a wonderful system in place right now. It makes a lot of sense. We do things perfectly. There is nothing wrong with the system. My suggestion of the Australian method would unnecessarily complicate things. It would just ruin the whole system we have, and it is such a wonderful system.

What I hope the Government will talk about is what the Auditor General had to say about that wonderful system. I hope it will mention, as I have, some of the Auditor General's concerns, the fact that he is not impressed with the quality of the reports, and the fact that there is nothing to specify what is to be in the report. There is no purpose to the report. There is no idea of who the Auditor General is. The reports are often late and perhaps completely irrelevant because of the time frame in which they have to report.

It will be interesting to see if the Government addresses those issues and, in doing so, can honestly say that it has a good system which does not need to be changed. This motion is put forward for the purpose of improving the system. Surely you and I, and all other Members in the Chamber here tonight, in fact all Members of the House of Commons, and all members of the Press Gallery who are watching on television, are here to ensure that we do things better. We are not here to do things worse. We are not here to just carry on making the same mistakes. We are here to do things better. That is the purpose of the motion.

That motion, which you so eloquently read and which I moved, says:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of establishing uniform guidelines and an evaluation procedure similar to those presently in use in Australia, upon which Government Departments, Boards, Crown Corporations and Agencies should base their annual reports and thereby establish a system by which those reports which have most effectively complied with these guidelines may be acknowledged.

In fact, maybe rewarded. I would like to move that the motion be referred to committee so that we can deal with it properly and the Government can address it properly so as to improve the system.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, in addressing the motion tabled by the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) to establish guidelines and evaluation procedures for annual reports, I would like to emphasize the major progress made in this country on the quality of the information the Government provides on departments and programs through the new version of the Estimates.

Hon. Members are of course aware they now have access to a vast store of new and more detailed information in the Estimates and that these documents, in their present form, are a remarkable improvement in terms of disclosure of the information that forms the basis for government accountability.

Briefly, the new Estimates are divided into three parts. Part I is concerned with the multi-year expenditure plan, which is first tabled in Parliament as part of the Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance, in the form of an overview of public spending which highlights past and future spending priorities and their impact on the economy. Part I also contains a detailed description of the expenditure plan in terms of each of the eight policy sectors, including the Government's objectives and initiatives for each sector. Part I also contains an analysis of the Estimates according to the various types of expenditures, including operating or capital costs of departments and agencies, transfer payments, payments to certain Crown corporations, public debt charges, and loans, investments and advances.

Part II of the Estimates lists the votes we are asked to approve annually by the Government when it tables its appropriation Bills. Each vote justifies the amount that may be spent and, as drafted, constitutes a legal statement of the conditions for appropriation of funds. Consequently, the votes form the legal basis for Parliamentary scrutiny of the Government's use of appropriations.

Mr. Speaker, the most important change resulting from the extended review of the Estimates, a change that is directly related to the Hon. Member's motion, was the addition of a separate expenditure plan for each department to Part III. The plan describes every program implemented by a department and provides an overview of its operations, the factors likely to affect the program, action taken and objectives. The plan provides information on the results of individual programs, including facts that will help Members determine whether results were as expected and objectives were met. The scope of these documents covers both planned and realized results. Information on both planned and realized results is provided every year, so that Members have an overview of the output of a department over the last complete financial year.

Mr. Speaker, these expenditure plans are a tremendous adjunct to any serious consideration of the Government's programs, previous results and future objectives. On the whole, the information on plans and program output that appears in these documents contributes substantially to documenting the Government's accountability to Parliament. As pointed out by the Auditor General in a recent annual report, Part III of the Estimates is still the best instrument Members have for judging the validity and worth of individual Government programs.

We feel that the use of these plans as the main instrument of accountability to Parliament has a number of important advantages. First of all, whether for their own use or as Members of a Standing Committee, all Members now need only one document to examine both previous results and future plans. Second, plans established for the coming fiscal year are subject to a second scrutiny, since they have to be defined in terms of the program's recent results. This procedure has the advantage of cutting down on the administrative workload we would otherwise have if we had to examine in real output a separate annual report.

Mr. Speaker, that is probably what would happen if the House were to approve the Hon. Member's motion. The point is that the new Part III has kept both duplication and workload to a minimum, for users as well as for the departments who prepare these papers.

However, Mr. Speaker, these are not the only reports the Government receives as part of the accountability process. Hon. Members know that the Public Accounts of Canada now contain better information summaries on the Government's financial performance. Improvements were made in response to Parliament's need for appropriate and complementary information on the Estimates directly based on the Budget Papers.

Mr. Speaker, the Government is committed to ensuring that Parliament is well informed, not only by providing a vast amount of detailed information, but also by making a consistent effort to improve the quality of that information. As my colleagues must have noticed, tremendous progress has been achieved in the field of accounting practices and standards. As a result, Canada has an excellent record for the way we report on our activities to Parliament. Other countries have recognized Canada's leading position in this respect, and the Auditor General has commented publicly on this fact on many occasions.

I am sure Hon. Members are aware of the great progress accomplished in the field of communications, the results achieved through each program by providing summaries on program assessments, more detailed information on the goals of the programs as well as the efficiency and profitability of their operations.

I might also point out that our Government did respond quickly to requests from parliamentary committee members seeking to obtain different information. It is now possible to get more detailed information in Part III of the estimates concerning various public projects, including on such issues as transfer of technology, unemployment insurance benefits, industrial fallout, if any, and trade exchanges.

The fact that Members now have access to better information could not happen at a better time: as a result of the parliamentary reform, committees play a much bigger role in the consideration of policies, programs and recommendations with respect to public expenditures. To a large extent, the efficiency of the new committee structure and the benefits which flow from improved research and other technical support now available to committees depend on the accuracy of the information.

To sum up, Mr. Speaker, I would stress that specific and precise guidelines are in addition to the reforms made by this Government concerning the availability of information. I believe we should continue to set up new mechanisms and fine tune those already in use so that the Government can be proud of the efficiency of its programs and of its financial management processes. Canadian men and women alike may eventually benefit from our efforts in this field.

[English]

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on this motion and I am glad that my hon. friend, the Member for York East (Mr. Redway), put it forward. Annual reports of government Departments, Crown corporations, and other government agencies are ignored for the most part by Members of Parliament and the public. I am glad that the Hon. Member had the opportunity to state his case and I enjoyed hearing the Government's response to it.

Before I make my own comments, I want to do something that is normally not possible in this House. I want to give my colleague, the Member for York East, the opportunity to respond to what the Government said about his motion that we take a serious look at annual reports.

The Member for York East has heard the government response and put his response to it in writing. He says: "After reading that speech prepared by the Government, will the Hon. Member for Quebec East (Mr. Tremblay) be able to look the Auditor General in the eye when he next sits with the Public Accounts Committee?"

That is a strong statement. It gives us the flavour of my hon. friend's response to the Government's response to his motion. That is a unique contribution to debate in this House. It adds to the public discussion and democratic process.

The Hon. Member has moved:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of establishing uniform guidelines and an evaluation procedure similar to those presently in use in Australia, upon which Government Departments, Boards, Crown Corporations and Agencies should base their annual reports and thereby establish a system by which those reports which have most effectively complied with these guidelines may be acknowledged.

It is a good idea to look at annual reports. Why otherwise do we have them? The Government's response does not persuade me that it has thought the problem through. The Hon. Member for Quebec East basically said that there had already been progress made in the provision of information to Parliament through the new budgetary process. He said that the progress in the way budget and expenditure items are reported to parliamentary committees is sufficient and we need not bother with annual reports.

If we already have the information we need within the budgetary process, why am i wasting my time talking to this motion?

One could ask, what is the purpose of annual reports? Perhaps at one extreme it could be said that there is no need for annual reports because they do not provide the required information. At the other extreme it could be suggested that annual reports are such a valuable source of information that there is no need for the expenditure accounts or the budgetary papers even in their new format.

Clearly, both of those extremes would not be considered by the parliamentary committee if it were to study the motion being put by my hon. friend.

We must consider the basic question about the purpose of annual reports. I believe their purpose is to provide information to Members of Parliament, the public and the press. Next, we must consider what kind of information government Departments, Crown corporations and other government agencies must provide so that they are more accountable to the public.

My hon. friend has clearly pointed out that there is a real lack of guidelines for providing such information. Other countries, such as Australia, have devised a system that has basic guidelines with respect to what information should be included in annual reports. I believe we should follow that procedure.

It would be a progressive step for any Government to consider the purpose of annual reports and therefore provide the public with the required information to evaluate whether a government Department or agency is doing its job. The failure to address the question of annual reports reflects the general nature of Government not to address the purpose behind its activities. As a result, the taxpayer's hard earned money is wasted. That is why the Auditor General is able to write rather voluminous reports every year, indicating where money has been wasted.

Perhaps we can rectify this by beginning to study the whole question of annual reports. I commend my friend, the Hon. Member for York East, for bringing this motion forward.

My experience as the NDP Post Office critic supports the argument he is making today. The annual reports from the Post Office do not provide the kind of information we need in order to make a real evaluation of what it is or is not doing and determine how it can function better. The establishment of straightforward and simple guidelines for annual reports will improve the process of public accountability for the activities of Government.

I encourage the House to support his motion so that a parliamentary committee can consider this question and establish some good guidelines for annual reports which may contain useful information that will help keep the Government accountable, as is only proper in a democratic society.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to support the motion of my friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway). As a new member of the Public Accounts Committee, it has been my pleasure to work with him as the Vice-Chairman and with the Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) as Chairman. I want to congratulate them on their hard work on the committee and I am sure that we will see better auditing and greater attention paid to annual reports as a result of their efforts.

It has been stated that many annual reports are shelved and little attention is paid to them. Since many of them are referred to a committee, perhaps it is the committees that should spend more time on these reports.

From time to time, the Auditor General makes an in depth audit of a particular government Department. As a Veterans Affairs' spokesman a few years ago, I found an extensive audit of Veterans Affairs by the Auditor General most helpful. As a result of that information, we were able to clean up the Veterans Affairs Department, which was being run very poorly.

I want to take this opportunity today to pay tribute to the late J.J. Macdonell, who was Canada's Auditor General prior to Mr. Dye. He introduced comprehensive auditing to Canada, and I am informed that he was one of the leaders in the world in introducing such a procedure.

Comprehensive auditing means value for money, which deals with efficiency, economy and devising measures to assess the effectiveness of auditing. Our present Auditor General, Mr. Kenneth Dye, has continued the fine work that was introduced by Macdonell. He is President of IDI, an international organization of supreme audit institutions. Its members form the national audit offices of countries belonging to the United Nations. Our Auditor General is showing leadership in helping the Third World countries have proper and effective auditing systems.

We must also pay tribute to our Auditor General for having probably one of the most efficient offices in government. His office works at 81 per cent productivity, which I believe is probably the most efficient of any government Department or Crown corporation. He must be congratulated for his efforts in obtaining such productivity in his office.

Our Public Accounts Committee will be dealing more extensively with productivity in the New Year. This is important because millions of dollars can be saved with increased productivity throughout the whole government system. There will never be 100 per cent efficiency with big government. We have big government in Canada which the majority of Canadians want. But they will have to understand it will cost them a lot of money, because it is so unwieldy.

I wish to point out that the Auditor General has congratulated the Government for making a lot of improvements in efficiency, and his reports are not as damaging as they have been in the past. The Auditor General's reports are most helpful to Government, Crown corporations, and different Departments in order for them to clean up their act, so to speak.

I also must congratulate my hon. friend, the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, on the tenth report. They have certainly gone to great lengths in making recommendations for proper accountability throughout the whole system. I hope that the Government pays strict attention to this tenth annual report. A lot of effort has gone into it, and there are many excellent suggestions and recommendations in this report.

The motion presented by my friend, the Hon. Member for York East speaks directly to the account to be taken of any performance indicators and other quantitative measures relevant to an evaluation of a Department's operations. I believe that the establishment of an evaluation procedure and uniform guidelines for government Departments, boards, Crown corporations and agencies to base their annual reports on would establish a system by which those reports could be most effectively compiled.

The Australian model endeavours to pursue such ends, and much of what I am saying here today is gleaned from their experience. The Australian model offers much in terms of streamlining the annual reports of government Departments, boards, Crown corporations, and agencies.

The following criteria exemplify the standards begged by this particular motion: The clarification of a Department's over-all function through the detailed reference to each division of a Department as well as its various branches; the integration of the objectives of a Department and a review of its operations so that there is some sense of how well that Department has been performing, and what, in the Department's view, are the relevant indicators. Because a Department is a large and complicated organization with responsibility for a wide range of related activities, the format chosen to serve as a sensible exposition should be detailed yet well proportioned; provide a brief introduction and overview of major or recent developments; relate management structures to the working environment; and provide an informative account of the Department's consultative mechanisms with other bodies.

Such reporting would be able to ensure a strong early focus on management issues, to allow frank statements of administrative problems and policies, and to provide, through an informative appendix, a listing of statistics on a range of important matters. Departments should be more selective, concentrating on those statistics that are relevant performance indicators in respect of a Department's basic responsibilities.

In the financial area, this motion concerns the use of program or functional statements of expenditures, the reporting of future commitments, and the details of any separate funds administered by Departments.

The demand for an annual report arises from the community interest in the accountability of public bodies. Whatever else reports might hope to do, they must address this demand. Information provided in a report should be relevant to this primary task, and in this regard there should be a judicious selection of tables and statistics to give the reader a well-informed picture of the Department's actual workload.

The value of reports is substantial, substantially influenced by their early availability. The timeliness of reports is so important that Departments should make every effort to publish their reports as early as possible in the new financial year.

Although departmental reports are first and foremost accounts of internal administration, they should seek to address for the public the basic purpose of answering, what we are, what we do, who does it, and how well we perform. The basics of public accountability would be served if such questions were answered in departmental reports.

I have a section here from the Auditor's General's Office. It is on value for money auditing. It is an excellent document for all Members to read to show what the Auditor General is attempting to achieve.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to take a few minutes to speak in support of the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway). I would also like to take this opportunity to congratulate him for his contribution and for his work on the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

[English]

Some years ago the Auditor General and his predecessors began to do their work for us in the House of Commons. They made a more uniform system of reporting some of the financial information. That has been very useful in terms of compiling numbers and expenditures of various government Departments, and some Crown corporations and agencies of the Government.

However, in our quest to standardize some of those procedures, perhaps we have overlooked another area that has to be far more uniform and standardized, and an area that we need to make more accessible not only to Members of Parliament but also to the general public. That area is the area of annual reports of the various government Departments, corporations, boards, agencies, and so on.

Hardly a day passes that a Member of Parliament does not receive an annual report of some sort in his or her office. As you will know, Mr. Speaker, there are days in which we actually get stacks of them coming from all over the place, including corporations of the Government, and also private corporations that are proud of their achievements and want to send Members of Parliament of all stripes their annual reports in order to highlight what it is they have done during the previous fiscal year. Sometimes those reports are interesting. Perhaps I am the exception, but I do not read every single one of those reports. Possibly other Members do, but we do try to read or glance over the ones that are important and informative to us.

As a Member of Parliament from a largely rural constituency, I represent probably a greater number of dairy farmers than anyone else in the House. One report that I always read from cover to cover is the annual report of the Canadian Dairy Commission. I find that the information contained in that report is indeed useful to me in representing my constituents.

This particular report contains everything, such as the cost of production formula that is utilized by the commission in establishing the revenues that will be generated to farmers, and so on. It talks about the importation of cheese into this country. It talks about the subsidies paid. It talks about the production of industrial milk versus fluid milk, and everything else Hon. Members would want to know about the operations of this particular commission.

In my opinion it is generally well prepared, well presented, and attractive to read and to view. It has a few pictures, not 14 eight-by-ten glossies of the Minister or anything excessive like that. However, it is well balanced and has the audited financial statements appended to the document in question. It is really a very useful tool. It is probably not perfect. I suppose none of them are, but at least it is interesting.

Sometimes other annual reports that we see have so little information that we actually wonder why anyone bothered to put them out. Others are so complex that they are virtual encyclopaedias of how the government Departments in question work.

Obviously what we need is a more standard formula, not one which is identical, because what is good for the Canadian Dairy Commission is not necessarily what is important for the Canada Lands Company, to use another corporation with which I have some familiarity. These two corporations or agencies operate very differently, and the procedures they use should probably not be identical. Nevertheless, there should be a standard form by which, if a parliamentarian or anyone else opens up one of these documents, he will know what it is. The first thing he is presented with is the letter by the Minister presenting his or her report. The second thing is the board of directors of the corporation, followed by the audited statements, the operations, and so on. Someone picking up one of these documents should be able to see at a glance what happens.

Another matter of interest to me—and I am not sure how it would be realized; but I am expressing the view nevertheless—is that there should be a standard or more uniform time of reporting for some of these corporations. Some of them operate on the government fiscal year, others operate on the calendar year, and some operate on scattered fiscal years in a way similar to that of private companies. Because they are all Crown corporations or agencies of the Crown in one way or another, we should at least make uniform, or a little more uniform, the time in which they are called upon to report. If that is deemed to be a serious overload on the system, perhaps we could have a number of them reporting on March 31 and a number of them reporting in September, October, or whenever. That would ensure that 90 days or 120 days after the end of the fiscal year, Members of Parliament would be able to get the annual reports of all Crown corporations from a to l, and six months later it would be the same for the ones from m to z.

Not only must the information be made available to us, but it must be made available in a timely manner so that we can use it. Also, there should be a parallel means of identifying to parliamentarians, to the media, and to everyone else those occasions when people are in breach of the established procedure.

Yesterday it came to my attention that one Crown corporation had failed to file its audited statements in the prescribed time according to the Financial Administration Act. That information was not published in the Public Accounts of Canada. All Members of the House, and probably those of the other place, have received copies of the Public Accounts of Canada. We all had them in our offices. However, how many people actually knew that that information was missing from the complete set of volumes? There should be a mechanism by which the authority, responsible for publishing the information, releases some sort of communique at the time the documents are published to identify and highlight to parliamentarians and all other Canadians that the deficiencies in the system are such that the agency which has failed to report is easily identified. Then we can raise questions, or whatever we must do, to ensure that next year the offender does not repeat what it did. We could only achieve that if we can identify it. There must be a means to identify those who are delinquent.

The time available to me is probably close to an end, so I will conclude my remarks by suggesting to the Hon. Member that his initiative is excellent. I hope he will succeed in having the issue dealt with and voted on as soon as possible, so that it can be brought to the attention of a parliamentary committee in future.

I am not sure whether the Standing Committee on Public Accounts or the Standing Committee on Government Operations would be the appropriate one to deal with the issue. I think either one would be excellent. Hopefully we can come up with good and constructive recommendations toward having more uniform forms of reporting in terms of annual reports of government Departments, agencies, and Crown corporations.

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the contribution made by the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) has been most important, but I could not miss this opportunity to say a few words, although I have not much time left. You are being rather hard on me, Mr. Speaker, in giving me so little time while other Members in this House have had a good ten minutes. All I have is those meager three or four minutes.

I am most pleased to mention that the Hon. Member for York East is referring to establishing uniform guidelines and an evaluation procedure similar to the one now in use in Australia.

Mr. Speaker, speaking of Australia, I am sure Hon. Members in this House will allow me a short digression concerning Australia, and I will take this opportunity to send my kind regards to my nephews Gaëtan and Sylvain Grisé who left Canada two years ago and have since been living in Australia, and especially, to Gaëtan, the elder one, who was married over the weekend in Sydney, Australia. I would therefore like to take this opportunity, on behalf of the whole Grisé family, to extend to them my best wishes of happiness on their wedding. And since in Australia a name like Gaëtan Grisé does not set you very far, Mr. Speaker, he decided to change his name to Polo Martin, which is much more popular in Australia. So, Polo Martin—

[English]

On behalf of my entire family I wish to extend to Polo and Fiona—

Mr. Redway: You are sending them a big koala bear.

Mr. Grisé: —best wishes in their married life and happiness together for a long time.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention, in connection with the motion—

An Hon. Member: Let's get back to it.

Mr. Grisé: We only went to Australia for a moment and I am seriously getting back to the motion moved by the Hon. Member for York East.

It should be mentioned, in fact, that Canada has one of the best systems in the world for presenting official documents, in both official languages, of course.

During the past 25 years, there were many reports and commissions, such as the Glassco Commission in 1962, the Lambert Royal Commission in 1979—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1), the order is dropped from the Order Paper.

It being 6 o'clock, pursuant to order made today, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT OF LAW TO MAKE DEATH THREAT A CRIMINAL OFFENCE

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, on Monday, December 7, 1987 in Montreal, Mrs. Irène Joly was killed by her ex-husband, a Mr. Dupré, who was arrested and jailed several hours later. In January 1986, Mrs. Joly had been stabbed several times by her ex-husband but survived, thanks to the unexpected arrival of her daughter. Her ex-husband received a suspended sentence, although the Crown prosecutor demanded a prison sentence. Since that time, Mr. Dupré had been following and harassing his ex-wife and her children. The court ignored the prosecutor's request for an order preventing the ex-husband from getting closer than 1,000 feet to his victim. For six months, her son drove her to work because he was afraid his mother would get hurt. Last Monday, Mrs. Joly was attacked and killed by her ex-husband.

Mr. Speaker, the law must be changed to make a death threat a criminal offence. At the present time, the police cannot do more than they are already doing because threatening to kill someone, however serious the threat may be, is not recognized as a serious offence. I want to ask the Government to act quickly, because I may remind the House that this is the second woman killed by her ex-husband in the past six months. Perhaps it would help reduce violence in the family and make ex-husbands realize their wives are not their personal property and that even if they leave their husbands, that is no reason to kill them.

REFUGEES

SENATE DELAY IN PASSING LEGISLATION

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, four months ago the Government introduced legislation that will make our refugee determination system faster and fairer. For four months that legislation has been held up by both opposition Parties and now by the Senate. It is time for action.

Thirty thousand people are expected to come to Canada this year and file refugee claims. Even though 70 per cent of those claims will be groundless, each case could take months and years to decide. Our present refugee system is inefficient, inadequate and inappropriate.

Canadians want and deserve a refugee determination process that treats all claimants fairly and promptly. The measures introduced last August will do just that.

Are the opposition Parties waiting for another boatload of people to arrive on our shores before realizing the necessity of changing our system? Or will they join with us and the majority of Canadians who recognize that it is time to take action and put the policy introduced by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) in place now? Canadians and needy refugees around the world can wait no longer.

TAX REFORM

FLOW-THROUGH SHARES—CALL FOR RETENTION

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, Canadians living in northern regions are very concerned over the plans of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) for flow-through shares.

New Democrats realize flow-through shares have done much to alleviate a key problem in the mining industry, namely, the difficulties small companies have in raising capital for mineral exploration. Clearly there has been a very significant increase in activity and this has had the effect of creating many new jobs in regions of high unemployment.

Speaking in Noranda-Rouyn on September 24, our Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), said:

This fiscal measure corresponds well to the objectives of my Party in terms of the creation of jobs and the development of resource-based regions.

We do have some concerns with the existing system.

[Translation]

More specifically, we want to channel the benefits to small businesses which always have trouble raising investment capital.

Actually, the corporate tax system is supposed to help capitalize small businesses which are the foundation of economic renewal and job creation in our regions.

[English]

It is vital that flow-through shares be retained in order to ensure an active mining sector which is one of the key pillars of regional development throughout northern Canada.

THE ECONOMY

SITUATION IN ABITIBI-TÉMISCAMINGUE REGION

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the Abitibi-Témiscamingue region is still breaking records for the number of residents employed and the number of unemployed in the area.

The unemployment rate is the lowest in the entire province of Quebec. It was 6.7 per cent in November 1987, which is 0.7 per cent less then it was in October.

That is a striking departure from the unemployment rates we had under the former Liberal Government in this country, when employment was as high as 27, 24 and 20 per cent from 1980 to 1984.

Mr. Speaker, the unemployment rate continues to drop in Abitibi-Témiscamingue, thanks to the concerted efforts of our entrepreneurs and employees in the private sector and federal and provincial programs.

I want to thank the people of Abitibi for their participation and their faith in the economic renewal of our region.

LABOUR RELATIONS

CLOSURE OF ROUTE CANADA TERMINAL IN SYDNEY—TREATMENT OF WORKERS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the closure of the Route Canada terminal in Sydney and the subsequent lay-off of 17 employees will hurt not only the workers but the community at large. The hardships that these employees will now face is one of extreme proportion. This workforce is a very senior one and its years of service range from 16 to 46 of dedicated and faithful work to the employer.

The severance package will be pursuant to the provisions of the Canada Labour Code and not the special agreement which was consummated by the Canadian National Railway company, Transport Canada, Route Canada, and the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway, Transport and General Workers. The special agreement provided many more benefits to the workers than what is being offered under the Canada Labour Code.

The activity by senior management of Route Canada in this matter is prejudicial to the workers involved. Where is the justice in this situation? Where is the obligation this company has to years of dedicated service by its employees? This situation is not acceptable. Route Canada managers and the corporation as a whole will just have to do better if they wish to operate in eastern Canada.

We are not in the stone age of labour relations, Mr. Speaker. In coming weeks I intend to point this out again and again to Route Canada management. It is time that it took its responsibilities seriously on behalf of the workers who have now been affected.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF TORONTO BOARD OF TRADE

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, free trade with the United States has the potential to reap great dividends for Canada and we in Alberta support it unequivocally. But just so that Canadians and particularly those from the great Province of Ontario are not confused into believing that Premier Peterson, in opposing the deal, speaks for everyone, I would like to bring to the attention of Hon. Members the views of the Board of Trade of Metropolitan Toronto, an organization with over 15,000 members, the largest community Board of Trade or Chamber of Commerce in all of North America.

In a submission to the House Standing Committee, the board stated:

—rising U.S. protectionism has obliged the federal Government to secure and enhance Canadian access to that export market upon which Canada is . . . most dependent for its continued prosperity.

The board went on to say that failure to realize an agreement could pose a threat to national unity.

Is it not interesting how the Ontario Government can claim to have won its mandate by opposing the free trade agreement when it does not have the support of so large a sector of its business community and all the workers who work within it?

BILL C-84—NEED FOR FURTHER AMENDMENTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, The Globe and Mail reports that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) may make amendments to Bill C-84, amendments he absolutely refused during weeks of debate in Parliament and committee. If he is beginning to wake up, that's good. However, he'll need to go much further than reported.

His Bill will surely fail at the Supreme Court as long as it makes criminals of Canadians who help a refugee without a visa to come to an immigration office in Canada; allows immigration officers to break and enter, search, and seize documents at will; detains new arrivals on mere Minister's suspicion, without habeas corpus rights, and violates Canada's signature on the UN Convention for Refugees by turning refugee ships away at sea.

The Minister must back down still further.

CONSERVATIVE GOVERNMENT AS MODEL FOR WORLD

Mr. Marcel Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, the month of December gives me pause to reflect upon peace and what is happening in foreign countries where Christmas this year will be marred by violence, where people will suffer and cry.

Here is what we Canadians have achieved in 1987 after only three years under a Progressive Conservative Government: social peace throughout the country, joy of living, reconciliation of all Canadians from coast to coast, leadership highlighted by humanism and based on the individual's sense of responsibility and valorization.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians are now proud of themselves and their Government because they feel useful and responsible. They have confidence in their Prime Minister, and justifiably so.

Over a number of years the Liberal Party drew inspiration from the NDP in its quest for socialist order in Canada. As a result, Canadians sank $200 billion deeper into debt, they lost their self-confidence, and they now live in a climate of mistrust where aggressivity between individuals and cultural and economic interest groups prevails.

Mr. Speaker, it is my fervent wish that 1988 will enable countries torn by war and misery to establish institutions, policies and governments whose inspirational spirit will resemble that of the administration now headed by the Prime Minister of Canada, the Right Hon. Brian Mulroney.

AEROSPACE

SITE OF FUTURE SPACE AGENCY

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Government has earmarked $824 million for the space research program. This is not new money, but funds recycled from the appropriations of the National Research Council which, as we have seen this week, is seeking applicants for jobs with the famous space agency—yet we still have no idea as to where the agency is to be located.

Reading newspapers in recent days made me appreciate just why the Prime Minister simply cannot make up his own mind. On September 16 the Minister of State for Science and Technology stated that this essentially political decision rests with the Prime Minister.

Today's Le Droit reports that the same Minister is saying: "Decision not made yet". As we recall, the Minister of State for Science and Technology stated: "Within a few weeks".

We know that even the Minister of State told us: "No, no, never ever. The decision will not be made by tomorrow"!

Well, when will this Government have the nerve to tell us: The Space Agency—in Ottawa or in Montreal? Or half in Ottawa and half in Montreal? Where will it be located? Somewhere in limbo? Do something, you guys! This means jobs in my riding, in the national capital.

HUMAN RIGHTS

WORLD-WIDE VIOLATIONS—ROLE TO BE PLAYED BY PARLIAMENTARIANS

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow, December 10, has been declared International Human Rights Day by the United Nations. Man has made tremendous technological progress to the point where nature can be challenged or controlled. However, a dark cloud hangs over the greatness of civilization.

Today in many nations, individuals are denied their basic human rights, rights which all Canadians take for granted. The Jews and Christians of Russia, the Baha'is of Iran, the Tibetans of China, and all the political dissidents held by the dictatorships of Africa, Asia, South and Central America and the Caribbean have only one hope, the hope that we parliamentarians in the free world must not let the world forget their plight.

Today, Mr. Knanh Le-Kim, President of the Vietnamese Buddhist Association of Toronto, is meeting with Ambassador Lewis in New York to bring him abreast of the religious persecution in Vietnam. We can never let our guard down even if there is only one individual left in the world who is being denied any right. Only when individuals in all societies enjoy all their basic human rights can man finally claim that he has advanced from prehistoric times.

DISARMAMENT

U.S.A.—U.S.S.R. AGREEMENT—INFLUENCE OF PEACE MOVEMENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, as we contemplate events in Washington this week, I think it would be appropriate for all of us to remember the role various peace movements have played in coming to this particular point in human history.

The peace movement is often reviled, both in the East and the West, by the political leadership of those countries, and sometimes by Members opposite, but it is a fact that the peace movement has been that source of creative tension and criticism, that leaven within the loaf that is very important in keeping political leaders always rethinking their positions on these crucial issues that affect the future of planet Earth.

I think we should remember this with respect to the peace movement here in Canada, in Europe and in the United States of America, but we should also remember those within the Soviet Union and Eastern Bloc countries who often have to work under even more difficult circumstances.

We know that here, CSIS and other organizations keep an eye on the peace movement and regard its activities not as essential but as disloyal. We also know that in the Soviet Union and East Germany, Christian peace activists are from time to time harassed and rounded up and life is made difficult for them. Let us keep them in mind, and let us keep in mind that the peace movement on both sides of the so-called divide is very, very important and not unconnected to what is happening in Washington today.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECTS ON NORTHERN MANITOBA

Mr. George Minaker (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, the report prepared for the Canada West Foundation on the effects of free trade on Manitoba clearly indicates substantial benefits for the province from free trade and severe economic disruption if protectionism in the United States continues unchecked. Of particular interest in the study is the section dealing with northern Manitoba. It points out that jobs are threatened in the North and says:

> Northern Manitoba would be the most adversely affected region in Manitoba in the event of increased U.S. protectionism.
> Due to the high concentration of employment in resource industries which are largely dependent on access to the U.S. market, communities such as Thompson, Flin Flon and Lynn Lake would be devastated by any U.S. actions which would restrict exports such as nickel, copper, zinc and gold.

The Canada-U.S. free trade agreement assures and enhances access to the U.S. market. Given these facts, it is astonishing to consider the position of the NDP Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) who opposes the free trade agreement.

Even NDP MLAs from northern Manitoba are against the agreement. By following their anti-American ideology, they are selling out the best interests of northerners. Their constituents will not forget!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

TOXIC MUSSELS—TIME OF TESTING

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, seven times on Monday the Minister of National Health and Welfare accused the Opposition of making false allegations about the toxic mussels. On Tuesday the Minister accused the Opposition six times of making false allegations about the toxic mussels.

The truth is that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has misled the House of Commons and has misled the people of Canada and must answer some serious questions on matters that have now put the lives of Canadians at risk.

What did the Minister say? He said that Dr. Todd received these samples from Prince Edward Island at 8.15 p.m. upon which testing began that evening, Saturday. Dr. Todd said on television:

> We received the samples about noon on Friday and we got an answer late in the afternoon that there was a reaction present in these animals.

Will the Minister explain that contradiction to the Canadian public and to Parliament? Will he admit his complete failure to protect Canadians from poisoned mussels?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I say to the right hon. gentleman that I did not mislead either him or the House. I did not mislead Canadians.

If the right hon. gentleman is interested in the facts, I will give them again. I said to the House that testing had been done prior to the information I gave yesterday and we have had two sets of testing. I will give that information, if he has some time, and it is this—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Answer the question.

• (1420)

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I am answering the question. First, we had information prior to the weekend on some mussels. The testing done by Dr. Todd on the first set of samples was for PSP, paralytic shellfish poisoning. That was injected into the mice. In that type of test mice die within twenty minutes. That is the normal test. The mice did not die in that way, they died two to three hours later. Yesterday the Hon. Member for Hamilton East said that mice were dying during that period of time. I have never denied that, but it was not under PSP.

We looked at the testing very carefully, that was the first test, and we then stepped up the investigation through the weekend. The information I gave the House yesterday was the second sample which ended in the health alert that I gave on the Tuesday.

NUMBER OF CANADIANS HOSPITALIZED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has yet to explain the discrepancy between his version and Dr. Todd's, and he is playing with words to cover up his incompetence.

If the Minister of National Health and Welfare cannot act immediately and with celerity to protect the public from food poisoning, who is going to do it?

Since the Minister claims he has all the facts, perhaps he could give us the following information: How many Canadians were hospitalized between the time the Minister ordered the shippers to stop shipping toxic mussels, and two and a half days later, when the Minister warned the Canadian public of the danger of eating these toxic mussels? How many?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, there is no contradiction between what I am saying today and what I have said on any other day in the House. My Deputy Minister, my Assistant Deputy Minister, Health Protection Branch, and the field operations people have all checked with Dr. Todd. I have not, and I will tell the right hon. gentleman why. I have said in this House time after time, and I insist on it, that I will not influence the scientists in my Department. I will take their advice on the basis of their scientific knowledge and experience.

The right hon. gentleman asked how many people have been hospitalized. As of December 1 there have been no new cases. What we have done diligently at Health and Welfare is go to provincial hospitals, the MUC in Montreal, clinics, and doctors' offices to find out the exact number of cases. I stress that there are no new cases, because of the action we took, since December 1. The number of cases reported to us as of today is 75. The number of hospitalizations is 17.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, we want to know how many Canadians were hospitalized from the moment the Ministry gave an order not to ship any further mussels. There are 1.2 million mussels shipped every week. We are talking about a possible 400,000 mussels being in circulation between the moment the Ministry stopped shipment and the moment the Minister warned the Canadian public.

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct my question to the Prime Minister who sat listening to this conversation today and yesterday.

Does he not admit that his Minister acted in a manner which has not properly protected Canadians' health? For that reason, will he not ask his Minister to resign?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Will he not admit the Minister has not been forthcoming in giving the House of Commons the whole truth about a matter now affecting the lives of Canadians?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Whatever happened to free trade?

Mr. Beatty: We expect better than that from you.

Mr. McKnight: John has now joined the rat pack.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the right hon. gentleman that I have given all the facts. I have not tried to hide any facts. I do not operate on the basis of hiding the facts. I have not asked my Department to hide any facts. I did not contact the industry. I did not ask my Department for a second opinion. I did not ask my Department to hold back any information in any way.

What I said was, when we have got the scientific information on any case—mussels, English cucumbers, White Spot in Vancouver—and I can go on and on, in every case when I have had the scientific information I have acted.

I want to say to the right hon. gentleman that I think it is important for him as a national leader to stay with the facts and not try to destroy people in this House or in the Department when we acted responsibly.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STATEMENTS MADE BY MINISTER AND BY SCIENTIST

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the halo is not shining for those families who have relatives in hospitals hovering on the verge of death.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare claims he has told the truth to the people. Why is it that today he has finally admitted that tests were done on the Friday, not only in Ottawa but also in New Brunswick, which showed mice were dying? Why has he admitted now that a link was established on Friday, when in fact when he was speaking to the press last week about this issue he said on Sunday: "There was, when we asked the companies to stop shipment there was a suspicion that there could be a link. Then we have to feed that material to laboratory rats". In fact, the laboratory animals were dying two days prior to the Minister's claim that the laboratory rats testing began.

How does the Minister explain the absolute contradiction between his statement in the House yesterday and the statement of the federal scientist who was responsible for carrying out the tests who said that a link was established on Friday, November 27?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, no matter how loudly people speak I will stay with the facts and here they are again. I have said consistently and I say again today that there was not a link established on the Friday. The Hon. Member keeps using those words. I said, and I will repeat it again, that the testing that was done up until the Friday was for paralytic shellfish poisoning. That was the experience of the Department along with DFO. The mice did not react relative to the symptoms and reactions of PSP.

An Hon. Member: Big deal.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): That is a very big deal because it is important. Additionally, from that Friday, as well as the details I gave yesterday, we stepped up the investigation. The point that I make again is that those are the facts. We stepped up the investigation and the link between a toxin other than PSP was established on the Monday, the Tuesday. That detail I have given as well.

• (1430)

The Member talked about links. It is necessary to understand that the Department did not have the scientific basis at the times that she talks about which it had at the time which I have talked about which enabled me to give the health alert on Tuesday.

EXTENT OF KNOWLEDGE OF ISSUE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the House, the Minister of National Health and Welfare claimed that the injections were given on Monday, November 30 and Thuesday, December 1. From what the scientists said, it seems the first injections were given on the Friday before, and that the mice started dying in Ottawa and also in Blacks Harbour, New Brunswick, that Friday. Why didn't the Minister conclude there was enough scientific evidence to ask the companies to stop shipping mussels as of Sunday morning? He did not have the courage and he didn't even know the facts, because as late as Monday, he was not aware of what was happening. Why was he not sufficiently informed to be able to issue the same warning to Canadians? Up to Tuesday evening, consumers were still eating toxic mussels.

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will go through it one more time and maybe most Members in the House will understand. On Friday, as I have already indicated, there was a test done and the mice did not react—

Ms. Copps: You did not indicate that.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The questions are detailed and probably call for detailed answers. I ask Hon. Members to refrain from calling out too often unless they are recognized. The Hon. Minister will complete his answer.

Mr. Beatty: She is not even listening to the response.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): As an investigative tool about which I asked my officials again today, on the Sunday we told the wholesaler, the supplier, and the shipper, that we had some indication that there could be problems with their product and to stop the shipment. That is what the Department did.

Ms. Copps: But you did not know about it.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member could give me the same courtesy as I am trying to give her, just for once maybe.

What happened was very clear. The Department informed the shippers. As I have said in the House time after time, I was notified on Monday. On Tuesday we had the link and the health alert was issued.

Mr. Nunziata: You are finished, Jake.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my information, my details, and my facts have been consistent. I do not think they have differed in any way today from the first day I was asked this question.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade.

The Government has now reached a final agreement with the United States on the final wording of the trade proposal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I want to thank the Members opposite for their applause, Mr. Speaker. It is very thoughtful.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Thirty-two per cent and falling.

Mr. Broadbent: Will the Minister tell us when Members of the House will be able to see that report? When she answers that question will she, on behalf of the Government, guarantee that there will be adequate time to debate that report and resolution in the House? In addition, will she guarantee that there will be a vote taken before the Government of Canada signs this agreement with the United States?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, my officials advised me before Question Period that the officials on both sides are into the final details of the proof-reading.

Mr. Riis: We heard that three months ago.

Miss Carney: Again, Mr. Speaker, the Opposition asks questions but does not have time to hear the answers. They are against this report. They have not even read it. They do not even want to know when it is available. That shows the consistency of the NDP policy.

Mr. Broadbent: Give it to us so we can read it.

Mr. Fulton: Has she read it?

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I will try with the Prime Minister. The chairman of the House committee has said that the committee will not be reporting to the House based on the final wording. He said it would be "absolutely silly" to make an attempt to do that and that it would "make a mockery" of the whole issue.

Would the Prime Minister not agree that unless there is adequate time to debate and understand all the details involved, and to take a vote in the House of Commons, the Government would be absolutely silly to proceed and would be making a mockery of the importance of this question for the people of Canada?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the committee has already confirmed that the committee is free at any time to deal with any aspect of the report. Should it find that it is substantially different from the "Elements of the Agreement", which it is not, the committee is free at any time to pursue its own agenda on this issue.

With regard to the timing of the report, as I started to say earlier, we are expecting the tabling of the report by the end of the week. With regard to the timing of the debate, the Prime Minister has already assured us that there will be a debate. In view of the Hon. Member's enthusiasm for a debate, I suggest that his House Leader co-operate with the Government House Leader on the timing of it.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Minister that we will co-operate on the timing. However, the timing which is of interest to the people of Canada is that they have time to understand what this complex deal is all about.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR DEBATE AND VOTE PRIOR TO SIGNATURE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I will direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Witnesses from Vancouver in the West to St. John's, Newfoundland, in the East, including many witnesses who gave support in principle for the idea, pointed out the need to have time to study the final text.

Therefore, will the Prime Minister make a serious commitment to the principles of democracy, to the need to understand this document, and ensure that there will be adequate time in the House of Commons for a full debate and a vote on this before it is signed and becomes an official agreement with the United States, rather than rushing it through before Christmas?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have already answered that question. The Prime Minister has repeatedly said that there will be a debate on this issue.

Mr. Broadbent: A vote?

Miss Carney: The timing and the nature of the debate will depend on the co-operation of the opposition Parties.

Mr. Broadbent: A three-day debate, right.

HEALTH

TOXIC MUSSELS—TESTING DONE WITH MICE AND RATS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Minister asked us earlier to stick with the facts. I suggest that if the Minister had stuck with the facts in this whole debate and during Question Period in the last few days, he would not have the problems he has today. Also, he would not have had the contradiction that he had with Dr. Todd as shown on television last evening.

The Minister has mentioned that tests were made for PSP, paralytic shellfish poisoning. The fact remains that rats and mice died on Friday both in Ottawa and in Black's Harbour, New Brunswick. Those are the facts and I will stick with them if the Minister will stick with the facts.

If mice and rats were dying does the Minister not think that the product which was killing those mice and rats should not have been available to human beings?

• (1440)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will explain to the hon. gentleman. First, I said that we were testing for PSP. As a former Fisheries Minister, he would understand that.

Second, he would understand that most scientists will say that mice will die within a 20-minute period with the symptoms and development of PSP. The mice in question died between two and three hours, so that it was not indicative of PSP. I have said that all along. I am not giving any new facts. That has been common knowledge.

The Hon. Member should change his question somewhat because I am sure he did not phrase in that way purposely. The number of mice that were tested and the number that died additionally concern a second piece of scientific information. A small ratio of the mice in fact died, which again is different from any traditional type of PSP testing. Obviously, the investigation had to go from there.

We still do not have that toxin isolated. As a former Fisheries Minister he should look at what happened in Denmark, Sweden, and Japan. I refer him to what health experts clearly said in terms of the speed with which the Department acted.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I am not talking about PSP. Obviously that was ruled out as a possibility. I am talking about a substance, regardless of what it is, that killed mice and rats and obviously was harmful for human consumption.

AVAILABILITY OF SCIENTIFIC EVIDENCE

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare has ruined the mussel industry in Atlantic Canada by his inaction.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Henderson: What new evidence was obtained by the Department between 10 a.m. on Sunday morning, when mussel exporters were stopped from exporting mussels off Prince Edward Island, and 6.45 on Tuesday evening, that would make the Minister decide that an all-out alert would be posted for consumers of mussels in Canada that would not have been the same evidence which produced the stop order on shipment of mussels at ten o'clock on Sunday? What new evidence?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I can answer that as well. I say to the Hon. Member that he cannot have it both ways. Like the action on the 2,600 cases that I mentioned to him, if I stopped the industry every time there was a first indication of any complaint he would be after me immediately, saying that I killed the industry. Now he wants to work it the other way, but he cannot have it both ways.

Some Hon. Members: Answer the question.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I will return to the details for which he asked. The times that he gave are accurate and are exactly the times that I have given. It was during that period when additional samples were tested and those were the details I gave in the House yesterday. Clearly, once the medical link was established, without identifying the toxin, the decision was taken.

TRADE

FREE TRADE—ELIMINATION OF MARINE TRANSPORT SECTOR—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Could the Prime Minister explain to the House and to the Canadian people why the Government has agreed to eliminate maritime shipping from its trade agreement?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is anticipating the final report. I would urge him to wait until he sees the final report before commenting on any details.

SITUATION OF SHIPPING INDUSTRY

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. What can he tell the shipping industry and the shipbuilders of this country who have been expecting to achieve something against the discriminatory pressures of American law, particularly under the Jones Act provisions, which will force the import into Canada of Alaskan crude oil in Canadian tankers? What has he to say to the comfort of the maritime industries of Canada, given the failure in the face of the American shipping lobby?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would give them the same advice, which is to wait and read the final report.

CANADA LANDS COMPANY

ALLEGED FAILURE TO FILE ANNUAL FINANCIAL RETURN

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Public Works my question is directed to the Prime Minister. We have been raising questions about the suspicious circumstances involving the Crown corporation, Canada Lands Company at Mirabel, including the fact that the company broke the law by failing to file its annual financial return by last June.

The Minister explained that the company was having a difference with the Auditor General about the profiling of overhead. I learned, in examining the company's returns, that the Government fired all of the directors of that company and replaced them some time in late summer.

Were these directors fired because of the way they profiled the overhead, or was there some other reason? Why did the Government change the direction of that company in August?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, first of all, in the absence of the responsible Minister who is attending to departmental business, I think the Minister fully dealt with this question, and first of all with a number of false allegations which were made by the Hon. Member.

Second, the financial statements were submitted to the Auditor General, who noted certain discrepancies regarding specific expenditure items. The Department immediately set up an audit team which submitted a report. The report will be discussed tomorrow, and the Minister has promised to act on its findings, Mr. Speaker.

REQUEST THAT ANNUAL REPORT BE PRESENTED BY NEXT MONDAY AT LATEST

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the report was not tabled in the House as it should have been. The Minister said yesterday that there was a meeting on Friday, attended by the Auditor General and the Corporation. I now want to ask the Minister, if the difference of opinion is not resolved, whether he could confirm today that we will have the Corporation's annual report next Monday at the latest?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could comment here. I think the Auditor General's report mentioned this Government's excellent management performance. He even said he was very optimistic about the Government's future record, Mr. Speaker, and I believe that this is more than he could have said about the previous government.

CANADA HEALTH ACT

REGULATIONS—CONTENT OF PROPOSED CHANGES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I understand that the Minister intends to introduce changes to the regulations under the Canada Health Act later this week. Will he assure Canadians that those changes will not reflect what a director of the Canadian Medical Association said before the last election about the need for user fees on services? He said: "When the Conservatives get in power they will fix it up and make it right for us".

• (1450)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman will have to wait for any tabling until it occurs in respect of the Government's position on health care. It has been stated very clearly by the Government and I, as the spokesman both on user-fees and extra billing, that through the Canada Health Act we supported the removal of them or the financial penalty which the clauses called for.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. In the past he has expressed some sympathy for privatization of some health care services.

Will he assure Canadians that any changes in these regulations will not encourage the privatization of any health care services or hospital services, as was recommended to the Minister about two years ago in a report by Mr. Bud Sherman, the former Minister of Health in Manitoba?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman should recognize—and I am sure he does—that the delivery of health care is in the hands of the provinces. There is a Canada Health Act which governs the federal financial portion of the payment of those costs, along with the health portion of the Established Programs Financing.

There has been no change of policy, and in respect of the tabling of any other changes he will have to wait.

CANADA LANDS COMPANY

DELAY IN PRESENTING FINANCIAL STATEMENTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Public Works, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister and concerns the administration of the Canada Lands Company (Mirabel) Ltd. According to a spokesperson for the Auditor General's office, the Canada Lands Corporation was late in filing its financial statements, and not just in 1986-87 but also in 1985-86 and 1984-85. This means that since the Conservative Government came to power— Could the Prime Minister explain to Canadians why this was the only Crown Corporation to be late in filing its financial statements in the current year, and could he inform the House about the technical reasons which the Minister of Public Works suggested yesterday were the cause of the delay?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, first of all, before talking about financial statements, what we started to do was to sell back land that had been unfairly expropriated.

Second, in implementing these policies and procedures, the Government made every effort to ensure that programs and policies were implemented satisfactorily, and we informed the Auditor General's office about this in great detail. It is also a fact that when financial statements are filed late, they appear in the subsequent year's Public Accounts.

M. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, the Government is hardly in a position to talk about unfair treatment.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister and it concerns the Canada Lands Company at Mirabel. During the last few days we have learned of no less than two RCMP investigations and an internal audit by the Department of Public Works. We now know of a fired board of directors of the Canada Lands Company and the possibility of 50 additional land flips.

Just what does it take to make the Government move on the issue of the Canada Lands Company at Mirabel? Why will the Prime Minister not learn anything from the Parker Commission of Inquiry and learn that it is time that he started to clean up his act?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, again, I believe the Minister already answered the question yesterday, and perhaps I may continue along those lines. Initially, the land redistribution decision was made and implemented by this Government, and as I said before, all the steps taken by the Government were aimed at ensuring these activities were justified and would be followed up. I repeat that in his report, the Auditor General commented on the excellent performance of this Government, and we are convinced, as I said before, that the Department and the Government have done everything to ensure the situation was dealt with satisfactorily.

DISARMAMENT

U.S.A.—U.S.S.R. AGREEMENT—COMMUNICATIONS WITH AMERICAN AND RUSSIAN LEADERS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I would like to preface it by saying how very pleased all Canadians are that a very historic treaty was reached in Washington yesterday between Secretary Gorbachev and President Reagan.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Jewett: In view of the fact that there is some concern, however, that the elimination of intermediate range nuclear missiles may in fact lead to an increase in nuclear missiles that are submarine-based or air-launched, and the recognition by President Reagan that this indeed could happen on both sides, could the Prime Minister tell the House whether, in the period of time leading up to the INF negotiations, he communicated with both Secretary Gorbachev and President Reagan on the matter of the desirability of reducing submarine-launched and air-launched Cruise missiles and, if he did communicate, what was their reply?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I join with my hon. friend in conveying our congratulations to both sides on achieving an historic agreement on the reduction of nuclear arms, and in a special way I know my hon. friend would want me, on behalf of the Government, to convey congratulations to President Reagan and to all members of NATO whose solidarity brought about in large measure such an accomplishment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I think the fact that this kind of very important achievement, which escaped the leadership of both sides in the past, was brought about in large measure by the great solidarity of NATO and statesmanship on both sides should be underlined here in the House.

With regard to the communications, indeed I had the privilege of communicating with the General Secretary and the President in respect of the matters raised by my hon. friend prior to the signature some days ago.

AIR AND SUBMARINE-LAUNCHED MISSILES

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has not made clear whether he asked both of them to address the issue of massive reductions in strategic offensive weapons.

Did he ask both or did he tell both of them of Canada's particular concern about air-launched Cruise missiles and submarine-launched Cruise and ballistic missiles? Did he specifically ask? Finally, did he also press upon both the need now for a comprehensive test ban before there is further enlargement or enhancement of the nuclear arms race?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, given the question of my hon. friend, I thought the answer was very clear. I regret that my hon. friend did not agree.

In the communications we have had on this very important subject, we have conveyed the views of the Government of Canada in regard to the steps which we believe ought to be taken to secure further reductions in the possible deployment of nuclear arms.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs set out very carefully the manner in which Canada has recommended that the alliance and that General Secretary Gorbachev pursue this. My recommendations and views expressed to both sides have been consistent with that policy as set out clearly by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION ON DEMOLITION OF SENNETERRE RADAR BASE IN ABITIBI

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Associate Minister of National Defence.

