ture at their plant? There are also canning factories and the tobacco industry in the county of Kent. All these industries need a protective tariff at their back to support them against foreign competition. Yet my hon. friend supports the Liberal platform which would throw the Canadian market open to foreign competition. A little further east is the county of Middlesex. My hon. friend who represents West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) has in his constituency large fruit areas, canning factories, wood turning establishments, and many other industries. What position is he going to take on this resolution? What position did he take in 1919? Why, he attended the Liberal convention and supported the resolution that would place the products of the bulk of these industries on the free list. A little farther east is the city of Kitchener. There you will find many other factories, and in the neighbourhood a big sugar refinery which takes the beets grown by the farmers and manufactures sugar from them. What position is my hon. friend from North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) going to take on this resolution? I ask the same question with respect to my hon. friend from East Elgin (Mr. McDermand)? I am glad to see the hon. member for that constituency in his seat. He is generally there; he is a good and faithful attendant at the House and a good citizen. I had the privilege of doing what I could during the space of a couple of weeks to show the people in his constituency that they should support the present Government. Let me tell hon. gentlemen two or three things about that constituency. We have heard a good deal of talk about East Elgin and what wonderful things were accomplished in the by-election there, but let us look at the facts. In round figures there are 13,000 voters in the riding of East Elgin, but there is only one town in the constituency—the town of Aylmer with 2,700 inhabitants and two or three small villages, none of them having a population over 300 persons. Of the total number of voters more than 10,000 live in the country districts; but notwithstanding that the representative of this Government was able to come within 200 odd votes of defeating my hon. friend. When people talk about this Government and the great defeat it received in East Elgin they should remember the foregoing facts. Now, my hon. friend was hardly elected before certain representatives from that riding—including gentlemen connected with the canning industry—who had voted against the Government went to London when the Tariff Commission sat there last year and pleaded with the Finance Minister to keep the duty on the products of these industries in order that they might carry on. My hon. friend knows full well that if the milk condensery and the canning factory in his riding were wiped out, the value of the farms throughout the district would be materially reduced. He knows full well that the canning factory distributed hundreds of thousands of dollars amongst the farmers of East Elgin, and that the milk condensery paid out over $900,000 for raw milk that was manufactured into condensed milk, and distributed throughout the country. I am merely making these statements to show that in that western part of the province—and I am sure that the same principle applies in many other districts throughout the Dominion—it is impossible for the people to accept the policy of free trade in fruit, in agricultural implements, in food products, and in dozens of other products such as are named in the platform of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Then I might turn to my good friend from West Lambton (Mr. Pardee). As he is well aware, the beautiful city of Sarnia is filled with factories, and the Board of Trade are urging Americans to cross the border and locate more factories in order to still further develop that city. Among its industries is a large plant manufacturing threshers and tractors. This industry and other industries would be wiped out if the policy enunciated by him and his colleagues in 1919 should be put into effect. For instance, in his city is an oil refining plant, the largest in Canada, erected at a cost of $2,500,000 or $3,000,000. The policy of his party and of the Agrarian group is to place lubricating, fuel and illuminating oils on the free list. Crude oil and gasoline are already exempt from duty. What else would be left to keep that refinery going if the free trade policy were in operation? And yet that one company alone has invested over $20,000,000 in refineries and stations throughout the Dominion. Unquestionably they would not operate in this country if you took away the little protection they now enjoy. It is apparent that many of our industries cannot possibly carry on without reasonable protection. I am not a high protectionist, far from it, but I am heartily in support of the policy of moderate protection enunciated by this Government, and I favour the Budget presented by the Minister of Finance in support of the policy which we on this side of the House advocate.

Now, a word or two about my own constituency. In it there are fifty-one industries, twenty-one of them being entirely separate and distinct in their organization. Do my hon. friends of the Agrarian party expect me to support their policy? I cannot do it. Do hon. gentlemen opposite expect me to support their policy? If I gave it my endorsement I would simply have to go back to my constituents and tell them what I told them last year, that over half of their industries would be wiped out if the policy of the Liberal and the Farmers party were put into effect.

Mr. GAUVREAU: They would not believe you at all.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): My hon. friend says those industries would not be wiped out. That was the cry in 1906. But he and his party have a definite tariff policy, and its effect on my riding will be evident when I read this passage from the resolution on the tariff adopted at the National Liberal Convention of 1919:

> That to these ends, wheat, wheat flour and all products of wheat; the principal articles of food; farm implements and machinery; farm tractors, mining, flour and saw-mill machinery and repair parts thereof; rough and partly dressed lumber; gasoline, illuminating, lubricating and fuel oils—should be free from customs duties—
> That a revision downwards of the tariff should be made whereby substantial reductions should be effected in the duties on wearing apparel and footwear—
> That the British preference be increased to fifty per cent of the general tariff.
> And the Liberal party hereby pledges itself to implement by legislation the provision of this resolution when returned to power.

There is no question of doubt in my mind that if the Liberal party were to carry that policy into effect it would not only wipe out practically half the industries in Ontario, but it would also materially affect every industry in the sister province of Quebec. Hon. members from that province know full well that in supporting such a policy they are not acting in the best interests either of the people of their province or of the people of the Dominion generally, and I hope that when opportunity is given to the electorate of that fair province they will come out manfully and decisively in support of the protective tariff enunciated by this Government. We have 18,000,000 horse-power of electrical energy available, of which 14,000,000 is going to waste to-day. How are we going to develop that 14,000,000 horse-power unless we encourage the establishment and development of industries that will use our raw materials and carry on a variety of manufactures? We have the second largest coal area of any country in the world. How can we develop it unless we take an active interest in a policy that will ensure a reasonable amount of protection to our industries? Why do American industries come to Canada? Not only for the purpose of taking care of their Canadian business, but in order that they may develop trade with the Motherland and our sister Dominions.

I wonder if we appreciate the enormous natural resources this country possesses? The output last year of our mines was over $400,000,000; of our forests over $182,000,000; of our fisheries over $60,000,000. Our farming industry produced over $2,000,000,000 worth of products. But it must not be forgotten that our manufactories produced goods to the value of $2,700,000,000. Surely, they are worthy of consideration, and I ask hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House to give this question their very earnest consideration, feeling sure that if they do they will support the policy enunciated by the Minister of Finance in the Budget which he has presented to this House.

Mr. J. E. PREVOST (Terrebonne): (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, neither the speech of the Minister of Finance on this deficit-laden Budget, nor after all the speech from the Throne at the beginning of the session, were calculated to comfort public opinion.

If it be true that nations have the governments they deserve, Canada must be very guilty indeed to be deserving of the Government which gives itself airs under her eyes, gorgeously adorned with the name of National, Liberal and Conservative government, a compound name for a composite government having no authority nor cohesion, a name which has no meaning at all because it is intended to mean too many things. This so-called National, Liberal and Conservative government wearing that name as it would a patch-work recalls to memory that vaudeville character who sings on a lively tune: "A proof that I am something is that I do not know what I am."

How distant are the glorious days of the mighty Conservative party under the leadership of Cartier and Macdonald! That political party has passed through all the stages leading to its downfall. To mention but three of those stages: in 1911, Conservatives came into power by denouncing reciprocity formerly advocated by Macdonald; in 1917 they throw to the dogs their old name, become "unionists" and seize power by means of an electoral plunder which will forever defile the memory of that party; and in 1920-21, the former Conservative party has completely degenerated and is totally in the hands of the Tory element, which under a spurious label seek to put the public on a wrong scent.

Divided, subdivided, torn apart and indifferently mended, the Government show themselves absolutely powerless to direct Canadian politics with foresight and firmness. Tossed about by endless eddies, the ship of state has, in three years, completely changed its crew, and its new pilot will not be equal to prevail against the storm which is brewing outside, nor able to long impose his authority over his immediate surroundings.

I know that the Prime Minister has audacity, and that he is capable of using the whip to tame those who dare raise their heads; he will cut to the bone. He is of those who cut the Gordian knot instead of untying it. But cutting is not enough, there is also splicing to be done. The Prime Minister does not seem to me particularly qualified to group around himself goodwill and tried talents desirous of directing and hastening, in a warm atmosphere of union and co-operation, the economic uplifting of our country.

The contact with the electors, in the course of the last months, has shown this Government, born from the tricked ballots of 1917, that they do not possess the confidence of the people. And there is no wonder in that, for this Government, in spite of all the false faces they put on are nothing but the Government of National Distress.

And, to begin with, can we feel safe as to the administration of our finances?

We are in the midst of a financial crisis, a great part of the responsibility for which is due to the Government. No doubt the war has brought about large expenditures and entailed heavy burdens. But the war is not the only cause of our financial disorder.

Let the Government search their conscience if they have any. Scandalous contracts have enriched favourites of the ministers. With their profiteers of all typ s; hoarders, bloated capitalists, speculating shareholders, they have cost millions to the country. These parasites have lived upon the Unionist Government like all parasites feeding upon the beast they cling to.

We have seen the Government embarking upon a ruinous railway policy. Instead of firmly pursuing a programme of restoration of our finances, the Government has delighted in their lack of foresight. Hundreds of millions have been added to the already heavy liabilities of the country by the purchase of the Canadian Northern, by the purchase of the Grand Trunk,—condemnable measures which have been blamed by the serious business men of the country without party distinction and by the boards of trade of our largest cities.

The nationalization of the railways has entailed upon our Budget an ever-increasing annual deficit; a deficit of 40 millions in 1919, of 70 millions for the last twelve months, and which the Minister of Railways foresees will be of 100 millions at the end of the present fiscal year.

Sir Robert Holt, president of the Royal Bank of Commerce and Sir Vincent Meredith, president of the Bank of Montreal, recently advised the Canadian Government to renounce their public ownership policy and to take necessary steps to return the railways to their former owners.

Lord Shaughnessy himself has just advised the Government to abandon the direction of affairs which ever-increasingly deepen the abyss of our deficits.

To its already grave faults the Government still added others: for instance, in bringing from the United States self-styled experts to reclassify our Civil Service; experts who only bungled the former classification, and who cost us hundreds of millions of dollars.

The trade commission which was the charnel-house of all the claims of the consumers against the high cost of living, cost the country $25,000 a year.

Last session, the Government caused to be voted for military purposes, the sum of $12,000,000; this year they again claim $11,890,000 for militia and yet the war is over.

I neglect many instances and some of the worst. The Government indulges in this financial debauch at a time when our finances are in a pitiable state.

In 1914, our expenses were $127,384,473; in 1920, they reached $533,000,000; in 1921, they will come up to $591,500,000. The debt of the country, which, in 1914, was $335,-996,850, that is $43 per capita, amounts in 1921 to $2,350,236,700, or $284 per capita.

Although in 18 years, from 1896 to 1914, the public debt increased to $77,000,000 from 1914 to 1921, in seven years, it rose to $2,000,000,000. The interest on the debt, which in 1914 was $14,752,117, amounts to-day to over $140,000,000 yearly. We had, in 1914, a surplus of $35,000,000; our deficit in 1921 was $220,000,000. For 1920 only the debt has increased to $101,-368,000. The Minister of Finance has declared with a cheerful mind that the total trade has increased from March, 1920, to 1921. It is true, but we must remember that our imports have increased by $175,000,000, while our exports have been reduced by $25,000,000.

The minister further states, in this House, with a smile of self-satisfaction, that our revenues, which were $349,000,000 on March 31, 1920, have reached $432,-000,000 in 1921; but only for war taxes of all kinds, we have paid within the last 12 months $170,000,000.

When the Government claims a surplus of $69,000,000 over the ordinary expenses, they omit to say that they include in their receipts those extraordinary revenues derived from war taxes and amounting to $170,000,000.

Without any additional taxes for the 12 months from April 1, 1921, we would have to meet foreseen expenses of more than $591,000,000, receipts reduced to $375,000,-000. Consequently, we would have, notwithstanding a deficit of $101,000,000 during 1919-20, another deficit amounting to $219,500,000, on March 31, 1922. Our national railways alone are to absorb over $165,000,000. The condition is such that provision must further be made for new taxes. Besides those $163,000,000 which our people have paid up in 1919 in custom duties; besides those $37,200,000 which they have contributed in excise duties, this Government has collected the following taxes:

On business profits	$40,000,000
On income taxes	46,500,000
As war-tax of the Inland Revenue	79,050,000
As well as other war taxes	2,355,000

It is according to those figures that we must judge of the evil deeds of the Government who, after having dragged us into debt beyond all measure, refuse to make the necessary economy to balance our finances and to carry on economic uplifting of the country. Far from that, the Government are taxing the people. The enormous fiscal effort asked from the Canadians will not give the results expected, if the Government does not cut down with a firm hand the useless expenses. In other words, the one remedy for the present conditions is to practice a wise and strict economical hygiene.

The Government, it is true, says that they are willing to economize, and are doing away with certain expenses; but let us make a distinction. Our ministers who talk about economy have mostly in mind the retrenchments to be effected in the present service, namely in the staff of the civil servants, and specially the mean reduction of their bonus, etc. But, those reforms are but slight economies. Moreover, it must be admitted that those who are in need the most amongst civil servants are not, as a rule, paid as they should be, if a decent living is to be guaranteed to them.

What I am censuring are the extravagant expenses of the trading and industrial Government. They have ventured into railway enterprises; the systems which they operate show a deficit of $70,000,000.

Not having profited by that disastrous experience, they now want to hazard themselves into a Government merchant marine, and, although they have asked us for that $20,000,000, last year, they want to spend this year $8,330,000 more.

What about our military expenses which, in peace times, amount to $12,000,000 each year! The Government have no right to be extravagant, and they are, when they make a gift of $25,000,000 to the provinces in order to build healthy houses, and another gift of $20,000,000 in order to improve the highways; when they spend annually $12,000,000 for militia; when specially, they grant $28,000,000 to a merchant marine, what are they going to answer when we ask them where all these millions will be derived from, when the Budget shows a deficit of $220,000,000?

It is quite plausible to give some explanations about different increases in the expenses. But there is a fact of the utmost importance, and it is the necessity of remedying our financial distress. It is a crime to increase by many millions the national Budget for new and dangerous undertakings. It is a mad ride towards bankruptcy.

Mr. Speaker, in these difficult times I have no confidence that the Government, with its bad antecedents, will adopt a consistent policy of economy, will equitably assess the taxes and seriously help the nation to recuperate.

The Government with which we are afflicted, is also the Government of National Distress, born of imperialism.

It must be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that the leader of this so-called National-Liberal-Conservative Government is the averred Imperialist who wanted to lead Canada to ruin for the benefit of the Empire, and that he has come to power just at the time when the policy he wanted and inspired is dragging our country to ruin.

I do not want to reopen a question which belongs to the past and which remains a badly closed-up wound. If I recall the lamentable conscription law, it is only with the object of connecting it with the Imperialist policy which has always been that of the Tories, and which is consequently the policy which prompts the present Government.

Many times we have proved that the voluntary enlisting was sufficient to maintain the four Canadian divisions at the front; but this was not the object of the measure, which so unfortunately divided the nation; its object was Imperialistic. As the tribute of $35,000,000 which a Tory Government wanted us to pay to England, conscription was an acute manifestation of British Imperialism, which tends to make of colonials, not citizens but subjects taxable in money and labour at discretion.

I will not insist upon a point which impartial history will bear out. Let me only observe, Mr. Speaker, that in Australia, conscription was viewed from the same angle as by the Canadian anti-conscriptionists, and was twice rejected there. It is important to recall these facts on the eve of the London conference to which the Prime Minister is so anxious to go.

If on October 28, 1917, the referendum before the people in Australia rejected Mr. Hughes' proposition about conscription, it was not due to lack of patriotism on the part of Australia; in that country as well as in Canada, the opposition to conscription was a protest against an Imperialistic tendency.

It behooves us in reality to understand the facts. In Australia, conscription or obligatory military service, had existed several years, since January 1, 1911, for the defense of the confederate states. In 1917, Mr. Hughes, the Prime Minister of the Federation, proposed to put the military forces of Australia at the disposal of the Government for the purposes of the war and wherever it would be thought useful to send them. This is the wording of the question submitted to the people:

> Are you of opinion that, in view of the present grave circumstances, and for the duration of this war, and in respect of the requisition of personal military service outside the territory of the Commonwealth, the Government should be invested with the same powers as they already have in respect to military service within the limits of this territory?

The result was negative.

It must be noted, Mr. Speaker, that the question to be voted upon was in effect:

> "Do you wish that conscription which already exists for the defence of the territory be utilized for a war outside of Australia?"

The Australians considered that Mr. Hughes' proposition would only result in favouring Imperialism. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I thought it proper to quote the example of Australia. If I referred again to this measure, it is that in Canada as well as in Australia, it was an Imperialist movement. It was an attempt to finally and bindingly engage Canada in the war ventures of the Empire.

Now, the leader of the present Cabinet was the brain of the Borden Government that decreed conscription. The motto adopted by the present Prime Minister was "to the last man, to the last cent," in a war in which Canada's share should have been strictly limited to its national interests.

The party which now governs Canada is neither Unionist, nor Liberal, nor Conservative, nor National; it is the Tory party in which the mischievous element of Imperialism is preponderant

There is in your country a spirit which is not Canadian, for there is here a dynasty which comes down in direct line from the old Tories who played such a pernicious part in our history. In their minds the British Empire is to be an omnipotent state, its rights ever increasing while the rights of the individuals of the Canadians are reduced to naught.

They seek to domineer over our politics and to create a point of view as false as it is anti-national. In other words, the jingo-Tory-Imperialist element wish to change our political course, and suppress the Canadian feeling, replacing it by British pride.

It is to be feared that the Prime Minister may belong to this family; he has given proofs of this already. If we do not care to see him leave for London, it is because we dread the day when he returns. We fear that, because of his imperialistic feelings, his sojourn on the banks of the Thames may be to the detriment of Canadian interests. We fear that he may return from overseas entrusted with the mission to make us endorse such agreements as we might regret.

We ask the Prime Minister to adopt, first, a Canadian policy which he will preach and extol until it triumphs both here and in London. And he may find a splendid example in another Canadian Prime Minister who represented our country, in the very heart of the Empire, at several intercolonial conferences. May the present Prime Minister who will leave in a few days for England take example on the irreproachable attitude taken by Laurier, the illustrious son of Canada, a loyal subject of the British Empire, if ever there was one, and who, yet, never let another country take precedence over his own in his affections.

Face to face with the Imperialist doctrine stands the Canadian doctrine. Laurier had chosen the latter and was faithful to it to the last. In so doing, he was undoubtedly guided not only by his sincere patriotism but also by a clear-sighted love of the British Empire.

On each of his voyages to London, at each one of the intercolonial conferences which he attended, he had to choose between two tendencies: the Imperialist and the Canadian. He declared himself decidedly in favour of the Canadian.

On the eve of the conference of the Prime Ministers of the Empire which will be held in London and which the Canadian Prime Minister will attend, it is well to remember how, in the past and under similar circumstances, a great Canadian checked Imperialism.

Let us first take the Intercolonial conference which was held in 1902. So as to convince one's self of the energy displayed by Sir Wilfrid Laurier on this occasion, one need but glance at the official documents concerning the colonial conference which was held in 1902.

The principal questions which were discussed at this conference were: the political and the trade relations of the Empire and its naval and military defence.

We know that Laurier, so far as our political relations were concerned, would not even entertain the idea of possible changes in the existing situation. The conference passed only the practically meaningless resolution to hold, at least every fourth year, colonial conferences of the same kind as that of 1902.

As to our trade relations, our Canadian ministers endeavoured with care, but also very clearly, to make England understand that the preferential tariff which she had obtained from Canada deserved that the latter country in turn be granted privileges on the British market.

But when Chamberlain showed his ill-will by not admitting that we were entitled to privileges for lowering our tariff—how quickly did he then change his mind!—the Canadian ministers had let it be understood that it might be possible to increase certain duties in favour of British goods, but, they said that, if after all these efforts to obtain a change in the tariff, the Canadian government found out that the policy of a mutual preferential tariff did not suit the colonies or England they would consider themselves free to adopt such measures as they thought proper.

On this point as well as on the other, Laurier stood for Canada, and he took great care not to take the least step towards this Imperialism by which Chamberlain tried to dazzle the colonial political chiefs. But it is mostly the question of naval and military defence which casts the greater light on the brave attitude taken by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his ministers at the conference in 1902.

Let us first take the military defence. It had been suggested that the conference pass a resolution by which each colony would have pledged herself to maintain "a military reserve for duty, in case of necessity, outside of the limits of the colony where the said reserve would have been organized". While the representatives from the Cape and from Natal were quite willing to accept the policy proposed by Mr. Seldon, and by the war secretary, and favoured by Mr. Chamberlain, the Canadian representatives, according to the official report of the conference, thought it would be better to improve the military training of the troops, organize the service and complete the necessary equipment for the mobilization of a field army, whilst the colonies would have the right to determine, when occasion would arise, how and to what extent they should help.

It meant that they refused. In order to be fully understood, our representatives added that " to organize a military force specially for the service of the Empire and practically under its control, would be to give up a prerogative which the colonies enjoyed." I ask you if that was not a strong claim of our rights as a Dominion.

Let us see now what took place about naval defence. On that issue, Laurier had a great deal to do so as not to be influenced in favour of a direct Canadian contribution to the British navy. We notice that at the conference, in 1902, every British colony, except Canada, accepted to share in the expenditure for the naval defence of the Empire. The Cape Colony, Australia, Natal, Newfoundland, New Zealand were willing to make a direct contribution to the Imperial navy. Canada was the only one to refuse. Laurier needed a wonderful strength of mind to keep his ground against the Imperialist infatuation of all the colonies put together and the pressing requests of Chamberlain and the First Lord of the Admiralty.

In the proceedings of the conference, page 18, we find the following remarks made by Lord Selborne, First Lord of the Admiralty:

"Sir Wilfrid Laurier informed me that His Majesty's Government of the Dominion of Canada are comtemplating the establishment of a local naval force in the waters of Canada, but that they were not able to make any offer of assistance analogous to those enumerated above".

Moreover in a memorandum which they submitted to the conference respecting the defence of our country, the Canadian ministers, as reported on page 73, said:

"The Canadian ministers regret that they have been unable to assent to the suggestions made by Lord Selborne, respecting the Navy and by Mr. St. John Brodrick respecting the Army....." "The acceptance of the proposal would entail an important departure from the principle of Colonial self-government...." "While the Canadian ministers are obliged to withhold their assent to the propositions of the Admiralty and the War Office, they fully appreciate the duty of the Dominion, as it advances in population and wealth, to make more liberal outlay for those necessary preparations of self defence...." "At present Canadian expenditures for defence services are confined to the military side. The Canadian Government are prepared to consider the naval side of defence as well...." "They have the strongest desire to carry out their defence schemes in co-operation with the Imperial authorities, and under the advice of experienced Imperial Officers, so far as this is consistent with the principle of local self-government."

Therefore, at the conference of 1902, Laurier and his ministers resisted all the Imperialist propositions made by Mr. Chamberlain and of his colleagues. Their firm attitude did not seem satisfactory to the Imperialists, but the very great majority of the Canadian people recognized that Laurier had done his duty as a Canadian statesman.

[Mr. Prevost.]

The same thing occurred at the Colonial Conference in 1907, when Laurier kept all Imperialists schemes at bay. Among the questions raised on that occasion, we notice the following which was submitted by Dr. Smartt, a representative of Cape Colony, on May 9, 1907:

Dr. Smartt:—Would I be in order in moving this Naval resolution after the discussion yesterday. I do not think it will take any time, because it is a resolution which requires no remarks to make it acceptable to the conference. "That this conference, recognizing the vast importance of the services rendered by the Navy to the defence of the Empire and the protection of its trade, and the paramount importance of continuing to maintain the Navy in the highest possible state of efficiency, considers it to be the duty of the Dominions beyond the seas to make such contribution towards the upkeep of the Navy as may be determined by their local legislatures—the contribution to take the form of a grant of money, the establishment of local naval defence, or such other services, in such a manner as may be decided upon after consultation with the Admiralty and as would best accord with their varying circumstances".

"I do not think anybody can take exception to the resolution."

"I will content myself by simply moving the resolution, which I hope will be acceptable to every member of the conference".

This is what Sir Wilfrid Laurier replied:

"I am sorry to say, so far as Canada is concerned, we cannot agree to the resolution. We took the ground many years ago that we had enough to do in our respect in that country before committing ourselves to a general claim. The Government of Canada has done a great deal in that respect. Our action was not understood, but I was glad to see that the First Lord of the Admiralty admitted we had done much more than he was aware of. It is impossible, in my humble opinion, to have a uniform policy in this matter: the disproportion is too great between the Mother Country and the Colonies. We have too much to do otherwise. In the Mother Country, you must remember, they have no expenses to incur with regard to public works; whereas in most of the Colonies, certainly in Canada, we have to tax ourselves to the utmost of our resources in the development of our country, and could not contribute, or undertake to do more than we are doing in that way. For my part, if the motion were pressed to a conclusion, I should have to vote against it."

And the Smartt resolution was withdrawn.

This marked another triumph for Laurier as against the Imperialistic tendencies.

It was in the course of this 1907 conference that Laurier described the relations between the colonies and England by this happy formula which amounts to a doctrine:

"Imperial unity through local autonomy."

Let us now examine the 1909 conference. In a message addressed by the English Secretary of State to the Governor General of Canada, on April 30, 1909, to convene an Imperial Conference for July of the same year, it is stated:

The object of the conference would be to discuss the general question of naval and military defence of the Empire, with special reference to the Canadian resolution (that of March 29, 1909) and to the proposals from New Zealand and Australia.

The Governor General answered on May 5, 1909, in the following terms:

Your telegram of April 30. Ministers wish to point out that views of Canadian House of Commons on the question of naval defence have already been expressed, and, in pursuance of resolution of that body, two ministers, as already announced, will shortly go to London to discuss with Admiralty best method of carrying out that resolution. My ministers have not sufficient information to warrant them in advising as to necessity for such a formal conference as that suggested, but there would be no objection to postpone visit till July so as to suit convenience of Imperial Government.—Grey.

It means that Laurier, in 1909, did not care to engage his Government in an Imperial Conference where it was proposed to study a scheme of naval defence likely to go further than the limits set by the resolution passed by the Canadian Parliament.

At the Intercolonial Conference of 1911 Laurier did again oppose the Imperialism, this could be seen in the following resolution presented by Sir Joseph Ward, Premier of New Zealand, on May 23, 1911.

In concerns the establishment of an Imperial Council, and we find the text of that resolution at page 40 of the report. Here it is:

"That the Empire has now reached a stage of Imperial development which renders it expedient that there should be an Imperial Council of State, with representatives from all the constituent parts of the Empire whether self-governing or not, in theory and in fact advisory to the Imperial Government on all questions affecting the interests of His Majesty's Dominions oversea."

In the course of the debate following the presentation of that resolution, on May 25, Sir Wilfrid Laurier expressed himself as follows (page 73 of the report):

"What Sir Joseph Ward proposed is not an Advisory Council; it is a legislative body to be elected by the people of the United Kingdom and the Dominions beyond the seas—a legislative body, I say, with power to create expenditure and no power to create revenue. Now, if there is one system which I think is indefensible it is the creation of a body which should have the power to expend at its own sweet will without having the responsibility of providing for the revenue to carry on the expenditure.

"That seems to me at once to dispose of the matter. This body suggested by Sir Joseph Ward would have the power to sit, here in London, or Ottawa, or Wellington, or in Melbourne, for the matter of that, it does not matter, and in its wisdom to say: 'Well, this year the British Empire should spend £2,000,000, £5,000,000, £20,000,000 for defence, to be apportioned so much to the United Kingdom, so much to Canada, so much to Australia, so much to New Zealand, so much to South Africa, and so much to Newfoundland'; and then, as I understand the proposal of Sir Joseph Ward, this would be remitted to the respective governments concerned, and all the governments would be dumb agents to carry out these resolutions. The Chancellor of the Exchequer would simply have to provide so much; in Canada we would have to provide so much, in order that various munitions of war might he purchased, and so in Australia, and so in South Africa, and so in Newfoundland.

"I must say with all respect and due deference to Sir Joseph Ward, the proposal seems to me to be absolutely impracticable."

And Sir Joseph Ward brings down his imperialistic flag when he says:

"In view of the expression of opinion of the members of the conference against the resolution, I think it would be less embarassing for the whole of them, and certainly in accord with my own desire, that I should ask that the resolution, having been discussed, should be withdrawn."

Once again, Imperialism was beaten by the Canadian Premier. This is how Sir Wilfrid Laurier always preserved Canadian autonomy with a jealous care and an energetic will.

On February 3, 1910, he stated in the House of Commons:

I do not pretend to be an Imperialist. Neither do I pretend to be an anti-Imperialist. I am a Canadian first, last and all the time. I am a British subject, by birth, by tradition, by conviction—by the conviction that under British institutions my native land has found a measure of security and freedom which it could not have found under any other regime. I want to speak from that double standpoint, for our policy is an expression of that double opinion. Let me say at once to gentlemen who differ from me, to those who pretend to be Imperialists, to those who pretend that the British Empire must be the first consideration that, in my judgment, the policy which we advocate, the policy which I have the honour to place before the House at this moment, is in better keeping with the true spirit upon which the British Empire was founded, upon which it exists, and upon only which it can continue to exist.

The words and especially the deed of Laurier might be a subject of meditation for the Prime Minister, now that he is on the eve of his departure for London where he will meet the imperialist bull dog which is ever ready to devour colonials.

We liberals wish him to know that we are strongly opposed to the centralization of imperial control and to any organic change in the constitution of Canada, so far as it concerns Canadian relations with the Empire, even after it is passed by Parliament, and before it is ratified by a Canadian vote, by means of a plebiscite. Such are the minutes adopted as the Liberal policy, by the national convention, in 1919.

Besides, as was declared in this House by the leader of the Opposition, on April 27, last, the Liberals, whilst admitting that it may be useful for Canada to be represented at the next imperial conference, object to any decision being taken, during the course of the said conference, which might involve any change whatever in Canada's relations with other parts of the Empire, and they are of opinion that, owing to the present financial situation in Canada, nothing should be done which would be of a nature to involve the country in further expenditure for naval or military purposes.

In assuming this attitude we have been inspired above all things by a Canadian policy, the only one which will uphold the Empire, and will guarantee the survival of Canada and its complete national development.

Let us always have for object and for motto Laurier's splendid formula:

Imperial unity by means of local autonomy.

The hybrid Government who administer the country's business without the support of public opinion are still causing a national distress and they have set the nation at variance.

The truth of this need not be proven; it is written in large type of such size as to cast a shadow on all provinces of the Confederation from ocean to ocean.

The nefarious administration of the so-called Union Government has created a legitime distrust in certain provinces, it is the cause of the farmer's movement, it has irritated the working class, called forth protestations from the soldiers whose anger it has aroused. Never had we seen the country so badly at variance, never had we heard of such disputes.

The Prime Minister has realized how much this distrust, these quarrels have weakened his Government.

Scarcely had he taken the direction of public affairs, when he decided first to smile to the province of Quebec which until then had been denounced, calumniated and brought into disrepute by his friends.

[Mr. Prevost.]

Although certain papers have announced that the Prime Minister's affectionate demonstrations will soon be at an end, it is not yet too late to mention the subject.

As soon as the hon. member for Portage la Prairie became Prime Minister, he declared himself in favour of peace and union; he henceforth uttered only honeyed words, and he laid down the trumpet which had but lately sounded the war cry against us and rallied in a common crusade both orangemen and tories.

The Prime Minister has replaced this warlike instrument by the Pandean pipes and he is trying to tune them to the sweetest melody.

Never have the prairies and the mountains re-echoed with such sweet melodies on the part of the hon. member. Listen to him:

The danger which every nation has to face is a tendency to divide on the point of view of race, religion, social classes and right of opinion. . . .

We ought to set aside all disputes which may exist, all those which do not exist so far as concerns vital questions in the country. There are here two great races. The fundamental Canadian institutions are as dear to the one as to the other. Law and order count as many friends, and there is as responsible a government amongst the French Canadians as there are amongst the English Canadians. Cheer up and get together.

Never have such conciliating words been proffered by the member for Portage la Prairie, during the twelve years that he has held a seat in Parliament.

Until now his conduct has been the very reverse of the fine doctrine which he now adopts, now that he is Prime Minister, now that, to govern, he needs the help of those whom he has always judged and treated so unfairly.

I would like to quote in extenso the "pastoral" speech delivered by the Prime Minister at Portage la Prairie after he had been chosen as leader of the Government; it is remarkable for its soft and lively expression and for its skilful peacefulness.

"Get together," says he. I believe that it is my duty to give the province of Quebec the share to which she is entitled in the Federal Government." He is quite willing that "a moral union be formed amongst those who are right-minded."

With magnificent generosity he proclaims that justice will be done wheresoever it is needed. How pleasant and Virgilian these things are to hear. It reminds us of the first eclogue, where Tityrus eulogizes peace and renders thanks to Augustus.

Deus nobis haec otia fecit. The Prime Minister is that deity, that double face Janus who, for the moment at least, hides his war-like countenance.

Nevertheless these emotions of the member of Portage la Prairie, that have perhaps affected his followers, leave us cold and sceptical. Never shall we forget the bitter feelings of this political man towards Quebec and the wicked deeds he is guilty of against the Canadian nation.

I therefore feel that we should not be lulled into a false security by listening to the soft melody of the chants of this youthful Prime Minister. If only he had been frank; had he only apprised us of his intentions towards national unity, had he but repented, disavowing this pitiless fanaticism, this blind and prejudicial Tory infatuation by which he was swayed in the past, and if he proposed in the future to be of an open mind, to calm the bitterness of his soul, to take as a future guide, thoughts really fruitful and truly Canadian thus doing away with those evil and wicked underlying designs.

Unfortunately the Prime Minister's speeches are but hymns devoted to peace, manifestations without weight deprived of any guaranty. Let him fiddle away, he will not make us forget that he was one of the leaders of that clan who wished to vanquish our race by appealing to the most shameful prejudices, the electoral brigandage which has absolutely destroyed the sincerity at the polls weighs heavily on his conscience. In vain will the leader of the Government assume his most enticing ways to draw us within his enchanting flute, after having battered us and stolen away the country from us by unbridling against us the passions of race and religion, he will not trick us this time.

Many friends and the Prime Minister himself have defied us to state one word which the present leader of the Government has said against the province of Quebec. The hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Béland) took up that challenge here in this House and has rightly said: words count little but deeds speak. We are acquainted with the deeds of the Unionist Government of which the Prime Minister was the inspiring soul. Nevertheless to our opponents' challenge, I will in my turn answer: I defy them to quote one single word of the Prime Minister in defense of the province of Quebec, and protesting against these ignominious slanders of which she was made the target of, for over two years, on the part of the Prime Minister's friends through a bigoted organization closely connected with him, and through a political clan of which he was the moving soul. His declaration of love, to-day, had therefore very little sincerity since he was silent when the Unionist press stirred up the most shameful prejudices against us, calling us Germany's ally and rousing hatred to such an extent as to say that a vote for Laurier, the Frenchman and Catholic, was a vote for the Kaiser.

The Prime Minister approved by his guilty silence this hideous campaign. The French Canadians have a very good reason to prudently keep away. The Borden Government tried to make us forget its wrongs by speaking of war; the Meighen Government tries to make us forget the iniquities committed by the Government during and after the war by talking tariff and the love they bear us. Let us be on our guard lest that such adversaries wish to embrace us so as to better strangle us. Mr. Speaker, we wish the union, and it shall become an accomplished fact as it is already taking place through the country, only that union is taking place not with the Government but against it.

It is true that the allurements of power has bewitched one of ours. A sardonic smile must have come over the Prime Minister's face when he witnessed a chip fall from the solid Liberal block.

The incident has very little importance: the member for St. Hyacinthe (Mr. L. J. Gauthier) notwithstanding his eloquence and his talent will follow inevitably the sad fate of turncoats of all times who are traitors to their friends and throw away their principles; they are at first despised and later cast in oblivion.

It is a sad fate for the one who has just fallen.

However, Mr. Speaker, the tree of the Liberal party is vigorous enough, deep-rooted enough, rich enough in foliage to shed a few dead leaves without being weakened in its sap nor impaired in its splendour.

The tree planted by the fathers of the Liberal party still spreads with marvellous vitality, and will none the less continue to shelter under its vast shade the sound Liberal doctrine, the true principles which should guide Canadian politics, the great ideas of liberty, justice, loyalty and fidelity to the interests of the people, which gave to this country for fifteen years the most prosperous era that it ever knew.

Mr. Speaker, I have wandered in the course of my remarks from the question which is the immediate object of this debate. I have not to apologize for that since the Budget statement is properly a bid for a review of the general policy of the Government.

In the balance sheet of the state affairs, in the inventory of the causes of riches or poverty, of successes or failures in the administration of public affairs, we should not stop only to consider the financial course adopted by the Administration. Man does not live on bread alone, and besides "a money sore does not kill."

Other wounds, deeper and more serious, afflict us. We should face all realities, and by the side of our financial deficits, we should place, consider and study the shortcomings of the present regime; failure of national spirit, failure of Canadian patriotism, failure of constitutional government, failure of popular confidence, failure of union and harmony between the citizens of this country, all capable of putting in danger the very life of Canada. Should this Government remain long in office this accumulation of defiicits and failures is due to disregard for the sound policy which should make of Canada not only a rich country but a nation, a true nation with its own soul, and conscious of its present duties as well as of its future grandeur.

The failure of the Government is complete and affects the service of the state in all its ramifications.

There is a consoling fact: it is that the country is better than its rulers.

At present, since we are specially considering the fiscal system and the tariff policy of the Government which is at the point of death under our eyes, it seems evident to me that the ministers cannot remedy any of the evils of the country. The Minister of Finance particularly has nothing to offer us but wretched expedients which leave our finances in the same precarious state for which the Borden and Meighen Governments are responsible. Our great steward believes that he has found the solution for the economic problem which alarms all Canadians, when he gives a turn to the screw of the press and makes it yield sixty additional millions this year.

I have never understood the ostrich's method, it hides its head under its wing—and gets killed. Such is the fate awaiting these incapable and imprudent administrators, who believe they can conceal their huge bankruptcy under the dark wing of taxation which they spread over a people already oppressed by the high cost of living.

The Prime Minister delivered in this House on Friday, an aggressive speech which was much applauded by his partisans.

His effort was more an attack against his opponents than a defence of his Government. Our perilous economic situation has no anxiety for him, as he merely referred to it without offering any remedy to the evils from which the country suffers and which the Budget speech sets forth in plain daylight.

He rather applied himself to treating with sarcasm those who oppose his Government. In this the Prime Minister showed himself a better party man than a statesman.

To such a speech was due an obligato accompaniment of frantic applauses from the ministerialists who in him have put all their trust, all their hopes for the putting off of the general elections which are to be their political grave.

The Prime Minister raised particularly the enthusiasm of his followers when he reproached the Farmers and the Liberals with not setting off with more details their tariff platform in the wording of an amendment to the Finance Minister's motion. It hardly behooves the Prime Minister to address such a reproach to the Opposition when the Goverment which he leads are themselves to-day, putting aside the principal measure which they formally announced at the opening of this session. Indeed what do we read in the speech from the Throne delivered on Feb. 14 last, just three months ago.

> My advisers are convinced of the necessity for revision of the Customs tariff. In order to secure the most complete information a committee has conducted an extensive and thorough inquiry, and has secured the views of all parties and interests in every province.

Now the cabinet conceal their intentions, they differ that revision of the tariff which, according to them, was urgent three months ago. Nay, worse, they bring forth as a plea for holding back and for their inaction, that the fiscal policy of Canada must be subordinate to that of the U.S.

The policy of the United States is well known. Why should the Canadian Government put off making their own policy known? They lack dignity, energy and decision when they lay aside, for such a reason, the most important plank in their platform for this session. The real reason of their continuous postponement of the tariff revision announced by them ever since 1918 is that the cabinet is not unanimous on this question, the Government is marking time, while its ministers are swayed to and fro. Therefore the Prime Minister is very daring when he blames the opposition for not having had the courage to make known their platform with respect to the tariff. He is mistaken if he thinks that he will thereby divert the attention of the public and make them forget the tactics of the Government who, not having the courage to undertake a general and thorough revision of the tariff, nevertheless touch it up on the sly, but always with the tendency to higher protection, thus far from alleviating the burden of the consumer, has the contrary effect of increasing it. They have just given us another instance of that when they decided to increase the sales tax on all imported goods by 1 per cent. This new tax is a sly protection which will increase the cost of living, and which no national industry needed. The amendment which the hon. member for Queen's and Shelburne has moved to the Budget speech shows the direction which should be given our fiscal policy, and I think I shall be fulfilling my duty as a Liberal and as a Canadian by voting for it.

Mr. M. J. DEMERS (St. Johns and Iberville: Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that I am not able to give a fair translation of the speech which has just been delivered by the hon. member for Terrebonne (Mr. Prevost) because I believe that it is one of the best contributions to this debate. I hope that hon. members of this House will take the trouble to read it when it is translated.

The Budget speech, Mr. Speaker, had been looked forward to as the chief matter of importance to be presented to the House during this session. In the speech as delivered by the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) there is nothing, so far as I can see, which may be regarded as unexpected, except, possibly, the attitude of optimism taken by the minister, an attitude for which I can discover no good reason. After all, the only substance which can be extracted from the speech is the statement that there is an increase in our statement that there is an increase in our national debt of $100,000,000 and additional taxation. For my part, I do not find very much comfort in that condition. The statement of the minister with regard to the financial and economic condition of the country is of such a nature as to command public attention and thought. It is more and more evident that we are living in a period of emergency, and it is the duty of the representatives of the people to awaken public opinion to the seriousness of the situation. Our financial position, Mr. Speaker, is worse than ever; it is worse than at any time during the war. It is surprising to hear the admissions of members of the Government themselves with regard to our financial troubles and economic difficulties, because such an attitude on their part is not customary. I submit also that we cannot but feel a certain amount of anxiety when some of the most prominent citizens outside the field of politics have deemed it their duty to utter what I would call a solemn warning to their fellow countrymen. It is not my intention, Mr. Speaker, to present any pessimistic views as to the ultimate destiny of our country, because I think that with the development of our unlimited natural resources the future may be faced with confidence. But I am not satisfied that the Government has given any proof of its ability to meet the requirements of the hour; on the contrary, their methods of government have been disastrous and I cannot see any indication of an improvement. If one studies the methods followed by this Administration in the conduct of public affairs the only conclusion to be arrived at is that it is the deliberate decision of the Government to pursue the same policy of extravagance and waste that they have pursued for years and which has been so detrimental to the best interests of Canada. Sir, I will endeavour to prove this assertion. I sometimes wonder whether the Government realizes the state of disorganization in which Canada finds herself. We know that we can hardly meet our national obligations, and we are informed in the Budget that the Government will have to squeeze out more money from the taxpayers of Canada in order to try to make both ends meet. Our financial condition, Sir, is appalling. Let me illustrate by quoting some fundamental figures. In 1914, our expenditures were $180,000,000 or $24.11 per capita. In 1921, our estimated expenditures will be more than $600,000,000, or more than $70 per capita. In 1914, our gross debt was $554,000,000, or about $71 per capita. In 1921, although the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton), in his speech, did not give us the exact amount of our gross debt, it is no exaggeration to say that it is over $3,000,000,000, or more than $335 per capita.

In 1914, as I said, our gross debt was $554,000,000, but that represented all our national obligations since Confederation. We shall not forget that, during that period, that is to say, from 1867 to 1914, the money borrowed by Canada contributed to the equipment of our country. We built railways, canals, wharves, bridges and so on; we provided for the general organization of the country. But what have we, materially speaking, for the $2,500,000,000 added to our gross national debt since 1914, that is to say, during the last seven years? Almost nothing. This is one of the main considerations when we are endeavouring to understand our real financial and economic situation. Under such circumstances, is it necessary to say that the first and the last duty of the Government is, not only to preach but to practise, the strictest economy, to effect drastic reductions in our public expenditure, to limit our expenses to things of the most urgent character? Is that what the Government is doing? The railway and the shipbuilding policies of the Governement have proved to be nefarious; nevertheless, the Government is determined to persist in them. The National Railways policy of the Government will be recorded in the history of this country as the most hurtful blunder ever perpetrated by any government. The people of this country will never admit that public interest was served by the acquisition of the Canadian Northern or the Grand Trunk by this Government, when by those transactions we are assuming obligations of insolvent corporations as if they were solvent. The people of this country will never admit that this Government has a right to do what would be considered in private business as stupid. Last year, the railway administration had to report a deficit of $47,000,000; this year, the admitted deficit is $70,000,000; and if we were to believe some will informed people, this deficit really is $138,000,000; and the Government cannot give us any hope that the situation will not be worse next year. But the Government persists in that policy; it says: "What can the Government do?" Everybody knows that the Government is at sea; that it is absolutely unable to meet the situation. The Government admits that itself, and that is one reason why I repeat what I said in a previous debate, namely, that the duty of this Government under such circumstances is to resign and let other people endeavour to solve the problems.

[Mr. Demers.]

As regards the shipbuilding policy, notwithstanding the obviously manufactured surplus of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Ballantyne), it is very clear also that this is one of the big mistakes of this administration, and I think that everybody will admit that "mistake" is a very mild expression with which to qualify such a scheme. Without considering the excessive cost at which the Government is building ships, without taking into account the general depression in traffic and transportation, without even going into the merits of that scheme, I say that the hesitation, the unwillingness of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, on the discussion on his Estimates, to provide the information asked for by members of the Opposition, were, for me, evidences of the folly of that scheme. It was very clear that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries did not favour too much talking, about the matter and I desire to say here that after a few hours of discussion, the application of closure in order to pass the Estimates of the ship-building policy of the Government, was a new display of autocratic methods which, with this Government, are customary.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Does my hon. friend call an all-night sitting and three previous occasions when the appropriation was before the House, a "few hours"? If all the hours were put together, I am sure they would comprise something like two days.

Mr. DEMERS: For a scheme like that, it was a very few hours to discuss the policy of the Government, and the time was so short that even now we have not the necessary information. The attitude of the Government was the application of arbitrary methods that the people of this country cannot and will not tolerate for very long. It was a violation of the fundamental principles of responsible Government. It was the application of the autocratic rules which existed before the Magna Charta, when constitutional Government was unknown, when the people had no right to be heard and when the only governmental principle was "taxation without representation." Perhaps this is a digression; but let me say that the first thing that we should preserve in this country above any matter, financial or economic, is responsible Government. We shall not forget the struggles that the people had to go through before being recognized, before obtaining the consecration of the principle that their représentatives should have absolute control of all moneys asked for and spent by the Government. For my part, I claim that this principle has been wilfully and generally ignored and violated by this Administration, and that the tendencies of this Government have been such in that respect that the main issue during the next general election should be the necessity of re-establishment of responsible Government in Canada. This will be the best kind of reconstruction work for our country. It will furnish the best contribution to its greatness and prosperity, and to the welfare and happiness of its people.

May I also be permitted to say that amongst the many problems that we have to face in Canada, there is one of importance that should not be overlooked, and that is the question of the relations between capital and labour. Generally speaking, the workers throughout Canada are not satisfied with existing conditions; there is a certain amount of discontent and unrest. To that condition of affairs many causes may have contributed, which it would be too long and too difficult to analyse because they pertain to the social, psychological and economic domains. But I think we can arrive at this conclusion, that labour will never revert to its pre-war condition. For myself, I am glad of that, because I do firmly believe that in the past the workers all over the world did not get a fair share of the happiness and good things of life. I am a believer in the principle of fraternity and equality; I think it is only by the application of this Christian principle that our civilization can be saved. I believe it is the duty of every public man to give this question of the relations between capital and labour his best attention in order to find some way of effecting a reconciliation between these two elements. If the House will permit me, I will give my own personal opinion as to the ways and means that might be adopted to attain such a result.

There are, according to my mind, two ways by which a reconciliation can be effected. First, the workers should be satisfied that they are getting a reasonable share of the profits realized from their work. Mark you, Mr. Speaker, I do not say that they should have an equal share of the profits. What is in my mind is this: that they should have a reasonable participation in the profits, after allowance has been made for the risks and responsibility of the employers, for the costs of materials, administration, and executive, for running and overhead charges, and manufacturer's profit. Or Sir, excess profits should be employed to form a reserve fund to provide for old age pensions, mother's and widow's pensions or other humanitarian institutions. I think we should always remember that labour is a living, fighting force, fighting for equality, and that it will not stop until it achieves a victory.

Coming back to the question of the necessity for economy, as I said before, I cannot see any evidence of any such spirit in the policy of the Government. I have spoken of the railway and shipbuilding policies of the Government, which, to my mind, are nothing but a negation of any principle of economy. Let me now point to some other matters that call for the immediate attention of the Canadian Government, if we are ever to get out of our difficulties. There is for instance, the question of the Civil Service. For my part, I believe that our Civil Service is inadequate in this sense, that we have by far too many civil servants. I think that their number should be gradually reduced. I believe that some millions of dollars could be saved in that direction, and I think that that is a work that should be started at once.

There is another question upon which I desire to say a few words, and that is the question of military expenditure. The Minister of Militia (Mr. Guthrie) quoted some statistics the other day going to show that Canada's expenditure on naval and military defence was lower than that of any other country in the world. Sir, we know that comparisons are odious, and this case, I think, is no exception to the rule. To compare Canada with sovereign countries seems to me to be no more reasonable than to compare the physical strength of a man with that of a child; and when you compare Canada with the other Dominions, if you wish to make a fair comparison, there are many things that you must take into consideration. First of all, we should look not merely at the amount expended in only one branch of the administration of a country, but at the total expenditure of every one of these Dominions with which a comparison is made. Their geographical situation must also be taken into account, as well as other factors. But even if all these conditions were exactly the same in the different countries that my hon. friend the minister has mentioned, I do not think we can fairly conclude that because one country is spending too much money in one direction, we should also do the same thing. If the minister is satisfied with his statistics, I certainly believe that the people of this country do not share his satisfaction. For my part, in view of the very grave financial situation of Canada, and of the additional taxation to be imposed, I was expecting a substantial reduction in our military expenditure. The expenditure of $12,000,000 for military purposes is, in my opinion, nothing short of extravagance, and the same can be said of many public works such, for instance, as: the Victoria dry dock, which is the subject of some interesting discussion at the present moment; the Toronto harbour; the St. John harbour; improvements to the Welland and Trent canals; and other undertakings of that character. In the face of these extravagances it is nothing but provocation to the people for the Government now to talk about additional taxation. As I said, economy should be the watchword everywhere, and it is for this Government to set the example.

There is one matter of supreme importance, in regard to which the Government will have to render strict account, and that is the acceptance of the battleships offered by the Admiralty. The attitude of the Government in this matter had no justification whatever. We should not spend one cent on the expansion of the Canadian navy. Sir, we have nothing to fear, and, therefore, we do not need a navy. There is only one country with whom we might expect to have difficulties, and that is, our neighbours to the south of us, the United States. I am sure, however, that there is no hon. member in this House who would say that there is, or can be, any reasonable fear of such a calamity as a rupture between us and the United States. It would be absurd and entirely wrong on our part to provoke any serious conflict with them, and it would be equally unjustifiable and unjust for them to do anything that would incur our enmity. All that we need in the way of a Canadian naval force is a fleet that will provide protection for our fisheries, protection not against any nation, but against individuals. I say that the acceptance of these battleships will simply burden the people of this country with a very large and unnecessary expenditure for which there can be no excuse, and I therefore register my protest against such a policy. Some one will probably say that we on this side of the House did once favour a Canadian navy. I shall not pay any more attention to that question than to say that we submited our policy to the people and it was rejected. Is there any reason to believe that the public sentiment in that respect has changed, especially when there is no longer ground for the fear that existed then, and when the causes for apprehension have disappeared? There is something more to say on this question. These battleships were accepted without the consent of the people or of Parliament, and the consequences of this action may prove of very great national importance. The acceptance of a gift of such a nature may well involve dangerous obligations in the future, and I cannot too strongly express my protest against the autocratic and unconstitutional action of the Government in this matter.

I said a moment ago that economy is absolutely necessary everywhere to-day; but economy, Mr. Speaker, is not the only necessity in Canada. There is one great principle, the application of which will do more than anything else to accomplish the great work of reconstruction which rests with the public men of this country. That principle is this: Mind your own business. That principle is that Canada should be the only object of our attention and consideration at this time. We should restrict our activities to Canada exclusively. Our country is large enough to require the concentration of all our energies towards its development. Let us be Canadians first, and Canadians only; let us get out of European and Imperial affairs. It is about time that the true Canadian began the work of creating an exclusive Canadian sentiment in this country, and there could be no better time than now that we realize that we cannot ever meet its requirements.

I was impressed the other day with an article which I read in no less important a paper than the Montreal Gazette, which declared that Parliament is sick of the League of Nations and of trips to Europe by Cabinet ministers. I thought that that was the real feeling of a good many members of this House, also, if they would only voice it. At any rate, any man who does not agree with that view must admit that he has not learned the lessons of true Canadianism which we received from the two great leaders, Macdonald and Laurier.

Sir, Canada is the only country in the world for us; it is all that we can call our own, and it is so immense in area and of such vast possibilities that it will take all our time to develop it. Let us not only sing, but let us feel and fully appreciate the sentiment of our national anthem, "O! Canada."

It is not my intention, Mr. Speaker, to deal with any other questions at this time, but before resuming my seat, I should like to summarize, in a few words, my views as to the methods which this Government should adopt to carry out the work of reorganization and reconstruction: First, an exclusively Canadian policy; second, restoration of responsible government; third, solution of labour problems; and, fourth, economy in every branch of administration. Such is, Sir, to my mind, the policy that would restore prosperity and greatness to Canada.

Mr. THOMAS W. CALDWELL (Victoria and Carleton, N.B.): Mr. Speaker, I have followed with a great deal of interest the different speeches that have been delivered during this debate. I must say, however, that I was rather disappointed in the speech the Prime Minister delivered on Friday last. I think the members of this House, and the people of the country, expected the Prime Minister to deal with the very serious problems that face the country to-day—the railway situation, the unemployment situation, and the other serious issues that confront the country. But what were we treated to on the part of the right hon. gentleman? He gave one of the greatest expositions of ridicule and abuse that this House has ever witnessed. The Prime Minister accused our little group, in this part of the chamber, of not moving their platform in Parliament. Mr. Speaker, it reminds me of a passage in a book that hon. gentlemen are more or less familiar with: Cast not your pearls before swine.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. CALDWELL: We have moved this platform before a tribunal that is possibly less prejudiced than this House, a tribunal higher than Parliament itself—the electors of Canada. That platform has been endorsed in a large number of cases where it was tried out before the people on its merits, and if it is endorsed to as great an extent at the next general election as it has been in the recent by-elections we will have no cause to complain.

I think it was very small politics for the Prime Minister to try to make out that we were an "annex" to the Liberal party simply because we propose to vote for the amendment before the House, in view of the fact that we have supported the Government with our votes in this House nearly as often as we have opposed them. As to where we stand I think, Mr. Speaker, I cannot do better than quote what I said last year on the Budget because what I said at that time is quite applicable to our position to-day. Speaking on May 27, 1920, I expressed myself as follows:

> —we do not propose to support either of the old parties in this House. When a question arises such as the present question before the House we intend to take a stand on it that will be in the best interests of Canada. We may err, but if we do we shall err in judgment; we shall not be whipped into line to support this party or that against our convictions,—do not make any mistake about that. I think that we have proved our independence in this House during the present session; we have voted with the Government perhaps as often as against them. I am only sorry that we were not able to vote with them oftener, because if we had been able to vote with them it would have meant that they were bringing down good legislation, legislation for the good of Canada and which we would have been pleased to support.

I do not wish to take up a great deal of time in this debate, because the discussion has run at some length now, and after matters of this kind have been discussed for three or four days there is not very much new left to be said with respect to them. I do, however, wish to give a concrete example or two of how a protective tariff affects the business of the country, and how extravagant a method it is of collecting a revenue, and I wish to take in illustration some articles I know something about—articles that are used in my own province very largely.

For one thing I wish to speak of the duty on fertilizers. At the present time, as you all know, there is a duty of 10 per cent on mixed fertilizer, whilst chemicals, with the exception of acid phosphates, are admitted to the country free. I have here the imports of fertilizers for the last ten years, giving the amount imported that was dutiable and the amount imported that was free. Some of the recent speakers have referred to the Canadian tariff as inducing American manufacturers to locate in Canada. I want to show you why that is the case—because while they are able to import into Canada their raw materials free they are able to charge a duty on the manufactured article, collect it from the people of Canada and put it into their pockets instead of that duty going into the revenues of the country. For instance, in 1912 we imported $413,338 worth of fertilizers that were dutiable, and on those imports collected $41,333 in duty.

That same year there was imported, duty free, fertilizer materials to the value of $735,053.

Had these materials been dutiable the duty collected would have been $73,505. But that went into the manufacturer's pocket, not into the revenue of the country. Therefore, for every dollar that we collected in duty that year the manufacturer put nearly two dollars in his pocket. I do not know that I will trouble the House to give the figures for each year separately. I wish to state, however, that in the ten years we collected in duty on fertilizers imported into Canada $769,585.20, and we imported, duty free, fertilizer materials on which, had there been duty the customs imposed would have amounted to $1,766,134.90. It is just possible that some hon. member will say: Well, the fertilizer manufacturers do not take advantage of this. Very well, I want to disabuse the minds of hon. gentlemen in that particular. I have here the price lists of a firm—an American firm by the way—who have a factory in Canada, a mixing plant. They import their chemicals free of duty and sell the finished product in Canada as well as in the United States. Living as I do only six miles from the American boundary I know whereof I speak in regard to this matter. I have here the lists of this company giving the prices at which they sell in the state of Maine and in the province of New Brunswick. Now, the fertilizers which they sell in Maine for $62.50 they sold in New Brunswick this year for $77.50, a difference of $15 a ton. Yet the chemicals were brought from the same source and it was the same company doing business in both instances. Another fertilizer that they sold in Maine for $67.75, they sold in New Brunswick for $82.75. Another brand, of a higher grade, they sold in Maine for $75.75 and in New Brunswick for $90.75. Owing to this fact our farmers' organizations have taken to buying their own chemicals and importing them themselves. Accordingly this year we were able to lay down at the farmer's local railway station, chemicals such as used in the brand that our dealer charged $77.50 for at $46.18, a difference of $31.32. The farmers, of course, have the remedy in their own hands, and I feel they are going to avail themselves of it—they will simply import their own chemicals and mix their own fertilizers.

I now wish, very briefly, to illustrate how a heavy duty affects our exports. We grow in New Brunswick large quantities of potatoes; that is the reason we use so much fertilizer. The latter part of this past season the prices have been very poor in New Brunswick, and we are not realizing a very good price for potatoes at the present time. However, I notice that the potatoes exported during the present year, that is up to the end of March last, have brought a higher average price than those exported last year when the prices were quoted so high. The high price of last year caused different members to fling the accusation at the farmers that they were profiteers, that they were selling potatoes at $12 a barrel. Potatoes did go to that price in April last year for the simple reason that there were no potatoes in New Brunswick. The potato crop in Canada the past season on the whole, sold at a higher price than the year before. Prices are very low at the present time, for the reason that there is an over-supply on hand and the demand is not equal to the supply. I have here figures of potato exports from Canada to the United States from 1912 to 1921. Of course, during the few war years prices and conditions were abnormal and therefore I shall take two years before the war and two years after and compare them. During the two years before the war there was a duty against our potatoes going to the United States which made the export business rather unprofitable for us. In 1912 we exported 27,286 bushels at a price of 70 cents a bushel; in 1913 152,557 bushels, at a price of 84 cents a bushel; in 1920—when there was no duty—5,480,754 bushels at a price of $1.25 a bushel; and in 1921, 4,204,684 bushels at a price of $1.98 a bushel. It will be noticed that in 1920 we exported over 5,000,000 bushels as compared with only 27,000 bushels in 1912.

When the Fordney Tariff Bill was proposed I took it upon myself to write to the Prime Minister to know if our Government could not take some steps to overcome this Bill. Of course, I realized, as our Prime Minister informed me, that the United States Government have full authority to legislate for themselves, and would resent any interference. At the same time, in view of the fact that Canada has practically a monopoly of the pulpwood supply of North America, it seemed to me that our Government could very well have put it up to the United States Government that if they discriminated against our farm products it might be necessary for Canada to impose a heavy export duty on pulpwood. I think if this had been done the United States would have thought twice before passing an Act discriminating against our farm products. I do not know whether such representations were made or not by our Government to the Government of the United States, but at any rate this country had had no intimation of any such action having been taken.

In view of the fact that the Young Emergency Tariff measure will affect the potato growers of Eastern Canada very severely, I should like to urge upon the Government the necessity for providing facilities at the port of St. John for the shipping of potatoes during the winter season. If we are practically shut out of the United States, Cuba is our next best market. During the past winter I received several communications from potato shippers in New Brunswick urging me to see if the Government would provide some means for shipping potatoes through the port of St. John during the winter season. I believe it would not be a costly matter —merely the erection of a frost proof warehouse. These shippers advised me that during last winter they were compelled to ship via Boston, which meant, according to the ruling of the Railway Commission, that they had to pay freight in American funds from the shipping point in Canada to Boston, and from Boston to Cuba. Had they been able to ship by the port of St. John the difference in the rate of exchange on the freight and in the short rail haul and the longer water haul would have meant practically a dollar a barrel difference in favour of the farmers. I sincerely hope that the Government will take this into consideration and provide the necessary facilities at the port of St. John for handling what is the big export crop from the province of New Brunswick. There are already facilities at the port for handling our western grain, facilities that the whole Dominion has helped to provide, and I think it is no more than fair that the province in which this port is situated should have the facilities required for handling its potatoes.

In speaking of how a high tariff affects imports and exports, I would crave the indulgence of the House while I read an extract from the Montreal Gazette as to what the minority members of the House of Representatives think of the Fordney Tariff Bill.

> In the minority report the Republicans are accused of tossing into the lap of "three great trusts, the packers, the sugar trust and the woollen trusts $775,000,000 a year," and of seeking to disbar any future trade with the Central Powers and smaller states in Europe through "a subtle and dangerous joker," in directing the Secretary of the Treasury to fix the value of foreign money as a basis for levying duties on imports.
> The present bill is characterized as even worse than its predecessor, the Fordney measure, by the report which asserts that "if any advantage will apply anywhere from the new proposal, it will be to the trusts, speculators and profiteers." It also calls attention to provisions of the Republican national platform—

By the way, that platform provided for a decrease in the cost of living.

> —and inquires whether "any honest Republican can sincerely vote for this bill in the belief that it will reduce the cost of living."
> "We note that the bill has been changed since the last session of Congress," the report adds, "from the Fordney Emergency Tariff Bill to the Young Emergency Tariff Bill. Whether the ways and means committee thought the name of its chairman, Mr. Fordney, attached to the bill, would discredit it or believed that by attaching the name of Young from the agricultural state of North Dakota, it would more easily fool the farmers, we cannot undertake to say. But there must be some political significance in it."
> "Figures were presented to show that the actual increase in living costs resulting from enactment of such law would be about $2,000,000,000 a year. The statement says that the bill would hand a gratuity of $125,000,000 annually to the sugar trust $550,000,000 annually to the meat and beef trust, and more than $100,000,000 a year to the income of the woollen trust.

There is no doubt in my mind, Mr. Speaker, that a high tariff has that effect in any country. I realize, however, that in view of the Young Emergency Tariff Bill going into effect our Administration will have to be governed in their tariff legislation accordingly, but I hope they will not increase the duty, for instance, on fertilizers, with which we grow potatoes, because we have to pay that import duty, and also the duty on our potatoes going into the United States. Somebody will say: That is not logical; if we pay the duty on the fertilizer coming in, why will we pay the duty on the potatoes going out? The explanation is simply this, that our export trade in potatoes to the United States compared with the quantity of potatoes they grow is a very small factor in fixing the price in that country. For that reason, we being the little fellow, the price is practically set by the big fellow. In that connection, a duty of 25 cents a bushel is being imposed on our potatoes entering the United States, while their potatoes enter Canada free to-day. I think under these circumstances our home market for potatoes should be reserved to Canadian growers. In the next two months we will have a large quantity of potatoes on our hands, and they certainly will not all be disposed of in Eastern Canada, as the new potatoes coming in from the United States will take the place of our own product. Our shippers tell me that if retaliation is proposed by this Government it should be in such a form as will offset the duty that the United States has imposed on articles imported from this country. Of course, you will hear the old cry: Where will you get the revenue from? Well, Mr. Speaker, I cannot help thinking that there is as much in the spending of the revenue of the country as there is in collecting it. It seems to me that if our Government had not seen fit to loan $23,000,000 to Roumania in 1919 we would not have needed so much revenue. The very fact of our immense debt makes it clear that Canada had no money to lend, least of all to a bankrupt country from which there is very little prospect of ever getting either the principal or interest. That interest was to have been paid twice a year, but already nearly a million and a half is overdue, and I doubt very much if it ever will be paid. Not only have we thrown this $23,000,000 away; but the people of Canada will have to pay interest on it until the Victory bonds through which we obtained this money to squander are redeemed. I think it would have been a good thing for this country if the revenue in the past few years had not been quite so large; the Government would not have been quite so ready to squander it in loans to bankrupt countries, nor to apply the closure in this House very recently in order to vote $8,0000,000 to build ships for the Canadian Government Merchant Marine at exorbitant prices. If I am not mistaken—the Minister of Marine (Mr. Ballantyne) will correct me if I am wrong—the price paid for the building of vessels in Canada recently has been $191 a ton. I believe that a firm in Montreal bought a couple of vessels very recently for somewhere in the neighbourhood of $50 a ton. Of course, we realize that that does not represent the cost of building the vessels, but there are numberless ships idle to-day and no doubt the owners of these were in difficult financial circumstances and were glad to realize money on them at any price. I believe that a member of this firm made the statement that very soon it would be possible to buy ships in Canada at $25 a ton, because large numbers of vessels are at present tied up and unable to get sufficient freight to enable them to pay operating expenses.

I have spoken of the loan to Roumania. At the time it was made we all wondered why the Government was so willing to lend money to anybody at that time, to say nothing of lending it to a bankrupt country. The answers to questions put on the Order Paper last year by the member for Chambly-Verchères (Mr. Archambault) throw some light on why the Government authorized this loan. If I remember rightly the hon. member inquired who were the firms who supplied the goods to Roumania and Greece and what were the prices. It is my memory that the names of a number of firms were given but that the prices were not stated. It was with more or less amazement that members of the House read the answers to those replies, and that they found that a large quantity of goods furnished to Roumania and Greece on this credit or loan was furnished by firms of which supporters of the Government were members, of which some hon. members of this House were presidents and managing directors. If an individual member of Parliament had sold any goods in this way and for this purpose, he would have to resign his seat. But the supporters of the Government were able to get away with it, due to the fact that they were members of these companies. I think, however, we will all admit, that they got very close to the edge.

In dealing with the question where the revenue was to come from I pointed out last year, when speaking on the Budget, a source of revenue that this Government had not only failed to take advantage of but had made it impossible for any succeeding government to take advantage of, namely, Victory bonds exempt from taxation, amounting in all to $1,358,000,000. More than that, it cost the country nearly $14,000,000 to float those loans, in the payment of commissions to agents who canvassed for the sale of the bonds and to the banks for handling the amounts as they were turned over. We have never been able and never will be able to collect one cent by way of tax on the income derived by the holders of these bonds amounting to $1,358,000,000. I said at the time it was proposed to make this loan free from taxation that I could hardly find language strong enough to express my disapproval of that course. The Finance Minister pointed out that if the Government did not exempt the bonds from taxation they would not be able to float the loan. Well, it is a fact that the later loan in 1919, which was made taxable, was over-subscribed just as readily as the non-taxable loans; therefore the theory of the Minister of Finance was disproved. Certainly it is harder to sell a taxable bond, once you set the precedent of not taxing, than to sell a non-taxable bond, but, as I say, the loan in 1919, which was not exempt from taxation, was largely oversubscribed. I have made an estimate of what the income would be by way of income tax if these loans had not been exempt from taxation. The income on $1,358,000,000 at 5½ per cent would be $74,690,000. It is fair to suppose that $37,345,000, or half this amount, would be taxable as income at the rate of 4 per cent, because, I think, it is true that these moneys were not all subscribed by the poorer people; it is fair to assume that half the people who subscribed to the loans would have incomes taxable at the rate of 4 per cent. This would add $1,493,800 to the revenue of the country. I think it may be assumed also that the other half of the $74,690,000 would be taxable at the rate of 8 per cent, which would yield a revenue of $2,987,600. I also believe that half of this revenue from interest on Victory bonds would be received by persons whose incomes were large enough to pay a surtax of 3 per cent, and that would add another $1,120,350 to the revenue of the country, or a total of $5,601,750 yearly. But due to the fact that this tax exemption was made as part of the agreement when the bonds were issued, no government will ever be able to make these bonds taxable which I consider is very unfortunate in view of the fact that we must raise such a very large revenue, a revenue double per capita that raised in the United States. I think it has been stated that the amount which we must raise per capita in order to obtain the necessary revenue will amount to about $70 per capita or $350 for each family of five in this country. The expenditure per capita in the United States is $35 per head, or just half of what ours is. The Secretary of the Treasury of the United States has warned the United States Government that they must retrench, that the country cannot stand the present extravagant rate of expenditure. When you compare the revenue which they raise per capita with ours, you will see that they spend one dollar per head for every two dollars per head that we spend in Canada. I do not think any member of this House, and I am sure that no elector in this country will contend that we are able to pay twice the amount of taxes per head that the citizens of the United States could pay.

I think it was a very unwise thing to abolish the luxury taxes, having regard to the facts concerning our expenditure. The sound way to raise revenue is by taxing a man on what he is worth, not on what he consumes. The fact that the luxury tax was a good revenue getter was another reason why it should not have been abolished. During the six months that it was in operation it produced somewhere in the neighbourhood of $4,000,000 more than the sales tax has produced in ten months. The luxury tax fell upon people who were better able to pay than the majority of those who will be called upon to contribute to the revenue through the medium of the sales tax which is to take the place of the luxury tax. In my opinion the business profits tax should also have been continued. The people would be interested to know, I am sure, just what was behind the abolition of the luxury tax and the business profits tax, and I propose, before I conclude my remarks, to give them just a little information in regard to this matter.

At Six o'clock, the House took recess.

After Recess

The House resumed at Eight o'clock.

Mr. CALDWELL (resuming): Mr. Speaker, when the House rose at six o'clock, I had just arrived at that point in my remarks where I was saying that I believed that the consuming public of Canada would be anxious to know what influences were behind the Government to induce them to abolish the luxury and business profits taxes which were such good revenue getters. I said that I hoped to be able to enlighten the House and possibly the country as to just what these influences were that induced the Government to do this very unbusinesslike act. I wish to quote from an article that was printed in the Montreal Gazette of May 12, 1920. There were very big headlines on this article: "Million Dollar Fund for Propaganda." Then in somewhat smaller headlines were the words, "Canadian Manufacturers' Association Insistent Upon Tariff Commission of Specialists." The article goes on:

> A million dollar fund for the propaganda of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association was foreshadowed to night at the annual dinner of the Montreal Branch. Among the guests were Col. W. Grant Morden, Sir James McKechie, head of the Vickers firm of England and many of the business leaders of the province.
> T. P. Howard, as President of the Dominion Manufacturers' Association, said that they had approached the Government on the necessity for a scientific tariff board for Canada and stated that it would be considered with the support of 1,600 labor unions of Canada as well as the manufacturers, and in a defence of great industrial mergers both here and in England.

With regard to this demand of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association for a scientific tariff board for Canada, I understand that their wish was to have a tariff commission appointed that would deal with the tariff in much the same way that the present Board of Railway Commissioners deals with freight and passenger rates—a board that would have absolute control over what the tariff on all imports should be, and a board that would not be responsible to the electors. I wish to congratulate the Government on withstanding the Canadian Manufacturers' Association in this demand. To appoint such a board would be very unconstitutional, and I am pleased that the Government did not do it. The Canadian Manufacturers' Association, not being able to accomplish this object, evidently turned their attention to the matter of outlining a plan of taxation for Canada, for in the Montreal Gazette of a later date, I find the following:

March 29, 1921.—The question of Federal taxation will be discussed here this week by representatives of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada, and the Wholesale Merchants' Association, as a result of an intimation from Sir Henry Drayton, Minister of Finance, that he wishes to obtain the collective judgment of the business interests in Canada as to the most desirable plan to raise revenue for Federal requirements.

It is quite evident that these people had raised their million dollar fund, and had assured the Government that they could deliver them the support of 1,600 labour unions. Here we find the Minister of Finance telling them: All right, if you can deliver me this support, get together and tell us what you want, and we will see if we can meet your requirements. I think most people will agree on looking over the Budget that all of the requests made by the big interests of Canada have been granted except one. I believe they wanted in addition to the abolition of the business profits tax and the balance of the luxury taxes, the income tax on corporations abolished. I want to congratulate the Minister of Finance on not acceding to this last request, but it is just possible that he is coming to that by easy stages, and that that tax may be the next thing to go; I hope not, however.

During the war, the slogan in Canada was: The last man and the last dollar. We got the required men all right, but I am sorry to say that the Government did not begin to get the first dollar of big profits made on war contracts during the war. I think the Government and the Minister of Finance were about two, if not three years too late in starting to tax the excess profits of the business interests of Canada. And I believe it would be unsound to abolish that tax at the present time.

I wish to quote a few extracts from the Montreal Star of May 12, 1921, which prove conclusively, if proof were needed, that the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the other interests allied with them were the instigators of the present taxation scheme for Canada:

"It appears to me that the Finance Minister has worked out the matter in a very clear and concise way," said F. W. Stewart, Chairman of the Montreal Branch of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. "It appears to have been very carefully designed, and the changes made are in the best interests of business. The sales tax is really the basis on which taxation will affect the consumer the least. The manufacturer does not absorb it, and by showing it separately on his invoice no advance is added to it. The sales tax was working very satisfactorily indeed, and its continuation will be satisfactory to wholesalers and manufacturers."

I cannot for the life of me see how Mr. Stewart comes to the conclusion that the sales tax will affect the consumer least, because it is the consumer who pays that tax. Mr. Stewart admits that the wholesaler does not absorb it, so he must pass it on to the consumer. I quote again:

The new budget provisions bring a welcome relief to the ardent card player, to whom the high cost of cards has been a source of frequent complaints. The tax on cards not exceeding $24 a gross, is reduced from 15 cents a pack to 8 cents, and that on cards costing over $24 a gross, drops from 25 cents a pack to 15 cents.

I suppose that the ardent card player, the people who have leisure to indulge in card playing, and the card sharper who fleeces the innocent victim out of his money at cards, will no doubt be benefited by the Budget provisions in this respect, but I do not know whether it is in the best interests of the country or not. I leave that for the House to judge. Another quotation:

The Retail Merchants' Association of Canada is well pleased with the budget, and is glad its work has resulted in what it has been aiming at.

So if we needed any further proof that the Budget was the work of the Retail and Wholesale Merchants' Associations and of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, I think we have it here in the avowal that the Retail Merchants' Association have accomplished what they were aiming at. Again:

"So far as we can judge, Sir Henry Drayton has taken the best possible course in his budget," said T. P. Howard, ex-President of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, and President of the Howard Smith Paper Mills, Ltd. "The abolition of the business profits tax is good. We realize that Sir Henry had to get revenue, and he has done it in the way that presses least heavily on the taxpayer and on business."

When you take out the taxpayer and the business man, who is left to pay the taxes? It is evidently the consumer who owns no property, according to this man, because it is the non-taxpayer, and not the business man. It is the poor labouring man who is working in a mill or on the railroads for $2 or $3 a day, trying to support a large family, who is raising the revenue by paying a tax on everything that he and his family eat and wear. If that is a sound method of taxation, I will admit that I do not know very much about economics. My idea of equitable taxation is to raise the revenue by taxing the men best able to bear it, the men who own property, or who make big profits out of business. It has been said that the reason why the business profits tax was abolished was because there were no profits. If that were the case no harm would be done by leaving the tax in force. To abolish the tax is simply saying to the business man: Go ahead and make all the profits you like, and we will not touch you. That is not sound, in my opinion. I have another quotation to make from the Montreal Star:

"I think the increase in the sales tax will meet with little opposition," states W. M. Birks, 1st vice-president of the Montreal Board of Trade. "It is not so general or uniform a tax as the turnover tax advocated by the Board of Trade, but still it is quite good, as is the abolition of the business war profits tax and the last of the luxury taxes, for which the council of the board has been pressing for some time."

Why are these people so jubilant over this tax? To my mind the reason can be summed up in a word: They are able through this new measure of taxation to shift their load on to the other fellow's back.

Mr. ONESIPHORE TURGEON (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, the Budget debate has lasted now over a week and has been the means of giving much information to the House and the country at large on the fiscal proposals of the Government. It is certainly with great regret, when I see my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton), opposite to me this evening, that I rise in the exercise of what I feel to be my duty to inflict upon him the burden of my remarks on the Budget. He has delivered his Budget with evident sincerity and honesty, and for that we certainly owe him a debt of gratitude and our congratulations. The fact that he occasionally enunciates good Liberal principles has led me to believe that my hon. friend was a Liberal, but that he has lost his bearings in the befogged economic atmosphere of Toronto. To-day every Canadian is anxious to know what the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) can do to improve our present disquieting financial conditions, and although the Budget which my hon. friend has submitted to Parliament does not contain very much, the facts it discloses are serious enough to set every earnest citizen thinking. It is true that we have passed through very grave and difficult times, but we know, Mr. Speaker, that while our obligations are tremendous, we have resources that are almost inexhaustible; and if the Government would only go about it in the right way, they would find it not an impossible task to put this country once more upon a sound financial basis. I do not minimize the vastness of the task, but I certainly think that the Government is not doing all it can in the present circumstances. For many years to come the people of Canada will have to shoulder a heavy burden in the way of taxation, and it is the duty of whatever Government may be in power to do everything humanly possible, in the way of developing our natural resources, and, above all, of economizing in the management of public affairs, to relieve the people, as far as possible, of that burden. But conditions, I am afraid, seem to be going from bad to worse, and this year we have to raise an amount much larger than was called for last year; in addition to which, we must face the increased deficit which is anticipated in connection with the Canadian National Railways. The people to-day are undoubtedly discontented; but, if they had an opportunity of electing a new Parliament, and could feel that that Parliament truly reflected their opinions and their wishes, they would take heart and be fully prepared to co-operate with the Government in the effort to discharge our obligations. Unfortunately, however, as has been remarked on many an occasion, not only the Prime Minister and the Government, but this Parliament as a whole, cannot claim to represent the people. This Parliament was elected under particular circumstances for a specific purpose. Its mandate has expired; the occasion for which the Government was returned to office has passed; and the people are anxious to return new representatives who will reflect their views and their wishes, and endeavour to implement their ambitions.

For some considerable time now we have been promised a revision of the tariff, which has been demanded by a section of the press; and if, as some people think, that section is a minority, still it is a minority that commands the respect of the people. Two years ago we were promised a tariff revision during the recess; and last year the same assurance, in emphatic terms, was given to the House by the Minister of Finance himself. After that assurance I felt convinced that this time there would certainly be a revision of the tariff which we might discuss at this session of Parliament. I am inclined to think that the hon. minister, who travelled from one end of the country to the other, going to the trouble of taking evidence extensively, and of hearing the whole question discussed from every standpoint, must have been personally in favour of undertaking a revision of the tariff. No doubt, however, he has been influenced in his decision by the counsel of his colleagues, and if he finds himself to-day unable to carry out his promise to give us a revision of the tariff, he is not alone responsible. Pressure has been brought to bear upon him, I presume, by the Government and the Prime Minister, and so we hear hon. gentlemen opposite putting forward, as a reason why there is no tariff revision, the importance of our waiting until the United States puts its new tariff law into effect.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, Canada would not to-day be faced with any adverse exchange with the United States if we had been wise enough in 911 to adopt the reciprocity agreement proposed by that able leader, Sir Wilfrid Laurier. That agreement was unquestionably conducive to the greatest prosperity in this country; and, if we had adopted it, it would have made for better conditions financially for Canada, and a very much better mutual understanding between the two countries. The right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster), in 1911, told the people that their only salvation lay in defeating reciprocity; but recently we have seen him pleading with the United States, in that eloquent way we all know, and beseeching them not to use the weapon in their hands. In 1911, the war cry was "No truck or trade with the Yankees;" to-day it is this: "Let us be friends; we are of common origin; there is no reason why we cannot carry on business amicably with each other".

My right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Mr. Meighen) the other day, in that virile style of his, criticized the Opposition. I know that he is never at a loss for an argument, but I think he went rather too far when he declared that the tariff we have to-day, under the Conservative party, is identical with the tariff as it was left by my hon. friend, the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), in 1911. I will admit that the tariff may be the same as was left to hon. gentlemen opposite in 1911—minus the benefits of the reciprocity pact. Those benefits would have been added to the tariff but for the position which my hon. friend and his friends took in regard to reciprocity. Immense benefits would have accrued to Canada under the reciprocity pact to which my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Finance had given two years of hard work in order to try and bring the representatives of the American people into harmony with his views and aspirations. Fortunately, there were a couple of provinces in Canada which were not affected by the tornado of prejudice which swept over the country in 1911 and which affected more particularly the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. I refer to the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. These two provinces sent a full contingent of representatives to Parliament in support of reciprocity, with the exception perhaps of two gentlemen who have since taken refuge on the bench or elsewhere. Every other representative of the two provinces came to Parliament in the chariot of reciprocity, and not one of them has changed his mind on that important question.

My hon. friends opposite are fond of talking of the value of the home market to the people of Canada. That is the great slogan of the protectionist—the home market. They tell you that you must not consider outside markets or outside conditions; you must confine your activities to the home market. As an illustration of the value of the home market they refer to the article of butter which, during the war, commanded such a high price. Are we not to consider any of the rest of our farm products? What about our wheat and our other grains needed so much by the outside world, and abundant crops of which mean so much to the prosperity of this country? Are we to confine ourselves, in the development of our resources, to a market of eight or nine millions of people when those resources are such as to enable us to supply the needs of a great part of the world? Where would the wheat grower of the Prairie Provinces be if he were limited to producing only sufficient for the needs of eight or nine millions of people in Canada? Where would be the great benefits to industry, that are now enjoyed, if we had such an extremely restricted market? It is an unrestricted development of production which makes for the prosperity of a nation. We have a country of immense area, and of unlimited resources; and it is in the development of our trade with outside countries that I expect to see Canada grow and expand in the future. Our manufacturers in the big cities should realize this—I think as an actual fact they do realize it—but until they get this broader outlook and act upon it we shall not see Canada expand and prosper in the way she ought to do.

We have seen the luxury taxes as they were called—those taxes which gave so much trouble to the retailers and their customers—discarded and other methods resorted to. But in every case it is the consumer who pays. I have always been in favour of the abolition of taxes that press heavily upon the masses of the people, and replacing them by taxation that would fall upon those best able to meet it. It is not only upon the ordinary commodities that the Minister of Finance is imposing taxes that will bear heavily upon the people—he is now imposing a tax upon lumber. The proposition of the Finance Minister, as outlined in the Budget, reads as follows:

> Provided that in respect of lumber an excise tax of three per cent shall be imposed, levied and collected on sales and deliveries by the Canadian manufacturers—

This is going to add to the cost of erecting buildings more especially in the cities, and by reason of it tenants will have to pay increased house rents. Only a short time age we heard from the Minister of Railways the statement that owing to the high freight rates we cannot get lumber from British Columbia. Even the people in the prairie district of the West are suffering by reason of that fact. Notwithstanding the prosperity they have been experiencing they will not, owing to the high cost of transportation, be able to obtain lumber from British Columbia to shelter themselves, their families and their stock.

Again, he tells us that that lumber cannot under the present excessive freight rates be transported to Central Canada to meet the needs of the people there. We know also that owing to those same excessive freight rates New Brunswick lumber cannot be sold in Montreal, Toronto or Buffalo as it used to be. Our lumbermen of northern New Brunswick have to pay a freight rate of $11 per thousand feet to send their lumber to Montreal, and they have to pay another $12 or $13 freight rate to extend their sales to Toronto or Buffalo, which represents the price of the lumber itself. And yet after receiving that statement from the Minister of Railways we find the sales tax on that lumber is increased to three and a half per cent.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Will the hon. gentleman allow me? I am sure he would like the facts. Does he know that the two taxes of one per cent each making 2 per cent in all of last year have been consolidated this year in so far as lumber is concerned into a three per cent tax, an increase of one per cent only on the two, and that the rate as consolidated and increased is only 3 and not 3½ per cent.

Mr. TURGEON: I accept the explanation given by my hon. friend (Sir Henry Drayton), but still under present conditions if there was one article which should be free of that taxation it is lumber, because in every city there is a dearth of dwelling houses, and the high prices of lumber and other material tend to discourage the erection of new houses.

Needless to say, Mr. Speaker, the amendment brought in by my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) will receive my hearty support, although I think it is well known in this House that I am willing to go much further; but, as I have said on other occasions, we cannot expect free trade to become effective in a moment, especially under present world conditions. It will come gradually as circumstances permit. But certainly the principles underlying that amendment are such as if put into practice will undoubtediy improve the conditions of our people. The principle of protection itself is injurious to any country, but especially to such a country as Canada that can only prosper by the development of its natural resources, —that circumstance alone is a sufficient condemnation of protection. The United States is often cited as an example of the benefits accruing from protection, but it must always be remembered that however high the protective tariff has been in that country, it has never been such a burden upon the people there as is our protective tariff upon our people to-day. But, outside of tariff matters, permit me to say that the growth and prosperity of the United States cannot be attributed solely, or, indeed, in any degree to their tariff policy, but rather to the expansion of territory which has resulted from successive annexations until the original thirteen New England States have grown to over forty, not only increasing the area of the United States but its population also, and those states enjoy a freedom of trade that was unknown to the old colonies. In a word, the industries of the whole country have been developed, and we find that the industrial expansion in California has kept pace with that of New York, while the city of Chicago has become the great centre of commerce of the Middle West, and its unparalleled prosperity has not been at the expense of, but has helped, the prosperity of New York, Boston and Philadelphia.

And my great leader, the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier, developed this country by revising the tariff to the untold benefit of our people, and by adopting a vigorous immigration policy, he attracted a virile enterprising class of settlers who peopled our western territories, necessitating the creation of new provinces and virtually expanding our territory in a manner somewhat similar to the expansion of the United States. The result has been that the energy of Canadians from the East combined with the energy of our newcomers has developed the West to its present prosperous condition, which has reacted on the East, and this country would not be as well off as it is to-day but for that far-sighted policy.

But we are told that we must have protection. I see that the Minister of Labour addressed a meeting a few nights ago at McAdam Junction, and for the time being, apparently, represented himself as the friend of the railway men and of labour generally, and he told them that they must have protection to afford the labouring men plenty of work. In this connection I would remind this House and the country that the working man besides being a seller of labour is also a purchaser of commodities, and the price of his labour must correspond to the price of the commodities which he has to buy. It is not only a case of for instance a particular manufacturer of boots and shoes, saying to his workmen: "You pay a little more for your boots and shoes and I will give you higher wages." But after buying their boots and shoes those workmen have also to buy food and clothing for themselves and their families. So we cannot judge of the prosperity of the country merely by a tariff.

This amendment is certainly a move in the right direction—a direction which the late hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier indicated in his manifesto to the people of Canada, in which he said among other things:

> If I should be entrusted with the administration of the country, I would immediately relieve agriculture from all its shackles of the customs duties. Thus I would at once abolish the duties on all farming implements and the other necessities of the farm, and would advocate as an essential object of my administration a general and well constituted reform of the tariff, tending to aid production in Canada and to relieve the Canadian consumer.

This is the programme which would have shaped the destinies of Canada in 1917 had not the people been misled by the flag-waver, and this country would be in a far different position than that in which we find it to-day. Every Canadian, I am sure, will admit that this programme was the best that could be instituted in the interests of Canada, having regard to the conditions. We would have had a degree of free trade which certainly would have satisfied my desire as well as that of every honest free trader in Canada. The same object is embodied in the resolution which has been introduced in amendment by the ex-Minister of Finance, the member for Shelburne and Queen's.

The protectionist spirit, Sir, is not consistent with the principles of democracy. It is the masses of the people, ninety or ninety-five per cent of the population, who most require assistance. The millionaire can look after himself; it is the man in the factory, the workingman, the man who assists in the development of our natural resources, the man who gets his bread by the sweat of his brow—this is the man whom we should look after. Generally it is he who has the largest family. The object of his affections is at home, and if during the six working days of the week he must worry about how he may provide his family with the necessities of life, he cannot enjoy his home on Sunday. To improve the condition of these people should be the aspiration of every man who has to do with the administration of the country's affairs, and this applies not only to Canada but to every other nation. Henry George once said that the spirit of love, not hate, will produce happiness; that it knows no difference of race or creed; it knows no animosities. That,

Mr. Speaker, is the spirit of free trade, and whether or not we can put it into practice in toto, it is the spirit which should animate the people of Canada to-day.

I listened with great attention this afternoon to the remarks made by the hon. member for St. Johns and Iberville (Mr. Demers) with regard to the condition of the workingman. He said he would have the workingman prosper; he even said they should enjoy a portion of the benefits accruing to the businesses for which they were working. I consider myself a greater free trader than the hon. member for St. Johns and Iberville. I do not go so far as he does, but I do say that we should do all we can to bring happiness and contentment to the workingman, and only by enabling him to obtain under fair conditions the commodities which he must purchase for the sustenance of his family can we hope to make him happy and contented. If we make the workingman happy and contended he will rise in the esteem of the whole people; his work will contribute to the prosperity of the nation and he will be glad to do an honest day's work for whatever wage he gets.

With regard to the question of revenue, I submit that the raising of what I might call indirect revenue means the placing of the burden upon the masses of the people. Hon. gentlemen opposite express their approval of the income tax. It is true that we have had income tax for the last three years, but I may point out that the provision for income tax, while put into effect by hon. gentlemen opposite, is the work of the Liberal party. We had almost exhausted our patience in asking for it, and the Government had exercised all its powers of resistance against it. I and other gentlemen on this side from the very beginning of the war urged that we should have income tax and thus avoid borrowing in order to meet the expenses of the war. But during three years of the war, when the greatest prosperity prevailed in Canada, when immense profits were made and such a source of revenue would have yielded two or three times what it brings to-day, the Government took no action. Of course, the present Finance Minister is not responsible, for he was not here at the time. I am sure that if he had been here, he would, in his generosity of heart, have inspired his colleagues to better sentiments in this direction. However, I repeat that the Liberal party through its constant efforts in that regard is responsible for the introduction of this tax.

We are told that we must have a tariff; that a tariff alone can save the country. But look at the case of Great Britain. During the last sixty or seventy-five years she has had free trade and she has expanded her commerce so greatly that the English language is recognized to-day as the language of trade and commerce. Her trade has reached every shore and every ocean, and the principle of free trade, recognized by Great Britain, has been the means of engendering a spirit of fraternity and encouraging true Christian sentiments. It is the policy which has created Britain's great merchant navy—and it is to be remembered that it was Britain's navy which won the war and without which the victory could not have been ours. Surely that is a circumstance which should impress every nation.

On different occasions in this House the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Meighen) has referred to hon. gentlemen on this side as Bolshevists and wreckers. As I and the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) have on many occasions in this House set forth the principles of free trade, I must be included in the reference which my right hon. friend made, in which hon. gentlemen advocating the policy of free trade were called Bolshevists and wreckers.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Perhaps the hon. gengentleman will do what hon. members of the Agrarian party have always failed to do in that regard. Would he be good enough to quote just what I said, before he seeks to attack it?

Mr. TURGEON: I have not under my hand reports of those speeches.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They never have.

Mr. TURGEON: But it is well known that they conveyed this idea as regards all those in this House who were opposed to him.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh, no.

Mr. TURGEON: The words "wreckers" and "Bolsheviki" were used.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Get somebody to quote what I said.

Mr. TURGEON: I am not so far away from the truth after all. I am not converted for all that to the principle of protection, and I sincerely believe in this great policy which is bound to be adopted in Canada, because, if there is in the world a country which has been made, by Providence, a country which should have free trade, it is certainly Canada with her magnificent natural resources and her markets on every ocean and on every side. We can reach the countries on the Pacific ocean as well as those on the Atlantic. When I speak in favour of a diminution of the tariff as rapidly as possible, I do not think the result will be to injure the manufacturer. I have no objection to the prosperity of the manufacturer; I desire that he should prosper; and when I advocate an expansion of trade into the great markets of the world, my desire is to ensure his prosperity, for I say that the Canadian manufacturer will never prosper as he should, with the resources that he has at his command, until he has developed his trade with other nations, whether on the European continent or in the Orient. When I say that we can do with a lower tariff, I do not mean that I want to harm either the manufacturer, the employer or the employee. A protective tariff is bad, as everyone who will study the matter will admit; a tariff for revenue is better, but no tariff at all is better still. Let me prove my contention by this argument. We say that we must have revenue, and to get revenue we must have importation. You cannot have revenue unless you import. The more revenue you wish to collect by a tariff, the more you must encourage importation, and the more you deprive the labourer of his work and the manufacturer of his products. Supposing we collect $200,000,000 by a tariff. That represents a total importation of, say, $800,000,000. Therefore, it means $800,000,000 worth of commodities that the labourer has not been able to work upon and that the manufacturer has not been able to produce in this country. Therefore, the more you encourage revenue by importation, the more you deprive the workmen and the manufacturer of their prosperity.

This is a time when the people of Canada should encourage freer trade between the nations in order to restore harmony, more particularly between nations on the European continent and some other continents where agitation still exists in the minds of the people. This can be done by opening the doors to their commerce and asking those countries to join with us in trade as well as in other matters. Trade creates friendship, and with friendship we shall have peace. With animosity, we shall have war.

The Brussels Conference was referred to by the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) in a speech which he delivered in presenting his amendment. I should, however, like to read over again the two resolutions which he quoted from that conference, in order to impress more deeply upon the House the consequences which I draw for Canada from them. This is what the first one says:

> The Conference recommends that within such limits and at such time as may appear possible each country should aim at the progressive restoration of that freedom of commerce which prevailed before the war, including the withdrawal of artificial restrictions on, and discriminations of price against, external trade.

Another resolution is this:

> The International Financial Conference affirms that the improvement of the financial position largely depends on the general restoration as soon as possible of good-will between the various nations; and in particular it endorses the declaration of the Supreme Council of the 8th March last "that the States which have been created or enlarged as a result of the war should at once re-established full and friendly co-operation and arrange for the unrestricted interchange of commodities in order that the essential unity of European economic life may not be impaired by the erection of artificial economic barriers."

Such is the proposition laid down by those resolutions of the Brussels Conference at which the Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Guthrie) represented Canada, and I am proud that a representative of Canada gave his adherence to such resolutions, the putting into effect of which would fill my heart with joy and happiness, because I would see, in the near future, happiness and contentment in the various nations of the world. It is an invitation which, certainly, the people of Canada should not only accept with great pleasure, but endeavour to enforce upon other nations. Let Canada do her duty to-day as she did it at the beginning of and during the war. As in those days, love of the Mother Country, Great Britain, was able to bring from every ocean her millions of subjects and to unite them into one common bond under the beneficent smile of Providence, let again the same spirit animate us all in every clime, and in every country; let us here to-day, unite in the endeavour to promote peace, harmony, and good-will amongst the nations of the earth. We have been told that Canada is a great nation; that she enjoys a reputation beyond that of any of the greater nations owing to the sacrifices which she made in the war and the intelligent service rendered by our Canadian soldiers. If Canada is a nation big enough to be a member of the league, let her be a member big enough to be a leader in that league.

Let us to-day put aside our prejudices and start in the direction of freer trade with other countries, so that we may be sure we shall not be confronted with another war in the future. We are asked, what else are you going to do? I say: Reduce the tariff so that our people may be able to buy the necessaries of life and educate their children, who certainly in the course of time will be the rulers of the country. We all know that very often from the families of the working men come those who are destined for the highest places in the world.

I have already on more than one occasion given my ideas on a system of taxation which is not new to this Parliament. I have dilated on that scheme very often and perhaps I should not touch upon it to-night, but I read a reference to it, not being present in the House, in the speeches of my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark) and my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Thomson). I refer to a land values tax. I again advocate that system of taxation. I want it to be well understood that I am not advocating a tax on improvements to property, but merely on the unearned increment. The local Government are to-day raising revenue by the taxation of property, but they are taxing the improvements. I do not advocate that. I want only that land to be taxed that is unemployed, and that is being held mainly for the purpose of exacting a higher price. It is the mere value of the land itself that we should tax, and not the improvements, for that would be an injustice to the people of Canada. In any country the value of the land rises with the improvements and the general prosperity of the country. The construction of a railway or of public works in any portion of Canada causes the land in the neighbourhood to rise in value, and this added value that is given to the land should be for the benefit and prosperity of the whole country. To-day the farmer who has 100 acres of land upon which he works hard finds that the more buildings he erects and the more improvements he makes to his property the more he is taxed, while the farmer alongside of him who allows his land to lie uncultivated pays no tax at all. It is the land of this farmer, who is leaving his farm unused, without any benefit to the people of the community, that we wish to tax. And similarly with regard to the land in the cities. We do not wish to tax the improvements, but the vacant land that is being held for a higher price. If you tax that land, the owner seeks either to use it or to sell it. As I said, land values rise with the improvements in the neighbourhood and the general prosperity of the country, and it is certainly astonishing sometimes to see how greatly values rise. Every time I walk along Sparks street I am struck by the immense value of its property—a value which has been given to it by the Federal Government of Canada. What was the value of a foot of land on Sparks street or Bank street about fifty years ago before the creation of a Capital in Ottawa? Not very much. Since the session opened I saw in the newspapers that a piece of property with a thirty-three foot frontage on Sparks street, without a building on it, had been purchased by the Home Bank for $195,000. How much would that land have been worth if the seat of Parliament was not in Ottawa? Only about $400 or $500. The increased value has been given it by the Federal Government being in Ottawa and having erected buildings here, with all the necessary improvements in the neighbourhood. These improvements have meant that a piece of land that otherwise would have been worth only a few hundred dollars is now worth $195,000. If we have to raise $200,000,000 of revenue, we would have to raise from the city of Ottawa, I suppose, about $2,000,000 or $3,000,000, according to population. How much better it would be if we could help to raise that amount by taxing the land values in the way I have suggested, instead of raising the money by going into the home of the working man, the clerk, the school teacher, and the returned soldier, and extorting the tax from their tables and upon the things they wear. That is the difference between the two methods of taxation. A land values tax such as I have advocated will not interfere with exchange or transportation or with any other business. After all, this land value taxation is an old British Liberal principle. You can find that principle as far back as William the Conqueror, and my hon. friend the Minister of Finance knows I am right. William the Conqueror took possession of all the land and parcelled it out amongst his generals and officers and soldiers on the condition that they would always be prepared for military service. During this great man's reign the common people had no regular taxes to pay in connection with wars; the nobility were always in a state of preparedness. It was only afterwards, when they refused to discharge their obligations, that the common people suffered and pauperism got a footing in Britain. The principle which I have stated is one that Campbell-Bannerman, Asquith, and Lloyd George advocated before the war, although Lloyd George of late has betrayed it. Even at the rate of one per cent we could raise a very large revenue by taxing unused lands, and by that means we could raise revenue instead of taking it out of the working classes, who find it difficult enough to provide themselves and their families with food and clothing. The sooner we have a Government that will introduce a system of this sort, the better it will be for the whole country. If this were done, the working classes would be grateful to the party that brought it about. Extravagance at any time is wrong, but to-day particularly it is criminal, and I think we can safely claim that the Conservative Government and its successors, since 1911, have been wasting the people's money. Now, I think that one way of putting an end to extravagance would be to tax land values. If this were done, the land-owners would themselves see to it that there was no extravagance on the part of the Government, entailing an increase in taxes in which they would participate; and I suggest this as one of the best policies that could be adopted.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have perhaps kept the House too long. I regret my inability to place before you and before the country, the views which I hold on many subjects. Were I gifted with the eloquence, the impressiveness, and the clear expression of my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark), or of the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Meighen), I would use that gift in submitting, not only to the members of this House, but to the people of the country at large, the views which I have for the betterment of conditions in this country, and the opinions which, I think, if put into practice, would at least help towards the general prosperity. My opinions may not be acceptable to many hon. members, but I state them, nevertheless; and, as I say, my only regret is that I cannot express myself with the clearness which I should desire. I believe that there are many things which the Government could do to help the country out of its present difficulty, and I only wish they would do these things. In conclusion, Sir, I trust that the House will pardon me for having taken so much time in giving expression to the principles of British Liberalism which I have stated to-night, and which I think are the only right principles in the present conditions, not only in Canada, but throughout the world.

Mr. H. B. MORPHY (North Perth): In rising to make some remarks upon the subject before the House, I would congratulate the Minister of Finance upon the simplicity of his Budget and the fact that it tends to ease the public mind and to lessen the unrest that prevailed before it was presented. It has also resulted in releasing, to some extent, the direct burden of taxation which was in some cases rather vexatious. The lack of criticism of the Budget in the country and in the press shows a wholesome satisfaction on the part of the Canadian people, and proves that the Budget is one that commends itself to the public at large.

Canada has borne well tthe stress and strain of the war, and it is my opinion that the people of this country have returned to normal conditions more quickly than could have been reasonably expected. By comparison with the other peoples of the world, Canada, I think, stands out prominently as a country that was not stampeded and whose people were sane enough to realize that they have a duty to perform in maintaining that equilibrium and poise which have so well characterized the serious times through which we have passed. I think Canada is to be congratulated also, and the Meighen Government too, upon the state of affairs which has ushered in the new administration led by the right hon. the present Prime Minister. I think probably it would not be out of place to pay a compliment to the late Government of Sir Robert Borden, because it must have forcibly struck the mind of every independent and unbiased person who was carefully watching throughout all the great expenditures of the war and prior to it, that with the billions of dollars expended upon the effective activities of the great war by this young nation, the Government emerged cleaner, freer from scandal and freer from criticism, than I suppose any other Government in the civilized world engaged in the great struggle. That, of course, made for a broader way and a clearer path for the incoming Government; and I do not think there is in the public mind in the confines of Canada to-day—either on that side of the House or this, or throughout the country, from one coast to the other, any doubt that the present Prime Minister is a worthy follower of the one he has succeeded and that in his hands the country's interests will be absolutely safe.

The question of free trade and protection has apparently come back, whether advocated by individuals among the Liberal Opposition or by the free trade apostles in an angularly opposite direction led by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark). It seems to have come back at a time when every civilized nation of the world, England included, is practising and following to a smaller or greater extent, the doctrine of protection: whether high, moderate, or low the doctrine of protection is the ruling doctrine in all the nations of the world. As to the question of free trade, I was interested in a book entitled "The Cure of Poverty" which goes into the subject of free trade and protection in a very intimate and special way, and I would like the House to bear with me for a time while I cite from this book, written by J. Calvin Brown in the year 1914. Mr. Brown was then residing in England, and the book was written for publication in England and was published in that year. The author speaks of the question of free trade at large and defines the principle. His definition of free trade is an interesting one and brings us down pretty close, I think, to a proper discussion of the subject. He says:

> The term "free trade" is seldom understood and always misapplied. "Free Trade" is the unfettered and absolutely free right of every person both to buy and to sell in any market in which he can do the best.
> Such a thing does not exist amongst the peoples of any two nations in the world, and I doubt if it ever has existed.
> Properly to carry in mind the subject of "free trade" one must never cease to keep it divided clearly into two separate and distinct parts:
> 1. The free right to buy.
> 2. The free right to sell.
> Practically every man of every nation has, and always will have, the free right to buy in any market he desires, provided he is willing to pay the price, but in these days of tariffs few nations have the free right to sell in any other than their home markets.

To the casual observer of current events that strikes one at once. We are in a world of tariffs, and the free right to sell is limited to one's own country which is not affected by the tariff. The moment you talk about the free right to sell you are at the mercy of the other country you want to sell to which puts a tariff against you, so that in essence there is no such thing today in the leading nations of the world as free trade.

They say that England is a free trade country. Well, let us take the figures for 1914, and I take that year because—owing to the stress of war, the disruption of trade, the congestion of the arteries of trade, and the upheavals of one kind and another—conditions have not been normal since that time. I think, therefore, it is fair to consider the situation as it was in 1914. England as a free trade country has always—or at any rate for many years—had a customs tariff, and the strange thing about it is that it is a tariff largely upon the necessities of life. In 1912-13 the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain collected £72,000,000 from free trade duties, divided into £34,000,000 from customs and £38,000,000 from excise duties. Now a free trade country collecting duties as Britain did collect them, and collecting them upon these particular commodities would be looked upon as a peculiar example of free trade. I find for that year that the United Kingdom collected duties amounting to £6,000,000, or $30,000,000, upon tea—the household beverage of not only the rich but the poor. On sugar it collected £3,000,000, or $15,000,000; on tobacco £17,000,000, or $85,000,000; on spirits £4,000,000, or $20,000,000; on wine £1,000,000, or $5,000,000; and on cocoa and coffee £600,000, or $3,000,000. All these products came from abroad and could not, it is true, be produced in the United Kingdom. At the same time it was collecting these duties upon what would be considered, in practically every item, as the necessaries of life for the poor man as well as for the rich. Necessities of life for the poor man mean something. Necessities of life cannot very well be applied to the use of those who are abundantly wealthy and able to pay. This author then takes up the question and states that:

> A "protective" tariff is a system of high duties on such articles as are or could be overproduced at home.
> A "protective" tariii not only provides a larger revenue than a "free trade" tariff, but it is so arranged that the duties are collected on foreign articles which directly compete with home industries.
> The United States "protective" tariff is the most complete system in use at present by any country, and it is designed about as follows:
> In selecting the list of articles to be taxed the United States asks first: "Do we produce this article at home in quantities equal to the home demand? If not, could we?" "Is there any climatic or other reason why we could not learn to do so?" If the article is not, or could not be so produced, then it is put on the free list without any further discussion, because the American knows that any duty placed on such article must be paid by the home consumer.

Now the United States, for natural reasons, could never expect to produce coffee, tea or cocoa, and therefore these articles are free of duty in America.

Practically the English principle of putting duties on articles that they do not produce at home.

A most remarkable case showing the effect of a tariff is cited by this same author as follows:

When the McKinley tariff of 1890 was framed it was found, for instance, that the United States imported from Great Britain some 340,000 tons of tin plate per year and did not manufacture any.

The Government, after a thorough investigation, concluded that there was no reason why tin plate should not be made in America, and they forthwith placed a duty of 2.2 cents per pound on tin plate.

Tin plate was then selling in the United States at 3 cents per pound, and when the tariff of 2.2 cents made it possible for home producers to sell it for 5.2 per pound, the capitalists put up tin plate mills all over the country. The mills became so numerous and competed so vigorously among themselves that they soon pressed the price down to 2.8 cents per pound, and they now produce more tin plate than any other nation in the world, and in 1911 they used up over 8,000,000 pounds worth of raw tin.

In this case the "protective" tariff actually forced into existence an entirely new industry which now furnishes work for thousands of men, and uses up great quantities of iron, coal, etc., which furnishes further wages, practically all of which was formerly enjoyed by the British workman.

But there is another case noted which is of great importance. The author writes:

Prior to 1884 no soda ash was made in the United States and they imported 175,000 tons per year, and the price was $48 per ton.

The Americans were therefore paying to foreign producers $1,680,000 per year for this one article.

The Americans were paying for an article produced by foreigners, whose workmen were paid in foreign lands, and the American workmen had no benefit whatever, but the money for labour wages was all going to the foreign manufacturer, and the Americans woke up to that fact.

Congress put a duty of $5 per ton on soda ash, and home producers began to get into the soda ash business, until home competition soon drove the price down to $28 per ton from $48 per ton.

Exactly the same thing as happened in the tin plate business.

Without home competition the foreigner was charging an excessive price for this article, but the "protective" tariff not only forced prices down to their fair level, and thereby saved the consumers $3,900,000 per year, but it forced into existence an entirely new and prosperous home industry, which paid $800,000 per year in wages and consumed 70,000 tons of home coal, 100,000 tons of home limestone, 10,000 tons of home coke and 100,000 tons of home salt, all of which benefits had previously been enjoyed by foreign peoples.

So that when one considers that a protective tariff is meant to encourage and foster home industries and protect them from foreign products, we have in these two cases of tin plate and soda ash concrete examples that prove the value of protection in supplying work and wages to your own home workmen instead of paying money to employ and benefit the workmen of foreign nations.

Now, in the United States they do not even refuse to consider the question of a bounty to advance their own prosperity. Some people hold up their hands in holy horror when they hear the word "bounty" mentioned in any fiscal or economic proposition.

"Bounty" is a reward or premium paid by the Government to the home producer of some article in order to give him an advantage over his foreign competitor which will enable him to compete with the foreigner without forcing him to pay the low wages paid by the foreigner.

In 1890 when the McKinley tariff was being drawn it was found that a duty of two cents per pound was being collected on imported sugar, and that home producers were making only one-eighth of the sugar consumed in America.

Note the proportion, only one-eighth.

The Government simply made sugar free of duty, thus saving the people $55,000,000 per year.

The free trader would say that that was a good thing. But how does it work out? At the same time they paid a bounty of two cents a pound to the home producers of beet sugar. Beet sugar is grown not only in the United States but largely in Canada, and we have a couple of large refineries at Kitchener and Walkerville handling the product of the farmers in Western Ontario. The output of those factories aids the home market to stem unfair competition and to bring to the doors of the people sugar made by our own refiners from beets grown by our own farmers.

This bounty amounted to only $7,000,000 a year.

The use of the word "only" seems to indicate that it is an infinitesimal sum in relation to the advantages brought about by the policy pursued by the United States Government.

This gave the home grower the same two cent advantage over the foreign grower, and therefore resulted in a net saving to sugar users of $48,000,000 per year, or nearly $1,000,000 per week. The United States production of sugar at once increased, until in 1902 she produced 67 per cent of all the sugar in the world, in spite of the fact that the world's demand for sugar is ten times as great as it was in 1840, and is constantly increasing. In 1850 the per capita consumption of sugar in the United States was 22 pounds; it is now more than 70 pounds.

I am speaking of 1914 still.

There were 970 workmen engaged in growing United States beet sugar in 1899 and they received $1,092,000 wages. In 1904 the industry employed 4,000 workmen and paid them $2,500,000 in wages. In 1907 these figures were almost doubled and they have continued to mount steadily.

So that a protective tariff is not necessarily a prohibitive tariff.

Now, the question of the cause of England's greatness has been argued pro and con, some contending that she grew great through a policy of free trade, others that it was through a policy of protection of the strongest kind that she—shall I say, commanded the markets of the world by stamping out all trade on the part of nations who were once opponents and outstanding rivals in the trade field. It was not until then, through the most drastic policy of protection that any nation ever put in force, that Great Britain commanded the trade of the world. She beat down Holland by the most drastic piece of legislation, she went so far as to say that no commodities should be brought from foreign countries except in British bottoms commanded by English mates, and with at least half the crew British. In that way Britain directed the imports of foreign nations through her own merchant marine. It is rather painful for a Canadian to reflect upon how England in the early days, when she was making up her mind to be the trade centre of the world, passed legislation prohibiting the colonies from doing all sorts of things. I could relate them in extenso but I do not wish to take the time. That policy was pursued with a great deal of pertinacity and keeness, involving the most pronounced policy of protection which any nation ever put in force. In 1699 she passed a law forbidding the American colonies to ship any wool, yarn, cloth or woollen manufactures to any place whatever under penalty of forfeiture of both ship and cargo and a fine of £500. Another law was passed forbidding the exportation to America of any live lambs, sheep, etc., under severe penalities. In 1781 a law was passed forbidding the export of any woollen machinery. In 1782 the export of cotton machinery was prohibited and the emigration of artificers in cotton forbidden as well. That kind of governmental attitude and policy is construed to-day to have been, and was then one of the strongest measures of protection ever undertaken by any country. It went on for a long time, until it was observed in the United States that the policy of foreign nations was to glut the American market and drive the American workingman entirely out of his occupation and livelihood. Although the principle of protection has been in vogue in the United States from the earliest years, practically from 1789, there have since been times when they have had both protection and free trade. But the history of the United States shows clearly that every time there was a relegation from the stable principle of protection to that of free trade, the result was dire distress and the practical breakdown of the mercantile, banking and industrial systems of the country. The old doctrine of the free traders was that expounded by the economic school of Manchester led by Cobden. They followed their policy pretty closely up to and including the year 1846, and it was then prophesied by Cobden that in fifty years from that date there would not be a civilized nation in the world following a policy involving the principle of protection. Had Cobden lived till now —what would he have said with protection everywhere? The United States, having had in view the principle of protection from their earliest years, finally adopted that principle by successive pieces of legislation. On this point the authority which I have quoted says:

Great Britain literally poured her accumulated stocks of all sorts of merchandise into the United States, at far below their cost, and utterly demolished the manufactories of the United States. Lord Brougham declared in the House of Commons in 1816:

"It is well worth while to incur a loss upon the first exportations, in order, by glut, to stifle in the cradle those infant manufactures in the United States which the war has forced into existence."

Bankruptcy soon became general in the United States and financial ruin was everywhere. Benton gives the following picture of the period: "No price for property, no sales—except by the sheriff, no purchasers except the creditors; no demand for labour; no demand for farm products; distress was universal and relief the universal demand."

These conditions were brought about at intervals, and, as is well known to every man in this House, they occurred at those times when the people of the United States left the same policy of protection and adopted a policy of free trade. I quote further from this work:

The first real "protective tariff" of 1824 was hailed with joy by all save the free trade politicians and their allied press. These predicted that all sorts of calamity and ruin would result and warned the country of the awful conditions which must follow. A leading article in the New York Evening Post, a leading free trade journal of that time, said:

"Pass this tariff, and you palsy the nation. Pass it and where will you any longer find occupants for your costly piles of stores and dwelling houses? Pass it, and who will be exempt from its grinding operations? The poorer classes especially must feel its effect in paying an additional price for every article of clothing they wear and every mouthful they eat or drink, save cold water, and to that will they ere long be reduced."

A fearful picture to contemplate, but it did not work out just in that way. In fact, none of these things happened. According to this authority:

Instead of "palsy" the nation trembled with energy let loose, all the American factories opened at once, labour was in great demand, no one was idle, wages went up rapidly, and millions of emigrants came and were also put to work. This condition continued until 1833, when the barking, hungry politician and intriguer—

This sounds a little strong, but I fancy that some may find that it applies in some countries.

—again secured control of Congress, not on a straight fight on tariff, but as a compromise or "sop" to the politicians of the southern States, who were in almost open revolt against "protection."

The southern states did not want protection because there was no free labour there. The people were slaves; they got no wages; they got their keep. Consequently, there was no working man of the ordinary style in the south. According to this authority:

Her labour, being slaves, had no votes and received no wages, therefore "protection" could not help them, and they would not help "protection."

So that the south was solidly against a policy of protection. And again:

The southerner objected to a tariff forced on him for the benefit of the northern manufacturer and paid labourers. And this was the strength which kept the "free trade" party alive and made it possible for it to defeat the "protective" tariff in 1833.

The result of the repeal of the "protective" tariff was certain and instantaneous.

Bankruptcy again became general.

Factories again closed. Labour was unemployed, wages fell, and conditions went rapidly from bad to worse, finally culminating in the worst financial panic (1837) till that time experienced in the United States.

The whole country went into liquidation, bank loans and discounts fell off more than one-half.

[Mr. Morphy.]

The people again took the bits in their teeth, and in 1842 passed another "protective" tariff over the veto of President Tyler (a southerner).

Business again began to boom. The old factories all opened and new ones started, labour was all employed and everywhere in great demand, wages advanced and farms found a ready market for their products.

President Polk, the successful candidate, carried on a double-faced campaign.

He was, privately, in the south, a declared advocate of "free trade" and slavery extension, but he could not be elected by the south alone, but needed the support of the vote of the northern state of Pennsylvania, which was strongly "protectionist."

To fool the "protection" voters of Pennsylvania, Polk wrote his notorious "Kane" letter, in which he managed to evade a definite declaration, but led all to suppose that he would not, if elected, allow the "protective" tariff of 1842 to be interfered with, and to make the deceit more complete, he caused George M. Dallas, a resident of Pennsylvania, who professed to be an out-and-out "protectionist," to be nominated as his vice-president (a position of no power whatever, but possessing a deciding vote in the Lower House), and in this tricky way his "free trade" party gained power.

This 1846 "free trade" Bill was strenuously opposed by the entire north, but the Bill was barely carried by the casting vote of that same George M. Dallas, who had professed himself an avowed "protectionist."

That ancient history in a way has a very close parallel in this House and in this country. Some hon. gentlemen are very prone to pretend that they are what they are not. They do that for the same reason that the politician in the United States used to do it; they act in the same way that this gentleman, Mr. Dallas, did, when he cast his vote against his convictions for the sake of getting into office and holding his party in power.

It was in a speech, lasting three entire days, during this debate that Daniel Webster coined the famous phrase, which is well worth remembering, "Where there is employment there will be bread."

This phrase contains all the arguments really necessary against free trade and in favour of protection. Hon. gentlemen opposite, I believe, really do not understand, or they declare themselves not to be willing to appreciate, the fact that one of the greatest resources which Canada has is her man-power, her woman-power, her working man and her working woman, the man who sweats in the modern shop, who toils in the coal mine, who works in the factory and woman who works in the factory. Where there is no work, there is no bread, and this country cannot be a great country by following any specious policy of narrow sectarian interests. In order that Canada may be a great country, the good of the whole people must be maintained and must be loyally supported by every red-blooded human being who takes interest or part in the economic, civic, or parliamentary life of this country. We talk about our natural resources. What would the farmers products be without the man-power? What would be the merchant's power, the railways' power, the power of any class of the community without the man-power? What would the interests do without the men of this country, the machinery makers, the worker of every kind? Therefore, one of the great features that governments have and ought to have, in mind is the conservation of the livelihood, yes, the more than livelihood of the toiling masses of this country. You cannot have that conservation unless you have a stable policy that gives encouragement to the home market, that goes for the upbuilding of great home industries, that goes for the building of those factories which have been the result of the policy laid down by Sir John A. Macdonald in 1878. Give me the policy that gives me power against your free trade theories and theses and Canada will blossom like the rose. Agriculture will be encouraged; industrial life will be encouraged; factories will spring up and they will be everywhere.

They have sprung up and they are almost everywhere; they are in Quebec; they are in Ontario; they are in the Maritime Provinces; they are going into the West and the moment they get more fully into the West, the western farmer will have a greater market for his smaller products and some of his larger products. That is a policy which appeals to me from the standpoint of a proud Canadian who wants to see his country go ahead, no matter what Government may be in power. The policy of the Government in power is a political matter; and should be approached with fear and trembling lest a mistaken policy, a fatuous policy, might be put forward in this Parliament that would unsettle the policy that Sir John Macdonald inaugurated in 1878 and Sir Wilfrid Laurier carried on for the sixteen years during which he was in control of the purse strings of the country. He took cognizance of what happened to Grover Cleveland in the latter part of 1895 and the early part of 1896, when Mr. Cleveland went to the people on a free trade policy. He was returned; but Congress turned him down; they over-ruled his veto, and he could not put his policy into force. Sir Wilfrid Laurier took cognizance of that fact, and though he preached practically free trade issues at that time, when he got into power and his party sat on the right of the Speaker, he turned his coat upside down and inside out and he reverted to the policy of Sir John A. Macdonald, the policy of a strong, virile, moderate protection for the benefit of every class in the Dominion.

I wonder what the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria (Mr. McKenzie), if he were to speak his honest opinion, would say as to a policy of protection upon steel and coal in the Maritime Provinces. He has declared himself in the past, but I presume he will vote for this amendment because of the political aspect, and because of the hope that he may get into power. The hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), has admitted that he is not against protection; that he is in favour of protection. The hon. gentleman will not deny that. Yet he is going to vote for an amendment that may mean anything at all or everything. The people of Canada want an outspoken individual expression of opinion from the leading men in this Parliament upon this, the great question at issue before the Canadian people to-day, and especially from hon. gentlemen who are so prone to express themselves so freely, ad lib., time after time, on every other subject under the sun. Their silence must be construed strongly against hon. gentlemen opposite, as a silence that involves the question of political chicanery, the fighting of an unfair political battle—a silence which we on this side of the House, speaking for myself at least, believe weakens them, while they believe it strengthens them. To-day with Canada's burden of two billion dollars of debt caused by the war, over and above the ordinary debt, in a crisis like this the public want stability; they want public men to speak out and to sink their party differences. I do not believe that the public of Canada will stand for one minute for public men refusing to get up in this House and taking the stand they have taken before, at a time when it is more necessary to speak out than it ever was before.

I do not know what the tariff will be in the United States, but there is no question to my mind—as they have announced by the Fordney Bill, and now by the Young Bill—that their tariff is going to be higher than it has been for many, many years. Why? They claim they are raising their tariff for the sake of agriculture in the United States. Hon. gentlemen must remember that it is the American people who tell us what we can sell in their country, and it is the Canadian people who tell them what they can sell in our country. It has been said by economists that one of the most useful purposes to which a tariff can be put is that of a weapon for bargaining. It enables you to say: We will trade you this for that so long as it does not injure any interest that is necessay to our country or injure any of our institutions. A country like Canada, with eight millions of people, that would adopt free trade with the highest protected country in the world at her doors, with a population of one hundred and ten millions, would be committing national harikari, or a crime, call it by any other name you will, that would put her out of existence in the twinkling of an eye.

Having said that much, may I suggest to the Government—I know the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) will not agree with this, for this matter has been mentioned in the House before—that at the present time they should look a little forward in regard to our own trade problems. Internally, I think, Canada has weathered the storm pretty well. I think she is entitled to be proud of the sanity and level-headedness of her people, but at certain times in our history I believe there is a duty upon Government to do a little more than probably they would do in ordinary times. In that connection I want to point out that last year the United States sold to Canada over $1,000,000,000 of their products, while we sold to the United States about $552,000,000; that is, the United States, with 110,000,000 people, sold $2 worth of goods to us, while Canada, with a population of 8,000,000, sold $1 worth to them. Our trade stands out very prominently there, because one might have expected that a country like the United States with their gigantic industrial system, their large organizations and their much greater population, would have sold their goods to us in a greater proportion than two to one, but thanks to our tariff we have held them to a reasonable basis. If we had free trade, they would sell to us every dollar's worth of goods that we wanted, and this country would go out of business industrially. The United States has adopted a different position from ours. They went after Canadian trade, but Canadians did not go after American trade. This $552,000,000 of Canadian goods was sold to the United States without Canada trying to sell them. What I means is this: the United States has in this country ninety-two consuls-general, consular agents and trade agents. For the benefit of the House I would refer to the report of the Secretary of State for External Affairs of this Government, for the year ending March 31, 1920. At page 9, appendix A, of that report you will find the names of all the American consuls in this country. They have two or three in Montreal and Toronto, several in Vancouver, and in all our cities from Halifax to Vancouver there is either an American consul-general, an American vice-consul, or an American trade agent. We have not a blessed one in the United States with its market of 110,000,000 people, while they have 92 in this country. What for? Why, to look after the interests of the United States in Canada. I repeat, we have not one to look after our trade interests in the United States. These consular agencies of the United States in this country have put themselves on a self-sustaining basis. Under their regulations every shipment of goods from this country to the United States must be accompanied by a fee for viséing the invoice. In the eight years from 1913 to 1920 there have been collected from the Canadian people in these fees on Canadian shipments to the United States the sum of $2,595,326.92. The total expenditure for Canada was $1,630,823.80. Thus, the consular agents of the United States, out of these fees from Canadian pockets in these eight years, have made a profit over all overhead charges for the maintenance and upkeep of their offices in Canada of $964,503.12.

Mr. DuTREMBLAY: Does the hon. gentleman pretend that we have no business representatives in the United States?

Mr. MORPHY: I believe so. I have not been able to find them. While we have no business agents there, Great Britain has. She has 115 trade agents in the United States, including the ambassador. What for? To look after British trade in that market, protection or no protection. Great Britain is alive, up to date; she has 115 trade agents in the United States. What did we export to the United States last year? I will give some of the exports in round figures: paper, $50,000,000; wood products and pulp, $32,000,000; shingles, $10,000,000; fish, canned and salted. $9,000,000; leather, $4,000,000; butter, $5,000,000; milk, canned and condensed, $2,000,000; flour and mill products, $4,000,000; confectionery and maple sugar, $1,500,000, most of the latter, no doubt, from the constituency of my hon. friend from Beauce; binder twine, $3,000,000.

Flax and products	$1,205,000
Wool clothing	1,000,000
Rolling mill products	1,687,000
Smelted products	4,769,000
Asbestos products	6,752,000
Abrasives	1,355,000
Fertilizers	4,624,000
Inorganic chemicals	3,134,000
Scientific and educational equipment	1,100,000

Roughly speaking, $160,000,000 is represented in these items alone, of goods partly manufactured and wholly manufactured. It seems to me that with that list alone, and it is not complete, it ought to be worth while for our Government to give close attention to the establishment in that country of an export market for Canadian goods in spite of the tariff which they will raise, because I maintain that the higher the tariff the more need there is for us to work to get an export market, and if we do not have an export market for our goods, the exchange will be against us forever. If there is anything in the economist's statement, that exchange is adjusted and regulated by exports of goods over and above the goods you import, then this is, to my mind, indubitably a case where I would want some one to show me some reason why Canada should not be represented in the United States, and endeavour to put the products of Canadian industry into that country. We should seek a greater export market, not only there, but throughout the world, and thus improve the state of Canadian exchange and give to Canada that opportunity in the markets abroad to which she is entitled if prompted by activity. But some gentlemen will say: Oh, let the manufacturer and the merchant, the men who have goods to sell, go over there and do it; it is right at their door. Well, it is about as long a journey from here to the western United States as it is to Liverpool. Liverpool is almost as close to the United States as we are to the remote parts of that country. But the question which I should like to have answered is, why Canada has no trade agents there while Britain has 115. I do not suggest that the commercial activities of Great Britain would be pursued and developed at the expense of Canada. I have never heard it suggested that this should be done, and I cannot conceive it to be so; but I will venture, without fear of successful contradiction, the statement that the British trade agent is looking especially after British trade and not Canadian; and our trade would be greatly increased if we had in the United States, commensurate with their population, a staff of trade agents from Seattle or San Francisco to New York, and down to the Gulf of Mexico, and throughout the Eastern States. If we had, in every important city of the American union, a corps of properly trained agents skilled in business methods, we should be able to extend our trade with the United States, to an extent hardly conceivable, and where we sell $552,000,000 worth of goods in a year, without special effort, the amount we could sell, if we did try through the work of trained agents, would be so great, in spite of a tariff which might be prohibitive in some respects, that it would redound to the everlasting welfare of this great Dominion. We have trade agents in Asia and Europe, so that the principle is not new. Now, what other benefit would there be from having trade agents in the United States to look after Canadian interests? In the first place, if the United States in Canada, with a consulate service numbering 92, can make nearly $1,000,000 a year more than it costs to maintain the service, surely it is not too much to say that Canada, with a service of equal strength, could make a million and a half dollars more than would pay the way of these trade agents, in view of the fact that their trade shipments are greater to Canada than ours to the United States. The trade agents would be live wires, because, of course, you would have to send none but live wires. There are hundreds of young men, commercial travellers and business men, in this country who I believe could do wonderful work if this policy were adopted. Indeed, there are thousands of them and they are of the brightest minds we have in business and trade. Let them go over. If we have an ambassador there, all well and good; but if I had my choice between an ambassador on the one hand, and a number of trade agents on the other, I would elect for the trade agents every time, and leave the ambassadorial work to the British Embassy. Let us get into the British ways of trade expansion and "go to it" as a young man would say. These trade agents located there would be active and energetic and would prevent smuggling into this country, because every invoice would have to be visé and would pass through their hands. They would also prevent any improper valuation, which is something that invariably we are up against here. It is said that the American invoices are sometimes not up to the home market value and the goods getting in at an under valuation; they call it a method of dumping. The great bulk of the United States' traders are, of course, honest, but many of them seek to gain some advantage by this process. If the invoices pass through the hands of our own trade agents they could not do it, because the agents would know the values. Besides this, a trade agent in the United States would be in the most favourable position to learn public opinion, and to know what the masses of the people were thinking. They could ascertain more quickly and more clearly what the people were thinking in a trade way in this section and that section than our Government can possibly know, located here in Ottawa. I venture to say that the American consuls in Canada to-day—the 92 of them, including the three consuls general and the vice-consuls—know more of actual conditions of trade in Canada in many sections than the Government or any branch of the Canadian people. They are on the spot and they know what is going on.

Without attempting to prolong my remarks—there are many things one could suggest—I once more want to make an appeal to the Government, in whom I have every confidence. I believe we have to-day as honest, as upright, and as capable an Administration as the public life of Canada demands. I believe it is composed of gentlemen whose honour and integrity are above reproach, and the people at large have confidence in the present Government. Feeling that way, I would just turn for a moment to the attack that has been made on the Canadian Merchant Marine. I have often felt that it was rather a remarkable position in which Canada stood, that although we produce our hundreds of millions of bushels of wheat in the West, and although we transport that wheat through Canadian territory,—and I am happy to say that it will furnish traffic for what I might call the White Elephant which honourable gentlemen across the way gave us, the national railway,—we do not ship it all through a Canadian port. I believe the western farmer can do a great deal himself. I saw the most wonderful oatmeal in the Ottawa shops made, I think, in Moosejaw. I do not see why our western farmer cannot get into the industrial business of working up his oats and his wheat and pease in greater quantities. I do not see why, out in the West they cannot take the natural resources of the country—the products of the farm, the timber, and the coal—and work them up industrially, to an extent beyond their own western needs and ship the finished products abroad —ship them over the national railways to the ports of St. John, Halifax or Montreal where these vessels ply, and let these vessels carry the products of Canada overseas and seek return cargoes. It is all very well for the hon. member for Red Deer to say, in his self sufficient way, as he said it in this House—thinking that the British seamanship is the only thing in this world—"Oh, what is the good of taking cargo one way and coming back empty?" Well, we have the vessels, we have the making of our own rates, we are independent of competition. We have a merchant marine as well as a national railway the property of the people of Canada. If we give a fair trial to these great public enterprises, both the outcome of the war, if we follow the principles that I have enunciated, if we insist that the products of Canada shall be transported over the national railway as far as possible and also over the Canadian Pacific Railway, another great national undertaking, although not owned by the people, and if we load these products at our ocean ports into Canadian vessels, and transport them abroad to the countries of consumption, we will not only build up a great trade for Canada but we will ensure for our merchant marine return cargoes.

To that end the appointment of trade agents may be necessary, and I would double, treble and quadruple the number of trade agents in England unless somebody can show me some good reason why we should not do it. I do not think I have ever noticed England refusing to compete with the industry of Canada. Her products of all kinds enter Canada, and she would take no objection to the brightest jewel in the Crown invading the mother land and endeavouring to get return cargoes. To me the shipping of this country is of great consequence. I believe in standing for Canada first in all those things that have sprung from and are indigenous to the soil of this country. Will hon. gentlemen opposite for the sake of a carping criticism play the game of little Canadians in endeavouring to belittle the merchant marine of Canada? It is something that they helped to build, they were in favour of building it, and it will some day be of great advantage to the western prairies; because that merchant marine would not be on the ocean merely, it will be on the great lakes taking the cargoes of grain from Port Arthur and Fort William; and when ultimately the Welland canal is finished and the other canals are in good shape it will be taking out of the West in Canadian bottoms the golden harvests of the West at the cheapest rate that will ever be maintained by any service that this country can give. If hon. members want to play the game of trying to make political capital of the merchant marine they will have to reckon with the people.

What I have outlined suggests a great idea to the realization of which we can look forward. I am not a pessimist. I believe that when we Canadians have the power we should have the courage, after looking carefully into these things, to go full steam ahead at this time. At this crucial period, the critical turning point in Canada's history, the burden of debt will not be such a bug-a-boo if men on both sides of this House will sink the littleness of Canadian political life and rise up determined to make the industrial life of Quebec strong, to make the industrial life of Ontario strong, to make the fisheries of the Maritime Provinces strong, and develop the coal and timber wealth of the far West and the great resources of the prairies. We have to do this ourselves. We are living beside a nation that will not do it for us, except to our disadvantage and for their great advantage. We must therefore in our national development be independent of the whole world. So let us put our hands to the plough and not turn back.

