Alexander Prince had Them in a Pot in Kennebecasis River Fattening for American Market.

The immense box, pierced with holes for ventilation, was kept floating below the surface, but was carried away in the late gale and wrecked at the scene of the loss. The business very profitable as live cells bring from fifteen to twenty cents a pound, wholesale in the American market.

NOTHING TO BE DONE BY THE GOVERNMENT TO PROMOTE RAILWAY FACILITIES

Hon. Mr. Pugsley Shows How Mr. Borden Is Neglecting Important Plans at East St. John

Danger That G. T. P. Will Have to Wait Until Wharves are Completed Before Road Can Proceed With Its Part of the Work—Ex-Minister of Public Works in Able Speech Exposes Inconsistency of His Opponents.

Several questions of interest to the people of this city and province were discussed last night by Hon. William Pugsley in his speech in the house of commons on November 29. Here follow some portions of his noteworthy address, taken from Hansard.

Mr. Pugsley—As to the carrying out of the Hudson Bay railway, I would remind my right hon. friend the prime minister, that just before the last election, he gave a pledge to the people of St. John with regard to the development of the port of St. John. True, he met the pledge under heavy pressure, true he gave it when the people were making it pretty hot for our Conservative opponents, and when, in order to give the Conservative party any hope whatever in that constituency it seemed to be necessary for the right hon. gentleman to make some promise. Under those circumstances he made a very strong and a very definite promise with regard to harbor improvements, and the right hon. gentleman sent a telegram to the people of St. John telling them that they might depend upon it that if the Conservative party were returned to power there would be no delay, no putting off, and no diminution of the plans for the development of the harbor of St. John. I am happy to know that that pledge has been partially carried out by the minister of public works signing a contract upon which had been called for by the late government for the construction of harbor works in Courtney Bay, and also by signing a contract upon which had been called for by the late government for the construction of wharves on the western side of the harbor. I am pleased also to know that he has continued the work in which the late government was carrying on in the western side of the harbor. But, beyond the works for which the late government had called for tenders and for payment for the work to be carried out, not a single step has been taken by this government towards the development of the harbor of St. John. I am glad to see that the Hon. Mr. Borden has taken the initiative in this regard, and that he has called for tenders for the construction of wharves on the western side of the harbor. I am pleased also to know that he has continued the work in which the late government was carrying on in the western side of the harbor. But, beyond the works for which the late government had called for tenders and for payment for the work to be carried out, not a single step has been taken by this government towards the development of the harbor of St. John. I am glad to see that the Hon. Mr. Borden has taken the initiative in this regard, and that he has called for tenders for the construction of wharves on the western side of the harbor. I am pleased also to know that he has continued the work in which the late government was carrying on in the western side of the harbor.

as to the proper course to pursue, and to vote upon the government's proposition. But so far the house and the people of this country have been kept absolutely in the dark as to the true communication between the ministers and the British government. Only a few days before the election in England my hon. friend the minister of inland revenue, who has been a member of this government for some fourteen months, in addressing a meeting of the electors, told them that he was ignorant as to what the documents would disclose, but that when he had an opportunity of reading them he would make up his mind as to what would be his duty so far as the naval question was concerned. My hon. friend the secretary of state (Mr. Cochrane) who with me was addressing that constituency, succeeded, and I am glad he did succeed, in defeating the Nationalist candidate by such an overwhelming majority, even he, addressing that constituency in the same way as he was not aware of what the documents, as he called them, would disclose, but that after he had had an opportunity of reading them he would make up his mind as to what would be his duty so far as the naval question was concerned. My hon. friend the secretary of state (Mr. Cochrane) who with me was addressing that constituency, succeeded, and I am glad he did succeed, in defeating the Nationalist candidate by such an overwhelming majority, even he, addressing that constituency in the same way as he was not aware of what the documents, as he called them, would disclose, but that after he had had an opportunity of reading them he would make up his mind as to what would be his duty so far as the naval question was concerned.

less they had had reason to believe that it would be the settled policy of this country to construct the Canadian navy, to have ships built in Canada, and that that right of dominion of the dry dock there is ample room to place a shipbuilding plant, and that they would be prepared to make arrangements to enter upon the construction of a shipbuilding plant as large as any which are now in the British navy. They have built many battleships, cruisers and smaller vessels, and they are engaged in the construction of smaller vessels, it is true, but steel vessels, vessels of the character that will be required only they will require to be upon larger scales, and it will not take very long to establish a shipbuilding plant upon the Pacific coast at which the largest vessels can be built. The same will apply to the port of Sydney. When the late government was in power, plans were submitted and proposals were made for the construction of a great dry dock there, and it is recognized universally that the port of Sydney would be an admirable place for the building of ships.