The economic development of Senneterre in Abitibi is dependent on three major components: forestry, rail transport, and the Canadian Armed Forces Base.

Since it was announced in 1985 that the radar base would be dismantled in August 1988, the Senneterre economic recovery committee and I have been making concerted efforts to find a solution.

My question is this: Can the Minister confirm today that a private Montreal firm has made a study to estimate the cost of dismantling the base? If so, could the expenditures involved be transferred to the municipality by the municipal council of Senneterre which wants to keep the base because of the socio-economic impact the dismantling would have on local residents who have no other facilities and would make use of those already on the base, including the swimming pool, the curling rink and the community centre?

• (1500)

[English]

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there has been a study conducted by a Montreal firm. We have an estimate on how much it would cost to demolish the base. We would have to be released by the Province of Quebec if we were not to undertake demolition, and have that assigned to another party in case they did not maintain the facility as it is.

We are willing to look at any proposal put forward by any of the municipalities in the areas where the 17 bases that are being closed are concerned.

ENERGY

ELECTRICITY SALES TO UNITED STATES—PURCHASES BY SPECIFIED PROVINCES

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

The Minister of Energy wants to deregulate electricity sales to the United States. If the provinces dependent upon this electricity do not have the option to purchase at least a portion of this electricity at a reasonable price, they will be placed in a very devastating position, for example, a province such as Prince Edward Island which already has the highest electricity prices in Canada.

Why is the Government deregulating electricity sales to the United States, and thereby placing provinces such as Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, and Newfoundland, in the difficult position of not knowing if they will be able to get electricity at a reasonable price, or even if they are going to be able to get electricity at all?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, why would the Member make such a preposterous suggestion when, in point of fact, at the First Ministers' Conference 10 days ago, Premier Bourassa announced that he had just concluded an arrangement to supply hydro-electricity to the Province of New Brunswick at very favourable terms? In other circumstances he has indicated that this would be the policy of his Government, and the policy of Governments across the country.

At that same First Ministers' Conference, and here in the House of Commons, I indicated the willingness of the Government of Canada to work with the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador, and the Government of the Province of Quebec, in respect of Churchill Falls and related developments, precisely to ensure further availability of electricity that could be made available in these circumstances to the benefit of Canadian provinces.

GOVERNMENT'S RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Right Hon. Prime Minister to study this question a little more. He will realize that, for one thing, the sale to New Brunswick is only for six years.

The Minister of Energy states that he will not duplicate any regulations placed by the provinces, even if those provinces pass regulations which conflict with what the federal Government is doing at the present time. This will negate the federal Government's responsibility.

Why is the federal Government once again abandoning its responsibility in this country, and giving these powers to the provinces?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know that my hon. friend is opposed to the free trade agreement, and is trying to tie every possible objection that he can into it. But I ask him to go back and examine the words of Premier Ghiz of Prince Edward Island, at the First Ministers' Conference, when he acknowledged that one of the first actions taken by this new Government of Canada was action to reduce energy costs on Prince Edward Island. He expressed the gratitude of his Government for that.

Second, my hon. friend asks me about electricity prices and hydro prices in Prince Edward Island. They get their hydro from New Brunswick Power, which is why Premier Bourassa sold it to New Brunswick at a lower cost, in order that Prince Edward Island could benefit from this type of preferential treatment.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise Hon. Members that the time for oral questions has expired.

I have two rulings to give.

PRIVILEGE

DISPOSITION OF PRIVATE MEMBERS' BILLS—MR. SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: On Wednesday November 25, 1987, the Hon. Member for Broadview Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) raised in the House the manner in which her Private Member's Bill C-204 is being dealt with in the legislative committee appointed to study the Bill.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) claimed that the Committee's proceedings were being systematically obstructed by Government Members sitting on the Committee and by the Committee's Chairman or Acting Chairman. She said that Government Members did not look favourably on the Bill and that the actions of the Acting Chairman on Thursday, November 24, 1987, reflected his prejudice against the Bill before the Committee.

[English]

I wish to thank the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) and the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) for their contribution to this important matter. The Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James) must also be mentioned, and I thank him for his helpful intervention.

I wish to remind all Hon. Members of my ruling of November 18, 1987, where I cited several excerpts from the rulings of my predecessors concerning the established custom and traditions of the House in not interfering in committee proceedings until such committees have reported to the House. This is an important rule that has clear underpinnings in logic, and I, of course, want to follow it.

Thus, after careful consideration, I have come to the conclusion that the Hon. Member's complaint ought properly to be dealt with in committee and, therefore, it is not a question of privilege and cannot be dealt with here unless the matter is reported to the House by the committee.

There are established practices which have been followed for a long time. One is that Members refrain from criticizing the actions of another Member without the making of a clear charge set out in a motion. The traditional and proper way of dealing with the type of conduct alleged by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood would be by appealing the conduct of the chairman to the committee, or by way of a motion proposed to the committee and, if it is adopted, reporting the same to the House.

[Translation]

I hope that in future, Hon. Members will be guided by what I said on November 18, 1987 and will formulate their complaints and grievances in the committees, which are entirely capable of dealing with these matters, instead of wasting the precious time of the House. The precedents are clear: These questions do not come under the jurisdiction of the Chair.

JUSTICE AND SOLICITOR GENERAL—VISIT BY THE STANDING COMMITTEE TO MILLHAVEN INSTITUTION—MR. SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: On Wednesday, November 25, 1987, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) raised serious matters in the House which he believed were tantamount to contempt of the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General during its recent visit to the various penal institutions in the Kingston area.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member maintained that witnesses from Correctional Service Canada who appeared before the Standing Committee had been subject to pressure on the part of their superiors about what they should or should not say before the Committee. The Chair has allowed the House to spend quite some time discussing this matter because any allegation of suborning witnesses should be a matter of concern to all Hon. Members.

[English]

I wish to thank the Solicitor General, the Hon. Members for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata), Ottawa West (Mr.

Daubney), Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson), and London East (Mr. Jepson), for their timely interventions in this important matter.

[Translation]

After hearing these Members, especially the Chairman of the Committee, the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney), and after due consideration, I must repeat what I said following comments by Hon. Members on November 26, namely that "the Chair is really not in a position to interfere with the affairs of the Committee . . . I want to re-emphasize that, generally speaking, Members with a complaint should go back into the Committee and sort it out there."

[English]

For further clarity, I refer all Hon. Members to a previous ruling I made on November 18, 1987, which is found on page 10930 of House of Commons Debates, and I quote:

> Previous rulings and parliamentary custom are quite clear. Committees are definitely in control of their own procedures. In this respect, I may refer Hon. Members to Beauchesne's, Fifth Edition, Citation 569(3), which reads as follows:
> The Speaker has ruled on many occasions that it is not competent for him to exercise procedural control over the committees. Committees are and must remain masters of their own procedure.

• (1510)

From these and other citations quoted in that ruling I thus feel that the precedents are clear and, with regret, I cannot find that the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) made out a prima facie case of privilege.

This matter may or may not merit further consideration but it should be first raised in the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General. It is in that forum that the Hon. Member should pursue the issue and ask the committee to report the matter to the House. In this respect I refer all Hon. Members to the debates of April 28, 1987 and May 5, 1987 when a situation involving a committee matter was reported to the House following which Members raised a question of privilege thereon.

The Chair has taken this opportunity to review several of the recent matters that have been raised in the House that relate to events in or around the committees of the House. I have told the House before that the Speaker has been somewhat tolerant because the new rules were made permanent just last June. It was, I think, predictable that the new committee system would experience some growing pains. In every case that I have reviewed since last June, every question of privilege on a committee matter probably should have been raised first in the committee.

The reason I mention this in this ruling is that I am increasingly concerned with the time consumed by the House on committee problems that now are fully within the Members' own reach and control. I regret that I must serve notice to all Hon. Members that unless there is something of extraordinary seriousness I will be less disposed to allowing debate on such matters unless a committee has first reported thereon.

The reform of the committees has conferred upon them larger mandates and greater powers. With that reform comes the responsibility and the challenge for committee members to deal with issues within the new parameters of the redefined committee system.

I would like to add, and this is only by way of a suggestion from the Chair which might prove to be helpful to all Hon. Members, that perhaps Members, when they are carrying out their duties in committees, could go that extra mile to ensure that the sensibilities of fellow committee members are taken into account. If that is kept in mind, then some of the matters that have come before the Chair might well be able to be resolved with perhaps much less dispute and much less time consuming debate.

I thank all Hon. Members for bringing these matters to the Chair. I hope that we can keep in mind the necessity that the Chair is bound by the rulings and the precedents and that Members will try to resolve these matters in committee. There is always a possibility of some extraordinary matter happening and, of course, under those circumstances I would want to look very carefully at that. I am not saying I would never take an application under those circumstances, but I would ask the co-operation of Hon. Members, the co-operation of the chairman and members of committees to resolve the matters there.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE OF BILL C-92

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe the Government House Leader may have a proposal about a committee. Does he intend to make it today.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Yes, Mr. Speaker. There have been discussions among the Parties and I think you will find unanimous consent for the following motion dealing with the committee reference of Bill C-92.

I move:

That the order for second reading and reference to a legislative committee of Bill C-92, an Act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, standing on the Order Paper, be changed to read second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Minister of State have unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO CANADIAN INVOLVEMENT IN SDI

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present today, both particularly relevant in view of the summit.

The first one points out that, whereas the U.S. Strategic Defence Initiative is a dangerous escalation of the nuclear arms race and has been condemned by over 15 Nobel Prize winning scientists as economically disastrous and strategically destabilizing, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to guarantee that there will be no testing, development, manufacture or deployment of SDI systems or components in Canada and that Canada actively support positive alternatives to SDI, including the strengthening of the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty, that we support the establishment of an international satellite monitoring agency and a ban on all nuclear weapons testing.

OPPOSITION TO PURCHASE OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): The second petition, Mr. Speaker, points out the great danger of accidents while nuclear armed or powered ships are in Canadian ports. The petition points out that such a procedure is a threat to the environment and to Canadian citizens. The petitioners call upon the Government not to purchase nuclear powered submarines for Canada.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)) moved:

That Bill C-92, an Act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-92, an Act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act is important. The Canadian Wheat Board is of considerable significance to grain producers in western Canada. The Wheat Board has been in existence since 1935 and it has served western grain producers very well in that period of time. It is especially valuable now in an international market that is very depressed and very competitive. As testimony to the performance of the board, one need only look at what has happened to Canadian sales in the last three years.

• (1520)

At a time of very depressed international grain prices and very fierce competition for market shares, Canada's share of the international wheat market has increased every year for the last three years. It has gone from approximately 17 per cent two years ago to about 20 per cent. In this year, the International Wheat Council estimates that our share could be close to 24 per cent. That tells us something about the effectiveness of the Canadian Wheat Board and how it has functioned and served Canadian producers in the last period of time.

The Government of Canada recognizes the very difficult situation in which grain oilseed producers find themselves. We have as part of an over-all approach to the problem taken an approach that has involved three things. First, we have been very aggressive in the international market. The evidence is there and I just mentioned what has happened with wheat sales. We have been able to increase our market share because of the very good reputation of the Canadian Wheat Board. We have also relied on the reputation of the Canada Grain Commission which is a government agency that looks after the grading and weighing of Canadian grain. Its reputation worldwide is one that serves Canada very well.

We also have a good reputation as a country. We have never embargoed the sale of food to anyone and that serves us well in dealing with our customers. Those things have all helped us in our selling.

Second, we have as a policy provided a large amount of direct financial support to farmers. We know that no matter how much Government provides, the need is such that Government cannot step in and cover the total loss of income resulting from very depressed international prices. Nevertheless, in the time we have been in office the Government has increased by over 350 per cent its spending on agriculture and most of it has been in the grain and oilseeds sector. Again, that is an indication of the Government's recognition of the very serious problem agriculture is facing and the willingness of the Government to deal with it.

The third thing we have done, and I think most farmers and people who follow the situation agree that this is of vital importance, is to pursue a solution to the depressed prices internationally. We know, for instance, that in Europe those who produce durum wheat, a product used to produce macaroni, spaghetti and lasagna, receive in some cases as much as four times the amount Canadian farmers receive, yet Canadian farmers produce a very high quality product. Because of the discrepancies and differences in the system of support, Canadian producers are put at a very great disadvantage.

The solution to those problems must be an international settlement of the issue. Here we give considerable credit to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who has raised this issue at both of the last summits. He has also shown leadership in seeing that the Government raises those issues internationally whenever there is an opportunity to do so. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), for instance, raises these issues. The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) has also been very effective in having some of these items placed on agendas involving trade Ministers.

This brings me to the amendments to the Canadian Wheat Board Act, the selling aspect of it. The Canadian Wheat Board is the sole agency responsible for the selling of wheat, oats and barley outside our country. It also has responsibility for selling wheat, oats and barley in the country when it is used for human consumption. Hon. Members can see that it has a very large role to play in the four western provinces in the marketing of wheat, oats and barley.

Additionally, the Wheat Board administers initial payments and operates a pooling system for sales of grain. The Wheat Board is also involved in the movement of grain in the sense that opportunities for producers to deliver are equalized over the crop year. The Wheat Board has a major function to fulfil.

The amendments before us are rather straightforward. Three of them bring the Act up to date and two of them make changes we think will allow the board to operate in a more effective manner. I will simply outline them.

The first amendment deals with the way the quota system operates. The Canadian Wheat Board uses a quota system which allocates a certain amount of delivery opportunity to each producer throughout the year, so that throughout the delivery or crop year each producer has an opportunity to deliver an equal amount of grain at certain times of the year. The reason for that is to give producers, whether large or small, close to an elevator or far away, an opportunity to deliver a certain percentage of grain throughout the whole delivery season as sales opportunities arise.

One of the amendments we propose will see that grain that is delivered through a producer car or a platform car must be entered in the quota book the same as grain that goes through the elevators. There is a technical concern that the Act may in fact give producers who deliver through the producer-car system the opportunity to delivery grain without having it shown as part of the over-all quota. In that sense, they are able to have an advantage other producers do not have because of these additional delivery opportunities. We are simply changing the Act to see that that will no longer be done. I am not sure that it is being done deliberately, but there is a concern that because of the way the Act is worded, grain delivered through producer cars may not in fact have to be entered in a permit book.

The second amendment we are proposing changes the definition in the Act for legal purposes of what is now Canola. Some Hon. Members may know that in 1960, Canada, through some very dedicated research and testing, developed a strain of rapeseed with very low erucic acid. It has become very much sought after internationally and it is a very high quality product. Canadians gave it the name Canola. One of the amendments simply change for legal purposes the definition in the Act from rapeseed to what is officially called Canola. Again, it is a rather technical amendment, but one that brings the Act up to date.

The Canadian Wheat Board usually operates with five commissioners. The Act calls for a minimum of three and a maximum of five. Associated with the Wheat Board is a producer advisory board whose members are elected by the producers. As such, they are allowed a per diem and expenses for their activities as part of the advisory board.

The advisory board meets on a regular basis, approximately once a month. There have been occasions in the past when the advisory board has set up special committees to deal with certain topics that need to be looked at by a smaller group and on a more concentrated basis. There is no provision in the Act to allow for advisory board members who are part of a special committee to receive any kind of expense allowance or per diem. The Bill will simply amend that to allow for per diem payments to members of the advisory board who sit on special committees of the advisory board to the Canadian Wheat Board. That is something we think is useful and something the board has recommended. The Government is very pleased to recommend it to the House.

Just by way of example, it might be of interest to know that right now, there is an ad hoc special committee of the advisory board looking at the over-all quota system and how it applies to producers in the Wheat Board area. That is an example of how this amendment could be used.

The other two amendments simply provide for changes that we think are useful and will allow the board to run its affairs on a more equitable basis. I might say also that all of the proposals we have in front of us for amendments were recommended by the Canadian Wheat Board.

The fourth amendment we are proposing has to do with the financial operations of the board. To pick a figure, the board regularly markets 25 to 30 million tonnes of grain. If you take an average price, even at today's very low market, of $100 a tonne you can see that the board regularly deals with literally billions of dollars a year. It has a big responsibility for managing its cash flow.

The Act limited the board to borrowing from chartered banks. In the last 10 years things have changed. Markets have altered considerably. The banks are not the only place where people can raise funds. There are other institutions such as trust companies and credit unions where you can raise money for a Crown corporation the size of the Canadian Wheat Board. The amendments we are proposing will be very useful to the board in managing its fiscal affairs in a more effective way, thus saving producers money.

The board has a very significant financial section itself. It has a treasurer, internal auditors, several chartered accountants, and is subject to an external audit every year when it presents its report to the Government. We think these measures will allow the board to be more effective, not only in borrowing money but in investing its surplus cash from time to time.

The last amendment changes the provisions dealing with cost assessment when producer cars are loaded. Most grain on the Prairies is shipped through an elevator system. Certain interest and carrying charges are then deducted from the price the producer receives. There is a relatively small amount of grain which is not shipped through the primary elevator system. The grain is loaded by producers directly into producer cars. Grain shipped that way to export points, whether it be Thunder Bay, the West Coast or Churchill, even if it does not see the inside of an elevator, by regulation incurs certain charges as if it had been stored in an elevator.

When you talk to people that load producer cars they say they think that is not correct. They think because their grain does not see the inside of an elevator it is not fair to have to pay these charges. On the other hand, some people see the issue from a different point of view. They say we have an integrated system where costs are shared. Regardless of whether or not you use an elevator, you benefit from its existence. We all would have to admit that it would be impossible for Canada to move the amount of grain we do if it was all loaded individually into producer cars. They say that even though the grain does not go into an elevator it has benefited from that elevator because it makes the whole system operate more effectively and more grain is moved out, thereby providing a benefit to the person who delivers his grain through a producer car.

There are arguments to be made on both sides. I do not think it is necessarily a cut and dried situation. The amendment we are proposing will allow the board, at its discretion, to refund what it assesses as a reasonable part of the storage charges to a producer who loads his grain into a producer car. We think this will be useful in the over-all operation of the system and give some recognition to the fact that grain does not always go into an elevator.

In conclusion, I want to say that we are pleased to propose these amendments. I emphasize the fact that the Canadian Wheat Board requested them. We have had a chance to sit down and talk through the amendments with the board and this Bill is the result. It will improve the over-all effectiveness of the Board and hopefully reduce some of its operating costs, thereby saving producers money. We think the administrative procedures which will come about as a result of these amendments will also allow for a more equitable system with respect to costs and benefits for each producer.

Lastly, and I am not too sure we do enough of this, I want to give credit to the Canadian Wheat Board. It has served grain producers in western Canada very well. We think it is an extremely well run Crown corporation. The evidence of its effectiveness and ability to sell in a very difficult and depressed world market is in the figures. We have not only maintained but increased our market share during a time of extreme competitiveness and depressed prices.

I look forward to having the Bill go through as quickly as possible and into committee. Some of its provisions can be put into effect as soon as the Bill is passed. That will provide benefits to the board and producers as well.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of the Liberal Caucus of the Official Opposition, I welcome the opportunity this afternoon to take part in the debate on Bill C-92, a Bill tabled by the Government to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

[English]

We in our Party do not intend to take up too much time of the House on this Bill. Not that it is not an important Bill, because obviously it is, but we do not think it is controversial to the extent that would preclude us from allowing speedy passage. Outside of the fact that the Opposition is usually co-operative, as you know, the reason we want to give our approval is because of the benefits to be derived by farmers from the legislation.

We know the Bill gives the Canadian Wheat Board the authority to borrow, with the approval of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), from financial institutions other than Canadian chartered banks. I have a concern in this respect, not of great magnitude but one which I hope the Minister will be able to address, perhaps in committee. I cannot help but wonder why the Government is so interested in permitting the board not to borrow from other sources, because we agree with that, but on the world market. We know, of course, that the Wheat Board has indicated that it may want to do that in the future.

• (1540)

I have before me an article from the Star-Phoenix dated December 1. Mr. Joe Kyncha of the Star-Phoenix interviewed Mr. John Morriss, a spokesman of the Wheat Board in Winnipeg. The article reads:

> Projections have been done on how much it might save by being able to take advantage of competitive financing on world markets "but we'd rather not make it public," Morriss said.

In other words, this is something which may be undertaken in the future but which they would prefer not to discuss.

I have some concerns with that, particularly since on occasions in the past Canada has borrowed on international markets and subsequent currency fluctuations were not advantageous for us. That concern is quite apart from my general concern about addressing ourselves to the international market when we could be doing something domestically. It is quite true that on occasion there could be savings in doing this, but I am not convinced that those savings are always justified. I invite the Minister to address that concern at some time in the future.

I would also like to know whether the Minister is of the opinion that there will be other legislative changes necessary to make this Bill work. For instance, I am curious to know whether the issuance of bonds and debentures will require amendments to the Income Tax Act and whether there will be guarantees by the Government on these bonds, as I assume there will be.

In addition, who does the Minister think the investors will be, particularly if they are from outside the country? Has the Minister or the Department of Finance done a market study to determine who the investors in these bonds would be?

I do not ask these questions to demonstrate an unwillingness to co-operate with passage of the Bill. However, I think these questions should be addressed at some time in order that all Members of Parliament can have a fuller understanding of the implications of the amendments to this Act.

Perhaps while talking about this Bill we should take the opportunity to speak a little bit about the Prime Minister's trade deal with the United States. The Minister said some moments ago that Canada has managed to hold its own in terms of quantities of exports. However, in terms of holding our own in revenues it would be wrong to think that we have fared well in the international subsidy wars which are taking place right now.

I have indicated to the House in previous speeches that I have had the opportunity to go to Washington and study the U.S. Farm Bill, that legislation in the United States which has caused such damage to the Canadian farming industry. When I participated in the symposium on the Farm Bill in Washington that Bill was to involve $70 billion U.S. of subsidies. That is over $100 billion Canadian. That is one pile of money to be spent, and a large portion of those funds have been spent and will continue to be spent with the specific purpose of displacing the markets of other countries, including Canada.

One cannot help but wonder, first, why the Prime Minister's trade deal did not address this issue and, second, how the Government could have signed that agreement knowing that as they were negotiating the trade agreement the U.S. had placed this enormous barrier, this wall of money around itself in order to displace our markets and totally destroy the prices we are getting for agricultural commodities.

As the Minister has said, there may have even been a small increase in the amount we were able to sell in the past. While that may be so, the price which we have been getting for our commodities makes holding our own in terms of quantity insufficient. I do not say this to fault the Wheat Board. It is not the Wheat Board's fault that the Government has failed to convince the United States not to go ahead with the United States Food Security Act, 1985, more commonly known as the U.S. Farm Bill.

The Minister's deputy addressed a group of Members of Parliament and gave us some excellent briefing material on the U.S. Farm Bill. Although the information was interesting, it was far from rosy and far from showing a prosperous immediate future for Canadian wheat producers and other Canadian farmers.

There are a few more issues I want to raise, but I will be brief. The Bill provides for Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee members to be paid an honorarium for the days they actually work advising the board as well as for travel days. We support that amendment for the people who give up their time to serve in this advisory capacity. However, we are concerned that the advisory committee members are not always consulted on issues, the one of obvious concern being this Bill.

Some people have suggested that the advisory committee was not consulted in depth with regard to the implications of this Bill having to do with foreign borrowing and so on. If the Minister tells us that that is not so, which I hope he will do, perhaps he could then provide us with whatever information was provided to the advisory committee.

The Minister indicated that producers delivering grain to the Canadian Wheat Board by way of producer cars currently share in the board's cost of carrying grain in the country elevator system with regard to storage and financing charges, even though they do not physically store grain in a country elevator. The Minister has indicated that there is an inherent benefit in having the facility there even if they do not use it. People have made arguments on both sides of that issue and I do not intend to repeat them all here today. I suppose it is somewhat like discussing the Crow's Nest Pass freight rate. There will always be two opinions on how the payment should be made in the future. It is one of those issues that will be debated for some time to come.

Nevertheless, having made those brief remarks, I want to indicate to the Minister that we hope he will provide us with additional information at the committee level. Judging by the usual co-operation we get from the Minister, I have no doubt that we will get that information.

On behalf of my Party I want to indicate that we have no intention of delaying and hope that the legislation is adopted without any unnecessary delay so as to benefit the agricultural community in western Canada as soon as possible.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Bill C-92, an Act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act. I have some concerns about the Bill, but first I want to congratulate the Wheat Board on its ability to sell wheat. While we may complain about the price, at least the wheat is being sold. I do not believe any farmers in the West who depend upon Wheat Board sales would suggest that it has not done a good job in selling grain and in fact increasing our markets in the last year, which has been particularly difficult. While the price may have been low, it is something we have to accept considering the structure in which the grain had to be sold.

During a particularly difficult period for the Wheat Board in the last two years, there have been only four commissioners. While the Act only requires three to five commissioners, there were five commissioners when it was facing much less difficulty. I hope the Minister will tell us whether he intends to fill that vacancy.

I also want to comment on what impact the so-called free trade agreement might have on the Wheat Board. Presently, the Wheat Board is responsible for licensing of grain imports to Canada. We understand that legislation will probably be presented in the next year to eliminate that.

Mr. Mayer: You are talking about permits, are you not?

Mr. Hovdebo: That is right. Permits to bring in grain. I am concerned, as I think are many people, that the ability of the Wheat Board to control imports, which is a basic underpinning of the marketing system, may be eliminated as part of the free trade agreement. In fact, that is a real concern about all marketing boards, whether or not they are in supply management. I think there is some danger of undermining the Wheat Board, making it weaker.

I recognize, as I believe do most producers, that things are not the same on the farm as they were even five years ago. They are definitely not the same as they were 20 years ago. While they believe the changes the Minister has made in the sale and movement of wheat are probably steps in the right direction, it would be unfortunate if, by the stroke of a pen, we undermined an institution on which western farmers have learned to depend and trust.

The mandate of the Canadian Wheat Board is to sell grain for the farmers at the best possible price. The regulations and the sales process that have been in place since 1935 were established to allow the Board to fulfil that mandate. Most farmers would not want to see its ability to fulfil that mandate undermined.

The Wheat Board has expressed the hope that it will be able to sell more grains when the free trade agreement is signed and the markets are opened. I know that the Minister has suggested that the Canola market would be expanded. It may be a surprise to some to learn that we already sell a considerable amount of our high quality wheat to the United States, who very much appreciate the quality of our wheat and mix it with their own low grade wheats for the making of much of their pastry and bread.

I think they will buy much more wheat than has been sold to them, but I wonder whether the U.S. farmers will stand still for this kind of incursion into their market. How will they react? The Wheat Board, with its mandate to control imports and exports, has always limited the amount sold to the United States in view of the concern about any reaction by the United States to our exports. I am not sure that a free trade deal would give us that protection.

I want to thank the Deputy House Leader and the Chairman of the Agriculture Committee, who is in the House, for changing the reference of this Bill from a legislative committee to the Standing Committee on Agriculture. I had some concern about this because the areas which are being changed by the Bill require some study on the part of the Standing Committee on Agriculture and the entire agricultural community. Consequently, that would not likely happen if the matter were referred to a legislative committee that has been set up for a short period of time and dies immediately upon the Bill being reported to the House. There is a need for all members of the agriculture committee to have insight in respect of the Bill.

• (1600)

I understand that at some time in the future the Minister is likely to bring in some changes to the Canada Grains Act and that those changes will be affected by any study that takes place.

I recognize that generally the Bill is a housekeeping Bill. Most of its clauses are of value to the board and its operations. As I said, perhaps they are long overdue in some cases.

I am also concerned about the fact—and the previous speaker mentioned it—that there does not seem to have been a great deal of consultation in terms of the drafting of the Bill with the people who are to be affected by it. I called three advisory committee members and not one of them knew what was in the Bill. They had not been consulted in any way.

I was particularly concerned because one thing the Bill would do is pay them a little more for their work, and I think we all agree with that. However, in the précis which we received from the department it was suggested that there be an amendment to expand the number of activities of advisory committee members for which per diem payments could be made to facilitate their additional involvement in developing policy advice for the board. Representatives of the producers are elected to the advisory committee to make suggestions to the Canadian Wheat Board. The Minister said that these amendments were recommended by the board, but they were never tried out on the advisory committee. It is worth while for the Bill to go to the Standing Committee on Agriculture for advisory committee representatives to appear before to discuss how producers feel about these changes.

Coincidentally, the day before yesterday I had occasion to talk with the three presidents of the prairie pools which handle approximately 60 per cent of prairie grain. They were a little surprised by the Bill and some of its clauses. I think they should also be given an opportunity to appear before the committee and express their concerns. That may not change the Bill. In fact, it may not be the desire of any of the groups to change it.

I would like to refer to the transportation change. Both CN and CP are required to handle producer cars, for instance. I am not sure whether they have been contacted, but they may have some concerns about that suggestion. I should say that some people I contacted knew about some of the changes but not all of them. I was particularly surprised that the advisory committee had not been fully briefed and did not know what changes were to be made.

I do not intend to speak much longer, but I would like to go over some of the changes to the Act. I have no particular concern about the addition of Canola under the Act. It probably should have been there before.

I appreciate the probable need for changes in borrowing. In talking with people involved with the Canadian Wheat Board over the years, I can see the value of that, but I have a couple of questions which I would like to ask of Canadian Wheat Board officials.

Probably we have not been giving committee members the amount of remuneration they had the right to expect since they were elected members. For instance, the member from Alberta can spend a day getting to Winnipeg for a day's meeting and another day getting back. Under the old structure he was paid for only one day. This piece of legislation would allow the Canadian Wheat Board to pay them more than it has in the past. They can also be paid for attending subcommittee meetings, which in itself is valuable. If they are not being paid to attend subcommittee meetings, quite often the fellow who is closest attends. However, if one is from northern Alberta, for example, it is a little difficult to be part of a subcommittee meeting in Winnipeg over a longer period of time. In any event, many committee members who are now serving and have served in the past have attended subcommittee meetings as representatives of the farmers.

I have some concern about Clause 8 respecting additional payments for producer cars. As the Minister indicated, there are two sides to this question. This particular amendment to the Canada Wheat Board Act resulted from the reaction of one group. I recognize that it is permissive legislation, that the wheat board may not do it or does not have to pay any particular amount. However, it is an area which requires a little more study by members of the agriculture committee than it has received to date, so that anything they have learned in the process of passing the Bill will not disappear but will stay with them when they deal with other parts of the grain handling process.

Legislation respecting producer cars does not come under this Act; it comes under the Canada Grains Act. It would give the Wheat Board the ability to make additional payments to people using producer cars. The Minister outlined very well the controversy and the concerns on both sides, but I think it is a matter which needs to be dealt with a little more deeply before this piece of permissive legislation is passed. I suppose my concern about this type of legislation is that too often we see legislation passed which is permissive and then it becomes the fact. The level of payment is not indicated here, but it could be very detrimental to the whole system.

As the Minister indicated, in the process of producer cars there is a concern that they should not be paying for the storage charges. There is also a suggestion that they should not be paying for some of the handling charges. I would like to look at what areas they should be paying for. For instance, they do use the railway system, and they pay freight. They also use the sidings.

During the last year I attended some of the hearings on variable rates and at those hearings some of the elevator companies stated that the sidings cost them approximately $12,000 per car spot. Is that something that should be considered in the producer car operation? Anybody who uses a producer car knows that it is being used because the system is there. One could argue that it is being used at the expense of someone else. I have been involved in arguments between farmers at a delivery point where the elevator was plugged, there was no room for any grain, and one of the local farmers got a producer car. One can imagine the type of reaction that caused in that particular community. The producer cars are taken off the top, and that means fewer cars for the general public.

Mr. Mayer: That is not true.

Mr. Hovdebo: Consequently, there are those types of reactions to the producer car structure.

We must look at what they are paying for now, what they should pay for, and what they should not pay for. It is a major concern. I thank the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Agriculture. It is so much of a concern that a group of producers in western Canada have gone to the trouble of hiring someone to produce a study on the current and future role of producer cars in Canada, grain handling and transportation system. It includes a number of recommendations.

I noticed when reading the report that they have contacted the Canadian Wheat Board and other groups including the Grain Transportation Agency, the Canadian Grain Commission, CN Rail and CP Rail. They neglected to contact the people who handle the rest of the grain, the elevator companies. There is also concern as to who should pay for the paper work, and the effect of producer cars on the whole of the handling system.

I think I have raised most of the concerns that I have. Those concerns can be opened up in the committee and looked at a little more closely when the Bill comes before it. The concern about producer cars is probably the greatest concern in the Bill, and it is something that concerns the agriculture committee and those in the grain handling system.

There have been several studies. In 1978 there was a study on the use of producer cars. There is now another one before us. I am concerned that this legislation might be the first step to putting in place something with which perhaps all of the producers, all of the grain handlers, and the grain handling system would not agree.

I appreciate the opportunity to speak on the Bill. I look forward to some in-depth discussions on factors contained in this Bill, and asking questions of the people who are much more expert at it than I am.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak to this Bill because in my years in Parliament, which are the same as yours, Sir, several times we have had amendments to the Canadian Wheat Board Act, and transportation legislation. My experience has been that every time there were amendments to the Railway Act, or the National Transportation Act, or the Canadian Wheat Board Act, usually the farmers lost. I am sure the Minister will forgive me if I am a little leery and suspicious about some parts, if not all, of this Bill.

A number of years ago we had trouble getting quotas and we had trouble getting railway cars. Finally enough farmers came up to my railway station and signed a car order book in order to get a car. Two or three of them went together and pooled their quotas in order to get a car, because the elevators were plugged. Out of 150 some permit book holders at the shipping point at which I was located, there were over 100 cars on order by one or more individual producers, so that they could load railway cars on their own. It had to be done over the loading platform with their grain augers. Some of them even used shovels.

Well, Mr. Speaker, what happened? Most of those 100 cars at our little shipping point were met over the course of the crop year, or the remainder of the crop year. But the railroad said, "This shipping point has had so many cars, as many or more than other shipping points have had". The next thing we knew, a week or two before the end of the crop year, the elevators were plugged and the quota had been raised from five bushels to seven bushels per acre. One of the elevator agents of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, the last two days of the crop year, July 30, went out and bought about 50 rolls of tar-paper. He spread it out on the ground down by the stockyards. He phoned all his wheat pool members and said, "Bring in your last two bushels per acre". We ended up with 57,000 bushels piled on the ground on top of the tar-paper. Then the railroads had to provide an additional 25 cars to pick that grain up off the ground.

I mention that story from my experience only to illustrate what I think is a problem about whether there is a large volume of producer cars. A large volume of producer cars, particularly in light of the experience of this past late summer and fall with a shortage of railway cars, means that those cars get siphoned off to individual producers while our elevator system is clogged, and then there are not enough cars.

The Minister sat on the committee when we were dealing with legislation that ended up getting the Western Grain Transportation Act which got rid of the Crow rate. He will recall very vividly, because I remember him getting a little angry once in a while too in dealing with the then Liberal Government, that we were told as an article of faith, let alone a leap of faith, that there would be lots of railway cars. What was it? "You get rid of the Crow rate, establish the Western Grain Transportation Act and all will be well. Never again will there be a shortage of cars. The tracks will get fixed up. There will be no more abandonments". It was going to be heaven on earth for those grain producers and grain companies. But what have we gone through this past few months, Mr. Speaker? There have not been enough cars. The railroads want to abandon another 6,000 or 7,000 miles of track in western Canada. Whatever happened to this great heaven on earth by having the Western Grain Transportation Act? The western grain farmers have been had again.

The Government seems to think that by relaxing measures regarding producer cars that somehow or other that will solve the problem of adequate transportation and that somehow or other that will lower the costs for producers. Well, Mr. Speaker, it does not. Who the dickens asked for these amendments on producer cars? I am not aware that the three wheat pools asked.

Mr. Mayer: The Wheat Board asked for them.

Mr. Benjamin: I am not aware that the Wheat Board Advisory Committee asked for it.

Mr. Mayer: The Wheat Board itself asked, Les.

Mr. Benjamin: I am not aware that the National Farmers Union asked for it. The Minister tells me that the Canadian Wheat Board asked. It seems to me that that would have been the time for the Minister to say, "Look, you better listen to your advisory committee members and go back to the drawing board on this one." I do not care who is running the organization or who set it up, none run 100 per cent perfect. I do not understand, unless the Wheat Board is trying to remove pressure for itself, the grain transportation agency and the provision of rolling stock, that this is the way to go about it.

We were also told that with the benefits of the Western Grain Transportation Act the grain producers would get their grain moved because the railroads would be fully compensated for the cost of transporting grain. They have been, and they are being fully compensated. The grain producers are paying an extra $300 million a year in freight charges. The federal Government is paying a little over $600 million a year extra to the railroads but we still do not have the tracks all fixed up. We still do not have enough rolling stock, yet the railroads want to abandon thousands more miles of railway track.

I think the Minister and the Government are attacking the problem from the wrong end. At best, just to satisfy a very few thousand individual producer cars and likely only a few hundred, or one or two thousand grain producers, you put higher costs in the handling system on all the other producers. You leave the elevator companies stuck with costs that they will be paying, for and they did not handle the grain.

Mr. Mayer: They all get the money now anyway. What are you talking about?

Mr. Benjamin: The elevator companies pay the railroads. Is every producer car assessed a charge for the cost of that siding? I do not think they are. Is that built into the freight bill? Is that an additional charge in the freight bill? Whatever happened to the system whereby a grain producer going into an elevator, if he were not satisfied with the grade or the dockage being offered by the elevator agent, could put his grain into a car subject to grade, dockage and condition? Once it arrived at Thunder Bay or Vancouver he would accept whatever the findings were there. In a sense, it was a producer car. He chose not to accept what the elevator company said it would grade his grain at but shipped it subject to grades dockage and condition. In a sense until that car arrived at export position or at a flour mill in the interior of Canada, he was in effect using a kind of producer car.

I hope the agriculture committee will go into this matter in a great deal of detail. I hope the committee will ask to hear from grain producers and organizations from all over western Canada. I hope the committee will question the Canadian Wheat Board very closely as to the reasons and the logic for the changes regarding producer cars. I am a little suspicious. I suspect, and I hope I am wrong, that it is for the likes of the former Palliser Wheat Growers Association which now calls itself the Wheat Growers Association, a few hundred of them.

Mr. Mayer: It is called the Western Wheat Growers.

Mr. Benjamin: It is the same difference. It is the same breed of cat. They are the ones who have always opposed orderly marketing, always opposed the Wheat Board, but I suspect it is the result of political pressure from the Conservative Party and outfits like the Western Wheat Growers the barley growers and the flax growers, all of which have 200, 300 or 400 members, while the wishes of the wheat pools with something like 140,000 members get overlooked. Any kind of a thing that will convenience the so-called free and open market forces of the friends of the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board seems to get an inordinate amount of attention, disproportionately, from what the overwhelming majority of grain producers want. I know the Minister always has maintained, and does not take a back seat to anybody today, his support of the Canadian Wheat Board and orderly marketing, et cetera, et cetera. When I look at some of the friends the Minister has in the agricultural movement, in the grain industry—

Miss Carney: He has lots of them.

Mr. Benjamin: When I look at the friends the Minister has and some of the outfits that support his Party, I cannot help but be a little suspicious.

Mr. Mayer: Talk to my neighbours.

Mr. Benjamin: I do not think it is paranoia, Mr. Speaker. I cannot help but be suspicious.

Miss Carney: It is Christmas!

Mr. Benjamin: The Hon. Minister, who is such a great protector of orderly marketing, the Canadian Wheat Board and grain producers, along with his colleagues, is telling us that grain producers will benefit a great deal under the free trade agreement. It will be nothing but another heaven on earth for the grain producers. It will be just like getting rid of the Crow rate. I believe you too, Mr. Speaker, were somewhat involved in that fracas. Anyone who tells the people that he is a true blue representative of western Canada will have to explain to me and to a lot of grain producers as well as the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and CSP Foods what is so beneficial about losing the benefits of the Western Grain Transportation Act on the movement of rapeseed meal, grain pellets and grain screenings to the United States and having to pay the full commercial freight rate. I would like the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board as well as the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) to tell us how it will be better for western farmers if the freight rate for their grain screenings, Canola meal, alfalfa pellets or any products used for animal feeds in the United States is to be higher. I know that the farmers would be interested to hear that.

• (1630)

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like, with the indulgence of the House, to offer to go through it and explain it to him. The Hon. Member has asked for an explanation. I would be more than happy to provide it for him if he is agreeable and if there is unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Belsher): That is not a point of order, Sir.

Mr. Benjamin: When I am through, the Minister can rise to answer all these questions and I will be happy to listen. He has our consent to speak again.

I would also like to know how it will be better if American agricultural producers can send any of their grains into western Canada with or without a Wheat Board licence. I do not understand that. I am just an innocent, stubble-jumping prairie boy, and I do not understand it. Since we are up to here in all these grains, how would it be beneficial to western grain producers for Americans to move their grain, particularly cereals, into western Canada?

Considering the amount of subsidies for those American grains, I would like to know from the Minister, regardless of the free trade agreement, not if but when the Americans start moving those specialty crops into western Canada, will the Minister and the Government of the day, the present one with which we are stuck, be prepared to levy our own countervail or tariffs on any subsidized grain from the U.S. that moves into western Canada with or without the Canadian Wheat Board? The grain producers of western Canada would like an explanation. How is it better for western grain producers from an area of Canada that cannot get rid of all the grain it has for the Americans to sell grain in western Canada? I need an explanation for that as do about 150,000 grain producers.

We are told that the free trade agreement gets rid of the two-price system. There are two explanations we would like on this matter. On the one hand, Americans will countervail, slap on tariffs or duties or place embargoes if they feel that we are charging ourselves less than we are charging them. With international trading habits these days, that is the normal practice. One country thinks another is dumping and charging itself less than it is charging for exports, so it hits the other country with a tariff, a countervail, an embargo or an excise tax. There are lots of ways to do it.

On the other hand, when we charge ourselves more for the grain we consume in Canada than for the grain we have exported, the Americans do not like that either. If we charge ourselves less, that is a subsidy. If we charge ourselves more, that is no good either.

The Canadian Wheat Board will have to live with the results of these negotiations. Why then did it accept the elimination of the two-price grain system under which we charge ourselves more for grain used for human consumption in Canada than we charge for grain sold abroad? That is the exact opposite of the normal practices of exporting countries. That means $260 million to grain producers.

I would like the Minister to explain how it is better for western grain producers to lose the two-price wheat system. Does that mean that the Government will make up that $260 million? If so, does that not fly in the face of the so-called agreement? Will the Americans not accuse us of unfair subsidies and take the appropriate action?

I do not think we are getting the whole story. I have just cited three examples of this. The soft fruit industry and a whole slew of other industries in western Canada will, I submit, be victimized as well.

Let me return to the Canadian Wheat Board and its welfare and good order. If there were ever a time to be strengthening the Canadian Wheat Board, that time would be now.

I do not suppose that it makes a lot of difference whether the Wheat Board borrows money from a Canadian bank or from a bank in Switzerland, as long as the federal Government guarantees the loan. It is immaterial whether we get taken by domestic bankers or by international bankers. If the federal Government is guaranteeing it and we get taken again on the foreign exchange markets, at least Canadian grain producers will not get stuck for the losses. As far as I am concerned, as long as the Government guarantee is there, where it borrows money is immaterial. As far as I can tell from the Bill, at least the Minister is not weakening that protection for western grain producers.

I would like to ask the Minister or one of his colleagues to answer the points I have raised. My colleague from Prince Albert and I would like to have a full explanation as to how the costs are shared. One of the principles under which the Canadian Wheat Board functions, the principle that underlies the Wheat Board and other similar agencies, is orderly marketing. Farmers pool their products and resources and share in the benefits. They share in the costs and they share relatively equally. I know the system is not perfect, but whatever happened to that basic fundamental principle, the raison d'être for the Canadian Wheat Board, orderly marketing?

If we are to allow a few producers to escape some of the costs by using producer cars, surely that is unfair to all the other producers. Surely it helps undermine for the umpteenth time something which was started by the present Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) when he threw feed grains on the open market. The price has never been good since.

I would like government Members to explain why they would want to resort to any kind of weakening or potential weakening of the Canadian Wheat Board through which farmers pool their products. The board is an agent which acts on their behalf in both domestic and export sales and the producers share the benefits and the costs. Whatever happened to that?

Let us not just pander to a minority of interests who think that somehow or other, they will be able to save some money or take advantage of a neighbour by getting a producer car. I hope that either in the House at second reading or in committee we will get full, complete and frank answers to the questions we have raised about why the amendments concerning producer cars had to be brought in.

• (1640)

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, let me make just a brief comment in response to some of the questions the Hon. Member raised in his speech.

If the Hon. Member lived on a farm in Saskatchewan and farmed, which he does not, he and his neighbours would be producing some of the highest if not the highest quality product in the world.

Mr. Benjamin: Tell me something I did not already know.

Mr. Mayer: His province produces probably the best quality durum, used for pasta, and milling wheat in the world. In that part of Canada we also produce some of the highest quality oil seeds in the world.

Mr. Benjamin: I know that. What has that got to do with the questions I raised?

Mr. Mayer: The Hon. Member asked about the opportunity in the U.S. market. We have an opportunity to take advantage of that market. I do not understand the Hon. Member being against people in his province having a chance to show the rest of the world the high quality products they produce.

To make the point of how good we are in what we do in agriculture, and what this opportunity of selling across the line in the U.S. can do for us let me say that about a month ago the American Health Institute named a product called Puriton Oil the health food product of the year. For the Hon. Member's information, that product was made from 100 per cent Canadian Canola oil. That tells you something about the quality of the product we produce. It also indicates the type of marketing opportunity there is in the U.S.

The trade arrangement worked out between Canada and the U.S. allows us to take advantage of that market because of the high quality products we produce.

Mr. Benjamin: Nothing new about that. We have always had that.

Mr. Mayer: You are asking me to explain some of the advantages and I am giving you that explanation. The Hon. Member might also remember, and the Member for Prince Alberta (Mr. Hovdebo) made reference to this, that the U.S. produces roughly four times as much wheat as Canada. We produce about 20 million tonnes, and the U.S. produces 80 million tonnes. They buy virtually no wheat from us. Given that fact and the fact that the U.S. exports twice as much wheat as we do, why would they buy any wheat from Canada at all? North Dakota is right across the border from both Manitoba and Saskatchewan. Montana is as well. Why would the U.S. buy any wheat from us? Yet in point of fact last year they were about our fifteenth largest customer for wheat, not because we are nice people but because we have a product in demand in that market. We would sell them more except for the fact that under present U.S. trade law they can close the border down literally on 24 hours' notice. The trade arrangement opens up that border.

The Hon. Member talked about explaining some of the benefits for Canadian agriculture in this trade arrangement. We have tremendous potential in the market because of the quality of the product we produce. We are not afraid of competition. What we are afraid of is competition without rules. We know, for instance, that we cannot ignore American and European farm subsidies because they are hurting us, wrecking our farms. Yet we also know that we cannot compete with them because they have much larger treasuries. The common sense thing to do is to sit down at a table, work out an arrangement with rules that make sense, and go. We have done that, and the agreement provides some very great opportunities for us to sell in that market.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, in his opening remarks the Hon. Minister said: "If the Hon. Member lived on a farm". Earlier in the debate he yelled out that I do not have a Canadian Wheat Board permit. I have heard the Hon. Member make speeches about transportation in the House and in committee and, boy, he knew lots of things about railroads. When did he ever work on a railroad? The Hon. Minister should know better than to spout that kind of specious nonsense. He knows damn well that I spent 20 years here and the previous 20 years fighting for orderly marketing for grain producers in western Canada. When he was in diapers I was shovelling wheat and helping harvest grain.

Mr. Mayer: Come on, Les.

Mr. Benjamin: The Minister says we are going to have rules under the free trade agreement. I would like him to explain again. He is quite right, our products are of the best quality in the world. The only reason Americans buy durum from us and some other specialty crops and our No. 1 red spring wheat with a 16 per cent protein content is that it is better than their own. However, would the Minister explain how we keep that small, marginal market in the U.S. if our grain producers lose the Western Grain Transportation Act?

Mr. Mayer: They are not.

Mr. Benjamin: I read it myself.

Mr. Siddon: What did you read? You have not seen the agreement.

Mr. Benjamin: I read it even in the transportation annex. You can read between the lines.

Mr. Mayer: That was not the whole thing.

Mr. Benjamin: If this is such a good deal, why can the Americans sell up here with or without a Canadian Wheat Board licence when we have the best grains in the world?

The Minister still does not have an explanation of why our grain producers are better off without the two-price system.

Mr. Mayer: They are not going to be without it.

Mr. Benjamin: Oh, well, how are they going to get the $260 million?

Mr. Mayer: We said the benefits are going to stay.

Mr. Benjamin: That money automatically becomes a subsidy under U.S. trade law which the U.S. Senate is not about to change. That means nothing has changed under the agreement. The U.S. Senate will implement a countervailing duty just like that.

The Minister conveniently forgets that President Reagan wrote to Senator Packwood, in order to get them to agree to the fast track, that the constitutional authority of the U.S. House of Representatives and the U.S. Senate remain in place regardless of what trade agreement Canada arrives at with the U.S. Therefore, nothing would have changed. The U.S. Congress will continue, under their rules and their laws, to slap embargoes and countervailing duties on agricultural products of all kinds and fisheries products from coast to coast. Nothing has changed. The Minister may be willing to buy a pig in a poke, but I am not and I do not think the grain producers in western Canada are either.

He still has not answered the questions. He has run away from them completely and I hope that when he gets in front of the committee he is better prepared to answer them and explain his way out of it than he has been up until now.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, let us lay on the table what is in the deal. We have agreed not to subsidize the movement of product into the Pacific northwest through West Coast ports. We do not lose the whole Western Grain Transportation Act and the Hon. Member knows that.

Mr. Benjamin: I did not say that.

Mr. Mayer: He should not imply it either. Let me tell him what someone from the Canadian Canola Council said. Bob Broeska said:

> The opportunity to compete freely in a market 10 times larger than Canada's far offsets the loss of Western Grain Transportation Act subsidies on shipments to the U.S. through western ports.

For Canola that represents about one-third of our total exports. He went on to say:

> In recent years, land sown to canola on the prairies has averaged between 6 and 6.5 million acres.
> But if we're successful in our U.S. marketing efforts in the next year or two, we will need an acreage base of at least eight million to meet demand.

We are already beginning to be successful. Broeska suggests the system should be gearing up now to cope with that increase. That is an opportunity for us.

The Hon. Member referred to two-price wheat. We said the benefits are going to remain. I had a chance to meet in Toronto yesterday with the whole industry to talk about how we are going to deal with the two-price wheat system.

The benefits are going to stay there. It has nothing to do with what goes on in the free trade agreement. There is nothing in there to say the U.S. will stop supporting its farmers or that we are going to stop supporting ours. The Hon. Member does not know what he is talking about. He is raising absolute nonsense for the sake of making political brownie points. That should be an embarrassment to his Party which presently has a lot of support in an area which is suffering from very severe problems. We do not need more uncertainties raised for the sake of making political brownie points.

• (1650)

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a quick response. The Minister still has not explained how our Canola growers, our crushers, and the people who ship grain screenings, are better off paying a freight rate three or four times as high as that under the Western Grain Transportation Act. He still has not answered that question. How are we better off paying higher freight charges for shipping the products he has talked about to the northwestern United States? All that means to me is that the feed, pellet, and meal producers' lobby in the U.S. has been a lot stronger than our Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments is now terminated. If the Hon. Member would like to talk to the Minister behind the curtains that would be very nice.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, we do not want to prolong this debate unnecessarily. It is certainly our intention to have the Bill moved into committee before the day is out. We appreciate the generosity of the Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis) in arranging with the Minister and the spokespersons of the opposition Parties to have this Bill referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture where it will be dealt with more expeditiously than in a legislative committee. That will also provide an opportunity for the learned members of that committee to examine a number of related issues. I believe that that is in the best interests of the legislation and the House with regard to the issues which have been raised.

The representatives of the Wheat Board will have an opportunity in committee to respond to a variety of inquiries. As well, grain producers will have an opportunity to make their views known, particularly with regard to producer cars. We have probably raised more questions in the debate today than we have heard answered on the reasons for the changes to producer cars in this legislation. Who made the requests for changes and for what reasons? That is a legitimate question which has so far not been responded to comprehensively.