Mr. J. ALFRED LEDUC (Westmount-St. Henry): I deem it my duty on rising to congratulate the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat (Mr. Morphy) on the thoroughly efficient manner in which he extolled the Government's action and policy. I am not at all surprised at the hon. gentlemen's eulogy; I think he still hopes to enter the Cabinet in which there are yet "rooms to let." I imagine his object in making so lengthly a speech must have been to qualify himself for a portfolio.

The hon. member for North Perth dwelt on the importance of having Canada represented by trade agents in the United States. This policy was first advocated by a former member for St. James, Montreal, the late Honore Gervais, who for many years favoured such a course in this House. What Canada needs at the present time is not an ambassador at Washington for ceremonial purposes but a real business man to develop trade with our great neighbour to the south.

I am certain that nobody in this chamber will refuse the Minister of Finance the admiration which he deserves for his courage in the presentation of such a poor Budget. For my part, I do not deny him my warmest sympathy in the thankless task which he had in explaining to the country the lamentable state of affairs for which the present Government is responsible.

Lamentable, it is in reality, Mr. Speaker, for to the enormous debt under which the tax-payer is already overburdened, one must add the trifle of over one hundred million dollars for this year, despite the promises made last year by the Minister of Finance that the national debt would be reduced.

I doubt very much if, when he made this consoling promise, the Minister of Finance had taken the time to measure the incompetance of the Government into which he was invited to enter. Had he done so he would have maintained a prudent silence, instead of blaming inwardly those who drew him into this chaos where now hs finds himself with his unfortunate though honourable colleagues.

How far are we, Mr. Speaker, from those blessed times when, after twelve months of fruitful administration, the honourable member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), then Minister of Finance of the Liberal Government, unrolled before the amazed eyes of the country the spectacle of the prosperity existing from one end of the country to the other, the spectacle of peace and concord reigning among employers and employees. How far we are, Mr. Speaker, from that happy time when we saw every factory in the country smoking night and day and where we saw our dear Canada advancing by giant strides towards her destiny, under the vigorous impulsion of our ever to be regretted chief, the right hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

To destroy this magnificent work ten years have sufficed, Mr. Speaker, of a government born in 1911 of the alliance, justly called immoral, of the Tories with a handful of political adventurers disguised as Nationalists, wrecks of the two parties who were thrown on the reefs of the indignation of their compatriots.

I can quite understand, Mr. Speaker, that the right honourable predecessor of the present Prime Minister, oppressed with a sense of discouragement and fright at the sight of the ruins of his party, might have wished to throw on the shoulders of the right honourable member for Portage-la-Prairie the weight of the universal repro-bation under which the Canadian electorate proposes to smother the present Government at the next general elections; for, it would be just that the right hon. Prime Minister, principal author of these fatal politics, should behold their disastrous consequences.

If now, Mr. Speaker, we cast a glance at the state of our finances, we are amazed to find that not only has our debt not diminished, but it has increased, as I indicated a moment ago, to the truly colossal sum of two billion three hundred and fifty millions; and if we seek the cause of this increase, we find it in the foolish policies of the Government, which, since 1911, has clung to power by means of all possible concessions;—policies, foolish and disastrous, I repeat, chiefly in three cases: An imprudently immoderate participation in the European war, costing us the loss of millions and millions of dollars, which otherwise would be available now; absurd railway policies which have this year absorbed one hundred and thirteen millions of dollars; and, finally, unlimited waste, added to the improvidence of a Government which has done nothing to guard us against the labour crisis at present raging throughout the country, the reverberations of which are shaking the economical structure of the nation.

I was in favour, Mr. Speaker, of reasonable and limited participation in the European war, but I absolutely disapprove of the manner in which the Government conducted it. Instead of enriching certain of their favourites with millions through large war contracts, why did they not take over, for instance, the control of the manufacture of munitions, even if it were necessary, as in the case of the erection of this Parliament building, for example, to allow a percentage of reasonable profit to the different firms having charge of the manufacture of munitions for the account of the Canadian Government, thus saving to the state millions which were scandalously wasted to gorge the pockets of a few personages in the good graces of the Government.

The right hon. the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, has a right to be pleased with his work—he, who, in 1915, swore to spend up to the last cent of the treasury, even if it was necessary to bring the country into bankruptcy. I spoke a little while ago of the railway policy of the Government. It is not surprising to us on this side of the House that the country is facing disaster; from the moment, when, by a turn of the hand, the right hon. chief of the Government, instead of asking the administrators of the private railways the secret of good direction, bought the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk, it was to be foreseen that the same disorder, the same contempt for the safeguard of the money of the Canadian people, the same wild dance of dollars would bring us rapidly to the regrettable situation in which we find ourselves to-day, by the accumulation of annual deficits. But, how to get out of this mix-up, Mr. Speaker? I would suggest to the right hon. the Prime Minister that this should be put before the committee appointed to consider these questions, and the suggestions made by that capable business man, Lord Shaughnessy, should be taken into serious consideration.

I may quote, Mr. Speaker, an article from the Financial Times of January 29 last on a speech delivered by Sir Herbert Holt at the annual meeting of the Royal Bank of Canada, which reads as follows:

"Government control has practically disappeared during the year just past—wheat, paper and sugar being the commodities to be freed from regulation. Government ownership of transportation systems has developed. Without any advantage to the public in efficiency or rates, the operation of our national railways during the past twelve months has resulted in a loss which will probably more than absorb the amounts collected on excess profits and income taxes for the year 1919. Unless Government methods of operation are more efficient in this country than they have been in others, tax payers in Canada may find the maintenance of their railroads and fleet more expensive than pension charges and other legacies of the war combined."

These few sentences constitute one of the most graphic denunciations of the evils of government ownership it has been our privilege to read in a long time. Time was when the mention of millions almost took our breath away. A millionaire was as well worth seeing as a crowned head. It was not necessary to go beyond millions to express the superlative of all things. The war ruined our perspective. We began to talk of millions as though they were merely thousands. It is no longer possible to waken the Canadian public to a realization of what government operation of railways may cost by expressing it in figures. What if it does cost $50,000,000 or $75,000,000 per annum? The Finance Minister will borrow it or dig it up in some manner. The cost does not seem to come home to us. We will pay it along with other costs and grouch about our heavy taxation and let the government continue to extend it field of operations. We will ask it to loan us more money to bulid houses with and to finance other operations or interfere in other matters of business which we should be attending to ourselves and which will only result in further deficits and increased taxation.

President Holt of the Royal Bank, however, avoids much reference to figures. Instead, he tells us that government operation of our railways will probably result in a loss which will exceed the governmental revenue from excess profits and income taxes. Could anything bring this matter home to us in more vivid manner? The whole business world denounces the excess profits tax and practically everyone who pays an income tax does so with rage in his heart against the German junker who is supposed to have laid him under the levy.

But, here, in Canada, and altogether independent of the war, is a levy which we, as good democrats and as electors with the freedom of the ballot, have placed upon ourselves. The excess profits tax and the income tax go to wipe out the annual deficit of our governmental system of railways. Nay, the situation is yet worse. This whole burden of increased tatxation which we labor under promises to go finally but to wipe out the annual loss incurred in the operation of our railways. We are not paying the interest on our war bill with it at all, we are not even paying pensions—we are just breaking even—on governmental operation of our railways. Presumably this means we will have to tax ourselves all over againt to pay for the war. Truly it is a condition of affairs of which we have little reason to feel proud.

As long as the Government persists in its nefarious policy of helping certain gangs of financiers—if I may use the expression, Mr. Speaker—interested in the maladministration of the railways, by administering them in the worst possible manner, the Canadian people must hold themselves ready to meet the growing deficits from year to year.

I have been asking myself, Mr. Speaker, how the Minister of Finance could make up his Budget this year without borrowing. There remains to him, it is true, the imposition of new taxes. As to that, the Canadian people would have little to say if the Government would divide the burden equitably and proportionately to the resources of each class and of each individual. I understand that again this year the Government is following the detestable custom it followed during the war, when it placed its rapacious hand on the shoulder of the small contributor, the man who had brought up a large family only to make food for cannon, while it exempted those who rested comfortably at the fireside and amassed exorbitant profits. Following this policy, the Government has lifted the tax on luxuries, which, to my mind, was a just tax. It has also abolished the tax on profits, thus lightening the burden of the rich, very often with few if any children, and shifting it to the poor, frequently the supporters of large families. Further, the only capital which should have been spared —the human capital furnished by these numerous families and which in the end, constitutes the wealth of the nation—was again this year particularly hit for the benefit of capial held in the hands of a minority which compromises by its monopoly the equilibrium of the country.

I cannot, Mr. Speaker, let this occasion pass without saying a few words about the high cost of living, which has regularly increased every year under the placid eyes of the Government—a Government more occupied in conducting throughout the country a campaign of racial hate to ensure its return to power than in giving attention to matters of this kind. While the humble labourer was asking himself how he was going to meet the needs of his family, the profiteers and monopolists of all kinds were occupying themselves in artificially raising the cost of living and hastening to protect their fortunes by buying up nearly a billion and a half of Victory bonds—free from taxes through the imprudence of the Government—and openly defying the Board of Commerce, the institution supposed to be designed to regulate their profits. Mr. Speaker, if I were to enumerate all the errors accumulated by the incompetence of the Government during the time it has had charge of the country's affairs it would be necessary for me to retain the attention of this chamber for a much longer time than I intend to occupy.

May I be allowed, Mr. Speaker, to protest in advance in the most vehement manner possible against any attempt to change anything which touches the actual state of our foreign relations or to involve us in new military or naval expenses outside of our country without the unanimous consent of this House? I allude to the next Imperial Conference, in which the Government has given itself carte blanche to take part. Too often our autonomy has been sacrificed at these Imperial conferences and heavy burdens imposed upon us under the pretext of our being admitted to the rank of sister nation. Too long the Imperial statesmen have tired our ears and fascinated our eyes with the words "equality" and "sister nation", while they sacrificed our children, exploited our finances and endangered our liberty. Before we become embroiled to our great detriment in Imperial affairs, let us remember that our country is Canada and that no others than Canadians can ensure her prosperity and future.

I see the hon. Minister of Finance in his seat, although I know he is there not specially to listen to me, but to fulfil his duty. I would like to ask him if he has ever considered the advisability of reducing the income tax upon the heads of large families. Has he ever put to himself this question: Suppose I were the father of a family of seven or eight children, my income is $3,000, and I am exempted on $2,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend must know that if his income was $3,000 and he had seven or eight children, he would be exempt from taxation on $2,000 and on $200 for each child, so that he would have nothing to pay.

Mr. LEDUC: My point is this: the education of many children is continued after the age of eighteen. I have never seen a law student attending college who was under eighteen years of age. For my part I have seven children at college, all over the age of eighteen, and I am trying to do the best I can to educate them. A boy or girl who is going to school should be called a child, for that matter; he is a child so long as he is maintained by his parents. I ask you gentlemen who are lawyers how much money you brought home before you were twenty-five years of age.

Mr. McMASTER: Not much.

Mr. LEDUC: I do not think many hon. members who are lawyers brought home any money before they were twenty-five years of age. I would ask the minister to consider this question and see whether he cannot take that burden off the shoulders of parents. The amount by which the revenue would be reduced, if the minister were to adopt this suggestion of mine, would not be very great, because not many who have large families are rich.

In conclusion, I may say that, in accordance with the brief remarks that I have made this evening, I am going to vote for the amendment moved by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding).

Mr. A. M. DECHENE (Montmagny) (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, the hon. minister of Finance seems to be happy since he has given us the result of his burning the midnight oil to impose the financial condition of Canada, but the people were disagreeably surprised at his Budget speech. In fact, what is there in that statement to show his desire to dress the wounds of the Canadian consumer and to alleviate the heavy burdens weighing on his shoulders? Almost nothing, and if the hon. minister has worked hard during the first months of the session, it was surely not for the purpose of finding a fairer or most efficient way of portioning out the taxes from which we have so much to suffer at this time. The remedy which he has found—and that remedy is always the Tory party's remedy—consists in enabling as much as possible the great business corporations to pocket big dividends; it consists in not disturbing the big financiers who control those corporations, dispensing them with making a report on their enormous revenues. A much simpler mean was found: They increased the tax on retail sales from 2 to 3 per cent. This tax, which was already 2 per 100, has been increased by 50 per 100 of its original figure, doubling, by the very fact, the burden imposed upon the Canadian consumer. Why? Simply in order to enable the great financial corporations to easily overcome the very serious crisis now affecting every country in the world, and especially to make the most of the good will of those people with respect to the coming election.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh! Oh!

Mr. DECHENE: I hear some hon. member say: Oh! Oh! May I be permitted to remark that the whole country has gathered from the stump speech delivered by the Prime Minister the other day, that we are to have at an early date an election, and a general election at that, thank God—and that it was necessary to submit to the people, by all means, a series of small arguments, since there were no serious ones to submit.

The Prime Minister's speech, which laste for two hours, is far from being what could be expected from a statesman. To my mind, it was a cross-road politician's speech. It was very easy for that hon. gentleman to tell our colleagues of the Agrarian party: "Why did you not come forward with your tariff, with your fiscal policy?" It was easy also for him to say to the hon. leader of the Opposition: "Why did you not include in your amendment all your policy concerning the tariff?

Mr. Speaker, to blame an opponent is an easy thing to do, but while the Prime Minister had the floor, while his Minister of Finance was preparing the Budget during the two months, why did he fail to state his own permanent fiscal policy or why was it not announced in the Budget; it was such an easy thing to do? But the hon. gentleman drew the curtain over his own policy, he buried the great inquiry which his beloved colleague made through the country. However, he was perfectly in a position to bring a permanent fiscal policy forward.

Why then has he done so? Was it because of lack of that master-mindedness which one expects to find in a Canadian Prime Minister? Is he to be classed, in spite of his youth, among the weakest of our Prime ministers? The public truly have the right to know this fact, and we on this side of the House, who have heard the great speech he delivered the other day are quite convinced that it is so.

The hon. Minister of Finance told us recently that he had abolished the war profits tax, because, said he, large companies shall not have any more immense profits and shall not pay another cent. But you are quite aware that these large companies have divided up their capital in three or four parts and that instead of paying any dividends on a share which was originally worth $100 or $200, the apparent value of these shares has been raised to four or five hundred dollars. Are you not witnesses that these large companies—they are friends of the Government, you may say—have changed their capital stock, that they have quadrupled, quintupled this capital, this being done, the dividend must also be quintupled. It is not surprising therefore that it is as much as large companies can do to pay their dividends or even to pay a part of their profits to the public treasury. The hon. minister had it in his power to prevent these large companies from subdividing their stock. Why has he not done so? If he had acted thus he might have obliged these gentlemen, his friends, to pay into the public treasury a part of the wealth they have extorted from the public during the war; but he could not do so, because they were his friends and he had to protect them. Therefore the Minister of Finance is to blame if the Government's friends are not paying the taxes as they should.

The hon. member from Neepawa (Mr. Davis) remarked the other day that while taxes had been abolished for large companies, nothing had been done to amend the income tax so far as smaller companies were concerned. It is these small companies in the province of Quebec and the western provinces which usually manufacture the agricultural implements which our farmers need, and these small companies which did not come under the war profits tax, had to pay the income tax. By leaving the income tax such as it is, these small companies which are capitalized at less than $25,000, are still subject to a tax. An exemption of $2,000 is allowed on their capital, and any amount in excess of this shall be taxed 10 per cent; as in the past. Yet, they are forced to sell their products at 3 per cent like the others. This makes it impossible for the smaller companies to continue their business and it places them almost on the verge of bankruptcy. It is an indirect way of doing away with the small competitor, he who very often succeeds in making the large companies, who are friends of the Government, reduce their prices. The hon. Minister of Finance has veiled these details in the Budget. It is the consumer who, in the end will have to pay; it is he who shall have to meet the large deficits of this Government which the people did not want, this Government which has proclaimed itself "the country's Government" and which, however hard the Opposition has tried, it has not been able to bring them to their senses and have them bring on the elections.

I had the pleasure the other day to hear the hon. Minister of Marine (Mr. Ballantyne) claim the candidate from Yamaska as his worthy adopted son, also as that of his leader, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Meighen). Now that the child has been recognized, that he is to be christened —for he is in the county of Yamaska to be christened—I shall take the liberty of asking a question: Who are the ministers who are entitled to vote in the county of Yamaska? Could the hon. Minister of Justice tell me if there are any? Could the hon. Minister of Marine tell me if there are any ministers who are entitled to vote in Yamaska? The hon. Minister of Marine does not wish to answer. It might be interesting to know. We might then know, now that the hon. minister has accepted the son, who is to show him the way in the county of Yamaska? According to the law, all ministers must reside in Ottawa; yet there is a minister who has found means of registering in Yamaska so that he as well as his own family, may cast a vote in that county. Could the Government allow a minister, according to the law, to vote in Yamaska, when he has lived in the city of Ottawa since 1911? The Postmaster General (Mr. Blondin) has found out that he could vote in that county, as well as could all his family.

I have in my possesion for the personal edification of my hon. friend and to replace the answer which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries refused to give me, the proof that the Postmaster General intends to vote in the constituency of Yamaska. One father has owned up to the child, but the other supposed father—when one is a putative father, there may be several—will try to mark out the way for him. In the parish of St. Francois-du-Lac, there appears on the electoral list the name of the Hon. P. E. Blondin, senator, Postmaster General, and it has been put there on the special request of the minister himself. Although he is a resident of the city of Ottawa, this gentleman's name has been inscribed on the electoral list of the parish of St. Francois-du-Lac. Not satisfied with his name being placed on the list he has seen that the name of Madam P. E. Blondin be added to the electoral list. Then, the hon. minister said to himself: Why should not the name of my sister-in-law be added also? And the name of Miss E. Brisson, sister-in-law of the hon. Postmaster General has been added on the electoral list of the parish of St. Francois-du-Lac, notwithstanding the fact that she lives in the city of Ottawa. Miss Marie Brisson too, another sister-in-law of the hon. minister has found a way, thanks probably to her charming brother-in-law, to obtain for herself the right to vote in the constituency of Yamaska, although she resides in Ottawa. Arthur Brisson, civil engineer—a rather interesting thing for his friends in the Mines Branch—also an official of the State residing in Ottawa, found it possible to have a right to vote in the same county. Moreover, the name of Miss Josephine Blondin, a cousin of the hon. Postmaster General, now employed as a stenographer for the Federal Government in Ottawa, figures also on the electoral list of St. Francois-du-Lac, making in all six members of the Blondin family, all residents of Ottawa, who have a right to vote in the constituency of Yamaska. Therefore, this is why I have asked the hon. Minister of Justice as well as the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who fortunately understand very well the French language, if to their knowledge some of their colleagues had the right of vote in the county of Yamaska. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries discovered the candidate and has claimed him. Well, the Postmaster General for his own part will despatch him by mail on May the 28th, but, Sir, to the dead-letter branch. When one realizes the ways and means taken by the members of this Government in order to assure the election of their candidates and how they can twist the law in view of securing a right to vote in a constituency where they do not reside and where they simply go for an automobile tour during the summer, have we not the right to ask you to what excess you, as well as your colleagues are ready to descend in view of securing votes?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I will remind the hon. member that he must address his remarks to the Chair and not to the hon. ministers.

Mr. DECHENE: I am glad to bow to your ruling, Mr. Chairman, and I will follow it henceforth. I thought may be those remarks were supposed to interest the hon. minister much more than yourself, Mr. Chairman, and I tried to give them some direct information, without having to communicate them through you; at any rate, I will sin no more. Besides the electors from Yamaska will give them the latest news. The Postmaster General will come back to his department where he will take care of his dead letters. It would perhaps be better for him to go there in the broad daylight instead of in the darkness of night and to avoid the by-ways. The whole population of Montreal district is aware of those facts and you may rest assured, gentlemen, that it is not so easy to humbug the people of Yamaska. There is a song of Musset which says:

"Où le père a passé, passera bien l'enfant."

I believe that Musset under that circumstance meant to speak of the real father. But the putative child does not always pass where the supposed father has passed. Now, I desire to make a few remarks concerning the way the hon. Minister of Finance deals with the railways' deficits. I believe that the best way for my hon. friend to cover these deficits of our Canadian National railways is to remain silent on that score. In the long run it is "Baptiste" that pays. Do you want an illustration, gentlemen, about the bad administration of the national railways?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I will remind the hon. member once again that he is speaking in the House of Commons and that he must address the Chair.

Mr. DECHENE: The Department of Railways is administered in such a way that the present state of things is of evil omen for the country. The Government, not satisfied with having dragged the Canadian Northern Railway System to bankruptcy, has taken into its service the leading officials of that railway. How could we expect, Mr. Speaker, that the administration of this road would sustain many changes at the hands of these people?

I claim that it is not so, and we become absolutely sure of it when we see what is going on around us. Let me specially draw your attention, for instance, to the manner in which the express companies are being dealt with. There are two great express companies in this country: the Dominion Express, which is the sole property of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the Canadian Express, which belongs to the Government. As you follow the Intercolonial from Montreal along to St. Rosalie, Drummondville, Lévis, Montmagny, Rivière du Loup up to Rimouski, you will notice a most extraordinary state of things. We have here a Government who accepted to take over a company with a capital of $1,000,000 and which has $4,000,000 of debentures on the market. That makes a capital of $5,000,000. In every station of the Intercolonial the agent of the Dominion Express is the station master who is in the employ of the Government, while our own company, the Canadian Express, must seek refuge outside of the station. Who has to suffer for this? Who has to pay for the transfer of the goods from the station to the offices? It is the people, it is the company itself. Here is a striking example: In the town of Montmagny, which has a population of 5,000, both companies are represented. The station agent of the Canadian National railways is the representative of the Dominion Express, and the latter's packages are received in the offices of the station agent. Now, what is being done with regard to the Canadian Express? The goods are left on the platform of the station and the company has to pay somebody to bring them over to the offices which it had to rent in the town, and also to deliver them to the people at the same rate as the Dominion Express. It means that in the town of Montmagny alone, the Canadian Express is losing every year $500 or $600, which it could save, if conditions were reversed. Why should not the Canadian Express, which is our own company, be represented at the station? Why do they not compel the Dominion Express to transfer its offices elsewhere and to pay for the carriage of its goods? In that way we could get our full revenue and we would be able to save millions on the whole system if the Government would only manage the roads in the proper way. But they don't want to do it; they gave the Canadian Pacific privileges which they do not care to take away from that company.

One of the hon. members opposite, speaking on behalf of the manufacturers, said that if we wanted to reduce our deficits and be able to pay off our debts, we should encourage our industries and buy "made in Canada" goods. Do you know, Sir, who originated this war-cry and who first urged upon the people of Canada to buy Canadian-made goods in preference to the imported ones? It is the manufacturer himself. If we, the consumers, must buy Canadian goods, we have a right to know whether the manufacturers are themselves setting the example in patronizing Canadian industries and Canadian financial undertakings and also in buying as much as possible of their materials in Canada. To illustrate my thought and to show that these people are not quite the patriots they would like us to believe they are, I made inquiries as to how much insurance, either against fire, or employer's liabilities, or as security bonds, they were taking in the various Canadian companies, and also how much they were taking in British and foreign firms. In 1919, fire insurance policies in Canada amounted to $40,031,474. Out of that sum, the Canadian companies only held $6,415,838; the British companies, $20,377,871, and foreign firms, $13,237,765. Therefore, out of $40,000,000 worth of insurance carried in this country, only six millions were placed with Canadian companies, and thirty-three millions were held by companies having their head office and shareholders outside of Canada. If you consider the difference between the amount collected every year as premiums and that paid out by the companies, you will realize that we are paying a tribute of some fifteen or eighteen millions to strangers every year. Now, who are the people holding the largest fire insurance policies in Canada? It is surely not the farmer nor the poor consumer who very often is not insured, it is the financial corporations. Why do they not apply to the Canadian companies to get insured? Why do they not set the example of encouraging the Canadian companies? Their support would make those companies more powerful, that money would remain in the country and the whole community would profit by it. In 1919, the respective amounts of insurance taken in the Canadian, British and foreign companies against accidents were according to order as follows: $953,103, $1,199,036 and $388,009. Why should those people not get their workingmen insured in Canadian companies, when they are so loud in their utterances to the effect that goods made in Canada should be given preference?

If you wish to see another aspect of this question, I shall give you the figures on cattle which are specially for the farmer's use. In 1919, $65,657 worth of insurance on Canadian herds was taken in Canadian companies and $32,942 in the British companies, foreign companies having done no business because they were not represented with respect to that kind of insurance, and this is to our farmer's credit. Though the figures just quoted be not very high, we see, however, that our good country people go so far, at least, as to apply those principles by favouring their fellow-citizens rather than foreigners. Mr. Chairman, if the manufacturers, who are always complaining that they are not protected as much as they should be, were willing to apply the principles which they preach, our financial situation would not be what it is to-day, the one-half of our people would not be taxed for the benefit of the other half.

The ministry in power has not the support of the people, all the by-elections went against them. They are afraid to face the storm and they put off, as much as possible, holding elections in the constituencies which are not represented in the House of Commons, and I can safely assure you that if the Government decided to do what the Prime Minister gave us to understand, the other day, that we might anticipate, the event alluded to by the Ottawa Journal this morning, the Prime Minister would take the place of the leader of the Opposition, which is rightfully his, because he should lead the opposition for a long time before he is Prime Minister.

Mr. J. E. SINCLAIR (Queen's, P.E.I.): Mr. Speaker, I do not suppose that at this late hour, I can add very much to the discussion, which has been somewhat protracted, on the subject now before the House, nor do I intend to attempt in any way to convert any hon. member into my way of thinking. However, I do rise to discharge a duty which I owe to the constituency which I have the honour to represent, and that is, to submit to this supreme forum of Canadian politics their views on the questions which are embraced in the Budget now under consideration. In doing this, I desire, at the outset, to refer to some of the unfair statements that have been made regarding the attitude and record of the Liberal party during the time they were in power from 1896 to 1911. The speeches so far delivered on the other side of the House, especially that of the right hon. gentleman who leads the Government (Mr. Meighen), have been mainly by way of comparison between the respective records of the two parties in Canada, and I think that the speech of the Prime Minister in particular was anything but fair in its view of the Liberal party's achievements. The right hon. gentleman did not make any reference to that party's record which explained the whole truth. Now, in order that I may make my remarks all the more clear, I want to refer to the speech which the right hon. gentleman delivered one year ago, as it will be found in Hansard at page 2698 of the revised edition. In referring to the Fielding tariff; the right hon. gentleman said:

> The last tariff under the Conservative Government—because the scale had been reduced very much by the Conservative Government in the revision of 1894—gave an average percentage of duty on dutiable goods (and these articles in effect remained the same) of 29.96 per cent. That was the tariff which went out of effect in 1897 when the Fielding tariff came in. The hon. gentleman gave us a tariff in which the percentage, instead of being 29.96 was 29.22, or the great reduction of .74 per cent. That is precisely the reduction that was made, and that I suppose is all the hon. gentleman had to do to bring the tariff out of the Tory category and make it in keeping with the "historic" principles of Liberalism. The next year the percentage was 28.65. It remained around there till 1907. In 1908 it was increased, and in 1909 it was further increased. It was increased, indeed, as much in 1909 as is was diminished in 1897. I do not know whether that was apostacy from the principles of Liberalism in 1909, but there was the same raise in 1909 as there was reduction in 1897, and in neither year was there anything like the change that was made by way of reduction by the Minister of Finance in connection with the revision that preceded it in 1894—nothing to compare with it in any degree and nothing to compare, in the whole fifteen years, during which the responsibility was upon the Liberal Government, with the reduction that is embodied in the Budget which we are debating to-day or even in the Budget we were debating last year. The reduction to-day is forty times greater than theirs.

Now, Sir, I want to submit to the House the method of comparison that was adopted by the Prime Minister when he took the average percentage of duty on dutiable goods. In calculating the rate of duty and comparing the importations on that scale during the respective periods in which the two parties were in power, you do not give credit to the party who transferred from the dutiable to the free list several articles of import. This method gives only one half of the truth. When we figure the duty on dutiable goods in 1897 and compare it with the duty on dutiable goods in the year 1907, we make a comparison that is not fair to the party that was in power during that period, because it does not give credit in respect of the articles that were removed from the dutiable to the free list. If we take those artitcles into consideration we find that during the period the Liberal Government were in power, they removed over 122 items in the customs tariff, which is composed of 800 items, from the dutiable to the free list. It is not necessary for me to enumerate these articles, but I cite this fact because the comparison of averages is about the only real calculation that was given by any of the speakers on the other side to justify the allegation made in the House and in the country that the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), who has moved the amendment now before the House, during his term of office, followed a protectionist policy. This method of calculating on the basis of averages is about the only mathematitcal argument which has been advanced on the other side as a ground for attack on the member for Shelburne and Queen's. Now, if we want to make a fair comparison of the rates of duty, and give to each party the fair share of credit to which it may be entitled, we must take into account the articles that have been transferred from the dutiable to the free list. In order to illustrate my point, I desire to submit a comparative table to demonstrate how the method adopted by hon. gentlemen opposite, of comparing the records of the two parties, may be deceptive. Let me submit the following comparative table of imaginary imports in a given year:

Comparative table of rates of duty on imaginary imports in a given year

Articles	Value	Duty collected	Rate of duty per cent
Wool	$ 500,000	$150,000	30
Cottons	300,000	90,000	30
Agricultural implements	250,000	75,000	30
Leather and manufactures thereof	400,000	120,000	30
Steel and manufactures thereof	500,000	150,000	30
Total	$1,950,000	$585,000	30

Average percentage of duty on dutiable goods, 30 per cent.

Average percentage of duty on total imports, 30 per cent.

Now I take another table of the same articles at the same valuation for the next year:

Articles	Value	Duty collected	Rate of duty per cent
Wool	$ 500,000	$150,000	30
Cottons	300,000	Nil	Free
Agricultural implements	250,000	Nil	Free
Leather and manufactures thereof	400,000	120,000	30
Steel and manufactures thereof	500,000	150,000	30
Total	$1,950,000	$420,000	22.1

Average percentage of duty on dutiable goods, 30 per cent.

Average percentage of duty on total imports, 22.1 per cent.

Now if I followed the method that was followed by the Prime Minister, it would be fair for me to say that the rate of duty on dutiable goods was the same in both cases, but would that be a fair method of comparing the two? I submit that it is an unfair way to compare the record of one party as against another by giving only one-half of the story, as was done by the Prime Minister last year in this particular case.

There is another point to which I wish to draw attention. In his statement last year the right hon. the Prime Minister referred to the lowest rate of duty under the Liberal regime as being 28.56 per cent. In his speech a few days ago, he used the following words, referring to the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's:

When he went out of power the tariff averaged 26.7 per cent.

Evidently the right hon. gentleman has revised some of his figures of last year.

Mr. STEVENS: As the Prime Minister is not here, perhaps my hon. friend—

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens P.E.I.): As the hon. member for Vancouver has not spoken in this debate, he will have a chance later on. He can take a note of what I say.

Mr. STEVENS: What the Prime Minister stated was that 28.65 was the average duty in the 15 years of the Liberal regime, and 26.7 per cent the lowest rate of duty or the duty at the time the Liberal Government went out of office.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queen's P.E.I.): The hon. gentleman has just told us that 28.65 per cent was the average duty in the 15 years of the Liberal regime. The words that were used by the Prime Minister are these, as will be seen by Hansard of last year:

The next year the percentage was 28.65.

There is no average for fifteen years about that. It is the percentage for the year. Therefore, I cannot accept the explanation given by the hon. member for Vancouver. Then the right hon. gentleman stated in this debate a day or so ago, referring to the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's:

When he went out of power the tariff averaged 26.7 per cent.

Mr. STEVENS: For that year.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queen's, P.E.I.): That is correct, not for the whole fifteen years, as stated by the hon. member.

Mr. STEVENS: I said 26.7 was the duty at the time the Liberal Government went out of power.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queen's, P.E.I.): I have shown by the tables I have read how an unfair impression may be conveyed by giving the average showing averages by range of duty on dutiable goods.

Let me give another illustration. Take the rate of duty on dutiable goods for the year 1920. The amount of dutiable goods imported in that year was $693,655,165, and the duty collected was $187,524,181.77, or an average on dutiable goods of 27.32 per cent. In his speech a few days ago the right hon. the Prime Minister stated:

The tariff that he (Mr. Fielding) left at that figure in the fiscal year that has just passed averages precisely 21.2 per cent.

So, Sir, the tariff in 1920 was 27.32 per cent on dutiable goods, and for the year just closed, according to the figures given by the Prime Minister, 21.2 per cent. One might infer from the argument of the right hon. the Prime Minister with regard to fiscal changes under the Liberal regime that the tariff brought down by the Budget of last year was very much lower than it had been previous to that time; but that is not the case. So the method of argument that was followed by the Prime Minister is not a correct method. It does not show the true comparison with regard to the tariff, and I submit to the House and the country that the only correct way, if you are going to take averages, is to take the average of imports and the duty collected thereon.

Let me show what the average customs tariff on imports of dutiable and free goods entering Canada for home consumption has been since 1896.

1899	16.70
1900	15.98
1901	16.06
1904	16.28
1905	16.04
1907	16.07
1908	16.27
1909	16.11
1910	16.24
1911	15.87
1912	16.00
1913	17.03
1914	16.91
1915	17.39
1916	20.47
1917	17.46
1918	16.79

The average percentage of duty for the fifteen years under the Liberal rule was 16.29, and the average under the eight years of Conservative rule 17.41. This table is given in page 13 of the report of the Customs Department for the year 1919-1920. It shows that there was a reduction, under Liberal rule, of 2.41 per cent on the whole amount of dutiable and free goods, and that under Conservative rule, from 1911 to 1920, there was an increase of 1.74 per cent. Now, sir, in the face of these figures in the blue book how can the Prime Minister justify the statement that the tariff reduction to-day is forty times greater than it was under Liberal rule. It is absurd. Further than that, the Liberal government in 1911 entered into an agreement know as the reciprocity Pact, by which many more items would have been added to the free list. I find on looking over the returns that during the Liberal rule there were 122 items added to that list and only 18 items added during the Conservative regime. The fact of the matter is that in the campaign of 1911 such a sentiment was aroused in the country that it was impossible for any Government to refuse to add those items to the list which were placed there during the last ten years. A feeling of resentment was displayed by a great many of the people when they found that the reciprocity agreement had been defeated at the polls; and a large percentage of the adverse vote were cast by those who supported the Conservative party at that time. The feeling if disappointment was so strong, and the public sentiment so pronounced, that the Government were obliged to add the items in question to the free list.

In the province from which I come the tariff question is a very live issue. It is not satisfactory to the people of Eastern Canada to hear the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance say that we can afford to wait and see what is to be done in the United States before we undertake tariff revision in this country. That is not a policy that will make for good under the present circumstances. Canada being the smaller country, we cannot afford to pursue a policy of retaliation in regard to the United States tariff. We must, if possible, keep in touch with our good friends in the United States. There is a sentiment in that country, as well as in Canada, that favours a moderate tariff, a lower tariff, a tariff for revenue only rather than a high protective tariff. In support of that statement let me quote the words which were uttered by the late President of the United States when he vetoed the Fordney Bill. On that occasion Mr. Wilson said:

> I do not believe that the sober judgment of the masses of the people of the nation, or even of the special class whose interests are immediately affected by this measure, will sanction a return, especially in view of conditions which lend even less justification for such action, to a policy of legislation for selfish interests which will foster monopoly and increase the disposition to look upon the Government as an instrument for private gain instead of an interest for the promotion of the general well-being.

He said further:

> It is obvious that for the commodities, except sugar and wool mentioned in the measure which make up the greater part of our agricultural international trade, the imports can have little or no effect on the prices of the domestic products.
> This is strikingly true of such commodities as wheat and corn. The imports of wheat have come mainly from Canada and Argentina and have not competed with the domestic crop. Rather they have supplemented it.

That expression of sentiment by the President of the United States is supported by a great many people in that country, and if we in Canada adopt a policy of "wait and see," or of retaliation, in response to the tariff that may be imposed by the high protectionists at Washington, we cannot expect to be able to negotiate trade arrangements, as between the two countries, that will be favourable to us. We, as the smaller nation, stand to lose in the event of high tariffs being brought into operation between Canada and the United States. In Eastern Canada a condition exists which is more extreme than has been experienced for many years. In our cellars we have a crop of potatoes that it was impossible to move entirely last fall —our communications with the mainland were not good—and to-day we have two million bushels stored that are not worth anything. It is quite true that we did not this year enjoy a market in the eastern states. Speaking generally, however, and taking the average of one year with another, we have always had a market in the eastern states for our surplus stock of potatoes—potatoes grown in Eastern Canada but not needed there for consumption. We now have facilities for moving these products down the seaboard to the Atlantic ports; and it looks as though we might, in the very near future, have a very cheap method of transportation by water, because rates are coming down every day and competition is becoming keener between the water carriers. It is therefore to our advantage to have an open market in the United States for our products. In view of the contemplated tariff legislation in the United States are we going to make conditions better by resorting to retaliatory measures? No, the results will be much worse for the Canadian consumer and there will be no advantage for the Canadian producer. Because, as I see it, and I think I am correct, the American market of 120 millions of people controls the price as between that country and Canada. The proportionately small amount that we export to the United States makes no difference to the price in that country. On the other hand, if they put up a tariff to keep our products out of the American market and send their low-grade goods, —of which their surplus in food products largely consists—into Canada, they can demoralize the market in this country. That is, as regards low grade goods. In products of the higher standard we can compete with them in the open market because the quality of what we have to sell is equal, if not superior, to theirs. Under favourable conditions we can obtain a market in the United States for our eastern products at a comparatively small expenditure; and the people of Central Canada can trade with their neighbours across the international boundary line much in the same way. But the higher the tariff is made the worse it will be for the people of Eastern Canada, they are the ones that will suffer.

Another product that we are finding an excellent market for in the United States, ever since the duty was removed is eggs. In the last few years the farmers in Eastern Canada have been shipping their fresh eggs to the United States, and have built up a splendid trade with that country. The success achieved in that way has done a good deal to encourage the egg trade.

The farmers have been encouraged to improve the quality of their output and today the quality of the eggs produced in Eastern Canada compares favourably to the eggs produced in any other part of Canada, if indeed it is not superior. On the other hand ten years ago the quality of that product was at an extremely low level. These facts tend to substantiate the statement I make that our people in the East will benefit, and have benefited, by a low tariff with the United States, especially in the matter of food products. And if we pursue a policy of retaliation against their increased tariff, without making any approach to them, we cannot expect anying else but a tariff war between the two countries.

I wish also, Sir, to make reference to a local matter that is closely related to the last subject, and that is the method of getting our goods to market. I do not wish to bring local issues too much into this debate, but it is necessary from the standpoint of attending to every portion of the country that where grievances exist, whether it be in the east or in the west or in the centre, those grievances should be adjusted, otherwise we cannot expect to keep our country united and present a solid front in the markets of the world. We have in Prince Edward Island a condition that has accentuated the potato situation as I have described it, and that is the method of transportation to the mainland during the winter months. Last fall our farmers taxed the capacity of the railway to its utmost before the season closed for moving out their potatoes. During the winter months owing to the railway being in a state of transition from the narrow gauge to the broad gauge on which work began some years ago and was later suspended, those farmers were able to get out only a very small percentage of their crop, and when the spring opened up they found themselves with large quantities of potatoes on their hands and a very poor market for them; in fact, the freight rates were so high and the market so unsatisfactory that the returns on their potatoes would not pay for the freight and bags. If we had had our transportation system completed we would not have been in such a bad condition, as our crop would be moving during the whole winter. Therefore I want to impress upon the Government the necessity of putting the transportation system in better shape. I would urge them to complete the work of broadening the gauge which was undertaken some years ago and stopped during the last two years of the war for various reasons, which I am not going to refer to nor complain of now, but it was generally held that it was poor policy to discontinue the work.

It is very expensive to operate the railway in its present condition, and the expenditure necessary to put the railway facilities in good shape is fully justified. It costs more to operate the system under present conditions on account of having to transfer freight from the narrow gauge to the broad gauge, and vice versa, etc. According to the estimates made by competent engineers and endorsed and passed by the board of management of the Canadian National railways—which estimates are now awaiting endorsation by the Department of Railways and Canals—the work could be completed for $650,000. The annual saving in operation would then be $81,000 per annum, made up as follows:

Saving from transfer of freight west of Summerside	$14,000
Saving from transfer of freight east and south of Charlottetown	20,000
Saving from use of standard engines operating over the entire road	30,000
Saving from extra men now required on third rail section	15,000
Saving of extra material required for upkeep on third rail section	2,000

Now, Sir, when the province asks for work of that nature, and it is shown by competent engineers that an annual saving to that extent would accrue, and when we consider the improved service that would result and the consequent increase in volume of traffic and revenue, I think it will be admitted that the necessity of having this work gone on with at once cannot be too strongly urged upon the Government.

There is another point in connection with the railway that I should mention, and I think in common with all hon. members that it is wise to express it to the Government, namely, that we deplore the present high freight rates. With the price of farm products at such a low ebb, it is almost impossible to send them to the markets that we have been in the habit of supplying during the past few years. In this connection allow me to submit to the House a resolution unanimously passed by the Legislature of Prince Edward Island during the past few weeks. It is as follows:

Whereas an unusually large quantity of potatoes are at present in our farmers' cellars awaiting shipment,

And whereas the freight charges are greater to our Canadian markets than the price offered for this product,

And whereas on account of the season it is impossible now to feed any considerable quantity of this product to live stock,

And whereas if immediate relief is not forthcoming in the nature of a substantial reduction in freight, great loss will ensue to the province, and a disaster to those who have a large stock still on hand,

And whereas under existing circumstances it is impossible to transact any business, and the railways are suffering with the farmers through the loss incurred by this condition.

Therefore resolved that this legislature would strongly urge upon the Minister of Railways the necessity of immediately reducing the rate on potatoes at least one-third until June 15 to enable our farmers to dispose of this surplus food product.

I might also submit a few figures to show how the freight rates affect our shippers. We depend largely upon the province of Nova Scotia for our domestic coal, and it is there we find one of the ready markets for our farm products. Let us compare the rates of freight on coal and on potatoes that exist between those points and Prince Edward Island, and vice versa.

Coal Rates Inward

	Rate per 100 lbs.
Sydney to Chalottetown	16 cents
Point Tupper to Charlottetown	15 "
Pictou County Mines to Charlottetown	13½ "
Springhill Mines to Charlottetown	11 "

Potato Rates Outward

Charlottetown to Sydney	43 "
Charlottetown to New Glasgow	37½ "
Charlottetown to Springhill	35½ "
Charlottetown to Montreal	43 "
Charlottetown to Boston	60 "

You will see that the rate from Charlottetown to Sydney is as high as the rate from Charlottetown to Montreal, over three times the distance. The rates on the exportable products of Prince Edward Island and on the product which is the exportable surplus of Nova Scotia are unfair beyond all comparison. This bears heavily upon our people when the price of the product goes down. When we are getting the high price for potatoes last year of $3 per bushel f.o.b. railway the freight rate did not seem so much, but when the price goes down to the point which it has now reached and 17 cents a bushel is all that can be offered to the farmer on account of the high freight rate, it makes it almost useless to try to market the potatoes at all. At this season of the year it would not pay a farmer to give the time to hauling the potatoes to the station at that price if he had to haul them more than a mile, as many farmers have to do; in fact, in many cases they are hauled ten miles. I have made reference to this local condition in order that hon. members of the House, especially members of the Government, may be familiar with the situation as it exists in regard to farm produce in the eastern provinces.

There is another matter, Sir, to which I should like to refer before I close. Coming back to more controversial politics I may say that we have an election pending in one constituency in New Brunswick and in one constituency in Quebec, to take place on the 28th of this month. I see by the Ottawa Citizen of May 13, that one of the members of the Government, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Robertson) visited the constituency of York-Sunbury and spoke at McAdam on May 12. On that occasion he is quoted as saying.

> There has been no government in power since Confederation whose policies could not be justly criticised and accused of dishonesty, yet even its political enemies will not accuse the present Governmnet of misappropriation of funds during the war.

Now, Sir, I want to draw particular attention to that statement of an hon. minister of this Government in a by-election in the province of New Brunswick. What is the record of the Government during the war? Have any accusations been made? I think, Sir, I can justly say to this House and to the country that the statement made by the Minister of Labour is not borne out by the facts that are on record—on the record of the Committees of this House during the war. I refer to the Public Accounts Committee in 1915, when it was proved that the moneys were misappropriated by the Government for war purposes. It was shown before the Public Accounts Committee that there was lost or squandered of the moneys of this country, on horses, $83,000; on bicycles, $28,000; on shield shovels, $30,000; on binoculars, $3,000; on submarines, $250,000; and a large amount on Oliver equipment. It is surprising, Sir, to see a member of the Government going into the country and appealing for support on such a cry—stating, as appears in the press report, that no accusation has been made against the Government when the records of committees of this House show that hundreds of thousands of dollars were squandered. It is evident, therefore, that references and comparisons made, as I have shown, by the right hon. Prime Minister in the House and by his ministers out of the House are not borne out by the facts when the whole truth is told. Mr. Speaker, the hour is late and I will not detain the House any further.

On motion of Mr. Kennedy (Glengarry) the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Right Hon. Mr. Doherty, the House adjourned at 12.16 a.m. Tuesday.

Tuesday, May 17, 1921.

The House met at Three o'clock.

THE BUDGET

DEBATE CONTINUED ON THE ANNUAL STATEMENT PRESENTED BY THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Monday, May 16, the debate on the motion of Hon. Sir Henry Drayton (Minister of Finance), that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Ways and Means, and the proposed amendment thereto of Hon. W. S. Fielding.

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, the occasion of the Budget speech gives to the House and the country the opportunity to review the state of financial health of the nation. A Budget speech, because of what it may contain, is always of interest at any time; but on an occasion such as the present, when the country has passed through four or five years of war that was a new experience for us; when that war has added greatly to our debt; when it has disturbed our economic conditions as they have never been disturbed before;—a Budget under such circumstances as these, is a matter of interest, and profound interest, to the people of any country, and particularly to the people of Canada.

Before I discuss the proposals contained in the Budget delivered by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) the other day, I wish to refer to one or two statements made by my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) and, I think, by the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Casselman) in his speech the other evening. These hon. gentlemen directed some criticism against my administration of the Department of Agriculture when I was a member of the Government. Their criticism was that I had failed in my duty to the agricultural people of Canada, in that I had permitted their products to be sold in the markets of the world, to the Allies at prices greatly below their actual value; and they therefore chided me and held me up to reproach because that condition had existed. Well, I bear in mind that my hon. friends supported the policy of that time because it was the policy of the Government of the day and not of the Minister of Agriculture. They supported it in the past, and it is rather a late occasion now on which to rake up criticism of this kind. What were the facts that faced the country under those conditions of war? They were such that there were no free markets for our products. The Allied countries of Europe, as every one in the House and out of it knows, were buying their requirements through one or two agencies who controlled the shipping on the high seas and absolutely controlled the prices that producers in either Canada or the United States could get for their products. Under those circumstances, therefore, there was no other course for the Government of the day to follow than to make the best arrangements possible with the buyers in Europe; and I am free to confess that, in my opinion, in the great majority of cases the Allied purchasing agents, wielding the power they possessed through unified control in buying, dealt fairly generously with the producers on the North American continent.

I desire now to deal with the Budget statement delivered by the Minister of Finance the other day, and I am bound to say that my hon. friend, in the statement he has presented to the House this year, has fallen far short of the standard he set in his Budget speech of a year ago. At that time his speech was clear and courageous; it contained a note of courage and encouragement to the country. On the present occasion, however, these qualities are entirely lacking. A year ago my hon. friend made this declaration:

> The duty to-day is not only to carry on the government of the country without any additions to the debt, but, on the other hand, to promote measures which will reduce the nation's obligations.

Now, that was a sound declaration of policy at that time. It contained two things in particular: First, the view that there should be no increase in the debt, and, second, that steps should be taken to reduce the nation's obligations. But what do we find in the present Budget speech? Do we find that ideal carried out by my hon. friend? Not at all. We find, on the contrary, that our debt has increased by over $100,000,000, and we find, as I shall show presently, absolutely not one word by way of provision for the future as to how we shall care for our heavy commitments that fall due, within the next few years. Now, in this statement my hon. friend figures out a surplus. One would almost imagine that this Budget was the precursor of an election,—and I am not at all certain but that the Government, in the rather uncertain times that lie ahead of them, are making a virtue of necessity and have dressed up their Budget proposals so that they will have the finest possible appearance to the country. What does my hon. friend claim? He claims a surplus of $69,000,000, and other hon. gentlemen who sit behind him have played upon this string and have pointed out what a splendid thing it is to have a Government that can produce a surplus of $69,000,000 in a year like this. But how does my hon. friend reach his surplus? He has reached it by charging up to capital expenditure items, and very large items, that should be paid out of ordinary revenue. We are faced with our railway situation, which every one admits is serious. Now, one principle, absolutely, should be laid down in the financing of this enterprise, and that is, that the deficits that occur in operation, and the sums that are necessary to meet interest on fixed charges, should be paid out of income and not charged up to capital. That is only the position which any ordinary business house would take But does my hon. friend do that? Not at all. We find that the interest on these obligations and the operating deficits have been charged up; and after charging them up my hon. friend arrives at a surplus of $69,000,000. If these charges had been met, as they should have been met, and would have been met by a courageous government, there would have been no surplus, and the facts would have been placed frankly before the people that our income last year did not meet our expenditure.

Have we any hope of improvement for the future? My hon. friend is budgeting this year for a considerable sum of money. He hopes to raise the same revenue that he raised last year, namely, $432,000,000, and he details the items. He speaks of estimated consolidated revenue expenditure $343,000,000—I am giving round figures—estimated capital expenditure $27,000,000; estimated demobilization expenditure $7,000,000—a total of $378,000,000. He sets that down as the amount that should be paid out of current revenue, but he goes on further and he has an item of $50,000,000 for the Canadian Northern railway, $89,000,000 for the Grand Trunk railway, and $26,000,000 for the Grand Trunk Pacific railway. Some of these charges in respect of the railways are of the nature of capital improvements and therefore could properly be charged to capital; but many of them—I venture to say half of them although the House has not the detailed information from my hon. friend—are charges to meet interest on investments, or to pay operating deficits; and to that extent the statement is not a sound statement to place before the country. My hon. friend practically makes that admission a little later in his Budget speech, and I submit that his statement of our national finances is not such a statement as should be placed before the people at this time. If there ever was a time in the history of Canada when Parliament and the Government should deal frankly with the country in respect to the question of expenditures and revenues it is now, because only by sustaining the courage and receiving the support of our people throughout the country can we hope to pass through the difficult times that lie ahead of us.

And what is the prospect for the coming year? My hon. friend has estimated a revenue of $135,000,000 from customs against $165,000,000 a year ago, a decrease of $30,000,000. But what are the facts as far as the months of March and April are concerned? The month of March, it is true, was in the last fiscal year, but it gives an indication of what we may expect in the few months that are immediately ahead of us. The customs revenue in March declined over $10,000,000 as against March a year ago and the customs revenue in April last declined over $7,000,000, as compared with April a year ago. There is $7,000,000 gone in one month of the $30,000,000 reduction which my hon. friend has provided for. And the same thing will apply to other sources of revenue. There is bound to be shrinkage in our income, and the Government has made absolutely no provision to meet it. They are going along making extravagant expenditure without any regard for the future; and I am afraid that when we come to the end of the present financial year, my hon. friend will have to come to this House with a deficit unless he can improve his book-keeping methods to a greater extent than he has done in the year that has gone past.

But there is one other criticism I wish to offer my hon. friend: He has made no provision whatever—indeed there is no reference whatever in the Budget speech to the matter—for the needs of the future immediately ahead of us. And what are they? This country has to provide for refunding almost $600,000,000 before the first of September, 1925. In other words within the next four years we have to meet maturing loans to the extent of $600,000,000. My hon. friend can say, and the Government can say, "Oh, well, we do not have to meet that for a few years, we will cross that bridge when we come to it." But what would a prudent business man do, and what would any prudent person do, under such circumstances? They would endeavour to make some provision to meet this obligation when it matures. But none is made by the Government. The Chancellor of the Exchequer in Great Britain is facing a somewhat similar position; he has to provide in the next four or five years for something like £600,000,000 of maturing loans. Is he letting the thing drift along without making any provision or entertaining any thought for the future? Not at all. He is taking steps to-day to provide for the refunding of those loans. We are drifting along aimlessly and almost hopelessly—these loans maturing, our trade shrinking, our revenues going down and, as our expenditure exceeds our income, our credit being impaired. We have to face these loans, and I tell my hon. friend now that if he does not take some steps to provide for them, if he does not give this matter some thought—and if the Government does not give it some thought—then he will pay a much higher rate of interest when he comes to refund these loans and care for these obligations than he is paying at the present time. The importance of that fact was pointed out by my hon. friend from Neepawa (Mr. Davis), and to my mind it is one of the most important matters that should receive the immediate consideration of the Government. But have we any suggestion of economy in my hon. friend's speech? Not one word. Last year he was strong on economy: last year the country should economize, individuals should economize, the Government should economize—every one should economize. Is there one word of economy in the Budget speech of my hon. friend delivered to this House a few days ago? Not one solitary word. At any rate my hon. friends opposite have the grace to recognize that they can lay no particular claim to economy in the administration of this country's affairs at the present time. How could they? A dry dock at Victoria costing $4,000,000, and a pier being built in Vancouver, as a monument to my hon. friend the Minister of Marine, (Mr. Ballantyne) that will also cost millions of dollars. Then we have the Welland canal, for which there is a vote of $5,000,000—my hon. friends opposite deal very easily in the millions. Then we have the Trent Valley canal with an expenditure of $500,000; we have a dam being built up in Peterborough constituency, to redeem an election promise—which did not happen to elect the Government candidate—for $250,000; we have $20,000,000 for militia, navy, air defence and police; and $10,000,000 for ships to be constructed under the policy of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Hear, hear.

Mr. CRERAR: My hon. friend says "hear, hear", and he is building ships as to which, before they are completed, he can write off two-thirds of their value and he will not have them over-valued then. When we protest against this and when we demand economy on the part of the Government, what do we get?

An hon. MEMBER: The closure.

Mr. CRERAR: Yes, we get a shrug of the shoulders, a cynical smile, and the closure.

My hon. friends opposite are just as careless in the little things as they are in the big things. We had an illustration of that the other evening in this House when my hon. friend the Minister of Railways was dealing with his Estimates, and asking for an increase for road supervision by a road department that did not exist in the Department of Railways until a year or two ago. For that department $25,000 was asked a year ago, and $55,000 is required this year, and there is no more need for it than there is for the Minister of Marine to have a battleship. The whole Budget is discouraging. And Sir, it is largely misleading; it is not giving the facts to the country as they should be given. What do the members of the Government have to say in connection with it? The Minister of Trade and Commerce, when he spoke, did not offer to make any defence of if whatever. When the Minister of Marine spoke, he extolled the virtues of protection, and he told how they were going to win elections in the province of Quebec—that is what largely concerns the Minister of Marine. Then the Minister of Militia spent an hour and a quarter the other day endeavouring to convince the House and the country that Canada is not nearly so war-like as many other nations in the world, notwithstanding the fact that the Permanent Force to-day is almost 1,500 greater strength than it was the year before the war. And then we had the Prime Minister; I must not forget him. He came to the defence of the Government. What had the country a right to expect from my right hon. friend at this time? It had the right to expect some definite lead, some note of encouragement, some declaration as to the need of public and private economy. It should have had a high sounding note from my right hon. friend. But what did the country get? Well, Sir, we got an exhibition of cheap political vaudeville for over two hours and a half.

Talk about inconsistency! My right hon. friend throws his taunts around very freely and very lightly, and he was good enough to direct some particular attention to the hon. gentlemen "who sit angularly opposite" as he describes them. First of all he said that hon. gentlemen "angularly opposite"—that is, the Progressives—and the Liberals are in the same boat; the next moment he said that one is protectionist and the other is free trade; and then he described us as "servile tools and minions, a dilapidated annex" of my hon. friends who sit to my right. Finally he completely reversed his position and wound up with the assertion that the Government and those who sit behind him were more low tariff than any other party in the country. A more amazing mass of inconsistencies could scarcely be imagined. And he concluded with this pious declaration, "Let this game cease. It is not doing any credit to the politics of Canada."

Was my right hon. friend doing any credit to the politics of Canada while he was endeavouring during the past six or seven months to annex a number of hon. gentlemen of the Liberal Opposition who sit on this side of the chamber? My right hon. friend is anxious to get representation in the province of Quebec; I do not blame him for that. But let me ask him and this House in all sincerity: Have the methods which he has followed been any credit to the political life of this country? Perhaps he took his inspiration from my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) and my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Hocken). Both those hon. gentlemen are supposed to have a peculiar liking for the province of Quebec.

Servile tools and minions! Where was my right hon. friend in 1911 and the party that he then gave adherence to? In that year he and his party made an arrangement with the Nationalists of Quebec. Not only that but he and his party financed the Nationalists, their allies. The question of reciprocity was not an issue in Quebec. On what did his allies, whom he and his party financed at that time, make their appeal? Scarcely on grounds that would commend themselves to my hon. friends from Frontenac and West Toronto. It was an attack on the Empire. But my right hon. friend was not backward in seeking the assistance of those who then were willing to "shoot holes in the British flag." It does not lie in his mouth to lecture any one in this House upon political morality.

But let us go a step further. My right hon. friend describes us as a "dilapidated annex of the Liberal party, servile tools and minions." Were those who sit, as he says, angularly opposite, "servile tools and minions" in 1917, when at their country's call, be their judgment right or wrong, they assisted my right hon. friend and his Government when it was on the brink of ruin and in despair? I should like to know if my right hon. friend considers we were "servile tools and minions" at that time. Let my right hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster) answer. He knows better. And what about the "dilapidated annex"—where has it been? Where was the "dilapidated annex" in Assiniboia two years ago?

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): Where was the Government?

Mr. CRERAR: And where was the Government? Why, the Government was under the barn.

An hon. MEMBER: And is still there.

Mr. CRERAR: We at this corner of the chamber stand for definite principles, and we are not afraid to fight for those principles. In Assiniboia we fought one of the leaders of Liberalism in Western Canada, but my right hon. friend's Government was not represented in that election. And where were we in East Elgin—another "dilapidated annex"? My right hon. friend had a candidate in that constituency and appeared twice in his support, but where was his candidate when election day was over? Then we had the "dilapidated annex" operating again in West Peterborough. I will admit that it was not quite as successful there, but my right hon. friend did not get much comfort out of that election. And what about Timiskaming, where the "dilapidated annex" was again in operation? And what about our record and our votes in this House? My right hon. friend knows that he has no right to hurl that epithet across the floor.

He taunts us with not having moved our platform in this House, but he knows very well why it has not been moved. Two years ago when we sought to introduce an amendment to the amendment on the Budget we could not do so. My right hon. friend knows that my hon. friends to the right of me have first claim to speak in the Budget debate. We could not move our amendment two years ago, and my right hon. friend was mighty glad that we could not. At that time he had just gathered a few wavering converts into the fold permanently—my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Henders), my hon. friend from Humboldt (Mr. Lang) and several other hon. gentlemen from Western Canada.

Mr. GAUVREAU: They will never come back.

Mr. CRERAR: My right hon. friend did not want our amendment to the amendment moved upon that occasion, for he thought his new converts might be frightened. Then he says, "But why did you not move it on going into Supply?" Does not my right hon. friend recall that two years ago last March my hon. friend from Brome (Mr. McMaster) moved a tariff amendment on going into Supply? And does he not recall the position the Government took, at that time? I was then supposed to be among the faithful, and I spoke in that debate, my right hon. friend, I think also spoke, at any rate the leader of the Government of that day did; and the position every hon. gentleman on the other side took was that the amendment should be voted down, on the ground that the Budget debate was the place to discuss tariff matters in this House.

I can quite conceive of the pleasure it would give my right hon. friend to have us move an amendment on the tariff when going into Committee of Supply. Immediately he would get up and remind us of the speeches we had made on a former occasion that such an amendment should not be moved, and he would appeal to the loyalty of his supporters to vote our amendment down on the ground that the proper time to move it was when the Budget debate took place.

Now, why is all this suggested now? Why did my right hon. friend make that remarkable speech the other day? I think he expected it might have some effect on a by-election which is now being contested down in the Maritime Provinces. He knows that his chances in that constituency are very slim indeed, but he hoped that he could influence a number of the electors there who have hitherto given support to him and to his policies to vote against the farmer candidate. On what platform is his candidate running in York-Sunbury at the present time? Does the tariff take a leading place in the discussion? Not according to the best information I get. My right hon. friend's candidate is running on a new —no, I will not say an altogether new, platform; it is an old platform of some of my hon. friends opposite. His candidate is saying privately to the Protestants of the constituency: I do not want any Catholic support; are you going to vote for the man whom the Catholics are voting for?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Shame.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman has made a very serious assertion. He will be good enough to support that assertion by quotation.

Mr. CRERAR: I have no doubt that my right hon. friend can get witnesses to prove it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I never heard it.

Mr. CRERAR: I accept at once my right hon. friend's statement; but I am stating what his candidate is saying down in York-Sunbury. And did not my right hon. friend within the past eight months, through his agents, approach the Catholic Minister of Public Works in New Brunswick with a view to having him come into his Government? Did he get that inspiration from my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards)?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the hon. gentleman repeat that statement, please? I did not quite catch it.

Mr. CRERAR: Yes, I will repeat the statement: did not my right hon. friend or some one representing him approach—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

An hon. MEMBER: Somebody told somebody else.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CRERAR: Did not my right hon. friend or some of the members of his Government—I will put it that definitely—approach the Minister of Public Works in New Brunswick with a view of having him come into the Administration?

Mr. MEIGHEN:: I want to state that that is absolutely false so far as I am concerned or so far as any one is concerned acting upon my authority.

Mr. CRERAR: I at once, Mr. Speaker, again take my right hon. friend's word for it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I may tell my hon. friend as well that his previous assertion is denied categorically by the candidate and by every one in the county from whom I have heard.

Mr. CRERAR: After all, my right hon. friend did attempt one or two arguments in his speech the other day. He attempted to make an argument on the binder twine industry. I believe he quoted from Mr. Lambert, now secretary of the Council of Agriculture. Now, Mr. Lambert, it is true, wrote the article that my right hon. friend quoted, but that article was written in 1911 during the reciprocity campaign, and when Mr. Lambert was a student fresh from the university and doing literary work of a general character. That was simply a youthful effusion on the part of Mr. Lambert, but my right hon. friend attempts to build a substantial argument upon it. And then he goes on and talks about the binder twine industry, pointing out that twenty-five years ago we had 25 binder twine factories in Canada and now we have only 3. Well, does that prove anything particularly? It is true there was a decline in the number of binder twine factories in Canada, but what about other industries? Take the great agricultural implement industry; in 1881, according to the census figures, there were 234 factories in Canada manufacturing agricultural implements; in 1917 there were 90. Is that what protection has done for the agricultural implement industry in this country? And if my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. Currie) wants some further information, I have it. Take boots and shoes: in 1881, according to the census figures, there were over 4,000 establishments in Canada making boots and shoes; in 1917 there were 185. And take the matter of woollen goods: in 1881 there were 1,994 factories in Canada manufacturing woollen goods; in 1917 there were 80. In 1881 these factories gave employment, according to the census figures, to over 18,000 people; in 1917 they gave employment to a little over 5,000 people. Is that what protection has done to these industries? When my right hon. friend argues, therefore, that the decline in the binder twine industry in Canada was due to the fact that it had no protection, he cannot offer substantial proof of his statement. But take the case of the Brantford Cordage Company, engaged in the binder twine industry: twenty years ago it had only 60 spindles operating; to-day it has over 700 spindles operating, and its output is over 10,000 tons of binder twine annually. My right hon. friend states that the industry was bonused. Well, has it been bonused? It has not had protection or assistance of any kind for ten years, and in the face of that it is expanding and developing.

My right hon. friend spoke also about the cream separator industry, and he played upon what he referred to as our "working the cream separator all over the country." But, while he may pass these clever remarks across the House he cannot get away from the fact that the cream separator industry in Canada, without protection, has developed and prospered. If the Renfrew Machinery Company can make cream separators and build up their business and expand it as they are expanding it in practically every country where cream separators are used, why cannot my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) makes his ploughs in the same way? The same elements precisely enter into the manufacture of the plough which enter into the manufacture of the cream separator.

After all, what was there in the speech that was delivered by my right hon. friend? I have said that there was no lead to the country; there was no discussion of the grave problems which face us; it was as barren as the frozen wastes of the Arctic regions so far as constructive statesmanship was concerned. And my hon. friend from Regina (Mr. Cowan), who, I am sorry to see, is not in the chamber, went one better; he applied the terms "duplicity" and "deception" to those who sit in this corner of the chamber—my hon. friend from Regina, who forgets to-day what he said yesterday and will repudiate to-morrow what he said to-day.

We come now to a consideration of the tariff proposals. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance has stated that it is not the intention to have any tariff revision. But is that the case? I will not go over the history of the Government's jockeying with the tariff question or discuss the position that was taken by the Government two years ago. We know then that the expectation was held out to the country, and particularly to some of my western friends, who are sitting with hon. gentlemen opposite, that this tariff revision would take place, and that we would have a tariff with moderate protection; that we would have a tariff behind the walls of which industry would not be allowed to shelter in ease. Then we had the Tariff Commission journeying throughout this country, and later we had the announcement in the Speech from the Throne, a few months ago, that a measure based upon the Tariff Commission's findings would be brought down to this House. But now the Government comes down with the announcement that there is to be no tariff increase. Is that the case, however? This Budget increases the tariff; in its spirit and essence, it is the most protectionist Budget that has been delivered in this House in twenty years. Not only are duties left at the old levels, but new constructions, new interpretations are introduced in the Customs Act, and we find, for instance, as the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) pointed out, that as regards countries in which there is a depreciated currency, 50 per cent of the value of that currency will be taken for purposes of assessing the duty. On the other hand, we find this condition directed against trade with the United States, that the duty is to be levied on the premium in exchange between the United States and Canada. Further, we have the proposal—I do not know what particular merit there may be in it—that all goods coming to Canada must be marked with the name of the country of origin. That may be a perfectly proper measure to take, but it is quite obvious that it simply places another obstacle in the way of those engaged in trade.

At the present time, the Canadian manufacturer has against the United States manufacturer the protection of the adverse exchange. As regards woollens, which carry a duty, I think, of 30 per cent, what is the actual protection that the Canadian woollen manufacturer enjoys to-day by virtue of trade conditions and the acts of this Government? He has his 30 per cent duty; he has 12 per cent discount on his dollar in the United States, which discount acts as a protection to him; he has the rate of duty on that, and he has the import tax levied by virtue of the sales tax which the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) has increased. Altogether the protection that the Canadian woollen manufacturer enjoys to-day is over 40 per cent as against the United States.

Mr. LALOR: What is the duty on the same class of goods going into the United States?

Mr. CRERAR: I am sorry that at the moment I cannot give my hon. friend that information, but I will take boots and shoes—

Mr. LALOR: The duty, my dear fellow, is from 30 to 40 per cent.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CRERAR: I much appreciate the endearing remarks of my hon. friend opposite, but I will cite another instance. Boots and shoes have a protection of 30 per cent in Canada. The same thing applies equally to them, and I will tell my hon. friend that boots and shoes go into the United States free of duty.

Mr. LALOR: Certainly.

Mr. CRERAR: The effect of this Budget will be simply to discourage and stop trade and to discourage industry, and Canada as a result of the attitude of my hon. friends opposite who believe in all the glories and virtues of a protective tariff, will be left to languish in isolation. There is a very notable change going on throughout the world in respect to the whole question of protection to industry. My hon. friends opposite doubtless read the manifesto published the other day by the British bankers. I do not wish to dilate upon it now as it was referred to by my hon. friend from Maple Creek the other evening. This is what the British bankers say:

> We cannot limit imports without limiting our export trade, and striking a grave blow at world wide commerce on which this Kingdom principally depends.

And further on, they say:

> We desire to enter a respectful protest against every restrictive regulation of trade which tends to diminish the resources of the State.

We have also the statement of a prominent New York banker the other day who repeated almost word for word the declaration made by these eminent bankers of Great Britain. In my judgment, the policy of protection, in the extreme position in which we have had it in Canada, was never suited to the country; but if there ever was a time when it should be changed, that time is the present.

What should our fiscal policy in this country be? I have endeavoured to lay it down to this House and to the country. It should be such as to encourage the development of the natural resources of the country. Last year Canada had a total export trade of $1,190,000,000. Where did those exports chiefly come from? Let me give the information:

Animals living	$26,000,000
Butter	5,200,000
Cheese	37,150,000
Hides and skins	4,700,000
Leather	7,000,000
Bacon and hams	31,500,000
Beef	8,500,000
Pork and other meats	4,200,000
Milk and cream	10,500,000

That makes a sum total of $134,750,000 from the products of live stock and manufactures based on live stock. What do we find in regard to cereals and vegetables?—

Oats	$ 14,150,000
Wheat	310,000,000
Other grain	19,000,000
Flax seed	3,800,000
Vegetables	10,800,000
Wheat flour	66,500,000

That makes a total of $424,250,000. Last year, with the great volume of trade that this country had, practically one-half of our exports came directly from the farm, had their origin in the agricultural industry of this country.

Mr. CURRIE: What about the manufacturers?

Mr. CRERAR: My hon. friend need not worry; I will have the figures for him in a moment. What about the products of the forest?

Wood products, manufactured and unmanufactured	$115,000,000
Wood pulp	71,500,000
Printing paper	79,000,000
Other paper	13,000,000

That makes a total of $278,500,000 worth of exports directly from our forests. These are the great natural resources of the country. Let me give the same information as regards minerals:

Asbestos	$12,600,000
Copper	13,300,000
Nickel	9,400,000
Silver	11,100,000
Coal	16,500,000

That makes a total from our mines of $62,900,000.

Then we have our fisheries, $33,000,000, and furs, $12,200,000. If we total these altogether, we find that we have $945,600,000 worth of exports based on the natural resources of this country as against a total export amounting to $1,190,000,000. My hon. friend from Simcoe North (Mr. Currie) asked a moment ago: What about manufactures? I will tell him. On textiles, we have had a protective duty of over 30 per cent—yes, going as high at times as 40 per cent during the last forty years. What was the magnificent total contribution that our textile industry, that we have been protecting for forty years in this country, made to the exports of Canada? It was $12,350,000 last year.

What about rubber goods? They have a protection running over 30 per cent, and they have been protected for forty years. They added to our total export trade last year by $10,800,000.

And what about clothing?—clothing that every person in this country, high or low, must have, and a great deal of it, because of the rigours of our climate. We have protected clothing in order to develop a clothing manufacturing industry in this country; and after forty years of protection what did it contribute to the sum total of our export trade last year? Only $3,500,000. These figures prove beyond any question of dispute where the real wealth in this country lies. I say again now what I have said before in this House, that it is the height of economic folly for this country to place these high tariff duties in favour of industries that are not based on the natural resources of Canada.

What protection has the farmer got? What protection has the lumberman got? What protection has the fisherman got? None at all. What value is a protective tariff to the Canadian farmer? My hon. friend the Minister of Finance has spoken about the home market, and that has been dealt with by my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark). I want to point out that we are exporting hundreds of millions of dollars worth of produce from our farms more than we can possibly consume in Canada. Is it not therefore the part of wisdom so to shape the fiscal policy of this country as to give encouragement to industries, like agriculture, to the production of our forest wealth, our mineral wealth, and of the wealth from our seas? That is the sound, sane policy for this country to follow, and I am convinced that before very long this country is going to adopt that policy.

Another defect of a protective tariff is this: I submit that protection, with all its increases, and they have been great, simply facilitates the formation of combines and mergers in this country. I know that some of my friends opposite may differ with me, but I believe that that is the inevitable result of the system. One of the crying evils that this country has suffered from in the last twenty years has been the exploitation of the Canadian people by stock watering and stock promoting in practically every industry in Canada. Let me give the House a few illustrations—and I could multiply these by a score if it were necessary.

Take the boot and shoe business—an article of vital necessity to the whole Canadian people, because even if we were disposed to do so, the rigours of our climate would not permit us to go barefooted or lightly shod. We find that in 1911 there was a merger of shoe manufacturing concerns in Canada. In that year the Ames-Holden-McCready Company, Limited, was formed, absorbing Ames-Holden, Limited, and the James McCready Company, Limited. The capital issues of these two concerns—capital stock and bonds—amounted to $3,500,000. That was their actual worth as disclosed by their bonds and capital stock. What was that turned into? $3,500,000 of common stock, $2,500,000 of preferred stock, and $1,000,000 of bonds, or a total issue of $7,000,000. One cannot speak with definite knowledge, because one has not access to the records of this company, but I believe that I am not beyond the mark when I make the statement that practically every dollar of that common stock was water. What has been the result? Boots and shoes that you and I, Mr. Speaker, and every one else in this country wear have enjoyed a tariff protection of 30 per cent. Where has the value of the common stock of the Ames-Holden-McCready Company gone? In 1920 it sold as high as $137 a share. Is that protecting industry, or is it, as I stated in this House on one occasion before, protecting exploitation of the people?

Take another article which is very commonly used in this country—glass. In 1913 the Dominion Glass Company was formed. What did it embrace? We find that it absorbed the Diamond Glass Company, with $1,000,000 of securities, capital stock and bonds; the Sydenham Glass Company with $300,000, and the Canadian Glass Company with $100,000, or a total capitalization—capital and bonds—of $1,400,000. What happened when the merger was formed? What happened under the alchemy of the stock promoter's wand? The new company that was formed was capitalized as follows: common stock, $4,250,000; preferred stock, $2,600,000; bonds, $2,000,000; or a total of $8,850,000. You will say that that common stock had no value. True, it had no value, then. There was even an inflated value given to the bonds and preferred stock, according to the statement. But what has since happened to the common stock? Under a protection of 32½ per cent this company has gone on making its glass bottles, glass jars and other glass products, until the common stock in 1920 sold as high as $69.25 a share. I ask again, is that protecting a legitimate industry in Canada, or is it enabling these promoters, through this protective tariff, to exploit the Canadian people?

I am sorry the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Ballantyne) is going out because the next example I was going to give was the Sherwin-Williams Paint Company of Canada, Limited. This company according to the records was incorporated in 1911.

Mr. PARENT: With all kinds of colours.

Mr. CRERAR: It absorbed the Sherwin-Williams Company, Limited, with $1,000,000 of capital stock and bonds; Lewis Berger and Sons, with $750,000, and the Canadian Paint Company with $750,000, or a total of $2,500,000 of bonds and stock. Under the alchemy of the promoter's wand this was converted into $9,450,000, as follows; $4,000,000 of common stock, $3,000,000 of preferred stock, and $2,450,000 of bonds.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Lots of water in the paint.

Mr. CRERAR: This industry has enjoyed a protection of 30 per cent, or better, ever since we have had a protective tariff. What has happened to its common stock? Last year the common stock of the Sherwin-Williams Paint Company sold as high as $119, according to the stock quotations in the financial journals of this country. Was there actual value put into this stock?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The company was formed in 1911. Will my hon. friend be good enough to tell the House what the stock sold for without any dividend at all? The dividend has only been paid this last year?

Mr. CRERAR: The common stock in 1911 was worth nothing.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I asked my hon. friend what the stock was selling for, not for his opinion as to what it was worth.

Mr. CRERAR: In 1911 it sold as low as 29.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: And in 1920?

Mr. CRERAR: It sold as high as $119, and sold down again to $75. I want to do full justice to my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. There is $4,000,000 of common stock, which in 1911 sold at less than $30 a share; the lowest point the stock touched last year was $75 a share, and all the time there has been a protective tariff on paint coming into this country of over 30 per cent.

I have been represented as being opposed to industries in this country. I am not opposed to industries in Canada. I should like to see industries developed in Canada, but I am opposed, as I trust I shall ever be, to a system of protection that permits this sort of thing and exploits the great masses of the Canadian people in order that a few individuals may enrich themselves.

Now, Sir, the effect of these taxes which my hon. friend the Minister of Finance has imposed is to increase the cost of living in this country; they can have no other effect. I have shown, as my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark) and other hon. gentlemen who have preceded me have shown, that the purpose of these taxes is to increase the tariff. The operation of the sales tax will also bear heavily upon the poor man. My hon. friend from Red Deer stated the thing in a nutshell in his argument the other day, and so far there has not been an hon. gentleman opposite who has attempted to reply to the argument which my hon. friend advanced. As the hon. member for Red Deer said, the operation of these taxes will raise the prices of commodities in the country. If it raises the prices of commodities it limits and decreases the consumption of them. If it limits and decreases consumption it decreases production, and if it decreases production it brings stagnation to business and unemployment to labour.

That is the inevitable effect of the operation of these taxes. My hon. friend from Red Deer pointed it our clearly, and so far he has not been answered by any hon. gentleman who has attempted to discuss the matter on the other side of the chamber. Furthermore, these taxes are not levied according to the ability of the citizen to pay. Now, I have every sympathy with the position in which the Minister of Finance finds himself, because it is extremely difficult to get the revenues which this country requires in the days we are passing through. But the minister, through the operation of the sales tax, is increasing the cost of living to every person in the country. What about the wealthy man who spends six months in California or Florida, or Europe? He has not to pay taxes on purchases when he is away. But the poor man with the limited income,—he may be out of work, without any income at all, just living on the slender resources he may have accumulated in the past—finds himself in an altogether different situation. What position is he in? and what position is the returned soldier in? This tax will hit them every day in the year; they cannot escape from it; and to that extent my hon. friend has been very unwise in the taxes he is imposing.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I should like to ask my hon. friend whether he and his party are still in favour of increasing the British preference to 50 per cent and, after five years, of having absolutely free trade.

Mr. CRERAR: I have no hesitation in saying that we are in favour of increasing the British preference to 50 per cent. Now, these taxes are not only bad in their effect, but I submit that they will not get the revenue required. If business is stagnant, if you discourage business and discourage trade generally, how are you going to get your revenue? If our experience of the past proves anything, it proves that when trade is most buoyant, when we are exporting the most, our revenue is the most easily obtained. But the only effect of the taxes which my hon. friend has imposed will be to discourage trade and industry. We are not paying our way as we go. In Great Britain they are doing better in that respect than we are, for they paid last year £256,000,000 of their debt. My right hon. friend the leader of the Government (Mr. Meighen) states that this was accomplished mainly from the sale of war supplies. That may be although I cannot find anything to that effect in a reading of the budget speech of the British Chancellor delivered a few weeks ago in the British House of Commons. But what do they propose to do this year? They propose to pay off over £80,000,000 out of current revenue, according to the statement of the British Chancellor of the Exchequer in the speech he delivered to the British Parliament when he brought down his budget. And what are they doing in the United States? Sir, one of the first things which the new Secretary of the Treasury in the United States did was to impress upon Congress and upon the people the great need of economy; and the American people are not spending to-day in public expenditure anything like what we in Canada are spending in the same ratio to population. I hope the fear is unwarranted, but I am afraid that my hon. friend, when the year comes to a close, will find that his revenues have not come up to his anticipations. I would urge again upon him and upon the Government the great need of laying down some definite financial policy. I know that the matter of taxes is a difficult one; no one likes to pay taxes. But we must have the revenues that are required to pay the interest on our debt, to meet the charges for returned soldiers, to pay pensions, maintenance, etc., and to provide for all the other services which are necessary in the public welfare. But we should aim to raise these taxes where they will bear as lightly as possible upon the great mass of the common people of the country, and in that respect I would offer one or two suggestions to the Minister of Finance. I have not very much hope that he will accept them, but nevertheless I proffer them. I think that the income tax might very well have been extended. A man with an income of $20,000 in Canada to-day pays a tax of some $1,500 or $1,600, as compared with a similar tax on a similar income in Great Britain of almost $6,000. It is true that on the larger incomes, running up to $100,000, $150,000 and $200,000, our tax in Canada is heavier than in Great Britain. But I think the range of income might have been extended. I think also that my hon. friend might have somewhat increased the income tax on corporations. He has abolished the business profits tax, and in that respect he has acted wisely. But it does seem to me that the income tax on corporations might have been somewhat, possibly, considerably extended. And then there is another source of revenue that may not be very well understood in the House, although it is one which I think the Government might well consider when it is looking for money with which to carry on public affairs. My hon. friend from Gloucester (Mr. Turgeon) last evening referred to the possibility of raising revenue by a tax on the values of land. The hon. Minister of Marine (Mr. Ballantyne) referred to this subject in his speech the other day, but he spoke of the tax as a land tax, and I desire to draw the distinction clearly between a land tax and a tax on the unimproved values of land, which is a totally different thing from a flat tax on land. How does this tax on the unimproved values of land operate? Let me illustrate it. I know of a case, which has come under my observation, where a certain gentleman in one of the cities of Canada owns an apartment block. He has alongside it a vacant lot. He derives his income mainly from the revenues he receives from the dwellings and buildings he rents. He spends very little of his time in Canada, but his agent comes around every month to collect the rents. The vacant lot he holds is increasing in value every year by virtue of the fact that the people around are busy working and carrying on all the activities of a civilized community. What does this gentleman hope to do? What has he done in countless cases in the past? He has reaped the advantage of the increase in value, but he gets off with a very slight, a nominal tax on the land he has held out of use. Now, this tax on the unimproved values of land would have the effect of bringing such land as this into use. It would take for the state simply the increment that comes to the land as a result of the activities of the people living in the community and would be no injustice to anyone; and it would lessen the burden on the poor individual—the workingman, the clerk in the store, the clerk in the law office—who has to pay, in many of our Canadian cities, exorbitant rents in order to get a place in which to live. That is the effect of this. I would suggest to my right hon. friend that this avenue of taxation might well be inquired into. I know that, particularly, in the western provinces, this principle has been applied by the Provincial Governments, and it may be that that field of taxation should be left to them, but it is worth seriously enquiring into. In that connection I have another suggestion to make to my hon. friend and it is this—it might be well to-day to have a conference, not only with the provinces but with representatives from some of our larger cities, with a view of reaching some definite understanding as to the relative fields of taxation in Canada.

Now, Sir, I have taken more time than I intended.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. CRERAR: Our trade is shrinking, it is shrinking seriously. The effect of the United States tariff legislation has already been alluded to, and I cannot help but regret the action of my hon. friends opposite when they rejected the reciprocity arrangement of 1911. We have had for several years past one of the best markets for our natural products in the United States. I do not know that we can complain of the action they are taking in that country, but I would offer this suggestion to the Minister of Trade and Commerce—that he might very well say to our friends at Washington "Let us talk this matter over." Let him tell them frankly that we are ready to trade with them on the basis of the 1911 arrangement. That arrangement still stands on their statute books, and it may be that they would yet accept it; and if my hon. friend will do that he will render to Canada one of the best services he has ever given to it in his long and distinguished career.

But I want to point out to my manufacturing friends what the effect is going to be of a restricted market for our agricultural products. We sold last year almost $160,000,000 of agricultural products in the United States, and we know the condition that the European markets are in in this respect. Therefore I say to my manufacturing friends, "Where are you going to sell your goods if the Canadian farmer is not prosperous?" It is one of the unfortunate facts—perhaps it was unavoidable—of a protective tariff that our manufacturing industries have not extended their markets in the world. I have proven that by the figures I quoted to the House. We are at the present time having a decline in the values of farm products. Why, Sir, in the past year alone the value of live animals in Canada has decreased over $350,000,000. The farmers are selling oats for 19 cents a bushel and hides for one cent a pound, as my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark) pointed out, and paying $10 and $12 a pair for shoes. You cannot have prosperity in a country under those conditions; and if my manufacturing friends desire to extend their business it should be of the first and greatest concern to them that the farmers of this country are prosperous and remain prosperous.

I would offer this suggestion to the Government also, and to my hon. friend the Minister of Finance with whom I sympathize in his many troubles and tribulations; that we should have a policy of rigid economy absolutely; rigid economy first, last and all the time; rigid economy for five years at any rate until we have refunded our maturing obligations, until we have passed through this period of depression that we are in now and of which we have not yet reached the bottom. Under such circumstances only economy of the most rigid kind can satisfy the demands and needs of the hour.

Then I would offer another suggestion—that we could dispense with expenditures of a local character. Very often in this House we are called upon to vote moneys for purely local purposes. That is not sound business nor is it sound policy. Local needs should be cared for by local taxation, and that matter is one that could well engage the attention of the Government.

I think also—as I suggested a moment ago—that the Minister of Finance might well call into consultation the treasurers of the various provinces and the treasurers of our large cities—follow the practice that was adopted early in the war when the late Minister of Finance laid down certain restrictions with respect to the sale of securities, and when there was an effort made to unify and co-ordinate the financial policy of Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific. My hon. friend should do that and he should do it without delay, because the burden of taxation upon the people is growing every day and their ability to pay is growing less every day.

I would offer another suggestion to the Government: They might very well discontinue the expenditure on roads and on the housing problem that we have been engaging in for the last few years. That was undertaken at a time when there was apparently a growing need in the country for such purposes, but I submit again that that is expenditure that should be cared for by the provinces or by the municipalities interested. After all, the burdens of the municipalities in Canada and the burdens of the provinces are infinitely less, financially, than are the burdens on the Federal Treasury.

I am not very sanguine that my suggestions will be taken by the Government, but I repeat that our situation is serious—if I cannot impress that upon the Government I hope I may, in some degree, impress it upon the country. The people of Canada to-day—on information given me a short time ago by a gentleman who I think is usually careful in his estimates—are paying in taxes for federal, provincial and municipal purposes over one thousand million dollars a year, and we are paying, to meet our obligations abroad, almost $250,000,000 a year. That burden is a very heavy burden.

Sir, the Government should give some lead to the country. But do we get any lead from the Government either in economy or any other direction at the present time? So far we have not had it. My hon. friends opposite—and I do not wish to do any injustice to them; I think I will be given credit by most hon. gentlemen in this House for fairness—it does seem to me that my hon. friends opposite are mainly concerned with their political success rather than with the pressing needs of the country at this time, and such a policy can bring no useful result to the Canadian people. There is no doubt, Sir, that our difficulties are great, our problems are serious. I would like to see the Prime Minister—and I do not wish him any ill—I would like to see him, and I would like to see this Government, give a definite lead to the country at the present time, give a definite lead in economy, place frankly before the country the difficulties and the serious nature of the problems that lie immediately ahead of us; and I have faith and confidence in the Canadian people that they will rally to the support of any Government that attempts to meet the necessities of the hour as they should be met. But, Sir, when we look at the Treasury Benches of to-day, when we analyse and study the policy of the Government, when we see the motives that animate it in its public administration of this country's affairs, it offers but little hope for the future. We can only get relief from this condition of affairs when we have had an election, and when the country has had an opportunity to pronounce upon these problems and to elect representatives to this Parliament who will give the Government of this country the efficiency, the vigour, and the courage that it calls for at the present time.

Mr. WILLIAM FOSTER COCKSHUTT (Brantford): Mr. Speaker—

An hon. MEMBER: Six o'clock.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is quite six o'clock. I think I will be able to give the hon. gentleman who made that interjection a few facts before six o'clock is reached.

Before entering upon a reply to my hon. friend who has just taken his seat I wish to make one or two remarks with regard to the Budget that has been brought down. I hope that my hon. friend from Marquette, to whom I have listened very patiently, will be on hand when I have to address certain remarks to himself in reply to certain references he has made with regard to the manufacturers. I just throw that out as a hint to my hon. friend, who is now leaving the chamber, in order that he may kindly return if possible. The Budget, as prepared and presented by the Minister of Finance, I consider is upon the whole one of the best and most pleasing that Canada has had in many years. That may be considered quite a statement for me to make, but we must remember that we are living in very extraordinary times, and therefore we have to fit our views to suit the situation in which we find ourselves placed. That the Minister of Finance should be able to show that we have taken care of all our ordinary expenditure and have a surplus at our command of about $70,000,000 is, I think, an achievement in these days that very few countries can show. The Minister of Finance and I have not seen eye to eye upon every matter of taxation, and it is not to be supposed that we would always agree on such matters. Taxation is never pleasant, and it touches a man in a very sensitive part of his constitution; therefore we must make allowances when we feel that we are taxed severely, knowing that the needs of the treasury are great and must be met regardless of who may be touched and what interests may be affected. I am free to say that I, for one, have felt the taxation very severely. Probably some of my hon. friends opposite will say I did not show it, and I tried not to. I must say, however, that I have been taxed during the past two years in a way that I never expected to live to see; and while my hon. friend from Marquette shouts for more income tax, I do not know where he expects to get very much more than is being collected to-day. I say it, and with some knowledge of the facts, Mr. Speaker, that we have been taxed already to a degree that is affecting our commercial affairs in a very serious way. There is not a bit of doubt about that. All the money that is taken from the pockets of the manufacturer, the merchant or the tradesman is diverted from its ordinary avocation of building up and extending industries, of maintaining those that are here, and of seeing that the workmen are employed. Whenever the money is diverted from the pockets of those who think that they have made it honestly and is put into the Treasury, that money for the time being, is withdrawn from all productive effort; that has been the case to a very large extent in Canada; and I trust that as soon as the Minister of Finance is able to reduce that taxation he will do so. In the meantime we must pay it with the best grace possible, and I for one am endeavouring to do that.

The business profits tax, I am thankful to know, is gone. Probably it was more damaging and dangerous to industry than is the income tax, because the money thus collected was primarily intended for extensions of factories, for the implanting of new industries, and for all that variety of enterprises to which spare capital can be devoted.

The railway situation, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Marquette, is very serious for the country, and has called for a large portion of our revenue to go into channels for which it was not intended.

And now having made these very brief references to the Budget as a whole, I purpose in the brief time at my disposal to devote considerable attention to the august aggregation of Agrarians sitting across the chamber. I regret that in spite of my reference to the hon. member for Marquette he has withdrawn. His speech, as I understand it, was a political speech from start to finish. It was such a speech as probably he has been delivering in New Brunswick recently. It is evidently intended for campaign purposes. The part of his speech that was not devoted to denouncing industry because it was unsuccessful was devoted to opposing those who have made money out of manufacturing. So whether manufacturing was a failure or a success it was just as heartily cursed by the hon. member for Marquette.

I cannot conceive what has imbued apparently so fair-minded a man as the hon. gentleman who leads the Agrarian party to take such a hostile attitude towards all those who are engaged in the industries of this country. He is not attacking merely the few at the head of our industries, he is attacking the bread and butter of every workingman in Canada; and if he succeeds in destroying the industries of this country, as he is evidently bent upon, he is going to throw out of work tens of thousands of workmen from coast to coast. Anybody can see that; everybody knows it. If it were only the three or four or five thousand manufacturers who get the advantage of the protective tariff I would say at once: The number of them does not justify the tariff; take it off. But when you speak of a factory you not only speak of the men at the head of it, of the board of directors, and of the shareholders, but you speak of every man who is at the bench and getting his daily bread by honest toil. I say, Mr. Speaker, that the production of the factory in honest goods is entitled to just as fair consideration, and no fairer, as the production of the field—a statement that cannot be successfully contradicted by any man in this House or outside of it. The honest toil of the workman that goes into the manufactured product and is sold in the markets of the world or in the home market is just as worthy as the toil that goes into the production of a bushel of wheat or oats or a pound of butter. I stand for both. I have always advocated the policy of helping the farm as well as the factory, and I must say that the feeling evinced by our friends in the West is not at all the same as that which prevails in my county. We have cordial co-operation there between the farmers and the manufacturers. Many of the former quit their farms in the winter time and come and work in our factories, leaving a boy, and in some cases a woman to do the chores, thus allowing the man to earn money during the winter season. That is done throughout Ontario in scores of our cities and towns; and surely that is an advantage that should not be forgotten by the farmer himself. Then take the home market. In the city of Brantford alone we consume more of certain lines of farm products than are grown in the county of Brant. Is that no advantage to the farmer? My hon. friend from Marquette bemoans that we cannot send more agricultural products to the markets of the world. He neglected throughout his entire speech to show, as he very well could, that upwards of seventy-five per cent of the agricultural products of Canada are consumed at home. Is that not worth while? Are you going to sacrifice three-quarters of your market for the sake of a doubtful one-quarter in foreign countries? And still that is the policy proposed by the hon. member for Marquette. He has got another guess coming before he is a statesman big enough to govern a country like Canada, if the speech we have heard this afternoon is to be taken as a measure of his statesmanship. He has shown no breadth of vision. He denounced manufacturing and all those engaged in it; apparently he has no good word for anybody not engaged in agriculture. I do not know that he himself follows agriculture very much. Perhaps he does, but I must say he does not look as though he had been working at it lately.

I stand just as four-square for agriculture and the farmer as for manufacturing and the manufacturer. I have shown that in this House on previous occasions, and there have been times in my political career when I have taken off my coat and helped farmer candidates in my own riding. Although three-quarters of the voters lived in the city, we nominated the farmer and got behind him and did our best to elect him.

I will do that again on any occasion when a farmer runs as a citizen. I say he should run as a citizen of Canada, not as a farmer; we shall never get anywhere by class legislation. The workingman is entitled to a seat in this House. I say, all honour to the workingman who can be elected, and where a workingman will run in one of our towns or cities I am prepared to support him if he runs as a citizen of Canada and not as a nominee of Labour. If a manufacturer runs as nominated by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and is backed only by that organization when he is put into the field, I will absolutely refuse to aid him in any way no matter what his views are. Am I not consistent? I have never been put in the field by the manufacturers. I have never sought anything from the Manufacturers' Association; I have never been a member of it and do not suppose I ever will be. Any nominations I have ever had have come more from the workingmen than any one else, and I have had the farmers' support as well; in fact, I received more support from that direction in the last election than I did on any previous occasion. I mention this, Mr. Speaker, only to show that I am prepared in all respects to see that our farmer and rural population get their fair representation in this House. As a result of the elections in 1917, if I remember rightly, we had fifty farmers sitting on this side, all elected not as farmers but as citizens of Canada. Are they not farmers still? Are they not good men upon the land? Are they any less men and citizens of Canada because they did not run particularly in the Agrarian interests? I cannot see it, Mr. Speaker. I say, all honour to these men who have been elected in that way as citizens of Canada, who have taken a broad view of the country's affairs, and who have been of the opinion that this country is too large and too varied in its character to be run in any one particular groove. It seems to me, Sir, that that is sound policy.

The member for Marquette uttered a wail of woe with regard to what the manufacturers have done and are doing. But I do not think he can show that the manufacturers have been unduly grasping, or that they have not been managing their businesses fairly well. I read in a pamphlet containing facts with regard to Canada, just issued—1921—on the second page, that Canada's agricultural wealth in 1919 was estimated at $7,379,299,000, made up as follows: agricultural production, $1,975,841,000; value of farm land, $2,792,299,000; buildings, $927,548,000; implements, $387,079,000; farm live stock, $1,296,602,000. You will note that the agricultural production was $1,975,841,000 in 1919. Now, let me draw the attention of my hon. friends opposite to what manufacturing did in the year previous to that, 1918—because for some reason or other the book is not as up-to-date in the matter of manufacturing as it is in its figures with regard to agriculture. I read from page 42, which gives figures of the industrial census. The capitalization of industries in 1915 was $1,994,103,272 and in 1918, three years later, it had risen to $3,034,301,915.

An hon. MEMBER: Watered stock.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: Well, you may say watered stock, but we can produce the goods as well, as I will show you. The production of industries in 1915 was $1,407,138,140, and in 1918—and let my hon. friends make a note of it—it was $3,458,036,975, or upwards of fifty per cent more than the whole agricultural output of Canada. Does that show any progress?

Mr. MAHARG: Munitions of war.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: We are not talking about munitions; we are talking about products, and there are the figures set forth in a disinterested book, taken from statistics. My hon. friend may twist them as he likes, but the facts are there, and he does not like them. This country is at least half industrial to-day, and in spite of all the efforts of my agrarian friends they are never going to make Canada a purely agrarian country. Canada is not built on those lines.

Mr. WHITE: Is the increase not accounted for by the large increase of prices of manufactured goods? Prices went up 100 per cent in the last five years.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: I admit that, but my hon. friend will also admit that the prices of agricultural products advanced as fast as, if not a little faster than, the prices of manufactured goods.

Mr. WHITE: And they are going down a good deal faster than is the case with the agricultural implements.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: Well, we swallow more of them, I suppose, in our daily round. My hon. friend cannot make any argument with regard to the prices of these articles. The years to which I have referred are both war years, and the prices of all these things were war prices. My hon. friend is a farmer, and he will know that during the war when the manufacturer was denounced for his high prices the farmer could drive in to his neighbouring town or city in the west, and in exchange for the value of a load of produce of any kind take home more goods than he could ever have taken home in pre-war days. That is a statement that cannot be refuted. Of course, I am speaking now of the war time, not of present conditions, because, as the hon. gentleman has pointed out, prices have dropped, and it may be that the agriculturist has suffered more than those engaged in some lines of industry. But if my hon. friends think that the making of goods is all "pie", I advise them to try it. There is the proof of the pudding. They are large sellers of all kinds of goods; I would advise them to try it. They have read some astounding figures with regard to the paint industry and other industries to show that money was being made too fast. The hon. gentleman also read a number of statistics in order to show that some of these industries were making money too slowly and were no good because they could not export to foreign countries. But I have shown, Mr. Speaker, that the industries of Canada produced in 1918 upwards of $3,000,000,000 worth of goods.

Mr. REID (Mackenzie): Will my hon. friend give the figures for 1920?

Mr. COCKSHUTT: I am sorry that I cannot do so; as I have said, the book gives the figures in respect to manufacturing only up to 1918 and of agriculture only up to 1919. Of course, the figures for 1920 are not yet available, in any case.

Mr. GOULD: Is it not possible that in the figures my hon. friend has given, wheat which has been ground and manufactured into flour is counted in with total manufactures?

Mr. COCKSHUTT: This classification is not mine; it is prepared by the authority who has prepared it annually in Toronto for many years, Mr. Frank Yeigh. I should say that what he called manufactured goods are manufactured goods, and it is not unlikely that some of them are the product of the farms. But the more we can manufacture in Canada of all these goods; the more we can send out in highly finished form, the more money we in Canada get for them. That is evident, I think, to all.

I noted the other evening the speech of my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Thomson). Apparently he foreshadowed to some extent what we might expect from the leader of the Agrarian party. He made a very vicious attack upon manufacturers and their products. He denounced us as practically eating up the people, and as bonused, I think he said, to the extent of five or six hundred million dollars—a hundred million dollars did not matter very much. All the same, I think I can show that we have given fairly good results for the money.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle, who, I understand, is chief whip of the Agrarian party, bemoaned very seriously the low price of hides, and I think that bemoaning of his has been echoed by several gentlemen in the Agrarian party. I was thinking of making this suggestion to the Agrarian party, that they take advantage of the low price of hides to lay in one or two new whips for the party. How would that be? I think the hon. member for Qu'Appelle saw that this was coming because he bemoaned the price of hides. Two or three good raw hides could be laid in very cheaply, and I am not sure that they would not have more effect than the hon. member for Qu'Appelle has upon the party at times, because I notice that he has not been able to hold them in subjection at all times during the present session. Sometimes they voted on one side and sometimes on the other. I commend them for that, but that does not look like good whipping, does it? My hon. friend, when he bemoans all this, should realize that the manufacturers, as well as the farmers, have their troubles. I am not sure that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle is either a farmer or a lawyer. Sometimes, I think he applies legal knowledge to his farming, and sometimes I think he applies his farming knowledge to the legal profession. He seems to be in a general state of mixture.

Mr. MAHARG: And a good one.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: It is a good one, is it? There may be differences of opinion as to that. I very much regret that the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar) has not yet come back into the chamber. I got up largely to refute statements that have been made freely by the Agrarian party, not only in this House, but on the platform throughout the country. I always try to have my statements as nearly as possible correct on the subject on which I am speaking. If I make a mistake, that mistake has been made unintentionally and not by device. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle the other night repeated a statement made in this House some six or eight weeks ago, when the Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Guthrie) was giving to the House certain facts with regard to protection to industries, and particularly with regard to the implement business. The shout came back from across the way—and I think my few friends who remain in the chamber will recognize this—that the reason the United Farmer does not buy his implements in Canada, is because the manufacturer will not sell to him. I think my hon. friend recognizes this statement as having been made.

Mr. MAHARG: Certainly.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: The hon. member for Qu'Appelle says that, inasmuch as this statement was not contradicted in the House, he takes it for granted that it is correct. Well, if every part of my hon. friend's speech that was not correct was contradicted, there would not be very much left. The reason why we did not contradict this at the time is because it is against the rules of this House to jump up and butt in on a speaker when he is making, no matter how ridiculous, a statement. The statement that he made is one that cannot be borne out by the facts.

Mr. REID (Mackenzie): Does my hon. friend deny that the manufacturers of Canada refused to sell agricultural implements to the Grain Growers of the West when they first wanted to buy them?

Mr. COCKSHUTT: My hon. friend puts in "when they first wanted to buy them." This statement was made this week in the House, and it has been made several times during this session. I want to say a few words in regard to the matter. When the debate took place in this House about six weeks ago, in which debate the Minister of Militia and Defence took part, the cry came back—and it was distinctly heard on this side—from several hon. members that the reason why the United Farmers did not buy their implements in Canada was because they could not buy them from Canadian manufacturers. That was a statement, not of the past, but of the present. I have had an opportunity, during the interval, to find out a little about that, and I say to the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Reid), who is an honourable man, that the statement is not correct. These gentlemen, as soon as they made the statement, set about to prove it, but a wise man would have proved the fact first and made the statement afterwards. That was not the case with the Agrarian party; they rushed in and then they tried to get the facts to back them up in what they hoped was so. It was only two or three days after that statement was made in the House that their friend, Mr. Rice Jones, whose name, I think my hon. friends will realize, is a comparatively well-known name in the West, wired to a certain firm in Brantford to know if he could be received by that firm on business. The answer went back promptly naming a day and asking him to come on.

Mr. MAHARG: They will all sell now.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: He did not come; but he wired again in a few days to know if he could be received, and again he got an answer: "Come on." Apparently, he was looking for a telegram to say: "We will not meet you and we will not sell to you;" but he did not get it. He got an invitation to come on, and that is the last thing that he wanted. But finally, after great deliberation, and no doubt after some of my hon. friends had been consulted, he came on and the firm on whom he waited said to him: "Submit your proposition with regard to buying implements; we will consider it, and we hope to do business." But up to the last time that I have heard, not a word has come out from the hon. gentleman's friend in the West since. Does that show any strong desire to buy in Ontario? He wanted to be refused, and then he wanted to go down, as the hon. member for Marquette has done, into York-Sunbury and flourish a telegram there and say: "One of the big implement people of Canada has refused to sell agricultural implements to the farmers and that is the reason why we are buying them in the United States." But such was not the answer he received. I have not made any canvass of the manufacturers, but I have stumbled across three who have not only offered to sell, but have sold, to the Grain Growers' organization. Does that prove that the manufacturers of Canada will not sell? When the Farmers' party made that statement, did they mean that every manufacturer had been tried by them and that every manufacturer had refused? If they did not, they had no business to use the words that they did. They might have said: "Some manufacturers will not sell to us." They cannot say that all the manufacturers will not sell to them, because they have not tried them all. Some manufacturers who have wanted and who have tried to sell to them, have not been able to sell very much, so that the Agrarian party have not very much grievance in that regard. The fact of the matter is that their whole opposition is against the implement industry in Canada, and when they can buy an article outside instead of inside the country, they are going to buy the article from an outside manufacturer. As was pointed out in this House on more than one occasion, the only Canadian-made article in a 100-page illustrated catalogue issued by them, was a wogon made in Petrolea. I think, perhaps, my hon. friend may recognize it. Whether they drove too hard a bargain, or whatever was the cause, the business that they gave that manufacturer was not long in shutting up the works, and it is a dead duck to-day. That was practically the only item manufactured in Canada amongst the implements advertised in the whole of their list. The United Farmers were offered the plant for a mere song. But did they buy it? No, they looked over it pretty carefully: It was going at about 30 cents on the dollar, but there was so much money in making wagons that they did not think they would venture even that much in the business, so they did not buy it, and the business has since passed into the hands of another Brantford concern, by whom it is being run at the present time.

The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar) tells us that free trade is a brilliant success with regard to binder twine, barbed wire, and cream separators. We have heard from the Prime Minister what happened to binder twine. If there is any one in the House who should know something about binder twine, I think I should, as I have lived almost within sight of two of the largest factories in Canada for a great many years. Binder twine was put on the free list some 12 or 15 years ago. At that time there were about 20 factories in Canada manufacturing binder twine. That number has since shrunk to three, and one of these is an American concern. The farmers did not even have pity on their own fellows, those who were in the same business as themselves, for the Farmers' Co-operative Binder Twine Company of Brantford was composed of about 4,000 farmers, just as good farmers as anybody, although they may not have been farming on as big a scale as some, but they had their money in this binder twine business, and at one time it was a great success, paying nearly 100 per cent in one year; but so drastic was the call of the West and so fierce were the denunciations of the Western farmers of a 10 per cent duty on binder twine, which would have saved the business, that it was ruined, and the last remnants of that company are now being wound up. These 3,000 or 4,000 farmers who had their money in the concern, and owned it, were put out of business. The same thing happened with regard to a pork packing industry there, owned entirely by farmers. That was put out of business in a comparatively short time, but not by being put on the free list. However, they were handling a farm product that benefits right now, and always has for years, through the tariff. When my hon. friends of the Agrarian party tell us there is no benefit in the tariff to the farmer, I say that they do not know Ontario, although my hon. friend from Maple Creek (Mr. Maharg) ought to know Ontario, for he tells us he was born here. He must have forgotten more than he should have about his native province, when he can stand up and say that the tariff does no good to the Canadian farmer.

Mr. MAHARG: I am proud of it.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: Proud of what you forgot?

Mr. MAHARG: Proud of the province.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: Then I do not see why you do not remember it a little in your policy. The policy you are pursuing is destructive to the farmer of Ontario. You ask the fruit growers of Ontario, of whom there are a large number, what they think of your policy, or the vegetable growers, or the man who produces poultry and eggs. My hon. friend from Marquette tells us that the farmer gets no benefit from the tariff. Why, only recently there were 600 tons of Chinese eggs imported into this country under a duty of 4 cents a dozen. I would not mind seeing the duty put at 10 cents a dozen if it would keep those eggs out.

Mr. GOULD: We do not want that.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: No, because you do not raise chickens, but your chickens may come home to roost some day. I would like to have a little field day with my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Gould). If he will come up our way, we will take a bunch of farmers along to listen to us. He will draw the farmers, and I will try and give them the facts. I say that my hon. friends of the Agrarian party, many of whom came from Ontario, if they will consult the Ontario farmers, will find that the tariff has saved the farmers of Ontario.

My hon. friends talk about rural depopulation. I say that does not exist in our part of the country. Our farmers have all the men they want. My hon. friends tell us, on the one hand, that they cannot sell their products at a profit, that hides are out of sight, that eggs, butter, cheese, wheat and all the rest of it are on the tumble, and then, on the other hand, they say: We will be saved if you populate the country—put more farmers on the land to raise more stuff that cannot be sold. That is a fine piece of argument, a beautiful demonstration of wit. They are going to be saved by getting more people to produce more of the stuff that they cannot sell now at a profit. I cannot imagine any other business in the world that would take that view. If my hon. friend wants to lose money, I would advise him to go into the plough business.

Mr. GOULD: I would cordially invite my hon. friend to come to Assiniboia, as he has invited me out.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: I do not know but what I would feel more at home in my native province, from which my hon. friend also comes. I have not forgot the hole of the pit from whence I was digged. I have spoken in the West. I am not afraid to meet men who do not agree with me; I have met them before, and it may be that I shall meet them again in this House. I am not afraid to give the reason for the faith that is in me, and I say in all sincerity that the protective policy which has been followed in Canada for the past forty years has been to the vast advantage of the farmers of Ontario. That can be proved to a demonstration in every town and city of our province, and on every farm that is adjacent to those towns and cities, in which the farmers sell their produce and get their price. The home market is the best; it is the market that pays for the goods, and takes them off your hands immediately. My hon. friends seem to look upon the home market practically as a liability, instead of as an asset. They say, why cannot the implement manufacturer sell in Canada as cheaply as the United States manufacturer would sell without the duty? Let me tell them a few things that the manufacturer has to meet. In the first place, he has to settle with the Dominion Government on his profits—and that takes a large part of them. Then he has to take out a Dominion charter. Even that is not sufficient; he has to pay for a license in every province in which he does business. I know of one institution, Mr. Speaker, that before it could begin business had to pay out $200,000 in taxes, federal, provincial and municipal. My hon. friends of the Agrarian party propose to let the American manufacturer who is over the border, and who has not paid one cent of these taxes—who has not supported a single one of our municipal institutions, who has not given a dollar to schools, a dollar to churches, a dollar to charity, or a dollar to the province or municipality—come into this country and divide the market with the man who has paid all these things. And they call that a square deal.

Mr. WHITE: How does the manufacturer pay these taxes? Does he not pass them on to the consumer?

Mr. COCKSHUTT: He pays them in cash.

Mr. WHITE: Where does he get the cash?

Mr. COCKSHUTT: As best he can. Sometimes he borrows it.

Mr. WHITE: He adds the taxes to the price of the goods he sells.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: My hon. friend knows that cash comes in slowly at times, especially if you have it loaned out, or have sold goods that are not paid for. My hon. friend who has lived so long in the West knows that there is quite an interval between the time that goods are sold and the time they are paid for. This game of setting the farmer against the city man, and the city man against the farmer, is one that should not be indulged in. It cannot possibly lead to any good.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: Who began it, and who has carried it on in this House during all this debate? I would not have made any of these remarks if hon. gentlemen across the way had not courted them by making a vicious attack upon manufacturers as a body, and in doing so, they attacked every working man and everybody that is employed in our towns and cities and is dependent upon these industries for his living. The question was asked the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar) a few moments ago, whether he stood by the Farmers' platform and believed in the 50 per cent reduction as a preference to British goods. He replied that he certainly did. He has also endorsed the Council of Agriculture's platform, which declares that they want free trade with Britain within five years. I think my hon. friend recognizes that as a correct statement. Well, what does free trade with Britain mean? Free trade with Britain simply means free trade with the world. I have pointed that out on many occasions to my hon. friends, but they cannot see it. Free trade with Britain would simply mean that goods from the United States would go to Liverpool and thence into Canada free; it would mean that German goods would go to Britain and then come free into Canada. And the same would be the case with French and Belgian goods and the products of other countries. My hon. friend shakes his head, but he knows that he could not stop these goods from coming into Canada free if we had free trade with Britain. My hon. friend knows that if three wells are connected by pipes the water will run freely from the first into the third though it has to go through the second; the water of all three will find the same level. So that my hon. friends, when they talk about free trade with Britain, are simply advocating free trade with the world, and if they have not got that fact into their heads they had better do so before they attempt to put this theory of theirs into practice. Let me repeat once more, for the benefit of those hon. gentlemen, that free trade with Britain is free trade with the world.

Those hon. gentlemen have denounced this Government for reckless expenditure and tremendous extravagance, and my hon. friend from Marquette, again, is the one who has principally made these charges. Let me ask the hon. gentleman this question: What about his own farmer government in Ontario? What about their spending proclivities? Has he a word to say in condemnation of them? Well, Sir, if the sample of government we have got from the Farmers in Ontario is to be taken as a fair example of what they would do for the whole of Canada, then, I say, the Lord help the country. The hon. Peter Smith, the great financier, of Ontario, in one year, the first year of his record, floated upwards of $70,000,000 worth of bonds in the name of the province. Think of it, Mr. Speaker. Seventy million dollars' worth of bonds in one year, a sum that ran the whole Dominion of Canada and more than ran it, when I first came into this House not so many years ago. And yet my Farmer friend has the temerity to talk about reckless extravagance! I hope he will send a wire to the Hon. Peter Smith, the Provincial Treasurer of Ontario, calling the attention of that gentleman to his denunciation in this House of reckless expenditures and unwarranted extravagance. Talk about road expenditures! Ask my friend from Hamilton and my friend from Wentworth; they can tell you something about road expenditures, and they have not got any kind of roads yet. Talk about reckless expenditure! Well, there is a guess coming to my hon. friend if he thinks that this country will save much by putting in an aggregation like that which we have in Toronto, which is the most reckless that the province has ever had, by all odds. There is no doubt about that fact, and if the hon. gentleman does not believe it he can come up and look at the Government there. I tell you, Sir, we were caught napping. The expenditure there is the most reckless that the province has ever seen. They imposed new taxation, selecting five different ways. Four of them applied entirely to the cities and the fifth applied partly to the cities and partly to the country. That is the class of taxation they put on. So that if this is an example of what our good friends will give us when they get into power, I think we have gone far enough in the direction of putting our Farmer friends into governments in Canada.

My hon. friend from Marquette says that the cream separator business has been a great success in Canada. Now, what cream separator does my hon. friend buy for his organization? If my information is correct he buys American cream separators, notwithstanding that he tells us the Canadian business was a great success under free trade. I am told—I may be wrong, but that is my information—that his organization is buying separators made in Buffalo. Those hon. gentlemen tell us that barbed wire, which was put on the free list, has also shown its ability to live. Well, I do not know where there is a barbed wire factory operating in Canada to-day. During the war, and practically at the very outset of the war, tens of thousands of tons of barbed wire were wanted for wire entanglements at the front, but we had not a factory in Canada, although, before this article was put upon the free list, there were twenty or thirty factories in this country devoting their attention largely to the barbed wire industry. But the whole industry was wiped out by the placing of this article on the free list, and that is what will happen to other industries if you put their manufactures on the free list. If these industries are ruined in this way the workingmen, who earn their bread by the sweat of their brow in the factories of the Dominion, will have to find homes elsewhere. Surely, in view of this, it will be admitted that the policy which is proposed in this Budget, of moderate protection, is one of the best that can operate in Canada.

Now, I had not intended taking up so much time, but it was my wish to put on Hansard a few facts, with regard to the implement business, as prepared by the Massey-Harris Company and signed by Mr. Thomas Findlay, its president. He gives some interesting facts in a pronouncement submitted to the Finance Department. He outlines the history of the business from the year 1883 and shows that people can buy implements as cheaply in Canada as practically in any other country in the world; and the statement which is freely and often made that implements can be bought in all foreign countries cheaper than at home he proves to be entirely fallacious. He gives here the proof in regard to that and also deals with the statements made by my hon. friend from Victoria and Carleton (Mr. Caldwell) with reference to what could be bought in Maine and in New Brunswick. He puts that hon. gentleman straight in a letter that was addressed to the department, showing that if the prices submitted by the hon. member had been taken advantage of and he had bought his implements in Maine instead of in New Brunswick he would have been money out of pocket. The hon. member is in the House and he probably remembers the figures he gave. The refutation is here in a letter which was sent to the Finance Department showing that my hon. friend, probably with no intentional unfairness, quoted the cash price in one instance and the credit price in the other. Well, Mr. Speaker, it is easy to show a difference if you do that. It costs something to give six months or a year's credit; and there is the interest.

Mr. CALDWELL: Will the hon. gentleman allow me to make a correction?

Mr. COCKSHUTT: I will not object to a short statement, but I do not want a speech.

Mr. CALDWELL: I have the Massey-Harris price list—

Mr. COCKSHUTT: I do not want a price list. If I misrepresent my hon. friend he can correct me.

Mr. CALDWELL: I have the Massey-Harris price list, and—

Mr. SPEAKER (Mr. Steele): Order.

Mr. CALDWELL: —the hon. member is not representing me fairly.

[Mr. Cockshutt.]

Mr. COCKSHUTT: This document has been carefully prepared. The firm went to the trouble of sending a special delegate to Maine to verify all the prices, to compare them with the prices in New Brunswick. When my hon. friend is on the platform down there he ought to be careful, because there may be some one watching him, and while he may get away with things on a platform, where there is no one to refute any wrong statement, nevertheless the facts can afterwards be obtained. And the fact is that, in this instance, he gave the cash price on the one hand and the credit price on the other.

Mr. CALDWELL: That is absolutely false; I gave the cash prices in both cases.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: I am telling the hon. gentleman what is in the letter that was carefully prepared, submitting all the facts. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think I have said enough to show that the policy that has been pursued in Canada with success for so many years in the development of our industries and in the building up of the country—not only the building up of our cities but the development of our natural resources—is one that is eminently in the interests of this country, and there is no doubt that Canada, in that policy is going in the right direction. In the matter of developing not only what may be called the city industries, but our natural resources—such as pulp, paper, minerals; all those things that go to build up a great industrial nation—Canada has embarked upon the right policy. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that if this policy is continued and pursued we will finally emerge from the difficulties and dangers in which the war has left us. Although matters do not look well at the present moment, although there are difficulties and dangers ahead, I believe they will be surmounted by united effort and by an honest determination on the part of our citizens to live and to let live. To raise any cry in the country to the jeopardy of a particular class is a dangerous policy. You may succeed in pulling down, but you will not succeed in building up by any such policy. Therefore I beseech hon. gentlemen on both sides that we should devote ourselves unitedly to the building up of all the industries of Canada, both urban and rural, and that as one united people we go on with a determined, honest effort to make the best of the grand heritage with which Providence has blessed us.

Mr. FREDERICK FORSYTH PARDEE (West Lambton): I entirely agree with the sentiments expressed in his closing remarks by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. We ought all to be united, and we ought all to follow the purpose that will tend to the building up of Canada. The question is, what is the best course to pursue to attain that end? We have listened to the speech of the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt). He is still a high protectionist, and he has expressed again this afternoon the views which he has uttered in this House and in the country session after session, and year after year. I have no doubt the hon. gentleman is absolutely sincere in his views but we on this side cannot see eye to eye with him, and it is for the people of Canada to decide which is the best policy to adopt. The Budget brought down by the Finance Minister may be satisfactory to hon. gentlemen opposite, but there is one thought that occurs to me, as it would accur to the ordinary individual: I cannot quite grasp the legerdemain of the book-keeping which declares that, although the expenditures exceed the revenues by $101,000,000, and that amount has been added to the national debt, therefore we still have a surplus. To the ordinary man such a proposition as that is a conundrum, and I do not believe the country will take very much stock in it.

Now as to the Budget, and the tariff proposals which accompany it, are concerned, I would point out first this fact: for a long time past this Government has maintained that there would be tariff revision; to that end a commission, headed by the Minister of Finance, has travelled from one end of Canada to the other, and I read the statement in one newspaper that evidence had been taken to the extent of two million words. We were told that the tariff would be revised and placed in such a condition as to satisfy the whole of the people of Canada. Following the tariff inquiry Parliament is called, the representatives of the people assemble, the Budget is delivered—and there is no general revision of the tariff such as we were led to believe would take place. What reason is given for this? That on account of some contemplated changes in the tariff of the United States it would not be well to make any change in our own tariff at the present time. Let us see how well that excuse pans out. There was an election in East Elgin on November 22, 1920. The Prime Minister visited that constituency and he said "Elect our candidate and we promise you that when the next session of Parliament comes there will be a revision of the tariff. We are now collecting the necessary information to that end. The Tariff Commission is now going from one end of the country to the other making an inquiry, and we will give you a tariff revision." Parliament met on February 14, last and in the speech from the Throne tariff revision was promised. However it has not taken place. Surely it cannot be argued that delay is due to the Fordney Bill, or the Young Bill. Because, at the very time the Prime Minister spoke, on the occasion alluded to, the terms of the Fordney Bill were known. Then what excuse or logical reason is there for the Government's failure to implement its promise and revise the tariff? The reason, to my mind, is to be found in this fact: The high protectionist friends of the Government descended in a flock upon them and said "Leave the tariff alone if you have the slightest regard for your life." The tariff has been practically left alone. In so far as regards any changes that have gone into effect, these changes mean more taxation and a further raising of the cost of the people's food. What do we find in the Government's Budget proposals? Taxation of the necessities of life; the duties on cocoa, chocolate, and so forth increased; increased taxation applied to arrowroot biscuits, an article that plays an important part in the diet of infants; and a further upward lift to sugars. The Minister of Finance may be proud of such tariff changes as these, but of the articles to which I have alluded there is not one that is not an actual necessity of life, or that does not form part of the ordinary everyday meal of the masses of people. On a former occasion I suggested to the Finance Minister the proper course for him to pursue. I shall not now repeat the views which I then expressed except to say this—If the Government desires to impose taxation let it place that taxation on luxuries, and reduce the imposts on the necessities of life to the greatest extent possible. We have in this country the most serious unrest that Canada has ever witnessed. Will that unrest be allayed by the imposition of further burdens upon the people? No; the right policy to pursue is to make that taxation as low as possible and to leave free of taxation as far as possible the necessities of life. Not very long ago a friend of mine, Mr. McKinnon —who I believe is President of the Manufacturers' Association—found fault with certain of my remarks on the subject of high protection and in reference to my having said that he was "a Haman's gallows man" Mr. McKinnon declared that he did not think I knew what the expression meant. Well, I have not read the book of Esther of late, but my recollection of the Haman incident is this: that Haman was a man who erected a high gallows for the purpose of hanging a certain people and had all his arrangements completed, when suddenly it was found that Haman was not all that he appeared to be, and he was hanged on the very gallows that he had prepared for others. Now, may it not be that the Government, in still pursuing their tariff policy of higher taxation on the necessaries of life, will find themselves in a political sense, in the same plight as Haman, at the impending general election?

I am not going into an analogy on tariffs, but while listening the other day to my hon. friend from Fort William and Rainy River (Mr. Manion) I could not help thinking that of late there seems to have come over this House a tendency to depreciate Great Britain. We are told: Oh, no, you must not copy the fiscal policy of England, because she is becoming decadent. Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that any country that could have done what Great Britain did during the war—in the field, in financing so many of her Allies, in transporting a large proportion of the United States soldiers across the Atlantic, and in furnishing munitions and equipment, and that to-day is able to reduce her national debt by $200,000,000, is not very decadent. To say the least, we need not be ashamed of her being at the head of our Confederation, so to speak. To my mind she has shown that she is absolutely the leading country in the world. Apparently the fiscal arrangements of Great Britain are satisfactory to her people, and I for one do not think that it comes with any very good grace from hon. members to decry Great Britain and, in effect, to say to her people: You do not know what you are doing with your economic system; you ought to do thus and so because we in Canada think you should. It appears to me that in our present position we have ample to occupy our time in looking after our own business without bothering the people of our great Mother Country, and I think that if we stick to a purely Canadian platform we will be fulfilling the duty for which we were sent here by our constituents.

The trouble with Canada, so far as I can make out, is that she needs to extend her foreign trade. If we would build up our manufacturing and farming interests we must find them more markets for the sale of their products. In this connection I would direct attention to the flourish of trumpets with which my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Ballantyne) brought down his statement of operations of his mercantile marine. But it seems to me that it would have been well had the Minister of Finance taken the Minister of Marine and Fisheries gently aside and said to him: You have already spent millions and are to-day proposing to spend more millions on your mercantile marine; but in our present financial condition with our per capita debt almost $300, this is not the time to spend more money on a doubtful venture, and you had better cut your vote in two. Had that been done the money so saved could have been devoted to extending our foreign trade and letting the world know that Canada was on the map and ready with the goods and willing to trade. It has been predicted, and I am sorry to say that I believe the prediction will come true, that between now and another year we will have this mercantile marine, this creation of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, a white elephant on the hands of the people, and he will have to sell the ships for a quarter of what he paid for them. What is the good of repeating the argument? In all the ports of the world you have bottom after bottom absolutely idle. I saw a statement the other day that although these ships of our mercantile marine cost between one and two hundred dollars a ton, there are ships lying in the Clyde to-day which would answer our purposes and which could be bought for $25 a ton. That statement was made by one of the very best informed shipping men in the Dominion after a recent trip to England; I refer to Mr. James Playfair, whom, no doubt, the minister knows. If freights are going to be hard to get, and unremunerative when you do get them, would not our money have been far better spent in the way I have suggested than in building more ships to rust at their berths? It appears to me that had proper allowance been made for depreciation, and so forth, the Minister of Marine would have had no surplus to show on the past year's operations of his mercantile marine; and it is pretty certain that even his present method of book-keeping will not enable him to disguise the deficit next year, which will likely run into many more millions of dollars.

Taking into consideration the deficit on our mercantile marine and also the huge deficit on our railway operations, where are the people of Canada to get off at? How are we going to meet these enormous liabilities? This year our railway deficit is $69,000,000, and next year it is prophesied that it will be increased to $168,000,000. If this Government keeps on with its extravagant waste of the moneys of our people, numbering scarcely 9,000,000, what position shall we be landed in? Have the Government curtailed their extravagance? They have not. As the hon. member for Marquette said to-day, the extravagance still goes on, the money flows like water, and no heed is taken of the present or the future.

In so far as our railways are concerned we have adopted the principle of public ownership. I do not say that the Government did not have to take the railways over, but now that they have got those railways, I say frankly that I have yet to be convinced that government ownership is the proper thing. But if it is to be made a success two factors are essential; in the first place, there must be complete elimination of even a colourable resemblance of the interests that were formally associated with the railways which have now become part of our national system. I have great respect for Mr. D. B. Hanna, and in making these remarks I do not desire to reflect upon him; I think he is a perfectly honourable and a perfectly just man. But, Sir, Mr. Hanna is unfortunate. There is no question about the fact that among the people of the country generally —among Liberals, Conservatives and farmers alike—there is an absolute distrust of Mackenzie and Mann. The people feel that the country was bled, not for the purposes of the Canadian Northern but for the benefit of subsidiary enterprises, thus bringing gain to the pockets of these two men. If therefore, the confidence of the people is to be regained, everything coloured with Mackenzie and Mann must be absolutely taken out of the management of the Government railways. There are rumours abroad to-day—whether or not they are true I do not know—that Sir William Mackenzie is still exceedingly active and exceedingly close to the management of the national railways so far as the Canadian Northern portion of it is concerned. Is it possible that Sir William, with his boundless ambition and with his control of millions on the part of himself and his friends, is to-day angling for the ownership of the Canadian National railways? If anythink like that should happen, I have only to say that it would be a great calamity for the people. Therefore I submit that the first thing to do is to remove all traces of Mackenzie and Mann from the present management of the Canadian National railways.

The next step I deem to be necessary is this: There are many advocates of public ownership in Canada. The principle may be right, and it may be wrong; I have yet to be convinced. But if you are to have public ownership of any enterprise you must have at the head of the management, or included in the board of management, persons who believe in the principle of public ownership. The Government should, therefore at the earliest possible moment, in the reorganization of the management of these public roads, put at the head of that management or include in it men who have the utmost faith in public ownership and are in sympathy with it. If you do not do so, if you have on the board of management men who are entirely out of sympathy with the principle of public ownership, these men are very human, and the best efforts may not be put forth.

Coming to the speech delivered by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Meighen) in this House the other day, I would say that the keynote of it—to be candid, the only note in the speech—was a manifestation of curiosity to know something about hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. The right hon. gentleman said that there was no Liberal party, and the hon. Minister of Militia (Mr. Guthrie) has said: So far as the Liberal party is concerned, we have them all; you have only a remnant. The right hon. gentleman in his speech the other day went from one subject to the other but he always came back to the same theme, "Oh tell me; for heaven's sake tell me, where are the Liberal party? Where are the Farmers' party? What are you going to do? Where do you stand? Please tell me so that I may know." It was like the man who had committed a murder and who had succeeded more or less in putting the thought of it from his mind; but just as he would be feeling that he had everything covered up and that everything was all right, the head of the poor murdered man would pop up and scare him to death. Time and again during the course of my right hon. friend's speech—in the middle, at the end, at the three-quarter pole—he repeated: "Where are the Liberals? Where are the Farmers? What are they going to do?" Well, all I have to say to the right hon. gentleman is this: The Liberals are here; they are quite content, happy, and waiting. The farmers are there, and none of them look to me like a "dilapidated annex." They all look strong; they all look healthy; they are there, content and also waiting. The Prime Minister says there is no Liberal party. He would give us to believe that he has nothing to fear; that the good old Tory party is still uppermost in Canada; that the old flag is still waving. Well, in order to gratify his overweening curiosity I would say to him that there is only one way to get an answer to all this questioning: appeal to the people and let them say. The people do not often go wrong. They are sane, the people of Canada; they know their way about pretty well. They have set ideas, and when they get an idea into their head they generally see that it is carried out. I strongly recommend to the Prime Minister, therefore, that he dissolve the House, go to the country, and say to the people: "I am not sure where these fellows opposite stand, and I want to know; the only way I can possibly know is through your verdict." Let the Government go ahead and try it. It is quite simple.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How would that show where they stand?

Mr. PARDEE: Because the Government would be beaten and this side would be returned to power.

There is nothing in the Budget, Mr. Speaker, having in view a reduction in the cost of living, but there is much in it which will tend to increase the taxation. I propose to vote for the amendment because I think it will help to remedy that state of affairs. Just here, Sir, may I be permitted to make a digression? In 1896 Sir Wilfrid Laurier formed a Cabinet. It was referred to as the "Cabinet of all the talents"; it was a galaxy, Sir, of clever men—of men who had the interests of this country at heart, men of foresight, men who had a proper conception of the needs of this country. In every way it came up to the expectations of the people as well as the expectations of the great Leader who formed it. In this House and in this present Canadian Parliament, we have but one of those men left. I know I voice the sentiment of every man on this side of the House, and I am sure I voice the sentiment of every man on either side and especially the sentiment of the people of the Dominion of Canada, when I say that we all hope and pray that long may he (Mr. Fielding) be spared with his wise counsel, with his keen insight into the needs of the people, to help to guide and shape the destinies of this great Dominion of ours.

Now in closing: Though neither a prophet, nor the son of a prophet, I make this prophecy. Whether an election comes soon or late, an election must come, and the opinion of the people of the Dominion of Canada must be had; and my firm belief is that when that time comes, we shall have, as Minister of Finance in a Liberal Government, the man who brought down the tariff of 1897 and who made this country prosperous and happy, and that under his wise guidance a tariff will be so framed as to meet the needs of all the people of the Dominion. I believe that that will come about, and that he will be the man under whom the economic policies of the Dominion of Canada will be carried out. Let me say this to the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton), that then not only the sun, but the moon and the stars, will shine; not only the rivers, but all the waters will sparkle; and the people of this country will be brought back to an era of prosperity that they have not known for some time.

At Six o'clock, the House took recess.

After Recess

The House resumed at Eight o'clock.

Mr. JOHN HAROLD (Brant): Mr. Speaker, in opening my remarks I desire in the first instance to commend the Finance Minister (Sir Henry Drayton) and the Government for the way in which they have handled the present serious situation in our country. I believe that the wisdom of their policy will become more and more evident to the people of Canada as time goes on.

We are confronted to-day with a number of very serious problems. We have a business depression, and almost unprecedented unemployment throughout the country. The outlook for the sale of our surplus farm products is very unpromising; the revenues of the country are on the decline; our obligations are very great, and I believe, may become greater; our railway rates are too high, and our Government railway lines are losing money. All these things were inevitable after the Great War, with its inflation, and the deflation which had to follow. Canada so far has weathered the storm and in my opinion is giving every promise of establishing her business and finance on a sound basis. We in this country have every reason to be thankful that, considering all we had to go through, we are in such a good position I can recall no other country in the world that can be regarded as being in as good a position as Canada to-day.

The manufacturing industries of our country are under attack at the present time, and those who are engaged in them feel that it is necessary that they should justify their existence. In relation to all the problems which I have just mentioned, I would like to say that I believe that unless the manufacturing industries of this country are properly handled, all these problems will become intensified. In a crisis such as we are facing to-day, when a great issue is raised, it becomes imperative that we should face it frankly and leave no doubt as to where we stand with regard to it. A great issue has been raised; it is an old one, it is true, but what has happened in recent years has made it stand out more prominently than at any time in the past, and the action that we may take as a country to-day is going to be of greater importance to the interest and welfare to the people of Canada than any similar action we might have taken in the past.

