The Chicago Corn Markets. CHICAGO, Sept. 30.—Billy McHenry, wh acted as spokesman for the corn bulls in the September squeeze, offered 90 cents for a million bushels just before the close of business to-day. The scene on the floor approached a pandemonium. A short trader offered to sell one carload at 57 cents, trader offered to sell one carload at 57 cents, which was taken. This was a ruse to prevent the manipulators from enforcing too high a settling price. The settling price is expected to be from 83 to 85 cents. Wheat is stronger this afternoon. In reality there were very few trades during the closing hour, but prices rose steadily until 86 was touched, when MeHenry of fered to buy lots of a quarter, half and an entire million, until the figure 90 was reached.

Durthe hours named the water was almost rip pleless, in fact it was almost unprecedent edly smooth for September 30. That the race was not decided on its merits and to the satisfaction of all concerned, was owing to the unlimited amount of "monkeying" displayed by the managers of the race. Tommy Louden was chosen referee, the judge for O'Connor and Euright was Joe Rogers, for the other party James Douglass, while Capt. Dillon was made finishing judge. The steamer D. C. West left the Toronto rowing club house at 3.45 with the referee and about 100 on board. Shesteamed down to the distillery, where half an hour was spent in taking the oarsmen on board. gentieman of literary talent as well as ess energy. He employs a number of book canvassing agents throughout the than ordinary abundance of gall and a fluency of language which puts the average professional to the blush. This would seem to indicate that Mr. Lyon had a corner on the best lying talent of the country, but a couple of pamphlets just come to hand suggest another explanation of the matter. Mr. Lyon does not find successful canvassers; he creates them. His head office in Guelph is a nursery for budding book agents. There, it is said, candidates rehearse conciliatory scenes with stuffed bull dogs, try the power of the human eye upon the muzzle of a shot-gun, and in various other ways prepare themselves for the arduous duties of their calling.

To the fact that Mr. Lyon himself is an old canvasser the book agents of to-day are indebted for the publication of two choice little manuals on the successful pursuit of their profession. The manuals are not intended for public circulation, but they contain so much candid information and so many ingenious suggestions respecting the details of the book canvassing trade that than ordinary abundance of gall and a flu-of readers than that for which they were originally written.

Mr. Lyon opens his "instructions" in a vivacious style which must inspire confidence in the most retiring and bashful of his pupils. "Look cheerful," he says, "for everything may depend upon that." "Be a man of one idea," "Work yourself up to a kind of inspiration" is his advice to beginners who might otherwise be disposed to flightiness. But he does not linger long on the general aspect of the subject. This is the way he plunges into particular directions:

Introduce yourself by saying. This is Mr.—, I believe. My name is ——; (shake hands heartily, if opportunity presents). I was recommended to call upon you by Mr.—(The name you give should be a subscriber, and one he knows and respects. Get your customer seated, if possible, and, if in the house, endeavor to get all the family to look at the book. Be sure and notice the children. Take the prospectus from your pocket, holding it wrongside up to yourself, but right side up to your customer. You have, of course, become so thoroughly acquainted with every word of the description that you can say it fluently, and in a natural tone, with a clear and distinct voice not loud or too fast. If you know it well enough people will not suspect it is a learned piece. If well said it will be almost sure to interest your customer so that he will listen to you and without becoming uneasy, give you a fair hearing.

But the successful agent must imitate the wisdom of the serpent as well as the artless cooing of the dove. Here is how Mr. Lyon advises him to introduce a medical work to a physician:

The object with a doctor being to make him think the book is made up of rules of health and hygienes and simple remedies, that the wife and mother can use in very simple cases. You will have the doctor against you if you dwell on how specific the book is, the great number of prescriptions, and that every family can become their own doctor. On the other hand, you want to talk and act right the other way with the public; dwell upon how specific the book is, how clear it makes the diagnosis, so you may with certainty know the disease.