The Canadian Wheat Board Act certainly required some updating. This legislation moves in that direction, particularly with regard to the upgrading of the definition of Canola. People from western Canada appreciate not only the decision to expand acreage into Canola but also the research which has been done in western Canada to upgrade the quality of rapeseed. The reduction of acids has resulted in one of the best products in the world for producing oils, that being, of course, western Canadian Canola. We are proud of that accomplishment.

In a number of other jurisdictions we have changed the name from rapeseed to Canola to reflect the improved product. The amendment to the Canadian Wheat Board Act evidences the fact that the Canadian Wheat Board now includes in its definition of grain—in addition to wheat, oats, barley, rye, flax and rapeseed—Canola. That represents one more of the astonishing accomplishments which western Canadians have made in the development of agricultural technology around the world.

This Bill recommends changes in terms of raising funds. Traditionally the Canadian Wheat Board has been limited to loans from financial institutions. The board anticipates that it could achieve significant savings by issuing commercial paper. Considering the substantial borrowings which the Canadian Wheat Board undertakes each year, the savings resulting from this amendment should improve returns to grain producers and open a whole set of options for raising funds which hitherto did not exist.

At first blush I believe that that is a major step forward. I am sure that we all want to do whatever we can to assist the Canadian Wheat Board to assist Canadian grain producers. The spirit of the debate today verifies that.

My uncle, who runs the family farm in central Saskatchewan, reminded me that in the 1930s farmers received about $2 for No.3 wheat. Today his son, my cousin, is getting about the same price for No.3 wheat. That tells the woeful tale of what western grain producers are up against. In some cases the price of wheat has remained unchanged since 1978. I do not think there are many commodities for which the price has not increased to reflect the cost of doing business, although that has certainly not been the case in the wheat-growing business.

Our farmers are up against some incredible odds. If the amendments in Bill C-22 can enable the Wheat Board to provide a greater service to grain producers, we will want to support them enthusiastically.

I am glad that the Government has decided to move beyond borrowing from traditional financial institutions. There has been some indication that the banks and other financial institutions have not always given the best deal, simply because the Wheat Board was restricted in where it could obtain funding. This amendment will enable the Wheat Board to issue commercial paper which, I suspect, must be in the board's best interests.

My colleagues from Prince Albert and Regina West have outlined the concerns of my Party on the producer cars issue. As I cannot add much to that, I will step down and look forward to having this legislation moved as expeditiously as possible to the appropriate standing committee for further examination.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have a chance to make a few observations on Bill C-92. At first blush, this Bill appears to be quite technical in that it provides for the addition of the word "Canola" rather than only rapeseed in the Canadian Wheat Board Act. It provides for greater flexibility in the honorarium paid to members of the Wheat Board Advisory Committee and in the payment of their travelling expenses. They make a tremendous contribution to Canadian agriculture, especially to the grain industry in western Canada. We want to provide that kind of flexibility in the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

The legislation also enables the Canadian Wheat Board to borrow from a wider range of agencies rather than only from chartered banks, credit unions, and trust companies. The ability to borrow has even been extended to foreign Governments and provincial Governments. I hope the Minister will be able to explain why we want to borrow from foreign Governments. We recall that the Wheat Board lost $200 million a few years ago when dealing with China in the British currency rather than in our own currency. We certainly want to know what is the advantage of being able to borrow from foreign Governments.

We also want to know why the Government is planning to eliminate the investment committee of the Canadian Wheat Board. To my knowledge, that committee has been functioning well. The representative of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is always there in any event. Surely the Minister of Finance is not capable of being privy to all the activities of that investment committee, and it could become an administrative problem for the Wheat Board to have to turn to the Minister of Finance for each new borrowing arrangement, rather than to work with the investment committee of the Wheat Board itself.

Some agricultural groups in the West have expressed some concern about the Government's plan to move to the issuing of bonds and debentures. They wonder whether this is a further move toward privatization of the Wheat Board, as has been done in some other countries. There is concern whether the next legislative package with regard to the Wheat Board would be to move to the issuance of shares and so on.

This Bill appears to be simply a technical amendment to the Wheat Board Act to give greater efficiency to its operations and provide more flexibility in choosing financial instruments for greater efficiency and reduction of cost. It would be interesting to know from the Minister exactly how much would have been saved last year if the Government had been able to borrow from a wider range of money markets other than that which is authorized under the present legislation.

Another cause for concern is that this legislation seems to come in tandem with the changes that will occur in the operation of the Wheat Board as a result of the free trade agreement with the United States. Clearly, a free trade agreement will put greater pressure on the Canadian Wheat Board. Farmers living in border areas in the West who have to secure a Wheat Board permit for the sale of their grains to the United States will be limited to the quota provided under our quota system. At the same time, unlimited quantities of cheap grain flowing into Canada under a free trade agreement will put great pressure on the whole Wheat Board system. There will be even greater stress and demands on the producer groups than there is today when they are restricted to selling to the limit of their quota while American producers can deliver an unlimited amount, as economics allow.

What guarantees will be offered by the Wheat Board when the Government issues these bonds? Will amendments to the Income Tax Act be required with regard to the bonds which the Wheat Board proposes to sell under the provisions of this Act? Who will be the investors, and what market studies have been done by the Wheat Board? These are some questions being raised by farm groups with regard to this legislation.

There is a third element beyond the advisory committee and provisions for greater borrowing and investing powers by the Wheat Board. It is the question of producers delivering grain to the Canadian Wheat Board by way of producer cars. This is now available, but the individual producer must pay for the storage charge and the financing charges of the country elevator. This recommendation has been supported by a number of groups, including the western Canadian wheat producers. The standing committee reviewed this idea and suggested it to the Government in its input cost study last year. While I believe any efficiency we can build into the system is desirable, on the other hand we must ensure that the savings are not disproportionate to the advantages of having these delivery points throughout the West.

If everyone were to do this, the whole pooling arrangement and delivery point system would be destroyed. Those who view the Government's actions in the free trade agreement as a move toward the ultimate privatization or emasculation of the Wheat Board are extremely concerned about this arrangement. One only need look at many of the provisions in the free trade agreement to realize that there will be great disadvantages in many aspects of the whole grain handling industry.

The sale of Canola and Canola meal to the Pacific Northwest is an example. The Government has moved the Crow benefit which will result in a higher cost in some areas of Alberta, as high as $23 a tonne for Canola meal, and over $30 a tonne in areas of Saskatchewan and Manitoba. That would be removed January 1, 1989, whereas the tariff of approximately $35 or $40 a tonne for Canola oil to the Pacific Northwest that is being applied by the U.S. Government would be removed over a 10-year period. We had an advancing market in this area that was growing by leaps and bounds. There was a dramatic increase in the market, and consumers liked it. The Canola producers were going to have a great advantage in the long run because of the quality of that Canola oil. The margins for those producers will be dramatically cut because of the free trade agreement. I have seen the estimates for the market in the Pacific northwest, and they are tremendous. Of course, when the market was completely saturated, there was opportunity to go into the California market, which would have been many times larger.

The industry wonders why the Government removed that. It is an admission, not only to the Americans but to our competitors in the grain handling industry abroad, that the Government of the day has agreed that it is a transportation and export subsidy. It will give our competitors great fire-power in the battle at the GATT, not only to call the Crow benefit with regard to the Pacific northwest a transportation and export subsidy, but to call the entire Crow benefit a transportation and export subsidy.

The Government is committed to going to the GATT and to reducing export subsidies on farm commodities. It is committed to a "me too" policy. To whatever the Americans say at the GATT, it will say: "Aye, ready". That will be its support for the issue. I would be interested in knowing how the Government can say "Aye, ready" to the removal of the Crow benefit, which is an integral part of the transportation system of western Canada and extremely important to our producers. Yet it is being put in jeopardy by the free trade agreement and the admission that it is a transportation subsidy in terms of the Pacific northwest.

Many producer groups in the West wonder why the Government did not simply provide the Crow benefit for Canola, Canola meal, and all other shipments going to Vancouver so that it would be uniform assistance across the board. Likewise, in the free trade agreement the Government has agreed to support the United States in its undertakings at the GATT. We wonder why it is doing that since essentially we are competitors in international grain markets. We are not always purchasers of their commodities, and they are not always purchasers of ours.

These are some of my concerns about the legislation. At first blush it appears to be strictly a technical Bill which provides for a few technical amendments such as the inclusion of Canola in the legislation. It also provides for greater borrowing power by the Canadian Wheat Board, more agencies, and more lending institutions. We wonder why that provision would be extended to foreign Governments. Perhaps the details can be provided.

We want to see efficiency in terms of producer cars, but at the same time we do not want to see the entire pooling system or delivery point system destroyed in the grain handling mechanism of the Canadian West.

I understand that there has been agreement to refer the Bill to the Standing Committee on Agriculture rather than to a legislative one. I think that is a good idea, because those of us who serve on that standing committee would also be required to serve on the legislative committee. It will be much easier in terms of scheduling, and I think we can do as good a job in handling the details in the standing committee rather than in a legislative committee.

When the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer) appears before the committee, I hope he will be able to answer some of these questions. I also hope that groups such as the prairie pools will have a chance to appear before the standing committee so that they can provide their input to this piece of legislation. We need to view it not only as technical legislation but in terms of the general challenge that will be before the Canadian Wheat Board after the free trade legislation has been pushed through the House, which we assume will be in the next week and a half.

Having made those few comments, let me say that I want to see the Bill go to committee for further discussion and consideration.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, December 8, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-87, an Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters and to amend or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When Bill C-87 was last before the House, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) had the floor.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to continue some of the remarks I made yesterday about Bill C-87 which, as I said, is a bit like a Trojan horse. It purports to be a routine Bill to harmonize the Canadian tariff system's nomenclature with that of other countries. In fact it is also a Bill which gives or continues powers given to Cabinet to cut tariffs to other countries in return for compensation, without defining what it should be and without any form of accountability to Parliament.

We are just about at the Christmas break. As the House began meeting in mid-August, I think Hon. Members are looking forward to a few weeks away. I am sure that that is true of most Canadians as well. If I may put it bluntly, we are not in a mood to consider a major and fundamental decision about tariffs, yet essentially that is what is being done with Bill C-87.

As I was saying yesterday, I speak with particular reference to the Canada-United States trade deal because it involves the reduction of tariffs worth some $2 billion a year, at current values, which Canada imposes on goods imported from the United States.

Therefore, the tariff cutting powers in Bill C-87 are not just theoretical matters nor powers which can be used in the event of some minor deal with Papua New Guinea or some other such country. In fact they are powers which the Government now has every reason to use if it intends, as seems likely, to avoid any more than a very modest kind of reference to Parliament of a text that none of us have yet seen.

I must say as well that as of today all we have to go on in terms of the tariff cuts that are about to take place and to be mandated by treaty between Canada and the United States are a series of announcements, some rumours, some back-stage briefings that have been given to certain journalists, and the elements of the agreement, which are extremely vague. We do not know which tariffs are to be removed immediately. We do not know which tariffs are to be removed over a period of five years. We do not know which tariffs are to be removed over a period of ten years. Yet the Bill, as it stands, allows the Government to make those decisions without any further reference to Parliament.

I would have to say that it is grossly inadequate that the text should be released perhaps tomorrow, perhaps the next day, perhaps Monday, who knows, and that the House will then be asked to debate it for a few days and then a motion of approval would be given at that time. On other important matters such as the Bill that we have just debated on grain handling, I think of the fact that a Bill has to go through a number of stages. If it is a financial Bill, it requires a Ways and Means motion. If it is a non-financial Bill, it requires first reading, second reading, reference to committee, report stage, and then third reading. In the case of Bill C-87 those stages have been followed. Bill C-87 is the umbrella Bill which allows the Government to cut tariffs. But when it comes to the actual tariff cutting, there is no such requirement on the Government. Since this Bill refers to the compensation that may be given in return for tariff cuts, there is also no way by which Parliament has a chance to study whether or not the compensation being offered is adequate.

I notice that the Chairman of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade indicated that his committee is not in a position to make a judgment about the final text. The committee has decided that it will issue an interim report towards the beginning of next week, but not a final report. So we have a situation where, using the powers given in Bill C-87, the Government is going ahead and signing a treaty with the United States, despite the fact that Parliament, through the relevant committee, has been put through a sham. The committee went from coast to coast in a couple of weeks. It was a joke of a parliamentary hearing process in which no witness, group, individual, company, or interested party who wanted to comment on this trade deal was able to comment on the specifics because details were not available. A few of the people who commented may have known some of the details, because certain details were released to the sectoral advisory groups which were made up of persons representative of different industries across the country, almost all of whom were spokespersons or representatives of different business concerns. However, in that particular case those persons had no ability to talk because they were bound to secrecy.

I know you wish me to talk about the Bill, Mr. Speaker, and I am talking about the Bill. I want you to understand that very clearly. I am talking about the Bill, because the Bill gives the authority to the Government to do what it is doing without adequate access or recourse to Parliament. You will know, Mr. Speaker, because you sat in this House for some time as we were looking at the Bill, that in a number of ways my Party tried to reinforce the concept of accountability with respect to major trade actions by the Government. Unfortunately, we were beaten back by the majority on the government side at every effort that we made. I have to say with regret that we lost on the simple concepts that we were putting forward, which is that it is not fair to make major tariff changes without reference to Parliament; that it is not just for Parliament to be ignored in those matters; that it is not right for a trade agreement to be signed with a major trading partner without a means by which Canadians in general, and not only this Parliament, can have access to what is being done and an ability to influence the result before the decision is made. It seems that the government side did not understand that at all, which I regret. I think that that fundamentally undermines this Parliament, and I believe that that is is wrong.

When I was first elected to this place in 1984, one of the promises made by the Government was that we would reform the parliamentary process. Back-benchers would be given more of a say. Parliamentary committees would be given more standing. A number of reforms were put into force, and in fact they were pioneered by the former Hon. Member for St. John's East. Those matters were put into force, but it requires a commitment and a political will to ensure that that really happens.

We see an example in this particular Bill where the Government is putting into place a trade deal that hurts average Canadians without allowing average Canadians to have a say. That was what we were trying to say on Bill C-87 from the beginning of second reading, and through all the various hearings that the Bill has been subjected to.

If, under the powers in this Bill, Canada embarks upon a lopsided arrangement where tariffs are cut and we do not receive very much in return, and if as a consequence hundreds of thousands of average Canadians see that their jobs are put at risk, or they may lose their jobs, I think they are right to be concerned. If it goes beyond that, and rather than allowing the details to be out there in order that people can comment for some substantial period of time, the Government instead keeps the details secret—that is done in Mr. Gorbachev's Russia, but I would assume that that would not happen in a democratic country with the democratic values that all of us are elected to uphold in this particular place—I would have thought that a Government should understand that major decisions which appear to be lopsided should not go forward unless people have a chance to have their say.

With regard to the tariff changes now being contemplated, those tariff changes have not been communicated to the public. People have not had a chance to do anything about it. We have tried to do this through this particular Bill, and we have not succeeded. It is conceivable that many more workers fear for their position than may be actually affected. I cannot say, because I have not seen the details.

There are grave fears among women that their position may be seriously affected. They are not in a position to comment because they have not seen the details. When we tried to ensure that that would be done through the process of this particular Bill, we were not able to do that.

There have been grave questions raised with respect to the elimination of the tariffs which affect automobile production. Therefore, the tariffs are an essential part of the automobile free trade agreement, the managed trade agreement between Canada and the United States. It has not been possible for the automobile industry and the workers in that industry, or for Members of Parliament who represent those parts of the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec which have an important stake in that industry, to comment in any detailed or knowledgeable way, because they too have not seen the details.

We are seeing changes in terms of compensation which are phoney compensation. As you know, Mr. Speaker, we have been assured that the health of regional economies in northern Quebec, Atlantic Canada, British Columbia, and places like that, are not being traded away. Our efforts to ensure that there was an adequate opportunity to see what the compensation might be in this particular case were frustrated by the Government. I will come back to that particular point later, but it is a very important point.

I for one have real reservations when the Government uses its tariff cutting powers which are reaffirmed in this particular Bill in order to enter into agreements that seriously and profoundly affect many other aspects of Government in this country. That is the compensation, except that the compensation is one-sided. It seems to me that we have deliberately decided to give the Americans what they were looking for without getting anything in return. That is very serious. We have lost control of Canadian energy. We have lost control of Canadian agriculture. We are losing control of the way in which Canadian Governments have traditionally helped to direct and been involved in the economy.

Sir John A. Macdonald, the architect of a national policy that helped to create industry in this country back in the 1860s and 1870s would, as a good Conservative, be turning in his grave at seeing what is happening under those in his Party who purport to call themselves Conservative and who have put into place such a sell-out of Canada as has essentially taken place.

Mr. Siddon: Rubbish.

Mr. Thacker: You don't know your history.

Mr. Cassidy: Of course I know my history. The Hon. Member states that I do not know my history. One of the things I do know is that a Canadian Government under Sir John A. Macdonald went ahead and saw to it that we created a national east-west railroad which brought the country together. That railroad would be deemed to be an illegal subsidy, according to the Americans, and any goods that were carried along that railroad in future, according to American trade law in this free trade agreement, would in fact become countervailable. That is why I say that Sir John A. would be rolling in his grave. He was a man who had the foresight to bring the country together. He was a man who had the foresight to see that Atlantic Canada, Quebec, Ontario, the Prairies, and British Columbia could live together. He was a man who had the strength and foresight to see that Canada did not have to succumb to all the economic forces that were forcing trade, cultural, and other types of development in a north-south direction, but that we could have a country with separate traditions and with a separate way of proceeding.

• (1730)

Members opposite are disowning the spiritual father of their Party, I would suggest. The Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Witer) seems to disagree. He is disowning the spiritual father of this Party in saying that what Sir John A. tried to create in Canada is no longer valid. It is a pretty day when you have Conservatives adopting the free trade line, which was always a Liberal hallmark. Free trade was tried in 1911, in the 1930s and in the 1940s. The Liberals had to back away because they got defeated every time they tried it. Now the Conservatives are trying to do what the Liberals could never do.

It is essential to ask whether the Government passes the test of honesty, fairness and openness with this Bill.

Mr. St. Germain: We have already.

Mr. Cassidy: The Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) says that the Government has passed the test of openness. That is why the text has not been released on this particular arrangement for two and a half months. That is why the Premiers are being asked to endorse it with 24 hours' notice this Thursday and Friday when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) meets with them. That is why this Parliament is being asked to confirm a deal some 2,000 pages in length which will fundamentally change the way Governments work in this country. Yet the Member from Mission—Port Moody says this Government passes the test of openness, honesty and fairness. If you want to talk about honesty, Mr. Speaker, why is it that the Hon. Member who is now the Prime Minister spoke against this kind—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to hear the Hon. Member, but I think the Hon. Member should mention the Bill once in a while instead of going out on a tangent.

Mr. Cassidy: The Hon. Members are my constituents.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cassidy: They read my constituency reports religiously.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cassidy: Unfortunately, they have not yet been persuaded to my way of thinking. I promised that I will continue always in hope, confident in the knowledge that if not converted they will return to their constituencies when the next federal election occurs.

I could remind you that Clause 62 of the Bill states specifically:

> The Governor in Council may, on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance, by order,
> (a) reduce or remove customs duties on goods imported from any country by way of compensation for concessions granted by that country or any other country, subject to such conditions as may be specified in the order—

I recall that because when I first picked up this Bill I had been assured by the Parliamentary Secretary that this was just a very minor affair. There was reference to an interdepartmental committee setting up a Customs Tariff which talked about the new harmonized commodity description and coding system, or the HS system, and it was seen to be absolutely and benignly routine and boring. Then I picked up the Bill and read it and discovered that, lurking beneath that benign, routine and boring exterior were powers which had existed before but which I believe now are seriously subject to question. You know, Mr. Speaker, that we have been changing a number of the ways things are done around this place since 1984 because Canadians are more alert to the need for a democratization of the way government works in Canada.

It is interesting that the United States will not cut any tariffs until it has taken the trade treaty with Canada through the Senate and the Congress and through lengthy procedures of hearings which will last another six or eight months after Canada signs the deal on January 2. Here in Canada the Government can commit itself by means of a treaty because of the executive power which was given to the Prime Minister as a consequence of the 1984 election. That is our system right now and I believe it is profoundly wrong.

I think that it is wrong for the Prime Minister by the stroke of a pen to make decisions that cut tariffs and thereby imply some other cuts or increases in taxes by $2 billion that fundamentally change the way this country works. It is wrong for the Prime Minister and the Cabinet to make a quickie decision about whether or not the compensation or concessions granted by the U.S.A. as to whether they are adequate without any real means by which we and other Members of Parliament or Canadians in general could look at it. That is why I am continually referring to tariff cuts which can now be made if this Bill passes third reading without any further consent from Parliament. We would not even need a vote next week.

I do not know whether or not the Government will seek to bring matters to a vote next week, but does a resolution in this House really accord with your understanding about the way in which major measures should go forward, Mr. Speaker? That is not the way we handled things on tax reform. We had a White Paper which was out for a number of months. We had 570 briefs and almost 200 witnesses. The committee spent several weeks hearing witnesses both in Ottawa and elsewhere across the country. It finally produced a report after a great deal of lengthy and detailed consideration. That report was then referred back to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), who will still have to come forward with a Ways and Means motion and with a series of measures which then must pass scrutiny by Parliament. It is quite clearly understood that if, for some reason, those measures are found wanting, even though they may be put into force on January 1, 1988—and I have questions about that—nonetheless those measures will be invalidated if Parliament rejects them, withdraws its consent or in some way amends the legislation put forward based on the Ways and Means motion which we will see next week.

Tax reform is important. It affects almost every Canadian. It has a profound influence on the economic lives of our country. This is a process which has gone on now for two and a half years. We have had White Papers. The Minister has announced his intentions. There has been a great deal of canvassing and consultation taking place. Then there was a formal declaration of government proposals in the White Paper, followed by the Ways and Means motion which we will see in another week. Is that happening with something more profound in its influence on our country? No, it is not. Not in any way. In fact, if some Canadian who voted in 1984 and then left the country to go to Africa, who has not been in touch with the news over the course of the last two or three years, came back to Canada now, he or she would be scratching his or her head and saying, "I don't understand this at all. Why is it that the Government is not only seeking renewed powers to cut tariffs without reference to Parliament"—which is what we have before us this afternoon—"but also intends to use those in the greatest tariff cuts Canada has ever seen in a precipitous fashion without any further reference to Parliament? Why is that taking place?" They will say, "I remember hearing the Prime Minister say that Canadians would never accept a free trade agreement. Therefore I assumed when I voted"—no matter how that individual voted in September, 1984—"that I was not voting for this and that the integrity of my country would stay intact while I was away. I certainly did not see this happening".

There is in a very profound way a problem in this legislation, namely, this legislation perpetuates a kind of elitism to which the Government is particularly prone. I have heard representatives of the Business Council on National Issues say it would be a great thing to reduce Canadian tariffs and American tariffs, presumably as part of the free trade deal. That council advocated that some time ago and is a major proponent of it. Nobody talks about the fact that those corporate presidents of the 150 largest companies in Canada are in large measure the heads, presidents or CEOs of companies that are controlled in the United States. Whether some of them as Canadians may have some misgivings about what is taking place is a possibility, but nonetheless for the most part the companies for which they work are indifferent as to whether they carry out business in Canada or in the United States. If they all emigrate to the United States because of changes in tariffs and if they find they can serve the Canadian market from Cleveland, Philadelphia, Milwaukee or Seattle, then it is no skin off their backs because their company will continue to make profits, pay dividends to the shareholders and be able to continue its amount of business. Therefore, as a company or an organization, it will not be profoundly affected. The Canadians in the company will of course be profoundly affected, and that is why the labour movement has raised such concerns over such measures as are contained in Bill C-87, measures which allow what sociologists call elite accommodation. I think it is significant of the fact—

[Translation]

I think it is quite significant that at recent hearings before the Committee on External Affairs and International Trade, witnesses representing the business world, big corporations and big companies mostly spoke out in favour of the Government's proposal to reduce tariffs in our trade with the Americans, while witnesses representing farmers, women, and coalitions of average Canadians spoke out against the free trade proposal, because they were defending the interests of ordinary Canadians, while the business people who appeared before the Comittee did not have a second thought about the average Canadian. One wonders, Mr. Speaker, whether the elite should really run this country. Are we supposed to tolerate that from time to time, as an afterthought, Canadians are referred to in an election campaign? That advertising campaigns are used in an attempt to influence Canadians, campaigns paid by whom? By the taxpayer. Mr. Speaker, to promote the tariff cuts that are being sought or have been made possible as a result of Bill C-87, an advertising campaign costing taxpayers about $12 million will be launched in the next few weeks. Vast amounts of very expensive leaflets have been printed to persuade Canadians that tariff cuts are a good thing and will benefit the average Canadian. Mr. Speaker, it is clear now that more and more Canadians are rejecting these arguments, but nevertheless, the process of accommodating the elite is an antidemocratic process now being implemented by the Government a very unfair process which involves accommodating the Americans, with the support of the business world but without referring at all to the average Canadian.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to see an election before we introduce measures that are as important as the Government's proposed tariff cuts in the agreement with the United States. This is not just my position, it is my Party's as well. We believe that Canadians have been deceived in terms of what they were promised during the previous election campaign, considering that the Government planned to go ahead with a measure that threatens not only our jobs but also the sovereignty of this country, its social programs, regional development, and so forth.

Unfortunately, it is not within my power to force the Government to call an election right away. However, Mr. Speaker, it is within my power to insist that a Bill that affects Canada's trade should become a piece of truly democratic legislation. Instead of the Government having the power to make tariff decisions without reference to Parliament which represents all Canadians, the Bill should either be rejected or amended to provide for truly democratic participation by the elected representatives of the Canadian people, the three Parties and 282 Members of the Parliament of Canada.

• (1740)

As I have said, I very much fear that business will say yes and the Government and its 210 Members will jump. Canadians as a whole will say no or will be unsure because many people really are unsure about these matters. They are technical, and of course it is hard to understand what is in a particular tariff-cutting exercise without having the details until the very last minute.

I am really uneasy about that. I think we ought to have a full national debate based on the over-all picture of our trade with the particular country with whom we choose to cut tariffs and a full national debate that touches on the compensation or the concessions that are made. My concern is that the concessions we are getting from the United States are in fact so inadequate.

Speaking of elite accommodation, I have a very real fear that we have something more than that here. The Government is unpopular. I regret that. While I respect you, Mr. Speaker, I know that even your seat might be threatened in the next election because of the unpopularity of the Prime Minister and the Government as a whole.

The Government is profoundly unpopular among Canadians and increasingly takes a right-wing view of the kind of agenda that should be imposed on Canada. It believes in privatization, deregulation, scrapping any effort to intervene in the energy sector, trying until just the other day to deregulate the transportation industry totally. This Government has been trying to change profoundly the way Canada is run.

How will it change the way Canada is run? It will put the control of Canada's future in the hands of large corporations, many of which are American owned, and take the control and power to influence away from the people of Canada who traditionally have exercised that power through Governments.

I spoke a few minutes ago about Sir John A. Macdonald. Sir John A. was a pragmatist, besides being a lover of good Scotch. He saw that we could not create the country of Canada if we did not have a substantial amount of participation in creating that country. He created a national railway without which we would not have had a country.

During the time of the Conservative Prime Minister, R. B. Bennett, a man whose memory is perhaps sometimes treated with a bit too much disdain, there was the creation of Air Canada, another means of binding the country together, a means which this Government wants to privatize. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation was formed at that time, another national body that helps to knit the country together but which this Government would like to privatize if it had the opportunity to do so.

During the 1920s and the 1930s, the Canadian National Railway was developed as another way of bringing the country together. What is happening now? All of these are now being reviewed by the Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall). If the Government thinks it can get away with it, it will in fact get away with it.

The Government prefers to stand for the world of the rich and forget about the world of the longshoremen in Montreal who are facing a lock-out by their employers and the world of the Brinks guards with whom I was on the picket line today. They have been forced to strike because they have received pay increases of only 50 cents per hour in the course of the last five and a half years. These are average Canadians who are suffering because of the agenda which has been put into force by this Government.

What is happening to the trade agreement? What concessions are taking place? All the concessions appear to be from Canada, and I think Canada got nothing in return. In return, we got a limitation of our ability to use energy as an instrument of economic development. We got a limitation of our ability to continue to use agriculture as a means of maintaining rural life in Canada. We got a limitation on our future ability to develop industry and create jobs in Atlantic Canada. We got a fundamental interference with the traditional role of the Government in having a cultural presence for Canadians here in Canada.

As many more commentators are saying, the nature of the concessions that were made by the United States is in fact very difficult to see. In the papers today, Mr. Cedric Ritchie, no New Democrat he, an eminent banker, has written to the president or the director of the Canadian Business Council on National Issues, breaking ranks with big business's stand in favour of the free trade agreement. I think that is very important because, if I can refer it back to this particular Bill, Mr. Ritchie is saying that the arrangement proposed right now is so lopsided that Canada is basically throwing away all of its bargaining chips without getting necessary concessions in return.

An Hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Cassidy: The Hon. Member says "nonsense". Yet it is true. I think those comments are extremely relevant. Based on the outline of the deal he believes that a reasonable case can be made that we have not made adequate progress towards our principal goal of secure access to the U.S. market. Yet that is the concession being used to justify Canada giving up $2 billion worth of tariffs and the U.S. giving up only $1 billion.

• (1750)

We left the question of subsidies undefined. We left it as a matter of discussion for the next five or seven years. Goodness knows what is going to happen after that. In the meantime, because it is very hard to put tariffs up after you have reduced them, we will be left with no means of fighting back if the Americans do not fight fair. I have to say that there is a lot of evidence that the Americans tend not to fight fair.

Another reason I think it is important that these matters come back to Parliament, and why we tried to do that in a number of different ways with respect to this Bill, and ensure that treaty-making powers would not be used to accomplish an end-run around Parliament, is because of the way it weakens our traditional reliance on and adherence to GATT.

As a long-time Member of Parliament, Mr. Speaker, you know the importance of that and how in the past we have respected our obligations in that respect. We have participated actively in GATT negotiations. Just a few months ago Canada provided very active leadership at the launching of the Uruguay round of tariff cuts. That has been a lengthy and public process, yet I have to say, in line with what I am saying here, that even there we had problems. The process was flawed because the cuts made in the Tokyo round, the Kennedy round, and others were made without direct reference to Parliament.

If we turn around and unilaterally cut tariffs for the U.S. which accounts for 78 per cent of our trade, and do it in such a way that 90 per cent of our trade within a few years will be with the U.S., then I think the other countries in GATT will quite rightly look on Canada as simply a puppet or pawn of whoever happens to be the President of the U.S. and whoever happens to be in the U.S. Congress at a particular time. In fact, it has even been suggested that there may be Canadians starting to say that this is crazy, why the devil do we not simply give up and become the fifty-first state?

As Canadian industries struggle, and they will, some unsuccessfully, will Canada then go and negotiate away further protections, or will we no longer be prepared to provide leadership on the issue of multilateral tariff reductions in GATT?

With respect to trading rules under which other countries can collectively put pressure on the U.S. for concessions in their unjust and unreasonable legislation which allows them to harass businessmen who import goods not just from Canada but from many other countries, Canada will have essentially given away its ability to deal with that in GATT. We have already said we are not going to play in that particular sandbox. We have already made our own deal. If we discover it is not a very good deal, it will be too late.

I repeat, we will have cut tariffs for inadequate compensation and the people of Canada will not have had an opportunity to participate in any meaningful way.

I read with some interest the directives given by the U.S. when it was talking about the compensation and concessions it would give to Canada with respect to tariff-cutting arrangements, which is what we are talking about in this Bill. It is very interesting that in his communication with Senator Bob Packwood of the Senate Finance Committee, President Reagan did not talk about concessions to Canada. It was all about concessions to the U.S. Since Canada has had a trade surplus with the U.S. of up to $20 billion, I suppose it is natural for the Americans to say they are not getting a good deal, so they will try to improve it. That is what they set out to do, and they succeeded.

I for one, as a Member of this Parliament, would have appreciated the opportunity to have talked to that issue in detail, not just in a hurried debate that will take place for a week next week when everyone is buying their Christmas presents and worrying about whether they can make adequate transportation arrangements to go back home for the Christmas break.

The President looked for comparable treatment for American and Canadian investment. He wanted increased access to government procurement opportunities. These are not concessions by the Americans, they are concessions to the Americans. There are no concessions by the Americans. We cut tariffs with no concessions by the Americans except for the fact that their very low levels of tariffs are being cut. They are not a real obstacle to Canadian industries right now. They have agreed to talk with us for the next five or seven years.

Mr. Hawkes: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. We are at third reading debate on the customs harmonization Bill. The Hon. Member is reading from an American document, I suspect because his Party turned down a chance for detailed briefings all the way along. Therefore he is not familiar with the Canadian position. In either case, he is not talking in a manner relevant to the Bill before the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I think the Hon. Member is getting to the Bill now.

Mr. Cassidy: Maybe the Hon. Member is getting to the Government.

Mr. Witer: Wishful thinking.

Mr. Cassidy: We had an option. We could have shared the information available to the average Canadian or we could have taken briefings from the Government on the condition that nothing we learned would be imparted to the public. When we had that option we stood with average Canadians and not with the small elite group which has been kept informed of what is actually happening behind the scenes in the tariff-cutting process.

I want to tell you about the concessions. Clause 62 says that Canada can reduce or remove customs duties on goods imported from any country by way of compensation for concessions granted by that country. The Hon. Member may have misunderstood that. It is not concessions to that country, it is concessions by that country. Yet the President wanted to ensure that the U.S. would get reduction of government subsidies and support to industry in Canada; that there would be non-discriminatory treatment of supplies and services in Canada; that there would be effective protection against transshipment problems in Canada. In other words, President Reagan was not looking to make concessions to Canada in return for our eliminating $2 billion worth of tariffs. He was looking to us to pay the Americans with a $2 billion tariff cut, which will come from God knows what increases in taxes in Canada, and then make further concessions in order to sit down at a table and talk with us for the next five or seven years. That is why we have been saying the Government is dishonest, unjust and unfair in the way it is handling our trade relations and in particular our tariff cutting.

If you would like me to call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to do so.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is six o'clock and the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) will still have the floor when the debate resumes.

HUMAN RIGHTS

ANNIVERSARY OF UNIVERSAL DECLARATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I rise to inform all Members of this House that today is Human Rights Day and marks the 39th anniversary of the universal Declaration of Human Rights. This historic document on basic rights and fundamental freedoms was proclaimed on December 10, 1948, by the United Nations. Its philosophy of equality and personal dignity symbolized a new era in human understanding and tolerance. The member nations that signed the declaration in 1948 voiced their united support for individual liberty in all countries throughout the world.

For our part, we in Canada have continued to stress the importance of these principles within our own borders with a distinctly Canadian vision of a fair and harmonious society.

[Translation]

The 1960 Canadian Bill of Rights affirmed the privileges which all Canadians enjoy as citizens of this country. Bearing the signature of the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker, this monument to freedom which we hold so dearly states, among other things: "... in Canada there have existed and shall continue to exist without discrimination by reason of race, national origin, colour, religion or sex, the ... human rights and fundamental freedoms ...".

[English]

Our Canadian Human Rights Act came into being in 1977, followed by the Constitution Act of 1982. This encompassed the social principles of our Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, a statement in support of human dignity and equality that is the envy of many of our neighbours worldwide.

On December 1, I tabled in this House the Canadian Multicultural Act. When passed, this historic Bill will confirm the constitutional freedom of all Canadians of whatever origin to preserve and enhance their multicultural heritage and to share it with others. It will recognize that all of us are equal participants in our society, thereby reinforcing both our Canadian identity and the unity of this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, Canada has also heralded civil rights on a world-wide scale. The position we have taken against the injustices we see in South Africa, in Central America, and in a number of other regions of the world vividly attests to our firm determination to restore the kind of climate where all nations of the world will be able to feel like true equals.

• (1110)

[English]

Another example of the Government's commitment to human rights lies in its plans to establish the International Centre for Human Rights and Democratic Development as jointly announced by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Landry). This centre's important mandate will be to uphold human rights and strengthen democratic institutions by means of international co-operation.

International Humans Rights Day is a time for recalling the millions in the world who are denied their basic rights. It is also an occasion for solemn reflection, for some through prayer, for others through giving thanks, for the blessings we enjoy in Canada where human rights for everyone is a central pillar of our society's structure.

[Translation]

As Canada grew to maturity, its citizens displayed ever increasing openmindedness in mutual respect for one another. But we still have some way to go because it is always possible to improve the situation. Given the understanding which has developed between the people and the Government of Canada, I firmly believe that the principles underlying our hopes are that much stronger. Indeed, cultural or racial origins must not stand as obstacles to the free expression of fundamantal rights.

[English]

Allow me to conclude by quoting from the introduction to the Multiculturalism Act a week ago. It states:

> . . . The Government calls upon all citizens to make a renewed commitment to the principles of equality, diversity, and community and to continue the great task of building their homeland into a free and united country that will continue to be a symbol of hope in a fractious, turbulent world . . . The proposed Act should reinforce Canada's stature among the nations of the world, adding another page to the country's long record as a leader in matters relating to human and civil rights.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I read the text of the Minister's statement which I received about an hour ago, and I have listened carefully in the hopes that it might be amended. On an occasion as important as International Human Rights Day, I am frankly disappointed that he would limit himself to painting such a rosy picture of human rights in Canada and, in a sense, publicize or promote his own legislative program when the world is in such agony and chaos. Instead of addressing the problems facing our native people, or the inequality affecting women, or the problems of discrimination faced by visible minorities, the disabled and handicapped, he has reviewed and rehashed generalities with which I am sure we all agree. I wonder if the Minister wrote the statement himself.

The Minister spoke about the Multiculturalism Bill, and of course we have all supported the multiculturalism concept for decades. Yet I would have liked him to have told us what it actually achieves. What does it do, for example, about racism and discrimination?

The Minister passed over the world's problems in several sentences, yet at this very hour burning issues exist. Let us take just one example, that of Haiti, where a brutal military regime has savaged its population for several years and sponsored or condoned death squads which have been murdering citizens lining up for an election. The election had to be cancelled for that reason and that Government has had the audacity to announce today that it is trying to call illegal elections for January 17. That is just one of many tragic examples of international problems. On a day of such importance and such solemnity as International Human Rights Day, I am disappointed that the Minister has not risen to the occasion and discussed with us the problems, instead of shovelling self-serving and self-congratulatory propaganda of sweetness and light for the Government.

Perhaps he would like to deal with the real human rights issues here in Canada. What about the failure to appoint a commissioner from the Atlantic region to the Canadian Human Rights Commission? What about the slow pace of dealing with human rights cases before that commission, some reputedly taking as long as a year to a year and a half or even two years? What about the failure to deal with the human rights concerns of our native people? What about the aboriginal land claims? What about the way in which we deal with our native people in our system of justice? What about the human rights problems facing our native people with respect to housing? What about the problems faced by our native people with respect to medical care? What about youth programs? We know so many young people in the native communities are struggling to find meaning in life. What about the basic right to life? What about the fact that our native people have a higher mortality rate than others in Canada, particularly for their children? What about human rights issues in this country?

On International Human Rights Day, I was pleased that the Minister recognized the occasion but I have to ask him, on a day of this importance, can you not get serious?

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, once again I rise on behalf of the NDP to add my voice to that of the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) and the Official Opposition spokesman in recognition of the thirty-ninth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. This day marks the culmination of the recognition of a new ideal among nations in a world where, only a century before, slavery and the attitude that supported it were pervasive.

It is because of this new ideal that we have a better world, but not a perfect world. Even now, in the glow of glasnost, Jews plead for Russian refuseniks and Afghans for their land. In Haiti the people struggle for a blood-free vote. In southern Africa, El Salvador, Nicaragua and Guatemala human rights lay victim to local tyranny and foreign conflicts. In Iran, Pakistan and elsewhere we see that religious intolerance is still a powerful force for suppression.

We in Canada, as the Minister says, can look with pride upon a nation striving to become a new model for understanding among an increasing diversity of people. As we increasingly reflect the many peoples of the world in our own citizenship, we are asked to become an increasingly powerful voice on the world stage for equality, justice and freedom. Whether it be in southern Africa, Central America or elsewhere, we must be sure that our voice will be heard above the cacophony of national or big power interests which tempt compromise. In our own land the recognition in legislation of the multiculturalism of our land is not enough unless equality is absolutely assured.

On this thirty-ninth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, let us not forget that, as we celebrate Meech Lake, we still have not dealt with the limits on equality presented in our Charter of Rights by the override clause. Those of us who have supported Meech Lake and those of us who look upon Canada as a multicultural nation insist that the first priority, as the provinces and the federal Government deliberate about the next constitutional change, be the elimination of the that clause which says to too many of us who are not of English or French descent that we are not quite equal if there is a need for compromise for some purpose.

Let us also recognize that increasingly those of us who looked with hope upon the Human Rights Commissions of the federal Government and the provinces see now that they have virtually deserted us. When it takes not days, not weeks, but years all too often for complaints of discrimination to be processed by provincial human rights commissions or the federal Human Rights Commission, it suggests to many that we are willing to move too slowly on something which should have been completed long ago and for which there was so much hope not too long ago.

• (1120)

We join in celebration. We are proud of the contribution that Canada has made. We are pleased by the changes which make this country more representative of the world's population, but we cannot sit down on this day satisfied that we have achieved perfection domestically or internationally. We have done well, but we have much more to do.

Mr. Speaker: I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement Government Orders will be extended by 14 minutes beginning at one o'clock.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 82—CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—EXTENSION OF DEADLINE

Mr. Speaker: Since today is the final allotted day, the House will go through the usual procedures to consider and dispose of the Supply Bill. In view of recent practices, do Hon. Members agree that the Supply Bill be distributed now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa) moved:

That this House condemn the government for its failure to allow an adequate period of review prior to the signing of a highly complex trade agreement with the United States on January 2, 1988 and, as a result, this House calls upon the government to seek an extension of the January 2nd deadline by at least 60 days.

He said: Mr. Speaker, we are just three short weeks away from signing what has been described as the most significant economic agreement in the history of the relationships between Canada and the United States. That description is one which my Party shares. This deal is indeed very significant, if not quite comparable to the Magna Carta which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) would like to suggest from time to time in his highly exaggerated rhetoric, and will have an immense impact on the lives of Canadians, not only for the rest of this century but into the next century as well.

Yet, as serious as this is, the incredible fact remains that the Parliament of Canada has not yet seen the final text. This is absolutely outrageous.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Broadbent: The Conservative Government and the United States administration agreed to the elements of this proposal in the first weekend of October. We were assured at that time that the people of Canada and their representatives here in the Parliament of Canada would have a final legal text within a matter of weeks. Weeks turned into months and it will be more than two months after that promise was made that a final text will be presented.

We are now told that tomorrow the Government of Canada will release publicly a 250-page agreement with over 1,200 pages of tariff tables for the people outside of Parliament and the Parliament of Canada finally to consider in detail. In terms of the parliamentary agenda leading into the Christmas period, that means that an agreement of this immense complexity and seriousness will have to be discussed and debated, according to the Government's proposed schedule, for only five days, the five sitting days of next week.

On behalf of all the members of my Party and, I am sure, of Canadians from coast to coast, this is not a democratic process but a mockery of the democratic process.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The Prime Minister, regrettably, is still determined to sign this deal on a schedule imposed and proposed by the United States of America. The January 2 date was not decided upon as a consequence of a Canadian initiative even though the impact of this deal will be much more significant on the lives of Canadians than it will be on the lives of Americans for the obvious reason that their society and economy is so much larger than ours. Even though the consequences are much more horrendous from our point of view, and positive from the Government's point of view, the Government has accepted the January 2 deadline which was proposed by the United States.

Even the Conservative Chairman of the Committee on External Affairs and International Trade which looked into this accord in the past few weeks, without the final wording of course, has said that it would be "absolutely silly", to use his words, for his committee to consider the final text until some time in the new year.

Surely when a government proposes such a massive change in Canada-U.S. relations there is an obligation to ensure that the democratic rights of Canadians to consider this deal are honoured. If it was absolutely silly to think that the committee could consider the final wording of this text in a matter of days, it is absolutely silly and irresponsible for the Government to expect the Parliament of Canada to do so in a matter of a few days.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: For once the Government should act in a responsible and serious manner. It has an obligation to live up to the implications of the serious agreement which it has signed. It has an obligation to give Parliament, the provinces and, most of all, the people of Canada, the facts on which they are supposed to make a judgment.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Conservative majority decided that the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade would be on the road for less than two weeks. Dozens of private citizens and groups have been unable to make presentations before the Committee. Only a few groups and individuals have had a chance to explain their concerns to the Parliamentary Committee. Day after day, NDP Members on the Committee moved to have the hearings opened to the public. Day after day, they moved to give ordinary citizens a chance to express their views, and day after day, the Conservative majority voted against this democratic opening up of the consultation process.

Mr. Speaker, the Conservatives did not want a democratic process. They merely wanted to give the impression it was democratic. That is typical of this Government.

Today's debate is not about the substance of the Agreement. We may have a debate on that Monday, at least I hope so. Today, our subject is the need for a real, informed debate in this country. We are talking about the democratic rights of the Canadian people. Whether Canadians are for or against the Agreement, most Canadians would like to see the details of the Agreement. They want a chance to judge the Agreement with all the facts.

Mr. Speaker, many Canadians share our concern about fundamental changes in our political, social and economic life. The status of our relations with the United States is crucial for Canadians, especially for our trade relations.

Today we are each other's principal economic partner, and that will remain so. However, Mr. Speaker, as a nation, we are masters in our own house and we want it to stay that way. The Conservatives must understand this fact. All Canadians understand the basic reality of our economic and foreign policies and their impact on our relations with the United States. All Canadians understand as well that in business terms, a healthy relationship with the United States is of vital importance to our economy, our communities and our jobs. That is why we are so concerned about the impact this trade agreement will have, whether on energy, agriculture or regional equity. All these concerns are central to our economy and our way of life. In all these areas, Mr. Speaker, the Conservatives have sacrificed our sovereignty. That is the truth.

• (1130)

On Monday I will outline at length the New Democratic Party opposition to very specific parts of the deal. Today, I simply want to note some specific matters of concern in a discussion that is fundamentally about the democratic process.

One must ask, why this particular deal? Why are we making major concessions on the control of our decision-making in energy, on our right to retain control over business enterprises to ensure that they stay in Canadian hands in almost every sector. Why are we making major concessions that will negatively affect the agricultural sector, the manufacturing sector and particularly will have a negative effect over the capacity of our western provinces to become industrialized and not simply remain resource exporters?

The Deputy Minister of Finance has already announced major changes affecting our capacity to have just and equitable regional development programs. All of these elements are found in this deal. Why is the Government doing this? I hope that either today or in Monday's debate these questions will be faced head on.

When the Prime Minister first proposed this, we had a $20 billion surplus in trade with the United States in our commercial exchange. We were doing quite well in trade with the United States. It is true that from the time the Prime Minister announced this the United States has taken negative actions against some of our key exports which, incidentally, were supposed to be going in duty-free already.

In spite of those actions, most of which were unfair and totally unwarranted, even today the monthly trade figures for October show that we had a surplus in our merchandise trade with the United States of $840 million. So far this year we have had a trade surplus with the United States of $10.1 billion without this deal.

I say, as a Canadian and a New Democrat, that we are a confident and competent people. Whatever the domain of activity, whether it is the arts, athletic activity, or business activity, during the last 25 years in particular I believe that Canadians are second to none in the world. In terms of our ability to compete with the United States of America, we have never been in a better position. In sector after sector we are winning the competition with the United States already.

I want to remind the Conservatives who are embarking upon this historic mess that already 95 per cent of our exports into the United States are duty free or at a level of duty or tariff of 5 per cent or less. We are doing well in competition. We are not confronted by significant tariff barriers for most of our exports to the United States.

The Government reminds us that the Americans took unfair actions in some parts of our economy. We all noted that and objected to it. The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) promised that the Conservative Government would move "to get unfair U.S. laws changed", and said that we had to have guaranteed access to the United States markets. The Conservatives went after a dispute settlement mechanism which the Minister for International Trade and other spokespersons for the Government said would give us this guaranteed access. They got no such thing. There is a tribunal that does not have the authority to change U.S. laws.

Mr. McDermid: Or Canadian laws.

Mr. Broadbent: Or Canadian laws. I say to the Member opposite that it was not our agenda, it was the Conservatives who promised to get us guaranteed access to the U.S. markets. After making so many sacrifices, they did not even get that.

If we are winning in our trade competition with the United States, whether it is in shakes and shingles, softwood, tubular steel, pork or any other part of our trade, the U.S. Congress will have exactly the same powers to pass unfair laws against us as they had before this agreement.

Mr. McDermid: Wrong.

Mr. Broadbent: We find that unacceptable.

Mr. McDermid: Wrong.

Mr. Broadbent: The Member says that is wrong. I hope he can prove it. If he can, it will be the first time he has done so in the House.

Unless there is a fundamental change in the nature of the dispute settlement mechanism, the constitutional right of the U.S. Congress to take action against us when we win the competition will remain in place. The Government got nothing, having given away so much on the part of the people of Canada.

• (1140)

Not only did it get nothing out of what was stated to be its central goal in these negotiations, but our prairie farmers, in this case, the grain exporters, thought that if we had this locked in trade agreement with the United States, at least they should be protected from massive American subsidies in grain exports when they export directly to countries in which we have had traditional markets, whatever other limitations in the agreement.

Our grain exporters are the most efficient producers of grain in the world and are quite prepared to meet honest competition. But the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) tried to justify the continuity of these subsidies by saying: "Oh, these were from a pre-existing program established by the U.S. Congress". It is a pre-existing program that will still be applicable, that can still use the massive resources of the U.S. treasury against our agricultural sector which is effective and competitive, and I say, once again, the Government sold out the interests of our grain producers.

The right of Canadians to export processed products as opposed to unprocessed products is something we in this Party have maintained as a goal. We have wanted this, particularly for the development of western Canada; not to be hewers of wood and drawers of water, not to go for the quick buck fix so characteristic of the Tories. We wanted the right to maintain as a nation the sovereign control over resource development to whatever level of finished processing before we export it.

There was a preliminary decision by GATT against a very important part of the British Columbia economy, the export of processed fish. According to news reports about the change in the wording of this agreement, incredibly enough, this Conservative Government is prepared to sacrifice this right. It has—and we will see if they got it—maintained the right for the east coast fisheries to ensure that we can export processed fish without having action taken against us by the U.S., but it has completely capitulated in terms of the interests of British Columbia, and we find it totally unacceptable.

To give one more example, late yesterday afternoon I had incredible news presented to me by a document produced by the Automotive Parts Manufacturers' Association of Canada, which up to this point had been supporting this deal on a tentative basis. It has now unequivocally withdrawn its support. Why? Interestingly enough, when it saw the first wording on the weekend of October 3 and October 4, the Automotive Parts Manufacturers' Association, like the New Democratic Party, opposed this deal in this particular instance because of its impact on the automotive sector. It went to work to try at least to persuade the Government to increase the North American content in automotive production.

I remind Conservatives Members we are talking about 65,000 direct jobs in automotive parts alone, not considering the indirect jobs. The Automotive Parts Manufacturers' Association wanted the Government to at least raise the North American content from 50 per cent to 60 per cent in this agreement. I learned yesterday that the American side had agreed to this, that the Americans saw this could be like the original Auto Pact, if it applied equitably to both sides.

If we consider competition from other parts of the world, both Canada and the United States could benefit from increasing the North American content provisions from 50 per cent to 60 per cent. It would have been beneficial to Canadians, and the Americans concluded it would have been beneficial to the Americans as well. Incredibly enough, I learned yesterday that it was the Canadian side in the negotiations that said no to this. The Canadian spokesperson said this was not in the Government's interests. So we have the incredible situation that the Government gave away the enforcement mechanism of tariff imposition to enforce the Auto Pact, the Canadian Automotive Parts Manufacturers' Association arguing for some improvement, at least raising North American content from 50 per cent to 60 per cent, the American side agreeing with this and the Canadian side turning it down. I say this is disgusting behaviour and totally unacceptable to Canadians wherever they may live.