It is my intention, Mr. Speaker, to try and make my position perfectly clear upon the issue of protection or free trade, because after all it seems to me that we can take only one of two positions. A man may in his belief in free trade as the proper policy for this country adopt an intermediate course, but by so doing he will definitely align himself as one who proposes to advance towards free trade at the earliest possible moment, and he also must take the ground that this country made a mistake when it ever departed from the policy of free trade. So far as I am concerned, after considerable experience of the tariff and its effects, and after having given some thought to the question, I have come to the conclusion that this country took the only course that it was proper for it to take when it decided to adopt the principle of protection in its fiscal legislation. On that platform I am prepared to stand, as well as behind the policy outlined by the Prime Minister when he spoke to the House a few days ago.

In my opinion we should make some departure from the way in which we now deal with the tariff problems of this country. I believe that the people of this country whose business it is to know about the tariff and its effects upon them should be put in a position where they may better understand the value of the tariff and of protection, where they may understand the burdens that they may carry temporarily or permanently, in order that this policy may be carried out in the interests of the people of Canada as a whole. In order to do this, I feel that our machinery or organization is not fully equipped for handling tariff questions, and the relations of the tariff to the people of Canada and of other countries. If a conference were called—and such a thing might not be a bad idea—comprising representatives of labour, of the manufacturers, the merchants, the railroads and the producing industries such as mining, lumber, etc., together with representatives of the consuming public, they would not discuss the question as we deal with it on the floor of the House. I believe they would try to co-operate and find out what were really the facts, what was the best policy, and how it would affect the various interests involved. Such a conference, in my opinion, would not disperse before unanimously demanding that the Government should establish a tariff board, or a board of experts similar to that in the United States. The member for Victoria and Carleton (Mr. Caldwell) made the statement in the House that the Manufacturers' Association were asking for such a board with powers practically to usurp those of the Government. Such a request was never made by the Manufacturers' Association. I have their resolution here, although I do not propose to read it; but what they did ask for was that a board be appointed that would give information and advice and that would submit all the facts it might gather with regard to the tariff and its relations to the people. We must have a railway board to deal with railway rates, and that is not so complicated or important a matter as the tariff is to this country. Now the Manufacturers' Association, in asking for this board, gives us evidence that they do not desire to conceal the facts with regard to the subject. They desire the facts to be known, and they are prepared to justify their position. They have such faith in their position that they feel it would commend itself to the people of Canada as being one that could be sustained. Hundreds of labour organizations have also passed resolutions requesting that such a board be formed. I might say, for the information of the hon. member for Victoria and Carleton, that in the United States, where the question was first mooted, it was the farmers' organization which was most insistent that such a board should be established, and since it has been formed the work it has done for the country has been so valuable that there has been no thought, on the part of any party, of going back to the old system.

During the months of the fall, representatives of the Government travelled through the country gathering information on the tariff, and I am told that, in bulk, the pages containing the evidence taken are about three feet thick. I believe it would be quite impossible to-day to use that evidence to any great extent because much of it would be out of date. Now, in making this suggestion, I do not reflect in any degree whatever upon the Government, because some time ago a former government, of which several hon. gentlemen at present occupying seats on the Treasury benches were members, endeavoured to bring about such a reform. All I can say is that if they introduce it I cannot see how it could have anything but the heartiest support of members of the House, and I believe it would do a very great deal towards removing the misunderstanding with regard to the effect of our laws upon the people. There is a great fear in minds of many people that at present a few persons sit down in a room and try to decide this question without sufficient facts and an adequate knowledge of the whole situation, and that they are influenced in their decisions by political or other interests. That may or may not be so; we do not know; we are all human. But the tariff is the business of the public, and I feel that the door should be open and that all the facts should be laid before the people. Then we should be sure that whatever action was taken would have the support of the people, and its permanency would contribute greatly to the prosperity of the country.

Now to come to the question of protection. The first thing we must fix in our minds is what is best for the welfare of the country. It is in the interest of no particular class and of no particular province; it is a question of protecting our own nation. Are we not going to use any legitimate weapon to defend ourselves in a world in which practically every other country—I would say every other country—exerts what powers it has to defend and develop itself? Great Britain has her own way of protecting herself, and in her commercial dealings she adopts the same principle as any other country; that is to say, she does that which she considers best for herself. If I believed in free trade I would look upon this as a country that was to be made free for any one to come into it and use its resources in any way he saw fit so long as he did what was legal; and it would seem to me that the logical conclusion, from this statement, would be that there should be the same freedom with regard to immigration, and that we should permit the free entry of any person who desired to come to our shores. But we do not believe in that principle, and I do not see how it is possible for any one to contend that free trade is really a practical question in Canada to-day. If we believe in protection, therefore, the question is not whether it is high, or low, or moderate; it is a principle we apply as a physician would give treatment to a patient. It may be that at times high protection, like strong medicine, is the best thing to administer; but no one contends that it should be habitual. I think that it is best in this country, generally speaking, that we should have a medium or moderate protection; but the defenders of high protection can cite many instances of the success of that policy, particularly in the United States, where it has achieved such splendid results in building up that great country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have tried to follow the debate rather closely, and to pick out some of the points that I felt I was in a position to give special attention to, and in bringing these forward I do not wish it to appear in any way that I think any hon. member is endeavouring to mislead the House. What I do know is, that there is a very great misunderstanding with regard to this whole question; and I do feel that the Government took the right and proper stand when it decided that it was not in the interest of this country that an election should be brought on during the abnormal times that have existed up to the present. I would use as an illustration this fact—that up to a very short time ago, the business interests of this country were in the position where it could be said that they had reaped very large profits. During the time of inflation large paper profits, or book profits, were made; but during the past few months a large part of these profits, and in some instances all the accumulation of the years of the war, have been swept away. Not only that, but many of these companies have paid heavy taxation to the Government and to-day owe the Government amounts of money on which they are paying interest, and they are unable, with their working capital, to continue the operation of their plants. It would not have been fair to the people of this country to have brought on an election at such a time as that; it would be like trying a prisoner without giving him an opportunity to properly place the evidence before an unprejudiced jury. What have we now? We see the other side, and it was only due to the people that this Government should have held off an election until they could see the other side of the question. Not only is the situation as I have stated but for some years, upon a thousand platforms in this country, the position of the great industries of Canada have been grossly misrepresented. By so stating, I do not mean that the misrepresentation has been intentional; it has been through ignorance and a lack of knowledge of the situation. The other evening the member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Thomson) made this astounding statement:

> I say that under the present tariff we shall be paying to the manufacturers of Canada a bonus equal to $500,000,000 a year.

Mr. Speaker, I have tried to find out what the manufacturers' total profits are in Canada in a normal year. I have tried to arrive at it from different angles. The Census Bureau purposely covers that up because they have not the right to bring out those facts; but at least we can find out very easily by inquiry there that the manufacturers cannot make $500,000,000 a year. However, there was another way I tried to ascertain the facts, and that was from the taxation which is paid. We have a business profits tax and that tax has yielded about $40,000,000 a year. But all of that taxation is not on the manufacturing industries—all the great jobbing houses, and all the great retail stores—some of them like the T. Eaton Company and many other large institutions scattered through the length and breadth of the country—also pay that tax. In order to be very generous in the figures that I am using I therefore place the amount that the manufacturers might have paid at $34,000,000. In addition, we have the income tax on those corporations that would come under the business profits tax, that totals $13,400,000 but I would reduce that down to $8,000,000, and it yields a grand total of $42,000,000. Now when you consider that the minimum tax was 10 per cent, and a great many returns it was 25, 50 and 75 per cent, you will see how absurd is the statement, from that standpoint, that the manufactures can be presented with $500,000,000 yearly. My estimate is that the profits on three billion dollars of manufactures would run about $180,000,000, taking such favourable times as we have during the past couple of years, or an average of about 6 per cent net profit on the turn over.

An hon. MEMBER: It is not very much.

Mr. HAROLD: Perhaps not, but there is many a manufacturer who would be very thankful if he were assured that amount, and during this year there will be very few that will enjoy any such profit.

The member for Qu'Appelle in his figures overlooked several very important facts. First, he overlooked the duty on the equipment; next, the duty on the materials, or parts, that enter into the finished article; third, the tax on the companies' profits; fourth, the tax on the dividends. In his computation he also overlooked the fact that the price is not fixed by the United States price plus the duty. In last year's customs returns I find that the importation of machines for manufacturers amounted to over $33,000,000 on which a duty of $8,336,000 was paid; and in looking through the many items in the report of the Customs Department it will be found that probably the largest amount of duties are drawn direct from the manufacturers for their partly finished goods or raw materials. For example on the item of steel the duties paid amounted to $5,623,650; including on angles and parts $1,216,000; on rolled iron for making milling cutters $706,000; also tubing for boilers and beds $578,000; wire $430,000; and fuel $4,865,000. It will therefore be seen how absurd it is for a man to charge a manufacturer with having put in his pocket all the amount of the duty that the schedule calls for on his goods. As a matter of fact he has not that protection. In a great many instances he has not one-half of it, because you must make due allowance for the duty he has to pay on his imported material. Now not only is that a fact, but the manufacturer also reduces the price to a point where internal competition compels him to go; and in all the experience that I have had in any businesses that I am connected with—and I am interested in several companies and know the existing conditions—I do not know of any case in twenty years where the price of the article sold in Canada was regulated by the price in the United States plus the duty. Protection does not make a contribution to a manufacturer any more than it makes a contribution to the employees who work for that industry. It simply makes it possible for the employees to secure work at fair wages, and for the capitalist to employ his capital at a reasonable rate, or otherwise competition will soon bring it down to the point where it is reasonable. There may be isolated instances of abuse, and it is to reach them that we should have a board of inquiry functioning. It has been my opinion that if this House had appointed a board to deal with the tariff and see that it was not abused, instead of appointing the Board of Commerce, we would have made much better progress.

Another thing overlooked was the tax upon profits. In fact, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Thomson) evidently forgot that whilst the business profits tax has been repealed the income tax on corporation profits has not, and that if a company makes a profit of only one per cent on its capital it has to pay ten per cent of that to the Government, less an exemption of $2,000. If the company makes a profit of 10 per cent or 20 per cent the rate is the same. This I think should be amended and a graduated scale should be adopted. There are many companies to-day that will feel that tax very severely, but no complaints have been heard from them.

We will suppose that one man owns a company on the operations of which he makes $50,000 profit. His exemption of $2,000 leaves $48,000 subject to the ten per cent tax, which, plus five per cent supertax, represents a total taxation of $5,040. If he takes that profit out of his business he is taxed again to the extent of $5,050 by the supertax, or $10,090 altogether. And in speaking of the profits we must always remember that it is not the gross profits, it is the actual amount that in the end is left with the owner of the business. The manufacturer is also used as the medium for the collection of this sales tax to a very large extent. He has to pay one and a half per cent on his materials, and if he has sold his goods ahead he has to take another half a cent off his margin in that respect. He has also to collect the sales tax of one and a half per cent on goods sold to jobbers and of three per cent if sold to retailers. When we look over the list of taxes collected from our industries, does it not appear that one should not be too hasty in getting up in this House and saying: We have adopted a platform of free trade in the implements of production? I think it is a mistake for any political party to put itself on record to do anything whatever to this tariff until that party has had an opportunity of investigating its operation and giving the people concerned an opportunity of defending themselves. That is one serious objection I have to the platform of the official Opposition.

Another statement made by the hon. member for Mackenzie was as follows:

> I find that our customs tariff taxation per capita last year was $22.55, whereas the United States tariff taxation per capita was $3.15.

Then he works it out and continues:

> It should also be remembered that to that taxation we are adding a sales tax which will represent a total payment in the case of the average Canadian family of $147.75.

That seems to me a most illogical position to take, because they have claimed no matter whether they can prove it or not, that the rate of duty on goods made in Canada is the amount taken out of the consumer in Canada, even though a manufacturer may sell his goods here as cheap as on the other side; but in the statement referred to they take the amount paid at the frontier as the basis for taxation. It is the high tariff in the United States that keeps out imports and therefore the comparative figures are not such as to permit us to arrive at any conclusion. Then the "average family" illustration is not a fair way of arriving at the expenses of an ordinary family. Why, all one has to do is to read over the list of taxes that were collected through the customs to find that the average family is interested in very little of the articles mentioned in the returns. Our legislation has been directed towards taking the burden off the average family. Take only three items—automobiles, engines, and boilers, and machines, on which customs tax was paid to the extent of $22,500,000. How ridiculous it is to assert that a workingman's family is paying $147 a year in tariff taxation. Any one could take the articles they buy and easily prove that the tariff tax paid is a very small amount indeed.

My good friend from Mackenzie also made this further statement:

> We, on the other hand, claim that while the Government receives $1 from the customs revenue tax, our good friends, the manufacturers, receive $3. If this is not correct, I am sure my good friends sitting opposite will show me that it is not so.

The arguments I have already advanced should make it clear to every hon. member that that could not possibly be so. He would say that we are presenting the manufacturers with $495,000,000; but it is questionable if after their taxation is taken off they have a third of that in profits. These are very unfortunate statements, and I would ask my good friends to investigate a little more closely before they make such comments. What we want is not to throw dust in the eyes of the people; we want to try and take it out. And it does not seem to me that Parliament is the place where statements should be made that have not been very carefully weighed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have been told that in 1898 certain articles were put on the free list, and that the various industries concerned had been able to succeed notwithstanding the loss of protection. I have had a special opportunity of being in touch with some of those industries and I am going to deal with the binder twine situation. In 1898 we imported 2,405,000 pounds; in 1917, 66,000,000 pounds, or more than twenty-five times as much; but that is not an average year. However, I have a statement before me compiled a year ago from the latest returns I could get from the customs and the statistical branch, which shows that the amount of twine made in Canada for the years 1917 and 1918 was 59,000,000 pounds; we imported 115,000,000 pounds and deduct exported 19,000,000 pounds; and the total we used was 155,000,000 pounds.

Deducting from the amount of binder twine made in Canada during those years 59,000,000 pounds, the amount of exports, 19,000,000 pounds, we find that the amount of Canadian-made binder twine used in Canada was 40,000,000 pounds, or only 26 per cent of the total. Now, the member for Qu'Appelle suggested that industries should be encouraged that could work on a 10 per cent protection. Well, all that is asked by the company referred to to-day, the Brantford Cordage Company, is 5 per cent, and they say that the benefits that would accrue to the country would be very great. The extra freight resulting in shipments to the West would amount to over $700,000, and that would go to the benefit of our railways. The importation of the raw material by the west coast from the Philippine Islands would yield freights amounting to $212,500, or a total of $912,500. I give these figures also in order to show the extent to which the protection of the industries of this country has a bearing upon the railway situation. I would place myself on record as saying that we would be wise in affording a small protection to binder twine and believe that if a board or commission would make careful inquiry into the matter and examine the subject in all its bearings, they would recommend that that be done. Here is an item which I clipped out of a western paper last year; it is from Kelwood:

> There is a continued scarcity along the line of gasoline. Binder twine supplies seem hazardous at the present time and old stocks have been depleted by farmers buying in advance. There is a serious shortage of barbed wire.

Then it says:

> The district convention of the Grain Growers' Association will be held at Kelwood on July 10.

I hope that on that occasion this question was taken into serious consideration and that the grain growers there assembled considered whether it is advantageous that Canada's supply of binder twine should come almost entirely from the United States. They take their crop off first and if the necessary provision is not always made to supply Canada we are likely to go seriously short some day. The farmers' organization should take this matter up and try to help the binder twine interests to get reasonable protection, because thereby the interests of the farmers themselves will be protected.

With regard to barbed wire, in 1897, before the duty was taken off, we imported that commodity to the value of $80,467 while in 1920 we imported $2,056,000 worth. In 1918 we manufactured barbed wire only to the value of $300,000 for war purposes. That does not look as if the industry had been a success under free trade. With regard to cream separators, I should like to point out that the situation in this regard was a somewhat peculiar one, due to the fact than many of these cream separators were patented articles and thus had a market in Canada assured to them by agreements with the patentees. Many of the most prominent makes of cream separators have an exclusive sale in Canada, and there is no competition from the same machine on the part of any other country.

In conclusion, I should like to give some reasons why we desire that our industries shall be continued in a vigorous and healthy state. We believe that the industries are essential to our welfare because of the diversified employment they give to our people, the large home market they create for our products and natural resources, and the extent to which they contribute to the strength and development of our railways. Our railways are the arteries, the veins and the capillaries which carry the life blood of commerce back and forth to every part of our Dominion—to the farm, the forest and the mine; and the industries keep alive and add increasing power to our banks and financial institutions. They also indirectly help the professional men and the merchants and affect directly or indirectly practically all other interests and activities of the country. The Government stands by this policy not with any desire to further special interests of the manufacturers, but with the laudable object of attaining the largest measure of unity, prosperity and national upbuilding.

Mr. A. B. McCOIG (Kent): Mr. Speaker, I wish in the first place to congratulate the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Harold) upon his very great effort as a former Liberal to justify his position in remaining as a supporter of the present Administration. I wish also to direct attention to the fact that of the seven important speeches delivered by members supporting the Government five were delivered by former Liberals and supporters of the great Liberal party from 1896 to 1911, when it administered the country's affairs so satisfactorily that in 1911, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Meighen) and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster) could only say throughout the length and breadth of Canada: "Let well enough alone." It looks as if the present Administration is trying to commercialize these five hon. gentlemen, trying to send out word to the different parts of the country that on the Government benches there are five outstanding figures, gentlemen who assisted in carrying on the affairs of Canada when every person was so well pleased with the conduct of the Government that they cried: Let well enough alone; take no chances of doing anything to bring about better times and to increase prosperity throughout the country.

Mr. Speaker, contrast the message to which I have just referred with that handed out by the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) the other day. Did he say: Let well enough alone? No, that was not his cry. These are his words:

[Mr. Harold.]

> Mr. Speaker, we in Canada have a great task before us. The world is sadly out of tune. May we help in restoring harmony? Trust and confidence are sadly lacking. Class interests are advanced with selfish insistence. Unemployment is with us. Faith in our fellow-men is weakened. Doubt of the future is often voiced. And what is the trouble?

What is the trouble, Mr. Speaker? I will endeavour to give you a few reasons for the trouble, after I read the following sentence which was quoted in part by the member for West Lambton (Mr. Pardee) this afternoon. The Minister of Finance said:

> The sun still shines—the rivers still sparkle—our lands are as great and fruitful as ever.

For these three great blessings mentioned by the minister we have to thank Providence, not the Government or the Minister of Finance.

"What is the trouble?" the Minister of Finance asks. All he has to do is to do as hon. gentlemen on this side have already called upon him to do. The people of Canada are so dissatisfied with the present Administration in their conduct of affairs of this country that they are bound to tell him what the trouble is, and, as the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Pardee) said this afternoon, let the Government appeal to the country and they will find out what the trouble is; they will have an answer, and without question they will have it in abundance.

As regards the present Budget, this is what you will find the people in the different cities and towns and in the country districts saying when they are asked if there is anything wrong with the tax which the Government has placed in this Budget of $10 a case on spirits. They say that while the referendum was held in Ontario on April 18, the day that importation into the province was prohibited was May 1, so that some days elapsed allowing the richer people, the men with plenty of money to fill their cellars and attics with all the spirits they might require for future years. Thus, the Government gave the man of wealth an advantage over the man in humble circumstances who might want a case or a bottle of liquor for different reasons. The man in humble circumstances is the man who is now called upon to pay the tax on liquor which he requires for medicinal and other purposes. Yet the Minister of Finance asks: "What is the trouble?"

Hon. gentlemen may laugh, but the people of the country do not consider this Budget any laughing matter. The necessaries of life are being taxed by the present Budget. The Minister of Finance, in his address, stated that oatmeal and flour in packages under 48 pounds would be taxed. The man who has the means can purchase flour in 50 or 100-pound sacks or in barrels, and thus escape paying the tax; but the mechanic, who receives a weekly wage, hands his wages over to his wife on Saturday, and when she goes to the store to buy food, clothing and shoes, and to pay for her rent, light and heat, she is the one who has to pay the tax. She does not buy flour by the hundredweight, but she buys flour 12 or 25 pounds at a time. Is it not ridiculous on the part of the present Administration to say to that woman: "You will have to pay a tax on your flour if you buy it in less than 50 pound packages." Yet the minister asks: "What is the trouble?" The trouble is that the Government is not giving a square deal to the ordinary people of this country, but is giving an advantage to the wealthy classes.

Hon. gentlemen on this side of the House have drawn the attention of the Government to the fact that men on the mail and customs staffs, who are receiving small salaries ranging from only $900 to $1,000, are getting a cut of 25 per cent in their bonus, and yet the Prime Minister (Mr. Meighen) stands up in this House and defends the action of the Administration in that regard. Let me draw the attention of hon. members to the Esti-

9 p.m. mates which we have been passing from time to time. In every department you will find officials, who are drawing salaries ranging from $2,000 to $4,000 a year, receiving a handsome raise of from $100 to $300, and the man with the humble salary is receiving a 25 per cent cut in his bonus. Nevertheless, the Minister of Finance asks: What is the trouble? Let him go to towns and villages where the rural mail is delivered by men under contract at about $850 a year, out of which they have to keep a couple of horses. If these men have not a legal right, they have a moral right to be given an opportunity by this Government to get a living wage with which they may be able to look after their boys and girls and give them an education as any other parent would. But the Government hangs on to that paltry little contract and makes these men go through the storms of winter and heat of summer on a salary of $850 a year. If this Government was worthy of handling the affairs of this great country, the first thing it would do would be to say: "We will give to these men a bonus so that they may raise their families respectably and, perhaps, some of their sons may be outstanding men in the future in this great Dominion of Canada. Yet the Minister of Finance asks: "What is the trouble?"

This afternoon we heard from the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar) and the question was raised as to the difference between the price of hides and the price which the people of Canada have to pay for their footwear. Could anything be more ridiculous than the tremendous difference in price and the way in which the people of Canada are getting the worst of the deal in this respect? Can you blame the consumers of Canada for complaining when they see by the press that hog raisers in this country are getting $9.50 per hundred pounds and when they go into the different butcher shops throughout Canada they find they are charged from 50 to 60 cents a pound for ham and bacon, the same old price that the people were being charged when hogs were selling at $25. Yet the Minister of Finance asks: "What is the trouble?" Beef is 10 cents per pound on foot and yet the same old price is being charged by the abattoirs for the goods that we receive from them. Yet my hon. friend wants to know what the trouble is. Farmers who produce tobacco are receiving seven or eight cents per pound for it today and yet users of tobacco are paying the same old price for the manufactured article.

The Prime Minister, when he addressed the House on this debate the other day referred in a rather deprecating manner to the question of cream separators. Let me say for the benefit of the Prime Minister and the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) who spoke this afternoon that I drew the attention of this Parliament a number of years ago to the fact that cream separators were coming in free, and that as the hon. member for Brantford is well aware, when the Canadian manufacturers were getting out their price lists year after year, cream separators, on account of their being allowed into Canada free of duty, were the only articles on their lists that were not advanced, whereas, every other manufactured article that was protected, was advanced in price from 10 to 25 per cent. That is the point that we wanted to convey to the people of Canada and not the matter of what cream separators are selling at on the two sides of the international boundary. The Prime Minister referred in the most complimentary terms to Mr. Finley of the Massey-Harris Company. When he was referring to Mr. Finley's statement with respect to the cost of cream separators, with the abundant knowledge that that gentleman has of the manufacture of agricultural implements in Canada, why did he not ask Mr. Finley of that great corporation why binders and other agricultural implements are 10 per cent higher in price this year than they were in 1920, in face of the fact that wages of the labouring men in those factories have been cut at least once or twice during the last six months? Let me give this illustration by way of comparison for the benefit of the hon. member for Brantford. If a man wants to buy a binder to-day the price is $300. If he wanted to buy a binder last year, the price was in the neighbourhood of $250.

If he was going to pay for the binder last year with the oats he raised, taking the average crop as fifty bushels to the acre, it would take the crop off five acres of land, at last year's price of $1 a bushel, to pay for the binder, whereas to pay for the binder this year, taking fifty bushels to the acre, at thirty cents a bushel, which is the price oats are now selling for, it would take the crop off 20 acres to pay for that binder at present prices. That means that four times the amount of crop has to be harvested to pay for the same implement, yet the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) asks our Progressive friends, why they do not go into the manufacturing business. I say to the hon. member for Brantford: why do you not go into the farming business, if there is so much money in it?

I am glad to see the Minister of Militia in his seat. I wish to read him a short extract from his speech the other day:

> Now, Mr. Speaker, we are told, on the other hand, that there will be no more war, and the cry is in some quarters: Wipe out all military expenditure. That cry is popular, very popular among some elements in this and every other country. It is particularly pleasant to the ear of the Bolshevist, to the ear of the Red and to the crowd which gathers around the soap-box orator at the street corners in our big cities.

I wish to read another extract, which I have read on a previous occasion, to illustrate the point I am endeavouring to make. It is an extract from an article which was sent to the New York World by the present member for King's (Sir Robert Borden):

> I sympathise most deeply and earnestly with every reasonable proposal for the reduction of armaments. Untold sacrifices endured in the great war will have been wholly in vain if the nations are still to compete in a mad struggle for supremacy in the power of destruction. The economic folly of such a policy is too manifest to be gainsaid. Is there not a sorrowful and bitter protest from millions on the verge of starvation in Europe and which must ring in the ears of every thoughtful person.

Those are the words of the right hon. gentleman who at one time was Prime Minister of this country. I want to follow that up by referring to an article that appeared in the Toronto Globe of the very same date. It is a despatch from the city of Hamilton and is headed "Father is Sick, Kiddies Starve—Sad Case of Distress Found in a Home on Mount Hamilton." Here, right at our doors, we have a family on the verge of starvation, yet the Minister of Militia says that we have to spend millions more of the people's money to satisfy a few gentlemen in the department of which he is in charge. I say that the people of this country have no wish to rival any of the European countries in seeing how many millions of dollars they can spend on the militia. This is an agricultural country, a manufacturing country —not a military country. I want to quote a brief extract from a message that was sent to the soldiers of the Canadian Expeditionary Forces during the war, signed by the Minister of Militia:

> Canada has to supply herself and the Allies with food. Men will be retained to secure the necessary production.

I believe that those words of the Minister of Militia will be received with a great deal more satisfaction by the people of this country than the message he gave to the Canadian people the other night.

Hon. gentlemen on the other side,—particularly the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Casselman), the other night,—have made the statement and disseminated it through the press that there had been no scandals in this country since the Conservative party came into power. When I heard the hon. member for Dundas make that statement I thought that though he may be up in years, he must be young in political experience, because many hon. members now in the House will remember the binocular scandal, and the drug scandal, for his connection with which one hon. gentleman opposite was read out of the party by the Prime Minister of the day. Surely no one who is a real Canadian has forgotten these scandals, and the Allison scandal, for they were, so to speak, the most scandalous scandals we ever had in this country. Hon. members sure have not forgotten the horse scandals, and particularly the hon. member for Dundas, because I think it was the Conservative member for the county of Peel in the Provincial Legislature who was so anxious at that time to supply the demand for horses for army purposes that when he could not get horses of the desired colour, and when grey horses came along, he had them painted black so as to meet the military requirements. Surely hon. gentlemen will not forget the number of days we sat in the Public Accounts Committee listening to evidence with regard to horse scandals in the province of Nova Scotia, that little province that sends so many good men to Parliament, but which on that occasion must have slipped a cog. We all remember how thousands of dollars of the people's money were spent in purchasing horses that were only fit to be sold to fertilizer plants, or make mucilage to place on the Government stamps, for which there was a great demand at that time. The horse scandals in that province were so bad that the Prime Minister read out of the party the gentleman who then represented the county of King's, N.S. Yet, Mr. Speaker, we find that this gentleman, who was incapable of purchasing horses for the Government to mount our brave boys overseas in their fight with the Hun, was selected after showing his wonderful ability as a purchasing agent for horses to be the new Superintendent of Resources, for the Canadian National railways, in Chicago—one of the most important positions in connection with our great railway system, on which we had the enormous deficit last year of $70,000,000, which the people of this country have to put up. And my hon. friend the Minister of Finance asks what is the trouble? What is the trouble? Do you mean to say that if a man is not fit to represent a constituency in this Parliament he is able to represent the Government in one of the most important positions in connection with one of the greatest railway systems in the world? These are some of the things which are causing discontent amongst our people, and which are responsible for the demand that this Government appeal to the country so that the people may have an opportunity of expressing themselves on the question as to who shall administer the affairs of Canada.

There is another matter to which I wish to refer. The right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster) the other day said that the duties on agricultural implements were lower to-day than they were when the Liberals were in power. Let me tell my hon. friend that the request for free tractors to assist in producing greater crops in this country was first made in this Parliament by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, and it was turned down by the Government until public opinion became so strong in favour of that measure that the Government had to grant our request and allow farm tractors to come in free.

Another important matter which was brought to the attention of Parliament by this side of the House was the question of supplying tractor ditchers. The Government at first were loathe to take action in this matter, but when the demand from the Minister of Agriculture of every province became insistent they finally decided that it was in the interests of increased production to allow these machines, which were not manufactured in this country, to come in free of duty. But what was done? The limit was fixed at $3,000 at which they could come in free. These machines sold for $2,600 and $2,800, but the moment the price went beyond $3,000 the Government stopped their admission because they would not amend their legislation in keeping with the advanced prices of these tractor ditchers.

Now, Sir, what did the Government do during the by-election in the county of Bruce? The greatest argument they advanced was that they were looking after the interests of the farmers and were doing everything possible to further agriculture in this country. We have requested the expert of the Finance Department to increase the limit at which these tractors may come in free, and I was on the deputation with the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross), which waited on the Minister of Agriculture and drew this matter forcibly to his attention, pointing out the importance and necessity of so amending the Act as to admit these tractor ditchers. To-day the tile factories are loaded up with tile, because they wanted to give employment to the labouring men in that industry and there is a great demand for tile drainage throughout Ontario. But the prices of these tractor ditchers are now prohibitory, as may be seen from the fact that only two of these machines were imported in 1920 and only one in 1921 from the Buckeye Tractor Company. These were both repaired machines, and were sold for less than $3,000. The importance of proper drainage is so great that the Provincial Government of Ontario, who were so greatly criticised to-day by the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt), thought it proper to increase the loan, which they give to every farmer who wants to tile-drain his land, from $1,000 per hundred acres to $2,000. That legislation has gone into effect and the farmers availed themselves of this great privilege last year, obtaining the money necessary for this purpose, to be paid back in twenty years at 5½ per cent. This Government claim that they are doing everything possible to assist the producers of this country, but they pay little attention to the requirements of the farmers. Nor do they heed the requests that are made of them from time to time. In the face of these facts, Mr. Speaker, when we find in every city and town in this great Dominion hundreds of men out of employment, and, as I said a few moments ago, families in the city of Hamilton starving; when we find dissatisfaction rampant in every province of the Dominion; and when as the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) himself states. There is nothing but trouble, I think the following lines might well be taken to heart by the Government, if they are capable of appreciating the gravity of the situation to-day:

For the debt we owe is a mighty one,
'Twill last for countless years,
For the boys who have helped to defeat the Hun
Can't be paid with cheers,
It's up to you to lend a hand
'Tis a duty none can shirk;
So wave your flags and start your bands
But get these boys to work.

Mr. PETER McGIBBON (Muskoka): We have all listened with a great deal of pleasure to the stump speech of the hon. member for Kent (Mr. McCoig). That hon. gentleman, like many others who have spoken in the debate on the other side of the House, has chosen rather to make a political speech than to endeavour to contribute in some way to the solution of the great problems laid before the country by the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton). Indeed, Sir, practically the whole burden of the song on the other side has been criticism of the Militia Department, the merchant marine and the dry dock at Victoria. That, practically speaking, has been the sole contribution of many hon. members opposite to the solution of the problems with which Canada is confronted to-day. The hon. member who has just taken his seat avoided, of course, any reference to protection as it applies to tobacco, just as the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Pardee) this afternoon, in that beautiful little speech of his which was as remarkable for its lack of facts as for its weakness of argument, avoided any criticism of protection of the industries in his constituency. The hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Euler) skilfully skates around the question of protection as it affects the industries in his county; and a Farmer representative last night, we found asking for protection on potatoes and pulpwood. But the great problems that are before the country have been practically passed over.

Now, what do we find? The Minister of Finance has presented a statement of the business conditions in this country which is well worthy of the earnest consideration of every member of Parliament. I do not think I am saying anything out of the way when I assert that the minister's statement has been a surprise both to the Opposition and to a great many people in the country—a surprise to the Opposition, because they did not expect such a favourable statement of the finances of Canada to-day, a statement that has left them, so far as argument is concerned, utterly helpless in discussing the Budget as presented to the House. In the statement of revenue, for the past fiscal year, which has been laid before us, we find for excise $37,000,000. That has never been questioned by any man in this House. Hon. members have not suggested that it be either added to or subtracted from. And the revenue from the Post Office, amounting to $26,000,000, has met with the same approval. The business profits tax, $40,000,000, has not been adversely criticized, and the income tax of $46,500,000 has apparently suited every one in the House. Inland revenue, amounting to $79,000,000 odd, finds no objection in any quarter, nor have the other war taxes totalling $2,355,000. The only question in the whole category that has aroused any criticism is that relating to the customs revenue amounting to $163,000,000. And what have been the criticisms in that respect? Certainly no one has suggested that the revenue has been too small, and it has not been contended, either, that it is too large. It is true that statements have been made by the member for Mackenzie (Mr. Reid) and by the member for West Lambton this afternoon, to the effect that an undue burden was placed upon the poorer classes of the country. Well, that statement only exemplifies one thing, and that is that these gentlemen have not taken the trouble to acquire a true knowledge of the facts.

They have not had the inclination to get the facts and certainly do not know them. Now, Mr. Speaker, if any man will take the trouble to go through the list of items—I placed them on Hansard last year—he will ascertain that over $100,000,000 of the $170,000,000 taken in at that time was paid practically on the articles which are only bought and consumed by the wealthier people of this country. I submit that when statements are made, such as were made by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Reid), that there was a tax of $110 on every family of five in this country it shows a deplorable lack of the actual conditions as they exist in regard to the revenue. We have had some criticisms too in regard to customs duties. I followed the member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar) very carefully this afternoon to find out what means of obtaining revenue he would suggest if the present method of customs duties from which we derive $165,000,000 were abolished, as my hon. friend has been advocating its abolition to a great degree. He has presented to the people of this country a number of very plausible suggestions. One was the imposition of a land tax, another direct taxation, and so on.

Mr. Speaker, I am quite certain that the people of Canada, for the time being at least, have had their fill of direct taxation. We gave them some of it last year in the form of a luxury tax, and any government that would again attempt to tax the people in that form would, in my opinion, be very unwise. Let us analyse the proposition for a moment and see what it would mean. It means this: If you are going to do away with that tax you must place taxation somewhere else, because there has been no suggestion here that any other sources of revenue than those which have been presented by the Finance Minister can be secured to carry on the affairs of the country. If you are going to raise the desired revenue by some other means what means are available? The imposition of a land tax was proposed for a while but that idea has long since been abandoned—at least I have not heard anything of it for the last twelve months. That proposition would mean a tax of $300 on every hundred-acre farm in this country. On the valuation it would mean a tax of 2½ per cent. It would mean about $225 on every $5,000 farm; and if it were a head tax it would represent something like $22 for every man, woman and child in Canada. I submit there is no reasonable way by which the revenue which we need can be collected so easily, and bear so lightly upon the people as by the present method. I make the assertion that this country to-day is carrying its great war debt as easily as any country in the world that was involved in the late war. It is true that we have a railroad problem, but for this I refuse to have the party on this side held responsible. When hon. members opposite first guaranteed the bonds of the Canadian Northern from Port Arthur east, they fastened, for all time to come, a railway problem upon this country as far as that road was concerned; and when they started in to build the Grand Trunk Pacific—fifty years before its time—they placed upon this country a debt and an obligation which is going to be a burden for many a day. We have been criticised by some hon. gentlemen opposite in reference to these obligations, but I am going to place those obligations where they rightly belong, and I say that those who were the means of creating them must assume the responsibility for them.

The problems before the country, as I see them, may be boiled down to two. One is that this Government has to carry on public affairs and secure enough money to pay our way as we go. The second is: what policy must be pursued in order to develop this nation in the northern part of the continent of America? As to the first, there is no means suggested whereby the amount of money we need can be so easily raised and so lightly carried by the people as by the present method. With regard to the other question, I submit that the people of the Dominion over forty years ago settled once and for all the policy that must be pursued by Canada as long as it is a nation. That policy is the policy of protection. It was inaugurated in the year 1878, and from that time onward has never been departed from. I look upon protection as nothing more or less than an instrument for the development of the natural resources of this country. Looking at the question from that standpoint I maintain that the policy was settled long ago—settled not only by Canada, but by the United States and almost every other country in the world—and that instrument for protection and for development is going to remain in existence as far as Canada is concerned.

I am sorry the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) is not in his seat because he made some observations in his speech the other day that I would like to answer.

On that occasion he spoke about the trade of Britain increasing so rapidly. In spite of the fact that that trade has suffered a decline during the last month greater than did the trade of Canada, it is still enormous. But Mr. Speaker, he forgot to tell —or he did not tell if he knew—that the one great cause of that trade was that nearly all the assets of the other countries of Europe are at the present time—and have been since the war—hypothecated in the Bank of England. Our Canadian manufacturers know that. They know that when they tried to give lines of credit to certain countries in Europe they were prohibited from doing so by the fact that the securities of those countries were nearly all tied up in the Bank of England, and that institution insisted that the trade should go to English traders and English manufacturers. We must bear in mind the fact that when we talk about developing our export trade with European countries it is a question of finance; and I think every man in this House will agree that as far as finance is concerned there are no better or abler people on earth than the people of the British Isles. In this connection I would like to quote a statement made by right Hon. Mr. Runciman in January, 1916, when delivering his budget. He said:

> It will, in fact, be apparent to all close observers, that a country which fails to regulate and foster its industries in the national interest cannot, in the nature of things, long survive the rivalry of another country where the industries are so regulated and so fostered.

That is a statement by one of the leading men in the country which my hon. friend from Red Deer reveres so much. Let me now quote a statement by Abraham Lincoln. That great statesman on one occasion said:

> The tariff is a question of national housekeeping. It is to the Government what replenishing the meal tub is to the family.

I might also quote statements from some of my hon. friend's favourite authors, such as John Stuart Mill who says, speaking of infant industries:

> That a tax on infant industries for a time is the easiest way that a nation can carry them into development.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want for a few moments— and only for a few moments, for I will be brief—to place before this House some ways in which this policy has operated not only in Canada but in the United States. I find from statistics compiled by the Manufacturers' Association that we have $400,000,000 of United States capital invested in this country in 600 branch factories employing no less than 87,000 men. Does any hon. member think we would have got those industries here if it had not been for our protective tariff? We have in addition $2,000,000,000 of British capital, and we have all told 700,000 hands employed in our industries. They are paying out to our people no less than $550,000,000 in wages. I ask hon. members opposite if they think that is not worth something to Canada? I would also remind them that according to the statistics our field crops in 1920 were worth $1,455,000,000. How much of that huge amount was exported? Only $271,000,000 worth. Where is their great market? The hon. member for Marquette to-day wanted to know where the manufacturer was going to sell his goods. I say to him: If you wipe out your home market where would the Canadian farmer sell his products? These two industries must be developed side by side to the equal benefit of both. Last year the manufacturers of this country spent $31,000,000 in wages for manufacturing food products, and employed 38,000 persons.

In that connection I want to indicate along what lines I think this country should be developed. The hon. member for Marquette this afternoon laid great stress on the American market. Unquestionably that is a great market and we would like to get into it. But how did they create that market? Did they not create it in the indentical way that I am advocating to-night? Is not the home market created by means of a protective tariff, that being the instrument which developed that enormous home market of 111,000,000 people to-day? He finds fault because we cannot get in there. Is it not natural for them to keep their market for themselves? And is it not natural for us to follow in their footsteps and create a market here along the same lines, that is, a market that they cannot take from us, which is the market that in the end will be most beneficial to Canada? Why should we hesitate to do that? Does any man doubt the ability of Canadians to do it? Compare our record in the war—I mean in a business sense. Canada with one-fifteenth of the population of the United States did one-fifth as much business. Does that indicate that we are behind them in resources or resourcefulness in developing industry and trade? It is just the opposite. I could give figures showing the enormous increase in our foreign trade, but I will not detain the House.

The hon. member for Victoria and Carleton (Mr. Caldwell) the other night stated that he wanted protection on potatoes and pulpwood. I would remind him that it is only about eleven or twelve years ago since the provinces of Ontario and Quebec forbade the export of pulpwood to the American Republic. What is the result? I can show it here in a very few figures. In 1890, for example, Canada's export of pulp and paper totalled $120. I repeat the figure —$120. Last year it totalled $160,000,000. That, I contend, is the direct result of protection of that industry. In 1919 that industry employed 26,765 hands. Was it not good business to place an embargo on the export of pulpwood? Have we not created an industry in this country that is worth having and will be worth having for many years to come?

My good friend from Fort William and Rainy River (Mr. Manion) the other night presented some very interesting figures in regard to the iron and steel industry, and he will pardon me, I am sure, if I supplement them a little because it is more or less essential to my argument that I should do so. The iron and steel industry of the United States had a very severe struggle in the early days. The first attempt to introduce bessemer steel was in Milwaukee and I am told it was a failure after hundreds of millions of dollars had been invested in the enterprise. The second works were started at Troy, and I am informed that the buildings were subsequently sold for as many thousand dollars as millions were put into them. The next was the Freedom iron works in Pennsylvania, which went bankrupt, next the Vulcan steel works were started at St. Louis and failed, and following them steel mills were established at Joliette, with the same result. That is the history of the attempt to establish the iron and steel industry in the United States without sufficient protection. Then the United States increased the protective duty and what happened? I do not think that I have as late figures as those presented by my hon. friend from Fort William and Rainy River, but mine are all pre-war figures, because I did not think it fair to take anything during and after the war. We are told, for example, —and I think my hon. friend's information is authoritative—that steel rails dropped from $170 to $27.50 a ton. But I am not concerned with that figure. I know it may be contended that the Bessemer steel rails were not as good as the iron rails, that they crystallized, and so on. The point is that in 1907 there was an output of 51,000,000 tons, 56,000 workmen were employed, and they were paid $31,500,000 in wages. Was that good business for the United States or was it not?

I might also cite the plate glass industry, whose history is more or less similar. The first attempt to establish the plate glass industry was in New Albany, Indiana, but after spending hundreds of thousands of dollars the firm went bankrupt. Next an attempt was made at Crystal City, Mexico, but it suffered the same fate. Another factory was started at Louisville, Kentucky, in 1872, and that also failed, as did a factory started at Jefferson, Indiana. Finally, sufficient protection was accorded the industry, and to-day it is one of the greatest in the United States; and incidentally the price of plate glass fell from $2.50 per square foot to 59 cents. And, Mr. Speaker, I would interject here that wherever you have a commodity controlled by an importer you always have the highest price because of lack of competition, for it is competition within your own country that brings down prices and gives you cheaper goods.

Then take the pineapple industry in the United States, the history of which will be of interest to our farmer friends. The industry is just developing, but before a duty was placed on pineapples only 100-000 crates were grown in the United States; in ten years that production has increased to over 1,000,000 crates. The same thing happened in respect to the wire nail industry. Prior to 1883 there was a tariff on wire nails of one cent a pound; they were selling at 7 and 8 cents a pound, and were practically all imported. In 1900 the duty was doubled, 5,000,000 kegs were made in the United States and the price dropped to 2 cents. The same happened in respect to sugar. When the Dingley tariff was passed in 1897 there were only six sugar factories in the United States, and the output was only 37,500 tons. In 1910 there were 65 factories and over 400,000 tons were produced annually; there was a fixed investment of $100,000,000 in the industry and $40,000,000 was paid out to the farmers and the labour employed in connection with it. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, if that is not the kind of industry that is worth something to a country? In ten years the United States sugar factories produced 24,245,000 tons of sugar and paid $121,000,000 in wages.

Practically the same thing happened in respect to the lemon industry in the United States: after the duty was put on, the output jumped from 30,000,000 to 133,000,000 pounds. In respect to tin plate the same development occurred. In 1897 there was hardly a kid glove made in the United States. In that year the duty was put on of $4 per dozen and the output grew from 5 per cent in 1897, to 90 per cent in 1910, the industry now employs 25,000 people, and the price of gloves fell from $2.50 and $3 to $1.50. Such is the history of a few of the leading industries of the United States; one industry after another has been scientifically developed until it has got on its feet. In those cases where the tariff was wiped away it was found that the industries could not get on their feet, subjected as they were to the competition of the world.

In order to follow up the line of my argument I wish to refer for a moment to the British Isles—not as suggested by the member for West Lambton (Mr. Pardee) this afternoon, in a disparaging way, but in order to compare the state of development, prosperity and wages in countries where industries are scientifically protected with similar conditions in countries where no such protection has been afforded. I wish the hon. member for Red Deer was in his seat because I have a couple of quotations from some of his favourite authors. One is Mr. John Bright, who said in 1886 that the one way by which free competition could be met and home industries preserved was by cheap labour. I would like to ask the hon. member for Red Deer what his opinion is with regard to that statement. In 1905 Mr. Asquith said: "The necessity for our prosperity is cheap labour." I do not know what other hon. members think, Mr. Speaker, but so far as I am concerned I disagree with both these statements. I say that times are always harder when goods are cheap, measured by the money standard, and times are always best when the value of commodities is based upon favourable labour conditions. I want to go further, Mr. Speaker, and give you some of the wages paid in England and the United States in 1910, for purposes of comparison:

	England.	United States.
Masons	$1.68	$4.40
Carpenters	1.60	2.88
Painters	1.44	2.80
Plumbers	1.60	3.52
Machinists	1.36	2.16
Hod carriers	1.04	2.32

Why this difference between the wages paid in the United States and those paid in Great Britain? The reason, I submit, is the basis of our economic condition; it is the basis of all our prosperity and of all our wealth. In this connection I have some further figures with regard to various industries in the United Kingdom and in the United States, taken from a work written by two Oxford graduates, both of them Englishmen, I think—certainly they were not Americans. This statement, which shows the wealth produced per man per year in each of the industries named in the respective countries, is as follows:

	United Kingdom	United States
Boot and shoe trade	£171	£516
Cocoa, chocolate, confectionery	296	662
Cutlery and tools	164	323
Clothing	158	484
Hats and caps	149	414
Hosiery	184	309
Leather	686	1054
Matches	223	625
Paper	330	705
Printing and publishing	396	572

Now, what does that signify? I have a long list before me which I could read, but the point I want to emphasize is that the amount of wealth produced per man per year on the American continent has been greater than that produced in Great Britain, and as a result, wages in the United States are greater and the employees there make more money. It is, then, the amount of wealth produced per man which is the basis of all our prosperity. That point, Mr. Speaker, is, I think, worth emphasizing.

I have here some further figures which go to substantiate my argument. The following statement of the number of tons of coal produced per annum per person employed in the countries named should be of interest:

	United Kingdom	United States	Australia	New Zealand	Canada
1886-90	312	400	333	359	341
1910	257	618	449	478	453

The average value of coal per ton at the pit's mouth produced in the United Kingdom, United States, Australia and New Zealand for the years named was as follows:

	United Kingdom	United States	Australia	New Zealand
	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.
1886	4 10	6 4¼	...	—
1890	8 3	5 2¾	8 6	11 0
1895	6 0½	4 9¼	6 4	11 1
1900	10 9¾	5 3¾	6 0	10 9
1905	6 11½	5 8	6 2	10 7
1910	8 2¼	5 10¼	7 6½	11 1¼

This bears out my statement that the amount of wealth produced per person is the real basis of prosperity. The point I want to make is this—and you can get the same figures in reference to Germany—the amount of wealth produced per person is greatest in the countries which protect themselves and their own industries.

I repeat, I am sorry the hon. member for Red Deer is not in his seat because I have some other figures that I should like to call to his attention, but it is not worth while putting them on Hansard. My point is that from the time Great Britain inaugurated free trade until the present time, her exports to protected countries have been diminishing year after year and her imports from the same countries have been increasing. We know that she had an adverse balance of trade, but there is more than that in the matter. If you would subtract from her adverse balance of trade, her trade with her colonies and countries without a protective tariff, you would find that the showing would be still worse. She made up her loss to protected countries by increasing her trade with her colonies and countries without a protective tariff. Let me carry the argument a little further. If all these countries protect themselves against her, it can be readily seen how Great Britain is going to be handicapped in trade, and I do not wonder that, at the present time, she is rapidly drifting towards protection. I have a great deal of admiration for the people of Great Britain; I think they are the best and most resourceful people on earth; I am not a prophet, but I do not think it will be many years before free trade in England will be a thing of the past. I think it was Chamberlain who said that "a nation that ties its hands, gets pretty well cuffed." The hon. member for Fort William and Rainy River (Mr. Manion) said the other night: "She loses her power of bargaining when she throws away the protective instrument that she has."

I have some facts regarding Great Britain's trade, navigation laws and so on, but I will not weary the House by presenting them. Before I close, I want to point out that even Great Britain developed her industrial conditions under protection. When she threw away protection in 1849, she was the most highly developed industrial country in the world, and, consequently, she was capable, not only of looking after herself, but of getting a great deal of the business of the world. If you analyse her statistics of trade following that date, you will find that when gold was found in California in 1850 or 1851, Great Britain secured a great deal of the business and her exports to the United States increased by 94 per cent. When gold was found in Australia, Great Britain again got a great deal of the business and her export trade to Australia increased by 360 per cent, while her export trade with the rest of the world increased by only 22 per cent. The same thing happened when gold was discovered in the Transvaal and later on in West Australia, but I will not weary the House with the figures.

I should like to refer for a few moments to our former friends and see what we have done for them. I will not refer to the reduction which this Government has made for their benefit in agricultural implements. It is not necessary for me to refer to the list of expenditures that we have, running into millions every year, on agriculture, and in my opinion, more should be spent. But when they object, as they did the other night, to giving Roumania a credit of $25,000,000 with which to buy our manufactured products, I want to remind them, as Sir Thomas White did a year ago, of the $300,000,000 advanced by this Government to make possible the marketing of the products of the farmers of this country. I only wish that could be done again this year. I do not think it is fair to advocate protection in one direction unless you carry it all along the line. I am firmly convinced that, in protection, we have the only instrument that can make Canada a great country, and in that regard I include protection for the farmer as well as for every other man. I can quite readily see the rationality of the United States in trying to protect the farmers of that country. That has been the principle of the Republican party since that party was formed, and there is not a man in this House who does not know that, if the Young Bill goes through, it is going to be a detriment to Canada, but at the same time it is going to be a help to the farmers of the United States. The idea is that they want to protect their industries, their farmers and everything else within the borders of their country. That is the policy that should be carried out in this country.

I should like to put on Hansard for reference some figures which have been supplied to me by the former Minister of Militia regarding exemption to farmers, a subject that has been so often brought up, the claim being made that this Government broke its pledge in that regard. I am not going to argue the question one way or the other, although I am perfectly prepared to do that, just as I am perfectly prepared to answer the argument of the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Cannon) when, in this House a few weeks ago, he declared that every member from Ontario and the other provinces should apologize to Quebec. I want to tell him that I am not and do not pretend to be in the apologizing business. The figures supplied to me are as follows:

Total number who registered as farmers under the Military Service Act....	166,484
Number of above who claimed exemption..	161,981
Number of above allowed exemption..	141,532
Number who reported for service.. ..	4,503
Number of all occupations who were enrolled as soldiers under the Military Service Act..	124,568
Of above the number of farmers were approximately..	55,000
Number of farmers granted leave of absence by special Order in Council	29,650
In addition to above, there was granted conditional leave of absence—harvest leave—to..	7,000
In addition to that, a number were made non-liable under special Orders in Council governing hardship cases, approximately..	2,000

I place these figures on Hansard simply for reference, because no doubt they will be useful to many people.

I have endeavoured to present to the House a few arguments showing the way in which we can meet our difficulties in the future. I believe Canada, with her immense natural resources of all kinds, must develop and perfect them to the greatest degree within her own borders, and that we must send out from this country the finished product, thus giving the greatest benefit to the present number of our people.

Mr. ROCK LANCTOT (Laprairie-Napierville): (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, the Budget speech is always interesting to this House and to the people of this country; but it is more so this year because the speech from the Throne announced that there would be a revision of the tariff during the present session. However, on the 9th instant the hon. Minister of Finance declared that the revision of the tariff would not take place this year. Now, the Government had judged proper during last year to appoint a commission composed of ministers and secretaries, to go over the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and inquire into our needs and guide the hon. Minister of Finance in this tariff revision. To my mind there was no need of this commission going over the country and spending tens and tens of thousands of dollars if the Government had no intention of going on with this revision. But I am not surprised, Mr. Speaker, that there should be no revision this year, for I have somewhat followed the right hon. Prime Minister's round last fall, and I concluded from his speeches that he did not want a tariff revision, for everywhere he preached the protection policy inaugurated in 1878. He contended in his speeches that it was the only proper one for the country. It was therefore useless to have spent the people's money on this errand.

Before entering upon the consideration which I intend to offer upon the new taxation, I must say that I do not very heartily endorse the new liabilities, for I did not encourage the Imperialistic policy which has been carried on since 1914. I was for three years the only one in this House to protest against this insane policy of sending five or six hundred thousand men to the great European war. I will recall to you, Mr. Speaker, what I stood for in this House in 1915. I then stated that we should take part in this war, but according to our means. I gave the illustration of a son who must help his father; but I added that if both were threatened with ruin, the son should stand aloof, for with a young family to bring up he should save the little money he has. The reverse took place, Mr. Speaker, we enlisted 590,000 soldiers, and the result is that the son is ruined while the father is enabled to decrease the amount of his debts. Such is the result of our participation in the war. I see in the public reports that England has in the course of the fiscal year just ended decreased its debt by more than one thousand million dollars, while we have increased ours by more than hundred and one millions. If my opinion had been listened to at the time, if the Government of the day, led by the right hon. member for King's (Sir Robert Borden) had understood the interest of the country, they would have realized that the interest of the country would not permit the sending of more than one hundred thousand men, for instance, I will say two hundred thousand men in deference to the Imperialists. I believe that any nation in Enrope would have been satisfied with this contribution, for at that time neither England nor France, nor the other Allies, expected more from Canada, as it was known we could not do better.

In order to prove that I was right at that time, and that 200,000 men were a sufficient sacrifice—it was even too much, to my mind, but I allow this figure in order not to arouse the warriors of this House—here is what I find in the report of the proceedings of the special committee appointed by a resolution of the House of Commons, of September 18, 1919, to which was referred Bill No. 10 to amend the Act creating a Department for the re-establishment of returned soldiers in civil life, as well as certain Orders in Council relating to the work of that department:

The Chairman: I desire to read to the committee a letter received by the secretary at noon from Mr. Cox (reads):

OTTAWA CANADA, October 1, 1919.

The Secretary,
Special Committee,
Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—As instructed by the committee I have prepared an estimate as to the amount it would cost to pay gratuity of $2,000 on account of every soldier who saw service in France, $1,500 on account of every soldier who saw service in England, and $1,000 on account of every soldier who saw service in Canada only.

From the figures at present available, I estimate the cost of paying this gratuity would be $983,624.

Yours faithfully,

(Signe) THOMAS COX,
Assistant Director Pay Service
(Demobilization).

By Hon. Hr. Béland:

Q. What is that based on?—A. It is based on official figures.

By the Chairman:

Q. Who prepared this estimate?—A. I did, sir.

Q. Upon what basis was it prepared?—A. The total enlistments in the Canadian Expeditionary Forces were 590,572. Of those 418,052 proceeded overseas, leaving a balance of 172,520 who had service in Canada only.

Q. How many in Canada?—A. 172,520. And 418,052 proceeded overseas. Of them it is estimated that 50,000 did not get any further than England.

There are no actual figures available showing the number of men who did not get further than England, at the present time, but I have discussed this from the information we have, and have confirmed it from the heads of all the other departments, and I believe that this 50,000 is a fair estimate. Taking the 50,000 from the 418,052, it leaves those who proceeded to France or to some other cambatant area at 368,052. Multiply this by $2,000 for each of those who saw active service and it would mean the Government would have to pay them a total of $736,104,000. Then pay 50,000 soldiers who served in England a bonus of $1,500 each, and this would come to $75,000,000. Pay $1,000 each to the 172,520 soldiers who served in Canada and there would be added to the above amounts the sum of $172,520,000. This would make a total for all three of $983,624,000.

By Mr. Cooper:

Q. That does not include the Imperial veterans or their dependants?—R. No, Sir.

I do not need to say more. This is sufficient for the point I am making.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what conclusion could an impartial man draw from all this—I mean a man who is not a politician, who is biased by no political considerations? It is this, that when the Government whose leader was the right hon. member for King's (Sir Robert Borden) imposed upon us as a conscription of 100,000 men, it was not with the object of winning the war, but of winning the election of 1917. If there were an immediate need of 100,000 men, why did the Prime Minister and the Minister of Militia not send first the 50,000 men who were in England at that time and the 50,000 men who were here in Canada and whom the Government kept here to hunt for conscripts through the country? That would have solved the problem of the 100,000 men alleged to be needed. But that did not suit the Government. Conscription was imposed. What happened? The available soldiers in Canada were used to gather conscripts. The province of Quebec was hounded. The object of conscription was to win the election. The Government wanted to have it said in the other provinces that it was absolutely necessary to enforce conscription against the Quebec people who refused to do their duty. Our friends from Ontario were nevertheless a little disappointed themselves, for their candidates had promised them that they would not be disturbed by conscription, that the measure was directed against the people of Quebec only. I believe that it is to some extent an outcome of all this that we have among us a third party—the Agrarian party—that I am pleased to see in this House; and if the electors of Ontario have rid themselves of the Hearst Government, I believe that it was also due to conscription.

I now come to the speech of the hon. Minister of Finance. The minister is gratified with the volume of business done by us, which amounts to $2,429,288,755. Our imports have increased by $175,608,887, and our exports decreased by $50,328,397. Our volume of business has been large, it is true; the proof that it was very large is that we are poorer than ever; there have been hundreds of thousands of men unemployed in the country for several months; our imports cost too much; and people who during the war could buy have not the same means, and business goes from bad to worse.

The Minister of Finance is proud of the result obtained during the last fiscal year. The revenue has surpassed his expectations; it is approximately $432,000,000 against $349,746,334 last year. He declares that this increase is most satisfactory, albeit the times are not very good. Mr. Speaker, the hon. minister forgets to tell us that this sum of 432 millions does not represent ordinary revenue, but is made up of extraordinary taxation. I quote as follows the revenue for 1919-1920:—

Inland Revenue	$ 43,000,000
War taxes on industrial benefits	40,000,000
Taxes on income	35,000,000
Other war taxes	17,000,000
	$135,000,000

In 1920-1921, the revenue was as follows:—

Excise	$ 37,200,000
Industrial benefits	40,000,000
War taxes—on income	46,500,000
War tax on Inland Revenue	79,050,000
Other war taxes	2,355,000

As you see, Mr. Speaker, the war taxes for 1919-1920 were 135 millions and $205,105,000 for 1920-1921. The hon. minister will tell you that with the ordinary revenue he has been able to pay the ordinary and the extraordinary expenses. I hold that the revenue which the minister to-day calls an ordinary one, is really one drawn from extraordinary sources, seeing that every year new taxes are added; the $135,000,000 of war tax in 1919-1920 having been increased by new taxes in 1920, therefore for the last fiscal year ending on March 31, 1921, the war taxes brought in more than $70,000,000 over and above the 1920 taxes, and next year we shall still have a larger revenue with the tax on commerce; that is to say on our importations and exportations, sale taxes and on our business transactions in the country the taxes are as follows: 1½ to 3 per cent—the taxes on our importations will amount to 2½ to 4 per cent respectively; at the same time the taxes on alcohol will have doubled; so much so that next year instead of paying $205,000,000 of war tax, we shall be paying very closely to $300,000,000, and the hon. Minister of Finance will again declare before this House and the country: "With the ordinary revenue, I have paid up both the current and unusual expenses," but what he has not mentioned is that he has collected $300,000,000 in war tax, since 1917; these did not exist before 1914.

But this is not all, Mr. Speaker. Take for instance the custom duties in 1919-1920 and 1920-1921. In 1920, it amounted to $167,000,000 and in 1921, it was $163,000,000; while before the war we had a revenue of $70,000,000. Why the difference? Is it owing to the increase of our population, if within the last six years our revenue has more than doubled? No, Sir, the reason will be found in the higher price we have paid for goods that have been bought since the war. In many cases the duties are paid ad valorem according to the value of the merchandise and these having tripled in value in many instances, the duties are three times as high. As an example, a piece of cloth, let us say a web of 100 yards at $1.40 per yard = $140 at 30 per cent duty=$42. Let us suppose that the same cloth had been bought in 1914, a web of 100 yards, exactly the same quantity—but the quality is not the same—these goods have trebled and even increased fourfold in price in many cases. As a base of comparison let us say it has increased three times, it is therefore no more 100 yards of cloth at $1.40 but at $4.20 which gives $420 at 30 per cent ad valorem=$126 which brings to the public treasury three times as much money. The minister is well acquainted with this fact, that the custom duties for the year 1921-1922 amount to $135,000,000 in comparison with $163,000,000 which they amounted to last year, not that our population is less than last year, but for the simple reason that goods we now buy have come down in price.

If such is the case, Sir, our people have thus paid, from 1915 up to this day, on an average more than double what they paid before the war, therefore, we have not only had war taxes bringing in an extraordinary revenue, but also from 60 to 80 million dollars in custom duties as an extraordinary revenue. Add these figures to the war taxes and you arrive to conclusion that this year we have paid very closely to $300,000,000 in new taxes, and that we shall be paying very near to $350,000,000 in 1921-1922. Mr. Speaker, the minister will tell us, that things were well done; but is it not a fact that the people played their part also? Shall we be better off next year? No, Sir, we shall be in a worse position owing to this further taxation. By this exportation and importation tax of 1½ to 3 per cent and of 2½ to 4 per cent, the hon. Minister of Finance will no doubt collect a large amount of money, because every one is called upon to pay, the poor even more than the rich. I have often heard remarks on the part of my good Montreal friends, which I could not endorse, with reference to the agricultural class not paying any income tax neither the higher paid artisans and that invariably the tax falls on the capitalist. I differ in opinion with them. The wholesale merchant of Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg or of anywhere else, who carries on a large business from which he derives large profits, certainly pays a large amount as an income tax; but that same merchant figures out first his expenses, before setting a price on his goods, and I am sure that he does not omit his rent, if he is a tenant, his municipal taxes, his staff and lastly his income tax, whether it be $50,000 or $100,000 and in the end we find that it is the people who pay.

Mr. McMASTER: (Translation.) It is "Baptiste" that pays.

Mr. LANCTOT: (Translation.) My hon. friend from Brome (Mr. McMaster) says that it is always "Baptiste" that pays, and he is right. I therefore say that everybody is called upon to pay and you must not throw the stone at any one and proclaim that it is only a certain portion of the population that contribute to the revenue. Everybody pays, unfortunately even those who should not pay because they are not rich.

This induces me to make a remark regarding what my hon. friend from Muskoka (Mr. McGibbon) said a moment ago. He asked: Where will our revenues come from if we have no custom duties. And he went on saying that we would have to impose heavy taxation in order to replace the amount now collected through the customs. For my part, whether the tax is a direct or an indirect one, the result is always the same: the people must ultimately pay.

The hon. Minister of Finances wants this House to vote $582,062,698 to cover the estimates for the year 1921-22, beside the $9,375,000 for the civil service bonus, or $591,437,698 in all. He gives us the following figures: Ordinary expenditures, $343,021,594; capital expenditure, $27,459,127; demobilization, $7,777.380, making a total of $378,258.101. I have nothing to say against ordinary expenditures, unless for instance we should certainly economize something as regards to public works. This year we might save from twelve to fifteen million dollars on works which are not urgent and which mostly have been promised at election time in order to return either a minister or a member supporting the Government.

Mr. McMASTER: It is not worth the price.

Mr. LANCTOT: It is too expensive. We might also economize on the Militia of my old and esteemed friend the Minister of Militia (Mr. Guthrie). I have always strongly protested in this House against this folly of militarism in our country. When my hon. friend the Minister of Militia asks the House to vote his militia estimates he goes into comparisons, he talks about our sister Dominions, he takes us to Europe, even to Asia and Africa and he concludes by stating that we are the only country in the world spending so little for her army. The hon. minister forgets to state that geographically we are so situated that we could cease spending any more money for army purposes and that the other British colonies are not in a similar situation. This is why I think that not a cent should be spent for the next five years, but I am ready to allow a few military expenses so as to satisfy my imperialistic friends. This year we are spending twelve millions for the Militia. Why not cut this amount in half and spend only six millions.

An hon. MEMBER: That's too much.

Mr. LANCTOT: One of the hon. member says it is too much. Quite true, it is too much in my opinion, but I wanted to make suggestions to the Government although I am perfectly convinced they will not accept them. Does the hon. Minister of Militia claim that at the present time it is absolutely necessary to give to a number of our young men a military training? Will the hon. minister state that it is absolutely necessary for us to have soldiers? Why? In case another war should take place in Europe is there a Government at Ottawa willing to throw us in that new war when we are practically ruined? For my part I would not send another single soldier in Europe to take part in another war. Was not our war against Prussians also directed against militarism which we wanted to destroy in the world? Now that we have the League of Nations some of our political men claim that our status is changed, that we have a different standing from what we had before the war. It is true that our status is changed, when we have to pay as well as the great European powers, but when it comes to receive, we shall revert to our colonial status, we shall be told that Downing Street still governs us and we will not get a cent of the war indemnity. We are mighty important people when it is a question of paying out but when there shall be something to collect, we will be assigned a back seat and we will not get a red cent.

But, that is not all. We have also an air fleet, so they say, which will cost $1,625,000 this year. Why should we have an air fleet at the present time? I fail to understand why we go on with such folies. If our forefathers could come back and were told that we are spending so much on militarism, they would say: What is the world becoming? In my opinion not a cent should be spent for such purposes and in this way we could save the country this amount of $1,625,000. I only wish we did not spend a dollar for that air fleet because we might thus save the country an expenditure of $1,625,000.

The hon. Minister of Militia says that the Mounted Police do not come under his jurisdiction, but I suppose there is a member of the Government who has charge of this department and I must tell him just now, that it is shocking to see the Mounted Police parading the streets in Ottawa.

I have been here for 17 years, and I consider that the city of Ottawa does not need the Mounted Police parading the streets. Ottawa is one of the most peaceful cities in the country, and therefore there is no necessity of keeping the Mounted Police here. That is why I say to the Government, with regard to this credit: You have about four million dollars, you may easily cut out two million and a half.

[Mr. Lanctôt.]

And that is not all. The hon. Minister of Marine has obtained for us a gift of three ships from the Mother Country—England. The upkeep of this present is quite expensive. The crew must be fed and paid and we must buy coal. This involves considerable expenditure. Under the circumstances, I would suggest that the minister place his gift in safety at Montreal, at the million dollar island, for example, or elsewhere, and leave it there for five years, so that we may save the country at least two million dollars a year, which would mean a saving of ten millions.

I am economical myself, I preach and practice economy, and if my hon. friends did the same, it would be to the greater benefit and happiness of the people.

The hon. Minister of Finance spoke the other day of non-productive investments, that is to say, which do not yield any returns. Where I come from we know nothing of this kind of investment. He mentioned the following:

C.N.R. Railway	$ 50,000,000
Grand Trunk	89,687,633
Grand Trunk Pacific	26,000,000

He told us that certain amounts should be charged to current expenditure of the year, but that he could not do it this year as there is already a large deficit, although he said at first that he had a surplus of 12 million dollars which subsequently was absorbed by a deficit. I must say that, so far as it concerns the railway question in which all Canada is interested, and particularly those who use them, who have goods to ship from one end of the country to the other, that there practically exists an embargo, at the present time, on the shipment of our goods. For several reasons, this railway policy has been disastrous to the people of this country; all politicians are more or less responsible for that. The hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. Davidson) began just now to discuss the question but he stopped suddenly. I have already had the occasion, during the session, to speak of railways; however, I wish to speak further on the subject. The party which is now in power is the same as in 1911, although it has changed its name.

Mr. McMASTER: An alias.

Mr. LANCTOT: (Translation.) But the staff is the same. Some are dead, others have resigned, but it is still the Conservative party—call it what you will—it is the party which has advocated this railway policy from 1911 until now.

The Prime Minister has frequently told us that the Liberal party were responsible for the present situation; that Sir Wilfrid Laurier's railway policy had been disastrous, and that the Liberal party wanted to wash their hands of this, claiming they were not responsible. I say that those who are most guilty are the present leaders of the Government. If Sir Wilfrid Laurier's policy was not good in 1911, why have you continued such a policy? If the railway construction from Port Arthur to Montreal was of no advantage to the people of this country, why, after the elections of 1911, did you continue it, with Mackenzie and Mann, and why, later, did you extend the Canadian Northern railway from the prairies to Vancouver. Is it our fault if we now have three transcontinental railways to go to the Pacific ocean? It has been the most disastrous policy which a Government could have adopted. But, what could have been done at the time—I blame both parties for this—what should have been done in 1911 would have been not to give 35 million dollars to Mackenzie and Mann, but to expropriate them and to settle with them once for all as early as 1911, and to use these branch-lines in the West as "feeders" for the Transcontinental National and then the Transcontinental and the Grand Trunk Pacific would have been a success. The Government of the day was not interested to make the Grand Trunk Pacific a success, but the new Government whose leader was the right hon. member for King's (N.S.) (Sir Robert Borden), from the very moment they came into power, in 1911, endeavoured to destroy Sir Wilfrid Laurier's work. They did all they could; they made an investigation and some enthusiastic supporters of this Government endeavoured to disparage as much as possible Sir Wilfrid Laurier's undertaking, and to prevent the Grand Trunk from taking control of it. That is what that party has done. They committed a serious offence, when, for political purposes, they disparaged the property of the people of this country.

Mr. McMASTER (Translation.): Slanderers.

Mr. LANCTOT (Translation.): They were slanderers. It is awful for a party to destroy, simply for political purposes, property which cost $171,000,000. I say, Mr. Speaker, that a party holding such conduct will be severely punished in due time. Is there a Government in a country like ours who are able to administer the railways, and particularly this Government who never made a success of any of their undertakings? For instance, they gave out contracts three years in advance and sometimes at a much higher price than was warranted. Just think, they underlook to operate in accordance with what was being done in the United States the railways of this country, whose area is equal to that of the United States, but whose population is only 8½ millions, compared with 105 millions in the neighbouring Republic, then to apply here the eight hour day, according to the McAdoo schedule; and the result is that we have throughout the country many railways paralleling one another. Please notice what is being done here in the capital. There are twelve trains leaving Ottawa for Montreal every day, and the same number going in the opposite way, which makes twenty four trains daily.

I have a suggestion to make with a view to preventing our railway policy to ruin the country. I think the Government did not take the trouble to read the memorandum addressed to them by Lord Shaughnessy. As far as I am concerned, I have a right to speak in the name of the 234th part of this country, since we are 234 members of Parliament. Well, in my opinion, the sooner we get rid of our national railways, the better it will be; and personaly, I say very frankly that I am not very particular about the way in which we may get rid of them: Be it for one, or for five, or for one million dollars, I would get rid of them immediately. I would not confide the operation of our railways to a company like Mackenzie and Mann, but to a company like the Canadian Pacific, administered by a board of directors possessed of great experience. Then you would see a great change in the administration at the end of four or five years, and instead of having deficit upon deficit, we might have a surplus. But can you ever expect any return on a railway administered by a so-called independent board, for they contend that the Civil Service Commission is an independent body and that patronage has been abolished. But the Government is doing nothing without patronage. I shall refer to it later. For the moment, I am dealing with our railways and the way to ensure their effective operation. Whom do you see at the head of those railways? Mr. Hanna and Sir Hormisdas Laporte. What does Sir Hormidas Laporte know about railways? He knows all about sugar and molasses, but absolutely nothing about railways. However they are the men who are expected to administer with profit our 17,000 miles of national railways.

Now we have the Grand Trunk on our hands. That company seems to be very fastidious; they will not accept the views of the Government nor the results of the arbitration. I would like to be the party to decide and I would soon settle their case; I would refuse to take control of that railway and I am sure people would approve of my decision. But this Government want to have the Grand Trunk; they want everything in the world, and then we shall have to pay for it. But what shall we pay with? The hon. Minister of Finance will impose some new taxes, and more taxes all the time.

The Government is responsible for this railway policy which is bearing so heavily on the people of this country. You might just as well say to the Government that there are dealers to-day who have very large stocks and who are in financial straits. Personally, as a hay merchant, I have lost money and I am going to lose some more. Why don't you help me out? The railway companies need but to apply to the Government. The very men who led those railways to bankruptcy are still the advisers of the roads. Mackenzie and Mann are there, behind the screens, working in behalf of this Government. There is one thing that is always tempting all political parties and it was the misfortune of many a country in the world: The elections are drawing near, and they often come sooner that it is desired.

There are two openings now; these elections were not wanted, but unfortunately, the representatives of these ridings died. I understand that the Government require a lot of money for that; the big railway men are asked to contribute and thousands, nay, hundreds of thousands of dollars are secured in that way for electoral purposes. Later on, you cannot refuse to do a good turn to these gentlemen should they be embarrassed, and the people have to foot the Bill. I congratulate my friends of the Agrarian party for having adopted a better method, that of having the campaign funds voted by the riding which is to elect a representative. What I have found to be the best system is to work in the interest of my constituents, to tell the truth, to say whether such legislation is good or bad and when it is bad, to vote against it. Then I go back to my constituency where I can be elected without disbursing a red cent.

The hon. Minister of Finance in his Budget speech, gave us the net debt of this country, but not our total of indebtedness. I looked in the Official Gazette and there I saw that the gross debt, of this country in March last, amounted to $3,000,000,000. I was particularly impressed by the amount of interest which we are paying on our debt and which amounts to almost $143,000,000. If our obligations were only $2,350,000,000, we would not be paying such a large amount of interest. Now I have always held and I still hold that the actual debt is represented by the total amount of our indebtedness, because we are not sure of getting back the amounts due to us which we include as assets. The Government has advanced money to foreign countries upon which it receives no interest and there are many loans, out of which we get no returns. Therefore I say that our debt amounts not only to $2,350,000,000, but reaches $3,000,000,000, and I am going to prove it. We are paying this year $142,000,000 for interest, that is an increase of $519,069.69 over last year. Our deficit of $101,000,000 for last year, will increase by so much our interests for 1922-23. It means that within two or three years we shall have to pay $150,000,000 for interests. Moreover, our railways do not pay their operating charges. We have to borrow and add that to capital.

If we maintain that railway policy, in five years from now, our debt will not only amount to $3,000,000,000, but judging by what our railways have cost us up to now —except the Grand Trunk—I do not think I am misleading the House in saying that we shall owe $1,000,000,000, for our railways alone. Three billions and one billion, make four billion dollars, and if we acquire the Grand Trunk which will cost, I suppose, four or five hundred million dollars and perhaps a good deal more, in five years, our total debt will certainly amount to $5,000,000,000. Therefore I say to you: What shall we become with such an enormous debt, and why should we have it? We owe it to our war-time folly, to our foolish acquisition of bankrupt railways, and also to the fact that we have adopted the McAdoo schedule. Again I ask you: Why should we have adopted the eight-hour day for our railway employees? To-day conductors and engineers earn more than professional men in the country districts. Some conductors are earning as much as $5,500, others $4,500 and $4,000.

Mr. McMASTER: Per month.

Mr. LANCTOT: No, per year. Is there any reason why, to-day, after the war, and poor as we are, we should maintain the eight-hour day? Not at all, Mr. Speaker. Let us come back to pre-war conditions and let us establish a ten-hour day for all railway employees. An eight-hour day is sufficient for men who are working in factories and mines, but for railway employees as well as for us farmers, a ten-hour working day does no harm. It is a well known fact that railway employees, whether on our national roads or on the Canadian Pacific railway, are not working only eight hours a day, but in many cases, sixteen and eighteen hours, in other to get time and a half. Under such conditions it is very hard to come out even.

I was saying a moment ago that I was surprised to see in the Estimates such large provisions for demobilization. The armistice was signed nearly three years ago and yet this Parliament is asked to vote seven or eight million dollars for the purpose of demobilization. I think that it is simply a pretext given by the Government to take better care of their friends, and we have a proof in that certain lawyers in Winnipeg have been well cared for, not so very long ago, out of those demobilization Estimates. Somebody assured me that a law firm in Winnipeg, drew the small amount of $56,000 for 102 days of work. This, I admit, was unsatisfactory to other firms in that city, so they had to retain the services of other lawyers in order to do away with all bitterness. The Department of Justice did that, they took in some other lawyers and, as stated before the Committee on Public Accounts a few days ago, $180,000 were paid to lawyers in Winnipeg to secure the punishment of workingmen who had indulged in seditious appeals during the Winnipeg strike, it was found necessary to hire the help of lawyers in order to have those people imprisoned. Mr. Speaker, I protest against this fraudulent appropriation of the money voted by this House for a special purpose and not with the intention of feeding any Winnipeg lawyers in spite of the well-known fact that some ten odd lawyers are to be found in the offices of the Department of Justice at Ottawa. Of course, many lawyers are required there, as the Minister of Justice can devote but a small part of his time to the business, for the reason that he is too busy outside, having estates to manage, banks to take care of as director, too many "jobs," as our good Canadians say. He wants some help, and so much the more so as he is advanced in years and suffering from illness. Then, he has to keep tab of all his salaries, the amount of his pension, of his investments; this also requires a good deal of time and, therefore, there must be a good many lawyers at work in his department. I am told that there are ten. Why not take two, for instance, and send them where trouble happens to arise. Instead of paying $56,000 to outside lawyers one might have relieved the congestion in the Department of Justice and left there a staff of eight. I do not suppose that a business man, a hay dealer or a wholesale dealer in Montreal would apply to a lawyer in Ottawa with respect to a case he had to plead in this city if he had already retained the services of another lawyer with respect to his general business. I can safely say that the Government would save at least $500,000 a year by resorting to the services of the lawyers whom they have already engaged, and permanently so, at Ottawa, and by leaving the outside lawyers with their own business. I am pretty sure that everything would be carried on to the best advantage in this way. The right hon. Prime Minister has inquired, on many occasions, what was the stand of the Opposition as regards the tariff question, stating that the next election would be fought on that mere question. Speaking for myself only, I must tell the Prime Minister right away, that as far as I am concerned and as far as the county of Laprairie-Napierville is concerned, he will have some other questions to settle with me and with my electors if, as I hope, we are to have an election shortly. The Prime Minister must be judged on what he has done to date. If he has sinned he must be punished. The man who dies to-day will not be punished for the faults which he might have committed twenty years from now, but for the faults committed in the past. I merely want the Prime Minister to be punished for the sins he has committed and not for those which he might commit in the future. The farmers in our counties know a tree by its fruit. "The tree which bears no good fruit shall be cut and cast into the fire." Of course, I would not tell my electors to sentence the Prime Minister to be thrown in the fire, but I shall have him condemned to go back to the Opposition side, that is the only punishment I wish him.

As far as I am concerned, I would like to discuss the treatment which we have received at the hands of the Prime Minister. I remember that, on several occasions, we have been charged by hon. gentlemen opposite with being cowards and slackers. Well, let me tell the Prime Minister right now, that he will find the electors of my county to be no cowards and that they will go to the polling booths and deposit their ballots in the ballot boxes, but not in his favour. The right hon. Prime Minister will leave for Europe shortly, in order to attend the Imperial conference. I look unfavourably on his departure, but, after all, the majority of the House has authorized it. I am very much afraid he will come back to this country with new obligations imposed upon the Canadian people, although he will have received no mandate aforehand to bind the country; but, anyhow, this House has given him carte blanche.

Mr. TRAHAN: (Translation.) On division.

Mr. LANCTOT: (Translation.) . . . on division. I am not sending him, nor is my hon. friend from Nicolet (Mr. Trahan). However, he will leave shortly. I suppose he will be wise enough not to take an unseaworthy boat. I hope he will take a seaworthy boat so as to get overseas safely; he will make a good choice and I approve him. But when he taunts the members of the Agrarian party for selecting their boat and getting in ours, being unwilling to risk themselves in the Government's leaky craft, then I disapprove him. I want him to leave on a good boat that he may sail safely, but I want him also to let others have their own say in choosing a craft for themselves.

Mr. R. H. BUTTS (Cape Breton South and Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the Budget speech has taken a most peculiar turn in the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just preceded me (Mr. Lanctôt). He talked about everything except what his own side of the House have been talking about since this debate began. Surely the platform they have adopted since this debate has been in progress was wide enough to admit my hon. friend, for it included all kinds of fantastic economic theories. My hon. friend, however, has chosen to confine his remarks to railway matters and naval affairs, and he never even touched on the question of pressed hay, in which I understand he is very much interested.

I have followed with a great deal of attention the speeches delivered on both sides of the House, and the difference between the two sides is really quite marked. I do not think anybody with any degree of reason whatever could have any doubt as to the policy of hon. members who sit to your right, Mr. Speaker. I do not think there is need for anything further to be said as to our attitude on this side of the House after the speech of the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Meighen). The policy outlined by him is, I believe, unanimously supported by hon. members on this side of the House. But when we turn to the other side we find the greatest medley of economic inconsistencies that could possibly be conceived of. Take, for instance, my hon. friend from North Cape Breton and Victoria (Mr. McKenzie). When leader of the Opposition he laid down a fiscal policy; it is there crystallized in Hansard for all time. He said:

> No, while we may have iron and steel in the raw state in this country, there may be others who can pour their products into this country and keep us forever from having an industry of that kind for our own. If I were to say that, and to allow the natural resources of this country to remain forever in a dormant state, I do not consider that I would be doing what would be in the best interests of my country or for the general advancement of the people. If to take some specific object of that kind and to provide for it in the way in which I think it should be provided for its Toryism, or protectionism, or unreasonable, as regards the general trade of the country, I must plead guilty.

That is a very clear definition of where he stands, and certainly it is good, sound protectionist doctrine. I understand that my hon. friend has since very humbly apologized for his stand on that occasion. I am told he has said he then made a mistake, and I am quite prepared to believe that, for in this Parliament on more than one occasion he has said he was not a protectionist, but that he was in favour of bounties. Now if there is any vice in protection, in bounties you have the most vicious type of protection.

Coming to my hon. friend from Maisonneuve and Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux), who sits next, he is the greatest protectionist in all Quebec when he is in the constituency of Maisonneuve, but when in Gaspé, in his advocacy of free trade he is only rivalled by my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark).

Coming down a bit further to the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), he is all things to all constituencies.

It makes no difference what constituency he is in, he has a coat that will fit it.

Coming now to the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), I can remember, though it is quite a few years ago, hearing him deliver a speech in the city of Sydney, right in the centre of the coal fields of Cape Breton, in which he said that if the coal trade of Nova Scotia could not stand without protection, then let it fall. Here in this House, a few nights ago, he told us that he was not a free trader, and never had been.

Coming now to my imaginative friend from Brome (Mr. McMaster), at the Liberal convention here in Ottawa, he said: Yes I am a free trader, but in theory only. My imaginative friend imagines he is a free trader, but I do not think there is any one in this House imaginative enough to imagine for one moment that he does anything more than imagine he is a free trader. He is not one in reality.

Coming now to my hon. friend from Gloucester (Mr. Turgeon), after talking along protectionist lines all night he turned round at the heel of the hunt and said that tariff for revenue was good, but no tariff at all was better, and then sat down, so we did not know which side of the fence he was on. He left us in doubt as to his position on the tariff.

My hon. friend from Victoria and Carleton (Mr. Caldwell) is, of course, an out and out free trader. He was a free trader in potatoes and farm products all during the war when he was getting $4 and $5 a bushel, but now that this new tariff has come into effect in the United States and closed, him out, he is no longer a free trader. He is a protectionist now, and he wants the Canadian Government to retain the Canadian market, not only for potatoes, but for farm products generally. He would welcome an expert duty on pulpwood. So you see his is a brand-new type of protection, different altogether from that advocated by hon. gentlemen who sit on the front benches on this side.

My hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Sinclair) is in favour of an altogether different type of protection. He talks neither free trade nor protection, but under some kind of a veil he advocates a new species of protection that I never heard of before. He tells us that in Prince Edward Island they cannot sell potatoes at 17 cents. Now potatoes were on the free list up till very recently, but when the American tariff is put on, my hon. friend runs for cover, and seeks protection of a very peculiar type. He wants this Government to reduce the freight rates on potatoes from Prince Edward Island by about two-thirds for several months, and I suppose later on he will not need so much protection. It is not strange, therefore, that I should call this a medley of economic contradictions. Turn it what way you will, the most you can possibly make of it is that they cling to that old phanton of free trade, while in reality they are protectionists of one kind or another, save only my imaginative and hon. friend from Brome (Mr. McMaster) and my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark), who hold to that old phanton, and who are the only remaining examples of an almost extinct species.

Now, let us just look very briefly over the fiscal policy of this country, as far back as you wish to go. You will find that when protection was adopted four or five hundred miles of railroads were all that we had in the Dominion, and under the protectionist policy which has obtained from 1878 until to-day, this Dominion, with a population varying from, at that time, five and a half millions or six millions to eight or nine millions to-day, has built forty thousand miles of railway. To-day, although perhaps we should be better off without some of the railways, the Dominion of Canada has a greater mileage of railroads per capita than any other country in the world, and they have been built under protection. Previous to 1911 we had spent approximately $250,000,000 on a canal system, opening up a waterway from the mouth of the St. Lawrence 2,500 miles into the interior of this country; and that was built under protection.

When hon. gentlemen opposite were in opposition previous to 1896 they yelled free trade, so that the capitalists did place some amount of credence in their declarations. They thought that after the preaching of years, surely the Liberal party would do something to bring about a lower tariff, and for that very reason, during those years, there was something unstable in the commercial conditions of Canada. But when in 1897 the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) brought down a protectionist Budget and further stabilized the trade of Canada, then it was that the capitalists began to feel confidence in the resources of this country; and during the ten years that followed there came into Canada $300,000,000 of American money to build up factories and develop the resources of the Dominion. It was realized then that there was no longer a dispute between the protectionists and the free traders. The American capitalists began to realize that we were all of one fold, with one shepherd; we were all protectionists; hence the stability of trade, hence the influx of capital, hence the golden age which my hon. friend from Maisonneuve and Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) has spoken of. Can he expect any one to believe that it was their political doctrines that brought about the age of prosperiy that lasted from the time when our fiscal policy and our trade conditions were stabilized, right down to the beginning of the war? I do not think he will seriously contend anything of the kind. It is true that if they did not raise the tariff of their predecessors, neither did they make any attempt to cut it down as it stood when they came into power.

Let me look for a moment at the condition of our foreign trade under protection. In 1866 our foreign trade amounted to $131,000,000, including imports and exports; in 1890 it was $218,000,000; but by 1900—from 1890 to 1900 were protectionist years—we increased our foreign trade from $218,000,000 to $693,000,000. We did that under protection. The home interchanges in Canada in 1911 amounted to $1,000,000,000 and the yearly wages paid out in Canada at that time amounted to $250,000,000. These are some of the figures that make us pause and consider; these are the conditions that made the Laurier Government also pause and think, and that prompted the member for Shelburne and Queen's, who was formerly Minister of Finance, to throw to the winds those whimsical ideas he entertained while in Opposition, when he felt no responsibility whatever upon his shoulders, and to adopt the policy that had proven itself in the country, the policy of wiser statesmen than he. That hon. gentleman's wisdom consisted principally in knowing enough about the tariff to be guided by those who were more conversant with the situation than he was.

Well, time went on and my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's could not get clear of that little hobby horse of his younger days; and the time came when he and the late Hon. William Paterson went down to Washington to negotiate the Reciprocity Pact. Now, I have read a good portion of the book of life, and I have read a few more books, and I have learned from them that one very strong criterion of truth is public opinion. If that is so, then I say that the criterion of truth in all of Canada's days has been against the idea of free trade, or even of a low tariff. When that pact was negotiated, the very first thing we knew in Canada was that the legislatures of British Columbia, Manitoba, Ontario and New Brunswick passed resolutions opposing it. Nova Scotia and Saskatchewan approved of it; the provinces of Ontario and New Brunswick legislated against it. Pulpwood and timber cut on Crown and leased lands were not allowed to be exported to the United States. So you see the provinces of British Columbia, Manitoba, Ontario and New Brunswick, through their legislatures, protested against this pact. Let me just reiterate the words "that public opinion is a very strong criterion of truth." If it is, and we are guided by it, then we must say that a fair, moderate, and just protection to our industries is what the people of Canada wish for and what they will have retained.

I wish now to make a few remarks upon our steel trade. I am not going to speak of the coal trade to-night. I do not think it would be appropriate for me to do so because there is a special committee now considering that very question. They are taking evidence but they have, as yet, made no report and anything that I might say now would at least be characterized as inopportune. I shall, however, speak briefly upon the iron and steel industry. Now if we follow the history of that industry in the United States, with respect to the tariff conditions that have prevailed, we will find that the production of pig iron in the adjoining republic has assumed enormous proportions and developed to its present position under a high tariff. In 1868, when the industry was in its infancy, a tariff of $9 per ton was placed upon pig iron. This tariff was in 1874 reduced to $7 per ton, at which figure it remained until 1887 when it was further reduced to $6.72 per ton. In 1894 the tariff was further reduced to $4, at which figure it remained until 1910 when a reduction to $2.50 per ton was made. In the meantime, and as a result of the protection that it had received under that tariff, the pig iron industry of the United States had grown to such enormous proportions that the duty was entirely removed. Pig iron was put on the free list, and that product in the United States competed with all the countries of the world. The development of the industry was so immense that it was able, and more than able, to engage in such competition.

Take steel ingots and billets. The manufacture of steel ingots and billets in the United States was developed under similar circumstances. The tariff on certain grades of ingots and billets in 1868 varied from $25 to $70 per ton. The tariff was reduced by 10 per cent in 1874, but this reduction was afterwards eliminated in 1879. In 1894 there was a further reduction when the tariff varied, according to the quality of steel, from $5.36 to $83.90 per ton. The tariff was greater in 1894 on steel billets in the United States than they could be sold for to-day, not speaking of duty at all. Later on, under that tariff, the time came when they were able to make those products duty free, the steel industry having increased to such enormous proportions. The same is true in regard to wire rods, the manufacture of which received similar encouragement. In 1868 a tariff of $30 a ton was first imposed, the result being the development of the industry on a very large scale. It was the same with nails. In 1868 a duty of $30 a ton was imposed on nails. The United States, however, found that the duty of $30 a ton was not sufficient for the English nail was still coming into the country. They therefore increased the duty on nails in 1874 to $80 per ton, less 10 per cent. In 1879 they eliminated the 10 per cent and imposed a flat duty of $80 per ton. The protection was continued until 1894 when the industry had developed to such an extent that the duty on nails was reduced to 25 per cent. The United States was still able to compete with its rivals notwithstanding the reduction, and to-day those same nails are on the free list. It is said, I think on fairly good grounds, that from the steel works in Sydney some 600 different grades of nails went into England during all the years of the war. The United States supplied all its different grades of iron and steel to England, and their nails and their steel products are to be found in the markets of every country in the world. Notwithstanding the fact that they had a high protective tariff, so well established did their steel industry become that they have practically captured the markets of the world, and if they have not done that they are at least able to compete with all other countries at the present time, their products being on the free list.

Now, having that knowledge of the steel industry of the United States, just look at the present condition of the steel industry here in Canada. We have three large concerns manufacturing steel and steel products in the Dominion, and what are the conditions? In the fiscal year ending March 31, 1920, we imported 1,144,430 tons of iron ore amounting in value to $4,095,839, and for the ten months ending January 1, 1921, we imported 1,302,207 tons having a value of $4,886,942. In agricultural implements we imported from the United States in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1920, $6,792,-245 worth; we imported boilers, windmills, pumps, etc., to the value of $22,705,319; of castings we imported $1,958,311 worth; of chains we imported $3,395,496 worth; and so I could go on through all the different grades of steel and steel products imported from the United States alone until I come to the grand total of $178,661,606.

There is your low tariff! There is your hundred and seventy-eight and a half million dollars of Canadian money going into the United States to build up the industries of a foreign and rival nation to the detriment of our own manufacturers, and to the detriment of our own workingmen, who should have earned every dollar of that money. And still you talk free trade. Free trade with whom? Free trade with the United States that has to-day perhaps the highest tariff wall erected against us of any other nation in the world? Trade freely with them? Why, our free trade friend from Victoria and Carleton (Mr. Caldwell) even went so far as to forget his free trade principles and last night talked retaliation. And he was rebuked by the gentleman who sat quite near him, who in his speech afterwards said retaliation should not be suggested lest it might end in a tariff war. Was that not a very consistent conversation to take place between two paragons of free trade?

Now, Mr. Speaker, I shall pay attention for a few moments to some remarks made this afternoon by my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Crerar). There is an election down in New Brunswick, and my hon. friend referred to it this afternoon.

Mr. LALOR: Who is the Liberal candidate?

Mr. BUTTS: They are going to let that part of it remain in abeyance until the general election. But my hon. friend could not pass over that election without besmirching himself a little more than the man he intended to besmirch. He had to fan as much as he could the smouldering embers of bigotry and race that have on many occasions, I have no doubt, done yeoman service for gentlemen opposite. He attempted to lead his followers to drink at the polluted stream of religious and racial bigotry and fanaticism; and he would be pleased, I have no doubt, to see them drink at that polluted stream with the same avidity that a buzzard pounces upon his carrion prey.

But, Sir, let me say that he is not altogether alone in that respect, although I had hoped there were none in this House to descend to such arguments. Yet I read in the Montreal Gazette this quotation taken from the nomination day speech at St. Francois du Lac of my hon. friend from Maisonneuve (Mr. Lemieux). He said:

> When on the 28th you mark your cross, mark it like Laurier would mark his cross if he were voting that day. His shadow is over this assembly, as it hovers over Parliament. He follows our deliberations from the skies and is asking if his compatriots and Canadians of all languages will renew the present regime.

My hon. friend seems to take on some of Mr. Stead's theories. He is a little spiritualistic—more spiritualistic, I think, than spiritual. But according to the Montreal Star—and, Sir, this is a very delicate subject which I am going to approach, and I wish to deal with it in all reverence and in all respect—my hon. friend from Maisonneuve is reported as having said:

> "Meighen is the father of conscription," went on Mr. Lemieux. "We cannot talk conscription without some emotion. While the Hon. Mr. Ballantyne was trailing his sword in London and Paris, my only son was in the trenches. He is gone, and it seems that I should pay testimony to his memory by working to punish those who brought the atrocity of conscription on our country."

Now, Mr. Speaker, if that is not partisanship gone mad I do not know what is. It is not often, that we find a man who deliberately uses the memory of his departed and lamented offspring to attempt to gain political aggrandizement by playing upon the feelings of an excited nomination day audience and making his departed son the object of commiseration. How much more he would have been admired even by that excited audience had he said to them: "My son was no conscript; he was a volunteer. When his country needed him he sprang to her assistance. He drew his sword in her defence; he bared his breast to the enemies of his country; he in the end made the supreme sacrifice that his country might live." The hon. gentleman might have said to the young men of Quebec: "Had you followed his example, conscription in this country would have been unnecessary. Had that course been taken by my hon. friend it would have been an honourable course; the memory of his son would be doubly revered and he himself would be doubly respected.

I regret, Mr. Speaker, that the leader of the Opposition is not in the House, for I feel compelled to pay a small amount of attention to him for a few moments. In a previous debate in the session the hon. member for North Cape Breton and Victoria made use of some such expression as this: that one of the many weaknesses of this Government was that it was at war with labour. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that this Government is so very bellicose as to be at war with labour, or vice versa. If labour is at war with this Government it is doubly bellicose, for certain it is that it has been at war with the leader of the Opposition for many years. Down in our county, some years ago, and also about the same time in Cumberland county, Nova Scotia, while my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition was Minister of Labour, we had a strike in which about 5,000 men were involved. On the morning that the strike broke out the leader of the Opposition, then the Minister of Labour received from M. J. Gillies, M.P.P., of Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, a supporter of the Murray Government at that time, a telegram in which he said:

> Five thousand employees Dominion Coal Company on strike here. Situation looks serious. Important that you get here immediately and try to effect a settlement.

How Mr. Macdonald, then the member for Pictou county in this House in the Liberal interest, found out about that is more than I can tell. Suffice it to say that on the same date he wrote a letter to the then Minister of Labour, the present leader of the Opposition, in which he said:

> Let me congratulate you upon the fact that you were not troubled with an election and that you have got into the saddle without very much trouble.

It was hinted at that time that the congratulation was not altogether sincere; Mr. Macdonald was very much disappointed, I understand, that he did not get that portfolio. However, the letter went on to say:

> I have just been talking on the phone with our mutual friend Alex. Johnston, and our joint opinion with regard to the situation in Sydney is that at the present stage it is not wise or prudent for you to come down or take part in the situation. There was a rumour in Sydney that you were to be asked to come down, and I am writing as a result of my interview with Johnston, to say that I think for the present that you should not come down. We will advise you a little later in the matter.

Now, that appears to me, offhand, to be a little bit more on the side of Liberalism than on the side of the labouring men; it was the Liberal party's interests, not the labouring men's interests, that were being considered. Mr. Alex. Johnston, then the member for South Cape Breton, and Mr. E. M. Macdonald, then the Liberal representative for Pictou county, who at the same time held a retainer from the Dominion Coal Company—these gentlemen went into solemn conclave and advised the Minister of Labour as to what it was wise for him to do—no doubt from a political viewpoint. Matters went on; letters passed to and fro, until finally Mr. Macdonald wrote along somewhat—

Mr. McKENZIE: I presume the hon. member knows that he is reading a letter which was stolen—taken from the files.

Mr. BUTTS: I do not care whether it was stolen or not.

Mr. McKENZIE: I believe that.

Mr. BUTTS: I did not steal it. My hon. friend can see that I am reading from Hansard, not from a letter at all.

Mr. McKENZIE: My hon. friend is quite welcome to all the capital he can make of it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. BUTTS: Whether I am welcome or not, I am going to have it. Mr. Macdonald then writes to the Minister of Labour, the present leader of the Opposition, as follows:

> The strike situation in Nova Scotia has been summarized in this way, that in Inverness the strike practically does not exist. There are some men who are not working, but these men are not necessary to the adequate operation of the mines. In the Dominion Coal Company's works, from which I have just returned, the company are rapidly increasing their output, and the men are only being kept out on strike, at least a great portion of them, by the actual stories which the resources of the United Mine Workers' people supply to them, of the fact that the company are going to settle and various reasons are given for this from week to week. I do not doubt at all that the company will be successful there, and there may be a break very shortly.

There is no doubt in the world that Mr. Macdonald took it for granted that there was reassuring evidence that the company was going to win out and that the labouring men were going to be defeated in the strike. The letter continues:

> I think that the men will eventually realize that the company will not on any terms settle their compromise. The Springhill situation is one I am not advised about and is really very serious. The situation at Inverness and the action of the United Mine Workers is a direct and absolute defiance of the provisions of the Conciliation Act, and I think it would be a great mistake if the department itself—not the company or any outside party or person—did not proceed against the United Mine Workers people who came out on strike in disregard of that Act. I notice by the press that inquiries are being made by the department with reference to the circumstances, and I am quite sure that you will find the facts to be that the strike is one which is in contravention to the Act. And can assure you of my fullest support in so doing if you should arrange to have these proceedings initiated. It seems to me that the effect of the department proceeding against this infraction of their own law would be a very good move in Nova Scotia.

He continues:

> At the present time public opinion is strongly against the strikers and against every one who is connected with them, and there is no question about their desire to have the matter speedily dealt with by a strong hand. In the event of your taking any proceedings, I would suggest that the matter be put in the hands of some recognized lawyer of ability, such as Mr. Roscoe, of Kentville, who has been acting for the Militia Department and making some investigations in that matter. I should be very glad to hear from you in regard to this matter.

It would appear from the entire correspondence—it is rather lengthy, and I do not wish to weary the House by reading it—that the Labour Department in that strike was being advised by the solicitor of the Dominion Coal Company, Mr. E. M. Macdonald, who was then a member of Parliament, representing Pictou county in this House. There were prosecutions down there. But let me call this one fact—and it is a fact—to the attention of the House. Not only were there prosecutions; but before there was any overt act, before there was anything that showed sign or semblance of disorder in the entire community, a large detachment of soldiers landed there. When I say this, I wish to assure the House that prior to the time that those soldiers arrived, there was no such thing as a disturbance or a violation of the law in any one particular case. Shortly after the soldiers arrived there, the men were holding a procession, not a military parade or anything like that. They carried no arms; they were peaceful, peaceable, law-abiding men; they had shown no sign of attempting to disturb the serenity of the entire community; but while is that state of mind those men were parading, a line was drawn and a machine gun was set up before Bridgeport Catholic church and the men were ordered not to pass that line on peril of being fired upon. That was done while the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) was Minister of Labour. Do you wonder then that I say that the men are not sufficiently bellicose to be at war with this Government because they are already at war with the Opposition and the leaders of the Opposition. They may forgive those things; they are a forgiving people, but they have good memories. I feel very much inclined to believe that before the Opposition in this House can hold out any hopes of winning seats in Cape Breton county at least, they will have to swap horses, even if they do that when crossing the stream.

I have finished pretty nearly all that I intended to say, and the night is getting late. I have only this to say, in conclusion, that I notice down in the "Annex" they seem to be a little bit stronger than those hon. gentlemen in the official Opposition, and it seems strange to me how they are going to affect a union, or anything approaching the marital tie. You have to raise your tariff before you can come up to those protectionists opposite or you have to lure them away with your free-trade theories, and I cannot very well understand how you are going to carry on the negotiations when I consider the fact that not a man in the "Annex" can talk French. I would ask you gentlemen of the "Annex" down there to consider these matters and to see if it is not possible for you—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I must remind the hon. member that he should address the Chair.

Mr. BUTTS: I beg your pardon, Sir—to see if it is not possible for them to take the advice of the Prime Minister (Mr. Meighen) the other evening, when he told them to throw away the mask, to come out into the open and to form the union in order that we might possibly have a little bit of jollification before we have an election.

On motion of Mr. Proulx (Prescott) the debate was adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS

Bill No. 137, to amend and consolidate the Acts respecting Quebec Steamship Company.—Mr. Casgrain.

[Mr. Butts.]

Bill No. 43, to incorporate Standard Insurance Company, and recommending that the title be changed to "An Act to incorporate Ensign Insurance Company."—Mr. Mowat.

On motion of Right Hon. Arthur Meighen the House adjourned at 12.06 a.m. Wednesday.

Wednesday, May 18, 1921.

The House met at Three o'clock.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

STEAMSHIPS—GOVERNMENT

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton):

1. What action, if any, has the Government taken towards accepting the recommendations set forth in the final Report of the Royal Commission on the Natural Resources, Trade and Legislation of certain portions of His Majesty's Dominions and presented to both Houses of Parliament by command of His Majesty in March, 1917, showing that it is not desirable that the operations of the steamship companies carrying passengers and freight between the Dominion of Canada and the United Kingdom should remain longer without some measure of Government supervision?

2. Does the Government intend to give effect to this legislation?

3. What action, if any, has the Government taken to assist the Imperial Government in bringing about Government control of ocean carriers doing business (or from time to time doing business) between ports in the United Kingdom and ports in the Dominion of Canada?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The recommendations referred to have been considered by the Government and the subject matter discussed with other Overseas Premiers and the Premier of Great Britain. An Imperial Shipping Committee was appointed by the British Government in June, 1920, to inquire into and report on all matters connected with ocean freights and facilities and on all matters connected with the development and improvement of sea communications between the different parts of the Empire. On this committee Canada and other Overseas Dominions are represented. This committee has been in session and a preliminary report has been made on ship-owners' liabilities under bills of lading and matters pertaining thereto. This will doubtless be followed by reports on other phases of the subject being investigated by the above-named committee. After this investigation is finished and the reports made, what action, if any, is to be taken by the Government will have to be determined after the reception and consideration of these reports of the committee.

RETURNED SOLDIER CIVIL SERVANTS

Mr. McDONALD:

1. Have any representations been received from any Civil Service organization on allowing to returned soldiers Civil Servants the statutory increases they would have received had they spent in the Civil Service the period they were on active service overseas?
2. If so, have these representations been given consideration, and by whom?
3. Have any recommendations been made, and is any action to be taken in this matter?

Hon. Sir HENRY DRAYTON:

1. No.
2 and 3. Do not arise.

L. T. MARCIL

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure):

1. Referring to question answered on April 25, 1921, concerning settlement made with L. T. Marcil, who was injured on the Canadian Pioneer, will the Canadian Governmet Merchant Marine, Limited, give the name of the Insurance Company and the nature of the settlement arrived at in that case?
2. What was the nature of the injury and was it of a nature to permanently incapacitate this man?
3. What was the amount paid?

Hon. Mr. BALLANTYNE:

1. The Dominion Gresham Guarantee and Casualty Co., 302 St. James Street, Montreal.

Mr. Marcil was referred to that company for any settlement he might be entitled to.

2. Louis Marcil, aged 63, employed as foreman longshoreman, was walking downstairs at No. 1 grain elevator, Montreal, when some one called him. He turned around to see what was wanted, and in doing so fell downstairs and is reported to have sustained internal injury. The department understands the medical evidence submitted in this case indicates the injury slight, but that Marcil has suffered from double hernia for the past forty years and also dyspepsia for the past seven years, which combination is considered to be the cause of his present incapacity.

3. The department is informed that the Dominion Gresham Company settled with Marcil for the sum of $60 in full satisfaction of all claims.

BONUS TO CIVIL SERVANTS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): I would like to ask the Government if it has arrived at any decision as to whether the bonus to civil servants will be continued in whole or not?

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Prime Minister): The decision of the Government in that regard was stated to Parliament many weeks ago; it has not been changed.

Mr. EULER: I thought a hearing was given to a deputation from the Civil Service on the matter, and that the Government was to announce its decision later on.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We have heard a very great deal on the subject but the Government's decision is unchanged.

OLEOMARGARINE RESOLUTION

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Shelburne and Queen's): I would like to draw the attention of the Prime Minister to an item which has been standing on the Order Paper for two and a half months, notice of a resolution to continue the privilege of manufacturing and dealing in oleomargarine. I desire to know whether it is the intention of the Government to proceed with the measure?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, it is.

VICTORIA DAY

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. W. F. KAY (Missisquoi): I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether it is intended that the House shall sit on the 24th of May?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is not usual for the House to sit on the 24th of May, but there may be circumstances that would make it wise to do so this year. I would be glad to hear the opinion of hon. members in general.

DEBATE CONTINUED ON THE ANNUAL STATEMENT PRESENTED BY THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Tuesday, May 17, the debate on the motion of Hon. Sir Henry Drayton (Minister of Finance), that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Ways and Means, and the proposed amendment thereto of Hon. W. S. Fielding:

Mr. DUNCAN CAMPBELL ROSS (West Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to make any extended remarks in regard to the Budget which the Minister of Finance has brought down. In a general way I would like to observe that the Budget, as I see it, is not going to bring any relief to the great consuming masses of the people of this country but will place additional burdens on their backs. I had hoped that the Government would have undertaken some revision of the tariff which would have resulted in a reduction of the taxation levied on the necessities of life, which cost so large a proportion of the income, not only of the labouring and farming classes, but also of those who form what may be called the middle classes of society. However, we have been disappointed in this regard notwithstanding the many promises made throughout the country by the Government and its supporters.

Permit me to say that we are faced at the present time with a very difficult situation indeed, and one which is bound to have a very prejudicial affect upon the country, more particularly in the matter of agricultural production. It is not my intention to review at great length the events of 1911, but I think it is recognized to-day —not only by this House but by the people generally—that had the reciprocity pact of that year been accepted by this country it would have been one of the greatest booms that Canada ever enjoyed. That has been proved, to some extent, by the action of the Government itself, which, although it helped to repudiate reciprocity in 1911, subsequently adopted some of its important provisions. The removal by the United States of the duties on cattle, sheep and hogs, resulted in the live stock industry in this country making very great strides. In the western part of the province of Ontario the cattle, sheep and hog industry was greatly helped by the taking down of the tariff barriers; but the prospect of a reimposition of those duties has caused in the minds of our farmers a feeling of perturbation; they do not know exactly where they are going to find markets if the tariff barriers are raised again, and they are most anxious that they should continue to enjoy the benefits which they have experienced partially but which they would have had in toto had the reciprocity agreement been accepted by Canada. I hope it is not too late for measures to be taken looking to that end. What is proposed at Washington is only a temporary tariff, and it would be well to enter into negotiations with the Government there to see whether some arrangement cannot be entered into whereby we might have trade relations which would be to the benefit of both countries. I do not mean by that that we should go hat in hand and ask in a pleading or humiliating way for concessions on the part of the United States administration. But we have things they want and they have things which we need, and if we can enter into any arrangement for commercial intercourse on mutually advantageous terms, it would be of the greatest possible benefit to the live stock industry of this country. As I say, the Fordney Bill is only a temporary measure. These two countries are peculiarly situated, they are neighbours for three or four thousand miles, and it is to be hoped that their long-standing friendly relations will never be interrupted. So I think the time is probably overripe—it is ripe, anyway—for the Government to take some action with a view to restoring to our cattle raisers the benefits of the American market which they have hitherto enjoyed.

If the Government do not think well to take such action, they must provide another outlet for our cattle, and I would suggest to the Prime Minister that during his visit to the Old Country—and I wish him all good fortune in the undertaking—he should attempt in a reasonable businesslike way, without meddling in their domestic affairs, to impress upon the British Government the mutual benefit of doing away with the embargo on our cattle. The matter has already been taken up with the British authorities, but coming from the Prime Minister the prestige of his position would give added weight to his representations, and I am sure he would succeed in inducing the British people to see that justice is done to our cattle raisers. There can be no doubt that the so-called facts which induced the British Government to impose that embargo do not now, and in fact never did, exist, and its removal would confer a two-fold benefit, it would provide an outlet for our cattle, and at the same time it would enable the British people to get cheaper meat.

This debate, Mr. Speaker, has wandered pretty far afield, but throughout its course I have noticed that the Government seem to be very much bothered about us on this side of the House. Even the Prime Minister thinks we are getting into difficulties, and he would like to make it appear that we and our friends to the left are about to enter into an unholy alliance, and are intent on taking down the tariff barriers that now surround the country. He charges us with inconsistency and, in common with some of his supporters, seems to be very solicitous in regard to the attitude which my hon. friends on this side have taken. He seems so very solicitous that really I cannot understand his anxiety. He is bothered about the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) and is afraid that he will not retain his seat. That is a rather kindly solicitude coming from the Prime Minister for an hon. member who is opposed to him.

Mr. McMASTER: Crocodile tears.

Mr. ROSS: Yes, crocodile tears. He seems to be bothered about my hon. friend from Montreal (Mr. Rinfret) also, and about my hon. friend from West Peterborough (Mr. Gordon). He seems to think that we are not sincere, and he presumes to admonish us in regard to our sincerity and consistency. With all respect to the right hon. gentleman, I would tell him that it would be well for him to scrutinize some of his own supporters. He would probably find then that he had his hands full, and he might have some tremors as to just what line some of them would take on a protection motion. For my own part, I do not see how my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Henders) can, consistently stick to the Prime Minister on this occasion; nor can I see how my hon. friend from Swift Current (Mr. Argue) can follow the Prime Minister in view of the statements he has made in times past as to the trade policy that this country should adopt; nor do I see how my hon. and gallant friend from Skeena (Mr. Peck) can support the Prime Minister, if he is to be consistent with former declarations made on the platform and in this House. But I may come closer to the Prime Minister, to members of his own cabinet. I have very grave doubts—rather I have not any doubts—if he wishes to be consistent, in regard to the attitude of the Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Guthrie) on this amendment.

The right hon. Prime Minister last week made a very long and clever speech, but it was not the best that I have heard him deliver in this House. At times I was surprised at his lack of logic, remembering his peculiarly subtle mind, and it seemed to me that he forgot that vituperation is not argument, nor is declamation logic. There is a principle in the British constitution that there should be solidarity in the cabinet, and, looking at the past history of the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence, I really cannot see how he can refuse to support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's. It is only seven short years ago that he was one in the fighting phalanx on this side of the House. He carried the banner of Liberalism particularly high, and especially the banner of tariff reform as espoused by the Liberal party in this House and in the country. I have heard him on more than one occasion declaiming for the benefits of free agricultural implements, for a lower tariff all round, for assistance to the great consuming masses, and I have heard him rail at the Manufacturers' Association in no uncertain tones. But now the scene is changed. The attainment of power and his new environment seem to have made him another man. Contrasting his political past with his political present he seems to be a sort of political Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde in regard to the tariff policy. Not so very long ago he indulged in this House in quite a tirade against my hon. friends to my left. And in passing I would like to compliment their leader, the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar) on his speech of yesterday, which I think is one of the best I have ever heard in this House. The Minister of Militia was gibing the farmers with not being loyal to the industries of this country, and consequently, I presume, not loyal to Canada herself. He intimated that they did not want to buy Canadian made goods, but prefered American, and he thought that was an outrageous policy for them to pursue. Now, what has been the policy of the Minister of Militia? As long as I have known him, until this sudden change, he had been a consistent supporter of the principles of the Liberal party. Let us look at his political history for a few moments, and while in doing this I may be adding to the material which has already been put on Hansard by the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Pardee), I think it well to do so, to show just how far there can be solidarity in this cabinet in regard to tariff policy. The Minister of Militia, speaking in this House on March 1st, as reported on page 443 of Hansard, used this language:

> But what is this organization doing? What is the party supported by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. M. Clark) doing to-day? Look at the millions upon millions of dollars that are going out of this country every year—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I must point out to the hon. member that it is a part of the unwritten law of parliament that a member, in speaking, cannot refer to anything said or done in a previous debate during the same session and that he is not in order in quoting from a previous debate.

Mr. ROSS: Well, Mr. Speaker, I bow to your ruling. But I may point out that the hon. minister, after indulging in this tirade against the farmers, intimated that the removal of the duty on farm implements would result in the destruction of all implement manufacturing industries in this country, and that it would make valueless all the capital invested in them. He said that the manufacturers would lose everything they had put into those industries; that the Americans would come here and steal our market; that Canadian labour would not be used, and that our money would be spent in buying American goods. I am sorry that I cannot quote his exact words, but I think that is just about what he said; I am sure he will not deny it. Now, in March, 1914, a motion was made by Mr. Knowles, then a member of the House, to put agricultural implements on the free list, and in the course of the debate on that motion the Minister of Militia made another very positive speech. He generally makes positive speeches and sometimes issues challenges to hon. gentlemen holding different views; in this case his remarks were just as positive as usual. To-day he is absolutely opposed to the admission of agricultural implements free of duty, on the ground that it would be unpatriotic. Well, I do not see anything in the condition of the country at the present time to make any difference between what would be unpatriotic now and what was unpatriotic in 1914. Here is what the present Minister of Militia said in 1914:

> There is only one thing left for him to do—
> Referring to the Prime Minister.
> —and that is to reduce the tariff on agricultural implements to a minimum. In my view, that will not be as satisfactory as the complete abolition of the duties upon agricultural implements. But from the statement of the Prime Minister at six o'clock, his followers from the western provinces who represent agricultural constituencies, and his followers from the province of Ontario who represent the Wellingtons, the Dufferins, the Oxfords and the Waterloos, can tell their constituents that the great boon of free agricultural implements has been denied to them this day by the Prime Minister of Canada, who is the mouthpiece of the Government.

These were the words used by the present Minister of Militia on March 11, 1914, in this House. At that time he was not Minister of Militia; he was the great tribune of the people. He went on to say:

> I rose on this occasion chiefly because I think that some member from the province of Ontario should interject some remarks into this debate to show that the demand for agricultural implements is by no means limited to the western provinces of Canada. The riding which I have the honour to represent in this House is about equally made up of urban and of rural inhabitants. I am satisfied that, irrespective of party, the people engaged in agriculture in the county of Wellington, north or south, would hold up both hands for the boon of free agricultural implements.

When my hon. friend goes back to his constituency some time in the course of a year or two, what will the people of North and South Wellington say to him in regard to this volte-face in the matter of free agricultural implements—a condition necessary to the proper carrying on of agricultural work by his farmer friends? The hon. gentleman went on to say:

> From the Atlantic to the Pacific, the demand is as broad as is the country. I then ask the Government: Why not accede to a demand of that kind when your revenue is going to suffer so little and when no Canadian industry is going to be injured?

In 1914 the hon. gentleman referred to this question as a very grave one. In 1921, speaking on this very same "grave question," he contends in all seriousness that if we have free agricultural implements all the agricultural implement industries of this country will be wiped out. In 1914 he said:

> I then ask the Government: Why not accede to a demand of that kind when your revenue is going to suffer so little and when no Canadian industry is going to be injured?

The hon. gentleman at that time was even more ardent in his support of the motion than its sponsor, Mr. Knowles. It is generally understood that agricultural implements cover only such articles as mowers, reapers, and a few other things; their number is not large so far as the tariff schedules are concerned. But in 1914, in the speech to which I have been referring, the hon. gentleman went on to say:

> I, for one, believe that of all the industries in Canada the agricultural implement industry is the one now best able to stand without the support of any customs tariff at all. I made a little list of twenty-five articles which are generally and properly considered agricultural implements. I know that some hon. members in referring to agricultural implements include only reapers, mowers, binders and a few other articles, but I cannot see why the list should not be much more extended.

So the hon. gentleman at that time wanted to extend the application of the term "agricultural implements" to some twenty-five different articles and have them all made free of duty. He promised to give a list of these articles in response to a question put by Mr. Sharpe, but I do not see that the list was ever given. So there we have some of the history of the hon. gentleman so far as his stand on this very important question of agricultural implements is concerned.

But that was not the latest stand which he took on the subject prior to this year. Even as late as 1917 his conversion had not been effected; he was still in favour of free agricultural implements. In 1917 a motion was moved in this House by Hon. Frank Oliver, of which the following is a part:

That in the opinion of this House it would be in the public interest if the Customs Tariff Act were so amended as to provide:

1. That wheat, wheat flour, and all other products of wheat be placed upon the free list.
2. That farm implements and machinery, farm tractors, mining, flour and saw-mill machinery, and repairs for same, rough and partly dressed lumber, illuminating, lubricating and fuel oils, cement and fertilizers be added to the free list.

The hon. Minister of Militia expressed his approval of that policy. There seems, therefore, to be a good deal of inconsistency and considerable lack of harmony on the tariff question, even among the followers of my right hon. friend (Mr. Meighen). He had better look after his own house and not bother about hon. gentlemen on this side.

As I have said, the Minister of Militia has always been one of the greatest opponents in this House of the principle of protection. We can find this out by looking through the old debates—and they are very interesting—when the minister makes statements in regard to the tariff policy of this country. He says to-day—at least I presume he does, because I suppose he is following his leader, as this is a very important matter and the Cabinet should be of one mind in regard to it—that he and his Government are in favour of the principle of protection. That is not what he used to say. In the olden days, if I remember aright, the Minister of Militia was in favour of a revenue tariff, but to-day he is going further; he wants to help the privileged classes; he is more closely associated with the Manufacturers' Association or, at any rate, more friendly to them, and he has abandoned those clients and friends of his of the olden days, the great consuming masses and the farmers of his riding.

What did he say in 1911-12 in regard to this question. At that time there was before the House a very important measure, introduced, I think, by the then Prime Minister, to establish a permanent tariff commission in this country. The present Minister of Militia was not in favour of that measure, and on the second reading of the Bill providing for the establishment of a permanent tariff commission the minister made certain observations. I want to dwell upon this point because it shows such a complete change of heart on the part of the minister. All through these speeches of his he has been referring to the burden that the tariff will place on the great consuming masses, on labour and so on, but to-day he seems to have forgotten these people entirely. At page 2602 of Volume II of Hansard of 1911-12, the present Minister of Militia spoke as follows:

But apart from the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, has any call come from any other section of the country?

That is, for the appointment of a permanent tariff commission.

I ask my hon. friend the Minister of Finance: Have any agricultural societies in Canada asked for the establishment of a permanent tariff commission? Have any of the dairymen's associations—

In those days he was looking after the different associations connected with agriculture and the raising of live stock.

—any of the live stock associations, swine breeders' or sheep breeders' associations, any western associations, the Grain Growers' Association, the Dominion Grange—have any of these men asked for it? Have any of the great consuming classes asked for such a measure?

That was the position of the Minister of Militia in 1911-12. He was the protector of the consuming masses, of the grain growers, the sheep breeders, the swine breeders, and he had a little soft spot in his heart even for his present enemies across the way. That was not all that he said at that time. At page 2603 of the same volume of Hansard he used these words:

It does, Sir, seem to me a strange thing that the first important official act, the first act, at all events, of any consequence or any magnitude, performed by the Minister of Finance in this House since his appointment to that high position a few monthes ago, should be the introduction of a Bill to establish a permanent tariff commission in Canada, a Bill which, on his own statement, both in form and in substance, I think I am safe in saying, is practically borrowed from the highest protectionist country in the world, from the United States of America. It is a strange comment, a strange sequel, upon events which happened just about a year ago in Massey Hall, Toronto, at a tremendous gathering called by so-called Liberals to protest against the proposed reciprocity agreement with the United States.

They were "so-called Liberals" because they did not believe in reciprocity. I suppose, as regards others who believed in those days in reciprocity, in greater freedom of trade, free farm implements and a number of other things, and who do not do so now, it would not be kind to call them "so-called Liberals"—they have become hard-shell Tories, pure and simple. A little further on the minister went on to say, speaking of the Minister of Finance of that day:

He will remember, as I do, that one member of the House of Representatives said: I support this Bill because it is the best way to sustain the glorious doctrine of protection.

Thus showing that he himself was bitterly opposed to that "glorious doctrine" of protection, which he is espousing so bravely and loyally to-day. A little further on he used these words:

A tariff commission board seems to be a necessary adjunct to the high protective system, and I do not think I am going one jot beyond the truth when I say that this Bill is brought in here—almost the first important Bill of the first session of this Parliament—as a quid pro quo for the Canadian Manufacturers' Association to redeem the promises made to them for their generous and lavish support during the election on September 21 last.

I wonder if one can apply those words to-day. I wonder if this stand as regards protection is not another bid from hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the House to get the Canadian manufacturers and the big interests of this country to back them again as they did in 1911, and by misrepresentations about various things sweep them again into power. It looks very much as if this were a duplication of their effort of 1911; but I prophesy that you cannot fool the people all the time, and failure will confront my hon. friends whenever the election day comes. A little further on the hon. gentleman used these words:

Is that not plain enough? Do the people not believe that the Government's proposal means that the Board of Tariff Commissioners shall, from time to time, make reports upon which this Government will act, and that these reports, in the very nature of things, will be in the interest of higher duties or greater protection to the industries of Canada,—or, in the words of the Prime Minister, will be designed to give the industries of Canada more than a fair chance? If they give them more than a fair chance, somebody is going to suffer. It is at the expense of somebody else.

At whose expense is it to be? Certainly, at the expense of the great consuming masses of this country.

[Mr. Ross.]

That is a clear admission that, by the Government's adherence to a policy of protection, to which at that time my hon. friend did not adhere, the great masses of the people were going to be injured. A little further on he made use of these words:

The fact, therefore, is that we are going to have three permanent tariff commissioners, a board just as permanently appointed as a bench of judges is appointed; and that the qualification is that they shall be loyal subjects and followers of the right hon. gentleman who is now Prime Minister of Canada. They are to be Conservatives first, last, and all the time, and if they are, they have also got to be protectionists and high protectionists. We may make up our minds to it that we are going to have a board made up of individuals who rightly or wrongly hold opinions in favour of a highly protective system in this Dominion.

Mr. Blain: Is not my hon. friend (Mr. Guthrie) a protectionist himself?

Mr. Guthrie: I believe in a certain amount of protection; a tariff for revenue. A tariff for revenue affords enough protection in my community and in my opinion it is sufficient.

Later on, in the course of that address, the hon. member spoke of his being in favour of a revenue tariff. Consequently, as late as 1912, my hon. friend was not in favour of the protective principle except as far as there was incidental protection in a revenue tariff. Further on he says:

My own opinion is that, while it may fall somewhat short of the ideal of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, it is a perfect "lemon" for the farmers and workers of Canada.

That is the establishment of a tariff commission which meant "protection" as he said.

They will be fooled and hoodwinked by such a measure. They have a right, I believe, to look for better treatment at the hands of the right hon. Prime Minister.

The hon. member then moved the six months' hoist. All this was a struggle to prevent protection from becoming a factor in the tariff policy of this country. The whole political policy of the Minister of Militia up to a session or so ago when he joined this Government, has been to tear down the tariff walls around this country and make trade freer. But a wonderful change has come over the hon. gentleman since he entered this Government and became Minister of Militia.

Just at this point I would like to touch on some criticisms that the Minister of Militia has made on the attitude we on this side of the House have taken with regard to certain of his Estimates. My hon. friend from Kent (Mr. McCoig) moved that the vote of $1,500,000 in the minister's Estimates for annual drill should be cut in two. The Minister of Militia took great exception to that, and in a very eloquent peroration tried to leave the impression on the country that we on this side of the House were not friendly to the boys in the trenches, but were endeavouring to make them do their duty twice; it was suggested that we had not their interests at heart. Now I presume it is known to this House and to the country that just as many Liberals and sons of Liberals died on the fields of France and Flanders as Conservatives and the sons of Conservatives. The suggestion that was made from this side of the House to cut that vote in two was made solely in the interests of economy. It was a good suggestion, and I heartily approved of it. I think the minister's argument on that occasion destroyed itself, because he said: Unless we do the thing properly, we might as well save the money. Now, if any boy can get much benefit by taking six days' drill, I will have to be shown something more than I know at present of the drills that have taken place in this country from year to year.

But that is not altogether the point. Our argument was this: In 1921 Canada is in a different position from what she has been in for many a year. The war is over; peace is established, and, we believe, firmly established. Not so very long ago I had the pleasure of listening to one of the Prime Ministers of the greatest self-governing dominions, and he said that he did not believe we would have another war in this generation. So we have come back to a peace basis, and we do not need to be looking for trouble and spending money on military matters to the extent we did in the past. It is not as if we were in Europe, with an armed camp all around us. We are isolated here in Canada. We are not unfriendly with the country to the south of us. We are a peaceable people, and we desire peace, and on grounds of economy alone, if for no other reason, I believe it would be wise for us to save this money we are expending on military matters, and use it for expanding our trade, and in other more profitable ways that will readily suggest themselves to the minds of all hon. members.

What attitude did the present Minister of Militia take in regard to a similar vote in this House in 1914? The Minister of Militia of that day, now the hon. member for Victoria (Sir Sam Hughes) had an item in his Estimates of $2,000,000 for annual training. My hon. friend the present Minister of Militia seemed at that time to be the critic of militia Estimates, and he was very much in favour of reducing this item of $2,000,000 for military training; so much so, that he thought it would be a good argument to back up his position by referring to the past record of the gentlemen with whom he is now associated, and he went back to the time when my hon. friend who is now Minister of Trade and Commerce Sir George Foster) was Minister of Finance, and pointed out what he did under similar circumstances. Then he went on to advocate that military drill should be cut out on grounds of economy. I will give you his exact words:

> On their face these Estimates are wrong. There is a statement that there is less spent this year than last. I remember in the old days of the Conservative party, prior to 1896. That was a year very much like this. There was a falling revenue and an increasing expenditure. Times were hard and unemployment was general throughout the land. How did the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) who was then Minister of Finance, face the situation? Did he increase the military expenditure? No. he did not send the men out to drill that year and he saved between $600,000 and $700,000 to the people of Canada by one stroke of the pen. A similar situation confronts us to-day—a falling revenue, a rising expenditure and the militia expenditure, of all others, rising faster in proportion than the expenditure of any other department of the Government.

Further on he said:

> Look at the other requirements of Canada calling for our attention to-day.

I contend that here we have an absolute confirmation of the rightfulness of the position we have taken with regard to the proposed expenditure on drill. The conditions are even worse to-day; our revenues are falling, hard times are upon us, unemployment is general throughout the country; and if there is one thing that this Government needs to study at the present time it is economy. I submit that the position taken by the Minister of Militia in this House this session with regard to this item for drill was absolutely out of accord with the position he took in 1914.

In the year 1912 also the present Minister of Militia was desirous of reducing other military Estimates. He even went so far, as you will see by page 6452, Volume 4, of the Debates of 1912-13, as to say in reply to the suggestion of the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Beland) for a naval holiday:

> Yes, and take a holiday in naval matters, and go forward with this Bank Act and the private legislation and the other pressing measures which are before the country and which have been held up by the Government.

So in those days when my hon. friend was on this side of the House he was a great champion of reduction in military expenditures. I say that our attitude is much more justified at this time by the situation in which this country finds itself to-day.

I shall not detain the House much longer, as I have already spoken longer than I had intended. There is just one thing further that I wish to say. There seems to be on the other side of the House a great deal of fear among many hon. members who have spoken as to the attitude of hon. members of the Progressive party. That fear seems to pervade the mind and heart not only of the Prime Minister (Mr. Meighen) but of the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Cowan), the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) and quite a few other hon. gentlemen opposite. There seems to be some suspicion in their minds that the Progressive elements in this country might form an alliance; that our friends to my left at some time in the future, either before or after the election, might join with us in endeavouring to give good government to this country. I do not know that that is such a horrible prospect to contemplate. I do not know that such an alliance would strike terror into the hearts of the people. I do not know but that worse things might happen to this country. Which would be the better for this country—a union or alliance of the moderating wisdom of experienced Liberalism with the progressive ideals of ardent and advanced agrarianism, or an alliance of decrepit, decayed, and moribund Toryism with the selfish, reactionary ideals of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association? It seems to me that the former are pretty vigorous parents, and that they would breed a pretty sound offspring. I think that they would do in Canada what was done in 1896; they would bring prosperity, progress and contentment to the masses of the people, and they would bring flourishing industries into Canada and make this country a great nation. On the other hand, our friends opposite, by the alliance which apparently they desire to make, could only bring forth an offspring that would mean a continuation of special privilege in this country and that would not make for the contentment of the masses, but would rather, on the contrary, impose upon them, in the future, the taxation they have had to bear in the past. My hon. friends, by that alliance, would do nothing to promote flourishing business; they would simply bring stagnation to business and trade, and instead of building up a great nation, they would help to reduce this promising country to the stature of a dwarf nation. I do not care whether or not this alliance is consummated between the Agrarians and this party; but I do say, Mr. Speaker, that after the next Parliament, it is my belief that either a union of these two great vitalizing elements in this country will go forward to carry out the policy enunciated in the amendment moved by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), or, if they do not unite to prosecute that policy, then there will be in Parliament either an Agrarian party, or a Liberal party which will carry out this policy and build up the country, making it more happy and prosperous than it is at present, or than it could otherwise hope to be.

Mr. W. H. WHITE (Victoria, Alta.): I did not expect that I should be called upon so suddenly to take part in the debate. I had not thought it possible that I should have to follow immediately an hon. member on this side of the House; I had no idea that our friends across the way had contemplated so early a surrender. My reason for not contributing to the debate at an earlier stage is the fact that the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark), one of the twelve members representing the people of Alberta in this House, is usually accorded the right to precede those members in an important debate such as this, in view of his eloquence and his knowledge of economic affairs. I had been waiting for some hon. member from my province to get up and in some measure endeavour to make an argument against the views advanced by the hon. member for Red Deer, but so far not one of them has accepted the challenge.