London Advertiser: It is reported that Bishop Hellmuth, lately of this city, formerly bishop of Huron and subsequently coadjuior bishop of Ruson, is likely to be appointed to the Anglo German bishopric at Jerusalem. This appointment is in the hands of the king of Prussia, it having been agreed upon at the formation of the bishopric by the English and German governments that the appointments should be made by each government afternately. Bishop Hellmuth probably owes his appointment in roune degree to the fact that he is the second Jew who has ever been raised to the anglican episcopacy.

Since Editor of The World. sional report of Mr. S. B. Reed, angeminent American engineer, under whose supervision the Union Pacific railroad was built. Mr. Reed's report shows that the actual cost of the mountain section will be much less than at first expected; and Mr Van Horne says that this section will posipleted within a year from this date, and for four million dollars less than last year's estimates. "Within the same time," says Mr. Van Horne, "the eastern section will also be completed, so that by September next a through rail connection between Montreal and the Pacific coast will be established." These strong and very decided statements, made on such good authority, will doubtless create a profound impression throughout the country, and in England as well. Manager Van Horne's last appears to have knocked the Globe "out of time," for now it says that his report and Mr. Reed's give "a more favorable account of the mountain section than has yet been printed." But the Globe still reserves to itself the satisfaction of abusing Professor

Most important of all is what Mr. Van Horne says of the prospects of traffic for the road, once it is completed. And these are his emphatic words: "I do not hesi tate to say that the Canadian Pacific rail way has more good agricultural land, more goal and more timber between Winnipeg and the Pacific coast than all of the other Pacific railways combined, and that every part of the line, from Montreal to the Pacific, will pay." This is talking straight to the point, we should say; and with facts for a basis it will be sure to tell. \ Let us quote further on the important subject of the materiel for future trailic:

I am happy to state, as one result of my trip, that my doubts about the value of the mountain section of the railway have been entirely removed. In addition to the agricultural possibilities of the meny valleys of British Columbia and its great mineral wealth, its magnificent forests alone will furnish a large and remunerative traffic for the rail way. From the mouth of the Kicking Horse river, forty-four miles west from the summit of the Hocky Mountains, to the Salmon Arm of the Shuswap lakes, a distance of one hundred and fifty miles, the line passes through a continuous belt of gigantic trees, which increase in size going westward unthey reach their maximum in Eagle Pass, which increase in size going westward unthey reach their maximum in Eagle Pass, which increase in size going westward unthey reach their maximum in Eagle Pass, which increase in the property of the pround, are common. The timber is mostly cedar, louglas fit, hemlock, white pine, spruce and amarac. Other varieties of more or less value also occur. All of the valleys near the line of the railway through the Gold range and the Selkirk mountains seemed to be well filled with valuable timber, and I have no doubt that the supply is practically inexhaustible. About the Pacific terminus there are also great forests of gigantic trees, even larger the materiel for future traffic:

oute is undoubtedly good, but that along the constructed line is as good as land can well be, and the worst of it would be rated as firstless in almost any other country. Reports bout alkali districts and sandy stretches ave been circulated by parties ignorant of the country. These reports have in ome cases originated in malice, and a others from superficial observation. There is no more alkali in the land on the rairie section of the line, than on any other rairie section of the same extent in North

Last week the news of the suspension of Mr. Fawcett, the leading private banker in western Ontario, gave a shock to the stock market, both in Toronto and Montreal. The shock was the more felt because the market was "feeling rather poorly," as we may say, the week before, and the public were quick to take the alarm. And there does not appear to be any very decided recovery as yet.

While the outlook appears to be an un favorable one for speculation in stocks, real estate more than holds its own, and is quite lively, and on the advance. Such is the case in Toon the advance. Such is the case in Toronto, at all events, and we hear the same thing from Montreal. The Mail's correspondent is informed by a leading financier

People have been drawing their deposits from banks, and have been putting it where they thought it would do more good—in real estate. The same informant assured him that he was offered any amount of capital on mortgage on city real estate at 5 per cent, and that there was far more to be had at that rate than could be absorbed by the demand.