As I said at the outset of my comments on this motion, although I referred to a few of the details of the resolution today, the debate is fundamentally about process, about the denial of a serious opportunity to Canadians to consider the impact of this major proposal in their lives. When so many significant groups representing all walks of life have indicated their concern about having the opportunity to learn, to understand and to comment upon the agreement, the Government has an obligation, in our view, to respond fully and to facilitate such a debate and discussion. It is a denial of democracy not to give the Canadian people an opportunity to fully examine this deal.

The committee studying this proposal, as all Members of the House know, went simply to a handful of cities across the country from Vancouver to St. John's. It obviously heard from some people in those hearings. However, I ask, what about the people and groups who were denied the opportunity to speak to the committee either to give their views or to obtain information? Even given the committee's own democratic decision not to advertise, many groups and individuals in all these communities tried to appear before the committee and were frustrated in their attempts.

An anti-poverty organization in Fredericton, womens' groups in Edmonton, a textile firm in Montreal, seniors' groups in Toronto, all were denied their right to be heard on this important matter which affects their lives and the lives of all other Canadians. In Manitoba over 30 different groups wanted to appear before the committee and could not. In Charlottetown, the coalition against this deal was forced to hold its own hearings because it was denied access to the committee. A British Columbia coalition of 43 groups was given only a 30 minute hearing. That worked out roughly to 20 seconds each. I repeat, this is not a democratic process. It makes a travesty of democratic process.

Other groups which did get to appear, particularly in Atlantic Canada, gave the deal only qualified or lukewarm support. Many said they wanted to see the final text before making up their minds. The Economic Council of Newfoundland, the Halifax Board of Trade and the Atlantic Chamber of Commerce gave the deal what could at best be described as lukewarm support. The Yellowknife Chamber of Commerce said the Government is trying to sell free trade and not educate Canadians as to its content. The Prince Edward Island seafood processors complained of what they described as political manipulation.

The Prime Minister and the Government have to be seen to be doing more precisely what they are doing. What they are up to is not presenting a democratic process. What they are up to is railroading a deal through Parliament, disregarding the whole democratic process of this country. They are doing it in a way with which we totally and fundamentally disagree.

While the Canadian Prime Minister refuses to give Canadians adequate time to assess this measure, it is worth noting that in the United States members of the U.S. Congress will have a minimum of three months to consider its impact. Our Parliament does not again reconvene after next week until after the January 2 deadline. While Canadian families will be celebrating with their loved ones, friends and neighbours, and while they are enjoying themselves during the Christmas period, this Government will be busy signing away the country's control over its own future. Beginning the new year by signing away the control of the country without allowing the country a chance to study this deal is absolutely unacceptable to the New Democratic Party and the people of Canada.

Just last week the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said in the House:

> January 2 is a day of no great significance to Canadians or to the House of Commons.

He was right when he said that. It remains true today. But the Prime Minister has refused to act on what the logical implications of that announcement are. If January 2 has no great significance to the people of Canada and to the Parliament of Canada, why doesn't the Prime Minister put an end to January 2 as the deadline?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired. Is there unanimous consent of the House to allow the Leader of the New Democratic Party to continue his speech?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I thank members of the Government and others for giving me the extended time. I will not abuse that privilege.

I want to conclude by saying that the Prime Minister does owe the people of Canada the right to thoroughly look at, to understand in all its complexity, what he has described as the most important economic deal in the history of relations between our two countries. There is nothing magic and there is nothing of significance about January 2. We need as a people at least the amount of time the Americans have to assess the impact of this proposed arrangement on our lives. Canadians want, Canadians deserve and Canadians should have the democratic right to a real debate on the facts. The deadline of January 2 must be extended.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have listened today with great interest to the leader of the socialist Party in Canada. There are a couple of areas in his speech with which I agree wholeheartedly. One is that Canadians are good, they are competitive. They work well and they are able to compete in this world today. I agree with him wholeheartedly, they are. That is what this agreement is all about. There is no question that we in the Progressive Conservative Party and the Government of Canada have great faith in our workers and our competitive position within the world. We can compete with the best.

We are following a process which started after the Second World War when tariffs dropped from an average of 40 per cent on a myriad of items to an average of 9 per cent on a few selected items. What has happened to this Canada in that period of time, Mr. Speaker? We have become a stronger country, a more sovereign country and a more affluent society. Prosperity has followed. This is just the natural progression following on those reductions in tariffs to get an open trading agreement, and not only with the United States. I am sure we will have some good progress in the current negotiations that are going on under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade in Geneva today.

My friend from Oshawa fears a great American takeover. The economy of his riding is generated by one of the finest automobile manufacturing operations in the world, namely, General Motors. He fears the American investment and he fears the Americans coming. He keeps saying around the country that we are going to be the fifty-first. Yet he welcomes with open arms $2 billion of investment by General Motors in his riding. That is welcomed with open arms. He does not call for an investigation or a review of that investment, not at all.

An Hon. Member: That is not free trade, it is managed trade.

Mr. McDermid: He is there applauding it. The Member thinks it is great if investment is in his riding. He thinks the Auto Pact is terrific because it helps his riding and his UAW friends. It does. We say that is great. I like it too because it helps in Brampton as well. I have an auto manufacturing operation in my riding as well. But if anybody else wants to take advantage of this agreement the New Democratics say, "We are opposed."

We have heard the doom and gloom and we have seen the crocodile tears.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: I sat and listened quietly to the Hon. Member's speech. I have got the New Democrats going on the other side. I must have pinched a nerve.

Mr. Orlikow: You are not telling the truth, that is why.

Mr. McDermid: There is the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) yelling that "You are not telling the truth".

Mr. Orlikow: You are not.

Mr. McDermid: But the NDP is trying to frighten Canadians. Here is the latest development from the New Democratic Party which is hot off the press. The NDP business development Minister in Manitoba, Al Mackling, would have Canadians believing that an armed invasion from the United States might occur if Canada tore up the free trade agreement or did not live up to its part of the deal.

Mr. Holtmann: Invasion?

Mr. McDermid: Have you ever heard anything so silly and ridiculous in your life, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Broadbent: Stick to the motion.

Mr. McDermid: I am sure the guys at Fort Bragg are having a good chuckle today after that. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North says we are not telling the truth. What about the nonsense of an armed invasion which the NDP is spreading around the countryside. It is such utter nonsense.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): He was wrong. Tell us about free trade and farm implements.

Mr. McDermid: Let us get to the crux of the motion. I want to emphasize the importance of this free trade agreement to all regions and all sectors of our economy and talk about the unprecedented program of consultation with Canadians. If the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) would sit back and relax, I will let him speak after me—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): A thousand jobs have been lost in Brantford on free trade.

Mr. McDermid: That had a lot to do with free trade, sure.

Mr. Broadbent: You lunkhead. If they had an Auto Pact there it would not have happened.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Can we allow the Member to continue his speech? The Hon. Member.

Mr. McDermid: We sure have the New Democrats going this morning, Mr. Speaker.

As I was saying before I was so dramatically interrupted, the consultations that we have had in the last number of years with Canadians on the free trade negotiations are unprecedented. Most legitimate, if not all legitimate studies done outside of Government have recommended that we enter into these trade negotiations. It was most important that this be done to protect and enlarge our markets. From the time the negotiations were begun, we have had those consultations and they have allowed us to enter into a two-way dialogue with business, labour, consumers, and with the provinces. The core of the system of consultation has been the International Trade Advisory Committee system to provide a two-way flow of information and advice between the Government and the private sector.

• (1200)

Under the distinguished chairmanship of Mr. Walter Light, bringing together more than 40 leaders from business, labour, consumer groups, and academia, the ITAC, the International Trade Advisory Committee, has concerned itself with broad matters relating to international trade access and marketing. It has made valuable recommendations to the free trade agreement negotiation process.

Complementing the work of ITAC are 15 sectoral advisory groups of international trade, SAGITs. The SAGITs represent a broad cross-section of the Canadian economy. For the record, I wish to cover the sectors that are represented. There is agriculture, food and beverage; fish and fish products; minerals and metals; energy products and services; chemicals and petrochemicals; forest products; industrial, marine and rail equipment; automotive and aerospace; textiles, footwear and leather; apparel and fur; consumer and household products; communications, computer equipment and services; financial services; general services; arts and cultural industries.

The SAGITs were all selected in close co-operation and consultation with various national trade groups, provincial Governments, and labour. Both the ITACs and the SAGITs were provided regular briefings on the state of the negotiations by the senior negotiators of the trade negotiation office, and had the opportunity to formulate recommendations directly to the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney). More than 150 meetings of the sectoral advisory committees and their working groups have been held over the past 18 months. We asked for advice, we listened to it, and we acted on it.

Over and above the formal SAGIT consultations there have been dozens of briefings and consultations by officials from the trade negotiations office with all segments of the private sector. Recently the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has held extensive consultations—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Couldn't sell free trade to the farmers either.

Mr. McDermid: —with representatives of grape growers and wineries in the Provinces of Ontario and British Columbia—

Mr. Cassidy: They turned them down four to one.

Mr. McDermid: —to discuss mechanisms to facilitate the process of adjustment.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Give us the whole story, John.

Mr. Cassidy: Don't just put your side of the story.

Mr. McDermid: In addition, for weeks government Ministers and other Members of the House have been criss-crossing the country holding meetings, speaking, answering questions, and appearing on radio and television all in an effort to enhance the two-way dialogue with Canadians on this important issue.

Mr. Cassidy: The Tory propaganda machine.

Mr. McDermid: We have helped explain this agreement to Canadians, and equally important we have listened to the views and the concerns of Canadians in every region of this country.

Apart from close consultation with the private sector, the Government undertook to work closely and co-operatively with the provinces. The First Ministers were briefed and consulted regularly as the negotiations progressed. They received briefings with slide presentations on every detail of the agreement. Typifying the co-operative spirit which this Government has fostered, through the Meech Lake Accord and other federal-provincial co-operative endeavours—even our Liberal friend from the Province of Ontario stated that the new attitude is very positive for Canada—the First Ministers were kept fully apprised, not through personal briefings but by a detailed network of contacts at the senior officials level.

In fact, since the negotiations began, we have held approximately nine First Ministers' meetings where the free trade agreement was the single agenda item; three First Ministers' Conferences where free trade was extensively discussed, most recently in Toronto on November 26 and 27. There have been 19 full day committee meetings of the senior officials forum, the continuing committee on trade negotiations, and scores of working group meetings on every subject of the free trade agreement. More than 500 documents have been shared with the provinces. In addition, provincial trade Ministers and designated Ministers have met with the Minister for International Trade on several occasions to review the free trade issues. No previous Government has involved the provinces so extensively in such a comprehensive process of consultations and information sharing.

It is not only the private sector and the provinces that had an opportunity to express their views and participate on the process. On March 16 of this year the House debated a motion introduced by the Minister for International Trade:

> That this House supports the negotiation of a bilateral trading arrangement with the United States, as part of the Government's multilateral trade policy, while protecting our political sovereignty,—

Done!

social programs,—

Done!

agricultural marketing systems,—

Done!

the auto industry—

Done, and—

Mr. Cassidy: Done in.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Sold out.

Mr. McDermid:

and our unique cultural identity.

Done!

Hon. Members opposite were given a full opportunity to express their views on that occasion.

To ensure further that Parliament fully take account of the views of the Canadian people on this important national issue, the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade of this House, representing all Parties, has been holding hearings in Ottawa and across the country.

Today I listened to the Leader of the socialist Party stating that all those groups and individuals could not appear before the committee. I do not know how many committees he has served, probably not too many because he has primarily been the Leader of the Party, but I can tell him that there has not been a committee that I have served on where it was humanly possible to accommodate all the witnesses who wanted to appear before any committee, no matter what it was.

For over one month now this committee has been hearing why the free trade agreement is so important to Canadians in all regions of the country. It held hearings in Vancouver, Edmonton, Yellowknife, Regina, Winnipeg, Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal, Fredericton, Charlottetown, Halifax, and St. John's. Prior to that, hearings were held for two and a half weeks here in Ottawa.

The Minister for International Trade and senior officials of the trade negotiations office have appeared before the committee whenever requested to ensure that the terms of the agreement are clearly understood. Women's groups, labour leaders, representatives of our First Nations, trade associations, have all had and are having a chance to be heard. Altogether, this committee has now heard from nearly 200 Canadian organizations and individuals from every province and territory in Canada.

Furthermore, despite the large majority of Conservative Members on that committee, which reflects the composition of this House, Members from the Opposition have been given an unprecedented degree of influence to guide the course of these hearings, including the power to select fully one-half of all the witnesses invited to appear before the committee. I do not think that anything has been fairer.

I do not understand the weeping and gnashing of teeth today of the Leader of the socialist Party, because there have been over 200 representations. If the Hon. Member took time to analyse the composition of those who appeared, I am sure he would find that virtually every corner of this country was represented by one group, organization, or individuals who appeared before the committee. Alone, the churches that appeared before the committee represented a very large cross-section of Canada.

To round out this comprehensive consultative process, the standing foreign affairs committee of the other place has been holding public hearings on the free trade agreement for nearly one month. I might say, Mr. Speaker, it was a study by the Senate that also supported Canada entering into free trade. It was the Liberal dominated Senate that recommended that the Government enter into trade negotiations with the United States.

The Senate committee has been receiving highly detailed evidence and testimony from a wide range of Canadian experts and specialists, and making an extremely important contribution to the public dialogue on this critical issue. This adds up to a major effort of consultation, allowing the Canadian people in all provinces and territories an unprecedented degree of input and awareness. It is a reflection of the commitment of the Government to hear the views of the people of Canada as individuals—

• (1210)

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): How can you read that with a straight face, John?

Mr. McDermid: —through their provincial Governments, through their federal MPs, through their business, economic, labour, and church leaders.

The Hon. Member opposite laughs. The church leaders appeared before the committee. What is he laughing at? I mean, what is so funny?

Mr. Cassidy: You ignored them.

Mr. McDermid: Why is the NDP laughing about the church leaders appearing before the committee?

Some Hon. Members: We are laughing at you.

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member for Brant is laughing at church people appearing before the committee. What is so funny about that?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Go ahead, John.

Mr. McDermid: What is so funny about that? This is only one element that chose not to participate in the consultative process.

The groups were offered the opportunity of confidential briefings and refused. They should remember that. The Leader of the New Democratic Party and his buddy, the right hon.

gentleman in the Liberal Party, say that everything is secret, that everything is done in secret, and that nobody knows what is going on. They were offered briefings, they were offered confidential briefings. Not only were they offered them; they asked for them.

Mr. Hopkins: Briefings in secret.

Mr. Riis: Secret briefings.

Mr. McDermid: They asked for them. They asked for confidential briefings. We offered it, and they turned it down.

Mr. Riis: They didn't want to do things in secret, under cover, or in camera.

Mr. McDermid: Is it not terrible that they turned it down? Dear, oh, dear! They stand up with this great song and dance about how badly they have been treated on this. There has never been, to my knowledge, as much consultation or as much involvement with the Canadian people in an agreement.

Mr. Riis: You should go to Kamloops and say that.

Mr. McDermid: NDP Members sit there and howl. They know, for example, that the Auto Pact was never brought to the House. It was negotiated in secret. It was signed. It was a fait accompli. There was absolutely—

Some Hon. Members: So what?

Mr. Cassidy: We are talking about the people of Canada now.

Mr. McDermid: I know, but let me finish my point.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) likes to sit on the seat of his pants and yell. We understand why the Ontario NDP kicked him out as leader. The only time he ever made any sense was when he was sitting on the seat of his pants.

Ms. Dewar: You are really stretching it.

Mr. McDermid: Let me say that there has never been consultation in any trade arrangement—

Ms. Jewett: Even Pat Carney is better than this.

Mr. McDermid: —by any Government in Canada like there has been on this one—never, never in history. For them to stand here and say that we have not consulted is absolutely ludicrous. Given the extensive, wide-ranging, consultative effort in which the Government has been engaged for over two years, it is unnecessary, in our view, to delay the signing of the free trade agreement beyond January 2. Not only is an extension unwarranted but, as Hon. Members opposite should know, it is manifestly unrealistic.

Barring a Congressional extension, the U.S. President does not sign the free trade agreement. We know what they are up to. They are going to try to scuttle the agreement any way they can. We know that. We know what their bottom line is. This talk about "give us another 60 days to consider" is nonsense. They are out to scuttle the deal. They know that. They have known the timetable of these negotiations right from the beginning. It has not been a secret anywhere, any time. Now they want it extended because they know what happens if we do not sign the agreement. They know that Congress would no longer be bound to the fast track rules requiring a straight up or down vote, with 90 legislative days following the submission of the implementing legislation. They are going to be considering their legislation as well as the agreement. The same process will be going on here in Canada. We will be considering the agreement and our legislation as well.

This means that the U.S. Congress would have the right then to pick apart this delicately balanced accord and introduce any amendments it saw fit, or simply delay the action indefinitely. Clearly it is not in Canada's interest to have this fast track process derailed for any amendments at this stage by the U.S., because it would not serve—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: I wish the camera would be on the whole House so that the people would see how the Opposition is acting.

Mr. McDermid: Yes, that would be a good idea. I would support that amendment.

Mr. Hopkins: That would put you on too, Harvey.

Mr. McDermid: Furthermore, while the January 2 deadline could theoretically be extended by Congress, it is hardly likely, given that Congress is set to recess at the end of next week and in the meantime is preoccupied, as the Hon. Member knows, with a full agenda including arms control and deficit reduction. Deficit reduction, which the NDP does not understand. In summary, as I have outlined, the free trade consultations that we have conducted with the Canadian people have been extensive, exhaustive, and thorough.

Even if it were possible, therefore, there would simply be no need to delay the signing of this historic agreement.

The Canada-U.S. free trade agreement is crucial to Canada's long-term economic prosperity. I urge my hon. friends opposite to set aside their narrow partisan interests and join the Government as it prepares Canada to take its place in the new competitive environment of the 21st Century.

In closing, I want to remind the people of Canada that it is the same bunch that opposed the Auto Pact 23 years ago—

Mr. Broadbent: Another lie.

Mr. McDermid: The same gang exactly that opposed the Auto Pact 23 years ago.

Mr. Broadbent: Lie after lie.

Mr. McDermid: Today they are protecting it with their lives.

Mr. Broadbent: I called you a liar. Did you hear?

Mr. McDermid: I will make a prediction today, that 20 years from today that same bunch over there will be standing up and saying that this was one of the best agreements that Canada ever signed in international trade and will be protecting this one with their lives.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I have a comment and a question. I would like to put a question to the Member who just spoke. He was talking about the Auto Pact. Tories love to refer to the Auto Pact in the same breath as they are referring to free trade. The Auto Pact is not free trade. It is managed trade with sanctions against those companies or those countries that do not go along with the specific agreement.

However, thanks to managed trade in the Auto Pact in the last 10 years, between 1974 and 1984, we created 4,000 new jobs in this country.

Let us take a look now at free trade in the agricultural implement industry. We have had free trade in farm implement manufacturing with the United States since 1948. In every year since 1948 we have had a net deficit with the United States in the manufacture of farm implements—a net deficit. Between 1974 and 1984 we lost 5,000 jobs thanks to free trade. We lost 1,000 of those jobs in the City of Brantford when White Farm implements was forced to close, I believe it was, in 1985.

I want to ask the Minister or the Parliamentary Secretary how he can explain that. The point here is that through free trade—and I am not talking about the three or four bad years farmers went through before White Farm went down in 1985, I am talking about the good years in the fifties, sixties, and seventies—we had a net deficit in farm implements. That is the devastation which this Mulroney trade deal will bring upon the whole country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. future minister for Brampton—Georgetown.

Mr. McDermid: I keep getting promoted.

Mr. Broadbent: With that kind of performance I think you are ripe.

Mr. McDermid: I thank the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). It is very kind of him to say that.

The Hon. Member knows full well that the Americans lost about 50,000 jobs in the farm implement business too. It was an international problem, and he knows that full well. He cannot blame that on free trade between Canada and the United States. He is comparing apples and oranges, and he knows that full well.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You are talking about the recession. I am talking about the good years, the fifties, sixties, and seventies. I am talking about 30 years.

Ms. Dewar: It is scary.

Mr. Riis: He does not understand the elementary aspects of this.

Mr. McDermid: They are trying to say that the free trade between Canada and the United States in farm implements destroyed that particular industry for Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: You got it. Right on.

Mr. McDermid: It did not.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): There is only one Canadian firm left.

Mr. McDermid: Why is there one Canadian firm left? It is because they are competitive, because they are good, and because they can compete in the market-place. That is the whole story.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Where did the other ones go?

Mr. McDermid: Why can Canadians compete in so many other areas? It is because they are good at it. If there is one firm left and it is competing in that area, it is because it is good at it.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): That is incredible, John.

Mr. McDermid: It is as simple as that. The Hon. Members knows that comparing the farm machinery matter with this agreement is comparing apples and oranges.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): It is not. It is free trade.

Mr. McDermid: He is totally out to lunch on it, and he knows it.

• (1220)

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I have a very simple question for the Hon. Member. During the course of his speech he took some pride in announcing that churches had been consulted during the course of the committee hearings. It is true that the Primate of the Anglican Church appeared, the Moderator of the United Church appeared and Bishop De Roo representing the Conference of Catholic Bishops appeared. They represent the three largest denominations in Canada. All three said that the proposed trade agreement was immoral. All three said that it should not be signed. All three said that the process is undemocratic. All three said that it would fundamentally change the structure of the economy.

If the Hon. Member believes in consultation, is the Government prepared to listen to those church leaders representing a vast majority of Canadians speaking from an ethical point of view who are saying that this agreement stinks, is immoral and should not be signed? If he believes in consultation, why is the Government not listening to those church leaders?

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, we have listened to them. My father was a United Church minister. I am a member of the United Church of Canada. One of the United Church ministers who appeared before the committee said that every Christian should oppose this trade deal. As a Christian, I am offended by that type of representation. I believe that there is nothing immoral about this agreement whatsoever. It is a commercial agreement. The ministers to whom I have talked in my community from those congregations do not necessarily support what their churches are saying.

The point I was making earlier was that the Leader of the New Democratic Party was saying that we did not consult broadly. That was the point he was trying to make and I was saying that we did consult broadly.

We listened to them. We listened to what they had to say. However, we can have differences of opinion. That is allowed in this country, thank God.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I listened with considerable interest to the Hon. Member's erudite comments on the auto industry in which he repeated the systematic disinformation the Conservative propaganda machine has been kicking out about this free trade agreement. I want to ask the Hon. Member a straightforward question.

If it is a free trade agreement, why is it that when it came into being it had investment requirements in Canada built into it? Quite specifically, the presidents of General Motors, Chrysler and Ford signed letters committing themselves and their companies to a certain level over time of investment in Canada. Is that what the Hon. Member is describing as free trade? If he is, I can tell him that there is not an economist in the world who would agree with him unless he happens to be a big "C" Conservative economist and has as little regard for the truth as the Hon. Member.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, here is what NDP Members said about the Auto Pact. They said that the Government is devious or insufficient with the Auto Pact. They said that the Government has made no plans to handle the dislocation and retraining of those who would lose their jobs as a result. One thing they did not say at that time was that we would lose our culture. They did not say that, but they did say that all the American firms would move back to the United States and that we would lose jobs because of this deal. They made all these dire predictions and they are doing it again.

The Hon. Member does this. He asks questions and then he walks out of the House.

Mr. Broadbent: Yeah, because I want an answer to the question.

Mr. McDermid: He did the same thing the other day in Question Period. He has absolutely no interest whatsoever in any answers. He does it all the time.

Mr. Broadbent: You are a lying phoney who won't answer the questions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. McDermid: Point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think Hon. Members know that they should not comment on whether Members are present or absent in the House.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I was called by the Leader of the New Democratic Party just now a lying phoney. I would ask him to withdraw that remark.

Mr. Broadbent: Which part of it do you want withdrawn?

Mr. McDermid: All of it.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I would be totally happy to withdraw the unparliamentary language and I now hope that the Hon. Member for once in his life in this Parliament would have the integrity to answer the question that was asked of him.

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to this somewhat heated debate on trade. I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary about the headlines which appeared in one of the major newspapers from Ontario today. One headline reads: "Ontario's future rosy under trade pact, province forecasts". Down a little further, it says: "Ontario treasury officials say provincial exports to the United States will grow next year". It goes on to indicate very clearly that there seems to be some contradiction.

The Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) represents an Ontario riding that has received great benefits from trade with the United States. It indicates here that provincial government officials from the Province of Ontario feel that this will continue and expand under a free trade agreement. There seems to be some contradiction here.

I am a western Member and know that western farmers and producers have been wanting to get what Ontario has had. We now see that the advantages of free trade will be expanded. I am very pleased with this debate because there seems to have been a turnaround in the direction of the provincial Government of Ontario. I would like to hear the Hon. Member's comments on that.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in reading this morning's report that the Treasurer of Ontario, Robert Nixon, released. I think he was a little concerned about that report. Obviously he tried to do some backtracking on it. After he read it, he said: "No, no, I don't want you to misunderstand this, now, this is not an endorsation of the free trade agreement". However, it certainly was very interesting. Knowing the Department of the Treasury in Ontario fairly well, it usually puts out some fairly good and accurate information. Needless to say, we were very pleased to see that.

We have said all along that Ontario has the most to gain from this agreement. There is no question about it. If we do not get a free trade agreement with our largest customer and if we do not have access to and open up that market, then Ontario has the most to lose. I believe the people of Ontario understand that, and that support for the agreement is growing.

I might add that opposition Members have had for the last three years a plan to discredit this Government by rising in the House of Commons to call the Prime Minister, the Parliamentary Secretaries or the Ministers liars. They are still at it today. They do not have to justify it, they just rise and say it. Unfortunately, it has, to my way of thinking, detracted greatly not only from this debate but from any debate.

One of the things that concerns me about the free trade debate is the name-calling on all sides by both—

Ms. Dewar: You started it.

Mr. McDermid: Now they are—

Mr. Riis: Simon Reisman called us a bunch of Nazis and you supported that. The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) supported that. She said that that was quite right.

Mr. McDermid: May I finish what I was trying to say?

Mr. Riis: The Prime Minister broke his promise and called us Nazis. Do you support it? Do you call us Nazis as well?

• (1230)

Mr. McDermid: I am saying that name calling by both sides is wrong. It takes away from the importance to Canada of this debate. Someone said "You started it". It does not matter who started it, it is wrong on both sides. I hope it will stop so that we can debate this agreement without totally unfounded and unfair name calling.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, over the last hour or so I have listened with some interest to the presentations by both the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) and the Parliamentary Secretary. Between the scuffling some very important issues were joined. The Parliamentary Secretary, who in his presentation almost makes one long for the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) to be in the House—

Mr. Blaikie: And that is not easy.

Mr. Axworthy: —and that is not easy, has now admonished us to try and stick to the facts. I will do that. I will take the Parliamentary Secretary at his word, that he is prepared to listen to the facts, not as they are pumped up by the public relations firms his Government has hired, but by the reality of what has taken place in this country on the issue and what Canadians are saying about it.

Let us start with January 2. That is a very important date. It is not insignificant, as the Prime Minister said. Under a parliamentary form of Government, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) exchanges instruments with another country he commits us to a course of action. It is not the same for the President. He is restrained by the obligation to have congressional concurrence. When our Prime Minister signifies his intent to enter into this particular arrangement on January 2, he is committing Canada to that course of action. That is not insignificant.

The one thing which has become very clear in this debate, from whatever source, is that this is not a trade deal. It has elements of trade but the principles tabled on October 4 go way beyond the conventional trade negotiations conducted between countries. They go way beyond anything in the common market today. They deal with matters which no other group of nations has ever tried to negotiate or come to an arrangement on. They go into areas of control of our domestic economy way beyond anything attempted before, control of our energy sector—

Mr. McDermid: Wrong.

Mr. Axworthy: —investment, cultural arrangements, and service industries. Those areas of such incredible concern were not forecast in any announcement by the Government. They were not given any kind of preliminary airing in this Parliament. Yet they were part of a deal arrived at in Washington in a sort of finger liken' good fried chicken dinner between the respective negotiators. All of a sudden we found we do not have a trade deal, we have a form of sovereignty association, economic union, and economic integration which goes way beyond anything attempted in the past. So for the Hon. Member to cite studies to demonstrate that there has already been full and adequate discussion misses the point.

The point is this agreement was not included in any of those studies. A North American energy policy was not part of any forecast that the Government provided. In fact, when two Ministers, one from Prince Edward Island and the other from Manitoba, were directly asked about that, they both said clearly that the Government did not even include the provinces in those discussions. Whatever consultations did take place, there were a lot of hidden cards in the deck which were not revealed even behind closed doors.

In addition, the Parliamentary Secretary made a historical gaff. He said this agreement is in line with successive government efforts since the 1940s to reduce trade barriers. No other Government in that period of time ever put forward the proposal that we sign a comprehensive commercial trade and economic arrangement with the U.S. There have been sectoral discussions. There have been reductions in tariffs brought about as a consequence of international negotiations, not bilateral negotiations. This is the first time since 1911 that any Canadian Government has wilfully decided to initiate negotiations on a comprehensive trade arrangement. That has nothing to do with historical continuity. This deal breaks that continuity and, furthermore, goes against the wisdom of history which shows that we were able to achieve reduction of tariff barriers without surrendering control over large parts of our economy.

One of the distinct advantages of securing trade liberalization through the international system is that you can do it without having to surrender autonomy over your own economy. The rules of subsidy under GATT are very different from the rules of subsidy established by the Americans. They did not concern themselves with regional development policies or cultural issues. That was not part of the international trade regime, but this is. The Hon. Member wants facts. That is a historical fact and the Hon. Member is wrong in what he said as a result. He did not state the facts properly.

Let us talk about these consultations that went on. He talked about SAGITs and industrial groups. During the course of the committee's travels across the country I had occasion to ask the National Anti-Poverty Organization whether it was consulted. No, it was not. Was the National Farmers Union consulted? No, it was not. Were the churches consulted? No, they were not. Were women's organizations consulted? No, they were not. In other words, a large part of the Canadian population was excluded from those consultations.

What the Hon. Member was really describing was an elite process. Consultations were confined primarily to spokespersons or advocates of those who want a free trade arrangement. They did not include a broad spectrum of Canadian society. When he tries to make the case that consultation is already taking place, yes, consultation among friends but not among the broad population.

It is interesting to ask who was the chief agricultural representative appearing in front of that committee. It was the spokesman for Cargill! Hardly what you would call a representative of the grain economy in western Canada. That company certainly has a right to be heard but it certainly does not represent the kind of broad-based pool and co-operative farm movement on the Prairies.

On the other side of the border, who was the chief advisor on agriculture to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Chief Trade Negotiator? It was the former president of Cargill. They got it both ways. They locked up the consultation process in one company. So when we talk about consultation, we have to ask who, and for what interest?

Mr. McDermid: Be honest.

Mr. Axworthy: The Hon. Member talked about a wide range of studies which were produced to provide support for the trade deal. Let us look at those studies for a moment. Where do they come from? Who did them? What was in them? What did the Macdonald Commission report, the Government's Bible, have to say? It said there are two kinds of major trade issues, tariff and non-tariff barriers. The non-tariff barriers can only be handled, says the report, by getting an exemption from U.S. trade laws. In other words, the primary criteria established by the Macdonald Commission, has not been met by this agreement. To cite that report as proof that somehow this agreement has a wealth of evidence behind it simply ignores the studies themselves.

What about the famous Economic Council report which has been waved in the face of countless House of Commons sessions by the Prime Minister to prove that 350,000 jobs will be created. The Economic Council based its study on the premise that countervail and anti-dumping laws would no longer apply to Canada. Furthermore, it did not include the service industry which accounts for 70 percent of jobs. The arrangement that has been negotiated does not include exemptions from countervail and anti-dumping and does include the service sector. In other words, the study is irrelevant and useless.

The point is that we have to talk about the deal. All that went before is only prologue. We have to talk about the specifics of the deal. What has the Government done to enable large numbers of Canadians to gain information about the arrangement and to ensure that when Canadians were consulted they would be listened to and responded to? There is no point in undertaking consultation if it is a one-way street, if it does not complete the circle. If there is no response from the Government it is only a cynical, crass attempt to manipulate public opinion. In genuine consultation people are responded to.

What have we achieved with this arrangement? When the elements of the agreement were tabled on October 4 we were promised that there would be a final text in a matter of a few days, in a couple of weeks at most. We are still awaiting that final text. The Government expects Canadians to give their opinions on something they have not yet seen. That would give Jonathan Swift a wonderful subject for satire. It is too bad that he is not alive to day to listen to the Parliamentary Secretary speak. He would have a new rendition of Gulliver's Travels. Let us go out and consult, they say, but we will not tell them what we are consulting about because we do not yet have the final text.

We understand that there were problems in the second round of negotiations. We understood that there were pressures. Why could the Government not be honest and say so? Why could it not just say that the October 4 document was incomplete and had problems, that it had to go back to the bargaining table and renegotiate, that it would come back with an agreement in December and start with the fast track process? Instead, the Government maintained its charade. It launched a committee across the country without the final text.

The Member pointed to that committee with great pride. He said that we had all the consultation we could possibly stand. In fact, the majority members on that committee refused, by vote, to extend the hearings to a date when we would have a final text. They refused to open the committee by advertising in newspapers where the committee was sitting in order that people could come forward. Witnesses were pre-selected.

There have been plenty of precedents for the openness about which I have spoken. When I was a member of the Joint Committee on International Relations which studied free trade one of the most important parts of the committee's hearings was at the end of each day when the session was opened up to individual representations. It is true that sometimes we had to sit until 11 p.m. or midnight, but some days we heard 20 or 30 unsolicited Canadians who came forward to be heard. That was one of the most important parts of that committee because it gave us insight into the basic anxieties and concerns of a broad cross-section of Canadians.

This committee was deliberately refused that opportunity by the majority of Tory members on that committee. For the Hon. Member to stand in this House and say that that was a legitimate process denies what went on. It denies the fact that a parliamentary committee was restricted, limited, and circumscribed in the proper functioning of its duties. It is a fact on the record that the committee was handicapped in its work.

After 100 years of tradition in this House and centuries of tradition in the British House the whole point of having a committee is that it will be heard and that its report will be tabled in the House and responded to. The committee will report next Tuesday. Its report will contain a number of recommendations from people who spoke about how the agreement must be changed. Even those who are philosophically in favour of free trade said that it is a bad agreement and needs correction. Is the Prime Minister going to allow those corrections to take place? Is he going to give proper and due consideration to the findings of that committee?

For example, we are faced with a fundamental dilemma in that the Grocery Products Manufacturers association, the largest employer in Canada employing close to 300,000 workers, said that under this deal they may be forced out of business because, by reducing tariffs to zero, the Americans will be able to import packaged, processed, and frozen goods at a much lower cost, while in Canada we are also being required to fulfil supply management. We must remove supply management or they will be put out of business by the tariff changes. They asked the committee to do something about it. I am not making that up, it is the fact.

It would seem to me that a government interested in governing would recognize that it is putting at risk the whole food processing industry of Canada, to say nothing of the supply management system. That legitimate and deeply-felt concern was expressed to the committee.

Will the committee's findings on that be incorporated in the new agreement? Of course not. The Prime Minister is going to run off and sign something on January 2. He will not fulfil his proper parliamentary obligation to listen to the findings of a committee of this House. We say that the rights of Parliament are being usurped and one can find no clearer evidence of that than what I have just cited.

A very dangerous trend is being started by the Government. The constitutional arrangement was negotiated by the executive behind closed doors with no accountability to elected representatives, provincial or federal. This economic union arrangement was negotiated behind closed doors by executive bureaucrats who did not tell us what was going on. Now this Parliament is being denied the lawful and rightful functioning of its committee.

In addition to the clear and prevalent danger to the economic, social, and political arrangements of this country in the arrangement which the Prime Minister and the President will be signing on January 2, in whatever form, there is also the erosion of Parliament. The fundamental rights for proper and free discussion and for accountability are being undermined and eroded by the Government. This is the most basic contempt for this House that we have seen in generations. That is one of the most serious consequences that we face.

I would like to point out one final fact. The justification for this ramrod, choo-choo, hurry up, headless horseman approach to the trade deal has been that we must follow the American timetable of the fast track. That has been the one and only justification. Today we learned that the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee said that the agreement would not even be dealt with until June. Mr. Speaker, the fast track is in Canada and the slow track is in the United States.

The timetable has nothing to do with the American timetable in this respect. If the American legislators are saying they cannot even begin to deal with the matter until late June, would it not have been proper to ask for the kind of extension that this motion seeks? According to the American legislation, Congress has the right to grant that extension. I say to the Parliamentary Secretary that the Congress has the right to grant that extension, if requested. But the Government has not even taken the time to request it.

Once more, we see that contempt for Parliament and the complete disdain for the rights of Canadians to know what is happening and be able to understand what will be in the agreement. The Government has refused to listen and respond to their concerns, and incorporate them in the agreement itself. All the fundamental obligations of a parliamentary democratic system are being spurned, ignored and thwarted by the Government in proceeding as it has with this particular deal.

Mr. Harvey: Mr. Speaker, this morning you may have noticed there was a lot of panic in the Opposition ranks, among the NDP and the Liberals. It may be because Canadians are starting to realize these two Parties do not always tell the truth. Actually, I find it hard to take the heated exchanges we were hearing from both Opposition Parties, especially the last speaker, very seriously.

How can anyone be expected to take the Hon. Member's comments seriously after watching the position taken by the Liberal Party in recent weeks and months on issues that are of vital importance to all Quebecers and all Canadians? I think of Bill C-22, the legislation on drug patents, where the position taken by the Liberals was a mass of contradictions. Some Liberal Members even left the House to avoid voting on the Bill, including the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). Finally, however, we all agreed to condemn the attitude taken by the Liberal majority in the Senate, which has arbitrarily opposed a Bill that will generate thousands of jobs in Quebec.

The Liberal Party was also divided on the Meech Lake Accord, an agreement that in the final instance led to national reconciliation, while the profound differences within the Liberal Party were not surprising, considering the divisive policies of this Party.

Regarding the issue before the House today, I would like to ask the Hon. Member first of all when the Liberal Party is going to start its campaign against free trade in Quebec. Second, I want to ask him what he thinks about the position taken by the Premier of Quebec, Mr. Bourassa, who, I would think is perfectly capable of defending the interests of Quebec and has spoken out several times in favour of the Free Trade Agreement?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, for the Hon. Member's information, we have started our campaign against the Mulroney-Reagan Agreement on economic integration of Canada and the United States. In fact, Mr. Speaker, we have had several meetings with, for instance, the groups representing farmers and the agricultural industry which are very concerned about the Conservative Government's proposal. In fact, the Quebec Government has changed its position on agriculture—that may be of particular interest to the Hon. Member—and on the textile, food, clothing and research sectors.

Representatives for these industries made representations against free trade because jobs would be lost in these sectors. This is not just a Liberal concern. It is a concern that is felt by the people of Quebec as well.

[English]

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, just prior to the speech by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) a Government Member rose in his place and referred to an article in The Globe and Mail this morning which had the headline: "Ontario Future Rosy under Trade Pact: Province Forecast". When we saw that article we immediately called the Ontario Government to find out if the report was correct. Of course, we were told that it was not.

I now have a copy of the forecast of the Ontario Treasury Department, and I believe the Hon. Member has one as well. It states:

> A single quantitative estimate of the macroeconomic impact of the proposed Canada-U.S. trade and investment agreement is not possible. The proposed deal covers many areas and issues—for example from tariffs to investment, to energy, to services, to procurement, to agriculture, and to dispute settlement. Most, if not all, do not lend themselves to summary arithmetic evaluations.

It goes on. Unfortunately, even great newspapers like The Globe and Mail badly interpret complex Government reports from time to time. Would the Hon. Member comment further on this? I noticed that Government Members took great glee in referring to this headline which is now shown to be false.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grace—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). I think he has corrected what was clearly an attempt to provide misinformation to the House.

If one reads the actual report, one can see that the economic forecast clearly states that it will not make those kind of quantitative judgments because, as I have said, so much of what is in the agreement goes way beyond trade and into the inner workings of our economy. Therefore, the judgments that must be made are those based upon whether we will retain the ability to manage our economy.

The Ontario study itself suggests that losing control over regional development, over the energy sector and over the automobile sector would result in serious consequences. It points to one example that I think is important to illustrate. Our Party's position is not against tariff reduction. Since 1948 our Party has witnessed and has initiated substantial reductions of tariffs around the world. Members of past governments have certainly made great efforts to work out amicable trade arrangements with the Americans, the Europeans and other countries.

The fallacy in the Conservative Government's case is that it puts forward the argument that only by a comprehensive bilateral, all-encompassing economic arrangement with the United States can we secure tariff reduction. Of course, that is absolute, total nonsense. Negotiations are currently taking place in GATT to reduce tariff and non-tariff barriers, without giving away all of the sectors of our economy that are included in this agreement. Furthermore, the United States trade legislation itself has a specific requirement to negotiate the reduction of tariff barriers with Canada. In other words, we would not have to become involved in energy, investment and services. They are not part of tariff reduction.

My point is that there are other ways of bringing about whatever benefits reduced tariffs may have. The way is not to sell out the fundamental institutions of this country.

• (1300)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This the last question. The Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, we know the Opposition will do absolutely anything to scuttle this deal. It has opposed the deal right from the start. Before the Opposition ever saw the deal it was opposed to it. It is still opposed. Now it has come to the conclusion that the only way it can scuttle the deal is to extend it on into 1988, into the American elections, and let it be picked apart and torn asunder. We know that is the raison d'être of the Opposition, and we understand it.

The Hon. Member talks about GATT. This is the favourite vehicle of the Liberals. It is interesting to note that our GATT partners were very interested in and very supportive of this agreement. They say it bodes well for the negotiations going on now in Geneva, and if Canada and the United States could not have had had a free trade agreement, two of the largest trading partners in the world, it did not bode well for the negotiations going on in Geneva at the present time. So they were supportive and pleased to see the progress made on that agreement.

The Hon. Member talked about services. Services are the fastest growing industry in the world and the GATT, which again the Opposition loves to talk about, support and embrace wholeheartedly, felt as well that services were a very important part of the negotiations, in fact, so important that they have it on their agenda for the negotiations in Geneva as well. They felt because of this fast growing part of our economy in the world that something had to be done.

If the Hon. Member is saying we took services in under this agreement, we certainly did and we are proud of it. We are a Progressive Conservative Government. We look forward to the future. We know that services play a very important part in the world's economy today and have to be tackled, and we had the guts to do it.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I think the Parliamentary Secretary has just displayed to this House the Conservative mentality when it comes to trade negotiation. He is obviously saying that we would prefer to negotiate services through a bilateral arrangement as opposed to doing it internationally. If, as he quite correctly states, GATT is going to negotiate services, then why did we not negotiate services as part of the GATT process, where there were 95 other countries involved, where we would not give up the right of establishment, and the right of investment performance, which other GATT countries are prepared to defend?

When I was at the Uruguay Round, it was made very clear that most of the other countries in the world wanted to find some way of protecting their financial institutions and their service sectors against total takeovers from large countries like the United States. Yet this country has already given that up before we even get into that negotiation.

The fact is that the international system works because there is an ability to get a much broader bargaining base against a large powerful nation like the United States when a country can have many other countries join it in that bargaining rather than doing it one on one.

When the Parliamentary Secretary states that there is general approval, I take issue with it. Arthur Dunkel, the Secretary General of GATT, has said that the most imminent danger to the international trading system is the emergence of regional trading blocs because those regional trading blocs, similar to what is being proposed today, set up discriminatory barriers against other countries. The fundamental principle of the international system is that it is non-discriminatory. The tariff and non-tariff barriers are the same for everyone. What we are negotiating under the Canada-U.S. trade arrangement is that we will be putting up different barriers than those countries in the Pacific Rim, the Europeans, the Latin Americans, and giving preference to the Americans.

That is the fundamental flaw in the whole reasoning. In fact, the Government is contributing to the breakdown of the international trading system by proposing and promoting this evolution to regional trading blocs which will simply become large, competing, controversial, combatative trading systems, and that will destroy the international trading system which this country has for so long tried to defend and promote.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pick up on an issue which was debated earlier. It has to do with the Auto Pact. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of International Trade (Mr. McDermid), was offended when some of us on this side questioned his affection for the truth with respect to how he described the Auto Pact. Like a great many Conservative Members, and like a great many proponents of this free trade agreement, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary characterized the Auto Pact as a free trade agreement. This has been done in my own home city by the Winnipeg Free Press, for instance. It has been done right across the west by Premier Devine and others in an attempt to create the impression that somehow there is a free trade situation in Ontario with respect to automobiles that the New Democratic Party and others are trying to prevent from happening in other parts of the country.

I ask the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, rhetorically at this point because I am the one who has the floor, how in heavens name would anyone with any self respect get up and say that the Auto Pact is a free trade agreement when he knows it involves performance guarantees, safeguards, and the invocation of tariffs if certain conditions are not met? He knows all those things. He knows that they have absolutely nothing to do with free trade.

The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary comes from Brampton. He knows there has been free trade in agricultural implements since about 1948. In the free trade relationship that exists with respect to agricultural implements, there are no tariffs, no performance guarantees, no agreements that for every combine sold in Canada we have to make one in Canada. There are no agreements whatsoever about anything. That is free trade, which is quite different from the Auto Pact.

If the only tactic that can be employed to promote this agreement is to so falsely characterize the Auto Pact, then Hon. Members opposite are indeed desperate for an argument. The fact is that the Auto Pact is not a free trade agreement and future agreements like the Auto Pact will be impossible under this agreement. Nothing could be further from the truth than what the Conservatives, whether it be the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary or Premier Devine, the Winnipeg Free Press or anyone else, happen to be saying about the Auto Pact. I do not understand it. I find it a constant source of despair that people who I otherwise respect and have a great deal of time for, have the nerve to stand and say the kinds of things they do. It is just beyond me.

The motion has to do with the timeframe in which this is all happening. The motion the New Democratic Party has moved could not be more reasonable. We are calling upon the Government not to sign the agreement on January 2 but to seek an extension of the January 2 date by at least 60 days. What could be more reasonable than for the Government to ask of its counterparts in the United States that the appropriate time for due parliamentary process in Canada be provided? We will probably have the text tomorrow. The House will likely adjourn next week and the deal will be signed January 2. Neither this House, Canadians, nor the committee charged with looking at it will have anything that remotely approaches the appropriate amount of time.

• (1310)

I recall when the former Liberal Government brought in an energy omnibus Bill which dealt with so many things, the Official Opposition at that time, the Conservatives, rose up in righteous indignation and tied this place up with the ringing of the bells for much longer than we will have to consider this agreement after we have the text. What has happened in the meantime to the parliamentary conscience of the Conservative Party in giving Parliament an opportunity to consider matters that are before it? One of the complaints against the energy omnibus bill was that it included too much. We did not have enough time to look at everything.

What could be more of an omnibus situation than the agreement we have before us which deals with almost every economic thing you could think of concerning Canada, yet we will get to debate the matter for only five days?

Mr. McDermid: You will have the legislation.

Mr. Blaikie: We will get the legislation says the Parliamentary Secretary. But this is not the United States. Maybe some day it will be as a result of this agreement.

Mr. McDermid: There you go.

Mr. Blaikie: But it is not yet the United States. In this country we have a parliamentary system of Government and that means Parliament has to have its say before things are signed, not after. Congress has its say after things are signed but Congress has power after things are signed. Congress can say yes or no. In Canada the executive and legislative dimensions of Government are one in the sense that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) controls the House of Commons.

The Hon. Member is saying to us, "Well, Parliament will get to consider the implementing legislation". But he knows that there are 210 seats in his pocket. It is absolutely ridiculous. I wish people would stop making such uncritical comparisons between the American system of Government and the Canadian system. There is a difference between our two systems of Government.

The parliamentary system should be respected before our Prime Minister commits the country to an agreement between the United States and Canada, which will be quite different than what Ronald Reagan will be doing when he signs the agreement, because he will be creating the context in which he can then present it to Congress. But that is not what our Prime Minister will be doing. He will be signing the agreement. When it comes down to the real agreement, it will be Congress on the American side that signs the agreement with Canada. The Congress will sign it with the Prime Minister who will already have signed it on January 2. That is why what is happening here is one of the most enormous crimes against democracy that you can imagine, Mr. Speaker, and that is why we have moved this motion.

I take it my time has run out. I look forward to resuming this debate after Question Period.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 1.14 p.m., I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m.

At 1.14 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—PLIGHT OF ASTROPHYSICIST VLADIMIR DASHEVSKY

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, today is International Human Rights Day. It is an appropriate day to be reminded that the litmus test for a democratic society is how it treats its minorities. I went to Washington to join 200,000 other North Americans to bring this message to Mr. Gorbachev.

This is an appropriate day to bring to the attention of this House the plight of the refusenik, Professor Vladimir Dashevsky. Professor Dashevsky is an astrophysicist of international reputation. He is one of only three Soviet members of the American Astronomical Society.

He applied for an exit visa in 1977. Since then he has not been allowed to work in his profession. His family has very little means on which to live. Professor Dashevsky's application was first refused on the grounds of "state interest". He has now been assured that he has no security obligations to the institute in which he worked. However, he is still not able to get the Soviet authorities to act, and no visa has been granted over these 10 years.

Perhaps we can hope that in this period of glasnost, and with the enormous hopes raised by the Washington Summit meeting, Professor Dashevsky and others like him will be given their freedom.

AIR SAFETY

SECURITY PROCEDURES AT AIRPORTS—CHECKING OF AIR FREIGHT SHIPMENTS

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, last week my colleague, the Hon. Member for Moncton (Mr. Cochrane), brought to the attention of the House, through a committee, problems with airport security. Although the Government has made many significant improvements and innovations to airport security across Canada, two of my constituents who work in this industry brought to my attention some problems with airport security procedures.

Screening and control of small package delivery companies that guarantee same-day delivery is considered to be very lax. There are no formal security procedures or checks for air freight, space available shipments. I am also informed that certain security procedures have been overlooked or disregarded to expedite onschedule departures. These are holes in Canada's airport and airline security.

If we are to have adequate airport and airline security, then the entire security issue should be thoroughly addressed. Security must be the quintessential concern of the air travel industry, but we have to reconcile an approach which will keep passengers secure; one which is fair to long-time loyal employees in this industry; and a security check procedure that will protect the individual's right to privacy.

The priority should be given to those areas which are a definite threat to safety and security rather than scrutinizing the personal lives of employees who have served the industry and all Canadians loyally in past years.

HISTORIC EVENTS

"RUSSIFICATION" OF UKRAINE—FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, 1987 marks the fiftieth anniversary of the tragic murder by the Soviet secret police of 10,000 Ukrainian citizens, residents of the city of Vinnytsa.

The logic behind these murders was the Soviet program of "Russification" of Ukraine. This process deliberately attacked Ukrainian religion, culture, language, and heritage, with the ultimate goal of eliminating all things Ukrainian. Similar atrocities took place in many towns and cities across Ukraine and amounted to deliberate cultural genocide.

The great famine of 1933 is a clear example of the viciousness of the Soviet regime against the Ukrainian populace. In 1933, in the process of collectivization, 7 million Ukrainian men, women, and children died, victims of a state-planned famine.

Many Canadians of Ukrainian origin have families in Ukraine who still suffer under the "Russification" program. They join with me in urging the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to exert all pressure possible on the Soviet Government to ensure fundamental human rights to the people of Ukraine, and to provide some measure of protection for cultural, religious, and linguistic rights of all minorities living under Soviet domination.