We know, Mr. Speaker, that in Canada to-day things are not what they were a few years ago; things are on the retrograde rather than progressive in Alberta, as in other parts of the Dominion. But one would imagine, from the silence of the representatives of that province, that we were back in the year 1896 when there was only one representative for the whole province of Alberta—although, let me say, he was some representative. Nothing ever transpired in reference to his province on which he did not have something to say; I suppose it is hardly necessary for me to state that I refer to Hon. Frank Oliver. But

4 p.m.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know that even at that time, away back in 1896, we were not about as well represented in Parliament as we have ever been since. We had then one energetic and active man to take care of our interests. If things were in a prosperous state, or if we had some reasonable ground for hope that conditions would be bettered by the administration of this Government we could excuse the inactivity of hon. gentlemen who sit behind them. I may say, in passing, that I am a pretty old resident of that province, having spent some forty years there, and during all that time—and my experineces were rather hard in the early eighties—I do not believe that the people ever had to struggle as hard to make ends meet as at the present time. It was surprising to those who came at a later date and were able to prosper in that province to be told of the hard times which we had experienced in the old days; they thought we were telling them a tale in which there was more romance than truth. But they are beginning to realize, as we did, what real hard times mean, and what it is to have a Tory Government in power. Hon. gentlemen opposite may say that difficult conditions to-day are not peculiar to Canada, but are world-wide; but I contend that with a proper government we should still be able to carry on. The Government has tampered with everything. They have tampered with the administration of lands., tampered with the regulations in regard to oils, tampered with the development of our country, and tampered with the oil and mining leases, until to-day no investor has courage enough to come in and take a chance. Day after day I have received letters of complaint from various classes of people; sometimes from farmers, sometimes from men interested in mining rights, sometimes from men interested in coal, and sometimes from timber men; and last, but not least, from oil prospectors. I have rereceived letters, and I have no doubt hon. gentlemen opposite from that province have also received like letters, condemning the Government for every change and amendment they have made in the mining regulations. I have one particular letter which I will not read in full, but I may read a resolution which was passed by a meeting of citizens on this subject. The resolution is as follows:

We, therefore, submit the following resolutions:

1. There should be no Government reservations at the present time in the North West Territories. Should the Government adhere to the idea of a reserve, then the lessee should have the prior rights to such reservations, upon payment of what royalty the Government demand.

2. There should be no burdensome money payments required during development or before marketing of the oil becomes possible.

3. The Government should rely mainly upon royalties for control of petroleum production, rather than upon rentals and reservations.

4. Canada's present dependence upon foreign oil supply, and her unfavourable trade balance, suggest and require that every possible assistance and encouragement should be given to the business of developing our own oil resources.

5. The best encouragement that the Government can offer at the present time is the adopting of a set of fixed regulations that cannot be altered except by Act of Parliament.

6. The Government should so frame its petroleum policy as to offer every possible encouragement to foreign capital to come to Canada.

7. The Government would be well advised in appointing a Commission for the purpose of investigating the difficulties and practical possibilities of the MacKenzie River Basin Oil Fields; one of such Commission should be from Alberta and familiar with the geographic, climatic and transport difficulties of the North; in the interim, pending the Commission's report, the more onerous restrictions should be amended so that there will be no interference with development work going on this year.

Now let me read a further communication on this subject:

A large number of men of the city of Edmonton, who are conversant with all the development that has taken place in Western Canada, and who are looking forward anxiously to the opening up and development of Canada's Natural Resources, beg to submit for your consideration the following observations re the issue of Oil and Gas Permits and Leases in the North-West Territories:

1. Although capital prefers specific contracts before investment, no lease will be granted until oil has been actually found. (Section 1 and 22.)

2. Prospecting permits cover a maximum of only four square miles, which is insufficient to warrant the heavy outlays necessary in far Northern fields. (Section 2.)

3. Prospecting permits lapse and revert to the Government without notice upon casual or clerical defaults, and, in any event, at the end of four years, whether drilling is still proceeding or not. (Sections 16, 19 and 21.)

4. A lease will be granted for only one-quarter of the area secured under permit. The balance becomes Crown reserve. (Section 23.)

5. A separate drill must be set to work upon every permit acquired or held by each and every owner. This is a physical impossibility. Transportation into the North Country is limited by climatic conditions to 12 weeks. E.G., it took 27 days for the Imperial Oil, Limited, utilizing every possible resource of men and of money, at a time when there was no congestion of traffic, to transport one drill outfit over Smith Portage. (Section 15.)

6. Rental charges must always be paid, and vigorous pumping of oil must continue at all times whether facilities for delivery of oil to a market are available or not. The only alternative is wastefully to pump into open pits. (Section 46.)

It does not matter what a man's calling may be—whether he is engaged in farming, mining, or anything else—it is difficult for him to do business in that country owing to the hampering and restrictive effect of the Government regulations.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Strathcona): Will the hon. gentleman give the name of the writer of the letter?

Mr. WHITE: It is signed by Mr. H. L. McInnes, who for many years was president of the Conservative Association at Edmonton. I have no doubt my hon. friend knows him very well.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Strathcona): Is the hon. gentleman aware that changes have been made in the regulations in the direction asked for?

Mr. WHITE: I am very glad if that is the case. It may have the effect of awakening the Government to the necessity of making further changes in the regulations.

I now wish to draw attention to the necessity of providing adequate transportation facilities in the West. The impression exists very generally in the East that the railroads in the West were built solely for the benefit of the western people. The fact is that most of the existing roads were built before there were any settlers in the West to speak of, the number located there at that time was very few. As I said a few moments ago, as late as 1896, when a considerable number of railroads had been built, there was only one representative in this Parliament from the province of Alberta, and, I think, two from the province of Saskatchewan. These railways were built at the instance of the eastern people who should assume the responsibility therefor to as great an extent as the people of the West—western people should not be called upon to bear the entire burden. Let me point out to hon. gentlemen the extent to which increased rates on transportation facilities bears more heavily on the West than on the East. There are districts in the province of Alberta where the grain has to be marketed at a distance of approximately one thousand miles from the place of production. On the other hand, in the province of Ontario the farmer's market is not at a greater distance, probably, than fifty miles. In the West we have to pay railway rates on a thousand-mile journey, whereas in the East the railway rate only applies to a fifty-mile journey. The result of such heavy railway freight rates was demonstrated the other day by one of the members of the Agrarian party, I think the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Reid) who showed that on a shipment of a carload of oats the producer received nothing and in addition had to pay $38 to make up the charges of the commission merchant. Whatever the reasons may be, that is the situation we are up against in the West—we have a large crop but we have no markets for it. Does the Government think it a wise thing to maintain high railway rates and render it impossible for producers to get their products to market? Such a policy is undoubtedly limiting production and causing stagnation throughout the country. The facts in regard to the existing situation were fully placed before the Prime Minister when he visited the West last fall. I was asked to head a delegation of people from the districts along the Canadian Northern line who wished to complain to the right hon. gentleman of the existing congestion of grain and their inability to market their crop. The Prime Minister was apprised in advance that the deputation were about to wait on him, a wire being sent to him at Vancouver. When he met the delegation he was quite sympathetic, of course, but was unable to give any answer as to what he might be able to do. The recommendations made to the Prime Minister on that occasion were most comprehensive, the several Boards of Trade along the main line of the Canadian Northern, for a distance of one hundred miles, having drawn up statements explaining the actual conditions. No notice has been taken of those representations, although nearly a year has expired; apparently the Prime Minister has been unable to do anything. Under the circumstances I deem it well to place on Hansard the memorials addressed to the Prime Minister. By a perusal of them it may be possible to take measures to prevent a repetition of the events of last year. The first document I shall read is a memorial addressed to the Prime Minister, which reads as follows:

Edmonton, November 11, 1920.

To the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen,
Prime Minister of Canada.

Sir:—

On November 4, 1920, a convention was held at Vegreville to discuss the matter of a car shortage. At this convention, representatives were present from the various agricultural and business organizations along the line of the Canadian National railway, including the districts served by the towns of Lamont, Chipman, Mundare, Vegreville, Lavoy, Ranfurly, Innisfree, Minburn and Mannville. The territory served by these towns takes in an area running one hundred miles east and west; and fifteen miles south and thirty-five miles north of the Canadian National line, or five thousand square miles of what is recognized as the richest farming lands in Northern Alberta.

A careful survey of the situation was made by the convention and it was estimated (conservatively) that at least 6,210 cars will be required to handle this season's crop. These cars to be distributed as follows:

I wish to call the attention of hon. gentlemen to the fact that this was on November 11, and the threshing had started early in September, or an interval of about three months. Yet, notwithstanding that period of time this was the number of cars received at the different points, and none of these cars were spotted as empties, but were cars that brought in merchandise, so there was actually no special provision made at all for grain shipments:

Station	No. of cars received	No. of cars required
Manville	32	400
Minburn	24	300
Innisfree	29	300
Ranfurly	..	100
Lavoy	12	750
Vegreville	66	1,000
Raith	16	80
Mundare	30	600
Hilliard	..	80
Chipman	..	400
Lamont	45	600
Bruderheim	17	600
Fort Saskatchewan	31	1,000

In view of what is going on every day now in the railway committee, before which the general manager of this railroad has claimed that all that is needed to make our Government railways successful is business, I think it will be plain to everybody that the trouble with the Canadian Northern Railway is that they already have more business than they can attend to. This letter continues:

Up to the time of the convention only 254 cars had been supplied in all to these towns. As a contrast to that, it may be pointed out that at one point, only on the Canadian Pacific Railway immediately south of this district, over 300 cars have been shipped. At this one point, which is only typical of all those served by the Canadian Pacific, the elevators, through being able to market their grain promptly, have been paying 3 cents more per bushel for the different grades and at the same time are obliged to pay a one and one-half cent higher freight rate. It is obvious that the loss to the farmers along the Canadian National Railway is severe, more especially this season when record crops are being threshed. As one familiar with Western conditions, you will appreciate the statement that wheat is turning out from 40 to 60 bushels per acre and oats from 75 to 100 per acre. On all this out-turn, money is being lost and will continue to be lost throughout the entire shipping season, if cars are not provided. Each passing day accentuates the severity of a grain blockade throughout this district, a blockade which cannot fail to be detrimental in every respect.

You will be aware that the severe winter of 1919-20 was the occasion of a feed shortage which forced the farmers to assume heavy financial obligations. To discharge these obligations, they require all that they can realize from this season's operations, and if they cannot ship their grain, it is evident that their financial position cannot be improved. As the district is purely agricultural, it is equally plain that all other business institutions must suffer along with the farmers.

These notes have merely been placed before you as explanatory of formal resolutions duly approved by the convention. The resolutions are as follows:—

Whereas there is imminent danger of a Grain Blockade in the districts served by the towns along the Canadian National Railway, as noted in the explanatory items above mentioned,

And whereas at this date only 254 cars of grain have been shipped from all these points, as contrasted with 300 cars shipped from one point along the Canadian Pacific Railway immediately south of the district,

And whereas a difference of price amounting to 3 cents per bushel more is obtainable at the said C.P.R. point where a higher freight rate is in effect than at the Canadian National points above mentioned,

And whereas the elevators at the said points are already filled and no other storage facilities are available and grain held by farmers is kept in poorly constructed facilities or in some cases left lying exposed to the weather, as farmers could not secure sufficient help to construct proper storage facilities on their farms,

And whereas the feed shortage of the winter 1919-20 made it necessary for farmers to assume heavy financial obligations, which obligations are in many cases yet unfulfilled, and which cannot be fulfilled unless they can market their grain, and the result will inevitably curtail next season's farming operations,

And whereas the district being purely agricultural all other business institutions are dependent on the success of farming operations and if these are hindered or the results thereof lost, a serious stringency will affect such institutions to the possible extent of their enforced closing down.

And whereas when the usual cold winter weather sets in, it will necessitate the use of many more cars for coal transportation, thus further curtailing the number in use for grain shipments,

Therefore, be it resolved that this Convention duly petition the Dominion Government in the interest of Government ownership and operation, to spare no efforts to provide for immediate relief through a much increased supply of cars,

Or, in the alternative, that the Dominion Government devise some method of financing this season's crop until such time as it is possible to market it.

Signed on behalf of the Convention,

W. P. Williams, Con., Lamont.

I know it is rather wearying to the House to listen to these matters, but as no notice was taken by the Prime Minister when this memorial was presented to him—or at least no results have followed,—I have been asked by some of these gentlemen to place it on Hansard, and at a future date perhaps the Prime Minister or the Minister of Trade and Commerce may have time to study it and see how serious the situation was last year. There has been no relief yet, because the prices are such that they would not pay the freight on this grain, which should have been shipped out last year at the then current prices very much to the benefit of these men.

The tariff question has been handled very well by hon. gentlemen who perhaps know a great deal more about it than I do. My knowledge of tariffs has been confined principally to paying the duties imposed by them. The people of the Western country feel that they are unjustly called upon to pay more than is just, and although not averse to paying their share of the revenue they think that what they do pay is rather a bonus to the manufacturers than a help to the treasury. And it is not only those of the Liberal party who think that. My hon. friend from West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) this afternoon called the attention of the House to the fact that even a prominent member of the Government had formerly each year something to say about the burdens of taxation that the farmers of the East were bearing. The Prime Minister claims that the tariff has not been in any way tampered with, that if there is anything wrong with it the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) is responsible, and that the only thing the Government has done to the tariff has been to make it a little lower.

I can remember very well when the Prime Minister, like the Minister of Militia, held very different views. When the Western country was a great deal more prosperous than it is to-day, perhaps in the most prosperous time of its history, in what some people call the "golden days," which reached their summit in 1911—a year that we must refer to as the sunset of Canadian prosperity—my right hon. friend the Prime Minister was not satisfied with the then prevailing conditions and wanted a further reduction in the tariff. Now, a further reduction in the tariff at a time when the farmers were receiving in some cases three times what they are getting now would not seem to be so necessary as a reduction at the present time. In a speech delivered by the present Prime Minister at a time when he was in this House simply as the representative of a western constituency, he gave certain figures. He pointed out that in 1910 the average price of a mower was $44 and the average duty $7.70; that the average price of a binder was $144 and the average duty $19.60; that wagons were worth $90, and the duty on a wagon, therefore, at 25 per cent, would be $2.50. To-day a wagon of the same class is worth $200. The duty has been reduced to 20 per cent, so that with an increase in the price of the article of 100 per cent the farmer has to pay a duty of $40, or half the price of the wagon in those earlier days. As I have indicated, if there was ever a time when the farmers were better able to carry a burden of taxation, it was in those years; yet the Prime Minister thought then that the farmers were being called upon to do something that they were hardly able to do. Speaking of the duties of that day the Prime Minister said:

> What is the reason for all this? If the Government could show that these industries had degenerated from manhood to infancy, that they had got younger instead of older, that the conditions of competition were more onerous then than they are now, that the relative price of labour was higher to-day than it was then—I say the relative price—then there might be some excuse for it.

Some excuse for a duty of $7.70 on a mower and $19.60 on a binder? Well, the duties to-day are double these amounts; the conditions are much worse; yet hon. gentlemen seem to think that the farmers do not need relief. The hon. gentleman said further:

> They have so added to the protection afforded to the manufacturer that it has had the effect almost of driving out importations altogether, and to-day the total revenue which this Government derive, is, as I showed, some $283,633.99, even including the importations of ploughs, and if we leave out that one article the total revenue which this tariff for revenue government has derived from the importations of agricultural implements sinks to the insignificant sum of $92,954.72.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Thomson)—if his figures are correct, and they usually are—pointed out the other day that we were bonusing the manufacturers of this country to the extent of about $500,000,000. Well, if out of that amount all that finds its way into the treasury in this matter of agricultural implements is $92,954 it is only half the fees paid to the lawyers for dealing with one case in connection with the Winnipeg strike. Why should the people be penalized in the carrying of hundreds of millions by way of bonus to the manufacturers, when all the Government receives in respect of duties on agricultural implements is, according to the Prime Minister's figures, the small amount which I have mentioned. The Prime Minister, in the address to which I have referred, contended that as a revenue getter the tariff on agricultural implements was no good. He said:

> Why, sir, we have no tariff for revenue at all; nobody can defend this as a tariff for revenue.

Other criticisms were offered by the right hon. Prime Minister at that time; they can be found in Hansard for 1910-11, page 1915 and following pages. As the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) pointed out, the views with regard to tariff entertained by some hon. gentlemen seems to depend upon which side of the House they sit on.

It has been suggested by hon. gentlemen opposite that there is some alliance between the Liberal party and the Progressive group. Personally I fail to see it. I may say that I was the first man in Canada to be opposed by a farmer candidate. I know that the United Farmers are placing men in the field without paying any attention whatever to the political faith of those who oppose them—it does not seem to matter whether their opponents are Liberal or Conservative; they go into the field just the same. The farmer candidate who opposed me is still there and if I am again a candidate in that constituency I know that I will be opposed by him. That does not look very much like an alliance. Of course, I am quite satisfied that it should be so. I have, as a Liberal, always believed that the majority should rule, and if it is the wish of the people of my constituency or of the people of any constituency, for that matter, to be represented by those who support the platform of the Agrarian group, why, it is nothing more than their right.

I was somewhat surprised to hear the Prime Minister make an attack upon those who came so readily to his aid in 1917. I think that the securing of the services of the hon. gentleman who is now leader of the Progressive party had a great deal to do with the results, in the West, in the last election. But of course, he was a pretty good fellow as long as he was supporting them. I can remember some years after, when I seconded a resolution moved by the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster), the Prime Minister and others lauded many of the same hon. gentlemen because they remained with the Government at that time. The Government paid special attention to them, said that they were doing something that was noble and patriotic. Since then they have committed no crime that I am aware of, except that they have crossed the floor of the House and taken seats on the opposite side. By so doing, they have apparently lost all their virtues.

I may say, in conclusion, that I think the amendment is a good one; that it is in true accord with the Liberal platform. The suggestion made by the Prime Minister that the platform should have been read as an amendment is, perhaps, his opinion; but we are not bound by his opinion, nor do we look to the Prime Minister nor to any one else on that side for suggestions or proposed improvements as regards any amendments that we may move in the House. I am glad that this amendment has been moved and that I have been given this opportunity of supporting it. The Farmers' platform would have suited me just as well and I would have supported it just as readily, but as this amendment is in accord with it, I am glad of this opportunity of stating my views along this line.

Mr. GEORGE NEWCOMBE GORDON (Peterborough West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address myself briefly to the subject under discussion this afternoon, and to make an appeal particularly to the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton), who has introduced this proposed legislation which will seriously affect all the milling interests in the industrial centres. The minister made his maiden political speech in the city of Peterborough a few months ago, and on that occasion he assured the people of that city that he had a very affectionate regard for their interests. Therefore, I feel that I have a right to appeal to him not to forget the assurances that he gave us a couple of months ago in the city of Peterborough, and that he should now seek to avoid what will cause most serious injury to our milling industries and will, I believe, cause a great deal of loss and unemployment to those at present employed in the cereal mills in that city and in Eastern Canada. To show in some small way the amount of export business going through the city of Peterborough, I have taken the figures from the American Consul's office in that city. In 1920 we exported to the United States wheat flour, rye flour and other cereal products to the extent of over $1,000,000. We manufactured and sent to the United States milker parts, cream separator parts, of the De Laval Company, to the extent of about half a million dollars and competed successfully in the American market against American manufacturers. In addition to that, we exported to the United States, wood and wood products to the extent of $1,475,000. In the first quarter of this year we have exported to the United States from the flour mills $655,000 worth of breadstuffs, and if we can continue at that rate during the year, that will mean that we will export to the United States $2,620,000 worth of those products from that district. The export of wood manufactured products has increased largely, too, and if we can continue at the same rate during the present year, our export business to the United States in that line will be over $2,000,000. That indicates what some of these industries are, and it also shows that some manufacturers, in the city of Peterborough, at least, can compete successfully in the United States with American manufacturers.

In the city of Peterborough, there is a large number of mills, flour mills or cereal mills. It is said that the most modern mill in the world is located in the city of Peterborough, namely, the Quaker Oats mill. The capacity of the mills in that city is something like 10,000 barrels a day. Within the last few years nearly all of the products of these mills, breakfast and other foods, with the exception of flour, and, in some cases, I think flour also, are put up in small packages. In fact that business has developed to such an extent that I think the major part of the "Quaker Oats" business is that of putting up the goods in packages.

Mr. LEMIEUX: How many men do they employ?

Mr. GORDON: They are capable of employing and do employ, I think, all the way from 500 to 1,000 or 1,200 employees, the number depending largely upon the quantity of export business, because it is an export mill. The small package is sanitary, clean, wholesome; it suits the purse of the workingman; the goods do not deteriorate, because it is done up in waterproof paper. A trade has been established in these lines of goods; hundreds of thousands of dollars have been expended in the development of this class of trade; the trade names of the package goods are registered; they are known by the various brands advertised, and a market has been developed for them during all these years. If the legislation which the minister has introduced imposing this taxation is passed, the paper box industry and the labour connected with it will be seriously injured. The Nashua Gum Coated Paper Co., Ltd., a company that was established only three or four years ago and which is capable of employing many hundreds of men, will close its doors. Labour will be injured and seriously affected in this plant and the milling plants because in this package business, a large quantity of labour is employed for the purpose of doing up these goods in packages. The result will be that "barrel" quantities will be sold, and the grocer will attempt to sell from the barrel as he did in the old days. The situation is so serious, and it strikes the city of Peterborough to such an extent that it is feared there that there will be a great deal of unemployment for some time to come unless this proposed legislation is varied in some way. The reason why this package business has been established and such a market developed for it is that the products put up in this way are perishable and they need to be hermetically sealed. They also need to be hermetically sealed so that they cannot deteriorate or become tainted as frequently takes place in the case of foods done up by other methods. The purchase of large quantities of these articles of food by the average family has altogether ceased, for the simple reason that it did not pay them to continue that method of purchasing. The prices were fixed and they could obtain these package goods whenever they desired them. In this way there has been developed throughout Canada, in the last six or eight years, a trade in package goods which is the surprise of every one. It is true that the small unit costs more initially; but goods done up in packages are cleaner, healthier, and freer from taint, and the possibility of adulteration is obviated. Therefore, in the long run the small unit of flour or any other cereal product is the proper and economical unit. This proposed sales tax legislation on flour, rolled oats, oat meal and corn meal, when purchased in quantities that practical experience has demonstrated to be best suited and most economical, as well as practicable for the people as a whole, is unsound and ill-advised. I submit that it has not been carefully considered, or it would not have got to the stage it has now reached. The standard of this package food is high. As the reputation of these concerns is at stake, they must necessarily keep their products up to a proper standard; there can be no adulteration, because these great concerns stand behind the food they are selling to the people. The grocer, however has no difficulty in bagging this material and selling it as he sees fit, and there may be cases amongst the grocers where adulteration will take place.

The flour and cereal milling business in Canada, according to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, had an output last year of $263,000,000, on a $78,000,000 capitalization, and had a $30,000,000 greater production than any other industry in Canada; so the milling industry is the largest industry in Canada, outside of agriculture.

The difficulty in taxing the food of the people in packages or parcels under 48 pounds is that nearly all of it comes in the small package. If these products are delivered from one wholesaler to another, the tax is pyramided by 1½ per cent each time. Now, that affects the small mill, because it cannot establish its own sales offices, but sells first of all to a large wholesaler, perhaps in Toronto or Montreal, who in turn sells to a smaller wholesaler, located at Brantford, Peterborough, or some other of the smaller cities, and that wholesaler in turn sells to the retailer. Each time the article is turned over, 1½ per cent is added to it, which the consumer pays. The tax is fixed upon the cost plus the freight from the terminal elevator to the mill in the East, or from the country elevator in the West to the mill, and I would just like to indicate to the minister how that works out. Take ploughs, for instance —and I think the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) will appreciate this illustration. The Cockshutt Plough Company, let me say, sells a plough f.o.b. Hamilton at $100. Now, if the company sells the plough to a jobber who has no connection with that firm, the jobber in turn must sell f.o.b. his warehouse, and pay the tax on the price to him, which is $100 plus the freight to his warehouse. The Cockshutt Plough Company could sell direct to the consumer f.o.b. Hamilton, while the jobber could not do that. Now, the large concerns have warehouses in the various centres, while the small concerns have not, and that applies also to the small mills. The small plant must sell through a jobber, because it cannot establish and finance its own sales branches in the various centres in Canada. Dealing with that matter and how it affects Ontario labour, Quebec labour, and the Ontario and Quebec mills, take the price of bran, say, at Calgary, at $16 a ton. There is a three per cent tax on that, which amounts to 48 cents. At Montreal the price, plus the cost of transportation, would be $31. The sales tax is fixed on the price of the bran, plus the price of the transportation to Montreal. At 3 per cent that makes 93 cents, or a difference of 45 cents a ton, or a difference on a 25-ton car of $11.25 in favour and to the advantage of the Calgary mill. In other words, the Montreal consumer could purchase from the Calgary miller and save $11.25 per car, as he would pay no tax on the transportation cost on bran, from Calgary to Montreal, for there would be no tax on that. That means that the western miller, finding that the prices down East would be very much higher than they are in the West, would send his product East, to the ultimate cost of the consumer in the West, who would eventually be compelled to pay a higher price for the miller's product there. A miller in the Calgary zone can buy wheat on the Calgary price, which is the Fort William price, less the freight from Calgary to Fort William; but the Ontario or Quebec miller must pay on the Fort William price, plus freight to his mill. Upon that freight and the Fort William price a tax of 3 per cent is imposed. So he has to pay a tax on transportation cost, which may mean when the product reaches Montreal, as I have said before in the case of bran, twice the price in the Calgary zone.

The difficulty, I submit, with this proposed legislation is the manner in which this tax is imposed. The tax is imposed on the shipments f.o.b. the point of shipment of the miller, so as in the case of the figures which I have given the tax is imposed not on the actual cost of the raw product to the miller, but piled on top of that is the high transportation costs, which have reached a higher point than ever before, and from which it seems to me there is little relief to be expected. I therefore think that a wrong principle has been adopted, and that the Minister of Finance should vary this tax which he seeks to impose on the free food of the people, so that it will not directly have included in it a tax on the transportation cost, which is not, as a matter of fact, or should not be, a part of the actual cost to the ultimate consumer. At present an undue preference is given to the West. It puts a premium on western business, and injures to a very serious extent Ontario and eastern mills. The western miller can sell his mill product at the cost of the grain, freight, labour, and a reasonable profit, plus the tax. There is no freight in the Calgary zone to speak of, but when the product comes east, there is pyramided on that cost, the freight costs, which may amount to almost the same value as the goods, and this tax is imposed upon the two. This is confirmed by the regulations that have been issued by the Minister of Finance, and which have been released, I think, within the last 48 hours. At page 7 of the regulations, under the heading "Value for Excise Taxes" it is stated:

> The Sales Tax on domestic sales must be computed upon the regular (open) market value at point of shipment, provided, however, that the excise tax must in no case be collected on less than the actual net selling price of the goods.
> When goods are sold at a delivered price and estimated or actual freight charges have been added to the price f.o.b. point of shipment to arrive at such delivered price, the actual charges so added may be deducted from the gross invoice value to ascertain the value upon which to compute the sales tax.

These regulations, which have been issued this week, and have gone out to the trade, will it seems to me seriously affect the employment of men in the large cities, where we have already so much unemployment. The miller must make a considerable computation, and he will in turn charge to the consumer the cost of that extra clerical assistance in computing the tax under so complicated a system. But if there were a simple turnover tax of, say, one per cent, he would require no extra clerical work. At the end of a week or a month he would know what his turnover was, and could readily compute it, and there would be no cumbersome and difficult work in connection with it.

Corn flour is taxable in 48-pound lots or less, while cornmeal is taxable in any quantity. Now, cornmeal is the food of the workingman and is sold to a much greater extent than corn flour. It is a coarser product and does not require to be specially treated, as corn flour does. Corn flour is really used by the man of greater means who can afford to pay for it, and why it is not taxable in the same way as cornmeal, I am unable to understand. If the food of the people in these industrial centres and, for that matter, in any part of the country, is to be taxed, we are failing to reduce the cost of food, and that in turn will have its effect on the cost of labour. I think that in taxing the food of the workingman we are simply keeping up the cost of living, just at a time when we should do our utmost to bring it down. The manufacturer says that he must have reduced costs, and he cannot get it if we tax the food of the men whom he employs, because they will necessarily demand wages to meet with the cost of living. Reducing the cost of food would certainly reduce the manufacturers' cost of labour, and to do this we must avoid taxing the people on the necessaries of life. A tax such as this on cornmeal, for instance, is a discrimination against the workingman who has a large family, and if there is one class of taxation that should not be imposed, it is taxation on food. For three and a half years we have avoided the imposition of an income tax in this country, but this has not been through any fault of the present Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton); it was due to a former Minister of Finance. There are men living in western Ontario, men who we know made enormous profits during the war, and the minister in those years might well have taxed their incomes. He should have told them: "Our boys gave their service overseas and while they were fighting you promised that you would give your last dollar. Now we want you to carry out that promise." When the Minister goes to the city of Peterborough again, and expresses his interest in the people of that city and his affectionate regard for them, I suppose he will announce on the platform that diamonds are free. And so they are; they are free from the luxury tax and the customs' tax. Of all the useless and worthless modes of investment, when money is so badly needed, the indulgence in jewellery of this kind is the most reprehensible. In strenuous times like these, why in the world should the purchase of expensive jewellery be encouraged? Was there ever a time in the history of the country when it was more imperative that we should discourage that sort of thing, and when we should do everything possible to enable the workingmen in the industrial centres to bring up their families on a decent plane of living? I say, Mr. Speaker, that the taxing of foodstuffs in this way discriminates against the workingman, and the workingman alone. He is the man who buys these goods, who lives in the small house and cannot put in any large quantities of goods because he has not sufficient capital; and even if he could afford to buy things in large quantities he has no room. It seems to me that we are going back to the days of the Corn Laws in England, because this Budget simply proposes to tax the food of those people who are least able to bear taxation. When men are toiling and suffering from the conditions that are being created in the present readjustment; when everything is unsettled and unemployment is rife; when men in the city of Peterborough, as elsewhere, are out of employment for months and months, the great industries are very much concerned over this proposed legislation, and they are protesting in the most vigorous manner against it, because it will probably cut off business that would amount to millions of dollars in favour of what they call the "barrel" business,—I do not mean since the referendum, but before that.

The hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), has stated the situation clearly in the words of the proposed amendment:

That the aim of the fiscal policy of Canada should be the encouragement of industries based on the natural resources of the country, the development of which may reasonably be expected to create healthy enterprises giving promise of enduring success.

Those enterprises which we hope will have enduring success, based on the natural resources of this country, includes the industries which depend upon the wonderful electrical energy which we possess all through the province of Ontario. That energy gives to industrial Ontario an advantage over all American concerns, such as, for instance exist in Bridgeport, Connecticut, an industrial centre which pays something like $20 a horse-power more than we do in Peterborough. If we are given an opportunity to develop these industries to a greater degree than we have reached it will mean a great deal of wealth for the country, but we cannot hope for any success if we tax the food of the people, thus increasing the cost of manufacturing. If you increase the cost of living to the workingman by taxing his food, he must in turn remand a decent wage from his employer, and the cost of producing will accordingly be increased, so that in the end the consumer must foot the bill.

Diamonds, however, are free, and while the minister may think that this fact will help him in any way, when he goes to Peterborough, I have my doubts.

The other day, because some of us presumed to express some different opinions from the Prime Minister's, that right hon. gentleman must needs taunt those sitting on this side of the House with being tools and minions; but his taunt is just about as effective and valuable, and goes just about as far as the taunt of the school boy who sits on the fence and makes faces at the passers-by. We have a right to our opinions, and in this free Parliament we have the right to voice them; and we resent such aspersions as the Prime Minister saw fit to cast upon hon. members of the House.

And then he makes a plea for consistency. Well, those who have read the utterances of the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Calder), will recall that he has given expression to the same great principles which we have always espoused, and I should like to quote from the Official Debates of the session of 1919. Let me read very briefly from page 70, where the Minister of Immigration expresses himself very well, as he usually does.

Just let me say that when I joined this Government I joined as a Liberal, and I am a Liberal to-day.

That declaration has an honest ring to it. He goes on:

More than that no person can make me anything else. There may be those who would like to drive me out of the Liberal party, but they cannot do it.

He will not let them drive him out of the party, let alone leave it on his own accord.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It would be very hard to drive him out.

An hon. MEMBER: "Far, far away."

Mr. GORDON (reading):

I care not whether I am in the organization or whether I have any part in the organization—that means very little in times like these. I have had letters from my friends out West saying: For goodness sake, Calder, come over while there is time—as somebody said to-day—or it may be too late.

Mr. RINFRET: That is a great speech.

Mr. GORDON (reading):

The question of party is a very small thing at the present time, in my judgement. There is something bigger at stake than mere politics at the moment.

It would be rather interesting for us to know what the minister had in mind when he said there was something bigger at stake. I think there was more than a single meaning to that.

We have bigger, more important work to do. When the time comes later on there may be those who will desire to play politics in this country. Well and good; let that be done when the time does come. Just now we have something else to attend to.

And then he continues in some very interesting statements which I will briefly quote from Hansard of 1919, page 3340:

The time has arrived, I believe, when a thorough study should be made of Canada's economic situation in order that we may have a general revision of the tariff.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Who is speaking?

Mr. GORDON: The hon. the Minister of Immigration.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Again?

Mr. GORDON: Yes, again; in 1919. He goes on to say:

The existing tariff, in my judgment, has outlived its usefulness. It was made for a period some ten or twelve years ago, and it is chockfull of all sorts of anomalies which should be straightened out. A thorough investigation and inquiry, as forecasted by the Minister of Finance, should be made with a view to having a general revision of the tariff.

The minister follows that up with a further statement which I will briefly quote:

When I joined the Government in 1917—

I am now quoting from page 3341:

—I did so for a very definite and specific reason. I did so because I believe the proposals that were put forward at that time set out the only policy that would enable Canada to see this war through, so far as our part in it was concerned. Now I believe it to be my duty to stay with the task I have assumed until demobilization has been completed and our soldiers are returned.

They are back to Peterborough I know.

An hon. MEMBER: He means demobilization of the Government.

Mr. GORDON: That is on the road. The minister continues:

I do not purpose to allow any temporary changes in the tariff to divert me from my duty in that respect as I see it.

The Prime Minister has charged hon. gentlemen on this side of the House with inconsistency. Does it lie in his mouth to say that we on this side have not been quite as consistent as some in his own family circle? Now Mr. W. F. O'Connor opposed the present Government in the Peterborough election. Mr. O'Connor was the High Cost of Living Commissioner appointed by this Government. He was well-named as the High Cost of Living Commissioner, because while he was commissioner the cost of living went up, and when he resigned it came down.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. GORDON: As I say, Mr. O'Connor opposed this Government in the Peterborough election; he was on the platform of the Labour candidate and supported him against this Government. Yet the Minister of Militia, when the Bankruptcy Bill was being considered by the House in Committee of the Whole, had Mr. W. F. O'Connor sitting in front of him in this chamber and assisting him. So Mr. O'Connor is still in the employ of the Government and was in its employ at the time referred to in the city of Peterborough. There is another sample of the consistency of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Now this jockeying of the tariff question cannot go on very much longer. The manufacturers demand and require something to be done to change the situation, which has not been varied, I may say, to any degree, or to any material extent, since 1911. The manufacturers want it, the business men want it, and the consumer is entitled to it. This thing, as the Minister of Immigration and Colonization said, has been going on for all these years. My hon. friend complains very bitterly about that, and I agree with what he says. I hope when the vote on this amendment is taken the minister will remember the statements I have just quoted to him and will not forget his duty to the people he represents.

The Minister of Finance a short time ago expressed the hope that this unrest, this disturbance, this discontent would be removed and the people would be relieved. I agree with him as to the desirability of that if such a state of affairs exist. But the returned man is at his forge, he is working at the lathe, he is employed at the bench—he has filled in his place well. There has been no disturbance on his part—he fitted in as naturally and well on his return from war as if he had returned from a visit of a lengthy period to his friends, he has found his place. It is not the returned man who is causing unrest, it is not the working man who is causing discontent—the trouble arises from such things as I wish to describe now.

In the summer of 1920 I attended before the president of the Canadian General Electric Company in the effort to settle a strike in the city of Peterborough—I was there with the mayor and the chairman of the Board of Works of the city of Peterborough. The then president of the company said that he could not pay his employees, who were asking for a new schedule and a wage increase of five cents an hour, what they demanded; he said that his great competitor, the Westinghouse Company, of the city of Hamilton, was competing with him at so close a margin that he could not afford to. It was not possible for the increase asked for to be granted and these men would have to accept the wage that he offered. I am sorry to say it but in that great plant in the city of Peterborough was an arsenal deposited by the management of this concern. They had firearms there ostensibly for the purpose of protecting the property, but it was a dangerous thing to do when there was never a question of any violence being displayed. In addition to that, men were brought across from the United States, most of whom I examined under oath, and they were men of a low type with every mark on them of dishonesty and crime. These men were employed and kept at the best hotel in Peterborough by the management of this concern and paid far more than the men who were seeking an increase of their wages. That strike or lock-out, whatever it may be called, was crushed, and some of the employees lost their places never to regain them,—men with families. But what happened later on to this president of the Canadian General Electric Company? On March 26, 1921, the Toronto Telegram stated:

$595,350 from Canadian General Electric for Hon. Fred Nicholls?

The president of the company who could not afford to pay his men on account of the competition of the Westinghouse company.

$53,040 for Life, including shares worth $311,200, as token of regard.
What is the annuity?

Opinions vary as to whether it is $30,000 or $35,000, and President Dyment, of the Canadian General Electric, is not communicative.

That is what is causing discontent, that is what is causing unrest, that is what is causing unhappiness in this land. When men say that they cannot pay a wage that will maintain a fair and honest standard of living for the workingman in order that he may keep his family of boys and girls comfortably housed, respectably clothed, and properly educated, and when those men get together in high places and take from the coffers of a great concern over half a million dollars, we may well say that it is not the war, it is the greed of such men whetted by the excessive profits made during the war that is causing unrest in this country. And here is another instance of what breeds discontent. In this House one afternoon the postman's bonus was cut 25 per cent. Their life at that particular class of work is limited to a few years on account of the heavy mails they have to distribute in all kinds of weather over the hard pavements of our cities. Many cases occur where these men early in life are discarded, like an old horse turned out to pasture, on account of their inability to carry on their work. These poorly paid civil servants suffered a cut of 25 per cent in their bonus, and it was done in a pretty short way by the right hon. gentleman who occupies the Prime Minister's seat. An hour after that the second or third reading of a Bill was moved by the Prime Minister whereby the Chief Justice of Canada was appointed administrator at a salary of $5,000 per year on top of his $10,000 as chief Justice, and in addition to that he was given exemption from income tax on $10,000 of that $15,000 income. That also breeds discontent, unhappiness and unrest. It is not the returned men who are causing unrest, it is those who in high places are assuming to do what they have not any right to do. We need big business, it is necessary with our developed civilization to have big business, but we want big business to be fair, and we want men in high places with great means to share honestly and fairly their profits with those who are entitled to participate in them. And no man has a right to take from those who are unable to defend themselves, as was done in the case of the minority shareholders of this company, what he has no moral right to take.

The charge is laid that we are inconsistent and unfair. I do not know what the Prime Minister's ideas of sportsmanship are, but I know that in the games we play it is not considered the best of form to attempt to steal one of the other fellow's players. Some believe in those methods, but I think that the best of Canadian manhood does not believe in them whether in political life or in sporting life. The Prime Minister knows the overtures that have been made not only here but in West Peterborough. I think he knows the situation because when the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Porter) and I met the Prime Minister about the power situation in the Midland part of Ontario, the latter was good enough to say to me that he had heard of me from a certain gentleman who was supposed to head the Round Table group in Toronto—a well-known and prominent lawyer there. This same well-known and prominent lawyer was busy for a long while, and finally it developed that overtures were made to various Liberals that if they could succeed in defeating a former supporter of this Government, Mr. J. H. Burnham, the Government would not put a candidate in the field, but would assist them to that extent. The hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Mowat) knows that. He happened to be present one night when the executive of the Liberal association in Peterborough was meeting. The Prime Minister must have had some knowledge of what was going on, because he held the writ for a sufficient length of time to let these things be developed. So I say it does not lie in the mouth of any member of the Government to charge members on this side of the House with inconsistency.

The inconsistency of taxation which has been developed by the Budget is one of the most dangerous to the consumer of milled food products that has ever been imposed in this country. It means unemployment, it means increased cost of living, it means the people will have to pay more because their food is taxed the same as the food of the people used to be taxed in England, for the benefit of those who had great wealth that they might accumulate more. As I said before, the Minister of Finance has brought us back to the days of the Corn Laws in England. If the present unemployment is aggravated by the taxation that is now sought to be imposed, which will force these great mills to absolutely discard one method of packing food, he can blame his proposed taxation. There is an easy and a fair taxation to impose, which means that the man in the Calgary zone does not get his milled product for half of what we require to pay between Peterborough and Montreal. That can be done, and the milling industry of this country will not be injured. The great mills of the Midland district of Ontario and those in Peterborough particularly, will not be affected. But if this measure goes through in its present form, and this taxation is imposed, it will simply add to the numbers of the men who walk the streets day after day looking for positions, and are turned away, like beggars on the street, because unemployment is being created by the direct act of this Government.

Mr. J. F. JOHNSTON (Last Mountain): Mr. Speaker, before dealing directly with the proposals as contained in the speech of the hon. Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) I wish to pay some attention to the figures given to the House by the Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Guthrie) the other day in connection with the expenditure of his department. The hon. minister placed on Hansard a great number of figures in an attempt to prove that Canada's military expenditure was less than that of any other country. As reported on page 3378 of Hansard, the hon. minister said:

> For comparison I go first to Australia. The estimate of population in Australia to-day is 5,000,000. Expenditure for militia $13,800,000 odd, just about $2,000,000 above us; naval expenditure is $14,000,000, about $11,500,000 above us; air force in Australia, $2,700,000.

Now, I wish to compare these figures, Mr. Speaker, with the figures given in the official Budget as presented to the Parliament of the Commonwealth of Australia for the year 1920-21. The hon. Minister of Militia gave as the expenditure for militia in Australia, $13,800,000, whereas the figure given in the Australian Budget is £797,692. Reckoning $5 to the pound, this would give approximately $8,250,000 as against $13,800,000 as stated by the Minister of Militia. This was the expenditure for militia. The naval expenditure of Australia was given by the minister as $14,000,000, whereas it should have been $12,000,000; air force, as given by the minister, $2,700,000, whereas it should have been $1,500,000. I take it, Sir, that the minister's figures were not taken from the Budget for 1920-21.

Mr. GUTHRIE: My hon. friend is quite wrong in his figures.

Mr. JOHNSTON: When I get through the minister will have an opportunity to refute my statement. The hon. gentleman also laboured to show a big per capita expenditure for Australia and a small one for Canada.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not wish to interrupt my hon. friend, but he is making a tremendous blunder; he has just given about half the figures. I know the mistake he has made, and I do not want—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I would prefer that the minister would let me know wherein I am wrong, if he wishes to do so.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I see that the hon. gentleman has the official figures for Australia before him and if he will turn to page 29, he will find the total expenditure for the present year given as £3,428,049. Now, if he turns to page 30 of that same document he will find the total for naval expenditure, £3,073,229; and on the same page the air expenditure, £500,000 for military air expenditure and £100,000 for civil. The three items amount to £7,001,278, which, figured on the basis of $4.50 a pound, would amount to just a little more than the figures given in the per capita table to which he refers. He can see these figures for himself if he will just turn to the pages which I have given. The figures which my hon. friend has given represent only part of the vote for 1920-21.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I was figuring on the basis of $5 to the pound, as I stated at the outset. This Budget is for 1920-21; as the fiscal year for the Commonwealth of Australia does not end until June 30, how can the minister be quoting the figures for this year?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am quoting them—

Mr. JOHNSTON: The minister will just keep his seat until I finish.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Turn to page 29 and quote the figures given there.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. JOHNSTON: The minister also laboured to show a big per capita expenditure for Australia and a small one for Canada and that is why, I suppose, he includes Australia's naval figures, although he is only Minister of Militia. But let us see how the percentage of militia expenditures to total revenue in the case of Australia compares with the percentage in the case of Canada. Australia has a revenue for 1920-21, as given in this report, of £63,364,700, as against Canada's revenue of $381,000,000. The militia expenditure in Australia is £1,797,692, or, reckoning at $5 to the pound, $8,500,000, while the militia expenditure in Canada is $12,554,807, making the Australian militia expenditure 3 per cent of the revenue as against Canada's 3.5 per cent of revenue.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is based on your improper figures.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Australia's militia expenditure per capita is about 1.29 as against Canada's 1.45.

Mr. HALLADAY: Read the figures and be a sport.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Page 29 will show you the correct figures as I have quoted them.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I am giving the figures as taken from the Budget speech.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, he is only giving part of the figures.

Mr. HALLADAY: Anybody could imagine figures.

Mr. JOHNSTON: There is no imagination at all. These figures are taken from the Australian Budget speech.

Mr. COWAN: Give us the truth, anyway.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have given this comparative statement in connection with the figures supplied by the Minister of Militia. If the figures which I have given are wrong and the minister can prove that they are wrong, I assume that he will have some chance to do so on a future occasion.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Prove it yourself—simply refer to pages 29 and 30 of the report in your hand and you will be convinced.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. JOHNSTON: The minister occupied a considerable amount of the time of the House when he took part in this debate a few days ago; he presented his arguments to the best of his ability and he waved the flag very energetically. I do not propose to let him take up any of my time now.

In speaking the other day, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Cowan), who has seen fit to interrupt my remarks at this time, said that the Opposition in this House had wings. I submit to you, Sir, that no one ever charged the hon. member for Regina with having wings. It would not be a surprising thing to many of us sitting in this quarter of the House if we saw a pair of horns sprouting on his troubled brow at any time.

Mr. COWAN: Good thing to have something in.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I find little in the proposals of the hon. Minister of Finance as contained in his Budget speech upon which I could congratulate him. Someone has termed his proposals "makeshift," and I cannot find any better term to use; in respect to the taxation proposals, it is a clear case of shifting. The business profits war tax has been abolished, and in its place we have an increase of the sales tax, thus shifting the burden from the shoulders of those who are able to pay to the shoulders of the great consuming and producing masses of the people—shifting, because the Government has got away from the direct method of imposing taxation to the indirect method. After pressure had been brought to bear upon the Government they imposed a tax upon incomes, but every proposal of the Minister of Finance in his Budget speech with respect to taxation is of an indirect nature, showing that the policy of the Government is to impose indirect instead of direct taxation. Some weeks ago the Minister of Finance called representatives of the manufacturing industries in this country and others into consultation with him, presumably for discussion of the best methods of levying and collecting these new taxes. No representative, however, of the greatest industry in this country was present at that consultation. Neither agriculture nor labour was represented there, although it is upon those two classes that these taxes will fall the heaviest. The policy of the Government has been and is to toady to the big interests of this country, and that is given effect to in the imposition of these new taxes. The sales tax has been increased by 50 per cent, and that, to my mind, is a direct increase in the customs tariff. But what are we to expect? Some one has said that you cannot expect to have the perfume of roses around while there is a polecat under the table. Neither can you expect to have fair methods of taxation imposed by a government whose policy is dictated by, and wholly in the interest of, the big interests of the country.

We have heard a great deal about tariff revision. Back in 1919, when some of us withdrew our support from the Government, we were told that the Government would revise the tariff. We were also taunted and told that it would be revised in such a way that we would be sorry that we had not stuck to the ship. Now, 1920 has gone; 1921 is here, and I just wonder if the provisions of the tariff, as presented in the proposals of the Minister of Finance, meet with the approval of those members of the House from Western Canada who are still supporting the Government, and if they think that these proposals will be satisfactory to the people of their constituencies.

Mr. COWAN: I am quite ready to take a chance on that.

Mr. JOHNSTON: It is quite true that the Government appointed a tariff commission to investigate this matter, and this commission travelled throughout Canada at very great expense during the fall months of last year and the early part of the present year, and we have 1 per cent increase in the tariff as a result of these new taxes. Our protectionist friends are endeavouring to raise the class cry in this country. They have gone so far as to say that the farmers of Canada are opposed to the growth of our towns and cities. That statement is absolutely wrong. No farmer in this country is opposed to the natural growth of our towns and cities; but when our towns and cities are built up by the depletion of our rural sections, the farmer or any one else in Canada is justified in claiming that that is not a healthy growth. When you deplete rural sections of Canada of their producing element, you at once reduce production, and as a natural result, you increase the cost of living.

The primary duty of this Parliament and of the Government of the day is to develop the natural resources of Canada, to draft a policy that will enable both capital and labour to apply themselves to this development with some chance of success. Under existing economic conditions, this development will not be undertaken by thinking people. The Prime Minister (Mr. Meighen) says that his Government and party stand by the principle of protection and the old National Policy, a policy that, in my humble judgment, is the real cause of Canada having but eight or nine million people to-day when she should have at least double that number.

Agriculture is the basic industry of this country, and if we have a fiscal policy that will admit of the development of this and others of our natural resources, we would soon have villages, towns and cities, and a home market worthy of the name. Our manufacturing friends make a great deal of this plea of the home market, and well they may, for under the protective tariff, they are able to exact from the people of Canada greater prices than they can command for their products in any other country. If our manufacturing friends would have the good sense to let up on this cry for protection and give to this country an opportunity of developing itself along natural lines, by a general reduction of the tariff, especially on the implements of production, I believe that in ten years' time, through this development, through the increased population, their sales would increase to such an extent that they would be ashamed to think that they had ever demanded protection from this or any other government. The old National Policy has been on trial in this country for forty-three years, and under it we have lost many of our best citizens. From the 1920 United States' census, we learn that there are 1,117,136 native-born Canadians in the United States. If you take three to the family, that would mean that there are 3,351,408 citizens of the United States who are of Canadian birth or origin. This almost equals our total immigration to this country during the last thirty years. We have been filling our country up with foreign-born people, while we have been losing to the United States our own Canadian-born citizens.

Further, this Government claims that its policy is clear-cut and definite. Is this the case? It is true that the Prime Minister says that they stand by the "principle of protection." In a speech delivered by the Prime Minister in the city of Regina last fall, he said that he was not a "high protectionist," while the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Ballantyne) told the House the other day during this debate that the Government stood four-square for "moderate protection." Before the Government can claim that its policy is clear-cut and definite, some one should explain what percentage of protection the Prime Minister stands for when he disclaims being a high protectionist. And will the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries kindly explain what he means by moderate protection? Moderate protection to a moderate man might mean a very low tariff, but is there any one who thinks that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is a moderate man? Would he be satisfied with a moderate tariff? I submit that the shipbuilding policy of the hon. gentleman must be held to banish him forever from the ranks of moderate people. The figures submitted by my hon. leader in his speech of yesterday in connection with some companies with which the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries is connected would go to show that there was enough water in the stock of these companies almost to float his merchant marine.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Would the hon. gentleman allow me a question? I would like to put to him the same question that I put to his leader yesterday. There is a plank in your platform favouring 50 per cent preference for Great Britain, and absolute free trade with her in five years. I want an answer to that last particularly. Are you in favour of that?

Mr. JOHNSTON: The minister is adopting a tone that is altogether unbecoming. He is demanding something. I have no hesitation whatever in answering his question, but I do not care to be driven to do anything. If the minister would put his question in a gentlemanly way I would be glad to answer it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I do not think the hon. member is justified in saying that another hon. member has not acted or spoken in a gentlemanly way.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I bow to your ruling, Mr. Speaker. May I use the word "moderate" instead?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: What is your answer?

Mr. LALOR: He won't answer.

Mr. JOHNSTON: On that question I stand absolutely where my leader stands.

Mr. LALOR: I have never heard where he stood.

Mr. HALLADAY: Nobody knows where he stands.

Mr. JOHNSTON: It is on Hansard.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I must ask hon. gentlemen who desire to ask a question of the hon. member who has the floor to rise in their places for the purpose of doing so, and I must remind them that they must first obtain his permission.

Mr. JOHNSTON: So I submit, Mr. Speaker, that when the Government calls on hon. members on this side of the House to explain their policy, it might be well for the Government and its supporters to remember that the people of this country will ask them to say just what they mean by these ambiguous terms to which I have alluded.

The question may be asked, what room is there for the development of the natural resources of this country? I shall only refer to the industry with which I am best acquainted, that of agriculture. I shall give to the House figures of the total arable acreage in the three Prairie Provinces, the acreage under cultivation, and the amount in dollars derived from the sale of the products of that acreage last year. In the province of Alberta there are 81,300,000 acres of arable land, of which 11,764,167 are cultivated; Manitoba, 25,223,348 acres of arable land, with 4,637,660 acres cultivated; Saskatchewan, 57,884,160 acres of arable land, with 22,549,669 cultivated, or a total arable acreage of 164,407,508 acres, with 38,951,496 acres cultivated, or less than 25 per cent of the arable land under cultivation. There was derived in dollars from the sale of field crops in these three provinces last year the following amounts: Alberta, $199,033,500; Manitoba, $142,000,000; Saskatchewan, $350,521,010; or a total of $691,554,510. As I have already said, there was less than 25 per cent of the arable acreage under cultivation. So if you multiply that total by four you would have a return of $2,766,218,040, and still leave a margin of the arable land uncultivated. In these figures I have not included the returns from live stock, dairy products and so forth. In connection with this matter of the further development of our natural resources it can be seen that if the agricultural resources of the three Prairie Provinces were almost fully developed, you would have a return in one year, on the same basis as last year, more than equalling the total of our national debt.

I have on more than one occasion in this House said that the greatest need in Canada to-day was greater production, and that to get greater production we needed more people. If we had these two things, it would necessarily mean that we would need wider markets, but I submit that under prevailing conditions in Canada to-day, the further development of our natural resources is out of the question, and we may as well stop talking about further immigration until we get in this country a government big enough and courageous enough to give us a fiscal policy that will give some chance of success to the people who go on the land. Any great development under present conditions will not result in lasting benefit to Canada. One would think that this Government, having put some 20,000 odd returned men on the land in Canada during the last few years, would give very serious consideration to the conditions under which these men have to labour. These men, returned from the war, eager and anxious to get back into civil life, accepted the Government's offer of assistance to go on the land; and now they find themselves up against conditions, over which they have no control, which make it impossible for them to carry on. In this connection I wish to place on Hansard some figures taken from a report issued by the Soldier Settlement Board on February 1 of this year.

At Six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess

The House resumed at Eight o'clock.

Mr. JOHNSTON: When the House rose at 6 o'clock I had asked to put on Hansard a report issued by the Soldiers' Settlement Board, giving a summary of the operations of that Board up to January 31, of this year. That report shows:

Number of veterans applied for privileges of Act	58,276
Number accepted as qualified to farm	42,285
Number qualified, but not yet located	22,254
Number in training under supervision of Board	781
Number completed training	1,579

The loans to these men were as follows:

Number granted loans	20,231
Amount of loans approved	$82,043,414
Amount of loans disbursed	73,711,558
Initial Payments on land purchased	3,869,159
Number liable for repayments Nov 1,	12,507
Number who made repayments	9,355 (or 74.8 p. c.)
Amount of money due at Nov. 1	2,323,582
Amount repaid	1,634,972 (or 70.4 p. c.
Number who have repaid all loans in full	320

You will notice, Sir, that the number liable for repayment at November 1, was 12,507.

Adjustments

Number of failures and changes of ownership adjusted	179
Amount invested in these farms	$635,484
Amount realized in re-sale of farm equipment	637,347

The report goes on to give the area of soldiers' land, the stock, equipment, etc. I wish to bring this matter to the attention of the House for the purpose of showing just how much these soldier farmers will be called upon to pay of the new taxes imposed under this Budget. The minister expects to raise $62,000,000 by this increase in the sales taxes. This would mean about $7 per capita, putting our population at between 8,000,000 and 9,000,000. Now, we have put 20,231 returned men on the land. Multiply this by seven—the per capita tax—and you have $141,617. I think it would be fair to assume that there would be three members in each family, and that would mean a total taxation of $424,851, which the returned men whom we have put on the land would have to pay, or $21 per family. Let us follow this a little further and see what it means. We are charging these returned men 5 per cent for the money we have loaned them. It will be seen, however, that the amount taken from them by the sales tax would more than equal the interest on $8,000,000, and I submit that this extra amount could very well have been used by these men who are trying to establish themselves upon the land. The figures I have given do not take into account the pyramiding of the taxes which is bound to take place. If this were done, the amount I have mentioned would be at least doubled, and I think that this is a concrete example of the way in which the protective tariff works. I am sure it must make the manufacturers of the country feel like real patriots to know that they have shifted the burden to the backs of the returned men. I suppose, however, when the next election comes around we may expect to find these barons of special privilege going around waving the flag and calling every one disloyal who votes against them and their party.

I have pointed out, Mr. Speaker, that in my opinion there is little use of looking for any great development of the natural resources of Western Canada under existing conditions, and one of the things that are bearing heavily upon the western farmer to-day is the increase in freight rates. This increase put on last fall does bear very heavily upon the people of the western provinces, because everything that they use on their farms, or dispose of from those farms, has to be hauled great distances. The Prairie Provinces, through their Provincial Governments, have made representations to the Railway Commission and to the Government regarding this matter, and have protested as vigorously as possible. I desire to read the opinions expressed by one or two influential organizations upon this matter. I have here a clipping reporting a resolution passed at the sixtenth annual convention of the Saskatchewan Rural Municipalities Organization. This resolution reads:

> Resolved that this Convention desires to protest in the strongest manner against the recent large and unreasonable increase of freight and express rates. The present high rates will result in making successful farming on the prairies difficult, if not impossible—

The opinion I have expressed, Mr. Speaker, that no great development in Western Canada can be looked for under existing conditions is borne out by this statement.

> —and will retard indefinitely the further settling up of farm lands in Western Canada; and we further protest against the want of sympathy with the public, where railway matters are concerned, manifested by the Railway Commission; and, further, that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Prime Minister of Canada.

The organization that fathered this resolution is representative of every municipality in the province of Saskatchewan. I have another clipping, dated Toronto, March 13, which reads as follows:

> Delegates representing all the large stockyard centres in the Dominion attended a meeting of the Canadian Livestock Exchange here Saturday night, and the prevailing opinion expressed was that the high freight rates had a tendency to keep shippers from shipping to the greater number of markets. Vice-President O. Attwell was delegated to confer with E. S. Todd, of the Eastern Canada Livestock Exchange, with reference to the question of appearing before the Dominion Railway Board with a request for a reduction of rates governing the shipment of livestock.

This matter, in my opinion, must receive immediate attention if the producers of Western Canada are going to be able to carry on with any degree of success.

Now, Sir, I desire to touch briefly upon another matter, and I offer some apology for bringing it to the attention of the House at this time, because it has already had some discussion in Parliament. I refer to the question of returning the natural resources to the Prairie Provinces. I did not avail myself of an opportunity to speak upon this subject when it was before the House on a previous occasion, but I wish to do so now as briefly as I can. The return of these natural resources to the Western Provinces is a matter that has been before this Parliament and the country for a number of years. I believe it is in the best interests of the whole of Canada that these resources should be returned to the provinces for the very good reason that the provinces would develop them much faster than the Dominion is doing. Furthermore—as was pointed out when this matter was specifically before the House—the Fathers of Confederation never intended that one part of Canada should be, as was termed at the time, "Crown colonies," while the rest of the country should have full autonomy. Besides that we had the direct promise of the ex-Prime Minister, the present member for King's, N.S. (Sir Robert Borden) in 1910 that if his party were returned to power he would return these resources to the Prairie Provinces; and we have had upon many occasions, the unanimous vote of the legislatures of the different provinces interested in favour of that course. I submit that the other provinces, as provinces, have no claim in this matter at all other than that whatever case they have should be presented to this Parliament. Every one of those provinces has its representatives in the Federal Parliament and this is where the matter should be decided. In this connection let me read a short quotation from a speech delivered by the Hon. Mr. Turgeon to the legislature of Saskatchewan on November 23 last. On that occasion Mr. Turgeon said:

> All the provinces of Canada are represented in the Federal Parliament. Each province as a province, sends so many members there, and one of the duties of each of these members is to look after the interests of his province and more particularly is this the duty of the Senate of Canada which was created and intended to be the custodian of Provincial rights; and if you look into its composition and how its numbers are allocated that fact is very much in evidence. All the provinces are represented in the Senate and let some Government at Ottawa have sufficient courage to formulate a policy which will run the gauntlet of the Senate and Commons: in this manner only can the question be settled.

That is what we want. We want the Government of Canada to make up its mind as to what should be done, not after consulting the other provinces and waiting until they all agree on something, but on its own responsibility to the Parliament and the people of Canada. What is fair to us is to hand back our natural resources and to fix what allowance we should continue to receive. If at the same time any province of Canada wishes to go to the Federal Parliament and say: "you have reopened the terms of confederation because you have reopened the constitution of one province" let Parliament settle with that province in the way best suited to that province. If Nova Scotia, for instance, thinks it should have an increased subsidy let it go to the Government of Canada and lay its case there.

That is our attitude and I see no hope for anything being done until the Government of Canada will take our attitude as the proper one, form its own policy, bring it down and put it through.

That statement, I think, carries with it the opinion of the vast majority of the people of the province of Saskatchewan, and I can only add that I sincerely hope that something may be done in this regard in the near future.

Another matter that has been brought before the House, and to which I wish to make reference, is the proposal to send an ambassador to Washington. I am of the opinion that Canada should have a representative at Washington. I believe it is not only necessary but essential for us to have a representative there to look after our interests. There is also the matter of Canada appointing trade agents in the United States. I understand that the United States have over fifty of these agents in Canada. Well, Mr. Speaker, if the neighbouring republic have seen fit to send some fifty trade agents into Canada to drum up business with eight or nine millions of people, it surely follows that it would be a sensible thing on the part of Canada to have at least a few trade agents in the United States where we have a chance of trading with one hundred and ten millions of people.

Returning to the question more particularly before the House, I believe that the strictest economy should be practised at the present time by this Government and by every spending body in Canada. I further believe that the Government might have effected a considerable saving in the Estimates which have been submitted to Parliament. The expenditure on the Trent and Welland canals and the dry-dock at Victoria could have been very materially reduced, to say nothing of the expenditure of over $11,000,000 on the militia. A very considerable reduction could have been made in these votes without causing any harm to Canada or the Canadian people. The expenditure of public money for the purpose of creating employment can be carried too far. I think we have had evidence that such a policy has been carried too far in Canada by the shipbuilding programme of the Minister of Marine. While speaking on this subject I would like to explain, in regard to some figures that I submitted to the House before six o'clock and which were questioned by the Minister of Militia (Mr. Guthrie), that the figures in question were quoted from the Budget, showing the consolidated revenue receipts and expenditure, of the Commonwealth of Australia for the year 1920-21. I wish to make that explanation to show that the figures were official.

There is another matter I wish to touch upon before closing. I hesitated to do so earlier in my remarks because the Prime Minister (Mr. Meighen) was absent from the chamber. He is present to-night and therefore I shall make the statement I had in contemplation. A day or two ago when the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Turgeon) was speaking, he said that the Prime Minister had alluded to the followers of the Farmers' party as wreckers and Bolshevists. The right hon. gentleman then asked the hon. member to do what the members of the Farmer's party had not done, support the statement by a quotation from his speech. I do not happen to have the particular speech in question before me but I have a quotation from another speech. The Montreal Gazette of September 2, reports the Prime Minister as having used these words at Sherbrooke:

A new party has arisen in Canada, best described as "The Farmer Free Trade party." It took its birth in the Western Provinces and for some twelve years or more it has been gaining strength. It has adopted the old Liberal free trade policy of 1893. It demands to be placed in power in Canada. It has gathered under its banner and trails behind it every class of theorist and malcontent, and to-day beyond all doubt it constitutes the most numerous and strongest organization opposed to the present Government.

I think the right hon. gentleman will not dispute this report of his remarks; it is taken from a newspaper that, I believe, would be very careful not to misquote him.

But I wish to draw the attention of the House to the closing words of this quotation:

It constitutes the most numerous and strongest organization opposed to the present Government.

In the face of that, Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman in his address the other day termed this party, to which I have the honour to belong, a "dilapidated annex" of some other party. Such words coming from the Prime Minister are pretty hard to take, and in view of his statement that the supporters of this party are the most numerous and strongest of any organization opposing his Government, one may well wonder why he should attempt to be so sarcastic. I may be pardoned if I reply in kind and say that, if my party looks like a "dilapidated annex" to the right hon. gentleman, after the next general election I cannot think of any better term to describe the remnant that he may or may not then be the head of than to liken it to an exploded blister, and in all probability that remnant will be very easily accommodated in the few unoccupied seats in the most southeasterly part of the chamber next to the wall.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me say that the records of this House will show that I voted want of confidence in the Administration on the amendment to the Address at the beginning of this session, and I must confess that the Government has not improved in the meantime. Some hon. gentlemen opposite in a previous debate said that this Government—mark the expression, Sir, this Government—was elected in 1917. I said at the time that it was not elected at all but was manufactured in this city last July, and everything that has transpired since its formation confirms my view. I do not want to be unkind, but the fact of the matter is this Government wished itself on the people, and it has not the good sense to see that it is not wanted. Undoubtedly we should have had a general election long before this. For these and many other reasons, Sir, I purpose to vote for the amendment. I believe that the people want an opportunity to elect a government representing their views—a government with some sense of its responsibilities to the country, and an appreciation of the necessity of rigid economy in the expenditure of the public money at a time when the financial outlook is so serious.

Mr. J. ARCHAMBAULT (Chambly and Verchères): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to enter into a general discussion of the Budget, or the relative merits or demerits of the fiscal policy of the Government. I have already given my opinion on the question in the course of other debates in this House, and it has been thoroughly discussed by many hon. members on both sides. But I shall take the opportunity of answering the statements made by some hon. members on your right, Sir, and of touching on a few points that have already been called attention to during the course of this debate.

First of all, I shall correct a wrong impression which has been conveyed through the subsidized press to the people regarding the financial operations of the fiscal year 1920-21; then I shall say something about economy,—the practice of which is totally ignored by the Government; I shall also deal with the worn out appeal that the Minister of Militia made in this House last week; then I shall answer the Prime Minister regarding the Grand Trunk speculation, and finally, I shall deal with the moral mentality of the Government, including their scandalous misuse of the Roumanian and Grecian loans in order to feed their hungry friends and keep them in line.

The subsidized press of Canada have tried to convey an impression to the people, by arithmetical and acrobatical arguments, that last year's operations closed with a surplus. In order to destroy that impression and to point out to the country the net result of those financial operations, I shall simply quote the words of the Minister of Finance himself, to be found at page 3,217 of unrevised Hansard. In his speech on May 9 last, he said:

> The country's revenues have been well maintained. The revenue for the fiscal year when the accounts are finally closed will approximately reach $432,000,000—

This is for 1920-21. On the same page will be found this passage:

> —The estimated expenditure for the year amounts to $533,368,077.—

Making it clear, Sir, that the deficit on last year's operations was $101,368,077. Furthermore, on the next page, as if to prove this fact, the Minister of Finance, speaking of the increase of the national debt, said:

> As already stated, there have been no fresh borrowings. On the other hand, the debt has increased by the amount that the liquid surplus of the year before has been used, namely, $101,368,077.

These are plain figures without any frills or garniture, and when the people come to discuss the financial operations of last year they will find out that they resulted, as the minister implies, in a deficit to that extent.

Now, Sir, I purpose to devote a few minutes to the necessity for rigid economy in our national expenditure. The estimated expenditure for this year is $591,437,698—about $250,000,000 more than the total national debt in 1914. But the word "economy" has been deleted from the vocabulary of the Government, and the word "extravagance" with a capital "E" has taken its place.

When a firm or business concern is nearing the edge of the cliffs of bankruptcy, is it not common sense to say that the first thing to do is not to enhance prices to its customers, but to reduce the expenses of administration? That is the only hope of rescue. But what do we see here? Instead of curtailing expenditure the Government is increasing the taxes. The Government in this Budget is increasing the cost of living. It is true, Sir, that they do it in a camouflaged way; they do it by increasing the duties on goods imported from the United States through changes based upon the ratio of exchange. Every one in Canada will know when this Budget comes into force that he will have to pay more for goods coming from the United States. Instead of adopting this course the Government should have used the knife for the purpose of eradicating the gangrene of extravagant expenditure. There are many items in the Estimates that could be reduced; some of them could be altogether eliminated. I shall not go over all these items; it would take too long. But, Sir, I may mention some of the items on which expenditure could have been cut in two if not reduced by three-quarters. There is $500,000 for the Canada Temperance Act. There is $10,456,800 for the housing scheme. There is $80,000 for the Purchasing Commission, when it has been shown in this House that every department has its own purchasing agent, and that for these purchasing agents in the different departments the House is asked to vote the sum of $53,000. There is $200,000 for the Secretariat of the League of Nations. There is $5,165,000 for the Welland canal, and $854,000 for the Trent canal. There is $1,000,000 for the Toronto harbour—to make boulevards on which the millionaires of Toronto may drive. There is $1,250,000 for St. John harbour—probably to redeem an election promise. There is $2,500,000 for the naval service, to take care of ships which, it has been stated by Lord Fisher, a great naval expert, will be obsolete in three or four years. There is an additional sum of $8,330,000 for ship building—we have already spent $70,000,000 on this item. I am sorry that the Minister of Marine (Mr. Ballantyne) is not in his seat I hope he will be here later. We are spending $168,000,000 on the railways, $5,000,000 for a dock at Victoria, and $20,000,000 for militia, naval defence, and police.

Now, Sir, the Minister of Militia (Mr. Guthrie) during the course of his speech in this debate, made a comparison between the military and naval expenditures of Canada and those of certain other countries. The comparison which the minister makes in this regard is found at page 3383 of unrevised Hansard. He compares Canada to three classes of countries—European countries, South American countries, and British Dominions. Now, is it fair to compare the necessity for military expenditure in Canada with that of European countries which are practically still at war? Is it fair to compare the necessity for military expenditure in Canada with that of the South American republics, which are fighting together practically every day? And then, Sir, is it fair to compare the necessity for military expenditure in Canada with that of the other British Dominions? So far as Australia and New Zealand are concerned, these countries need a strong navy because they are isolated in the middle of the ocean and have to protect themselves from attacks on the part of Japan or other countries; the same need is not apparent in the case of Canada. Is it fair to compare the necessity for military expenditure in Canada with that of South Africa, where there is a large black population which is threatening that British Dominion, and ready to rise at any momoent? In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, this comparison made by the minister cannot stand.

The minister resorted to the old cry which has been used for five or six years, and especially during the last two or three years; he questioned the loyalty of the Opposition and their sympathy for the cause of the returned soldiers: In other words, he made the inevitable answer which the Government make to any criticism that we may bring against them. Hon. gentlemen know what this insinuation is; it is an attempt to convey the idea that the Government alone have the monopoly of patriotism in this country and that the Opposition are antagonistic to the soldiers. Answering the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King); answering the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding); answering the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) who had contended that there was no necessity for training men at the present time because we had a great number of trained men who had enlisted and who would in a case of emergency be useful for the protection of Canada, the minister, as reported at page 3386 of Hansard, made the following attack and insinuation:

What do these statements mean, Mr. Speaker? They mean simply this, that we have in Canada at this moment about 400,000 of the most highly trained soldiers that the world has ever seen, men who have gone through the worst grilling in battle that the world has ever known. They have bared their breasts to the shot and shell of the enemy, they have taken their chances, they have done much to secure us who stayed at home in our lives, our homes and our liberties. And the message to those brave lads from the leader of the Opposition, from his chief lieutenant who sits beside him, and from the hon. member for South Quebec means, if it means anything: We will be so penurious and so miserly that we will not spend any further money for military training, but if trouble come in the future we will call again on those brave souls to protect us. Surely, in the name of God, these men have earned some measure of relief, surely under high heaven one may honestly declare that these men have done their bit, their full bit, and are entitled to rest and to immunity while others are in training to take their places.

I will admit that it was a great temptation for the minister to endeavour to revive the falsehood that the Opposition has no sympathy for the returned soldier. The minister could not resist this temptation; but if the minister had given all the facts regarding this matter, his sentimental appeal would have fallen flat. If he had given to the House a very pertinent part of the evidence taken before the special committee which inquired into the Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, if he had taken the opportunity of reading in this House what is said at page 456 of the report of that committee, he would have found out that, besides the brave boys who went overseas and risked their lives, besides those who were in the front trenches, besides those who went to France, there were 232,520 highly trained men who never saw the firing line, who never touched the soil of France or any other place where fighting was going on. This is what I read at page 456 of this report:

The Chairman: I desire to read to the committee a letter received by the secretary at noon from Mr. Cox (reads):

OTTAWA, CANADA, October 1, 1919.

The Secretary,
Special Committee,
Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—As instructed by the committee, I have prepared an estimate as to the amount it would cost to pay gratuity of $2,000 on account of every soldier who saw service in France, $1,500 on account of every soldier who saw service in England, and $1,000 on account of every soldier who saw service in Canada only.

From the figures at present available, I estimate the cost of paying this gratuity would be $983,624.

Yours faithfully,
(Signed) THOMAS COX,
Assistant Director Pay Service
(Demobilization).

By Hon. Mr. Béland:

Q. What is that based on?—A. It is based on official figures.

By the Chairman:

Q. Who prepared this estimate?—A. I did, sir.

Q. Upon what basis was it prepared?—A. The total enlistments in the Canadian Expeditionary Forces were 590,572. Of those 418,052 proceeded overseas, leaving a balance of 172,520 who had service in Canada only.

Q. How many in Canada?—A. 172,520. And 418,052 proceeded overseas. Of them it is estimated that 50,000 did not get any further than England.

This makes a total of 232,520 who saw service in Canada only or who did not proceed further than England. I do not wish to cast any reflections on members of the Canadian Expeditionary Forces who did not go overseas, who did not go into the trenches and who rendered valuable service in this country towards the war. But when we are discussing the military expenditures of this country, when we are trying to do our best to reduce the expenditures of this country, is it not fair to say that, when the Minister of Militia and Defence comes with his Estimates for training men for military purposes, we can answer him, that if a case of emergency were to arise, these 232,520 highly trained men, who enlisted during the war, but who did not proceed overseas, would be available to help us and to protect and defend Canada in such emergency?

While talking about expenditures, I should like to direct the attention of the House to a couple of items in the Auditor General's Report. The House will understand that it would be tedious if I were to go over many items that I could criticise. I have chosen two items showing lack of economy and extravagant expenditure on the part of the Government. At page ZZ-30 of volume 4 of the Auditor General's Report of this year, there is one item showing that J. A. Huot, Ottawa, was paid, by Order in Council dated September 29, 1919, the sum of $25,000 for purchase of patent rights of an automatic rifle attachment. This was one year after the war was over, one year after the armistice was signed. I had an opportunity of seeing the cheque, and it is endorsed to a man in Montreal who made a fortune during the war and who is a very close friend of the ex-chairman of the War Purchasing Commission, Sir Hormisdas

Laporte. I have another item to show how the Government treat their friends. Every one has heard of the Winnipeg strike, and I am not going to discuss the merits or demerits of that strike. I am not ready to blame the Government for having acted in the way they acted in repressing the strike, but the expenditure incurred in prosecuting men who were accused in that strike is extravagant and scandalous. At page ZZ-13 of Volume 4 of the Auditor General's Report, I find that the expenses of prosecution alone during the Winnipeg strike cost the country the sum of $180,259.38 for two of three months of work. The sum of $140,000 was paid to lawyers; one firm alone, the firm of Andrews and Company for their three months' work was paid the sum of $56,000. But I also find something else. During the election of 1917, many good Liberals left the Liberal party quite honestly because in their conscience they felt that conscription was the only measure that would provide for the winning of the war. I have a great respect for those who did that honestly. Amongst them was a prominent lawyer of Winnipeg named Isaac Pitblado. Although a supporter of the Union Government in 1917, Mr. Pitblado, a few months afterwards vigorously denounced the Union Government in bitter words, and everybody in this country was amazed when on October 27, last, the press of Canada gave us the report that Mr. Pitblado, who had bitterly denounced the Union Government, had presided over the right hon. the Prime Minister's meeting in Winnipeg. The Government press made a lot of it. I do not want to connect Mr. Pitblado's action in that regard with an item that appears in the Public Accounts—I will leave hon. members and the people of this country to draw their own conclusions—but I find that Mr. Pitblado for his services as prosecutor in the Winnipeg strike received for 102 days' work the handsome sum of $26,990, making more than $225 a day.

Mr. COPP: He could afford to act as chairman for one evening after that.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Oh, yes. There is another question on which I wish to say a few words, and that is with respect to the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway. The House will remember that in the month of October 1919, the exact date, I believe, was October 20, an order of the House was passed at my request for a list of the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway appearing on the books of the Company of October 9, 1919. I have repeatedly asked for that list. In the month of November, 1919, the Minister of Justice answered me that the list was being prepared. In the month of June, 1920, the Minister of Railways informed me that it would take seven or eight months to make the list. I got the same answer again on June 26. On May 13, of this year, I inquired of the Prime Minister about that return, and he answered as follows (Unrevised Hansard, page 3427):

> As regards the first order, an order for the names of all the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway, that order was passed. There did not seem to be any reason that could be advanced why it should not be passed if it was the desire of the House to approve. But this just illustrates what may be done under the present rules. The Government has no means in the world of getting the names of those shareholders except by grace of the Grand Trunk Railway. We immediately set to work to get them, and since that time the Grand Trunk officials have been reminded time and time again that we desire those names. I do not know of any obligation they are under to give them to us, nor do I know of any way in which we can enforce the request.

Now comes the sentence to which I wish to draw particular attention:

> I am still more at a loss to understand what earthly good the information would be when it comes here. It will likely cost a very great deal of money and the cost will have to be borne by the country. All the Government can do is to request the information, and keep on requesting it, and that the Government has done.

The Montreal Gazette, which has in the Press Gallery a specialist in the art of making newspaper headings, reported the incident as follows: "Mr. Archambault's Curiosity Costing Appreciable Sum. Premier Cannot See Value Of Information Demanded By Member." Then follows the Canadian Press report. The Canadian Press report, I might say, was published in other newspapers throughout the country under the heading of "G.T.R. Shareholders List," without any innuendo or insinuation whatsoever, but the reporter for the Montreal Gazette thought he would serve his cause and the cause of the premier by using the heading I have mentioned.

Mr. Speaker, there are three or four points to consider in connection with this matter. First of all, there was an order of the House passed, calling for a list of the Grand Trunk shareholders. Now, when an order of the House is passed, supported by a majority of the House, I say that it is the duty of the Government to comply with that order, whatever they may think of it. An order of the House is the will of Parliament. The Prime Minister stated very plainly that many requests had been made to the Grand Trunk people for this list, but when I asked him to bring down the written requests that were made by the Government of the Grand Trunk he made the following answer—I will give my question with the the answer (Unrevised Hansard, page 3428):

> Mr. Archambault: Of course, under the rules I am precluded at this stage from answering the arguments of the Prime Minister, but I would like to suggest that there be brought down the correspondence requesting the Grand Trunk management to make that list.
> Mr. Meighen: I do not know whether there is anything to be brought down or not. I remember speaking to Mr. Bell, the Deputy Minister of Railways, who said that he had requested the list just a short time before I spoke to him, and was continuing to request it. Whether there were letters or not, I do not know.

That answer, Sir, appears to me and to everybody a clear contradiction of the first answer made by the Prime Minister. It is clear to me and to everybody that although an order of the House had been passed asking for a list of the Grand Trunk shareholders, the Prime Minister was not au courant—he did not know whether such a demand had been made to the Grand Trunk Company by the Government.

One objection of the Prime Minister and of the Government to bringing down this list is that it will cost too much money. The reporter for the Montreal Gazette says: "Mr. Archambault's curiosity costing appreciable sum." Now is it not clear to everybody that even if the list of shareholders contains 10,000, 50,000, or even 100,000 names, an ordinary typist could copy that list inside of two weeks, and that the cost of copying it would at the utmost be $150, or say even $250? The Prime Minister says:

> I am still more at a loss to understand what earthly good the information would be when it comes here.

Well, Sir, there was £12,500,000 of guaranteed stock of the Grand Trunk. That stock was quoted at 45 two or three months before the proposed acquisition of the Grand Trunk railway by the Canadian Government. It rose to 70 on the 16th October, a clean-up of between $15,000,000 and $20,000,000 having been made. It has not been made by the original shareholders; it has been made by those who had pointers and tips that the Government intended to acquire the Grand Trunk railway by arbitration. It was known in Canada only about October 10 when the measure was brought before the House, and it was evidently known in England before that time. It leaked out in the Canadian Gazette of London on September 18. I may say that I personally met an officer returning from England who told me that as far back as the month of August he had been tipped to buy some of the Grand Trunk stock as it was a sure thing that the Government of Canada would acquire the railway. Sir, this transaction has put millions into the hands of some persons at present unknown, and I am mighty suspicious that there is something behind the determination of the Government to refuse to comply with my request for that list. I can well understand the statement of the Prime Minister that he is at a loss to understand what good the information would be, if he means, what good it would be "to the Government." I am asking for this list, not for my personal benefit, but for the benefit of the public, who are becoming just as suspicious and just as anxious as I am to know who has been tipped and who has made millions out of that speculation.

Now, I will say a few words about what I may call the moral mentality of the Government. My hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Crerar) was amazed the other day to hear the Prime Minister say: "Cease playing the game; you are deceiving no one; it is not in the interests of Canada and not to the credit of Canadian politics." Sir, can you picture to yourself the present Prime Minister of Canada waxing indignant because he believes that perhaps someone may be playing the game? What a brilliant subject for Molière, if he were alive now! I have no doubt that if that great comedian and inimitable writer were alive to-day he would write on this subject something that would surpass "Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme," "Les Précieuses Ridicules," and even "Tartufe." The Prime Minister, of course, has never "played the game" in his life. I suppose he was not playing the game, but was doing something to the credit of Canadian politics, when he introduced the War-Time Elections Act, when he introduced the Military Voters' Act, and when he introduced the closure. He was not playing the game when he dictated that famous telegram by which votes were assigned to different constituencies. He was not playing the game when he supported, in the election of my hon. friend from Carleton and Victoria (Mr. Caldwell), the famous and notorious Colonel Melville who, before a court of justice, admitted that he had perjured himself in order to vote in the county of Chambly and Vercheres. The Prime Minister took the trouble to go to Carleton county, I suppose he was not playing the game to the detriment of politics in Canada when, in 1917, he endorsed the racial cry, which is not yet forgotten, if the hon. member for Marquette was well informed when he stated that even to-day, in the election in New Brunswick, the candidate is making an appeal on religious questions; the Prime Minister was not playing the game when, during the troublesome times in Montreal, his Government was engaging a man named Ti-noir Desjardins, who was the prime cause of the dynamiting of Lord Atholstan's house. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Lafortune), who was the prosecuting attorney in Montreal, knows these facts and knows that the Government, in order to release Ti-noir Desjardins, who had been accused with the other dynamiters, put up a check for $10,000 to bail him out. My hon. friend the Prime Minister was a member of the Government at that time, and he is responsible for their actions in this matter. Yet he dares to come to the House and accuse hon. members of playing the game. He is not playing the game now, but is elevating Canadian politics, when he uses the utmost of his ability and his cunning in the effort to induce members of this side of the House to board the Government boat that is leaking and rapidly sinking. Is it conducive to a high standard of decency and a high ideal of political ethics in this country for him to endorse a candidate in Yamaska, who says of the Prime Minister—I will quote the exact words—that:

> He is the most narrow-minded and the most bigoted politician who sits at Ottawa, a hangman and an autocrat.

I am very glad to see the Minister of Marine (Mr. Ballantyne) in the House. He is right at the back, but I can see him well. When the hon. member for Maisonneuve and Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) cited that letter the other day, the minister said: "Wait until Mr. Mondou, who is the Government candidate, talks about this letter." Well, he has talked about the letter. The letter was read to Mr. Mondou at a meeting, and he said that while it might have been exaggerated in the papers, he did not withdraw anything that he had said. He said, at Liberal meetings:

> They say that, if I am elected, I shall be made a minister in the Meighen Government. Do not forget the opinion I have of Mr. Meighen and which I have expressed.

Well, Sir, if you were not convinced of the high morals of the Prime Minister in politics, I could convince you by reading that right hon. gentleman's words in defence of the Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue (Mr. Wigmore), who had written to the French purchasing commission, begging for business for his own firm of Nagle and Wigmore, stating that he was Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue. The Premier's words are to be found on page 3181 of Hansard—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. I am obliged to ask the hon. member to desist from reading those words. He is undoubtedly quite familiar with the unwritten law of Parliament, set forth on page 357 of Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure where it is stated that a member in speaking cannot refer to anything said or done in a previous debate during the same session.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: I was under the impression that the Premier's remarks were uttered during the Budget debate.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: They were made in committee upon the Estimates of the Department of Customs and Inland Revenue.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Then it was my mistake.

Mr. BUREAU: May I be allowed to remark that in reading Burinot this afternoon I noticed that formerly it was the rule in the English Commons that you could not refer even to a debate of a previous session, but that the tendency of late has been towards the relaxation of the rule, and it is now permitted to do that. I think we ought to have the same liberty in this House and that we should be permitted to cite from a speech made during a previous debate. Otherwise we must give the quotation from memory which would lead perhaps to unintentional misrepresentation on the part of an hon. member whose memory was not faithful to the text. Under the circumstances I think the ruling ought to me made that as long as the member does not abuse the privilege by taking up the time of the House in quoting from speeches made during the same session he should have the liberty of referring to a previous debate. I would like to have the expression of hon. members on the subject.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: All I can say, in answer to the hon. gentleman, is that the occupant of the Chair acts at all times subject to the judgment of the House, and that his ruling can be reversed by a majority of its members. I may be permitted to add that the present incumbent of the Speaker's Chair has several times in my hearing during the present Parliament given the precise ruling which I have repeated to-night, and even though I desired to do so, I would not intentionally, during his unavoidable absence, create any new precedents in the House of Commons.

Mr. BUREAU: May I be allowed to say in explanation, although I have no right to speak a second time, that in speaking as I did I intended no reflection upon the Chair, but the suggestion was that you, Sir, as the present occupant of the Chair might take into consideration the tendency in the British House. For my part I think there ought to be some relaxation of the rule in question.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Mr. Speaker, when I referred to the opinion of the Prime Minister (Mr. Meighen) in regard to the letter written by the Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue I was under the impression that that letter had been brought down during the Budget debate. However, I bow to your ruling and will not read the speech referred to. At the same time every one remembers that the Prime Minister endorsed the attitude of the Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue, that the right hon. gentleman stated he was not profoundly moved by the accusation against his colleague, and that it was no penal offence for the minister in question to use his name as a member of the Government, and to write a letter upon Government paper, in order to secure business for his own firm. Sir, I am not surprised at that attitude of the Prime Minister; it is up to the standard of high morality which has characterized this Government. We certainly can call such a letter and such an endorsement "playing the game," and feel that it is doing credit to the politics of Canada!

I now come to a very interesting matter and one with which I dealt to some extent last year, I mean the credits extended by the Government to Greece and Roumania. Although I spoke upon this question last year there have been some further developments, and I believe I shall be able to convince you, Sir, that the high standard of political morality in this country has remained unimpaired according to certain mentalities that we find in this House. Sir, in our efforts to probe the morality evidenced in connection with these credits let us examine the whole subject. It will be remembered that in the month of May, 1919, the then Minister of Finance, Sir Thomas White, asked this House to vote these credits because the population of Roumania was starving and needed food; and I can well remember the right hon. gentleman saying at that time, "Will the population of Canada remain unmoved and not help the population of Roumania which is now starving?" Well, Sir, two credits of $25,000,000 each were opened, one for Roumania and one for Greece. Of this amount, $26,989,000 has already gone and only $3,500,000 has been spent on food. The rest of the credits have served for the purpose of buying goods from the manufacturers of this country. The hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Pacaud) said the other night that the Government of Canada, in answer to a merchant in Belgium who asked that food should be exported from these moneys, said that only one-fifth of the credit to Belgium could be devoted to the purchase and exportation of food. Now, Sir, a return was brought down last year to an Order of the House—I refer to "Sessional Paper No. 147." This return shows conclusively that companies controlled by the Minister of Marine (Mr. Ballantyne), the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Lalor), the hon member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt), the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) and the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Elkin) had sold goods for export which had been paid for by the Government. I was under the impression that the disclosures of last year would have had their effect and that there would not be a repetition of any such transactions; but although since April 19, the Government of Roumania has defaulted in two or three payments of interest, and probably Greece also, more of this money has been going to favourites of the Government, and a further sum of $5,342,077.32 has been advanced. On March 4 an Order of the House was passed for a return showing:

1. The amounts loaned or the credits made by the Government of Canada since the 19th of April, 1920. (a) to Greece, (b) to Roumania.

2. The respective dates of these loans or credits to (a) Greece, (b) Roumania.

3. The nature of goods bought by the Government of Canada (a) for Greece, (b) for Roumania.

4. The names of corporations, firms or persons from whom these goods have been purchased, (a) the nature of the merchandise in each case, (b) the amounts paid by the Government to these corporations, firms or persons in each case and also the date of said payments.

Let us examine this very interesting document. Although the Minister of Militia in duscussing the Estimates of his department the other day denied that any goods belonging to the Militia Department had been sold to Rumania or Greece, I find at page 3 of the report the following—I am giving the various sums in round figures:

Militia and Defence:

March, 1920, military equipment..	$36,000
May, 1920, military cloting..	325,000
April, 1920, dubbin	3,000

Mr. COCKSHUTT: If the hon. gentleman does not object, I should like to ask: Does he say that I was a controller of one of the companies that was paid certain sums?

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: I said that my hon. friend was a director of one of the companies.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: No, you did not use the word "director"; the word "control" was used. I entirely repudiate any such control.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: It was a directing control. My hon. friend knows that every director has a certain control of the company of which he is a director; otherwise he should resign—

Mr. COCKSHUTT: I have no control over the company.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: —otherwise he should resign as a director of the company, or resign his seat in this House.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: If I could not do better than you I certainly would resign.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: That is your opinion. I find also that the Department of Militia and Defence sold to Greece the following:

May, 1920—Brushes..	$11,728
May, 1920—Boots..	635,000
May, 1920—Braces..	8,320
April, 1920—Denim..	38,000
March, 1921—Sweaters..	150,000
April, 1920—Blankets..	876,000

I have grave doubts, Sir, as to the wisdom of the Department of Militia in getting rid of all this useful equipment when the people would have been very glad to buy these blankets, boots, brushes, braces, sweaters, etc., at prices cheaper than our manufacturers were selling them. In the United States the Government opened retail stores for the sale of their surplus military stores at prices lower than those asked by the manufacturers.

Now, my hon. friend from Brantford, whom I might call the "father of protection" in this country, seems to be very sensitive. Well, at page 5 of this return I see that the Brantford Roofing Company received from the Government $65,000 between September, 1919, and June, 1920, for roofing sold to Roumania. I understand that I am giving the figures for 1919 and 1920.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: You are not giving them right.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: I say your figures are not right.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: This return is from the Government, so the Government is not right. Well, I admit the Government is all wrong.

Mr. RINFRET: The figures must be higher.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: I must draw the attention of my hon. friend to the number of the report. It is headed: "Sessional Papers No. 147." Last year the company of which he is a director—

Mr. COCKSHUTT: Not a controller, though.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: —the Brantford Roofing Company, was paid $36,200. Taking the total for this year as reported at page 5, $65,000, it shows that this year my hon. friend's company got a little less, but still the handsome sum of $28,800.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: Your figures are not correct.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Let us follow up the return. Last year the Welland Vale Manufacturing Company,—of which my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) is a director—was paid by the Government the sum of $137,234.87.

Mr. BUREAU: Foodstuffs?

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: No, edge tools.

Mr. BUREAU: They are not good for the stomach.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Well, the $137,000 is all right for the stomach.

Mr. BUREAU: But not the tools.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: This year my hon. friend for Lincoln has not made any speech on the Budget—he did not get any more orders. Next I find that the Maritime Nail Company of St. John, N.B.,—of which according to the Parliamentary Guide the junior member for St. John (Mr. Elkin), not the minister for New Brunswick (Mr. Wigmore), is a director—had an order last year—I have not the figures exactly, but he got altogether an order for $77,304.95. I find on reference to the other return that this year his company got $8,136.22. Now, we were told by the Government that we had a trade representative in England who had done great things for Canadian trade, Mr. Lloyd Harris. I see by this report that Mr. Lloyd Harris has not forgotten himself: he is a director of Peck's Rolling Mills, and last year that firm got the sum of $26,624.96. Now, this report is very edifying with regard to another company which it mentions. I find that the Dominion Iron and Steel Company of Montreal was paid by the Government the sum of $66,138.48 out of the money of the Canadian people. Turning to page 248 of the Annual Financial Review, dated June, 1920, I find that the directors of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company, Limited, are as follows: Hon. Charles P. Beaubien, Senator, of Montreal; Edmund Bristol, K.C., M.P., Toronto; Stanley Elkin, M.P., St. John, N.B.; Sir William Mackenzie, Toronto; Hector McInnes, K.C., Halifax, N.S.; Lieut-Col. Hon. Frederic Nicholls, Toronto; Hon. Sir Clifford Sifton, K.C.M.G. It is clear, Sir, that no other company dealing in iron and steel had on its board of directors so many friends of the Government, including members of Parliament and senators. The House will remember that last year I brought to its attention the fact that two companies, the Sherwin-Williams Company of Canada, Limited, and the Canada Paint Company, of which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was a director, had received orders amounting to $31,490 and $11,332 respectively; and I see that the figures are the same in this report. I am very glad I brought the matter up last year, because it seemed to have the effect of making the Minister of Marine wiser; his company did not take any orders during this year.

Now, on page 7 of this report another company is referred to, the Monarch Knitting Company of Dunnville. This company got a "small" order amounting to $293,295.80. I find in the Annual Financial Review of June, 1920, that the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Lalor) is managing director of that company. I see that the amount paid to that company this year has been increased by $21,451.32. I notice the name of Stanfields, Limited, of Truro. I do not know whether or not they deal in tomatoes, but there is a senator of that name who is a director of that company—and they got an order amounting to $21,780. I find in the same document that the Renfrew Woollen Mills got an order amounting to $114,041, and if I am not mistaken, Senator O'Brien is a director of that company. Well, Sir, the House of Commons Act, 1906, section 15, which I have already read to the House, provides that if any member is interested in any contract with the Government or sells goods to the Government, his seat is vacated; he is disqualified. It is true that section 19 does not disqualify a shareholder of a company, but nothing is said about a director or a manager of a company holding a great number of shares. I know what the answer of my hon. friends will be; they will say that they have not personally sold to the Government, and that the Government bought not for the Canadian people but for Roumania and Greece. Technically they are right; as a matter of law, we could not succeed if the matter came before the courts. They are within the letter of the law, but, Sir, they are not within the spirit of the law. This law was passed in order to prevent the Government from winning the influence of members or senators by buying goods from them or from companies in which they had the chief interest. What difference is there, Mr. Speaker, between a proprietor and a director owning a great number of the shares in a business? If this loophole satisfies the conscience of my hon. friends, well and good, but the fact remains that moneys have been disbursed by this Government in the purchase of goods from members of Parliament and senators or companies in which they were interested, and that this money will, in all probability, never be reimbursed by Roumania or Greece. This transaction will throw a shadow on the independence of Parliament. But, Sir, it is perfectly in line, as I have said, with the standard of morals held by this Government. The circumstance also affords me an opportunity—and this will be my last word—to throw back at the Government the words uttered in this House by the Prime Minister: "Cease to play the game; you are deceiving no one; you are doing no credit to the politics of Canada."

Mr. H. O. WRIGHT (Battleford): Mr. Speaker, at this late hour, I will not take up very much of the time of the House. At the outset I wish to extend to the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) my sympathy in so far as I realize that he has been faced with a gigantic task in the preparation of the Budget which has lately been presented to the House and, further, in the infinitely greater task with which he will be faced in the future should he retain office. While the Budget that he has presented to the House is of a character that will no doubt be looked upon with favour in some quarters, from the point of view from which I see it, it is highly unsatisfactory, and I think that will be the opinion of the majority of those who regard it from the standpoint of placing the burden where it can most easily be borne. It is a high protectionist Budget, and it contains in every particular the old system of special privilege, the system which seeks to build up an industrial structure without regard to the stability of the foundation upon which it must depend for its safety, a system which says: Let us build up our manufacturing industries; let us create large cities at whatever cost, even though our better judgment tells us that this is primarily an agricultural country, and let the farmer and the wage earner, who are the national beasts of burden under the system of special privilege, continue to bear that burden, no matter how great it may be.

The Budget removes the business profits tax. It is claimed by the minister that there is little use in continuing this tax, for the reason that profits are not being earned and very little revenue would be derived from it. If this be the case, I do not see how any person would be hurt by leaving the tax as it is. There is always a possibility that some revenue might be derived therefrom. It always commended itself to me as a tax which procured revenue from those who could best afford to pay. Under the present Budget, the load is lifted to a very great extent from the shoulders of those who are able to pay and is placed where it will be felt most by those who are living in poor circumstances with large families to support. This Budget is merely another illustration of the contention of many inside and outside of this House, that the present Government is a Government largely under the control of, or at any rate in great sympathy with, the big interests of the country. With its ultra sympathetic tendencies in that direction, it has lost sight of the needs of the common people.

Let me give you, Sir, one or two examples as proof of this contention. It will be remembered by all that a Board of Commerce was appointed in answer to the insistent demands of the people for the control of the prices of the necessaries of life. This board did not control. After futile attempts they resigned, giving as a reason for their resignation the fact that they could not obtain Government co-operation in making their regulations effective. Then the board was reconstituted, evidently with men who were more sympathetic to the suggestions of the Government. Almost their first move was to set the price of sugar, not in the interest of the consumer, but to protect the refineries from the result of their unwise gambling in raw material, at the same time placing an embargo on sugar coming in from the United States. While this order was disallowed by the Government, I am satisfied that it was not made without their knowledge, and only the nation-wide outcry that went up when it was made public, and the fact that the Prime Minister wished to create as favourable an impression as possible before going on his western tour, influenced the Government in setting it aside.

Then there is the increase in the freight rates, and let me not forget the fact that when the Minister of Finance was looking for advice as to how he should levy his new taxes, it is a notorious fact that he went to the Manufacturers' Association and kindred associations for advice, utterly ignoring the labour and farmers' organizations of this country.

In contrast with this, we have the refusal of the Government to continue the Canada Wheat Board, notwithstanding the persistent demands of the grain producers for its continuance. In this connection, I am sure that it will be remembered that several times during this session hon. gentlemen opposite have attempted to fasten the responsibility for the discontinuance of this board upon the farmers, and particularly upon those members of the House who have the honour to be numbered with this party. While their efforts were unsuccessful, in order to illustrate my point that the present Government is largely controlled by the big interests, I deem it advisable to place upon Hansard an extract from a trade journal published in the city of Montreal. This journal is known as the Canadian Milling and Grain Journal. It is published many hundreds of miles from the great wheat fields of the West, and it was evidently the belief of the publishers that they could afford to deal with this matter with perfect frankness, feeling assured that their words would not get back to the western grain grower. In their issue of August 1, 1920, under the caption "Exit the Wheat Board," I find the following, which is published editorially:

A triumph which is all the more notable because it was won by a minority in the face of well organized opposition, has been scored by the announcement of the Government that the 1920 crop will not be subject to control, thereby opening wide the door for a return to the normal trading conditions which have been so long and so ardently desired.

Ever since the adoption of the Government's "enabling" legislation during the final hours of the last session of Parliament, the grain growers of the country as well as their supporters have been harbouring the conviction that nothing could prevent the continuation of control for another year. Consequently, the official statement which was made just six weeks before the expiration of the present Wheat Board's term of office came upon the grain growers and their friends like a bolt from the blue. In their consternation the growers are wildly threatening to pool their interests but whatever effect this may ultimately have, the fact remains that thousands of grain handlers can get back to work, make plans for the future, and endeavour to repair the ravages caused their business by control.

There is not the slightest doubt that the termination of control and the restoration of future trading in the United States had much to do with influencing the Government's decision but if reports from reliable sources are to be believed the chief reason why the authorities at Ottawa decided in the face of the strongest kind of opposition to abolish control of the 1920 crop was because such was desired by the banking interests which feared, as was the case in many other influential quarters, that another year of control would pave the way for the establishment of a state monopoly in the grain trade.

Then a little further on this editorial continues:

When it was learned in Regina that the Government had decided to discontinue control so far as the 1920 wheat crop is concerned, there was a wailing and gnashing of teeth among the members of the Saskatchewan Co-operative Elevator Company, the Saskatchewan Grain Growers' Association and last but not by any means least the Regina representatives of the National Council of Agriculture who had regarded continued control as a foregone conclusion.

Fair criticism of any project should not be ignored and the disappointment of the other fellow can always be sympathised with, but a decidedly selfish view of the decision of the Government has been taken, according to reports, by a high official of the Saskatchewan Grain Growers' Association who openly deplores the fact that as a result of de-control the grain handlers will endeavour to make up the losses which control imposed upon them, and that furthermore the farmers will suffer the loss of the millions of dollars the grain handlers will make.

There is no pretence here of congratulating the grain growers on having freed themselves from the Wheat Board. Instead, it admits that the grain growers generally wanted the Wheat Board continued, that it was to their advantage that it should be continued, that the people who did not want the Wheat Board were a minority whose interests were not those of the grain growers, and that the victory was a victory gained by the minority at the expense of the grain growers.

While the Business Profits tax has been removed and herculean efforts are being put forth to stabilize the manufacturing industries of the country, in what condition do we find the real basic industry —I refer to agriculture? I have recently returned from the West where I spent a few days superintending the planting of the crop for this year. I think I am, in common with the average Canadian, not of an unhappy disposition, and far too much inclined to live in the present, without very much thought for the future, but the condition that confronted me was such that it brought me up with a jerk, and it has given me food for serious thought.

Last year we produced a fair average crop in the portion of the country where I reside, and in this we were fortunate, for in many districts, farmers experienced their third successive failure. Little benefit has been derived from the high prices brought about by the war on account of these unsatisfactory crop years. The crop of last year was produced under very heavy expense, and when it was finally harvested we were very soon made aware of the fact that we were selling upon a rapidly falling market. Transportation difficulties were met with which prevented the speedy shipment of the grain to market in order to take advantage of the higher prices that prevailed earlier in the season. The result is, that a great deal of last year's crop is still in the hand of the farmers, and the price now obtainable for wheat, after the freight charges are paid, will scarcely meet the cost of production. Oats cost 14 cents a bushel to thresh, and in many cases 10 cents a bushel is the price offered, which means a straight loss of 4 cents a bushed on the cost of threshing alone, without taking into consideration the preparation of the land, seed, twine for harvesting, and the incidential expenses of labour and hauling to the market.

The cattle market is such that heavy loss is the result when a sale is made. Hides are not worth the labour of bringing them to the market alone. Wool will not pay the freight to the point of sale. Horses have little or no value. The other day a buyer purchased a car of horses in my immediate vicinity at $15 per head, and shipped them to a point where he thought he could sell them; he put them up at public auction, but could not secure a single bid. In the face of these conditions the farmers are going ahead with their seeding operations, putting in every available acre as usual, and trying to make the best of a very bad situation.

If, as a result of their labours, an abundant crop is secured the prospect of finding a market for it is not very bright. Should the terms of the Young Bill be made permanent in the United States it may have the effect of excluding a great portion of our wheat from the American market. This also applies to live stock. With the British embargo on our cattle, and the lack of purchasing ability on the part of the European nations, I cannot see where the outlet is to be found for our produce. The home market, which is so much talked about by hon. gentlemen opposite, may be all right for the truck gardener, but it is of no use for the western farmer.

I am not mentioning these matters for the purpose of creating a bad impression of the future of the agricultural industry in Canada, or merely for the purpose of painting a dismal picture. My object is, if possible, to bring home to the Government the fact that our agricultural industry is facing the gravest period in its existence, and it is my belief that if the Government would take this matter seriously to heart and give it one-half the consideration that they seem to give to the condition of the manufacturing industries of the country, some way could be found to rectify this condition and stabilize an industry without which we have no hope of national prosperity.

While the price of farm produce has dropped to the extent of somewhere in the neighbourhood of two-thirds on an average, it is rather a remarkable thing to find that the price of the machinery necessary to production, in place of coming down, has actually gone up with the single exception of traction engines and threshing machines. The price of farm machinery at the present time is so high that it is absolutely stifling the trade. I know of numerous instances where farmers have gone into town and priced machines that they needed in order to speed up the work of putting in their crops, and finding the price so high that they returned to their farms and put an extra outfit of horses to work, working a double shift on the machinery they already had.

I think it is a pretty well recognized principle in business to set the price of an article just about as high as the trade will stand. The present price of farm machinery is away beyond that level, and my advice to the manufacturer is, if he really wishes to stabilize his industry and get back to the condition where his factories will furnish employment, to make an immediate readjustment of his prices and cheerfully accept his loss, if loss there be, in the same way the farmer is trying to accept his. The longer this readjustment of prices is delayed, the longer will both the agricultural industry and the farm machinery industry be retarded in returning to their normal conditions.

Much is being said as to the desirability of bringing in immigrants to settle upon our unoccupied lands, more particularly adjoining the Canadian National railways. There is no doubt in my mind that, under normal conditions, this would be a very desirable thing to do, but in the present state of the agricultural industry, where the cost of the necessary equipment to start operations is so abnormally high, and the prospect of a market for farm produce so very discouraging, I am afraid that in place of these immigrants, should they come to Canada in any great numbers, being an asset to the country, they would rapidly become a charge upon the state. There can be no doubt that it will tax the resources of some of the old settlers to the utmost to retain their land holdings and continue their farming operations if conditions do not better themselves speedily.

The right hon. the Prime Minister, who occupies in this House the position of leader of the shattered remnants of the defunct Union party, has stated, both here and in the country, that it is the aim of the Progressive party to bring about immediate free trade. From my place in what the right hon. gentleman is pleased to term the dilapidated annex of the Liberal party, I wish to make a statement as to where I stand in this matter.

The term, free trade, has no terrors for me. As a goal to be kept in view and worked for just as speedily as conditions will permit, it is commendable. Democracy and freedom of trade go hand in hand, while the policy of high protection, which is synonymous of special privilege, is the twin brother of plutocracy. In this instance, as is his custom, the Prime Minister has apparently not taken very much pains to see that his statements were fair to those whom he chose to criticise. If he had said that the Progressive party was absolutely opposed to the policy of high protection, to which he adheres most zealously, he would have been correct.

On September 14 the Canadian Council of Agriculture presented to the Government Tariff Board, then sitting in the city of Winnipeg, a memorandum setting forth their views on the tariff. May I be permitted, Sir, to read a short extract therefrom. Under the heading "A New National Policy", I find the following:

> The Farmers' platform is indeed an attempt to define a New National Policy for Canada, and the principal thought which it seeks to leave in the mind of the Canadian people is that Canada is, and will be for years to come, a pioneers' country. It is based upon the facts that agricultural land is Canada's richest natural resource; that the bulk of it lies in idleness and waste; and that the Dominion's greatest need to-day is people living and working on the land.
> Because for 40 years the development of this Dominion has been subject to the influence of a so-called National Policy which has failed to make the most of the true natural source of the country's wealth, the suggestions contained in the Farmers' platform have to do mainly with question of fiscal reform. The bed-rock upon which the Farmers' platform would lay a new national policy for Canada is upon a low customs tariff and upon direct methods of taxation. It does not ask for drastic legislation which would tend to unsettle and injure Canadian industry, but it does take the position that a national policy based upon the principle of protection is wrong. It suggests that the fiscal policy of Canada's future governments should aim at reducing the customs tariff to a strictly revenue basis. Production and trade in Canada have been forced into narrow, unnatural and uneconomic channels through the application of protective duties, and thereby development of vast supplies of natural wealth has been retarded and the Dominion prevented from proceeding favourably towards a realization of the fruitful destiny which nature has intended for her.

In view of what I believe to be a fact, that the Government of this country has always been in the hands of a few who have exploited its resources for their own personal advantage regardless of which party held office, it is borne home to me that there is urgent need of a new and a peoples' party in Federal politics.

I turn to the New National Policy as that which will produce just such a party, and I commend it to your careful and unbiased consideration, as a policy which starts at the real foundation of production and builds its structure upwards, unlike the practitioners of other policies, who attempt to suspend their structure from the clouds.

I support the New National Policy because it is a policy that has sprung spontaneously from the hearts of the people and is not the product of any party machine; because it is framed in honesty and sincerity of purpose and gives equal rights and privileges to all; because it is the policy of those who have learned their lesson in the school of adversity and hard knocks, where human sympathy is most pronounced; because it is the policy of the sane and sensible citizen who believes in supporting properly constituted law and authority.

I Support the New National Policy because its supporters are not trammelled with the fetters of party campaign funds, whose donors exact special privileges for the giving; because it is not tainted with sectionalism, and does not harbour any radical or religious animosities; because it is a policy that will go far to build up a great and united Canadian nation, embracing all creeds and nationalities and welding them into a common Canadian citizenship, thus strengthening the great Empire of which we are a part.

While we live in a wonderful country, and enjoy many privileges that we are truly thankful for, the very abundant richness of our heritage, a gift of heaven itself, unsurpassed by that of any people on the globe, gives us reason to be watchful, for these riches of natural resource are not inexhaustable, and we should see to it that they are not exploited for the benefit of the few, but that they should yield their munificence to every citizen of this great Canada of ours.

I will take great pleasure in supporting the amendment of the hon. member for Queen's and Shelburne (Mr. Fielding).

Mr. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): Although the Budget affords an opportunity for the discussion of public affairs in general, it is my intention to restrict my remarks to but a few phases, to make some observations with regard to the railway situation, and to discuss briefly the amendment which has been introduced by the member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding).

The Budget which has been presented by the Minister of Finance is not one that has any very outstanding features. One might have thought, after the delay experienced by this House and the people of this country, that something much more profound would have been submitted; but, as a matter of fact, there are only two outstanding features in the Budget that has been brought down. The minister has abolished the business profits tax, and he has amplified the sales tax of last session. So far as the business profits tax is concerned, I cannot agree with the hon. member who has preceded me (Mr. Wright). I believe that what the minister has done in the abolition of that tax is a step in the right direction, not because I do not think that profits ought to be taxed, but because it is my opinion that they should be taxed after they have reached the pocket of the individual. With regard to the sales tax, after all the agitation which we have had throughout the country and the consideration that has been given to the matter by various public bodies, and the representations that have been made to the Government, it was to be expected that we should have had some sort of modification or amplification of the existing sales tax. I believe, however, that the minister would have been well advised had he given some thought to the exemption from the operation of that tax of the food of the people of Canada.

The minister I regret to say has made no pronouncement whatever as to any steps which he intends to take, which will have for their object an early diminution of the tremendous public debt of Canada, which now reaches the enormous total of nearly $2,500,000,000, and places a debt of no less than $300 upon every man, woman and child in this country. We have no indication that he is making any effort to curb the expenditures of his colleagues in the Cabinet. The Minister of Militia (Mr. Guthrie) and the Minister of Marine (Mr. Ballantyne), for instance, propose to expend in the current year no less a sum than $17,000,000 on military undertakings, at least $10,000,000 of which, in my opinion, could be saved without any disadvantage to the people of this country.

In my opinion, one of the chief duties of the Minister of Finance is to place a brake upon the expenditures of the members of the Cabinet. I believe that, as a matter of fact, all the expenditures proposed in the various departments must pass in review before the Minister of Finance, who is charged with the duty of raising the revenues, and I should be very much surprised if the ministers did not themselves expect that the man who is in charge of the finances of the country, the Minister of Finance, should indeed take occasion to cut down, as far as possible, the very Estimates which they place before him. Yet we have before us at this session of Parliament Estimates totalling more than $600,000,000, and I say that the Minister of Finance has given no indication that he has attempted, to combat the tendencies of the ministers to increased expenditure.

I would like to say a few words with reference to the income tax. In my opinion the collection of that tax, and the methods of its calculation, have been the source of inexcusable worry to the people of Canada. If the Minister of Finance were in his seat, I would like to draw his attention to the remarks made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster) in connection with the income tax. That gentleman spoke as follows:

> If by the exercise of any methods that may occur to him—

That is the Minister of Finance.

> —it is possible for him to make it easier for us after this, to make our calculations, I should advise him to do so, and get a name for himself softer, and sweeter and more pleasing than that which now appertains to him when we set ourselves with our pencils to calculate our income tax.

Mr. Speaker, when we consider the fact that the Minister of Trade and Commerce is a colleague of the Minister of Finance, and when we bear in mind the other fact that in these later years the former hon. gentleman has in his heart nothing but charity even for his opponents—I say when we consider these two facts in conjunction with what he said in regard to the income tax, it is a very strong indictment of the Finance Minister for his attitude respecting that tax.

I believe in the principle of the income tax. We have to collect an immense amount of money every year in order to meet our obligations; and I believe that we must collect this money from the men who have it, from the men whose large incomes have been made possible by the opportunities which this country affords to them. But, granting that, I believe also it is the duty of the Finance Minister to make the collection, and the calculation, of the income tax with as little inconvenience as possible to the people who have to pay it. The present method seems almost to have been devised with a view to confuse and irritate the public unnecessarily. With two kinds of normal tax, and the varying rates of surtax, crowned by the entirely arbitrary and quite illogical special tax of five per cent on the sum of the other taxes—for which I presume the Minister of Finance could find no good name—with the various exemptions and the puzzling interpretations which are placed on the clauses of the law throughout, I say that the income tax of last year was nothing less than a nightmare to the people of this country. It seems to me that it could be made more simple and yet obtain as much revenue as has been obtained in the past and possibly more. It looks to me as if the minister has intended to make the income tax and its collection as difficult and perhaps as disagreeable, for the people, as possible. It reminds me of the homely riddle in which the victim is asked this question: "What animal is it that has feathers, lays eggs and barks like a dog?" In due course the victim gives it up and the propounder of the riddle says: "Well it is an ordinary barnyard hen." The one to whom the riddle had been submitted, says: "But why do you say it barks like a dog?" "Oh," says the other, "I just put that in to make it more difficult." It seems to me the same thing may be said of some of the provisions of the income tax as it stands now—they were put in to make it more difficult.

The Government, and the Minister of Finance in particular, have spread throughout the country the propaganda that we should not buy so much in the United States, the object, of course, being to relieve the exchange situation which now operates so heavily against us. Well, so far as the exchange situation is concerned, I make no pretense at being an expert in economics, but I think we have a good deal of aimless guessing with regard to the cause of the prevailing unfavourable rate. I have a suspicion myself that what governs the rate of exchange is just the same old principle that applies in ordinary business. When a man gets himself deeply into a hole and has such heavy obligations that the public have a suspicion that he may not be able to pay those obligations; then his dollar is usually not worth quite as much as the other man's when he goes to buy. His credit is impaired. That I think is just the condition of Canada. Our debt is so extremely heavy that our neighbours to the south of us have not just that confidence in our ability to pay that they had at one time. But with regard to the propaganda that has been carried on—I will not say improperly carried on—that we should not buy so much in the United States, I think the Minister of Finance might at least persuade his colleagues, and more particularly the Minister of Public Works, to practise what he himself preaches. Last week in raising my eyes to the gallery opposite I observed that a new clock had been placed there and another one on this side. Upon making examination I found that these clocks were made in the United States. I would like to know why the Government, consistent with its injunction to the people of Canada, did not purchase these clocks in this country. There is a factory in the Dominion which makes excellent clocks and it is located at no less a place than the city of Kitchener from which I come.

With regard to the methods of raising revenue, which are always a feature of the Budget, I would be glad to see them simplified as much as possible. Indeed, I would suggest that the methods of raising the revenue might very well be consolidated under three principal heads. We have the customs tax, which in its very nature has certain limitations; we have the income tax which, although we may be able to obtain from it from year to year a larger sum of money, also must have its limitations; and we have now the sales tax which can be adjusted to whatever degree may be necessary. If these methods were followed I would like to suggest to the minister that he abolish some of the smaller aggravating methods that are now followed of raising taxation, and which, in some respects, defeat their own purposes. I would have him, for example, abolish such irritating methods of taxation as the licking of stamps and placing them upon checques, notes, drafts and commercial paper of various kinds. He might just as logically place in force the old window tax which used to obtain in England many years ago; he might just as well tax a man because he has eleven rooms in his house instead of seven; there would be just about as much reason for doing so. I would also suggest to the Finance Minister that he might very well consider taking the war tax off postage. Many years ago we had three-cent postage and a former Postmaster-General, Sir William Mulock, reduced the rate to two cents, with the result that he converted a deficit into a surplus. I believe that the same thing might be possible now. I am not suggesting that the postage should be reduced to two cents with a view of bringing a smaller amount of money into the treasury of Canada; but I believe it would be a relief to the public, and the Government would receive just as much revenue, if the postage were reduced from three cents to two. That method has been followed in the United States, which had a three-cent rate during the war, but reverted to the two-cent rate shortly after the war ended.

I am surprised that the Minister of Finance has had so little to say about our national railway enterprise, which is making such great demands upon his revenue. Despite the heavy loss of the past year, which we all regret, and despite the propaganda that has been—deliberately by some and innocently by others—spread throughout the country against public ownership of railways, I may say that I still have some faith in the ultimate success of our public ownership experiment. It is only now that the country is obtaining control of the Grand Trunk Railway system, and for that reason it is only now that we will be able to co-ordinate that system with the national system, both being necessary for the welding together and the formation of a system which will be complete in itself and will offer some possibility of economic operation. But it will take some time to accomplish it. It cannot be done in a year or in two years. In this House the Canadian Pacific railway is repeatedly pointed to as being all that is efficient in the way of railway operation, and I quite agree with that view; but we should not forget that that railway, too, had its difficulties in its early years. Indeed, it has its difficulties to-day. During the past year even the Canadian Pacific railway would not have been able to pay its dividends from its railway operations alone; it was able to do so because of the inclusion of its earnings from hotels, land sales and shipping.

I am going to refer again to what I have said in previous sessions with regard to the management of our national railways. I held in 1919 that the cause of public ownership would receive a black eye if the management of the national system was not placed in other hands. I do not desire to reflect upon gentlemen who probably are doing the very best they can, but it does seem to me that with so much at stake it was the duty of the Government to place in charge of that system men who had made a success of the railway business, not men who had failed on a smaller scale and expect them to manage successfully a much greater enterprise. It was also necessary in my opinion when we entered upon this great public ownership project, to place in charge men who had not behind them a record of constant and consistent opposition to the principle of public ownership. In that regard, Mr. Speaker, I think the Government has not done its duty, and I trust when the Grand Trunk system is united with the national system that a board will be placed in control of the reorganized system that will be the best that it is possible to obtain, no matter what the cost.

With regard to the proposal made by Lord Shaughnessy to the Prime Minister, it seemed to me that it was merely the culmination of one stage of the propaganda which had for its ultimate purpose the sole control of Canadian railways by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The proposal of Lord Shaughnessy suggested that the national railways be combined with the Canadian Pacific railway; that the Grand Trunk railway be cut adrift to work out its own salvation, if it could; that the control of the national railways be taken away entirely from Parliament and become to all intents and purposes the enterprise of the Canadian Pacific; and that the Canadian Pacific stockholders and security holders should be guaranteed for all time to come, by the Canadian Government, a fixed dividend upon their holdings. That looks to me, Mr. Speaker, like a very good proposition for the Canadian Pacific Railway shareholders, but I do not see where the Dominion of Canada can possibly be the gainer. One would have thought that when Lord Shaughnessy made that proposal he would have tried to make it somewhat attractive to the people and the Parliament of Canada; but when we examine it, we find that in the sequel, all he can figure out as a result of the combination of the two systems and their operation by the Canadian Pacific Railway management is a deficit of $80,000,000, as compared with our own little $70,000,000 that we have now. In my opinion, a few years of that sort of thing would so disgust the people with the whole proposition that they would be very glad to hand over the national railways to the Canadian Pacific company and wash their hands of the railway business, and public ownership would be dead for many years to come, probably for all time. In the interim no doubt the Grand Trunk Railway would find itself in the difficulties that it encountered before the Government came to its relief, and the natural result would be that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company would ultimately come into possession of the Grand Trunk system, and we would then have a railway monopoly such as exists in no other part of the world. That may be a far-fetched conclusion, but it seems to me that the probabilities would be entirely in that direction. I have no hesitation in expressing the opinion that the people will not for one moment stand for that sort of thing. I am sure they would say: Sooner than have such a railway monopoly we will take our annual losses for a time and try to work out our own railway salvation. It should be remembered, moreover, that the object of public ownership is not the making of profits but the rendering of efficient service to the public.

In concluding my remarks, I want to deal very briefly with the amendment that has been offered by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding). I do not propose to debate any fine economic theories; in fact, I am not concerned whether the tariff is called a tariff for revenue or a tariff for protection; but I am interested in the results obtained, no matter under what name. There are few men, in Eastern Canada at least, who do not admit that for a great many years to come this country must have a tariff of some kind. The obligations of the war leave us no option in the matter, for we are under the necessity of raising half a billion dollars or more each year. Even with the heavy taxes that we have now we find ourselves quite unable to reduce our enormous capital indebtedness. As the Minister of Finance told us in his statement, during the past year, in spite of the large revenues received, the national debt was increased by a round $100,000,000. So, as a matter of fact, a tariff we must have. If you have a tariff for revenue—and this is the point I desire to make—you have also in practice, a tariff which protects.

I do not think there is any escape from that. The amendment says the tariff is a tax. Well, to the extent to which you tax imports just to that extent do you place a handicap upon the foreign manufacturer. If your tariff tax handicaps the manufacturer of a foreign country, it must follow necessarily, that it benefits the Canadian manufacturer. If the tariff is extremely low, it may not, as my hon. friends opposite might say, protect adequately. If it is extremely high, it gives a degree of protection that becomes monopolistic and unduly burdensome to the consumer, and I am not in favour of that kind of tariff. But most reasonable men in Eastern Canada—and I hope some in Western Canada—believe that there is a wise middle course; that Canada should have a moderate tariff which will maintain such industries as we have; that will still leave the field open to competition and provide revenue by means of a customs tax upon imports. So that I am quite content, Mr. Speaker, to have hon. gentlemen on the other side argue with hon. members on this side as to what they are going to call the tariff so long as the desired results are obtained. Morever, I will say quite frankly, that one of those desirable results, in my opinion, is the preservation of Canadian industry and the conservation of the interests of the Canadian workingmen. In the city from which I come, the city of Kitchener, and in the town of Waterloo, there are upwards of 150 manufacturing industries; in the whole of the riding there are probably 175 manufacturing establishments giving employment to many thousands of workingmen. I am not going to say what a tariff should be; I am not in a position to say that. But I do say that I have no intention whatever at any time of supporting any sort of legislation which would imperil the interests of the workingmen of the constituency which, I represent.

I believe, further, Sir, that Canada had a most admirable tariff during the fifteen years of the Laurier Administration and when the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) was Minister of Finance. Designate that tariff as you like—I am not taking any issue on that point with the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's—it is a fact that during that period Canadian industry flourished as it never did before. And we have the significant fact—at least it is claimed to be a fact by the Prime Minister—that the Borden Administration or the present Government have not revised upward the tariff of the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's, and that it is the same tariff. Indeed, I was rather surprised to hear the Prime Minister make the remarkable claim the other day that his Government, or the Government which preceded his—I do not know just exactly where one government ends and the other begins—he had reduced to 21 per cent the average tariff rate under the Laurier Government, which had been 26 per cent. So I repeat that I am not very much concerned with names and theories. If a liberal Government were in power I would have no fear that it would injure Canadian industry at this time any more than it did in the years between 1896 and 1911, and I do not believe hon. gentlemen opposite believe that such an Administration would injure Canadian industry. I will say further that if I did not feel secure on that point; if I had any doubt that the general tenor of the amendment submitted was in accord with the position

I have taken, I would have no hesitation whatever in voting against it. I want to assure hon. gentlemen right now that I have no such fear.

After all, Mr. Speaker, the interests of all the people of Canada should be regarded as one. No sectional advantage should be sought. In a far-flung country such as ours, with its diversified interests, there must be some compromise. The western farmer in many cases desires free trade or a very low tariff; the eastern manufacturer, perhaps in too many instances, though not in all, would like a prohibitive tariff. Let each yield what he can for the general good. In Ontario at least—I think in all parts of this country—the prosperity of the city means prosperity for the farmer, who recognizes that the city man is his best customer.

The present Government, Mr. Speaker, hopes to be returned upon an issue which, I contend, important as it is, is not the paramount issue in this country—the matter of the tariff. The Government would distract the minds of the people from its misdeeds, its many errors of omission and commission, its autocracy, its extravagance, and its continued usurpation of power. But the Canadian people will not be misled by any tariff herring that the Government is drawing across the trail. They are waiting as patiently as they can; they know their minds with regard to this Government, and they await but the opportunity to remove it. Whatever party or group attains to power, the industries of Canada will be just as secure as they were after 1896.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to the speech of the Prime Minister last Friday. He did me the honour of addressing some of his remarks to me, as also did some of the hon. members who have preceded me in this debate. The Prime Minister, after describing this amendment as being in effect a protectionist amendment—I do not think I do him any wrong when I interpret his remarks in that way—further described me as a protectionist. If he was quite sincere in what he said—and I do not doubt that he was—I cannot quite understand how he should have any doubt as to how I should vote. If the amendment is a protectionist amendment and I am a protectionist, naturally I would support the amendment. While his whole speech was an effort to prove that the record of the Liberal party in office was protectionist and while he expressed his conviction that it still is so and that the amendment, in part at least, bears out that contention, he intimates that in some respects there is inconsistency in the motion before us, and he is curious to know which part of it I am going to support. Well, even if what he says with regard to inconsistency were true, a decision under all the circumstances should not be very difficult. The Prime Minister, of course, knows just as well as any one, and better than most persons, that he and I must vote for the amendment as it stands, in whole and not in part. He said on Friday that he was quite in accord with a good many portions of the amendment submitted by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's. That being the case, I assume that he would like to vote for those portions. He asked me which part I intended to vote for; I might very well ask him the same question. The amendment calls for the encouragement of industry based upon the natural resources of this country. It asks that readjustment of tariff should have in mind existing conditions of trade; that any changes should cause the least possible disturbance of business, and, further, that such changes should reduce the cost of living. I am quite sure that the Prime Minister (Mr. Meighen) is in accord with these principles; but will he for that reason vote for the amendment? Of course, there is only one reply. While he has laboured to show that both Liberal practice and the present amendment are in accord with his tariff policy, he will regard the vote on the amendment as a vote of want of confidence. I have no particular fault to find with that. Like himself, I believe in the principles which I have just enunciated, but I differ from the Prime Minister on one very vital point. I have no confidence whatever in this Government. It obtained office by unfair means; it obtained office by a Franchise Act which did not give to the people of Canada an opportunity for a complete, unprejudiced and unbiassed expression of opinion. It continues to hold office to-day in defiance of the will of the Canadian people. That is true. If any proof were needed, one need only to look to the left and see the wholesale defections that have been made from the party across the way. If any further proof were needed, one need but observe the results of the by-elections since this Government or the government of the former Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden) came into power. I believe I am correct in saying that the government since 1917 has not won a single by-election from its opponents, whoever they may have been, but it has lost many seats held by its supporters. It has lost Glengarry and North Ontario.

Mr. LALOR: How many seats have the party which my hon. friend supports in this House won in the by-election?

Mr. EULER: We have won some. I will name some in a moment. The Government has lost Glengarry, North Ontario, Temiskaming, Carleton, Assiniboia, East Elgin and West Peterborough. It is a most unprecedented condition of affairs that a Government in power, from the day that it took office, has not been able to win a single by-election from its opponents, and has lost the number which I have enumerated. What is the result of that? As a result, it is an undoubted fact that the Government is weak and reactionary. It has not to-day the courage even to maintain the occasional good legislation that it has enacted. To-day, at the command of its patronage-hunting followers, it is prepared to sacrifice its Civil Service Act just as that law was beginning to be shaken down into good working order. I give the Prime Minister all credit for courage and ability, but he cannot carry the burden alone; he needs assistance, and yet he dare not complete his Cabinet because of the necessary by-elections. His position is too weak to-day to enable him to rid himself of a minister who uses his public position to advance the interests of the firm of which he was a member. I would put the challenge to the members of the Government who are now in their seats, to say whether they approve the action of the Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue (Mr. Wigmore) in writing that letter. I believe that there is not in the House to-night a minister who does not in his heart, and probably in some other places, condemn to the utmost the action of his colleague in this matter. Further, the Prime Minister is put to the necessity of enacting an election law disfranchising 100,000 British subjects who might vote against him, and even then he dares not put his fate to the touch in a general election. I have no confidence in such a Government, and the people of Canada have no confidence in it. There is nothing that the people desire more than an opportunity to remove this Government from office. For that reason as for other reasons which I have already given, and because I know that my constituents would resent anything that might be construed as an expression of confidence in this Government, I have no hesitation whatever in supporting the amendment.

Mr. J. J. DENIS (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, on the morrow of the evening on which the Budget was delivered, one could read on the front page of the outstanding newspaper. the Montreal Gazette, the following headline:

Budget meets approval and disapproval. Government members and industrial interests satisfied.

Those words in the Gazette were true, in fact, much more so than many of us could readily realize. The Budget has satisfied two groups of the community if it has satisfied no others—Government members and industrial interests. As regards the first group, namely, the Government members, my esteemed colleagues in this House for whom I have the greatest personal regard, I have but little comment to make. Every one of us in this House has to bear the responsibility for his actions, and he must answer to his electors for his conduct in Parliament. My hon. friends opposite will be called upon in due course to render to the electors an account of their actions and of the vote which they will give on this Budget. Happy will they be, however, if in order to justify their vote, they can put forward some better reasons than the sole desire to give support to the present Administration. So much for the alleged support of Government members.

But what concerns me more in this matter and what concerns the people of this country is the approval of the Budget by the industrial interests. May I say that the industrial interests are not the only ones who are satisfied with this Budget? The whole group, generally comprised under the term of "interests," is satisfied with it. To use an expression very common on the other side of the border line, the "interests" are satisfied, and for any one who knows what the "interests" are, no further explanation should be necessary. For the average person who does not know of the "interests," it is well to mention that the "interests," generally speaking, and in the broad sense of the word, include capitalists, manufacturers, speculators, and also profiteers. That is the particular class commonly called the "interests" as opposed to the ordinary common people, the poor people and the well-to-do people. Any one who has perused the Budget should not be surprised to hear that the "interests" are satisfied, because this is a Budget framed with the obvious intention of satisfying the "interests." But what about the common people, the poor people who represent 90 per cent, or perhaps, more of the population? Are those people satisfied with the Budget? I say that they are not. They cannot be satisfied, because this Budget adds enormously to the taxes which already bear heavily upon them. To my mind, Sir, the Budget can be properly described in a four-word sentence, as "the poor man's burden." It is the poor man's burden in that it imposes upon the common people, the poor people, and the middle classes the taxes that should be paid by the rich—by the interests which I have just described. It is the poor man's burden because it imposes upon the poorer classes heavy additional burdens, when that class is already taxed to the breaking point.

One of the taxes that must bear heavily on the poorer classes and the working classes generally is the sales tax in its new form. This tax was already heavy, but this Budget makes it much worse. A sales tax of 3 and 4 per cent is a tremendous tax upon the poor people, while it is hardly a tax at all on the rich. This new sales tax will be added directly to the price of commodities, and as the larger part of the consumption of the nation is represented by the family budgets of the poorer classes and the lower middle classes, almost the totality of the tax will rest upon the masses of the people. As the poor spend the largest portion of their income on commodities, the sales tax will bear most heavily upon them. It will increase the cost of living at a time when the Government has been so strongly urged to reduce the cost of living, and when so many assurances have been given by the Administration that efforts were being made in that direction. The sales tax rests essentially upon a false and unjust principle, the basic iniquity of it being that it ignores the ability to pay, as well as the difference in circumstances. No wonder the interests are in favour of the sales tax, because they know that this tax in a large measure will shift the burden of supporting the expenditure of the country from their shoulders to the shoulders of the poor and the moderately well-to-do. It is hardly more commendable than a head tax would be. A head tax would indiscriminately place upon the head of the poor the same tax as upon the head of the rich. This sales tax works in the same way to a large extent. This tax is not a wonderful discovery at that. In the United States Senator Smoot has introduced into Congress a Bill providing for a sales tax of 1 per cent that is being very strongly criticised in many quarters. Now if a sales tax of 1 per cent is deprecated in the United States, there are good reasons for contending that a sales tax of 3 and 4 per cent in this country makes the taxation the poor man's burden.

