CHAPTER VI.

"Every one admires her. What a pretty little thing Miss Daunt is! His lordship seems smitten."
Sidney's eyes softened as they glanced in the direction in which he was looking, and rested on Dolly, who was dancing unweariedly, and evidently thoroughly enjoying her first ball. Her partner was Lord de la Poer, a tall slim young fellow with a smooth, closely cropped dark head and a budding mustache, who seemed to have eyes for no one but his pretty little partner.

"Suddenly Sidney rose.
"Do you mind not finishing this dance, Mr. Erne?" she said. "It is so warm here. I should like to go out for a little while."
"I will find you a quite spot," he answered, smiling. "I often spend two or three days here, you know, and know the mysteries of the labyrinth."

He piloted her skillfully through the billows of silk and lace and tulle, and led her out of the ball-room, across a passage, and on to a lobby—a large, square, dimly-lighted landing, with one large window overlooking the street. With a little sigh of relief Sidney sank down on the old-fashioned window-seat. The dim light and cool air were intensely refreshing after the heated atmosphere of the ball-room. Opposite to the window a floor stood partly open, leading into a little sitting-room, where the gas was lighted, but turned down rather low, and from which came the murmuring sound of voices.

"Very jolly here, is it not?" Mr. Erne said, leaning against the window and looking out into the street. "How queer and pretty it looks, Miss Arnold!"

Sidney turned her head languidly and looked out. The scene below was "queer and pretty," as he said. The moon was at the full, and the snow had ceased falling; the street was comparatively quiet and deserted; and-girl playmates together, and which was less likely than hate even to change into the love that men and women feel when they love "closest and sweetest." It may have been her own anguish which made her more inclined to pity Frank; and when he begged her to save him from himself, she had yielded, hoping to save him from yet greater misery, and to save not him only. When she learned that Sibyl Nell's betrothed, against whom Frank had uttered such desperate threats, was not Stephen Daunt, it was too late, her word had been given, and Sidney would not draw back; she would be true to Frank in the spirit and to the letter; she might save him from sin and misery perhaps. Sidney Arnold little guessed, as she sat in the dim light, leaning her pretty head against the window, how soon her freedom would be given to her and in what terrible circumstances!

The quiet and solitude were inexpressibly grateful to Sidney; it was so pleasant to close her burning, aching eyes, to let the forced smiles fade away, the little hands droop in utter weariness. From the ball-room came the sound of gay dance-music, the band was playing the "Madame Angot" quadrilles; without, the street was quiet and deserted. Through the open door on the opposite side of the landing came a confused murmur of voices, which at first Sidney did not heed, until they rose louder, and she recognized Frank's voice, eager, passionate, now threatening, now pleading, mingling with a woman's voice, a clear metallic voice, speaking angrily but unsteadily, as if fear mingled with anger.

Sidney rose hurriedly. Whither could she go to escape hearing that which was not meant for her to hear? What should she do? Ought she to go into the room and interrupt them? What was going on?

As she stood trembling and irresolute, some one came hurriedly up a back staircase, and, catching sight of the slender white figure on the dim landing, hastily approached her. "Your carriage is here," Stephen Daunt's voice said. "Come, do not Only once that evening had Frank approached her, and the one value they had danced together had been a very dreary performance. Frank's manner had been so strange, so hasty and nervous and excited, that Sidney had been struck by it and considerably alarmed. His face too was flushed, his eyes were bright with a strange feverish luster, and his speech was so incoherent that the girl had at first felt a faint feeling of disgust at the thought that he had taken too much wine. The value over, he had taken Sidney back to her seat, lingering a moment by her side, as if he had something to say to her, then moved away without having uttered a word. A few minutes afterward Sidney had seen him beside Mrs. Rutledge, looking haggard and miserable, his face changing at a word or look from her.

How cruel she was, Sidney thought, bitterly, as she rested her white brow against the cold pane of glass and looked out dreamily into the quiet street—how cruel—as cruel—as cruel as she was beautiful! She played with Frank, torturing him, driving him half-mad with pain and misery one day, and raising him to the seventh heaven the next. How could she do it? the girl wondered. How would it all end?

Not even Sidney herself could have told the reasons which had made her accept Frank Greville for her future husband on that day when he had come to her dazed, maddened, heart-broken at Miss Nell's engagement. She was very fond of him, fond with that affection which had grown up with her since they had been boy-

"linger. It is worse than foolish."
Sidney drew back, trying to speak; but her dry parched lips were powerless.
"Come!" he repeated, imperatively, taking her hand. "Come, do not—Why, Sidney!"
"There is some mistake," she said, drawing back.

"Yes!" he muttered. "What are you doing here, child? Why don't you go back to the ball-room? I was looking for Sibyl—for Mrs. Rutledge. Shall I take you back?"

"I need not trouble you," Sidney said proudly, moving away from him; and, just as she uttered the words, the sitting-room door was thrown open violently, a man rushed out, dashed past Sidney, brushing against her, and disappeared down the side staircase.

Hasty as his movements were and dimly lighted as the landing was, Sidney recognized Frank Greville; and a terrible dread almost overpowered her. With a startled exclamation Stephen turned away and entered the room; and with a reluctance and terror she could not overcome Sidney turned her eyes toward the open door. But there was nothing terrible there; she saw only a beautiful woman in shining white drapery, with diamonds glittering on her throat and wrists, who ran to Stephen and caught his arm with both hands and raised her agitated, ghastly pale face to his. Sidney did not wait to see or hear more; she turned away and groped her way back to the ball-room, where she found that they were dancing a waltz, and that her partner was looking for her.

Neither Frank Greville nor Mrs. Rutledge reappeared in the ball-room that evening; and it was nearly two hours later when Stephen came in, looking rather pale, but easy and languid as usual, to give his mother his arm to lead her to the carriage.
"Hasn't it been a lovely ball?" Dolly said, as Lord de la Poer wrapped her in her white cloak, and some other cavalier performed the same office for Sidney. "Have you enjoyed it, Sidney?"

"Yes," Sidney answered, wondering if there were such a sensation as enjoyment in the world. It seemed to her that there was nothing but misery and unrest.

THE CRIME WAVE.

We still confront the wave of crime, and hens are stolen every night; unholly villains spend their time in stark defiance of the right. Now in the fair and cultured east some men have formed a moral band, and they will bravely try, at least, to drive this crime stuff from the land. They've pledged themselves to spare no pains, they'll carry on their grim crusade till Law and Order hold the reins, and all the statutes are obeyed. And I, whose henhouse has been stripped by burglars, seven times or ten, whose faith in government has slipped, would cheer these whole-souled, dauntless men. And if they knock the bandits flat, and crush all specialists in crime, I'll be the first to wave my hat, and say their record is sublime. But ah, my friends, my henhouse stands untenanted by fowls to-day; nine times profane and vicious hands have borne my cherished hens away. The roosters that would greet the dawn in other times, in ringing tones, are from their coop forever gone, they're vanished, feathers, spurs and bones. I've heard of many splendid schemes to make this country like a church, but in the end they all were dreams, and hens were lifted from their perch, and did not want to go anywhere. I do knitting and fancy work, and I would get irritable after a few minutes of work. I have been in Canada five years and have been this way ever since I came. I am taking Lydia E. LUNENBURG RUM RUNNER SUNK.

PROVIDENCE, R.I., Sept. 2.
While being towed from New London to Providence this morning by a coastguard patrol boat, the Canadian schooner Dawn, of Lunenburg, laden with 500 cases of whiskey, caught fire off Block Island and was sunk by gunfire from the patrol boat. The Dawn, when towed from the beach where she had been grounded at Saint-John's Town yesterday, was taken to New London and was being brought from there to Providence for Federal disposal. The boat and cargo were valued at over a hundred thousand dol-day by a coast patrol boat but the crew leaped over the side and escaped in the darkness.

In Memoriam

MR. JEREMIAH SAVAGE.

