POETRY.

The Old School-House.

With the red paint worn from the humble walls,
With its shutterless windows blank and wide,
With never a foot of land of its own
Of the fields about it on every side.

With a rusted lock and a worn door-stone,
The little old school-house to ruin fall,
White the windows and sun throw warp
Against the hinges aken on its roof.

Within, the desks are few and small and straight
And short the stales that run across the floor:
A broken chair, the teacher's vacant throne,
Still keeps its place beside the sagging door.

Through whose wide crack a bright eye
Sometimes shone,
To spy the last when lagging feet
Came late,
But the night is day, and the day is night,
And there's never a teacher or child in sight.

A mile away, where the brown river runs,
The old-time teacher is taking his rest,
Careless if scholars shall work or shall play,
Idle himself, with his hands on his breast,

He has lain in his grave for many a day
And the wind and the rain letter on at will,
Where the old man sleeps on the brow of the hill.

On land and on seas, in field and in town
The old-time pupils are doing their work,
But their eyes are dim and their hair is white,
And the shoulder that pushed now
sain would shrink,
As the school-day lengthens into the night.

But the master Time, and his colleague Fate,
Know no excuse for the boy who is late,
Yet so pervasive are the souls of men,
Though we struggle and strain till hearts shall break
For the prizes we leave when school is done

For the foolish baubles the masters make,
Not one of us would go back--not one
To be a child in the school-house again,
When the jaw and ear
and wool
Against the shingles askew on the roof.

SELECT STORY.

A Life for a Love.

BY L. T. MEADE.

They exchanged a few commonplace. Then Mr George Carmichael, who showed far more uneasiness than his host, explained the motive of his visit.

"You know my father," he said, "owing to a strange circumstance, which perhaps you are aware of, but which scarcely concerns the object of this call, certain papers of importance did not come into my hands until I was of age. These are the papers."

He placed two yellow documents on the table.

"I find by these that I am entitled to money which you hold in trust."

"You are," said Mr Paget, with a kindly smile.

"I am puzzled to know why I was never made aware of the fact. I had no expectations. I have not been educated to meet the position which in reality awaited me. Somebody has done me a wrong."

"I assure you not me, Mr. Carmichael. Perhaps, however, I can throw some light on the subject. If you will do me the favor of dining with me some evening we can talk the matter over at our leisure."

"Thank you, I have very little leisure."

The stranger was wonderfully restless.

"After a struggle I have succeeded in obtaining a good post in Calcutta. I hurried over to see you. I must hurry back to my work. Oh, yes, thanks, I like India. The main point is, when can you hand me over my money. With interest it amounts to--"

"Including interest it amounts to eighty thousand pounds, Mr. Carmichael. Allow me to congratulate you, sir, as a man of fortune. There is no need to hurry back to that beggarly clerkship."

"It's not a clerkship, Mr. Paget, nor beggarly. I'm a partner in a rising concern. The other man's name is Parr; he has a wife and children, and I wouldn't desert him for the world. Eighty thousand pounds! By Jove, won't Parr open his eyes."

Mr George Carmichael was now so excited that his shyness vanished.

"When can I have my money, sir?"
"In a month's time."

"Not until then? I wanted to go back to India next week."

"It can be sent after you."
"A slow suspicious smile crept round the young man's lips; he looked more well-bred than he was."

"None of that," he said. "I don't stir until I get the cheque. I say, can't you give it me at once? It's mine."

"Not a day sooner than a month. I must take that time to realize so large a sum. You shall have it this day month."

"Beastly inconvenience. Parr will be in no end of a taking. I suppose there's no help for it, however."

"None."
"This is the 17th of June. Now your not playing me a trick, are you? You'll pay me over that money all square on the 17th of July."

Mr Paget had an imposing presence. He rose now, slowly, stood on the hearthrug, under his daughter's picture, and looked down at his guest.

"I am sorry for you," he said. "Your education has certainly been imperfect. Your father was a gentleman, and my friend. You, I regret to say, are not a gentleman. I don't repeat my invitation to dine at my house."

With regard to the money it shall be in your hands on the 17th July. I am rather pressed for time this morning. Mr Carmichael, and must ask you to leave me. Stay, however, a moment. You are, of course, prepared to give me all proofs of identity?"

"What do you mean, sir?"

"What I say. The certificate of the marriage of your parents and certificate of the proof that you are the person you represent yourself to be."

"I have letters from your friends in India. No doubt, of course--no doubt who you are, but these things are necessary."