STRONG PLEA FOR A CHILD'S PROTECTIVE ACT

Speakers at Every Day Club Point Out Great Need for Immediate Legislation Along This Line.

Monday, Dec. 2. The series of Sunday afternoon meetings for men at the Every Day Club had an excellent beginning yesterday. Water Brindle spoke on the need in St. John of a Child's Protective Act, in a prison farm, and a home for erring girls of the Protestant faith. He pointed out that the club had set itself to the task of working with definite purpose for needed legislation and needed changes in social conditions. At the same time it hoped to make its rooms in the evenings of benefit to young men.

Before spring he hoped to see a broil-house present on Sunday afternoon that would be a real force for good in this city. Mr. Brindle gave some striking illustrations of the need of work to save little children from parental neglect, and to save men from the misery of drink. The president announced that on Thursday evening next George Scott would open a discussion on the interdict law, and suggested improvements to that measure. Rev. Robert Smart, at last evening's meeting, made an earnest and eloquent plea for the children. After dwelling upon the real meaning of the word "home," he said that there are people in St. John who are homeless. They have no a roof to cover them, but the place is not a home, and in most cases there are little children who are not giving lives. A law is needed for their protection.

The speaker eloquently described the possibilities wrapped up in these young lives. Their future will be a blessing or a curse, according to the influence of an eminent English clergyman who always removed his hat when talking with a boy from the Ragged School in London, because, he said, he did not know what greatness that young life might develop. Mr. Smart made a strong plea for an act of legislation in St. John to ensure the adoption of a Child's Protective Act at the next session of the provincial legislature. Other provinces had such legislation, and it was greatly needed in New Brunswick.

The president said that J. J. Kelso, of Toronto, who was the great promoter of child-welfare in Canada, would probably be in the province at some time during the session of the legislature, and if so an effort should be made to gain a law for his Ragged School in London, the meantime every effort should be made to induce the municipal council to ask for the passage of such an act.

EXPLAINS THAT FARMERS SHOULD KEEP CORE PENS

Poultry Expert Blames Them for Opportunities Missed—Here on Department Business.

W. A. Brown, poultry specialist of the federal department of agriculture, is in the city and is registered at the Royal Hotel. He is in the city on his return from Amherst, where he is attending a meeting for the Maritime Winter Fair which will be held at Amherst, and is at the same time looking into the egg situation in the Maritime provinces. For some time the department have been examining this situation as Canada at this time is importing something like 12,000,000 dozen eggs, which is compared with ten years ago, when the country exported about 8,000,000 dozen.

"I grieve," said Mr. Brown, "like all other articles, have increased very much in value of late years and the people are individually consuming a greater number than ever before. The supply has not kept pace with the demand, and the department is doing its best to find the reason for this condition, and then action will be taken. The dealers all over Canada have been warned by the department to keep a careful record of all the eggs that they handle, and the results of their labors will be investigated by the department of agriculture, and tomorrow shall go round the dealers of this city and get from them particulars regarding the local conditions."

"The farmers are largely to blame for this condition," Mr. Brown said, "as they do not keep enough hens. They ought at least to keep one hen for every acre, but not more than 500 to 700 hens each, as the latter number is about all the farmer and his help can keep efficiently. Should he have this number, and take care of them properly, he will have a very nice addition to his income, and they will work well in with his other possessions in farming. The greatest encouragement to poultry raising is the breeding of pure breeds. A good general purpose stock that will give a uniform egg and a uniform grade should be cultivated."

Mr. Brown added a matter of public interest, "added Mr. Brown, "to know that the November issue of the Census and Statistics Monthly, published by the department of agriculture, will contain an outline of the plans of the department."

A splendid way to improve the appearance of the stock store is to take soap studs after washing clothes and wash the studs all over with the studs. Then use stove polish as usual. The studs can also be garnished with a decorative paper, before making them smooth.

ment and the attention of the people to the deplorable fact that during the last fiscal year, our trade with the United States—this country with which we were to have no truck if we could help it—increased 32 per cent. more than our trade with the United Kingdom. We will now take simply the value of imports from the United Kingdom entered for consumption in 1912, $148,977,222, being an increase over the previous year of $7,419,730. Our imports from all other countries of the world were only $74,520,000, an increase over the previous year of $1,149,570. Our exports for the year 1912 to the United Kingdom were $111,433,413, being an increase of $14,388,242, while our exports to the United States for the same year were $19,558,694, an increase over the previous year of only $1,134,833. You will observe, Mr. Speaker, the startling fact that last year the increase in our trade with the United States over the previous year amounted to seventy-one millions and upwards, and the increase in exports to the same country was only $4,845,000.