In the recent almost sudden demise of Mr. Jeremiah Savage, superintendent of the fish exporting department of the firm of Harvey & Co., St. John's, has lost one of its most worthy citizens and a gentleman who was universally known and highly respected. It can be truly said of the deceased that he was one of nature's noblemen. Kindly and affable by disposition, indulgent to those who worked with and under him, small wonder is it that his passing is deeply regretted all over the city. "Jerry," as he was familiarly known, was a favorite with all classes. In his early manhood he was noted for his splendid physique and was a man of extraordinary strength, so that in athletic circles his fame was widespread. As a cricketer he had few peers at a time when this splendid game was in its heyday and when St.
John's boasted aggregations that could hold their own with any on the North American Continent. In the early eighties of the last century, when the British fleet led by the cruiser Bellerophon visited St. John's—one of the finest eleven to handle the willow here—the pick of the warships was pitted against a specially selected team from the Shamrocks and Terra Nova. The naval team came down through the Provinces from Montreal and had a triumphal procession, even defeating the redoubtable Wanderers of Halifax. Here, however, at famous Pleasantville they met their waterloo, their defeat being in large measure due to the splendid bowling of Messrs. Savage and Bennett, and which, with characteristic generosity, was highly praised by the vanquished cricketers, some of whom said in the writer's presence that they never faced swifter or more accurate bowling. Mr. Savage, who was a cooper by trade, was born at Sandy Point, Bay St. George, on October 3rd, 1857, the youngest son of the late Eugene and Anne Savage. He left that place with his parents and went to St.
John's in 1875, and here he received his apprenticeship with the late Frank Bogdan of Prescott Street, later engaging with the late N. Couzens, South Side, after which he went to Harvey & Co.'s and served that firm faithfully and loyally for over 49 years. Mr. Savage in 1896 married Miss Bridget Brine, daughter of the late W. Brine, who predeceased him by five years. Left to mourn a kind and affectionate father are two daughters, Mrs. R. Long of Franklin Avenue and Miss May Savage of this city. Mr.
John Savage of Harvey & Co.'s is a brother. The bereaved ones have the sincere sympathy of the large circle of friends who highly esteemed the deceased. T. D. C.

Crew for Caribou

It is expected that the new steamer Caribou will be ready to make her trial trip on October 1st, and then exceed to England to take supplies. The deck hands and stewards, to the number of fifteen, will leave by Sunday's express en route to Schiedam, Holland, to join the ship. They have been engaged for some time past and would have proceeded to Holland many weeks ago, but for the dockers' strike, which delayed completion of the ship.

Famous Originals Theatrical Company

COMING BACK TO ST. JOHN'S
AGAIN IN APRIL

The Originals will pay a return visit to St. John's again this season, coming here early in April for three weeks. Everyone who saw that famous Company at the Nickel last May will be pleased to hear that they are returning again, they presented a type of entertainment distinctly different from anything ever seen in this city before, and by far the best musical shows ever seen in Newfoundland.

The Company is now playing toward Western Canada and will return east early in the New Year. This season's revue is named "Thumbs Up" and is said to eclipse anything ever before offered by this talented company.
Brilliant new settings, magnificent costumes, side-splitting comedy skits, dances of almost every kind, while the glorious Gene Pearson, who is the undisputed peer of present day female impersonators, steps forth in some new Parisian gowns worth a little fortune. One of the big fans Mr. Pearson uses in the show was imported

The End of Ramadan

Writing from Tunisia to a London paper, Dorothy Burk describes as follows some of the peculiar religious observances of the Arabs:

The rhythmic boom of a tom-tom guides us through the blackness of the night. In a great courtyard hundreds of Arabs are squatting round in a silent, swaying circle. Four negroes beat the huge drum and in the centre a dozen frantic figures are whirling in a mad dance, faster and yet faster.
They utter sharp cries, they foam at the mouth, and the flickering red lights of the torches show convulsed faces with starting eyeballs. At the culminating point of frenzy they are insensible to pain. Fire cannot burn them, nor serpents sting them, nor swords pierce. They swallow burning coals or spiny cactus leaves, or live and deadly scorpions.

And their madness has a sinister contagion. The acrid smell of incense, the deep vibration of the great drum, the wailing Yo-yo-yo-yo-yo of the women hidden in a neighbouring house—all these work, strangely even on the balanced European brain.

At the end of Ramadan, the Mahomedan season of fasting, these religious gatherings are held every night. Ramadan lasts for one lunar month, and during that time no true believer takes food, drink or tobacco from the rising of the setting sun.
Again at 3 o'clock the tom-tom has been atoken the faithful that they may eat before the first red ray of the sun touches the desert's rim and the voice of the mezzin is heard from the mosque.

And night after night there rises the monotonous chant that rouses the faintly to frenzy.
"La'ilah ill'Allah!" "There is no God save Allah!"

Ramadan over, the feast called Aid Eris is held, and every Arab, however dirty, ragged and barefoot, is attired with more than Oriental splendor. My cookboy wears white linen, pantaloons, an orange embroidered vest, and a bureau of white silk. Also his red fez has a twelve-inch tassel and his face appears to be washed.

"To-day there will be a great feast in the market-place," he tells me. "The Kaid has given six meshout (lambs roasted whole), and afterwards there will be dancing, and men of the Al-Saouwa will swallow snakes!"

When the sect of the Al-Saouwa hold their great feast the houses of the Jews are shut and barred. For the Moroccan Jew is clothed in black, and the Al-Saouwa have the peculiarity in their frenzies, of being driven mad by black as a bull is driven mad by red.

The 5th Annual Championships Sports Meet, conducted under the auspices of the Nfld. Amateur Athletic Association, took place at St. George's Field yesterday afternoon, under wretched weather conditions.

NOTES IN THE SPORTS. Considerable comment was occasioned by the conduct of certain spectators, who so far forgot they were watching an amateur sporting contest as to hoot and boo at some of the contestants.

United Business College Re-Opened

The United Business College re-opened yesterday in Victoria Hall with an address by the principal, P. G. Butler, M.C.S., on the value of a business college education to graduates and the country.

First, the financial value of education was shown. From statistics and observation, it has been concluded that the trained worker at the age of thirty-two is four times as valuable as the untrained who starts to work at the age of fourteen. Special preparation is needed for success in the battle of life. Each day spent in high school pays a dividend of $9.25, while each day spent in college for specialized study pays a dividend of $55.00 per day, as read from reports on this subject from the Department of Education, U.S.A., 1925.

Dean Lord of Boston University College of Business Administration in his recent survey proved that the average yearly income of the untrained man was $1,000; of the high school graduate, $2,000; of the college graduate, $6,000. The untrained, starting to work at fourteen, reaches his maximum income at the age of thirty, and more than 60 p.c. of them are dependent upon others for support at the age of 60.

Dr. Ellis of Texas University Department of Commercial College extension proved in his investigation recently that the child with no schooling has one chance in 150,000 of performing distinguished service in his country; with elementary education he has four times this chance; and with college education, 800 times the chance.

Therefore advanced courses in a business college, increase productive power and should be encouraged.

Another illustration: "Only one child in 150,000 has been able in America without education to become a notable factor in the progress of his country. With no schooling, out of five millions examined, only five attained distinction; with elementary schooling, out of 3 millions, 508 attained distinction; with high school education, out of 2 millions, 1245 attained distinction; and with college training, out of one million no fewer than 5768 attained distinction."

These figures have been placed on exhibit by colleges of commerce in America, as conclusive evidence that a business education pays big dividends for life and is not an expense but an investment that everyone should endeavour to possess because it affords the best chance to succeed in life.

Briefly, a college graduate earns $2000 a year, on an average, so that his college course may pay him a dividend of $40,000 in forty years, which figures out at $55.00 a day for every day he spent in school, showing most certainly that Business College training is a good investment.

Business education helps one to earn a living where classical education may or may not. Graduates of business colleges have, positively without exception, paying positions awaiting them. They do not have to beg, borrow or stand in the bread line. They can get out and sell on commission and make money. It emphasizes not only the possession of knowledge but the ability to think for oneself, to produce, to make business a profession by increased earning power, tact and ambition to succeed, largely developed through debating, salesmanship and effective psychology of business. Accuracy and speed are also developed by rapid calculations, accounting, stenography and touch typewriting that produce the habit of concentration or sticking to it to win.

Everyone should endeavour to attend a business college for specialized training as a guarantee of efficiency and to make their success certain in business life.

The usual courses and debates will be continued in Day and Evening classes and special lecturers are asked to help in the work as usual so that a success year is assured.

"Proud Flesh" is Democratic Tale

KING VIDOR'S LATEST PICTURE A DELIGHTFUL COMEDY OF CONTRASTS.

King Vidor's latest contribution to motion pictures is at the Nickel Theatre to-night in the production "Proud Flesh," a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer offering. It is said to maintain the high calibre of work done in the past by this director, one of the youngest in the motion picture industry.

Old world culture is pitted against new world democracy; hereditary instincts struggling with the promptings of environment; arrogance and snobbery battling with the desires of the heart.

This stirring combination forms the basis for the screen version of Lawrence Sanders' novel, one of the "best sellers" of the year, featuring Eleanor Boardman, Harrison Ford, Pat O'Malley and a notable supporting cast.

The story raises the question as to whether environment or hereditary are stronger in prompting a girl's choice for a mate. Will a pair of overalls and crude mannerisms kill a girl's love when these are the things in life she has been taught to disdain? Eleanor Boardman, as Fernanda, plays a role that is the antithesis of those in which she has recently appeared. Fernanda is proud and arrogant; reared in atmosphere of aristocratic continental culture.

Pat O'Malley depicts a fighting, young Irish-American plumber; the democratic American in a pair of overalls. The name of the character, curiously enough, is Patrick O'Malley.