REVENUE CANADA

ISSUANCE OF CHILD TAX PREPAYMENT CHEQUES TO RESIDENTS OF ONTARIO INDIAN RESERVE

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, several needy families in an isolated community in my riding fear that there will be no Christmas cheer this year, as they have not been issued the child tax prepayment cheques on which they were counting.

The Northwest Angle 33 reserve is a Canadian community with a population of 122. It is only accessible by air, and because there is no post office there is no choice but to receive its mail through the United States mail service.

The problem is that Revenue Canada will not issue refund cheques to a mailing address in the United States. The residents are told that they have to find a mailing address in Canada.

While the Government pushes the pipe dream of the trade give-away to the United States, it is more than a little ironic that, despite knowing about this situation a year ago, such a basic service as mail delivery between the two countries is apparently restricted for financial control reasons.

S. O. 21

I call upon the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) to have a chat with his computers and get those Christmas cheques moving. Alternatively, why doesn't the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) direct Canada Post to serve all communities in this country?

INTERNATIONAL HUMAN RIGHTS DAY

SITUATION IN HAITI—WISH THAT GOVERNMENT EXERCISE ITS MORAL AND POLITICAL LEADERSHIP

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, last Saturday on Parliament Hill, I had the privilege of receiving, on behalf of the Leader of the Liberal Party of Canada, a most peaceable delegation from the Haitian community in Montreal, whose members had come to express publicly the outrage and expectations of the Haitian community.

Today, the whole world is celebrating International Human Rights Day. None of us can remain unmoved by the terrible events that occurred on November 29, when peace-loving citizens were waiting and looking forward to exercising their democratic right to vote, for the first time in many years. We know they were massacred.

Today it is clear that the spectre of the Duvaliers still hangs over Haiti. I sincerely hope that Canada will exercise moral and political leadership, vigorously condemn the Haitian Government's failure to act and make appropriate representations to the United Nations so that at last we can have the assurance these incredible violations of the fundamental and legitimate rights of the Haitian people will be stopped as soon as possible.

EMPLOYMENT

GOVERNMENT PERFORMANCE

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to stress the Conservative Goverment's outstanding performance in creating jobs. Since September 1984, 1,042,000 jobs have been created in Canada. The unemployment rate has gone down 3.5 points since election day, reaching 8.2 per cent in November 1987, the lowest rate on record since November 1981. During that time, more jobs were created in Canada than in France, Germany, Italy or Great Britain, countries with twice our population.

Total youth unemployment has dropped by 163,000 since the election. This means that since September 1984, youth unemployment has gone down five points, from 18.3 per cent to 13.3 per cent in November 1987. The number of unemployed women has dropped by 134,000 since the present Government came to power. The unemployment rate for women has dropped 3.2 points since the election, from 12 per cent to 8.8 per cent. The number of women in management and the liberal professions rose 30 per cent between 1984 and 1986.

Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that this Government will continue to reduce unemployment by means of its economic renewal program and the Free Trade Agreement with the United States, in order to improve the standard of living of all Canadians.

CHILD CARE

NATIONAL STRATEGY—CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) claims that the child care strategy finally announced last week will improve the availability, affordability, and quality of child care for Canadian families. This promise is a cruel joke for many parents who have been anxiously awaiting some government relief in just these areas.

CBC-Radio recently described a nurse who is a single parent mother of two, paying $800 a month for child care in order to be able to earn an independent living. The child care expense deduction is useless to her because she pays no income tax. She had a right to expect that the Minister would understand her situation. After all, there are thousands more hard-working, independent single parents like her in Canada.

What kind of a national strategy is this that turns its back on a whole category of parents and children? This policy does not deserve to be called a national program. It is simply a politically expedient hodge-podge of measures, which proves once again that the Government cannot be trusted to look after the interests of ordinary Canadians.

FISHERIES

DAMAGE SUFFERED BY PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND MUSSEL INDUSTRY

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak in defence of those who work in the mussel industry in my riding in Atlantic Canada.

The damage the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) is inflicting on this industry should not be underestimated. We all agree that public health is a paramount concern. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has made that clear on behalf of the Government.

The toxin problem, however, may be very isolated, and it may very well be due to natural causes. In such an instance nature may remedy the problem and the industry will suffer only in a minimal way.

To raise the fears of all consumers, as the Leader of the Opposition is doing, is to undermine the market in the long term. I call upon the Liberal Party Leader to resist being seduced by the lure of political opportunism. This is a time for all political Parties to act in a non-partisan way. Surely our shared concern about public health and the long-term economic health of the mussel industry is enough. Act responsibly and leave the bush league politics at home. The Liberal Member—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I should comment. It is a very difficult issue. I interrupted the Hon. Member because I was not sure where his remarks were leading. Hon. Members will understand that Statements under Standing Order 21 are not a place even to begin to impugn the motives of another Member of this place. However, I recognize the very serious matter that has been raised.

PESTICIDES

CALL FOR AMENDMENTS TO LEGISLATION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, as you know, under the title Pesticides in Canada, the Law Reform Commission has published an important study which recommends that the law controlling pesticides be amended to include timetables for regular re-evaluation of pesticides already in use so as to assess their potential to cause cancer, birth defects or mutations.

In addition it is recommended that the legislation be amended to require chemical companies to notify the Government immediately of studies or other evidence revealing that one of their chemical products may endanger human health or the environment.

Finally, it is recommended that the legislation be amended to require that companies indicate on their products all ingredients, not just those which are deemed active as presently required by the Pest Control Products Act.

To sum it up, the proposed changes are urgent for the protection of public health. Again we urge the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to launch a public review of present laws adopting Pesticides in Canada as the foundation on which to build a modern law.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

GRANTING OF ALL-NEWS LICENCE TO CBC—DEMAND THAT GOVERNMENT OVERTURN DECISION

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, last week I was astounded, as were many Canadians, to learn of the CRTC decision to grant a licence for the cable news network of Canada to the CBC over the other applicant, Allarcom Limited. The CRTC has shown a disregard for the need for more diversified and regionally balanced news services and for the interests of Canadian taxpayers.

A corporation that can lose track of $57 million and cannot produce a financial statement capable of being audited by the Auditor General does not inspire the confidence of Canadians in its ability to take on new ventures. Of most concern, however, is the even greater concentration of the media and control over news and public affairs by a single entity, and a Toronto based state-owned corporation at that. This is not a healthy situation in a democracy in which the balance and independence of the press are required.

I call upon the Government and the Cabinet to exercise the power granted to them under the Act by setting aside this decision.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON NORTHERN MANITOBA

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the House of Commons the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James (Mr. Minaker) made some flippant remarks about the way I am representing northern Manitobans. He said that I was astonishing them because I am opposed to the Conservative trade deal.

Northern Manitobans do not want the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) trade deal. We know that our economy is dependent on the resource sector. We also know what the trade deal could do to our raw resources. Northern Manitobans know that our raw logs and unprocessed minerals could be sent south to the States. We know that with this deal more of our jobs would be sent south to the States where low-paid non-union workers could do the work.

As I travel around my riding I hear northern Manitobans telling me that they do not want this deal. They have seen what the Americans have done to our shakes and shingles industry. They know that this deal will not protect them from the American trade laws that caused the problems in the first place. Even the Thompson Chamber of Commerce admits that its members are divided on this issue.

S. O. 21

When I was in The Pas at the beginning of this month, I witnessed the passing of a resolution against the Conservative trade deal by the regional chapter of the Manitoba Métis Federation. They know that native employment and economic programs may be jeopardized by this deal. This resolution reflects the concerns that northern Manitobans and Canadians across the country have about the Prime Minister's trade deal.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON ECONOMY OF ONTARIO

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, will wonders never cease? For months, Premier Peterson and the Ontario Government have been knocking the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement as being bad for Ontario. Now a forecast released by the Ontario Government itself says that the elimination of tariffs between Canada and the U.S. over the next 10 years will have a "very small but marginally positive effect" on the Ontario economy.

According to the report, Ontario's textile industry, which Premier Peterson says is particularly vulnerable to the tariff reductions, has a growing trade surplus with the United States and the province's businesses are doing well even in competition with such low-wage states as Georgia.

Now that the Ontario Government has spoken out in favour of free trade, who knows what will happen next? Perhaps organized labour and the NDP will also decide to support free trade now rather than waiting until later, the way they did with the Auto Pact.

HUMAN RIGHTS

HAITI—VIOLATIONS BY MILITARY REGIME

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, today is International Human Rights Day. As Canadians we are thankful for what we have accomplished thus far in our own country. Yet we know we must strive for further improvements.

Canada has played and should continue to play a significant international role in obtaining basic human rights for all people. However, in many parts of the world dreadful human rights violations continue to occur.

Canadians were shocked by the recent and tragic turn of events in Haiti. The Haitian people, who suffered for years under the Duvalier dictatorships, finally had a chance to obtain a democratically elected Government. Instead we saw voters hacked and shot to death in polling booths by roving bands of thugs, with the consent and even encouragement of the military regime of Colonel Namphy.

The Haitian regime has displayed its contempt for Human Rights Day by announcing today its plans to hold a fraudulent election on January 17. The Canadian Government must finally and at last inform that regime of Canada's displeasure over the gross violations of human rights in Haiti and do all it can to pressure that regime into holding free and fair elections as soon as possible.

FREE TRADE

ONTARIO'S ECONOMIC PROSPECTS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, Ontario Deputy Premier Robert Nixon who is also responsible for the Treasury Board and acts as Minister of Economic Affairs and Minister of Finance released a study which clearly shows that the economy of Ontario will continue to grow with free trade. Ontario would even corner a larger slice of the American market. This is a courageous position taken by Mr. Robert Nixon.

For Mr. Nixon, the interests of Ontarians take precedence over political shenanigans with the Liberal Party of Canada. For Mr. Nixon Ontario is part of Canada, whereas for Mr. Peterson Ontario is part of the Liberal Party.

At a time when the Liberal caucus of Canada, along with its leader and even its Quebec members, is trying to regionalize the free trade issue, the intervention of Mr. Nixon is most appropriate. I would suggest that this challenging message from Ontario's Deputy Premier must be viewed in a Canadian context. It amounts to an official political acknowledgement that the message of the Ontario business community has been fully appreciated by the Deputy Premier of Ontario. It is a message of solidarity with Canada and, let us admit it, with the Government of Quebec, the Liberal Party of Québec, and the Conservative Party of Canada.

FISHERIES

GEORGES BANK—PROTECTION OF FISH STOCK—POSSIBLE EFFECT OF DRILLING FOR OIL

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, there is a question on the minds of many Nova Scotians which must be answered. Will the Government of Canada act now to protect the fishery on the Georges Bank?

The Georges Bank is the most productive fishing ground in the entire North Atlantic. Studies of scallop stocks demonstrate that the growth of scallops on the Georges Bank on a yearly basis is far greater than that found on other banks off the coasts of the North Atlantic.

The Georges Bank is vital to the economy of Nova Scotia and contributes more than $300 million in value to the fishing industry, and accounts for more than 6,000 jobs.

I have stated in the past the view that there must be no oil and gas exploration on the Georges Bank. This rich fishery must be declared an environmentally sensitive area and protected as such. As a matter of public policy and not politics, I believe this vital renewable natural resource must be protected for this and future generations.

The Government has been duped on environmental issues by the Americans, on fishing issues by the French, and now appears ready to be duped by oil and gas companies that may, with their drilling, destroy the environment in this rich fishing ground. It is time that the Government of Canada made a clear and unequivocal statement about the fishery on Georges Bank.

ORAL QUESTIONS

TOXIC MUSSELS—QUERY WHETHER MINISTER OFFERED RESIGNATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He knows perfectly well that during the last four days, his Minister of National Health and Welfare has been unable to explain why he failed to warn Canadians immediately of the dangers of eating toxic mussels. Even worse, Mr. Speaker, his version of the facts was contradicted by what was said by his top expert in the field. The Prime Minister is well aware of this since he was right here in the House at the time, and Canadians are not going to tolerate his remaining silent on this matter much longer.

Could he inform the House whether the Minister of National Health and Welfare has offered his resignation? If not, does he intend to ask for the Minister's resignation?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is talking about two things: The absence, according to him, of facts, and a version that was allegedly contradicted, the version provided by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In both cases, I think the House and the Canadian people will acknowledge that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has consistently given the House all the facts, and his version of the facts has never been contradicted either by him or by a third party. In concluding, the Leader of the Opposition asked me if the Minister had offered his resignation or if I had accepted it. The answer is negative in both cases.

PRIME MINISTER'S CONFIDENCE IN MINISTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Prime Minister bears the ultimate responsibility for the competence and integrity of the Ministers of his Government. Canadians do not expect that from time to time problems will not occur. However, they do expect that if there is a case of ministerial incompetence, or if a Minister fails to supervise properly the operations of his Department, the Prime Minister will act swiftly.

The Prime Minister cannot duck the issue. Is he prepared to say in the House of Commons that he reaffirms his confidence in the Minister of National Health and Welfare, or will he do the proper thing and secure the resignation of that Minister?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition refers, I suppose, to the possibility of ministerial resignation in the event of lack of competence or lack of integrity by the Minister. I know that not even he would suggest that the Minister of National Health and Welfare lacks either competence or integrity.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition raises the question of what I, as Prime Minister, believe my responsibilities are in the event that the Minister is ducking the issue. I have not ducked the issue. The Government has not ducked the issue. The Minister has been here every day to deal in an honourable, straightforward, and effective way with a difficult issue. He has done the opposite of ducking the issue. He has dealt with the issue in the most honourable traditions of this House.

DISCHARGE OF MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the words I used were that the Prime Minister bears the ultimate responsibility for the competence and integrity of his Ministers. I have not accused the Minister of lack of integrity because I accept that. However, I do accuse the Minister of lack of competence in overseeing his Department and in his own reaction to this health crisis.

I suggest to the Prime Minister that surely as First Minister of the country his first loyalty is not to the Members of this House whom he chooses to act as Ministers of the Crown, but to the people of Canada who elected him as Prime Minister of Canada.

When will the Prime Minister learn that a case of ministerial negligence cannot be evaded and that the problem will not just go away? Does the Prime Minister not agree that, if he does not begin to deal with these issues, negligence starts to taint his own performance as First Minister of the country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, of course any time in the British parliamentary system when there is a situation such as that mentioned by my right hon. friend in respect of a Minister either being incompetent or lacking integrity, it clearly impacts, as it should, on the Prime Minister of the day. I notice that my right hon. friend, who has served both as a Minister and as Prime Minister, withdrew any suggestion about a lack of integrity on the part of the Minister.

• (1425)

In regard to the question of competence which he raises, I believe that most objective Canadians and observers would come to the conclusion that, notwithstanding difficult circumstances, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, as has been his tradition, has dealt with this with a great deal of competence and alacrity as it came to his attention.

With regard to the question of loyalty, the first and foremost loyalty of the Prime Minister is to Canada, and his first and foremost loyalty is to do his best by those requirements that govern his job, as it is the responsibility of all Members of the House, including the responsibility to be fair and objective when analyzing difficult circumstances in this House. It is my view that a fair and objective analysis will confirm the judgment that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has acted with competence, dignity, and great ability, as he has always done since he first set foot in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MESSAGE GIVEN TO CHARLOTTETOWN WAREHOUSE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I suggest that his responses on this issue have in fact indeed been checkered with contradictions and confusion. He originally insisted that no public warning was issued until Tuesday night because no testing had been done and therefore the link had not been established. This morning we learned that, on November 27, Sobey's Food Warehouse in Charlottetown was visited by government officials personally, with one message: "Please stop selling mussels". Why would the Government send an agent to Sobey's Food Warehouse in Charlottetown, P.E.I., and not let the public of Canada have that information at the same time?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I hope you would give me the latitude first to take the opportunity to express on my personal behalf and I am sure on behalf of all Members of the House my deep condolences to the Pomeroy family on the loss they have suffered.

I think all of us who have public responsibilities have to search our consciences to be convinced that everything we have done is correct. I have done that again, and I believe every established practice of the Department and the Government of Canada, which has been developed over years by experts, was followed exactly. I did not interfere with scientists. I did not interfere with their expertise. I did not interfere with any advice. When I received their expert advice, I acted.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

QUERY WHY PUBLIC DID NOT RECEIVE SAME INFORMATION AS STORES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the same Minister who failed to react and even contributed to the situation by his silence from the very beginning until December 1. I would like to ask him... Obviously, people will be offering their condolences to the family of Mr. Pomeroy who died this morning. However, I would like to ask the Minister why on November 27—before the date on which Mr. Pomeroy ate the mussels—when Government officials visited at least one establishment, Sobey's Food Warehouse in Charlottetown, to ask them to withdraw the mussels, those officials did not give Canadians, did not give Mr. Pomeroy and all consumers the same information?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have not been contradictory. I have not given any information to the House that was not factual, and I have not given any more than has been factual.

I have said time after time that there are established practices. They have been developed over time, they are dictated by experience, and they are based on expertise. Those established practices are there to protect the public. Those established practices were clearly followed.

• (1430)

In terms of the specific question raised by the Hon. Member, in order that the Government is not seen to be protecting itself in any political way, I have offered a number of times a full briefing, on the record, from officials, in terms of those practices. Again, if I can use the opportunity, today at four o'clock in the Sir Frederick Banting Building, that will again be formally constructed. The press, my opposition critics, or whoever can ask my officials, on the record, for any detail of practices. I am responsible to follow the practices, and I have done that.

REASON FOR STOPPING SHIPMENTS AND NOT STOPPING SALES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. I would hope he would agree that his duties as Minister are more than following the practices. If, as Minister, he finds the practices are wrong, his obligation is to change the practices. I notice the Minister is nodding in agreement.

The Minister knows that rats that were injected with material from the infected mussels were dying on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, and that the Department took action to stop shipment on the Sunday, but there was no action to warn consumers until Tuesday. The Minister in this House has attempted to justify that practice, that time gap. If he thinks that logic, under the circumstances, was sufficient to stop shipment of the mussels, why would the same logic, with even greater serious implications, not lead to the conclusion that not only should consumers have been warned at that precise moment but simultaneously an instruction to stop sales ought to have gone out?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that is a valid question and I will try again to answer it as I have done before. I will not go into all the testing of the week prior to the Sunday in question because that has been put on the record and I am trying not to take up the time of the House.

I just want to say to the Hon. Member that the mouse and rat tests done both by DFO and by the Department of National Health and Welfare gave results very different from what was at that time being tested, paralytic shellfish poisoning. In terms of the Sunday and the stop shipment, that is done as an investigative tool for the purposes of giving us both samples and time to do further testing. That is what was done. In fact, I said yesterday in the House as well that, in terms of the number of cases we get just on food complaints a year, obviously every one of them has to be tracked down. We do that. We have over 2,687 cases, of which five led to a medical alert.

I know the Hon. Member is trying to be fair about this, as I am trying to be very open. I believe that any rational approach to this would indicate that with that type of expertise and history, my officials followed very clear procedures and informed me according to the dates I have given the House earlier.

TIME LAPSE BETWEEN STOPPING SHIPMENTS AND WARNING PUBLIC

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, no one at this point is questioning that the officials involved were not following traditional procedures. What is being questioned, and certainly I am asking questions about it, is why the Minister accepts those procedures.

I want to ask either the Minister or the Prime Minister what seems to me to be quite a serious question under the circumstances. If rats are dying three days in a row, and that is deemed to be serious enough to stop shipments—in other words, major action was taken—why in heaven's name, ought procedures not also require at precisely that same time that consumers be warned, and the whole process be stopped until we are completely secure about the health implications of the product?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is not—and I am not trying to hide behind this—trying to question the competence of the people who work with these products day in and day out. I am not, and he is not. They use their expertise, and competence, based on the experience they have gathered through the years. That is what they did. That is what they do case after case.

In terms of the stop shipment I can tell the Hon. Member—not trying to hide behind any cases—that we have a number of stop shipments as an investigative tool throughout the year which do not lead to medical alerts. It is part of the process, and at no time—and I say this very directly to the Hon. Member—did I ask for a second opinion. At no time did I ask about the industry. I don't know who is involved. It was health only. When they came to me with a health conclusion and asked for action, I acted within the hour.

REQUEST THAT DEPARTMENTAL PROCEDURES BE CHANGED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): As the Minister knows, we now have the terrible circumstances about which he feels as badly as does everyone else, that in fact someone has actually died in this process. What does concern me a bit is that the Minister seems to be saying, notwithstanding this happening, that we ought not to be changing procedures.

Since we have now found that one of the consequences of the adopted procedures can lead to a product being out there, much of it presumably still out there, people eating it, and as we know, people actually dying from it, does the Minister not agree that what ought to be done now is to change the procedures so that, as soon as a warning is sufficient enough to stop shipment of such a product, simultaneously instructions should go out to stores from one end of Canada to the other to stop selling the product?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in terms of the procedures, and I was not trying not to answer the question—I think we have to look at two things. First, the procedures that we presently have in place, time-tested, based on our experience, have worked well for us as Canadians. Our health system is a good system.

In terms of the Hon. Member's question, should they be reviewed, I think that is always a legitimate question, and that is being done on a constant basis. When we take a look—and we have done this—at other countries that were involved with similar, I am not saying the same, but similar cases, and we take a look at the timeframe they used to try to solve the issue, we found we have been able to act much faster, based again on that experience, even to the point, for example, of getting additional kits from Japan in the last days. We do the bioassay on mice and rats, we do the chemical testing which is done with DFO of Mont-Joli, and if there are additional kits and procedures, we are using those as well.

So even on the basis of world expertise we believe we have touched everything we could have used. If there are additional things we could do, it is my responsibility to put those in place as well, and we will do that. But I have everything in place that the experts tell me is available world-wide, and we have used it.

QUERY WHY MINISTER DID NOT FOLLOW UP DEMAND MADE BY MAGDALEN ISLANDS' MUSSEL FISHERMEN

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, in this sad sequence of events there is someone else who has a responsibility, and I am referring to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. My question is therefore directed to him. Mr. Speaker, I have here a letter dated Grande-Entrée, Magdalen Islands, November 28, 1985, sent to the Minister by the Magdalen Islands mussel growers association. At the time, the association asked the Minister for preventive monitoring of the marine environment for contamination by jonyaulax, the toxin that causes paralytic shellfish poisoning.

What I want to ask the Minister is this: Why did the Minister fail to act on the request made by mussel growers in the Magdalen Islands on November 28, 1985, when the growers were worried about the possibility of shellfish poisoning?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for that question. Obviously all the resources of the Government, the DFO, the Department of the Environment, the Department of National Health and Welfare, or any other Department or agency, are being used. But I want the hon. gentleman to be very clear when he asks these questions. At the present time of the investigation we are using labs, not only government but private labs as well. It has not been determined what the exact toxin is in Prince Edward Island.

• (1440)

Mr. Lapierre: What about the Magdalen Islands.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I will get to that. In terms of the Magdalen Islands, again it appears that what we are dealing with is algae bloom and paralytic shellfish poisoning. In fact, with these two cases, one in the Magdalen Islands and one in Prince Edward Island, there could have been two very different sources but a confluence of those cases at the same time period, or relatively the same time period. When the gentleman asks his question, I want to say to him that we are checking the matter very closely. Obviously we have been doing so on an ongoing 24 hour basis, but I do not want the Member to jump to conclusions which scientifically have not been established.

[Translation]

QUERY WHY PREVENTIVE PROGRAM WAS NOT ESTABLISHED

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, as far the Magdalen Islands mussel growers and their mussels are concerned, we realize there is a difference, but the fact remains that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans had a responsibility on November 28, 1985. He was warned before anyone else, and well before the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but he failed to act on a request made by fishermen who were worried their product might not be fit for human consumption. We are not talking about twenty-four hours a day. This was two years ago, and the Minister has not yet taken any action. I want to ask him why he did not act responsibly. Why didn't the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans make sure there was a preventive program instead of just an annual inspection?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Again, Mr. Speaker, I cannot change the answer or give it any differently than I did the first time. I say to the hon. gentleman that these are highly technical issues.

I think it would help the Canadian public, who have a right to be reassured about their health safety, their public health system and the fishery, that at four o'clock not only will health officials be available but also officials from the Department of Fisheries and Oceans to answer all those technical questions.

CASE REPORTED IN OTTAWA ON NOVEMBER 20

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I received a call this morning from a Dr. Donald Smith of Ottawa whose wife, Doris Smith, became ill after eating mussels on November 19. Her husband, Dr. Smith, brought the matter to Dr. Even Todd at the Health Protection Branch on November 20 who recommended that she contact the regional health office. However, no further action was taken until November 25 when Health and Welfare heard of further cases in Montreal.

Is the Minister aware of this particular incident? If he is not, now that I have raised it with him will he investigate this matter because there seem to be some lapses of time here which would be very important for the kinds of processes that have to take place?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that situation. My officials have not brought that to my attention. I will be glad to check into it.

I think the Hon. Member has to recognize that any of these health cases, which can be accessed either through an emergency system, a hospital, or a doctor's office, would not immediately be brought to the attention of the Department of National Health and Welfare. I have not been informed of that case. We will, however, check immediately after Question Period.

REQUEST FOR COMMITMENT DEPARTMENTAL PROCEDURES WILL BE CHANGED

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the same Minister. He described the procedures. On Sunday he ordered shipments be stopped and on Tuesday there was a health warning to Canadians.

Will the Minister tell this House, in light of what has taken place, is he prepared now to give a commitment that, in fact, the process will be changed so that if the Minister has to err he will err on the side of safety for Canadians? Will the Minister give this House that assurance now?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that has always been the practice. I give that assurance to the Member right now. If there are improved procedures we can use, whether in Canada on the basis of our experience and expertise or whether on the basis of world experience, the answer is yes.

I do not want the Hon. Member to be under the impression that we have not been trying to improve whatever procedures are used world-wide. If we can improve them, if there is a lapse, obviously that is my responsibility. I am as interested in that as any Member of the House and any person in Canada who should expect that, and has a right to expect that. I want to assure the Member and Canadians that, to the best of our human abilities, the system is as good as any that we have seen. If we can improve it, we will improve it even beyond this point.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SUPREME COURT DECISION REVERSING VERDICT OF MURDER BY ASSOCIATION

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Yesterday, as he knows, there was a significant decision brought down in the Supreme Court of Canada regarding the prosecution of those charged with first and second degree murder by association. This decision obviously has serious implications for the future.

What are the Minister's feelings on this decision and what does he intend to do about it in the future?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his continuing interest in justice and legal affairs.

This is an important decision that has been handed down by the Supreme Court of Canada. It has implications, specifically for one section of the Criminal Code, namely Section 213(d) dealing with constructive murder. The implications are now being studied. On receipt of the decision from the Supreme Court of Canada I instructed my officials to examine the judgment itself and the implications, and we are communicating with our provincial counterparts who are responsible for the administration of justice.

Finally, the matter is an agenda item with the Deputy Ministers of Justice who will be meeting this month. I hope that after those examinations have taken place we will be in a better position to determine what action is required legislatively.

HEALTH

TOXIC MUSSELS—TIMING OF PUBLIC ALERT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, Canadians have been exposed to a deadly toxin as a direct result of the indecision and inaction of a Minister of the Crown, not because of flawed processes.

For two and a half days after an industry advisory went out Canadians were left in the dark with respect to the existence on their grocery shelves of a deadly toxin. Seventy-five Canadians have been afflicted; many of them are seriously ill. Tragically, one has died.

My question is for the Prime Minister. Canadians want to know why it has become a common occurrence for this Prime Minister to put his misguided sense of loyalty with the Minister of the Crown and not—

Mr. Thacker: That is shameful.

Mr. Speaker: I have to say that that question clearly imputes the motive of the Right Hon. Prime Minister. I would have to call it exactly the same for any other Minister or any other Member. I am sure the Hon. Member could rephrase the question.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I kindly suggested the actions were misguided but I will attempt to rephrase the question.

The Prime Minister's first responsibility, and indeed he has acknowledged it today in the House, is to Canada. That is number one.

Has the Prime Minister examined all the facts with respect to this tragic episode? Is he satisfied in his own mind that an industry advisory with respect to the existence of deadly toxins should have been released two and a half days before consumers were aware that toxic filled mussels were available on the grocery shelves? Does the Prime Minister believe that that represents a timely warning to the consumers of Canada?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I believe that question is couched in the same words as I have answered before. It is a matter of how much time does it legitimately take with officials working as diligently as they can with the resources of government, with their own expertise and their own deep desire to protect the health of Canadians, and was there a time lapse.

• (1450)

I say to the hon. gentleman that officials did everything in their power to develop medical, scientific, and toxicological answers, and it was on the basis of that evidence that they advised me on the Tuesday that a health alert was in order. It was on the basis both of that detective work, that scientific work, and that expertise and advice, that the Government acted.

DISCHARGE OF MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the actions of officials are not in question here today.

Two and a half years ago after the tainted tuna episode, the Prime Minister announced that henceforth the highest possible health standards would be applied to seafood. He also announced that, in order to avoid any possibility of a conflict of interest in the Minister's responsibility, in future the Minister of Health and not the Minister of Fisheries would be responsible for issuing advisories on food warnings. It was the Prime Minister's decision that there would be higher standards and the responsibility removed from Fisheries and brought to Health.

I want to ask the Prime Minister whether he is satisfied, given that decision he took, that the Minister of Health in these circumstances has properly carried out his responsibilities. Can he be satisfied that a two and a half day period of ignorance by the people of Canada as to the dangerous nature of toxic mussels on grocery shelves is acceptable and represents a proper carrying out of responsibilities by this Minister of Health?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, from the beginning of inquiries in the House, the Minister of Health has provided full and complete answers which I think respond to the concerns of all Canadians coming from all political Parties in an extremely difficult human situation.

My hon. friend alludes to the question of the competence of the Minister of Health himself, which I believe was a question raised by his Leader. I give him exactly the same response, that few Canadians, from whatever political background, based on the evidence of some 15 or 20 years service to Canada, would question either the integrity or the competence of the distinguished Minister of Health.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ISSUANCE OF PUBLIC WARNING—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

The Minister has yet to say to the House that he agrees that those procedures need change. I wish to ask the Minister the following simple question. If he believes the scientific procedures were correct up until Sunday morning—and I have no way to determine if those procedures are the best in the world or not, so I will accept the Minister's word—surely once those scientific procedures had been completed, it then became a question of judgment.

When the Minister or his Department ordered the cessation of shipments of those products, surely at the same time consumers in Canada were also entitled to receive that information?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that question has previously been put, and I have answered it.

Mr. Benjamin: No, you did not.

Mr. Broadbent: Are you going to change your procedure, Jake?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Yes, I have answered that question, but I will answer it again.

In terms of the procedures, Members in the House, as the Hon. Member himself stated, accept the best advice we get from experts whether they are health experts, or whatever is the issue of the day.

If procedures can be improved in any way, as we examine them, obviously they will be improved. But let us not take the improvement of procedures, if in fact it is possible, with the period of time experts need exactly to have the very best procedures, and it is those kinds of questions that the Member and I have to accept from experts. If there are better procedures on a world basis, we will search for them. That is obviously what we will do.

REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN PROCESS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, even if we accept that scientific procedures require what those officials did, surely after those procedures have been followed it then becomes a question of judgment, which is not tied into the same structures. That is the question.

I simply ask the Minister again, will he not assure the House and Canadians, and stand up and agree to change that process after the scientific procedures have been done?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I know what the hon. gentleman is asking, and I have examined that very closely.

I go back to when I mentioned to him the number of food complaints, drug complaints, or cosmetic complaints that we receive in the Department. If that procedure were to be followed as rigorously as he outlined in his question, I would have eight or nine "stop shipments" every day, before we would receive the investigatory evidence which we have to have.

It is for that reason that I am not trying to change procedures, I am trying to improve procedures, but keep in mind that it is a detective approach that we have to take in terms of science and toxicology, and that is what has to be done and what was done.

ALLEGED NOTIFICATION OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RETAILER

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

The Minister knows that the issue is not one of procedure; the issue is a judgment call by the Minister himself.

I wish to ask the Minister, why was a retailer in P.E.I. notified of this particular problem on Friday, November 27, the Minister had knowledge of this particular issue for some days, and then he waited two and a half days before letting the general public know. I ask the Minister why he waited for two and a half days before informing the general public?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the premise of the question is false. The alleged facts are false. The Department issued the "stop shipment" on Sunday.

As I have stated a number of times in the House and to the press outside, I was informed by the Department on the Monday that they were looking at a problem with mussels. I indicated to them to give me all the evidence and the advice as promptly as they could. That was done on the Tuesday. The Members states I was incompetent and did not act. I acted immediately—

Ms. Copps: You did not.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I acted immediately. I ask the Hon. Member for Hamilton East to give me the same right as an hon. gentleman in this House to deal with the facts, and I wish she would too.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister.

I tell the Minister that the applause of his colleagues is not necessarily the applause of Canadians in the faith of this Minister, or the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Through you, Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister sincerely and seriously, if you knew on Monday, why didn't you tell the Canadian people?

Mr. Speaker: The question was a little out of order, but I think the Minister heard it. Perhaps the Minister would reply.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I did not give any new information to the Hon. Member and his exercise does not change the facts.

• (1500)

The facts are as I gave them, and I said very directly to the hon. gentleman, to the House, and to Canadians: I will expect from my Department, from my officials who are honest people, who are Canadians as concerned as any of you, that once the medical information is given I acted, and I will act just that way.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CIA FUNDING OF BRAINWASHING EXPERIMENTS—REQUEST FOR EX GRATIA PAYMENT TO VICTIMS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. As the Minister knows, in the late 1950s a number of Canadians were victims of terrible brainwashing experiments by Dr. Ewen Cameron in Montreal, funded both by the Canadian Government and the CIA.

In view of the permanent scars that were suffered by these individuals, a number of whom are suing the CIA and in fact a number of whom are in the gallery today, when will the Minister do the right thing and offer each of these elderly victims an ex gratia payment of $100,000 to ease their burden, as was discussed in the Cooper report last year?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member raising this question. I want simply to put the record straight, though, with respect to a couple of the allegations made in the course of his question.

The first was that the Canadian Government in some way was aware of CIA activity during the course of these treatments. That is absolutely incorrect. We have had a very extensive, thorough, and full examination of the circumstances by the Cooper report. This document has gone through the details in a precise way and has in fact concluded, as my predecessor pointed out on the floor of the House and publicly on different occasions, that there is no legal liability on the part of the Government of Canada.

The Hon. Member in fact asked me, I think it was last June, if there was something we could do as a Government to assist in the legal case that was being brought by these Canadians against the CIA.

I have been trying to carry on some negotiation and discussion with my colleagues, particularly with the Hon.

Member for Winnipeg North as an interlocutory between these people and the Government, to see if some assistance might be possible with respect to out of pocket expenses or legal costs that would be incurred.

We have manifested our interest and support for these people in a number of ways. I will continue to carry on these discussions so long as the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North wishes to do so.

Mr. Robinson: It is particularly shameful that a Government, which could come up with over $650,000 in legal fees for Sinclair Stevens—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Robinson: —does not find one penny for the victims of these terrible experiments.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. Even George Cooper, whose appalling report was basically a whitewash absolving the Government of all moral and legal responsibility and was used as Exhibit No. 1 by the CIA in the lawsuit in the United States, suggested that the Government look seriously at the question of an ex gratia payment of $100,000 over and above legal fees.

When will the Government finally do the right and decent thing and pay these people the compensation to which they are entitled before even more of the elderly victims have died? When will the Government finally act?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I find the question rather disconcerting inasmuch as the Hon. Member's Leader has been in touch with me by correspondence. He has asked me—and I have agreed to do it—to try to find what might be possible on an ex gratia basis, that is to say in simple terms, while there is no legal responsibility, we are compassionate with respect to these people. We as a Government have not been directly involved, but we understand what has taken place in the past. We have attempted to come to terms with determining a reasonable amount of money that might be available to the victims of the experiments.

I have proposed to carry on my discussions. I undertook that I would, for the Leader of the New Democratic Party. I do not think it is fair to say that somehow we are not prepared to help. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has done this so often in the past in a number of ways that I am determined to carry it on. I hope the Hon. Member will assist me in this regard.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question in the Question Period. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

HEALTH

TOXIC MUSSELS—CHRONOLOGY OF EVENTS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a further question for the Minister of Health. I have listened to him carefully during the four days that this issue has dominated the House of Commons. I accept his word that he did not, as a Minister, learn until Monday morning, the relative weekend, Monday morning—well, on the Monday—

An Hon. Member: That's right.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is what he said in answer to my colleague. The Minister has to make up his mind.

The facts remain that Dr. Todd said on television that rats were dying from this toxin on the Friday afternoon. The shippers, exporters, companies involved, were informed on the Sunday. The Canadian people were not informed until Tuesday evening. That is a large gap for me to swallow and for the Canadian people to understand.

The Minister bears some responsibility for the period in which he knew. He also bears responsibility for the period in which his Department knew, and he has to take responsibility for it.

I have yet to get a satisfactory explanation. I ask the Minister one more time: what happened between Friday afternoon and Tuesday night before the Canadian people were told?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have answered that question as well, and I can go through the chronology again. I can go through the chronology, if you give me the time, Mr. Speaker.

Ms. Copps: Which chronology?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I have only used one chronology. The Hon. Member might have used more. I can go through the chronology. It will be available again at four o'clock, but I want to get directly to the right hon. gentleman. I said that I had been informed on Monday, prior to Question Period on Monday, that the Department was investigating a mussel problem.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Didn't they tell you during the weekend at all?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): No. Just as he wants me, and I do respect his word, I ask him the same thing, respect mine.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I respect your word. I just want to know what happened during that weekend.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): What I am saying to the right hon. gentleman is that the Department, through that period of time, was testing and came up with a medical link on Tuesday, late afternoon. It was my House duty on Tuesday. I came out of the House from my House duty on Tuesday. There was a CBC reporter, because there had been a story running on Charlottetown CBC. I said: "I am going to my office. I want to know as well". He came to my office, waited outside my office. My ADM came into my office on Tuesday, around six o'clock Tuesday night.

As I received the request for a medical alert, as it got into my hands, I gave it to the press. That is how instantaneous it was.

So, Mr. Speaker, on every count I have acted quickly. I have acted responsibly. I have allowed my officials' full expertise to function, and I say to the hon. gentleman very sincerely, he and I have been in this House a fair period of time, and in ministerial responsibility I take my responsibilities as he did as Prime Minister and as a Minister. I believe he also expected from his officials the best, and when the officials gave him the information he acted. I did the very same thing, and I ask him to respect that as well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POINT OF ORDER

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF ALLEGEDLY QUOTED DOCUMENT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would ask that the Minister, given that he was quoting at length from a document, in fact table the document.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there has been a request for a tabling of notes. It is a known fact in this House that Ministers are prepared and always quote from notes. I will check the "blues" to see if in the course of the Question Period there was any reference to an actual document.

In any event, the Minister has stated to the House that he is holding a full briefing at four o'clock, and I am sure that document will be available there.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. The Minister made very clear that he was quoting from an official document to which he referred over and over again as a chronology. He did not simply have a piece of paper in his hand which he glanced down at from time to time. He said that he had an official document which he called the chronology, and he said that it was the only chronology. I think the precedents are clear. They are in Beauchesne's. The Minister has done something in a way which requires him to table in the House the document from which he was quoting.

• (1510)

I would say further that it is no answer to the point of order of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) to say that there will be a briefing at four o'clock. The House of Commons takes precedent over any briefing by an official. The Government is not willing to respect the House of Commons. You, Sir, on behalf of all Members and on behalf of the Canadian people, should ensure that the Government carries out its duties to the Canadian people which must be expressed through this House.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would reiterate my undertaking to check the "blues". If the Minister made any reference to a document in his answers, definitely the document will be tabled without question.

Mr. Speaker: Under the circumstances, of course, I would expect that the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) will try to obtain that information as quickly as possible. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) has raised a fundamental matter of procedural law in this Chamber. If indeed the Minister was using an official document and reading from it, of course, it ought to be tabled and I think the Minister of State has given that undertaking. I am sure that if that is the case, the Minister of State will report back to me or to the House shortly.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I hope that this point of order will not be controversial. I simply want to ask the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) to give the usual statement of business the Government wants to call for the coming week.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I would offer to table my notes but I am not sure that you could read my writing.

Tomorrow, we will deal with Bill C-88 at third reading stage. The Bill deals with some minor changes to the Judges Act. We would hope that we could complete that between 10 a.m. and 11 a.m. We would then move to Bill C-87, the Customs Harmonization Act, and we expect that we could complete third reading of that Bill tomorrow.

As for next week, there are a number of Bills now at committee which may be reported back to the House. We could deal with them on an ad hoc basis. In addition, we expect finalization of the free trade agreement with the United States very soon and that will be tabled in the House as soon as possible. I will meet with other House Leaders to finalize the framework for a full and complete debate in the House.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY—S. O. 82—CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—EXTENSION OF DEADLINE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Broadbent:

That this House condemn the government for its failure to allow an adequate period of review prior to the signing of a highly complex trade agreement with the United States on January 2, 1988 and, as a result, this House calls upon the government to seek an extension of the January 2nd deadline by at least 60 days.

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at 1 p.m., the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) had the floor.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, when the House rose, I was speaking about the inadequacy of the process the Government has imposed upon Parliament and the Canadian people and the inadequacy of the time for debate and examination of the free trade agreement. I was speaking to a motion put by my Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), which condemns the Government for the process as it stands and which calls on the Government to request a 60-day extension to the January 2 signing date so that Canadians, both those who are for and those who are against the agreement, can have time to take a good look at the text of it.

I was arguing that the time which remains to Parliament and Canadians between the time we receive the text, which will, I hope, be tomorrow, and the time of the signing of the agreement on January 2 is hopelessly inadequate. Given that there is a provision in the United States for Congress to extend the fast track, I cannot understand why it is that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is unwilling to have the decency to request such an extension so the due parliamentary and political process can be followed.

If it is possible under the congressional procedure to have a time extension, why on earth would the Prime Minister who had given a commitment to full parliamentary and public debate not request such an extension? Perhaps I could understand it if there were no possibility of extending the date of January 2. I would still be angry with the Government for having put us in such a position. I would be angry with the Government for having negotiated with the Americans at the end of their fast-track procedure when they would have the natural advantage over us, because we would be in a position of having to conclude an agreement by a particular time.

The fact remains that the Prime Minister has not even tried. He has not requested or tried to see whether or not Congress and the President would allow for the possibility of such an extension. For that, the Government is to be condemned. That is why we have moved the motion condemning the Government, for not seeking that extension and for being satisfied with a process that gives Canadians only a few weeks to consider the text of an agreement which will be some 2,000 pages long.

Part of this process has been the committee hearings. I had the dubious privilege of serving on that committee which travelled the country to hear witnesses, both pro and con, on the agreement. That process was completely flawed because the committee did not have the text before it; nor did the people from whom we heard. Many people who came before us supporting the agreement were only able to give conditional support. They would say that they support the agreement but they hope that this does not mean this and that does not mean that and that they need to see the final text. These people have thought through the agreement, want to see the final text and want to have an opportunity to render a judgment on that final text. However, they will not have that opportunity because of the time frame the Prime Minister has accepted for Canadian due process.

Looking for a silver lining in a cloud, I suppose that the committee hearings were not completely without value. They were awfully frustrating to the great many Canadians who were unable to come before us, but many of the people who came before the committee in support of the agreement, and there were just as many who were against it, were much more forthcoming and honest about the true impact of the agreement than we could ever get the Government to be.

The very best example of this that I can think of is the presentation of the former Premier of Alberta, Peter Lougheed. Mr. Lougheed said openly and directly before the committee that under this agreement, provinces would never again be able to have a preferential pricing policy for domestic consumers or local industry. We have been trying to get the Minister of Energy (Mr. Masse) to say that in this House as clearly for months on end. We could not get the Government to be honest about the real impact of the part of the agreement which provides that there will be no discriminatory pricing.

Mr. Lougheed said to the committee that that would be the effect of the agreement and that he was glad of it. I am not glad of it. I think it will be a real disadvantage, particularly to provinces which have been able in the past to use preferential energy pricing as a means of attracting industry. Mr. Lougheed was at least honest about the effect of it.

Another example of this was the question of marketing boards and supply management. We have been saying since day one that this agreement would put at risk our supply management and marketing board system.

I wonder if we could have some order, Mr. Speaker. It is a little hard to speak over the chuckles. I have the greatest of respect for the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, but if I cannot hear the jokes, I would prefer not to listen to the laughter.

• (1520)

We said from the very beginning that marketing boards and supply management were at risk as a result of this agreement. Every time we said that, the Government would say marketing boards are not on the table; the NDP is trying to create fear. The NDP is exaggerating. The NDP is this and the NDP is that. The Grocery Products Manufacturers of Canada appeared before the committee. I hope they cannot be accused of being part of the socialist hordes. They said things like you cannot have marketing boards and no tariffs. It makes no economic sense. Once you reduce tariffs, then you have to have either the elimination of marketing boards or a very fundamental change in them which would require farmers to receive a lower price than they do now for the products they sell to the association.

What is clear from that? Marketing boards are at risk. Exactly what we have been saying all along. That was said not by opposition Members but by the Grocery Products Manufacturers of Canada.

Every time we said social programs were at risk under this agreement we were accused of hysteria and trying to whip up irrational fears among the Canadian people. The irony is that the claim about social programs being involved was most validated in the evidence the committee received from businessmen themselves. Ironically, they brought it up.

I recall in Vancouver a member of the Business Council, I believe his name was Mr. Matkin, and on the other coast Mr. Cummings of National Sea, referred to the fact that one of the reasons investors sometimes locate a plant in Canada is because they find the social programs to be of benefit, not only to their employees but to themselves. Mr. Cummings said they had done a comparative study of their plant in New Hampshire and their plant in Nova Scotia. They found the Canadian plant was more competitive on balance. One of the reasons was that the plant in New Hampshire had to pay health care insurance for its employees, whereas the plant in Nova Scotia did not.

A similar point was made about how social programs become part of the calculus in determining what constitutes competitive advantage by some of the businessmen who appeared as witnesses in Vancouver.

The point is this. Whether we like it or not, social programs are part of the calculus. They are part of what is taken into consideration when we calculate competitive advantage. If we enter into a relationship with the U.S. in which we, over the next five to seven years, negotiate the meaning of a level playing field, it is absolutely inevitable that our social programs will come to be part of that debate. By entering into that agreement we will be creating a context in which arguments about social programs as part and parcel of what is calculated as competitive advantage will come about. Whether it is the argument I have just made about Americans saying Canadian social programs constitute a competitive advantage, or Canadian employers saying the tax burden they have to bear in order to fund these social programs puts them at a competitive disadvantage, the point is that they become part of the calculation, I say to the Parliamentary Secretary shaking his head.

I am trying to make this point—

Mr. McDermid: Negatively.

Mr. Blaikie: —in as non-partisan a way as I can to show how this will become part of the argument. That is what we mean when we say our social programs are on the table whether you like it or not. To deny it is to simply bury your head in the sand.

A final point in the same vein. One of the things we said in the beginning was that a free trade agreement with the U.S. would mean the end of the Crow benefit in western Canada. It would be a further step towards dismantling the economic structures set up in western Canada over the years and which we value. We could not get the Government to say they were at risk but we saw a supporter of the agreement, the Western Canadian Wheat Growers Association, and others, come before the committee and say yes, the Crow benefit is at stake. Not just the benefit being removed as a result of the agreement but the payment to the railways is at stake. This will lead to payment to producers and when you do that it means more trucking. When you use trucks, it means more use of inland terminals. You know who owns the inland terminals? It just happens to be the company that the Canadian negotiator on agriculture worked for and the company that the American negotiator on agriculture worked for, Cargill—surprise, surprise.

I see my time is up. However, the fact remains that the only legitimate and final political process appropriate when a Government proposes to change the very nature of this country by entering into this comprehensive an agreement with our southern neighbour is an election. The sooner we have it, the sooner the Canadian people will be able to render their own judgment. That is absolutely necessary.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the comments of the Hon. Member. They were not rantings. I cannot use that word. However, I happen to disagree with them. I think they are causing unjustified fear among the public.

The Hon. Member talks about social programs being an unfair trade practice or tipping the scale in trade negotiations. I submit that if that is the case, why has it not been brought forward before now? The laws have been in place for that kind of an attack, as the NDP likes to put it, on our social programs. Yet it has not happened heretofore.

I know what the NDP are trying to do. They are trying to tie this into the trade talks, but it is just not factual. The trade laws on both sides of the border are basically the same. They come under the rules and regulations of GATT. The U.S. has had the opportunity to bring charges against Canada for unfair trade practices if in fact they feel it is a distortion of trade, or places companies in an unfair competitive position. This has not happened and it is not going to happen.

Lowering tariff rates is not doing that at all. National treatment comes into play, as the Hon. Member knows. As long as all companies are treated equally and fairly, these will not come into play at all.

He talks about subsidies and transportation. That was another one of his theories. I can say to him that the agreement says very clearly that until all distortions to agricultural trade are on an equal basis, those particular subsidies will remain in place. The Hon. Member knows that. That has to do with trade with the U.S., not trade overseas or the shipping of any of our grain products overseas. There is a good market in the United States for certain types of our high quality grains. The agreement says that once we get on a level playing field, to use the current terminology, subsidies on both sides will be gone and there will be fair trade. We are talking about what is fair to both sides.

• (1530)

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I will have to keep my remarks brief because the committee which is drafting the report on the agreement is meeting right now and I need to be there. My understanding on the transportation subsidy is that the Crow benefit for Canola, for example, comes off right away rather than after everything else has been leveled out. We heard from the Canola producers and Canola oil manufacturers in western Canada that this would affect them right away.

With regard to the Crow benefit in general, I was talking about the effect this would have in the future. I did not make the claim which the Member alleged I made about it happening immediately.

I did not say that our social programs were an unfair trade practice. I do not think they are. I do not think they should have anything to do with trade. The Parliamentary Secretary talks about what has happened so far. I know what has happened so far. I am talking about what might happen as a result of this entirely new relationship. That which has happened so far is not a reliable guide.

The point I am making is that when you get into a level-playing-field relationship these arguments will be generated. I am not saying that these arguments will succeed. I hope they will not. However, either the Minister is being very naive indeed or simply he does not want to admit that the arguments about social programs will become part of the negotiations. Over the next five to seven years we will be negotiating what constitutes a non-tariff barrier, what constitutes an unfair trade advantage of a non-tariff kind.

The Parliamentary Secretary says that he does not know how lowering tariffs can affect social programs. I am not talking about the lowering of tariffs. I am talking about the negotiations that will take place over the next five to seven years about what the level playing field will look like. I think that is where the arguments will be generated about social programs.

I could be wrong, and I hope that I am. I hope I never get to find out. I hope we kill this deal, because I do not like it. However, if it does go through, and if what I am predicting does not come to pass at the end of the negotiating period, I will be one of the happiest guys around. However, if you consider the things that have been said you will see that social programs will become a part of the argument.

We know that the Americans already tried once to countervail unemployment insurance. They did not succeed, but I think they will have a better chance of succeeding under this arrangement. I believe the Government has gone into it "bass backwards" if you like. Before we get rid of all the tariffs we should have agreement on non-tariffs. We should have a standardization of social policies such as exists in the European common market countries.

I do not want standardization according to American standards. For the benefit of the American people I would like to have standardization according to Canadian standards so that they can have a medicare program like ours. However, I do not expect that to happen. If it does, it would be great, but history tells us otherwise. When you enter into this kind of a relationship, the weaker country tends to take on the characteristics of the stronger country.

We heard from a number of native people throughout the hearings who had something to tell us.

Mr. McDermid: They got before the committee?

Mr. Blaikie: Yes, they got before the committee on a couple of occasions. The Assembly of First Nations appeared before the committee here, the President of the Dene Nations appeared in Yellowknife, and Chief Moses Okimaw of Manitoba was part of the coalition. I am not pretending that they were not heard. I am saying that they had some advice for us.

They told us that they had lots of experience with treaties between themselves and very powerful institutions such as the Canadian Government. I see that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) is here, which is rather appropriate. The native people told us that in their experience it is the powerful people who interpret the treaties, who in the end have the leverage to say that the treaty means something other than what the native people said it did.