The address moved in reply to the speech from the throne is very meagre as to details of the country's present condition, and the practice in recent years, the course adopted in this house, as well as in all deliberative assemblies modelled upon the parliament of Great Britain, to take into detail in regard to the different paragraphs of the speech, it does seem to me that it would have been well if, upon this important subject, the attention of his royal highness had been called to the fact that this question of naval defence is not a new one so far as this parliament is concerned. The resolution of the House of Commons in 1909, which was passed on the 23rd of March, 1909, so that it will again appear in Hansard, and be placed before the people of this country, is a resolution which was as follows: "This House fully recognizes the duty of the people of Canada, as they increase in numbers and wealth, to assume the responsibility of the maintenance of a national defence."

The House reaffirms the opinion, repeatedly expressed by representatives of the people of Canada, that the present constitutional relations between the mother country and the self-governing dominions, the payment of any assisted contributions for the maintenance of the navy and military purposes would not, so far as Canada is concerned, be a satisfactory solution of the question of defence.

The House would cordially approve of any necessary expenditure designed to promote the organization of a navy, and in close relation to the imperial navy, along the lines suggested by the admiralty at the last imperial conference, and in the opinion of Great Britain is essential to the security of commerce, the safety of the empire and the peace of the world.

Does my honorable friend not think that in the speech which his royal highness made at all attention to the fact that the people of this country to the deplorable state of affairs revealed by these statistics? I have actually made our people pay by way of taxes, upon goods imported from the United States, an enormous sum of forty-nine millions and upwards—eleven millions more than was paid out during the previous year. I have actually made our people pay, in the year 1912, from all other countries, an increase over the previous year of $4,845,000. The total income of my honorable friend, the minister of the United Kingdom and from all other countries amounted to $2,500,000, and the increase over the previous year on goods imported from the United States, $1,134,833—the increase in duties on goods brought in from the United States amounting to 500 per cent. more than the year 1911. I have actually made our people pay, in the year 1912, from all other countries, an increase over the previous year of $4,845,000.

My honorable friend ought to look and, indeed, as I look around, the only honorable gentleman who appears to be smiling and happy is my honorable friend, the minister of inland revenue, who has customs duties seem to be ad and thoughtful upon hearing the figures which I have presented to the house. And what condition is that which my honorable friend has denuded now imposed upon the great masses of the people, and reduce the cost of living. I observe, Mr. Speaker, that in the speech from the throne his royal highness has been asked by his advisers to say that he would not be a party to any such a course as that which has been taken in the case of the Hudson Bay railway. I am glad to see that he has taken the initiative in this regard, and that he has called for tenders for the construction of wharves on the western side of the harbor. I am pleased also to know that he has continued the work in which the late government was carrying on in the western side of the harbor.

During the past summer four members of my government conferred in London with his majesty's government on the question of the Hudson Bay railway. Customs look place and conditions have been disclosed which in the opinion of my advisers render it imperative that the railway be built and operated as soon as possible. It is to be strengthened without delay. My hon. friend is convinced that it is the duty of Canada at this juncture to afford reasons for the delay. A bill to introduce a bill will be introduced accordingly.

It appears to me that in a matter of such great importance, and in which the people of Canada are so deeply interested, it would have been reasonable that some information should already have been submitted to this house from which his royal highness could call the attention of the proper course to pursue, and to vote upon the government's proposition. But so far the house and the people of this country have been kept absolutely in the dark as to the true communication between the ministers and the British government. Only a few days before the election in England my hon. friend the minister of inland revenue, who has been a member of this government for some fourteen months, in addressing a meeting of the electors, told them that he was ignorant as to what the documents would disclose, but that when he had an opportunity of reading them he would make up his mind as to what would be his duty so far as the naval question was concerned. My honorable friend ought to look and, indeed, as I look around, the only honorable gentleman who appears to be smiling and happy is my honorable friend, the minister of inland revenue, who has customs duties seem to be ad and thoughtful upon hearing the figures which I have presented to the house. And what condition is that which my honorable friend has denuded now imposed upon the great masses of the people, and reduce the cost of living. I observe, Mr. Speaker, that in the speech from the throne his royal highness has been asked by his advisers to say that he would not be a party to any such a course as that which has been taken in the case of the Hudson Bay railway. I am glad to see that he has taken the initiative in this regard, and that he has called for tenders for the construction of wharves on the western side of the harbor. I am pleased also to know that he has continued the work in which the late government was carrying on in the western side of the harbor.

During the past summer four members of my government conferred in London with his majesty's government on the question of the Hudson Bay railway. Customs look place and conditions have been disclosed which in the opinion of my advisers render it imperative that the railway be built and operated as soon as possible. It is to be strengthened without delay. My hon. friend is convinced that it is the duty of Canada at this juncture to afford reasons for the delay. A bill to introduce a bill will be introduced accordingly.