Religion Grows Stale and Should be Modernized

SO DECLARES CANON SHATFORD IN ADDRESS TO BROTHERHOOD AT PITTSBURGH.

PITTSBURGH, Sept. 3.—Religion has grown stale and indifferent, it should be rehabilitated and presented with the same speed and startling application that the modern press presents news of the world, declared Rev. Allan Pearson Shatford, of Montreal, at the fortieth annual convention of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. Episcopal men's organization here last night. The convention opened with more than 500 delegates from all parts of Canada and the United States registered.

Canon Shatford pleaded for revitalization of the Christian religion throughout the world.

"The great task of organizations such as this at the present time," he said, "is to arouse the church from the indifference into which it has fallen. We need to plan a reawakening of the entire Christian world. The church offers the only source for recovery from failure in the world."

In asserting Christians have failed to make their religion a delight and a joy, Canon Shatford said children

Little Jack Rabbit
by David Cory

"There goes Billy Bat," exclaimed Lady Love, the little rabbit's pretty bunny mother, one evening as she and her bunny boy sat on the back porch. "How swiftly he flies, almost as fast as Mrs. Swallow."

"He hangs all day long head downwards by his toenails," laughed the little rabbit. "I saw him yesterday in the Shady Forest."

Just then the mournful cry of Hooty Tooty Owl sounded from the hemlock grove. "Another night prowler is stirring himself," shivered Lady Love. "Soon we'll hear Nighthawk's cry."

The next moment something moved in the bramble bushes. "Who's there?" whispered the timid lady rabbit, hopping up from her rocking chair. "I declare, I feel so nervous," and she looked up at Mrs. Moon, half-hidden by a cloud. "It will be quite dark in a minute. Let's go into the kitchen."

But, Oh dear me. Before she had finished speaking Danny Fox pushed his head out of the bushes.

"Ha, ha, I'm glad you're both at home. No need for me to further roam. I'll just take home you rabbits two. To make a juicy bunny stew."

he snarled, showing all his long, white teeth. Then on his tiptoe sox up to the porch crept the sly old fox. And the two poor little rabbits were too frightened to move. Dear me, they just stood there as if their feet were glued to the porch floor!

"Hold on," cried a voice, all of a sudden, just like that, quick as the wind that blows off your hat, and out popped Old Man Weasel. "What are you doing here?" he asked, turning his little sharp eyes on Danny Fox.

"What are you doing here I'd like to know," answered the old fox, with a growl. "Better go home or I'll bite you."

"No, you won't," answered Old Man Weasel, with a grin. "You know better."

"Please both of you go way," begged Lady Love, her voice all a-tremble. "Please do."

should go to Sunday school with the same delight as they go to the movies and grow-ups with the same joy as they take to the golf links.

"I'll give you a dozen lollypops," added the bunny boy. "Please do as mother asks."

"Ha, ha," laughed Danny Fox. "He, he," laughed Old Man Weasel, but neither stirred. They just stood there, glaring at the two frightened little bunnies.

"Let's match pennies to see who gets them," suggested Danny Fox, pulling a Pumpkin Penny from his pocket.

"Agreed," answered Old Man Weasel, taking a Carrot Cent from his leather purse. "I'll match you," and he tossed his cent in the air. And so did Danny Fox. But, goodness me! When they went to look for the little round pieces of money, they couldn't find them. No, sir. Some way or another that little Carrot Cent and that little Pumpkin Penny had hidden themselves. Maybe they couldn't bear to see either of those wicked robbers win.

"What are you doing here I'd like to know," answered the old fox.

"Botheration!" snarled Danny Fox, glaring at Old Man Weasel. "What trick are you up to?"

"Be careful what you say," retorted the angry weasel, snarling back at the old fox. And in the next story you shall hear what happened after that.

The British Empire Through French Eyes

The Professor's Task.
"We propose to show within the broad framework, as it were, of human geography, how a group of men has succeeded in setting to work its faculties of invention, adaptation, acclimatization, and propagation in a very peculiar and very varied sphere of action."

"British colonialism as a national phenomenon has reacted profoundly on conditions of life in Great Britain itself, but it is also a world-phenomenon, inseparable from the life of other nations. We may well ask what Great Britain would be like without her Empire, and also what the world would be like without it."

"Of all the countries in this Europe of ours, which has done so much in the way of exploring, exploiting, and populating the earth, it is Great Britain whose colonizing instinct has contributed most towards giving it form and life."

"There is no British family but has a son beyond the seas; no newspaper but keeps its readers informed of events in the far-off lands of the Empire; no household that does not consume imperial products; no career for which the colonies can offer no outlet; no industry that does not work for a colonial market; no great export that does not trade with one or other of His Majesty's possessions; no capitalist or rentier without colonial stocks or shares in his portfolio; no security for the homeland unless the way to the colonies is open and free to the British Navy; no war that has not extended the Empire or defended it from attack."

"The conception of the Empire is familiar to every Englishman, while to the British Government it is the supreme national interest—an interest of literally world-wide extent. Without its overseas possessions the United Kingdom is merely a small group of islands off the coast of Europe; with them, it has become one of the poles of the human race. The Englishman has property everywhere, and everywhere the English tongue is spoken."

"The Englishman never feels alone in a foreign land, and no journey can take him far from the sight of his own flag. When he thinks of his country, he sees her, wherever her ships are sailing. He is hurt if he feels that Continental affairs are checking her or absorbing her; he is at ease if her outlook is upon the ocean."

Body and Soul Beyond the Seas.
"No other land has a greater portion of her body and her soul beyond the seas. Business houses, factories, merchant shipping, banks, and bookshops—what would Great Britain be without her Empire?"

"And now what would the world be without the British Empire? There is no ocean without a British coastline; no continent without some inhabitants of British race; no coming and going without British means of communication."

"In every settlement of British colonists there are the same forms of civilization, the same domesticated animals, the same cultivated crops, the same kind of material existence, the same method of exploiting the soil, and the same spiritual needs. Without the British Empire we should have a different distribution of the races of the earth, for it has altered the field of expansion of negroes, Indians, and whites."

The Map Would Be Differently Drawn
"Europe faces the other peoples of the world with an Anglo-Saxon front; the yellow races in Oceania, in North America, and in the Monsoon region of Asia; the blacks in North America and South Africa. Without the British Empire the political map of the world would be differently drawn; it is a fact of world-wide import that Anglo-Saxon races dwell in both continents of the Northern Hemisphere and in two of the three continents of the Southern."

The Empire supplies the whole world with goods whose production

"Sundown" is Big Drama of West

100,000 Cattle in Vast Drive Forms Thrilling Scene of Master Film.

It took six states to furnish the background for "Sundown," First National's epic of the cattle country, coming to the Star Theatre.

The story of "Sundown" tells of the passing of the Old West. A group of cattlemen gather and discuss the encroachment of homesteaders who have been allotted quarter sections of land by the government. These "mesters," as the cattlemen call them, are gradually crowding them out, leaving them little or no room for grazing their immense herds. A committee confers with Theodore Roosevelt, president at that time, but it is informed that "nothing can stop the onrush of civilization."

Returning to their homes the cattlemen decide that they must seek new pastures, and with their hearts breaking they gather their vast herds and make the last and greatest drive in the history of the world. Thousands of cattle trek across the plains and deserts of the northern continent, finally crossing the Mexican border and settling there.

It is the tragic story of this migration, forced upon the hardy old pioneers by a relentless civilization that makes "Sundown" the most spectacular motion picture of the Old West ever filmed.

"Sundown" was written for the screen by Earl Hudson, author of "For Sale" and "S. A. G. Wires." It was directed by Lawrence Trimble and Harry O. Hoyt under Hudson's personal supervision, with Marion Fairfax as editorial director.

Dr. Howlett has resumed Practice from September 7th. sept7, 17

"Obey" and Marriage

BISHOP ON THE MAJORITY VOTE AT HOME.

NEW YORK—A bitter attack on the movement to force the next Episcopal Church Convention to strike the word "obey" from the marriage service has been opened by Bishop Irvine Johnson, of Colorado, one of the most brilliant thinkers and orators of the Episcopal Church in the United States.

He insists that the change would "accommodate the Word of God to palliate the situation," and declares: "The Roman empire in the days of Marcus Aurelius was not more incapable of setting the standards of family life than we are in America to-day, where the home has become a memory and family life a tragedy. We are unfit to amend the marriage of our fathers until we have restored family life to the sanctity enjoyed in their time." Bishop Johnson argues: "If women do not love men well enough to accept their leadership, which is the significance of the word obey, they will not love more because their vanity is flattered by the omission."

"When a woman is asked to obey her husband she does not lessen the glory of her womanhood. In the family's corporation either man is head of the family or else it is presided over by a committee of two, which has no way of determining a majority vote except by an endurance test."

Lighting Freak

During a thunderstorm in Bradford, Mr. and Mrs. Hainsworth, who had been listening, but had decided to close down until the storm was over, heard a loud explosion.