That is the kind of relationship into which we are entering with the United States. That was stated very well in Manitoba by Chief Moses Okimaw who was quoting from The Ecstasy of Rita Joe, I believe. He concluded by saying that free trade will make Indians of us all.

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in its motion put forward today the Opposition is asking us to extend the deadline for signing the agreement by 60 days. On the face of it, that seems to be a reasonable request which anyone might wish to consider. It seems hardly likely that it could not be accommodated. However, the fact is that there are two reasons why it is an unreasonable request. First, it implies that extending the agreement would not jeopardize the agreement we have, that we could simply extend the deadline by 60 days and examine the agreement a little closer without having an impact on our ability to conclude successfully the agreement which we have reached. Second, the Opposition is suggesting to the House that we have not spent enough time considering the free trade agreement. If the Opposition were a little more aware of what has been going on in the country for the last five years beyond the assembly lines of Oshawa it would know that westerners have been requesting a free trade agreement for years. In 1911 this desire of western Canada was put forward. We were not successful at that time, but we intend to be successful this time.

The Official Opposition and the NDP know that liberalized trade has been on the national agenda for many decades and has come to the top of the agenda in the last 10 years. Our national economy and our standard of living depend upon our ability to sell the goods and services we produce. We sell our goods all over the world. Thirty percent of our Gross Domestic Product is comprised of exports. The United States is our largest trading partner by far. We must keep certain economic facts in mind when we consider a free trade agreement.

Within the entire organization of the OECD, Canada is second, after West Germany, in the percentage of our Gross National Product dependent on international trade. Canada is a trading nation. We have always been and always will be. The Opposition has forgotten that this free trade agreement must be placed within the entire history of our trade with the world. Trade is fundamental to us. Our country was founded on trade with the Hudson's Bay Company and the Northwest Company. The fur traders and voyageurs built forts, travelled this country, and brought settlers because we had things to trade.

We still have things to trade and we have examined ways in which we can continue to trade them. Free trade is one of those options. It has been studied by many people. I recall when Premier Lougheed of my Province of Alberta put this idea forward at a First Ministers' Conference. He envisaged this as the way the West, and Alberta in particular, could fulfill its true economic potential, by providing Albertans with an avenue into the American market. He also saw the threat of protectionism against those items we currently sell to the American market. He was at the forefront of that trade debate and brought this issue into the modern era.

The question of free trade has been studied by many groups, including economists, professors, bankers, and business people, as well as the federal Government and some provincial Governments. One of the most important of those studies occurred in the fall of 1982 when the former Government set up the Royal Commission on Economic Union and Development Prospects for Canada. It is more commonly known as the Macdonald Commission, and was chaired by the Hon. Donald Macdonald, a former Minister of Finance under Prime Minister Trudeau.

That commission concluded that we must venture into untried ways that will demand open-mindedness, courage, innovation and determination. It went on to say that we must concentrate our efforts on obtaining secure access to the American market on which continental economic forces have made us increasingly dependent.

The Government has reacted to these challenges. We have been open minded and courageous. We have obtained secure access to the American market. Time and a series of international events have been on our side, such that we have been able to put this trade deal on the national agendas of both Canada and the United States. The Opposition is trying to ensure that free trade, and the state of the Canadian economy as a result of American protectionism fall to the bottom of those agendas.

We have spent years considering free trade and how it will affect us. During the 1977 to 1979 round of GATT negotiations, the Premiers of Canada expressed the view that, contrary to what the federal Government was then doing, there should be a two-pronged effort in Canadian trade initiatives, with a multilateral approach through GATT as well as on a bilateral basis with the United States. We did not do as well as we should have at the GATT negotiations because we are not part of a trading bloc like the European Economic Community, nor do we have the trading leverage of the larger nations like Japan or the United States. We did not have the empathy of the lesser developed countries and various other groups of nations in the world.

In 1980, Ronald Reagan sought election as President of the United States. One of his early commitments was to improve relations with his continental neighbours, Mexico and Canada. In 1983, the Macdonald Commission discussed the future of the Canadian economy through public hearings which were held throughout the country. It studied where the opportunities for job prospects might lie.

At the same time, the Ontario Economic Council produced a report by Mr. Harris and Mr. Cox which said that within Ontario there would be higher real incomes for Canadian labour and lower prices for many imported and domestically produced goods if we had a comprehensive trade agreement with the United States.

In 1984, however, the United States began to develop a trade deficit. This deficit developed for a multitude of reasons, including perhaps, an overvalued dollar. This, combined with a reduction in exports, caused protectionist Bills to spring up in the U.S. House of Representatives and Senate. This mood in the United States was increasingly threatening to Canada.

In January, 1985, the recently elected Conservative Government set forth three options for securing and enhancing access and export markets. The following month, the First Ministers met to discuss these options. One western Premier in particular, Peter Lougheed, was especially vocal in his support for a free trade deal.

In July, 1985, when the Macdonald Commission reported, its primary recommendation for economic policy was a comprehensive trade arrangement with the United States. This recommendation came from a group of people with the same political background as those who are now opposed to the deal.

Subsequently, the Prime Minister appointed a chief negotiator, Mr. Simon Reisman. The Premiers met to discuss provincial involvements during which there were several months of intensive negotiations. Throughout the course of negotiations, the Government consulted with advisory groups from various sectors of the economy. It met with industry representatives to discuss how particular tariff reductions would affect their industries. After numerous discussions and consultations, a comprehensive free trade agreement with the United States was made on October 3.

There have been a number of arguments against free trade presented in this House and elsewhere. Those arguments are wrong for a number of reasons, which I will outline later. Generally, though, they are wrong because they have neglected two factors.

First, those arguments neglect the fact that this is a trade agreement, not a political or cultural agreement.

Second, they do not recognize that this is a trade agreement which affects a number of sectors of the economy. The suggestions that our sovereignty will disappear or Canadians will no longer govern this country have extended the trade agreement to other spheres far beyond the scope of anything that this agreement does or contemplates doing. Those who say we will lose as a result of this deal have forgotten that this is one trade deal with one customer. We trade with other countries and hope to pursue liberalized trade with them in due course.

Let me give a brief outline of the basic aspects of this agreement which we signed with the United States. It is important to understand what underlies this agreement and how important it is to proceed without delay as has been suggested by this motion today. At the outset of the free trade talks, the Government stated clearly that a free trade agreement would be good for Canada or there would be no agreement. We have delivered on that commitment. On January 3, we will sign an agreement that is good for Canada.

Unlike the Opposition, our Government is not living in the past. We know that there is no status quo in the world trade environment, with rising protectionism in the United States and a changing world around us.

The events in the stock market last month demonstrated our vulnerability to world events. What happens in New York affects Toronto, Tokyo, Hong Kong, Zurich and London. We cannot insulate ourselves from the changing world around us. With today's information technology, business is conducted at paces never envisioned 25 years ago. Capital is moved around the world at the speed of light. In this environment, no country can shield itself behind a wall of protectionism and try to insulate itself from world forces. We cannot return to the days of 50 years ago when every small village and town had a bakery, butcher shop, livery barn and blacksmith shop. Today, we cannot insulate ourselves from continuing change and from moving ahead into the future.

Every recognized study of this issue has concluded that the free trade agreement will be positive for the Canadian economy. These studies include those by the Economic Council of Canada, the C. D. Howe Institute—generally believed to be more of a Liberal-thinking research institute—the Canada West Foundation, the Fraser Institute, various banks, professional groups, professors and universities. Every single study of which I am aware concludes that this would be positive for the Canadian economy. No one concludes otherwise. We can rest assured that there are people around who are prepared to pay for studies to come up with the conclusions they want, but even the Ontario Government's study which was released yesterday indicated that this agreement would be a positive thing for the Ontario economy. We all know it will be positive for the regional economies. We all know Quebec is on side and agrees it will be positive for Quebec. And these studies also conclude that it will be good for Ontario.

Our industries operate in world environments, energy, agriculture and high technology. In the things we do, we are among the best and the most efficient in the world. We already trade in international markets. So what are the implications of this agreement? There will be lower prices for consumers as tariffs come down. For consumers, tariffs are a tax. They are highest on food and clothing, the very things on which people with lower incomes spend most of their income. If those tariffs are taken away, the standard of living is automatically increased for every Canadian.

The Economic Council of Canada has suggested a 5 per cent increase in the standard of living of Canadians. The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has suggested that in terms of setting up a complete household, the savings would be in the order of $8,000 per household. A study was done some years ago on the potential impact of removing tariffs on the poor. The study concluded that the removal of tariffs could put 25 per cent of the people currently living below the poverty line above that line.

We will be exporting goods and services to the United States, not jobs. There will be increased foreign investment in Canada. The economy will become more specialized, more efficient and more productive. Canadian firms will move to the frontier of technology and our society will become more outward looking.

Many members have heard of the slogan of the anti-free traders 75 years ago: "No truck or trade with the Yankees".

Those who echo that slogan today are, to quote Marshall McLuhan, marching backward into the future. This agreement reflects the confidence and determination of those who have a vision of a big Canada, big in prospects, big in opportunities, big in competitiveness, productivity increases and research and development.

This agreement is consistent with other agreements in the world. The European Economic Community has a more far-reaching agreement than is envisaged here. When Britain was considering entering the EEC, the same kind of arguments were put forward, that somehow the agreement would diminish the status of England as a independent country, somehow it would be less independent. But, as we know, that is foolishness. Britain is still Britain, the Queen is still the Queen, and Maggie Thatcher is still the Prime Minister and just as tough as ever. Smaller countries in Europe which have entered into the agreement agree it has been of great benefit to them. One will find none of those countries today that would withdraw from the EEC. None of those countries would give up the benefits that that trading arrangement has given to them.

Between Australia and New Zealand there is a trading agreement. These are two countries with relatively the same population differential as between Canada and the United States. New Zealand has benefited greatly from that agreement. All the economic theory indicates that smaller countries have benefited more than the larger countries because the smaller countries are the ones gaining access to the larger market.

In Canada we have a trade agreement with the United States called the Auto Pact. It was signed in 1965 by Prime Minister Pearson without consultation of Parliament. The same people who opposed that agreement are opposed to this one. Yet that agreement can be cancelled by either side on six months' notice. It is now the darling of those who opposed it when it was first brought in. Today the people who are the greatest benefactors of that agreement, namely the auto workers' unions, lead the opposition to the free trade agreement.

The City of Oshawa is the home of General Motors in Canada and is represented by the Leader of the New Democratic Party, known also as the Member for General Motors, which was built with $4.6 billion of foreign investment. Premier Devine has said he wants to take all the mayors from all of the towns and cities in Saskatchewan to visit Oshawa. He wants them to see whether all that foreign investment would be as bad for Saskatchewan as it has been for Oshawa. He said that all he wants is $4.6 billion for all of Saskatchewan. He will stop there. He is not greedy. That will be enough.

The free trade debate is really about two views of Canada. The first view is that we should protect ourselves from a too competitive world by using the state to prop up the inefficient and the uncompetitive. The other view, one in which we believe, is of confidence in our ability to compete in the world as an outward-looking nation ready to take advantage of global opportunities. We firmly believe that Canadians will choose our vision of the future. Protectionism leads to depression and we must unite against that.

I want to examine for just a moment that other vision, the vision proposed by the Party putting forward the motion today that seeks to derail this agreement. I think it is worth while to consider for a moment the views of the New Democratic Party and, to a lesser degree, the views of the Liberal Party. Let us examine the New Democratic Party. On the national scene we have professors, high school teachers, community college lecturers, media types and so on. That is not meant to be negative about any of those people. We have plenty of them in the Conservative Party as well. But what the New Democratic Party does not have is balance. Those Members are long in the realm of ideas but short on experience. They have rarely managed anything, let alone an entire Government, yet profess to have the expertise necessary to tell all Canadians how to run their affairs. They do not have the confidence to trust Canadian initiative. They do not have the confidence in the ability of individual Canadians to compete in the world if they were just given the opportunity.

The NDP world is a world of ideas and commentary not the world of management. It wants to maintain the status quo. The NDP find solution in government intervention as a matter of first resort. That Party believes the free market should be interfered with whenever it threatens the present state of affairs. It spouts the clichés of outmoded protectionism. Protectionism is for those who have a small vision of Canada. The NDP is dominated by fear. It has neither confidence in itself nor a vision for Canada. New Democrats doubt their capacity to be Canadian without an artificial wall around them. They forget that trade has always been fundamental to our development as a nation, especially in western Canada.

I believe we must defeat this motion today. We must proceed with this agreement with dispatch. This motion would jeopardize the agreement that all of us from western Canada have worked so hard to get. I urge the House to defeat today's motion.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, as usual, I appreciated the comments of the Hon. Member and the tone in which they were delivered. I did not agree with much of what he said but I respect his right to make his opinions known.

I am perplexed about one area on which the Hon. Member spent a great deal of time, that is, the energy area and what the free trade deal will do to assist the Albertan economy. He quoted his ex-Premier, Peter Lougheed. When we are building our economy, particularly our manufacturing section, we look to see what our competitive advantage is. Some countries have very cheap labour costs and with other countries it is the whole elimination of environmental standards and health and safety standards, while in other countries, perhaps, it is the location, but we all try to maximize what advantage we have in terms of competing on the international markets. One thing that Alberta has that other parts of the country do not, of course, is ample and abundant energy sources, relatively inexpensive energy when it comes to importing from Saudi Arabia or Venezuela with respect to the petrochemical industries.

• (1600)

One of the advantages Alberta has always had is in the development of its petrochemical industry. Alberta could purchase feedstocks for that industry at a price lower than world price. This gave Alberta an obvious advantage because the critical raw material was there and it gave Albertans that extra leg up to develop and compete internationally. Albertans might be able to compete with a country where the cost of labour is significantly lower than Alberta's but the cost of energy is higher.

What we have done in this agreement is to lose our ability to price our feedstocks of oil and natural gas. They will be world price and the price will be the same whether it is Leduc, Red Deer or Dallas, Texas. I simply pose the rather hypothetical question to my friend but it will provide him with an opportunity to answer.

If he were a major investor, industrialist or a large business person who was going to invest in a major petrochemical plant locating it in Red Deer or in Amarillo, Texas and the cost of gas or oil, even if it were from Alberta, would be the same no matter where and he had a choice of locating it close to major American markets or way up in Canada, what would motivate the Hon. Member to open up that major petrochemical complex far away from markets in Canada if the price of feedstocks were exactly the same wherever he opened that plant?

Mr. Dorin: Mr. Speaker, one of the easiest ways to answer the Hon. Member's question is to tell him about the reaction of the petrochemical industry in Alberta to this agreement. It is one of welcome. For one thing, currently there are tariffs between 12 per cent and 18 per cent on petrochemicals being produced in Alberta going to the United States. We already have that 12 per cent to 18 per cent disadvantage. This agreement will remove those tariffs. Certainly there are choices and a variety of factors that come into being in the location of a plant.

Peter Lougheed has pointed out that Alberta has developed a petrochemical industry which was not there 15 or 20 years ago and it has developed it to a state of maturity where it can now sustain itself in world markets, if it can get access to those world markets without due restraint, such as the 12 per cent to 18 per cent tariffs. There is no doubt about that at all. The industry is ecstatic about this agreement. The industry will believe it will lead to an expansion of facilities, sales and more employment. That speaks volumes, more than any rhetoric or scare tactics.

The basic difference is philosophy. Our province and our Party believe that we can compete with market forces and we can do so very well. Let us not forget what we are talking about when we are talking about controlling prices. We are talking about the Government controlling prices, and the Government saying what the price will be and indirectly what the wage and what the return will be. We reject that philosophy. We believe the free market is the one that will serve us best.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin) who is quite an authority on the energy business in Alberta. He knows the devastating and damaging effect of the National Energy Program on his province. We now see a repeat with the New Democratic Party opposing free trade, which will deny western Canada tremendous wealth if we enter into a free trade agreement with the amount of energy that we have in reserve. We have some 680 years of energy reserves. We will not run out of energy. In fact, we had better start getting rid of the surplus gas and oil as quickly as possible because by the turn of the century there will be all kinds of other alternative sources of energy and there will not be the same need for all this gas.

A book written by Ron Graham quotes the ex-Liberal Energy Minister Marc Lalonde. It reads:

> For the first time Mr. Lalonde admits publicly that the purpose of the NEP was to prevent the west from growing too wealthy.

We know that the National Energy Program was introduced by the Liberal Party, fully, totally and completely supported by the NDP.

Mr. Manly: That is a lie.

Mr. Riis: That is a lie.

Mr. McKenzie: If that blow were not bad enough, the NDP is—

Mr. Riis: That is a lie.

Mr. McKenzie: The New Democrats are saying that Marc Lalonde is lying.

Mr. Riis: You are.

Mr. McKenzie: I challenge the New Democrats to challenge Marc Lalonde. I am quoting Marc Lalonde. I am not lying.

Mr. Riis: You are a liar.

Mr. McKenzie: Challenge the NDP. Go to Marc Lalonde.

Mr. Riis: You are a liar.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I want this man removed from the Chamber. He called me a liar. I am quoting what Mr. Lalonde said, not what I said.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) to withdraw his remarks.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, because of the parliamentary rules of the House and my respect for them I will reconsider the name that I have called my hon. friend because I think he was misleading the House by saying that the NDP supported the NEP in all its phases. He knows. He was here and he knows that is incorrect. Perhaps my calling him a liar was a bit out of line and I withdraw that comment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap.

Mr. McKenzie: The NDP might not have voted for all phases of the NEP, but the New Democrats voted for the majority of the phases.

Mr. Lalonde went on to say:

> Our proposal was to increase Ottawa's share appreciably, so that the share of the producing provinces would decline significantly and the industry's share would decline somewhat.

We know the devastating effects of the National Energy Program. Two banks collapsed because of it.

I am not an authority on energy—

Mr. Orlikow: Or on anything else.

Mr. McKenzie: —so I have to turn to people in the field who are authorities. I do not turn to the New Democrats to find out anything about energy or about anything else.

The Independent Petroleum Association of Canada presented figures on energy reserves. Let me quote them. We have 680 years of supply. These energy figures were quoted to Members of Parliament in November this year, and they are made up of two components; one, estimates of reserves that have been discovered, and two, estimates of the potential reserves that have not yet been discovered. This data was obtained by IPAC from the Canadian Petroleum Association.

Will we run out of energy if we sign this trade deal? Doesn't the Member think there is enough energy to go around with 680 years of supply? Is there a problem if the West goes into this trade deal? I think the West will become extremely wealthy if we enter into this trade deal and export all this surplus natural gas. I am sure the Hon. Member for Edmonton West, who is more associated with the industry than I am, could give us an explanation on the points that I have raised.

Mr. Dorin: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can briefly respond. As the Hon. Member has pointed out, there are ample studies, including the one to which he has referred, done recently by the standing committee of this House which has shown that there are large supplies of energy in Canada. There is no danger of our running out of energy.

The concern and the question is the price of that energy and whether or not a Government, as was done through the NEP, should impose a government price that robs producers and gives them half or less of what the product is worth. Producers should be entitled to a rate of return and a price that they can achieve in the market-place. We know what the answer is from our Party because we got rid of the NEP. In this agreement we are securing access to markets at market prices.

Maybe I could add one more point concerning the energy field. In Alberta we think of oil and natural gas. I spoke to a representative of a utility company which produces electric power from coal. He said to me that this agreement would be a great boon to them, because in Alberta we also have tremendous resources of coal. This agreement would allow them to produce electric power for export to the United States, and use those coal resources that are currently under utilized. Therefore, over and above the supplies of oil and natural gas, there are huge volumes of other energy which this agreement has the potential to tap, allow to be developed, and provide the jobs, income and growth that we are all seeking.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the United States-Canada trade deal, falsely called the free trade deal, has raised more serious issues for Canada than any other measures submitted to Parliament or the Canadian people since the Second World War. Yet despite that fact, we are asked to deal with it as if it were a minor piece of legislation.

The manner in which the Government is trying to ram this measure through Parliament and past the Canadian people is totally unacceptable and contrary to all our democratic traditions. Not only are we meeting a U.S. fast-track timetable, a timetable which was made in the United States, but also under that timetable we in the Canadian Parliament will have much less time to consider this deal than the United States Congress.

The impact of this deal will be much greater in Canada than in the United States. For example, 80 per cent of our foreign trade is in the United States, while only 25 per cent of the United States foreign trade is in Canada. Yet our Government has submitted to a fast-track schedule for dealing with this matter which is against our interest.

The other thing for which one has to have complete disgust is the fact that it provides the American Congress, which is less interested in the deal, with more time to consider the measure than the Canadian Parliament. Not only that, but we have not yet seen the legal text of this agreement. We will be asked to approve it next week.

When the 35 page document entitled Elements of the Agreement was tabled in the House a short while ago, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stated that we would have the legal text within three weeks. It is now 10 weeks, we are told that the legal text is finished, and we were told that we would have it today. We do not have it today. We are now told we may have it tomorrow, or perhaps we will have it on Monday. The House will adjourn on December 18, which is next Friday. We will be asked to debate, examine, and approve or reject this 1,200 page legal document in that short period of time.

Christmas and New Year's will come along and the break for the holidays, and the Prime Minister will sign the document on January 2. I do not know how anyone with any reason and intelligence can accept that something so important and with such far-reaching implications should be dealt with in such a summary manner.

I wish to refer to the United States system. Under the American Constitution treaties must be approved by the Congress, especially by the Senate. Under our Constitution in Canada, in law the Government need not submit a treaty to Parliament for its approval. The signature of the Government is sufficient to make that treaty legal. However, from time to time when something is divisive and controversial, and there appears to be a lack of consensus, Governments nevertheless have given Parliament a chance to examine the matter, debate it, and then decide on it. We know with the great majority of Conservatives in the House, that they will approve of it whether it is good or bad. But to deny the right to a full and complete examination and debate is totally unacceptable, as is stated in this resolution.

We are dealing with this free trade agreement which impacts on every aspect of our economic, social, and political life, and we are asked to do it in a summary way without having the total document. Compare that with the process we have with an ordinary Bill. The Bill is tabled for first reading, distributed, we all have a chance to look at it, then there is second reading debate, and a vote at the end of the second reading debate. The Bill is then sent to committee where witnesses are heard. The committee then sends it back to the House, there is a report stage with more debate and more possibility of amendment, and then there is a third reading debate and another vote. Then the Bill is sent to the Senate. Generally, those rules provide for a complete and thorough examination, but that is not happening with this so-called free trade agreement.

I can say as a member of the committee who examined the agreement—I hate to use the word "examined" because we were given only four weeks to examine with witnesses the Elements of the Agreement, two weeks in Ottawa and one day in each province and territory, except the Yukon—that at every meeting witnesses stated that they wanted more time to consider this. Even those who are in favour of free trade in principle stated that they had doubts, concerns, questions that they wanted answered, and they wanted more time. Not only professors and church people but business people came to the committee, such as people from the printing industry or the small printers in New Brunswick and the maritime provinces, and they wanted to look at the legal text of the deal to see how it impacted on their businesses. They were afraid that they would not have enough time to readjust their businesses to compete with large American firms. The demand for more time, more information, answers to questions, and concerns over what might and might not be covered were raised all over the country. Yet the Government is rushing this thing through as if it did not want us to know what is in it.

Why do we need more time? We need more time because this is a very complex, complicated deal which impacts on every phase of Canadian life, and seriously changes the type of country that we have. I know the members of the Government do not think that that is true, but many Canadians think it is true and they want time to look at this. Having been a member of that committee, I might say that when one reads something like this for the second, third, fourth and fifth time, one always sees something new. That is the benefit of a long debate and discussion. New individuals come to the committee with a new perspective that was not seen before. But that will not happen when it is rushed through in such a quick manner.

We are not dealing here with theoretical free trade. Some people are debating this issue as if we were at a university and discussing theoretical free trade or text book free trade. That is not what we are discussing. We are discussing the 35 page document, up to this moment the 35-page Elements of the Agreement signed between Canada and the United States on October 4. That is what we are discussing. Is that agreement a good or a bad agreement? We are not discussing theoretical free trade.

The Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin) stated that this is just a trade agreement. All the members of his Party have been saying that wherever we went. But it is not only a trade agreement; it has serious implications for our political system and for our social programs. It needs close examination because of that.

What is in the 35 pages? I keep referring to the 35 pages, but God knows what will be in the 1,200 pages. At the beginning they stated it would be exactly the same as what was in the 35 pages. Then there was renegotiation of the shipping parts, the transportation parts, and now we hear something about postal rates. We will have to wait until we finally see the legal text. What is in the deal in itself requires much more examination than it has had to date.

Let us take a look at some of the things contained in the deal. If we look at the provisions on energy, I do not know how government Members can state that this particular statement with respect to energy is nothing more than a trade statement. It states:

> There is broad agreement to assure the freest possible bilateral trade in energy, including non-discriminatory access for the United States to Canadian energy supplies . . .

• (1620)

If we look back at the political battle during the OPEC crisis in the seventies, if those were not political battles as well as economic battles, I do not know what political is. This is a sell-out of Canadian energy and resources to the United States. This is untrammeled access to Canadian energy supplies, or whatever it says. I just put it on record.

With respect to agriculture, our horticultural industry and many aspects of our farming industry are very, very upset and concerned about what it will do not only to the economics of the farming industry but to a way of life—the family farm which is already in danger.

Turning to the Auto Pact, they said that the Auto Pact would not be included. However, we now find in the Elements of the Agreement that the safeguards have been taken away. The agreement removes any ability of the Canadian Government in the future, as long as the agreement exists, to screen or to bar foreign investment, even investment which it thinks is not in the best interest of the country. It outlaws "buy Canada" policies or government procurement policies which favour our own industry. If that is not political, I do not know what is, especially as an instrument of regional economic development. For the first time in the world we are including services in a trade agreement between countries. It has never been done before.

It also includes financial institutions. It changes the nature in which we deal with our financial institutions and with our cultural industries. We find that mentioned in the deal. All these things require a lot more discussion and examination than they have already been given, and it is not being done.

What did we get in exchange for some of the things I have just mentioned that we gave up, such as total access to our energy and putting Canadian agriculture which has a tough winter to deal with in competition with California, Florida, and Arizona in the southern United States where they do not have winters and they have very low costs? What did we get in exchange?

We are lowering tariffs over a 10-year period so that we will bring them down to a zero level. However, 80 per cent of the products which go between Canada and the United States are now tariff-free. By the way, because of that Canada had a $20 billion trade surplus with the United States just before the agreement was signed.

Until we went begging to the United States for this special arrangement, most Americans did not even realize that we had that big surplus with them. They thought the principal bogyman was Japan and they were aiming all their darts and arrows at Japan. Now they know that Canada must be dealt with as well. Of course, as soon as they knew, they started hitting our shakes and shingles, softwood lumber, potash, and many other industries.

In exchange for giving up all the things to which I referred, we got a lowering of tariffs from 20 per cent where there are still tariffs applicable. The non-tariff barriers still remain and, in particular, the right of the United States to apply countervailing duties and anti-dumping measures against us. This seriously impedes our regional development programs.

In our hearings in Atlantic Canada we referred to the fact that the American Department of Commerce had decided that 12 federal programs geared to assist the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada were unfair subsidies subject to countervail in the United States. They were such things as fishing vessel assistance programs, agricultural and rural development agreements, economic and regional development agreements, fishing vessel insurance plans, industrial and regional development programs, and so on. In other words, the United States has reserved the right to countervail against programs, even programs that we in Canada might consider necessary to assist the lesser developed regions of the country. A lot more examination needs to be done in respect of those things in the deal.

What are the implications of the agreement for major matters not mentioned in the deal itself? Every time witnesses came to our committee and said that the Mulroney-Reagan deal undermined our sovereignty or restricted our political action, Conservative members of the committee would take out the Elements of the Agreement and say: "Where in here does it say that our sovereignty was threatened or undermined?" Of course it is not mentioned within the covers of this blue booklet. It is not mentioned there at all.

The same thing happened whenever witnesses would say that social programs, minimum wages, health and safety standards for workers, unemployment insurance, affirmative action, marketing boards, and environmental laws were threatened. Each time something like that was said, they would say: "Show it to us. Where does it say in this little blue book that those things are up for grabs?" Of course it does not say that in the little blue book, but it does not take much intelligence to conclude that when Canadian companies, which are subject to Canadian labour standards and to minimum wages and must pay check-offs for medicare and other things, compete with American companies, especially from "right to work" states in the south of the United States, they will have much higher costs in Canada and will not be able to compete.

This is exactly why the Grocery Products Manufacturers Association of Canada made representations to us. This is not the radical left. We heard from large companies. The President of Quaker Oats said that if we had to buy our raw material food products on the Canadian market, with all costs that are entailed, we would not be able to compete with American companies that can buy their products at much cheaper prices and with much cheaper overhead due to the fact that they have lower wages, lower social standards, and so on.

What happens when we have Canadian companies living in that regime and trying to compete with American companies? By the way, there has been a movement in United States manufacturing from the north to the south where those cheaper standards and lower standards exist. They even have—and it would take me a whole debate to get into it—this Mexican connection whereby American companies send products into Mexico to have them assembled at much cheaper rates and then send them back into Canada. In any case, what will happen is that there will be pressures to harmonize all our social and labour programs with those of the United States so that our Canadian companies will be able to compete, or Canadian companies will scale down their Canadian operations and open plants in the United States so that they can manufacture at a much lower cost and still import or export into the Canadian market.

I would like to quote what a prominent German businessman said about this matter at a seminar on free trade in Montreal last weekend. The former chief of loans for the Dresden Bank said that without a free trade deal Europeans were almost forced to invest in Canada to reach the Canadian market, but that free trade would allow them to serve Canada from plants in the United States. He went on to say: "I know that is not a friendly argument but it seems to be the truth. If larger European firms are given the option of locating a manufacturing plant in either Canada or the United States, they will almost by definition choose the United States because of such factors as transportation costs, taxation rates, market size, and labour laws".

There is a lot more testimony if somebody wants to read it before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade on that very same matter.

There is pressure to harmonize or go to the United States. By the way, if that happens, a Canadian company which owns a branch plant in the United States to serve Canada will still make big profits. However, the workers in its Canadian plant will suffer because they will be laid off.

In conclusion, let me say that for a long time the Liberal Party has been in favour of liberalized trade. As a matter of fact, since the Second World War there has been a progressive reduction in tariffs between Canada and the United States, mostly accomplished through multilateral and sectoral arrangements. In those 40 years, Canadian tariffs came down from an average of 21 per cent to 9 per cent. United States tariffs came down from 32 per cent to 6 per cent. Right now, 80 per cent of the products that move between Canada and the United States are without tariff. Only 20 per cent of the products have some kind of meaningful tariffs. Because of the soundness of Canadian business practices, we have a $20-billion surplus with the United States.

• (1630)

Tariffs and other barriers to trade can be lowered without giving away our energy supply, without destroying our agriculture and without giving up our political control. We did it before in the 40 years since the Second World War and we can do it again.

[Translation]

Mrs. Duplessis: Mr. Speaker, at this point in time when we just signed an agreement—the most important in this century—that will bring prosperity to all Canadians, men and women, and to all provinces, an agreement that will keep on ensuring prosperity across the land, I want to suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that having listened very carefully to the speech delivered by the Hon. Member from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), I would like to know what his position as a Quebecer is on energy matters, since Quebec's Premier welcomes this Agreement because of its impact on the economic development of the Province of Quebec, where energy is so vital.

[English]

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, that is a very easy question to deal with. We have not had a free trade deal for years and Quebec has been very successful with its energy and the export of its energy. We do not need this kind of deal to assist Quebec in the export of its electrical energy.

The problem with this deal is that in the opinion of many, and I admit it is divided opinion, this deal will prevent Quebec from having a two-price system under which it could charge lower prices for its own citizens or for industries as an incentive to establish in Quebec.

We all know that the aluminum industry in Quebec was established because of special deals between the electricity companies and the Government. According to Mr. Lougheed, the former Premier of Alberta, that kind of two-price system will no longer be possible even for electricity. If one price is charged in Canada, that is the price that will have to be charged in New York, Maine or New Hampshire. We will not be able to charge a high price down there and a lower price up here.

I will refer to the provisions of the deal again, because this is a very important question. I would ask the Hon. Member to look at the provisions in the document under energy where it refers to non-discriminatory access for the United States to Canadian energy supplies. Electricity is energy. It goes on to say that both sides have agreed to prohibit restrictions on imports or exports including quantitative restrictions, taxes, minimum import or export price requirements or any other equivalent measure subject to very limited exceptions. These exceptions include national security, times of war and short supply.

The point is that we will not be able to discriminate between sales made to Americans and sales made to Canadians or sales Hydro Quebec would make to an industry that would want to establish in Quebec. I think that that is a mistake.

I can understand Mr. Bourassa wanting to sell as much electricity to the United States as possible. I support that, but to accept this kind of agreement which ties his hands is another thing.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my hon. colleague about the manufacturing in Mexico to which he referred. If I have the figures correctly, I believe there are about 300,000 people in northern Mexico who work in plants that have been built by Americans. These people work at a very cheap rate of pay, 68 cents or 70 cents per hour American. These people will be able to make all kinds of products.

How does the Hon. Member, who was a member of the committee looking at the trade deal, see that affecting products produced here in Canada where there are higher transportation rates and climatic differences? Does he see this as being an attack on certain industries in Canada?

Today, there are decent wage rates and social benefits such as unemployment insurance in Canada. Does he see this as an attack on the social net within Canadian society itself? Is this an indication that this agreement will assimilate Canadians to the American way of life, to American attitudes and to American high-pressure business at the expense of Canadian labour and competition?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is referring to what we call the Maquiladora Corridor, a corridor along the Mexican-U.S. border in which approximately 300,000 Mexican workers are now working in plants assembling parts made in the United States at wage rates much below those they would be paid in the United States.

For example, blue jeans are being assembled for $1 per pair in Mexico, whereas it would cost $7 per pair in the United States. This is not happening only to things like jeans but to refrigerators, stoves, video machines and a whole host of consumer goods like that.

Not only will that system hurt Canadians under this deal but it is already hurting many American workers who worked in plants in the northern United States. The American attitude is not one of intervening to protect the workers in the same way we traditionally do in this country. They are letting these American companies get away with it.

The trade negotiations office says that these products will not qualify under the free trade agreement for export to Canada without tariff. How will we be able to tell if a radio or a washing machine coming into Canada with an American brand name of an American company situated in the mid-United States did not have some of its components made south of the border under these kinds of arrangements?

The trade office says that there will be Canadian inspectors roaming all over the United States looking behind the panels of these products to see where their components are made and asking questions. With the deregulation in the United States and Canada and with the cut-backs in inspectors, I do not know how that will happen. Will there be massive armies of inspectors roaming all over the United States checking out these goods?

In any case, there is some dispute about this particular matter raised by my hon. colleague, and it is for this reason that these things should be given much more time. We should not rush through this debate in a few days. We should be holding hearings at least as long as the American Congress which, it seems, will hold hearings until next September. It does not even want to look at the deal in an official way until June.

Here we are, closing the whole debate next week sometime, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will sign it on January 2. That is it for us. The American Congress will have time to look at all these things. We will not.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Harvey) for a last question.

Mr. Harvey: Mr. Speaker, I listened closely to the Hon. Member's contribution and it is my view that if there were a vaccine against exaggeration and inconsistency, it would now be in short supply in Canada because of the Liberal Party. One day the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) supports the principle, and the next day he is against it. They bring in all sorts of qualifications. They talk about regional economic development and say that some programs would be cut, reduced. If there is one party, Mr. Speaker, if there is one Government that has cared about regional development over the last three years it is this Government, especially in Quebec with the number of sectoral agreements that were signed in key industries with our economic development in mind. I will spare you the list.

They talk about jobs. They talk about lost jobs, although the Economic Council of Canada and the Macdonald Commission—whose chairman, by the way, was not that much of a Conservative—made recommendations and reported very positive findings in that respect. Concerning the whole cultural aspect, Mr. Macdonald suggested among other things that whatever relates to popular culture is exempted from the provisions of the agreement. On the whole, Mr. Speaker, this issue may give rise to a high level of demagogy with reference to this theme which is a part of the history of this country.

The Premier of Quebec and his predecessor on a number of occasions have given unconditional support to this day to the free trade agreeement with the United States, especially as far as Quebec's interest is concerned. That deal will allow for significant economic renewal over the forthcoming decades. I would therefore simply ask the Hon. Member for his view, for his opinion on Mr. Bourassa's support for that Canada-U.S. free trade agreement between Canada and the United States.

• (1640)

[English]

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I personally believe that Mr. Bourassa gave his approval to this agreement too quickly. It is interesting to note how his Minister of Agriculture, in attending the meeting of l'Union des producteurs du Québec began to hedge on this matter. It is also interesting to note that we had only one day of hearings in Quebec. We did not go to Quebec City, Lac-Saint-Jean, the Abitibi, or the Gaspé, just Montreal.

The eight groups that appeared before us in Montreal were divided. Four were opposed and four were in favour. Yet even those in favour had conditions. They had doubts in their minds. What we are discussing today is a motion by the NDP which says we are going at this thing too quickly. If the agreement is good, it will stand up to intensive scrutiny over a period of time. The problem is that we are rushing at it too quickly. The Hon. Member does not have the legal text, and neither do I. Perhaps the Cabinet and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) have it, but neither of us know what is in the legal text. If the agreement is as good as he says it is, let us spend at least as much time as the U.S. and really test it. Let us hear everybody.

It was only today that the Auto Parts Manufacturers Association said it is now opposing the agreement. It took that group this long and there are others that will take that long.

The Hon. Member referred to the Macdonald Commission and the Economic Council. Their studies were made before the agreement was concluded. They were done on a theoretical free trade model, not on this agreement. I repeat over and over again that we are discussing this agreement. Mitchell Sharp, a former Liberal cabinet Minister, said he was a free trader but is against this agreement. So is Eric Kierans. It is not a question of whether you are for or against textbook free trade, it is this agreement which is at issue.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to take part in this debate on the motion put forward by my Leader condemning the Government for rushing this trade deal through. Bishop De Roo of the Roman Catholic Church spoke of what he called the secretive fast-track deal the Government is rushing through. We are rushing it through on an American timetable which the Americans themselves are not going to follow. They have set the agenda, we are following it, and they are not going to follow it themselves.

The agenda does not leave adequate time for the people or Parliament of Canada to look at the agreement and see what is in it for them and what we are giving up. It does not allow us to engage in an important debate. President Reagan spoke of this as a new economic constitution for North America and we in this House should be able to look at the fine print and have the time to debate it. The committee should have the time to hear witnesses who have had time to study the document. The committee should not hold farcical hearings across the country where the witnesses have not had the final text to study. It spent a day in each province hearing from eight or 10 different organizations. The whole process from beginning to end has been a complete farce.

Horace Walpole once said this world is a comedy to those who think and a tragedy to those who feel. No doubt there are some who have no feeling for Canada as a nation. If they stand back and look objectively at what the Government has done, they should be able to appreciate the farcical nature of what is happening. For those of us who care about Canada, who have a sense of Canada as a nation in which we grew up and in which we want our children to grow up, a nation where we see a future, then this deal is a tragedy. The process is a tragedy and has to be condemned as such.

The process goes back to at least 1983 when the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was seeking the leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party. At that time another person seeking to be the Leader, the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), put forward a proposal for a comprehensive partnership with the U.S. When the present Prime Minister was asked what he thought about that proposal he said: "Canadians rejected free trade with the U.S. in 1911. They would do so again in 1983. Canada must increase its share of total world trade which has dropped by 33 per cent in the past two decades". I am quoting from Maclean's magazine of June 13, 1983.

The present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clarke), who was involved in the trade discussions, said: "Unrestrained free trade with the U.S. raises the possibility that thousands of jobs could be lost in such critical industries as textiles, furniture and footwear. Before we jump on the bandwagon of continentalism we should strengthen our industrial structures so that we are more competitive." The Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) said: "It's silly. Canada must improve relations and trade with the U.S., of course, but our natural destiny is to become a global leader, not America's weak sister". The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said: "Bilateral free trade with the U.S. is simplistic and naive. It would only serve to further diminish our ability to compete internationally".

We need to ask why these four people, all very influential in the present Cabinet, were opposed to free trade in 1983, and why they are attempting to foist off this trade deal on the Canadian people in 1987. If, as the Prime Minister said four years ago, Canadians would reject this deal, then why try to impose it on Canadians now?

I suggest one of the reasons they opposed it in 1983 was because there was still a substantial number of members of the Conservative Party who had some allegiance to the Diefenbaker heritage. Whatever faults John Diefenbaker had, at least he had a vision of Canada that went beyond Canada being just a branch plant of the U.S. I would like to read from his last speech as Prime Minister on February 5, 1963. He said at page 3441 of Hansard:

> Somebody said to me that if I take this stand then we are going to suffer danger in Canada, damage to Canada, and that we are going to do harm to Canada's economic strength. I do not accept that argument. It is an unworthy one.
> —I cannot accept the fears of those who believe we must be subservient in order to be a good ally of any country in the world.
> Macdonald fought this battle. The great merchants in the city of Montreal, in those days—not the French Canadians—had their views on this subject, that after all Canada would be that much stronger if it were joined with the United States. That was not Macdonald's view. That idea comes in with almost every generation.
> I say this, Mr. Speaker. We are influenced in this way every day in our country on radio, television and in the press. When the leader of the United States speaks, we get it in detail over our television . . . .When I hear some saying that the fact that one dares to speak out will endanger Canada's economy, I wonder what the future of this country would be if those who have such fears and those who are of little faith held office in our country.

> I believe in co-operation, in the closest co-operation, but not in the absorption of our viewpoint by any other nation. I believe in the maintenance in spirit and in fact of Canada's identity, with the right to determine her own policy without extramural assistance in determining that policy.

● (1650)

That was John Diefenbaker in 1963. It was that legacy to which the present Prime Minister felt he had to appeal when he was seeking to be the Leader of the Conservative Party. It is that legacy which he is betraying right now. The first people who were betrayed by this free trade deal were the members of the Conservative Party to whom the Prime Minister made commitments in 1983.

During the election campaign in 1984 the Prime Minister did not travel across Canada saying that he was going to strike a trade deal with Ronald Reagan. Instead, he talked about fair and honest government, open government. He spoke about the pork-barrel patronage that we had seen and were all fed up with. We have not seen open, honest government free from patronage. Instead, there has been a continuation of that and, in addition, the betrayal that is represented by the free trade deal which the Government is presently trying to push upon us.

Following the election in 1984 the Prime Minister proceeded to bring Canadian law into compliance with the desires of American business interests. Instead of a relationship of mutual friendship and respect there was a fawning subservience to the power of United States business. We saw the gutting of FIRA, the doing away with the National Energy Program, and the elimination, through Bill C-22, of decent pharmaceutical laws which allowed the production of low-cost generic drugs in order to satisfy the American pharmaceutical industry.

The Government allowed U.S. business to move into areas which it said it was going to protect. It allowed Gulf and Western to take over Prentice Hall book publishing. It is allowing Amoco to take over Dome Petroleum. All the time that we are making these concessions the United States is moving against vital Canadian industries. Yet the Prime Minister does nothing but smile and put his arm around President Reagan and sing with him.

While we were moving toward the trade deal the United States was trying to stake out an ever-wider territory in Canadian business. We saw the imposition of a 35 per cent countervail on shakes and shingles. The Government tried to maintain the other day that that had no real effect. However, Mr. Scott Clarke, a representative of the Independent Shake and Shingle Producers Association of British Columbia, appeared before the standing committee studying the trade deal last month. He supported the deal, yet he said:

> As you are all aware, our industry was hit with a 35 per cent tariff on June 6, 1986. Prior to that date, our industry was a free trader. Since the inception of the tariff, our industry has seen curtailment in production, loss of jobs, and an increased failure rate among producers. In addition, some of my family's operations, along with our fellow competitors', have been forced to close down in Canada and relocate in the U.S.

Later, when asked, Mr. Clarke estimated that approximately 1,000 jobs had been lost in the Canadian shake and shingle industry because of that 35 per cent tariff.

We saw a 15 per cent countervail imposed on Canadian softwood lumber which was later changed to a 15 per cent export tax. In order to change that export tax we have to get the permission of the United States. We surrendered our sovereignty on that issue. Because of that John Sereny, the President of Green Forest Lumber Corporation of Toronto, one of Canada's largest lumber wholesalers said:

> It is cheaper to bring lumber to the Ontario market from the U.S. west coast than to buy the product from British Columbia.

That is what that 15 per cent countervail converted to a 15 per cent export tax has done to our lumber processing.

An 85 per cent tariff has been placed on potash. A 6 per cent tariff has been placed on Atlantic groundfish. All of this is taking place while the Prime Minister is talking about his great friendship with President Reagan. He was negotiating the free trade deal with what he might call good faith but what Canadians who look at it with some objectivity would call naive simplicity, or perhaps naive complicity, while the United States was pushing us for every possible advantage.

If I were going to preach on this issue I would take the text from the Book of Jeremiah, the second chapter, in which Jeremiah describes the nation of Israel as "A wild ass used to the wilderness, in her heat sniffing the wind! Who can restrain her lust? None who seek her need weary themselves".

The lust of the Prime Minister to get a free trade deal is like a wild ass in heat sniffing the east wind, as Jeremiah said. The way the Government has made one concession after another is absolutely obscene. "Open for business" is the way the Government has described it. "Canada is available" is what the Prime Minister is actually saying.

In the meantime the Americans appealed to the GATT over Canadian export restrictions on unprocessed salmon or herring. This directly affects the jobs of 4,000 to 6,000 shore workers in British Columbia. It affects several small communities in British Columbia which depend upon fish processing plants. Last month the preliminary decision of the GATT panel came down and it went against Canada. The final decision has not yet been made. It will probably be made early in the new year.

We know that of 52 decisions made by GATT panels 45 have been accepted, five have been dropped by mutual consent, and only two have been overturned by a full meeting of the GATT. Therefore, we do not have a great deal of confidence that, having lost the early appeal to the GATT panel, we will succeed before the larger meeting.

In the past Canada had the right either to accept or reject a GATT decision. As we have a lot of regard for GATT and believe in that kind of process we have usually accepted GATT decisions. However, this decision, which prohibits Canada from putting restrictions on the export of unprocessed herring or salmon, erodes our basic right to shape our own economy. It erodes our sovereignty. It takes away from our right as a nation to control our own economy. It is something we cannot accept. It is something we must reject.

Unfortunately, the preliminary draft of the free trade deal makes this impossible. I quote from page 11 as follows:

> Both Parties have agreed they will not maintain or introduce import or export restrictions except in accordance with the GATT, or as modified by the Agreement.

We have given away the opportunity to accept or reject GATT decisions. We are now bound, by this agreement with the United States, to accept GATT decisions.

It is important to look at the nature of shore workers. They have a highly seasonal type of work. At times they work long and unpredictable hours, at times they work a lot of overtime, and at times they work only a few hours a day. Seventy per cent of the shore workers in British Columbia are women. Due to a whole series of struggles that they along with other people in the fishing industry have experienced, they are highly unionized and have a decent wage. In 1983, the average wage was $11.94 an hour.

• (1700)

Yet because of the short work year, where they work concentrated hours in a few months, the average income for women is between $8,400 and $13,900, or between $11,400 and $20,000 for men. These shore workers are asking why their jobs were not protected in the trade negotiations. Why are they thrown overboard to the American sharks that want to come in to take their fish, leaving them without their jobs and their communities high and dry?

The Government should have insisted that the United States withdraw this appeal to GATT before it went any further with the trade negotiations. A primary consideration should have been to protect the jobs we already have.

Not only did the Government not ask strongly enough to have this withdrawn, it allowed an agreement that confirms this GATT decision and takes away Canada's right to reject it.

Part of Newfoundland's hesitancy in supporting the free trade deal was that it traditionally had the right to insist on the processing of fish before they are exported from Newfoundland. Newfoundland insisted on having that right protected. That right was confirmed for Atlantic Canada when the Government was involved in developing the final text, which none of us have seen yet. Now Atlantic provinces can continue to have restrictions that would prevent the export of unprocessed fish.

However, we have a Premier in British Columbia who was standing on the sidelines and cheering the trade deal as the greatest thing since sliced bread. He either did not take the time to look at what is involved in the agreement as far as British Columbia workers were concerned or did not care. As a result, we have a situation in which Atlantic workers are given some protection and British Columbia workers are thrown overboard to the sharks. Fish will be processed in Seattle or Bellingham by non union workers. What kind of level playing field is that?

I understand that companies will be insisting on a level playing field. What about a level playing field for the workers?

In conclusion, let me just say that before Atlantic fishing communities give their support to this agreement they should look at the effects of that 6 per cent countervail.

On page 21 of the Elements of the Agreement dealing with the dispute settling process, it states that the panel:

> ... would review, based upon the administrative record, final AD/CVD orders to determine if an investigative authority of either Party made a decision not in accordance with its law (including statutes, legislative history, regulations, administrative practice and judicial precedent).

This panel has to look at the whole history, at the precedents and previous practice. In the decision that was handed down in Atlantic Canada, there were over 50 different federal or provincial programs that were declared to be unfair subsidies. These are now enshrined in this agreement as part of the material that any panel involved in the dispute settling mechanism will consider. The ARDA Program, transitional programs, economic regional development programs, interest-free loans, over 50 different federal or provincial programs that are named in this countervail will be part of that history. They are enshrined in this agreement as something the Americans can continue to appeal as being an unfair subsidy.

This has been a flawed process. A bad process does not lead to a good agreement. It was a secretive and fast-track approach. We are working on the United States agenda rather than developing it in terms of our own agenda and our own needs. The Prime Minister is following the American agenda, which is not in the interest of the Canadian people. I urge government Members to listen to their constituents who are unhappy and confused about this agreement. They are unhappy about the way it is being rushed through without giving due process so that different segments of the Canadian society can examine it and have an impartial say. I urge that the whole process be slowed down.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I wish to comment on the Hon. Member's speech. This afternoon it was mentioned in the House that Mexico will be able to ship cheap goods to Canada. We heard comments about the climate and cheap labour in Mexico.

This question was raised at one of the committee meetings which had been held across the country, and was responded to immediately. Gordon Ritchie, Ambassador and Deputy Chief Negotiator, wrote to the Hon. Member for Guelph (Mr. Winegard), who is the Chairman of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade. He explained to him fully that there is no way Mexico will be able to ship cheap goods to this country. I will provide a copy of the letter to the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins).

I have been a Member of Parliament for 15 years. There is no way that any Member of Parliament will be an authority on all subjects. One must do research and listen to the experts.

In November, 1982, the then Liberal Government appointed a royal commission to study the economic union and development prospects for Canada. Three years and $24 million later, the Macdonald Commission presented its report which overwhelmingly recommended that Canada pursue free trade with the United States. The New Democratic Party is suggesting that these people are wrong and do not know what they are talking. That is absolutely ridiculous.

In March, 1974, the Liberal dominated Senate standing committee on foreign affairs was appointed to study Canada-U.S. relations. Eight years and over 100 witnesses later, the committee presented its report which overwhelmingly recommended that Canada pursue free trade with the United States.

Members opposite talk about plunging into this agreement. That is simply not the case. It will be phased in over 10 years.

If members of the NDP are correct in saying that this is a terrible and disastrous deal, I do not understand why the Canadian Manufacturers' Association would be supporting free trade. They are the ones who will be affected and know more about it than I or, especially, the NDP.

In the November 1987 issue of The Canadian Manufacturer, the President of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, Mr. J. Laurent Thibault, stated:

> The CMA supports the agreement and will continue to work closely with the federal Government to further improve the relationship with our most important trading partner.

He further stated:

> It offers the opportunity of continued increases in our standard of living while removing many historical tensions between western and central Canada. Canadian consumers will be clear beneficiaries through lower prices and increased choice of goods.

These are responsible people who are in the business. They know what they are doing. Therefore, I will listen to them and support free trade. If we had received a document from the CMA saying it is going to be a complete and total disaster, I would have great difficulty in supporting this free trade proposal.