Notwithstanding that he was the owner of eighty thousand pounds, Mr George Carmichael left the august presence of the head of Paget Brothers feeling somewhat crestfallen.

He had scarcely done so before Helps rushed in.

"A cable, sir! Praise the Lord, a cable at last!"

He thrust the sheet of paper into his employer's hands. It came from Melbourne, and bore the date of the day before.

"Expectation arrived safely. Delay caused by broken machinery. Accident of a painful nature on board. Full particulars by mail."
JELLYBY.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

Mr Paget was most careful that the full contents of the cable did not go to his daughter at Jewsbury-on-the-Wold. He read it three or four times, then he took up a telegraph form and wired to her as follows--

"Expectation arrived safely. Delay caused by injury to machinery. This telegram caused intense rejoicing at the rectory, and Mr Paget had his gloomy part to himself. He congratulated that part over and over."

A serious accident. To whom? About whom? What a fool that Jellyby was not to have given him more particulars. Why did that part of the cablegram fill him with consternation? Why should he feel so certain that the accident in question referred to his son-in-law? Well, he must wait over a month for news, and during that month he must collect together eighty thousand pounds. Surely he had enough to think of. Why should his thoughts revert to Wyndham with an ever increasing dread?

"Wyndham is safe enough," he said. "Jolly enough, too. I make no doubt, if his money waits for him at Ballarat. Of course bad news will come, but I shall see through it. Oh, yes, I shall see through it fast enough."

Days of suspense are hard days--long and weary days. As these days crept one by one away Mr Paget became by no means an easy person to live with. His temper grew morose, he was irritable, manifestly ill at ease, and he would often for hours scarcely utter a word.

The 17th of July passed. Mr Carmichael again called for his money. A part was paid to him, the balance the head of the great shipping firm assured the young man could not possibly be forthcoming for another month or six weeks.

"I am sorry," Mr Paget said, "extremely sorry not to be able to fulfill my word to the letter. But I must have time to realize such a large sum, and I greatly fear I must claim it."

Mr Carmichael had a cheque in his hand for ten thousand pounds. He could scarcely feel discontented at such a moment, and took his departure grumbling but elated.

"Helps," said Mr Paget, "I have taken that ten thousand pounds out of the business, and it can ill afford to lose it. If news does not come soon we are undone, and all our plotting and planning won't save the old place nor the honor of the old house."

"No fear," muttered Helps. "The news will come. I have had dreams at night. The house will be saved. Don't you fret, Mr Paget."

He went out of the room looking as morose and ugly as possible, and Mortimer Paget heeled to blessings after him.

The next day was fraught with tidings. A thick packet lay on the chief's desk, bearing the imprint of the Esperance on it. By the side of the packet was a telegram. He opened the telegram first--

"Jewsbury-on-the-Wold, 10 A. M.
"Valentine had a son this morning. Both did well."

The tears absolutely sprang to Mr Paget's eyes. His hands trembled; he looked round furitively; there was no one by. Then he raised the telegram to his lips and kissed it. Valentine had a son--he had a grandchild. Another head of the old house had arisen on the horizon.

He rang his electric bell; he was so excited that he could not keep these tidings to himself.

"I have sent for you to receive my congratulations, Helps," he said; "and--and here's a cheque for ten pounds. You must go home early and have a good supper--champagne and all that sort of thing. Not a word, Helps, my good fellow, you deserve it. You quite deserve it!"

"May I ask what for, Mr Paget?"

"Forgive me, sir. I see that the packet from the Esperance has come."

"So it has. It can wait. Take your money, Helps, and drink my grandson's health. He arrived this morning, bless him--my daughter had a son this morning."

"Indeed, sir. It's a pity the father isn't there. It would have been pretty to have seen Mr Wyndham as a father. Yes, sir, I'm glad your young lady is doing well. Babes come with trouble, and it seems to me they mostly go with trouble. All the same, we make a fuss of them--and the world's too full of it is."

"This child supplies a long felt need," replied the baby's grandfather, frowning. "He is the future head of the house."

"Poor innocent. Yes, sir, I congratulate you as in duty bound. You'll soon read that packet, won't you, sir. It seems a sort of a coincidence like, getting news of the father and the babe in one breath."

"I'll read the packet presently," said Mr Paget. "Go away now, Helps; don't disturb me."

Left alone, the pleased man spread out the pink sheet of paper in such a position that his eye could constantly rest on it. Then he broke the seal of Captain Jellyby's yarn, and began to read.

CHAPTER XXXV.

"Expectance, April 10.