A blue flame passed along the earth wire which went to the water-tap. The tap was torn from the wall, and the window through which the earth line passed was blown out. The paint on the window frame was also burnt.

Woman's Invention

STOPPER FOR APPLYING LOTIONS

A city business woman, secretary of a group of limited companies, has invented a new kind of stopper for bottles.

Struck by the need for providing some means of applying lotions or other liquids to the skin in an antiseptic manner, she procured a stopper made of rubber, to the top of which she affixed by a special solution, also of her own invention, a small piece of rubber sponge. The joint is permanent, and the sponge cannot be removed from the rest of the stopper without destroying it.

The manufacturers who made the first specimens suggested a great variety of other uses to which the stopper could be put. It has been patented.

LUXURA TEA

"Perhaps 'twas my fancy, but I thought the tea I was using wasn't as good as formerly, and it had a lot of dust; anyhow—I tried 'Luxura' for a change and I've used it ever since. Everybody in the house is crazy about it's delicious flavor, there's not a pinch of dust in a pound, and I'm SURE it goes further. You try a pound for yourself and let me know how you like it."

"Taste the luxury of LUXURA."

TEL-ELECTRIC CAR TO TORONTO—34-MILE GALLOX. REVOLUTIONARY.

passenger carrying cars, electricity, developed by the inventor, installed within the body of the car, will be put into service of the central region of the National Railways with this type of equipment to carry new developments power and brings to a new type of the most interesting story of the transportation in North America. One has a body of 60 feet, 60 inches in length, 60 feet in width, and 60 feet in height. It consists of a total over-all length of three four-wheel cars, the end of one and the other body are in the centre truck. The green cars is protected in much the same way as the vestibule ends of cars on steam trains. The small and the large are built to carry the capacity of the car, of which 18 can be seated in seats located in the articulated cars, passengers, of which 18 are accommodated in the articulated cars, relatively speaking the motive power of the car is simple, although its departure as far as the industry is concerned and of the car there is an engine operated which is both safe and reliable. The lightest crude oil is used outside of aero engines of those in the air. 3,750 pounds and 1,000 cars 5,000 pounds. The cars are started by a generator which provides electricity to the motor. The car is set underneath the power for the start. It is again required, as close as possible, that is, a perpetual motion as has been suggested.

Types of Engines

The engine for the articulated cars is 160 h.p. In test developed 250 h.p. The articulated cars are capable of 40 m.p.h. In both cases the car is a "perpetual motion" type, though it can be slowed down from either end of the car.

R. Tests New Type of Carrier

THE ELECTRIC CAR TRAVELS TORONTO—46 MILES PER GALLON. REVOLUTIONARY.

Passenger carrying cars, operated electrically, developed by a general electric company, have been installed within the body of the car. The electric motor is mounted in the central region of the Canadian National Railways within a few feet of the diesel-electric engine. This type of equipment represents a new development in motor power and brings to a close one of the most interesting chapters in the history of the evolution of transportation in North America.

One has a body with an overall length of 60 feet, set on two wheel trucks. This car can pull a passenger train. The second car is a trailer. It consists of two bodies, a total overall length of 102 feet. It is divided into three compartments. The front end of one and the forward end of the other body are attached to the central truck. The entrance to the car is protected by a canopy over much the same fashion as the vestibule ends of the passenger cars on steam trains.

On a trial trip made recently, the first 60-foot car, No. 16819, made the trip from Montreal to Toronto in approximately eight hours and thirty minutes actual running time. No difficulty was experienced and the engine was not stopped once between the two points. On a side trip from Port Hope to Lakeshore, the same day, the car hauled a coach as a trailer and was able to negotiate very heavy grades at a moderate speed. The fuel oil consumption from Montreal to Toronto, included hauling trailer to Lakeshore and taking into consideration all stand-by losses, averaged one gallon for 4.6 miles or about 10 per cent of the cost of fuel for similar steam operation. It is realized, of course, that difficulties will be experienced and that the performance of these cars will improve as time goes on and employees become better acquainted with their operation.

To C. E. Brooks, Chief of Motive Power of the Canadian National Railways and his associates, R. J. Needham and R. G. Gage, electrical engineers of the system, go the credit for the creation of the diesel-electric car, which it is hoped is the solution of the problem outlined. For more than three years they have been working on the idea and in the carrying out of the project which has been supported by Sir Henry Thornton, president, and S. J. Hamford, vice-president, in charge of operation of the company.

It was following a visit Mr. Brooks paid to Sweden and Great Britain about two years ago that the plan took definite form, and in spite of many discouragements which have attended their efforts on many occasions, the idea has been carried through to a successful conclusion. With the exception of the diesel engine and a specially constructed generator, which are of British manufacture, all the work on the new car has been done in Canada, the bulk of it at Point St. Charles Shops of the Canadian National Railways. The car can, therefore, be truly claimed as Canadian in its conception and construction.

Death Watch Beetle. A wasp attack is to be made on the Death Watch Beetle, which has been discovered to be working destruction in the timbers of the roof of Lincoln Cathedral. Professor Maxwell LeRoy, of the Imperial College of Science and Technology, will be director of operations. A harmless-looking white substance with a sweet smell and known as parathion-benzene, when treated with soap and olive oil and the mixture brushed on the affected timbers, provides an effective poison gas.

either direction, as required, without it being necessary to place the car on a turn-table or to run it on a "Y" to be reversed. The motorman has complete control over both the diesel engine and the flow of electricity.

No extravagant claims are made for the new car by those responsible for its design and construction. It is known, however, from many tests made during past months, that in the diesel-electric car there has been created a type of motive power which can be both economical and serviceable in operation, eminently suited for the type of work for which it is intended, namely suburban, inter-urban and branch line traffic. It is thought, also that it may prove an effective competitor of the motor bus and trolley which, using the public highways, are competing with the rail transportation systems in short haul passenger, express and freight business.

For years the best brains in the rail transportation industry have been concentrating upon the development of an economical and serviceable type of motive power. Steam power, derived from coal, has become so expensive as to cause serious losses to companies operating branch lines where the density of traffic is low. Relief from this condition was first sought in gasoline operated cars. These overcame the problem to a degree, but experience proved that, like all internal combustion engines, these cars could not be depended upon to adhere, with a sufficient degree of regularity, to a fixed schedule. There were too many points at which engine trouble could originate.

Next in order came the storage battery car. This type of car is operated by a motor fed from storage batteries. The big difficulty lay in the fact that these cars lost power for every mile they moved. Plants had to be established also for the recharging of the run down batteries. Other problems of a similar character were met with. The puzzle was to find something that would not have any of these serious faults and which could perform the service required. It is confidently believed by those who have been associated in the building of the diesel-electric cars and by those who have attended the tests that in it the ideal type of power has been found.

First Trip. On a trial trip made recently, the first 60-foot car, No. 16819, made the trip from Montreal to Toronto in approximately eight hours and thirty minutes actual running time. No difficulty was experienced and the engine was not stopped once between the two points. New Style of Stamp

USE OF WATERMARKED PAPER OBLIVIOUS. Experiments in watermarked and unwatermarked paper for stamps have been going on in New Zealand for some time. A trial has been made with the current low value stamps, which have now been issued on paper printed on the back "New Zealand" with a five-pointed star. This printing has been done before the paper was gummed and may eventually obviate the necessity for specially made watermarked paper which up to the present time has been in use in most countries to prevent forgeries. As this experiment, if successful, may possibly have far-reaching results, there is a demand from collectors for the limited number of stamps now issued. CONFEDERATION LIFE, aug17,3mos

Increase of Prices in France

The increase in wholesale prices in France which was noted in June continued during July, according to the official index number compiled by the French Statistical Bureau and transmitted to the Bankers Trust Company of New York by its French Information Service. This official index number, which is calculated on a basis of 100 in July 1914 for the average price of 45 different articles out of which 20 represent food stuffs, rose from 354 at the end of June to 369 at the end of July. The cost of food rose from 470 in May to 486 in June to 497 in July, while the industry and raw materials number rose from 584 in May and 614 in June to 632 in July. Retail prices however showed a slight decrease in July according to the official index number for Paris which is based on the retail prices of 15 essential articles, i.e. bread, meat, lard, butter, eggs, milk, cheese, potatoes, beans, sugar, oil, kerosene and methylated spirits and which fell from 422 in June to 421 in July. A year ago the wholesale food index number was 491; the wholesale industry number was 559, and the retail price index number was 360.