The next increase in taxes which we find in the Budget is an increase in the taxes on spirits. Last year, and the year before, heavy taxes were imposed on wines and spirits. The taxes on wines are maintained this year, and the taxes on spirits doubled. I say again, this new tax on spirits and the maintenance of the heavy taxes on wine will bear heavily on the poor man. If the consumption of wines and spirits is to be allowed in this country, why should those using those commodities, if commodities they are, be called upon to pay such an enormous tax as the Budget imposes? Again, why should a particular class of the community, the class that is using these beverages, be penalized, for the new taxes have been raised to such a point that they have become equivalent to a penalty? According to the principles of sound economics the burden of taxation should be imposed as much as possible on the community generally, according to the ability of each class or each individual to pay, and not upon one particular class or group in the community. The new taxes are in direct contravention of these principles, and again, the reasons which I alleged a few moments ago with regard to the sales tax apply equally to these new taxes on wines and spirits. It is little or no burden for the rich to pay these taxes, but it is a very heavy burden for the poor to pay, and these beverages will in the future be available only for the rich. If the poor man wants to make use of them, he will have to neglect his duty of looking after his family, or give up the use of some other commodities. In stating this, I do not intend by any means to be understood as making a plea in favour of wines and spirits; far from it, but I say that we must be logical. If these beverages are to be allowed in this country, let them be allowed for everybody; if they are not to be allowed for everybody, let them be denied to the rich as well as to the poor. Under the new system of taxation they are allowed to the rich and denied to the poor. If the poor man wants these beverages he will have to pay an enormous price, and of necessity deprive himself and his family of other needs. For these reasons, I say that the maintenance of the taxes on wines, which were already very high, and the doubling of the taxes on spirits, make the taxation the poor man's burden.

I now wish to pass to a question which has been very thoroughly discussed before in this House session after session, but which seems yet far distant from solution; I refer to the railway problem which confronts Parliament at the present time. It is a stupendous problem. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Reid) in making his annual statement on March 17 last said:

> What is the best way to improve the situation? I am ready to take, in fact I seek, advice from any or every member of this House, or whoever may be able to make any suggestion of value.

What a pity, Sir, that the hon. gentleman did not before this year appeal to the House for advice and suggestion, because in past years, before it was too late, he could have received very good advice from this House. But he has not shown any real inclination to accept any advice. The Government have made a terrible mess of their railway policy, and now they have reached the point where they do not know what next to do. They are in a state of despair. The minister admits the failure of his administration; he throws up the sponge and, with hands uplifted to high Heaven, he cries for help. Sir, I do not believe that any suggestion which hon. members of this House might offer the minister with regard to the railway situation would be of any avail, because we know from past experience that the Government does not really want advice; and even to-day their request for suggestions is only pretended. They want it to appear to the country that no advice is offered on this side of the House, and their object is to try to make every party share the responsibility, which belongs to them alone, for the present calamitous state of affairs in connection with the railways.

The position of the Minister of Railways might best be illustrated by the following illustration: Let us suppose a rich man to be the owner of a magnificent boat. He hires a captain to take charge of that boat and safely pilot her. The pilot, against the orders of the owner, steers the boat into dangerous currents and finally lands her on the reefs, partially destroying the boat. Having done that, he comes to the owner and asks for advice. What would the answer of the owner be? What would any practical man do in a case like that? I cannot conceive of anything else than this answer, on the part of the owner: "You have carried this boat into dangerous waters against my orders; you have disobeyed me; you have stranded the boat on reefs, and have destroyed it, partially, if not completely. The first thing for you to do is to leave the helm as quickly as you can, for I am going to place some one else in charge." Now, in the case in which we are interested, the owners of the ship—the ship of state—are the people. They have charged the Government, which is the pilot, with the responsibility for the safe conduct of this ship, but the Government has directed the boat on to the rocks. Time and again they were warned against sailing the boat in dangerous waters, but they disregarded every signal of danger, and now that the boat is wrecked, they come asking for advice. Well, there is only one answer which the people of the country can give them, and it is this: Leave the helm; we have no confidence in you, you are not worthy of the trust we placed in you, because you deliberately disobeyed our instructions, and now that you have stranded the ship, we will put some one else, who is capable, at the helm. The point at which the comparison ceases is this: in the first case, the owner would have no difficulty in immediately replacing the pilot; but in the present instance, the people, who are anxious and only too ready to displace the pilot, are just waiting for the opportunity to put another and more competent one, in his place. A better pilot and crew are available, but for the time being the people are helpless. However, the time will soon come when they will be able to dismiss the captain and crew at present in charge of the ship of state and put in their stead others who will be able to steer clear of the banks and shoals after the ship has been repaired.

In his speech on the railway situation, the Minister of Railways submitted a financial statement. Last year he admitted a deficit of $48,000,000, in round figures, in the administration of the railways, and this year he admits a deficit of $70,000,000. To say the least, the increase calls for comment, and it would be staggering even were the figures of the minister correct. But his figures are far from being accurate and complete. The minister's accounts give only half the truth. I will not say that he is trying to deceive the people, but I do say that his method of book-keeping is unsatisfactory, because it does not reveal the true financial situation of our railways and the full extent of the disastrous result of the Government's railway policy. On March 19, 1921, two days after the Minister of Railways had delivered his railway Budget, Mr. John Lambert Payne, former Chief Railway Statistician for the Canadian Government, published in the Montreal Daily Star a startling article giving a summary of our railway situation. According to the statement made by Mr. Payne, whose authority on railway matters is not, and cannot properly be, disputed, the book-keeping of the Railway Department is wrong and does not disclose the true capital accounts. According to the statement by Mr. Payne, the total deficit on the railways for the year 1920 is $128,829,330 instead of $70,000,000, as admitted by the Minister of Railways. Any one who peruses the statement of the Minister of Railways, compares Mr. Payne's statement with it, puts the two together, and tests them, will inevitably come to the conclusion that the statement of Mr. Payne is accurate and must be taken as representing the facts with respect to our railway situation in so far, at least, as the deficits are concerned.

Under the circumstances is it not apparent to you, Mr. Speaker, that our railway situation calls for immediate action? Any one who would deny this would be ignorant of the terrible situation in which this country is at present placed as regards our national railways. That immediate action should be taken is the least one should ask for. Yet what are the Government doing? They are not doing anything. They are simply carrying on aimlessly and hopelessly; they stand pat on the railway situation. While that situation alone would be sufficient to drive the country into a bottomless pit of deficits the Government stand pat. Sir, this is not the time for the Government to act as stand-patters. This is the time for action and for immediate action, and it would be nothing short of criminal on the part of the Government if immediate action with respect to the railway situation was not taken—in fact, the Government should have taken such action long ago. In the beginning they should never have acquired the systems of railway which they now have, but having acquired them they should immediately have set themselves to the task of placing the operation of those railways on a sound basis. The Minister of Railways calls for advice, but what did he or the Government do at the time of the acquisition of the Canadian Northern and Grand Trunk railways? Certainly the minister will not complain that advice was not given him at that time. Day after day, week after week, the Opposition fought in this House in order to prevent the perpetration of that nefarious transaction, but the Government had made up their minds, that they were going to acquire these railways and they did acquire them. They did so by using all the means at their disposal, including the application of the closure. They used every method in their power to perpetrate a transaction which for all time will remain as one of the most lamentable transactions of which any government was ever guilty. Now that they have done this they ask for advice, but the advice given to them will not be heeded. They ask for advice before the public, but in Parliament they will take no advice. The Government have not the courage to cope with the present railway situation. They do not dare to attempt to initiate any new railway policy; they merely ask for advice in order to try and show that they are acting in good faith. But it is useless to give them advice; they are stand-patters while this railway tragedy is developing, and the people of the country are being bled to provide the hundreds of millions of dollars necessary to meet the deficits indicated in the railway budget of the Minister of Railways.

If any advice should be given certainly one can say with reason that no panacea exists for the railway situation. The remedy which should be applied is not one which can cure in a very short time, even if it could ever cure at all. The proper thing to do is to adopt different remedies, different means, which, working together and tending in the same direction, will help to extricate our railways from the situation in which they now are. If the matter were in my hands I would, in the first place, ask that a board of responsible people be placed in charge of those railways. I would in the second instance ask for the application of the strictest economy. I would also demand the kind of immigration which we need in this country in order to develop it and provide a revenue for our railways. I would also consider, if not adopt, the scheme of Lord Shaughnessy which was placed before this House a short time ago. What we need first, Sir, is a responsible board to govern our railways. The present board are not responsible in the real sense of the term. True they are responsible to the Government, and the Government are responsible to Parliament and the country, but there is no liaison, there is no tie between the Government and that Board of Management such as would make the latter a responsible body. The present Board of Management have no interest whatever in the operation of our railways. They can spend money on these railways like drunken sailors if they want to, and they are not any the poorer or the richer at the end of the year whether they do or do not spend money lavishly, whether they give or do not give a good administration. How can you expect under such circumstances that a board of management, honest though they may be, could ever operate any concern or any company with success? I say it is absolutely impossible because the very basic principle, the very foundation, upon which that board are managing our railways is wrong. In order to have a good management we must have a responsible board. We must have a board responsible to somebody, a board whose actions can be checked and controlled by somebody—a board that can be censured when they make mistakes, a board like that of the Canadian Pacific railway as much as anything of the kind can be created in connection with the management of our railways.

To give you an example of how absolutely helpless the people of Canada are with regard to relieving this railway situation—except paying the deficits each year which is the part, and the only part, they are playing in the game—I will give you an example of what happened not very long ago in Joliette, the town from which I come and which I have the honour to represent in this House. The Canadian National Railways have a line from Montreal to Quebec which passes through the city of Joliette. Last year improvements or repairs, I do not know exactly which, were made to some of the bridges at and near Joliette. As a matter of fact on the bridge spanning the L'Assomption river, in the city, work has been in progress for about one year. It appears that the work has been so badly managed that about a month ago the bridge by some accident was partially destroyed, and as a consequence all the Transcontinental trains for several days had to be diverted and run over other lines. Can you imagine, Sir, the enormous loss to the Canadian National Railway system as a result? Being aware of these facts I asked the Minister of Railways recently, when the Estimates of his department were before the committee, if he knew of any contractors by the name of Fletcher and Company who were working on that bridge, and if he had any knowledge of their work. The minister and his deputy examined the books of the department, but could not find a single entry in relation to the building of this bridge, and therefore the minister said: "Seeing that this matter is not in the hands of the department of Railways and Canals, it must be in the hands of the board of management, and consequently I must take it for granted that this bridge is being built or repaired by the board." That is the end of it; after the minister has said that, no one can go any further, because the board of management is an irresponsible body. If the Government were responsible we could find out who was paying for the damage, and so on, but in this case we are helpless. All the people have to do when they are told that the board of management is responsible for any error or misstatement is—to pay the bill.

Having asked for a responsible management, I would also ask for efficient operation of these lines. Of my personal knowledge I know that an enormous number of claims are being made against the Canadian National Railways for losses of freight and express in the province of Quebec. It appears to me that there must be something wrong with the management when so many losses are happening. I was called upon by a client, not very long ago, to make a claim for seven pieces of baggage which had been lost. What about it, Sir? The claim is made against the company, and the company answer that they will give the matter their attention. Generally that is the last we hear of it. After that action has to be instituted in the courts, the company come along in due time and either settle the claim or defend the action, and in the latter case it has to pay both the claim and the costs. It would be extremely interesting, Sir, to know the number of claims that the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian National Railways Express are paying each year. I believe it would be found that by comparison they are losing more baggage, freight and express than any other railway in the country. This again I attribute to bad management. But the management not being responsible, what are the people to do? All they can do is to make claims for their losses and enforce payment, which in the long run the people at large must pay.

Now, Sir, a remedy which in my estimation would certainly be of some value would be a proper immigration policy.

Speaking on this question on March 21 last, Mr. E. W. Beatty, President of the Canadian Pacific Railway, gave the following interview to the Canadian press, which I find reported in the newspapers of the same date. It reads as follows:

E. W. Beatty, K.C., president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, interviewed by the Canadian Press on the subject of the deficit of $69,593,441 on the last year's running of the Canadian government-owned railroad systems, said that without immigration the prospects of the Canadian National lines were, in his opinion, hopeless and any legislation which would stem the tide of desirable immigration must inevitably pile up further deficits. It was, he said, an aggressive immigration propaganda that built the Canadian Pacific Railroad and he claimed that Hon. T. A. Crerar, leader of the National Progressive party, struck the right note when he declared before the Canadian Club in Montreal recently, that a wise and vigorous policy of immigration would help solve the problem.

Mr. Beatty added: "I quite agree with those who object to immigration of city-bred continentals of poor physique and doubtful health, who would at once drift into slums, or of large communities of foreign-born who frankly declare that they do not intend to assimilate with English-speaking conditions. But the gates of Canada should be opened once more not only to the British, French and American immigrant, but also to the Scandinavian and the more desirable type of continental." He pleaded also the cause of the skilled mechanic in addition to that of farm hands and domestics, on the ground that Canadian industry would be handicapped in its progress without them.

He concluded: "Policies which are perfectly appropriate in the case of the United States would not necessarily be applicable to this country. By all means let us exclude the undesirable immigrant, but admit those who in time will contribute to this country's commercial prosperity and economic strength."

I must say, Sir, that in a very large measure I concur in the views which were here expressed by the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. What we need in order to effect a solution of our railway problem and to bring about a development of the country generally is to get immigrants of the right kind, who will stay on the land rather than crowd into the cities. We want as immigrants not those who will increase the city population, but those who, coming from the land, will stay upon the land.

My hon. friend from North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) who spoke immediately preceding me, said that he would not have a tariff which would prejudice the workingmen of his community. I am of his opinion, Sir; I would not have any tariff that would prejudice the workingmen of our population. But I believe that the tariff policy which the Liberal party have propounded in this House is sufficiently wide to afford to the workingmen of this country all the protection that they need. And as to the matter of immigration, I repeat that the crowding of our cities by immigrants would have the effect of taking away from our own workingmen employment of which they are so badly in need, and which at the present time is very scarce. It would help nobody; it would not enrich the country but rather impoverish it. I stand for the protection of the workingman against any such immigration. The only kind of immigration we want at this time, the only kind that will be a source of revenue and of wealth to the country, is that which involves settlement upon the land. The hon. member for North Waterloo made reference to Lord Shaughnessy's plan for dealing with our railway situation. In my opinion, this plan is worthy of consideration. Many people who are authorities on railway matters, great economists and men of sound judgment, are of the opinion that the adoption of the plan suggested by Lord Shaughnessy would be the best for our railways. I do not say that I am in favour of that plan or that I am against it, but I do say that before the House prorogues and members go home for about eight months, in the meantime letting the railways look after themselves and letting the millions of deficits pile up, it is the duty of the Government to adopt some policy that will relieve the taxpayers of Canada of the enormous burden which is bearing upon them through the increasing deficits in connection with the operation of our railways.

There are before the House Estimates which have been passed and there are others which are still awaiting consideration with regard to the militia and the navy. As to the proposed militia expenditures I do not know that I could do any better than emphasize what was said the other day by the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power), that there are actually in this country about 400,000 ex-soldiers who could at a moment's notice be called to the colours if necessary. That being the case there is no present necessity for large military expenditures. As to the navy, Sir, I am afraid that the gift of a few ships from Great Britain, made, no doubt, with the best intention, was one which we should have refused. It is my view that in the future we should curtail as much as possible our expenditures with regard to the navy, because I am convinced that a navy for Canada is at the present time and will for many years to come be quite unnecessary, to say nothing of its being a heavy burden. The present tonnage of the three largest navies of the world is as follows: Great Britain, 808,200 tons; United States, 467,250; Japan, 319,140. If, therefore, the amount of tonnage represents the strength of a navy, Great Britain's navy is by far the strongest at the present time. Indeed, the navies of Japan and the United States combined have a tonnage a little less than that of the navy of Great Britain. But if the present programmes of these countries are carried out, in 1924 the United States will have a tonnage of 1,117,850, Great Britain 808,200, and Japan, 543,140. Under the circumstances, Sir, having regard to the immense size of these three navies, I cannot help wondering of what use a Canadian navy can be, or of what use the little navy is that we now have, if we have any at all. We cannot suppose for a moment that Canada will ever be at war with England, and, consequently, our navy would be absolutely useless as regards the Mother Country. Is our navy necessary to defend ourselves against Japan? It is not, for at least two reasons. First, the United States, with their navy twice as strong as that of Japan, would never allow the Japanese to land in this country, and second, we have, to protect our shores, the British navy which would never allow the Japanese to attack Canada. Would our navy be of any use against the navy of the United States? This eventuality again has to be set aside because, in the first instance, no one would think for a moment that war would ever be possible between Canada and the United States, and if, through unfortunate circumstances which we cannot foresee, such a war should ever take place, our navy would be so small and powerless as opposed to the American navy that it would be much better for us to have no navy at all than to have the kind of navy which we could not probably have even if we should decide to go to the expenditure of large amounts of money on a Canadian navy. We have had an example of this in the past. Let us recall for a moment the war between the United States and Spain. The Spaniards had a navy at that time; but it was an obsolete one; it was a navy which could not cope, by any means, with that of the United States. As soon as war was declared, the United States sent their navy to battle with the Spanish navy, with the result that the poor Spaniards who were on those obsolete ships, nearly all lost their lives, without being able to do the least damage to the United States navy.

I am very sorry that I have taken up so much of the time of the House, and I wish to be pardoned for so doing; but this is an exceptional occurrence, and I thought I would avail myself of the privilege of making my views known, obviously not on all questions, but on a few of the most important ones that are now before the House.

Parliament, we are told, will soon prorogue. Before it prorogues, if I had any advice to give to the Government, I would ask them to set their house in order, to look more to the business of this country than to any Imperial conference which is to be held in England. According to reports which have been published in the newspapers, the Prime Minister (Mr. Meighen) is scheduled to leave for England on June 7. It is all very well for the Prime Minister of Canada to attend the Imperial Conference, but it is much better for the Canadian Government to look after the business of the Canadian people. At the present time our country is in financial straits. We hear the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) telling us that he has a deficit this year of over $100,000,000, when other countries of the world, France, England, the United States, have surpluses. The United States are paying their national debt; England is paying her national debt. I do not know to what extent France is paying her national debt, but I know that she is paying it. France, destroyed as she has been during the war, tried as she has been, at the present time, has come to a point where her exports exceed her imports by hundreds of millions of francs. Canada is in a different position; Canada has still an adverse balance of trade against her; Canada is not going in the right direction; we are becoming each day more rapidly and surely an economic dependency of the United States. Before the Canadian Government think of going into European politics, before the Prime Minister embarks for Europe, if I had a friendly piece of advice to give him, I would tell him first to set in order the business of this country. In order to do so, he should take into account the fact that we cannot continue as we are going on now, piling up deficit upon deficit each year; we cannot let the railway situation look after itself; we cannot be indifferent to a right immigration policy upon which I am founding strong hopes; we cannot be indifferent to all the other problems which confront this country, and before going to England to look after the affairs of the Empire upon the pretence that Canada is now a nation and that she is admitted into the councils of the Empire, it would be right and proper for the Prime Minister to look after the business of our country. Therefore, I trust the Prime Minister will not look to the necessity of soon proroguing the House in order to allow him to go to England, but that prorogation will not come until the more important business of the country has been looked after, so that the Prime Minister can go, leaving no stone unturned behind him which can accrue to the welfare of Canada.

On motion of Mr. Sutherland the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Calder the House adjourned at 11.56 p.m.

Thursday, May 19, 1921.

The House met at Three o'clock.

REPORT

Second report of the Select Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills —Mr. Steele.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUSPENSION OF RULE 103.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE FOSTER (Minister of Trade and Commerce): moved:

That in view of the late period of the session, Private Bills sent by the Senate to this House for concurrence be read twice on the same day, and that Rule 103 relative to posting of such bills be suspended for the remainder of the session.

He said: This is a motion which has been passed by this House in previous sessions under similar conditions.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: This is merely a formal motion, but in the absence of notice it cannot be passed without unanimous consent.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS

Bill No. 165 for the relief of Lily Maude McCormack.—Mr. Glass.

Bill No. 166 for the relief of Herbert Henry Brown—Mr. Copp.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE

Mr. H. B. MORPHY (North Perth) presented the first report of the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts, and moved concurrence therein.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: This motion requires unanimous consent as notice has not been given. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is it a unanimous report?

Mr. MORPHY: I think so.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Carried.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—ST. ALEXIS

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure):

1. Was any portion of the Station ground at St. Alexis Station, Bonaventure county, leased to O. J. Levesque? If so, for how long and at what price?

2. Has the Management of the Canadian National Railways leased the said ground to one Arsenault, of Blaquiere and Arsenault and to Ludger Gallant? If so, what was the reason of the change and who recommended it?

3. Is the Management of the Canadian National Railways aware that the Station ground at St. Alexis Station is very limited?

4. Have any applications been received for the erection of a platform at that place, for the loading and unloading of freight? If so, why was this not granted?

5. Will the Management inquire as to whether or not the public interest is not being made subservient to that of individuals at this station?

Hon. Mr. REID:

1. No.

2. Yes. Recommendation of general superintendent and superintendent.

3. Station grounds considered large enough to accommodate all requirements at this point.

4. Application received in August, 1919, but work was deferred in that and succeeding years on account of large amount of more important work at other points.

5. Licenses of occupation are dated April 1, 1921, and are at pleasure of minister. They may be cancelled on short notice. It is not considered that they are detrimental to the interest of the public.

HIGHWAYS—HAMILTON-BRANTFORD ETC.

Mr. WILSON (Wentworth):

1. What is the cost of that completed portion of the Hamilton-Brantford highway lying between Paradise Road (the western boundary of the City of Hamilton), and Binkley's Corners (just before the turn in road leading to the Village of Ancaster)?

2. What is the distance contained in that portion of road where the permanent roadway has been laid?

3. What specifications were called for on the Hamilton-Brantford highway?

4. Is it true that portions of this pavement, put down last year by the Warren Paving Co., will have to be relaid this year?

5. What amount of money was paid by the Dominion Government to the Department of Public Works of Ontario for this Hamilton to Brantford highway?

6. What is the estimated cost of the highway between Hamilton and Brantford and what is the distance?

7. Is it proposed to build a subway under the T. H. & B. tracks on this highway, at or near Binkley's Corners, and, if so, what will be the cost of same?

8. What roads in the county of Wentworth have been approved of as highways by the Dominion Government and what roads have been proposed by the Department of Public Works of Ontario?

9. What is the estimated cost of the Hamilton-Brantford highway between the T. H. & B. railway track and the village of Ancaster? What distance is it?

Hon. Mr. REID:

1. $141,253.46.

2. 9,100 feet.

3. Concrete, asphaltic concrete and warrenite bitulithic.

4. No.

5. $5,220.76.

6. $658,907.05—19.18 miles.

7. The Canada Highways Act and regulations do not permit of payment of any portion of the cost of building subways, which in any event, would be a matter for the consideration of the Dominion Railway Board, the province and the municipality. The cost of building a subway under the tracks of the T. H. & B. is not included in the cost of improvement of the Hamilton-Brantford highway.

8. The following roads have been approved of as highways by this department: Hamilton-Queenston highway, Hamilton-Brantford highway, Hamilton-Jarvis highway, Dundas street highway; and the following roads have been proposed by the Department of Public Works of Ontario: Hamilton-Queenston highway, Hamilton-Brantford highway, Hamilton-Jarvis highway, Hamilton-Chatsworth highway, Hamilton-Kitchener highway, Dundas street highway.

9. $121,000.—2 4-5 miles.

WAR INDEMNITY—CANADA'S SHARE

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. P. F. CASGRAIN (Charlevoix-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I see in the Montreal Star of the 18th instant a news item headed:

Canada may get part of German payment.

Ottawa, May 18 (Canadian Press).—A small proportion of the first German payment on reparations may come to Canada. The payment of 150,000,000 gold marks made will, it is stated here, be applied to the cost of the Allied army of occupation.

I should like to know from the Government if there is any truth in this assertion.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE FOSTER (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The matter has been noticed in the public press, and, in accordance with what has been read by my hon. friend, Canada has her rights in her share of the reparations when paid. Further information cannot be given at the present time.

IMMIGRATION OF MENTAL DEFECTIVES

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. CHARLES MURPHY (Russell): Mr. Speaker, in a notice published in the Toronto Telegram of May 17 of a convention which is at present in progress in Toronto, described as the National Public Health Convention, there is a report of an address delivered by Dr. J. D. Page, referred to as Chief of the Division of Quarantine, Federal Health Department, Immigration Service, in which he is stated to have said:

That thousands of mentally defective ex-imperial soldiers are coming to this country, their papers being made out to cover "what it is not desired to see." He alleged that their passage is being paid to "this colonial dumping ground" by the British Government, and other agencies, which desire their riddance from Great Britain.

"It is a more important work than fighting the Germans," declared Dr. Page. "These defectives come from all countries, the most friendly of them, and we have had but one interpreter to deal with them. This year we may have four."

I desire to ask the hon. gentleman whose department covers the work referred to in this speech whether he has any knowledge of the state of affairs disclosed by this federal officer, and if so what steps are being taken or will be taken to prevent its continuance.

Hon. J. A. CALDER (Minister of Immigration): In the first place, I would doubt very much whether that statement was made by Dr. Page. In the second place, Dr. Page himself is in charge of this work and if such a condition did exist I would think one of his first duties would be to call immediate attention to it. I can say that he has not done so, and more than that, from inquiries I have made recently with reference to inspection from the physical as well as from the mental standpoint, I understand that within the last year no such condition has prevailed. I shall, however, take the very earliest opportunity to inquire whether this statement was made by Dr. Page.

PRIVILEGE—MR. LAPOINTE

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, in rising to a question of privilege I desire to quote from the report of a meeting held at Marysville, New Brunswick, as published in the Fredericton Gleaner of Saturday, May 14, 1921. At that meeting the Minister of Labour, Senator Robertson, is reported to have used the following words:

> Unfortunately, however, Mr. King would not be able to put his labour views into effect in Canada because 59 out of 72, or a total of 70 per cent of his following in the House of Commons were from Quebec and only a few weeks ago Mr. Ernest Lapointe, member for Quebec East, had definitely put forward the policy of the Quebec Liberals as favourable to the National Catholic Union, which divides labour along sectarian lines, and which was most undesirable as it did not make for national unity.

Mr. Speaker, this statement is wholly untrue and is a wilful misrepresentation of the facts. As to the purpose for which it was made, it is so obvious that I need not qualify it.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: May I ask my hon. friend if he has any authority for the authenticity of that statement other than the newspaper report?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Except that this report is in the Fredericton Gleaner, which is a good newspaper favourable to the Government in the Maritime Provinces.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: My hon. friend has no certainty of its authenticity other than that?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Only that this paper reports it.

CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. P. F. CASGRAIN (Charlevoix-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, in to-day's Montreal Gazette I see an article headed as follows:

> Asks Suspension of Scott Act. No answer to Quebec's Request has been received from Ottawa.

The article says:

> In the meantime the business of the city is suffering from the prevailing conditions, that could be easily corrected by the Federal Government consenting temporarily to suspend the Canada Temperance Act.

I would like to know what the Government intends to do in regard to this matter.

Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice): The statement in the newspaper that the condition could easily be remedied by the Dominion Government is inexact. In that particular matter the law does not allow any action by the Governor-in-Council looking to the suspension of the Scott Act on a petition such as has been made unless it be found that the provincial law with regard to liquor is as restrictive as the Scott Act. If there be any difficulty in the way of the suspension it would result from the fact that the present Quebec legislation would be found to be not as restrictive as the Scott Act. The question is receiving careful consideration.

THE BUDGET

The House resumed from Wednesday, May 18, the debate on the motion of Hon. Sir Henry Drayton (Minister of Finance), that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Ways and Means, and the proposed amendment thereto of Hon. W. S. Fielding.

Mr. DONALD SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): Mr. Speaker, the Budget speech of the Minister of Finance is always looked forward to as one of the most important if not the most important feature of a session. This occasion, I feel sure, is no exception to the rule. On the contrary, having regard to the stupendous difficulties with which we are confronted—largely the after-effects of a great and prolonged war which has left its mark on almost every one of the great nations—conditions have been very much disturbed, and we have cause to feel grateful and to congratulate ourselves that the Minister of Finance has been able to present a Budget which shows that there is a substantial balance on the right side of the ledger for the past year.

I shall not attempt to follow the speeches that have been made by those who have immediately preceded me. After a debate as prolonged as this one has been, continuing as it has for nearly two weeks, there must of necessity be a great deal of repetition, and nothing can be gained by going over the ground which has been pretty well covered by previous speakers. I hope, therefore, that those who have immediately preceded me will not feel that in not paying particular attention to what they have had to say I have overlooked the arguments which they have presented to the House. I understand that the leader of the official Opposition is going to speak this afternoon. I shall, therefore, be as brief as possible in order to give him full opportunity to deal with the questions to which he has undoubtedly given very close attention, more so than would be possible in the case of an ordinary private member.

There is no getting away from the fact that we have tremendous difficulties ahead of us. It is only natural that that should be the case; every country is facing difficulties of a similar nature. Even our great neighbour to the south of us is apparently suffering in that respect to a much greater degree than we are, and we, in turn, are very much affected as a result of conditions prevailing in that country. The Government of that country have very recently passed and are about to put into effect tariff legislation which is bound to affect us very seriously. We should, insofar as is possible, be guided by the experience through which other nations and peoples have passed, and also by the experience which we have had ourselves. There are in this chamber hon. members who can recall the time when we had a very satisfactory commercial treaty arrangement with our neighbours to the south, but that treaty was terminated by them after having been in effect for some ten or twelve years. We had developed between the two countries channels of trade that were suddenly severed; we were thrown upon our own resources at that time and we had to go out and open new channels of trade. A somewhat similar condition of affairs confronts us at the present time, and we have also to face the fact that the deflation in the value of the dollar has seriously affected us in our dealings with them.

The condition of our domestic affairs at present is such that we see the folly of the course pursued by this country for many years past in regard to railway construction. I am not going to attach all the blame to any particular party; but it is quite apparent to everyone that the very unsatisfactory condition of our transportation facilities to-day is largely attributable to the desire of the Liberal party to obtain a prestige which good business methods would not justify, and the inevitable result has come about. We have in this country transcontinental railways which the Government have been compelled to take over and to operate. Very recently, and at the same time there has gone into effect a very substantial increase in the freight and passenger rates on the railways of this country. To my mind, no one thing has had such a tendency to cause the present feeling of lack of confidence and inability to do business as the increase in railway rates in Canada, and the Government should take immediate steps to see that a reduction in that respect is brought about. I am satisfied, from close observation, that the increase has not resulted in any gain to the railway corporations of this country. On the contrary, tariff has fallen off to such a degree that unless something is done quickly, we shall be in a very difficult position before the next winter comes upon us, and it is hard to foresee what may be the result. I merely refer to this matter at this time, as I believe that it is the one outstanding question above all others that ought to be attended to immediately as it directly affects the people of this country at present as nothing else does.

I am referring particularly to those who engaged in what is known as industrial enterprise and in agricultural pursuits. Under the present condition of affairs, practically all the profits, if there were any some time ago, are now turned over to the railways, and the result of this is that there is a tendency to slacken up and not to do anything but wait for some change to take place. It is necessary that the people of Canada should obtain a confidence that they have not to-day. It is necessary and essential that we should take stock of ourselves and of our resources, in order to meet the difficulties with which we are confronted at the present time. Even more important than that is the fact that we should face our difficulties as a united people with a determination to overcome them and to see that they are overcome quickly. If we do not do so, you may rest assured that our difficulties will be prolonged, and that the prosperity which the resources of this country justly warrant us in believing will be ours in the future will be considerably delayed.

There is before the House an amendment moved by the hon. member who represents the constituency of Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), who was for many years Minister of Finance under the Government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. It is not necessary for me to refer to the amendment moved by the hon. member further than to state that he has been in the habit, for several years past, of moving amendments along similar lines. I would imagine that an hon. member, with the experience he has had, would endeavour to place before the House something that would be of a constructive nature and that would be helpful in suggesting methods of overcoming our difficulties. When you read the amendment moved by the hon. member, you can come to no other conclusion than that he was anxious to divide the House on a question that would not commit the party, with which he is now affiliated, to any particular policy. The same thing happened a year ago and also two years ago. A year ago an hon. member now sitting opposite, the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark), stated that he would have been much better pleased with the amendment which had been moved by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's, if it had contained a little more milk and a little less water, and had not been such an apparent attempt to divide the House on a question which meant nothing.

I stated a few moments ago that it was necessary that we should take stock of ourselves and of our resources. Under our system of government, a system that has been worked out and evolved through centuries by the genius of the best minds of the people of the British Empire, a system known as the party system of government, we are supposed to have a keen and alert Opposition who are carefully watching the Administration to see that nothing is done that will be to the disadvantage of the country, and to ensure that the Government will be careful and guarded in everything which they do. I believe that system has been adopted by practically every progressive country in the world. It is not something new, but it is something that has been evolved through the experience of centuries, and that has stood the test of time. Very recently we find that there is a tendency on the part of some people to discard the old system, to throw it into the discard and to evolve something new that will be much superior to it. They say: We will divide the people of this country into classes; we will do away with the old party system, and we will have a group system of government. This, Mr. Speaker, is advocated by quite a number of people, and I think it is well for us to consider what motive they have in their minds when they advocate such a policy. It has been advocated here in this House, and in several of the provinces; I believe that it developed out of conditions which prevail owing to the affect of the war. It is undoubtedly true that during the war a propaganda was carried on throughout the world that has had a tremendous effect on the minds of the people of all countries, and if I were asked to place my finger on what I consider to be the greatest handicap under which we are now labouring, and the one thing above all others to which many of our difficulties are due, I would say that it was organization; I believe that organization is the greatest curse that we have to-day—that is, the organization of people into sections and into bodies with a view to promoting their own selfish interests regardless of the effect such action may have on the great mass of the people who are not so organized. The result of this organization is that the unorganized people are almost forced to follow the same course in self-defense. As a result of these organizations, the Government is handicapped and the people are divided. Under the old system that has been in vogue in the British Empire for centuries men who were elected to represent the people in Parliament felt that they represented not only the people of the constituency which returned them to Parliament, but the people of the whole country. Is that the condition to-day? Is that the condition that would prevail under this new system of class consciousness that is being advocated and developed?

A few days ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Meighen) delivered an address in this House, and with his keen analytical mind he endeavoured to place clearly before the House and the country some of the things that are in evidence at the present time. I was somewhat surprised to hear the leader of the group which terms itself the National Progressive party refer to that speech of the Prime Minister as a "cheap political vaudeville" effort; I think those were the words he used. Now when the leader of a group in this House makes a statement of that kind with regard to the Prime Minister of this country, I think he can take no exception if we ask ourselves what a vaudeville exhibition means? My idea was that it was a variety entertainment. The leader of the Progressive party, who so characterized the Prime Minister's speech, was returned as a member of this Government. At the last general election, he was taken into the Government, and then went to the constituency of Marquette and was returned as a supporter of and a member of the present Government. To-day he is in opposition to the Government and is taking a stand by which he hopes to secure a following in the country and to discredit the Government of which he was formerly a member. Now my idea of the constitutional practice in the past was that when a minister, or a member of Parliament, differed with the Government of which he was a member, and which he had been elected to support, he went back to the people who had elected him, explained his position, and handed in his resignation to the people from whom he had received a mandate to represent them in Parliament and support the Government. Did the leader of the National Progressive party do that? Is this another new trail he is attempting to blaze in defiance of past precedents? He is going to create precedents, and apparently this is one of them—that the people of the constituency of Marquette do not count when he wishes to follow his own sweet will.

I do not like to question the motives of any man, but when an hon. member sitting in opposition to the Government of which I am a supporter makes such a statement as was made by the leader of the Progressive party, I feel I am justified in referring to the movements of that hon. member since he has been a member of Parliament. I shall not go back further than a month beyond that time. Let us see what has been the record of the hon. member who charges the leader of the Government with putting on "cheap political vaudeville" in this House.

He has for a number of years past been the president of a corporation in Western Canada, known as the Grain Growers' Grain Company. On September 1, 1917, the Grain Growers' Company amalgamated with the Alberta Elevator Company and formed the present United Grain Growers, Limited. On October 12, following the president of the amalgamated company, Mr. Crerar, was sworn in as a member of the Government. One month after the amalgamation of these two big corporations took place he took his seat as a member of the Government in this House, at the same time retaining his position as president of the United Grain Growers, Limited. He professes to see in existence in this country conditions of government which very seriously affect the farmers of this Dominion and he considers himself a Moses who has been called to deliver the farmers of this conutry from the oppression under which they have been labouring in the past. That is his stock-in-trade argument in the most of the speeches he has made in by-elections in which he has taken part.

Let us follow the hon. gentleman's career while he was a member of the Government for about one and a half years. Let us review a few of the important matters that became legislation on his recommendation as Minister of Agriculture, and which very seriously affected those engaged in agriculture in Canada. On October 12, he became a member of the Government, and about two weeks afterwards, on October 25, after he had become accustomed to the official harness, he had developed to such an extent that he felt he would be able to do something for the poor down-trodden farmer, and as a result of the sleepless nights which he had devoted to agricultural interests, he evolved a policy of granting a license to certain people. They would have to come to the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar), president of the United Grain Growers, Ltd., and Minister of Agriculture for Canada, in order to get the license to do business. He granted a license to two of the large packing companies of this country. You have heard a great deal about the exorbitant profits made by the packing houses of Canada, but what do you suppose this license permitted them to do? It permitted them, notwithstanding the fact that for years past, in fact, so long as anyone here can remember, the product covered by the license had been surrounded with municipal, provincial, and federal regulations to ensure its purity and to establish a standard which commanded attention throughout the world—it permitted them, I say, to adulterate that product. By reason of the act for which he was responsible, as a result of the recommendation which he placed before the Government, and which became law, with his approval, there was granted to the packing companies of the country the right, through this license, to adulterate butter and place it on the markets of the country, this right being denied to the manufacturers of butter. This was done, and still continues to be done as a result of the efforts of the hon. member who leads the National Progressive party to-day.

The hon. member developed rapidly, and his next move was made in November, 1917, the following month. He devised another brand-new scheme, something that had never been done before. As Minister of Agriculture he entered into a contract with the terminal elevator companies for the purchase of all recleaned screenings at $35 per ton, a price they had never before enjoyed, and one that was very satisfactory to them. According to the Auditor General's Report, for 1920, there has been paid out, in connection with this transaction during the two years for which he had contracted, the sum of $436,846.77, and from the sale of this commodity that he had purchased, there was received $288,165.63. I understand that the matter is not yet closed and that it is impossible to know, at the present time, what the condition of affairs is and the deficit may exceed the amount indicated. There is, however, one thing which is quite apparent to the farmers of the country, and that is that he was instrumental in having disposed of to them and placed on their farms, as a result of extensive advertising, noxious weeds to an extent they had never dreamed they were purchasing. Carloads of this stuff were returned to the Department of Agriculture because of the weed contents, and they absolutely refused to accept it, and as a result there is a deficit in the department to-day of $148,681.14, according to the Auditor General. And the matter is not yet cleared up. Yes, Sir, he makes a great ado in his election campaigns, as he did in the constituency of East Elgin a short time ago, about no one being able to connect him with the sale of those screenings, though he cannot deny that they were sold by his company to the parties from whom the Government bought them while he was minister. I happened to go into the constituency of East Elgin, which immediately adjoins my own. I arrived there on the very day when the hon. member for Marquette arrived. He was met at the station as I got off the train. Evidently he did not see me. He was taken to Port Burwell, where he delivered an address; and one of the first things he referred to, according to the press reports of his speech, was the criticism to which he was being subjected by myself in that campaign. He said that members of Parliament were as thick in the constituency as Jew peddlers. I met two other members of the House from a nearby constituency when I was there, and I can assure you there was no lack of outside support for the candidate whom the hon. gentleman was assisting. He referred to what I was stating in this campaign, and the criticisms I was making with regard to his policy before I even spoke in the constituency. Now, Sir, I criticised his policy and his administration in this House at the last session, and while the hon. member does not deny my statements in the House, he goes out up and down the back concessions and the small places, where he thinks he will be able to get away with it, and contradicts what I stated in the House. The hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. McDermand), knows full well that one of the most effective arguments which were made use of by his supporters in that campaign was this very matter to which I am referring. One of the dealers in mill feeds in the town of Aylmer canvassed the constituency and this was his whole argument why they should vote against the Government, and the thing they pointed to more than all others is the adulteration of mill feeds that had taken place and for which the Government was responsible yet did not intimate that the hon. member for Marquette was responsible. I say that the hon. member for Marquette, the president of the Grain Growers' Grain Company, Limited, was the man above all others who is responsible for this, because it was on his recommendation that this thing went into effect.

Mr. REID (Mackenzie): Hear, hear; it was very successful.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes, it was very successful, according to the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Reid) who is also a director of the United Grain Growers' Company. They were very successful, he says. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that his general manager, Mr. Rice-Jones, before a committee of this House, declared, as the leader of the Progressive party afterwards declared in Elgin, that you could not connect his company with the sale of screenings to the Government.

Mr. REID (Mackenzie): Hear, hear.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes, "hear, hear." But what did the general manager state further? He said he thought they had sold screenings to the Grand Trunk Pacific Elevator Company, and agreed to furnish the committee with the names of the purchasers of their screenings, but did not do so. Well, let us see what the Grand Trunk Pacific Elevator Company got out of the transaction. They sold 2,514 tons, 570 pounds, for which they received the sum of $87,990. There were other companies from whom the hon. member from Marquette purchased, but this was the largest transaction; there was more purchased from this company than from any other. I notice that there was another company, the Saskatchewan Co-operative Elevator Company, who made the next largest sale of 1,616 tons, 1,280 pounds, for which they received $56,000. With this company, I understand the hon. member for Maple Creek (Mr. Maharg) is closely connected. These are a few of the items which go to make up the deficit in connection with this matter, these two companies receiving $144,550 of the amount.

There are a number of other matters by means of which the hon. member is supposed to have "assisted" the farmers of this country. On December 3—the following month—he fathered another measure, the result of which has been the pollution of the mill feeds of the country, to say nothing of its distribution of noxious weed seeds to a greater extent than any other Minister of Agriculture has been responsible for during his term of office. In 1911, it was not permitted to have vital, noxious weeds in mill feeds. This was brought about by the enactment by Order in Council of what is known as section 17 of the Grain Standards regulations. The effect of this enabled the millers of the country—and they were here yesterday before the Agricultural Committee—to adulterate mill feeds to an extent that the live stock industries of Canada have suffered a blow such as they never experienced from any other source. This was the result of legislation passed on the recommendation of the president of the United Grain Growers, Limited, who at the time was also Minister of Agriculture, and also a member of this Government and in the pay of both. And this is the Moses who was going to lead the farmers of Canada into the promised land! A little later, September 30, 1918, it became necessary to secure butter for our soldiers serving at the front, and how was it done? The butter that was being manufactured by the dairymen of Canada was commandeered by the Government on the recommendation of the hon. member who now poses as the leader of the farmers of Canada. Somewhat similar action was taken by the Government of the United States, but what did they do? They commandeered the butter which was being held in cold storage. This Government reversed that procedure, and commandeered at a low price the butter that was being manufactured, while at the same time there was in Canadian cold storage warehouses 27,091,254 pounds; and these people, the packing companies, who had been licensed by him to adulterate butter had 3,622,800 pounds in cold storage—butter which my hon. friend had given them permission to adulterate with baser materials to be placed on the markets of this country. This is another of the great and wonderful achievements of the hon. gentleman while he was a member of the Government. The result of these proceedings was that our butter and cheese began to go across the line where the price was much higher than it was in this country. A stop had to be put to that, and accordingly an embargo was imposed on the exportation of dairy products from Canada on my hon. friend's recommendation. Now, let us see what he had to say about the adulteration of butter when the Oleomargarine Bill came before the House in 1918, when a motion was moved to give it the six months' hoist. He said:

> The hon. gentleman who has moved the amendment, which, if passed, will destroy the Bill before the House, and those who support him, have at least the merit of consistency in the position they are taking. I have gathered from the remarks of the hon. gentleman in this Chamber and elsewhere that he believes in the principle of protection; that he believes in imposing customs tariffs on the implements and equipment that farmers, and particularly the dairy farmers, require in their industry. Consequently, in taking the position that the dairy farmer should be protected in the sale of his butter, my hon. friend is consistent. For the same reason I am consistent in opposing the resolution that my hon. friend has moved.

That was the attitude of the hon. member for Marquette during the time he was a member of the Government.

Now one proposal in the policy of the party which the hon. gentleman is leading to-day is that all foodstuffs should be placed on the free list. What happened during the month of March last? There was imported into this country from the United States dairy products to the amount of 1,207,741 pounds, of which 752,726 pounds were butter and 324,672 pounds oleomargarine. At that very time an effort was being made to export the dairy products of Canada, and to find markets for them, in about twenty different foreign countries. Yet the hon. member takes the ground; I am going to permit these foreign products to come in absolutely free of duty. We have a small protective duty on butter of 4 cents a pound. And it must be remembered that this is entirely different from an ad valorem duty such as is imposed on most other articles of commerce. When the price of butter was 33⅓ cents a pound, that duty meant a protection of about 12 per cent, but when the price was 66⅔ cents it dropped to 6 per cent. What was the result of the heavy importations from the United States during March. That butter declined in price during one week to the extent of 25 cents per pound, and the market has become absolutely demoralized. The price of cheese has also fallen in proportion, and to-day the outlook for the dairy products of Canada is as dark and unsatisfactory as we have had to face for many years.

The hon. member for Marquette saw fit to leave the Government shortly after he had succeeded in placing on the statute books of this country some of the "progressive" legislation to which I have just alluded. In September, 1918, he had been doing so well that the United Grain Growers' Limited, the company of which he was president, decided to increase his salary from $10,000 to $15,000 a year, as a mark of their appreciation of the valuable services which he had been rendering. On June 6, 1919, the hon. member decided to resign his seat in the Government, and I am going to read the reason he advanced for taking that course. On June 4, 1919, he sent a letter to his leader—the man who had been labouring hard during all the years of the war and who had eventually succeeded in forming a Union Government representing all the political parties in this country—which reads as follows:

4 p.m.

My dear Sir Robert,

The Government, in its consideration of the Budget to be placed before Parliament to-morrow, has reached, I take it, definite and final conclusions as to the form it will take. As you are aware, I am not in accord with it and therefore cannot support it, either in the House or in the country. Having reached this decision, there is only one course for me to follow, and I therefore tender you herewith my resignation as a member of the Government. The reason for my decision shall be given more fully when the subject is under discussion in the House.

In view of the fact that the military business of the war, through demobilization, is not yet completed, permit me to say that only strong conviction upon this issue, reached after earnest consideration impels me to take this course.

I cannot refrain from expressing my appreciation of the heavy worries and responsibilities you have so courageously faced during the war, and particularly in the last year—worries and responsibilities which I venture to say the people of Canada do not yet fully understand; and also the fine manner in which you have represented Canada overseas in the delicate and difficult negotiations preliminary to the signing of Peace.

Let me also thank you very sincerely indeed for the many courtesies and kindnesses you have shown during the past eighteen months, to one quite inexperienced in parliamentary work and in the very intricate and difficult problems of government in this country.

I am, yours truly,

T. A. CRERAR.

[Mr. Sutherland.]

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): He writes a very nice letter.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes, "a very nice letter", I hear my hon. friend say. He (Mr. Crerar) differs with his party and he resigns, mark you, the very day before the Budget was brought down—keep that fresh in your minds—and he states that he will give a fuller explanation when the matter comes up in the House, which he did later on when he stated on June 11:

I felt there was only one course for me to follow when I found myself at issue with my colleagues, and that was to tender my resignation to the Prime Minister, which I did.

And he added:

In my opinion the present Budget is a protectionist Budget. I think there is no disguising that fact.

That was the statement of the hon. member a few days after the Budget was brought down. Well, what did the Budget contain? Remember he had no mandate from his constitutents to demand any tariff concessions when he was elected to this House. But in deference to the requests that had been made by people from Western Canada a reduction of about 12½ per cent was made in the tariff on most of the articles which he contends should be placed on the free list. He said:

This is a protectionist Budget.

That being so he could not approve of it, and consequently felt that it was necessary for him to resign his seat in the Government.

If there were any members of that Government, Mr. Speaker, who would have been justified in sending in their resignations that time they were those who advocated a protectionist policy for this country, because it had been departed from in that regard to a greater degree than had been the case since the National Policy was adopted in 1878. The hon. member was reproved by the hon. member for Durham (Mr. Rowell), who was then a member of the Government, and who pointed out that these concessions had been granted in deference to the desire of some hon. members from Western Canada. Even then there were differences of opinion among some of his (Mr. Crerar's) supporters, particularly his chief lieutenant (Mr. Clark, Red Deer) who is not at present in the chamber. The hon member for Red Deer on June 12, the day following, states:

I cannot quite agree with my hon. friend from Marquette—and this is the only disagreement I shall have with him—in describing the Budget as a protectionist Budget. I think a fairer thing would be to define it—and I think history will so define it,—as a Budget tending towards free trade.

It was the opinion of the hon. member for Red Deer, that it was "a Budget tending towards free trade." But the president of the United Grain Growers' Company, Limited, says that it is a protectionist Budget, and consequently he cannot stay in the Government any longer.

Well, Sir, I am unable to understand what actuated the hon. member, but on June 5, when the Budget was brought down, the general manager of the company of which the hon. member was president, was subpœnaed to testify before a committee of this House, and on June 27, in evidence under oath he made the statement, in answer to a question put to him by a member of the committee as to whether his company, which had been buying large quantities of agricultural implements, would not stand to lose very heavily by virtue of having those implements in their warehouses when this very substantial reduction of 12½ per cent took place:

Why, no. We were living in hopes of a reduction of the tariff, and we had a lot of it in bond, so we escaped the duty.

The president of the company, in the pay of the company, was a member of the Government with a full knowledge of what the Budget contained, and it is somewhat significant that his company should purchase largely and hold in bond a lot of agricultural implements, anticipating a reduction of the tariff.

Mr. CRERAR: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Assuredly.

Mr. CRERAR: Do I understand my hon. friend to state that the company with which I was connected profited from my knowledge of what the Budget contained? If that is his statement, then I wish to give it an unequivocal denial, and to state that my hon. friend is making an assertion which is absolutely contrary to fact.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not the authority for the statement which I have made. I gave the authority for it, the general manager of the company of which my hon. friend was president.

Mr. CRERAR: May I ask my hon. friend another question?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Most assuredly.

Mr. CRERAR: Does he find in the evidence of Mr. Rice-Jones before the Cost of Living Commission anything anywhere to the effect that I used the information I had of the Budget to the benefit of the company with which I was connected?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I pointed out that the Budget was brought down on the 5th day of June 1919, and that the hon. member saw fit to send in his resignation to the Prime Minister on the 4th of June, the day immediately preceding, and that his claim was that he could not remain in the Government on account of the difference he had with his colleagues with regard to the tariff, which he asserted was protectionist. The hon. member who sits on his left (Mr. Clark, Red Deer) differed with him and claimed that it was a tariff which tended towards free trade.

Mr. CRERAR: That is not the point.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Well, Sir, I have pointed out that the general manager of the company, of which the hon. member was president at the time and in the pay of, claimed that they did not suffer the loss which was pointed out they would likely suffer, by reason of the fact that they anticipated the reduction in the tariff and had this machinery purchased and in bond waiting for that reduction to go into effect.

The hon. member became quite gay the other day in speaking on this debate with reference to the Prime Minister, whom he endeavoured to answer, and he said:

Were those who sit as he says, angularly opposite, "servile tools and minions" in 1917, when at their country's call, be their judgment right or wrong, they assisted my right hon. friend and his Government when it was on the brink of ruin and in despair?

In ruin and in despair! A Government which had carried on for upwards of three years during the most difficult period in the history of this country that any Government had ever had to face. The danger at the front became even greater as the years went on, and it was necessary for us to bend all our energies to the task which lay before us. The Prime Minister of Canada, regardless of the political effect, regardless of the effect upon the party which he had led for many years and which had acquitted itself so admirably during the war, virtually scrapped that party and formed a union of both political parties to carry on. The hon. member says, what about 1917? Where were we then? Let me point out that when efforts to form a Union Government was first undertaken, several trips were made to Ottawa by gentlemen from Western Canada. It was only after it became certain that a further extension of the life of Parliament would not be granted and that the country, notwithstanding the peril with which it was confronted, was to be plunged into a general election—it was then and then only that the War-time Elections Act was passed. That Act disfranchised thousands of alien enemy birth and extraction and gave the franchise to the men who were fighting our battles for us at the front; and it provided that the 50,000 men who had given their lives for us and for our country should in some measure be represented through the granting of the franchise to women who were the wives, mothers and sisters of soldiers at the front. It was only after that Act was put through that the hon. member for Marquette joined the Government, and we have evidence that even while he was a member of the Government he was not true to the Government.

Mr. CRERAR: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to remain in my seat under the imputation that my hon. friend is throwing across the floor. I think he should either retract his statement or go further and produce evidence in support of it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Oh, I will go far enough to suit my hon. friend; he need not be alarmed about that. My authority is that of a prominent member of what is now the United Farmers of Ontario. Mr. Good, in an article which he published in the Canadian Countryman under date of December 17, 1919, pointed out the difficulties which that organization had to contend with, and pointed out also in another article that the movement had its origin through the efforts of the Provincial Government of Sir William Hearst to organize farmers' clubs with a view to co-operating to further their own interests, and that had it not been for the assistance they had received from the grain growers of the West and the frequent visits they had had from the hon. member for Marquette, they would not have been able to pull through. That is a very serious statement indeed; it has already been placed on Hansard during the session of 1920, and the hon. gentleman has taken no exception to it. Mr. Morrison, the secretary of the United Farmers of Ontario, claims that the movement in Ontario had its inception in a deputation which came to Ottawa and asked that farmers' sons should be exempt from military service. I quote from the Canadian Annual Review with reference to this delegation:

[Mr. Sutherland.]

> The Government received on May 3rd a delegation of farmers protesting against the abolition of the practical exemption of farmers' sons from conscription. On May 14th a great delegation of 5,000 farmers swept down upon the Capital and used every political and personal effort to compel a change of Government policy; They even asked and were refused permission to wait in a body upon Parliament; they came, in the main, from Ontario and Quebec—the Globe estimate being 3,000 from the former and 2,000 from the later province, with a few representatives of the Maritime Provinces and the West; they were led by the Hon. J. E. Caron, Minister of Agriculture in Quebec, L. T. Pacaud, M.P., and 14 members of the Quebec Legislature, together with Manning W. Doherty, W. A. Ames, and other leaders of the United Farmers of Ontario.

And what did Hon. Manning Doherty have to say when he was here? Referring to the promises which had been made by the Government, he said:

> We took these promises seriously. We do not believe there is sufficient justification for breaking this pledge.

And what was happening at the front at that time? Over a thousand British soldiers were being killed every day and about five thousand were being wounded and becoming casualties. It may be that Mr. Doherty was honest in his convictions at that time, but when Mr. J. J. Morrison, secretary of the United Farmers of Ontario, makes the statement quite recently, that that organization had its inception at that time, he is evidently proud of the fact. Well, if you look over the reports of some of the commanders of the military forces of the British Empire, made about that time, you will find that one great commander in the East, General Allenby, had been carrying on a successful campaign in Egypt and Palestine. He had captured the seaports, forged ahead and captured the Holy City; his troops had crossed the Jordan, reached Elsalt, and were about to form a junction with the troops of the king of the Hedjaz, and advance on to Damascus. But, what actually happened? According to General Allenby's report to the War Office dated September 18, 1918, the first week in April, the 52nd Division was withdrawn. The second week in April the 74th Division was withdrawn and hurried to the Western front, followed by 9 yeomanry regiments, 5½ siege batteries, and, later, by 10 British battalions and 5 machine-gun companies. In May, fourteen battalions of British infantry had to be withdrawn from Allenby's command and hurried to the Western front. Hon. gentlemen opposite evidently take pride in the fact that they were opposed to sending men to assist our armies on the front at that time—a time when the Commander-in-Chief of the Canadian forces sent that memorable message to Canada; "From the agony of the battlefields the prayer goes forth that the Homeland will not desert us in our hour of need and of our approaching triumph."

This was the message that was given to the people of Canada shortly before this movement had its inception, and to-day we find that this movement is linked up with the official Opposition in this House, an Opposition led by the hon. member (Mr. Mackenzie King) who will immediately follow me. I have a very vivid recollection of something that happened back in 1911. In that year the hon. member who now leads the official Opposition was a candidate in North Waterloo, and at that time during the campaign, he made a statement which did not apparently do him very much good in the election. It was a statement, however, which not many would like to have credited to them under similar circumstances. It will be recalled that, shortly before that election, the leader of the Opposition of that day (Sir Robert Borden) who afterwards became Prime Minister, was anxious that we should do something to strengthen and make more effective the navy of the British Empire. I am quoting from a Globe report of a speech delivered by the hon. member who leads the official Opposition:

> The Hon. Mr. King read extracts from Hon. Mr. Borden's speeches in the House of Commons in which the Conservative leader referred to the danger of war with Germany and urged the Government to go to Britain's aid with a dreadnought or a cash contribution.
> "Are the people of this country going to place at the head of affairs a man who will be precipitated into such a position as this, who will take from the treasury of this country and who would have taken enough money to build two dreadnoughts and send that money to England so that they could spend it as they pleased? And against what country? He was ready to spend money to build warships to fight Germany."

This is the official report of a newspaper which was representing the hon. member in his candidature in that election. A little later on he was a candidate in the general election of 1917 in a historic Liberal constituency, and he was turned down with a larger majority against him than had ever been given in favour of any Liberal in that constituency.

Mr. GORDON: They bought him out.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I hear a voice saying: "They bought him out." At any rate they did not buy him out in Peterborough where he was appealing to the people along different lines. My reason for referring to this just now is that the hon. gentleman who has just interrupted me has evidently a very excellent opinion of his ability to win elections. I have here from the Peterborough Examiner of February 5, 1921, some of his advertising during his campaign. He says:

> You know my record for the last fifteen years, and my policy has been Peterborough first. I will continue this policy in spite of the unfair and tricky tactics of political adventurers.

Mr. GORDON: Your friends.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I thought he referred to his friends opposite. Any one reading his statement would take it for granted that he was referring to the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar) and the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King).

Mr. GORDON: The voters of Peterborough did not do so.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The hon. member (Mr. Mackenzie King) states very loudly that this Government are usurpers, that they are usurping the office that he should have.

Some hon. MEMBERS:: Hear, hear.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes—that we are "usurpers" and consequently we should stand aside and give the hon. member an opportunity to form a government! What did one of his colleagues in this House have to say in regard to that in a letter that he wrote to a party in Peterborough? The following extract is from a letter received from a prominent Liberal member of Parliament, a member of the present House of Commons. I see him in the House at present, and if this is not correct, I hope he will deny it:

> I see by the press you have an election on in Peterborough—some noise, too. Five candidates in sight and one or two more coming. Too bad! The Liberals and Farmers should be ashamed of themselves. Our mutual friend Burnham is fighting the fight that they have been howling for for months, and why aren't they consistent? My idea was that Burnham and Meighen should have been allowed to settle this point as to whether the Government should bring on a general election now.

Mr. LALOR: Who said that?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: This is a letter written by a Liberal member of Parliament to Mr. W. H. Croft and by him communicated to the press. The hon. member was afraid that there would be a test as regards his claim that the Government were usurpers. I see another advertisement in the same issue of the Peterborough Examiner:

> Vote for Gordon and protect the man who believes in the protection of labour as well as industry.

This is all in the advertising of that campaign. On the night of the election, although my hon. friend (Mr. Gordon) polled about one-third of the votes, I read this despatch:

> Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, leader of the Liberal Party, to-night despatched the following telegram of congratulation to G. N. Gordon, the successful Liberal candidate:
> "The Liberal party joins me in heartiest congratulations to yourself and the Liberals of Peterborough on your splendid victory. No political contest in years has been of like significance. We may now look forward with confidence to the triumph of Liberal principles throughout the Dominion."

It did not matter although they did differ during the campaign. But there is another election in the province of Quebec, and I am going to refer to that very briefly, for two reasons. One is to show the policy that is in effect, the efforts that are being made and the object they have in view. In September, 1919, there was an election in the constituency of Hull across the river from Ottawa, and one of the members in this House is credited with having made a statement, part of which I will give. It is contained in the Ottawa Evening Journal of September 20, 1919:

> Deafening applause greeted Mr. Lucien Cannon when he went to the platform to speak. Like the other speakers, Mr. Cannon practically confined his remarks to praises of Dr. J. E. Fontaine and strong condemnation of the present Government.

A little further on I read this:

> "I have gone into the House to vindicate the rights of the French-Canadians," stated Mr. Cannon. "I do not regret in anyway the battles that I have fought and I consider that they are an incentive to greater efforts. I am not here to preach revolution, but I do say that we, having come here first, are the masters in this country. We have the right to vindicate the rights our forefathers won."

And a little further on:

> He spoke at great length of the manner in which Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King had supported Sir Wilfrid Laurier during the dark times—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Why do you not join up with your friends?

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK (Red Deer): The Prime Minister says that we have done so.

[Mr. Sutherland.]

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Reading):

> He spoke at great length of the manner in which Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King had supported Sir Wilfrid Laurier during the dark times, and he was sure that all French Canadians would give the new Liberal Chieftain the support they tendered to Laurier.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: They will, too.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I notice in the Ottawa Citizen a report of another by-election campaign that is now being carried on in the constituency of Yamaska. It says:

> Mr. Boucher said—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order, I must ask hon. gentlemen to maintain the dignity and decorum of Parliament.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The report says:

> Mr. Boucher said that there had been Liberal traitors who had left Laurier, such, for instance, as Hon. W. S. Fielding, and like L. J. Gauthier, recently.

Hon. gentlemen opposite are so kindly disposed towards each other that you may rest assured that if they were called upon to form a Government, the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) would not likely be included in it.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Will my hon. friend tell the House what Mr. Mondou said about the Prime Minister of this country?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: My hon. friend or his colleagues will have their opportunity later on. Now I want to refer to the policy that has been advocated both by the official Opposition and the opposition led by the hon. member for Marquette. Both advocate the removal of the tariff on articles of food. Both advocate that the British preference be increased to 50 per cent of the general tariff. The Farmers' party also advocate complete free trade between Canada and Great Britain within five years. Both advocate proportional representation. One of them advocates the adoption of an eight-hour day, and the other a direct tax on unimproved land values. I am not going to comment on those because I wish to say a word or two with reference to a matter on which a good deal of emphasis has been placed. I find that in the Liberal platform adopted in 1919 reference is made as follows to ocean traffic facilities:

> Adequate facilities and tonnage for ocean traffic are a vital concern to the commerce of Canada and the utter lack of foresight on the part of the Government in neglecting to see that such facilities and tonnage were provided for the immediate after-the-war period is not only humiliating to the Canadian people, but is materially impairing our export trade.

Further on I find this:

We are confronted with the lamentable situation that no adequate provision has been made for the transportation of the products of the farm, the factory and the forest to the markets of the world.

Yet hon. gentlemen opposite are loudly condemning the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the Government because ships have been built in this country. These same gentlemen in 1919 were condemning the Government for not doing what they now condemn them for doing. Is not that a consistent attitude to adopt?

I want to point out one of the things that has been accomplished by the Government's policy of building ships, and that is that we have to-day ocean rates such as we have not had for many, many years. The products of this country can be landed to-day in the markets of the world at a reasonable rate, which is something I do not remember having been the case at any time in the past.

Take, for instance, the matter that has been referred to by the Millers' Association of this country—the discrimination in the rates on flour and wheat. That discrimination was so great that it was practically impossible for the millers to ship their flour. That is now a thing of the past. Though some of our ships may be idle to-day, I contend that they have rendered a valuable and splendid service to this country in obtaining better ocean rates; we may look forward with confidence to the future if we can only get our railway transportation facilities down to a proper basis. Even if we have to tie up some of our roads in order to bring about lower railway rates, we shall have accomplished much if we succeed in reducing them.

I have spoken longer than I had intended, but I was anxious to show the motives that are in the minds of some hon. gentlemen who are so loud in their criticisms of the Prime Minister and his Government. They say: We must have the farmers represented in this House; we must have labour represented in this House. Let me point out to hon. members—and I know whereof I speak—that the Prime Minister of this country was born and grew to manhood on a farm near a small town in the county adjoining the one in which I live. In his early years he attended the school in the nearby town until he could receive no further education there, and then he went to the university. He graduated from a humble farm home in the county of Perth, and like thousands of others from Ontario he went to Western Canada. He was not long in that country before his sterling worth was recognized by the people amongst whom he had located, and soon he was elected as their representative in this House. He has been in the House now for quite a number of years. He entered Parliament as a very young man, and from the day he came here down to the present time he has been noted as one of the hardest-working members in the House. It is acknowledged by every one that he has not been called to the Premiership through pull or influence of any kind; it was through sheer outstanding ability. He is a self-made man. By burning freely of the midnight oil he had qualified himself to enter into competition, as it were, with the best intellects of this country. He outstripped them all and became Prime Minister of this country at an age younger than that of any other man that ever reached that high position. When hon. gentlemen opposite say that the farmers and labour must have representation in this House, I say to them that the farmers of this country have in the right hon. the Prime Minister the finest example of the product of a farm home that we have ever seen in this country. I say further, that labour has in the right hon. the Prime Minister one of the finest specimens of the product of hard and diligent labour that this country has ever witnessed. I say that the right hon. the Prime Minister supported the ex-Prime Minister during the years of the war and rendered him valiant service; he never deserted him. He stood by him and they carried on government, just as the right hon. the Prime Minister is endeavouring to carry on government to-day. When we find that there is an effort being made to link up all the discordant elements in this country, under the leadership of the allied Opposition, with a view to defeating the Government, I say that it is time for plain speaking in this House, and that is the reason why I am speaking as I am to-day. I am sorry that I have found it necessary to speak as long as I have done. But I do wish to emphasize again the fact that one of the leaders of the allied Opposition was a member of this Government. It is quite evident, from articles which have been published, that he intrigued with other elements that were endeavouring to establish a party in this country in opposition to the Government, and the hon. leader of the official Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), who was absent from this country during the early years of the war, hurried back to Canada when the election of 1917 was on. He entered the contest in opposition to the policy of the Government, in opposition to the cry for help that had been sent across the seas by Sir Arthur Currie from the agony of the battlefields: "We beseech you to support us." Although he opposed the offer of such help, he was chosen leader of the official Opposition, over and in place of men who had been in this House for many years, and who had not been repeatedly turned down by their electors. The hon. member (Mr. McKenzie) who sits almost immediately to his right was a leader in the House, but he was not acceptable to those who were selecting a leader at the time the hon. gentleman who now heads the official Opposition was chosen. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that we have to-day in this country, supporting this Government, very many of the best and sanest representatives of the Liberal party, men who have the best interests of the country at heart; and for that reason I say—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes, I know that some hon. members will take issue on that statement, but I declare it to be true, nevertheless. Now, we have in Canada a country that is but slightly developed, and if we are going to divide ourselves into independent sections, groups and communities, we shall not get very far. Nor shall we make that progress which we should and reach that stage of development of which this great country is capable through proper co-operation, if the great province of Quebec, with all its resources, is going to refuse to join the other provinces in the government of the country. But, however, this may be, of this be assured, that you will receive fair and decent treatment from the other provinces; and I think it is unfortunate and deeply to be regretted, after the work that was accomplished by many of Canada's great statesmen from that great province in the years gone by, that we should have a condition such as now exists in this Dominion.

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (leader of the Opposition): When Parliament assembled some three months ago, meagre as was the programme of legislation outlined, hon. members were given to understand that at least one subject of first importance would command their attention during the present session. That subject was a revision of the customs tariff. The announcement of the Government's intention with respect to this revision was no mere afterthought on the part of the ministry. It was made with all the formality and solemnity that attaches to a declaration of matured policy, conveyed to the country through the medium of the speech from the Throne by which His Excellency opens the proceedings of Parliament.

I shall not speak of the many public professions which preceded this formal announcement. They are well known to the House and to the country. One or two among the number may, however, be mentioned.

There was the declaration of Sir Thomas White, the former Minister of Finance, in his Budget speech of June 5, 1919, to the effect that a general revision of the tariff was "long over due," but, owing to the war, unavoidably overdue. It was urged that, because of the unsettled condition of international trade, still hampered by war restrictions and prohibitions and by exchange conditions, it would not be practicable to make a sound general revision of the tariff at that time. The hope, however, was expressed that within a year conditions would have become so stabilized as to permit of a general revision of the tariff. The Finance Minister urged that, preceding the revision, a thorough inquiry should be conducted by the Minister of Finance and two or more of his colleagues, and gave it as his view that this inquiry might well be commenced about the autumn of that year. It was stated that the result of such an inquiry should be "a body of information which would enable the Government to effect a general revision of the tariff fair to all parts of the community and effectually promoting the national welfare of Canada." This pronouncement served the purpose of the avoidance of any tariff revision during the session of 1919.

The autumn of 1919 came and went, but the inquiry foreshadowed for the fall of 1919 was not proceeded with. This occasioned a second official declaration. It was made, not by Sir Thomas White, but by his successor in office, my honourable friend the present Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton). It took the form of a statement issued to the public on December 15 of that year. That statement was intended to prepare the public mind for a further postponement of the day of tariff revision preliminary to the session of 1920. In that remarkable utterance, not only the time of general revision, but the time also of the inquiry which was to precede it, was further postponed. It was urged that international and economic conditions were in many respects worse than they were six months previous, or at any time during the war. Whilst this might serve as an excuse, if not as a reason, for delaying the general revision, it was evidently recognized that it would not serve with like effectiveness as a reason for abandoning the promised general inquiry which was to precede it. Accordingly the Government hit upon the rather unprecedented device of reversing the order of procedure with respect to inquiry, and instead of having the ministers confer with consumers and producers in a series of public hearings throughout the Dominion, announced its intention of having interested parties present their views and opinions in the form of written statements, which could be "systematically analyzed and classified for the purpose of making them a basis of general public inquiry to be held throughout the country."

The written statements were made to do duty for the session of 1920. Parliament was informed by my hon. friend, in his Budget speech of May 18 of that year, that though unfortunately trade and economic conditions were yet unstable, the tariff investigation had commenced, and public sittings would be held throughout Canada after prorogation. My hon. friend went further than promising the prosecution of the inquiry; he told the House that to make the inquiry thorough the Department of Finance would have the assistance of expert and other advisers, and he went on to say, "I am further of the opinion that not only should the investigation proceed, but that information should now be given of the principles and policies of the Government in the light of which effect will be given in the tariff revision to follow to the evidence and facts developed in the inquiry."

Then followed a somewhat pretentious and high-sounding enumeration of principles and policies, preceded by the declaration, "Our policy calls for a thorough revision of the tariff," and concluding with a reiteration of the affirmation that "a general revision of the Canadian tariff based upon the foregoing considerations was due." This statement of the hon. the Minister of Finance was limited only by the condition that the revision should not be undertaken "until a thorough inquiry is made to ascertain the essential facts upon which tariff provisions must necessarily be based."

That brought us to the end of the session of 1920. I shall omit for the moment reference to the somewhat remarkable, if not momentous, happening which occurred when the session ended, the disappearance in name, of the old Unionist party, and its disguised continuance under the all-embracing designation of the National Liberal and Conservative party. All I shall mention is that, as respects the tariff, the platform of the party as approved on July 1, 1920, called for a thorough revision.

Before the summer of 1920 was over, my hon. friend and certain of his colleagues, together with their experts and other advisers, entered upon the public sittings of the investigation, which was announced as having commenced when the statements of consumers and producers were called for. Across this continent, from ocean to ocean, at most of the important centres throughout the Dominion, and at great expense to the country, the Committee of the Cabinet conducted its hearings. Nothing was omitted in the way of press propaganda to have it appear that the committee was doing a great public work, and incidentally that protection was the one thing which everybody wanted. When the public hearings were over, the country was given to understand that the delay in the summoning of Parliament was due to the time required by the committee to get its information in shape for the tariff revision which was to be the main feature of the present session. Finally, on February 14, Parliament reassembled, and with the opening of Parliament came the pronouncement, in the speech from the Throne, respecting tariff revision.

I invite the attention of hon. members to the wording of the paragraph in the speech from the Throne referring to the promised tariff revision, and in particular with respect to the need for such revision.

"My advisers," says His Excellency, "are convinced of the necessity for revision of the customs tariff." There is no uncertainty there. "Conviction" and "necessity" are strong words, and both find a place in this terse and emphatic sentence. His Excellency continues: "In order to secure the most complete information, a committee has conducted an extensive and thorough inquiry." Here again are clear and emphatic words. Not only has the inquiry been conducted, but the inquiry has been extensive and thorough. The pronouncement continues: "The hearings necessary for this purpose have now been completed, and the conclusions founded thereon will be submitted to you in due course." It is unnecessary to quote further. No declaration could be clearer. It only remained for the Budget to be brought down for the House to enter upon the important work of this session.

5 p.m.

I need not remind hon. members how week after week I inquired of the Government when we might expect the Budget, nor need I remind the House of the questions asked the ministry with respect to rumours that the promised revision might not be forthcoming, and of the Government's repeated denials of all such. Patiently we waited for pronouncements of the Finance Minister, allowance being made from every quarter for the protracted delays because of the supposed magnitude of his task. What, then, was our surprise and the surprise of the country when on Monday the 9th instant, my hon. friend, in presenting his Budget to the House instead of submitting the conclusions founded upon the hearings of the committee of investigation, and outlining the measure of revision of the customs tariff promised by His Excelency in the speech from the Throne, calmly informed the House that it was "not proposed to put into effect now a general revision of the tariff schedules."

I shall not delay the House by repeating the platitudes with which my hon. friend sought to conceal this complete change of front and humiliating retreat on the part of the ministry. There was nothing in anything he said which might not be said at any time, which, in fact, has not been said over and over again with respect to every contemplated revision of the tariff. It is true that my hon. friend made allusion to some emergency legislation being enacted in the United States, and which may or may not become permanent; but since when have hon. gentlemen opposite come to believe and to affirm that Canada cannot revise her tariff independently altogether of what the United States does or proposes to do? What was the whole burden of their professed objection to the reciprocity agreement? It was that it rendered Canadian tariff conditions dependent on those of the United States. The representation was not true, but it gave expression to a point of view which is the only right and proper one, namely, that every country must regulate its own tariff in accordance with its own needs, and should be free to do so wholly irrespective of the action of any other country.

Let me point out that the fact that the Government of the United States was likely to revise its tariff, and that in a manner possibly prejudicial to Canadian trade, was well known to the Government long before the assembling of Parliament. The attitude of the Republican party towards the tariff was well known, and, as the House will recall, the return of the Republican party was assured on November 2 last. That the Government not only knew, but sought to have the Canadian public believe, that the return of the Republican party to power would mean additional barriers to trade between the two countries, is apparent from publications for which hon. gentlemen opposite are themselves directly responsible.

I hold in my hand a pamphlet published by the National Liberal and Conservative Party Publicity Bureau, entitled "What the Return of the Republican Party to Power in the United States means to Canada." It bears on the title page the following quotation from the Toronto Globe of November 3, 1920: "Canadians may be prepared for an additional barrier to trade between the countries." That pamphlet was issued during the by-election campaign in East Elgin held in November of last year, and its whole purport is to arouse the electorate to the certainty of a raising of the American tariff wall in virtue of the return of the Republican party to power. The first paragraph of the pamphlet reads as follows:

> Canadians generally, and the electors of East Elgin in particular, * * * would do well to give the most serious consideration to the result of the election in the United States on November 2nd as it affects Canada, because there is no doubt that the return of the Republican Party to power will have the most important bearing on our future trading relations with the United States.

That was in November. Subsequent events only served to confirm the predictions made.

The American Republican party was in power when the advisers of the Crown made their promise of a revision. The Fordney Bill, which subsequently became the Young Bill, was introduced in the House of Representatives early in December of 1920. It was February 14, 1921, that our Parliament reassembled, and that the speech from the Throne declared the conviction of His Excellency's advisers of the necessity for the revision of our customs tariff. If uncertainty as to American tariff legislation is a reason for delay in our much needed tariff revision it was as much a reason in the month of February as in this month of May.

As late as April 20, in answer to a question from the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, as to whether it was an accepted fact that there was not to be a general revision of the tariff, the Prime Minister replied in the negative.

In his remarks on the Budget, the Minister of Trade and Commerce led the House to believe that one of the reasons there had been no general revision of the tariff was the unfavourable state of the exchange with the United States. "The exchange situation", he said, "grows worse every day—and upon the exchange conditions, much depends in the fixation of your tariff." Now what are the facts? As between February 14, when the speech from the Throne promised revision, and May 9, when the Budget was brought down, the only change was favourable to Canada. On February 14, the rate of exchange between Canada and the United States was 14 per cent, and the value of the Canadian dollar in New York 86 cents; on May 9 exchange was at 10¼, and the value of the Canadian dollar therefore 89.75 cents.

Under these circumstances, it is useless for the Government to seek to have the country believe that it was influenced in its decision to withhold the tariff revision at the present session because of any actual or proposed action on the part of the United States. There were other and more subtle influences at work. That they can be shown to be more sinister influences as well is, I fear, unfortunately only too true.

But one of the alternatives is possible; either the Government, despite all its professions, has never had any real intention of revising the tariff; or, having such an intention, it has been frustrated in the carrying out of its intention the moment advance had been made to the point where definite action became necessary. It matters little which of these alternatives we take: the one really significant fact is apparent, the Government is not a free agent, in the matter of either intention or action. Its members in truth do not constitute the real Government of Canada to-day. In word and act, it is but the visible expression of influences and forces which dictate the policies, aye and in large measure are controlling the destinies of Canada to-day—forces and influences which constitute the real though the invisible government of this Dominion.

Were I to adopt the language of the right hon. the Prime Minister, and apply to him and his associates the terms which in his gratuitous and vituperative manner he has applied to a highly responsible and representative group of honourable members of this House, I would speak of him and his colleagues as "the servile tools and minions" of these sinister influences and forces. Let me remind my right hon. friend that people who live in glass houses should not throw stones, and that there is a passage of Scripture which says, "Judge not, that ye be not judged, for with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged, and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again."

To say that the changes being made in the American tariff are responsible for the abortive professions, the frustrated intention of the Government, is to assume an unlimited degree of gullibility on the part of the Canadian people. The failure of the Government, at this time of high living-costs, and much needed increase of production, to give any relief from burdensome taxation to either consumers or producers, is not due to any circumstances so much a matter of chance as the present emergency legislation of the United States; it is due to a deliberate and determined effort to thwart trade and to restrict competition in every direction, with the Mother Country and our sister dominions even more than with the United States, in order that a few wealthy men and their immediate friends and associates may reap still larger fortunes through obtaining, not a much-needed home market, as they would have us believe, but a monopoly of the Canadian market, in addition to markets abroad secured for them through Government action in a variety of directions and at enormous expense to the taxpayers of this country. Let me proceed to make good the truth of this assertion.

I have referred to the need for a thorough revision of the tariff as set forth in the Budget speech of my hon. friend the present Minister of Finance in May of last year, and to the demand for such a revision as set forth in the platform of the National Liberal and Conservative party as framed some six weeks later. I wish now to draw the attention of the House to a comparison of the two statements pertaining to this so-called thorough revision. The comparison lets in a flood of light; it reveals the whole situation. It is not often that a political party discloses in a manner so apparent, and shall I not add, so abhorrent, the sinister influences that frustrate its good intentions and bind and shackle its freedom of action.

In referring to the Budget speech of my hon. friend, I made mention of the pretentious and high-sounding principles and policies in the light of which it professed effect would be given, in the tariff revision, to the evidence and facts developed in the inquiry which he and his colleagues and experts and other advisers were to conduct. Those principles and policies were of course fresh in the minds of the hon. gentlemen opposite, and were before them in printed form in the pages of Hansard when, at the end of the session on the 1st of July, they met in secret conclave to disown the name of the party to which they belonged, to rechristen it as the National Liberal and Conservative party, and to draft the platform of policies and principles on which they were thereafter to stand.

That the principles and policies outlined by the Minister of Finance in his Budget speech were actually before hon. gentlemen opposite at the time of the drafting of their political platform is wholly apparent from a reading of the two pronouncements. With a single remarkable exception, to which in a moment I shall refer, the one follows the other almost literatim et verbatim. Each has its six main assertions of policy and principle, under the letters a, b, c, d, e, f; and each has the development in extenso of each of its several assertions. To all intents and purposes, with the exception mentioned, both pronouncements are the same throughout.

My hon. friend in delivering himself on the Budget had evidently two objectives in mind. He was seeking a means of avoiding any immediate revision of the tariff; and he was trying out on interested parties and the public in advance the tariff plank of the political platform which he and his friends had in mind for the secret conclave to be held at the close of the session.

Now here, Mr. Speaker, is the astounding disclosure which a comparison of these two apparently identical pronouncements reveals. To appearance, they are identical; in reality there is from the one an omission of a statement of policy and principle contained in the other, which omission is damaging, shall I not say "damning", in the extreme.

I have already alluded to the statement of guiding principles and policies being set forth in the case of each in the six main assertions which appear in the case of both, under the letters a, b, c, d, e, and f. Let me repeat, they are, with one exception, practically identical in virtually every particular. Let me read the two statements to the House.

Here is the statement of principles and policies as given by my honourable friend to the House in his Budget speech on May 18, 1920:

> Our policy calls for a thorough revision of the tariff with a view to the adoption of such reasonable measures as are necessary—(a) to assist in providing adequate revenues, (b) to stabilize legitimate industries and to encourage the establishment of new industries essential to the proper economic development of the nation—to the end that a proper and ever-increasing field of useful and remunerative employment be available for the nation's workers, (c) to develop to the fullest extent our natural resources, (d) to specially promote and increase trade with the Mother Country, the sister dominions and colonies and Crown dependencies, (e) to prevent the abuse of the tariff for the exploitation of the consumer, and, (f) to safeguard the interests of the Canadian people in the existing world struggle for commercial and industrial supremacy.

Observe, Mr. Speaker, that there are the six assertions of policy and principles, a, b, c, d, e, and f.

Now let us look at the statement of tariff policy as set forth in the official platform of the National Liberal and Conservative party. The language is the same. Observe, too, that it has its six assertions: a, b, c, d, e, and f.

> A thorough revision of the tariff with a view to the adoption of such reasonable measures as are necessary—(a) to assist in providing adequate revenues, (b) to stabilize legitimate industries, (c) to encourage the establishment of new industries essential to the economic development of the nation, (d) to develop to the fullest extent our natural resources, (e) to prevent the abuse of the tariff for the exploitation of the consumer, and (f) to safeguard the interests of the Canadian people in the existing world struggle for commercial and industrial supremacy.

Do you observe any difference, Mr. Speaker? To all appearances they are the same; they begin and end the same.

(a) in the case of each is "to assist in providing adequate revenues."

(f) in the case of each is, "to safeguard the interests of the Canadian people in the existing world struggle for commercial and industrial supremacy."

(e) in the case of each is the same; it is "to prevent the abuse of the tariff for the exploitation of the consumer."

(b) in the case of each begins "to stabilize legitimate industries;" but here a slight change occurs: (b) in the case of the speech of my hon. friend continues: "and to encourage the establishment of new industries essential to the proper economic development of the nation." In the case of the political platform of the National Liberal and Conservative party, this part of (b) is made a separate proposition; it is not set forth as a part of (b), but appears as (c). Why is that? It is because, between the time of the speech of my hon. friend on May 18 and the holding of the secret conclave on July 1, it had been found necessary, at the instance of the influences which control the Government, to drop something from the pronouncement of my hon. friend and, if possible, to conceal the omission.

Well, let us see what policy or principle it was that it was found necessary to drop when the party platform was framed. It was not the next proposition (c) to develop to the fullest extent our natural resources; that has become (d) in the party platform. That, Mr. Speaker, completes the slate so far as the statement of policies and principles in the party platform is concerned; a, b, c, d, e and f are now complete. The division of (b) in my hon. friend's speech into (b) and (c) of the party platform, and the placing of (e) of my hon. friend's speech under (d) in the party platform, made possible the squeezing out altogether from the platform of the party of (d) as given to this House and to the country in the Budget speech of my hon. friend.

Well, Mr. Speaker, what is (d)? What is the policy of the Government as set forth in the Budget speech of the Minister of Finance in May, 1920, which it was found necessary to delete from the platform of the party as framed some six weeks later? If it has passed unobserved, the House and the country will be astounded, I think, when I read it. Here it is, Mr. Speaker:

> To specially promote and increase trade with the Mother Country, the sister dominions and colonies and crown dependencies.

Let me read that again, and read it along with the context:

> Our policy calls for a thorough revision of the tariff with a view to the adoption of such reasonable measures—

Mark the words, Mr. Speaker, "reasonable measures":

> —as are necessary to specially promote and increase trade with the mother country, the sister dominions and colonies and crown dependencies.

Would you have believed it, Mr. Speaker—these words stricken out? And that by the hon. gentlemen who call themselves Empire-builders, that by the party that claims to have arrogated to its ranks all the patriots; that parades and boasts of its loyalty; that talks of a community of interest, of keeping the Empire united, of the family of nations comprising the British Commonwealth? And as if this were not enough—oh, unkindest cut of all—to choose for the occasion of thus stabbing at the heart our inter-Imperial trade, July 1, the birthday of our Dominion, the anniversary of the day on which the Mother Country gave us our status as a self-governing Dominion, the beginning of our nationhood within the British Empire—was there ever like ingratitude or baser treachery?

Why has this policy, this policy of promoting and increasing trade with the Mother Country, the sister Dominions and colonies, been erased and effaced from the platform of hon. gentlemen opposite? It is surely not because of the sacrifices of life and wealth shared in common in the Great War; it is surely not from motives of loyalty or affection towards the Mother Country; it cannot be from a desire to unite, to bind and to consolidate the different parts of the British Empire; nor is it from any concern for the great body of consumers in our own country. The Prime Minister has given us the answer. He knows. He ought to know. It is due to the dictation of the few wealthy men whose powerful interests are alone responsible for his being where he is to-day, the interests that demand what he calls "protection," that are not satisfied with the adoption of such reasonable measures of tariff revision as are necessary "to assist in providing adequate revenue," "to stabilize legitimate industries," "to encourage the establishment of new industries," "to develop the natural resources," "to prevent the exploitation of the consumer," and "to safeguard the interests of the Canadian people in the existing world struggle for commercial and industrial supremacy," but who, for their own selfish ends and personal aggrandisement, wish to control and monopolize the trade of this Dominion and are prepared, in that endeavour, to sacrifice every obligation of honour, of loyalty, and of human need.

In the light of this disclosure, what becomes of the hypocritical pretension that emergency changes in the United States tariff are responsible for the absence of any tariff revision in accordance with the professed intentions of hon. gentlemen opposite?

Hon. members will do well to reflect upon the significance of this episode. It gives the key to all the rest. It explains the usurpation and maintenance of power by the right hon. the Prime Minister, against all constitutional right and the will of the electorate of this country. It explains the somewhat frantic and certainly undignified appeals made by my right hon. friend whenever he enters upon his advocacy of protection. It should let the country understand why we on this side of the House, however different the shades of opinion or however wide the divergences of view that may exist between us, are at all events one in our inability, to use the words of the amendment which is before the House, to concur in the declarations by the Government that the tariff should be based on the principle of protection. They talk of protection; it is not protection they want, but monopoly.

Mr. Speaker, is more needed to explain the sinister forces and influences that are dictating the policies, and for the time being controlling the destinies, of this Dominion? I have referred to their combined power as constituting the real, albeit an invisible, government, compared with which the Government we see personified in hon. gentlemen opposite is but as form and shadow. Perhaps the time would be well spent if we paused for a moment to look a little more penetratingly behind the shadow, and discern what we can of the reality. A moment's reflection will enable us to see how this organized power came into being, and how menacing its existence is to the social and industrial well-being of our country.

I need not remind the House that for four years the energies of this country, the energies of its Government, of its industries, as well as of its people, were strained to the one herculean task, the winning of the war. It was inevitable that during that period there should be the closest kind of association between certain of the financial, manufacturing, transportation, and distributing interests, and between these several interests and the Government and its members. That association between the more active and prominent members of both groups was uninterrupted, and indeed necessarily intimate, over the greater part of the entire period. They were linked the one to the other by the most powerful of bonds. There was the bond of disinterested public service at the moment of the greatest crisis in the world's affairs, and there was the bond, wholly different in character it is true, but to some individuals even more powerful, of personal and private self-interest at a moment of opportunity such as has presented itself but once in the history of this world.

During those four years, a sum amounting to something like two billions of dollars was loaned by the country to the Government, and under Government direction was disbursed among these financial, manufacturing, transportation, and distributing interests. The Government was permitted a free hand; in the loans thus subscribed, the sacrifices present or future were never questioned; in the spending of these vast sums little or no check was exercised by Parliament; Orders-in-Council, at the caprice of the ministry were permitted to replace legislative enactments of both Houses of Parliament. It was an era of unparalleled opportunity both for the exercise of autocratic power and for the bestowal of favours. Strange indeed it would be had not the closest kind of relationship been formed between the controlling factors on both sides. That they were so formed, every Canadian citizen is well aware.

With the termination of the war and the demobilization of the military forces, this era of unlimited expenditures and unparalleled contracting came to an end. Not, however, the association between the financial, manufacturing, transportation, and distributing interests, among themselves, or with the Government. In considerable measure, it is true the compelling force of the bonds which had united these interests with the Government were lessened. Hon. members of the Government who read their obligation to the country in terms of disinterested public service, recalling the pledges on which the Government was returned to power, one by one retired from the ministry. Others of their colleagues, for reasons best known to themselves, continued in office. Similarly, it is to be presumed, among the financial, manufacturing, transportation, and distributing interests, were numbers of influential and prominent men who were quick to sever the intimacy of the relations formed with members of the Government during the period of stress and strain, and to give their thought to their particular business interests regardless altogether of Government favours or action.

Unfortunately for our Dominion, all the men of great wealth and power have not been of this class. The same self-interest which caused members of the Government to cling to office despite honourable obligation and constitutional right, has operated in like manner to cause certain members of the financial, manufacturing, transportation, and distributing interests to continue to look to Government for special favours and special privilege, and in return to support the administration by direct methods as well as indirect in its retention of power against the will of the people as a whole. Thus we have come to have in Canada, on the one hand, a Prime Minister and a ministry to whom usurpation of office and the exercise of autocratic methods in Government belong as a sort of natural right, and, on the other, a small circle, a sort of little oligarchy of interwoven financial, manufacturing, transportation and distributing interests, prepared, in return for a continuation of favour and special privilege, to use their wealth and influence to keep the Administration in power, and thereby constituting in a very true sense the real though invisible Government of this country.

We have, in other words, political power united with plutocracy in a bond of self-interest, the former the visible symbol of authority, the latter the governing and directing force in the State. We have a Government democratic in form, but autocratic in behaviour, and back of that Government, and vastly superior to it in many respects, we have the privileged coterie of wealthy and influential men, connected with certain of the financial, manufacturing, transportation, and distributing interests mentioned, who are not satisfied with sharing in the control of industry and the State, but wish to dominate both. They are for the time being able to exercise this domination at their own free will, for the Administration owes its existence to their dictation and its continuance in office to the powerful influence which in a multitude of directions they are able to exert. There is the real situation with which this country is faced at the present time. That is the danger to Canada at the moment, not that her Government is a Government carried on in the interest of the people as a whole, but rather that we have on the one side the selfish groups united together working for their joint ambitions, and, on the other, the great body of the people left to look after themselves.

This is the explanation, first of the Government's change in policy and principle respecting the promotion and increase of trade with the Mother Country and the sister Dominions in the period intervening between the Budget speech of the Minister of Finance and the secret conclave of July 1 of last year. It was part of the price paid by the Administration to these representatives of special privilege for a continuance of their support. It was not limited competition they were after; it was a monopoly of Canadian markets. Secondly, this is the explanation of the failure of the Government to revise the tariff at the present session. It was not fear of the consequences of American emergency legislation—that really was a ground for action—it was the maintenance by the favoured few of their privileged position as it has come to be in consequence of the war and conditions as they have grown out of the war. Thirdly, this is the explanation of the declaration made by the Prime Minister in the course of his lengthy speech on Friday last:

> "This Government stands for the tariff that is in existence to-day, and in any adjustment that will be made we will admit the principle of protection and we will apply it. . ."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Hon. gentlemen opposite say: Hear, hear. But protection for whom? Protection for these favoured interests, not for the great masses of the people. The invisible government has decreed that thus he must stand, and so the day of tariff revision in the interests of either producers or consumers is indefinitely postponed.

I shall not ask hon. members to accept my analysis of the situation as a last word. Did time permit, I might cite an abundance of evidence as proof of its accuracy. Fortunately we have the evidence of one who has been on the inside, one of the Government's own supporters who was permitted a peep behind the scene, in a position of exceptional opportunity, who was appointed to office by the Government itself, and who has given to the public a description of what he has seen, in the form of an official document, a State paper, may I not term it.

It was thought that a life position and a good salary would be enough for Mr. James Murdock, when he was appointed a member of the Board of Commerce, and that he might be expected to lend himself to the Government's game of pretending to be solicitous of the well-being of consumers and the public interest though all the while screening and protecting from public disclosure and public censure the few wealthy men whose business interests through close association, have become intimately interwoven and whose combined strength constitutes the power behind the throne, applying the simile for the moment to the present Administration. Fortunately, Mr. Murdock was not of the spineless and time-serving character it was hoped he would prove to be.

Having accepted nomination as a member of the board, he came at once into a specially favoured position. Indeed, strategically, he was in the best of positions; he was where he could view, on the one side, the organization of the specially favoured interests I have been describing, and, on the other, the relation thereto of hon. gentlemen opposite. Both situations he had described with perfect clearness; they are depicted in the official communication sent the Prime Minister in June of last year, and which the Government has had before it ever since. Here is the situation as respects the favoured interests.

Referring to the preliminary investigations of the Board of Commerce, and the necessity for some governmental machinery to protect the consumers and producers of the country against the kind of protection my right hon. friend has been advocating, Mr. Murdock says:

(a) Business men living together under the protection of the tariff have got to know each other so well that price-fixing agreements and arrangements are the rule, rather than the exception. The board has already on file evidence in some scores of cases of such agreements. Not all of these are reasonable or proper. It should not be left to the unfettered will of the businesses interested to fix prices on necessaries of life. . .

(b) Combines which have fastened themselves on the production and distribution of certain essential articles of food, such as canned fruits have introduced systems of merchandising which are injurious to trade and the consumer, and prevent fair competition. . . .

(c) The board has discovered that unfair and excessive profits are being taken by certain textile manufacturers, cement companies, and other large concerns. It is in the public interest that these investigations thus begun be not stopped at this point. . .

(d) There is reason to believe that sugar is not the only commodity in which speculation to the detriment of the public has taken place. . .

(e) Without a Board of Commerce the public has no organization to watch and protect its interests, while on the other side there is the most complete organization and cross-organization: Manufacturers' associations, retail associations, packers' associations and hundreds of other associations. The public, unorganized as the sands by the sea, requires a protector against the super-organization of modern business."

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Murdock speaks of the need of protection, but it is not the protection of the members of the associations he has described, but the protection of the great body of consumers that are like the sands of the seashore, without any protection whatever against what he terms the super-organization of modern business. It is the few wealthy men responsible for this super-organization of modern business depicted by Mr. Murdock who constitute the ring that controls the Government of Canada to-day, that shackles its freedom of action, and compels the Government on pain of extinction to do its bidding. It is the favoured position of these privileged few that the Government is striving in all its measures to advance and to protect.

Let us see how, in this particular, the situation appeared from the vantage ground accorded Mr. Murdock while a member of the Board of Control. Here is what he has to say of the Government's attitude as he came to know it—and let the House remember that this was a statement issued to the Prime Minister of this country by Mr. Murdock, while Mr. Murdock was still a member of the board:

I am convinced—

1. That the majority of the Cabinet of which you are the honored leader are not, and have never been, in sympathy with the provisions and intent of the Board of Commerce Act and of the Combines and Fair Prices Act.

2. That your advisers only recommended to Parliament the passage of those Acts as the result of temporary alarm incident to the Winnipeg strike and other strenuous demonstrations when the people demanded some means of controlling profiteers.

3. That as soon as the Board of Commerce Act and the Combines and Fair Prices Act were made law by the Parliament of Canada, honourable gentlemen prominent in the councils of Canada and members of your Cabinet at once began to undertake to minimize, to as great an extent as possible, what they believed to be the unnecessary and unfair provisions of these two Acts when applied to the businesses of those for whom those honourable gentlemen no doubt had first regard.

4. That the chairman appointed by your Government to the Board of Commerce was regarded by certain interests as being safe and sane in conserving to Canadian manufacturers and other large financial and business interests the generally unrestricted leeway heretofore enjoyed by such interests in the taking of profits, determined alone by the so-called market price and governed by supply and demand. . . .

Then, with special reference to the chairman, in paragraph 10:

10. That during the entire term of service in which he and I were together connected with the board . . . . nothing was done which could in any way affect the business and financial interests, which, in his judgment, should be protected from encroachments upon or interference by the Board of Commerce of Canada.

11. That the general viewpoints and desires of the former chairman were well known by various honourable members connected with your Cabinet, and especially by the Hon. Mr. Calder.

12. That many of the honourable gentlemen composing your Cabient saw in the former chairman's resignation an opportunity almost beyond their expectations to minimize the activities of the Board of Commerce, and to prepare for its demise and that several of them repeatedly undertook to thwart the board's desired activities by quiet and hidden restrictive opposition since that time.

14. That on January 28, 1920, when this board issued a declaration challenging the right of the Cabinet to interfere on behalf of the textile manufacturers in the Canadian Manufacturers' Association (they having made representations to the Government that it would cost $1,500,000 to prepare the data asked for by a questionnaire of this board, and that it would take weeks to so prepare) certain of your honourable colleagues were prepared to concede the claim made by the textile manufacturers and relieve them from the necessity of complying with the board's requests for information, and that only the public challenge to your Cabinet placed in the newspapers by the Board of Commerce prevented the textile firms from being relieved of the requests for data made by this board.

15. That later records show that the textile manufacturers had ample reason to struggle desperately to prevent the true facts from being known to the board and that if this board could have secured the assistance desired, a statement of the facts and figures disclosed, followed by an order as the results of the analysis of the statements of affairs sent to this board, would have startled and incensed the Canadian public beyond anything that has developed in recent months.

Finally, as indicating beyond shadow of doubt his view of the Government's relationship to the super-organization of business interests he has described, Mr. Murdock concludes:

In connection with your suggestion that I continue as a commissioner of the Board of Commerce until the decision of the Privy Council, I feel that the people need, and are entitled to, some results now. The light should be let in. I believe your Cabinet will devise some means to prevent the Board of Commerce from functioning, even should the Privy Council give a favorable decision. My conscience will not permit me to become a high-salaried time-server.

Could anything be clearer, Mr. Speaker? There are the specially favoured duly protected interests on the one side; the Government, their protecting and willing servants, on the other; and the whole a matter of public disclosure and now of public knowledge.

Let me say, so that my words will not be capable of misconstruction, that in making these references to certain financial, manufacturing, distributing and other business interests I am making no attack on big business as such, I am making no attack on wealth as such, I am making no attack whatever on vast organization as such, for in these days of competition between industry and industry, between locality and locality, between nation and nation, between continent and continent, large organization is absolutely necessary, and vast accumulations of wealth in particular industries are absolutely necessary if the country is to hold its own in competition. So I am making no charge against the organization of business as it is carried on to-day, nor against the men to whom this country is, indeed, vastly indebted for their skilful organization of industry and the way it is carried on. But what I wish to do is this: I wish to distinguish between those men who are prepared to share in the government of industry and in the government of the country, and those men who wish to monopolize and dictate in matters of industrial policy and the control of political affairs. You have in every country the two types. You have the men who are willing to work with their fellows and to share with their fellows, and you have others who wish to dictate, who wish to control, who wish to monopolize, and it is these latter groups that have been brought into combination through the circumstances of the country being as I have described them, and who are controlling this country at the present time. Think of a Government permitting itself to lie under the shadow of such an indictment! Mr. Murdock's charges were made on the eve of prorogation a year ago; the Government has taken no steps to free itself from all that those representations imply. Why has Mr. Murdock not beeen summoned to appear before some committee of this House and prove the charges he has made? There is one reason, and one reason only: the Government knows the charges to be true, and that any attempt at investigation will mean the letting in of more light.

Actions speak louder than words, Mr. Speaker, and we have not only the failure of the Government to defend itself against these most serious of charges, but we have also the record of this Government with respect to legislation to protect consumers and producers against the exactions of combines, monopolies, trusts, and mergers that seek to enhance prices and restrict trade unduly. We know, too, its record with respect to profiteering and profiteers.

When the Borden Administration came to power, there was on the statutes an Act to provide for the investigation of combines, monopolies, trusts, and mergers. It was known as the Combines Investigation Act, assented to on May 4, 1910. That law may not have been all that could have been wished; like other legal enactments, it was capable of amendment, but it at least afforded some protection to the public against the unrestricted acts of these combinations.

Under that Act, large powers of inquiry were given the Board of Investigation instituted thereby. The consumers were permitted to name their own member of the board; the expense of investigation was borne by the Government; heavy penalties were imposed upon combines restricting manufacture, trade, or competition. The Act gave the Governor in Council power to direct that, if it appeared to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council that, with regard to any article, there existed any combine to promote unduly the advantage of the manufacturers or dealers at the expense of the consumers, and that if it appeared to the Governor in Council that such disadvantage to the consumer was facilitated by the duties of customs, such article should be admitted into Canada free of duty or at a reduction in the duty.

This important Act was repealed by section 15 of the Combines and Fair Prices Act, passed in 1919. This Combines and Fair Prices Act was meaningless apart from the Board of Commerce Act, passed during the same year. The Acts were passed because at the time the people of Canada asked, yea, demanded that something should be done to check and pursue the profiteers. The fate of this legislation is well known. The truth respecting it has been told in the statements from Mr. Murdock which I have just read.

On February 23, Judge Robson, the chairman, resigned, admitting that he himself was not in sympathy with the Act. Then doubts arose as to the powers of the board, and the matter went to the Supreme Court of Canada, the court dividing itself on that question. In the meantime, the board issued its first report, dated May 1, 1920.

The report, amongst other things, says:

> While the present commissioners had been aware that there was close association between the various manufacturers of and dealers in commodities, your commissioners express profound surprise at the extent to which such organization has proceeded.

And further, about packing houses:

> These packing companies are beginning to exhibit a rather close association in their operations, and it would be quite undesirable to permit them to obtain in Canada anything like the impregnable position which, for a time, they had secured in the United States.

The interim report concludes with a minority report by Mr. Murdock, in which the following appears:

> My belief is that it would be very much in the public interest for the public of Canada to know something more of the reasons that prevented the Board of Commerce of Canada from performing its functions in controlling profiteering and combines against the public interest as by law intended.

Here, early in 1920, was direct information to the Government by its own board of the extensive association between various manufacturers and dealers in commodities, of the combines existing among packing companies, and of profiteering against the public interest. And yet no action was taken by the Government. Instead, the board was allowed to die, or rather, because of its exposures, was strangled by the Government. On June 16, Mr. O'Connor resigned, and a few days later, on June 25, Mr. Murdock, its sole surviving member, resigned.

Then an amazing happening occurred. Some months later, notwithstanding the loss of its entire membership, the board for some reason or another, was resurrected and was reconstituted in a sort of fictitious fashion. Members of the Civil Service were taken from their important posts of duty, and loaned to the board so as to constitute a temporary tribunal. For some little time the public tried to fathom the Government's solicitude on its behalf. It was not long, however, before they were undeceived. It soon became plain that it was not the interests of consumers the Government had at heart. It was the wealthy friends of the Government again, those belonging to one of the specially favoured of the privileged groups, this time the sugar refiners. I shall not go into the details of what took place at the time, the conversations and interviews between the refiners and members of the Government on the one hand, and members of the Government and their temporary appointees on the board on the other. Suffice it to say that, to the amazement of the entire country, the board, on October 14, issued an order fixing the price of sugar to Canadian consumers at 21 cents per pound and virtually prohibiting the importation of sugar at a moment when sugar was selling in the United States and should have been selling in Canada, at from 12 to 14 cents a pound.

After all that had been made public of the board's doings and misdoings by Commissioner Murdock, this was the last straw. Public indignation has seldom been at a higher pitch. The Government had at last to choose between its friends. In vain the sugar refiners sought to retain for the Government the support of the press, by the distribution of costly explanations paid for at advertising rates. Public clamour could not be silenced, and the Government, for once obliged to heed the voice of the people, suspended the order and allowed the board again to dissolve by permitting the temporary appointees on the board to resign. From that day to this, nothing further has been heard of the Board of Commerce; the combines in almost every branch of commerce and trade have been permitted a free hand and the consumers have been left absolutely without protection of any kind.

Little wonder is it that when Parliament assembled, the Prime Minister found it necessary to give some assurance to his followers that this intolerable situation would not be indefinitely prolonged, and that some protection would be granted the public during the course of the session Protection was promisel, and protection has been given, but it is not the protection that was asked for. More and more protection there has been for the trusts and combines, the super-organization of business, but none for the consumers.

I hold in my hand a despatch to the Montreal Gazette giving an account of the sessional programme as outlined to his supporters by the Prime Minister at the first Government caucus. It is dated Ottawa, February 18. After mentioning that the Government caucus "was informed to-day by the Prime Minister of the sessional programme and its details," it says:

> An important measure not yet before the House was indicated by the Prime Minister;

And it continues:

> "To the caucus the Prime Minister forecast legislation to control trusts and combines where the former Combines Act and the comatose Board of Commerce have failed. This legislation will probably be brought down before the Budget debate.

Hon. members opposite will be able to vouch for the accuracy of the representations contained in this despatch. But what, may I ask, has become of the promised legislation? You will observe, Mr. Speaker, no mention was made of this legislation in the speech from the Throne. That would have been too conspicuous. The friends of the Government would never have permitted that. The assurance of the Prime Minister was enough to silence agitation during the session, and once again we find the Government, with respect to its legislation on trusts and combines, just where it was with respect to promoting trade between Canada and the Mother Country and the sister Dominions, just where it was with its promises of tariff revision—absolutely fettered and manacled by its friends, the few wealthy men who are responsible for the super-organization of business which dictates the Government's policies and controls its actions.

Do you see now, Mr. Speaker, why this session has gone by, with nothing constructive in the way of legislation; why to every one in the House and in the country there appears to be something wanting, something lacking: why the word "reconstruction," of which we heard so much for a time, has virtually been dropped from the vocabulary of the ministry; why, in the two to three-hour speech of the Prime Minister a day or two ago, one will search in vain for a single expression revealing any human feeling or sympathy with the needs of the people; why, from beginning to end, it was one long plea for protection, not protection of the consumer, which is what is needed in Canada to-day, but more and more protection for these few wealthy men and the interwoven financial, manufacturing, transportation, and distributing interests with which they are associated.

Do you see also, Mr. Speaker, why it is, in the Budget which has just been presented by the Finance Minister (Sir Henry Drayton) that this year, as in former years no account whatever has been taken of profiteering; why another year has been allowed to pass without any effort whatever having been made by the Government to recover any of the war-time wealth; why, instead of the removal of any of the taxation that bears immediately upon the masses of the people, the duties upon the necessaries of life, it is the business profits taxes and the luxury taxes that have been abolished? The Prime Minister says we are all for protection. Let him have it so; but let me tell him that the protection for which we stand is the protection of the consumer against the exactions of combines, monopolies, and the super-organization of associated business, not the protection of these specially favoured organizations against the interests and well-being of the people at large.

At Six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, when the House rose at six o'clock I was speaking of the protection afforded to special interests in their actual or attempted monopoly of Canadian trade and markets. Let me now come to the bestowal of favours in another direction. Mr. Murdock has exposed the manner in which, as respects the necessaries of life, the food, the clothing, the articles required for the shelter of the people, associated businesses, with their trade agreements, combines, and monopolies, have been permitted, with the assistance of a protective tariff, and to the detriment of consumers, to reap their excessive profits through unrestrained freedom of action. Let me now direct the attention of the House to the manner in which, through the interweaving of business associations and interlocking of directorates as respects a different class of enterprises, the Government has, at great cost to the taxpayers of Canada, accorded a privileged position to another few of its wealthy friends.

The two classes of expenditure most severely criticised in this House and throughout the country to-day are the expenditures on account of the Canadian National railways and the Government merchant marine. They are the two classes of expenditure about which the representatives of the people in this Parliament have been able to obtain the least information. The public know that freight and passenger rates have been increased; they know that last year there was a deficit on the national railways amounting to $48,242,536.65; that this year there is a further deficit estimated at $70,331,734.88; and that, despite the increase of rates, the deficit estimated for the ensuing year will in all probability be in the neighbourhood of $100,000,000. They know, too, that despite repeated protests, and without due regard for either the law or customary practice, $70,000,000 has been spent on the construction of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine. They are aware that, as respects the latter, contracts were awarded by the Government without calling for tender; that the work of construction was distributed by the Government among its friends from the Atlantic to the Pacific; that in many cases the contracts had been awarded, and the work permitted to get under way before the money for the purpose had been appropriated by Parliament.

The condition, however, of which the public is not as yet fully seized is the significance of the methods devised by the Government for permitting to a few of its wealthy friends a free hand in the awarding of contracts with public moneys, and claiming for itself immunity from all responsibility to Parliament and the people for enormous outlays of public moneys in the work of construction and operation of these vast systems of transportation by land and sea.

What have hon. gentlemen opposite attempted to do in the various discussions that have taken place in regard to these enormous deficits? They have talked about the increases that have been paid to the labour on the road, and throughout this country a great deal of publicity has been given to the wages that are being paid to the workingmen. Well, the Government talk about protecting labour. Let the people's representatives in this Parliament get the facts, let us find out the truth in respect of these contracts—how they are being awarded, whom they are going to, and the prices paid, and labour will be able to take care of itself. We wish to protect labour just as much as hon. gentlemen opposite, but our methods are somewhat different. We believe the best protection that can be afforded any group of people in this country is the protection which comes from ample publicity in dealing with public affairs, not from concealment.

Talk of the super-organization of business, of the interweaving of financial, manufacturing, transportation, and distributing interests—I venture to say that never in the history of the world has a scheme been devised so well calculated to make interweaving and interlocking of private interests complete, or to permit, on so unlimited a scale, and in a manner so wholly indefensible, the use of public moneys to augment private fortunes at the expense of the state.

What is the method to which I allude? For clearness of understanding as to its significance, let me present, by way of contrast, the method that has hitherto obtained in the management, operation, and control of like enterprises by the Government of this country; the method, for example, that obtained formerly in the management of the Intercolonial railway and that obtains to-day under the Post Office Department. In both the latter instances, we have the doctrine of ministerial responsibility to Parliament for all that pertains to the management, operation, and control of a government enterprise, fully recognized and adhered to. In everything, the right to the fullest publicity is maintained. Contracts awarded are awarded in accordance with terms and conditions prescribed by law. Parliament looks to the minister, and the minister expects Parliament to look to him, for an accounting of every cent of public money expended under his direction, the names of the persons to whom the contracts have been awarded, the manner in which, and the terms on which, the awards have been made, the prices paid, and so forth and so forth. In other words, it is recognized that public moneys are being expended, that they are held in trust by the ministers of the departments concerned, and that the public is entitled to be satisfied in its mind both as to the necessity for, and the economies exercised in, the transactions pertaining thereto.

Compare this now with the methods devised by the present Administration in the expenditure of public moneys on those vast transportation systems. Both in the case of the Canadian National railway and the merchant marine, the Government has constituted boards of management. These boards are composed almost exclusively of the Government's own friends; almost without exception the gentlemen who compose these boards are associated with large industrial enterprises and businesses which are engaged in the manufacture, selling and distribution of the equipment and supplies required by these Government undertakings. In the awarding of contracts, they are given a perfectly free hand. They may award to whomever they please, in whatever quantities they please, and at whatever prices they please. That of itself one would think, where there was no personal liability, and where the moneys to meet the required payments were not coming out of the bank accounts of the parties concerned, but out of the public treasury, would be sufficient to encourage an all but unlimited degree of extravagance. But what is to be expected where, in addition to this opportunity of helping one's friends, an undertaking is given by the ministry that, no matter what the transaction, notwithstanding it is out of the taxes of the people that payments have ultimately to be made, the people's representatives in Parliament shall be denied all right of inquiry, all right of information, on the score that such right and knowledge are not in the public interest? And yet, Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the situation as it has existed for the past couple of years, and as it exists to-day. Is it any wonder there are huge expenditures and colossal deficits? The wonder of wonders would be how deficits could be avoided under such a system.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that it may not be said this is mere theorizing, let me give to the House the names of the members of the boards concerned, and the names of the companies with which these gentlemen are concerned. But, first of all, let me give a list of a few articles of commerce required in connection with the equipment and supplies of these transportation systems. It requires no understanding of human nature to believe that, unless the gentlemen who are directors of companies directly or indirectly concerned in furnishing such equipment and supplies are woefully neglectful of the business interests it is alike their duty and personal advantage to watch and further in every manner possible, the companies of which they are directors, or businesses associated with such companies, are not likely to be forgotten in the contracts awarded, and in the prices paid for the articles necessary to the equipment and supplies of these vast transportation systems.

But before I speak of the companies with which these gentlemen are connected in a business way as directors, let me refer to the classes of commodities which are likely to be required in large quantities as supplies and equipment for the Government railways and the Government merchant marine.

Iron and steel (locomotives, rails, cars, castings, couplers, bolts, bars, etc.).
Cement.
Oil; coal oil, white lead oil, boiled linseed oil.
Gasoline.
Lumber and timber, for car decking and roofing and for construction (fencing).
Paints..
Cotton and wool waste.
Uniforms for conductors and employees.
Coal.
Food of all kinds.
Ties.
Pullman and sleepers materials.
Electric materials.
Fuses.
Wheels.
Hose.
Air-brake materials.
Tie plates.
Hotel supplies.
Insurance.
Advertising.
Printing.

It requires only the mention of this list to show what enormous patronage is extended through this particular source,—a patronage running into millions of dollars; and all of it, mark you, under this arrangement is disposed of by the Government's friends just where they think best, and the people's representatives in this Parliament are denied all knowledge of where the contracts are placed. Now who are the members of the Board of Directors of the two companies? The personnel of the two directorates is the same, and is as follows:

Mr. D. B. Hanna, of Toronto.
Mr. A. J. Mitchell, of Toronto.
Mr. E. R. Wood, of Toronto.
Mr. R. Hobson, of Hamilton.
Major G. A. Bell, C.M.G., of Ottawa.
Sir Hormisdas Laporte, of Montreal.
Mr. A. F. Barnhill, K.C., D.C.L., of St. John, N.B.
Colonel Thomas Cantley, of New Glasgow, N.S.
Mr. R. T. Riley, of Winnipeg.

What are the companies with which these gentlemen are connected? Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish it distinctly understood that I make no reflection upon any of these gentlemen or their business integrity, I merely place the information before the House and let it speak for itself. This list is taken from the Annual Financial Review for June, 1920, and, by the way, it does not, I believe, begin to include the companies with which these gentlemen are connected in an indirect way, nor is it complete as regards the companies of which they are directors. Mr. D. B. Hanna, is president of the Canada Flour Mills and a director of Canada Steamship Lines, Limited; Electrical Development Company of Canada, Limited; Canada Mortgage Investment Company; British-American Assurance Company; Western Assurance Company; Canadian North Prairies Lands Company; Brazilian Traction, Light and Power Company, Limited; Rio de Janeiro Light and Power Company; Sao Paulo Light and Power Company. Mr. A. J. Mitchell is a director of the Western Canada Flour Mills. Mr. R. T. Riley is vice-president of the Union Bank of Canada and of the Great West Life Assurance Company. Mr. Robert Hobson is president of the Steel Company of Canada, Limited, and a director of the Canadian Locomotive Company, Limited; Bank of Hamilton; Tuckett Tobacco Company, Limited; North Star Oil and Refining Company; Chartered Trusts and Executor Company; British Empire Trust Company; Dominion Power and Transmission Company; Toronto General Trusts Corporation. Sir Hormisdas Laporte is a director of Credit Foncier Franco-Canadian; Société d'Administration Générale; Frontenac Breweries, Limited; La Sauvegarde Life Assurance Company. Mr. A. P. Barnhill is president of the New Brunswick Electrical Company and the Acamac Land Company, Limited, and a director of the Eastern Trusts Company; St. John Iron Works, Limited; James Pender and Company, Limited; Telegraph Publishing Company; Fenton Land and Building Company; Westfield Land Company; Times Publishing Company. Colonel Thomas Cantley is a director of Eastern Car Company, Limited; Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company, Limited; Brandram-Henderson Paints and Varnishes. Mr. E. R. Wood is president of the Central Canada Loan and Savings Company, vice-president of the Canada Life Assurance Company; National Trust Company; Brazilian Traction, Light and Power Company, Limited, and director of British-American Assurance Company; Western Assurance Company; Canadian Bank of Commerce; Dominion Steel Corporation; Toronto Savings and Loan Company; Calgary Power Company; Mexico Northwestern Railway Company; Barcelona Traction, Light and Power Company, Limited; Rio de Janeiro Tramway, Light and Power Company; Sao Paulo Tramway, Light and Power Company; Mexico Tramway Company; Mexico Electric Light Company; Toronto Railway Company; Toronto Power Company, Limited; Toronto Electric Light Company, Limited; Electrical Development Company of Canada, Limited; Dominion Securities Corporation, Limited.

Major Bell, being the Deputy Minister of the Department of Railways and Canals, is not included in the list of directors of any companies. I imagine that if he is doing his full duty as a deputy minister, which I believe he is, his whole time is taken up in the department and practically none of it can be given to the work of this Board of Management.

In this connection, Mr. Speaker, let me repeat that I do not for a moment desire to be considered as reflecting upon the honesty or business integrity of the gentlemen connected with these various boards. All I wish to say is that if these gentlemen are directors of a large number of business enterprises from which commodities in the nature of supplies and equipment for the railways and merchant marine can be or are being obtained, they are not true to their obligations as directors of those business concerns if with the inside knowledge they have of what is available in the way of contracts they do not go after those contracts and try to get them for the companies with which they are connected. That is their duty. The duty of a director is to watch the interests of the businesses with which he is connected, and I say that these gentlemen being on the board of directors of various companies, and having knowledge of large numbers of contracts running into millions of dollars, it is certain that they would not be doing their best by the companies of which they are directors if they did not look out for the interests of those companies.

Could interlocking of directorates be carried to a degree of greater perfection? Just think of it, Mr. Speaker, all these vast industrial concerns, and many more, to all intents and purposes represented by this little circle of favoured individuals who comprise the Board of Directors of the Government railways and merchant marine, who have a free hand in the disbursing of millions upon millions of the public moneys, with a guarantee that no information will be given to the people through their representatives in Parliament as to how or to whom the moneys were distributed. Need we look further, Mr. Speaker, for an explanation of the size of the deficits in these undertakings, and the vastly increased expenditures, and consequent increased taxation to which the people of Canada are being subjected. Could a more powerful combination of business interests be imagined? What government under such a system should not be able to keep itself in power indefinitely?

I wish now to refer to a somewhat parallel method of dealing with public moneys in a manner which ensures benefits to friends of the Government and not to friends only, but to supporters in this House. I shall not take up much time in referring to this parallel; it was referred to at some length last night by the hon. member for Chambly-Verchères (Mr. Archambault). I refer to the system of making loans of public money to foreign countries and then, through the agency of the Government or its friends, ensuring the placing of contracts with business concerns in this country, with which members of this House are associated as directors, the money, in settlement of these contracts, being paid out of these loans to foreign countries. Remember, Sir, that this money is the money of the taxpayers of Canada. The Government in thus loaning it and allowing it to be disbursed for the purchase of commodities to be sent to these different countries, has devised another scheme under which so far as any accounting for public funds is concerned, there is no way of finding out what opportunity there has been for freedom of competition or what opportunity there has been for anyone other than the immediate friends of the Government to secure contracts. Sir, as an indication of the way in which this system works, let me cite to the House some of the contracts which have been awarded and some of the orders given to industries with which some friends, not remote, but immediate friends of the Government, sitting on Government benches opposite, are concerned. I shall spare the House the possible pain of having to listen to the names of hon. members who are directors of these concerns.

Mr. SHEARD: Give the names. Let us have it all.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend is not one of them, so he is perfectly safe in calling for the names. But while he nods his head in one direction some of his neighbours are shaking theirs in another.

Mr. SHEARD: Let us have the names. Let us have the facts.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Take your medicine.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In order that the House may appreciate what this system amounts to, I may say that the Government have given to Roumania a credit of $25,000,000 and to Greece a credit of $25,000,000. It is extremely doubtful, as has already been pointed out, whether these amounts will ever be wholly refunded. Of these amounts $26,989,000 has already been advanced. Now, of the amount of $26,989,000 advanced to these countries, which since the war have been in great need of foodstuffs especially, $3,500,000 has gone for foodstuffs and some $23,460,000 and over has gone in the supplying of manufactured articles to these particular countries—manufactured articles for which we in Canada, according to my hon. friends need such great protection. Of the manufactured articles supplied, contracts have gone to the following concerns of which some hon. gentlemen on the opposite side and one or two Senators, friends of the Government, happen to be directors: Brantford Roofing Company, $65,000; Welland Vale Manufacturing Company, for edge tools, $137,234.87; Maritime Nail Company, nails, $77,304.95; Dominion Iron and Steel Company, $66,138.48; Sherwin-Williams Paint Company, $31,490 and $11,-332; Monarch Knitting Company, knitted goods, $293,295.80; Stanfields Limited woollens, $21,780; Renfrew Woollen Mills, woollens, $114,041; Massey-Harris Company, agricultural implements, $536,000; Peck's Rolling Mills, $26,694.96.

There, Mr. Speaker, are some of the contracts which run up, as I say, to somewhere around $23,000,000 of the money of the people of this country, which has been lent to these various countries and which has found its way back to companies of which hon. members of this Parliament, sitting opposite to me and listening to my remarks at this moment, and other friends of the Government are directors and managers. I do not know in what terms one can adequately describe such a use of the public moneys. Hon. gentlemen opposite think there is nothing irregular about it; that it is all perfectly right and proper. Well, I hope we are not losing altogether the British tradition that when a man takes a seat in Parliament he is at least supposed to be above reproach in the matter of contracts with which he and the concerns with which he is connected have to do in so far as they involve business relations with the Government. But, perhaps, it is a matter of little wonder that hon. members opposite should find it difficult to see anything wrong in this procedure, when we find the Prime Minister himself standing up and defending in this House the action of one of his colleagues in soliciting business from another government for his private firm and using as a means of getting that business the influence and prestige of his office as Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue. We are now beginning to see some of the reasons for the enormous expenditures to which the people of this country have been subjected and for the steady increase in the burden of taxation.

I have referred to the action of a minister of the Crown in soliciting business—the carrying of cargoes from France to Canada. I would point out that that minister is a member of a Government which is managing a merchant marine, a merchant marine which has not sufficient business to enable it to operate profitably; yet he uses his name as a minister of the Crown in order that he may enter into competition with the Government's own business; that he may take away that business from the Government and give it to his own firm. And the right hon. the Prime Minister stands up in this Parliament and defends that kind of thing. Well, Mr. Speaker, as long as my hon. friends opposite have that conception of public morality I see no hope of economy in public expenditures or that the taxes upon the people will be made less burdensome.

Now, Sir, in order to conceal these methods of doing business, in order to remove their possibilities from the arena of public discussion, to divert public attention and the public mind from any careful consideration of this stupendous situation, the one really menacing factor in our national life, the right hon. the Prime Minister is at great pains, whenever he speaks, whether on the platform or in this chamber, to misrepresent the position and the attitude of his opponents on the tariff, in the hope that their time will be spent in refuting his misleading statements. It is perhaps natural that he should adopt such a course. I regret that the Prime Minister is not in his seat this evening, and that he has not been in the chamber all afternoon; I should have preferred to address these remarks through you, Mr. Speaker, direct to him. However, he will, no doubt, have an opportunity of reading them, and I trust that he will pay particular attention to what I have to say in regard to the tariff. Having misrepresented, session after session, the intention of the Government itself with respect to tariff revision, it is not surprising that he should adopt the same tactics in dealing with the intention of his opponents. In the few remaining minutes that I desire to speak, may I attempt to show the nature of these misrepresentations, and at the same time restate the Liberal position as it is and as it is set forth in the amendment which is before the House? Hon members will recall that my right hon. friend, in his speech of a day or two ago, said he wished primarily to deal with the amendment. I shall endeavour to follow him in this particular, though in others I hope I may escape the ill effects of his bad example.

My right hon. friend has misrepresented the position of his opponents in three important essentials. My hon. friend, the leader of the Agrarian group (Mr. Crerar), has shown wherein this is true of himself, and hon. gentlemen with whom he is associated. May I be permitted to do the same as respects myself and the position of the Liberal party? In this matter of the tariff, we have been misrepresented by the Prime Minister and his colleagues as to principle, as to aim, and as to method.

First, as to principle. My right hon. friend has endeavoured to have it appear that the issue, as respects the tariff, is one of free trade versus protection. Over and over again, he has made this assertion. Sometimes, oddly enough, he has said that we of the Liberal party, like himself, believed in a tariff based on the principle of protection; at other times he has said that we believe in a tariff based on the principle of free trade; then again he has said that, as respects the tariff, we have no principles, or were without any principle. Quite obviously, all three statements are not correct. As a matter of truth, not one of them is correct. That I may do my right hon. friend no injustice, let me quote a sentence or two from one or two of his speeches. I shall give only one or two quotations, but they will have a familiar sound to hon. members of the House. Here is a quotation from a speech delivered by the Prime Minister at Sherbroke on September 21, 1920, as reported in the Montreal Gazette of September 22. My right hon. friend said then:

> What then is the issue? It is the old subject of trade policy.
> Back to the old question of free trade or protection the pendulum has swung again. Once more the people of Canada have had to decide whether one principle or the other is to prevail.

Elsewhere in the same address my right hon. friend used these words:

> We have, therefore, a clear-cut issue. Do we want free trade in this country or do we not? . . . . The majority of the opposition to the Government of the day is composed of free traders. . . .

There is a positive statement made by the Prime Minister of this country, although my right hon. friend knows as well as I do that the issue is not between protection and free trade. He knows that there is no free trade issue in this country at the present time.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend laughs. Let me repeat, Mr. Speaker, the issue is not between protection and free trade. If any one has any doubts on that score, let him read the second clause of the amendment which is before the House, and which will be supported unanimously, I believe, by hon. members on this side of the House. What is the first sentence of that clause? It is to the effect that existing financial requirements of the Dominion demand the maintenance of the customs tariff. So long as you recognize a customs tariff, you cannot have free trade. The tariff is, as this amendment states, a tax. It is a tax on imports, and a tax on imports is an obstruction to trade. Free trade means the absence of all tax; it means what it says, complete freedom of trade, and the raising of revenues by some other method exclusively, by income tax, for example, and when my right hon. friend says that the issue is between protection and free trade, he does not describe the situation aright. The minute a tax is imposed on trade, that moment trade is obstructed. The obstruction may be made to serve primarily one of two purposes: it may be made a means of raising revenue, or it may be made a means of affording protection to some industry within the country. Usually it serves both purposes in some measure. A tax imposed for purposes of protection will incidentally afford revenue, and a tax imposed for purposes of revenue will incidentally afford protection. The art of statesmanship in the imposition of taxation lies in making taxation as light as circumstances will permit, and in having regard for existing national needs in whatever taxation is imposed. The issue, so far as the Liberal party's attitude on the tariff is concerned, is not and never has been in this country, between free trade and protection; it has been between a tariff imposed primarily for purposes of protection, and a tariff imposed primarily for purposes of revenue.

My right hon. friend says it is either free trade or protection; that there are only the two grounds: there is no middle ground between. Let me quote his exact words:

> I said a moment ago that any body of men framing a tariff must adopt one of two principles, the protective principle or the free trade principle, and I say that every public man owes it to the people to declare definitely on which of the two principles he stands.

That was a statement made at Winnipeg on October 25, 1920. The House will observe that my right hon. friend is choosing his own ground in making the alternative. He makes the assertion, and then he begins to argue from his own premises, but his premises are not right to begin with. He says:

> There is a free trade tariff, and there is a protective tariff.

He goes on to say:

> Is there a man or woman here who knows whether Mr. King stands for tariff on the free trade principle, or on the protection principle? You may keep on asking him, but you will never get an answer, yes or no.

My right hon. friend knows very well that I never give an answer, "yes" or "no," on premises that are entirely false. The question is not between protection and free trade. He says, in an issue between protection and free trade, there is no middle ground. In that I agree with him, if by protection he means tariff and by free trade absence of tariff. The one is the negation of the other. That issue may be fought out theoretically, but practically there is no such issue in this country, and never has been. My right hon. friend says: "You can have two kinds of tariff and only two; you can have a tariff founded on one principle, that of protection, or another principle, that of free trade." That, Mr. Speaker, is where my right hon. friend misstates the case. You cannot have a tariff on the principle of free trade, for the principle of free trade means the absence of all tariff. What my right hon. friend should have said, what he would have said had he not deliberately been trying to becloud the issue, when speaking of the only possible alternatives of a tariff, is that there are but two kinds, a tariff based on the principle of protection, and a tariff based on the principle of revenue. Had he stated the alternative in these words, he would have correctly described the issue.

In dealing with taxation, the aim should be, as the amendment before the House states, to make taxation fall as lightly as possible upon the people of the country. The art of statesmanship as respects taxation, and as respects anything else, consists in having as much regard for the interests of the country as possible. If, when you are framing your tariff with one object or another in view, you do not take into consideration all the other objects that are to be served, you do not do your full duty to the people whose representatives you are. Unless my hon. friends opposite, when they are framing a tariff for purposes of protection, say that they will give no consideration to the revenue that is to be raised they should not hurl a stone at us because in regard to a tariff designed primarily for revenue purposes, we have some regard for the interests and needs of the country in whatever direction those needs may present themselves. As regards the tariff, my right hon. friend has never once spoken of there being an issue between a tariff primarily for revenue and a tariff primarily for protection. He has tried to make an issue between free trade and protection, and speaking of the first alternative and omitting altogether the second, which must be as familiar to him as it is to every other hon. member of the House, he has shown that he has been trying to draw away the minds of the people from the real issue and cause them to think of something which is not the issue at all.

The position which I have just stated has been the position the Liberal party has taken in regard to the tariff since it has taken any practical interest in tariff matters. In the last speech he delivered on the Budget before the war, the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier stated in the clearest possible terms the position of the Liberal party on the tariff. Here are Sir Wilfrid Laurier's words. They will be found in Hansard of April 23, 1914, page 2844:

> We have always contended, that the policy best suited to this country is not a protective tariff but a customs tariff for revenue purposes.

There is the statement of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. There is the statement of the Liberal party in the matter of the tariff. That is where Sir Wilfrid stood; that is where I stand; that is where our party stands and is prepared to stand when the day of reckoning with the electorate comes.

As to the aim of our fiscal policy, my right hon. friend states that we aim to destroy the industries of Canada, though here again he finds himself in a curiously contradictory position. He says that in the West, where he alleges they want Free Trade, we are free traders, and that in the East, where he alleges they want Protection, we are protectionists. That, Mr. Speaker, would look as though, instead of seeking to destroy, we were doing our utmost to conserve.

My right hon. friend, if I may be permitted to say so, in this regard has done his utmost to misrepresent me personally, from one end of the country to the other. The other day, from his seat in the House, he could hardly wait until he had hurled across the floor at me that I particularly was being subjected to the criticism by the public that I stood in one place for one thing and in another for another; that I particularly had created throughout the country the impression that I was trying to be all things to all men. Here is a statement of my right hon. friend as given to the women of Toronto. I think my right hon. friend should have been a little more careful of the truth in talking to the ladies. This is from a report in the Ottawa Citizen of April 18 of a speech delivered by the Prime Minister at a meeting of the Women's Liberal-Conservative Association at Toronto on April 16:

> Touching on the tariff question, Premier Meighen said that in Eastern Canada the opposition had advocated moderate protection, and in Western Canada free trade.

Then as reported in the Mail and Empire's account of the same meeting:

> In Eastern Canada, the Opposition had advocated moderate protection, and in Western Canada, free trade. Everything their leaders had spoken had bound them to free trade.