"MY DEAR SIR,
"I begin a letter to you under peculiarly afflicting circumstances. Your son-in-law, the favorite of every eye on board, one of the nicest young gentlemen I have had the luck to meet, fell overboard last night, a very heavy sea was running, when a very heavy sea was running. He was standing at the wheel, talking to a sailor of the name of Logan. Logan a sailor of the name of Logan, and he was very cheerful and keen to watch the storm. He was helping to lighten up a bit of rope when the boat was taken care of, but he was never seen again. Logan shouted to him to take care, but he was taken off his feet, and he was taken off his feet. We put out the boats and did all in our power, but in addition to the storm the water was very dark, and we never saw him again. Logan, the unfortunate young gentleman. The night was so rough he must have gone to the bottom almost directly. I cannot say we put out all on board--As I said almost upon all on board--As I was beloved ready, your son-in-law was beloved by passengers and sailors alike. His death was due to the most ordinary accident.

"Well, sir, regrets are useless, but if regrets would bring Mr Wyndham back, he would be safe and well now; he was one of the most taking young men I ever came across, and also one of the best. Please give my respectful condolences to his poor young widow--"

Here there was a break in the narrative. It was taken up some days later.

"I had scarcely written the last when an awful thing happened. There was a fearful crash on board, and in short, sir, our tunnel was blown down. I can scarcely go into particulars now, but for many days we lay at the mercy of the sea, and I never thought to see land any more. It speaks well for the worthiness of the Esperance that she weathered such a gale. But for many days and nights the destruction to your property for the water poured in in all parts, and the miserable state of the passengers, baffles description. The ship was in such a condition that we could not use steam, and when the storm abated had to drift with the mainmast, and we could put on scarcely any sail. Our provisions were also becoming short."

A week ago, by the mercy of God, we came within hail of the steamer Solomanon, which towed us into port, and the Esperance has been put into dock at Melbourne for repairs."

Under these appalling circumstances, Mr Wyndham's loss has not been forgotten, but to a certain extent cast on one side. Perhaps I ought to say here, sir, that when your son-in-law commented on his voyage to Sydney under my auspices, and I appeared to be in such a state of agitation, and in such distress of mind, that I had sent him on this voyage by a doctor's order. He made also a request to me which seemed to confirm this view. He begged me not to let out to anyone on board the smallest particulars (I really did not know any) of his history. In especial he did not wish his wife spoken of. He looked strange when he made these requests, and even now I can see the despair in his eyes when I refused--you will remember, sir, when I refused--to touch at Plymouth. I may as well say frankly, that had Mr Wyndham continued as depressed as he was the first few days of the voyage, I should have almost considered his untimely end altogether due to accident. But I am happy to be able to side the separation from his wife terribly at first there is no doubt, but there is also no doubt that he got over this, and feeling that he was healthily happy, and altogether the brightest fellow on board. In short, sir, he was the life of the ship; even now we are never done lamenting him. Untimely as his fate was, no one could have been more ready to rush suddenly into this formal certificate of Mr Wyndham's death, with the latitude and longitude of the exact spot where he must have gone, accurately described. This certificate is duly attested by the Consul here, and I delayed one day in writing to you in order that it should go.

"I remain, sir,
"Yours respectfully,
"HARRY JELLYBY."

"P. S.--I forgot to mention that two of our boats have been absolutely lost; but I will send you a full list of casualties by next mail."

Helps had never felt more restless than he did that morning; he could not attend to his ordinary avocations. Truth to tell, Helps' position in the house of Paget Brothers had always been more or less a dubious one. It was patent to all that he was confided in to a remarkable degree by the head of the house. It was also observed that he had no special or defined post, that he had no special or defined post, that he had no special or defined post.

In short that he did a little of everybody's work, and seemed to have nothing absolutely depending on himself.

All the same, when Helps was away the whole establishment felt a less. If the old work was useful for no other purpose, he was at least valuable as a scapegoat. He could bear blame which belonged to others. It was convenient to make excuses, and to shift uncomfortable omissions of all sorts from one's own shoulders.

"Oh, I thought Helps would have seen to that."

Helps saw to a great deal, and was perfectly indifferent to these inuendoes. Of one thing he was certain, that they would never reach the chief's ears.

On this particular morning Helps would assist no one; he had ten pounds in his pocket, and he knew that the future order of the great business lay in his cradle at Jewsbury-on-the-Wold. Little cared he for that.

"What news of Mr Wyndham?"