Where Water is Washed

If you were called upon to empty away between 100,000 to 200,000 gallons of water twice weekly right through the bathing season, refilling it each time with fresh water, it is probable you would soon have a breakdown. Yet but for a wonderful system by means of which the water in public baths is kept clean, this is the procedure that would have to be followed. Where the system is used it is not even necessary to change the bathers' water once during six months! It can be drunk with perfect safety at any time. It is a filtration system, similar to that which cleans our drinking water, which makes all this possible. Not merely once, but two or three times during the twenty-four hours, every drop of water is carefully "washed." The "laundry" where this is done is right behind the scenes—a throbbing nest of powerful engines. These, which constitute the pumping plant, suck the water from the baths on to filter beds. The filter beds themselves consist of layers of sand and gravel. It is essential, of course, that these are not fouled or choked in any way, consequently the water, as it comes from the baths, goes first of all through a strainer. Angler Sees Weird Rough Creatures

IN DEPTHS OF OKANAGAN. Victoria, B.C., Sept. 1.—(C.P.)—Long-necked, rough-skinned creatures who waddled across the surface of earth long before man, monkeys and evolution were heard of, are living in the depths of Okanagan Lake in the Southern interior of British Columbia. It was reported to John P. Babcock, deputy commissioner of fisheries yesterday by R. Leckie-Ewing, an angler of this district. Mr. Leckie-Ewing is preparing to go forth and do battle with the monsters who live unknown in the lake bottom. Armed with a rifle he plans to shoot one of the creatures and to tow it ashore. Mr. Babcock's theory that big sturgeon and not sea serpents are causing the discussion with silent contempt by the men who claim to have seen the terrifying visitors.

DO YOU KNOW THIS TYPE?

My neighbor was fretting the other day over a difficult piece of sewing which was too much for her limited skill as a seamstress—a box covering for a couch in her guest room.

Like a great many young married women, my neighbor spent her pre-marriage years in an office, and while she is an expert stenographer and knows a great deal about accounting, she doesn't know very much about handling a needle.

"That's the third time I've sewed it up," she wailed, "and it isn't right yet. And I did so want to get it done before I have the club next week. I'm almost desperate enough to ask my mother-in-law to help me."

"If she'd suggest them herself," "Desperate," said I in astonishment. "Why I shouldn't think you'd hesitate a minute. She's always making things for you. And she's so clever. That wouldn't be anything for her and she'd probably love to do it. She loves to do things for you."

"Yes," said my neighbor, "she does if they're the things she offers to do herself, but she's one of those people you can't ask to do things. They'll do most anything for you if you don't ask them but if you ask them, good-night! Then they feel as if you were imposing on them."

"But such a little thing as that..." "It doesn't matter how little it is. It's the feeling that she's being taken advantage of. I know. I felt the way you do when we were first married. She had done so many lovely things for me that took an awful lot of time and work that when she came to visit and I was fussing over some curtains that I was too stupid to get hung right I didn't think anything of asking her if she would do them for me. Well she did them all right, but she made me feel as if I were a slave driver to ask it. And I know she said a lot to father for he said something sarcastic about her setting up in business as a curtain maker. Yet the next time she came down she brought a hemstitched linen Bureau scarf that I really didn't need or want and that must have taken her five times as long to make as the curtains did. And I know she tells everyone about how much she does for me, and of course she does do a lot but it would mean more to me to be able to ask her now and then to help me out in the little things than to have her do some of the big things she does.

Witness stood up in the water, and Jackie got out and then went in again and saved Lizzie. The three of them went home, meeting on the way Mrs. Taylor, a neighbour, whom they told what had happened.

"She Died in the Water."

Jackie Vaughan, aged nine, stated that on Friday night his mother said she was going to drown them all, but it was too late to take them to the river then. On Saturday morning she took them on to the shore and threw them all into the water. He got out again, but Elsie went into deep water and "she died in the water." He repeated in detail what his sister had stated in regard to the other children.

Mrs. Phoebe Taylor, 68, St. Paul's Road, Rock Ferry, deposed to following Mrs. Vaughan down to the shore intending to keep her company until Mr. Vaughan had left the house as she knew there had been some trouble. She was accompanied to the shore by her two daughters. When they looked round they could see nothing but the baby carriage and some children's clothing. On climbing up on to a boat on the shore witness saw what she took to be Mrs. Vaughan down at the edge of the water some hundreds of yards away. She (witness) started to run towards her, but she stuck in the mud and had to take off first her boots and then her stockings. She could not get through the mud, however, so she went back to fetch her husband. He ran off to the shore and witness followed and met the three children coming along the "slush."

What the Constable Found.

Police-Constable George Robinson said that as he went to the slush, met Maisie, Jackie and Bessie. They were drenched and had the appearance of having been in the water. When he met them they were dragging the perambulator by the bank at bottom of St. Paul's Road. They had come about 250 yards from the water's edge. Witness followed the footmarks of the children down to the water, and he then saw a body about forty yards out. He waded in up to the waist and brought out the body of a little girl. He tried artificial respiration, and then handed the body over to the father. He next saw the body of Mrs. Vaughan floating in the river about fifty yards away. He ob-say that but don't you think if people want gratitude they ought to be willing to help in your way as well as in theirs?"

Who doesn't think so? No one surely who has had one of the people such as my neighbor so graphically describes in the family. And I suspect that means a good many of us.

Distracted Mother's Terrible Crime

THROWS HERSELF AND 4 CHILDREN INTO THE MERSEY—FOUR DROWNED.

Further light was thrown upon the Rock Ferry quadruple drowning tragedy at the inquest held by Mr. J. C. Bate (the Wallasey district coroner) and a jury, on the three-year-old girl, Elsie Vaughan, whose body was found floating near Egremont.

The child was one of the three little girls who, with their brother and two sisters, were thrown into the river at Rock Ferry by their mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Vaughan, aged thirty-four, the wife of William Arthur Vaughan, of 45, Oak Tree Place, Rock Ferry, a railway checker. The boy escaped from the river, it will be remembered, and assisted in the rescue of his two sisters.

The father, William Arthur Vaughan, identified the body as that of his daughter Elsie, aged three years. She had been addicted to fits, as a result of which she was not a normal child. She could not walk properly, and had to be carried. Witness then proceeded to state in detail the facts concerning the arrest and release of his wife on a charge of theft and of the quarrel they had at home.

Following the quarrel, his wife told him she would "leave him to it." She had several times threatened to commit suicide but she had never threatened to take the lives of the children.

Young Daughter's Story.

The eldest of the woman's five daughters, Maisie, aged eleven, was the next witness. She said that she was out with her mother on Friday night, when her mother said she was going to take them all to the shore in the morning to drown them. On the Saturday morning, just at daylight, her mother took the children downstairs, and put Elsie, Nellie, and Bessie into the perambulator. She then took them away, and witness went back to bed.

Her mother came back for her soon afterwards and made her go down to the shore with her. When she got there, witness saw the other children on the sands. She went down to the low water mark with her mother. Witness carried Nellie, and her mother carried Elsie to the water's edge. Her mother took off her shoes and stockings, and put them in the perambulator. "She threw Elsie into the water first. Then she threw Bessie, then Lizzie, and then Nellie, and then she threw me, and afterwards Jackie," said witness.

Witness stood up in the water, and Jackie got out and then went in again and saved Lizzie. The three of them went home, meeting on the way Mrs. Taylor, a neighbour, whom they told what had happened.

tained a boat, got her out of the water, and took her to the Rock Ferry stage, where they tried artificial respiration for over an hour, but without avail.

The jury, after a brief consultation, found that the child met her death by drowning and that she was thrown into the water by her mother. They, therefore, returned a verdict of "Wilful murder" against Elizabeth Vaughan, deceased.

Swimmer Quizzed in Prince Search

Scotland Yard Think Egyptian Knows Something of Disappearance.

Boulogne, Sept. 3. (A.P.)—Ishak Helmy, the Egyptian swimmer, member of the Channel swimming colony for the past few weeks, figured yesterday in the search for Prince Self El Dine, recently escaped from an Asylum at Hastings, Eng. Two Scotland Yard men are here making discreet inquiries regarding Helmy's activities. They did not disguise their suspicion that Helmy, whose father is an intimate friend of Self El Dine, was not concerned so much about swimming the Channel as he was in the Prince.

Helmy, while declaring great sympathy with the Prince, disclaims any but a hearsay knowledge of the Prince's escape and wanderings, and denies also that he knows anything about a villa he is supposed to have rented for the purpose of hiding his countryman.

THE DIFFICULTY OF GETTING THINGS DONE.

(To Billy Phelps) Professor William Lyon Phelps, philosopher and friend. This summer day these simple lines of lasting love are penned. How curiously run the years, how strangely flows life's tide. That I should come with praise and blame, nor can the two divide; I blame you for the charms I praise. 'Tis all your fault, I say. That I who had much work to do played truant yesterday.

If you were other than you are or lived not where you do, Or if it were not such a joy to share a day with you, Or if you frowned as many frown, or sneered as many sneer And had no reverence in your heart for things which men revere, I could remain at work unmoved and plod my tedious way. But just to be with you awhile the vagabond I play.