I should like to say to the Prime Minister of this country—I do not know whether the rules of the House will permit it—but if the rules permit it I would say that he knew that was not true when he said it. If the rules of the House so permit, I will say that, but if they do not, I will not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I must point out to the hon member that the rules of the House would not permit him to say that any hon. member of the House wilfully made a mis-statement or told an untruth.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Then, Mr. Speaker, I am prevented from saying what I should like to have said. However, I wish to say this: that statement is not true, and every hon. member of this House knows that it is not true. Then at a meeting of the Conservative Club, in Toronto, on April 16, 1921, the Prime Minister is reported in the Toronto Mail and Empire as saying::

> But is there any one knows where the Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King stands? . . . . . Mr. King was an advocate of ruthless tariff reduction out West, but in the East he stood for the adequate protection of industry.

I challenge the right hon. the Prime Minister to point to any utterance of mine in the West than can possibly be understood as meaning that I stood for ruthless tariff reduction. It is very easy to misrepresent, but it is another thing to undo the evils of misrepresentation. My right hon. friend has gone out of his way to have it appear that my attitude on the tariff has been one thing in one place and another in another. He says I have not been frank on the tariff issue. His example in that particular has been followed by his colleagues and many of his supporters, and has been enlarged upon, of course, by his party press. Indeed, the order has gone out from my right hon. friend's office, through his publicity office, that this is to be the line of attack upon myself and the Liberal party; that it is to be made so much of a barrage on all occasions that the public is not to have an opportunity of ever learning the truth that is being obscured by this policy of misrepresentation.

As I have said, some of the colleagues of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister have followed his tactics. I was somewhat surprised to find my hon. friend the Minister of Finance doing exactly the same thing. I have here a speech delivered by my hon. friend at Peterborough in which he said, as reported in the Ottawa Citizen of January 31, of this year:

> Now Mr. King comes into West Peterborough and tells the people that if the Liberals got into power tomorrow they would not make a single change in the tariff without first submitting it to the people.

Now that was not wholly true to begin with. I was referring to the by-election and the consequence of it, and I told the electors of Peterborough, what was true, that if on a vote of want of confidence in this House the Government opposite should be defeated, and we on this side of the House should be called upon to associate ourselves together in a Government, we would not do what hon. gentlemen opposite were then proposing to do, namely, revise the tariff, before there had been an appeal to the people, but that we would state to the people what our tariff policies and principles were, and that the people would be given a chance at a general election to pass upon them.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is what was said.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If that is now my hon. friend's interpretation, I am glad to have it But what about this? My hon. friend went on to say, and this is in quotation marks:

> "Out on the prairies, Mr. King is one of the most marvellous free traders and tariff-smashers you could find anywhere."

Again, I ask my hon. friend to point to a single utterance of mine which justifies that remark. He cannot do it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No difficulty whatever about it. All that was necessary at that time was to read the newspaper reports of my hon. friend's utterances.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I challenge my hon. friend to bring into this House and read to hon. members any bona fide report of any utterance of mine that justifies a statement of that kind. Such statements, Mr. Speaker, I say are absolutely false and untrue. The speeches I made through the Canadian West were made in the hearing of thousands of persons; they were reported very fully in the western papers, and in despatches to the East; they were made within the hearing of several hon. members of this House, and I challenge both my hon. friends, or either of them, to point to a single sentence in all that I have said which will afford a shadow of justification for their allegations. I have looked through the press reports of the different speeches I made in the different cities, and I find that every one of them on this question of the tariff tallies, verbatim et literatim, with the policy of the Liberal party as I have already stated it in this House, and as it is known to the country. There is not a single item in any of those newspaper reports to justify any such statement as was made either by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance or the right hon. the Prime Minister.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I will be pleased to send a report of a speech to my hon. friend.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, read it to the House. My hon. friend knows that secret communications are not a desirable way of carrying on public business. That there may be no misunderstanding as to the position I took on the tariff during the western trip last fall, that there may be no misunderstanding as to the position I took on the tariff when I spoke in the Maritime Provinces a little over a year ago, that there may be no misunderstanding of my present attitude on the tariff may I read to the House from the account of a speech which I delivered in the city of Toronto on August 14, of last year, before starting for the West, and which appears under the conspicuous heading, "Mr. King on All-Important Tariff Issue —A tariff for consumers and producers". on the front page of the Toronto Globe of August 16. That statement, to all intents and purposes, is identical with the presentation of the Liberal attitude on the tariff as made at every meeting at which I have spoken on the tariff since the Liberal Convention of August, 1919. It is in all essential particulars true to the Liberal platform as laid down at that convention, and it is absolutely in accord with the aim of the Liberal party on fiscal policy as set forth in the amendment before the House.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

I challenge any man or woman in this country to show that I have anywhere, at any time, swerved from the views and opinions and statement of policy as set forth in this quotation, which is both clear and comprehensive. Before giving the quotation from the Globe—may I say this to my hon. friend from Centre Vancouver (Mr. Stevens) who I understand is to follow me, and with whom I see the Minister of Finance is at the moment conferring, that my hon. friend from Centre Vancouver, when he spoke in this House in the debate on the Address, made certain quotations from western papers which I have looked into since, and I find that my hon. friend quoted only part of what I said and never finished the sentences. I ask him when he speaks in this debate tonight, if he reads any extracts of my speeches, not simply to pick out the parts that suit his purpose, but to read the entire paragraph. This is the quotation which I wish to give from the Toronto Globe of August 16, 1920:

> Speaking on the all-important tariff question at the Liberal picnic Saturday, Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, Liberal Leader, said:
> "We believe that the time has come, indeed that it is already long past, when a downward revision of the tariff is necessary. In this revision we believe that there should be substantial reductions of the duties on the necessaries of life, in other words, on those articles which go to make up the food, the clothing, the shelter of the Canadian people; that certain specific articles required for the purposes of consumption and other articles essential to production should be placed upon the free list, and that in regard to the implements of production in the basic industries of agriculture, mining, lumbering and fishing there should also be a substantial reduction of duties. It is not a question of free trade or protection. . . ."
> "In revising the tariff to this end care will be taken of the position and needs of all the industries in our country, but such tariff as may be necessary in this connection will be, under Liberal policy, a tariff for consumers and producers, and not a tariff to further the interests of combines, monopolies or of any special or privileged classes. . . ."
> "It is not honest to say that we can do away with the tariff. We can revise it, and that is the policy of the Liberal party. And I shall say in regard to tariff policies exactly the same in the city of Toronto as I shall say in the Western Provinces. I have not one message for the city and another message for the country—one message for the employer and another for the employee."

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Will my hon. friend be good enough to tell the House if he stands by the policy of the Liberal party, as outlined at the Convention of 1919, favouring a British preference of 50 per cent?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The statement I have just read to the House is intelligible to every hon. member, and I think my hon. friend has quite enough intelligence to see whether there is anything that is inconsistent, in what I have just read, with the platform laid down by the Liberal party at the Liberal convention. Now, Sir, my hon. friend the other day, in the course of his address, quoted from a speech of mine in Victoria, and from an article contributed by me to Maclean's Magazine in January last. I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman made a thorough search in every direction before he got hold of that speech and that article, and they may be presumed to be the best examples he could obtain for the purposes of his argument. I do not know whether his reading of them supplemented by his tone and gesture, served his purpose, but if he will compare that speech and the article in Maclean's Magazine with what I have just read to the House, he will find that they not only accord with each other, but are almost identical in language with the speech in Toronto from which I have quoted. In one or two respects, it is true, the article in Maclean's Magazine contained matter not there stated. For example, I find this clause.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Nothing about preference.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Just wait a minute. I do not know whether my hon. friend is the one who is responsible for getting his party to strike out that clause in regard to promoting trade between the Mother Country and the Dominions. It seems to me, from the nature of his remarks in the House, that he is acting as the special agent for those who were desirous to delete that clause from the party platform. Now, in the Maclean Magazine article of January 15, there is this additional sentence:

> In this revision, we believe that the home and its needs should be a first consideration.

I want to emphasize that fact. I want to make it clear that in revising the tariff of this country we are going to consider first, foremost, and always, the needs of the homes of the people of the country. Then there is the further statement:

> With the Liberal party, the main concern respecting the tariff is not free trade or protection; it is revenue, and the simultaneous development of industry in such manner as is likely to serve best the interests of the Canadian people. . . There will be required for purposes of revenue large sums of money which, of necessity, will have to be raised by indirect taxation through a customs tariff.

Now, I think I have perhaps said enough to make clear the position which we, on this side of the House, and which I myself, take in regard to the tariff and the principle on which it should be framed. The aim we seek in a revision of the tariff has been well set out in the amendment which is before the House. The Prime Minister (Mr. Meighen) would have the country believe that our aim is to destroy industries throughout the country, as though any political party would seek in any way to destroy the industries of a nation, and its consequent prosperity. What we aim at is well set out in these two clauses of the amendment:

> That the aim of the fiscal policy of Canada should be the encouragement of industries based on the natural resources of the country, the development of which may reasonably be expected to create healthy enterprises giving promise of enduring success;
> 4. That such changes should be made in the customs duties as may be expected to reduce the cost of living, and to reduce also the cost of implements of production required for the efficient development of the natural resources of the Dominion.

That aim, I contend, is in accordance with the needs of Government, in accordance with the needs of the country, and in accordance with the needs of the great body of consumers in this Dominion.

9 p.m.

Now, finally, a word as to the method by which, if entrusted with the duty of tariff revision, we should wish to proceed. My right hon. friend the leader of the Government, when on the public hustings, has a way of describing those who disagree with him in any particular as Bolshevists, nation wreckers, I.W.Ws., O.B.Us., and by any other epithet that denotes destruction and revolution. The right hon. gentlemen should be somewhat more careful of the language he uses. Let me say that the only aim we have is to do things in an orderly and decent manner, and that aim is well set out in paragraph 5 of the amendment:

> 5. That, while keeping this aim clearly in mind, the House recognizes that in any readjustment of the tariff that may take place, regard must be had to existing conditions of trade, and changes made in such a manner as will cause the least possible disturbance of business.

When the language of this amendment is used or when in speaking I say that in revising the tariff some regard should be had to the position and needs of industry, immediately my right hon. friend gets up and says that we are in exactly the same boat as he is and out for protection. Well, I know that my hon. friend is fond of monopolies, but when has he ever had the right to a monopoly for doing things in an orderly fashion? We on this side believe, as respects the tariff, and as respects everything else of national importance, in proceeding along evolutionary, not along revolutionary, lines, and, if the opportunity is given to us, anything that we do shall be done exactly as described in the spirit of this amendment.

Did time permit, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer at some length to the last clause of the amendment.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, I will not. With regard to the last clause of the amendment, I desire to say only a word or two. In many respects, it is its most important part. My right hon. friend said that he intended to address himself to the amendment, but I observe that, although he spoke for two hours and a half, he omitted altogether reference to this particular clause. No doubt he felt that reference of any kind would prove embarrassing. Let me read this final clause:

> 6. That the House, while recognizing that the obligations arising from the war must be met, and declaring its readiness to make all necessary provision for that purpose, regrets that the financial proposals of the Government are not made with due regard to the economy that is so urgently needed, and expresses the opinion that, before resorting to new taxation, the Government should make a subtantial reduction in the proposed expenditure.

This clause, Mr. Speaker, goes to the root of the matter. As I have said, unless we can keep down expenditures through economy and retrenchment, tariff revision will be of little service in any respect. I might repeat what has been so truly said by hon. members as to the many ways in which economy and retrenchment might be exercised with respect to the Estimates that have been presented to the House—as to how economy might be effected as regards the railways, the Merchant Marine, the foreign credits of doubtful nature, of which I have spoken, as regards the building of dry docks and piers, and as regards certain matters in respect of which the provinces are associated with the Federal Government and which might well be left for the present to the provinces alone, such for example, as questions of technical education, housing, and the making of roads; and, also, as to how economy might be effected with respect to military, naval, and police expenditures, all expenditure which we might in very large measure considerably curtail, for a while at least.

Now, Sir, with all these statements I am in entire accord, but what I wish to say is this: With a situation such as we have, and such as we know exists, economies effected in the directions suggested mean simply the lopping off so many branches here and there while the tree itself is decayed at the heart and rotten at the roots. We must go deeper than these surface indications and deal with the vitals and crux of the situation. It will avail but little to discuss the Budget in its details when we have a super-organization of business interests controlling the Government and dictating its policies; when we have an interweaving of financial, manufacturing, distributing and selling interests with some of their more ambitious members associated with hon. members who hold their positions in the Government against the will of the people; when we have groups of special friends helped by means of loans and foreign credits such as I have already described. When you have that kind of situation, what can be accomplished in the way of small economies here and there will have very little effect indeed in meeting the real issue. What is needed most in this country to-day is to break this selfish combination of political autocrats and industrial plutocrats which has grown and developed during the war and fastened itself like an octopus on the people of Canada. That, Mr. Speaker, is a task which is too large to be performed by this House; it is a task which the people alone can successfully undertake. We of the Opposition may do our best, but we are powerless when the Government has in its hands, and uses against us, the weapon of the closure the minute, on matters of public expenditure, we try to let in light. The only way in which that combination can be broken is to give to the people of this country their right to have a Parliament composed of their own representatives chosen in their own way. Until that right is granted we will never know what the assets or liabilities of this country are. What is the good of discussing the Budget of my hon. friend in its few details when we have this great combination at work using public funds in all directions to further the interests of a few specially favoured groups? We may make the best effort we can—we have been doing that—but we are powerless in the face of the weapons that hon. gentlemen opposite are prepared to use on behalf of the interests that are sustaining and keeping them in power. But we do ask—and ask in the name of the people of this country—that for the sake of Canada's present condition and for the sake of her future need, the people be granted the right—the constitutional right which is theirs—of electing a Parliament of their own choosing, and of breaking without further delay a combination which is so inimical to the public weal.

Mr. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, when the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) opened his remarks this afternoon he upbraided the Prime Minister (Mr. Meighen) for occupying two hours and a half of the time of the House. I would like to draw my hon. friend's attention to the fact that he has equalled the effort of the Prime Minister in so far only as time occupied is concerned. My hon. friend has succeeded in placing upon Hansard almost an exact copy of a stump speech which he has been uttering from one end of Canada to the other.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

An hon. MEMBER: Take it back.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. Once again I must call upon hon. members to assist the deputy speaker in upholding the dignity and decorum of Parliament. I fear that several hon. members have forgotten that these deliberations are taking place in the House of Commons.

Mr. STEVENS: I know my hon. friend's opposite somewhat resented my reference. I had no desire to cast any reflection upon the speech which the leader of the Opposition has delivered through the country. It was eloquent, and I propose dealing with many features of it. I want to say that I have a high regard for my hon. friend's ability on the platform. I must confess however, that I have not quite as high a regard for the conclusions which he arrives at.

Now my hon. friend has spent a good deal of time this afternoon and evening in repeating his old charge that this Government is the creation of invisible, unnamed big interests. The hon. gentleman knows that that is a very useful cry, that it appeals to a certain class of the population in this or any other country—anything that is in the nature of "a big interest" presents itself in an onimous fashion before the minds of the people. Therefore my hon. friend considers it good tactics to associate this Government, and particularly the Prime Minister, with what is known as "big interests". I have two things to say to the House in regard to that. The first is that I think it is most unfortunate for any leader of public opinion, or anyone attempting to lead public opinion, to constantly harp upon the idea that wherever you have capital associated in companies or corporations you necessarily have corruption and that which is inimical to the best interests of the community. That is not the case. This is the day of big businesses. This is the time and the period in the development of civilization when small amounts of capital are associated in larger capital organizations for the purpose of the development of business generally. It is an economic situation, and no man has a right to constantly insinuate that there is a sinister influence behind such. The second thing I desire to say is that if there is any foundation for what my hon. friend says, if there is any ground upon which he can base his insinuation that there is "a sinister influence"—and I use his own words—then he owes it to this House, and he owes it to the country to say what is the sinister influence and who the individuals are that he has in mind. Will my hon. friend name them? Will he tell this House what big interests are behind this Government and directing its affairs contrary to the interest of the country at large? I might go on and ask my hon. friend to name the large interests of the country to which he has reference, but I think that would not be fair; I do not think it would result in any good. But my hon. friend has no right at meetings in the country, or in this House, to insinuate that there is, as he says, "a sinister" influence behind the Government in the form of "big interests".

Now I am going to deal with some matters that my hon. friend brought up. For instance the hon. gentleman spent considerable time on the system of national railway control in this country. It is not my intention to go into that in detail, but I submit that my hon. friend has given to the House a subject which is quite a proper one for controversy. He holds that the national railways of Canada should be under the control of a minister of the Government and be run by his department. Parliament decided two years ago that another method should be adopted,—the incorporation of a company and the appointment of a board of directors. I grant that my hon. friend has a perfect right to take the position he does, but I question his right in drawing a picture which goes to every quarter of this country, in which he insinuates not only that the board of directors of the national railways are irresponsible—that is his own word—but that there is some form of sinister maladministration by them. These directors are leading citizens of the Dominion, selected from various parts of the country, and they have been before the public in one capacity or another for many years. They are all honourable men, and I submit that my hon. friend did neither himself nor this House credit when he insinuated that they were doing things as directors that were dishonourable, and that they themselves were dishonest,—because if they were not there was absolutely no force in my hon. friend's argument. He stated that they were distributing the money of this country regardless of the cost to friends of theirs and to companies they were associated with.

Now, my hon. friend has no right to make that statement unless he can bring to this House some proof to substantiate it; and, if he has that proof up his sleeve, then he owes it to this House and to the country to lay it on the Table. My hon. friend no doubt would interrupt and probably would say: "But we have not been given all the correspondence." That is an old demand of his. In the various motions he has brought before this House he has demanded that all the correspondence, all the contracts, and all other information in connection with the national railways shall be laid on the table of the House. But I draw this to your particular attention, Mr. Speaker: he has never moved for any specific, closed contract, and that is all we get from the Auditor General or from any department. There is no opposition whatever from this side of the House to bringing down any reasonable information that my hon. friend wants, but neither he nor any other member of the Opposition has ever moved for specific information. They say to us and to the Government: "Bring down everything, lay it on the table of the House, and let us rake it over to see if we can find something that is wrong." If he suspects there is anything wrong with the transactions between the Canadian National Railway Company and the firms with which the board of management are connected, let him name those members, let him ask for what he wants, and in all probability he will get the fullest possible information.

And so I say to my hon. friend that his course is not fair in discussing the principle whether there is to be departmental or company control of our national railways. We hold that it is better that the national railways should be run by a board of directors, similar to the management of the great Canadian Pacific Railway Company, rather than as a department of this Parliament. My hon. friend cited the Intercolonial, but surely he does not presume to bring that railway forward as an example of first-class management. Why, ever since the Intercolonial has been in operation, and that was before 1870, it has never paid a cent of interest on the capital investment, and nearly every year it has had a deficit in operation. Yet my hon. friend says: "This is the system that we want." He has a perfect right to say so, but he has no right, I repeat, to drag the names of honourable men before this Parliament and insinuate that they are dishonourable in the discharge of their duty,—so insinuating under the protection of his position in this House and for the purpose simply of making an argument to bolster up his case.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to follow my hon. friend in some detail, but I shall do so in connection with the problems and questions that have been raised in the course of this debate. I think perhaps if I were to describe my hon. friend's speech in one sentence, I would say that he has succeeded in coining a new phrase, which no doubt will appear in most of the newspapers to-morrow, namely, "political autocrats and industrial plutocrats." That is going to be the battle cry of my hon. friend. That is what he seeks to establish.

He had something to say about the loans to Roumania and Greece. My hon. friend from Chambly-Vercheres (Mr. Archambault) last night gave the same information that the hon. leader of the Opposition submitted to-night. The insinuation was that this Government had paid out moneys buying goods in Canada and had shipped those goods to Roumania and Greece, that money having been distributed to friends of the Government. I purpose to examine briefly what grounds there are for such a charge. In the first place, the loans to Roumania and Greece were based upon a statute of Parliament, and the Government had absolutely nothing to do with the letting of the contracts. As far as I have been able to check them up—and I have not been able to check all of them—these contracts were let in Paris by representatives of the Roumanian and Grecian governments. All that the Government of Canada did was this: under the instructions of Parliament it set aside $25,000,000, I think it was, and out of that, on the direction of these two foreign governments, paid the bills.

Now, my hon. friend quoted certain firms that had sold goods, and he said that these firms contained the names of some hon. gentlemen sitting on this side of the House. I am not going over this in detail, but the names of seven firms were cited, and hon. gentlemen here or in the Senate, supporters of the Government, were said to be associated with those firms, the insinuation being that there was something crooked in the letting of those contracts. Why did not my hon. friend also state—and, again, I have only had an opportunity for a few moments to check this up, because my hon. friends opposite have had this return constantly in their control up until this morning—why did he not also say that these firms had associated with them as directors hon. gentlemen supporting the Opposition? There is nothing wrong in that; indeed, I claim that it is perfectly all right. But my point is: why seize upon what is an honourable and proper transaction and seek to fasten it in an improper way upon members on this side of the House? For instance we have Senator Dandurand, a very fine old war horse of the Liberal party, associated as a director with the Steel Company of Canada, which did business with those governments. I am not criticising that for a moment; it is perfectly proper. Then we have also another very excellent supporter of the former Government and the Liberal party, Senator Beique, associated with Canada Cottons, a very large and important firm that got extensive orders, and properly so. But why in the name of fairness and common sense do my hon. friends stand in their place and seek to give the impression to the country that there is some sinister underhand work going on when there is absolutely nothing of the kind? There are 216 firms which are mentioned as having received business from Roumania and Greece, and out of those 216 firms my hon. friend succeeded in finding seven with which hon. gentlemen on this side of the House were more or less directly connected.

Now, in the concluding portion of his remarks the hon. leader of the Opposition made a strong charge of extravagance against the Government. Well, it is the duty of the leader of the Opposition and his party to expose extravagance on the part of the Government if they can do so; it is a fair battle ground, and I have no hesitation in meeting them half way in the matter. I have taken a little trouble to check up the proposed expenditures of the Government and you will be surprised, Mr. Speaker, to hear the result when a comparison is made with the expenditure of the former Liberal Administration. By the way, in making this comparison I am not criticising the Government of the late Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier at all. I have under my hand the Estimates of 1911 of a government of which my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition was a very prominent and active member, and at a time when the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) was custodian of the funds of the country. In that year they brought down an Estimate for expenditures amounting to $138,000,000. I have no criticism of that expenditure; I let it stand as a perfectly honest and fair Estimate. But I ask the House, what is the amount of the Estimates this year, outside of extraordinary expenditures, which I shall deal with in a moment? It is $177,000,000; that is the proposed expenditure on exactly the same account as that for which $138,000,000 was voted ten years ago—a difference of $38,000,000. It is a proper subject of debate whether or not that increase is justifiable, and I propose, Sir, to show it is justifiable. But before going into the matter in detail, let me observe that last year the actual expenditure of this Government—a government charged with extravagance—was $141,000,000 out of consolidated revenue fund, only $2,000,000 more than the last Estimate of the Government of my hon. friend opposite, in 1911. Now, Sir, an examination of these figures reveals certain facts. For instance, the Department of Trade and Commerce shows an expenditure of $2,300,000 more this year than it did in 1911. The increase is accounted for by the transfer of the Statistical Branch from the Department of Agriculture, involving an additional expenditure on the part of the Trade and Commerce Department of $1,800,000; the administration of the Canada Grain Act, $1,175,000; relief to the West in the matter of seed grain, $825,000; protection of timber, $1,000,000; fuel investigation—a most useful effort to improve the development of our natural resources—$200,000. Then there are some other items, but what I wish to impress upon the House is that the increase of expenditure this year over the expenditure of 1911 is more than accounted for by the increase in the cost of materials, wages, and the salaries of the Civil Service, and the general increase coming with a period of ten years of development on the part of the country. So I submit that my hon. friends have very little ground for complaint against the Government, on that score.

The main attack of my hon. friends opposite has been directed against the Militia and Naval Estimates. Will the House believe me when I say that in 1911 my hon. friends opposite proposed a larger expenditure on naval affairs than we propose this year? It is true that in respect of militia the proposed expenditure this year is somewhat larger, accounted for wholly by increased cost of material and salaries.

Now, we have the question of the increased debt. I will say this to my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition: he has had nothing to do with the increase in the debt during the last seven or eight years; he is fully exonerated in that regard. But what I do wish to say to him and to the House is that the increase of the debt in Canada is attributable wholly to war costs and expenditures. I will not weary the House with figures, but it may be interesting to note in passing that $103,000,000 has been paid off the public debt this year. It is true that the whole debt has slightly increased, but it has been increased by the addition of investments of a paying and interest-bearing character.

I now come to the question of the tariff, about which we have heard a good deal in the last hour. It is rather interesting to note that my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition has at last made a clear-cut statement as to where he stands on the tariff. He says he is out absolutely for a tariff for revenue. It is my purpose to examine very briefly what that means. The hon. gentleman made rather harsh and, I think, unfair statements with regard to the Prime Minister's various utterances in this connection. The Prime Minister has been complaining for the last year or more that my hon. friend would not make a clear-cut statement as to where he stood on the tariff so that we might know on what ground to debate the question with him. He would not move his 1919 platform; he will not move it yet—he positively refuses to move it. He is either ashamed of it or he knows that some political advantage is to be gained in refraining from moving it. I do not see why he should complain about our asking him to move his own platform, but that is what he does. Now, what is my hon. friend's position in this matter? He challenged the Minister of Finance a few moments ago to quote any words of his to show that he had made the remarks at Peterborough attributed to him by the minister. Now, I have under my hand the address which my hon. friend delivered in Peterborough. He was referring to the possibility that at this session, which was then approaching, in the event of the defeat of the Administration he might be called upon to form a government—Peterborough is a manufacturing city; the people there would not stand for free trade, would not stand for the reductions in the tariff mentioned in this pamphlet, "A message of Liberalism"—and my hon. friend knows they would not. This is what he said to the people of Peterborough:

> Should the contingency of which I speak arise, should the Government be defeated, should a Liberal Administration be formed, advantage will not be taken of such a situation to introduce legislation on the tariff.

If I am misquoting my hon. friend he will correct me; this is exactly what he is reported to have said in Peterborough. He goes on to say:

> Nothing will be done in the way of altering or amending the tariff in the smallest particular without reference to the people in the first instance and the submission of the Liberal policy to the electorate at a general election.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is right.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend says that is right. He spent about half an hour in this chamber a little while ago upbraiding the Government for not bringing down a complete revision of the tariff this session.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend will observe that my remarks related to what I would do, and I was presenting to the people of Canada my plans. I was upbraiding the Government for not bringing down any revision this session because in the speech from the Throne they said that they were going to do so.

Mr. STEVENS: I give my hon. friend credit for that. I was saying, when my hon. friend interrupted me, that he upbraided the Government because they did not bring down a complete revision of the tariff this session. Had the Government done that, he would have been the first on his feet condemning the Government for tampering with the tariff before an election and also before we knew what the United States were going to do. It would be a positively preposterous and asinine thing for any Government to do that, and he knows it. All that my hon. friend is sorry about is that the Government were not so simple and stupid that they would fall into such a trap. The idea of this Parliament attempting a general revision of our Canadian tariff in the face of a known general revision of the American tariff being under way! It is infinitely better for this country to wait and see what the general tariff of the United States is going to be. It is an absurd thing for any one to suggest that the American tariff does not affect the affairs of this country. It is one of the most important factors in determining the business activities and the direction of the industrial life of Canada. We must take cognizance of the American tariff in the revision of our tariff. Had there been no disturbance of the American tariff; had, for instance, President Wilson been continued in office and his policy continued, we could safely have proceeded with a revision of our tariff. But with the complete turnover in the United States, with a new economic vision before the people of that country, to say that we shoud proceed with a general revision of our tariff, is, in my estimation, arrant nonsense. That is not all that I have to say to my hon. friend. I hope the House will remember what I said a moment ago, that in Peterborough, which is a protectionist city, my hon. friend pledged himself that his party, if they were brought into power, would not touch that sacred institution known as the tariff. In the city of Kamloops, he delivered a speech and he delivered virtually the same speech throughout the West. He made statements of this kind:

Let me tell you what that policy is—

He refers to the policy laid down at the Liberal convention in 1919, and I will read just an extract from his speech so as to put myself in proper order. He says:

Take for instance, the Liberal convention held last year—

That is 1919.

—in Ottawa. This convention was decided upon by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and was called for the purpose of formulating the policy—

That was the main object of that convention.

—which would carry out the principles of Liberalism as believed right by the men and women who attended it.

He goes on:

It was attended by delegates from all parts of Canada. It was a convention which lasted from two to four days. This great gathering drafted and formulated the policy of the Liberal party.

That policy I have here, and again I say to my hon. friend—and I submit that not only am I in order in saying it, but it is a perfectly pertinent request—why does he not move the tariff platform contained in the declaration of Liberalism passed at this convention to which he attaches so much importance? He has not done so, and he will not do so because it contains provisions that, he knows perfectly well, will violate the sentiments and desires of large centres of influence in Eastern Canada, and he knows that the only part of Canada that will be very much appealed to by the tariff proposal in that platform is the middle West. Therefore, he will not put it on record; he will not bind his party to the platform which they drafted in August, 1919. But I was going on to say that this was what my hon. friend said at Kamloops:

Let me tell you what that policy is. We say the time has come in Canada when the tariff should be reduced.

Is that correct?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Certainly, that is right.

Mr. STEVENS: Again I ask hon. members to remember that in Peterborough, in October, a few months after this, which was in January or early in February, he pledged himself not to touch that sacred institution of the tariff under any circumstances, while at Kamloops he says "We start on this at once."

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not think my hon. friend wants deliberately to misrepresent the situation. When I was speaking at Kamloops, what I said, as he read it, is absolutely true, that that was the platform; we would do nothing until we were in power, and that meant after a general election. When I was speaking in Peterborough, I was speaking at a by-election and I sought to make it plain that come what might I did not wish to have a revision of the tariff until after a general election.

Mr. STEVENS: I must say to my hon. friend that his explanation at the present moment is a turning of a pretty sharp corner.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Not at all. The Minister of Finance said that I was quite right in what I said.

Mr. STEVENS: The hon. member is at issue with me, and I want to give him all opportunity of correcting me if I am wrong, I submit these words to the House and the House can judge for itself. My particular complaint of my hon. friend is that he goes through my province and the other western provinces telling the people that the platform of 1919 is the platform. But he positively refuses to put his party on record in this House on that platform, and why? The hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria (Mr. McKenzie) let the cat out of the bag the other night, if you will permit me, Sir, to use that homely phrase. This is what he said; or he used words to this effect: "Why, the tariff is not an issue; we will not let them make it an issue." Can my hon. friends around me, with their experience in caucuses, imagine all the happy conferences that have been going on between the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria and the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster), for instance? I can imagine the hon. member for Cape Breton North saying with that splendid Scotch stubborness of his, "Noo, Sir, I will not allow that platform to be moved." He would not allow it to be moved, because he knows, that the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. McCrea), the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Kennedy), the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) and many others would not go on record in this House in support of this resolution, the reciprocity agreement, the revision of the tariff downwards and the putting on the free list of "wheat, wheat flour and all products of wheat; the principal articles of food; farm implements and machinery; farm tractors, mining, flour and saw-mill machinery and repair parts thereof; rough and partly dressed lumber; gasoline, illuminating, lubricating and fuel oils; nets, net twines and fishermen's equipment; cements and fertilizers," and so on. They would not go on record in support of that, and my hon. friend does not dare to test them out on it. Some one mentions 50 per cent preference.

A few moments ago my hon. friend took two documents and he repeated the statement. He took a speech by the Minister of Finance in 1920; he took utterances of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House as expressed in July last, and he wandered through clauses (a), (b), (c), (d), (e) and (f). I shall not read them to the House. He then struck a most tragic attitude; he said that he found that (d) was missing, and he said to his much warmed up associates: "And what do you think this is?" He came out with the startling revelation that we had failed to include in our platform a statement made in the Minister of Finance's speech, "to especially promote and increase the trade with the Mother Country." My hon. friend laid that as the foundation for an innuendo that the Government and its supporters on this side of the House were seeking to lessen the trade with the Mother Country and to interfere with the Imperial connection. Will the House believe me when I tell it that had he turned over the page he would have found that clause set out in heavy leaded type on the other page.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, I would not. I challenge the hon. member to show it.

Mr. STEVENS: Will my hon. friend be patient just for a moment? I repeat that the hon. gentleman laid that as the foundation for a charge that this Government and this party were departing from its ancient tradition of close connection with the Mother Land, and were seeking to interfere with the trade of the Mother Country and the Imperial connection. That is a charge that touches a pretty tender spot in hon. gentlemen on this side, and they will not tolerate my hon. friend or anybody else getting away with a charge or insinuation of that kind. It was a bare insinuation and nothing more. I am going to read the two clauses in this platform. At the very commencement we find this, and it is the foundation of the platform upon which the party on this side of the House stands:

Firm adherence to British connection in full confidence that Canada will find its amplest scope for development, usefulness and influence as a member of the Britannic commonwealth with the status of a self-governing nation equal to that of the other members.

That alone would have been sufficient to convince my hon. friend that there was nothing wrong; but this is what I complain of. I do not like to characterize his effort as dishonest but I will tell the House that I cannot characterize it as a genuine effort to do what was fair. Here is the other clause in the platform, set out in leaded type.

The principle of trade preference between the different members of the Britannic commonwealth should be maintained and extended from time to time to such a degree as may be found practicable and consistent with Canadian interests.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Will my hon. friend allow me a question?

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend may ask a question, but not make an argument.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is not what the hon. member has just read a part also of the speech of the Minister of Finance which was delivered at the time I have spoken? It is, verbatim et literatim; but the other clause is gone.

Mr. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, is it not clear to any one with the slightest desire for fairness in debate from the two clauses I have read that we stand exactly where we have always stood on this question of trade with the Mother Land? But that is not all. We bring something more than empty words. We bring forward to the House the agreement and treaty with the West Indies, which was ratified in this House within the past two weeks, extending this very principle. The members of the Government spent weeks and weeks last summer with the delegates from the West Indies studying out the many ramifications and the intricate clauses of this agreement and treaty, which was ratified this year. Yet my hon. friend has the audacity to insinuate in this House that we are not playing the game with the Imperial connection.

Oh, hon. gentlemen opposite say to us, the conditions in Canada to-day are due to the fact that you rejected reciprocity; had you not rejected reciprocity, we would have had prosperity in this country to-day. That has been the attitude adopted by the hon. gentlemen opposite. Now my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition in nearly all his speeches in different parts of this country has used a phrase something like this, that the people should govern.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Hear, hear.

Mr. STEVENS: Well, I ask him who rejected the reciprocity agreement that my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) and the late Mr. William Paterson framed at Washington, and brought humbly back to this Parliament in 1911, and which was before this Parliament and debated throughout the length and breadth of this country for months. Parliament then adjourned, the Prime Minister going to the Old Country. On coming back, he re-asssembled Parliament, and finding that he could not pass part of the reciprocity agreement he appealed to the people on the one sole issue of reciprocity, and the people rejected reciprocity by an overwhelming vote. My hon. friend the leader of the Opposition says that we ought to appeal to the people. Now if there is one thing upon which we have a clear-cut mandate from the people, it is that we must not tamper with the proposed reciprocity agreement.

My hon. friend the leader of the Opposition says: Let us have a tariff for revenue only. I have noted repeatedly, Mr. Speaker, in debates in this House that when an hon. gentleman puts forward an opinion or a definition some hon. gentlemen question it; they brush it aside, by turning a sharp corner, or in some way or other. So I decided some time ago to hunt up a definition of "tariff" from an authority they would accept, and I happen to have it now in my hand. I have taken this definition from the Encyclopaedia Britannica, and I do not think anybody will accuse me of being a partisan in doing that. I invite my hon. friend, who to-night for the first time since he has been leader of the party opposite has taken a stand on this issue, and who says, we stand for a tariff for revenue only, to listen to this definition of "tariff":

> Resort is made to tariffs, or import duties, partly to secure revenue, partly to affect the course of industry within a country. Strictly speaking, these two objects are inconsistent with each other; since a customs duty, in so far as it causes a domestic industry rather than a foreign industry to supply the market, ceases to be a source of revenue—

This will suit the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) very well.

> —but in a great number of cases the imposition of a duty causes only a partial displacement of the foreign supply, and hence brings some revenue from that which remains. This circumstance strengthens the hold of the protective system especially in countries where customs revenues are important sources of revenue, the combination of fiscal conveniences and of protection to home industry being a highly attractive one.
> Where tariff duties are imposed solely for revenue, an equivalent excise tax is imposed within the country, so as to put the domestic producer precisely on the footing of his foreign competitors; and tariffs so maintained are in complete conformity with the principles of free trade.

The reason I read this definition is for the purpose of showing to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the House that we on this side stand for a tariff which has for its underlying basic principle the protection of home industries. We hold that that protection should extend only so far as is necessary to maintain those industries in Canada. That is where we stand. My hon. friends say they want a tariff for revenue only. Now I will tell the House, and I submit that this cannot be gainsaid, what a tariff for revenue really is. My hon. friends angularily opposite, as they are termed, have that policy in their platform, and it is this: where you have a tariff for revenue only, you put on a moderate duty, but you put on precisely the same excise duty on the same goods manufactured within the country. If my hon. friends start on the policy of a tariff for revenue only, it will work in this way, and in this way only, if they accept the term that is accepted everywhere by all economists. Suppose they put a 30 per cent tariff on woollen goods. They must then put a 30 per cent excise tariff on woollen goods manufactured in Canada. Suppose they put $2 a ton on steel. Then they must pay $2 a ton excise on steel manufactured within Canada. So that virtually it wipes out all protection. As a matter of fact, the Prime Minister (Mr. Meighen) has been absolutely correct when he has stated time and time again that there are only two forms of tariff, one based upon the free trade principle, and the other upon the protective principle; and there is no other plane on which it can stand. It is true, according to the Encyclopaedia Britannica, that very often the two are in practice more or less merged, that is to say, they are designed for the purpose of raising revenue; and that is exactly where we stand on the principle of protection.

My hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), made a rather interesting statement the other day in his speech, which was supposed to be the official declaration of the Opposition. He said, in effect: "I have no use for protection at all and I never had. Not only that, but I emphasize the fact more than ever to-day that I have no use for protection; and if I had to choose between the two, I would choose a tariff based on free trade principles." That is what my hon. friend said, and he does not contradict my quotation. But he goes further than that, and this is where we get some interpretation of the policy of my hon. friends opposite. He says: "If any industry comes here hoping to become established by reason of an import duty, or protection, my advice to them is not to come, but to stay out." That is what he says. So that we have my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), standing on a revenue tariff and calling for an equal excise duty on every item that is represented in that tariff, and my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's declaring officially, on behalf of the Opposition, that he stands for a tariff based on the free trade principle. This is the nearest approach to a clear-cut declaration which we have had from hon. gentlemen opposite.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Now, I desire to turn my attention for a few moments to my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Crerar), who, I observe, has left the chamber. I should be glad if he were present, because I have a few things to say unto him. I advised my hon. friend this afternoon that I intended to make certain references to himself, and as I did not wish him to think that I wanted in any way to take advantage of any temporary absence of his, I gave him that notice of what I proposed to do.

An hon. MEMBER: He did not want to hear it.

Mr. STEVENS: I would rather have him present when I make these remarks, and as he is not here, I will withhold some of them until he returns. In the meantime, I shall proceed with other remarks in reference to the hon. gentleman. My hon. friend, in connection with his tariff position, makes the statement that the Prime Minister had taunted them with not moving their platform.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Here he is.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go to it.

Mr. STEVENS: I am pleased to note that my hon. friend from Marquette has returned to the chamber. Now, Mr. Speaker, this Parliament, since its birth, has followed all the traditional practices of the Mother of Parliaments in Great Britain, one of the most cherished principles of which is that of honour among the members. Members are allowed privileges based exclusively upon a sense of honour, and I think we cherish that tradition. At any rate, so far as my knowledge goes—and for twelve sessions I
10 p.m. have been a member of the House—these privileges enjoyed by hon. members have been very highly valued and very jealously safeguarded. My hon. friend, the other day, Sir, made what I think was perhaps the best speech he has delivered since he has been in this House, —save for two qualifications. My first qualification of that statement—and I shall deal with it at a later stage—is that the hon. member's arguments were based upon what I, at least, content to be a false premise. That, of course, is no reflection on him; he has a right to his views. The other qualification is in the fact that he made a charge which I think was unworthy of the hon. gentleman. Now, I am going to deal with the latter first, and then, with the indulgence of the House, I shall deal with the hon. gentleman's arguments on economic matters. I shall refer to my hon. friend's charge that the candidate of the Government in York-Sunbury had been appealing to the prejudices of the people in that constituency in a very base manner, and I shall read what Hansard reports as the statements made by my hon. friend and then I will read what my hon. friend exactly did say. After that, I purpose reading certain things to illustrate the effect of his unfortunate and exceedingly unfair, uncalled for, and baseless charge. I trust the House will be patient with me, because I consider this a matter of importance which should not pass without serious consideration and note. My hon. friend is reported in Hansard as having said:

On what platform is his candidate running in York-Sunbury at the present time?

Mr. LEMIEUX: I rise to a point of order. I do not wish to interfere with my hon. friend, and I take no exception to his reading from the Debates, but I should like to have the ruling of the Chair. Yesterday my hon. friend from Middlesex (Mr. Ross) was attempting to quote from Hansard, but was prevented by the Chair. I do not believe that the ruling given last night is very wise, because it is almost impossible to discuss a question intelligently if an hon. member is not to refer to what other hon. members have said during a debate of this importance.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The ruling had reference to a former debate.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I do not wish to prevent my hon. friend from reading from the Debates, but I want the ruling of the Chair to apply to both sides.

Mr. STEVENS: Before the Speaker gives his ruling, I should like to say a word to the point of order. My hon. friend is apparently not cognizant of the rule, which, if I mistake not, is that an hon. member may not refer to a previous debate in the same session; but he is privileged to refer to any previous speech in the same debate in which he is participating.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Steele): The point of order raised by the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Lemieux) is not well taken. Bourinot, at page 357, says:

Neither can an hon. member, in speaking, refer to anything said or done in a previous debate during the same session.

It will be seen that the authority here laid down does not preclude an hon. member from quoting from the same debate in which he is speaking.

Mr. STEVENS: To continue:

Does the tariff take a leading place in the discussion? Not according to the best information I get. My right hon. friend's candidate is running on a new—no, I will not say an altogether new, platform; it is an old platform of some of my hon. friends opposite. His candidate is saying privately to the Protestants of the constituency: I do not want any Catholic support; are you going to vote for the man whom the Catholics are voting for?

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Meighen: The hon. gentleman has made a very serious assertion. He will be good enough to support that assertion by quotation.

Mr. Crerar: I have no doubt that my right hon. friend can get witnesses to prove it.

Mr. Meighen: I never heard it.

Mr. Crerar: I accept at once my right hon. friend's statement; but I am stating what his candidate is saying down in York-Sunbury. And did not my right hon. friend within the past eight months, through his agents, approach the Catholic Minister of Public Works in New Brunswick with a view to having him come into his Government? Did he get that inspiration from my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards?

Mr. Meighen: Will the hon. gentleman repeat that statement, please? I did not quite catch it.

Mr. Crerar: Yes, I will repeat the statement did not my right hon. friend or some one representing him approach—

Some hon. members interrupted at this point and one hon. member said:

Somebody told somebody else.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Crerar: Did not my right hon. friend or some of the members of his Government—I will put it that definitely—approach the Minister of Public Works in New Brunswick with a view of having him come into the Administration?

Mr. Meighen: I want to state that that is absolutely false so far as I am concerned or so far as any one is concerned acting upon my authority.

Mr. Crerar: I at once, Mr. Speaker, again take my right hon. friend's word for it.

Mr. Meighen: I may tell my hon. friend as well that his previous assertion is denied categorically by the candidate and by every one in the county from whom I have heard.

Now that is the report that appears in Hansard. That report has been changed, that is not what my hon. friend said. My hon. friend in that report is represented as asking the Prime Minister a question. He has also changed—or the words have also been changed—as regards the time—; the two months is changed into eight months. Now I am going to read to the House exactly what my hon. friend did say and then I shall make a few comments:

Mr. Crerar: On what platform is my right hon. friend's candidate running in York-Sunbury at the present time? Does the tariff take a high place in the discussion? Not according to the best information I can get. My right hon. friend's candidate is running on a new—no I shall not say a new, platform; it is an old platform of my hon. friends opposite. His candidate in York-Sunbury is saying to the Protestants of the constituency: I do not want any Catholic support; are you going to vote for the man whom the Catholics are voting for? That is the position.

Then there is the part about interruptions and so on. I quote again:

Mr. Meighen: The hon. gentleman has made a very serious assertion. He will be good enough to support that assertion by quotation.

Then the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crerar) goes on:

I have no doubt that my right hon. friend can get a score of witnesses to prove it.

Mr. Meighen: I never heard of it.

Mr. Crerar: My right hon. friend, perhaps, has not heard it, but I am stating what his candidate is saying down in York-Sunbury.

Then he goes on to the other reference which I shall read later. What I wish to say to my hon. friend is this: He entered into a matter of controversy with the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister gave a categorical denial to the statement. It was in the form of a direct charge against the Government. My hon. friend corrected his speech in the Hansard room, and on Hansard it appears changed in substance from what appears in the transcript of the notes of the reporter. I shall read the second part which, in my estimation, is worse a great deal than the first.

An hon. MEMBER: Who changed it?

Mr. STEVENS: The speech was corrected by the hon. member for Marquette himself.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. STEVENS (reading):

Within the past two months—

Now, I want hon. members to follow me—

Within the past two months my right hon. friend, through his agents, also approached the Catholic Minister of Public Works in New Brunswick with a view to having him come into his Government.

A positive statement.

Did he get that inspiration from my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards)?

Mr. Meighen: Will the hon. gentleman repeat that statement, please? I did not quite catch it.

Mr. Crerar: Yes, I will repeat the statement: that my right hon. friend or someone representing him approached—

Then there was some interruption and he goes on again:

My right hon. friend, or some of the members of his Government—I will put it that definitely—approached the Minister of Public Works in New Brunswick with a view of having him come into the Administration.

Now on Hansard it appears as an innocent little question which makes the Prime Minister's denial somewhat absurd. But it was a positive statement by my hon. friend on his responsibility as a member of this House that the Prime Minister had approached this individual in New Brunswick. The Prime Minister gave a categorical and positive denial to it:

Mr. Meighen: I want to state that that is absolutely false so far as I am concerned or so far as anyone is concerned acting upon my authority.

Mr. Crerar: I must at once, Mr. Speaker, take my right hon. friend's word for it.

Mr. Meighen: I may tell my hon. friend as well that his previous assertion is denied categorically by the candidate and by everyone in the county from whom I have heard.

This is not a small thing. It is a very serious thing for any hon. gentleman to take advantage of the confidence placed in him in allowing him to make any slight correction or changes in his speech, other than grammatical errors, which I am sure would be highly appreciated by the hon. member for Maple Creek (Mr. Maharg).

Some hon. MEMBERS: Shame.

Mr. STEVENS: I say—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Shame.

Mr. STEVENS: I say—

An hon. MEMBER: Take it back.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Shame.

Mr. STEVENS: I say, Mr. Speaker, it is a very serious matter for any hon. gentleman to change the substance of his speech, especially on a matter that is in controversy. Now I have a wire the Prime Minister sent to Mr. Hanson—

Mr. CRERAR: If my hon. friend will permit me. He has made a rather serious reflection on me and one that is not at all warranted by the facts. There was considerable uproar in the chamber here when I was addressing those particular remarks to the House. I submit to you, Sir, and to the House, that I have not changed in substance at all the statement I made.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, I am prepared on my responsibility as a member of this House to make the statement that what I read as being what my hon. friend said is exactly what was transcribed from the notes of the reporter; and I make this further statement that my hon. friend corrected his speech. I make the further statement that the speech as it appears in Hansard is not, in substance, in accordance with that my hon. friend said.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. STEVENS: Now I have just one further statement to make—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. STEVENS: I was just going to say this—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. STEVENS: The change in the substance to which I refer—and my hon. friend will desire to have this—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, I was completing the sentence: The change in the substance to which I have referred is—

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle): I rise to a point of order.

Mr. STEVENS: I am simply making—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle): My hon. friend is bound to accept the statement of an hon. member as to what he said.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Steele): The hon. gentleman must accept the statement of another hon. member.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Take it back.

Mr. STEVENS: If my hon. friends will wait a moment until I complete the sentence—

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. STEVENS: I made the statement, Mr. Speaker, that the speech was changed in substance to this extent—and this is what I want my hon. friend to catch—that he changed what was a statement into a question.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. STEVENS: I am perfectly in order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. STEVENS: That he changed what was in the form of a definite statement, which I have read, into the form of a question. Now, my hon. friend may take the ground that that is not a change in substance. I have the opinion that it is, and what I wish to say is this, that in so far as it was a matter of controversy between the hon. gentleman and the right hon. Prime Minister no change should have been made whatever, and no hon. gentleman has a right to make such a change.

Mr. CRERAR: Will my hon. friend permit me? At the time I was speaking there was such an uproar in the House—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. CRERAR: I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, and I submit to this House that I made no change in substance in the correction of the report of my speech. In the taking down of the notes the reporter, probably due to the disturbance in the House—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. CRERAR:—did not get the exact words I stated.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CRERAR: Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to take the jibes of my hon. friends opposite. They can take their medicine once in a while surely.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. CRERAR: I have stated that I made no change, and I think my reputation in this House is well enough known for my hon. friend to be aware that I do not do that sort of thing.

An hon. MEMBER: Got him on the hip.

Mr. CAHILL: Who has got it on the hip?

Mr. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to submit to the regular procedure of this House. My hon. friend states that he did not make any changes in his speech? Am I right?

Mr. McMASTER: In substance.

Mr. CRERAR: I say this, Mr. Speaker, that I made no change whatever in substance in my speech.

Mr. STEVENS: Will my hon. friend—

Mr. CRERAR: Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend will permit me?

Mr. STEVENS: I will send him over the copy, and if he will say he made no corrections I will take his word for it. That is fair.

Mr. CRERAR: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Who has the floor?

Mr. CRERAR: Mr. Speaker, what my hon. friend has sent over to me is not a transcript of the reporter's notes at all, but is something that his typist has prepared for him. Perhaps my hon. friend will permit me to say one word further? I did make some changes in my speech—changes that are ordinarily made by members in their speeches—and to the best of my judgment I put my remarks in the words in which I expressed them. There was such a hubbub in the House at the time I was speaking that the reporter did not put in the form of a question what I had stated in that form.

Mr. STEVENS: Perhaps the hon. gentleman will send back the notes that he refuses to look over? I am simply stating the fact, that this is an exact copy of the original transcript of the notes, with the changes marked thereon. My hon. friend says that he did not make those changes. I am bound to accept his word. But I must say, Mr. Speaker, that whoever did make those changes was indeed trespassing very seriously upon the customs and the high privileges of this House.

Let me give my hon. friend very briefly some of the results of the seeds of dissension that he sowed. Let him remember that the Prime Minister categorically denied those statements. The hon. member gave them to the House, based upon a foundationless rumour which he seized with avidity and dragged into this debate, and already the result is the sowing of racial and religious prejudice throughout the country. The hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret) who is associated with Le Canada will find on the front page of his paper this article—but before I quote it I would appeal to such hon. gentlemen from the province of Quebec as the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe), the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Lemieux), the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Béland)—if he were in his seat, the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil)—hon. gentlemen who have been in this House for many years, and I would ask them if they have ever known me during my twelve years as a member to utter one single sentence derogatory of the Province of Quebec? They never have. I appreciate the high stand they take usually. But what I deplore is this report, based upon the statement of a leader of a political group, which is sent broadcast throughout the province of Quebec, and can only result in perpetuating the lack of understanding between the two races. This is the article in Le Canada of May 18, 1921:

A Good Subject for Meditation by the Electors of Yamaska

What will the electors of Yamaska think when they learn that the candidate of Mr. Meighen in York-Sunbury has declared on all his platforms that he refuses the support of the Catholic electorate. Can it be that Dr. J. W. Edwards, member for Frontenac, has inspired Mr. Meighen's candidate?

The Honourable Mr. Crerar practically stated in his speech on the Budget yesterday that Mr. Meighen's candidate is fighting his election in York-Sunbury upon the backs of the Catholics.

From a despatch of the Canadian Press we extract the following statements of Hon. Mr. Crerar in the Chamber yesterday:

And this is the extract:

In York-Sunbury, declared Mr. Crerar, the candidate of my hon. friend, Mr. Meighen, stated to the Protestants of the county: "I do not wish the support of Catholics. Are you going to vote for the man whom the Catholics are voting for?"

Then it completes the extract from the hon. member's speech. My hon. friend comes from the broad West where we have no religious distinctions, and yet seizing upon an idle and false rumour he brings it into the debate and by hurling it across the floor at the Prime Minister, succeeds in getting it into Yamaska, where it is calculated to defeat the Government's candidate. Moreover, it is a reflection upon an honourable citizen, Mr. Hanson. The Prime Minister wired to Mr. Hanson:

Mr. Crerar stated in Parliament yesterday that you were saying privately to the Protestants of the constituency that you did not want any Caholic support and asking them if they were going to vote for a man for whom the Catholics are voting. Please wire me the facts as to this.

To this Mr. Hanson replied:

Statements made by Mr. Crerar as to my attitude towards Catholic vote are entirely without foundation in fact. Would esteem it great favour if you would give my absolute and unqualified denial to same.

Now, let me tell the hon. gentleman just exactly how Mr. Hanson has treated his candidate. On platform after platform Mr. Hanson has stated that he had known his opponent for eighteen years and considers him one of the most honourable men in the province. Mr. Hanson has eulogized the hon. gentleman's candidate, and this is the treatment we get in return. As I said a moment ago, this is an attempt to stir up, for the advantage of his own candidate in another county, racial and religious prejudice at the expense of an honourable and respected private citizen.

Now, let me turn to the tariff question. My hon. friend made certain statements in the House the other day to which I wish to refer briefly. For instance, in denouncing the protective principle in the tariff he said that from 1881 to 1917 the number of agricultural implement factories was reduced from 234 to 90; boot and shoe factories from 4,000 to 185 and woollen factories from 1,994 to 80; and on these figures he based an argument that protection was destroying industry. Let me give to the House briefly some figures in this regard—and this will indicate the unsoundness of the economic arguments of my hon. friend. He poses as an economist, as a super-business man; I am going to show the House and show him that some of his economic arguments have mighty little foundation in fact. In the first place, he quoted from the census book, and what do you think he did? He gave as the figures in respect to woollen factories, the figures which come under the head "Tailors and Tailoring," the number of such institutions in 1881 being given as 1,994. What are the facts? Let us see what the output of these industries has been; that is the real test of the progress of an industry. In 1880 the value of the products of the agricultural implement industry in Canada was $4,400,000; in 1890, it was $9,597,000; in 1919 it was $37,700,000. Let us take woollen goods: in 1880 the value of the output was $8,100,000; in 1900, $7,000,000; in 1919, $27,000,000. That is the extent of the increase which took place under the system of protection. Where, then is my hon. friend's argument? He contends that because there were 1,994 tailor shops in Canada in 1881 and the number of woollen mills is what it is to-day, the whole industry has been going to the bow-wows.

What did the hon. gentleman quote in respect to the boot and shoe industry? Every cobbler shop in Canada. In the figures he gave from the census report he included three boot and shoe factories as operating in Caribou in 1880! In the census report the figures are given covering all the shoemakers and shoe repairers in Canada, numbering about 4,000. Now here are some of the facts. In 1880 there was capital invested in the boot and shoe industry in Canada amounting to over $6,400,000; in 1900, $11,000,000; in 1918, $33,000,000. The value of the product was as follows: in 1880, $17,000,000; in 1900, $18,000,000; in 1918, $46,000,000. These are the figures that count. The hon. gentleman sought to base an argument yesterday on the number of boot and shoe factories and stores in 1881 compared with the number to-day and to show that this industry was vanishing under the protective system. I need not go into any further detail on that score.

The hon. gentleman makes an indictment of the agricultural implement industry of Canada, and what is his indictment? It is that they sell cheaper abroad—a contention which is repeated and reiterated time after time and year after year in this House—and that they will not sell their products to the United Grain Growers. I assume that if I can refute my hon. friend's arguments on these two points, his condemnation of the agricultural implement industry is proved to be without foundation. In regard to the first point, I have under my hand a statement signed by the Massey-Harris Company giving the figures with regard to the selling prices of binders, mowers and hay rakes in various countries last year. This document was secured by me some months ago for the purpose of looking into the charge that had been made. Now, these are the figures for 1920, in respect to an 8-foot binder, delivered: Ontario, $286; Regina, $309; Great Britain, $408, on current exchange; Australia, $528; Argentina, $513. Now, let us take the prices for mowers: Ontario, $100; Regina, $105; Great Britain, $166.85; Australia, $170.40; Argentina, $217—the Argentina figures are for payment in gold. Then, these are the prices for a 10-foot dump-rake: Ontario, $58; Regina, $65; Great Britain, $84.55; Australia, $92.40; Argentina, $132. These figures are accurate in every detail, and the Massey-Harris Company make a declaration that they have never under any occasion sold for export at a lower price than that at which they sold in the home market. In the face of these statements, which can be verified at any time, why do my hon. friends persist in maligning and slandering the Canadian agricultural implement industry?

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): May I ask my hon. friend a question? He will see that I am seeking the light. Does he mean to indicate his opinion to this House that protected industries in any given country do not sell cheaper abroad?

Mr. STEVENS: I am making no hypothetical declarations at all. I am giving the exact facts.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): Will my hon. friend answer that question?

Mr. STEVENS: I am prepared to debate at any time—I would do it now were the occasion opportune—the question of free trade with my hon. friend.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): I would ask my hon. friend another question. What does he mean by dumping?

Mr. STEVENS: What do I mean by dumping?

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): Is not that selling cheaper abroad?

Mr. STEVENS: This is what we mean by dumping; I will give my hon. friend a concrete example.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): Selling cheaper abroad.

Mr. STEVENS: Will my hon. friend be patient and let me answer his question? My hon. friend does not want an answer; he does not like to be answered. So far as dumping is concerned, this is the fact: as regards Canada, it chiefly affects United States and Canadian trade. In the United States they have immense factories with a tremendous market and with a highly organized business; in Canada we have a small market and not such a highly organized business. The large American concern will, for the sake of breaking the Canadian market and breaking the Canadian industry, sell goods in Canada at a loss. That is what is meant by dumping; they have done it and did do it until my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's introduced an anti-dumping law—and they would do it again if my hon. friends came into office and carried out their platform.

My hon. friend has caused me to digress a little from the point with which I was dealing. The second charge made by the hon. member for Marquette against the agricultural implement manufacturers is that they will not sell to the United Grain Growers. The United Grain Growers are a large institution; they sold last year about $6,000,000 worth of goods of various kinds, which I intend to deal with in a moment. It has been stated during this debate that the Canadian implement manufacturers will not sell agricultural implements to the Grain Growers. Well, the Massey-Harris Company—and the same applies to many of the other agricultural implement manufacturers—for a period of sixty years have been building up an organization consisting of repair stations, distribution depots, salesmen, experts to set up binders and other machinery. All over the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific, particularly on the prairies, large warehouses have been built, clerical staffs established and a distribution system put into effect, and they have taken a very great pride in the service they render. My hon. friend's company went to that concern and to others, and said to them: We will buy from you if you will sell to us direct from your factory. In other words, they said: If you will put your whole distributing organization out of business we will buy from you—because that would inevitably follow. My hon. friend shakes his head. Does he mean to tell me that that is not the result? Does he mean to tell me that if the Massey-Harris Company sold their machinery to him in all the places where he and his company have storehouses and depots the depots of the Massey-Harris Company would not have to go out of business? Not only would they go out of business, but my hon. friend would not commit himself to handle only Massey-Harris goods; he would handle any goods, and that is his right. Then, where would the Massey-Harris interests go? Who would look after them? This would absolutely ruin their whole system.

I have another thing to say to my hon. friend and to his secretary, Mr. Rice Jones. When he was examined under oath here in 1919, Mr. Rice Jones said: "We handle no binders." "Why do you not handle binders?" They may now, but they did not then. He replied, "Because if we handle binders, we have to keep a man to go out and set them up, because the average farmer does not know how to do that." He would not handle binders because he would have to give service with the sale of the binders. They ask the Massey Harris Company to maintain a great service system, thousands of men throughout Canada selling their binders; but they ask that company to allow them to purchase all other classes of machinery from the factory in Toronto. A more unfair proposition could not be imagined, and my hon. friend has no right whatever to hurl at the manufacturers the statement that they refused to sell to him, because they have never refused to sell to him on reasonable terms.

My hon. friend has another complaint. Not he, perhaps, but many of his party, time after time in this House some years ago, in most doleful tones inveighed against the great lumber combines in the West. How often have we heard them talk about lumber combines. What did they do?

The United Grain Growers' Grain Company, one of the largest institutions in Canada, undertook to set up a saw-mill of their own; they bought a timber limit and they set up a saw-mill, the whole investment, according to my hon. friend, being $850,000. I have under my hand the annual report for 1920 of the United Grain Growers, Limited, and I find that they report for last year a loss of $97,000 on operations, without any charge for capital. With a capital of $850,000, you have an additional charge of 8 per cent or, say $68,000, making a total loss of $165,000. Yet these are the gentlemen who want to run the country. I notice one of the hon. gentlemen angularly opposite laughed in a rather sarcastic manner when I made this statement. Perhaps he will laugh when I read the words in the address of his president at the annual meeting of the United Grain Growers. Who is his president? The address of the president in this little booklet is signed, "T. A. Crerar, president." This is what he says. These are not my words; these are the words given to the shareholders at the annual meeting in December last:

At the end of December, a year ago the operations—

He was dealing with the United Grain Growers Sawmills, Ltd.

—showed a loss of slighly over $97,000, this including several large items written off the books entirely—

I want hon. gentlemen to listen to this.

—particularly an expenditure of $14,000 incured in building a logging railway, which a change in the plan of operation rendered largely useless.

Would we not have a glorious howl in this House if hon. gentlemen opposite found that the Government had spent $14,000 on a railway which they afterwards found was useless? My hon. friend goes on to say that the investment is $850,000, and proceeds:

It may be recalled that when this enterprise was undertaken it was with a view of getting into a position to ship carlots of lumber direct to farmers and farmers' associations, reducing thereby the expense of the middleman.

How they keep harping on the middleman! I want the House to follow this and see how they worked this out in practice without the middleman.

It may as well be admitted that this method of operation offers very little promise of success, and your Board is now inclined to the view that it will be necessary for the company to establish a number of retail yards at suitable points where sufficient promise of success offers.

The eternal cry from that corner of the chamber for the last two years has been: "Do away with the middleman." They come down with a loss of about $100,000 on the operation of their saw-mill, and they say: "We have come to the conclusion that we must put in the retail yard or the middleman." It was the fact that private dealers were able to undersell them. Let us see what Mr. Rice Jones says in his report as general manager. This is what he says:

Our Lumber and Builders' Supplies Department have been completely reorganised. With the dropping off in the demand for lumber, it was found impossible to maintain the service which was being given by this department in preparing plans and specifications without incurring a heavy loss. Consequently, the lumber department has been linked up with the supply department and a minimum staff only retained.

And so on. But that is not all. Not only have my hon. friends opposite failed in the transaction, but they show a loss in this statement of $52,000 in 1920 on a turnover of sales of farm machinery and supplies of $6,900,000. The year before they showed a loss of $59,000. It is no wonder that hon. gentlemen will be asking: "Where do they get the money? If they lose on the main transactions in this way, how do they carry on?" I told the House in 1919 how they carried on. They carry on out of the money they get in overages in their elevators. What are these overages? In a book called "Deep Furrows"—and I commend it to any hon. member who wishes to get an inside view of the institution,—this picture is given. It pictures two big bronzed men riding to an elevator with loads of wheat and one man meets the other man. These two men start to talk about the iniquity of the elevator companies. These men were Mr. Motherwell and Mr. Crerar and there started the birth of this great movement. The birth of the movement was to stop the iniquitous dockage by the elevator companies in the Prairie Provinces. They got into the game; they got large subscriptions; they worked up class sentiment as they are doing today. With what result? First they leased an elevator for, I think, $85,000 a year, and out of that elevator year after year they are taking fees amounting to about 13 per cent on the capital. They get the screenings; but over and above that, they have been getting from dockages of farmers' wheat hundreds of thousands of dollars annually, out of dockages, which I claimed two years ago, were absolutely illegal not only for them but for others. I showed from a report of the Price Waterhouse Company that they were not only illegal but immoral from the standpoint of business morals and ethics. Out of dockages they got $15,000,000, taken from the pockets of the farmers of the Prairie Provinces over a space of a few years. I put on the Order Paper a resolution asking that this $15,000,000 be paid into the general exchequer of the country by the elevator companies. What did my hon. friends opposite do? Supported by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar) and other gentlemen, they induced the hon. senior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) who was then Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce, to amend the Grain Act to cover up this nefarious business. Instead of standing by their declared policy of protecting the farmer against dockage, they perpetuated the system; they made it law, so that I think I am not mistaken that last year or the year before they took something like $300,000 in dockages. This is the way in which they make up their loss. One year they had a loss of some $80,000 on the Grain Growers' Guide. This was paid out of the farmer's pocket in dockages. "Oh," but they will say—my hon. friend from Mackenzie (Mr. Reid) in one case said it—"they are all members of the society." They are nothing of the kind. They buy grain from every farmer they can buy it from, and there are only 45,000 members in the three Prairie Provinces, if I am not mistaken. They buy grain from whoever will sell it to them, and that grain is docked at these elevators, including the Grain Growers' elevators, and illegal profits are made by the elevator companies at the expense of the grain growers of the prairies. That is the way they cover up losses made in operations on legitimate business. These are the hon. gentlemen who are asking this country to put them on the treasury benches and into power so that they can carry on the affairs of this country.

Mr. CRERAR: Is it not a fact that the Government Terminal Elevator at the head of the lakes had had greater overages than any other terminal elevator at that point? If that is true, has not this Government been defrauding the western farmers?

Mr. STEVENS: Because my hon. friend had an amendment made a year or so ago legalizing ¼ of 1 per cent dockage. I told this House plainly in 1919 that I considered this whole business of dockage was nothing more or less than stealing from the farmers of the prairie, and I hold the same view to-day. I hold further that this House was not well advised when it put through that amendment at the request of my hon. friend the leader of the Agrarian party and his supporters in the House. It is a complete reversal of their policy, an absolute abandonment of their principles, and all the purpose it serves is to cover up losses in other branches of the company's operations. If that privilege of deducting dockage from the farmers were taken away, the whole institution would fall like a pack of cards. I have detained the House much longer than I have intended, but interruptions have made it necessary for me to continue a short while longer.

The Government proposals in this Budget are very simple. Certain increases are proposed in internal taxation. My hon. friends opposite say that this bears heavily on the poor man. If they would examine these proposals, they would find that the heaviest increase is in the tax on spirits. Now I do not know that any one is worrying about the poor man's spirits; I do not think the poor man is himself. Food is exempt very largely, with the exception of package food. We expect to get our revenue from customs, excise, post office, and from other sources. My hon. friends directly opposite and my hon. friends angularly opposite have proposed to cut off a very serious amount of the customs tariff, and they offer to this House absolutely nothing in the place thereof. We stand on a clear-cut definite policy of a tariff of moderate protection, to the extent that is necessary to maintain the industries in Canada in a state of prosperity. That is a simple clear proposition; that is where we stand, and where we propose to stand. My hon. friends opposite talk about direct taxation, but in all the years they have been there they have not offered one single proposal of a new internal or excise tax except one and that is a tax on the unimproved value of land. I must take a moment to speak on that.

My hon. friend the leader of the Agrarian party proposed it again the other day. What does he mean by a tax on the unimproved value of land? He did not explain the tax the other day; he skated all round it, but did not explain it. According to his platform, which I have here, it means a tax on land in Canada with improvement exempt. If you have a tax of that kind, the farmers of this country will pay a very large portion of it—and perhaps that would be as well. My hon. friend gave an illustration of what he means by a tax on land, and I saw at once what he was driving at. He was trying to show the farmers of the West that if he and his friends came into office he would put the tax on the cities. His illustration was this: There are two lots owned by one man. The man builds an apartment house on one lot, while the other lot is vacant. He said that by the building of that apartment house you increased the value of the vacant lot, and what we mean to tax, he said, is the increased value of that vacant lot. Now that is taxing the unearned increment, and not the unimproved value of the land. My hon. friend is mixed in his definitions in these various matters that he undertakes to explain with such profound authority. I repeat, that is taxing the unearned increment, and not taxing in any sense the unimproved value of the land. My hon. friend will probably say: We intend to tax the unimproved wild lands. How much does he expect to get from taxing the wild lands in Canada? It is a joke. The estimate of the best actuaries in Canada is that a 1 per cent tax on all the lands in Canada, exclusive of improvements—and that is their proposal—would bring in $80,000,000. Who would stand for a tax on all the lands in Canada? The first people would be the hon. gentleman's own followers. How many cities in Canada can stand an additional tax on land? We tried a tax on unimproved land in Vancouver; that is, we exempted all improvements; it pretty nearly ruined the exchequer of the city of Vancouver, and we had to go back to a tax on improvements. The same thing has been tried in Alberta. Those who have tried it anywhere know the fallacy of the whole suggestion. In any case we have the municipal and provincial authorities, and this is a field of taxation which is exclusively theirs, perhaps not constitutionally, but certainly by practice. When my hon. friend seeks to pull the wool over the eyes of his followers on the prairies, he and they will have a sad awakening if the day comes when my hon. friends angularly opposite will be responsible for putting that tax in operation.

I want to make one further reference, and it is to a matter altogether apart from these debatable and controversial subjects. I refer to the appointment of a Canadian representative at Washington. I confess to the House that my mind perhaps was not so nimble as that of the hon. member for Durham (Mr. Rowell), nor was I so well informed in international affairs as the right hon. member for King's (Sir Robert Borden), both of whom have so ably put this matter before the House. After thinking the matter over carefully, I have come to the conclusion that the Government should not delay longer in appointing a Canadian representative at Washington, and I will tell the House why. The matter is of supreme importance, and I think that I should not lose this opportunity of making a reference to it. My reason for desiring this appointment to be made without delay is that there never was a time in the history of the world when things were in such a precarious condition as they are in to-day. The League of Nations has been formed, it is true, and I think we all hope that the League of Nations may prosper, but we all recognize the difficulties of diverse nations, races, views, and interests, getting together in the form of a League of Nations. I think we all will agree on this also, that the commonwealth of the British Empire, this group of autonomous nations within one Empire, together with the great republic to the south, would form a magnificent foundation for a permanent league of nations. While there are those who are endeavouring to cause division and differences between the Mother Land and the United States, I think Canada is peculiarly fitted geographically and by the genius of her people to bring together the Mother Land and the United States. Some hon. gentlemen may say: Let us do it by friendly commercial treaty or commercial arrangement. I say that the people of the United States are not concerned so much about our fiscal policy, any more than we are particularly concerned about theirs, except in a general way. What they are really concerned about, and what we are really concerned about, is the soul of the people, what we think of each other, and we know this: In all our aspirations and ambitions the United States and Canada think very, very closely alike, and we can interpret, I think, in a manner that no other nation can the views of the United States to the Mother Land and the views of the Mother Land to the United States. So I say to the Government, in conclusion, that in my judgment, they should hasten to fill this post at Washington so that Canada may fulfil the high destiny to which she is called.

Hon. CHARLES MURPHY (Russell): The hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat (Mr. Stevens), has re-affirmed his belief in protection as the correct fiscal policy for this country. My hon. friend will absolve me from the slightest intention of giving any offence if I say that the speech which he has made to-night will not change a single vote in this House; but, Mr. Speaker, that statement could not, with the same truth, be made with reference to the possible effect of the hon. gentleman's speech outside this House. And I will tell you why. A few months ago the hon. gentleman had charge of the Government campaign in the then Tory riding of West Peterborough. At different points in that riding the hon. gentleman made protectionist speeches precisely similar to the one to which you have just listened. And, Sir, what was the result? The people went forth from his meetings, there and then they left the ranks of the Tory party, they ranged themselves in solid array against the Tory candidate, and on election day they declared, by an overwhelming majority of their votes, that they did not believe in the fiscal doctrines preached by the hon. member for Vancouver and that they desired to be represented in this House, not by the Tory candidate, but by the hon. gentleman who now sits here as the Liberal member for West Peterborough (Mr. Gordon). In view of that result, Sir, you will understand that it may be regarded as not improbable that the speech delivered by the hon. gentleman to-night in this House will have an effect outside of this House the very reverse of that which it may produce here, but, one that will be exactly in line with the result of his speeches in the riding of West Peterborough.

Now, the hon. gentleman, in the course of his remarks, paid a good deal of attention to the speech delivered by my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) this afternoon, a speech, Mr. Speaker, which in point of vigour, logic, and comprehensive grasp of present conditions in Canada, has not, I venture to say without fear of contradiction, been surpassed in this debate. The member for Vancouver was very wrathy at my hon. leader for having dared to say that this Government is the child of the invisible power known as the big interests. Then he went on to challenge my hon. leader to name those interests. Well, if my hon. leader means the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, and if my hon. friend from Vancouver also means the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, then, Sir, before I resume my seat, I shall have proved that this Government is beyond question the creature of that organization, and I will defy any hon. gentleman on the other side of the House to gainsay the fact.

Then the hon. gentleman dealt with the leader of the Opposition's criticism of the railways owned by the Government, and of the personnel and the operations of the Government Board of Railway Directors. In that connection, the hon. gentleman said that there was no objection to bringing down in this House the fullest possible information with reference to the railways and to the Board of Directors. Well, Mr. Speaker, if your memory does not altogether fail you, that must have struck you as a very strange observation, coming from the hon. member in view of the fact that it is only a few weeks ago since a resolution moved from this side of the House, asking for just that kind of information, was voted down by hon. gentlemen opposite, including the member for Vancouver himself.

The hon. member also discussed what the leader of the Opposition had said with reference to the loans made to Roumania and Greece, and he waxed eloquent on that point. He declared that the contracts were not let by this Government, but were let in Paris. My hon. friend, if he desired to carry complete conviction to the members of the House, and to the public outside the House, did not go far enough. Possibly—possibly, I say, Mr. Speaker,—the contracts were let in Paris; but if my hon. friend desired the hon. gentlemen sitting on this side to believe that no gentleman interested in this Government, or very close to the members of the Cabinet, had anything to do with the letting of those contracts in Paris, then he should have gone on and told the House where a gentleman named Sifton—Sir Clifford Sifton—was, about the time these contracts were being let. He should also have gone on and informed the members of the House where a few other eminent Canadian captains of industry were about the same time. Had he done that, Mr. Speaker, he would have given to the House complete and unanswerable proof of the correctness of the statements made this afternoon by the leader of the Opposition.

My hon. friend echoed a complaint upon which those who are in the tadpole stage of politics have been very eloquent during recent months. My hon, friend, of course, has long since emerged from that stage. He complained that the leader of the Opposition had not moved his tariff platform, because he was afraid to put the party on record with reference to that platform. Mr. Speaker, how often is it necessary for us to go on record with reference to that platform? This party,—if it is to us on this side of the House that the hon. member was referring—were members of the convention that made and adopted that platform. This party voted for that platform. So that these statements made by hon. gentlemen opposite and by their friends throughout the country consist of the merest nonsense. This platform, after having been formally adopted at the great National 11 p.m. Liberal convention, by representatives of the whole Liberal party of the Dominion of Canada, is not, Sir, to be submitted to the House unless it were intended to trifle with the House and to waste its time. This platform is intended to be submitted to the whole people of Canada at the next general election, and when it is thus submitted to the entire electorate of the country, we on this side of the House have no doubt of the overwhelming majority of the people approving that platform. Then my hon. friend went on to censure the leader of the Opposition because of criticism offered by that hon. gentleman in regard to the Government's failure to bring down a measure of tariff reform. The hon. member for Vancouver said—and I took down his words—that it was "asinine to bring down a tariff measure now." Well, the only comment that I need make upon that, Mr. Speaker, is that, adopting the language of my hon. friend, the Government were asinine in saying in the speech from the Throne that they were going to bring down a measure of tariff reform. The language is not mine. The language is that of my hon. friend and I thank him for it. Applied to the Government it is most appropriate.

Then my hon. friend took up a statement made by the leader of the Opposition that the people should govern, and with a display of what he seemed to regard as cleverness he asked who rejected reciprocity? The answer, of course, is, the people rejected it. But, Sir, may I call the hon. gentlemen's attention to the fact that the party of which he is a member, and which he so consistently supports, have paid little or no attention to the will of the people as expressed with reference to that measure, because they have taken good care to grant piece-meal what our party proposed to grant at one time by a single piece of legislation. And, Sir, in this connection, as differentiating the two parties and marking the essential and eternal difference between Liberalism and Toryism, it must be remembered that had our late distinguished leader so willed it the reciprocity measure could have been put through Parliament by the adoption of closure but he said: No, we do not believe in coercion. We will not put this measure through by such means. We will never adopt closure while we are in power in this country. That, Sir, is a feature of the matter which should not be overlooked, and I mention it in case my hon. friend should have occasion to refer to the subject again.

Then the hon. gentleman directed his attention to my hon. friend the member for Marquette. He criticised him in rather severe terms and he challenged what my hon. friend had said with reference to the kind of canvass that is going on down in the constituency of York-Sunbury. He disputed the statement made the other day that the electors there are being asked to vote for the Government candidate on the ground that the Catholics are supporting the farmer candidate. In support of the denial of that statement by the Prime Minister the hon. gentleman read a telegram from the Tory candidate in the county of York-Sunbury. On that aspect of the dispute I do not wish to make any further observation. But the hon. gentleman also challenged the statement of the hon. member for Marquette with reference to an offer having been made to the Hon. P. J. Veniot, the Catholic representative in the Government of New Brunswick, to become a member of this Cabinet. The hon. gentleman laid much stress on the fact that the Prime Minister had categorically denied that statement, and he evoked the cheers of those around him by denouncing the hon. member for Marquette for having made it. Well, Sir, it happens that at this moment I am in a position to settle the dispute upon that point; and if I make no other contribution to the debate than the one that I am just about to make, then in all modesty I may aver that I will have rendered a public service to this country at the present time. The hon. member cited the denial of his leader that any offer had been made to the Hon. P. J. Veniot to become a member of this Government. Well, Sir, it so happens that the Canadian Press despatches to-day carry an article giving an interview with Mr.

Veniot, the man whom the hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House will admit is the man best qualified to tell what did take place with reference to the question under discussion. This is the article:

ST. JOHN, N.B., May, 19.

In reference to the claim of Hon. T. A. Crerar, leader of the Progressive in the House of Commons last Tuesday that Premier Meighen or his agents had approached "the Catholic Minister of Public Works in New Brunswick Hon. (P. J. Veniot), with a view to his coming into the Government," and Mr. Meighen's denial that any such offer had been made by him, or with his authority, Mr. Veniot is quoted in a special despatch to-day as stating:

"I would have preferred not to have discussed this matter, but in view of Premier Meighen's statement and the attempt made by the Conservative press to leave the impression that I sought the position instead of the position me, I feel, in justice to myself and my friends, I should break the silence maintained by me since first I was approached in December last with the request that I consider an offer to enter the Meighen Cabinet."

"Let me first say that I had no part in giving information on which certain questions asked in the House of Commons were based. I never authorized the use of my name in this connection."

"In view of all that has taken place in connection with this matter, I am, to say the least, surprised at the statement reported to have been made by the Prime Minister in the House on Tuesday last, when he left the impression that he knew absolutely nothing about any overtures made to me."

"The person who made the overtures to me presented to me a letter addressed to him and signed by Premier Meighen. * * * This letter showed that the Premier was in close touch with the situation, and, further, I may say that a certain other Cabinet Minister also wrote to this same person. It is scarcely necessary to add that the party who made the overtures is a strong and influential Conservative."

"I never sought the position, and my reply, dated January 11, 1921, can be produced to prove this when the proper time arrives. Should I ever aspire to fundamental"—

Evidently the word "fundamental" is a mistake.

—"honours, I would not attempt to obtain such honours by a base betrayal of my Liberal principles and the friends with whom I have been politically associated during the last thirty-five years. I still have faith in the grand old Liberal Party, and that faith cannot be shaken by any offers made by Premier Meighen and his friends."

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: May I ask my hon. friend a question? My hon. friend has read a letter of which I did not hear the whole, but the purport of which, if I understand it, is that Premier Meighen authorized some one to approach the gentleman who is referred to with an offer of a position in the Cabinet. Is that the purport of the letter?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Read it again.

[Mr. Murphy.]

Mr. MURPHY: I have no objection to my hon. friend asking a question, but in reply to his question I just want to say that I prefer not to be interrupted in my speech, and that this despatch—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MURPHY: I want to see who is laughing, because I can change that laugh in half a minute.

An hon. MEMBER: It will be changed pretty soon.

An hon. MEMBER: "The loud laugh denotes the vacant mind."

Mr. MURPHY: The despatch I have read tells exactly what was done in the language of Mr. Veniot and my hon. friend can see it for himself. Now on this point this document, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MEIGHEN: Would the hon. gentleman read the letter. I have not heard it and I would be glad indeed if he would read it?

Mr. MURPHY: I have read the despatch; the hon. gentleman was not in the House at the time. I desire to make some extended observations and I do not care to read it again.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MURPHY: I intend no discourtesy to the right hon. gentleman. It is not my fault that the right hon. gentleman was not here. He should have been here.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the hon. gentleman refuse to read it in my hearing?

Mr. MURPHY: No, I do not refuse to read Mr. Veniot's interview in the right hon. gentleman's hearing. That is not my reason for refusing to read it again. I have already read it, and the right hon gentleman should have been in his place to hear it.

In the course of this debate there have been various references to the right hon. gentleman's speech delivered a few days ago in this House. It was not my privilege to hear the right hon. gentleman, so I have been obliged to form my opinion of his speech by reading it, by hearing opin ions expressed about it, and by listening to a discussion of it here in the House. This afternoon my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition stated that in his opinion the lengthy speech of the right hon. gentleman in its duration of two and one-half hours did not contain a single human note. My impression is, Sir, that that is a correct description of the speech. It might have been an appropriate speech for the right hon. gentleman to deliver a few years ago when he was the chief slugger of the Borden Administration, but I submit it was not the kind of speech that we have a right to expect from the Prime Minister of Canada. I say, further, Sir, that there was neither dignity nor leadership in the speech, and that it was remarkable mostly for—

An hon. MEMBER: Slugging.

Mr. MURPHY: —for what it omitted rather than for what it contained. The right hon. gentleman devoted almost his entire time to an attack on members of the Opposition; but he had nothing to say about the question of unemployment or the remedy for it; he had nothing to say about the high cost of living or a measure of relief to reduce it; he had nothing to say about curbing public expenditures; nor had he anything to say about any policy to increase Canada's export trade.

Possibly, Sir, we have the key to the last omission in a report that appeared in this morning's Citizen, giving the substance of a speech delivered at Toronto last evening by Mr. Lloyd Harris, a friend of this Government and a gentleman who has occupied a very prominent place in the business life of this country. The despatch is as follows:

> Toronto, May 18th, Lloyd Harris, former Canadian Trade Commissioner, addressing the Canadian Confectionery, Biscuit and Chocolate Manufacturers at a banquet tonight which concluded the annual convention of the organization, said: "Canada's export trade in Great Britain was suffering because of our present political system. The Government is so inefficient," he said, "that it has less business understanding than a boy in the street."

And strangely enough, Sir, on the very day that the report of that speech appears there is given ocular demonstration to the members of this House and to visitors in the gallery that this business inefficiency even extends to the length of its being impossible for the Government to put two clocks on the walls of this chamber that will both tell the same time! As you will observe one is 10 minutes ahead of the other. And on the point of Government inefficiency it may also be observed that while my hon. friend from Vancouver (Mr. Stevens) did not specifically mention it, it may be assumed that he had Mr. Lloyd Harris' words in his mind when he strongly urged the Government to disregard the opinions of the hon. member for Durham (Mr. Rowell) and the right hon. member for King's, N.S. (Sir Robert Borden), and to hurry up and appoint a trade commissioner at Washington.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is not improbable that my opinion of the Budget, which has been more or less under discussion in this House for the past ten days, might be conjectured with a fair degree of accuracy, even if I refrained from giving expression to my views on the subject. However that may be, I deem it a duty that I owe to Parliament, to my constituents and to the country at large that I should state briefly and plainly what my position is, and at the same time make known the reasons for the vote that I intend to give upon the amendment that has been moved by my colleague the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding).

To the merest tyro in politics it is as clear as the noonday sun that this Budget was born of the necessities of the Government. In the Speech from the Throne at the opening of the session, as has been frequently said, a revision of the tariff was promised, but now when the Budget is brought down near the end of the session it does not contain the promised revision, and we are told that there will not be any revision of the tariff for some time to come. In other words, the Budget is the makeshift product of a makeshift government. For that very reason it has given fresh stimulus to the commercial unrest that a comprehensive and stable policy would be a prime factor in removing. Already merchants are protesting against some of its features that, in their application, are held to be injurious to the normal and proper conduct of business, and it is certain that as time passes this feeling will increase in intensity, just as the feeling against the luxury tax did, so that nobody need be surprised to see the Minister of Finance again recede from his position as he did on a former occasion. There can be no doubt, Sir, that, like the policeman in Gilbert and Sullivan's opera, the Finance Minister's lot "is not a happy one." Indeed, on this side of the House we should be disposed to extend greater sympathy to him if he had not given us such abundant proof that he is mentally constituted like the great majority of children, some women, and a considerable number of men, who do not realize the danger of certain tasks that they attempt.

Opposition members have sought to impress upon the Minister of Finance the futility of trying to re-establish equilibrium in our national business affairs by piling taxes upon taxes while useless expenditure goes on unchecked.

On that point I want to add a word.

It is true that the Minister of Finance and some of his colleagues in the Government preach economy, but, Sir, it is truer still that they do not practise economy. There has been a carnival of unnecessary expenditure in connection with the railways, the merchant marine, the militia, and the transfer of the mounted police from their natural and useful field of action in the West to an unnatural and an indefensibly expensive field of inaction in the East. Added to all this there have been new and hitherto unheard of schemes invented to spend public moneys, such as the housing scheme and the jobs created for and the financial rewards given to, scores upon scores of so-called Liberals who deserted their party in 1917. The net result is that no matter what amount may be raised by taxation, a large portion of it is put to uses from which the public as a whole derives no benefit whatever.

Dealing with this subject, the Toronto Globe in an editorial published a few months ago said:

> At a time when Britain has been cancelling debt at the rate of almost a hundred million dollars a month Canada is barely holding the net debt down to the figures shown at the completion of demobilization. The need for thrift in the various departments of the national service was never more urgent than it is to-day. There is no justification for the spending of public money at the rate of over $360,000,000 a year, even though that vast sum includes interest and sinking fund on the national debt. The Canadian people cannot stand taxation of almost $40 per year for every man, woman and child in the country. The load is intolerably great.

In view of the official figures, Sir, that have been made public since the editorial from which I have just quoted was written, the statement of the Globe has even greater weight to-day than it had when it was published a few months ago. But having regard to the forces behind this Government, it is, I fear, too much to expect that they will practice economy even if they desired to do so.

As a contrast, Mr. Speaker, with what has been their practice I am reminded of an incident that was told me to illustrate the spirit of thrift that animated Mr. Gladstone, the greatest of British statesmen.

A few years ago Mr. Lloyd George was showing me over the premises in Downing Street which he then occupied as Chancellor of the Exchequer. He directed my attention to a small plot of bare ground, possibly about fifty feet square, forming part of the government property immediately in the rear of his official residence. With a smile, he told me that Mr. Gladstone when Chancellor of the Exchequer had occasion to point out the same plot of ground to a friend and that the friend had suggested that it should be graded and sodded. Mr. Gladstone instantly turned and said: Sir, where is the money to come from? Merely to recall the incident, Mr. Speaker, is to illustrate, without any comment of mine, how sadly Mr. Gladstone would be out of place as a member of the present Government of Canada.

Hon. gentlemen who have preceded me on this side of the House have discussed the Government's Budget and its tax proposals in such detail that at this stage of the debate I do not think that anything could profitably be added to what they have said if I were to discuss any special features of the Government's policy. I will, therefore, confine my observations to a brief review of the tariff position taken by some hon. gentlemen opposite and then to an exposure of a few of the methods adopted by protectionists to attain their chief object is life, namely the fleecing of the Canadian public.

The hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Guthrie) who, I hope, is in the chamber at the moment, in his several tariff speeches during the present session paid a good deal of attention to the Opposition, and their attitude towards the tariff seemed to disturb my hon. friend. Well, Sir, as I listened to the hon. gentleman the thought occurred to me that what was really troubling him was not the present tariff attitude of the Opposition but the ghosts of some of his own former speeches on the tariff. In times past, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman took a very different attitude with regard to the tariff from that which he has recently taken in this House. I do not propose to go over all the tariff pronouncements made by my hon. friend, but, with perfect fairness to him I can indicate by a few references just where he stood upon the tariff a very short time ago and what he thought about the Government that then advocated a brand of protection similar to that which is advocated by the Government of which he is now a member.

When the Bill introduced by the Borden Government for the purpose of creating a tariff commission was under discussion in this House in February, 1912, the hon. gentleman took very strong exception to it.

After having described the Bill as "nothing more nor less than a cheap Yankee device of the Finance Minister copied from the United States, a device notoriously invented by the high protectionist party in the United States," and having further alleged that the Bill was "intended to sustain the glorious doctrine of protection," the hon. gentleman let in the light on his present political associates in a few biting sentences. They may be found on page 2604 of Hansard of 1912. They were as follows:

> This Bill cannot be said to be original in any respect. There are only two or three countries, I believe, in the world—only two or three at all events, of which I know—which have adopted tariff commissions and it is a strange thing that the countries which have adopted this method of procedure are the highest protected countries in the world. A tariff commission board seems to be a necessary adjunct to the high protective system, and I do not think I am going one jot beyond the truth when I say that this Bill is brought in here—almost the first important Bill of the the first session of this Parliament—as a quid pro quo for the Canadian manufacturers' Association to redeem the promises made to them for their generous and lavish support during the election on the 21st day of September last.

Having thus exposed how his present bedfellows proposed to reward their benefactors, the hon. gentleman declared that "the farmers of Ontario are not high protectionists," and then, having stated his own position in these words: "A tariff for revenue affords enough protection in my community and, in my opinion, it is sufficient"—the hon. gentleman wound up his excellent speech by moving that the Bill be given the six months' hoist.

Now Sir, the position taken on the occasion to which I have just referred by the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence was a fairly advanced position, but he made still greater progress toward freedom of trade during the following twelve months.

It will be remembered that there was a by-election in the constituency of South Bruce in the month of October, 1913. The hon. gentleman took part in that by-election and he delivered a number of stirring speeches in behalf of the successful Liberal candidate, the hon. member who at present represents South Bruce (Mr. Truax) in this chamber. One of the meetings that was addressed by the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence was held at Walkerton on October 23, 1913. At that meeting a speech was delivered in support of the Tory candidate by the present right hon. Prime Minister. It fell to the lot of my hon. friend, who is now a colleague of the Prime Minister, to reply to the latter on that occasion, and from the report of his speech published in the Toronto Globe on October 24, 1913, I take the following paragraphs:

> Every day since the present Government assumed office the cost of living had been increasing. Prices were being held up by the trusts and combines. There was a call in the country for a Government that was strong enough to break the flour combine, the canners' combine and the packers' combine.
> We want a Government that is strong enough to go to these people and say that the cost of living must be reduced. I will stand up in the House of Commons, or in the country, for free food for the people of Canada. Where was Mr. Meighen, too, on the duty on agricultural implements? He had moved a resolution in the House of Commons to have the duty on farming machinery reduced, but now that he was in the Government nothing was heard of it.

I call upon the Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Guthrie) to redeem the public promise that he made in the riding of South Bruce in the year 1913. I call upon him to stand up in this House and demand free food for the people of Canada. If he does not do so then out of his own mouth will he stand condemned; and by that broken pledge rather than by any mandate from the people, will he justify his continuing to hold a portfolio in this Cabinet of broken pledges.

During the past year the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Ballantyne) has made a number of speeches on the tariff in the country and in Parliament. His most recent speech on this subject was made in this debate a few days ago. In all his speeches the hon. gentleman has assumed a critical attitude towards the Liberal party and, stated in general terms, his position has been that he supported the tariff policy of Sir Wilfrid Laurier; that the Liberal party has abandoned that policy and substituted another which is not the one which Sir Wilfrid advocated, and that in consequence, the hon. gentleman cannot support the Liberal party. Now, Sir, let us examine these assertions.

Granting that the hon. gentleman supported the Liberal tariff policy down to the year 1911, I contend that his support of that policy ceased in that year. Recently I had occasion to read a list of names of certain Liberals in Montreal who opposed their party on the reciprocity issue in 1911. Included in the list there is a gentleman named Ballantyne, and upon making inquiry I was told by Montreal friends that the gentleman who is thus designated and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries are one and the same person. That being so, it is evident that the hon. gentleman broke with his party on the tariff issue in 1911 and that on fiscal matters he was not, from that time on, a follower of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Therefore, I cannot admit the claim set up by the hon. gentleman, based on the incorrect statement, that he was a consistent follower of Sir Wilfrid's tariff policy.

Now let us examine the other branch of his statement that the present tariff policy of the Liberal party is not the policy of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and that it is a substitute for the one advocated by the late leader of the Liberal party.

In the House of Commons on May 23, 1917, the Hon. Frank Oliver moved, and Mr. F. B. Carvell, then member for Carleton, N.B., seconded this resolution:

1. That wheat, wheat flour and all other products of wheat be placed upon the free list.
2. That farm implements and machinery, farm tractors, mining, flour and saw-mill machinery, and repairs for same, rough and partly dressed lumber, illuminating, lubricating and fuel oils, cement and fertilizers be added to the free list.
3. That staple foods and food products (other than wheat flour) domestic animals and foods therefor, be admitted into Canada free of duty when coming from and being the product of, any country admitting like Canadian articles into such country free of duty.
4. That substantial reductions be made in the general tariff on all articles imported into Canada, excepting luxuries.
5. That the British preference be increased to 50 per cent of the general tariff.

Upon reference to the Parliamentary records of the date mentioned, it will be found that Sir Wilfrid Laurier supported and voted for the resolution that I have just read. That resolution, therefore, embodies Sir Wilfrid's tariff policy on May 23, 1917.

Later on in the year 1917, in his election address of November of that year, Sir Wilfrid Laurier thus defined his position on the tariff:

In further mitigation of disadvantages to agricultural production, I would immediately remove the duties on agricultural implements and other essentials, as demanded by the western farmers. A general well-considered reform of the tariff for the purpose of helping Canadian production and relieving the Canadian consumer would also be an object of my administration.

These words make it plain that at the end of 1917 Sir Wilfrid stood on the same tariff platform as he had advocated earlier in that year.

The last public address delivered by Sir Wilfrid Laurier was his speech at the convention of the Eastern Ontario Liberal Association on January 14, 1919, just about a month before he died. The convention had adopted a comprehensive tariff resolution summarizing the Liberal party's record from 1893 to 1919, and declaring for a downward tariff revision in accordance with the resolution moved by Mr. Oliver and seconded by Mr. Carvell in the House on May 23, 1917, and in expressing his approval of the action of the convention, Sir Wilfrid spoke as follows:

In the resolution which was passed upon this subject at the convention of 1893, we declared against the principle of protection, and when we had the opportunity we lived up to our declaration. Sir, it has always been made a cause of reproach to us that when in office we did not adopt but were recreant to our declarations. Such a reproach cannot reach us. We were not recreant, we proceeded step by step towards the goal, always keeping it in view, never imposing a duty for protection's sake only, but always acting upon the principle or the basis of a tariff for revenue and revenue only. This was our policy in the past, it is our policy to-day and we have taken this occasion to reaffirm it. Sir, as I have already told you, the reproach is made to us that we were recreant to our declarations, to our policy. This reproach is well rebuked already by the declaration which you have passed this afternoon, reciting what we have done, reciting the many articles which we placed upon the free list, and reciting the many articles upon which we made a reduction of duty. But there are two features especially of our policy which will stand at all events, one will stand forever, and the other will soon be restored, I believe. The first policy which we affirmed upon succeeding to office was the policy of a British preference.

Then, after giving the details of the different stages in connection with the several increases of the British preference, Sir Wilfrid proceeded:

This was done in spite of all the opposition of the Conservative party.

And I might interrupt the reading of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's speech at this point by recalling that the hon. member for Vancouver, when he was speaking a little earlier this evening, said that, when there was any question of trading with Great Britain, that touched hon. gentlemen opposite on a tender spot. There can not have been much tenderness in that spot when the Liberal party introduced the British preference because, as Sir Wilfrid Laurier says, we adopted it "in spite of all the opposition of the Conservative party." Sir Wilfrid continued:

And upon what ground was their objection based? Simply upon the ground that we should have exacted preference for preference, that if we gave preference to the goods of Great Britain, that country should give us the preference for our goods. That was not our policy. We said: "No, we are not going to bargain with the Mother Country upon matters of that kind. We do it because we are British subjects, and because we believe in the principles of free trade. We believe also that it is for the good of the Canadian people that we should adopt that policy, and by that policy we stand to-day also. In your resolution your affirm that the black eye which was given by the present Government three years ago should be removed, and, Sir, if it is in our power to do so, we shall do so. At all events, we shall take the opportunity to bring the matter before Parliament at the next session."

Then a little later on in the same speech Sir Wilfrid Laurier dealt with the subject of reciprocity, and he said:

Sir, there was another feature of our policy another attempt that we made at freer trade—this time not with Great Britain, but with our neighbours, the American people. . . . Let me say here that if ever there was a policy which would have been beneficial to the Canadian people, it was the agreement which was made between Mr. Fielding and the Government of Mr. Taft.

However, that policy was defeated. It was met with the cry, of "no truck or trade with the Yankees," which was stupidity itself, and I am sorry to say they carried the country with it. But, Sir, revenge is sweet at all times, sweet even to me who profess to be a good Christian. Revenge is sweet, and do you know why? My revenge is in the attitude of the Conservative party who have proclaimed no truck or trade with the Yankees, and yet had to go to Washington, reluctantly, I admit, very reluctantly, but under the threat of the western farmers, who were asking for free wheat with the Americans, they had to go—the consequence is that to-day we have free wheat. But that is not all. They had to make another advance to the Americans, not for the farmers of the West this time, but for the farmers of the East. The growers of potatoes in Prince Edward Island and in New Brunswick made demands, and so those in power had to adopt the American offer of free potatoes; and so to-day the potatoes raised by eastern growers are free in the American market. There was still another step, and this one was taken, not by adopting the Washington legislation, but simply by action at Ottawa. They gave free tractors to the farmers of the West, this action being taken by Order in Council. I had no objection to such Order in Council. I would almost forgive them the others if they would pass more of this kind.

Now, what do these piece-meal advances in reciprocity mean? They are simply an admission that these people were acting stupidly—to put it no stronger than that—when they refused the offer made by the Americans of extended free trade with them. If there ever was anything stupid in the world surely it was the action of the Conservatives in 1911, in declaring that we Canadians, numbering less than 8,000,000 of people, should refuse to trade with the wealthiest nation on earth to-day, the American people.

He concluded that branch of his address with these words:

Of course, they have the satisfaction of having won office upon the stupid anti-reciprocity cry, but better lose ten times over than triumph by such methods as that. For we know that if there is one thing which, more than any other is conducive to good relations between nation and nation it is trade. And, though our commercial relations with our neighbours have not been as free or as friendly as I would like to have them, and though we lost a great opportunity in 1911 to make them more friendly than they were, still, thank Heaven, we have the satisfaction of knowing that for over a hundred years we have had no war with our American neighbours. That is a great triumph.

There, Sir, you have in Sir Wilfrid Laurier's own words his dying message as it were on the subject of the tariff. Now, after that, what did the Liberal party do? Did it, as the Minister of Marine and Fisheries claims, depart from the position taken by Sir Wilfrid and substitute another policy for his? It did nothing of the kind. At a great National Convention—such a convention, Mr. Speaker, by the way, as the Tories have never had the courage to hold—the Liberal party affirmed the policy which Sir Wilfrid had advocated by voice and vote, and it did so in a resolution whose terms are practically identical with those of the resolutions supported by Sir Wilfrid in 1917 and in January 1919. So that there may be no doubt on that point, I will read the resolution adopted by the National Liberal Convention in August 1919. It is as follows:

That the best interests of Canada demand that substantial reductions of the burdens of Customs taxation be made with a view to the accomplishing of two purposes of the highest importance: First: diminishing the very high cost of living which presses so severely on the masses of the people; Second: reducing the cost of the instruments of production in the industries based on the natural resources of the Dominion, the vigorous development of which is essential to the progress and prosperity of our country.

That, to these ends, wheat, wheat flour and all products of wheat; the principal articles of food; farm implements and machinery; farm tractors, mining, flour and saw-mill machinery and repair parts thereof; rough and partly dressed lumber; gasoline, illuminating, lubricating and fuel oils; nets, net-twines and fishermen's equipments; cements and fertilizers should be free from Customs duties, as well as the raw material entering into the same.

That a revision downwards of the tariff should be made whereby substantial reductions should be effected in the duties on wearing apparel and footwear, and on other articles of general consumption (other than luxuries), as well as on the raw material entering into the manufacture of the same.

That the British preference be increased to 50 per cent of the general tariff.

And the Liberal Party hereby pledges itself to implement by legislation the provision of this resolution when returned to power.

Now if the language of that resolution be compared with the resolutions publicly supported by Sir Wilfrid Laurier in 1917 and in January 1919, it will be found that the Liberal party to-day stands exactly where Sir Wilfrid stood up to the last hour of his life; and if my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries wants to see those who have abandoned the tariff policy of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, let him look first at the seats around him on his own side of the House, and then if he desire to complete the survey, let him look in his own mirror. Therefore, I say, let us hear no more of the silly talk that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries indulges in when he says that he follows the tariff policy of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and that we of the Liberal party have abandoned it.

Here let me interject, Mr. Speaker, an observation based on the presence in the Liberal party's tariff platform of a declaration in favour of increasing the British preference fifty per cent. Every time that is mentioned by anybody on this side of the House, up jumps the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and asks: Do you mean that? I have been wondering, Sir, whether the physical agility which the mention of that phrase, British preference, imparts to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has any relation to the fact that British manufacturers are famous the world over for making a superior quality of paint?

Now should my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries act on my suggestion and make a survey of the Liberal backsliders on his side of the House, one of the first upon whom his gaze will fall will be his colleague the hon. Minister of Immigration and Colonization (Mr. Calder). For that reason, and for other reasons as well, this hasty sketch of party fence-jumping would be minus its most attractive feature if the Minister of Immigration and Colonization were left out of the picture. Therefore, I will devote a few minutes to the hon. gentleman before I hasten on to the concluding part of my remarks.

In July last the hon. gentleman assisted at the birth of an alleged new party, and was one of the sponsors for the name adopted, the National Liberal and Conservative party—a double linchpin name. Following that event, it was announced that my hon. friend would be one of the members of the Tariff Commission, and that he would make a tour of the country with that body. For some reason that has not yet been disclosed, the hon. gentleman did not take up his duties with the Tariff Commission, but he did make a tour with the right hon. the Prime Minister. It was understood, Sir, at the time, that the Minister of Immigration and Colonization was to accompany his leader in the role of a political economist to preach sound fiscal doctrines in the West. You can therefore imagine the surprise, Mr. Speaker, of the right hon. the Prime Minister, and the vast amusement of the rest of the Dominion, when the Minister of Immigration and Colonization suddenly discarded the role of political economist and stood forth at a meeting one night in the character of an ornitholigist. declaring that in previous years, when he had spoken about the tariff, he had spoken as a parrot. Pursuing this new rôle, he endeavoured, but in vain, to convince his audience that he now spoke upon the tariff as an owl; and, on the authority of some of those who were present on more than one occasion, it can be asserted that the western people refused to take any more stock in the hon. gentleman as an ornithologist than they took in him as a political economist. Now, if the hon. gentleman is still pursuing his researches in ornithology, and if his analytical mind still occupies itself with a dissection of the elements of the party with which he is facing a lingering but inescapable fate, let me assist him in his studies by referring him to a few paragraphs in a speech delivered by Sir Richard Cartwright to the Young Liberal Club of Seaforth, Ontario, On October 27, 1886. These paragraphs are as follows:

> I want to say a few words to you on the proper relations which should subsist between Liberals and Conservatives. I want you to understand distinctly that in my opinion there is not necessarily, and ought not to be, any conflict between true Liberals and true Conservatives. According to my view of the situation Liberalism and Conservatism are rather the complement and supplement of each other than the necessary opposites. So to speak, I would say that Liberalism represents the masculine element, and Conservatism the feminine element in politics, all the world over. Don't let my Conservative friends here—if any such be present—for one moment suppose that with my views of the rights and functions and future place of women, when I speak of Conservatism as the feminine principle in politics, I do anything else than pay Conservatives an extremely high compliment. . . . We must recollect that it is the duty of the stronger to respect the weaker vessel. Both are wanted in a well ordered state if you can get them of the right sort. So I say to my young friends, be Conservative or Liberal, as you please; still I say also: Be one thing or the other. Let there be no halting between two opinions. If there be one thing I do abhor and detest, it is those Laodiceans of the commonwealth, those political mulattos who inherit the vices of both parties, and the virtues of neither; who seek to hunt with the hounds and run with the hare; who blow now hot and now cold; who, when political exigencies require it are ready to swear that black is white, that orange is green, that a circle is square, or a square is round, who are prepared to call themselves

Catholic-Protestants, or Protestant-Catholics, if they may thereby get a vote; whose principles are to have no principles; those men whose name is a lie in terms, which the other title of the animal is—"Liberal-Conservative." If any of that particular description of gentry object, Sir, I am willing to indulge them with another comparison. I revert to my original metaphor. If it be true, as I have intimated above, that Conservatism is the feminine and Liberalism the masculine element in politics, it follows, as a matter of course, that "Liberal-Conservative" represent the neuter gender—a barren, sterile, unfruitful generation, productive only of debts, of taxes, and of scandals.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Calder), will bring his acute mind to bear upon the sentences I have just quoted, he will readily see that in the case of himself and his associates who are banded together under a name which, as good old Sir Richard said, "is a lie in terms," history is merely repeating itself, and the same fate awaits those who have adopted this new camouflage as the one that overtook the party that was held up to ridicule before the Young Liberals of Seaforth in 1886. For the sake of old times, let me offer a suggestion to my hon. friend. If, before the inevitable happens, the hon. gentleman should by any chance have occasion to address meetings in Western Canada again, I would suggest that he abandon ornithology and appear as a zoologist. If he will do that, and if he will then tell his audiences that, when he is speaking on the tariff, he is speaking, not as a parrot, but as a chameleon, he will make the hit of his life.

12 m. Mr. Speaker, in the Budget, as well as in the speeches supporting it, the feature that stands out most prominently is the concern of the Government to protect the interests of the few at the expense of the interests of the many. Protection is thrust forward so aggressively that new meaning is given to the phrase that "it is a condition and not a theory" that the Canadian people have to face. What the condition is may be gauged by an exposure of some of the methods that have been employed to produce it, and that are now being used in an organized effort to make it permanent in this country.

Many of the members of the House, perhaps all, will have read occasional protests on the part of certain newspapers against the attempts of Mr. G. M. Murray, the former secretary of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, to control editorial opinion by the giving or withholding of advertisements. How that gentleman has been operating is not so well known, and as his operations are financed by the beneficiaries of protection, and are designed for the sole purpose of stifling or corrupting public opinion for the benefit of those who enjoy protection, it is in the public interest that the character and extent of these operations be made known. In general outline, that is what I now propose to do.

For six months or more prior to his resignation as secretary of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, Mr. Murray served on a number of Government boards and commissions. In reality, his services were loaned to the Government, because he was paid throughout by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. After resigning his secretaryship in the association, Mr. Murray began to collect his staff for the business in which he is now engaged, a business, Mr. Speaker, which is without precedent in Canada. Indeed, I doubt whether any parallel for it can be found in any other country in the world.

Mr. Murray operates through a company called "Murray's Editorial Report Service," with headquarters at Toronto. The chief business of this company is to collect the views of every Canadian daily newspaper, and Mr. Murray is assisted in this work by a corps of university graduates, who are supposed to be experts in "sizing up," as it is termed, any newspaper. Reports are sent out at irregular intervals to the company's patrons, or are given to them when called for. These reports are designed to guide the company's subscribers in the placing of their contracts for advertising space, and papers that advocate protection are always given the preference.

With funds supplied chiefly by Eastern manufacturers. Mr. Murray established two other companies to extend the scope of his operations. One was "Publishers News Service Limited," at Regina, and the other was "Canadian Newspaper Service Limited" at Hamilton. The former company was to put out in the West what are known as "patent insides" or ready prints for the newspapers, and the last named company was to perform similar work in the East. It was claimed that through these two agencies about 140 papers would be supplied with protectionist "patent insides".

The whole business under Mr. Murray's control has been conducted under a cloak of secrecy, and the names of the patrons of this unique service have not as yet been divulged. To keep up the mystery all the subscribers to the service have been furnished with a chart or analysis of the Canadian daily newspaper field from the standpoint of the editorial policy pursued by each publication. This chart or analysis is a mass of symbols, letters, and numerals that can be translated into ordinary language only if the Key to the analysis is at hand.

Now, Sir, it will be of interest to the House, and of even greater interest to the country, to learn how the chart or analysis, as interpreted by the Key, deals with the Canadian newspapers. For an illustration let me take two of the leading Canadian dailies, namely the Toronto Mail and the Toronto Globe.

In the analysis the name of the Toronto Mail is preceded by the symbol formed by the two pairs of crossed lines used to denote the word "number." According to the Key this means that the Mail is "Unionist in politics" and "supports Meighen." Then after the name of the Toronto Mail, there are in separate columns, under appropriate headings, the following letters and numerals:

"A.1." Which means: "Gives good comprehensive news service covering both general and local fields. Excellent,—the best."

"E.1." Which means: "Well written editorials, clever in argument, forceful in expression, carrying conviction."

"J.1." Which means: "Gives expression to safe and sane views on Labour, Industrial Unrest, and Socialism, denounces extremes of all kinds, pleads for moderation, etc. Discusses the subject very frequently."

"N.1." Which means: "Supports a protective tariff with or without revision. Discusses the subject very frequently."

"R.1." Which means: "Generally sympathetic with Business",—business, Mr. Speaker, with a big B—"apparently desirous of seeing it get a square deal." "Fair in argument and truthful in statement. Discusses the subject very frequently."

"U." Which means: "Specially deserving of support. Sound on practically all points. Alert and capable in defence of Business."

Again business with a big "B." That ends the analysis of the Toronto Mail. Now let us see what is set down about the Toronto Globe.

In the analysis, the name of the Toronto Globe is preceded by the two symbols used in currency to indicate dollars and pounds. Again turning to the Key, it will be found that these mean that the Globe is "Liberal and Farmer" in politics and that it "supports King and Crerar." After the name "Toronto Globe" there appears the following letters and numerals:

"A.1." Which gives it the same rating as the Mail for news service.

"E.1." Which means that in editorial ability the Globe is on a par with the Mail.

"H.4." Which means "shows strong editorial bias on subjects not hereinafter covered. Anti-Union Government."

"J.1." Which means: "That the Globe's views on Labour, Industrial Unrest and Socialism are the same as those of the Mail and are expressed as frequently;"

"O.1." Which means: "Favors low tariff with considerable extension of free list and all-round reduction on the remainder; favors reciprocity with the United States. Discusses the subject very frequently."

"T.1." Which means: "Generally antagonistic towards Business, or given to misrepresentation and unfair arguments, or featuring the bad and saying nothing about the good. Discusses the subject very frequently."

"X." Which means: "Unfair. Bad points outbalance good. Objectionable." And there, Sir, the analysis leaves the Globe. Other examples need not be cited because in every case the paper that favours protection is recommended as the medium through which to advertise.

No less interesting than the Analysis and the Key, and even more informative, are the reports issued confidentially to the subscribers to Mr. Murray's service. In a sheet called Editor and Publisher, dated August 28, 1920, appears one of these reports:

> Toronto—G. M. Murray, whose plan for putting control of the editorial opinion of Canadian newspapers into the hands of the purchasers of advertising was reported last spring in Editor and Publisher and given liberal space in the Canadian press, is "in again." He attributes his previous lack of success to the fact that newspapers did not then need the money so badly as they do now, in the face of rapidly rising costs. Under date of August 16, in his latest "confidential" communication to the manufacturers he is trying to organize, he says:
> "What with one thing and another, the newspapers were simply reaping a harvest and if an advertiser tried to talk editorial policy to them, they simply wouldn't listen."
> "Just when they are beginning to figure how much higher they can jack up their advertising rates to meet their increased cost of production and to calculate how much more space they can sell at the higher rates, along comes a business depression that leads to the wholesale slashing of advertising appropriations. To the manufacturer in a similar position, the sympathetic editor would no doubt say, 'Draw on your reserve.' But it makes a wonderful difference whose ox is being gored.

"Advertisers can talk policy to that editor to-day and they will be attentively listened to. The editor knows that advertisers form the one class who can save his enterprise from financial disaster and anything those advertisers ask in reason they are going to get.

"The fact that already there have disappeared from the field such papers as the Toronto News, Peterborough Review, Saskatoon Phœnix and Regina Post is warning to all and sundry that in the midst of journalistic life we are in death and that he who would survive must henceforth pay less attention to the editorial sanctum and more to the office of the business manager."

Having thus pointed out to the manufacturers how they could bring the newspapers to time Mr. Murray proceeded to goad them to action and on December 29, 1920, he sent out a report in which the following paragraph occurred:

To-day the free trade storm signals are set as a warning to navigators upon the sea of business. Make no mistake about it. They are there to be seen, clear as the sun in the sky, by all except those who keep their heads in the sand. The organized farmers, under the leadership of fanatical theorists, have been worked up into a veritable frenzy of resentment against a fiscal policy that they have come to look upon as special privilege. They are out to effect changes by a process of destruction—a process that once initiated may go to untold lengths before it can be checked. If those who would thus be destroyed don't speedily organize for their own defence, and marshall all their resources in money and brains to meet the attack, they will almost certainly find themselves powerless to ward off a blow for which the Grain Grower arm is already bared, nerved with the last ounce of strength and determination.

In another communication to the subscribers on the subject of how they should spend their advertising appropriation in 1921 Mr. Murray said:

"The average agent, of course, pays little or no attention to editorial policy; with him all that counts is rates and circulation. If he had his way, many a publication that is doing its best to ruin Canadian industry, would be rewarded by the prospective victims to its folly with huge chunks of profitable business, tendered on a silver platter. I try to persuade my subscribers to let me look over the schedules their agents are asking them to adopt. When they comply, I give them a brief report upon every publication in the list. Those that are O.K. are marked accordingly. In the case of those that are objectionable, I explain what it is that makes them objectionable. Some are worse than others. Some I recommend be retained, but with a reduction from full to part schedule. Some I recommend dropping altogether, and to replace them I submit where possible the names of meritorious publications of a similar class circulating in the same territory."

"The far-reaching possibilities of this work are nicely illustrated in an unsolicited letter just received from an old friend connected with a paper that has been giving us splendid support. Speaking of one contemporary (a low tariff advocate) he says it has noticeably moderated in tone, in an effort to hold all the advertising it can. Speaking of another (a free-trade organ) he says that despite many manifestations of wrath, as it lost schedule after schedule, it now appears to be tactfully backing away from free trade. 'If your work', he continues, 'has had one-half the effect in other parts of Canada that it has had here, then your subscribers should be able to see it as I do. Moreover, an opportunity for increasing its effectiveness will come with the new year, when newsprint costs will take a further jump, and the difficulties of the publishing business will grow more acute. Many papers will watch their step, more particularly so because they know through past publicity that you exist and are watching things'."

"This frank statement of the case should surely suggest to all subscribers the desirability of refraining from entering into any new advertising contracts until they have first submitted their schedules to me for a report."

Now, Sir, as a final link in the chain I will summarize the details of a few incidents that establish the connection between Mr. Murray's operations and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association.

At a meeting held in Toronto last year it was represented by the executive of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association that a fund of $3,000,000 would have to be available in the event of a Dominion election. Of this sum it was stated that $1,000,000 should be immediately available. A difficulty arose on the score that companies or corporations were debarred from making political subscriptions; but this was overcome by the explanation that the money would be used chiefly for newspaper propaganda.

Mr. Murray was present at this meeting, and after explaining his plans for securing protectionist publicity, he obtained the approval of the meeting for his method of distributing among the newspapers "ready prints" or "patent insides". Mr. Murray was placed in charge of this work, and it was decided to supply all the funds that were necessary to make it a success. So that the Canadian Manufacturers' Association might not be officially connected with the scheme, a special committee was appointed to deal with it, and an amount, said to have been in the neighbourhood of $40,000, was placed at the disposal of this special committee. It was emphasized that the association would look to Mr. Murray to protect its interests, and that the greatest possible care should be taken to prevent the attitude of the manufacurers towards the newspapers from being made public.

For the present, Mr. Speaker, I do not consider it necessary to enter into any further details of the operations of Mr. Murray and his protectionist patrons. In all probability I have gone far enough to make it unlikely that any supporter of the Government will rise in his place to defend the methods that I have just exposed; and yet, Sir, it must be borne in mind that these methods are being resorted to for the political benefit of the party now in office, and that that party must share responsibility for these methods with those who originate them, must share responsibility with those who finance them, and must share responsibility with those who carry them into execution to the detriment of the national welfare.

Mr. Speaker, it is because I hold these and the other opinions that I have expressed in the course of my address that I shall vote for the amendment that has been placed in your hands after being moved by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's.

Sir, in the next general election the whole record of the present Government will be the issue before the public. The Government's tariff policy will form an important part of that record. Hence, Sir, it is the duty of all who desire to see peace, prosperity and goodwill restored in this country to acquaint the electors at every possible opportunity with the true inwardness of the Government's tariff policy and with the aims and methods of those who support it. East Elgin and West Peterborough have demonstrated, and I venture to prophesy, without fear of successful contradiction, that York-Sunbury, Yamaska and Medicine Hat will further demonstrate, that protection will not protect this Government from the fate that awaits it when the verdict of the whole Canadian people is registered at the polls.

Hon. S. F. TOLMIE (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to take part in this debate but for the fact that the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) in the course of his speech made certain statements with reference to the building of a dry dock at Esquimalt, B.C. He implied that the construction of this drydock was entered upon for the purpose of assisting my re-election after my appointment as Minister of Agriculture. I want to state here, Sir, that if I had felt it was necessary to have a dry dock or any other public work constructed to elect me as a member of this House, I would still be in the live stock business out on the Pacific slope. I am quite sure that the hon. gentleman did not possess full information on the subject or he would not have made the statement which he placed before this House, and on that account I think it would be well for me to give the history of the construction of the dry dock from its inception up to the present time.

Esquimalt is located about four miles from Victoria at the southern extremity of Vancouver Island. It is in the constituency of the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. McIntosh). I represent the city of Victoria alone. A small dock, about 430 feet in length, was constructed at Esquimalt about forty years ago, for the purpose of accommodating naval vessels, Esquimalt having been the station of the British Navy on the Pacific coast for a number of years until it was handed over by the Imperial authorities to the Canadian Government. The dock was found of excellent service, and was the means of establishing at that particular point a very important ship repairing and shipbuilding business. For a long time, however, it had been felt that owing to the increasing size of vessels it was necessary to have a larger dry dock, for in many instances the Esquimalt dock being unable to accommodate ships wishing to dock for repairs, those ships went over to United States dry docks, and the work was lost to our contractors and also to our workingmen.

About the year 1912 the question of a drydock became a live issue. The matter was discussed very freely and active measures were taken to induce the Government to take some action with a view to providing larger accommodation in the drydock line. In fact that same year a drydock site was purchased at Lang's Cove in Esquimalt Harbour. About that time a big shipbuilding firm, Yarrows, Limited, with headquarters at Glasgow, Scotland, was searching about the Pacific coast for a suitable site for a drydock, having in view the establishment of a branch of their business on this continent. They examined sites on the American as well as on the Canadian side and after a thorough investigation they decided that Esquimalt was the most suitable place for their drydock. It may be of interest to hon. members to know that that was just five years before I had contemplated going into politics at all. The dock site, as I say, was selected, but owing to the fact that the war broke out shortly afterwards the work was not proceeded with and no further active steps were taken until 1919, the construction of the dock being agreed to in the month of June of that year. It was not until August 2 that I was asked to accept the portfolio of agriculture in the present government when the construction of the dock was agreed to in June.

I had no more idea of occupying my present position than I had of leaving for some other country; nor was the matter brought to my attention in any way by any member of the Government. It was 1920 that the contract was let for the construction of this dock. I cannot see, therefore, how under these circumstances my election either in 1919 or in 1917 can be connected with the construction of this drydock at Esquimalt.

Another dock is to be built at Vancouver under the Drydock Subsidies Act. There is also a floating dock at Prince Rupert, owned by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, but as that point is over 500 miles north of Victoria ships will not go from the south end of Vancouver island or down in the neighbourhood of the Straits of Juan de Fuca up as far as Prince Rupert if they can secure satisfactory accommodation nearer at hand.

There are a number of reasons why Esquimalt has been selected as the site for this drydock. A glance at the map will show that the Straits of Juan de Fuca pass in from the Pacific eastward and branch off to the south, terminating in Puget Sound on the American side, and also pass up to the north and into the Gulf of Georgia, thence up to Vancouver and further north. Esquimalt is situated about fifty miles from the Pacific ocean, and all traffic, whether destined for Southern Columbia ports or for American ports, passes practically within view of Esquimalt harbour, so that we have the benefit not only of Canadian-bound but also of American-bound traffic. The port is practically free from fog the year round. The waters of Esquimalt harbour have a considerable advantage over those of eastern points where drydocks are located in that they are liquid during the whole year, making them always navigable. We have there a very light rainfall, from 27 to 32 inches in the average year. Last year there was an average of sunshine or bright weather from five and a half to six hours a day during the whole year. There is winter temperature of about 42 degrees and a summer temperature of 60 degrees enabling men to work on the ships the year round; no fires are necessary to keep the men warm during the winter season. The work can be carried on under the cheapest possible conditions. The port is situated advantageously in that help can be secured from nearby centres, where it is always available, in the event of any big rush of ship repairing work coming on at any particular time.

About the time that the dry dock site was purchased Yarrows Limited was given to understand that this dock was to be constructed at Esquimalt, and this big firm immediately decided that they would locate there. They have since been carrying on to great advantage the business of a ship repair plant, employing a large number of men. The Government have thus not only kept faith with the people of Victoria, to whom this dock had been promised but have also kept faith with this big British firm which had come to this country to invest its money. If we hope to get British capital in this country one of the first things we must do is to carry out our undertakings in respect to that capital on every possible occasion. About seven or eight weeks ago I made a hurried trip to Victoria and Esquimalt, and at that time they had four deep sea-going vessels under repair. They had recently turned down another vessel because they could not accommodate it, and a Japanese vessel, the Manila Maru, had to go to Seattle for dockage accommodation because that available at Esquimalt was to small. This firm have plenty of capital. They do not ask for bonuses; if they lose money on a contract nobody knows anything about it but themselves; they do not come to the Government for assistance. They are rapidly building up a very valuable business at that point and employing a large number of Canadian workmen.

The trade of the Pacific Coast is increasing at a very rapid rate. There is at present about $2,000,000,000 worth of trade carried on yearly between America and Canadian Pacific ports and the Orient and countries to the south, and with the many millions of people over on the Asiatic side it is only reasonable to expect that this trans-Pacific business will increase by leaps and bounds, If we are to meet the situation we must have proper facilities on the Canadian side to accommodate shipping, to repair ships, and so on. As an indication of how keenly alive the Americans are to the situation, let me say that they have no less than sixteen floating and graving docks situated at San Francisco, Seattle, Portland, Oregon, and Bremerton, Washington, as compared with our one small dock at Esquimalt, which accommodates only one small ship, one floating dock at Prince Rupert and two other docks under construction. In the East, too, there are a larger number of docks than there are on the Pacific Coast. From the figures I will give you in a moment you will see that the number of docks on the Pacific is very small compared with that in the East, having regard to the amount of tonnage involved. With the present dock at Esquimalt and one under construction we will be able to accommodate any ship afloat. The dock has a division in the centre so that two small ships can be put in at the same time giving us dock accommodations for three vessels at once. Through the operations of this firm of Yarrows Limited, which is known from one end of the world to the other where shipping is done, I am sure that a great deal of business will be brought to that point once it is known that we can accommodate anything that may offer.

I would like to place on Hansard a few figures to show the amount of tonnage entering the various ports in Canada where dry docks are located. The statement follows:

If the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) were here, I believe he would agree that we should court on our side such industries as will retain the service of our Canadian workmen and will also enable us to cope with the increased traffic that we expect and have already on the Pacific ocean. I am quite sure that he would not agree that it would be good business for us to try to continue with a dock of small capacity, while our larger vessels were compelled to go to the American side to be properly repaired and taken care of. With smaller dock equipment at Esquimalt, we are quite unable to accommodate even the vessels of the Canadian Mercantile Marine, with the exception of small boats such as those which operate on the lakes, and, of course, they do not reach the Pacific. Therefore, this dock is an absolute necessity if we are to make any progress along these particular lines, and to get the great trade on the Pacific that we expect.

I do not believe that the country is going to gain very much by our continually voicing our pessimism, or talking about hard times. By intelligent expansion, the country can accomplish a great deal of good. Having been brought up in the West and having experienced one or two western real estate booms, I do not feel at all down-hearted about our present condition. By careful economy, by the investment of money along such lines as give promise of safe development, this country is absolutely sure in its future progress. In addition to that, I feel that after what we have accomplished in the war, we have the proper Canadian spirit to develop and build up a country which must occupy a position of prominence amongst the great nations. This is one of the finest countries in the world, and our present conditions will compare very favourably with those existing in any other country that has taken part in the war.

Mr. FERNAND RINFRET (St. James:) Mr. Speaker, after the contribution made to this debate to-day by the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Murphy), I feel there is very little to say on this side of the House, and I rise only to put myself on record as briefly as possible regarding this Budget which is of such interest to the people of the riding that I represent. Before I do that, I wish to say a few words regarding the declaration just made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Tolmie), that it was a mere coincidence if this drydock in Esquimalt was in any way connected with his election. We certainly have a Government of coincidences, because it happens that when there was an election in West Peterborough, by a mere coincidence also, a contract was given for the Trent canal to the tune of $175,000, and I was quite surprised, when I ran in the division of St. James, that the Government did not see fit to begin to build a wharf in one of the water basins which decorate the squares which are so rightly famed in that division. I happen to have in my hand extracts from the Victoria Times, a paper which, no doubt, the Minister of Agriculture knows quite well. On October 21, the Victoria Times published a report of one of the meetings of the Minister of Agriculture. What do we read?

> Dr. Tolmie went into the dry dock situation and declared that he was anxious for the establishment of the dry dock at Esquimalt because it would tie the ship repairing industry down here.

Addressing the electors of Victoria on October 20, 1919, he said:

> I am now in a position to say that I have the assurance of the Government that the work will be prosecuted without delay.

Again, on the same date, speaking to 400 shipworkers he said, referring to the dry dock:

> When a fellow works hard and delivers the goods as I think I have done at Ottawa—

And as he was doing out at Victoria, I might add.

> —do you fire him or do you send him back and give him another chance?
> I have taken a deep interest in these yards and have had something to do with securing these contracts. We must have prompt measures to provide for further work. Since I arrived in town I have been busy on this but we would like to get two more steel ships and also wooden ships and secure the development of the ocean docks.

I think I need say no more to establish that the dry dock did indeed play a part in the election, and that it was used at that time also to do some repairing on the Government ship itself.

The Prime Minister the other day in the course of this debate made the statement that he did not think in the whole of his parliamentary career he had witnessed a budget statement received with such general approval as that of this year. I humbly submit that this is another case which should come under the ruling of the Chair against imaginary statements being recorded in Hansard. I consider, on the contrary, that never in the history of this country has there been presented to the House a budget so appalling in figures, so disastrous in all that it has to admit and certainly none so burdensome upon the Canadian taxpayer. The Minister of Finance has to admit that although he has exerted his power of taxation with a view to securing from the public $100,000,000 more than is needed for the current expenditure of the country nevertheless on the whole operations of the year the deficit is twice that amount. The Minister of Finance, however, has great confidence in the future. With this distressing statement, he has given the House the valuable information that the sun still shines, our rivers still sparkle, our lands are as great and as fertile as ever, and our resources just as vast. Alas, Mr. Speaker, he has forgotten to add that our Federal expenditures are as great as ever, our deficits are running up all the time and the Government of the country is as incompetent and as unrepresentative as ever. Not that I wish to lay the whole blame on the Minister of Finance. We all know that he has only joined the Government of late, and that he is not responsible for most of the trouble. When he joined the Government party boat, to borrow a familiar metaphor of the Prime Minister, the ship of State was in a very unseaworthy condition, with the sails all torn out, the bottom leaking lamentably, the oars half disabled, and the planks in such a state of rottenness that no one short of a magician could have restored it and put it back into sailing condition. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance, though a sinner, is only a sinner of the eleventh hour, and I do hope that for him the text of scripture does not apply in the reverse form. He has done his best under the circumstances. He labours under the burden of an intolerable legacy, and is hampered by a policy which has proven disastrous. What could he do in view of the railway policy of the Government, and the merchant marine, the Militia Estimates, and all the extravagances of the Government? It is only natural to find that his financial powers have been superseded, and it is only logical that he should find himself confronted to-day with a shortage of food and an excess of appetite.

While the Minister of Finance undertook the duty of telling the people by what amount the country has been impoverished during the past year, the Prime Minister took upon himself to enter upon what he called a discussion of the tariff. May I here interject with all due courtesy that while we paid the greatest attention to the speech of the right hon. the Prime Minister, even to the point of putting questions to him occasionally, I was surprised to find that when the leader of the Opposition delivered to-day one of the greatest speeches we have heard in this House, the Prime Minister saw fit to keep away from the chamber. I think it is very seldom that a speech has been delivered by the leader of either party in a Budget debate wihch the other leader has not followed with due attention.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Possibly the hon. member would permit me to explain. I had to go out of town. I remained here yesterday, in the belief, according to announcement, that the leader of the Opposition would speak. He did not, and I had to go to-day. It was certainly out of no discourtesy to the leader of the Opposition. I would have been very glad indeed to have been here.