This was his thought of thoughts. "What secret lies hidden within that sealed packet? What is my master doing now? When will he be ring for me? How soon shall I know the best and the worst? Oh, God, why did I let that young man go? Why didn't I split? What's prison, after all? My God, what is prison compared to a heart on fire!"

Helps pattered about. He was a very wizened grey little fellow. The clerks found him decidedly in the way. They muttered to one another about him, and Mr Manners, one of the jumbos, requested him in a very staid voice to shut the door and go away.

Helps obeyed the command to the very letter. By this time his state of mind might have been described as on the rack. For two hours Mr Paget had been reading that time to time. Why had he not rung? Surely he must know what Helps was enduring. Surely at this crisis of his fate--at this crisis of both their fates, he must want to see his faithful servant. Why then did he not ring?

Misses Marie and Marjorie Borden, who have been visiting their sister, Mrs. C. M. Vaughan, of this town, for the past week, leave for their home in Boston, on Saturday.

Mr Collins of Somerville, Mass., brother of Mr. E. L. Collins, of this place, is visiting in Wolfville.

Quite a little commotion was occasioned on Saturday evening last, when the fire alarm was sounded, and it became known that the residence of Mr. Joseph Christie was in danger of being burned.

THE TERRORS OF DYSPEPSIA.

A Disease that Makes the Life of its Victims Almost Unbearable.

A sufferer for years told how she obtained Relief—A Bright Ray of Hope for Those Similarly Affected.

The editor of the News, in company with Mr. Jury, of the well-known firm of Stott & Jury, visited the home of Samuel Wood, in the township of Darlington, for the purpose of ascertaining the particulars of another of those remarkable cures happily brought about by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. It was Mrs. Wood who had thus been released from suffering, and when the newspaper man made known his mission she said, "Yes, I can give you a bright testimony in favor of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, for I believe that if it were not for them I do not think I should have been able to live for more than a year, but all the time was growing steadily worse. The medicine I took cost me a dollar a bottle, and the expenditure was more than useless, for it did me no good. Then my husband thought as I was growing worse, it would be better to try something else, as they felt that unless a change soon came I was doomed to live through the terrors of a dyspeptic life. Sometimes I would be fairly doubled up with the pain, and it seemed as if a knife was cutting into me. I then tried a number of medicines recommended for dyspepsia, but none of them brought the hoped for relief. We had so often read of the remarkable cures achieved by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills that I determined to give them a trial. I got a supply and before the second box was gone I found myself getting better. I continued the use of the pills until I had taken eleven boxes when I was fully recovered. This was a couple of years ago, and I have not now the least sign of dyspepsia."

Mrs. Wood further said that her husband had been a victim of kidney trouble for a long time and had taken a great deal of medicine for its cure but to no avail. When it was seen that Pink Pills were doing his wife so much good, Mr. Wood determined to try them, and they acted like a charm as he attributed all to the use of Pink Pills and would not be without them in the house.

Messrs Stott & Jury informed the News that Pink Pills have an enormous sale. They have handled Pink Pills for years and say that they cannot recall a single instance in which a customer came back and said they were not perfectly satisfied with the results. This is certainly a remarkable record, but then Dr. Williams' Pink Pills is a remarkable medicine, and cures where other medicines fail.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold only in boxes bearing the firm's trade mark and wrapper (printed in red ink), and may be had of all druggists or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Brockville, Ont., or Schenectady, N. Y., at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50.

Local vs. City Trade.

Many merchants in towns and villages feel very much chagrined and disappointed when they see their fellow townsmen sending to the "city" for dry goods, books, etc., instead of patronizing the men who are the mainstay of the town. It is exceedingly lamentable to see a conscientious, upright merchant in a small town doing his best to give the people in his vicinity a chance to inspect a full range of the season's novelties, and then when they have fully inspected his stock, got a general idea of what they ought to buy, they send for samples from "the city," and finally order from there.

We do not proclaim that "the local victor belongs the spoils," but we do maintain that the people of a town are following their own best interests when they patronize their home trade. Every store in the town pays a certain amount of rent, taxes, gas bills, etc., and the wages of employer and employee will amount to a snug sum every year. Another store occupied increases the price of real estate. Another store and one or two houses occupied means less taxes on other property. Another store occupied and competing for trade means an increased number of visitors, rural and civic, and an increased circulation of money in this and a dozen different ways.

The merchants of a town are its backbone. Take them out of any town and in three months it will be as dead as the proverbial "door nail." They are the stay of the town, and give it activity and life. One live merchant is worth ninety-nine retired farmers. Merchants take up the town; they draw manufacturers into it; they draw residents; they invest money in it; they help it in a thousand ways.—Ed.