Not knowing you, some men may say that I'm a fool to shrink. That I should have the strength of will to stay and do my work; They'd think 'twere easy to decline a call from you to play. Especially when they learn you dwell in a snugly quietude and rest. But, Billy Phelps, I set it down in last- ing black and white. 'Tis all your fault that I am here and working late to-night.

So for the very things I praise in you I also blame. Yours is the fault; if time shall bring to me a shiftless name; And if at last in failure I my poor career shall end The throng may doubt me when I say: "I had too good a friend!" His fault was that he was so fine, so gentle, and so true. That just to be with him I shirked the tasks I had to do.

THE author visited Canton, a charming but very dangerous city in China. While there he made the acquaintance of a Portuguese who took him to a gambling den.

The moment he entered, the author felt that the whole thing was being stage-managed with the one idea of fleecing the foreigner.

He played for a while, the game being one in which two dice were used, thrown from a box held by the banker. He lost steadily, and realized that the dice-box was of a type often used in gambling dens in South America.

Instead of holding just the two dice, the box had an inclined, movable bottom, so that at the will of the banker two hidden dice could be thrown instead of the straight-forward couple. The two hidden dice were weighed so as to throw in favor of the bank.

Mr. Newton thought quickly. During a lull he suddenly spoke. "This is a most interesting game," he said smilingly, "but oddly enough the last time I saw it played was in Peru. They are hasty people in that part of the world. One man had been losing a great deal, and all of a sudden he pulled out a gun and put a hole right through the dice box!"

The Portuguese started and stole a hurried look at the banker. "He was a fool to lose his temper," the author went on, "but what do you think happened? Of course the cup was smashed, but instead of two dice, four rolled out on to the table. We became great friends afterwards and he presented me with the gun, which I always carry as a souvenir. Here it is!"

The effect was electrical and the author fancied that he brought the gun out just in time. The banker, who had risen to his feet, sat down again. Mr. Newton left without difficulty!

THRILLING MOMENTS IN AN ADVENTURER'S CAREER.

In his book, "My Confessions," Mr. Montague Noel Newton confesses to a decidedly adventurous past. But as well as adventures he has had amusing experiences, too, as on one occasion when he was playing poker in Paraguay with some comparative strangers.

As it was very hot, the players took off their coats, and then produced from their pockets enormous revolvers, which they placed on the table.

So, following the old maxim: "When in Rome do as Rome does," he went to his room and brought out his two pistols!

The other players appeared astonished, and asked what on earth he was going to do with them.

"Only to return the compliment if there should be any discussion," he replied, laughing.

They then explained that they had put their guns on the table for the sake of comfort in order not to keep them in their pockets, but added that it was just as well to be armed. For in the last two months five murders had been committed at night without the murderers having been discovered!

The author visited Canton, a charming but very dangerous city in China. While there he made the acquaintance of a Portuguese who took him to a gambling den.

The moment he entered, the author felt that the whole thing was being stage-managed with the one idea of fleecing the foreigner.

The awful news was broken to him that kite-flying over the House of Parliament was forbidden, and that if he had similar ambitions concerning the Abbey, St. Paul's, or any such buildings, he would dismiss them from his mind.

With a smile, the policeman recommended the park, and thither the kite was carried with pride.

Labor's Stand Against Communism

(By SCRUTATOR in Weekly Post)

Mr. A. J. Cook, the miners' secretary, ought really to make up his mind where he stands. He ought to know whether he is an evolutionist like Mr. MacDonald or a revolutionary like Lenin. If he does not, he should take a holiday until he reaches some sort of conviction. As things are it is difficult to decide whether he ought to be regarded as an extreme extremist or invited to pose for the movies in competition with Charlie Chaplin. The miners have a right to know if they are being led by a Bismarck or by a Falstaff. It is very trying for people to be cheering themselves hoarse in admiration of a hero's fireworks and next day to find him rushing into print with explanations that reduce his heroic feats into the coolings of above. Really, it will not do, Mr. Cook.

Revolutionary Talk.
When the other day Mr. Cook spoke of a revolution with a disciplined army everybody thought he meant what he said—that he was using words in their natural, everyday meaning. One's mind wandered about from Robespierre to Cromwell, and from Cromwell to Trotsky, and people would scarcely have been surprised if the reserves and the Territorials had been mobilized in response to such a direct challenge. But, bless your innocent heart, Mr. Cook had not the remotest idea of challenging the forces of the Crown. When he speaks of a revolution he means anything that turns round, from a cart wheel to public opinion, and to him a disciplined army is nothing but a mass of workmen willing to starve for a whole month in order to prove the value of manual labour to the community. So that's that! Now, an orator, like a poet, is, I suppose, entitled to some licence. Mr. Cook likes military metaphors. They bring the cheers. But I would suggest that whenever in future he feels obliged to resume his verbal warfare, he should at least be careful to explain, immediately the cheering is over, that his words must be understood in a strictly Pickwickian sense. Then no bones will be broken, and we shall all be happy.

Leave Out the Cartridges.
No doubt Mr. Cook finds it necessary to keep in the limelight, and he has a right to be proud of his victory over the weakest Prime Minister of modern times. It was a considerable achievement, but he must not think that he has upset the British Empire because Mr. Baldwin has chosen to wait and see. If he chooses to get into trouble personally that's his own affair; but he has no right to mislead his followers into thinking that a minority of workers will be permitted to play ducks and drakes with the nation's interests and that a "dictation of the proletariat," after the Russian fashion, can be set up here as the result of thirty days' idleness. Masses of men, especially if they are suffering undeserved hardships, are often all too ready to give heed to false prophets, and to knock their own heads against granite walls. In their own interest they ought to be warned against relying on a strength they do not possess, and against the folly of violating the laws of a free, democratic country. I heartily welcome Mr. Cook's declaration of methods of violence, but I think he ought to be more careful in his language. If the gun goes off and somebody is injured, the old story that the careless handler did not think it was loaded will bring but little comfort. Let Mr. Cook leave out his rhetorical cartridges, and nobody will think the less of him.

By the Scruff of the Neck.
The case of Mr. Albert Inkpin, secretary of the British Communist Party, is in a different category, and ought to be dealt with differently. In a letter to the Labour Party and the General Council of the Trade Union Congress, Mr. Inkpin advocates the issuing of a manifesto to the Army and Navy with a view of "winning them from the capitalists." If his advice were acted upon somebody would get hurt. Great latitude is allowed in this country to general, impersonal talk, however heroic it may sound; but anybody caught tampering directly with the loyalty of the country defenders will get short shift and precious little sympathy. Of course, the responsible Labour leaders will treat the request with the contempt it deserves, but it is wise to dignify the matter with just a shrug of the shoulder? It is true that our Communists are but a handful, but that handful may grow in numbers and in its power for mischief. If the law is not strong enough to nip this sort of thing in the bud, it ought to be strengthened, and I would like to see it take all treason-mongers by the scruff of the neck and bundle them off to some more congenial climate. Russia owes us something in the matter of political refugees, and ought to welcome our superfluous Bolsheviks.

Labour's Own Voice.
Happily, British Labourism is showing a readiness to come to grips with Communism. There is a growing resentment against the impudent interference of the Red theorists in the political and economic activities of our trade unionists. To-day the Communists are the real Fabians; they are seeking day and night to pervert the Labour movement with the poison of dilatory, anarchy, and revolution. Some of them are within the citadel and others are burrowing under it from without. The danger is that the rank and file of the workers may one day be stampeded into extreme, illegal courses, contrary to the advice of their elected leaders. I am glad, therefore, that the General Council of the Trade Union Congress is resolved to be masters in its own house, and that great provincial centres like Liverpool are responding to the call of unity against Labour's greatest enemy. The day is coming when British Labour, like the British Government, will find it necessary to speak with one authoritative voice, not with a dozen discordant voices; and if it is to escape disruption, chaos, and impotence it will take care that that one voice will speak with the clear accents of patriotism and sanity.

"Novel Feature" at the Majestic

Holiday Audiences Appreciate "In the Speejacks."

As regards educational and entertainment value, the equal of the Paramount picture, "Around the World in the Speejacks," which delighted audiences at the Majestic Theatre yesterday afternoon and evening, has yet to be represented to the picture-going public. In fact there has never been anything just like this marvelous picture ever shown in this, or any other city. The story of this great adventure is widely known because of the wide newspaper publicity given to the exploit, Commodore and Mrs. A. Y. Gouwen of Gouwen, of left New York in August, 1924, in a 98-foot motor boat, "Speejacks," in which it was planned to circumnavigate the globe. On this expedition the little party sailed the seven seas and encountered many trials and hardships. But the Gouwens accomplished their purpose and in so doing marked an epoch in sea history. If you revel in thrills, see "Around the World in the Speejacks." There's heart interest, too, in the wedding of a lovers' island couple by Commodore Gouwen aboard his yacht where, beyond the three mile limit, his word, as a commander, is law. This is the finest travel picture we have ever seen.

It will be repeated again to-night whilst a complete change of programme is booked for to-morrow.