To the same effect are recent reports in the New York papers, of the investing public turning away from the stock exchange and going in for real estate instead. We may Mr. Koss has two duties to perform. First, to find out on whose authority this money was returned. It cannot have been that

The folks down there who is in trouble, and that he has been knew what they were about when they compelled to form an alliance with Gould shot Walker. in order to save his colossal fortune. The "old man," it is said, has managed pretty well himself, but his sons have been playing a losing game. William K, it is said, lost six millions last fall in speculation, and Cornelius dropped two millions during the panic in May; their father having to foot all the bills. It would have been cheaper amusement for them had they been traveling in Europe, or exploring Africa along with Stanley.

It is generally believed that Rus Sage, too, was a heavy sufferer by the May panie, and that since then the old millionaire has been in rather a broken-down condition, both mentally and financially. If half of what we have heard be true, some of the biggest fish in the New York finanany number of little ones, have themselves been badly bitten during the last twelve months or so. As Vanderbilt is said to have most of his means invested in United States bonds, which do not depreciate, he ought to have been safe enough, one might suppose. But still he may have lost largely by depreciation of railway stocks, in which also he is heavily interested. However, it would not be surprising were the reports of yesterday to be followed by the contraliction of to morrow. But that there is serious trouble among the millionaires seems likely enough to prove true. We venture to repeat here a conjecture which we hazarded some time ago in these columns -- that the tumble in American ailway stocks has been caused mainly by oncerted action on the part of European nancial magnates, who are revenging hemselves upon New York operators for he wrongs of former years. We offer this as a guess, and nothing more; but it might be of interest to watch what conirmation, if any, it may receive from what passes on both sides of the Atlantic re-

BY M. A. "Where are you going to night, Estella?" asked her mother in law, as pretty little Mrs. Cameron went into the parlor, ready dressed to go out.

"Oh, I forget to tell you that Edmond a coming as far as Springfield to-night, and I am going on the half past 5 train to meet aim there," was the reply.

This was all very well for loving, dutiful, little Mrs. Carieron to take the trouble of a twenty miles journey to meet her husband who would be at home upon the following evening.

But Mrs. Cameron the elder did not thin's so. "Did Edmond send for you to she asked.

"Well, no, not exactly; but in his letter he wrote how very lonely he was without me, and wished that he could see me before to morrow evening. So I shall give him a pleasant surprise, mother."

"You are very foolish, Estella." "Why, mother! Foolish to fly to meet my dear husband who is so unhappy without me, and so anxious to have me with him! How can you say so, mother, dear?" prattled the little wife of a half year, fastening the clasp of a dainty kid glove about ening the clasp of a dainty kid glove about her slender, snowy wrist.

"I think it is very foolish, Estella, for you to start for Springfield on the evening train to meet Edmond when he is not expecting you! Something may happen that will detain him in New York, and in that case you would arrive in Springfield at 6.30 o'clock in the evening alone, with no sone to meet you and escort you to a hotel. What will you do if he does not come in on the 6 o'clock train from New York?

Mrs. Cameron laughed as she replied:

"What shall I do? Go straight to his hotel and wait there for him until he has come. Think how delighted he will be to see me! You know he wrote yesterday that the hours accorded.

Mrs. Gameron, the eider, gave her lace handkerchief a spiteful flirt as she thought how utterly her stylish daughter in-law disregarded her advice, and by way of retaliation realized.

handkerchief a spiteful flirt as she thought how utterly her ztylish daughter in-law disregarded her advice, and by way ef retaliation replied:

"Very well, do as you like! But when you've lived in the world as long as I have you will have learned that a man always pretends the most love when he feels the least. If I were in your place I should go to Springfield, if only to watch Edmond, for as likely as not he'll console himself with the smiles of some other beauty to make up for the loss of yours."

This was said in that half way tone, with that half way air, so difficult to respond to as one would like to do because one never knows how much the speaker means nor how little.

Mrs. Cameron's watter and thought a plant to have come to meet me, even were there no villain abroad whose strange resemblance to me is both surprising and annoying to me. If you had telegraphed to me that you were coming, I would have come down upon an earlier train and met you at the depot. But ladies should not travel alone at night, without it is absolutely necessary."

"Butyou are glad to see me, Edmond?"