It appears to me that in a matter of such great importance, and in which the people of Canada are so deeply interested, it would have been reasonable that some information should already have been submitted to this house from which his royal highness could call the attention of other European power except England could send to sea; but the masses of the power of the British fleet would give it a formidable superiority over the German fleet of battle.

This statement refers only to fighting ships of the first class. In those of the second class, in scouts, light cruisers, destroyers, torpedo boats, transports, and colliers, Great Britain's superiority is tremendous. It is noteworthy that on the same day on which it published this clear cut estimate of Great Britain's naval superiority, the Sun in another editorial pays a fine tribute to the British Prime Minister and Sir Edward Grey because of the skill and judgment with which they have handled the Balkan situation.

NOTE AND COMMENT

It is about time the country was told what the government is going to do with the Interloper. There are multiplying signs of a decision to obliterate its identity by giving the company roads access to its best territory on their own terms.

A copy of the London Times, just received, gives details of the debate in the House of Commons on November 22 on the Home Rule bill. The government's majorities on division ranged from 134 to 156.

Liberals who are accused of delaying action in regard to the navy, by discussing the speech from the throne for a few days might well ask why Mr. Borden's government has delayed action since it took office more than a year ago.

Los Angeles is going to add a course in manners to the subjects already taught in the Normal School. Not a bad idea, either. In adopting commission government Los Angeles has established a department whose duties will be broadly humanitarian. The idea is that the city government must do something more than collect taxes and build improvements; it must have to do not only with the health but the comfort and well-being of the people, and the promotion of fair play and equality of opportunity.

Some Conservative journals profess to see a difference between the Willard Laurier's views on the naval question, and those of Sir George Ross. The answer is to be found in this summary of Sir George's speech in the Senate:

"A naval policy on the basis of a contribution was no policy at all. It was like throwing a penny in a beggar's cup. There was a naval policy on the statute books now, and the minister of public works had called for by the late government for the construction of a Canadian navy which would have been built in Canada, and which would have enabled Canada to send ships to the aid of the British cause in the Mediterranean, in Australia, or anywhere in the world where aid was needed. Canada had the maritime people to man a navy, the steel with which to build, and the spirit with which to maintain a navy."

A warning to the protectionist wing of the Conservative party is to be found in the Ottawa Journal (Ind. Con.) It sees in a recent utterance of Industrial Canada, the organ of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, a proposal "to boost the tariff up regardless of the British preference." The Journal says that an attempt to boost the tariff would probably lead to an agitation for lowering it. It adds:

The Journal's idea of the frame of mind of the majority of the Conservative party is that while they believe in protection, they believe in moderate protection only; that they think they have enough of it now; that if the Manufacturers' Association propositions to increase it, and that they could easily be irritated into a readiness to try less. Also, that nothing could so rapidly produce a change in the Conservative mind as to see the moderate degree of protection in force at present as an attack upon the British preference. Our impression, in short, is that if the Manufacturers' Association and its members are wise, they will let well enough alone."

In Canada going to give one hundred millions for naval defence? London evidently thinks so. The Canadian Gazette, London, presents this interesting forecast of Mr. Borden's plan:

"Those who are in the best position to know surmise that the Ministry will propose a sum of $100,000,000 ($200,000,000) to spread over a number of years, and that the sum of $100,000,000 ($200,000,000) will form Canada's immediate contribution to Empire defence. As it costs about two million sterling to build a superior battleship, Canada's emergency will mean the purchase of the latest and most powerful battleships to be immediately built, presumably in British shipyards, and placed at the disposal of the British Admiralty. The vote will be justified by the necessity for more than keeping pace with the increased shipbuilding programme of Germany, and the fact that Mr. Borden will also, it is assumed, be in a position to intimidate the desire of British Ministers that Canada should give the majority of the cost of the Imperial councils—a large share, in fact, as Canadian Ministers may deem to be desirable and necessary. If Canada does not do this, the British Government will withdraw the ships to Canadian waters at any time when her Ministers may deem fitting, the requirements of Canadian control would, it is thought, be adequately met for the moment."

How much, or little, basis there is for his we shall know presently, when Mr. Borden speaks. Meantime it is of interest in showing the policy of expectation to which he has raised the Old Country by his generalities.

"I've just learned a new charm to tell whether or not a man loves you," said the girl with the new hable skirt. "What is it?" asked the girl with the new dress. "Why, you take four or five little seeds and each of them after a particular man and place them after the seeds, I mean—on the stove and the one that pops is the one that loves you." "Oh," mused the girl with the new diamond ring. "I know a surer way than that." "You do?" "Yes, indeed, you do. You take a very little bit of soap in the parlor and sit close to him with the light a little low and look up to him very attentively and if he does not know you know his time to put another one on the sofa."