How to Judge Ebonite ...

(By C. C. PHILLIPS).
A false impression is created in speaking loosely of insulators as substances which do not permit the passage of electricity, because it gives rise to the idea that any insulator will do for our purpose.

There is no material obtainable that will absolutely bar the flow of electric current, and the best we can do is to use only those materials with properties which approach most closely to our needs.

For the efficient working of the set it is essential that the various parts should be mounted upon and separated by the best possible insulator, and ebonite provides the solution.

It may be drilled and cut with ease, it has good insulating properties, fair mechanical strength and to a certain extent its appearance is in its favour. But it must be of the best quality because, contrary to general opinion, there are many varying grades of ebonite, some of which are decidedly not good insulators.

In its most efficient form, its composition is mainly rubber, but certain other ingredients must be used in the vulcanizing or hardening process and the quality of the final product depends not only upon the grade of rubber involved but very largely upon the quantity, purity and suitability of these additions.

The World in 2925

WOMEN WILL WEAR THE SAME CLOTHES AS MEN.

The celebrated young Professor A. M. Low attempts in his book, "The Future," to draw a picture of the world as it will be a thousand years hence.

He predicts that women will have abandoned skirts in favour of the more convenient trousers worn by men. Also women's brains will be in every way as well developed as men's. In appearance there will be very little difference between them, as, with the taking to the trousers, women will no longer wear high heels. Their hair will be cut as short as men's.

The average man of the future will rise at 9.55 a.m. at the call of an alarm clock worked by wireless. While he is having his breakfast a loud speaker will keep him informed of the day's happenings, and at the same time another apparatus, known as a television, will show him, on a screen, moving pictures of interesting things happening at the moment.

The television apparatus, which will be worked by wireless, will almost do away with the vast crowds that today go to such events as the Derby. Instead, one will sit in comfort at home and watch the boat race, or the state opening of Parliament, or the Cup Final at the actual time it is taking place. By this means popular events the whole world over will be brought within view at home.

In the wonderful future, photographs will be "telephoned" from all parts of the world and be published quite as quickly as news is at the present time.

With wireless in all its new forms, one will be able to write at a distance. That is, your signature will be repeated at the same time and exactly as you are writing it, many hundreds of miles away.

In fact, Professor Low prophesies the time when a man will transmit his signature by wireless to a cheque book at the bank, while the cashier watches the operation by television. City streets of the future will be places of comfort in themselves. They will be roofed in with glass, thus preventing fogs, wind, or rain.

Roads will be wider and of better quality, while road-repairing, which to-day is such a serious cause of traffic congestion, will be conducted on the block-system, which will allow a complete block of the road to be taken up and relaid in a single night.

However, there will not be much walking in the world of the future. The principal thoroughfares will have progressive moving sidewalks. That is to say, pedestrians will stop on one travelling at three miles an hour, then on to one travelling at six, and so on, until a speed of about twenty miles an hour is attained. When nearing their destination they will step from one path to another, gradually reducing speed without difficulty.

The men of the future will certainly have greater intellectual strength and reasoning powers, but at the same time they will be far weaker creatures than to-day, relying on many artificial aids for existence. With this change there will come also a change in man's amusements. Instead of games of strength, they will be intelligent and educational games.

The introduction of innumerable scientific labor-saving devices will do away with monotonous toil, but will not in any way promote unemployment, for large numbers of skilled workers will be needed to produce and operate these machines.

All workers will be skilled, for the non-skilled work will be entirely performed by mechanical apparatus. The author foretells that when this age arrives we may have established wireless communication with beings on other planets. Even at the present day, he says, were there a wireless station on the moon we should be able to get into communication.

The Prince's Tour

WARM WELCOME AT LA PLATA.

Scenes of tumultuous excitement, to which the Prince of Wales and his party are now becoming accustomed, prevailed on the occasion of the Prince's visit to La Plata, the seat of Government of the province of Buenos Ayres. Any possibility of the journey being monotonous was prevented by the escort of five aeroplanes, the pilots of which gave a skilful display of low flying throughout the trip.

On arrival at Government House the Prince took his place on a specially-erected dais, the whole population of the city turning out en masse to greet him.

In front of the dais were massed children from the Government schools dressed, as is the custom of the country, in white. As the Prince was arriving they suddenly burst into song, with "God Save the King." They sang in excellent English, the result of special phonetic training for this occasion for some weeks. The British National Anthem was followed by the Argentine Anthem. Flocks of pigeons were released, and then one of the girls, carrying a banner, advanced and made a short speech welcoming the Prince. His Royal Highness made a smiling reply.

The Girls' Song of Welcome.
The girls again began a song of welcome, after which they wheeled and marched past the Prince, each rank clapping their hands as they passed the Prince. It was a very effective scene.

During the next half hour there defiled before the Prince a picturesque procession of detachments of the provincial guards, police, firemen, and other local official bodies in uniform of every style and color, headed by their bands. The men on foot marched with a kind of goose-step, a curious flat-footed, stiff-legged step in which the foot slapped the ground. These contingents were followed by Boy Scouts and other children's organizations.

Woman's Best Age.
What is woman's best age? A number of film producers—those expert dealers in the fluctuating market of human attractions—have chosen the adventurous middle years as the most interesting period in a woman's life. It is then that she has ripened beyond the mental and physical gaucheries of inexperienced youth and is untouched by the eel-sipping shadow of age.

If Madam Forty is wise enough to exploit her beauty along its own lines she can hold her own with Miss Sweet-and-Twenty. Defeat lies in any attempt to carry the war into youth's own country, but she can profit by the faults of inexperience and by cleverly exploiting her individuality. Her dress will be perfect in its compromise with fashion and her own colouring and figure; she will never be late for an appointment; she will remember her other people's names; and by eliminating that youthful characteristic quickness to take offence will score heavily.

But, after all, isn't it a little presumptuous to select any age as woman's best?

One thing, however, is certain. Womanhood in admiring eyes. Doesn't history record that Ninon man's best age is that when she feels de l'Enclos at seventy was adored for at ease with life, when her manner twenty-five or forty, that time must her charms; and that Juliet was in has its completest assurance and the come.

reads the justification of her womanhood in admiring eyes.

And to every woman, whether she be young or old, that time must her charms; and that Juliet was in has its completest assurance and the come.

Famous Judge's Discovery

Lord Darling's New Utopia Where Prisoners May Smoke in Court—From Chicago to Colney Hatch.

Just as St. Thomas More, the first lay Lord Chancellor of England, discovered "Utopia," so has Lord Darling, the most popular Judge of the last twenty five years, discovered "Ruggles-Brisia."

In the Ruggles-Brisian Commonwealth, a Judge, after a prisoner has been found guilty, may not sentence till the bench have made personal inquiries, via all sorts of fiddle-faddle, to determine whether the "patient" is to be sent to the madhouse, hospital, university, or gallow.

So Lord Darling, in the London "Evening News," reduces to absurdity the resolution lightly come to by the International Prison Conference, presided over by Sir E. Ruggles-Brisie.

Second Sight for J.P.'s.

Who they are who passed this resolution I know not—possibly no one knows them nor takes account of them except when they assemble together to be addressed by Lord Oxford and Asquith, and to Lord Haldane, and others who do not stay to be affected by the opinions of their audience (Lord Darling's remarkable article runs).

But be they whom they may, and dwell they where the must, they have, before dispersing with the swallows, left to us here in England their overpowering decision that whoever would be a magistrate, high or low, must be compelled to attend lectures on those branches of queer learning known as psychology, penology, sociology, and, above all, forensic psychiatry. This to begin; but one easily foresees that to those sciences must soon be added second-sight, prophecy in all its branches, murder as one of the fine arts, alchemy, conjuring, and all the learning of the Egyptians.

"Put Out Your Tongue."

For it was solemnly resolved that after conviction of the accused, and before passing sentence upon him, the magistrate must make himself acquainted with all the home life of the convict—his family, his pleasures, his pursuits—since all of these combined have made him what he is, a thief, an assassin, a bigamist, or a burglar, and the prescription which is to cure him can only be composed or compounded by one with this fullest knowledge of the case.

The first act of the medico-jurist will naturally be to say to the prisoner "Put out your tongue"—if indeed the roguish patient shall not already have protruded it. He must feel the pulse—and, if a conscientious practitioner, those of the prisoner's father and mother; and so with regard to any ancestors present or procurable—for is not heredity at the root of all that common men call crime, but the truly learned name progenital perversion?

Tinned Salmon and Slander.

Because it is well established that diet affects the mind as well as the body; that for example, a surfeit of tinned salmon induces to libel, slander, and petty larceny, whereas roast beef, Yorkshire pudding, with horseradish sauce, and strong beer all the while, brings up the essence of that British brutality from which lotus eaters, such as the Irish, are notoriously free; meat, drink, cookery, pills and purgatives must all be carefully studied by him who would be a Judge in the Commonwealth of Ruggles-Brisia. This indeed is an important branch of the new but now necessary "Forensic-psychiatry."