• (1710)

Mr. John Bulloch, a very responsible Canadian and businessman, has great knowledge of business affairs in this country. He is the President of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. He stated recently that securing access to the United States market is essential to the long-term viability of Canada as a participant in a fundamentally changing world economy. This idea that we are going to sit still and do nothing is not going to work.

While appearing before the House of Commons Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade on November 3, 1987, Mr. Bulloch said that the main interest of small business in the trade deal is the removal of tariffs and non-tariff barriers. That will be done over a 10 year period. He questioned his membership of 41,789 owners of small and medium-sized businesses, and the result was five to one in favour. Am I going to tell Mr. Bulloch he does not know what he is talking about? Am I to believe that these 40,000 business people are all wet, that they do not know what they are talking about? That is just absolutely ridiculous. More than five to one predicted the impact would be either positive or neutral. Mr. Bulloch pointed out all the reasons why it will benefit Canadian business. If it is going to benefit Canadian businesses, manufacturers and all the rest, it is going to be creating more employment.

I will listen to the experts. I am afraid I cannot accept the arguments that I have heard from the New Democratic Party today.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I have just a brief comment in response to the Hon. Member. First, he should know, as we all do, that some industries have expressed real concern about this agreement. As far as the Canadian Manufacturers' Association being in support, is concerned, it might be good for the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. What I was saying is that it is not good for Canadian workers. It is not good for the shore workers of British Columbia. It will not be good for the fisheries workers of Atlantic Canada. We can look at a number of industries right across Canada and find the same thing.

The Hon. Member for Yellowhead said in 1983 that it was not going to be good for textile and furniture workers. I would like to read from the well-known Conservative George Grant who wrote Lament for a Nation. He said:

> Capitalism is, after all, a way of life based on the principle that the most important activity is profit-making. That activity led the wealthy in the direction of continentalism. They lost nothing essential to the principle of their lives in losing their country. It is this very fact that has made capitalism the great solvent of all tradition in the modern era. When everything is made relative to profit making, all traditions of virtue are dissolved, including that aspect of virtue known as love of country.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, I have a very brief comment with respect to the attitude the New Democratic Party assumes, which is virtually anti-American. I would like the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) to really put his case forward as to whether or not he feels we can compete with the Americans. I think if he really sat down and studied the Province of British Columbia, he would realize that the reason the 15 per cent export tax was placed on softwood lumber is that we were much too competitive for the Americans. The industry in the United States took action against our Canadian industry.

The Hon. Member spoke of Scott Clarke from Scott's Cedar Products. He cited the fact that there was an adjustment due to the 35 per cent tariff on shakes and shingles. He read from

Mr. Clarke's delivery before the standing committee, but he left out the fact that in the final analysis, Mr. Clarke, like everyone in the shake and shingle industry in British Columbia, whether cutting blocks or bolts or running saw mills, advocates and supports 100 per cent a free trade initiative with the United States of America.

I think it is important that this be brought to light. I would like the Hon. Member to comment on Mr. Clarke's position. I would also like to point out to the Hon. Member that in a forum at which I was present in Vancouver with the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), a Mr. Bentley, who is head of Canadian Forest Products in the Province of British Columbia, clearly enunciated to the forum, to all British Columbians and to all Canadians that had we had the free trade arrangement in place, he felt there would be no 15 per cent export tax on lumber today because it would have been circumvented by that very agreement.

In conclusion, the Hon. Member cites the case of the B.C. shore workers. We are concerned about them as well. However, I think he is prejudging the situation. I have not seen the final draft, nor has he. Let us wait for the final draft on that particular issue.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, beginning with the Hon. Member's last comment about waiting until we have the final draft, the very point we are making over and over again is that the final draft has been delayed so long that the people of Canada are not going to have a chance to examine it in any kind of detail before the Prime Minister has signed away Canada's future. That is what we are concerned about.

The Hon. Member asked the question, can Canada compete? Well, I think any theory of free trade depends upon the concept of comparative advantage. Different countries will each do what they can do best. The question is, who decides what one country can do best? I believe it is the responsibility of the Government of a country to have some say over the economy of that country and to help to shape that economy.

Mr. St. Germain: That is socialism in its extreme form.

Mr. Manly: That is not socialism. That is the sort of thing that is happening in Japan. That is what Sir John A. Macdonald wanted to do. He felt there should be a national policy. If that is socialism, we will baptize Sir John A. Macdonald and take him over here into the New Democratic Party and the Conservatives can forswear him. They have already forsworn his heritage of Canadianism. If the Hon. Member wants to say that Sir John A. Macdonald's policy is socialism, he can go ahead.

The problem with this trade agreement is that we are giving away our ability to shape our own economy. We are giving away our control over our energy resources. We are giving away our control over our fisheries resources. We are surrendering the comparative advantage that would allow the Government to make basic decisions about the strengths of this country. If we surrender everything in advance, as this Government has done with the Americans, it is going to be very difficult to compete. If we are going to make all the concessions in advance, we are not going to be able to compete.

Finally, the Hon. Member commented on my statements regarding Mr. Clarke. I have made it very clear that Mr. Clarke was a witness who was in favour of the trade agreement. If the Hon. Member checks my remarks, I think he will find that. As for Mr. Bentley, the Head of Canadian Forest Products, I worked for him as head of Canadian Forest Products a few years ago. I did not have any great regard for the kind of attitude he had towards his workers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne).

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in a debate that is so important because we are talking about the question of free trade and the history-making agreement that has just been concluded by our Government and the United States. It is perhaps not so important if we consider the substance of the motion presented by the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, from the very beginning the New Democratic Party systematically opposed a free trade agreement with the Americans, without even knowing what the Agreement contained or the whys and wherefores. It was simply because their union leader, a Mr. Bob White, had said they were not going to support it. It was mainly because Mr. Bob White, who happens to be a personal friend of Mr. Broadbent, decided that free trade would not be a good thing for Canadians. They conveniently forgot one thing, Mr. Speaker. The Auto Pact is probably the best example of free trade with the Americans we did not have to sell in Canada, and it has been of particular benefit to the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), although he doesn't mention that, Mr. Speaker. He is not rising in the House to say there has already been a kind of free trade agreement with the Americans. When I hear NDP Members deny it is a free trade agreement when automobile parts circulate freely without tariff barriers, I wonder what it is, Mr. Speaker.

Before going any further, I would like to let Canadians who are listening know what the Opposition Parties are and what they stand for. I have some quotes I intend to use. I am quoting from Hansard of February 24, 1972, when the former Minister of Finance, today the Leader of the Official Opposition and Leader of the Liberal Party (Mr. Turner), said:

> The division of the world into large trading blocs, to which I referred a few moments ago, presents particular dangers to Canada as a major trading nation and one of the few industrialized countries without free access to a market of 100 million people or more.
> We in this country must now use what influence we can bring to bear to press for a resumption of the postwar movement toward greater liberalization of international trade. The dangerous alternative would be a move backward > toward greater protectionism. This alternative would present a serious threat to our economy . . .

And a little further, Mr. Speaker, and I quote:

> . . . there still remain out-standing issues involving bilateral trade relationships between Canada and the United States.
> . . . we remain hopeful that a number of these issues between us can be resolved to the mutual benefit of both countries.

Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition said that in 1972.

In January 1986, however, he changed his position. He said, for instance, that he felt it would be very dangerous to isolate ourselves from the rest of the world through bilateral negotiations with the United States. In 1972 he said the exact opposite.

In fact, he went on to say in the same speech that we should start talks with the United States and see how we could expand access to our respective markets.

Mr. Speaker, this is inconsistency in its purest form. It is particularly apparent from what the Leader of the Official Opposition says when asked for the Liberal Party's position on this issue. One minute he says he would like to tear up the Agreement and the next that maybe we should see whether we cannot reach an agreement of some kind. That is the typical Liberal position, Mr. Speaker. Clear as mud.

And now back to our NDP friends. Mr. Speaker, as you know, the New Democratic Party has always been opposed to free trade. Why? In 1970, the Leader of the New Democratic Party wrote in his book, The Liberal Rip-Off, and I quote: "In my view, we should gradually get rid of that moral fantasy we call capitalism." He goes on to say: "Free will and free enterprise are all part of the same myth."

Mr. Speaker, that is a pretty clear statement of the philosophy of the New Democratic Party and how it applies to the development of our businesses, job creation by the private sector, and the production mechanisms developed by the private sector. Mr. Speaker, to them it is worthless. Absolutely worthless. They want no part of it. They do not want Canadians to make their own business decisions. They do not want Canadians to be so productive and ingenious and competitive that they can take an active part in our economic growth, create jobs and finally Mr. Speaker, take their rightful place on international markets. Mr. Speaker, the position of the NDP is this: no to capitalism, no to private enterprise, and yes to trade unionism. The New Democrats would nationalize everything. If they did, who do they think would want to invest in Canada? Could they tell me for what possible reason a Canadian with no say in such a policy would want to invest in Canada for the sheer satisfaction as a Canadian of creating jobs, of making sure that Canada progresses and the unemployment rate in this country remains at a more acceptable level, compared to the 15 or 18 per cent it reached under the Liberals. Such is the policy of the New Democratic Party.

Before considering the pros and cons of the free trade issue, one must consider who are those opposed to it, what they do, what they have done and what they would be likely to do if they were in a position of power as the Government having to deal with this issue. We are dealing here today with one of our Government's initiative. In 1984, the Prime Minister announced that he was firmly committed to creating permanent jobs and putting an end to protectionism which, by the way, is causing the financial situation to deteriorate even further.

When we look at the Opposition parties who are dead set against free trade, we get the impression that they do not realize that Canada is a net exporter in need of foreign markets to thrive, whose economic activity must expand far beyond its frontiers to preserve existing jobs, to ensure technological progress and to go forward with new concepts and new investments.

Mr. Speaker, when we look at our Canadian exports, we realize that 80 per cent of those going to the United States benefit from a free trade situation. Both opposition parties are saying: We must not deal with the Americans. Absolutely not! They are going to invade us, they will deprive us of our cultural sovereignty and as individuals, of our Canadian identity. They will abolish the Auto Pact. They will pass all kinds of protectionist measures against us. They will have us scrap our marketing systems for farm products.

Mr. Speaker, I think that both Opposition parties are inconsistent when they say such things, because if we look at the mechanism provided for in the trade agreement, we see that from the very start we have set up a committee. We have set up a committee on free trade and both parties opposite have been asked to take part in those proceedings. We asked the Liberal Party and the NDP to sit with us. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to Canadians that both parties systematically refused to sit with us, to discuss the problems which could have raised some concerns and which they could have pointed out. They would rather go before the public and say all sorts of things without knowing what they are talking about and so today Canadians are undecided about the advantages and disadvantages of free trade since they were never implied at that level.

Mr. Speaker, at the very start, we set up a trade negotiations office made up of experienced men and women who were asked to organize and carry out the negotiations. Afterwards, we set up with the provinces a standing committee on negotiations whose purpose was to hold briefings with provincial trade representives. We met practically every month. We also met regularly with the Advisory Committee on International Trade chaired by Walter Light as well as with 15 other advisory groups representing the entire Canadian industrial community.

We have done our utmost to keep them informed about any progress and have asked them their views on matters which more directly concerned them.

When those mechanisms were set up, Mr. Speaker, our negotiators initiated the talks and this was in May 1986.

• (1730)

There were 28 official sessions, some of which lasted more than a week, as well as many sessions of detailed negotiations with task forces responsible for specific sectors and problems. That is what really happened, Mr. Speaker. And to demonstrate how desirable it was that these important talks should rise above the level of partisan debate, we invited, I repeat, we invited both Opposition Parties to come and sit down and discuss the issues with us, but they consistently refused. Mr. Speaker, how could we possibly have a debate that to Opposition Members would be an open and honest debate, a debate that would be good for Canadians, when they refused to participate in a process, when they refused to bring their queries to the negotiators, to raise points of particular concern, points that, to a certain extent, might jeopardize our economy and constitute some kind of danger for Canadians? Mr. Speaker, the Liberals and the New Democrats refused to take part in this process with us, as a normal part of the negotiations. We heard the Liberal Leader say: I will tear up the Agreement. That is really smart. That is typical of the rough reasoning of the Liberal Party. He does not want to negotiate, and he is ready to tear up the Agreement.

We saw the Leader of the New Democratic Party say: It is unacceptable. He even wanted to tell the Premier of Quebec what to do about electric power sales. He wanted to tell him what to do. And he calls that democracy. This morning, I heard the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) say the Canadian Government was not democratic because it wanted to conclude this Free Trade Agreement. Mr. Speaker, what is democracy? When six provinces are in favour of free trade, including Quebec, and when the two Opposition Leaders, the two Opposition Parties keep saying the Agreement is no good— Mr. Speaker, I do not think democracy is a one-way street. And when the Canadian public—48 per cent, according to one poll, is satisfied with the Agreement; Mr. Speaker, 62 per cent of Canadians think that the Free Trade Agreement would be a good thing for their province! Of course it does not work out 100 per cent, there is nothing absolute. Still, Mr. Speaker, it is a show of democracy on the part of a Government that promised to create permanent jobs, promised to get involved, promised to do something other than voice pious wishes. There are risks involved, Mr. Speaker, huge risks as we saw last March 16 when a motion was introduced in the House because indeed perhaps there were problems related to the free trade deal or the free trade negotiations. At the time, Mr. Speaker, the House considered a motion which can be summed up in these words: That Canada and the Canadian Government support bilateral negotiations with the Americans. However, we will protect our social programs, our cultural identity, our farm products marketing boards, and the Auto Pact.

But here is the strangest thing: The motion was moved by our Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) and was tabled, then the vote began. Of course the Party in office rose to vote because it was altogether logical and reasonable to protect what the various advisory groups had asked us to protect. Well, both Opposition Parties refused to vote on that. They voted against. They voted against preserving our cultural identity. They voted against maintaining social programs. They voted against keeping our farm products marketing boards. They voted against keeping the Auto Pact. And since then, Mr. Speaker, we have seen them repeating around the country: It is dangerous for the auto pact, for farmers, for our social programs, for our cultural identity. But where is the logic in all that, Mr. Speaker? Where is the logic of a Party that refuses to support a Government motion saying those areas are protected, but while it claims on the other hand the agreement offers no such protection? Mr. Speaker, the Government has a much more consistent and logical approach on a bilateral agreement than the two Opposition Parties, and I can tell Canadians the motion of March 16 is directly reflected in the agreement documents. It is reflected in the agreement because that was the wish of the Canadian people.

All day long the New Democrats and the Liberals have been saying the free trade agreement is jeopardizing social programs. This is quite untrue, Mr. Speaker. The best proof would be to look at a European country such as Sweden. If there is one country which is proud of its social programs, where the individual is protected and assisted by the state, it is certainly Sweden. I am sure that all the Hon. Members will agree.

If we look closely at the trading activities of Sweden, we find that Sweden is a founding member of the European Free Trade Association. It still is a member of this association, which has signed a free trade agreement with the European Economic Community. The Swedish manufacturers of Volvos therefore have a guaranteed access to about 355 million consumers. The strategy of Sweden is not based on a closed economy or on fear of competition, but on openness and on the belief that its manufacturers can compete on any European or world market. Yet, Sweden had some of the best social programs in the world. It is also an ardent defender of free trade agreements. The parties opposite should look at what could happen. They should look at what is going on in other countries. Perhaps then, they would better understand that an economic agreement in no way threatens such basic values as our social programs.

The Liberal and NDP Members suggest that we shall lose our cultural identity with free trade. They are trying to make Quebecers and French Canadians believe that we shall lose our cultural identity. Mr. Speaker, there are approximately six million French-speaking Canadians. Did we lose our cultural identity because we live among 250 or 300 million Americans and Canadians? No, Mr. Speaker. We have developed and strenghtened our identity. We have not been assimilated, and contrary to what the Opposition may say, we shall not become assimilated under a free trade agreement. We have defended our institutions. We have improved them and they are among the best in the French-speaking world. Take our educational system. Take companies like Bombardier. Did Bombardier, Lavalin, SNC or Alcan Canada lose their cultural identity because they gained access to the American market? No, Mr. Speaker. All Canadians and all Canadian Governments are proud of these companies. They have developed an international market. They got involved, and that is why the Free Trade Agreement will be a success.

The basic principle here is that, to expand, our economy needs foreign markets. It cannot expand and excel unless it has those markets. The two Opposition Parties are against this principle. They are against creating jobs here in Canada. They will not accept the fact that we can develop markets. They forget or refuse to admit that 80 per cent of our exports with the United States are subject to customs duty. They claim that Canada's farm producers have lost their marketing boards. They don't understand. The marketing boards are protected. The Minister of Agriculture said so. We had a special debate on this, and the NDP Members are now saying that it does not stand up.

Mr. Speaker, they spent the whole day telling us they did not have the final text so they could not make a final judgment, and now they are telling us: No, it is not protected. We are going to lose our cultural identity and our social programs.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say,—you are signalling that my time is about to expire—that the Free Trade Agreement in Canada and the United States is first and foremost an economic agreement, an agreement based on enterprise, job creation, and opening up international trade. Mr. Speaker, as a Canadian I am proud to take part in this kind of debate, to make this economic choice, because we in the Progressive Conservative Party are not afraid of the challenges of international trade. We are not afraid of meeting the challenge of the markets, especially the U.S. market, and although there are those who would have Canadians believe they should not ask for more, we say that Canadians can be competitive on international markets. We have the credibility and we have the know-how. That is what the two Opposition Parties tend to forget, but we will be there to remind Canadians.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, I just want to correct the Hon. Member because I am sure he would not want to leave on the record the kinds of inaccuracies which he committed in his speech just now. He made a statement that the Liberals and NDPers were offered a briefing by the Government, and that is absolutely wrong.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) offered a briefing to the Leader of the Liberal Party and to the Leader of the NDP, but he said: "Boys, don't say a word about it. You can't say a word to your own caucus. You must be entirely secretive about it". That is the kind of democracy we have in Canada today.

The Hon. Member mentioned the word "democracy" many times in his speech. We have a Prime Minister of Canada who is going to brief the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the NDP, and then he says: "We offered a briefing to the Liberals and to the NDPers". That is absolutely wrong, and I am sure the Hon. Member would not want to have it on record.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) said this afternoon that he has been in the House for many years. He said that no Member of Parliament is expert on all subjects, and then he went on with his deliberations. I want to say to that Hon. Member that no one has exemplified that fact any better than he has over the years in Parliament.

The Hon. Member also talked about this tremendous agreement and what great things it will do for Canada. If this agreement is so tremendous, why is the Hon. Member, his Party, and the Prime Minister ramming it through? We are about to get the details of this agreement, many hundreds of pages of material. Parliament sits next week and then it adjourns for Christmas. The Prime Minister is to sign this agreement on January 2. When we come back in January, it will be gone. Is that what he calls democracy?

We get the same old rhetoric from the Government day in and day out. If the agreement is so tremendous, why is the Prime Minister in such a great rush to get it through? Why did he not have the details before the House long ago?

The American Congress is going to take many more months to debate it than it had originally planned. What is wrong with Canada? I will tell him what is wrong with Canada. It is that we have a Government today that does not believe in democracy. It does not believe in free discussion. It does not want the people of Canada to know the details of the agreement. It does not even want Members of Parliament in the opposition Parties to know about it before it has been sent south of the border.

They think that it is a bad thing if they inform people about what is going on in the country, and that the more they can keep from them the easier it is to slip it through—slither it through, let it go south of the border, and let the American Congress handle it from there.

I say to the Prime Minister, to the Hon. Member who just spoke, and to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine that this so-called deal is not a free trade agreement. Let us stop calling it a free trade agreement. It is a deal cooked up by the Government and by the Reagan administration, and they expect to sell it to the Canadian people—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but we have one minute left and I would like to give the last word to the Hon. Member so that he may reply.

[Translation]

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, this shows the inconsistency of Liberals. We offered it to both opposition parties. This is true. We did offer both parties, including the Liberal leader, to sit at the negotiating table and to act as a man and as a responsible person. He refused, Mr. Speaker. I find it rather amusing when I hear a Liberal talk about democracy. It is amusing, Mr. Speaker, because I have to remind him that when the Constitution was patriated, some people were left out. But I will put that aside for the time being.

Mr. Speaker, when you talk about democracy—

[English]

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member has just restated the very words that I told him were incorrect in the first place. Only the Leaders of the two opposition Parties were offered briefings on this agreement, not members of the Parties, and those two Leaders were told not to say anything about it. They were offered briefings only if they did not say anything about it.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being 5.45 p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 82(10) to interrupt the proceedings and to put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the supply proceedings now before the House.

[English]

The question is on the motion standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Broadbent), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the chair.

On Clause 2—

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the customary question of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Mazankowski). Can he assure the House that the Bill conforms with the past traditions of the House, in keeping with the usual methods presented for the Estimates?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Chairman, as the Hon. Member knows, we normally follow the traditional customs and procedures. I can assure the Hon. Member that the Bill is in the same form as that passed in previous years.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, since the Liberals voted for the Bill already, I am not sure why they even asked the question.

Mr. Gauthier: May I just indicate to my socialist friend that the principle of the Bill is a good one. I have to tell him that this Bill is not debatable, but if he wants to debate it now, I am ready to do so.

PRIVILEGE

ACCESS TO TRADE AGREEMENT DOCUMENTS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have just been informed that the important documents dealing with the free trade deal have been the object of a lock-up since eight o'clock for members of the media. Members of Parliament were invited to a lock-up on those documents as of ten o'clock. I do not want to raise any hairs on the back of anyone's neck, but I do think Members of Parliament should be entitled to the same courtesy as the media and given access to the same documents at the same time. I appreciate that the media have to write and assess the documents in perhaps a different way but we still have to answer to the Canadian public for those documents.

I ask the Government if there is an explanation why the press was invited to attend this lock-up at eight o'clock this morning and Members of Parliament were invited only at ten o'clock.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, we made every effort to see that Members of Parliament from all Parties were briefed as soon as possible on the documents in question. To be quite frank with you, I would have to investigate the circumstances on other items such as a lock-up on the Estimates or the Budget. I undertake to look into the matter and get back to the House as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) raised this as a question of privilege. It may well not be, but in any event the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) has agreed to report back as quickly as he can. I think at least for now the Chair can leave the matter there.

I thank the Hon. Member for raising the issue which, as I say, may not be a question of privilege but is of very great interest to Hon. Members on both sides of the House.

PRIVILEGE

RESIGNATION AS PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY

Mr. Ron Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I am a Conservative, a strong supporter of my Party, my colleagues, my Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and, in general, my Government. I am also unilingual. I represent a riding which is overwhelmingly unilingual Anglophone. I fear my constituents' rights are jeopardized by Bill C-72 and the manner in which it is now written. Therefore, I think it only proper that, with regret, I tender my resignation as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Supply and Services.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has risen on what I think would be more properly referred to as a point of individual privilege. It has been customary in the past on such occasions to hear an Hon. Member under those circumstances. The Hon. Member has made his statement. I do not think there is any need to carry the question of privilege any further.

JUDGES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Minister of Justice) moved that the Bill C-88, an Act to amend the Judges Act, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee, be concurred in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Lewis (for the Minister of Justice) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few short remarks on the occasion of the third reading of this important piece of legislation.

[Translation]

As Hon. Members would know, this Bill contains only two clauses: the first will raise salaries of federally appointed judges, the second will repeal some of the provisions of the Judges Act under which they are entitled to benefits which have to do with their marital status and which might be challenged under the charter.

Mr. Speaker, you are aware that every three years, pursuant to the Judges Act, the Minister of Justice is required to set up an independent commission mandated to review the salaries and benefits of judges appointed by the federal Government and report on the matter. The 1986 commission—the second appointed under the provisions of the Judges Act—recommended a number of changes in judges' salaries and benefits. The purpose of Bill C-88 is to implement some of these recommendations.

[English]

Clause 1 of the Bill will increase judicial salaries to the levels recommended by the commission after its independent assessment of the adequacy of existing levels of remuneration. However, these increases will not be made fully retroactive to April 1, 1986, as the commission recommended, but implemented in three equal stages on April 1, 1986, April 1, 1987, and April 1, 1988.

• (1010)

Clause 2 of the Bill, amending the Judges Act so that benefits to spouses and children no longer depend on marital status, also implements a commission recommendation and will make the relevant provisions of the Act fully consistent with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

As the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) indicated on second reading debate, the remaining recommendations of the 1986 commission dealing largely with judicial pensions and other non-salary benefits are under review in consultation with those of my cabinet colleagues who are most directly concerned. The Minister of Justice intends to respond to these recommendations once these consultations have been completed.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I should also like to thank all Members of the legislative committee to which Bill C-88 was referred for their dispatch in dealing with the matter.

However short this Bill may be, Mr. Speaker, it is a major instrument which enables us to show federally appointed judges our unmistakable appreciation for the essential role they play in our justice system. The Minister of Justice is very pleased that the House has agreed to endorse this measure and hopes it will be given royal assent at the earliest opportunity.

[English]

I would like to thank the members of the legislative committee for their quick response to this Bill. I also want to thank all Members of this House for allowing the Government to give this Bill third reading today. We hope to receive Royal Assent in the very near future in order to help our judges.

[Translation]

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I expect my intervention to be rather short, but for now I should like to yield to my colleague from Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) because he is pressed for time. He has to be somewhere by 10.30.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, we all know that the first and second speakers have unlimited time at third reading. I imagine that although my colleague from Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) was kind enough to yield the floor for the time being, he would not want this to infringe on his right subsequently to take the time he deems necessary.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure the House would agree to that.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston). I have a meeting with a Minister with regard to a private Member's Bill. I want to get to that meeting because it is important for my constituents and merchant seamen and veterans in Canada.

I would like to make a few remarks on behalf of the New Democratic Party in reply to the Parliamentary Secretary's very succinct speech. The topic of judges reminds me of the Monty Python skit in which a coal miner says "I would have been a judge if I had the Latin, but I do not have the Latin so I won't be a judge".

Well, judges do not speak Latin these days but they do have a very busy job due to all the legislation that we pass and the more litigious nature of our society. In addition, we passed the Charter of Rights and have now passed the Meech Lake Accord with additional terms, if I can put it that way, which judges will have to interpret. We want to have the best judges that we possibly can in the country. By and large, we have a pretty good bench.

I note that the salaries of judges are being increased in the Bill but not entirely retroactively. I think that was a good decision. There is some controversy, and always will be, on how much judges should be paid. Some people in my Party think that judges get paid too much. Other people in the law profession and elsewhere say that if we want good lawyers to become judges we must pay them good salaries. Of course we want the best lawyers to be on the bench. I will, therefore, leave it at that. We do, however, monitor that very carefully.

It is very interesting that Parliament must pass salaries. I do not think that judges like that. They would rather have an independent commission do it, but I think Parliament should keep doing it because it gives us a chance to talk about judicial performance in a general way and to talk about government action with respect to judges and judicial appointments. I would like to make a few remarks on that point as well.

The Canadian Bar Association Committee Report "The Appointment of Judges in Canada" of August 20, 1985, states in part as follows:

> In our interviews—conducted in every province and territory, with members of federal and provincial governments and courts at all levels, with offices of the Canadian Bar Association and provincial law societies, and with lawyers generally—we found widespread dissatisfaction with the present method of judicial selection and appointments and a broadly-based desire for change.

That change has not come. We have been waiting for the Minister of Justice to indicate a better and fairer process of judicial appointments and we are still waiting.

The report continues:

> Jurisdictions that already have judicial councils or selection committees for choosing provincial judges are notable exceptions.
> In most jurisdictions, however, there is dissatisfaction with the extent of political patronage in judicial appointments, despite the recognition that political ties and legal or judicial skills often co-exist in the same persons. Where the nominating process emphasizes political criteria, excellent lawyers of the "wrong" or no political affiliation are passed over as serious candidates for the bench, with the result that there can be no assurance that the best possible nominees for judgeships are chosen.
> A former minister of justice told us that he sometimes chose the candidate rated "qualified" by the CBA Committee—

The Canadian Bar Association Committee represents some progress in the appointment of judges.

> —rather than the one rated "highly qualified", because he was influenced by "other sources" that presented judgments different from those of the Committee.
> Such an unsystematic process has resulted in much public cynicism about judicial appointments. Whatever the actual merits of the judges selected, there is a widespread public perception that judges are chosen primarily for political reasons.

In my own Province of British Columbia there are rumours in the bar that the Government may appoint the present Attorney General in the provincial government as Chief Justice of the Province of British Columbia. This is the same fellow who became a legal-laughing stock earlier this year when he unsuccessfully sought a court injunction against a threatened protest strike by B.C. labour on the grounds that the one-day job action would be seditious. Of course, the Supreme Court of British Columbia wisely threw that out. I do not think lawyers in my province would want to see someone who brought that rather strange law suit become Chief Justice of our province.

In summary, yes, politicians or people who have Party affiliations could be appointed judges. As the bar report says, that could co-exist in individuals who have good legal skills and so on. There are good examples of that in all three political Parties. I think of Davie Fulton and Stu Leggatt as examples.

We are asking for a better process for the selection and for better consultation. We hope that in the end there may be some means of scrutiny such as there is in the American jurisdiction, perhaps by a committee of this House. We have been receiving promises from the Minister of Justice. Like the person waiting for the suitor who receives nothing but promises, promises, promises, that is all the Minister of Justice gives on this area. I would like the Government to study that a little further.

With regard to pensions, I am very pleased that the Parliamentary Secretary mentioned that there were consultations ongoing on a few of the pension problems which the judges have had. I think that can be worked out and I am pleased the Government is doing this.

• (1020)

Let me conclude by saying on behalf of the New Democratic Party that we are prepared to let this Bill pass today after a short debate at third reading. We are pleased with the co-operation in committee and in the House on this Bill. The judiciary is becoming a more and more important level of Government. Canada, this strange country, is kind of half British and half French. It looks back to Britain and France for half our system, the other half following the American system. We are somewhere in between. The great thing is that we are now beginning to fashion our own system, something for which we are all struggling together. A good and strong judiciary where the average Canadian can get justice is what we are really striving for. That is why these kinds of Bills are important.

[Translation]

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have this opportunity to speak in this debate, because speaking for my Party, for the Official Opposition in this House, I too must say that as a lawyer and former Minister of Justice, I am convinced this is a very important Bill.

[English]

I do not think one can emphasize too much the importance of securing for Canada judges of the very highest calibre. I will say that I share the views expressed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), which is not always the case as you might appreciate, Mr. Speaker. I think it is a tribute to Members of this House on all sides that we seem to be looking together in the same direction on this important issue.

Some weeks ago I had the pleasure of participating in a panel discussion at the University of Alberta. The other participants representing the views of other Parties, were Roy Romanow, who is now the Leader of the New Democratic Party in Saskatchewan, and Lou Hyndman, who was formerly the Minister of Finance in Alberta. The topic of our panel was "Who rules Canada, judges or politicians?" Naturally, the debate took us very much into the area of the Charter and the incredibly important role which has been assigned to judges. They must reflect the morès and evolution of our society in the interpretation of that Charter which protects the rights of individual Canadians in every corner of this land.

Similarly, we raised the question of Meech Lake. If the Meech Lake Accord proceeds, and even if the proposed amendments are adopted, it is clear that judges will have a more and more important role in determining issues of fundamental law that touch the lives of every Canadian.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I cannot emphasize too strongly the importance of getting the best lawyers in Canada to serve as judges.

[English]

We support this Bill. We would like to see its rapid passage. I would say that on this issue of selection, I very much share the views expressed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway. I should also tell my colleagues in the House that at this panel, and during the subsequent participation by members of the audience, it was made clear that everyone recognizes the importance of the judicial selection process. It is undeniable that judges will play a more and more important role in the interpretation of the laws of this country, and I mentioned the Charter and the Constitution. Everyone agreed with that. There was no dissent.

However, there was concern that the judiciary may not always be capable of reflecting that cross-section of view so necessary in interpreting our fundamental law as our society evolves. Thus it is absolutely critical that the selection process be improved.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that as Minister of Justice for a rather brief period of time, I had the pleasure of meeting on numerous occasions with representatives of the Canadian Bar Association and the committee which had been struck by that association on judicial appointments. The Canadian Bar Association takes this issue very seriously. The Canadian Bar Association, and all its subsections, recognizes that the appointment of judges is fundamental to preserving the integrity of our judicial system.

It is important, as this Bill recognizes, that if we are to attract those men and women to the Bench who are capable of providing that integrity and of serving with honour and distinction in dealing with these litigious and difficult questions which touch the lives of all Canadians, they must be remunerated at a level that will convince them that they should give a good part of their lives to public service. These salary levels may seem high, but the best people in the law profession in many parts of this country are well paid and one can expect they will have to make sacrifices, and they will be making sacrifices even at this level of remuneration. However, this level of remuneration with the desire to provide public service by serving on the Bench, which is the touchstone in my judgment of success in the legal profession, is a necessary and fundamental step in attracting those people to our judiciary.

With respect to this issue of political patronage and appointments, I must say it is an important issue, but the political activity, whether it be serving as members of legislatures, provincial or federal, or whether it be simply political activity at the riding level or at some other level, should not preclude someone from serving on the Bench. In fact, Members of this House and those of other legislatures are brought into contact in many ways with problems that affect the lives of Canadians and they can be an important reservoir of talent for appointment to the Bench providing they have the professional qualification and the demonstrated objectivity that is required.

I can think of the eulogies paid in this House even by the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway upon the death of the Hon. Douglas Abbott, who served with distinction in this place for so many years as a senior Minister of the Crown, and then moved on to the Supreme Court of Canada where once again he served with distinction, objectivity and great honour. He was regarded, if I may say so, as one of the finest members of that court.

Political activity should not in any way preclude people from service. I would like to remind Members of this House that it was the Leader of the Opposition, (Mr. Turner) when he was Minister of Justice, who reached out and brought in men and women of different political persuasions on the basis of merit. I think Members can appreciate that many served in that capacity. Being a lawyer himself, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition recognized the importance of the kind of legislation we have in front of us today and went very far in improving the method of judicial selection. When one looks across the country at the judges who were appointed in the period when the Official Leader of the Opposition was Minister of Justice, one can say with all objectivity from all parts of this House that, indeed, he was successful in attracting some of the best men and women to the Bench.

That tradition must be continued. I fear it has not always been continued. The issue of judicial selection, while not directly dealt with in this Bill, is very much implicit in it because of the additional remuneration and pension provisions that are provided. They, of course, are terribly important in terms of attracting people to that selection process.

I also want to add a word of support for those recommendations with regard to pension improvement, the continuation of the survivor's pension to a widow or widower of a judge after the widow remarries. Obviously, this is an important and significant provision which we support. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the House Special Committee on Equality Rights recommended that a similar bar to pensioners who remarried be repealed throughout the federal jurisdiction. I hope that the Government will give serious consideration to that recommendation at the earliest possible date.

[Translation]

That being said, Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude my remarks by commending fellow Members on all sides of the House for recognizing the importance of supporting this Bill and improving it if necessary.

• (1030)

[English]

I also share my colleague's view that we have a very good judiciary in Canada. However, reform is fundamental in Liberal principle. Anything, no matter how good, can be improved. Let us try to improve our judiciary. This Bill is a step in that direction.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment briefly on the Bill before the House, Bill C-88, and follow up on the point made by the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston), that we should try to improve the situation, especially with respect to pensions.

I support this Bill because I believe it not only embodies recommendations made by a commission of inquiry—the Guthrie Commission which made recommendations with respect to the salaries of judges—but also deals with the important point of pensions and the right of the surviving spouse to continue to receive the pension of the deceased spouse upon remarriage.

Mr. Speaker, this provision is of particular interest to me because it affects about 200,000 federal public servants. It affects the military, the RCMP and probably all Crown Corporations, where the existing legislation provides that the spouse of a deceased pensioner loses, I repeat loses, any rights to pension benefits if that person remarries.

Bill C-88 is being used to create a precedent, to me a very important precedent, and I am referring to the provisions contained in Clause 2,

[English]

We support Clause 2 of Bill C-88 which provides for the continuation of survivor's pension to a widow or widower of a judge even after the widow or widower remarries. We see this provision as a humane step, a step forward. It is a small step which should apply to all public servants, be they federally employed under the Public Service Employment Act, employees under the RCMP Act, Armed Forces personnel or Crown corporation employees.

There are hundreds of thousands of people whose pension entitlements are cut because they have remarried. I believe that every Member of the House would want to see the Government, when it brings forward the pension reform we have been promised, give consideration to a proposal that would allow Canadian public servants in the categories I have just enumerated to have the same privileges as the judges.

I accept this Bill as being a good first step. I say to Government Members that we will look very closely for action on this front. I believe Members of the House would care enough to give the Government full control over this issue at this time so that we will see in forthcoming months provisions dealing with Public Service pensions.

I know that many members of my caucus would like to make a few comments on this question because it is a very important first step. I rest my case on the fact that it is a just measure. It is equitable and something that I will support. I hope the Government acts on it.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on Bill C-88, a Bill that is long overdue. A review of judges' salaries was done by an independent committee which compared judges' salaries with the incomes of those who are in the legal business today. In all fairness, we cannot expect to get good judges out of the legal system if indeed they will be paid far less than they can make in their regular occupations.

The position of a judge should not be one of status. It must be one of solid judgment. A person sitting on the bench must be fair minded, objective and dedicated if the people of Canada are to receive just and fair decisions.

Much has been said about judges over the years. A number of judges in Canada had political careers before being appointed to the bench. Many people in the legal profession across Canada have participated actively in one form or another in politics for several years before being appointed to the bench. Many people have participated actively in their communities before being appointed to the bench. Those activities in the early years of a judge's life are what determine whether or not a person will make a good judge.

Apart from politics, the moment a judge is appointed to the bench, we must understand that his or her whole life changes. Judges may no longer belong to groups or organizations in their communities. They can no longer participate in any political activities and even membership in fraternal organizations comes into question. A judge must be seen to be and must indeed be purer than the pure. As I said, a judge must be objective and honest.

If we are to ask all this of our judges, we must be fair to them. They cannot lobby for themselves because they cannot participate in politics. The only way we will have fair minded people on the bench is by providing that they will not lose income and that they will have a stable future. It is indeed a very important career and must be recognized as such.

A part of this Bill which has already been mentioned by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is the clause dealing with pensions going to the surviving spouse. We support this clause in principle. Before this Bill, if the spouse of a judge remarried after the judge had died, he or she would lose part of the pension. In fairness we must remember that that spouse has worked over the years beside his or her partner, beside that judge, and has earned that income together with the spouse. We would like to see that taken one step further.

• (1040)

I have seen cases where members of the Armed Forces have passed on, and the surviving spouse loses the benefits of the pension or annuity if they remarry. That means by remarrying they are giving up that very important income that they have spent their life working towards with their previous partner. Indeed, perhaps it may prevent people from remarrying for economic reasons. That is unfair.

I support the cases of public servants who have paid into these pensions over the years, members of the Armed Forces, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, Crown corporations where it applies and indeed all those throughout the federal jurisdiction, that when a surviving spouse remarries their part of that original pension from their first spouse will be retained and carried on. That is an essence of fairness. It has to be looked upon as part of their income, an income that they have worked towards with their partner during the first part of their lives. Why should they have to pay a penalty because they want to remarry and live a continuation of a happy life? Surely we do not have to pay for happiness. It has always been my understanding that happiness comes from true love and understanding, and one should not have to give up their monthly income in order to remarry.

Together with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier I wish to conclude by stating that, in the future, we want to see public servants, members of the Armed Forces, RCMP, Crown corporations, and others under federal jurisdiction included in this principle. If a spouse dies and sometime afterwards the surviving spouse wants to remarry, that spouse should not have to give up his or her share of the original pension from the original marriage.

It is a fair element in this Bill today that the surviving spouse of a judge would continue to retain that part of the pension earned during the marriage to the judge. We want to see that continued on a scale across the board in all fairness to those who have worked toward that pension, and that it really is part of their income for life.

Mr. Gauthier: The Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) has made some interesting comments in regard to the rights of deceased judges' pensions and the rights of the surviving spouse to that pension. I would like to inform the Hon. Member that I have just received some facts from the report of the administration of the Public Service Superannuation Act for the last fiscal year, 1986. The figures indicate that in the fiscal year from April 1, 1985 to March 31, 1986 there were 97 widows and 12 widowers who were deleted from the list of pensioners because they remarried. Last year, that is, 109 people were deleted.

The point to be made in passing Bill C-88, is that if we want to be humane towards pensions of judges' spouses, we should try to be as humane to those 109 people who in one year lost their income because they remarried.

I do not know if the Hon. Member has the figures from the Armed Forces, although I know the Petawawa base is in his riding and he has a preoccupation for Armed Forces personnel, but I do think we should look into of the Armed Forces and RCMP spouses who lose their entitlement to pensions because they remarry. Does the Hon. Member have any comments in respect to that?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, an Hon. Member has just said, "Who makes the laws?" In fairness to him, I would say who develops the law? The law is ongoing all the days of our life and during our time here. From time to time we revise those laws. When issues come before Parliament, we have to take a good look at those laws, and we are doing so in a fair light today.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier mentioned that in one year 97 widows and 12 widowers from the public service had given up their share of a pension because they remarried. The Hon. Member has simply verified the fact that this is no great expenditure for the Government of Canada. The pension fund is there, they have paid into it, and other people are continuing to contribute.

I am sure that all other members of the Public Service, members of the Armed Forces, RCMP, and others in Crown corporations do not mind continuing to pay into a fund because they too some day may need that benefit. It is like an insurance policy, it is there when you need it. We are not talking about a great big drain on the treasury as some might interpret it. If the 50 per cent share of the pension of the 97 widows' and 12 widowers had been continued, it would be peanuts in the over-all context. But it will create an element of fairness in their minds that they have been fairly treated. It will also provide a better economy for that new marriage. We well know, Mr. Speaker, that sometimes a lack of income becomes a big problem in a marriage.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier has hit a key point, because of the small numbers involved I think it is something that Parliament should address seriously and not only talk about today. I hope we will see this coming forward in future legislation.

Today in the Armed Forces of Canada there are approximately 84,600 members. We are not talking about large numbers here either. They have their own pension fund, and it would be no drain on that fund to continue this process. Indeed, the marriage may take place between two people where the new partner is also in the Public Service or in the Armed Forces which means that they are still continuing to contribute to the very fund from which the other spouse is drawing.

I wish to thank my hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier for raising that point. It certainly verifies the practicality of the suggestions that we are making.

• (1050)

On the recommendation of all Members of the House, the Government has brought this principle forward in the judges Bill. I congratulate them on that. I hope we will continue to even out the other inequities which still exist for spouses who remarry and are receiving pensions in part which were earned while their now deceased spouses were working in the government service of Canada in whatever area of activity.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Wednesday, December 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-87, an Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters and to amend or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to speak for a few minutes on the customs tariff Bill. Bill C-87 is an important piece of legislation. It has become more important in the last little while than we had realized. It is a revision and updating of the customs Act, but it also provides for the harmonization of tariffs between Canada and its trading partners. The major trading partners of Canada include quite a number of countries. Among others, we do approximately 80 per cent of our trade with the United States of America.

The routines involved in the trade process are important to both importers and exporters in Canada. This updating is necessary. It will allow for computerization of the process, to some extent, so that the system will work much more effectively and we will be much more able to control the movement of trade and the amount of trade between Canada and its many trading partners.

When Bill C-87 was brought in a few months ago, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) made a suggestion that it would be a routine Bill. However, when we started looking at it we found a number of very important clauses and powers being given, including the power to levy a surtax, the power to put on import controls, the power to suspend trading rights which Canada has granted by agreement with other countries, and the power to levy surcharges on certain types of imports.

It also includes an extremely important power which will be given to the Governor in Council. For example, Clause 62 reads as follows:

> The Governor in Council may, on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance, by order,
> (a) reduce or remove customs duties on goods imported from any country by way of compensation for concessions granted by that country or any other country, subject to such conditions as may be specified in the order; and
> (b) extend the benefit of any order made pursuant to paragraph (a) to any country as may be required by Canada's international obligations, subject to such conditions as may be specified in the order.

Parliament is being asked to authorize Cabinet to approve new tariffs in Canada's trade with the United States. Cabinet would then be able to use this power without reference to Parliament. That in itself has changed Bill C-87 from a fairly routine one, which most of us probably would have passed a couple of years ago without really looking at it, to a very important Bill which can have real impact on how Canada acts and reacts in the next while.

We must recognize that the Governor in Council having this kind of power is actually the way things in respect to customs have worked for a long period of time. We are really talking about a traditional position of the past. However, what is important now is the fact that a free trade agreement is in the wind and the Bill would allow the federal Government great latitude in making decisions about the tariff structure of Canada without reference to Parliament.

As I said, it has been the practice of previous Governments to operate this way, but if the free trade pact becomes part of the relationships between Canada and the United States particularly, or becomes, as Reagan put it, the new economic constitution for North America, it will make a difference. We must remember that this is being carried forward without little chance for Canadians or Parliament to be involved in the decision on how free trade will work. We have just received the final copy of the legal terms of the agreement, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will sign it on January 2. It will commit Canada to an agreement without Canadians having had time to look at it. Consequently this Bill which would give authority to Cabinet is much more important than it has been. We had hoped that report stage and committee stage would result in some changes to the Bill. Of course we put forward a number of amendments.

May I call it eleven o'clock, Mr. Speaker, and continue after twelve o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being eleven o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 19(4) the House will now proceed to Statements by Members pursuant to Standing Order 21.

PESTICIDES

REVIEW OF LEGISLATION URGED

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, as you know, under the title Pesticides in Canada the Law Reform Commission has published an important study which recommends that the law controlling pesticides be amended to allow the public to petition the Minister to investigate pesticides when new evidence has come to light regarding health or environmental effects.

In addition, it is recommended that the legislation be amended to provide a public hearing to review whether a pesticide should be removed from the market and, finally, that the legislation be amended to give public access to pesticide health and safety information on active and inert ingredients.

The study asks the the Government to produce for public discussion a cancer decision-making policy dealing with birth and mutagenic effects of pesticides and other toxic chemicals.

The protection of public health demands that changes to the regulation of pesticides and toxic chemicals be made urgently.

Again we urge the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to launch a public review of present laws and practices, adopting Pesticides in Canada as the foundation on which to build an up-to-date law.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

BIG BROTHERS AND BIG SISTERS ASSOCIATION

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, the Big Brothers and Big Sisters Association is a great help to young people who are disadvantaged or in conflict with our society. Members work quietly but effectively. They are real friends to young people who may not have any friends at all. We are proud of these volunteers and of what they are able to accomplish.

Last Saturday evening, I had the privilege of attending a Christmas party at Dorval, organized by the Big Brothers and Big Sisters for their young friends. It was a real pleasure to see them, Mr. Speaker!

[English]

This year, Mr. Speaker, the Christmas Party was a bigger success than ever. Association President, Chuck Taylor, and all his fellow volunteers were benefiting from the generosity of our new corporate neighbour, McDonald's, which, in addition to a substantial grant, provided the refreshments that kids of all ages enjoy.

It is time we said thank you to Big Brothers, Big Sisters, and Big Macs. Keep up the good work!

CANADA POST CORPORATION

ONTARIO LEGISLATURE'S OPPOSITION TO SUPERMAILBOXES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Legislature of the Province of Ontario overwhelming passed a Conservative sponsored resolution which stated the following:

> That, in the opinion of this House, recognizing that the Government of Canada supermailbox program has created second class citizens of many Ontario urban dwellers, this Legislature strongly urges the Government of Canada to direct Canada Post Corporation to:
> (1) immediately abandon its supermailbox program;
> (2) halt all projected installations of supermailboxes;
> (3) remove all supermailboxes at existing sites and to relandscape the area they occupy;
> (4) restore home delivery to all affected residences.

I have also received a resolution from the United Senior Citizens Organization of Ontario who are very concerned about the proposed closing of rural post offices. They point out that many seniors and infirm persons, with limited or no access to transportation, live many miles from a well populated centre and a post office allows them to remain in their own communities.

Isn't it high time that the Government recognized the hardship that the closing of rural post offices for rural dwellers and the installation of supermailboxes for urban dwellers is creating, and decided to reconsider the entire changes to the mail delivery system?

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

GOVERNMENT'S ACTION TO INCREASE NUMBER OF DISABLED EMPLOYED BY PUBLIC SERVICE

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, the federal Government is leading by example in providing the disabled with real opportunities for participation and access to Canadian society.

On Wednesday the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Mazankowski) presented the federal Government's response to the unanimous recommendations of the Standing Committee on the Status of Disabled Persons. Entitled Accepting the Challenge, the response revealed plans to increase the number of disabled persons in the Public Service by 67 per cent, to 6,900 employees.

The new hiring targets will raise the number of jobs held by disabled persons from the present figure of 1.9 per cent to 3.3 per cent in March, 1991. Moreover, the Minister announced that the number of disabled persons hired as managers, scientists, and professionals will increase by 90 per cent.

The Government will also spend $3.7 million over the next five years to provide training for the disabled and to buy equipment that will help them do their jobs, such as talking computers and Braille printers.

Disabled Canadians must have the same opportunities to participate in activities that are available to all Canadians. We are all responsible for the necessary changes which will facilitate the participation in Canadian society of disabled persons.

I am proud that the initiatives announced this week by our Government ensure that the federal Government will lead the way.

AEROSPACE

HAWKESBURY PROPOSED AS SITE FOR CANADIAN SPACE AGENCY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Government is once again in a pickle. It just cannot decide where to put its new space centre. While the Government is trying to evaluate where there is more political mileage, whether to put it in Ottawa or in Montreal, I have a solution for the Tories across the way.

A number of my constituents work in Ottawa and a number of them work in Montreal. An even greater number work in the riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. This is my solution. Fifty miles from Ottawa and 50 miles from Montreal is the beautiful community of Hawkesbury in my constituency. Scientists from the National Space Centre could work in the great community of Hawkesbury.

We need the jobs, the jobs that have been destroyed by the Government with its free trade agreement. We need to restore the economy of that area, and besides, where else in Canada would you want a space centre to be, Mr. Speaker?

POLITICAL PARTIES

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY'S VOTE ON PROPOSED GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the House voted on the Supplementary Estimates for the 1987-88 fiscal year. Canadians who support the NDP would want to know that their elected representatives are suffering from what can only be described as a flawed flu syndrome.

The socialists voted against an additional $63 million for old age security pensions. They voted against $93 million for commodities under agricultural stabilization. The socialists voted against $111 million for VIA Rail operating requirements and they voted against $46.5 for non-insured health services to Indians and Inuit.

The socialists voted against $330 million in statutory payments to equalization. Howard Pawley will condemn them.

The socialists voted against $84 million in spouses' allowance payments.

How about this? They voted against $75 million guaranteed income supplementary payments, and they voted against $350 million for Canadian exploration and development incentive programs.

The New Democrats are sick. They will never get nominated again.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—DETENTION OF CANADIAN CITIZEN WITHOUT TRIAL

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, on November 24 I asked the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs what steps the Government was taking to ensure that Mr. Balkar Singh, a Canadian citizen being detained without trial in India for several weeks, would either be brought to trial if there was evidence against him, or released if there was not evidence.

Since then it has come to light that Mr. Singh has been ill-treated in prison.

I urge the Government to pursue the matter very strongly. Mr. Singh is a Canadian citizen. Furthermore, Indian law provides that a person who becomes a citizen of Canada or of another country loses his former citizenship. Therefore, Mr. Singh is being held without trial in an Indian jail in a country where he himself has no status. It is particularly important that the Government of Canada make every effort to ensure that a Canadian citizen receives the same treatment that a Canadian citizen would receive here, namely, a prompt and fair trial if, indeed, there is evidence against him, or immediate release if there is no evidence.

LABOUR RELATIONS

PRINCE RUPERT GRAIN HANDLERS' STRIKE—CALL FOR REVIEW OF LABOUR RELATIONS LEGISLATION

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the movement of grain is the life-blood of the Canadian Prairies. Last year that movement was curtailed by shut-downs at the Port of Thunder Bay and later at the Port of Vancouver. Earlier this year various railway workers had to be legislated back to work. Now 69 grain handlers at the Port of Prince Rupert are on strike, thus threatening the movement of 15 per cent of Canada's export grain.