"I am glad you are here, darling, but sorry for all the trouble the journey has caused you. My little girl must be more careful in future," he answered, gravely. And after all, Mrs. Cameron did not so very much regret the journey, for she knew now just how much she should feel if Edmond were really lost to her or loved.

Mrs. Cameron's pretty young face orimsoned as she answered quickly:

"Only that Edmond is your son I should be offended at such a remark," and left the horse for the station.

And on the way to the next station, Estella amused herself with watching the love-making going on between the pair.

"Twe somebody waiting to love me, 'she sighed, softly to herself, as the twilight gathered, and she thought of the arrival at Springfield alone, and somehow she was not so brave as she had been in her parlors, talking about the journey.

coming. Presently the door opened, and he walked in.

Heavens! It was his face! His eyes, his hair, and even the curl of the mustache was the same.

With a little, broken cry, which attracted the notice of the gentlemen near,
Mrs. Cameron leaned, half fainting, against the side of the car.
"Are you ill, madam? Can I assist u in any way?" asked good-natured Mr.

"No, thank you, I am better now," ans wered Mrs. Cameron, drawing her vail still closer about her. The train was near Springfield now, and her resolution was quickly made. She would follow them.

Somehow, she could make this one scen real. It was like a troubled dream. The man was not, could not be her Edmond, and she seemed not to be herself at all. But the train stopped within the great depot, and she must move. She was close to the watched pair when they stepped upon the platform, and heard the lady say:

"Please do not call a carriage, my love.
It is but a step or two to our hotel, and we have no luggage, you know."

And, like an avenging spirit, Estella Cameron followed this devoted couple.

She stood in the shadow while their names were registered, and then came forward.

"Edmond Cameron and lady."

"Edmond Cameron and lady."
"His name, but not like his handwriting," she said, writing her own name un-given to the guilty pair.

Entering without ceremony, she stood before the gentleman, while the other lady clung to his arms.

"Edmond!"

"Madam!"

"Madam!"
"On, Edmond! How could you break my heart?"
There was a stir without the door, and a rush of feet along the wall, and before the bawildered wife could understand it all, the officers had the fine gentleman handcuffed and in their custody.

They were leading him away, when Estella sprang forward crying:
"He is my husband! I will go with him!" And heedless of the remonstrances of the officers the little wife followed the party down the stairs into the lower hall. A party just arrived at the hotel, having come in on the 6 o'clock train from New York.

Estella saw through her tears a tall tately form, and heard like dream words

"You here, Estella? my wife!"

the cry:

"You here, Estella? my wife!"

It was all over for poor Estella then, and she lay half fainting against the broad breast of her own true husband, who had just then arrived from New York.

A few words served to explain all.

The prisoner was a noted pickpocket and thief, who had been often brought into court, when Mr. Cameron was present, and now he was traveling under Lawyer Cameron's name, hoping to escape detection through the strange resemblance he bore to that gentleman; a resemblance so close as to deceive even the loving wife and the well-known townsman.

The villain laughed heartily as he said: "Tm much obliged to you, Lawyer Cameron, for the use of your name from Albany to Boston and back to Springfield again. Much obliged to you for coming in season to save me a dueced unpleasant scene with a jealous wife."

† The officers dragged him along the hall to the street door, and Edmond Cameron went with his wife to a pleasant room, where everything was explained.

After she had told him all about her sudden impulse to come to meet him, and the sad journey with its strange ending.

But the words of her mother-in-law kept coming to her mind all the way down the trait, made its first pause, she was really quite uncomfortable at heart.

A gentleman and lady entered the car at this station, and as they passed her seat to the other end of the car, Mrs. Estella Cameron thought how like her own husband this gentleman carried his head and shoulders.

"About Elmond's size, toe," she thought. Two-thirds of the way down the car, the gentleman found a seat for the lady and himself, and Estella thought the lovely young oreature must be a bride, her face was so perfectly radient with some unspoken joy.

And on the way to the next station, Estella amused herself with watching the love-making going on between the pair.

The train stopped, and two gentlemen in the seat ahead of Estella were talking in low tones of the young couple first mentioned.