Mr. RINFRET: I thank the Prime Minister for his explanation. I can only wish that he will read the speech of my hon. leader very carefully. I am very sorry he cannot read it before he registers his vote because he might even have been convinced at the last moment. The Prime Minister, in his very clever speech took good care to distort the meaning of the amendment before the House, and he took equally good care to say as little as he could on his own fiscal policy. Where is the platform of 1918, he asked the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar)? Where is the platform of 1919, he asked the leader of the Opposition? Why are they not moved, he went on? Mr. Speaker, these hon. gentlemen have explained their position. Perhaps before we vote we might now turn to the Prime Minister, and in his own expressive way, put to him a very simply question, because, after all, he is in charge of the affairs of this country: Where is the revision of the tariff? Where is that revision which was promised long ago—a promise which was reiterated last year, and which gave birth to a very expensive travelling commission, a promise which was embodied in the speech from the Throne, a promise, in fact, that the right hon. gentleman has made on every occasion except at the proper moment, when it was possible to give effect to it. My hon. friend is looking for our platform. What about that revision of the tariff? Do you not think, Mr. Speaker, that instead of poaching in our waters he might well do a little cruising in his own? He says that our amendments do not last more than one year. I remember a Budget which was proposed in this House last year which only lasted three weeks, and of which my right hon. friend approved in a lengthy speech. That was another case of a Budget giving general satisfaction, I suppose? The Budget lasted only three weeks, and then owing to the protests coming from all over the country, the Minister of Finance had to come before the House with a new Budget. That Budget also my right hon. friend approved, when it was in the form of a Bill. A few months later my right hon. friend, when Prime Minister, further amended that Budget by removing all luxury taxes from it. It will be seen, therefore, that he approved of a Budget in May, another Budget in June, and a third Budget in December, —a record of three Budgets in a little over six months. And yet he finds fault with us because we move only one amendment a year. But, Sir, I will not admit that the present amendment does not embody the policy of the Liberal party. That platform has remained intact, and I venture to say that there is not an hon. member on this side of the House who has not lived up to it. My hon. friend asks: Why not move it? Well, we are moving the essential principle of that platform. I will not go over this argument again, because it has been well put before the House in very conclusive terms. But again, I ask: What about the policy of the Government? I have read the Budget most carefully, and I find that the only changes that are proposed have reference to an increase in the duty on certain beverages which the free people of Quebec are at liberty to drink, and in this respect a most unusual taxation is imposed on a product which is prohibited in seven provinces out of nine. That taxation has come at the very last moment. After the people in these other provinces have had an opportunity to stock their cellars to the point of congestion, the Government now proposes to tax an article which the temperate people of Quebec and British Columbia are still in the habit of buying, not in dozens of cases, but by the single bottle. And the Budget also makes certain provision with reference to limes and other tropical fruit. Now, Sir, after the Government have spent thousands of dollars on a useless travelling commission, the only thing the hon. minister has to offer the country is a lemon tariff. I was somewhat surprised to find that the revision of the tariff had been deferred, because everything had been staged in such perfect fashion that we were led to believe that the Government would adopt a tariff still more to the purpose of their fiscal bed fellows. While the commission travelled throughout the country, and my right hon. friend himself delivered speeches in Sherbrooke, and elsewhere, declaring most unreservedly that the policy of the Government was a policy of protection. The people, in view of these declarations, were beginning to wonder why, if that was all settled in advance, it was necessary at all to promenade throughout the country the submissive smile of the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) and the aristocratic features of the hon. gentleman who represents the labouring classes in the Senate. It was said that the commission was out for information on which to base a fiscal policy; but it was soon found out that the commission was not looking for information, but for arguments by which to confirm a preconceived policy. And if the revision is long delayed, and we do not get it this year, I begin to think it is because, in spite of all the work which the commissioners have done, they have not yet secured sufficient argument to back up my right hon. friend's speeches. That is why he is looking for our platform; presumably, he has lost his own.

The commission worked very hard indeed. I recollect one instance in Quebec where a witness applied for a reduction of the tariff on tin receptacles for maple syrup and maple sugar. The witness argued that the maple sugar industry was in good shape, the product selling very well; but he pointed out that the high price of tins was unduly putting up the cost of marketing this article. There was a clear demand for a reduction on a specific item. How do you think it was received? If one may credit the newspaper reports at the time—and they were all unanimous on the point—this demand was considered, not as a request for lowering the tariff on tins, but as a request for increasing protection on maple sugar. Here was a clear case where the lowering of the tariff would have favoured an industry. I may cite another. Let me quote from the Citizen of November 20, 1920:

1 a.m.

> Armour and Company announced that it had closed out its business in Canada, including a packing house at Hamilton, Ont., and selling agencies at St. John, N.B., Hamilton, Montreal and Toronto. The reason for this industry leaving Canada is given in the press announcement, thus:
> The supply of cattle in Canada is insufficient to keep the packing plant running, it was explained, and the tariff on importation of dressed meats makes shipments to the selling agencies from Chicago prohibitive.

Now, to come back to the Tariff Commission.

Mr. McGIBBON (Muskoka): Does the hon. member adhere to the platform of 1919?

Mr. RINFRET: I did not catch your question.

Mr. McGIBBON: Do you adhere to the 1919 platform?

Mr. RINFRET: I do not know whether the hon. gentleman was out of town or not, but I stated only ten minutes ago that not only I, but every hon. member on this side of the House, did adhere to that platform and, further, would live up to it.

Mr. McGIBBON: Hear, hear.

Mr. RINFRET: Well, now, if that will cheer the heart of my hon. friend, I am prepared to make that declaration as often as he likes. But to come back to the Tariff Commission, I should like to read what the Gazette had to say in praise of the Minister of Finance when the work was about over. I will read only one paragraph, but it is most interesting. Says the Gazette of November 18, 1920:

> The Finance Minister has conducted the Tariff inquiry admirably. As is his duty, he listens intently and patiently to petitions presented him, and does not hesitate by query and interjecion, to expose off-hand the fallacy of an argument or to develop it to a logical conclusion.

You will observe, Sir, how exquisitely the Tory organ puts it. When a low tariff witness came before the commission, the commissioners were up in arms to expose the fallacy of the argument; but when there was a demand for protection, the commission eagerly inquired: "Are you quite sure you do not want more?"—and developed the demand to its logical conclusion. Yet the Prime Minister will not revise the tariff. He is looking for our platform, and that of the Farmers. Well, I will not read our platform; it has just been read to-night by the member for Russell (Mr. Murphy).

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Read it.

Mr. RINFRET: The Prime Minister says he cannot find that platform in the amendment moved by the member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), but he takes great comfort in the fact that he will be able to import a few lemons from the south, and that it will have cost the country hundreds of thousands of dollars in order that the people may have the incomparable privilege of drinking cheap lemonade.

In the meantime, the Prime Minister is leaving for England and, as I understand, he will deliver a few speeches there. I have no doubt that he will make the best use of his knowledge and talent when he addresses the British public. Now, he alluded the other day to the speech he delivered on the Budget last year. That speech contained a description of the way in which the fiscal policy of England has operated in the Mother Country, and I would advise my right hon. friend to take that speech with him when he goes there and quote it. I can picture the scene at the great banquet where all the economists of the country would be gathered and when the traditional usher would call in his rich melodious voice "silence, pray, for the Prime Minister of Canada." My right hon. friend would get up and say:

> My Lords and Gentlemen, you are all wrong and your fiscal policy is all wrong. Free trade has depopuated rural England; it has filled the emigrant ships with fugitives from her shores; it has scattered the manhood of Great Britain through the fields and workshops of the United States it has starved and repressed and dwarfed the nascent industries of Ireland; it has reversed the supremacy that Britain held through centuries in the industrial life of the world, and caused her to concede the place to other great competing nations who adopted a different policy. Such is the history of free trade.

Now, I will not play the childish trick of waiting for the question to be asked, "Who said or wrote this?" This is a speech that was delivered by the Prime Minister. It was not written by Norman Lambert; it is a speech to which the Prime Minister gave utterance.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And the Prime Minister has not changed his sentiments since.

Mr. RINFRET: I know that. That speech last year evoked a great deal of applause from the other side—in fact everything my right hon. friend says evokes a great deal of applause and desk-thumping on that side. Unfortunately that desk-thumping has no echo in the country; its only effect is to injure the furniture in the chamber and further add to the prevailing waste and extravagance. But I do not think there will be any desk-thumping in England if the Prime Minister repeats those sentiments there. If I have quoted his speech it is not for the mere pleasure of including it in the debate. It is because we find there in that single paragraph that blind, partisan, prejudiced attachment to a fiscal policy that we precisely condemn in the amendment that is before the House. I would go further than that. As far as I am concerned I will say that I not only approve of the amendment as it stands, but I would make it read: that the tariff should not be based on the principle of protection, or on the principle of free trade, or on any stringent fixed doctrine. Because I contend, Mr. Speaker, that in this country—young and rising as it is—we cannot fix the tariff on any stringent doctrine: It must be flexible, it must be dealt with item by item, and it must adapt itself to the needs of the country.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is pretty safe.

Mr. RINFRET: Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say merely a word about the St. James election. I am sorry to say that while my right hon. friend took no part at all in that election he is now manifesting considerable concern in the then Liberal candidate. He pointed to me in the House last session and asked how I should vote because I was elected, he said, on the platform of protection. I think he also did me the distinction to refer to me in his Sherbrooke speech saying that I was one of the Liberals who favoured protection. Finally, in his speech in this House the other day, he made some remarks of the same kind. Now, I do desire to state that during the St. James election we stood by the Liberal platform. It was read in public by different members of the House and by myself during the course of the campaign. The other candidate never dared to challenge it because he rather espoused it himself, and claimed that he was also a candidate approved by the leader of the Opposition. I may say that the whole electorate of St. James voted for that platform. Allusion has been made several times during the debate to Le Canada. This has afforded us free advertising which I appreciate. But let me say that we did publish that platform to a greater extent, perhaps, than any other paper in the whole of the Dominion.

The hon. member for Vancouver reproached me a few minutes ago because my paper published the interchange of remarks which took place between the Prime Minister and the member for Marquette, about the York-Sunbury by-election. I may say that we merely published the report sent out by the Canadian Press. I may add, however, that if the member for Vancouver, or any hon. gentleman opposite, is interested in to-night's proceedings, we will see to it that the interview about Mr. Veniot which was read a moment ago, is published.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Perhaps the hon. gentleman would improve on the hon. member for Russell and be good enough and honest enough to read the statement in my hearing.

Mr. BUREAU: Never mind reading it again. It will be published to-morrow and you can have a chance to read and think over it.

Mr. McGIBBON: Read it here, do not lose your nerve.

Mr. RINFRET: At this late hour I do not propose to detain the House very much longer. Some of the details of the Budget are very interesting. For example there has been quite a change in connection with the Customs Department, and I wish to congratulate the Minister of Customs upon having given up the writing of private letters and busying himself with public affairs. We are promised a chance in the Customs Department that we on this side have been asking for a long time in order to put that department on a business basis. Last year we inquired whether the Government intended to estimate customs duties according to the current rate of exchange and the reply was made by the then Minister of Customs that they did not. But good ideas make their way. On July 22, the former system was altered and a regulation passed by Order in Council—the usual method of the Government in dealing with these matters, only it was too long delayed—changing the regulations of the department in that respect. This session the Minister of Customs was asked whether further changes were intended as regards, for instance, goods coming from the United States, and again the reply was in the negative. However, good ideas once more made their way. We are now told that this regulation will also apply to imports of goods from the United States. Unfortunately the Government has seen fit to put an arbitrary value on all European moneys in this sense—that it will not, in any case, allow the depreciation to be any lower than 50 per cent. Now it is a well-known fact, Mr. Speaker, that European merchants who are quite conversant with the depreciation of their money usually make an overcharge on their goods before they export them to this country. However, this is a matter which can be taken up more in detail when we reach the committee stage. The same applies to the sales taxes and other provisions of the Budget.

Before I take my seat I wish to say a word or two about what is embodied in the last clause of the amendment concerning the general expenditure of the country. I think we should divide that expenditure into two groups. The first group would include expenditure, which we must acknowledge because it forms obligations which the country has taken upon itself. In this group would be the war debt, and I fully share what was so eloquently stated by the hon. member for Mégantic (Mr. Pacaud) that as regards war expenditure we must pay up without the least discussion. But, Mr. Speaker, I think we should not altogether allow ourselves to be too much moved by the mere fact that it is war expenditure, because it is well known that under that head are included not only the amounts that were strictly necessary for the conduct of the war, but also considerable amounts which represent the scandalous and extravagant waste which was indulged in during that time. I am not going over all that again. It was proven in this House and before the Public Accounts Committee that millions of dollars were squandered in payments to profiteers—friends of the Government, colonels and others. Therefore although we must pay that debt, we should be allowed to hold the Government responsible for the fact that we are not only paying interest on strictly war expenditure, but we are also paying interest on all those millions which were squandered. We should also hold the Government responsible, although I am afraid we cannot remedy the evil, for the fact that $1,300,000,000 were invested in loans which are exempt from income tax. I need not say that profiteers who had made enormous profits during the war and did not know where to invest their money were the first to take advantage of these war loans. I remember an article which I once read in an American paper to the effect that you ought always to keep a very close watch on profiteers because of their alertness. The writer went on to say that in a certain country it had been decided to hang profiteers, and those profiteers at once formed a trust to hoard coffins! That is what the people can expect from profiteers. But there is another group of expenditures, and they have been mentioned often during the course of this debate. There is, for instance, the railway deficit. I see my good friend—if I dare use that expression—the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster) before me, and I recall when I was a member of the press gallery in the old House how he used to get up with feigned indignation when the Intercolonial railway was showing a deficit of a few million dollars. Mr. Speaker, we have read in that great poem, Dante's "Inferno", that the sinners were punished according to the character of their sins; the gluttons were famished, the proud were humiliated, and carnal sinners were tortured in their very flesh. I think, Sir, that my good friend has reached a circle where, after feeling so indignant over a deficit of a few million dollars, he has now to swallow a deficit of $75,000,000 or $100,000,000 as the result of his Government's policy. There is also the Government merchant marine. I am not going over it again at this late hour, for I have delivered several speeches on the subject—

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Go ahead.

Mr. RINFRET: But I do recall that recently when the genial Minister of Marine was showing us over a dry dock—not the Victoria dry dock, but a dry dock in Maisonneuve—he took great pride in the fact that they were launching a boat which was being sold to Norway for $170 a ton. When the minister made that remark a member said—I do not know if it reached the ear of the minister—"If that is so, by all means let him sell the merchant ships of the Government and get rid of them as soon as he can at that price." As for the Militia Estimates, it is no argument to declare that we are not spending more for the militia than we did before the war. As a matter of fact we are spending more. But the argument of the Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Guthrie) was that as the militia was more costly now than before the war we had to spend more on it for the same number of men. I have figures here—but I will not go over them now—which show that we have more employees now in the Militia Department and about one thousand more men in the force than we had before the war. We should do away with this militia expenditure because it is less needed at the present time, because it is more costly, and because we have no money to waste on it.

I have tried, Mr. Speaker, to go over the different clauses of the amendment, but there is one reason more than any other which will lead me to vote for that amendment, and that is that it contains a general denunciation of the policy of the Government, and if perchance it were carried it would force the Government to go to the country, and would restore to the hands of the people their supreme and paramount right to elect their own representatives.

Mr. F. R. LALOR (Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to detain the House very long, but some statements have been made that I think I should answer. Before doing so I want to compliment the Minister of Finance on his splendid Budget report. I think never in the history of this House has there been presented a Budget so acceptable to the people or so eulogized even by members opposite. I also feel glad that in our Prime Minister (Mr. Meighen) Canada has such an able leader, and when I read some of the eulogistic statements made by hon. gentlemen opposite regarding the Prime Minister, I feel that we on this side of the House have reason to be very proud of him indeed.

There has been a great change in my time in the official Opposition. I have been a member since 1904, and at that time there was a solid Liberal delegation from British Columbia supporting Sir Wilfrid Laurier—that great and respected statesman whom I think every one remembers to with pride. Where is that representation to-day? Not one is left. Hon. gentlemen opposite have lost the support of that solid delegation. In Alberta the same condition exists—only one or two supporters of the Liberal party have been returned by that province; in Saskatchewan you find the same condition; and in the province of Manitoba their support has all gone to pieces. So we can say without possibility of contradiction that the great western provinces which supported the policy of the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier and of the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) have deserted the present official leader of the party. Indeed, I think I am right in saying that outside of the province of Quebec he and his party have from the other provinces only twenty or twenty-one supporters in this House. As against that, on this side of the House supporting the Government we have about thirty of the stalwart old Liberals whose names are well known throughout all Canada as the very foundation and pillars of Liberalism in the past.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: They will never come back.

Mr. LALOR: Well, my hon. friend may not be as good a prophet as he thinks he is, I could recall the names of some of these men. Take men like William Charlton, from a neighbouring county of mine, one of the stalwart Liberals in Ontario during the last fifty years and a strong supporter of the present Government. We have the Mowats the descendants of Blake—we have all the great Liberals of the province standing by and supporting this Government. We on this side are a united, enthusiastic and loyal party, and we are loyal and enthusiastic in the support of our present Prime Minister, whom we are proud to follow.

I want to refer just for a moment to the Agrarian group. I do not want to say anything unkind of them. I have respect for them; I have respect for the farmers of this country. No man in this House sympathizes more with the farmers than I do. I know how hard they work for their money; I know what long hours they devote to their work on the farm; I know the conditions under which they live. But I submit that hon. gentlemen on this side are all anxious and willing to do what they can for the farming interests of Caada. So far as I am concerned, if the Farmers' party on any other party in this House will move a resolution which in my judgment is in the interests of the farming people of this country I will support it. But we do not get many of those resolutions. We hear many statements and a lot of talk, but we do not get very many resolutions from hon. gentlemen oposite.

One of the great questions in this country, a few years ago, as you know, Mr. Speaker, was conscription. I do not want to refer at any length to that subject, but I am sorry that the Government of Canada had to enforce conscription. The conditions were such, as hon. gentlemen of the Agrarian Party know, that the decision to enforce conscription had to be supported, and who helped to support it? The leader of the Agrarian Party and the men sitting behind him crossed the floor of the House, supported conscription and voted in support of this Government for at least two years. They did that, I say in the interests of enforcing conscription in this country, and I want that put on record in order that the farmers of my county, anyway, may know that we were not alone on this side of the House with regard to that question.

We have heard a good deal in this House about free trade. As the Prime Minister has said, I think that free trade was born in the West. In that part of the country some of the people are pretty sincere, perhaps, in the views which they hold on free trade. But I have sat in this House with a good many of those who now make up the Agrarian party. Where were they in the years when the tariff of the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) was carried out in this country? Where were they during those sixteen years? That tariff was higher than the tariff at present in force, because reductions have since been made by this Government on many of the necessities of life, upon agricultural implements especially. But even when the tariff was higher, every one of the representatives of the farmers in this House supported that policy and helped to carry it out—the high tariff policy of the member for Shelburne and Queen's. None of them went back on it at that time; they seemed to think it was all right. The reason is that they were supporting a low tariff policy then; they were supporting a high tariff policy. And my friends directly opposite are in precisely the same position. They talk now about free trade and the tariff, but between 1896 and 1911 they supported the policy of the member for Shelburne and Queen's and stood by it by their votes and their speeches in this House. I want to congratulate the member for Shelburne and Queen's upon the fiscal policy which he maintained during those years; I wish that the Liberal party sitting behind the present leader of the Opposition would stand by the principles that Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the member for Shelburne and Queen's upheld during all those years. We who are interested in manufacturing and in supporting the manufacturing industries would be proud indeed if we could look forward to the continuance of such a policy as the Liberal party had at that time. But I doubt very much whether on the Liberal side of the House we have a great many men, especially among those from the province of Quebec, who would be glad to suport that policy or who if they were returned to power—even with the Agrarian's, the annex supporting them—would see that the principle was carried out. They talk of free trade, but I do not believe they are free traders at all, the great bulk of them. I do not believe they have an idea in their mind of lowering the tariff. A great many of the members from Quebec, especially those from Montreal, including the member for St. James Division (Mr. Rinfret) who has just spoken, would not support any policy which had in view the lowering of the tariff. The same applies to many other members who have spoken on this question. The member for West Peterborough (Mr. Gordon)—does any one think that he is a low tariff man or a free trader? Not by any means; he is a supporter of high tariff, or would be if he thought that any proposed tariff for Canada would have the effect of intefering with the progress and development of the manufacturing industries of this country.

I do not think any class of the people would be in a worse position with a low tariff than the farmers would be. The protection of the farming interests is necessary especially in Ontario. I do not believe there is any sympathy so far as the tariff is concerned between the farmers of Western Canada and the farmers of Ontario and Quebec; their ideas are entirely different. The farmers of the West depend upon wheat and grains almost entirely; the farmers of Ontario depend upon general farming and as general farmers they never could stand for free trade or a low tariff duties on farm products. Take the question of butter and eggs. The amount of butter imported from the United States last year was very large. We imported 7,000,000 dozen of eggs from the United States, and $10,000,000 worth of meats last year; do hon. gentlemen say that the tariff should be lowered and more of these goods imported? A large number of the farmers of my county were at one time in favour of reciprocity, but when they heard the arguments presented to them, when they realized the condition in which they would be placed under a low tariff or under reciprocity with the United States, they voted very strongly against it. And what did reciprocity do for them in respect of the articles on which it was applied? It did not help them any in the manufacturing line, as we all know, because the duties to-day upon agricultural implements necessary for use on the farm are lower than as provided for under the reciprocity agreement. So that reciprocity, I say, would not be any advantage to them. I say without fear of contradiction that a protective tariff—that is, a fairly reasonable protective tariff—is in the interests of the farmers of Quebec. We have heard many misrepresentations in connection with the manufacturing industries. I say that the manufacturing industries of this country are misrepresented by statements made by the Agrarian group as well as by the official Opposition. So far as hon. gentlemen opposite are concerned I do not believe they are sincere in the statements which they make; they surely must be in favour of reasonable protection to the manufacturing industries of Canada. Quebec is a great manufacturing province, one of the greatest in Canada, and I am sure that Quebec will grow in importance and in wealth under a fair and reasonable protective tariff. What would a low tariff do as regards people who work in factories? It would, as we all know, throw them out of employment, and I am sure men working in factories need protection now if they ever needed it in their history, when men are out of employment and looking for work. I regret exceedingly that there is unemployment in Canada to-day. But what would be the result if you took down the tariff wall between the United States and Canada, and with a low tariff or free trade allowed goods to come into this country? Hon. members from Quebec and the other provinces know as well as I do what would happen. I know that in my town in which I have lived all my life, if it were not for the manufacturers and industries in that town, grass would almost grow upon its streets. It is a town that has grown in a few years from a population of about 1,500 to something like 4,000, as the result of reasonable protection to its manufacturing industries.

Hon. gentlemen opposite say that manufacturers increase the price, I say that such is not the case. If you want to lower the price to the consumers of Canada, manufacture the goods in your own country, and competition between manufacturers in Canada will reduce the price to the level of the price of the imported article. Every dollar's worth of goods made in the United States or Great Britain and imported into Canada displaces just so much goods made in Canada and throws Canadians out of employment to that extent. My hon. friend shakes his head, but that is certainly the case. Men cannot be upheld in manufacturing industries; families cannot be kept and encouraged, unless manufacturers have a reasonable profit to encourage their industries. Manufacturers, we are told, take advantage of the duty and add it to the price. As a manufacturer, I say that that statement is not founded on fact; manufacturers do not take into consideration the duty upon an article when they set the price. What regulates the price is competition amongst manufacturers themselves, and perhaps the hon. member for Waterloo North (Mr. Euler) will bear me out in that. As I said, competition amongst manufacturers is sufficient to make the price just as low as it possibly can be made, and the price is very low and close. On many articles in Canada we manufacture and sell just as cheaply as American manufacturers do. I believe that in this country, boots and shoes—and they can go into the United States free of duty—can be bought just as cheaply as in the United States, and surely it is better to employ our people making shoes rather than to employ Americans to make them. I do not think members from Quebec, with the great shoe industries of that province, would ever endorse or support a policy that would admit boots and shoes into this country under a low tariff or free trade.

The same thing applies to the textile industry. Hon. gentlemen opposite tell us that we should appoint trade commissioners to develop trade in the United States. How can you develop trade in the United States for our manufactured goods when they put up a tariff wall that shuts us out of their market. A duty of 30 to 40 per cent is imposed on textiles going into the United States. How can you get over that wall of protection, and what would trade commissioners do in that country to develop and increase the exports of Canada? The people of the United States do not want our goods; their whole policy is to keep them out, not only by tariff, but by regulation, and any man who has attempted to export goods to the United States knows that the regulations there impose such restrictions upon him that it is almost impossible to get his goods in. I know, from experience, that textiles are sold as cheaply in Canada as in the United States. I am interested in a large factory in Buffalo in the United States; our scale of wages in Canada is practically the same as that in our American factory, and the goods we manufacture in our different factories in Canada are just about as cheap in price as those manufactured in our factory, and the goods we manufacture in factory in the United States. We do not sell our goods in the United States any cheaper than we do in Canada, so that the people of Canada are not robbed to the extent of one cent as against American prices. But we employ about 1,000 people in this country with their families to manufactories, and we must remember that those goods are made in Canada. Surely, that is better than manufacturing them in the United States and bringing them into Canada. If you import goods from the United States or from England, the people pay the price and the duty also. The development of industry in Canada will make our price lower than the American price and will encourage the employment of our own people.

What do the people of the United States contribute to our country and its development? They do not contribute towards our churches, charities, taxes, or anything else; but they manufacture goods and ship them in here, employing their people while, when goods are manufactured in Canada, that means that Canadians are employing their own people and contributing money towards Canadian necessities.

I was much amused the other day at the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar) saying that taxes should be imposed upon vacant lots. I do not think the hon. gentleman is sincere in that. In my town and in every other town and city in Canada artisans working in factories and men employed in other walks of life have bought lots; they are trying to save up enough money to pay for those lots and eventually to build a home on them, and the hon. member for Marquette says that those lots should be taxed in the interest of the Federal Government. I do not think the working people of Canada would appreciate very much a statement of that kind.

We want the Canadian market for the Canadian people, whether it is the manufacturer, artisan, man or woman working in those factories. We have about 8,000,000 people in this country. Do our own friends opposite say that we should open up that market of 8,000,000 people to the 105,000,000 people in the United States? As a manufacturer I say—and I think the manufacturers of Canada would endorse what I say,—that if we could get into that market free of duty, we would hold up both our hands for that; but they will not let us in; they shut us out, by their tariff and regulations. Yet our hon. friends says: "Let them into our market and ruin our market and industries for the Canadian people." That is not a loyal or patriotic policy for Canada. Every town, I think, wants manufacturing industries, and we want to encourage the establishment and development of such industries; but the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) says: "If you know of any individual or institution who wants to come to Canada and start a manufacturing industry, tell him not to come."

Mr. McMASTER: Depending on the tariff.

Mr. LALOR: He says: "They will not get any protection in this country if they come. If you know of anybody in Canada who contemplates starting an enterprise, tell him not to start one because he will not get reasonable protection." I say that all Canadian towns and even our cities want protection and to encourage and induce manufacturing industries to locate in them. In my town, the board of trade and Municipal council are putting forth efforts every day in an endeavour to ge manufacturers to locate there. Under the policy of the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), they are told to keep away and not to start their manufacturing industries in Canada.

Mr. FIELDING: I do not want to delay my hon. friend. I would prefer that he read what I said. He has hardly stated the position exactly. However, the difference is not very great and I do not want to delay him.

Mr. LALOR: I may not have given it word for word, but practically speaking, that was it.

Mr. FIELDING: No, not practically. I said that if a manufacturer was depending upon protection he would not be wise to come to Canada, because he could not rely upon its being continued.

Mr. LALOR: That is practically what I said.

Mr. FIELDING: No.

Mr. LALOR: I think so, that if the manufacturer depended upon protection he had better keep away. I say that we want to depend on protection. We want industries started in this country. We want men in Canada who have enterprise enough to start new industries, and there are a good many men in Canada who are abused by hon. gentlemen opposite who have enterprise enough to invest their money in Canadian industries. There are many men in this country who started with a very small capital, and who by their enterprise have built up manufacturing industries that are a credit to Canada. One of the great industries that I am interested in is the knitting business. We have a large institution which grew up under the Liberal policy in this country which gave us ample protection. All that we asked was that they would announce their intention of continuing that policy. Unfortunately, however, the Liberal party have now reached this position: They are afraid of the Agrarian group, who are free traders, and in order to satisfy them if they possibly can, they take the position in their speeches, at all events, in favour of low tariff or free trade. Whether they are sincere in that, I cannot say, but I doubt very much if they are. I believe, however, that many people in Canada believe that they are insincere. They know what the Liberal party professed in this country previous to 1896, when they were preaching this kind of thing, but did not carry it out after they had got into power. They put on a tariff very much higher than the tariff of this Government. The tariff of this Government is at least 3 per cent lower than the tariff of the Liberal party. I ask hon. gentlemen opposite, if they are restored to power, would they restore the tariff. That shows how sincere they were. in power, and would our Agrarian friends support it? Our Agrarian friends who had loyally supported this Government left this side of the House when we lowered the tariff. That shows how insincere they were. I believe that the friends of the official Opposition throughout the country think that if they are returned to power they will not lower the tariff. I do not know what would happen between the two groups opposite. I do not know who would be leader, the hon. member for Prince (Mr. King), or the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar). There may be some trouble over that, but at present both parties are trying to stand upon the resolution and the policy that has been introduced by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's. His resolution does not mean anything. Members from Ontario and Quebec, free traders and protectionists can all stand on that resolution.

Since I have been in this House I have never heard any one in the Farmers group move a resolution in favour of their policy of low tariff and free trade. I have never heard a resolution moved by the official Opposition in this House advocating low tariff or free trade. They have not the courage to move such a resolution. The Prime Minister has dared them time and again to do it, but they have not done so. They have simply indulged in vague statements, instead of bringing in a resolution upon which one could stand.

I rose chiefly for the purpose of speaking on a matter in connection with which my name has been mentioned. I refer to the Roumanian and Greek orders. The men who have made that statement have made a statement that is absolutely unfair, and it was made for political purposes. I want to give the Farmers group credit. I do not think they have made that statement; but our friends of the official Opposition have. What are the facts? I speak of the industry I am interested in—the textile business. Samples were submitted by the Canadian manufacturers to Roumania and Greece. They themselves selected from those samples certain goods that they wanted to buy from Canada; they were a pretty low-priced goods. They sent their men over here, and they met manufacturers from every province. I say without hesitation and without fear of contradiction that no pressure or influence was brought to bear by any manufacturer to secure orders under the Roumanian or Greek loans. The manufacturers were given orders just as large as they could handle, and in some cases more. At the meeting of the manufacturers each one had the privilege of taking all the orders he could supply, and as I said before, manufacturers were there from Quebec, Montreal and every province and every place where they manufacture textile goods. Our manufacturers were busy at the time manufacturing goods for the home market, and many took orders beyond their capacity. Other firms had to take over these contracts later. We manufactured what we had contracted for, and we helped out a good many other manufacturers, but there was no pressure or influence whatever brought to bear. It was a clean, fair arrangement to everybody who wanted to take an order, regardless of what province he came from or where he made the goods. I say that it is absolutely unfair for men, solely for political purposes, to drag my name and the names of others before this House and claim that we got these orders as a favour from the Government. It was not any favour at all. The manufacturers took these orders largely from patriotic motives. Notwithstanding that we were pretty busy and could not very well take these orders, the manufacturers felt that it was their duty to take all they could because Roumania and Greece were needing these goods. It was a clean, open business affair, and no one had any favours granted him.

In concluding, I believe that protection is the proper policy for Canada. I am not an extreme protectionist, but I believe that a fair and reasonable protection is in the interests of Canada, in the interests of the farmers, and more particularly in the interests of the working people in the factories of Canada. At the present time industry is in a deplorable condition. I know what I am talking about. Conditions are so bad that some manufacturers have lost more money in the last six months than they made perhaps during the whole of the war. At a time like this, industries need to be encouraged, and the men in those industries should not be held up to ridicule and have unfair statements made about them in this House, because no one deserves such treatment less than those engaged in the manufacturing industries of this country. Our manufacturing industries need help; they need encouragement; they need protection, and I am sorry that all of us, farmers and men in every walk of life, Liberals and Conservatives, cannot all unite upon a policy of support and encouragement to the great manufacturing industries of this country.

Mr. O. R. GOULD (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland), in beginning his speech this afternoon, assured the House that he was going to be exceedingly brief, so that the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) might have the floor immediately. He then proceeded to falsify that prediction, and succeeded admirably in doing so before he took his seat. In contradistinction to the hon. member, when I make the statement now that I shall be brief, I do so with the determination to live up to that assurance, not because there is not enough material to discuss, but because of the very early, or late, hour, as the case may be, and the evident desire of the House to come to a decision upon the question under consideration. That is the principal reason for my intention to be brief in the remarks I am going to make.

Now, the fact has been very patent, not only this session, but last session as well, that there is no single question which has been debated to such an extent from the Government benches as the United Grain Growers' Grain Company. That has been a favourite topic with a goodly number of hon. gentlemen opposite; in every debate of any pretensions they have introduced this subject. Well, that is really good political capital for our group, because the people who know our company best know perfectly well that the majority of the statements made in regard to that concern by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House are biased, and are not directed in any proper or sensible spirit. We know that very well, and I would advise the Government that those gentlemen sitting on the benches behind them and supporting them, who persist in debating the merits of the United Grain Growers' Company, are a load that no Government can afford to carry. If the leaders of the Government have not had sufficient perspicacity to see that, then I am giving that first-hand information now, because I have travelled around the country considerably, and I know the sentiment of the people, and I can assure this House that the people, particularly in the western part of Canada, object to these irrational statements on the part of individuals who know little about the operations of that company. I deplore the very low level which was reached by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), in his contribution to the debate. The hon. gentleman's attitude is to be deprecated, and the arguments which he has advanced tonight are not worthy of the smallest man in this House, particularly in so far as his remarks had reference to the United Grain Growers. But there is one matter to which he made reference, and in regard to which I, as an individual, have more information than any other member. I have personal information on the subject in question, and had it not been for the fact that the hon. member for Vancouver resuscitated it, I had not intended to allude to the incident. Perhaps the House is already aware of the fact that I put in two weeks, excepting two days, in the electoral district of York and Sunbury, and I spent every day but one of the time I was in the constituency in the city of Fredericton, the headquarters of both organizations. I know this to be a positive fact, which neither the Prime Minister nor any other gentleman can controvert, for I heard it iterated and reiterated, on the streets of the city of Fredericton, in the committee rooms, and in every other place where men congregate to discuss public matters, that the Government and its party are canvassing absolutely on religious lines. I speak whereof I know, and I would not have referred to this matter had it not been for the efforts of the Government to make it appear that this assertion in the first place had no basis of truth. I repeat that this is the biggest issue discussed in York-Sunbury, namely the charge that the Government supporters are working on religious grounds.

Now, we have listened to an address on high protection by the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Lalor), and we quite expected the hon. gentleman to make a speech of that nature. I do not think it is necessary for me to enter into any detailed discussion of the merits of the question. The hon. member makes the sweeping assertion that we are free traders. When my hon. friend makes that statement, he thereby gives proof positive that he has not read nor considered the platform on which we stand

Neither he, nor any other hon. gentleman can prove that we have ever stated that we are a free trade party, and yet that assertion is made throughout the country on the hustings, and also in this House, no matter how frequently nor how clearly it is refuted. In a few words, I would say that we demand that those who wish protection shall come before a tribunal of the House and show reasons why they should have it; and that is a most logical position in regard to the tariff. With that sentiment, I will leave any further reply to the statements made by the hon. member for Haldimand.

I rose for the purpose, if possible, at this late hour, of introducing some new material into the debate. Ever since I have come to the House, I have been quite in sympathy with the Minister of Finance in the great task with which he is charged, of raising money wherewith to administer the affairs of the country; but it seems to me that the minister himself is not sympathetic with those who would help him. He apparently has no desire to accept advice from those who tender it from this side of the House, and his cold attitude towards the sincere intentions of hon. members who would lend him some assistance cannot but be regarded as evidence of an improper spirit. Now, I wish to state that I am always proud to say a word for the big organizations of the West, the big agrarian organizations. Some time ago the Saskatchewan Grain Growers' Association asked the Canadian Council of Agriculture to gather first-hand information pending the day when bank legislation would be introduced so that such information could be available for the use of those who might frame that legislation. The idea was borne of a desire to help the Government, but we find that when the Minister of Finance proceeds to get information he does not go to any of these organizations. Now, I am actuated to-night by a desire to suggest to the minister some new avenues whereby money can be raised for the country. My sole desire is to suggest ways and means whereby the Minister of Finance may raise more revenue and tax some sources of wealth so far untaxed or, if taxed, not taxed to their capacity. I wish to refer, then, to our large banking institutions. Now, the banking institutions of this country, like those of other civilized countries, hold valuable franchises granted by the Government not only for the purpose of handling the moneys of the country, but for extending credits. It is a very valuable thing, a great consideration, to any group of individuals to be granted such a privilege and power. By that power they can extend or curtail expansion, and as a result depress certain industries if they so desire. It seems to me, Sir, that our banking institutions in Canada have not had the right view in respect to commercial and agricultural enterprises. It seems to me that their desire has been to extend credits more quickly to commercial enterprises than they have to agricultural pursuits. I cite the following as an illustration: When we wish to market our wheat in the West, or when, late in the season, it is our desire to prepare the soil for the next season an individual may go to the banks and say "I would like to ask for a loan to permit me to get my land in better shape for my crop of next year. I have so many thousand bushels of wheat threshed and in my bins on the farm and I would like an advance to finance myself until the cold weather comes when I can haul my wheat." Immediately the banking institutions will say "No, we do not extend credit in the case of wheat." But what happens? The moment you take that wheat and put it in the elevators the same banks that in the first instance refused the farmer credit, extend a credit to the concern which probably has put up a $5,000 or $7,000 building at that point although they had denied it to the agriculturist. That goes on all over Western Canada; I believe it to be the case in the east, wherever commodities are handled in large quantities and big sums of money are required. I quote that in substantiation of the statement I made that the viewpoint of the banking institutions of Canada is not as favourable to agriculture as it is to other industries. Of course those other industries may have two or three turn-overs in the course of a year, and that may be one of the reasons for the bank's policy towards them. But in the final analysis I am convinced, and I think all other hon. gentlemen are also, that agriculture is the surest source of wealth in Canada. Now we have a Government that does not seem to want to intervene in behalf of agriculture in that respect; I believe there is something lacking there. I believe that agriculture should demand that the influence of the Government should be used to see that equality prevails in the establishment of credits to commercial and agricultural enterprises alike.

I now wish to deal with the question of taxation. The axiom we should follow is that those best able to bear taxation should pay it; and I believe that if we look into this matter closely we will come to the conclusion that the large banking institutions of Canada are not contributing as large a proportion to the taxes as the franchise extended to them by the Government warrants, although they are in better shape financially than other sections of the community. The statement issued with respect to the chartered banks of Canada up to March 31, is before me and a perusal of it would lead one to believe that these large institutions are concealing the value of their assets. I will give an example of what I mean, and because I use the names of certain banks I would not have the inference drawn that it is from any desire to discredit those particular institutions—I believe the same conditions prevail in all our banks. In the case of any business corporation it will be admitted that when in large urban centres a central site is chosen and expensive buildings erected thereon, the value of the land and buildings is not stationary, but an increase in value follows. That does not appear to be the case in the bank statement; no matter for what length of time a bank occupies a site it continues to send to the Government only the initial price paid for that land and the buildings erected upon it. For example, take the Royal Bank—which is considered one of the strongest if not the strongest bank in the Dominion at the present time. The figures for that institution are as follows:

Total assets	$543,748,151
Total Liability	501,340,235
Assets over Liabilities	$ 42,407,916
Value of premises	9,705,809

All hon. gentlemen who are familiar with large urban centres where the Royal Bank holds valuable property will realize that the price given in those figures is a very low estimate of the value of the sites and buildings which they possess. Now take the Bank of Montreal:

Total assets	$528,101,391
Total liabilities	476,899,937
Assets over liabilities	$ 51,201,454
Value of premises	5,550,000

The same condition obtains with respect to the Bank of Commerce, the Bank of Hamilton, the Imperial Bank and all the other banks. Now here is the comparison I wish to make: In the West we have the small city of Weyburn with a population of not more than 8,000. In that city there is a bank known as the Weyburn Security Bank, which has fifteen small branches located throughout the West. Many of these branches are established in villages, none of them in large populous centres and yet we find the figures sent in by the Weyburn Security Bank are $203,515 for fifteen branches, or an average value of $13,567. The initial price, or at least the price per site, of the Merchants Bank is $10,388, a less amount per site than that given by the little Weyburn Security Bank in the West. The Merchants Bank has its headquarters in a city which boasts a population of 750,000 and yet its average price is given as $3,250 less than the average site of the Weyburn Security Bank, located in many instances in places not having a larger population than 250. Something is wrong also when the Royal Bank shows a valuation of only $26 per site more than the little bank referred to. If it is a fact that these banking institutions are not sending in proper returns to the Government they should be obliged to live up to the law; otherwise what is the good of sending in the returns at all? If an organization or an individual were to go to the directors of the Bank of Montreal and ask them for the value of their buildings and sites they would probably place it at $50,500,000 rather than $5,550,000. If they have received profits of that nature from valuable franchises of the Dominion Government, I believe it is only right that investigation should be made so that they may be called upon to pay their fair share of the taxation of the country. There must be some reason why the returns are sent in in that manner.

Another illustration that I would give refers to land taxation. In our western country, and I believe in all the other provinces, we have the evil known as the land speculator, but particularly in the West, while even down in the province of New Brunswick I have heard complaints that the evil is prevalent and lands are being held out of use. In the part of the country in which my home is, when I went in there speculators, largely from the United States, held lands that they had purchased at from $1.50 to $3 an acre. Those lands at that time were not worth any more perhaps, but those speculators came in and bought them in sections, half townships and townships, and as the homesteads around were taken up and my neighbour and I—I use this only as illustrative of what happened—made those vacant lands valuable, those speculators were able to sell at an increase in some instances as high as 1,500 per cent. I maintained in the first address I made in this House that that unearned increment is one of the means whereby this Government should receive taxation. What happens? Our big speculators come in from the United States and for an outlay of a few thousand dollars get in return hundreds of thousands of dollars, which they take back with them, and our Government stands aside and lets them do so. The State has created that wealth, and a portion of it should be taken for administering the affairs of the State. I think it is only logical and just that in Canada or in any other country where such conditions prevail the Government should step in and appropriate a certain portion of that unearned increment.

I read in the book which was quoted by the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) yesterday as an authority that agriculture every year loses approximately $125,000,000 because of destruction caused by vermin and insect pests. That is an enormous amount of money, and these large vacant areas are largely responsible. as any hon. gentleman who has lived in the West knows to be the fact, these large vacant areas are the breeding grounds of all the vermin and insect pests that prey upon our field crops. And those large vacant areas work this further hardship, that neighbours are a mile farther apart and have farther to go to church and to market; yet the settlers have to pay the taxes for the local improvements that enhance the value of these lands held by speculators. Every statement I make is applicable to the lands of the Canadian Pacific Railway and of its subsidiary companies. I think my suggestion can be worked out, and I am confident that the people of Canada will endorse a policy that will ensure a fair proportion of this unearned increment being appropriated for the use of the State. The taxation of these lands is a policy that we of the western provinces have to resort to simply because we have not any natural resources to fall back upon. We have been obliged for the purposes of provincial revenues to devise ways and means whereby taxes could be raised, and we have imposed a tax upon these people. Still they do not yet pay their fair proportion of the taxes. The residents have to pay the federal, provincial and municipal taxes, and now a sales tax is imposed, which increases the federal levy; but these speculators, who mostly live outside of Canada, escape the majority of these taxes, and pay no federal tax for the use of the land or for any unearned increment. I maintain that the federal authorities should oblige those speculators to leave a fair share of that unearned increment in this country, either in the form of straight taxes or of a substantial portion of the large profits they receive as a result of the enhanced prices of their land due to the efforts of the people in the community.

During the last ten or twelve years the provincial and federal governments have got much of their advice through commissions, but it is my opinion that the day of commissions is pretty nearly past. What Canada needs at the present time is appraisers to go out and value the assets of the country—the assets of great institutions, to ascertain if they are paying their fair and equitable share of taxation. In the case of the civil servants here in Ottawa their Pay Sheets are taken as the basis for computing the taxes they shall pay. They are made of the same clay as the people interested in these large institutions, and the Government should be big enough to have men go out and place a value on them, so that they may be taxed as thoroughly as the civil servant. One should be treated the same as the other. I maintain that if appraisers are put on and institutions can show they are paying a fair share of taxation they will not suffer; but when men connected with those institutions decry the appointment of appraisers, that immediately raises a doubt in my mind as to whether they are really paying their fair and equitable share of taxation, because if they are they would have nothing to fear.

Mr. LALOR: They would be delighted to have an investigation and to pay their share of the taxes.

Mr. GOULD: I would point out to my hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Lalor) that that is one of the planks in the platform of the Agrarian party, and I am pleased to know that he supports that plank. Despite all the lamentations over this platform, I find in the majority of cases wherever I have been speaking, whether here, in the country or on the floor of this House, invariably some plank in that platform is brought up which some one will endorse.

Now, on a number of platforms in the West preceding this session when being asked by members of my audience about the proposed tariff commission, I made this assertion—I do not wish to say this as endeavouring to prove that I am a prophet, for I am not, neither am I a descendant of a race of prophets—and it will be borne out, I believe, that all the tariff commission would amount to would be to fulfill the promise the Government had made to hold an inquiry, but that the evidence collected would be pigeon-holed. Such we find to be the case to-day. The people have demanded that the promises of the Government should be implemented to the fullest extent, and that following the work of that commission legislation should be brought before this House. We would like to know what the sentiment of the Government is in the matter of tariff revision, whether up or down. Just the bald statement that the Government stand for a protective platform is not good enough. The people demand from the Government, just as the Government have been demanding of the Opposition, a definite declaration — they want to know whether the revision is going to be up or down.

Mr. DAVIDSON: Will my hon. friend be good enough to tell me whether he accepts the policy of the Canadian Council of Agriculture to the effect that the British preference should be increased to fifty per cent and that free trade should be completed in this country inside of five years?

Mr. GOULD: I am not sure whether the hon. gentleman is the same gentleman who asked that question yesterday.

Mr. DAVIDSON: A new seeker after truth.

Mr. GOULD: I have no hesitation in saying that that is our policy. I am not prepared to accept the view expressed by the hon. member for Brantford that if we were to have free trade with Great Britain it would mean free trade with the whole world. We have a British preference at this time, but it does not affect the tariff in relation to other countries. In my humble opinion, it is absurd to say that if we have freedom of trade with Great Britain it must necessarily follow that we shall have free trade with the whole world.

The hon. member for Brantford asserted also that the policy as outlined by the hon. member for Marquette, my honoured leader, would be destructive to the interests of the workingman of Canada; that our policy as laid down in the platform of the Canadian Council of Agriculture would work havoc and ruin to the workingman as well as to the industries of Canada. Well, it was a case of simply making assertions without offering proof. Why the policy to which the hon. member for Brantford gives allegiance has already proved itself to be a failure. Take the case of Toronto, with the 20,000 men clamouring for bread; surely that in itself is condemnation of the present system. In a land in which the resources are so great and the agricultural possibilities so abundant, is there any reason why we should have starvation?

Mr. MYERS: Will the hon. gentleman tell me how many are employed in free trade Britain?

Mr. GOULD: I am not prepared to give the figures, but when coal strikes are on and other economic disturbances prevail, figures do not prove anything in any case. We do know, however, that Britain is recovering much more readily from her huge war debt than Canada is, and that may count for something.

I was making some reference to the sentiments expressed by the hon. member for Brantford. I believe that he asserted that the value of the exports of manufactured goods was in excess of the value of exports of agriculture. I asked the hon. gentleman at that time if it was not a fact that, taking say 5 bushels of wheat at a value of $1.50 a bushel, or $7.50, entering into the manufacture of a barrel of flour valued at $12—the only value coming under the head of manufacture being $4.50—I asked whether the whole value of the product $12 had not been credited to manufacture instead of only $4.50. Any computation on that basis would be quite unfair. If in such cases the price of the natural product were deducted from the value of the manufactured product, it would be found that the value of manufactured products exported does not compare with the value of the products of the farm, and the difference would be even greater if you added the products of the mines, the fisheries and the forests. The natural products of Canada are the wealth of Canada upon which the national debt rests and by and through which the national debt must be paid.

As a further illustration, take the case of hides. I have before me a letter written by my brother-in-law in which he asks me if another brother-in-law had said anything to me about beef hides. He shipped to Brandon six hides and he got one cent a pound for them. After he had paid the express on these six beef hides he had $1.35 left—and Brandon is about 130 miles distant from his home. They say that every cloud has a silver lining. Well, the only silver lining I can see in this case is that if he is called upon to pay income tax next year it will not be very heavy. Six cow hides—and one dollar toward the price of a pair of shoes! You could load up a team with beef hides and you would not get enough from the sale of them to pay for the harness with which the load was drawn. That is agriculture, and if my hon. friend from Brantford wishes to take that as an illustration; if he takes the value of the hide when made into leather and into shoes and counts that as manufacture, and then asks the people of this House to believe that the value of manufactures exceeds the value of agricultural products, then I say that it is an enormity, an illustration used simply for the purposes of argument.

The Minister of Militia (Mr. Guthrie) has also done his best to make it appear throughout the country that this United Farmers' Organization is a very vicious institution. Likewise, the member for Brantford would make it appear that it was not a fact that the manufacturers of Canada had refused to sell to the United Grain Growers. Now, I happen to be a shareholder in that organization; I am proud to say that I was a shareholder in it when it was first started. This company has been doing my business; I am satisfied with the manner in which they are doing it, and that being the case I do not see that it is anybody else's business. The very fact that this company does a large volume of business proves that the people for whom they do business are satisfied with them.

The Minister of Militia, speaking in York or some place near Toronto, said that we were disloyal in not buying Canadian made implements. The privilege had been denied us at the time at which he spoke, but in the House he made reference to it, and we tried to give the hon. gentleman the evidence, possibly thinking that he did not have the full facts. But he said: "I do not wish to be interrupted." I do not know whether the hon. gentleman's sentiments are influenced by the signs which have been placed up by the Canadian Manufacturers, on one side: "Buy made-in-Canada goods," and on the other: "Where will the revenue come from?" I read in the Estimates of the hon. gentleman's own department: "Customs duties on all imported stores and clothing, including material for the manufacture of ammunition, $40,000"—and this is the hon. gentleman who charges the farmers with being unpatriotic. Last year the item on this account was $50,000. Now why does the hon. gentleman go about the country trying to create prejudices, trying to make it appear that the farmers in the West, who were forced into this business in order to protect themselves from the avarice of financial institutions, are not acting properly, when the hon. gentleman himself was far more guilty of the very thing of which he charged us? But I wish to have it stated in Hansard that too much of this stuff is spoken, not in sincerity, but only on account of political prejudices, with a desire to make political capital. The people of the Dominion are anxiously looking for men who will speak in accordance with principles in which they believe and on which they act. That is, at least, what I am trying to do. I speak from a principle, and I have not yet reached the political stage where I would lose my sincerity to such an extent that I would try to take cheap political party advantage of hon. gentlemen. That is beneath me, and, I believe it is beneath the policy of the group which I have the honour to represent.

Just a few words in closing. The minister rose to a very high tone in his closing remarks when he asked for the unity of the people of Canada. When he went to the manufacturers' associations, retail merchants' associations, Credit Men's associations and so on for advice, they advised him to discard the luxury and other taxes and to impose a sales tax. I wish to point out that the labouring man, the man who works in the mine or on the railway or on the farm, wears out more clothes and shoes than hon. gentlemen sitting in this chamber, and the result will be that the sales tax will bear more heavily on those individuals, while the individuals who have a right and can afford to pay taxes on luxuries, are exempt. Had the minister gone to the Canadian Council of Agriculture, he would at least have heard the other side of the story and it is only fair to the great masses of the people of Canada that the minister, in his desire, which was, perhaps, an earnest one, to get first hand information and advice, should have gone to all classes representative of the people of the Dominion to ask for that advice. If, perchance, the minister has an opportunity another year of asking for advice for the purposes of Government, I would advise him to go to that great organization, because we believe, and we have a right to believe, that we have in that great organization in the West, the Canadian Council of Agriculture, a body of men and women who are the equals intellectually of men and women in any other organization in this Dominion. But in all cases they have been despised and ignored by this Government, because they are the appointees of the plain people who think of these economic questions so much. When these people elect these men to do those things for them and this Government, sitting in high places, spurns and despises the advice which they give, not in a partisan spirit, these people have a right, perhaps, to repeat the sentiments that are sometimes sent out that this Government is representative only of the big interests of the Dominion of Canada. Not until all the people of Canada shall be taken into consideration, will faith again permeate the body politic. The minister asks for it in high tones; but he has not established a precedent himself, and I say, not in any spirit of antagonism, but in a desire to suggest something of the errors into which the Government has fallen and means whereby it can redeem itself largely in the eyes of the people, that it should not ignore the request of the plain people, but should lend a sympathetic ear, because they are just as capable and wise as those belonging to other organizations, and in many cases they seem to be used only as the dromedaries of taxation. The people object to that.

Mr. SEGUIN (L'Assomption and Montcalm): (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, if I rise at this stage of the debate, be assured that I do not intend to put forth new arguments to condemn as it should be condemned the policy of the present Administration; but as I occupy a seat in this Parliament in order to represent my constituents, I think it is my duty to express my most emphatic disapproval of the manner public business is administered by this Government. After having given us a real dance of the millions, after having completely destroyed Canadian credit by their extravagant expenditure, after having lead us to the very door of bankruptcy, our present administrators cannot find any other remedy to-day to help us out of the predicament in which they have placed us, than to impose new taxes. Instead of practising the strictest economy, the present Government distribute gold by the handful, provided some of their friends are there to receive the lion's share.

These gentlemen talk of economy and of a wise administration of the public treasure only when it is proposed to assist some public undertaking, however meritorious, in the province of Quebec. If you ask these gentlemen to vote moneys for a post office, for the establishment of experimental farms or other similar works required in one of our counties, the answer is ever ready: "The treasury is empty"; but, should the proposal be to build a railway, or ships, or to increase the militia, oh! then, there is no hesitation in taking money out of the treasury and the debt continues to increase, to the despair of al true patriots.

While listening to the speeches delivered, during the course of this debate, by the hon. minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton), by the right hon. Prime minister (Mr. Meighen), and by several others, one wonders if these gentlemen have not gone out of their minds. Instead of admitting that the State treasury is quite empty, that there is a large increase of our indebtedness at the end of each fiscal year, the present Government cry as loudly as possible that everything is all right and they continue cramming their friends.

The so-called tariff commission went travelling through the country during several months, and with a semblance of seriousness, they gathered the information as well as the suggestions which were available. Considering all these preparations, the electors throughout the country, were entitled to a revision of the tariff in view of improving present conditions.

Even the people in the rural districts were allured by the deceitful management of our Government leaders, and to mention a case with which I am well acquainted, and which I have taken especially to heart, I may refer to that of my friends, the tobacco growers of my district. Their situation is one of the most critical; some of them have yet on hand their tobacco harvest of 1919 and 1920, it is no unusual occurrence to meet farmers in my county who have a thousand, five thousand, ten thousand and even twenty thousand pounds of tobacco for sale and who are offered only ridiculously low prices. Yet, the hon. Minister of Finance has invited them to meet him in Montreal and even in Ottawa. They have explained to him the critical situation in which they are placed, they have suggested to him remedies for their troubles. They had a right to expect that he would take their case into consideration and that something would be done to improve their fate; they had awaited the Budget with anxiety, and now they have been completely ignored by the Minister of Finance who evidently wishes to irritate them by depriving them of all hope for relief. In behalf of all these worthy farmers of whom advantage is being taken, in behalf of my good friends the tobacco growers of l'Assomption and Montcalm, I wish this evening to place on record my protest against the lack of protection given by the present Government to the interests of the agricultural class, and in behalf of the latter, I wish to repeat to my hon. friend the requests which I made when I submitted to him the representations made by the tobacco growers, in my county, and I would ask him to submit to the House, before the end of the session and without further delay, a measure to which I extend my support in advance, though it be on a protective basis because I declare myself for anything which may protect the farmer and the tobacco grower.

Such a measure should include the following provisions which sum up the fair claims of the tobacco growers of the country, that is to say:

I. Increase the duty to one dollar a pound on foreign tobacco, unstripped, and to one dollar and fifty cents on foreign tobacco, stripped.

II. Make compulsory the destruction of the ribs stripped from the tobacco leaves, as required previous to 1917.

III. Allow the producer to keep, for his personal use, at least thirty-five pounds of leaf tobacco or other tobacco; give the same permission for each of his sons and his male servants.

IV. Dispense growers of the requirement of securing a yearly permit and abolish the five cent duty per pound imposed on leaf tobacco, and if there must be a permit and a duty, to facilitate the collection of same by establishing an office to that effect in the post office of every locality where tobacco is being grown.

May I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Finance will hear this appeal in the name of my electors? I entertain serious doubts in this respect. Nevertheless, it would show that really the minister is anxious to be fair towards the farmers of this country.

The hon. Minister of Finance and the Government of the day have heretofore failed to implement their pledge to those who relied on the long advertised revision of the tariff. They have particularly omitted to procure relief to my good friends, the tobacco growers of l'Assomption and Montcalm; moreover, as I have not the least confidence in this Government of profiteers, I shall gladly vote against the motion of the Minister of Finance, giving my full support to the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding).

Mr. D. A. LAFORTUNE (Jacques-Cartier): (Translation). Mr. Speaker, I feel rather embarrassed in addressing the House after all those splendid speeches. The hon. members on both sides, have spoken admirably on the subject of the Budget, and it so happens that, at two o'clock in the morning I am obliged to make a few remarks in all fairness to my electors. May I ask my hon. colleague to grant me their attention for a few minutes?

Mr. McMASTER: (Translation). Hear, hear.

Mr. LAFORTUNE: (Translation.) When one is in business, Mr. Speaker, it is necessary at times to take stock. Merchants, manufacturers, business men and even to professional men examine the state of their business every year, and this is what I mean to do this evening, as a politician.

I have seen many a thing in my time—unfortunately I am getting old. When hon. Mr. Mackenzie came to power, and this is a long time ago, I was a young man, yet I was interested in politics. He came to power in 1874, and administered public affairs until 1878. He was a free-trader. He was an honest man, a man of strong principles. No one ever doubted the sincerity of the late Hon. Mr. Mackenzie. Amongst other important things which he did, was the institution of the Supreme Court. He gave the people the ballot system, he continued the construction of railways which had been begun. We had just had the amazing scandal, the Pacific scandal, and I remember well the words of the Conservative leader of the time: "These hands are clean." He spoke the truth. The late Sir John Macdonald, an honest man, a most distinguished politician, had not taken any part in this extraordinary scandal, this colossal scandal, for which his friends were responsible. One had received a large amount, another had received a smaller one; there were quite a few whose hands were not clean. That is why Sir John Macdonald de-cared: "My hands are clean." And I believe it was true. The hon. Mr. Mackenzie assumed the duties of office and performed these until 1878. He was a free-trader, and decidedly so. The people did not approve of his administration. Sir John Macdonald, who was cunning, took advantage of the situation to ask for protection; the national policy which he had always refused to give. He had been a free-trader at first, but seeing that his opponent was also a free-trader, he said to himself: This may help me in getting into power, I am going to declare myself a protectionist. He won the elections with a large majority, assumed power and governed until his death, in 1891. He was replaced by Sir John Abbott, a distinguished lawyer from Montreal, and one that held a high reputation, an honest man who did not live very long. He did not have time to do much. He was succeeded by Sir John Thompson, who was a Catholic; and who kept the reins of power until his death which occurred in England. Great Britain furnished the ship which brought his body home to Canada. On the ship's arrival at Halifax, there was another scandal and a very extraordinary one. I remember taking part in elections at that time when we were speaking of the famous scandal which had occurred on the occasion of the death of Sir John Thompson. The friends of the deceased managed to spend a considerable amount of money for his funeral. The pall bearers were given each a new pair of shoes, worth fifteen dollars and a silk hat. Generally, when you go to a funeral, before leaving your house you take your hat along with you, and you do not expect a new hat to be given to you at the deceased's house, on that occasion, you had to wear a new silk hat. Usually you give a pair of gloves to each one of the pall bearers; but this time you required twelve pairs, for each pall bearer. There were roses also. Well, it is the custom to give roses to newly-wed couples, but on the occasion of a funeral, you usually give a wreath or a few flowers. At any rate, they spent $2,000 worth of flowers for this funeral, the total cost of which amounted to $12,500. When we told the people that they had spent that much for a funeral, they would not believe it; we had to bring them the Hansard and let them read the evidence thus brought out; then they realized that we were telling the truth. So much said for the funeral of Sir John Thompson. He was succeeded by Sir Mackenzie Bowell, who was an honest man.

Mr. FONTAINE: (Translation.) He was not a Catholic.

Mr. LAFORTUNE: (Translation.) No, he was not a Catholic, but he was a gentleman and an honest man. He, however did not like his associates. I remember the statement he made: "I am tired, I don't know where to go, I am living in a nest of traitors." A nest of traitors! That is what the late Sir Mackenzie Bowell actually said. In April 1896, he handed the Government over to Sir Charles Tupper. He too, was a gentleman, but he was unlucky. He started on his campaign, preaching the conservative doctrine throughout the country, until he received his fatal blow in Regina, when he said to the people of that city: "Is it possible that you would prefer a French Catholic to an English Protestant"? That spread throughout the country and the Province of Quebec did not forget it. It had a good result. At the last meeting held in Summerlea, which I attended, I remember Mr. C. A. Geoffrion, a well known lawyer of Montreal, saying at a dinner, at the home of Mr. Robert Bickerdike: "Do you know that the election is taking place to-morrow?" That was on the evening of June 23rd. Mr. Bickerdike had invited us to have a cup of coffee at his cottage. It was the last meeting of the campaign. Mr. Geoffrion said: "Will you tell us, Wilfrid, what you think about the election that is to be held to-morrow". And Mr. Laurier replied: "I have no objection". Then he rose from his seat and said: "I have just returned from an extensive tour of the province of Ontario, and I am full of confidence; I have travelled throughout the Maritime Provinces and I feel the same confidence. I have gone everywhere, and all that I ask of my fellow citizens of Quebec is that they give me only half of the votes of their Province". Had this happened, he would have been defeated. He had confidence in the Province of Ontario and in the Maritime Provinces, but he had not much confidence in the Province of Quebec. The next evening June 23rd, on the eve of St. Jean Baptiste Day—not that of Mr. Gauthier, but the real St. Jean Baptiste Day—instead of splitting the vote, we had a majority of 31 in the Province of Quebec and that brought him to power.

Mr. Laurier formed a Government in 1896. We know all about the elections which were held in that year. In 1900, a complete victory, again in 1904, and in 1908, then in 1911, he was defeated on two questions, the navy and a certain reciprocity which he wanted for his country.

I remember at that time, that there was a man, a very thoughtful, hard worker and good debater, who, acting in good faith, I believe, undertook to defeat Sir Wilfrid Laurier. I refer to the Nationalist leader, Mr. Bourassa. He went all over the country and the Province of Quebec, claiming that a navy would be disastrous. I shall never forget that he came in my own riding of Montcalm to denounce the navy, to curse the navy. "The children and grandchildren of the members who voted in favour of that navy will curse the name of their ancestor". I assured you that I looked him straight in the eyes and told him: "Why, you Bourassa, on whose authorization would you have my children curse me? You tell my children to curse their father because I voted according to my conscience, according to my chief, listening to the voice of a chief in whom I had full confidence and, as a reward you tell my children: "Curse your father" I added: "When my children will kneel on my tombstone, they shall drop a tear, but shall not curse me" What authority have you to give such advice to my children? I can tell you he had a pretty hard time of it. I am not going to repeat what I told him, but he won't forget it for some time ot come.

As regards reciprocity I remember that the hon. members sitting opposite and who were sitting on this side (left) at that time used to say: "why, an agreement with the United States means annexation!" Everywhere we went they would say that granting the partial reciprocity agreement prepared by Messrs. Fielding and Patterson after their trip to the White House meant annexation. They shouted that so often that the people were convinced by it and poor Laurier was defeated on the issue of reciprocity and the navy. I assure you that we had lots of trouble in regard to the Niobe and the Rainbow which Laurier had bought. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that is was no fun listening to Mr. Bourassa and his friends, and the Conservatives with them, abusing the Rainbow and the Niobe. It was one of the worst scandals one could imagine and that a political party could be guilty of. "Men of war, mad must be any one who thinks war is near, and must also be crazy who thinks that there is any such danger and that it is necessary to prepare."

This is what the nationalist leader said at the time. He succeeded. Mr. Bourassa is no ordinary man. I can warrant you that there is not a man in the country as capable of rousing the people as he can and which he did at that time. He used to say to the fathers and mothers of families that their children would be strangled, murdered, cut into small pieces should they participate in the war which was going to take place. He said that Mr. Laurier bought men of war for England, as if England was in need of Canada to maintain her supremacy and the glory of her name. It was foolish to pretend that England was in need of the colonies to keep up her position in regard to other nations of the world. Mr. Bourassa thus spoke, the people were convinced and Mr. Laurier was defeated. As regards to reciprocity, I remember that hon. Mr. Monk, a gentleman and a good speaker representing the riding I am now representing—said in this House: "Let well enough alone". Those were the men who used to shout that Laurier was ruling the country. Whenever Mr. Laurier wanted to improve anything, they said "Let well enough alone" Well do I remember what Mr. Laurier answered. "This is a doubtful compliment you pay me. After stating that I could not properly administer the country you say "let well enough alone" when I want to do something." Reciprocity was rejected and so was the navy. Mr. Laurier was defeated. Those gentlemen are in power and will remain there until further notice.

Mr. Speaker, when we used to go through the province of Quebec, we were told. "Liberals are thieves, they have stolen our platform, the Conservatives party's platform" Then we said: "That is true, but why could not you succeed with that same platform? You had the same platform, you say, but instead of deficits you had we are getting surpluses?" But, of course, the hon, member for Shelburne and Queen's was there. At that time he was called the watch-dog of the Liberal party. He was there to keep everything tidy, spick and span. There were no more rats in the ship of State. Mr. Laurier had the upper hand, the latter had no match. He had enlisted as lieutenants the premiers of the provinces, the most worthy men: Sir Oliver Mowat, Hon. Mr. Davies, Hon. Mr. Fielding, all Premiers in their own province. Some of his friends did not relish this. I remember that some of his Liberal friends like Messrs. Langelier, Geoffrion, Beausoleil, Préfontaine felt rather sore when outsiders were taken in. But Mr. Laurier was there. He selected such men as Mr. Joly, once premier of the province of Quebec. He gathered the Prime Ministers from every province and thus formed a very strong cabinet.

For the Department of Agriculture, he chose a most practical man, Hon. Mr. Fisher, who died recently. He was a man of great experience. He knew the difference between a duck and a goose. The former Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Montague, coming to a farm-yard one day, said to the farmer's wife: "Madame, what a fine goose you have there!" "Sir," she replied, "this is not a goose, it is a duck." He did not know the difference between a goose and a duck. Mr. Fisher knew better. With men of such worth, well-known men of high reputation, in Sir Wilfrid's Laurier's Cabinet, not the first year, because there was a small deficit, but each subsequent year, there was a great surplus at the end of the fiscal year, whilst the other gentlemen, the previous administrators, had deficits, and large deficits, Mr. Speaker, this proves what men of worth, talent and integrity Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his colleagues were; they administered the country wisely, prudently, rightly, and with the greatest success.

The Hon. Mr. Mackenzie was somewhat obstinate; he was a Scotchman. He was advised by friends, at that time, to change the tariff, but he did not want to do so. He was a free trader, and held firm to his principles. That brought his defeat. Sometimes I hear hon. members on the Government side trying to recall the past in order to prove that Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his friends were free traders; but, these gentlemen are only quoting things that happened before Laurier came to power. They quote Sir Richard Cartwright, he was a free trader. Some of his friends were free traders, but Sir Wilfrid always refused to adopt that policy. He adopted the policy of the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) which was of a happy medium, and that policy is mine also. I regret not being able to follow the arguments which our hon. friends on the ministerial side are trying to bring forward, but I prefer adopting the same argument as the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) whom I trust. I listened to him to-day with great pride. There were several candidates at the large convention. We struggled hard before we made our choice. Hon. Mr. Graham was one of the candidates, there was the hon. member for Shelburne and Queens, he is not a first-comer, he is an extraordinary man; we had the leader of the Opposition who was chosen in preference to all; neither is the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) a first-comer, and he also was there; but we needed a leader in Parliament, we could not have a family of leaders, we had to choose one only, and I think we chose the best. The hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's is here, he has shown what he could do during fifteen years, and we want him for our Minister of Finance at the first opportunity. I assure you that it is not an easy matter to get millions from the hon. member. He was very strict. His friends thought so, because he did not unfasten the purse-strings very readily. One wants unreasonable things sometimes, and asks for them just the same, then, sulks and murmurs when it is impossible to obtain what has been asked; but, I assure you that one must be careful with the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's; one must be there early to get something; but let us honour him for that, honour is due to this method of managing the public funds. He has proven his worth, he is highly reputed as a financial man, and we want him to continue the work he has started with such success.

When Sir Wilfrid came into power and the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's had given us the tariff, manufactures were built as if by magic. My county is a manufacturing county, it is the county of Jacques-Cartier. There are several manufactures in the county of Jacques-Cartier, and they were all prosperous; industries were most prosperous during Sir Wilfrid Laurier's and the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's time. Manufactures rose amongst us as quickly as mushrooms. In less time than it takes to say it, a big chimney, a large manufacture was built; and, Mr. Speaker, were you to visit the county of Jacques-Cartier and see what is being done at Sainte Anne, Point Claire, Dixie, Valois, Lachine, Dorval, St. Pierre-aux-Liens, Côte Saint Paul, Emard, Saint Gabriel, you would be most astonished to see the great number of manufactures that have been erected in that district.

Then you go to Cartierville, you come to Saint-Laurent, to park Amherst, to Bordeaux; manufactures and very prosperous manufacturers. And if ever the hon. member for Prince, who is our leader, wanted to adopt a policy capable of hurting these industries, I would vote against him. But there is no danger; he is of the good school.

He attended the school of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the school of the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's, that is enough. I am certain he will never swerve from the proper course, from the golden mean, which would permit success to the manufacturer and give the working class, the artisan, the workman, bread for their families. I am certain he will never swerve from that course, should he try to do so, D. A. Lafortune, member for Jacques-Cartier, would be against him. But no danger of that.

The agricultural class was most prosperous during the fifteen years of the last Administration—Sir Wilfrid Laurier knew its needs, and his followers knew what their electors needed. As for myself, I have lived in the country for the last thirty-five years, cultivating farms at Saint-Laurent, and under the Liberal Administration I have been proud and happy; but since the fall of Sir Wilfrid and his friends, distress, want prevail. In former time, the name of Sir Wilfrid Laurier meant prosperity; that of the hon. member for King's (Sir Robert Borden) and his successor spelt wretchedness. They had the same tariff, they had the same elements to deal with; but the boss was not the same. He had promised to settle the burning school question which Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir MacKenzie Bowell, Sir Charles Tupper, Sir John Thompson, all the Conservative leaders that are no more, had promised, but failed to settle. Mr. Laurier succeeded to settle this question, not completely, but to the satisfaction of the episcopate, to the satisfaction of His Holiness Leo XIII, who said to the faithful—I advise you to accept this settlement, it is not complete; I would have desired to see it more satisfactory to the Catholics, but under the circumstances, accept what is given and pray God you may obtain the rest.

This question has dissappeared from the field of discussion. All are content, and I pay my tribute to the Canadian clergy for having, by their acceptance of that settlement, put an end to the then existing trouble. Since that day, there is no hell for the Liberals, we do not hear any more that the heavens are blue, that hell is red (the colours of the two parties of that day), and the clergy has done justice to us in putting us on an equal footing. Those days are ended.

I remember going once into a church, in the district of Three-Rivers. The parish priest ascended the pulpit and said: "My children, be careful, there are Liberals today in the village, in the parish; do not listen to them, listen to your priest. You know that hell is red, and that heaven is blue." I need not tell you that we left the church not over-pleased for having been treated in that way. We were going there to do our duty, to preach peace, concord, to make known the policy of the Liberal party; we were not expecting such treatment. But, all credit to the clergy now! Those things are of the past. Now, the Liberals are treated like the Conservatives and vice versa. We have nothing to complain of.

It had been said that contracts would be given to the lowest tenderers, and Sir Wilfrid, jealous of his word, had a law passed providing that for all cases of contracts of over $5,000, tenders should be invited, and that all such should be given to the lowest bidder. When you see the hon. Minister of Marine giving $78,000,000 contracts without tenders; when you see, I say, the Minister of Marine giving contracts for 75 or 78 million dollars without tenders—I will not abuse him, he is a former Liberal, let us respect him; but I will tell him that he has violated the law put on the statute book by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, which prohibits contracts being given without tenders in matters of more than $5,000. That law, the hon. minister has had occasion to see it, to read it, to get acquainted with it, but he did not respect it—let him allow me to say that he does not respect the laws that are on the statute books, he over-rides them, he does not mind them. He is king and master in his department, but let me say to him—"Sir, this is not the way the laws of the land should be observed."

There has been put in the contracts a clause which did not exist before—to the effect that the workman's salary should be respected by the contractors and all sub-contractors, and that the recipient of a contract, would be responsible for the workman's salary. It was not that way before. A contract was given to Peter, Peter would transfer it to Baptiste, Baptiste to Paul, and in the end the workmen did not know whom to apply to for their pay and they lost it.

There are now in the agreements a clause which protects the labourers, and that is what we had said.

We have built a great number of post offices. The Montreal post office was in a wretched condition, as well as in other places; every public building was neglected, and we had to provide for a great number of post offices and for repairing those which existed. That cost very dear but notwithstanding the expenses incurred for those large undertakings there was always a surplus at the end of the year.

In Montcalm, I had succeeded with great difficulty to get the consent of the honourable Minister of Finance to give me a post office. I had difficulties because he thought that the population was not sufficiently great, and that the business of the community was not sufficiently large. I proved to Mr. Laurier and the Minister of Finance that a post office in Montcalm was necessary and I got it. What happened? A site was bought and paid for; I had specifications prepared and I was ready to ask for tenders when the general elections were held and my post office was left there. At the present time, it is the cats and dogs that occupy the site; the specifications remained in the pigeon holes and we have never been able since that time to get a post office built. I am not sorry for it, because I have obtained from the voters of Montcalm a promise that if I could get a post office built there, they would give it my name, but, let them not do it, and I will have it built myself and my name shall be there; that post office will be the work of the next administration. They will ask for tenders and the Saint-Jacques post office will be built, and I shall be glad to have contributed to it.

The Hon. Mr. Laurier created two large provinces, and, if we have the honour now to have so many distinguished men from Alberta and from Saskatchewan, to whom are we indebted? It is thanks to Mr. Laurier. It is the government of that time who gave us an opportunity to bring to this House so many distinguished men from the West. There is something more to do at the present time. There is the great North-West Territory to open, and we shall do it when we have a Liberal government, and it will not be long now.

The hon. Mr. Gouin, who is not the first comer has compelled the Dominion Government to give us an additional subsidy which we had not before Mr. Gouin showed that the 80 cents obtained every year from the Dominion Government was not sufficient. Mr. Laurier was a little reluctant; Mr. Fielding was hesitating, but finally those terms were granted to the provinces and, if the province of Quebec receives a million, if the province of Ontario receives a million and three or four hundred thousand dollars and the other provnces as much, we owe it to Mr. Laurier and Mr. Fielding, who recognized the fairness of the claim. Mr. Gouin had called together all the Prime ministers of the several provinces in a great convention, and he satisfied the Dominion Government that the request he made for an additional subsidy was reasonable. We got it, and it was a great help for the provinces.

We have brought into existence the rural mail delivery, which was not a small improvement. How happy we are to receive our letters at home! The red box that we have at the door of each dwelling is a great relief indeed. In days gone by we used to receive our letters at the village, when we had time to go and get them. It was often late, roads were bad, and very often also the weather was bad. This rural mail delivery accommodates us indeed.

There is every year a large deficit in the post office department. The Hon. Mr. Lemieux took charge of the department and got a surplus of a million and some hundreds of thousand dollars. After having improved the post offices, after having decreased the cost of stamps—instead of paying three cents we then paid two cents and one cent—the surpluses were considerable. We have changed boss, it was not the old administration. The hon. Mr. Lemieux, now representing Maisonneuve and Gaspé, had much success in his administration as Postmaster General.

A MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. LAFORTUNE: (Translation.) Since then there was a change in the price of postage stamps. The one cent system has disappeared. The hon. member for Maisonneuve(Mr. Lemieux) brought into use the post cards I assure you that everything went well with those post cards; there was much correspondence and that increased enormously the revenue.

Under Sir Wilfrid, all the departments had a fair proportion of employees belonging to each nationality. Irishmen, Englishmen and French Canadians were about in the right proportion. But since Sir Wilfrid Laurier is gone, things have changed. A great number of French Canadians were dismissed and replaced by Irishmen and by Englishmen. When we come back to power, we shall see that this proportion is restored in a just and fair way, and that those of our French Canadian countrymen who have been dismissed and put out of the Civil Service will be reinstated. We shall see that justice is done to our friends.

Mr. Speaker, we had promised to improve the St. Lawrence route from Montreal to Quebec by doing the dredging, the work necessary to make that waterway safe at any hour of the day or night, and to equip it in such a way as to avoid the danger of accidents, and we have spent very large sums to improve the St. Lawrence river. We have built a great number of new wharves, we have enlarged or repaired the old wharves and we have improved the harbours, everywhere, in a proper way. The elevators built by the Liberal party were the most powerful, the most important in the world. In fact, there are no better elevators than those which we have built at Montreal or elsewhere. We have built a great number of dry docks and spent enormous sums of money. The former administration had started to build the Soulanges canal and the Liberal party pushed that enterprise to completion. A little work was done on that canal every year; the work was suspended in the fall and had to be done over again in the following spring, so that never any progress was made. The canal was filling up as rapidly as it was dredged, and never would it have been completed if such a system had been continued. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his friends went to work, they completed the Soulanges canal and made it one of the most magnificent in the world.

The Lachine canal was also completed. But there is a little bridge on the locks of that canal and I have tried my best to have the department do the repairing which it requires. We are answered "yes," but no action is taken. A young girl had a narrow escape of being drowned while passing on that bridge which is too narrow for circulation. That bridge was sufficient formerly, but Lachine has become a large town, one of our most important; it has a population of 35,000 and the traffic is such that this bridge is insufficient. However, I cannot succeed in getting the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McCurdy) or the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Reid) to repair the bridge. They tell me that they will do so, but they take no action.

We have gone on with the building of railways which had already been commenced; it was Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his Cabinet that carried on that work. Bridges were built in a great many localities, such as Charlemagne, Richmond, St. John, Halifax and Terrebonne. There remained the Quebec bridge, which was already started, but it happened to collapse. I well remember, Mr. Speaker, how the Conservatives jeered at this sad event, how loud they were in their very offensive remarks. They even went as far as to claim that this was the fault of the former administration. But God punished them as they deserved, they received what was coming to them, for they met with a similar accident. I do not say it was their fault if the accident happened, I do not blame them for it, I only wish to show how inconsistent they were when they tried to hold the Liberal party responsible for the collapse of the Quebec bridge when they also met with the same accident.

We have encouraged foreign immigration, we have brought to this country a great many people who have settled in the West, in the new provinces; at a great cost to the country, but the influx of immigrants was very great. However, as a reward for such good work, the Liberals had to be defeated at the last election, and to make sure of this and of their own return to power, the Conservatives disfranchised these people for one reason or another. We shall, at the earliest possible moment, return these people their right of vote.

Our French Canadians had emigrated to the United States. When the last census was taken, there were living in the United States as many as 1,300,000 Canadians who were born in the province of Quebec. Before Laurier and his friends got to power, the Canadians had left the country, the farms were deserted, the houses were closed, the barns were abandoned throughout the whole province. After Laurier took office and brought great prosperity to his country, the French Canadians who had settled in the United States came back to their native land, they went on the farms which they had abandoned and remained in our midst.

Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the hon. member for Montcalm and l'Assomption (Mr. Séguin) who has succeeded me in the county of Montcalm. When we came to power, the duty on tobacco was only five cents.

Mr. Laurier immediately increased those duties to ten cents. Then, we asked for more protection and they were raised to fifteen cents. Later on, we asked the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's and Sir Wilfrid Laurier for still more protection and we succeeded in getting a duty of 28 cents upon tobacco. The growing of tobacco in Montcalm, Joliette, Berthier, Farnham, Kent and Essex has assumed large proportions, very important ones, but it is not enough. The hon. member from L'Assumption-Montcalm and myself would like to have an additional tax put on foreign tobacco, American tobacco, so as to offer more protection to the growing of tobacco. We have been promised that the duty would be increased by the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue and the hon. Minister of Agriculture, but these gentlemen do not live up to their promises. We shall be indebted to the next administration—and it will be before long, I hope—for the placing of an additional tax upon foreign tobacco so as to give more protection to our Canadian weed.

Hon. Mr. Fisher, who was a practical man, had cold storage apparatus installed on board ships for the shipment overseas to England of our butter, our cheese, our eggs, our bacon, our apples, and the member of to-day followed in his steps and they acted right.

We established with a great deal of success a number of experimental farms wherever it was necessary to do so.

Mr. Speaker, the country has become prosperous; Laurier and Fielding had been so successful that deposits were filling the banks; legal interest which had been 6 per cent was lowered to 5 per cent on account of the large amount of money we had, and legal interest is still 5 per cent although formerly it was 6 per cent. The deposits in the banks have increased considerably.

The Laurier Administration was wise, cautious, honest and fair. The hon. member from Shelburne and Queen's was a faithful trustee of the public exchequer, stern and granting no favour nor privilege and that is why he was so successful in the administration at that time.

The hon. ministers as well as the hon. members had not been elected to hand over presents; they had been elected as we were to administer the commonwealth and I remember the nights spent in discussing the $35,000,000 which the Government intended to give away, and they would never have succeeded in voting that sum had it not been for the gag. I remember Sir Wilfrid Laurier took the floor and was gagged—they silenced him—it was a painful sight to see a man of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's standing prevented from speaking by those gentlemen who gagged the men who were discussing public affairs and trying above all to oppose that present of $35,000,000.

Once, a farmer from the county in which I reside (Jacques-Cartier) told me: "Now, Mr. Lafortune, those 35 millions were not voted; they were voted, but the Senate dissented from that Act." I said to him: "But you do not add that it is the Liberal Senate that prevented the passing of the Bill; you say it was the Senate, but had the Senate been composed of men like those who are ruling us nowadays, it would have passed scot free." The Liberal Senate put aside those 35 millions and we have not given them away.

The hon. Mr. Fisher, who has just died, went through a campaign in the county of Chateauguay. I took part in the fray. I remember that hon. Mr. Sevigny who led the Conservative forces—went from one parish to another in the county of Chateauguay, saying to the electors, in the presence of the ministers who accompanied him, that if they would elect Mr. Morris, of Chateauguay, the bridge leading into the county of Huntingdon would be built from Caughnawaga to the shores of Lachine; he was sure, positive; he pledged his word in the presence of the ministers that the bridge in question would be built. In vain did we tell the electors: "Don't you see it is a hoax; don't you see those men are trying to deceive you? Well you know that the bridge will not be built." But that statement was made before the ministers by Mr. Sevigny and his friends; the people believed those gentlemen; Mr. Fisher was beaten on account of the bridge. Go and see whether or not the bridge is built; just inquire if a step were taken towards its construction. That bridge is needed; it is a necessity for the counties of Beauharnois, Huntingdon, St. Johns, Napierville and Laprairie. I was not opposed to the construction of that bridge, but to the manner in which they held it out to the electors. That was the cause of the defeat of the late hon. Mr. Fisher. The hon. member for Chateauguay (Mr. Robb) knows as well as I do, that this bridge would be of great advantage, that its construction is badly needed. It is not all to say so, it must be done.

Since I have the honour of occupying a seat in the House, and practically since I represent the county of Jacques-Cartier, I have asked the right hon. Minister of Justice: "Why do you not build this tunnel for the Ville-Emard? Why do you not build this tunnel which is needed, so greatly needed, you, who are the Minister of Justice, who represent the division of St. Anne's, you know that my request is fair and necessary, you know that the electors of the district have to suffer because there is no tunnel to cross the Lachine canal in that region; why do you not build that tunnel? The people are suffering and insist loudly on having a tunnel where they can pass, when the bridges are open and boats are going down the canal". The hon. Minister of Justice pretends he does not hear, just as if I did not speak, as if I was asking this tunnel for myself; I do not need the tunnel, but the people I represent are clamouring: "Mr. Lafortune, for God's sake, ask the Minister of Justice, he who represents St. Anne's, your neighbouring district, to build this tunnel, kneel down to him and ask him to do so." I am quite willing to kneel down to him if he will only have this tunnel built. But no, he is deaf to my request, the request I am making in behalf of my constituency. He has plenty of time to do all kinds of things; he has time to go to Europe, he has time to lend millions to foreigners but he has no time to consider building this tunnel for which I am asking. He will be held responsible for this. The hon. minister is like the other members, he will have to render an account to the people; when election time comes, he, in turn, will have to take off his hat and ask the people to re-elect him. Then the people will have their turn. May be he will disappear, he may be called to the bench, or he may go to Europe, or perhaps Washington; he may not need the people, after all. He seems to be quite independent of the people, otherwise he would be more careful, more attentive, than he is.

I also want assistance to build a bridge between St. Anne's and Vaudreuil. That bridge shall be built, but we did not want any tolls on it. The Government of Quebec is willing to pay half of the cost of the bridge. All that we ask the Dominion Government is to help us to build the bridge. We are told: "It is not an interprovincial bridge it is a local bridge." Does not everybody cross that bridge? The object of this bridge is to allow people from Montreal and outsiders to go in and out of the metropolis; it is needed and it has been promised thousands of times by all representatives of the county of Jacques-Cartier, by the hon. Mr. Laflamme to begin with, the hon. Mr. Girouard, the hon. Mr. Monk, who had given his word of honour that if he were elected for the county of Jacques-Cartier, the first thing he would do, would be the bridge between St. Anne's and Vaudreuil. Mr. Monk made promises, alas, and though he was an honest man, a man of his word, he left without having made the least effort to build the said bridge. He had a small post office built in Saint Laurent where I live; we were proud of this post office, yet the bridge is more important. The bridge is to be built shortly by the Government of Quebec, only we shall have to impose tolls on it, whilst if the Dominion Government would only assist us, we would have a free bridge, and that would be of great advantage to the country.

A military hospital has been built in St. Anne's hospital has cost large sums of money. This hospital is needed. There are numbers of patients who go to that hospital. There is also the large Macdonald college at St. Anne's which cost nearly ten million dollars, there are many visitors who come to see the college, they have to cross from St. Anne's to Vaudreuil and Perrot island in a skiff, and unfortunately, we have had to deplore drownings there. If the bridge were built, it would connect the two provinces of Ontario and Quebec. It is the only place at present, whence we cannot cross over to the island of Montreal. Bridges have been built at Charlemagne, Terrebonne, Bizard island, Sault-au-Recollet.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: (Translation.) And Longueuil?

Mr. LAFORTUNE: (Translation.) I am coming to it, I have it in my notes. A bridge at St. Anne's would be very useful for the people of Montreal and of the surrounding districts. Then there is the Longueuil bridge, which is necessary and it has been accepted. The usefulness of that bridge was recognized by all the boards of trade, and by all the great manufacturers and investors. All realize the necessity of building that bridge. Why do they not do it? They say that there is no money available for works of that kind. I have long asked for a bridge to connect Bizard island and Ile Jésus, and I am told that there are no funds available for that, and there are none either for a bridge at Chateauguay or on the Lachine canal.

Under the Laurier administration, we had succeeded in having the wharves on the Bizard island bridge built by the Government. They had noticed at the time that the ice floes on the Ottawa River were liable to do great damage to the Bizard island bridge. The hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's, after having made a complete survey, consented to give us the wharves. They were not sufficiently strong, they are now in a bad condition and the bridge is not safe. We are asking the Government to have these piers repaired, but we cannot get satisfaction.

In my county, the Government has a wharf at Pte Claire, but it is of no value, and no boat can land there. We have been told that the wharf was leased to the Grand Trunk, but now that the Grand Trunk is the property of the Government, why should they not make the necessary repairs?

Take the Ottawa river in front of Bizard island, Cartier and St. Vincent de Paul. There are two rapids which should be done away with. The former member, Mr. Wilson, when he represented the county of Laval, succeeded in securing from Mr. Laurier a subsidy of $50,000 for that purpose; that was very well for a start, but we need another $100,000 to make the river navigable. It would be a great thing for the people of Laval and Jacques Cartier if that part of the river could be made navigable, because they would be able to bring their lumber from Ontario and land at Cartierville, and from there through the Ottawa river at Bout de l'Ile up to St. Vincent de Paul, and also to bring in coal, produce and everything that is necessary for the penintentiary and the village of St. Vincent de Paul. It would afford great protection and it would mean a great saving for those parishes, if the Government acceded to their very just request, but the Government are turning a deaf ear when applied to for works of that kind.

If we ever get into power as I hope, we shall grant the people of Montreal and of the province of Quebec that which they all ask for: the Georgian Bay canal. How many times have we discussed the matter! The former administrations, including that of Sir Wilfrid, spent considerable sums in soundings, surveys, plans, specifications and all kinds of works. Up to now we have spent nearly $200,000 towards the construction of the Georgian Bay canal. Everybody recognizes the necessity of shortening the route from the Great Lakes by 450 miles to carry wheat through the Ottawa river down to Montreal and then direct to London without breaking bulk. Some say that it will cost a lot of money. It is true, but you cannot reap unless you sow. Seeding costs money, but it is essential if you want a crop. It has been established beyond doubt that the Georgian Bay canal would be a great national undertaking which would cause a large saving in the future and therefore it must be carried out.

[Mr. Lafortune.]

What about the Montreal Exhibition which did not take place for the last twenty-five years? The Dominion Government is giving rather large sums of money to help exhibitions in other provinces, to help the Toronto Exhibition, but not Quebec, Quebec gets nothing. They could not help Quebec while they help the others. We are asked repeatedly why the Government do not give a good sum yearly in order to create a permanent exhibition in Montreal. Montreal is the only important city where no yearly exhibition takes place. I was in Toronto last year. In just one day 300,000 people visited the grounds where one could see the most beautiful, the most useful and the most practical things. Trade, industry, commerce and fine arts were all represented there. But Toronto has not a population as large as Montreal. Toronto is a second rate city, while Montreal, the metropolis, the largest city in the Dominion could not even exhibit a kitten.

You tell the farmers: "Cultivate your lands, stick to the land." Yes, but are you going to help us? You spend large sums of money for stables in Ottawa and you give nothing, absolutely nothing for the Montreal Exhibition. This sort of thing has got to stop. We have bought the Grand Trunk following on the acquisition of the Canadian Northern. Considerable sums were spent in those deals. Although we protested, although we opposed the acquisition of those roads the Government claimed that it was good business, a first-class transaction and a profitable undertaking. Now, what is the result? Where do we stand? With deficits amounting to $75,000,000 last year; $45,000,000 this year and probably $75,000,000 next year unless they go to $150,000,000. Where will such a policy land us?

Mr. Speaker, there is in the statutes a certain enactment, the Conscription Act. This unfortunate Act should be eradicated from the statutes. It should be recalled at once. It is unfair and scandalous to leave such an Act in our statute books. Voluntary enlistment is thought sufficient. A man who is now lying on his death bed, the hon. member for Victoria (Sir Sam Hughes) claimed that voluntary enlistment was sufficient and that conscription was unnecessary. He was mocked, laughed at, and considerable sums were spent for what? In order to annul judgments rendered by magistrates and judges of the Superior Court who had exempted farmers' sons from conscription. The farmers were told that their sons would not be called. We went before the judges of the Superior Court and we got these boys exempted. Then, the Government set up a Court of Appeals in Ottawa, a court presided over by Mr. Duff, so as to annul all these judgments and put aside the exemptions granted to farmers' sons. Mr. Speaker, I say that this was a scandal to appoint judges of the Superior Court so that they might grant exemptions, then having those decisions reversed so that the parents of those boys had to spend large sums of money. The speech from the Throne stated that a revision of the tariff would take place and the Government made that speech lie. Such a thing is unfair. The word of the King is a sacred thing. It is customary to say that the King may speak nothing but the truth, that the King cannot be wrong. In this case I charge the hon. gentlemen opposite with having put a lie in the mouth of the King.

But, Mr. Speaker, honour to the Liberals of the various counties! Honour to these Liberals who, once the war was over, had some respect for their pledged word. The hon. members for Marquette (Mr. Crerar), for Halifax (Mr. Maclean), for Durham (Mr. Rowell), for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), for Maple Creek (Mr. Maharg), for Prince Albert (Mr. Knox), for Battleford (Mr. Wright), for Last Mountain (Mr. Johnston), for Nelson (Mr. Campbell), for Neepawa (Mr. Davis), for Mackenzie (Mr. Reid), for Lethbridge (Mr. Buchanan), for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Thomson), for Saltcoats (Mr. MacNutt), for Red Deer (Mr. Clark)—the last but not the least—those who have had the courage, the self-denial and the honour to leave the opposite side of the House to come back and sit on this side, thus redeeming their pledged word that, once the war over, they would as true Liberals come back to occupy seats on your left, Mr. Speaker. As to those who remained on the other side, I shall not taunt them but I shall tell them that they have not proved so disinterested as those of our colleagues whom I have named. They have remained at your right, Mr. Speaker, through personal interest.

Mr. BELAND: (Translation.) Hear, hear!

Mr. LAFORTUNE: (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I ask Mr. Speaker, that we do as is done in ordinary life, and that is to pass the ministerial brush over the signs which these hon. members have put up. By what right can these gentlemen call themselves Nationalists? The Nationalists who have fought against us are not in the House. There are no more of them here. There is only one left, and he is in the Senate. The Nationalists were of good faith, when they fought against us. They had for leader a serious man, a man of worth, but who has given up politics. These gentlemen who call themselves Nationalists, have certainly not asked for his advice when they put up such signs as "National," alias "Liberal," alias "Conservative". Liberals are Liberals and Conservatives are Conservatives.

What would you say if the Liberal party were to put their own sign; "Liberal-Conservative"? The day when we call ourselves Conservatives, will be the day we are hypocrites. We are Liberals, and nothing else. I would therefore say to these gentlemen: When you adopt the word "National" or "Liberal", you are trying to lure the people, it is camouflage, nothing else; you want the public to believe that you are Liberals, Conservatives, Nationalists, when you are merely Conservatives-Tories, worthy successors of the men of the past. I say to them: Take your brush and paint over your sign, take away the word "National" and also the word "Liberal", and keep the word "Conservative", the only one to which you are entitled.

The hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) told us in his speech that we required a change. Yes, indeed, we do require a change and we will soon have it. The remaining Liberals are superior men, are we told by the supporters of the Government. You are right to tell us that they are superior men; these men have saved your political life; they have made political sacrifices to keep you in power, you had better take good care them, and treat them well, because it is thanks to them if you are there yet.

You have loaned 46 millions to foreign countries, 2 million dollars interest are yet unpaid, and you tell us: "We have no money for the work which is so badly needed". You tell us that you have no money when you can find some to lend to all the countries of the world, to insolvent countries; you can never collect that money; it is lost. You have had money for Toronto, Victoria, Vancouver, Halifax, you have money for every one except the province of Quebec, you have no money for her, when her representatives ask you for something.

There are men, there are employees, returned soldiers who ask for better treatment. There are men of the county courts who are calling to you for a higher salary.

These judges are not sufficiently remunerated. There are four judges in Montreal—the Minister of Justice must have received the pamphlet who was addressed to all the members. I have read mine, and I say to the Minister of Justice: "These men are perfectly right in their complaints, the salary which they receive is not sufficient; you have already increased the salary of the judges of the Superior Court; you have raised the salary of the judges of the Court of Appeal and of the Supreme Court; it is true that you have slightly increased that of the judges of the county courts, not sufficiently. The judges wish their salaries to be raised to $7,000. The are perfectly right. Having practised as a lawyer for 38 years, I know their work, I know their responsibilities. There are heads of families who earn $5,000. Take, for example, Judge Archambault who has to earn a living for his eleven children, boys and girls, who are at the college or at the convent; he receives only $5,000 a year. I say to the Minister of Justice: "Why do you do not help these men; give them an increase of salary, and the public will approve you". Judges who are superannuated, like Sir Alexandre Lacoste approve their request, and so do the judges who are receiving higher salaries. The hon. Minister of Justice who was a lawyer for a number of years, and who sat on the bench for several years, knows what their duties and their responsibilities are, he would only be doing an act of justice in increasing the salaries of the judges of the county courts.

I am not speaking for myself; I am pleading in favour of those who justly ask for an increase of salary. Let the hon. minister take cognizance of their pamphlet; let him peruse it and weigh the reasons given in it and I think that he will satisfy himself that the claims of those judges are absolutely just, fair and reasonable; you would perform a great act of justice if you were giving them the increase of salary they ask for.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my hon. friends have acted in such a way that a lot of mothers and fathers have shed bitter tears and they also have frightened the people. Several mothers have gone out of their mind at the sight of their sons leaving for the front. To my personal knowledge, many mothers have gone mad on account of their sons being taken by conscription. You had said that you would rely only upon voluntary enlistment and yet you have made people shed bitter tears, you have frightened the population, you are the cause that many people have lost their mind. Well, Mr. Speaker, when shall these gentlemen try to redress the wrong they have done?

I will just conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker. The main reason why we, the farmers of the province of Quebce, wantec to accept reciprocity, was that the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's and Sir Wilfrid Laurier had inserted a clause under which the American corn was admitted in this country free of any duty. How proud and happy were we as soon as we learned that the American corn would come free into Canada! We were saved. But, we appreciated more particularly that part of the arrangement under which they had conceded to us the free entry of corn into Canada. As far as the pact of reciprocity is concerned, I would have refused it if it had been a full treaty, but it was only a partial one; we were free to denounce it at will, to maintain it in force or abrogate it the next day. Both parties to the convention had reserved to themselves the right to put the treaty in force but to denounce it in case that one or the other would find that something was wrong or disadvantageous about it. There is another improvement—that we have been asking for a long time. We urge upon the Minister of Agriculture the necessity of regulating the weight of potatoes. For three years past, we have placed before my hon. friend a request asking to regulate the weight of the bags of potatoes, in other words to fix the weight to 80 pounds instead of 90 pounds.

Mr. MORPHY: (Translation.). Will the hon. member allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LAFORTUNE: (Translation.). Certainly, providing that it won't be too long.

Mr. MORPHY: (Translation.). Does the hon. member think that the Government of the day is the best Government in the world?

Mr. LAFORTUNE: (Translation.). I am not called upon to pass sentence on that Government but to criticise their acts. Regarding the question to bring this Government up for trial, you can do that yourselve.

Mr. CASGRAIN: (Translation.). The people will do that all right.

Mr. LAFORTUNE: (Translation.) This Government is the worst that I have ever known and the people will tell you the same thing at the next opportunity.

I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, to have to take my seat before being able to express all my views on the topics of the day. But I have still something to say. I will urge upon the present Administration, the same as I will ask my friends if they come to power after the next election, to promote the beet industry throughout the country, since it is so flourishing In fact, the culture of beets is a success in Ontario and I do not see why we should not have the same results in Quebec. If the Government would only assist us, if they were willing to give us a bounty for each ton of beet produced by the farmers, it would be of great help to our people. We could use the residue for the feeding of cattle, cows, sheep, pigs and so on. The establishment of such an industry would afford a good deal of help and protection for us. Naturally, the hon. ministers don't bother themselves with questions of that kind. They have made up their mind that it is a trifling matter but as far as we—the farmers—are concerned, we know what a boon it would be.

Mr. Speaker, I will resume my seat now, hoping that you will excuse me after having taken so much of the time of this House. However, I waited to put those few remarks on record, in justice to the people and the large constituency that I have the honour to represent in this Parliament. If I can spare a few moments later on, I will avail myself of the first opportunity to discuss the other subjects which were left aside to-night.

Mr. J. A. CAMPBELL (Nelson): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make some observations on one or two matters arising out of the Budget, but before doing so I desire to say a word or two in regard to that much talked of public work, the Esquimalt dry-dock. I listened with a great deal of interest to the explanation given by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Tolmie) regarding the construction of that dry dock, and I think he made out a pretty good case for its construction, that is, if these were normal times and finances were as buoyant as they have been in the past. Just as good a case however, could be made out for a score of other public works in the Dominion, and a much stronger case for a number of others which have either not been commenced or have been stopped by the Government from the standpoint of economy. I was much interested in the statement which the minister repeated more than once that the Government by carrying on this work were showing their good faith with the people and thus keeping their word. It is hardly necessary for me to point out that that is not the condition of affairs that has always existed. I have had occasion in this House more than once this year to bring up a couple of matters wherein the Government most emphatically did not keep their word, wherein solemn definite pledges had been broken by the Government in respect to public works which it had promised to undertake and in other matters. I refer particularly to the transfer of the natural resources to the western provinces, and the construction of the Hudson Bay railway. This railway was promised away back twenty years ago, whereas this dry dock that the Minister of Agriculture was speaking of was promised, I understand, in 1912. The war prevented its being gone on with, but the work was undertaken lately, and it is a most peculiar coincidence that it should be gone on with immediately after an election. There is no question that this public work was an issue in the election that took place in Victoria. The only conclusion I can come to why the other promises of the Government that I have referred to have not been kept is that there have been no elections in the Prairie Provinces in the last few years, except in Assiniboia, where, as everybody knows, the Government had no candidate, and therefore they were not interested in the promises made to the western provinces.

Regarding the Budget, I appreciate to a considerable extent the difficulties in the way of the Minister of Finance at the present time. They might be looked upon as three-fold, financial, economic, and political. I am only sorry that so far as the outcome is concerned, it would appear that the last condition has received more attention than either of the others. On the face of it, it would appear that the Government had decided to let well enough alone or to do nothing in connection with the tariff. That is the impression that has gone out through the country. However, on looking at the Budget it is easily to be seen that considerable has been done which has the effect of increasing the tariff, and that the first impression is not the correct one, for by certain changes in connection with exchange, the increase in the sales tax, and so on, the cords of protection are strengthened, and the result is practically a very considerable increase in the tariff tax.

In the remarks which I made on the Address some little time ago I mentioned the expectation I had at that time that the Government would revise the tariff to some extent this year, and I maintained the hope that they would reduce the burden of taxation by eliminating some duties and reducing others; in a word, that they would see their way clear to the cutting away of the "mouldering branches," and remove some of the inconsistencies and anomolies that undoubtedly do exist in connection with the tariff. The Government, however, did not do any of these things which I am satisfied the majority on both sides of the House expected that they would do. I am, therefore, convinced that we can expect no changes from this Government in the way of lessening the burden of taxation in connection with the tariff, and if there is to be any revision, it will be a revision upwards, as it is this year. An upward movement in many matters is a good thing, but in connection with the tariff it is not to be desired.

As far as the tariff itself is concerned, I do not propose to discuss that matter at all. I have said before, and I repeat now, that I do not think the tariff is an issue now; perhaps I should say that I do not think the tariff should be an issue. Now I do not wish to be misunderstood. I am satisfied that a majority of the protectionists in this House want a revision of the tariff schedules. They are not satisfied with the situation. I do not mean that they wish a revision by way of increase, but they want certain changes made such as I have already mentioned. I have here a communication from a friend of mine which illustrates the situation very fairly. This gentleman is a Conservative and a strong protectionist and has been engaged for quite a long time in industrial pursuits. I desire to read the following extract from this communication:

> I am a believer in protection but I believe in a protection that is based upon a tariff that is properly thought out and which is scientifically arranged. I believe in a protection that has for its objective the well-being and material advancement of Canada and not the creation and maintenance of a few groups of greedy millionaires, men who are in no sense manufacturers, but who are stock gamblers, carrying on their gambling transactions under the disguise of manufacturing. There exists no reason why known abuses should not be rectified; there can be no reason why the compilation of the Canadian Tariff should not be made upon scientific principles. This in the past has never been the case. The present and previous tariffs have been the result of trying to conciliate "big interests" combined with leaving the compilation to men who possessed little or no technical knewledge of the several industries affected.

I quote this to show the attitude now taken by certain protectionists. I do not wish to be interpreted as in any way justifying the principle of protection myself; I read this simply to show the frame of mind of many protectionists, and I know that there are a number of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House who hold the same views as are expressed in the foregoing extract, because they have conveyed the impression to me in almost the same words. They have told me that in their opinion the tariff has outlived its usefulness in its present form, and that in some respects it is a detriment to the manufacturing industries which it is desired to foster. They therefore think that material changes should be made in the tariff as it at present exists. My hon. friend from Muskoka (Mr. McGibbon) evidently believes the same also. He quoted John Stuart Mill the other night. In the course of his remarks he said:

> I might also quote statements from some of my hon. friend's favourite authors, such as John Stuart Mill, who says, speaking of infant industries:
> That a tax favoring infant industries for a time is the easiest way that a nation can carry them into development.

I am not sure whether these are the exact sentiments of the member for Muskoka, but as the quotation was used by him to refute statements made by some members on this side, I presume he agrees with the views therein set out. But I may point out that this quotation refers to infant industries, and it specifically adds the qualifying phrase "for a time." The reason why protection was introduced, in the first place, was to encourage infant industries, and only for a time, at that; but these industries in this country have grown bald-headed and grey-bearded, and can no longer be classed in that category. Others of the protectionist camp realize that the tariff is out of date and unscientific, including, as I have said, many anomalies. Now, I do not propose at this time of night to follow this question further. I have before me a number of instances showing wherein these anomalies occur, and wherein the tariff is out of date and does not really carry out the purposes for which it was intended. The principal objectionable features with the present tariff are:

1. Goods are placed out of their proper group.
2. Goods belonging to two or more groups and items are crowded in one item.
3. Raw materials are placed in items, mixed up with manufactures and sometimes with manufactures of raw material altogether different.

4. Some goods are named in more than one item and under different rates of duty.

5. Machinery and material required by certain favoured industries are admitted free or on the payment of but a small duty whilst the machinery and material required by other industries the development of which are of equal interest to Canada, are made to pay heavy duties even and although the machinery is not made in Canada.

6. Machinery of improved design not built in Canada, the improvements making its use necessary by all well managed concerns, is charged heavy duties, thereby penalizing progressive manufacturers, or it may be discouraging a valuable nascent industry, and this is done so that a badly managed moribund concern may continue to make profits by the production of machines that are not economical to the manifest injury of Canada as a whole.

As I have said, I have before me quite a number of definite instances of these anomalies and irregularities, but I refrain from quoting them to-night. Undoubtedly, most of them are already known to hon. members, and I doubt whether any useful purpose would be served by my going into them in extenso. Let me say that I look upon this subject with an open mind. I will admit that under some conditions protection may be an advantage to Canada. I have a rather pronounced leaning towards freedom of trade, but I recognize that this cannot be brought about in the immediate future, nor for a considerable time to come, even if this end is desired. But what I desire to show to-night is that protection is not being carried out as is my understanding of its intention in the first place, and instead of being a system or plan for development of industry, it is used by industrial barons to promote stock gambling, to create monopolies, and generally to bleed the public.

A couple of days ago the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar) gave a number of instances of how protection had been perverted to the advantage of certain stock jobbing schemes, and how the public was being mulcted thereby. I have one more instance which I wish to refer to to-night, that is the cement industry. Portland cement plays an exceedingly important part in the development of the country. It is used in the construction of roads, bridges, harbour works, houses, and factories, and for hydro-electric development and many other works of a public nature. Last but not least, it is now being used very extensively, or was until recent years, in the construction of farm buildings; in fact it plays an exceedingly important part in farm structures and in connection with work on the farm generally. Portland cement is composed of (1) lime stone or marl; (2) cement rock or clay; and (3) gypsum. In order to manufacture the finished product from these materials it is necessary to have power and fuel. The fuel used is coal, fuel oil or natural gas, and the power is hydro electric, or other power. Now in respect to nearly every one of these items Canada is in just as advantageous a position as is the United States. The only disadvantage from which Canada may suffer is in the matter of fuel. In respect of the other necessities, there appears to be no reason why cement should not be produced at as low a price in this country as in the United States, except in some instances which are very exceptional. The price in Canada, as quoted a few days ago by the chief concern manufacturing cement, was $3.90 per barrel of 350 pounds including the sacks or, deducting the price of sacks, $3.10 per barrel. Without going into the figures at length I have here a United States publication giving a summary of the cost and selling price of cement for a considerable period. According to it, the average cost of the production of cement within a recent period is $1.65 and the selling price $1.75 per barrel. It should be noted that the United States barrel has a content of 380 pounds instead of 350, and if we take the Canadian price for a barrel of 380 pounds it would represent $3.34 as against an average American price of $1.75. Now there is a duty on this cement of ten cents per hundred pounds. This perhaps does not account for the total difference, but there has been created in Canada within the last few years a monopoly in the cement business. According to information I have received, which is authentic, when a person wants cement and communicates with an American concern in order to get quotations he is referred to a certain Canadian company to fill his order. That is why the Canadian people have to pay a very great deal more for their cement than the situation warrants. There would appear to be no reason on earth why the duty referred to should exist at the present time. This industry is based on one of our natural resources, it is an industry peculiar to Canada, and is one in which surely the Canadian people can work to as great an advantage as those engaged in the same industry in the United States. Now the reason the people of Canada have to pay through the nose for their cement is largely owing to the fact, as I said before, that there is a monopoly. How has this monopoly been brought about? In 1909 there was incorporated in Canada the Canada Cement Company which took over eleven concerns which had previously operated. These eleven companies had a total capitalization of $17,750,000. The Canada Cement Company when incorporated issued common stock to the amount of $13,500,000, preference stock to the amount of $10,500,000; and bonds to the amount of $6,253,966, a total of $30,256,966, or $12,506,966 more than the total capitalization of the companies which they had absorbed —just that much water. This company is on a par with those referred to by the hon. member for Marquette, or perhaps is worse in character, and the financial history of Canada unfortunately is replete with instances of that kind.

Mr. LALOR: May I ask the hon. gentleman what is the price of cement in the United States?

Mr. CAMPBELL: I gave the quotation.

Mr. LALOR: Was it $1.75 per barrel?

Mr. CAMPBELL: Yes $1.75 a barrel.

Mr. LALOR: What is the price in Canada?

Mr. CAMPBELL: The quotation I gave was $3.90.

Mr. LALOR: And there is only a duty of 8 or 10 per cent? Why do you not buy cement in the United States if the duty is so low? There cannot be that much difference.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I am prepared to answer the hon. gentleman's question. The situation is this. The party who got this quotation showed me the letter and that was the price given in it. He told me that he had endeavoured to buy cement in the United States and he had been referred to the Canadian Company; the Canada Cement Company apparently has an arrangement under which he could not buy cement in the United States. It thus appears that a monopoly has been established. As I said before I am aware that the great difference between the price in the United States and the price in Canada is not wholly accounted for by the duty and here is the point I wish to make: The protective system was not devised to evolve a situation such as this. Notwithstanding the fact that there is so much water in the capitalization of the new organization its stock was sold, according to quotations I have here, at from 55 to 75 last year. The Canada Cement Company seems to be an exceedingly prosperous concern. Here is an instance similar to that mentioned by the Prime Minister a short time ago when he referred to the Binder Twine Industry and the lessening of the number of factories engaged in it. I understand there were more factories in existence some years ago than there are now, but some of these factories were shut down and the work of making cement has been centralized. In a word, the Canada Cement Company seems to be in a particularly prosperous condition and to have profited to the full extent of the duty that is imposed. It cannot be said, as has been intimated by the hon. member for Haldimand to-night that the putting on of the duty not only does not increase the price but tends somewhat to bring about a reduction through competition. In this case full advantage was taken of the duty, of the exchange, and of an arrangement with United States concerns. The result is that the increase in the price of cement during the last few years has brought about a situation very detrimental to the upbuilding of Canada. It has had an adverse effect upon the construction of public works, of houses which are so much needed all over the country, and of farm buildings generally. No doubt, as in the case of the textile industry, the directors are not conducting this concern for the glory of God or even for the glory of Canada, but purely for their own interests. Possibly some will not blame them, but when they can do so well there is no reason why they should be assisted by the people of Canada to the extent of ten cents a hundred pounds, and there would appear to be no reason why, in the interests of the public or even of the cement company, this duty should not be removed. I verily believe that a great many of these manufacturers who are taking full advantage of the tariff could get along very well without it by putting in up-to-date machinery and conducting their business in a more systematic way than at present. I had hoped that the Tariff Commission which roved around the country last winter would have been able to bring forth some information and suggestions regarding this particular phase of the matter, but I have been disappointed.

I have before me some figures about the coal and iron industry, but at his late, or rather early, hour I shall refrain from quoting them, although I might say that that industry is practically on all-fours with the cement industry. There were some other matters which I intended to deal with, but I said I would be brief, therefore, Mr

Speaker, I shall not detain the House any longer.

Mr THOMAS MacNUTT (Saltcoats): Mr. Speaker, it would be almost a criminal offence if I took up very much time of the House at this late, or rather very early, hour and I do not intend to do so, but I do not care to record a silent vote on this occasion.

The Budget is quite consistent with the attitude taken by the Prime Minister (Mr. Meighen) and his supporters. They stand for protection, they make no bones about it, and, although I do not agree with them, I give them credit for their frankness. The Prime Minister in his speeches throughout the West and also in this House has emphasized the fact that the party which he leads stands for protection to the manufacturer. I do not think, though, that he is quite fair to this little group when he referred to us as being "angularly opposite." We prefer to call ourselves the Progressive party. And I think we have shown ourselves to be independent of both the old political parties. We have at times voted for measures regardless of whether they emanated from your right, Sir, or from your left, for we do not consider how our voting will affect either party; we treat each measure on its merits. Whether right or wrong, I feel satisfied that we are perfectly sincere, and some of the statements made by the Prime Minister, in not particularly choice language, do not altogether fit in with our attitude either in this House or outside. I do not know whether the Prime Minister regarded us as a "dilapidated annex" when we swelled his majority from seventeen to thirty-eight, but I feel certain he did not think we were a "servile adjunct." However, even the Prime Minister can make a slip sometimes, and I will let it go at that.

Our platform, Mr. Speaker, has been placed on Hansard, and we stand behind it. The Prime Minister twitted us with not having sufficient courage to place our platform before the House, but, Sir, he knows very well that according to the ruling of the Chair there can be only one amendment to the Budget, and the official Opposition has the sole right to move that amendment. They did not take advantage of that privilege from 1911 to 1919, but since this little group came into existence the official Opposition have been in the habit of exercising their right, possibly from fear that some more obnoxious—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MacNUTT: —amendment might be brought before the House. At any rate, everything points to the fact that there is no affiliation between ourselves and the Liberal party.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Why the joy?

Mr. MacNUTT: During the course of his Budget speech the Prime Minister read from a pamphlet without giving the name of the author,—a pamphlet written, I think, in 1911, in support of protection. He was on what the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) might term a piscatorial expedition, and he caught a fish, but I think the fish escaped and took the hook and line along with him. The right hon. gentleman was referring to Mr. Norman Lambert who has for some time past been the secretary of the Council of Agriculture. Well, as a young man he might form certain views and afterwards change them, as a great many young men do, possibly through getting more light on the subject or through altered conditions. It would be a great pity if all our young men stuck rigidly to the views of their immature youth, and if they did we would have rather a poor country. We have numerous examples of very eminent men changing their political opinions. I understand that the ex-Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden) was at one time a Liberal, and no better evidence of such change of views can be pointed to than the presence of certain hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House at the present time. A great deal of the support of the present Government is derived from a number of hon. members who in 1917 were elected as Liberal Unionists. They certainly cannot claim to be following at the present time the Liberal doctrines as we understood them. One outstanding example is the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Henders) who at one time was president of the Grain Growers' Association, a body which he evidently now has very little use for. Another is the Minister of Immigration and Colonization (Mr. Calder). I think I knew that hon. gentleman's former politics about as well as anybody in this House. He was the apostle of Liberalism in the West, but he has seen fit lately to change his political views, and now condemns where he used to praise. I am not criticising the attitude of these hon. members; they have a perfect right to change their views—and so had Mr. Norman Lambert.

There is another matter which I wish to bring to the attention of the House, and it relates to ex-members of our Canadian navy who served on the high seas during the war. It appears that when any of these people apply for a position in the Civil Service they are treated as civilians. It is well known that when a returned soldier applies for a position in the Civil Service he gets the preference even though he gets a lower rating than the civilians on the list. That is quite proper, but I do not think there should be any discrimination in the matter of the men who manned our small Canadian navy. I put some questions on the Order Paper with regard to this matter, and on account of my leaving out a word or two the answer which I got does not mean anything. My question was:

(1) Have ex-members of the Canadian navy—

I should have said: "who have served on the high seas".

—the same status as ex-members of the Canadian Expeditionary Force who served overseas?

2. Do they receive the same preference with regard to appointments to the Civil Service?

To which the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) replied:

1. Yes. A member of the Canadian Navy who has served in European or Asiatic waters during the war period has the same status as a member of the Canadian Expeditionary Force who had served overseas.

2. Yes.

Well, that is no answer at all, because the Canadian navy did not serve in European or Asiatic waters. But Sir, they did good work on our own coasts. The Rainbow, with the two submarines and the parent ship, the Shearwater, patrolled the Pacific Coast from Esquimalt down to Panama and up as far as Prince Rupert. I think that the men who manned that little obsolete vessel, the Rainbow, displayed a good deal of heroism when they went out on the high seas where they might meet at any time one of the three modern German cruisers which were then hovering about those coasts—the Leipsic, the Nuremberg and the Scharnhorst. The Niobe also did good service on the Atlantic coast in guarding our shores. Surely the men who manned these ships were on active service, although not in action. We know that the British fleet kept watch at the entrance of the Kiel Canal; they were on active service but not in action during a great part of the war, yet had it not been for their services the war might not have ended as soon as it did. In a much smaller way, of course, the Canadian navy was guarding our shores. The naval service is usually considered senior to the army, but all that is asked for in this connection is that those who served in the Canadian navy be put on a par with the overseas soldiers in the matter of candidature for positions in the Civil Service, rather than be treated as civilians—for certainly they were not civilians. I want to bring this matter to the attention of the Government; I think it should be remedied. The present provision of the Civil Service Act in this regard is as follows—section 39:

Provided, however, that in all examinations for entrance into the Civil Service persons who have been on active service overseas on the military or naval forces of His Majesty or of any of the Allies of His Majesty during the present war. . . . shall, irrespective of the marks they have obtained, be placed in the order of merit on the list of successful candidates above all other candidates.

The provision which I suggest could be made by the insertion of five words by way of amendment to this section, so that it would read:

Provided however, that in all examinations for entrance into the Civil Service persons who have been on active service overseas or on the high seas on the military or naval forces of His Majesty, etc.

The insertion of the words "or on the high seas" would cover the ground. I bring this matter up in order to show that there is discrimination against an arm of the service the members of which deserve all the credit we can give them.

To return to our policy, I may say that we believe, in raising the revenue of the country, in taxing the wealth rather than the poverty of the country, placing the burden on those who are best able to pay, I am going to vote for the amendment, not so much for its own sake as a protest against the Budget, because it still points the way to protection and higher protection.

The House divided on the amendment. (Mr. Fielding), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle): I was paired with the hon. member for Victoria (Sir Sam Hughes). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. MEWBURN: I was paired with the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power). Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. JACOBS: I was paired with the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. McCOIG: I was paired with the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. PAPINEAU: I was paired with the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. Merner). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Mr. Speaker, my rising is more on a question of privilege than for the purpose of taking part in the debate as such. In the course of an address delivered in this debate by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar), he made the assertion that an offer of a position in the present Government had been made by myself or my agent to the present, as he described him, Catholic Minister of Public Works of the province of New Brunswick. The subject was not one that it is customary to make inquiries about or to ask a Prime Minister questions on across the floor of Parliament. But as the statement had been categorically made by the hon. member for Marquette, I felt at that time that I should give it an equally categoricall denial. I did so. Ordinarily the denial, I think, would have been accepted in this House, particularly taking into consideration the subject matter that was covered by the discussion. I find, however, that, in my absence from this House, the question was again raised by the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Murphy) this evening. In the course of the debate, he read some statement or newspaper interview said to have been given by the hon. Mr. Veniot, who, I believe, is at the present time Minister of Public Works in that province. On arriving in the House after the hon. member for Russell had quoted the alleged interview, I asked if he would be good enough to repeat it in my hearing. I was, however, denied this courtesy by the hon. member for Russell, who took the ground that I should always be in my seat in Parliament. As a former minister of the Crown, I am not able to understand how he conceives that to be possible, physically or in any other way.

Mr. MURPHY: I may say that I did not say that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The statement was that I should have been in my seat when my hon. friend quoted the interview. Perhaps the hon. member says that I should always be in the House when he is speaking.

Mr. MURPHY: No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I very much desire that that would be possible. I should like, indeed, to be in the House, particularly when the hon. member is speaking, and I may say that I would have expected from any other rather than from him a refusal to quote in my presence an interview in which I was directly concerned. However, he did not do so. I was able to obtain from Hansard a statement of the hon. gentleman's remarks in which the alleged interview was quoted, and I quote from it as follows—this is the only part I need refer to:

> The person who made the overtures to me presented to me a letter addressd to me and signed by Premier Meighen. This letter showed that the Premier was in close touch with the situation, and further I can say that a certain other Cabinet Minister also wrote to this same person. It is scarcely necessary to add that the party who made the overtures is a strong and influential Conservative. I never sought the position, and my reply, dated January 11, 1921, can be produced to prove this when the proper time arrives.

All I need say is to repeat the statement I made before. No such proposal was made by me, by any one with my authority, directly, indirectly, definitely, indefinitely, or in any other way, and no such letter to Mr. Veniot as referred to by him in the interview quoted ever was written. What the next step on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite should be I need not say. It is obvious to me, and should be obvious to them.

Mr. MURPHY: May I just put my right hon. friend right in one particular? The subject was not brought up by me. It was originally mentioned by the hon. member for Centre Vancouver (Mr. Stevens).

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, originally it was mentioned by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar).

Main motion (Sir Henry Drayton) agreed to, on the same division reversed.

WAYS AND MEANS

The House in Committee of Ways and Means, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

Progress reported.

PRESENTATION OF SPEAKER'S CHAIR BY RIGHT HON. J. W. LOWTHER

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the House that the beautiful replica of the Speaker's chair in the British House of Commons at Westminster, presented as a goodwill gift to this House of Commons by the honourable members of the Houses of Lords and Commons, constituting the United Kingdom Branch of the Empire Parliamentary Association, will be officially presented to the Canadian House of Commons by the Right Honourable James William Lowther, P.C., Speaker of the British House of Commons from 1905 to April of the present year, this day, Friday, May 20th, at half past two o'clock in the afternoon.

The ceremony of presentation will take place in this chamber. Members' galleries will be reserved for the wives and families of hon. members. The usual tickets of admission will be required for the other galleries, all of which will be open to the public at two o'clock in the afternoon.

On the motion of Right Hon. Mr. Meighen for the adjournment of the House:

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask my right hon. friend two questions? Will he inform the House if the Government has reached any decision as to sitting on Tuesday of next week? Also what business shall we take up later in the day?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I will make a statement as to sitting on Tuesday later to-day. The business for to-day will be Committee of Ways and Means and other Government orders now on the Order Paper.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 5.40 a.m. Friday.

Friday, May 20, 1921.

By order of the House,—See resolution p. 3691—the following printed as a preface to Hansard of this day:

Members of the House of Commons and the Senate assembled at 2.30 o'clock p.m., Honourable Edgar N. Rhodes, Speaker of the House of Commons, presiding, and the officers of either House in their respective places. His Excellency, the Duke of Devonshire, ê.G., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., P.C., etc., occupied a place at the right of Mr. Speaker. There was present as the guest of honour Right Hon. James W. Lowther, LL.M., D.L., D.C.L. (Oxford and Leeds), LL.D. (Cambridge), M.P., etc., lately Speaker of the British House of Commons and joint President of the Empire Parliamentary Association, United Kingdom Branch, accompanied by Sir Howard d'Egeville, K.B.E., Secretary of the United Kingdom Branch of the Empire Parliamentary Association. The galleries were filled to overflowing with invited guests and the general public.

Hon. EDGAR N. RHODES (Speaker of the House of Commons): I would that my duties were all as delightful and agreeable as the one which devolves upon me at the moment. The conventions have prescribed that there should be a formal introduction of speakers on the occasion of a gathering of this character. I am sure however, that it is not a convention which calls upon me to introduce the gentleman who will address you, because his name is well known throughout the British Empire. It is honoured in parliamentary circles and wherever British government is known, and I need hardly say that it is revered by the House of Commons of Canada. I present to you the Right Honourable James W. Lowther.

Right Hon. JAMES W. LOWTHER: Mr. Speaker, and gentlemen of the House of Commons of Canada: I come here to-day as the ambassador of the Empire Parliamentary Association, United Kingdom branch. Every ambassador, before he is listened to, has to present his credentials, and I propose, if you will permit me, verbally to follow that precedent.

My credentials, then, are that I have been, ever since its initiation, the president of the Empire Parliamentary Association —I ought, perhaps, rather to say that I have been a joint president, for my colleague is the Speaker of the House of Lords for the time being, the Lord Chancellor. The Empire Parliamentary Association is, as I think you all know well, an association which was formed ten years ago for the purpose of bringing into contact and communication the members of the different Parliaments of the United Kingdom and of the Dominions which are all under the British flag. That is their chief end and object, and it is carried out in various ways. We are always delighted in London to receive the visits of any members of Dominion Parliaments who happen to come to the metropolis, and we believe that by intercommunication and by the exchange of our respective ideas, the general interests of the Empire, to which we are all devoted, may be best furthered. I come here, then, as their representative and at their request.

But I have another qualification, I think, to which Mr. Speaker has just referred. It is that for sixteen years I have presided over the deliberations of the House of Commons, and it is only a week or two ago since I stepped down from the Chair. Now, my purpose in coming here is to carry to you gentlemen of the House of Commons of Canada the very friendliest greetings and the best wishes of the branch of the Empire Parliamentary Association established in London.

We heard with deep regret of the terrible calamity which overwhelmed your chamber in February, 1916. We were, I think, all the more sympathetic owing to the fact that a similar calamity had almost one hundred years ago overwhelmed the old Houses of Parliament at Westminster. And when we heard that you had erected for yourselves the magnificent building which I have had this morning an opportunity of inspecting, a number of members, both peers and members of the House of Commons, were anxious to do what they could to assist in completing the beautiful edifice which was being reared in Ottawa. Their first idea, I may tell you, was to offer to you a replica of the Table in the House of Commons—a table which was once described by Mr. Disraeli, when he professed to be alarmed at the gesticulations of Mr. Gladstone, as "this substantial piece of furniture which happily divides us." On second thoughts, however, it was decided that a table rather connoted conference, but that a chair, a replica of the Speaker's Chair, would be more suitable as being more emblematic of parliamentary institutions and more symbolic of the authority which rests with every Parliament.

Now, the Chair, which for the moment is veiled with the Union Jack, is an exact replica of the Speaker's Chair in the House of Commons, which was erected in that building in 1844. Above the Chair, in the canopy, you will observe, when the flags are removed, the Royal Coat of Arms. This is carved out of a peice of oak which until recently has formed part of the roof of Westminister Hall. The roof of Westminister Hall was erected in the time of Richard II, in the year 1397. I think, imitating the celebrated mot of Napoleon, I can fairly say that from here five centuries will look down upon you.

The Chair was designed by the well-known architect, Mr. Pugin, and the replica has been carried out by Sir Frank Baines. The Chair brings to mind the names of eminent statesmen who, from time to time, have addressed its occupant. I need only refer to the great names of Sir Robert Peel, Lord Palmerston, Lord John Russell, Mr. Disraeli, Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Asquith, Mr. Balfour, Mr. Lloyd George. The inscription in front of the Chair, which you will observe when the Chair is more open to view, recalls what I think I may call this historical occasion. The occupants of the Chair, before I had the honour of taking it, were Mr. Shaw Lefevre, Mr. Denison, Mr. Brand, Mr. Peel and Mr. Gully. And, showing how long my Parliamentary career has been, I may add that I have seen in the flesh everyone of those gentlemen, and that I have sat in Parliament under no less than three of them.

But the Chair is something more than a mere gift of friendship on the part of the Empire Parliamentary Association towards yourselves. It acknowledges, I think, in its presentation by us and its acceptance by you, the great principle which has been accepted by Great Britain and by all the Dominions within the British Empire, that Government of the people, by the people, and for the people, is best carried out through Parliamentary institutions. That is the best-known method by which a free people can govern themselves, and by which their aspirations or their aversions can be either realized or removed.

The donors cherish the hope that this Chair, presented to the House of Commons of Canada, will, within the walls of this magnificent building at Ottawa, bear an everlasting testimony of the goodwill existing between the members of Parliament and the Mother Country, and of the long sucession of parliamentary traditions inherited conjointly by the free nations of the British Empire.

In 1918, the members of the Empire Parliamentary Association of the United Kingdom presented to the Senate of Canada a Black Rod to replace the one which was burnt in the conflagration, and they hope that the gift now made to this House to replace the Chair destroyed by the same fire will be considered as essential to parliamentary proceedings and will forever stand as the symbol of the good-will and the earnest desire for still more cordial and closer relations between the members of the Parliament at Westminster and their colleagues in the Parliament at Ottawa.

Finally, I would say that the Speaker's Chair is the symbol not only of Parliamentary Government as evolved by the great constitutional elements of the commonwealth of nations, but of authority, the authority of the individual selected by his colleagues to preside over them, authority to regulate debate, to mainain order and to ensure the free expression of all opinions. It marks, therefore, not only the similarity and the continuity of Parliamentary institutions in the New World as in the Old, but it emphasizes the principle that, without law, order and authority, there can be no true freedom. Upon the Chair itself you will find this principle enshrined in the succinct maxim: "Libertas in Legibus."

It is the hope then of the donors that the Parliamentary instincts and traditions which, "broadening down from precedent to precedent," have come to us in St. Stephen's, may flourish and abound in this country, and that when this generation and future generations look upon this Chair, the sight may kindle in their hearts a spark, nay, I would rather say a flame, of respect and admiration and, I trust, affection for the "Old Country."

Mr. SPEAKER: Your Excellency, Mr. Lowther, gentlemen of the House of Commons—one year ago a cablegram was received by the Speaker of this House from the Secretary of the United Kingdom Branch of the Empire Parliamentary Association conveying the offer of a Speaker's Chair "as an abiding token of goodwill between both Parliaments."

Acceptance would obviously involve the necessity of foregoing a custom which has obtained in Canada almost since the inception of responsible government, that the retiring Speaker should take with him the Chair which he occupied during his term of office. But the spirit which prompted the proposal of so fine a gift and the accompanying expressions were of such a character that no shadow of doubt as to its acceptance could exist, and accordingly on June 8, 1920, on the motion of the Prime Minister, seconded by the leader of the Opposition, it was unanimously resolved:

That the offer of a Speaker's chair to the House of Commons of Canada by the Lord Chancellor and the Speaker of the House of Commons as Joint Presidents and by the members of the Empire Parliamentary Association in the House of Lords and in the House of Commons of the United Kingdom be most gratefully accepted, and that Mr. Speaker do inform the donors of the high appreciation of this House for the gift, and particularly for the sympathy and goodwill which it expresses.

We now see the Chair in its permanent home. An object of beauty—the finished product of expert craftsman. It is this, and far more than this. It comes to us surmounted by the Royal Arms carved from the oak of old England, which has viewed from the roof of Westminster Hall the changing scenes of the great Mother of Parliaments since the fourteenth century. It brings with it hallowed associations in its being a replica of the Chair at Westminster, a gift from our brother parliamentarians across the sea. It will be valued because it has been brought to us by one who occupied the original with singular acceptance and distinction during sixteen stirring and epoch-making years in the history of Great Britain.

As the years roll by new memories, traditions and sentiments will mingle with those of a far-off past challenging and inspiring future generations to maintain those cherished institutions which through the centuries have been inseparably associated with this ancient seat of authority.

We gratefully accept, we thank the donors for this treasured gift, and to you, Mr. Lowther, we are deeply grateful for the honour you have done us in making the presentation in person.

Mr. Speaker then took the Chair.

Mr. SPEAKER: To preserve the bi-lingual character of the House of Commons, which was so happily recognized by you, Mr. Lowther, I shall call upon the Deputy Speaker (Mr. G. H. Boivin) to follow me in French.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER (Mr. Boivin): (Translation.) May it please Your Excellency, Mr. Speaker, Right Hon. Mr. Lowther.

It is a signal honour for me to speak on behalf of the French Canadian representatives and French Canadians of Canada in order to add a few words to those the Speaker of the House of Commons has just delivered.

We see in the Senate the Throne occupied by Your Excellency as the representative of our illustrious Sovereign George V.

In the House of Commons, the Speaker's Chair is the throne of the people, the symbol of the citizens' authority. He who occupies the Chair is the spokesman of the representatives elected at the polls and when speaking, he speaks with all the authority arising from prerogatives obtained through many centuries of struggle, from the time of the Magna Charta up to the present day.