Canadians are growing weary of strikes and lock-outs in essential services, whether it be Air Canada, the Post Office, the railways, the ports, or some other sector. Canadians do not really care who went on strike or who locked out. They know only too well that they are the innocent third party that pays the price for the failure of management and labour to reach agreement.

Surely it is time to outlaw strikes and lock-outs in essential services and find alternative methods for resolving these impasses. There are plenty of alternatives and options, and I again call for establishment of a parliamentary committee to investigate this matter thoroughly and come back to the House with some alternatives. Surely it is time for the insanity of strikes and lock-outs to end.

TAX REFORM

NON-IMPOSITION OF SALES TAX ON FOOD AND PRESCRIPTION DRUGS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, Canadians welcome the announcement made last night by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that food will not be taxed. This mad scheme first proposed by the Government resulted in hundreds of thousands of Canadians signing petitions and protesting the move. Yesterday was a victory for ordinary Canadians. Their everyday necessities of life will not now be taxed.

We also welcome the announcement that basic drugs will escape the taxman, as well as hospitals, school boards and municipalities. If the Minister wants extra revenue, he should look at the 110,000 profitable corporations which did not pay any tax on over $13 billion in profits in 1983. Even with his tax reform, 50,000 of those corporations will still not pay any tax.

The Minister should stop robbing the pockets of ordinary Canadians and go after those who have not been paying their fair share.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF SASKATCHEWAN PREMIER

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, Premier Devine of Saskatchewan has suggested that the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal will make Saskatchewan an industrial giant. Are we to believe that he means an industrial giant just like North Dakota?

Premier Devine also indicated that the deal will make farm machinery cheaper for prairie farmers. Surely the Premier, who is also Saskatchewan's Minister of Agriculture, knows that we have had free trade in farm machinery for 30 years. If farm machinery is an example of free trade, we can expect little of the expansion of which the Premier speaks. Except for highly subsidized Versatile, not one tractor, John Deere, Massey Ferguson, International, Case or White, is made in Canada today. Compare that with the effects of managed trade under the Auto Pact where a requirement of 60 per cent production in Canada has developed a booming industry.

The Premier well knows that the free trade plan is not an Auto Pact. Trying to sell it in that way is an attempt to deceive the people of Saskatchewan.

SENIOR CITIZENS

RELIEF AT MINISTER'S ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): As you know, Mr. Speaker, next to Victoria, British Columbia, there are more senior citizens in my constituency than in any other in Canada. The seniors, and for that matter many others who have expressed their concern to me about the possibility of a tax on food, are delighted by the announcement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that there will be no federal tax imposed on groceries, prescription drugs and medical devices.

It is interesting to note, however, that in Sweden, long held up by the NDP as a socialist paradise, there is a value-added tax or national sales tax on everything, including basic groceries. There are three sales tax rates in Sweden and food is taxed at the highest rate, 23.46 per cent.

Fortunately, Canada is not an NDP socialist paradise. Fortunately, we have a Progressive Conservative Government sensitive to the concerns of Canadians.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON ENERGY INDUSTRY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak about the free trade deal in energy. About a year and a half ago, I stood in this House and predicted that we would have a continental energy policy in a short time. That is exactly what the Mulroney trade deal has done. Now, by law, we must share our energy resources with the Americans.

There are some irritants to access by Canadian resources to the American energy market but in spite of those irritants we always get access because they are going to need our oil, gas, and electricity in the energy shortages which are going to appear in the 1990s. We have given away our ace card, control over energy, which we could have used to diversify the western Canadian economy.

I cannot believe the hypocrisy of ex-Premier Lougheed and the other businessmen like him who would prefer that the American market economy govern our energy policy rather than the big bad easterners, meaning the Canadian national Government. We have a word for that. It is "traitors".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

SENIOR CITIZENS

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege of representing a federal electoral district that has a high proportion of very active elderly people. Hundreds of projects and community activities are organized by senior citizens in my riding.

To support these activities, from September 1984 to 1987 the federal Government has invested $128,402 in the riding of Québec Est through the New Horizons Program. Mr. Speaker, this kind of encouragement shows we are prepared to help the elderly improve the quality of their daily lives. Meeting regularly with various senior citizens' groups in my riding, I have found that funds are well spent and well managed and that the projects and activities are a success. This concern for helping the elderly demonstrates that the Mulroney Government is well aware of their circumstances and is trying very hard to improve them.

By appointing the Hon. George Hees as Minister of State (Senior Citizens) last summer and providing funding through programs such as New Horizons, the Progressive Conservative Government shows that senior citizens across Canada have a high priority with this government.

FINANCE

ELIGIBILITY OF NORTHWESTERN SASKATCHEWAN AREAS FOR NORTHERN TAX STATUS

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform Members of the House of a decision made this week by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) which more clearly defines the areas eligible for northern and isolated tax status. After months of meetings, negotiations and presenting petitions and letters on behalf of my constituents on this issue, I am delighted that certain areas of northwestern Saskatchewan will now be eligible for northern tax status. These areas include Meadow Lake, the rural municipality of Meadow Lake, Makwa, Loon Lake, Dorintosh and Rapid View.

This tax status means that, effective the 1987 tax year, people living in those areas will be eligible to claim a special tax deduction of up to 20 per cent of net income to a maximum of $5,400. It is encouraging to know that the Minister of Finance and his officials have recognized that additional costs do come with living and working in the North. I speak on behalf of all my constituents when I thank the Minister and all of the citizens of the communities involved for their diligence and persistence in this matter.

Merry Christmas, Mike!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

HEALTH

TOXIC MUSSELS—TIME OF TESTING

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Yesterday in the House the Prime Minister said that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has consistently given the House all the facts and his version of the facts has never been contradicted, either by him or a third party. The Prime Minister did not know what he was talking about. On Tuesday, December 8, the Minister said this in the House:

> Dr. Todd received those samples from Prince Edward Island at 8.15 p.m., upon which testing began that evening, Saturday.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister explain why the Minister said that, when no laboratory tests were conducted in Ottawa on that weekend?

Yesterday, Dr. Les Elliott, the Director of Field Operations in the Minister's Department, was asked by a reporter:

> You weren't in here, there weren't people in the office Saturday and Sunday testing in the lab?

Dr. Elliott replied:

No, there were no samples to test.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister explain why the Minister of National Health and Welfare misled the people of Canada and Parliament on this issue?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to answer the question of the right hon. gentleman. I have not misled the House and I have given all the information available to me. The time in question is the Saturday and Sunday. I think that is what the right hon. gentleman referred to. I have all the transcripts here as well.

May I refer him to the two parts of any investigation. First is the lab work, which was discussed, for example, with Dr. Elliott yesterday, as well as Dr. Liston, Dr. Law and Dr. Todd. On the other side is the epidemiological work or the investigative work. And I have got all those details here as well. As to what happened on Saturday and Sunday—I do not know, Mr. Speaker, if you give me the time—but maybe I can do it very quickly.

• (1120)

Mr. Gauthier: Do it on motions.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Take it before a parliamentary committee or something.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, then there will be other questions obviously. Let me just say to the right hon. gentleman, I have information here on the epidemiological work, both on the Saturday and the Sunday.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF ALLEGED CONTRADICTION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, no laboratory tests were done on the weekend. The laboratory mice in Blacks Harbour, New Brunswick, were all dead at three o'clock Friday afternoon. That is what we heard yesterday. Those in Ottawa were all dead at four o'clock the same day. The Minister of National Health and Welfare said Wednesday this week in the House that a small number of mice had died. The problem was not a serious one. However, employees in his Department admitted that all the mice that had been injected with the deadly toxin at the Ottawa laboratory had died Friday. Could the Minister explain this obvious contradiction? Could he explain the Minister's incredible misrepresentation of the facts?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, yes, I can explain that as well and I have read Dr. Todd's testimony of yesterday, and for instance where he said the six mice out of six mice had died, and I will get into that in this way. We have one sample of mussels and obviously if those from the same sample is injected into mice, in terms of the death of those mice, that is what Dr. Todd referred to. What the right hon. gentleman is tying together is that that was the only test, or that was the only reference that I made. I had some more studies done today in terms of how many mice in fact had been tested, because I think that is a legitimate piece of information to put into the picture as well. And we have tested as of this morning 336 mice from Prince Edward Island and the Magdalens. Of those 336 mice, 93 have died.

Now, what I am trying to convey to the right hon. gentleman is that we have to do the lab work as well as the field work, if I can characterize it that way. And I say to him that I, as a Minister, have a responsibility to act on the information that I get from my scientists. And his member today again in public debate, or public TV, said that I had known prior to the weekend. Again, I repeat, and I do not know how many times I have done that, that is simply not true.

EXERCISE OF MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the more we get into this matter the less able is the Minister to substantiate his statements by the statements of his own officials.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I suggest that this matter be brought before a parliamentary or judicial inquiry in order that we can get at the facts.

Mice were injected with deadly toxin in Blacks Harbour, New Brunswick, and died at three o'clock on the Friday. Mice injected with the same deadly toxin died the same Friday at 4 p.m. in Ottawa. The alarm bells went off and no one was listening.

Why was the Minister not informed? Why were the labs closed for the weekend? Why was the stop order on the shipment only made on Sunday? Why did the Minister only inform the Canadian people on Tuesday? Why was he not informed before Monday?

Why will he not take responsibility, as a Minister, for his own negligence and, in particular, for the negligence of his departmental officials? That is what ministerial responsibility is all about. Will the Minister come clean and give all of the facts to the people of Canada and to Parliament?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have come clean and I am coming clean this morning again. On the Saturday, the 28th, we got samples, one from St. Peters, seven additional from the Atlantic. We looked at the destinations. We looked at the routing.

At the fish lab in Prince Edward Island the lab was preparing extracts. Those extracts were sent to Ottawa to Dr. Todd by Canadian International. They were picked up on Sunday. We identified the leases. We identified the maps. On Sunday we interviewed a person by the name of Wayne in Charlottetown from our Department, went and interviewed illness complaints on three people. We then looked at the fisheries, at the bills of lading, the shipping records. It was on that basis and that information and that activity on that weekend, that is why the stop order came.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON TIME OF TESTING

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I would like him to think back to his words in this Chamber when he said, in answer to a question from me on December 8:

> The Member talks about Saturday. Dr. Todd received those samples from Prince Edward Island at 8.15 p.m. upon which testing began that evening—
> On Sunday, after the testing through the night—

The Minister claimed that there was testing through the night yet we heard yesterday from officials in his own Department that absolutely no testing was done on the weekend.

Who is telling the truth—his scientist, Dr. Todd, or the Minister who is involved in this cover-up?

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am not involved in any cover-up, nor is Dr. Todd trying to give any information differently from any information that he has.

Ms. Copps: He is telling the truth.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): What I said on December 8 and what the Member has quoted in Hansard is the information that I received. I think there was a handout yesterday at the press conference, in which, if she takes a look, if the Member takes a look under the Saturday, the investigation continues. I said, and I have tried to explain today again, that there are two types of investigations in this type of information. One is the lab testing. The other is the testing on the street as well as what I made available in terms of Prince Edward Island on the Saturday.

Mr. Speaker, I have been very open about that, I have been very clear about that. What the Hon. Member does not want to accept is that there are two streams of this testing that has to take place, that we have to get the evidence in order that we can make the medical link. Mr. Speaker, that happens in our labs, in our hospitals, every day of the week. That happens in medical laboratories every moment of my life. And that is a constant part of medicine and medical science.

Mr. Speaker, I have put all the facts forward. I would hope that she would at least understand that there is a medical science discipline that they have followed and which I, as a Minister, have to follow.

Ms. Copps: Please don't hide behind his officials, I would ask the Minister, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member knows that despite the seriousness of this matter the imputation of motive is not appropriate. It may well be that in argument at another time the Hon. Member may wish to draw some conclusions from the answers which the Minister gives. That is, of course, her privilege at another time. However, I would ask her to put her questions on the basis of the alleged facts which she has available.

I would remind all other Hon. Members that we have had a great many questions on this issue. The Chair has made very considerable effort to ensure that the Opposition not only has the right to ask these questions but is given every chance to exercise its duty. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

TESTING OF MICE IN OTTAWA—SCIENTIST'S STATEMENT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday we learned from Dr. Todd that, contrary to the claims made by the Minister in this House on December 9, all of the mice which were injected with toxin in Ottawa died. In fact, the situation was so serious that this scientist said it was the first time in his living memory that in the testing of food toxins all the mice died. I would like to quote: "We had three samples and two mice were sampled and all of the mice died, six out of six". Why did the Minister tell this House on December 9 that only a small ratio of the mice in fact died?

• (1130)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, again, I have given that information to the House and to the Hon. Member. I have given the number of mice that were tested. What the Hon. Member is referring to, and I have the Todd transcript here as well, was the one test, the one sample of testing. That is what the Hon. Member is referring to. I have not denied that.

What I have been saying throughout, just, as if she says that is valid, then it is surely as valid for me to say that as we are looking at the entire testing range, which my scientists are doing, that of the 336 mice we have tested, 93 have died.

Ms. Copps: Seventeen people are in the hospital.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The point I am making is that it was on the basis of the development of that medical evidence that action was taken. Surely, that is how medical evidence is gathered. That is how information comes through the line in the Department from the Assistant Deputy Minister of Health Protection Branch to the Deputy Minister, to the Minister.

Ms. Copps: You are passing the buck.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I am not passing any buck.

Ms. Copps: You certainly are. You are responsible.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): One thing I am telling you, Mr. Speaker, and that is this—and I am not hiding behind anyone—what I can only do is act even on an allegation, on a fact. I cannot have the clairvoyance of being able to take an action on which I know nothing about.

VALIDITY OF PROCEDURES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's answers, I regret to say, grow increasingly unconvincing.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: We were prepared yesterday to listen to the Minister who seems to be relying on scientific opinion for part of our concerns which he was addressing. But I want to ask him to reconsider what he has just said now. Dr. Todd, the expert in the field, who conducted the tests on Friday—all six have died in these particular tests he is referring to—said never before has there been a wait for such a period of time to take action in terms of warning after six mice died. He said:

> . . . there had never been another case in which the department waited so long to issue an alert after all lab animals died.

He even went on to say pretty directly that maybe they should have taken action then, in retrospect, he said.

Clearly, this is his professional judgment. These are six specific tests. He is saying retrospectively that it is serious. He, retrospectively, ought to have acted. Since it is this professional's opinion that maybe they ought to have done something that could have headed off very serious harm, we hope no more than that for other Canadians, will the Minister now acknowledge that the procedures were wrong and he ought to accept responsibility for those procedures?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. gentleman is quoting from a newspaper article in the Toronto Sun. Let us go back to Dr. Todd's exact words of what he said yesterday. Let us keep this in mind because we are trying to get the full story out. I am not trying to hide any part of the story. On page 42 of the Steno Tran, of the information, Mr. Speaker, this is exactly what Dr. Todd says. He was being asked this question about warning the public, just as the Hon. Member has mentioned, and he says, and I will read in part because of the time.

> In answer to your question, should there be a change or should, if mouse deaths occur in the future, I think we would have to look at that in the picture. I think if we had seen the same picture now, maybe we would have, but that is, you know . . . In retrospect—

The Member says that should the procedures be changed. I said yesterday to him in his question I think it is a perfectly valid question. Obviously, we have to take a look again how can we improve procedures. But what I want him to understand and accept as well is that a Minister, standing in his or her place here, has to have some information in order to be able to exercise judgment. If I have none, then I cannot exercise judgment.

In terms of the process of whether the information should have gone more quickly, I think that is a valid question.

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows very well the traditions of ministerial responsibility for his Department.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister now has a senior scientific person who is acknowledging that given six deaths after six tests on a Friday that, in his judgment, he is clearly implying—there is no doubt about that, even from what the Minister has just read out—that they ought to have taken different steps, I say to the Minister, given the fact that one Canadian has died, many, many others are sick, why doesn't this Minister admit his Department was wrong? Why doesn't he accept responsibility for this serious error and submit his resignation? That is the tradition in this Parliament.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, again the Member mentioned six tests. I think we have to be careful when he refers to six tests. The six mice that were used were from the same sample. Even the word "samples" has to be clearly understood in any testing. That is why, when we look at when Dr. Todd was doing those tests, he wanted to get samples not only that were on store shelves or in wholesalers bins, but from the mussel beds themselves. That was gone through yesterday as well.

So when the hon. gentleman says that there were six tests, he has to be very careful with the words and give the impression that there was a wide range of sample available and that six tests were done. That was not the case.

ACTUAL METHOD OF PROCEDURE—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has indicated that perhaps he will change the process. He said the same thing yesterday.

For the benefit of the House, would he clarify his intentions for the future and indicate whether—after this kind of tests, officials decide to stop shipments of such product—he intends to stop sales at the very same moment?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, again I think that is a valid question, and I want to take the Member through this very carefully. Under the Food and Drug Act, the officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare have to be able to develop a scientific evidentiary line. That is what they were doing. In terms of taking additional action, and today I have taken again additional action, not on the basis of the Food and Drug Act, but on the basis as a Minister of Health that I am able under the Health and Welfare Act to warn Canadians of a possible health danger. So there has been an alert even extended further today, for example, to include shellfish.

What I am trying to convey to the hon. gentleman, the decision that was taken today, the information came to the Department at 9.15 this morning and I made the decision at 9.18. I made it on the basis that we had the mussel incident, we had the clam evidence yesterday, and the action that was taken, and the alert today on shellfish. But I had an evidentiary track that gave me information that I could make a decision under the Health and Welfare Act. I did not have any information—I repeat to the Hon. Member—I did not have any information given to me prior to the Monday, which I told the Hon. Member about, and the alert after the medical evidence had been together on the Tuesday.

I have been totally open, totally frank with it. I have nothing to hide, nor am I trying to hide anything. But I want the Hon. Member to understand, and the people of Canada to understand, that a Minister can only act on the basis of evidence. That is why today's decision was made on the basis differently from the one on the Tuesday, and I think any reasonable person could understand why.

HEALTH OF CANADIANS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, on Saturday evening, November 28, Mr. Pomeroy of Montreal ate mussels because he was unaware of the danger involved. Yet 24 hours earlier, the day before, November 27, the lab mice tested by Health and Welfare Canada had all died as a result of toxins in the mussels.

I should like to know how the Minister, responsible as he is for the health of Canadians, can justify waiting four days—until 6.45 p.m. on December 1—before sounding general alarm. Why did the Minister choose to play Russian roulette with the health of Canadians, and why is he still hanging on to his ministerial portfolio now that he has lost the confidence of Canadians?

• (1140)

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am not playing Russian roulette with any person, with any person's life. What I am doing, on the Sunday, the stop shipment order which we have discussed in this House many times—

Ms. Copps: Which you did not know about.

An Hon. Member: Shut your mouth.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): —was a containment order—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must remind the colleagues of the Minister that they are not making it any easier for him to handle a difficult situation. I would ask that Hon. Members refrain from making comments unless they are recognized.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Just to finish my answer, on the Sunday, and the information that I gave when his Leader asked me for additional information on the Saturday and Sunday, which I gave, the stop shipment order is a containment activity by the Department, where there were approximately 30,000 pounds of mussels to be shipped, ready for shipment. We said to stop the shipment, we are investigating. That is what happened on the Sunday. That is logical. That is the way the Department has functioned and that is the way I have got to accept it, and I would suggest that he would accept it.

In the terms of bringing in the death of Mr. Pomeroy, probably nobody, other than the family, feels as badly about as I do. If I could have done something differently, or would have known something, I would have done something differently. I did not have that information.

[Translation]

RESULTS OF LABORATORY EXPERIMENTS—MINISTER'S OBLIGATION TO KNOW THEM AND TO MAKE THEM PUBLIC

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, that the Minister should tell us that he thought stopping the shipments was enough is simply incredible. Everybody knows there were hundreds of pounds of mussels across the country in refrigerators at restaurants and stores. That is what the Minister fails to understand.

It is unacceptable that the Minister was not informed immediately of the results of laboratory experiments that were already sufficiently conclusive to justify a public alert on November 27. It is unthinkable that the Minister should tolerate this lack of communication within his Department and with the public. And yet the Minister insists he didn't know!

Well, I would like to ask him whether he doesn't think he should have known and above all, should have informed the public.

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I go back to the stop shipment in which I say to my colleague that that is not an unusual procedure. That is a regular part of the procedures the Department uses and so that we would not have further spread of the mussels until we had our medical evidence.

If there is a better method to do the communications, on the basis of hindsight and on the basis of that experience, of course that is my responsibility and the Department's to improve on that. But I think we have to keep it in perspective and look at it as the dates developed rather than making the judgments as he did so easily or so conclusively from his mind that everybody knew and everybody could predict both in science and medicine every eventuality.

SHIPMENT STOP ORDER—TIMING OF PUBLIC WARNING

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, as a microbiologist who has in fact carried out this test for Gonyaulax, I must say that what we see here is an excess of scientific caution and a paucity of common sense and urgency.

Was there any other reason in the world for stopping the shipment of mussels on Sunday than the demonstration of the presence of a toxin in mussels on Friday, mussels that were already on the market? If it was justifiable to stop shipments, it was therefore justifiable to warn the public that there were mussels on the shelves already that contained the toxin.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Very quickly, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure the Member as a professional would also recognize that the test that was done was on the paralytic shell poisoning test and he knows the details as to how that test affects mice, for example, in the tests that there were done. What we do not have, and to this day—and he as a microbiologist would also know that the evidence today that the toxin still has not been isolated. Surely he as a microbiologist, in his professional experience, did not have instantaneous information but used the lab, his microscopes, used his analytical machinery to try to get exactly those answers. Surely that is what he did every day of his life in his professional life, and that is what we have done.

REASON FOR NOT ISSUING PUBLIC ALERT OVER WEEKEND

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, all of this pseudo scientific gobbledegook has missed the point of the question all together. There having been no tests carried out since, was there any reason at all, other than the fact that mussels from the Montreal episode were tested and found to kill six out of six mice, for stopping the shipment of mussels on Sunday? The mussels on the market were those in which it was demonstrated there was a problem, not the mussels still to be tested.

If the shipment of mussels that were not on the market yet and on which no tests were carried out were to be stopped, does it not make sense to warn the people that it has been ascertained that some of the mussels on the market which have made people ill are potentially there for people yet to consume? Would it not have been appropriate to say that there are mussels on the market that contain something that kills mice at least?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Again, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman—I can only repeat the answers that I have given and that is the testing that was done, in the minds of the scientists, that that was not conclusive to the point that he has taken it, that is that the Hon. Member has taken it in Question Period. Obviously that is why additional testing took place. That is why additional street work took place, investigatory work took place. I have laid that all out in front of the House, in front of the country, and I think the hon. gentleman has to accept it that that is what professionals with 18 years of experience in the case of Dr. Todd, that is what they were doing.

LABOUR RELATIONS

AIR CANADA STRIKE—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT APPOINT MEDIATOR

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Labour my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the Air Canada labour dispute which is a matter of concern to a great many Canadians.

In spite of the fact that negotiations have started again, will the Deputy Prime Minister give the House his assurance that in the event the Government senses that rapid progress is not being made in the negotiations toward a settlement, the Government will immediately appoint a mediator in this dispute?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the two parties got together last Wednesday, I believe. To my knowledge the talks are continuing and I think that should be a good sign. This occurred as a result of an initiative taken by the Minister of Labour.

Obviously the Minister of Labour is watching the situation very closely and, as he has indicated in previous times, he will be prepared to assist in any way to expedite and facilitate a satisfactory resolution to this unfortunate situation. I can only assure the Hon. Member that that ever watchful eye of the Minister of Labour will continue to observe the situation and I am sure he will be providing the encouragement for a quick settlement.

HEALTH

TOXIC MUSSELS—RESULTS OF MICE TESTS—INFORMATION NOT PROVIDED TO MINISTER

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It is a very serious situation we are in here today, both as far as the industry is concerned and indeed as far as consumers are concerned.

On Friday, November 28, at 7.00, all the mice that were tested died in the labs in Ottawa as well as in Black's Harbour, New Brunswick. Now the Minister is trying to cloud the issue just a bit here, because he mentioned there were 336 mice tested and 93 had died. To date 336 mice have been tested, and he is absolutely correct that 93 have died.

• (1150)

But up until Sunday there were only the mice tested only in Black's Harbour and the mice tested in Ottawa, and each and every one of them died. The Minister states that the testing was for PSP, but there was a toxic agent, a dinoflagellate or something there, that, when it was injected into those mice, killed every one. It is very serious when there is a 100 per cent kill.

Does the Minister not think with that type of evidence, never mind this testing of epidemiology and going around and surveying to see how many people are sick, but with the lab results alone, that this evidence was certainly strong enough in every way it was looked at, that the Minister should have been informed, and the Minister should have acted and taken the mussels off the shelves in wholesalers and in restaurants, and alerted people to the serious danger of this toxin, regardless of what the toxin was in these mussels?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I think, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. gentleman puts forward a case which I have looked at and have put forward as well in the sense of the testing that was taking place and the medical evidence.

The Member mentions that six out of six was conclusive proof. Obviously in the minds of scientists and Dr. Todd at the time, that was not enough scientific proof to send that message up the chain of command. Obviously, it was not.

I am saying to the hon. gentleman, and I am not trying to be personal in any way, he knows as a former Fisheries Minister how anyone would want to, from a scientific point of view, get the best information, and Dr. Todd, on the Friday, obviously was not convinced to send the information up the chain in terms of the information that he had.

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY—ISSUANCE OF PUBLIC WARNING

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, there is no other way to look at it but as extremely serious. The Minister has to take responsibility for his departmental officials. That is recognized as with any Minister of the Crown of the Government of Canada, or any provincial Minister. The buck stops at the Minister's desk. People were sick. The mussel industry itself, until we find the problem, is going to be devastated, and the more people who get sick, the more devastation for the industry, and it should have been stopped forthwith. It should have been stopped on Friday night.

I ask the Minister if he does not agree that it should have been stopped on Friday night, or certainly Saturday morning, and at the very latest when the stop order was issued for shipment of mussels from Prince Edward Island, that it should have been followed up immediately simultaneously with a stop order for the sale of mussels in every wholesaling unit and every retail outlet in Canada?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I tried to answer that as well, and I went back, for example, to the fact whether the Department should have informed earlier, or whether the communication should be different, or whether the Department should not rely, for example, quite as heavily on the evidentiary link that we have talked about here.

What I say to the Hon. Member, as I said to the Leader of the NDP, for example, that yes, obviously I am going to look at every procedure, every scientific procedure and see how we can improve it. But I say to the hon. gentleman as well that whatever improvement can be made, it will be made. But I want him to understand, as I say, as a former Fisheries Minister, what the procedures were, because he relied on them equally in order both to protect human life, which is my job—that is my job, and I don't pass the buck, it stops at my desk—but I say to him as well that it is not as clear as he would like to characterize it on the Friday, which he used in his question.

ISSUANCE OF STOP SHIPMENT ORDER

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As I understand it on the Friday of the tests where six out of six mice died, those were tests on mussels that were already on the market. Two days later the Ministry issued a "stop shipment" order on mussels that were not even tested.

I want to know from the Minister why they issued a "stop shipment" order on mussels that were not tested, but did not warn the public about the poisonous mussels that were already on the market and being consumed by Canadians in restaurants and elsewhere.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I can go through the chronology again on the Saturday and Sunday, but possibly for preservation of time, I won't.

What I say to the Hon. Member is that the "stop shipment" order is a containment order, namely, that mussels or any other product does not get on the market until the Department has got the evidence that it needed. That is why the order on Sunday, that was in the judgment of the Department. As they got the evidence, they made that evidence available to me, and I acted.

ISSUANCE OF PUBLIC WARNING—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, even Dr. Todd with his tremendous experience in this field appears to have had second thoughts about what has happened.

I wonder if the Minister, on reviewing the evidence, may now have some second thoughts, and whether or not he will admit in this House that he should have issued a warning to the public two or three days before he actually did.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think it comes back to the point that I quoted of Dr. Todd, that all of us will look at procedures again. But I say to the hon. gentleman, he's been in this House a long period of time, I think he would give, whether it is a Minister or any Member of the House, at least the ability to make a decision on information, on a fact, possibly even acting on an allegation. None of those were conveyed to me. And I don't have the ability of clairvoyance, which I have said earlier, to be able to make a decision if no information has been conveyed to me.

The question of procedures is valid. His Leader raised that yesterday. That is valid. But I think it has to be put in the context in which his Leader put it yesterday, rather than somehow a human being has to have the ability to make a decision or take an action without even being informed.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SALARIES OF REGISTERED NURSES

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Some days ago I asked him about the unacceptable results of a decision of the Canadian Human Rights Commission which has meant that registered nurses working for the federal Government are in fact earning less than the nursing assistants who work for them.

I wonder if the Minister can advise the House of any progress in resolving this inequitable situation.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate the Hon. Member's continuing interest in this matter. As I pointed out to him at the time he raised it, there had been a number of discussions and negotiations between the Treasury Board officials and the officials of the Professional Institute of the Public Service. I am pleased to report that, as of Tuesday, I believe this Tuesday, a tentative agreement was reached, and it is subject to ratification. Judging from the atmosphere during those negotiations, I am hopeful and optimistic that it will be ratified in a very satisfactory manner.

HEALTH

TOXIC MUSSELS—MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE OF TEST RESULTS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

He knows, Mr. Speaker, that knowledge of this incident is crucial, and equally so if the Minister was not aware of certain facts. That too is a very serious allegation in view of the circumstances.

I want to ask the Minister to clarify for the House, is he saying that he knew on that Friday, November 27, that after testing here in Ottawa, and after testing in Blacks Harbour, New Brunswick, where six out of six mice died from this toxin, 100 per cent, not 50, not 40, but 100 per cent—that the Minister knew of this information and did not act to inform Canadian consumers? Would he answer that question?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have answered it many, many times. I answer it again in the negative just as I have done many, many times.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. I say to the Prime Minister, and I ask the Prime Minister, that this is one of the worst forms of incompetence and gross negligence by a federal Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member may well have that opinion, but I am sure that he would want to set the facts out, or the alleged facts, upon which he bases his question. The Hon. Member.

• (1200)

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I ask the Prime Minister if he will not call for the resignation of his Minister of National Health and Welfare. If he is not prepared to do that, in view of the fact of glaring, obvious information, would he not now appoint a public inquiry or a judicial inquiry into the seriousness of a situation which has caused the death of one Canadian, sickness among many, many, and the ruination of an industry?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in terms of the information, the Hon. Member can be referred again to the information that was given by the Assistant Deputy Minister, Health Protection Branch. He was asked the question: "What is the process for notifying the Minister when something like this is going on?"

"In the vast majority of cases, as you perhaps know from the briefing that we have had, the Minister is not involved at all simply because either the problem is contained, a manufacturer agrees that he has a problem, agrees to withdraw the material, and the likelihood of more illness or whatever is somehow or other resolved. If there are other situations where we cannot withdraw it or there is material that is left with a consumer, those are the instances where we want to go public and alert the consumer and try and use the media as a means of distributing a message, a health alert. Those instances are the ones where the Minister is involved in an 'operational' sort of sense. The Minister is apprised of aggravated investigations that we carry out".

That is exactly what happened. I acted exactly on that basis. If we can improve the procedures, obviously we will do it.

But, Mr. Speaker, let us all remind ourselves of the fact that in medicine and in science there has to be some information, and my officials are developing that information. I respect that, and I hope that Members would also respect that these people, when they had the information, to the best of their ability they gave it to me and I acted immediately on the information given.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question of Question Period. I would ask the Hon. Member for Beaches to make his questions relatively short, given the time.

REASON FOR ISSUING STOP SHIPMENT ORDER

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Health. Was there any other reason for stopping the shipment of mussels on Sunday than the positive tests obtained from the mussels tested on Friday which, as the Minister is aware, were already on the market?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker, there was additional information. I gave that earlier. I can go through that again.

On November 28, on Saturday, samples were gathered. One from St. Peters, seven from additional Atlantic areas. Destination routing was done. Lab preparation was done in Charlottetown, was sent here to Ottawa to Dr. Todd's with Canadian International, was picked up on Sunday, identified leases. We did the maps. We also did the records, the shipping records. We tracked those. We also went on the street in Charlottetown. We interviewed people with complaints, three as I mentioned earlier, by a member of my Department.

That was all done, and it was on that basis plus the lab work that the stop shipment order was made.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member on a short supplementary question.

POSSIBLE ERROR IN JUDGMENT—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have a very short question for the same Minister. Would the Minister not agree that to any impartial observer of what happened in the last week it would appear that there has been an error in judgment? Would the Minister not also agree that, while most reasonable people are quite prepared to forgive an error in judgment, it is quite something else to have a Minister defending the indefensible, that is, to defend that error rather than admit it?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have already said to the gentleman and to his Leader, yesterday and today, that if we can improve procedures obviously that is going to be done. That is being done, but again I come back to him and say this: let us also not throw out procedures which have worked very well for the protection of health of Canadians and, if we can improve on that, we will do that, but let's keep that balance in mind as well.

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

TABLING OF REPORT OF CANADIAN DELEGATION AT CONFERENCE ON DRUG ABUSE AND ILLICIT TRAFFICKING

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 101, I have the honour to present to the House, in both official languages, the sixth report of the Canadian Group of the Interparliamentary Union, the report of the official parliamentary delegation which represented Canada at the Interparliamentary Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking in the Western Hemisphere in Caracas, Venezuela, from November 9 to 13, 1987.

In view of the importance of this topic and the role played by the Canadian delegation at this international conference, I wish to speak briefly to the report if I may.

First I would like to acknowledge the contribution of the other delegates to this conference—the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy), Senator Lorne Bonnell, and Paul Rosenbaum of the Library of Parliament, adviser to the delegation.

This conference was of importance for it marked the first time parliamentarians from western hemispheric countries gathered to discuss drug abuse and the illicit traffic in drugs. The conference was historic in that it considered drug abuse problems from what has been termed a balanced approach. The focus was not only on controlling supply through increased interdiction and domestic law enforcement, but also on the need to reduce the demand for drugs and to take steps nationally and internationally to restrict production and trafficking in illicit drugs.

Canada has clearly recognized the need to adopt a truly balanced approach. Through our participation in this conference we recognized the role Canada can play in assisting other nations to develop and implement their own programs, while at the same we reconfirmed the value of the Canadian approach to preventing drug abuse problems.

This balanced Canadian approach to drug abuse problems has been recently articulated in the national drug strategy and in last month's report of the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare. Canada has recognized that drug abuse is not limited to one drug or class of drugs, nor can it be dealt with simply by imposing increasingly harsh penalties on those who abuse illicit drugs. Through our participation in this western hemispheric conference we became more appreciative of the work Canada is doing internationally and the potential for additional Canadian contributions in preventing drug abuse problems.

Through additional bilateral agreements and through collaborative efforts with international bodies, especially the United Nations, Canada can assist other nations to develop drug abuse prevention programs that are effective in reducing the demand for drugs, in developing culturally relevant treatment programs, in assisting nations to draft laws consistent with international standards of justice, in the training of customs and law enforcement personnel and in many other areas.

There are clear differences between the approach to drug abuse taken by Canadians and that taken by some other nations. While recognizing and respecting these differences, it is also important that Canada clearly state its position. This is especially true with regard to the need to work internationally to reduce illicit drug production, to restrict the trafficking in illicit drugs and to take steps to reduce the demand—

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member except to say that the Hon. Member has probably gone on well beyond the ordinary constraints of introducing a report. However, in view of the very great importance of the report I was constrained from interrupting, but I do hope that Hon. Members will keep in mind that if they go on overly long other Hon. Members will, of course, ask for equal time.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

CALL FOR GENERAL ELECTION ON CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the struggle starts now. I have the first of many petitions on the free trade agreement.

The petitioners say as follows: Whereas the trade agreement negotiated by the Mulroney Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to control effectively foreign ownership to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians or to equalize opportunities between regions, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

I propose to table this petition, and I will have many more to come.

SUPPORT FOR BILL C-55

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition signed by 64 Calgarians in support of the refugee Bill, Bill C-55. The petitioners call upon the Parliament of Canada to restore a system of fairness, justice and expediency by supporting Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act.

COMPENSATION FOR FRED TURNER

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton—Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by approximately 20 people from the Northwest Territories, northern British Columbia and Alberta with respect to Fred Turner. Putting it in one sentence, they ask that justice be rendered to him. The House is very much familiar with the matter, Your Honour.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I have discussed privately on at least two occasions with the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) the fact that the rules of the House have not been complied with since Question No. 208, standing in my name, dated October 15, 1987 has not been responded to. You will know, with your vast knowledge of the rules, Mr. Speaker, that that response was necessary on or before November 30.

I know that the Minister of State himself has probably tried very hard to get the answer, but it appears that he is not the culprit. It is, rather, the Minister of whom I am asking the question.

When will the answer be forthcoming and when will the rules of this House calling for an answer in 45 days be respected in relation to Question No. 208?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, my colleague is correct in his statement of the facts. I have made inquiries with respect to the answer. I was assured that we would have it for delivery today. We do not.

I can assure the Hon. Member that inquiries will be made more forcefully, and we will get the answer as soon as we can.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I want to draw your attention to the last comment made by the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis). Without belabouring the point, some months ago the Speaker took under deliberation some comments of mine regarding the present Standing Orders and the request made by Members for an answer to an Order Paper Question within 45 days. In my view there is no remedy available to us or the Speaker with respect to getting the Government to respond. I think it would be appropriate for the Government to say: "I am sorry, we will do our best". That is the spirit in which the Minister of State is responding today.

• (1220)

I just wonder if you could ask the standing committee responsible for the rules of this House to possibly tighten up that rule so indeed the Government is compelled to answer within 45 days.

Mr. Speaker: As Hon. Members know, the Chair is not really in a position to act unilaterally on this. As the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) pointed out, the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) has been quite frank in saying that he will do everything he can to remedy this situation. I can say to the Hon. Member that I will ensure that an extract from today's Hansard on this point is brought to the committee's attention.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to tar everyone with the same brush. Some Ministers do respond to questions within the required amount of time. If they do not, they usually do forthwith, within one day, when they are alerted. However, I must regretfully say that when questions are asked of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse), we seldom if ever get a reply on time. We seldom even get it when it is late and we ask about it in the House.

I know I ask more questions than some Hon. Members, perhaps more than any other Member, and I want to point out that some Ministers do obey the rules. I did not want this occasion to go by without recording the fact that that is very much appreciated. However, there are culprits who should be exposed.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I think it is unfortunate that this master is brought up when the Minister is not here. It would be better to deal with it when he is.

Mr. Boudria: All Members are here. It is against the rules to say otherwise.

Mr. Hawkes: I would point out that there was a very important energy conference in Montreal all week dealing with a lot of energy initiatives relating to the final print of the text of the free trade. It was not a normal week for the Minister, and on his behalf I think that should be part of the record of today's proceedings.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, as is his duty, has spoken well on behalf of the Minister. I say to the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) that this part of Hansard will also be brought to the attention of others.

I am still in the position of having to ask if all other questions shall stand.

Mr. Gauthier: On division.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that, despite the concern, I do have agreement from the House although I did hear someone say "on division". Perhaps in spite of that we still have agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 29(1)

[English]

HEALTH

TOXIC MUSSELS—DISCHARGE OF MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Speaker: I want to bring to the attention of the House the fact that I have received from the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) the appropriate notice in writing under Standing Order 29 of a motion to adjourn the House for the purpose of an emergency debate with respect to an issue the House has been hearing about for some days now, what you could call, I suppose, the toxic mussel situation.

I know the Hon. Member has some remarks to make and, in doing so, she will be constrained by the usual understanding that the Chair will hear enough from the Hon. Member so that the application is fully in front of the House.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your giving us notice of the motion which my hon. friend is about to move. I would draw the attention of the House to Standing Order 29(3) which says:

> When requesting leave to propose such a motion, the Member shall rise in his or her place and present without argument the statement referred to in section (2) of this Standing Order.

Mr. Gauthier: The Speaker will look to that.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) is reading the rule. I hope that from my preliminary comment, the Hon. Member will keep that in mind.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I served notice this morning of my intention to ask the Speaker, who is certainly very knowledgeable in these areas, for the chance to give urgent consideration to the question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare's (Mr. Epp) handling of the toxic mussel situation.

I think the contradictions have been well outlined in the House. He has made statements which are at variance with the facts on a number of occasions, first, relating to the time the testing occurred; second, relating to the number of mice that were killed as a result of toxic injections; third, as a result of his—

Mr. Hawkes: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I believe Standing Order 29(3) anticipates that the Hon. Member will present the statement presented to the Speaker at least one hour ago. Surely there should be no latitude of the kind we are currently experiencing. We brought the rule to the Hon. Member's attention—

Ms. Copps: He is the Speaker.

Mr. Dick: You are the mouth.

Mr. Hawkes: —before she got the floor. We expected to hear the statement presented to you one hour ago rather than this free-lancing. By implication we are going to get ourselves in a difficult situation if the Standing Order is not adhered to.

Ms. Copps: Who are you, the Speaker?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary has hoisted himself on his own petard. The rules are quite explicit. The Member must present a written statement to the Speaker one hour before raising it in the House. That has been done. The Member must also, and I will read the Standing Order:

> —present without argument the statement referred to—

I ask that she be allowed to continue presenting the facts without argument. That is what she is doing. I think the Government is being just a little bit too irritable.

Mr. Lewis: No, we are just fed up with the abuse of this Standing Order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has again raised the practice and the rules with respect to a concise statement being made by the Hon. Member seeking an emergency debate. I was listening very carefully and watching the written text I had in front of me. I must say I did not feel, at least up until the point when the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) was interrupted, that she had strayed. She was perhaps setting out some additional facts, but they seemed to be consistent with the point made in writing. However, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East has the sense of the House and I know she would want to be brief. I can assure her that I think I understand the issue she is raising.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. I would just like to point out for the record that even since I served notice of this motion, the Government has gone from a position of doing nothing to a position of today issuing a health alert warning Canadians not to eat any oysters, clams or mussels. I understand that also includes lobsters. I have already had calls to my office from Atlantic Canada on the issue of an over-all alert against all shellfish from Atlantic Canada, whether they be domestically-cultivated or wild. Given that, the Speaker can certainly understand the gravity of the situation.

The Minister can also understand that we in the Opposition are a little confounded when, on the one hand, the Minister has done nothing for several weeks, and, on the other hand, he comes down with this over-all ruling.

I would like the Speaker to consider an emergency debate which would allow us to get the facts on the table. We know Canadians are in hospital. We know some are in comas. One has already died. We believe that it is critical enough that there should be an emergency debate.

• (1230)

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member. As Hon. Members would expect, I have given this application very serious consideration earlier today and while representations were being made by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East. That it is a serious matter is, I think, accepted by all Hon. Members. I think all Members would accept the fact that it is being treated very seriously by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) himself.

I have considered extremely carefully the proper basis upon which an emergency debate ought to be allowed. It is not the intention of the Chair very often to give indications of the reasons for its rulings in such matters because, as Hon. Members know, the reform commission felt that it was perhaps not helpful for the Speaker always to give reasons. The thrust of the Hon. Member's complaint is the conduct of the Hon. Minister and also some concern about procedures within the Department.

Both of those matters may well be extremely important, but given that there have been a number of days of extensive exchange in Question Period in which the Chair gave Hon. Members every possible latitude in asking questions, and in view of the fact that, as the Hon. Member for Hamilton East points out, some action was taken some time ago and further actions have now been taken, I find that I cannot accept the application as one which contains those factors which ought to be shown before an emergency debate is ordered.

However, I say to the Hon. Member for Hamilton East that that does not mean that the Chair looks lightly upon the issue at all. It is just that under these circumstances it would not seem appropriate to the Chair to order an emergency debate.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-87, an Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters and to amend or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties. I wish to advise the House that when the vote is taken on Bill C-87, the business presently before the House, the Government intends to call no further government business this day. I think you would find consent to move immediately to Private Members' Business at that time and proceed with the one hour's debate, or less, whatever it happens to be.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, when I had the floor before Question Period I was making the point that we believe this Bill has become much more important than it was in the past since the Government has decided to establish an economic union between ourselves and the United States. As a result of that it is much more important that Parliament have a say in how tariffs are established. Consequently, it is important that we ensure that our position on this Bill be well established.

Although the Government is establishing a new economic union, or as the President of the United States has called it, a new economic constitution, the Government does not have a mandate to establish free trade. It is important that Parliament controls the economy of the country, the exports from the country and imports into the country, more than it will be able to do under the economic union which is being suggested.

As I have pointed out, the Tories lack the mandate to do what they are doing. They do not have support in the polls to do this. They are changing their position. Traditionally they have opposed such an economic union, and that is the basis on which people thought they were electing them. Only five of the provinces have said that they would approve the free trade agreement and two of those provinces, Saskatchewan under Premier Devine and British Columbia under Premier Vander Zalm, do not have a clear mandate to take that position on behalf of the people of their provinces.

Rather than belabour this issue, I will sit down so that we can proceed to the next order of business.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak on Bill C-87 with regard to the harmonized tariff system. Under ordinary circumstances the Bill would have been treated as a technical one which simply put in place the legal framework for many years of negotiations. It took on a different flavour, however, after an incredibly insensitive statement made by the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) in the House. Less than an hour after debate had commenced he objected to opposition Members asking questions about the content of the Bill.

On December 1, as reported at page 11349 of Hansard the Minister said "—the free trade agreement we are putting together with the United States is designed to achieve—". He then went on to say that that would make motions produced by the Opposition unnecessary. The Minister continued:

> The rules of origin will be stated in detail in our trading agreement with the United States, and will completely rule out the possibility of the concerns . . . produced by the Hon. Member for Humber—Port-au-Port—St. Barbe.

In other words, in response to the very legitimate concerns raised by my colleague, the Member for Humber—Port-au-Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin), the Minister of State was saying that we should not worry, that we should pass this Bill and we will find our answers in an agreement which we had not yet seen but which may be produced in the House in the next week.

• (1240)

Naturally, Mr. Speaker, that was not a statement that was very well received by parliamentarians. However, today the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has tabled in the House the agreement in question, the Canada-U.S. agreement, although Members of Parliament have not yet seen it, which is very interesting. It was tabled at 12 p.m., and an hour later, what we have in our lobbies are volumes of tariff descriptions but not the basic agreement. Apparently, that is still on its way to us.

Nevertheless, since the agreement has finally been made public, obviously the debate on the agreement will now proceed on that basis next week. Therefore, we are at liberty to return today to dealing with Bill C-87, as a technical Bill.

It is a Bill that has been negotiated over many years. At the present time, because of the enormous range of products Canada imports from around the world—everything from fruit and vegetables to television sets—Canada Customs now processes seven million separate import declarations every year in order to collect more than $6 billion in duties and taxes. Canada and its major trading partners, the United States, Japan and the European Economic Community, have after many years of negotiation agreed to implement a new way of coding imported goods which will be based on international standards known as the harmonized commodity description and coding system.

This involves for Canada a fundamental revision of the customs tariff, but theoretically, at the end of the day, we would have a very much faster and more efficient method of dealing with imports. So on January 1 Canada Customs and Excise will start a new system which is based on the most massive overhaul in the history of the custom's clearance process.

The harmonized system of coding goods is the product of 13 years' work by the 56 countries that are members of the Customs Co-operation Council. Also within Canada there has been considerable consultation with trade associations, importers, customs brokers and so on. The computerized network which will make this whole new system work is being called bravely by Customs and Excise RMD, release on minimum documentation. The aim, indeed, is to make the system simpler for the user.

The RMD program will allow importers or their brokers who have previously arranged account security with the Department to have their shipments quickly cleared through customs on presentation of minimal documentation, usually just a cargo control document and an unrated invoice. This change will separate clearly the release of goods from the presentation and review of detailed accounting data and so will reduce the paper work required in order to get release of goods.

Also a new system is being set up called the customs automated data exchange, which is a direct link between Customs and the offices of brokers and importers. Under this new system, data, which must be presented for accounting and statistical reasons five days following the release of goods can be transmitted directly from computer to computer. We are told the CADEX system, as it has been called, the customs automated data exchange, will be implemented as of January 1, 1988.

Implementing this system is expected to save the taxpayer $109 million in the next six years. It is also expected that the streamlining will result in savings of $2.5 million to $3 million annually in administrative costs incurred by Customs and Excise. Naturally, as the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee, I am very happy to see the Governnment moving to reduce some of these administrative costs and I will watch with interest to see if indeed the system works as well as planned.

The proposed new system has been endorsed by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and other interested groups. One of the main changes is that the Bill now classifies goods based on what they are rather than how they are used. The Bill itself is not very large but the schedules accompanying it are enormous. There are several columns in it. Brokers, and especially the small importer, are going to have some problems with new names. For instance, propane torches will become blow lamps, and hoods for automobiles will take on the British name "bonnets", so I hope we do not have the milliners looking through the wrong place in the schedules.

Revenue Canada has been conducting seminars. It has sent out, in addition to the great complex information, some small manageable general information. This information I hold in my hand is headed "New Customs Commercial Procedures to begin on January 1, 1988". The sub headings are: "What will they mean to importers?" "When does it happen?" "Who is involved?" "How can I get more information?" Thousands of these have been distributed. Nevertheless, I think we have to anticipate that with such a very radical changeover as this, there will be problems and the smaller companies, in particular, may have difficulties adapting.

One would hope that the Department of Customs and Excise will be prepared to continue to be helpful to users of the system. We are told that 75,000 brochures were sent out in 1986, that detailed information kits were sent to 10,000 importers, brokers and others, and that some seminars were conducted in all regions of the country. But even the Minister is not anticipating that this will be quite trouble-free as of January 1.

There is a clause in the Bill, Clause 131, which provides broad authority to amend the rates of duty for an 18 month period following implementation. We do not know exactly how this clause will be used, but there is a possibility under the clause to help companies which may be caught unaware by the legislation. Clause 62 provides compensation to another country, which is similar to Section 11 of the existing legislation which has been used to implement the results of GATT negotiations. However, this one is more worrying because of the broad powers it gives the Government, which is worrying in the context of the present Canada-U.S. trade agreement. It reads:

> The Governor in Council may by order, reduce or remove the duties on goods imported into Canada from any country or countries by way of compensation for concessions granted by any such country or countries; and extend the benefits of any order made pursuant to paragraph (a) to any other country or countries as may be required by Canada's international obligations.

In the past, that kind of authority was used simply to give effect to a grievance under GATT. It is worrying to think of that kind of broad authority remaining in this Bill in the context of the Canada-U.S. agreement.

We have seen the Government take the unprecedented step of imposing a duty on our own domestic industries in response to pressure from the United States. We will be watching very carefully to see that Clause 62 is not misused in that way. If it were to be misused to implement the Canada-U.S. trade agreement through the back door, this is something about which members of my Party would be very exercised and would quickly call the Government to account.

One should also mention that although Canada is proceeding with this legislation which takes effect on January 1, the United States has not yet passed similar legislation. It is expected to separate out the clauses responding to the harmonized system from its omnibus trade Bill and therefore pass it separately, but there is no guarantee.

The Government is proceeding on the assumption that the harmonization will occur on January 1, 1988, without a clear guarantee that our major trading partner, the United States, will have a comparable system in effect at the time. If that should be the case, instead of a more orderly and efficient system providing savings to the taxpayer, we will have utter and complete chaos.

The Government likes to get its legislation through first and worry about its effects afterward. For the sake of the country, I hope it knows what it is doing and can manage it.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to say many words on this because I think it is time to force a vote on third reading of this Bill. I see my friend from Calgary running out of the Chamber. I know that he was in a car accident in Switzerland. I would like to tell him not to hurry. I can speak for a few moments until he gets the members of his Party in the House. I am very co-operative.

I do not want to hold up the show because there is other business to deal with today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the motion of Mr. Hockin.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 13(5), the recorded division shall stand deferred until 6 o'clock on Monday, December 14.

It is my understanding that there is unanimous consent to call it 2 o'clock.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.