Alive to Their Danger.

Minneapolis People Making Enquiries with regard to a Canadian Discovery.

Minneapolis, July 22—There has been an unusual number of deaths from heart disease in this city during the last few months and in many cases the victims were unconscious of being sufferers from the dread complaint. Postmortems have shown in several instances that the trouble was directly traceable to a diseased condition of the kidneys, and people have become alive to the danger. A number of enquiries have been instituted with regard to the best methods of cure and the new Canadian specific remedy known as Dodd's Kidney Pills has come in for a great share of attention owing to the extraordinary number of cures which have been effected through its agency.

Next meeting in Temperance Hall, Thursday, Aug. 1st, at 3.30 p. m. The meetings are always open to any who wish to become members.

Gospel Temperance meetings, conducted by members of the W. C. T. U., are held every Sunday afternoon at 3.30 o'clock, in the vestry of the Methodist church. All are welcome.

The Great Demonstration.
ROYAL ALBERT HALL, LONDON, JUNE 20, 1895.

The following extracts are taken from the report of the London convention as given in the Union Signal:

All that the week's march of events could culminate, and all that the steadily growing power of the temperance forces of every British clime could bring to bear, was focused upon the great climax of the World's W. C. T. U. Convention in Royal Albert Hall, June 20. Every instant in the march had been filled with those who were to take part. Within the seats rising tier after tier were all occupied, over ten thousand in all.

Never was a more enthusiastic gathering. From the incoming of the two great leaders to the closing moments of the varied panorama, the audience had but a single mind and impulse. Handkerchiefs were waved and hurrahs came from lusty English lungs and "foreigners" soon caught the impetus. The entrance of Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset with Madame Sterling and Miss Weston, attended by a body of English total abstinence marshals, was the signal for wild enthusiasm. They were followed by the representatives of different temperance organizations to the number of twenty-five.

As each delegation proceeded down the centre aisle with low plaudits to the place reserved for it, its leader took a position of honor upon the platform area.

The keynote of the great convocation was then struck by the singing of a temperance ode.

"Here we pledge ourselves anew Not to touch the drinker's drink."
This theme was woven in every movement of the great dramatic pageant, the climax of which was reached at the entrance of the representatives of the countries in which the W. C. T. U. is organized to the national airs played by the great organ and band. The enthusiasm was at white heat as the chorus of one thousand voices joined in singing:

"All round the world the ribbon white is twined,
All round the world the glorious light hath shined."
Ten thousand people then sang in unison "Old Hundred" and repeated the Lord's Prayer led by the clear, resonant voice of the Dean of Hereford.

Words of welcome were given by Lady Henry Somerset.

The great Polyglot Petition which was fastened four times around the big hall and hoisted before the platform was the text for Miss Willard's remarks.

"I have been watching the formation of this magnificent human mosaic," said the brilliant Canon Wilberforce, "and one text comes into my mind, 'The Lord shall send strength into the hands of a woman.' When once the women come to the front it's absolutely impossible to resist them."

There now appeared on the great limelight-earthen, as had the words of the previous hymns, the text of the first resolution thanking the government for the Local Control (option) bill and urging its immediate passage. Sir Willard Lawson, Bart., M. P., president United Kingdom Alliance, put the resolution in a terse and forceful speech giving this message to the delegates:
"The truths ye speak are spread abroad By every wind and every tide,
The voice of nature speaks aloud Upon your side."
An action song was announced on the program, but few of the audience were prepared for the touching and pathetic object lesson now given. To the melody of the "March Song of the Y. W. C. A.," a group of little children, ragged dirty and unkempt, from the West London slums, came upon the platform. They looked about with amazement upon the vast faces, the distant lights and the warm coloring, touching curiously with their grimy hands the dresses of those seated near them. Then led by their teachers, the "Slaves of the Poor," they sang the affecting words of Mary Lathrop:

"There's a shadow on the home, many hearts are sad to-day,
It bushes e'en the laughter of the children At their play.
At its coming went and sorrow across the threshold crept,
And amid their broken idols the mourning mothers weep."
As the sounds ceased, across the great auditorium came children's voices in the words of the bright chorus:

"We are coming to the rescue; we are coming in our youth;
The homes we build to-morrow shall be guarded by the truth;
We are coming, coming to the battle of purity and right;
And for a winsome token we wear the ribbon white."