"I don't blame the man for being in love with a face so sweet as that, but I do blame him for the wrong he is doing the sweetest little wife in W——"

"Ah! then the gentleman is a resident of your town?" asked the other.

"Yes. A young lawyer of first-rate reputation. He was called to New York on a law case last week, and his wife told me this afternoon that he was expected home to-morrow!"

"Indeed! And I daresay that the devoted wife is awaiting his return with the of the corns."

"But this man's wife couldn't be content to wait until another day passed before she saw her husband. She came on the train to-night, expecting to meet the false one at Springfield," replied the other.

As if in answer to her thought, the gentleman tenderly lifted the curly head of his companion from his shoulder, and whispering something in her ear, went into the smoking-car, probably to enjoy a cigar.

"I shall see him when he returns," thought the unhappy young wife, her brain all in a sad wairl of conflicting emotions.

A song of September. From the Boston Transcript. Two little flies in my chamber I see— I have killed one, and now there are three Three little flies crawling over my door— I have killed two, and now there are four. Four little flies on the wall still alive— I have killed three, and now there are five Five little flies, but their fate soon I'll fix-I have killed four, and now there are six. Six little flies to torment me have striven— I have killed five, and new there are seven. Seven little flies, buzzing early and late— I have killed six, and now there are eight. Eight little flies, all impatient to dine— I have killed seven, and now there are nine. Nine little files within reach of my pen— I have killed eight, and now there are ten. The lodging house at Simcoe and Pearl streets was scorched yesterday. The fire started in the attic, but was speedily extinguished by the brigade. A quantity of clothes was burned.

Returns of the western stock market for last week: Received, cattle 1329, sheep 3398, hogs 599. Weighed, cattle 530, sheep 696, hogs 2048. Cash received for weighing $43,95.

Mary Brown, aged 13, was last night arrested on two charges of larceny. She stole $10 from Joseph Doran's house on Edward street and $6 from Wm. Bacon of the waterworks department, while in their employ. The police say the girl is an incorrigible thief.

James Popes' grocery store on the Davenport road, near the Ontario and Quebec crossing, was destroyed by fire yesterday morning. The inmates escaped by jumping from the upper windows into blankets held by the neighbors. Loss $2500.

A fire was discovered in a vacant house, 26 Richmond street east last night, and an alarm given from box 75. The fire was soon extinguished. The building is owned by C. E. English, and it is supposed was set on fire by tramps. $30 will cover the damage.

Madame C. C. Rossiter at Temperand

Madame C. C. Rossiter appeared in varied entertainment at Temperance hall last evening before a good audience. Her dash, but lacked expression and distinct night. Although the house has been closed dash, but lacked expression and distinctness in execution. She, however, received a well merited encore for her rendition of the solo Alice by Ascher, which was one of her best pieces, and in response played a composition of her own. Her recitations were well received, and her voice not being a strong or full one, she wisely chose selections of a light character. Madame Rossiter, in addition, gave a a composition of her own. Her recitations were well received, and her voice not being a strong or full one, she wisely chose selections of a light character. Madame Rossiter, in addition, gave a unique performance on the concertina, which took well with the audience, and she also sang a solo. Miss Beaver assisted in several contralto solos.

> A MERKY NIGHT AT THE ISLAND. Hundred Friends.

A more social event has not taken place on the Island this season than the one which occurred at the Hotel Hanlan last Miligan, Mis. W. Both, Misses Turner and Miss Sutherland got up the social and invited about 100 of their lady and gentlemen friends to be present. Nearly every one of the linvitations were accepted, and the jolly party was taken to the Island on the John Hanlan. The dining-hall up-stairs was converted into a dancing-room, and to the tuneful music of the Italian band and the festive floor-management of Mr. Ed. Sullivan, the gay whirl paid tribute to Terpsichore until 3 o'clock this morning.

At midnight a very palatable supper, gotten up by Mr. Hughes of the Criterion, was spread down stairs and much enjoyed by the company. The health of Mrs. Hanlan and other ladies of the committee was enthusiastically drank with hot tea and coffee, and the champion's lady returned her own and her assistants' thanks.