Wish-Wash and Fiddle-Faddle.

But if the magistrates should know all this—if they must be forewarned with all these ailments—why should the jurors, which is to say, why should anybody, be spared? The resolution arrived at by the wise men from everywhere does at present compel the Judge to pause for an indefinite time between verdict and sentence until he has informed himself concerning the birth, bringing up, habits, and associates of the convicted one. Then he is to apply his medico-judicial mind, steeped in all the wish-wash of psychology, sociology, and all kinds of fiddle-faddle, to the question of whether the patient—for so we must regard him—is to be sent to the madhouse, the hospital, the university, or the gallow. Why, it may be asked, should not the jury have before them the whole life story of the man before they give their findings?

Doubtless this was carefully considered in camera by the assembled pundits. And it would soon appear that, seeing how accused persons are presumed (against all probability) to be innocent, the public would not assent to a process by which the whole part of themselves, and of those who begat them, should be revealed to the world into which the suspected one might next day be re-admitted "without a stain on his character"—but, as regards his mother, his brothers and his sisters, with no character left to speak of.

An Imaginary Trial.

Were I writing these reflections for publication in the "Quarterly Review," I would here permit myself the spaciousness of an imaginary trial in the High Court of Ruggles-Brisia. A verdict of guilty proforma having been returned, the Judge would begin his investigation of the past of the prisoner, who meanwhile would probably be accommodated with a seat on the bench, or allowed the solace of a cigarette.

Obviously it would be unsafe to rely on the reports of the police concerning so delicate a matter. The nearest relatives of the presumed wrongdoer must therefore be brought to testify concerning his infancy, and his adolescence. His mother must be sought, and his father, or his "putative father" as the law has it, in but too many instances. His mother's "marriage lines" would be put in—provided there were any. Her decrees, nisi and absolute, would naturally be exhibited. Photographs of the slum, or of the public school, in which his sportive youth was passed would be gravely considered by the court—as would also the records of his weight at birth, baptism, and confirmation.

With many other intimate particulars of his status at important stages of his progress from the font to the dock. Reared on Mother's or Nestle's.

A philosopher, who happened also to be a troubadour, boasted that if he might make a country's songs, anyone who fancied the job might write its laws. What then more necessary than to know the nursery rhymes which the patient absorbed with his mother's—or with Nestle's—milk? "Sing a Song of Sixpence" may well stimulate a child to start on the path of acquisitive evil. "A pocketful of rice" is in itself a suggestion of capitalist hoarding which might soon result in the theft of a bun by an infant of three years—for has not the egregiously Dr. Freud taught us that not only are we born in sin, but that the sub-conscious child en ventre sa mere, as my Lord Coke has it, has in itself all the bad qualities of its aires, and hopes to perpetuate them. Then, to proceed, how should one not excuse the fraudulent bankrupt, ruined by living beyond his means, when one learned that he had been lulled to rest by the imagined consumption of a dainty dish of five and twenty baked blackbirds? Hearing over and over again the story of Jack Horner must clearly promote the development of the glands of acquisitiveness and self-esteem, just as the inordinate perusal of the doings of Dick Turpin has notoriously converted many an innocent youth into a company promoter.

Melodies Rule Out Murder.

Should a gentle German be judged as we would judge a poor savage incited in youth by the cacophonous discords of the tom-tom? Surely not. His Judge, applying the new learning and distinguishing between the effects and the medical oblongata by the sabbat, psalter, dulcimer, and all kinds of music, would easily decide that of a gifted nation, rejoicing in the melodies of Mendelssohn, Beethoven, and Bach, could not be guilty of any inhuman act. The child brought up on "Songs without words" never could stoop to crimes such as those whose cradle song is "Malbrook s'en va-t-en guerre" must infallibly commit.

From Chicago and Colney Hatch.

Sociology, psychology, forensic psychiatry, divine gifts from Chicago and Colney Hatch, let it be the lot of the judges of Ruggles-Brisia to study and apply you all to those who seek for justice. Some will find themselves dissected; others who, according to English law, have done evil, will find themselves excused as being so many automatic machines ill put together.

May Prove Descendant of Link

BETWEEN MEN AND APES.

London, Aug. 31. (A.P.)—What may prove to be a direct descendant of the common ancestor of man, and the ape, is living in the forests of Borneo, according to Sir Arthur Smith Woodward, former director of the British Natural History Museum.

All the evidence goes to show that man and the ape descended from a common ancestor, Sir Arthur said in reference to the Borneo animal.

Whereas apes adapted themselves to living in a forest, man adapted himself to plains life where he was compelled to stand erect to survive. Sir Arthur said the theory of Dr. Wood Jones, of Adelaide University, Australia, that the ape descended from man was scarcely tenable.

"There is no doubt that if the common ancestor of man were living now," Sir Arthur said, "he would be classed as an ape or a monkey."

"The little tarsus, an animal which inhabits the forests of Borneo, is believed by anthropologists to be more like the common ancestor of man and ape than any other living creature."

"Fossils strongly resembling the tarsus have been found in the rocks of Europe and North America, and fossils of creatures belonging to the same group discovered in different places clearly indicate that this form of life was at one time to be met with in all parts of the Northern Hemisphere."

"Dr. Jones, in his theory of the descent of monkeys from man declared that the missing links between them were so ancient that they never would be found. That is absurd. Some day, the common ancestor will be found, and when found, in all probability he will be like this little animal, tarsus. Paleontologists are hopeful of finding him at any time. An American expedition has just emerged from Mongolia where the hunt is on for fossilized remains of ancient man. There have been many suggestions as to the part of the earth originally inhabited by man, but I should not be at all surprised if man's cradle proved to have been in Mongolia."

Council of Action

TO COMBAT THE COMMUNISTS.

Steps are being taken on Merseyside to form what is known as a Council of Action. It will, it is believed, represent 100,000 members of trades unions, and one of its objects is to be the putting of a check on the influence sought to be exerted on trade unions by the Communists.

A prominent trade union official in Liverpool said that there was no need whatever for timid people to feel anxious about this movement to establish a union of unions in the Mersey area. On the contrary, he said, they should draw comfort from it. "The actual position is this," he added. "During the recent negotiations in connection with the mines dispute, the General Council of the Trade Union Congress issued certain instructions, feeling that, if there was to be concerted action, it ought to be through the trades councils rather than through irresponsible bodies. Although the mines dispute ended satisfactorily, for the time being, it had been agreed that we should go on with the setting up of these Councils of Action. When established they cannot function unless and until the General Council of the T.U.C. issues instructions."

"What the local Trades Council has done is to invite certain organizations covered by its scope to send representatives to this Council of Action. The main object is to have some machine ready, and secondary aim is to prevent anything in the nature of hysteria or spasmodic action, urged by people who have no responsibility. There is nothing whatever in the movement to justify undue feeling in the minds of the people. It is simply part of the development of the trade union machine in the control of the General Council."

"When set up—if it is set up—it will not take any action without the consent of the General Council and the executive committees of the various unions, so there is, you see, no intention of using it in any extreme way. There is the National Minority Movement and the Communist Movement—which we assume to be about the same—and they are summoning meetings of various organizations. They have even invited the Trades Council to send representatives. If a machine is to be set up at all, it must be one with some sense of responsibility, and one which will function on sensible lines, and the effect of the Trades Council taking the matter up will be largely to knock the bottom out of any attempt by the extremist movement to engineer the adoption of their own particular ideas."

Clippings From "Punch"

2,950 Wild Horses Killed

Seven cowboys, paid by the Government £10 a month, killed 2,950 wild horses in three months and rid British Columbia of one of the most serious of its menaces to cattle.

For years the presence of hundreds of wild horses, many of them undersized and crippled strays from the old gold camps, have constituted a problem in the stock industry in that district. They broke down fences, ate valuable fodder, and lured domesticated horses away from the corral.

The ranchers complained repeatedly, and the idea of hiring a squad of cowboys was conceived. An intensive campaign accomplished more than anything in the past, with the result

Dawes' Plan Nets
U.S. $18,000,000

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1.—The United States has received $18,000,000 through operation of the Dawes plan in its first year, it was estimated at the Treasury yesterday.

A total of $14,725,154.40 was to- ward payment of costs of the army of occupation, which was allotted under the Wadsworth agreement. This sum was taken as the first year's payment of army costs. Under the subsequent Wadsworth agreement, the United States hereafter will receive $5,000,000 gold back annually, or about $15,000,000, until the entire army costs, amount- ing to $254,000,000 are paid.

The United States has also been al- lowed $5,313,000 gold marks, or about $6,800 for settlement of claims of the against Germany, repre- senting 2 1/2 per cent. of annual Ger- man reparations. This, however, is still in the hands of the transfer agent, and no part of it has been received.