A troop of well-did children came down the aisle bearing the white ribbon; they advanced upon the platform and twining the "winsome token" about the necks of those seated near them, sang the little group their gathered and singing their encouraging words all the time.

Never was there a more affecting and striking object lesson. Tears stored in many eyes.

Scrap for Odd Moments.

Och, says Biddy, I hope I will never be buried alive when I am dead.

Willie, have you been in another fight? No, mamma; this fellow outclassed me, and I wasn't in it.

Cherokee Vermifuge kills worms every time.

Suppose you have four apple dumplings, Willie, and you eat three, then what do you have? Willie—Nightmare.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla is recommended by physicians as the only sure blood purifier.

What makes you think the cater for you? Why mamma talked to him for more than an hour last evening, and he really seemed to enjoy it.

MINARD'S FAMILY PILLS are purely vegetable.

Have you received any pie yet? I asked one office-seeker of another. No, but I've received provisions of another sort. What sort? I cold shoulder.

When the deymman remarked that there was a mare in the new church the society was building, an old lady whispered, so that she knew the party referred to.

MINARD'S HONEY BALSAM, once tried, always used.

Has George taken any steps towards marrying her? Yes, indeed; they take the front steps from eight to twelve every mild evening.

Ayer's Ague cure is a vegetable preparation, and warranted to cure all malarial disorders.

Father—Do you think your position in life warrants your seeking my daughter's hand in marriage? Sutor—I think so; I am a lion tamer in Allford's circus.

Tired child at church—Mamma, how much did you put in the collection? Mother—A quarter, my dear.

Tired child—Well, this preacher gives an awful lot for the money.

MINARD'S HONEY BALSAM is a sure cure.

Which one of us would you rather have? I asked one of the two men who were running across the field. I don't care, replied the tall; it's a toss up between you.

Lady (to Butcher)—See here, I thought that I ordered a calf tongue of you. Look at this; it is as long as a beef tongue.

Reg pardon, madam, that is a calf's tongue; you see, it was a female calf.

Witness, said a lawyer in the police court the other day, you speak of Mr. Smith being "well off." Is he worth $5,000? No, sir. Two thousand? No, sir; he hasn't worth 25 cents. Then how is he well off? Got a wife, sir, who's worth a bull family, sir!

Dandruff forms when the glands of the skin are weakened, and if neglected, baldness is sure to follow. Hall's Hair Renewer is the best preventative.

I object, my dear, to your asking that woman to dinner. She's the greatest gossip in town, said Mr. Perkins.

I know that, John, but we can't invite the reporters, and I don't know how else to get an account of our dinner in the papers, replied Mrs. P.

Gen. S.—In Congress, while deploring one of the long, prosy speeches for which he was noted, said to Henry Clay—You speak, sir, for the present generation, but I speak for posterity.

Yes, replied the great Kentuckian, and it seems you are resolved to speak until your audience arrives.

If you do not know how a good remedy for head-ache is to be had, send a postal card to D. Denmore & Co., 271 Queen Street, West, Toronto.

Magistrate—What have you to say to the charge of being drunk and disorderly last night? Prisoner—You, know, y'r honor, that w'en a man is drunk he thinks he's sober and it's the other people is drunk. Magistrate—Um—yes, I have heard so. Prisoner—That's how it was, y'r honor. Th' policeman was drunk.

Young horse—Nothing but work work, work. I've a great mind to commit suicide.

Old horse—Have patience. When you are so old that you can't walk, you'll be just as suitable for a lady to drive, and after that you'll live in ease and luxury.

I WAS CURED of a severely sprained leg by MINARD'S LINFIMENT. BRIDGEWATER. JOSEPH WYKACHE.

Mr. Sewrick (patronizingly)—Were any of your ancestors men of note, Mr. Cynic? Mr. C.—Yes, madam, I should say so. One of them was the most famous admiral of his day, and commanded the royal forces of the world, Mrs. N. (with an altered tone of deep respect)—It is possible, Mr. C. I and what was his name? Noah, madam.

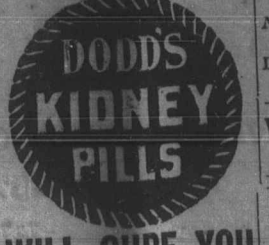

Tommy, said Mr. Egg sternly, I hung a smelt in your room, to the effect that little boys should be seen and not heard.

Yes, sir. I find that it has disappeared.

What did you do with it? I—I took it down to the deaf and dumb orphan asylum.

Check your indignation with K. D. C. the Great Checker.