Thanks to the genius of the British people, our parliamentary institutions have reached a stage of perfection which is envied by the whole world and secures to the minorities the absolute enjoyment of their rights and prerogatives. The generous donors of this Chair, a replica of the one which you, Mr. Lowther, have so gracefully occupied for sixteen years, wanted to bear witness to the fact that the Parliaments of the Dominions are enjoying no lesser privileges than those pertaining to the renowned Parliament of the United Kingdom.

From that Chair at Westminster, one of your illustrious predecessors, in 1867 put the question and called for the votes which guaranteed to us the British North America Act, the shield of our liberties, our rights and prerogatives. It is owing to that Act that we, from the province of Quebec, will ever be entitled to send here sixty-five representatives and to speak in these precincts the ever beautiful French language. It is owing to the beneficient influence of that constitution that those who sit in this Chair must alternately be of English or French-Canadian blood. We hope that the rulings given from this Chair shall always bear the stamp of the same knowledge of parliamentary procedure, the same righteousness and impartiality, the same courteousness which characterized yours, Sir, during the sixteen years you have occupied the Chair of the Mother of Parliaments at Westminster.

Let me conclude with a word more expressive than the few remarks I have made to the House, so that you may convey it to the generous donors you are representing to-day. I also address it to you as a token of gratitude for the long journey you have undertaken so as to present us with that gift and to offer us a living testimonial that the statesmen of England can speak like us the language of our ancestors. When translating that word, you will find in it, I hope, all that our French-Canadian heart feels; it is one of the softest, the most expressive words in the French vocabulary: "Merci."

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Your Excellency, Mr. Lowther, and Gentlemen of the Parliament of Canada:

You, Mr. Speaker, and the Deputy Speaker as well, have couched in very few words the sentiments that animate us all on this occasion, sentiments that I believe are shared not only by every member of this House but by every Canadian worthy of the name. The presentation of this Chair is an event of real significance. Possession of so splendid and beautiful an ornament adds immensely to the attractions of this chamber but what is of infinitely greater moment it will hold before our eyes throughout the long, we hope unending years of parliamentary government in Canada the symbol of the great mother Parliament of which ours is the offspring and the replica. It will stand as well as evidence of that sense of fellowship felt for us in the old land the helpful results of which we have through all our history enjoyed.

Every nation has made its own characteristic contribution to the world's advancement. Rome has given her simple but sane principles of law, Greece her ideals of beauty, Israel her ideals of religion; Italy has brought us something, Russia even has brought us something; France has brought us much. It is the peculiar glory of England that she has given to her daughter nations the model, and to the world the example of popular institutions of government. Just when the British Parliament took its birth historians hesitate to say, neither its birth nor its growth has been marked by any convulsion, by any easily discernible recasting or innovation. Time and events have done their work along sound and natural lines and wisdom has always presided in the process. This Chair will embody for us British traditions, it will remind us from day to day through the stern trials of the future of British wisdom and British patience.

In Canada we are not all of one race; a large part are of French descent. But I shall echo and anticipate the words of those who in the ceremony of this afternoon will especially represent French Canadians, just so far as to say that they as well as we of Anglo-Saxon blood are attached to the free institutions that we inherit from old England, that they believe as firmly as we in the essential rightness and fitness of the form of Government that she developed and that now is ours.

It is worth noting, indeed to me it is a valuable fact, that this gift from British Parliamentarians to the Canadian Parliament is carved out of English oak. The piece that is now the Royal Arms surmounting the Chair is cut from the rafters of the great Hall of Westminister. In the blood of every race there is something, there is some characteristic of every leading race that accounts for its place and power, indeed for its survival. It is the sturdy oak fibre of the British people that has carried them in triumph through the storms and perils of a thousand years.

We are honoured, very highly honoured, in having this Chair presented by the Right Hon. Mr. Lowther—the more so because he has travelled from London to perform this ceremony himself. For sixteen years, heavy, crucial, and eventful years, Mr. Lowther has presided over the House of Commons of Great Britain, and always with singular dignity and capacity. The name of his family has been associated with the public service of England ever since or almost ever since there was any England to serve. Within the walls of the British Commons for centuries back there has sat one of his line. It is therefore a memorable event for us that he should signalize the close of a long and distinguished service as first Commoner in the Mother of Parliaments by coming among us and presenting in person this visible and lasting link between the Commons of Britain and the Commons of Canada.

I am sure we, one and all of us, are grateful to the United Kingdom branch of the Empire Parliamentary Association, and particularly to the President who is here and to his co-President. We value this Speaker's Chair as we value the sense of fellow-citizenship in the British Empire which it is intended to express and to ensure.

Right Hon. Sir ROBERT BORDEN (ex-Prime Minister of Canada): Mr. Speaker, Your Excellency, Mr. Lowther—Little remains to be said after all that has been so eloquently and appropriately uttered by the Speaker, the Deputy Speaker, and the Prime Minister. May I ask to be associated with them in profound appreciation of this gift from the Empire Parliamentary Association of the United Kingdom; in appreciation also of the presence of Mr. Lowther, whose name is as well known in Canada as it is in the Mother Country, and who has served, not only the United Kingdom but the Empire, in the Speakership of the British House of Commons.

Just one thought, perhaps might be added. The parliamentary institutions which we have inherited and which we hold as of right and not of grace, were won by a common ancestry, and through gradual evolution and development during the past five or six centuries. I say a common ancestry advisedly, because it was under the leadership of Norman Barons that the Saxon people forced the Great Charter from a reluctant Norman King. The man who summoned the first gathering that might be regarded as the forerunner of the Commons House of Parliament of Great Britain, as well as that of Canada, was a Frenchman, born in France. He well served our country by calling together the Commons of England at Westminster on January 20, 1265. Thus, we can look back with satisfaction upon the fact that Saxon and Norman, five or six hundred years ago, stood side by side in the assertion of liberties that are ours to-day. With even greater satisfaction we remember that, since the establishment of representative and responsible government in this country, Canadians of French descent have co-operated effectively and whole-heartedly with those of British descent in developing our political institutions and asserting our liberties in this Dominion:

It is perfectly true, as has been observed this afternoon, that the present system of parliamentary government has been of gradual evolution. One hundred years ago there was in Great Britain representative and responsible government, but the House of Commons was then representative of what was called "an educated minority." To-day the Parliament of the United Kingdom is representative of nearly the whole people. In Canada the franchise began to be extended somewhat earlier than on the other side of the Atlantic. It now includes practically the entire community. I am sure that the influence of women in public life in both countries will be for the best. Already in Great Britain, Mr. Lowther has had the honour of having associated with him in Parliament a lady member of the House. So we in the near future, I imagine, may expect to see ladies sitting within the precincts of this chamber. It is even quite possible that some lady of distinguished parliamentary service may eventually attain the Chair, where I am sure she will preside with great dignity and impartiality.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I desire once more to express my very great gratification that this gift has been made. During all the years to come it will serve as a symbol of the common purpose of these two parliaments; and I trust that this common purpose may ever tend toward the maintenance of liberty, autonomy, and justice, towards the attainment of the highest ideals of democracy for which it is our duty constantly to strive.

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, your Excellency, Mr. Lowther—The constituent elements of Parliament here represented do right in regarding the present moment as one of historic significance. There are under British parliamentary institutions two symbols of authority—the Crown, which speaks of the sovereignty of royalty; the Speaker's Chair, which speaks of the sovereignty of the people. That, under the ægis of the British flag, these two sovereignties have blended into one, is a tribute not less to the character and devotion to duty of the occupants of the British throne than to the genius of the British peoples in the art and science of government.

On this occasion, we have these sovereignties not only represented in the symbols I have mentioned; we have them personified in the distinguished presence of His Excellency the Governor General and the presence of the eminent statesman who has crossed the seas to make to this Parliament and the people of Canada the gracious gift from our brother parliamentarians at Westminster, which by you, Mr. Speaker, has just been accepted in terms so adequate and appropriate.

It was said of our illustrious Queen Victoria that > Statesmen at her council met

> Who knew the seasons when to take > Occasion by the hand, and make
> The bounds of freedom wider yet.

We of this Parliament of Canada, reverencing British lore, and schooled in British parliamentary traditions, recognize in this moment such an occasion. We recognize in our parliamentary institutions, fashioned as they are upon the British model, the greatest guarantee of freedom which a people can possess. We recognize that in the preservation and extension of the principles of government underlying our free parliamentary institutions lies the possibility of our largest contribution to the freedom of mankind. Further, we recognize that it is around the Speaker's Chair that in the Mother of Parliaments the battles of political freedom have been waged, and in appeals to the authority of the Chair, as the symbol of a people's sovereignty, that British political liberties have been won.

We accept, therefore, this gift with a full appreciation of all that it signifies of what we owe of freedom to the Parliament at Westminster, and of courtesy and goodwill on the part of the members of the United Kingdom Branch of the Empire Parliamentary Association; and we ask you, Mr. Lowther, in conveying the thanks of this Parliament and of the Canadian people, at the same time also to convey the assurance that it will be our high privilege to seek to preserve, with due regard to its rightful dignity and authority, and its ancient and honourable tradition, this noble expression of the freedom and unity of the British peoples so generously committed to our charge.

Hon. THOMAS ALEXANDER CRERAR (leader of the National Progressive party): Mr. Speaker, Your Excellency, Mr. Lowther,—There is not much left for me to say on the present occasion. I am reminded however, that it has this fortunate aspect for us. Uusally the debates that take place in this chamber are not attended with the entire unanimity that has marked the proceedings this afternoon; and consequently it is a happy occasion when for the time being we can forget our controversies in the chamber and centre our thoughts on a united purpose. The circumstance is not an ordinary one. We to-day, in the admirable words of Mr. Lowther, have been presented with a replica of the Speaker's Chair in the great Mother of Parliaments. That, because of the preeminence of British institutions and parliamentary government, is a matter of no small consequence to us. I am reminded of the fact that Canada has enjoyed now for many years the precious boon of self government. It is a tribute to the genius of the Anglo-Saxon people that they have always endeavoured to build upon the broad foundation of freedom, and there is no finer or greater word in the whole Anglo-Saxon lexicon. We have also—and rightly and naturally so—derived our inspiration in parliamentary government from the Mother Country. We are familiar enough with history to know the struggles that have gone on in the Old Land for many centuries past, resulting in bringing the system of parliamentary government we have up to the state of perfection that we at present enjoy. It is also peculiarly fitting, Sir, that this Chair should come from the United Kingdom Branch of the Empire Parliamentary Association. That association embraces the self-governing Dominions of the Empire, and it is a great honour to this House that we should receive from them this splendid testimony of their good-will and affection for us.

I wish also to join my voice with those who have preceded me in saying that we are greatly honoured to-day in having with us the distinguished right hon. gentleman who for so many years presided over the deliberations of the British House of Commons. As Sir Robert Borden has stated, Mr. Lowther's name is not unknown in Canada; in fact, it is almost as well known here as in the Mother Land; and I am sure we all feel the deep debt of gratitude we are under to him for the trouble he has taken in coming to Canada to make this presentation in person.

This Chair will grace this chamber long after we who are now participating in the activities of this House have passed from the stage. It will be a constant reminder to the generations who come after us of the greatness and grandeur of British parliamentary institutions, and, moreover, it will be a lasting link with the Empire to which we are proud to belong.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Maisonneuve and Gaspé): (Translation.) Your Excellency, Mr. Lowther, Mr. Speaker; I thank you for the honour of the invitation which you have extended to me to address you on the occasion of the historical event for which we are here to-night. You have wished to render homage to the French minority, and I am doubly thankful to you.

In behalf of my colleagues, in behalf of French-Canada, I greet the distinguished guest who, by carrying out this trust, renews the ties of old-time and very friendly intercourse between the British Parliament and the Parliament of Canada. We know of his brilliant career, and also that, his exercise of the high function conferred upon him has caused parliamentary institutions to be the more loved and respected. Let him be welcome in our midst.

The new Speaker's chair, cut and carved out of the veneral wainscoting of Westminster Hall, is more than an ordinary ornament. It is an emblem, it is a symbol.

To have established throughout the world those institutions wherein lies so much of her glory and her power, will be to the everlasting honour of the Mother Country.

The parliamentary system is based on three principles: Liberty, justice and order.

He who presides over the debates of the representatives of the nation, and is well impressed with these fundamental principles, is worthy to occupy the Chair, which, by a happy fiction, symbolizes these principles.

It is a well acknowledged fact, Sir, that you have been one of the great "Speakers" who have honoured the British Parliament —a parliament which has so often been ruled solely by the master will of genius in the course of the last two centuries; a parliament whose historical walls have echoed the greatest events of modern history, and have resounded with the eloquent pronouncements of generous and pure minds, in turn proclaiming the abolishment of the slave-trade and the emancipation of Catholics, the framing of the Quebec Act, in 1774, and the granting to the Dominion of the privilege of responsible government.

Need I recall that in the long history of European civilization, which made its way as best it could through wars, despotism, revolutions, your Parliament was one of the rare sanctuaries where human eloquence which needs freedom to be powerful, and some sense of safety to be quite free, began to soar.

With Chatham and Pitt, Burke and Fox, Wilberforce and O'Connell, Bright and Peel, Gladstone and Disraeli, what illustrious ancestors you can claim! Those great models were the inspirators of Baldwin, and Lafontaine, Macdonald, Cartier, McGee, and of him whose great soul hovers within these precincts, Wilfrid Laurier.

May I add that we, Canadians of French ancestry, claim the institution of the parliamentary system as a family inheritance! Our ancestors, the Norman barons—whose signatures bear witness—wrested the Great Charter from King John, and Simon de Montfort was the first to bring together royalty, aristocracy and the people whose union formed the Parliament.

We all know that our language—the most beautiful ever uttered by human lips—was erstwhile the official language of the British Parliament.

By a happy turn of events, destiny—or better said, Providence, willed it that the sons of the victors on the plains of Abraham should become over the vast expanse of the New World, the associates of the descendants of the victors on the Hastings battlefield. Our dual origin and language present to the world a most interesting sight. We flatter ourselves with the thought that variety is an element of beauty and that this dual condition is a promise of harmony and unity. There are neither victors nor vanquished in this country. Being all equal in the eyes of the law, we want to take a hand in the common task, that is the development and the greatness of our country, under the guidance of the Crown whose motto is particularly dear to us, since it is expressed in a tongue whose accents are familiar to us, the cheering hope and the uplifting reality: "Dieu et mon droit."

Mr. Speaker, availing yourself of your prerogative, you have applied to me the rule of closure, a recent institution which has come over to us from the British Commons. With your permission I shall add a few words, intended for Mr. Lowther.

We have heard that he had taken leave of the House of Commons and that he would soon cross the historical threshold of the House of Lords.

A famous French writer who was travelling through England entered Westminster Hall one day. And here are the impressions which he confided to one of his friends: "I found, said he, the English middle class largely represented in the Commons, but when I read the mottos covering the walls and glazed windows of the House of Lords, there was not the slightest doubt left in my mind as to my being still in the very home of the old Norman aristocracy."

Mr. Lowther, you will soon return to London, and please accept our best wishes. If our French voices can be heard across the ocean, we beg our cousins over there to welcome you in that chamber of the British Parliament where, after many centuries, are still sitting the descendants of the old Norman aristocracy.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am sure I voice the unanimous desire when I express the hope that His Excellency will do us the honour of addressing us.

His Excellency the DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, Governor General of Canada:

Mr. Speaker, I hope I may express my grateful thanks to the House of Commons and yourself for having so made the arrangement for this historical and significant occasion as to allow me to be present. As far as I know, neither in the letter nor in the spirit have any of the justly-guarded privileges and traditions of the House of Commons been in any way encroached upon, and I hope I may take it as a happy omen for the future that the cordial relations that I have enjoyed will always exist between my successors in the distinguished office which I now have the honour to hold, and the members of the House of Commons.

The ceremony we witness this afternoon will hold an honoured place in our parliamentary records. The present and future members of the House of Commons will, I know, always have the same respect and veneration for this Chair that their colleagues have for its prototype in the venerable assembly which throughout the Empire we are proud to call the "Mother of Parliaments."

To myself as a former member of the House of Commons the occasion is one of special interest, and that interest is enhanced by the fact that the presentation has been made with characteristic charm and grace by an old House of Commons friend and colleague. I am afraid that I cannot honestly say that I have any reason to believe that Mr. Lowther during his long and distinguished career, first as chairman of committees and then as Speaker, had any particular reason to be impressed with any utterances of mine. At any rate, I think I can claim the satisfaction of knowing that to the best of my belief I never caused him any anxiety.

I join with you in the expression of grateful appreciation of the gift and in the confidence and assurance that the spirit which prompted it is sincerely reciprocated and will still further strengthen the ties which bind the two Parliaments together.

Right Hon. Mr. LOWTHER: The House will forgive me if for one moment I say that in addition to the Chair and in complement to it I have brought, on behalf of the Empire Parliamentary Association, this framed scroll with an inscription in front and a list at the back of all the peers and the members who have subscribed toward the gift which you have so generously and so amiably accepted.

[The proceedings were brought to a close by the singing of the National Anthem by all present, and before the meeting dispersed, hearty cheers were given for His Excellency the Governor General and the Right Honourable Mr. Lowther.]

Friday, May 20, 1921.

The House met at Three o'clock.

THE SPEAKER'S CHAIR

EXPRESSION OF THANKS TO EMPIRE PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Prime Minister): I beg to move, Mr. Speaker, seconded by Hon. Mr. Mackenzie King:

That the grateful thanks of this House be extended to the Lord Chancellor and the Speaker of the House of Commons, as Joint Presidents, and to the members of the Empire Parliamentary Association, United Kingdom Branch, for the Speaker's Chair presented on their behalf this day by the Rt. Hon. James W. Lowther, and that Mr. Speaker do inform the donors of the high appreciation of this House for the gift and for the expressions of goodwill which accompany and will ever be associated with it, and of the great honour which has been shown by the welcome visit of the Rt. Hon. James W. Lowther.

Motion agreed to.

EXPRESSION OF THANKS TO RIGHT HON. Mr. LOWTHER

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Prime Minister): I beg to move, seconded by Hon. Mr. Mackenzie King:

That this House deeply appreciates the honour paid it by the visit of the Rt. Hon. James W. Lowther, late Speaker of the House of Commons of Great Britain, for the purpose of presenting the Speaker's Chair, and that Mr. Speaker do convey to him the thanks of this House for his visit and its sense of appreciation of the high honour and compliment which it implies.

Motion agreed to.

ADDRESSES TO BE PRINTED IN 'HANSARD'

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Prime Minister): I beg to move, seconded by Hon. Mr. Mackenzie King:

That what has been said this day at the formal presentation of the Speaker's Chair, which took place prior to the opening of the House, by His Excellency the Governor General, the Rt. Hon. J. W. Lowther, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Deputy Speaker, the Prime Minister, the Rt. Hon. Sir Robert Borden, the Hon. Mackenzie King, the Hon. T. A. Crerar, and the Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, be printed in 'Hansard' as a prefix to the proceedings of the day.

Motion agreed to.

REPORT PRESENTED

Annual report of the Department of Public Printing and Stationery for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1920—Sir Henry Drayton.

GRAND TRUNK SHAREHOLDERS

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not able—indeed, I am not sure that I would be physically able to do so—to lay on the Table a return asked for some long time ago, ordered by the House at the instance of the hon. member for Chambly-Vercheres (Mr. Archambault) calling for a list of the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway. I have made inquiries, however, and I find that the return was asked for from the Grand Trunk through the President, Mr. Kelly, on October 23, 1919. He was asked to supply the names of the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway Company as they appeared in the books of the company on October 19, 1919. I find that there has arrived a large packing case completely filled, containing the names of the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway; that it contains over 70,000 names and addresses; that it is available in the Records Branch of the Department of Railways and Canals and is there for the inspection of the hon. member for Chambly-Vercheres or any other member of the House or the Senate who desires to examine them. The memorandum furnished to me says that unfortunately it is not in duplicate but in handwritten form, on very large and specially ruled and printed sheets with nine separate columns covering each particular class of Grand Trunk stock. This list has been required in connection with the Grand Trunk arbitration proceedings, and had to be sent twice to Montreal. It is in the Department at present and is available.

JUDGE SNIDER'S REPORT

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (leader of the Opposition): Is the Prime Minister now in a position to say when Judge Snider's report will be brought down?

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Prime Minister): I have heard nothing at all about the report. As far as I know, the report, after the final sitting, is not in. I am informed just now that it is not in.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Not been made?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No.

VICTORIA DAY

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Shelburne and Queen's): Is it intended that the House shall sit on May 24?

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Prime Minister): It is not the intention to sit on May 24.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF, 1907, AMENDMENT

The House in Committee of Ways and Means, Mr. Boivin in the Chair:

1. Resolved, That it is expedient to amend The Customs Tariff, 1907, by inserting the following section immediately after section 8:

8a. Notwithstanding anything in this Act, goods, other than tobacco, cigars, cigarettes, spirituous or alcoholic liquors and articles specified in Schedule A of The West Indies Trade Agreement Act, the produce or manufacture of

British Honduras; Bermuda;
the Bahamas;
Jamaica;
Turks and Caicos Islands;
the Leeward Islands (Antigua, St. Christopher-Nevis, Dominica, Montserrat, and the Virgin Islands); the Windward Islands (Grenada, St. Vincent and St. Lucia); Barbados;
Trinidad and Tobago; and British Guiana

when imported direct therefrom shall not be subject at any time to more than fifty per centum of the duties imposed on similar goods as set forth in the General Tariff under regulations by the Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue.

Mr. DuTREMBLAY: As regards the duty on tobacco and manufactured cigars, is the duty based on the weight or on the value of the tobacco?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This is not an ad valorem duty, it is a duty based on the pound weight of the leaf tobacco. The duty is 40 cents a pound, fixed, of course, by the pound weight.

Mr. DuTREMBLAY: The quality of the tobacco has nothing whatever to do with the duty?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No.

Mr. DuTREMBLAY: Has the minister not received representations or requests from cigar makers and others, especially the labouring class, in regard to this duty, inasmuch as it affects the price especially of cheap cigars? We do now see on the market as many cigars for five and ten cents as we used to see, and I understand that this is due to the fact that the duty is based, not upon the value, but upon the weight. In the United States, I am informed, the duty is based upon the value and not upon the weight, so as to allow ordinary people to be able to get a better cigar at the same price. Some years ago I put similar questions to the Minister of Finance and he looked into the matter, and he was to investigate it more fully. Has any progress been made in this direction?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There are two duties that are related to the matter to which my hon. friend refers. In the first instance, of course, we have our duty on the leaf tobacco, the raw material, and that duty, which is an excise duty is, as I have stated, 40 cents a pound. As my hon. friend intimates, many requests have been made for a change. Growers of tobacco—and we now grow a great deal of tobacco in Canada,— on the one hand have asked for a customs duty rate of $1 per pound on their product, and on the other hand manufacturers and the cigar makers, to whom my hon. friend has referred, have made requests looking, not to an increase, but to a very substantial decrease in duties upon tobaccos manufactured in this country. The particular duty to which my hon. friend is referring is the excise duty on manufactured cigars. There is a great deal to be said on both sides, but it has been a subject which we felt, in view of other considerations, we could not at the present time interfere with. No change is made.

Item agreed to.

2. Resolved, that Schedule A to the Customs Tariff, 1907, as amended by chapter 15 of the Acts of 1913, by chapter 26 of the Acts of 1914, and by chapter 5 of the Acts of 1914 (second session) be further amended by striking thereout tariff items 20, 21, 22, 23, 39b, 77a, 101, 101a, 103, 104, 110, 111, 113, 134, 135, 150, 151, 153, 156, 159, 160, 162, 163, 164 and 165, the several enumerations of goods respectively, and the several rates of duties of Customs, if any, set opposite each of said items, and to provide that the following items, enumerations and rates of duties be inserted in said Schedule A:

The CHAIRMAN: Shall this resolution be taken item by item? Carried.

Items Nos. 20 to 113 inclusive agreed to.

On item No. 134:

Tariff Items	——	British Preferential Tariff.	Intermediate Tariff.	General Tariff.
134	All sugar above number sixteen Dutch standard in colour, and all refined sugars of whatever kinds, grades or standards, not covered by tariff item No. 135, when not exceeding eighty-eight degrees of polarization, per one hundred pounds.....	$1.50	$2.00	$2.00
	when exceeding eighty-eight degrees but not exceeding eighty-nine degrees, per one hundred pounds	$1.52	$2.03	$2.03
	when exceeding eighty-nine degrees but not exceeding ninety degrees, per one hundred pounds.....	$1.54	$2.06	$2.06
	when exceeding ninety degrees but not exceeding ninety-one degrees, per one hundred pounds.....	$1.56	$2.08	$2.08
	when exceeding ninety-one degrees but not exceeding ninety-two degrees, per one hundred pounds.....	$1.59	$2.12	$2.12
	when exceeding ninety-two degrees but not exceeding ninety-three degrees, per one hundred pounds...	$1.61	$2.15	$2.15
	when exceeding ninety-three degrees but not exceeding ninety-four degrees, per one hundred pounds.....	$1.63	$2.18	$2.18
	when exceeding ninety-four degrees but not exceeding ninety-five degrees, per one hundred pounds..	$1.65	$2.20	$2.20
	when exceeding ninety-five degrees but not exceeding ninety-six degrees, per one hundred pounds.....	$1.68	$2.24	$2.24
	when exceeding ninety-six degrees but not exceeding ninety-seven degrees, per one hundred pounds...	$1.70	$2.27	$2.27

	Provided that refined sugar shall be entitled to entry under the British Preferential tariff upon evidence satisfactory to the Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue, that such refined sugar has been manufactured wholly from raw sugar produced in the British colonies and possessions, and not otherwise.

Mr. FIELDING: Mr. Chairman, this is really the most important item. I wonder if my hon. friend has made any comparative figures showing the relation of the raw sugar to the refined article. The sugar duties are very complicated, I know, varying at every degree of the polariscopic test, and it is very difficult for the ordinary reader to comprehend them, and one might easily make errors of calculation. I would be glad if my hon. friend could give the committee any comparative figures showing how far he is changing the duty on the raw material, and how far he is changing the duty as respects the refined article.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The matter is, as my hon. friend says, extremely complicated. We have to start with the preference which we are obliged to give the West Indies. Apply that minimum preference of 25 per cent, we start out with a base line, and having made that base line we make our calculations accordingly. There is a slight difference between the base line adopted for the British preferential tariff and that adopted for the general tariff. That had to be done in order to give effect to the preference called for in the Act. The old base line for the British preferential was $1.52. That was the base line for the first of these items in No. 134. That is now being reduced to $1.50. Then for the purpose of carrying out the 25 per cent base line, the general tariff which was $1.93 becomes $2, and the matter works out progressively from that base line. The really important item, so far as the cost of sugar in this country is concerned, is the ninety-nine degree item, which gives us a rate of $1.79 for the British preferential tariff. The margin of protection on raw sugar which results, in the first instance, from item No. 134, and from item No. 135, does not in any way enlarge the protection on refining in Canada. This ninety-nine degree item, which is really the item of importance, resulting in a tax under the British preferential of $1.79, and $2.39 under the general tariff, may be compared to the tax in the United Kingdom for polarization, not under 98 degrees. The equivalent rate under the English law is $5.5763 as compared with our $2.39.

Mr. FIELDING: The matter is extremely complicated, I know. In the case of refined sugar you have to take 99 or 100 degrees, because it is of a high character, but if you take raw sugar at any figure, say, 90 degrees, perhaps the simplest way of explaining the matter would be for the minister to say what has been the duty heretofore on that, and what the new duty will be, and then we will see whether we are or are not having an increase on the raw material. If we make a similar computation with respect to the refined article, we can see how it works out. I am inclined to think, on first view—although I speak with reservation, because I know how difficult it is to make exact calculations in these matters—that what my hon. friend has done is to reduce the rates of duty on raw material and increase the duty on the refined article. It looks that way, but I do not wish to assert that too positively, because it would be necessary to make a careful computation before one could speak with absolute certainty. I thought my hon. friend would have some information on that point. Take sugar at 90 degrees; what does it pay now?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Ninety-six degrees is the standard on which raw sugar is really purchased.

Mr. FIELDING: Much of it comes below that. A good deal of sugar is imported below 96.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The old item for raws under the British preferential tariff was $1.03¾ for 96 degrees as against 85.7 under the new order. The item which determines the question of protection is the general tariff item, which amounted to $1.37½, and the margin which is required by the agreement in connection with that, in schedule A of the treaty is 86.016 cents. The hon. gentleman will see that we have cut that down very materially in order to get that spread. If we did not cut it down on the British preferential side in order to get that spread there would have been a large increase in the customs duty. We expect to get no more revenue at all, but we hope to be able to hold the present revenue.

Mr. FIELDING: The raw material, practically speaking, will all come in under the West India Treaty, and we get our raw sugar very largely from the West Indies now. The aim of the West India agreement, very properly, is to increase purchases from the West Indies, and therefore I think it would be quite right to assume that the raw material will practically all come in under that agreement. If I understand my hon. friend on sugar of 96 degrees the rate hitherto charged was $1.03, and a fraction, and the new rate will be 85 cents. There is, therefore, a distinct reduction of 18 cents on the raw material. Is that correct?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is perfectly correct so far as the duty on the raw material is concerned. It has been cut down. We had to cut it down, or we should have had to increase the rate very much on the general standard. Although your preference is low, you do not buy at low prices. The exporter from the West Indies meets the competition which is open from the other fields, and I have been fortified in that conclusion by the remarks of my hon. friend in discussing the same question on previous occasions. Of course, human nature being what it is, my hon. friend was perfectly right; the benefit on all these preferences, generally speaking, will not come to the Canadian consumer; the benefit accrues to the exporter from the favoured country, unless, of course, the volume of trade is such that that advantage cannot be taken. But the fact is that the advantage can easily be taken. If I remember rightly, less than 50 per cent of our raw sugar manufactured in Canada comes from the British West Indies. I know I am quite right in saying that not more than 50 per cent comes from the West Indies, and it is perfectly obvious that there is not going to be any sugar bought in Canada at the lower standard having regard to that 50 per cent, and at the higher rate, having regard to the other 50 per cent.

Mr. FIELDING: The question as to who gets the benefit is a rather complicated one, and it is not necessary, for our purpose, to discuss it. We must confine ourselves to the duties; what their effect may be is a matter of argument. But if the legitimate aim on the West India agreement is to increase West India trade, it is a fair assumption that the bulk of our raw sugar—using that term broadly—will come from the West Indies. As a matter of fact, it comes largely from that section now, and under the agreement it will come in increasing qualities. Now, the rate on that raw sugar, which hitherto was $1.03, has been reduced to 85 cents, a distinct reduction—

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: 85.7.

Mr. FIELDING: —a distinct reduction in favour of the refiner of 18 cents. There is no doubt about that. The only possible question is how much sugar may come from some other quarter and pay a higher rate; but as the great aim of the West India agreement is for us to buy all the sugar we can from the West Indies, it is not unfair to assume that the bulk of our sugar will come from there, and to the extent that it does the refiner has an advantage of 18 cents, as compared with the previous rate. Having established the fact that the refiner is to get the raw material at a lower rate, let us turn to the question of the refined article.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: You will have to establish that.

Mr. FIELDING: I think I have stated the matter fairly.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There is a lower duty, but not a lower rate; it will not make the slightest difference in his rate.

Mr. FIELDING: We are not speaking of anything but the duty now. I am taking my information from my hon. friend, and I speak with all deference, because I know I could easily make a mistake in the matter. But I state the case again. Assuming that our raw sugar comes from the West Indies—and that is unquestionably the aim of the treaty, although, of course, occasionally, sugar will be imported from other places—the rate hitherto paid having been $1.03¾ on sugar of 96 degrees, and the new rate being 85 cents, there is a distinct reduction to the refiner of 18 cents per hundred pounds.

Now if you turn to the refined article I think my hon. friend will find he is working the thing the other way. When the West Indian Agreement was going through I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce if it did not imply a reduction on the raw material and he said it did. I then asked "What about the refined article?" He replied "That will have to be dealt with under the general tariff revision". Now, according to my figures I find that while my hon. friend has reduced the duty on the raw material he has increased the duty on refined sugar, which is the only thing the people use. For all the purposes of refined sugar you have got to consider the operation of the preference—it will come from Great Britain, not from the United States. You are not going to get any considerable quantity of refined sugar from the United States. The most of that sugar that is coming in will come in under the British preference and, as I say, if my figures are correct, my hon. friend has reduced the duty on the raw material for the benefit of the refiner, and he has increased the duty on refined sugar which is the only thing the people use. Now there is the possibility that an error has been made in the calculation and I would like to ask my hon. friend to check the figures.

Mr. STEVENS: Before the Minister of Finance answers my hon. friend, I would like to point out to him that a very large quantity of sugar, in fact nearly all that is used in the western sugar refinery, comes from Fiji.

Mr. FIELDING: Fiji is a British possession and is entitled to the preference.

Mr. STEVENS: It is not included in what my hon. friend referred to, the West Indian reciprocal agreement.

Mr. FIELDING: My hon. friend is right. There would be a shade of difference in that respect, but he is quite correct.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. FIELDING: No. I would like to have an answer from the Minister. He is reducing the duty to the refiner and I would like to know how the duty is increased on refined sugar.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I was just trying to follow a calculation and I did not quite catch what my hon. friend said.

Mr. FIELDING: There was nothing new in my last observation, it was merely a repetition.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think my hon. friend will find I am absolutely correct in this: Competitive sugars in the market, refined sugars, have always been foreign sugars. They have not been sugars manufactured in the West Indies, they have not been sugars manufactured under circumstances which can permit them to come in under the British preferential tariff. What we import under that tariff are raw sugars. The real competition in refined sugar—which as my hon. friend very properly says is the only thing that the people are interested in—is in foreign refined sugars chiefly from the United States where they get from time to time a very large quantity. Besides that there is a certain amount of refined sugar which comes in from the Orient; but the real competition, which affects the only market the Canadian consumer is directly interested in, is in refined sugar which comes from the United States. Taking refined sugar as of 99 and 100 degrees, as it is refined and sold, under the old tariff the rate per hundred pounds was 71½ cents. Under the present tariff the rate becomes 71 cents. In so far as the refiner in Canada is concerned his protection has been reduced by one-half of a cent having regard to his real competition. So far as regards the production of the raw materials for beet-root sugar on the other hand, the protection to the grower of beets has been largely increased. As the hon. gentleman says the public are interested in refined sugar, and that is exactly the position.

Mr. FIELDING: The duties on refined sugar are so high that under ordinary conditions very little comes in. This last year or so we have had abnormal conditions, and it is not perhaps fair to judge by that, but a comparatively small part of refined sugar is imported into Canada. We produce our own refined sugar, and I am not desirous that it should be otherwise, but I think that my hon. friend will find that he has—whether he intended to do it or not—given the refiners some advantage they did not possess before. However, I do not want to delay the passing of the items at the present time. Before the matter is finally disposed of I will be very glad to check up the figures my hon. friend has given and see whether my own interpretation is different from his. I think we may take this item and the next one together because they are related one to the other.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Before we pass this item I would like to get an explanation from the minister of the proviso at the foot of item 134 which reads as follows:

> Provided that refined sugar shall be entitled to entry under the British Preferential tariff upon evidence satisfactory to the Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue, that such refined sugar has been manufactured wholly from raw sugar produced in the British Colonies and possessions, and not otherwise.

Suppose that raw sugar produced in the island of Trinidad was imported into the United States and refined there. Can it come into Canada under the British preference?

Mr. FIELDING: No.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): This language would seem to imply that it could, because it says that sugar that has been produced in the British colonial possessions, and refined is to have the benefit of the British preference. It is not declared that the sugar must come direct from the country of origin, apparently it may come from anywhere provided it is produced in a British colony. That is the meaning of the language as I understand it. If I am incorrect in that understanding I would like to have an explanation from the minister.

Mr. FIELDING: I am afraid I am responsible for that language and I would like to explain the situation. Of course, nothing from the United States comes under the preferential tariff, whether it be sugar or anything else. The object of that clause is this: The aim under the former arrangement—and I am quite sure we are not desirous of changing it now—was to give a bona fide preference to the West Indies. If the West Indies can send their sugar to England and Scotland and have it refined there and come into Canada that sugar would bona fide be entitled to the preference, whereas if other sugars coming from foreign countries were sent to England and Scotland and refined there, if the British preference applied, it would not carry out the purpose of our agreement.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): It would be very easy to have a definition making it clear that the provision would apply to sugar coming from Great Britain or some of the British possessions. The present language is certainly open to the construction I have placed on it. Apparently the sugar may be refined anywhere provided the raw sugar was produced in a British colony. That seems to me to be the meaning of the sentence. If the intention is that it should apply where sugar produced in a British colony like Trinidad or Jamaica, and was afterwards refined in Great Britain or in any British possession, and subsequently introduced into Canada, it would be quite easy to claim language that would cover such a case.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not think anything has worked out wrongly or that there has been any real difficulty under the wording of this clause. It is a clause which was, I think, the subject of a great deal of careful study by my hon. friend the ex-Finance Minister in introducing what is really, after all, the whole bases of this particular kind of trade convention—his British preferential tariff of 1897. The wording of that Act stands unchanged, and we are merely continuing what in the light of experience has been found to work well.

Mr. FIELDING: I admit that the clause standing alone would be capable of that interpretation, but as the British preference is distinctly confined to British countries, I think it is quite evident you have to read that into the clause.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: For years it has worked out all right under this interpretation.

Mr. PEDLOW: The resolution says distinctly that articles specified in schedule A shall not be subject at any time to more than fifty per cent of the duties imposed on similar goods as set forth in the general tariff. This means that a number of these items scheduled in the general tariff would be allowed to come into Canada at a very much lower rate of duty than the same articles coming from Great Britain. I am sure that cannot be the intention of the Government.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not know anything in that section in which Great Britain is interested in the slightest. She does not grow sugar, limes or shaddocks. This is done having regard particularly to West Indian products, and the Act is entirely followed in the present resolution.

Mr. PEDLOW: Does not Great Britain manufacture sugar?

Mr. FIELDING: Not raw sugar.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Sugar is exempt from that provision.

Mr. PEDLOW: What about fruits, items 103 and 104?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There is no preference given to those items; those are fruits preserved in brandy.

Mr. PEDLOW: The resolution states, of course, the exception, "goods, other than tobacco, cigars, cigarettes, spirituous, or alcoholic liquors;" but these items 103 and 104 refer distinctly to preserved fruits. We get a quantity of preserved fruits from England and Scotland. Unless you dot every "i" and cross every "t" in the resolution, the department is likely to put a strictly literal interpretation on the Act, as, for instance, what happened last year in their classification of manufacturers, resulting in an immense amount of trouble. I would like to see this Bill put in such form that when it is passed no room will be left open for any expensive law suits —expensive on the Government and on individuals—caused by too literal rulings of the department.

Mr. FIELDING: If Great Britain produces the same articles, undoubtedly the argument of my hon. friend is correct and the rates of duty would vary. The only answer of the minister is that Great Britain does not produce the same things as a rule. It may be so in regard to fruit. It is a well understood principle that in no case will we charge Great Britain a higher duty than any other country. But as this resolution is worded there is nothing to say we shall not charge goods from Great Britain a higher rate than similar goods from the West Indies, and I am afraid we are going to do it under this agreement if there is any competition.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: It was expressly provided in the agreement with the West Indies that we should be at perfect freedom to make arrangements, preferential and otherwise, and that the West Indies should have the same liberty. The West Indies gives us a quid pro quo for which it gets a concession from us. Great Britain does not give us that quid pro quo, so we have a perfect right under the agreement with the West Indies to charge the lesser rate of duty agreed upon, and to charge on articles coming from the other parts of the Empire a preferential rate.

Mr. FIELDING: My right hon. friend is getting back to the very old ground that we should not give England a preference unless she gives us a quid pro quo.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: But we do.

Mr. FIELDING: We do without a quid pro quo. My right hon. friend says we are justified in not giving it to England because she does not give us a quid pro quo.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: England has a preferential tariff of thirty per cent now, although she does not give us a quid pro quo. We do not take that preference away from her; but when we make an agreement with the West Indies under which they give us reciprocity, and we give it to them in return, I do not think there is any injustice done to England.

Mr. PEDLOW: If you will permit me to refer back to the items that have already been passed to clear up the situation, items Nos. 20, 21, 22 and 23, I think it will be admitted that if these schedules are to obtain as they stand there will be a distinct discrimination against Great Britain in respect to those items. They are cocoa, paste or "liquor," preparations of cocoa or chocolate in powder form, preparations of cocoa or chocolate not otherwise provided for and confectionery. According to my reading of the resolution, those will be imported from the West Indies at a very much lower rate of duty than from Great Britain under this Act as it reads. Therefore we are discriminating against Great Britain.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I appreciate the point my hon. friend makes. The fact is that none of those items he has referred to are produced in the West Indies; they have none of those manufactures there. They are very much interested in the cocoa bean, Item 77A, and, indeed, that is the item which necessitates the changes that my hon. friend has referred to. The West Indies produce the cocoa bean, and England manufactures it into these commodities, as my hon. friend says. We also manufacture it into the same commodities. The West Indies are only interested in getting their preference in connection with the cocoa bean, which is given to them as called for by the agreement.

Supplementary to what my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) has said as to the general principle, I would say that while England must always get her goods in certainly at as low a rate, if not lower, than foreign countries—and that has been pretty well accepted of late—it has not been applied and extended to other British possessions. I would also point out that that principle was borne in mind by the hon. gentleman in bringing down his British preferential tariff. He held the general principle clearly in mind as to the effect of the British preferential tariff having regard to the benefit that was to be given to England, but he did not regard that as fettering his action in connection with what ought to be done to other and perhaps more necessitous parts of the British Empire, or to other parts of the British Empire where perhaps it pays Canada to work up a more intensive trade. For example, I direct attention to section 8 of the customs tariff implementing the arrangement made by my hon. friend in 1907, which says:

> Notwithstanding anything in this Act, fish and other products of the fisheries of Newfoundland may be imported into Canada free of all customs duty until otherwise determined by the Governor-in-Council, by order published in the Canada Gazette.

The direct result of that was to provide that Newfoundland could get her fish and fish products into the Canadian market free while Great Britain had to pay a British preferential tariff. There is no change in principle at all; it is simply a case of fish in one instance and cocoa beans in the other.

[Mr. Pedlow.]

Mr. FIELDING: I do not quite see the force of the illustration with regard to Newfoundland. However, the point raised by the hon. gentleman from Renfrew is in regard to preserved fruits, etc. Of all the articles mentioned, only one, I think, can be regarded as manufactured by Great Britain. Now, the revenue obtained by insisting upon a difference in rate on this one article would not amount to much, and I cannot see that any great harm would be done from the revenue point of view to say that any of these articles coming from Great Britain shall come at the rate granted the West Indies.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The particular fruit item that the hon. gentleman refers to gives the preference to nobody; it is the same all round.

Mr. FIELDING: That is so; I had not noticed that.

Mr. PEDLOW: But it doesn't appear in the item, and a merchant placing an order for preserved fruits from the West Indies might expect to get that product at a rate fifty per cent less than the rate given in the general tariff, but when he came to make his entry at the customs house he would find that the ruling was otherwise.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: These items refer to fruits preserved in alcohol.

Mr. PEDLOW: Suppose a British manufacturer, seeing the advantage of having these cocoa beans manufactured into paste or chocolate powder, installed a plant at some point in the West Indies and turned out the product there, thus obtaining the benefit of this preferential tariff of fifty per cent as against his competitor whose factory is established at some point in England, what is my hon. friend's opinion as to the result of that condition?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think the question that would arise there would be whether we thought it worth while to continue our own activities in the production of sweets and that sort of thing, or whether we should bring them to an end. That would really be the consideration should such an eventuality arise. I do not think, however, that there is much danger in that regard.

Item agreed to.

Items 135, 150, 151 and 153 agreed to.

On item 156:

Tariff Items	——	British Preferential Tariff.	Intermediate Tariff.	General Tariff.
156	Ethyl alcohol, or the substance commonly known as alcohol, hydrated oxide of ethyl or spirits of wine, n.o.p.; gin of all kinds, n.o.p.; whisky and all spirituous or alcoholic liquors, n.o.p.; amyl alcohol or fusel-oil, or any substance known as potato spirit or potato oil, methyl alcohol, wood alcohol, wood naphtha, pyroxylic spirit or any substance known as wood spirit or methylated spirits, absinthe, arrack or palm spirit, brandy, including artificial brandy and imitations of brandy, n.o.p.; cordials and liquers of all kinds, n.o.p.; mescal, pulque, rum shrub, schiedam and other schnapps; tafia, angostura and similar alcoholic bitters or beverages; and wines, n.o.p.; containing more than forty per cent of proof spirit, per gallon of the strength of proof.....	$10.00	$10.00	$10.00

Mr. FIELDING: Does this cover alcohol used for manufacturing purposes, by chemists and others? As regards spirits for beverage purposes, I do not want to make any complaint;—that is a matter in which the provinces of British Columbia and Quebec are interested; the other provinces cannot get any liquor, so that there is no need of making any fuss about the matter. Has my hon. friend received representations in regard to alcohol used for manufacturing purposes? I have had telegrams from druggists stating that their business is seriously affected by the increased duty on alcohol for chemical and manufacturing purposes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is dealt with under the excise item. This is the customs item.

Mr. FIELDING: It is not covered by this item?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I read in the press that the Attorney General of British Columbia has expressed the opinion that this Parliament cannot impose a tax on alcohol which is provincial property. Has the Government any legal advice on the matter?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes, the position of the Government is that when governments become traders, their trading operations are subject to taxation. Of course, if that were not so, it would be possible for a Provincial Government to remove practically entirely articles of taxation from this Government. The principle is not a new one, because it was introduced by this House into the statute book in the amendment of the Customs Act of 1917.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I would not like the impression to prevail that the Government of Quebec, at least, is entering a trade under the law that was enacted last session. It is certainly not to enter the trade that this law was passed; on the contrary, it is rather to serve the purpose of temperance, to remove temptation and to avoid abuses which existed formerly. The question of making money not only is secondary, but does not exist at all. The Government have no right to treat the provinces of British Columbia and Quebec as traders in the matter.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am very much pleased to hear what my hon. friend says, namely, that the province is not in this business for trade. The province is in it for the purpose of reducing the consumption of drink; to make respectable something which my hon. friend does not think has been quite respectable in the past; to perform a useful service. That business paid taxes in the past, and as the province is not in it for money, the imposition of these rates cannot in the slightest degree interfere with the fruition of its benevolent object.

Mr. ROBB: If I understood correctly the Minister of Finance a moment ago, he said that the Department of Justice advised them that when a province entered upon business trading, it is subject to taxation. My recollection is that at a recent session of this Parliament—and I am not sure whether it was the present Minister of Finance or his predecessor—on a question somewhat similar to this, a question of taxation, the Minister of Finance gave a ruling that the hydro-

5 p.m. electric companies of Ontario were exempt from the effects of taxation, while incorporated companies doing business in other provinces were subject to taxation. It was very strongly contended upon this side that that was an unfair attitude to take. The Miniser of Finance of that day ruled that the provinces doing business were exempt from taxation. Either the Department of Justice is giving different advice in this regard, or the Minister of Finance, at a previous session, offered an opinion without having consulted the Department of Justice.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The situation is hardly as bad as that. In fact, I would be only too happy to say at once that we will treat Quebec in this matter in precisely the same way as we have treated the hydro-electric. We are not here seeking to tax the income of Quebec. We are saying that imports of whiskey shall not become exempt because they are imported in the name of the province for the purpose of reselling. I think that is the position taken by the hon. member for Quebec East.

Mr. ROBB: I do not take that position.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is the position taken by the Attorney General of British Columbia, and I thought my hon. friend was a little sympathetic to that position. The Ontario Government, the Government of every province, nay further, the departments of this Government themselves, are obliged to pay customs duties on whatever they import into this country.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Has the minister considered the advisability of taking an inventory of the millions of dollars worth of whiskeys and wines stored in the cellars of the wealthy people of this province and of some of the other provinces which have gone "dry," and of imposing the additional taxes upon this hoarded liquor?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Does the hon. gentleman advise that that is within our power? I know that he is a lawyer of standing. Has he considered that our taxation is a customs tax in one case and an excise tax in the other; that it is a tax on transactions? Does the hon. gentleman suggest that the Dominion has such rights over civil property that it can go into the cellars of his fellow-townsmen and tax the contents of those cellars?

[Mr. Robb.]

Mr. FIELDING: The language of the British North America Act is that the Dominion has power to collect moneys by all or any means of taxation; there is no limit, so far as a tax is concerned. As to the right to go in and take possession of any person's cellar, that is another matter, but the right to levy a tax on the contents of the cellar is beyond question.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am afraid one would involve the other. How could you tell what he had in his cellar?

Mr. MICHAUD: These goods in the cellar are looked upon as sacred, and I do not believe we should go so far as has been suggested.

Mr. NESBITT: I understand there is a rebate of duty of 99 per cent on alchohol used in hospitals. How do you keep track of the quantity used?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That will come up under a separate item.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I wish to correct the minister's impression. I offered no opinion as to the merits or demerits of the legal opinion of the Attorney General of British Columbia; I merely asked whether the Government had had any legal advice in the matter, and I stated that it was not fair to consider the provinces as traders. I really think that this is an exorbitant tax. Some may criticise the laws which have been adopted in British Columbia and Quebec, but I say that these provinces are acting in good faith and are doing their best even for the cause of temperance. I think this is purely a provincial question and I say that the Federal Government should not step in immediately and impose an almost prohibitive tax on liquor.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think that is a point that we ought to clear up. This is not a prohibitive tax. There is a pretty good deal of whisky drunk in Great Britain —some people think, a great deal too much, —and the British Government derives a splendid revenue from that source. The tax in England, if I remember rightly, is $17.60 per gallon, while the corresponding rate here is $10 per gallon. You do not have to pay the English tax on liquor exported to this country. It comes over here simply on the basis of cost production, plus whatever profit the liquor producer thinks he can get; there is no British Government tax on it. It has been suggested that it is impossible for people to do business under our tax. Well, how is that great volume of business carried on in Great Britain by private people, who are at the expense of advertising and the like, which I suppose provincial governments will not be put to in this country, when their tax is many times greater than ours? An ordinary case of Scotch contains 1.7 gallons of taxable alcoholic contents. That would make on the whole dozen bottles of whisky a tax of $17 in this country, as against a tax many times greater in Great Britain; that is, we are imposing a $17 tax against a case of 12 bottles of Scotch, which is now being sold, if the price lists I have seen are correct, at the rate of $40, $45, and $50 per case. So, I am sure this tax will be hailed with delight.

Mr. JACOBS: By whom?

Mr. PARENT: Did I understand from the minister that the tax has been raised from $5 to $10 per gallon?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes, per proof gallon.

Mr. PARENT: Would the minister tell the committee what revenue he derived last year from this source when the tax was $5 a gallon?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am sorry I have not the figures here, but my recollection is that the total amount of spirits released from bond or imported was something like 3,500,000 gallons last year.

Mr. PARENT: Would the minister consider that that quantity yielded a large revenue?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would have to consider any revenue small which is anything less than what we can reasonably get.

Mr. PARENT: I have no doubt the minister is animated by the very best motives in imposing such a tax, but I venture to think that by raising the duty to $10 per gallon he may fail of the object he has in mind. The provinces of Quebec and British Columbia have both passed laws with a view to controlling the liquor trade and seeing that temperance shall prevail in their respective provinces; at least, that is the intention of the province of Quebec. By regulating the trade within their own limits they intend to have a better quality of liquor sold and distributed to the people, and at a reasonable price. I am afraid that if the duty is raised to $10 a gallon, as the minister proposes, the tax will be prohibitive, and it will have the effect of making some people manufacture all kinds of bad whiskies and spirits that are unfit to drink, with bad results to the health of the people at large. So far as I am concerned, I want to protest against this increased tax. I do not think it is fair.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Perhaps my hon. friend would assist me. I do not want to do anything that is unfair in the slightest degree. I am told—I confess that I have no intimate knowledge of the whisky business—that alcohol, and pretty good alcohol at that, is easily produced in quantity at rates as low as 25 and 50 cents a gallon. During the war, when whisky was pretty dear generally, I am told that the soldiers in France when they were on leave were allowed to buy whisky free of all duty, and that the price for a bottle was only two shillings and six pence, or 60 cents a bottle.

What does my hon. friend think is fair? If it be true that the real value of whisky as sold in the military mess rooms was 60 cents a bottle, after paying the cost of getting it into France—

Mr. GLASS: It does not designate the quantity.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am not speaking of the large imperial measure; I am talking about the ordinary bottle, which contains about one-sixth of a gallon. If it be true that the real value of the whisky is 60 cents a bottle, then it can be supplied, less cost of transportation, overhead charges, etc., which I should not think would be very heavy, on a basis of $7.20 a case. But suppose 60 cents is too low; suppose you put it a $1 a bottle, which every one will admit is the very outside price to attach to whisky. Whisky is sold to-day at $3.75, some at $3.85, some at $4, and some a little higher. Let us take $4, as affording an easy basis of calculation. On the basis of $1 to the agency which handles the whole thing, the whole cost, with our duty, is only $29 a case, as against a return of $48, or a profit of $19 a case, subject to the necessary reduction for overhead expenses in connection with offices, salaries, etc. Under the circumstances I should think that the tax would be welcomed rather than objected to.

Mr. LAPOINTE: To further the cause of temperance, and perhaps, to help the revenue, I would advise the Quebec Government to charge a higher price when customers are citizens of the other provinces, especially Ontario.

Tariff Item	——	British Preferential Tariff.	Intermediate Tariff.	General Tariff.
156a	Rum, per gallon of the strength of proof..... Provided, as to all goods specified in items No. 156 and No. 156a when of less strength than the strength of proof, that no reduction or allowance shall be made in the measurement thereof for duty purposes, below the strength of fifteen per cent under proof. Provided also, that when the goods specified in these two items are of greater strength than the strength of proof, the measurement thereof and the amount of duty payable thereon shall be increased in proportion for any greater strength than the strength of proof Provided further, that bottles and flasks and packages of gin, rum, whisky and brandy of all kinds, and imitations thereof, shall be held to contain the following quantities (subject to the provisions for addition or deduction in respect of the degree of strength), viz.:— Bottles, flasks and packages, containing not more than three-fourths of a gallon per dozen, as three-fourths of a gallon per dozen; Bottles, flasks and packages, containing more than three-fourths of a gallon but not more than one gallon per dozen, as one gallon per dozen; Bottles, flasks and packages, containing more than one gallon but not more than one and one-half gallon per dozen, as one and one-half gallon per dozen; Bottles, flasks and packages, containing more than one and one-half gallon but not more than two gallons per dozen, as two gallons per dozen; Bottles, flasks and packages, containing more than two gallons but not more than two and four-fifths gallons per dozen, as two and four-fifths gallons per dozen; Bottles, flasks and packages, containing more than two and four-fifths gallons but not more than three gallons per dozen, as three gallons per dozen; Bottles, flasks and packages, containing more than three gallons but not more than three and one-fifth gallons per dozen, as three and one-fifth gallons per dozen. Provided further, that bottles or phials of liquors for special purposes, such as samples not for sale to the trade, may be entered for duty according to actual measurement, under regulations prescribed by the Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue.	$8.00	$10.00	$10.00

Mr. JACOBS: It seems to me that these excise taxes are extortionate, in view of the fact that in every province, except Quebec and British Columbia, liquor is used as a medicine. What is the logic of charging people these extortionate rates for medicines?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We do not.

Mr. JACOBS: As I understand it, before a bottle can be procured in Ottawa —I have this only from hearsay—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. JACOBS: —one must secure a doctor's certificate indicating that the person needs the liquor as medicine.

Mr. NESBITT: That is in Ontario.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: He takes it as a beverage, as a matter of fact.

[Mr. Lapointe.]

Mr. JACOBS: He takes it down as a beverage, but it is given as a medicine, otherwise the doctor could not possibly issue the certificate. I do not understand why these high prices should be charged.

Mr. NESBITT: In Ontario it is used for rubbing.

Mr. JACOBS: Surely some distinction should be made between the use of liquor as a beverage and its use as a medicine.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We have not yet come to the question of excise duties. Under that item there will be provisions looking toward a gentle handling of whisky for medicinal purposes.

Mr. JACOBS: Would the minister consider that as soon as a doctor issues a certificate, liquor can be used for medicinal purposes?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is not what I have said.

Mr. JACOBS: That is the logical conclusion.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There are qualifications.

Mr. GLASS: This item naturally affects the manufacturers of extracts.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That also comes under the excise item.

Mr. FIELDING: Does the excise item deal with imported liquors as well as native?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No.

Mr. FIELDING: These are regulations that apply to imports. The excise will apply only to goods manufactured at home; so that the provisions which my hon. friend is enacting really constitute another form of protection.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is really an old and familiar form. So far as the production of alcohol is concerned, we have always had a bit of discrimination under all laws. My recollection is that we started out with a discrimination of 20 per cent in favour of the local as against the imported article. The rate was $3 against $2.40, and now we have gone all the way from $3 to $10, and if we took the 20 per cent off, the general excise rate of $9 would be a good deal lower.

Mr. JACOBS: That is to say, the excise is $9, as against $10 on the imported article.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes.

162	Medicinal or medicated wines, including vermouth and ginger wine, containing not more than forty per cent of proof spirit.....	80 p.c.	80 p.c.	80 p.c.

Mr. JACOBS: That seems to be a rather heavy rate considering that these are medicinal wines.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is exactly the same as last year, there is no increase.

Mr. JACOBS: Why should the Government insist upon charging such exorbitant rates upon medicinal preparations. We have a Health Department which already costs us a million dollars a year to see that the health of the people is conserved and preserved, and when medicinal or medicated wines are prescribed by physicians, why make a charge of 80 per cent. It seems to me quite illogical having in view the fact that we have an expensive health department.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think perhaps the chief element of controversy in this particular clause is vermouth. Of course my hon. friend does not know very much about vermouth, but it is used in the preparation of cocktails.

Mr. JACOBS: What is a cocktail?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is only procurable now, they tell me, in Montreal or one or two other favoured cities. Speaking seriously, there is not much in the item of a medicinal character. Anyhow, these are entirely in line with the general spirit duties.

Mr. JACOBS: The word "medicinal" is used in the item.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There are some very agreeable medicinal wines, wines that are quite nice to drink.

Mr. LAPOINTE: How does my hon. friend know that?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Perhaps my hon. friend is familiar with Vin Mariani. It is a standard wine and said to be of a medicinal character. The grapes from which it is produced are grown in a district where there is said to be quite a lot of iron. It is called a medicinal wine, but it is a first-rate drink.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): The inference is that a cocktail is always meant to be medicinal.

Mr. JACOBS: It is a life saver some times.

Mr. JACOBS: Is that 55 cents per gallon.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This is an item that does not carry any protection.

Mr. FIELDING: The rate is applicable to wines the produce of any British colony or territory in the South African Customs Union Convention. The language seems to imply more than South Africa. Is it the old item?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is the old item in connection with the French Treaty, Mr. Breadner tells me.

Mr. JACOBS: I notice that the words "British colony or territory" are used in this item. May I ask whether this would apply to Palestine? The British Government now has a mandate over Palestine and the chief article of export from that country is wine.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What brand would that be?

Mr. JACOBS: Mostly every kind of brand is produced in Palestine. It is a land flowing with milk and honey. The Minister of Finance ought to remember that.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do, but I have never heard anything about wine.

Mr. JACOBS: Well, that expression would cover everything. The British Government has a mandate over Palestine, and would that country now be regarded as a "British colony"?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think not. British South Africa as defined in the Act includes Cape Colony, Natal, Orange River Colony, the Transvaal, Rhodesia, Bechuanaland and Basutoland.

Mr. FIELDING: They all form part of South Africa.

Mr. JACOBS: Why not make some provision in favour of those countries over which the British Government has a mandate?

Mr. JACOBS: Is there any change here over last year?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The duties are the same as last year.

Mr. FIELDING: If they are the same why are they set out here?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We cancelled all the luxury taxes last year. We are just re-enacting those duties that need to be re-enacted.

Mr. FIELDING: Is not that ad valorem duty a new thing?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No.

Mr. FIELDING: Speaking generally the duties on spirituous liquors were the same under the general, the intermediate and the preferential tariff, but in this case there is a difference—I do not know whether it was done in a former session and is simply being retained—in addition we have 30 per cent under the general tariff.

Mr. NESBITT: My recollection is that has always been there.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The rate was 30 per cent under the tariff of 1907.

Mr. FIELDING: The 30 per cent duty is of long standing?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes. The French Treaty was the reason why my hon. friend put it under the general tariff.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Has the minister made any estimate as to whether the added duties on alcoholic liquors and wines will produce more revenue than the old law yielded last year?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is very difficult to tell. I should not think the duties would produce as much and my reason for saying that is this—the importers, particularly the importers in Montreal who are really doing the business, did an enormous trade last year in importing liquors into Canada. The old figures were greatly exceeded; in fact they were much beyond what they were before if I remember rightly. I do not think we are very likely to have anything like the same volume again for a long time.

Mr. ROBB: Roughly speaking, the minister estimated in his Budget speech that the revenue from excise would be about $4,000,000 less than last year?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes.

Section agreed to.

Section 3—date when effective—agreed to.

On section 4—marking of goods and penalities.

Mr. FIELDING: This is quite a new condition and a very important one. Will the hon. gentleman give us some information concerning it?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The object of the Bill is, as indicated, to let people know what goods they are buying. Speaking from recollection—I have not the American Act before me—I think this is broader than that Act, and broader than most legislation of this character. I believe a similar Act is in force in the United Kingdom in regard to certain articles. The list here is necessarily long because provision is made for marking anything which can be reasonably and properly marked without detriment. The matter came up objectively in connection with representations made by importers of goods from Great Britain. Representations were made by deputations in connection with the sale of wool, and they pointed out the pains which were being taken, for example, by the Scotch Woollen Merchants' Association to protect the public from fraud in connection with the sale of their goods. Every single yard of the cloth they manufacture bears at the top the name The Scotch Woollen Merchants' Association.

Mr. FIELDING: Not by law?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No, they have been trying to get everybody to understand that unless so marked the article is not Scotch cloth. They complained that much cloth was sold as of Scotch production which had never seen Scotland. And the complaint was not at all confined to cloth. Statements were made to the effect that German knives and razors and other articles were sold without the slightest knowledge on the part of the purchaser that they were German, but on the representation that they were English. All that is sought to be done is to let the fact be known in such a way that the representation is affirmatively on the article. The matter is so simple that I am not relying on precedent, but on what is the best thing to do. On the one hand, this section removes opportunities for fraud, and, on the other hand, it enables the purchaser to know what goods he is purchasing. It seems to me on a general principle, having regard to the desirability of promoting both those objects, that the section ought to be adopted.

Mr. FIELDING: Any regulation which guards against fraud should have our sympathy. It is a question, however, as to how far it is wise to do this thing by law. There is something in a reputation which is established by the makers of a certain article, and the stamp on Scotch woollen goods is of as much value as if legally enacted. I am afraid this law will lead to some trouble. I notice in the next clause that provision is made for this section to come into force on September last. That would penalize people for goods they already have in their possession.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The next section provides for this regulation becoming effective on September 1, 1921.

Mr. FIELDING: I beg my hon. friend's pardon. Of course, if similar Acts are in force elsewhere we may be able to learn something from them. Would there not be difficulty in marking large bales of these goods? And when you say they are to be marked so as to indicate the country of origin, would goods from the Old Country have to be marked as coming from England, Scotland, Ireland or the United Kingdom?

[Sir Henry Drayton.]

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I should say the United Kingdom.

Mr. FIELDING: Then you may have some cheap English goods masquerading as Scotch goods.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Or still worse, Irish goods.

Mr. FIELDING: And you would be doing some injustice to Old Ireland.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think that is right.

Mr. FIELDING: I think there is a little vagueness in this section which may be embarrassing. I know the difficulty of going into details in regard to these things, but it is so hard to know where the mark can be placed on some articles. Take a man who has a roll of cloth in his shop, and he sells off twenty yards of it; the roll was marked on the edge; after selling twenty yards what evidence have you got on the remainder as to where it came from? The penalties are severe, and while the object is a good one, I rather think the hon. gentleman will find difficulty in enforcing the regulation.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): I think Old Country firms are manufacturing goods now to be imported here this autumn, and therefore three months is not enough notice to all the world that all goods imported to Canada after September 1, 1921, have to be marked. I would say that six months' notice at least ought to be given.

Mr. NESBITT: I should say you do not run any risk if you leave the date as it is, because any firm which is proud of its goods will take care to mark them so the public will know what they are buying. It is only those who are not proud of their goods who will not be anxious to mark them.

Mr. PEDLOW: I agree with the member for Shelburne and Queen's that in matters of this kind—indeed, in all matters—the public have a right to be protected. But the enforcement of a law of this class is absolutely impossible, having regard to the strict wording of the provision of it. During the last year we have had some difficulty in connection with the interpretation of an Act. We were assured by the minister in charge of the Bill when the legislation was before the House that it would be subject to a certain interpretation but when the customs officers came to enforce it they interpreted its provisions quite differently. The result was no end of trouble during the last year, including a law-suit which has just been concluded, and which will be very expensive to whoever has to pay the costs.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am afraid that we have to pay them.

Mr. PEDLOW: But only a certain proportion. I am not a lawyer, but I understand that only certain costs can be assessed by a solicitor against the loser of a case; the other party will always have something to pay. Now, this provision insists on the branding of goods which may be branded without injury. Who is to decide what articles may be branded without injury? Some customs official who knows nothing about the material he is handling? Then there is a penalty provided of $1,000 and a year's imprisonment. It is provided also that all goods imported into Canada which do not comply with the requirements made shall be subject to an additional duty of 10 per cent and shall not be released from the customs office until they have been branded. Who is to do the branding? Some official in the Customs Department who knows nothing about the goods he is handling? Mr. Chairman, I would like to see this resolution struck out. If it is adopted we shall have a serious condition to deal with—a more serious condition than prevailed in connection with the Luxury Tax Act and the definition of what is a manufacturer. Now, you ask your customs officials to go into a retail store to examine a line of goods—officials who know very little of the technical qualities of the goods they are inspecting. And who is going to say whether or not the goods should be branded? It is provided that they shall be marked in a conspicuous place. Take the case of stockings; what lady is going to wear a pair of stockings which are branded with an indelible stamp?

An hon. MEMBER: Skirts may get longer.

Mr. PEDLOW: Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, they do not show a tendency in that direction. It is the other way about, so it is hard to say what may happen in that regard. Prior to the war a law was passed in England providing that goods which were not made in Great Britain should be marked "not British manufacture." That created a good deal of hard feeling in Germany. But the British manufacturers decided that in handling goods marked "German manufacture," for instance, they were advertising German manufactures; accordingly, they came to the conclusion that they would avoid that result by having the goods marked 'not British manufacture." If it were provided that the packages or containers of the goods should be marked "British manufacture," "German manufacture" or "Swiss manufacture," as the case might be, the purpose my hon. friend has in mind would be served, but such a law as is proposed cannot be enforced without a great deal of trouble and a considerable amount of friction. Some one has said that a good deal of deception is practiced by retail merchants by selling goods as of Scotch, English or Irish manufacture which are not made in those countries. Well, I suggest that the public should be allowed to do some deciding on their own account; they should be educated to the point of being able to protect themselves against impositions of that kind. I have seen any amount of tweed goods which had been made in Canada sold as Scotch manufacture. It suits the purchaser's fancy to believe that he is buying goods of Scotch manufacture, and he is getting value for his money just the same. A certain amount of that sort of thing cannot possibly be avoided,—and when clothing made in Canada is sold as Scotch goods, I do not think the purchaser suffers very much as a result. Of course, I want it to be understood distinctly that I do not approve of deception of that kind. Some of the best carpets produced are made in Canada. I would not have to go far from this chamber to find goods in use marked "British manufacture" and "U.S. manufacture" which, if the purchaser knew his business, would be found to be not so good value for the money as goods manufactured in Canadian mills.

Another point is this: If you insist on this resolution being put into force, you increase the cost of commodities, because all these little additional operations cost money. I do not think we should endeavour to stop the present downward trend of the price of commodities, and every little hampering enactment of this kind will certainly add to the cost of merchandise because it will cost money to brand each individual item in a package. If you brand the package or container, that will be quite sufficient to indicate where the goods come from, and the purpose underlying this resolution will be served by an enactment along this line. I shall be sorry if the minister insists on passing this resolution, because I know he will find that it will cause a great deal of hardship and trouble, particularly as regards merchandise in stock on September 1, 1921.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is not interfered with.

Mr. PEDLOW: Your customs officer, inspector, or spotter who goes around the country will interfere. He has been interfering in other cases. He will go into a store and find one line of articles that have been imported after September 1 and that are branded, and another line of the same goods not branded. What will he do? He will purchase an article that is not branded, take it before a magistrate and lay an information, and the merchant will have to defend a case of that kind. The minister need not shake his head. I have been through the mill, and I know exactly what this means. The retail trade of this country will be put to a great deal of cost in defending cases of this kind. Officials who have very little knowledge of items in which they are dealing, will put not only the department, but the business of the country to a great deal of trouble that might be saved by leaving conditions as they are.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I assure my hon. friend at once that this is something where there is no room for misunderstanding. Last year we did not get the legislation quite as clear as we should have done. I thought it was clear and evidently the courts thought it was clear enough, but the decision was overruled. There is no question of courts here. This is a question of the administration of the customs office pure and simple. You do not send inspectors out of the customs office unless they are asked to go and look after something special. There would certainly be no scrutiny made of private stocks after September 1, for the purpose of finding what had not been marked. The whole idea of this law is that when customs entries are being made and goods are being examined for customs purposes, then and then only shall this question as to the marking be determined. One might just as well say that because you have a customs law as it is now, the customs officer must follow everybody into the different offices, warehouses and so forth for the purpose of worrying and annoying him. As regards trade matters, I have very often the pleasure of agreeing with my hon. friend, but I think he is mistaken as regards a system which allows a Canadian manufacturer, in the case that he quoted, to turn around and sell Canadian-made goods, no matter how good they may be, as Scotch goods. I do not think that is a proper system.

Mr. PEDLOW: I do not think it is a good system.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We are going a long way in stopping that sort of thing by this legislation. Moreover, during the war, the people of this country were badly taken in in matters of this kind. First-rate hats are made in Canada; but during the war, hats were sold as English hats, and the only things that were English on them were the label and the hat band. If we get everything marked properly when it comes in, the proper mark of the firm, the mark can be put on any way they like. They are not going to hurt the smallest things. I yield at once to my hon. friend's experience in ladies' stockings, but I have seen very good ladies' stockings with marks on the toes. I have even seen those sacred things injured to the extent of having the number on them, and I do not believe it would hurt them any more if we put the name of the country on the toe. I do not believe that ladies would object to that in the slightest. As regards what kind of goods should be marked, that is something that will have to be made final, definite and determined in the regulations. There are some goods that ought not to be marked.

Mr. PEDLOW: The resolution says that the article must be marked in a conspicuous place and that the mark must not be covered up.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Does my hon. friend suggest that a lady's stocking is, of necessity, conspicuous in the sense that he means? I think my hon. friend is having a little fun at my expense, and that he really understands the object of the resolution; that is, that when a purchase is made by the consumer, the consumer will be able to see somewhere on the article, in a place where it can be read, the name of the country of origin. I do not think my hon. friend would say that, if that were applied to corsets, the name could not be put on a conspicuous place on the corsets. It refers to the garment, not when worn, but when purchased.

Mr. ROBB: Might I suggest to the minister that during the recess he might gather for the committee such information as would enable us to determine to what extent this prevails in other countries, because this will largely affect international trade? If it is a good thing for Canada to introduce and enforce such regulations, other countries may determine that it is a good thing for their trade, and this might result in a considerable expense to those throughout our country who do an export business.

Mr. FIELDING: Would it not be a move further in the right direction to require that goods manufactured in Canada shall be stamped as being of Canadian manufacture, so that we might stop the fraud of which my hon. friend speaks, of Canadian goods being sold as British goods? If it is good policy to let the people of Canada know that these goods are made abroad, it is equally good policy to let them know the goods that are made at home.

I foresee another difficulty. We have by regulations and the customs tariff dealt with the British preference, that is to say in determining what the country of origin is. For example, German goods are advanced to a stage nearing perfection. They are then sent to Great Britain where they are finished. When they come over here, is Great Britain the country of their origin? In the case of the British perference, there must be a certain percentage of British labour on them to enable them to be recognized as coming under our tariff. I am afraid my hon. friend will meet that same difficulty in determining the country of origin.

At Six o'clock, the committee rose and the House took recess.

After Recess

The House resumed at Eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. ETHIER: Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the House may I be permitted to move that the Rules of the House be suspended to permit me to move the first reading of a Bill which, I understand, was reported from the Senate this afternoon?

Mr. SPEAKER: I would have no objection to putting the question to the House as to whether unanimous consent should be given, but we must have at least the name of the Bill.

Mr. ETHIER: It is a Bill respecting the Central Railway Company of Canada.

Mr. SPEAKER: I will put the motion after we have received the report from the committee.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS

Bill No. 147 (from the Senate), for the relief of John Wilson.—Mr. Fripp.

Bill No. 148 (from the Senate), for the relief of Albert Harding.—Mr. Fripp.

Bill No. 149 (from the Senate), for the relief of Thomas Furneaux.—Mr. Mowat.

Bill No. 150 (from the Senate), for the relief of Matthew John Scott.—Mr. Best.

Bill No. 151 (from the Senate), for the relief of Dora Lucy Bell.—Mr. Mowat.

Bill No. 152 (from the Senate), for the relief of Henry Kropp.—Mr. Smith.

Bill No. 153 (from the Senate), for the relief of Arthur Daughton.—Mr. Douglas (Strathcona).

Bill No. 154 (from the Senate), for the relief of Annie Maud Bell.—Mr. Boys.

Bill No. 155 (from the Senate), for the relief of Thomas Henry Foster.—Mr. Rowell.

Bill No. 160 (from the Senate), for the relief of Edward George Taylor.—Mr. Douglas (Strathcona).

Bill No. 161 (from the Senate), for the relief of Margaret Swanston Neville.—Mr. Copp.

Bill No. 162 (from the Senate), for the relief of Ernest Lillie Montgomery.—Mr. Fripp.

Bill No. 163 (from the Senate), for the relief of Ethel Gordon Wright Ball.—Mr. Fripp.

Bill No. 164 (from the Senate), for the relief of Ivan Ignatius Brazill.—Mr. Mowat.

ALPHONSE LeMOYNE de MARTIGNY

House in committee on Bill No. 120 (from the Senate) for the relief of Alphonse LeMoyne de Martigny, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

On section 1—marriage dissolved:

Mr. STEIN: I move that consideration of this clause and of the Bill be postponed until the next sitting of the House. There was some opposition to this Bill in the Private Bills Committee, and with some other hon. members I should like to have the opportunity of reading the evidence, which we have not been able to do as yet on account of the late sittings recently.

Mr. FRIPP: I do not think we should interfere with the judgment of the Private Bills Committee in this case. This Bill was considered with a great deal of care by the Private Bills Committee, and there was evidence—

The CHAIRMAN: I must call the attention of the hon. member (Mr. Fripp) to the fact that we have not entered into a discussion of the Bill or of the clause. The motion is simply that consideration be postponed. That, of course, is an undebatable motion, and unless it can be agreed to by unanimous consent, I shall be obliged to put the motion to the committee.

Motion agreed to.

Progress reported.

CENTRAL RAILWAY COMPANY OF CANADA

Mr. ETHIER: Mr. Speaker, I move that rules 28 (a) and 115 be suspended and that Bill No. 188, respecting the Central Railway Company of Canada, be read the first time.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must point out that this motion can be entertained only by unanimous consent. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to and Bill read the first time.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the Bill be read the second time?

Mr. ETHIER: I should like to have it read the second time now.

Mr. SPEAKER: In this instance, also, the motion can be entertained only by unanimous consent.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time and referred to the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.

Mr. SPEAKER: Private Bills having been exhausted, the House will resume Committee of Ways and Means.

PRIVILEGE—RIGHT HON. MR. MEIGHEN

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Prime Minister): I would ask the unanimous consent of the House, Mr. Speaker, to return to Orders of the Day. I desire to make a few remarks on a question of privilege.

Mr. SPEAKER: Unless the House gives unanimous consent to return to Orders of the Day at this stage, it will be necessary to resume in Committee of Ways and Means, when progress could be reported and the Prime Minister then move that the House return to Orders of the Day. Has the right hon. member the unanimous consent of the House to return to Orders of the Day?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. MEIGHEN: I feel impelled again to refer to a matter that was introduced into this House by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar), in the course of his speech in the Budget debate on Thursday last. In that speech he made a statement in reference to a subject which I freely say he should not have felt at liberty to discuss in the House. He said that an offer had been made by me, or by some one representing me, of a position in this Government to Hon. Mr. Veniot, the Minister of Public Works in the province of New Brunswick. At the time I gave a categorical denial to the assertion, and added that no one, on my authority, had made any such proposal. The subject was brought up again, at yesterday's sitting of the House, some time this morning by the member for Russell (Mr. Murphy.)

Mr. DUFF: Centre Vancouver.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It was brought up by the hon. member for Centre Vancouver (Mr. Stevens), in relation to certain changes which he stated had been made in the report in Hansard.

It was referred to by the hon. member for Russell, however, proceeding along the line of the hon. member for Marquette, and an interview, or an alleged interview, said to have been given by the hon. Mr. Veniot, in his own province, was read. In the interview it was alleged—I am not saying now that the allegation was made by the hon. member for Russell; I do not know of my own knowledge whether the interview was ever given or not that this gentleman had been approached on behalf of myself, and indeed went on to say that some letter had been written to him by me and—

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is the way it appeared in Hansard transcript, although I see in the paper—

Mr. VIEN: Hansard was corrected.

Mr. MEIGHEN: —Mr. Veniot said it had been written to somebody else by me. This was intended to confirm the allegation that this proposal had been made. During all this I knew from memory, although my correspondence is very heavy, that I had received some letter some time on the subject, but as no one was good enough to give me the name of the correspondent I was not able to trace it. My secretary tried to do so yesterday but without success. This forenoon he has succeeded in securing two letters written me by a gentleman in the city of St. John. I am sorry to have to give so much time and attention to this subject. I assure you, Mr. Speaker, and the House, it is not worth it, but those responsible are well known. I am sorry also that letters of this character that were not intended by the writer to be made public are under the necessity of being made public because of the very unusual—and I hope not to be repeated—action taken by certain hon. members. I therefore propose to lay on the Table the actual correspondence that passed between us, and I commend it to the consideration of the hon. members who have not only been the means of circulating through this country an impression wholly false—I had almost said cruelly false—but an impression that has been taken advantage of by one or two unprincipled newspapers to pursue tactics peculiar to themselves. The first letter is dated November 29—I am not sure that I personally read it wholly through when I got it. I may say before I proceed any further that what I hold in my hand is all the correspondence that passed between me and anybody on the subject; nor did I speak to any human being, Cabinet minister, or other, on the subject. All I had to do with it is as represented by the correspondence I now read:

SAINT JOHN, N.B., November 29, 1920.

Honourable ARTHUR MEIGHEN,

Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Mr. Premier,—

I have just read the article "Trying to Rope Him In" by "The Mace" in this week's Toronto Saturday Night, and naturally it makes one think of "How to do it".

Not having had the pleasure of meeting you I am an entire stranger, but we have some mutual friends and to one, W. F. O'Connor, Ottawa, I will refer you as to my good faith in any proposition I may make.

Everybody knows how big the job is "To rope him in" and nearly all look at it from the same view point. My idea is to get at it from a different angle. Let me explain briefly: At the time of forming Union Government, I wrote Sir Robert L. Borden and suggested that, as he could not get support in Quebec, it would be good policy to take in the Honourable Peter J. Veniot who had two or three sons overseas, who could easily be returned for Gloucester, N.B., and who is well and favourably known throughout Eastern Quebec, but Sir Robert did not act on the suggestion although he wrote me in favour of it.

I may say that he was not in favour of it. I have the letter that was written.

You want and must get French support and Cabinet material. Why not take Mr. Veniot as representative of the Acadians among whom all over the Maritime Provinces he is recognised as leader. He would quickly increase his following from Quebec where he is active in many French organizations etc., and if desired at general election he could easily stand for and carry a Quebec riding. It would strengthen you with the French speaking people and be a powerful factor in breaking the solid front against you and the means of changing opponents to supporters.

In the words of the article referred to "You need a Tarte". Well Mr. Veniot is next thing to a Tarte, a trained parliamentarian, good debater, fluent speaker in both English and French, clever political organizer, stands well with his Church authorities and both French and English speaking people, knows the political game and so far has made good as Minister of Public Works for New Brunswick.

If you looked upon the suggestion with favour the question would be "Could you get him?" I have not spoken to Mr. Veniot about it nor to any other person in his behalf and he has not the faintest idea that I am writing you or had written Sir Robert Borden.

One way to win is to think of schemes others overlook and act upon them and this is such a case and I believe it can be put through.

Of course Mr. Veniot would have a portfolio in Cabinet. To make an opening for him Mr. Turgeon would have to be provided for and Mr. Veniot for the time being, at least, represent Gloucester. Probably Mr. Veniot would look upon the change to get to Ottawa with favour in view of the Farmers gain made in the last Provincial election in the English districts looked after by other ministers. He put the Foster Government into power and if he withdrew it would quickly go out which would mean a coalition between Conservatives and Farmers with Baxter for Premier and such would be a great factor towards your success later.

Almost the entire gain in population in the Maritime Provinces is among the Acadians. There are two Acadian Bishops in New Brunswick and giving Acadians recognition in Federal Cabinet would be simple justice in proportion to populations, and create favorable impressions all over the Maritime Provinces.

If I could be of any service in this matter let me know. I thought possibly if we found Mr. Veniot favourable it might be arranged for him to board your train at some quiet station and discuss the matter with you en route to or from Sydney, C.B., as I see you are going there.

Yours truly,

The signature is here. I would like hon. members to state further whether they desire to have it; if necessary we can discuss that. I do not know the gentleman; I never heard of him.

Mr. DUFF: It does not make any difference.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think the hon. members of finer feeling will see that it might be better that his name should not be given. I am sorry to have had to read the letter. Now I will read my reply.

Mr. COPP: You might give his initials.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If I am asked by the leader of the Opposition to give the name I will give it. My reply is dated December 1, and is very brief.

OTTAWA, ONT., December 1, 1920.

I have just received your letter of the 29th November. I will discuss the subject to which you call attention with Mr. Wigmore. I have had no intimation whatever from the party to whom you refer as to his attitude towards the Government or toward the paramount Federal issues of the day.

Faithfully yours,
(Sgd.) ARTHUR MEIGHEN.

I received, I see, a further letter dated January 7, from the same gentleman which reads as follows:

ST. JOHN, N.B., January 7, 1921.

HONOURABLE ARTHUR MEIGHEN,
Ottawa, Ont.

DEAR MR. MEIGHEN:—

After receipt of your letter and a letter from Mr. Wigmore, I awaited Mr. Wigmore's visit which was delayed and unfortunately missed seeing him, although I endeavoured to do so.

As you and Mr. Wigmore may not be in Ottawa at the same time I enclose copy of the letter I am sending Mr. Wigmore which explains itself.

The interviews referred to therein did not lessen my faith in the suggestion but rather confirmed it.

If I can be of any service in this or any other matter to assist you kindly advise.

Yours truly,

To which I replied as follows on January 10:

OTTAWA, ONT., January 10, 1921.

On my return to the city I find your letter of the 7th January, together with copy of one addressed to Mr. Wigmore, Minister of Customs, with whom I will be glad to discuss the matter referred to, at the first favourable opportunity.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) ARTHUR MEIGHEN.

I may say that through pressure of work or otherwise I have never yet even spoken to the Minister of Customs on the subject.

I should read now the letter to the Minister of Customs, a copy of which was enclosed to me in the above letter of January 7.

It is dated January 7, 1921, and is as follows:

Dear Mr. Wigmore:—

I am sorry you were unable to see me during your visit to Saint John as per your letter of December 3. I called at your office four or five times each day and the third day left a letter offering to meet you at any time or place that would suit you best, and repeatedly phoned and left my number both at the office and Mr. Terry's.

I know how rushed you were and merely mention above to show I did my best to see you without breaking my other business engagements.

I was in Bathurst two weeks since I got your letter and had three interviews with the party about whom I had written the Premier, and while I was not in a position to say anything definite, I promised to see him after your visit and now not having seen you puts me in an awkward position.

I might say in a general way my friend is quite an admirer of the Premier whom he met once in Ottawa, and believes in his sincerity to give the Dominion good honest administration and admits need of tariff and other methods of taxation to raise revenue to carry on affairs of this great country. He did not turn the proposition down, felt details as I suggested to make opening, could easily be arranged, but until I had something more definite he did not wish to say more than that he would be glad to see me after my interview with you.

As, expecting to see you, I delayed acknowledging the Premier's letter. I am doing so to-day and enclosing him carbon of this letter so he will know how the matter stands if you and he do not be in Ottawa at the same time.

Yours truly,

I have already read the letter in which he enclosed this copy.

Mr. McMASTER: You have not read the letter of Mr. Wigmore to this gentleman.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, I want to keep distinct the correspondence with myself; then I will read that letter.

This is the entire correspondence with me. There has been nothing beyond the correspondence, not a word—not even a sight of the gentleman, not even a word to my colleague or to any other members of the Government.

Mr. COPP: Did I understand the right hon. gentleman to say that the man's name was signed to this letter?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Mr. COPP: Is it signed on the copy?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I will lay it on the Table with the signature to it when asked by the leader of the Opposition.

Mr. COPP: I am simply asking if this copy is signed.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think the signature was copied on the typewriter, but the original letter was signed. On receipt of the letters, in the usual way I had my secretary refer them to the appropriate minister, and he put on the face of the correspondence:

Hon. R. W. WIGMORE.

Referred by the Prime Minister for consideration.

GEORGE F. BUSKARD,
Private Secretary.

Mr. Wigmore then writes:

> The Prime Minister has referred to me your letter in reference to P. J. Veniot and I have carefully noted what you say. I expect to be in St. John between Christmas and New Years and will be very glad to discuss the matter personally with you then.

Which discussion did not take place.

Mr. VIEN: When yesterday the Prime Minister denied these letters he quoted the speech of the member for Russell in this way:

> The person who made the overtures to me presented to me a letter addressed to me and signed Premier Meighen.

I find the quotation in the unrevised Hansard reads:

> The person who made the overtures to me presented to me a letter addressed to him and signed by Premier Meighen.

The Prime Minister when reading the quotation said: "addressed to me." That was not quite what the hon. member for Russell had quoted.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman will recall that the hon. member for Russell declined to read the interview in my hearing when I came into the House. I therefore sent to the Hansard office for the transcript; I received it, and it read exactly as I read in the House. I have the transcript in my hand at this moment. I presume there is an error.

Mr. VIEN: It does not read that way in the unrevised Hansard this morning.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I hold in my hand the transcript handed to me by the Hansard office. That possibly may be clear as well. Let me say finally, that what I stated was this, that no such proposal had been made by me, or upon my authority, directly or indirectly, definitely or indefinitely, or in any other way. I appeal to my colleagues of this House whether what I said was right.

Mr. ETHIER: I notice in reading the Journal newspaper report that there was mention of a letter sent by the Prime Minister to Mr. Veniot on January 11. Is there such a letter in the hands of the Prime Minister?

Mr. MEIGHEN: There was no such letter received. I never wrote him, and he never wrote me—at least, none was received.

On motion of Right Hon. Arthur Meighen the House returned to the Order: Private Bills.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF 1907 AMENDMENT

The House again in Committee of Ways and Means, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN: When the committee rose at six o'clock we were considering the first resolution, which will be found in the Votes and Proceedings of Monday, May 9, 1921. It is a resolution to amend the Customs tariff, 1907. The three first resolutions had been passed and we were considering resolution No. 4, which had been read and discussed. Shall resolution No. 4 carry?

Mr. ROBB: The hon. Minister of Finance was to obtain some information for the committee.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The hon. gentleman, Mr. Chairman, wanted information as to provisions in other countries dealing with the same subject. The provision adopted by the American Congress is very much in point. It is to be found in the Tariff Act of the United States, more popularly known as the Underwood Tariff of 1913. My recollection is that it was not even then a new provision, but an old provision somewhat amplified and brought down to date. At page 91 the section reads:

> That all articles of foreign manufacture or production, which are capable of being marked, stamped, branded, or labelled, without injury, shall be marked, stamped, branded, or labelled in legible English words, in a conspicuous place that shall not be covered or obscured by any subsequent attachments or arrangements, so as to indicate the country of origin. The said marking, stamping, branding, or labelling shall be as nearly indelible and permanent as the nature of the article will permit.

So that our resolution reads practically the same. But there is one provision which we have not inserted. The American law goes on to provide:

> All packages containing imported articles shall be marked, stamped, branded, or labelled so as to indicate legibly and plainly, in English words, the country of origin and the quantity of their contents, and until marked in accordance with the directions prescribed in this section no articles or packages shall be delivered to the importer.

We have not included the last provision; we thought that possibly it was not necessary. I quote further:

> Should any article or package of imported merchandise be marked, stamped, branded or labeled so as not acurately to indicate the quantity, number, or measurement actually contained in such article or package, no delivery of the same shall be made to the importer until the mark, stamp, brand, or label, as the case may be, shall be changed so as to conform to the facts of the case. The Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe the necessary rules and regulations to carry out the foregoing provision.

The penal clause in the United States law is as follows:

If any person shall fraudulently violate any of the provisions of this Act relating to the marking, stamping, branding, or labeling of any imported articles or packages; or shall fraudulently deface, destroy, remove, alter, or obliterate any such marks, stamps, brands, or labels with intent to conceal the information given by or contained in such marks, stamps, brands, or labels, he shall upon conviction be fined in any sum not exceeding $5,000—

That is, against the $1,000 mentioned in our resolution.

—or be imprisoned for any time not exceeding one year, or both.

Mr. PEDLOW: Before the committee rose at six o'clock I had expressed my opposition to this proposal. I have since considered the matter in more detail and I do not see why I should change my view in that regard. The fact that the United States or any other country has a provision of this kind is no reason why the Canadian Government should adopt a similar measure. If the minister can show any real necessity for this provision I might, perhaps, withdraw my opposition to it. Now, I have had some experience in matters of this kind and my opinion on this question should have some weight. As I said before six o'clock, in my judgment this measure if adopted will be absolutely impossible of enforcement; it is impracticable, and it is unnecessary. The minister apparently desires to protect the public against unscrupulous dealers. But let me say to the committee, and, through the press, if necessary, to the country, that in an experience of over forty-five years I have never known a merchant who practiced deceptive measures to be successful in business, or to remain before the public for any considerable length of time. I say that the public have the power in their own hands to deal with matters of this kind and that they do deal with them successfully. I know a town not far from Ottawa in which thirty years ago there were forty-five merchants doing business; to-day only one of the original number remains in active business. I admit that there are some merchants who attempt to deceive the public by selling, perhaps, Canadian made goods as goods of English, Scotch, Irish or German manufacture, but such merchants as I have indicated succeed only for a short time; they are dealt with by the public in very short order. Those who attempt to deceive the public live, move and have their being in business but for a brief space of time; they have not won the confidence of the public; they vanish and are soon seen no more.

Now, I had thought that we were through with restrictive measures of this kind, at least for some time. The hon. member for Durham, the former President of the Privy Council (Mr. Rowell), worked this class of legislation over time during the last three sessions. I understand that the hon. gentleman has decided to withdraw from the House. At any rate, he it was who had placed on the statute book an enactment regarding maple products which is so restrictive in its character that we have before the House this session a Bill, the purpose of which is to change or modify those restrictions.

Mr. ROBB: But it will not carry.

Mr. PEDLOW: That remains to be seen. It will have to be discussed on the floor of the House, and the fact that the member for Chateauguay-Huntingdon says so does not mean that it will not carry.

Mr. ROBB: I would point out to my hon. friend that the Bill was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and did not find one single supporter—it was thrown out.

Mr. PEDLOW: That does not alter my statement that, as I understand it, the Bill came before the House. I still maintain that because the hon. member for Chateauguay-Huntingdon says so, it does not follow that the House will support what he says. Another measure was introduced by the member for Durham providing that honey produced by bees fed on sugar should be regarded as adulterated honey. Evidently he would not allow even the bees to practice deception. I had hoped that this class of legislation was a thing of the past and that the genial Minister of Finance would not follow in the footsteps of the hon. member for Durham in this respect. Now, this resolution reads:

That all goods imported into Canada which are capable of being marked stamped, branded or labelled, without injury, shall be marked, stamped, branded, or labelled so as to indicate the country of origin. . . . in a conspicuous place that shall not be covered or obscured by any subsequent attachments or arrangements.

If we insist on that, the business people of this country will be engaged in advertising the merchandise of other countries by distributing their advertising. The British Government saw the foolishness of that procedure, and instead of insisting that the goods be branded with the name of country of origin, they insisted that they be branded "not British manufacture". In that way they avoided advertising German goods, Swiss goods, French goods and goods of other countries. That would be a much better proposition if we must have some propositions of this kind. In that way, instead of advertising foreign goods throughout the country, we advertise the fact that they are "not Canadian made goods." Thus, no matter where the goods originate, if the public are satisfied to purchase them at the price named, they have nothing to complain of.

In connection with this resolution, there are other provisions that I take exception to. The resolution which the minister has just read as being in force in the United States contains a very necessary qualifying word in one of its sections. The penalty clause reads:

> Provided further that if any person shall violate any of the provisions relating to the marking, stamping, branding, or labelling of any imported goods, or shall deface, destroy, remove, alter—

And so on. The American Act, as I followed the minister in reading it, states:

> Shall fraudulently deface.

The word "fraudulently" is a very important word in that connection. If marking on the goods was defaced accidentally of by the process of lying in stock or otherwise, the merchant might be subject to the penalty; but if the word "fraudulently" were inserted in the second line of this paragraph of the resolution before the word "deface", the meaning of the offence would be qualified, and the Government, if they took action against a merchant, would have to prove fraud. Thus it would be more difficult to secure a conviction.

The resolution states that these goods must be branded in a conspicuous place. Before six o'clock, I called attention to some items of merchandise that certainly would be destroyed and made of less value than their real worth if they were 9 p.m. branded in a conspicuous place. I called attention to the item of hosiery. The minister thought that I was having some fun at his expense in doing so, but I was really sincere. The resolution states that these articles must be branded in a conspicuous place that shall not be covered or obscured by any subsequent attachments or arrangements. A lady buys a pair of stockings. She is not supposed, according to this resolution, to cover them up, at all events, where the brand is to be. Her skirts will have to be shorter than they are to-day. I insist that this is going a little too far in a matter of this kind. I should like to know from the minister, who suggested this provision. I know it is in the American Act, but I would advise him not to have any "truck or trade with the Yankees" in matters of this kind. It is dangerous to follow such a provision.

Even though the word "fraudulent" be inserted as suggested, and even though the penalty is less than it is in the provisions of the United States' Act, this is still a very severe penalty. In this country there are, connected with the Customs and Inland Revenue Department, a large number of officials who, I consider, are in some instances not a very desirable class of individuals. These men are detectives sent out by the Government, and they are paid on a basis that makes their service really immoral. They are paid a percentage of the fines obtained, and that makes these officials stoop to unworthy methods to obtain convictions in cases where they wish to make some money. If the minister still insists that this resolution pass, and that it is absolutely necessary in the interest of the public that it should pass, he should modify this penalty clause. A nominal fine would be quite sufficient.

There is a provision whereby goods received at the customs after September 1, when this clause comes into operation, if they are not branded according to the prescribed form of the Customs Department, the importer will in the first place be subject to a penalty of 10 per cent additional customs duty, and the goods will be retained until such time as they have been branded. What provision does the minister intend to make for branding these goods? Who will have authority to say just where these several items should be branded, because that is a very important matter? I question whether there is in the customs service to-day a man capable of saying where the conspicuous point would be for branding an article so that the brand would not destroy the selling qualities of the merchandise.

I feel seriously in regard to this proposition, and I would suggest to the minister to delay further consideration of this matter until he has consulted the business interests of this country in regard to it, if he has not done so already. The mere fact that the United States Government have had an Act of this kind in force since 1913 should not influence us to the extent that we should ignore the opinion of our own people. If the minister would follow my advice, he would be saved in years to come a great deal of trouble in such as he came through in the past year in connection with the luxury tax and the provisions of the Single Tax Act. The provisions which I have referred to already, are those governing the definition of "manufacture." That caused a great deal of trouble; it was under discussion from the time the Bill was introduced last May until yesterday. The decision of the courts was handed down only yesterday, so that all the trade affected by that enactment of last year was in a state of turmoil and unrest during the entire year. I would, therefore, suggest that the minister allow this resolution to stand over for further consideration.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Perhaps my hon. friend has not quite grasped the real underlying purpose of this resolution. It is certainly not intended to bother purchasers of goods one way or another, and it will not and cannot. It is intended to put the Canadian people in the position of knowing what goods they are buying, and it is something which is asked for by a large section of the people. Rightly or wrongly, we have in Canada—and I think it is a very good thing that we have it—a large percentage of our people who are genuinely interested in trying to advance British trade. They want to know when they are buying a British made article. I do not know of anything which will help British trade more than the present proposal, and without cost to the Canadian public—and not only without cost to the Canadian public, but to their advantage, for they will know what they are getting. I would point out to my hon. friend that this provision applies only to goods which can be marked without injury. There is no idea in anyone's mind of putting stencil marks on expensive lace, for example, or anything of that kind. That has never been attempted anywhere. Nothing will be marked except what can be marked without injury.

Mr. PEDLOW: Who will decide what class of merchandise can be marked without injury?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The whole of that will be definitely decided in printed regulations to be drawn up, and in drawing up those regulations I hope that we shall be able to get the benefit of my hon. friend's business experience, because I am sure he would be able to help us. The provision as to not covering the marks is one that applies only to the person who is handling the goods. It is not for the purpose of the customs that these marks have to be put on, for the customs can easily satisfy themselves where the goods are coming from. Take, for example, the simple illustration which I have already given. It has been often alleged that German knives are being sold as English knives. Now the whole idea in having the knives marked "Made in England" in the one case, and "Made in Germany" in the other, is to ensure that the Canadian purchaser of that cutlery will know what kind of cutlery he is getting. If it is marked "Sheffield"—and Sheffield cutlery has a great reputation—he will know that he is getting Sheffield cutlery. I am told that some German goods today have "Sheffield" marked on them. What we are endeavouring to ensure is that the Canadian purchaser will know what he is buying, and that is all, so far as any question of covering up the mark is concerned. You have a knife brought in, we will suppose. It is marked all right, but suppose that a dealer in knives in Canada says: "The market for the English knife is much better than for the continental knife. A little bit of acid will take those words out, and I can easily put in the words "Made in England". Now that would be a serious offence, and it is that sort of thing that we are trying to stop. This has nothing whatever to do with what happens to the article after it has been purchased by the final consumer.

Mr. FIELDING: So far as the object of the hon. gentleman is to prevent fraud and deception, we all must sympathize with him, but it seems to me that he needs to go a little further. He has said that there are a great many people in Canada who want to buy British goods. That is very commendable, but there are also a great many people in Canada, and I am willing to be counted as one of them, who want to buy Canadian made goods. Now if it is important that a man should know whether he is buying British made goods, it is equally important that he should know whether he is buying Canadian made goods, and it seems to me that to carry out the intention of my hon. friend he should require that Canadian goods should be marked "Made in Canada". I do not think there is any escape from that. If the marking system is useful at all, it ought to work both ways, and it seems to me that to have the goods marked "Made in Canada" would be a protection of a legitimate kind to the Canadian manufacturer. My hon. friend from Renfrew (Mr. Pedlow) has said that within his knowledge people have sold Canadian goods and represented them to be British. That is equally fraudulent. There is a great "Made in Canada" movement in this country to-day in favour of buying Canadian made goods. If we want to encourage that movement, we want to make sure that we are getting Canadian made goods, and it seems to me there is just as much reason for insisting on the goods being marked "Made in Canada" as there is for imported goods to be marked, as is provided here. The object is the same in both cases—to see that we get what is represented. Why should we be open to deception in the case of Canadian made goods, and protected against the invasion only of British goods is not very plain.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This could hardly be called a protection against the invasion of British goods. This is something that the British Importers' Association have asked for. It is something which they say is in the interests of their fair and legitimate trade in this market. It is something which they have been very anxious to have provided. So far as Canadian made goods are concerned, if this law carries, and there is no mark on the article, it is Canadian.

Mr. FIELDING: That does not follow.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Why not? If this law is passed, and if it is observed, every article imported into the country will have the name of the country of origin upon it, and the only articles left will be Canadian made articles. I would think it would be a good thing for Canadian manufacturers to mark on their products that they were made in Canada. I know that in connection with butter and cheese our sales at one time were greatly increased just by reason of the fact that we were calling these products Canadian. Canadian bacon also had a wonderful standing in England; it was a great thing to be able to label your stuff "Canadian bacon". I think the hon. gentleman will agree, however, that in a Customs Act we cannot deal with the question of marking our local goods.

Mr. ROBB: I think it would cover the suggestion of my hon. friend from Renfrew and my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's if the section were amended to read "all goods imported into or manufactured in Canada".

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not think the hon. gentleman quite caught the point I made. How is it possible in a Customs Act properly to deal with the marking of Canadian goods?

Mr. PEDLOW: The minister does not seem to have caught the point I made. It is this: The British Government have already enacted legislation providing, not that the goods shall be marked with the country of origin, but the very reverse, and I know that the object of that legislation was to prevent the advertising in Great Britain of goods, wares and merchandise that are the manufacture of foreign countries. Their legislation provides that importations from foreign countries, instead of being marked with the name of the country of origin, shall be marked "Not British manufacture," and that British products shall be marked "British manufacture." I submit that that would be an improvement on the present proposal. I appreciate the minister's effort to encourage the demand for Canadian made goods. He has been preaching that all over the country, in Montreal, Toronto, and other places, but I would call the attention of the House to the fact that at least some of the departments of the Government are not supporting the minister in that regard. For instance, I take up a pen and find that it is marked "Made in the United States"; I take up a packages of pins upstairs, and instead of finding the inscription British or Canadian, I see that the package also bears the label "Made in the United States"; and the same with this pencil I have in my hand; it also was made in the United States. These articles are all furnished by the Government to members of the House. I think that business, like charity, should begin at home, and when the Government is preaching certain principles, they should see to it that their employees are first to live up to those principles. I notice the Purchasing Commission is buying, for this magnificent new building, rugs made in the United States, England and elsewhere, notwithstanding that better rugs can be purchased here for less money which are made right here in Canada. If the minister really desires to have the people buy "Made in Canada" goods, he must—to protect the interests of the Canadian manufacturer, as well as, according to the Government, the tax payer—set the example himself and insist that the various departments of the Government, as well as the Purchasing Commission, shall carry out those ideas which they instil into the public. The minister should allow this resolution to stand. I am sure that if he waits until he hears from the mercantile interests of the country he will amend it considerably. I am satisfied that as it stands it will serve no good purpose, and will only entail an enormous amount of trouble. The minister has had enough trouble during the past year with regard to another measure against which I protested at the time it was enacted.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): I think that, on general principles, an arrangement of this kind is bad. Of course, I despair of the Committee being in agreement with me on that subject. I object to interference with trade, and an interference of this small and petty order is particularly objectionable. I do not urge that point, however; but I am very much impressed with what has fallen from my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding). The minister tells us that his action has been supported by the British exporters. Well, while I am not a protectionist, I believe in fair play to the Canadian manufacturer, and I am not at all sure that it is quite fair to our own manufacturers to give a voluntary advertisement of this kind to goods produced even in Britain. Why should we give a special advertisement to British goods by Act of this House? It surely amounts to that. There is a great deal in what my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's indicated on that point. The minister replies that it would be difficult to carry out the suggestion of the hon. member. Indeed, it would be impossible by the Customs Act; it would require other legislation to compel the labelling of Canadian goods "Made in Canada". But that does not remove the objection to any special advertisement being given to British made goods as against Canadian products. If there were a real desire to promote commerce with Britain, of course, my hon. friend knows that I could give him a recipe along that line much more valuable to the Canadian and the British consumers than the mere marking of goods coming from Britain. If he would lower the bars a little, that would be a fair field and no favour; but a special advertisement for British goods seems to me to be a discrimination against the Canadian manufacturers that cannot very well be defended on grounds of logic.

[Mr. Pedlow.]

Mr. NESBITT: The Canadian manufacturers are not a bit alarmed at the British marking their goods British made. The Canadian manufacturers are perfectly willing to compete with British made goods, and there are few people in Canada who do not mark their goods "Made in Canada", or who do not indicate the town in which they are made.

Mr. CLARK: The hon. member takes a large order when he speaks for all the manufacturers of Canada.

Mr. NESBITT: I do not know of any manufacturers who are afraid of competition with British, or German, or any other goods.

Mr. PEDLOW: Will the minister not amend the resolution in conformity with the American resolution, by adding the word "fraudulently" before the word "deface" in the third last line? I move that the further consideration of this resolution be postponed.

Motion negatived.

Resolution agreed to.

5. Resolved, that any enactment founded on the preceding resolution shall be deemed to have come into force on the first day of September, nineteen hundred and twenty-one.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The object of this fifth resolution is to prevent the previous resolution immediately coming into force, so as to give every one an ample opportunity of conforming to the law without any trouble. I may point out that there is not likely to be much trouble, because most countries that are exporting into Canada also, to some extent, export into the United States. This gives to September 1 next to comply with the previous resolution.

Mr. PEDLOW: I submit that the time given is not sufficient. Contracts are placed with European and British manufacturers sometimes seventeen and eighteen months ahead, and it is utterly impossible for them to be varied now. I suggest that the time be extended to at least six months from the present date. Great hardship to importers of merchandise into this country would be created if the resolution as it now stands became law.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: As a matter of fact, one month would be ample. The American market is very largely similar to our own so far as the character of consumption is concerned. In order that there may not be the slightest possible difficulty, however, I have no objection to making it October 1 instead of September 1. I therefore move to amend the resolution accordingly.

Resolution as amended agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: Before I report this resolution, I may state that the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Fontaine) has requested me to obtain the unanimous consent of the committee for him to ask a question concerning resolution No. 2 which was passed during his absence this afternoon. There was a question of returning to and reopening the clause for discussion, and this, of course, would also require unanimous consent. The ends desired, I think, would be better met by unanimous consent being given that the hon. gentleman have leave to ask the question.

Mr. FONTAINE (Hull): (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, if I make that request, it is because I have received to-day many protests from druggists claiming that they have to pay high duties on alcohol, while manufacturers of pharmaceutical products are not obliged to pay that tax. Will the hon. Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) be kind enough to let me know if it is a fact that the manufacturers of the pharmaceutical products have not to pay $10 per gallon for alcohol, while druggists, who prepare themselves many prescriptions of which alcohol is a part, are forced to pay that tax?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The tax that the hon. gentleman has referred to—to the extent that I have been able to follow him—is the excise duty that druggists have to pay and which is covered by the resolutions we have not yet considered. We have been considering, the hon. gentleman will see, the customs regulations. We come down in the next resolution to the excise duties and bonding privileges, at which time the consideration the hon. gentleman desires to have given to that question can be given.

Mr. FONTAINE: (Translation.) I am willing to wait, as has been asked by the hon. minister. I understand, however, that druggists are dissatisfied, for they have to pay a very high tax on alcohol which they need for their pharmaceutical products, while the manufacturers can obtain alcohol free of that duty. If that be the case the druggist, who prepares all the elixirs which are included in the medicines, would be greatly discriminated against. Then Mr. Chairman, druggists sell their products to consumers. Such people call at the drug stores for the prescriptions which they need, and if the druggist is obliged to pay such a high duty he must necessarily sell his product at a high price. It would certainly be a grave injustice and it would show that what has been said yesterday during the debate on the Budget by the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) that the Government seems to be on good terms with the big interests is absolutely true, as about thirty manufacturers at the most would be protected and could secure the alcohol for their medicines in paying a comfortably low tax, while three or four thousand druggists could not get the same favour from the Government, being obliged to pay that duty, which would force them to charge a higher price for their medicines.

That seems to me to be a very serious situation, as you know, Mr. Chairman, that the buying of remedies is a daily need. It would be a crying injustice, if I am inclined to believe that the hon. Minister of Finance will do justice to whom it concerns. Once more I say that I am willing to wait for the proper moment in order to better discuss that resolution, but I want to state right now to the hon. minister that I will not allow without raising my voice that privileges be granted to thirty trusts or so while three or four thousand druggists will have to suffer from that situation and be obliged to sell their products to the consumers at a much higher price than they should.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend is not right in thinking there is any distinction made in the resolutions we have been considering, and which are customs resolutions, between the retail druggist that he speaks of and the patent medicine manufacturer; the tax of $10 is the same on all imported alcohol. The supplies of alcohol for the patent medicine manufacturer are dealt with under the resolution which immediately succeeds the present resolution. It is not touched at all by what the House has done.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall I report the resolutions?

Motion agreed to.

Resolutions read a second time and concurred in. Thereupon Sir Henry Drayton moved to introduce Bill No. 199 to amend the Customs Tariff, 1907.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the first time.

WAYS AND MEANS—INLAND REVENUE

On the motion of Sir Henry Drayton the House went into Committee of Ways and Means on the following proposed resolutions, Mr. Boivin in the Chair:

1. Resolved, That it is expedient to amend The Inland Revenue Act as amended by Chapter 6 of the Acts of 1914 (second session) by repealing section 154 thereof and substituting therefor the following:—

154. There shall be imposed, levied and collected on all spirits distilled, the following duties of excise, which shall be paid to the Colector, as herein provided, that is to say:—

(a) when the material used in the manufacture thereof consists of not less than ninety per centum, by weight of raw or unmalted grain, or when manufactured from sugar, syrup, molasses or other saccharine matter not otherwise provided for, on every gallon of the strength of proof by Sykes' hydrometer, nine dollars, and so in proportion for any greater or less strength than the strength of proof, and for any less quantity than a gallon;

(b) when manufactued exclusively from malted barley, taken to the distillery in bond and on which no duty of customs or excise has been paid, or when manufactured from raw or unma ted grain, used in combination, in such proportions as the department prescribes, with malted barley taken to the distillery in bond and on which no duty of customs or of excise has been paid, on every gallon of the strength of proof by Sykes' hydrometer, nine dollars and two cents, and so in proportion for any greater or less strength, and for any less quantity than a gallon;

(c) when manufactured exclusively from molasses, syrup, sugar or other saccharine matter, taken to the distillery in bond and on which no duty of customs has been paid on every gallon of the strength of proof by Sykes' hydrometer, nine dollars and three cents, and so in proportion for any greater or less strength, and for any less quantity than a gallon.

Provided however that any person licensed by the Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue to manufacture patent and proprietary medicines and pharmaceutical preparations by the use of spirits in bond subject to The Inland Revenue Act and regulations thereunder, the following duties of excise shall be imposed, levied and colected, that is to say:—

(a) when the material used in the manufacture thereof consists of not less than ninety per centum, by weight, of raw or unmalted grain, or when manufactured from sugar, syrup, molasses or other saccharine matter not otherwise provided for, on every gallon of the strength of proof by Sykes' hydrometer, two dollars and forty cents, and so in proportion for any greater or less strength than the strength of proof, and for any less quantity than a gallon;

(b) when manufactured exclusively from malted barley, taken to the distillery in bond and on which no duty of customs or excise has been paid, or when manufactured from raw or unmalted grain, used in combination, in such proportions as the department prescribes, with malted barley taken to the distillery in bond and on which no duty of customs or of excise has been paid, on every gallon of the strength of proof by Sykes' hydrometer, two dollars and forty-two cents, and so in proportion for any greater or less strength, and for any less quantity than a gallon;

(c) when manufactured exclusively from molasses, syrup, sugar or other saccharine matter, taken to the distillery in bond and on which no duty of customs has been paid, on every gallon of the strength of proof by Sykes' hydrometer, two dollars and forty-three cents, and so in proportion for any greater or less strength, and for any less quantity than a gallon.

Provided further that when such spirits testing not less than fifty per centum over proof are sold delivered in such limited quantities as may be prescribed by the Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue to any university or scientific and research laboratory for scientific purposes only, or to any bona fide hospital, certified to be such by the Department of Public Health, for medicinal purposes only, a drawback of ninety-nine per centum of the duty paid may be granted, under regulations to be made by the Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue.

2. Resolved, That any enactment founded on the preceding resolution shall be deemed to have come into force on the tenth day of May, nineteen hundred and twenty-one.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Mr. Chairman, there is a lot that is very technical in the wording of the resolution, but it follows the regular form of keeping the duties properly in line. Shortly, what is done is this. The excise duty is raised to $9 a gallon—

Mr. FIELDING: From what?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: From $4.40. It may be compared to the raise in customs from $5 to $10. Two exceptions are made, and I can assure the committee that they were not made because we would not have liked to get the revenue. They were made because it was felt that a good deal of hardship had resulted from the higher tax level, even having regard to the rate of $4.40 of last year. Hospitals, of necessity, use for medicinal purposes a great deal of alcohol, and it was not a particular complaint here or there, but generally hospitals represented that they were having great difficulty in making both ends meet, and that this new tax aggravated the difficulty. We propose in the present resolution to help the hospitals materially. Under the old law they paid, on a basis of $2.40 a gallon, and last year they paid as I have stated, on the basis of $4.40 a gallon. Our proposition now is in view of their difficulties in properly carrying on, and recognizing the great value of their work, to give them a refund of 99 per cent of all duty paid on spirits which are used by them for medicinal purposes.

Another matter in connection with which we have had a lot of complaint is as to the added cost of all pharmaceutical compounds and preparations in the manufacture of which alcohol plays a part. Not only did it apply to patent medicines as we generally understand them, but also to the regular standard pharmaceutical preparations of usual acceptance and use by physicians. We propose to provide that, under the regular policing which has to take place whenever special privileges are granted in connection with liquor taxation, the tax will be reduced to the old standard of $2.40 a gallon. The result will be that, so far as our taxation is concerned, these preparations and patent medicines return to the former level of cost.

There is also another matter which has arisen with insistence since the resolution was printed. It appears that essences and extracts are not entirely manufactured by pharmaceutical chemists, but by manufacturers who are not at the same time manufacturing any pharmaceutical goods. So in order to put them on a parity with manufacturing chemists, I beg to move that the resolution be amended by adding to the second paragraph of subsection (c) after the word "medicines" on the third line the words "extracts, essences."

Mr. FIELDING: Representations have been made that the operation of these changes is very much to the disadvantage of the druggists, as the resolution which the hon. gentleman has proposed would apply to the larger operators, but would not affect transactions of the ordinary druggist who uses alcohol in the making of many preparations. Do I understand from my hon. friend that the druggists get the full advantage of this: that they are not penalized as they think they are?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is a matter for the druggist whether or not he accepts the provision enabling him to carry on the manufacture. Of course, the taking advantage of the provision involves expense. An Ottawa druggist came to me and asked me about it the other day and I pointed out to him that he could get the full advantages given to larger manufacturing chemists if he was willing to go to the expense. He said that it would not pay him; that he could buy practically all these things ready prepared by manufacturing chemists, and do so more cheaply than he could make them himself. But if any chemist desires to bond his premises for the purpose, it is open to him to do so. I am afraid though, that it would not pay him.

Mr. FIELDING: Is there any change in the present regulations.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think so, for this reason: under the former regulations all manufacturing chemists had to pay the full rate. Very strong representations were made last year by manufacturing chemists that they could not possibly carry on business at these high rates; that the price of proprietary and patent medicines, which they described as the poor man's medicine, would have to be tremendously increased. Under those conditions all were in the same position; the man who wanted to use only a dram of alcohol was in exactly the same position as the man who had to use gallons in large manufacturing operations. Obviously, if you are going to make a specially low rate for these patent and proprietary medicines, hospital requirements, and so on, they must come in under the bonding privilege and a man must be kept on the premises for police purposes.

Mr. FIELDING: I am not complaining of anything that my hon. friend is doing for the large manufacturing concerns; still less am I complaining of the concession he is making to hospitals. But if the druggists, who are a very numerous body in the country, doing a work which is certainly of value, are to be made subject to difficulties which they have not had to experience hitherto, then I am afraid my hon. friend is not considering the greatest good of the greatest number. I have in my hand a telegram—I do not need to read it—in which the representation is made that while my hon. friend's proposed changes may favour a few large manufacturers, it will penalize all the druggists of the country. That is the representation which is made; I do not state it of my own known knowledge. But if it be a fact, then the explanation that this provision will help a few large manufacturers will not be a satisfactory explanation to the druggists.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I assure my hon. friend that there is not the slightest intention of helping the manufacturer particularly. Canada is a country of large distances and sparse population, and rightly or wrongly the Canadian people do rely on proprietary medicines. Indeed, in many districts where there are no chemists the people have to rely on these proprietary medicines and the regular pharmaceutical preparations. I would say at once that the provision does make a difference to the chemist who desires to use alcohol in the preparation of his prescriptions; it is the difference between $2.40 and $9. It is hard to get any approximate idea of how much alcohol the chemists use, but the gentleman to whom I was talking said that he was using about three gallons a year. The truth is that the great majority of chemists buy from the large manufacturing concerns, because in that way they can get it cheaper and better.

Mr. FIELDING: My hon. friend is giving a very good advertisement for the patent medicines. I do not object to that. Some of them are said to be of a trashy character, but a great many of them are very excellent especially for use in the country districts where there is no chemist or doctor near at hand, and in that respect I appreciate their value. But if in the changes proposed my hon. friend is putting new burdens and new taxes upon the druggists of the country, the fact that he is making it a little easier for the large manufacturing concerns is not going to be a satisfactory explanation.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There is no change in regulation, though there is a change in the rate of tax. Last year I was scolded for taxing the poor man's medicine which was made by these very manufacturers; this year I am trying to get away from that and to make the poor man's medicine cheap. Unfortunately there are some chemists who still make up their own alcoholic preparations, and it will cost them just so much more under thns provision. If there is any suggestion my hon. friend has to offer by which the matter could be worked out to better advantage I would be most happy to consider it.

Mr. FONTAINE: (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I understand very well the reasons set forth by the hon. Minister of Finance. While I recognize the advisability of protecting the large manufacturing concerns, I do not see why it should be necessary to make such a big difference in rates as that between $2.40 and $9. I know that patent medicines are of advantage and are greatly appreciated in the country districts where there are neither chemists nor doctors; but it is not fair to compel three or four thousand druggists to pay a tax of $9, when their competitors, the manufacturers of patent medicines, have to pay only $2.40. It may be a somewhat intricate question, but it seems to me that the hon. minister with his ability in providing for taxes and his experience, should find a means not to so discriminate against druggists. The Government is protecting about thirty large manufacturing concerns at the expense of four thousand chemists. But these chemists are not the only people to take into consideration. It is a well known fact that the chemist is not the party who will pay the increased tax on alcohol. He will simply increase the price of his products and it is the consumer, the sick person who goes and gives him the doctor's prescription who will have to pay for the difference. Instead of paying $1 for a bottle of medicine, he will be charged $1.50 or even $1.75. It is always the same old way of protecting a few privileged ones and not those who ought to be protected. Baptiste is always there to pay. The opinion expressed by the hon. leader of the Opposition that the consumers should be protected applies very well to this case. They are always protecting the manufacturer, always favouring a special class, and always calling upon the mass of the people to give out their money.

It does not befit me to tell the minister how he should arrange his taxation, but I venture to call his attention upon an anomaly which entails a very serious injustice. The chemist is called upon to pay the tax, but the ultimate sufferer will be the consumer. It is not reasonable and since taxes have to be imposed, they should be distributed as fairly as possible among all the people. Let there be no privilege and if the rate must be fixed at $9, let everybody pay that rate. If it is possible to make an exception for some, let us make it for all, in order that everybody be treated alike.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think the hon. gentleman says that there are about 4,000 retail druggists and 30 wholesale druggists in Canada. Would he, being a doctor, know how much alcohol the ordinary druggist uses in the preparation of medicines?

Mr. FONTAINE: (Translation.) I could not give the figures, but to-day, a chemist told me that he bought large quantities of alcohol, having to prepare all his drugs and all his elixirs and that he will have to stand the adverse competition of large manufacturers who are not called upon to pay this tax.

Once again, Mr. Chairman, I am unable to give you any figures, being no chemist, but a doctor; however, I understand that to-day chemists are using a great deal of alcohol because they cannot afford to buy all their products in a manufactured state on account of competition. They manufacture their own products and this is why they use such a large quantity of alcohol.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I wonder if the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Chisholm) could tell the committee how much alcohol is used generally by the ordinary druggist in filling prescriptions of medical preparations?

Mr. CHISHOLM: The minister has given me quite an order. As regards my practice, I buy my drugs from the manufacturers, but we use a large quantity of alcohol for other purposes besides medical preparations. Large quantities are used for experimental purposes. The minister has given a very commendable concession to hospitals. I have not a hospital in my county; we need alcohol every day in very substantial quantities for purposes that he quite understands, and we have to pay the high figure for this alcohol, while those who are better off can go to the hospitals and enjoy cheap alcohol. The manufacturers also get this concession. Personally, I do not manufacture drugs, and my knowledge of what goes on in the drug stores is limited because I buy my drugs from the manufacturers. I am sorry if I have not given the minister very much information.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am very much obliged to the hon. gentleman. Could he help us further? He says that this is a first-rate thing to do for the hospitals. Could he suggest any way in which the doctors could be similarly placed to the druggists?

Mr. CHISHOLM: I suppose by extending the same privilege to the doctors and druggists as the minister is giving to the manufacturers.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The manufacturers are put under regulations and bond.

Mr. CHISHOLM: What are the conditions under which the manufacturers get this privilege?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: They are under bonds, and regulations, and the department also appoints men for the purpose of overseeing every single thing the manufacturers do, seeing that they do not use the alcohol for any other purpose. They have to pay all expenses of that supervision.

Mr. CHISHOLM: Is it the privilege of the manufacturer to sell the alcohol to the druggist for the same price when it is to be used for this purpose?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This special price is merely for the purpose of manufacturing these medicinal preparations which are supposed to be proper and essential to health.

Mr. STEWART (Lanark): It might be inferred from the discussion that, under the provisions that are here made, there was a conflict, between the manufacturer and the retail druggist. As I understand the matter, no provision is made in the resolution in favour of the manufacturer. There is a provision permitting the sale of alcohol at $2.40, for a purpose, without reference to who uses it for that purpose. The manufacturer has no concession that is not available to any one, a doctor or a druggist, who takes advantage of it in the way that is provided in this resolution.

The difficulty, as I understand it, is to protect the Government in the use of $2.40 alcohol as against $9 alcohol for beverage purposes. So far as I understand the position of the manufacturing pharmacists, they would be delighted to secure alcohol at $2.40, but as I understand the department's position, it is that all who use the alcohol for the purposes of the exemption set out in the Act must do so under Government control. If there is to be an exemption provided, and alcohol is permitted at $2.40 a gallon, the department feel that they must follow it from the point where it issues, in the Inland Revenue Department, to the point where it is used for the purpose for which the lower duty was granted.

The point I want to emphasize is that there is no provision in the Act in favour of the manufacturer as against the retailer. In the last analysis the difficulty is that the retailer may be operated against for the reason that he may not be able to use sufficient alcohol to pay for the supervision which the regulations that will be drafted under the Act will in all probability require. There is really no difference in principle between the conditions that will exist under this provision in the law and the conditions that have existed heretofore. Manufacturing pharmacists have been obliged to manufacture under Government control for years, for the reason that in manufacturing in bond, non-potable alcohol was permissible, and has been for years—not permissible for the manufacturer, but permissible for any one who manufactured it for the purpose, and who was in a proper position, both with regard to the equipment of his premises, and with regard to manufacturing a sufficiently large quantity to justify the Government supervision. The regulations of the department have always provided that the personal supervision of the Inland Revenue officer had to be paid for by the party who was using that service. The point I want to emphasize is that so far as the manufacturer and retailer are concerned there is absolutely no conflict of interest, but there may be an operation that will place the retailer in a less favourable position than the manufacturer. That is only as a result of the fact that for reasons which he may or may not be able to control—the volume of his business, for instance—the provisions here may operate against him.

Mr. FIELDING: My hon. friend has stated the matter very fairly, yet the law will work out in this way, that the large manufacturer will get his alcohol at $2.40, while the druggist will have to pay $9. Now that is a striking fact. I grant you that it arises out of the condition of bonding regulations. We can all understand that a large manufacturer may be able to afford the expense of a bonding system which the smaller man cannot afford. May I ask the Minister of Finance at what rate the druggists are getting their alcohol to-day?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: $4.40.

Mr. FIELDING: Why increase that to $9?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Their rate was a general rate before. It has to be a general rate unless the Government keeps its hand on that alcohol from start to finish, until the Government sees that it is put to the purpose for which the lower rate of duty is thought to be advisable.

Mr. FIELDING: I quite appreciate the difficulty which my hon. friend has. On the other hand, it is worth remembering that the druggists as a class—there are exceptions; there are even bad politicians—are a fine type of men. They are all licensed by their respective provinces. The medical men of this country also, I say it to their honour, are almost invariably men of high class. Only rarely will you find a medical man who is prepared to abuse the law and issue a lot of prescriptions for alcohol for beverage purposes, but these, after all, are the exception. The great mass of the medical men and druggists are law-abiding citizens who will try to meet the regulations, and I think the minister should devise some means of making the tax lower. I am not able to suggest at the moment just what it should be, but we have the striking fact that the large manufacturer is getting his alcohol for $2.40 while the druggists and doctors who undertake to put up medicines are paying $9. That is a condition which the public generally will think ought not to exist. I do not venture to suggest any change, but I think the minister ought to devise some means of making the tax lower. I think he could trust to a very large degree both the druggists and medical men. I grant you that once in a whole druggists may abuse the law. I have seen cases where medical men have issued a volume of prescriptions under the Ontario and Nova Scotia temperance laws, which made it clear that they were abusing the law, but these, after all, are the exceptions, and we must not make regulations to deal with exceptions. We should try to adapt them to the general conditions of the country. I do not believe that the average medical man and the average druggist needs as much watching and such an expensive bonding system as my hon. friend is going to impose upon them.

Mr. STEWART (Lanark): I am in entire accord with the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) in everything he has said. I want to go a little further, and say this. There is no more reason why the alcohol that goes into the manufacture of a medical preparation—I do not care whether it is manufactured by a druggist, a large manufacturer, or a retailer, or whether it is compounded by a doctor—should be taxed any more than any other ingredient in that preparation should be taxed. If it is properly medicated, it should not be taxed at all. The fact is that alcohol entering into the manufacture of medicinal preparations has been taxed all during the years simply as a result of the fact that alcohol was also available for beverage purposes.

Mr. FIELDING: We have cured that now by legislation.

Mr. STEWART (Lanark): In theory, perhaps. What I rose to say was that the whole thing to-day is a matter of control, and there is no reason why the control could not be put upon a basis that would make it available for people who did not require as large a quantity of alcohol as some other people. That is all a matter of control. If the Government can be protected in the use of alcohol, there is absolutely no argument that I know of that can be advanced against the retailer, the druggist, or the physician who compounds his own medicines, getting alcohol at $2.40, just the same as the man who manufactures it in quantities sufficient to enable him to go to all this expense that is now necessary for the purpose of carrying out the regulations of the Government. It is entirely possible, and I would suggest to the minister that the regulations might be worked out in a way that would be advantageous to all who compound medicines legitimately, and at the sametime protect the Government, because, after all, that is the only question at issue.

Mr. MANION: In order to clear up the point, I may say a word as one who has practised medicine for quite a few years. The vast majority of druggists or pharmacists buy their medicines ready made up. I am speaking more especially of druggists and pharmacists in Ontario and the West. They buy their tinctures and elixirs, as mentioned by my hon. friend from Hull (Mr. Fontaine), ready made up from the large manufacturing chemists, such as Wampoles, Parke Davis, and various other firms. So that in a great number of cases, particularly in Ontario and the West, the druggist does not compound his own elixirs or tinctures, because the manufacturing chemist can make these preparations much better and more cheaply, and in a more palatable form than can the druggist. Regarding the doctors who prepare their own prescriptions and dispense them, as stated by my hon. friend from Inverness (Mr. Chisholm), there are a few who will be touched to a certain extent in this respect, but I think that even my hon. friend from Inverness will admit that for most of his medicines he imports his tinctures and elixirs ready prepared. I think I am correct in that. The hon. member signifies his concurrence in the statement. Most doctors in the cities do not dispense their own medicines, but my hon. friend and others who do so, import their own elixirs and tinctures ready prepared, so that these preparations which go to make up the medicines they would dispense would not be touched. They would not have to pay on them; they escape the tax by buying from the manufacturing chemists. As my hon. friend from Inverness states, there is an occasional case where a doctor might wish to give whisky as a stimulant, or might prescribe alcohol for rubbing purposes. That is a case where no doubt those who dispense their own medicines would be interfered with. And the same thing applies to druggists selling alcohol for rubbing purposes. I should think it would be a very difficult thing to make a law which would protect the Government and the people against any infractions of it, not so much because the doctors or the druggists would seek to break the law, but because, as occurs in the prohibition parts of the province from which I come, men are continually coming and asking for a bottle of alcohol. Foreigners particularly come and ask for a quart of alcohol, and when they are asked for what purpose the liquor is wanted, they say it is for rheumatism, for rubbing the joints, and so forth. As a matter of fact, before prohibition came into force, I cannot recall any foreigners coming and asking for a prescription for a quart of alcohol for rubbing purposes.

Mr. BUREAU: It is wanted for rubbing inside.

Mr. MANION: I give that as an illustration of the way in which the law is infringed, not because doctors purposely give prescriptions to persons who want the liquor merely as a beverage, but because men succeed in getting these prescriptions for application and use the alcohol for drinking purposes. The vast majority of doctors and druggists in Ontario and the West buy their tinctures and elixirs ready prepared from the manufacturing chemist, and this tax will not apply to them, with one exception suggested by my hon. friend from Inverness, in the case of giving alcohol for rubbing purposes, in connection with which there may be a disability imposed upon certain people.

Mr. BLAKE: The point raised by the member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), has not so far been dealt with, and that is that chemists and druggists should have some better rate than $9. I was speaking to a druggist in the city who makes up his own tincture of iodine, and I learned that he uses one gallon per month. He will be precluded from doing that and will have to buy tincture from the pharmaceutical houses. I do not know that that will make much difference. The pharmaceutical manufacturer can get alcohol for $2.40 a gallon, and the druggist has to pay $9, so that he is precluded from doing any manufacturing whatever. I do not see any way by which you can overcome this difficulty. If you legislate so that what the druggist uses for manufacturing purposes will be charged excise at $2.40, and what is required for beverage and rubbing purposes will be charged at $9, it will be impossible to collect the tax. It would simply resolve itself into either giving the druggists the same rate as is charged at present, or a lower rate, or else the flat rate of $9 for all they use. If you say that what is used for manufacturing purposes will be charged at $2.40, some druggists would say that all of the alcohol used was for manufacturing. As the member for Lanark (Mr. Stewart) says, they would put in some tincture of gentian or medication, and say that they used the alcohol for manufacturing purposes. As I say, it resolves itself into the question whether the druggists shall be given a rate of $2.40, or an intermediate rate, or whether the rate shall be left as it is. In the West—I speak particularly in regard to Manitoba—alcohol is not obtainable by the public, except on a doctor's prescription for drinking or application. Practically all the alcohol handled in Manitoba is therefore obtained through the prescriptions of doctors, who can prescribe only 12 ounces. Of course, it all comes through the Government vendor and the revenue could be charged on it through the vendor. In Manitoba, the alcohol used for beverage purposes is all bottled before it leaves the Government vendors, but in regard to the other alcohol handled by the druggists, I think it would be only reasonable to leave the rate at $4.40.

Mr. FIELDING: I am sure the Minister of Finance is as desirous as any of the rest of us to make the taxes reasonable. The druggist is now paying $4.40. What is the matter with the present regulations? If the present rate is sufficient, why increase it?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The druggist pays $4.40 in the open market. If we had never raised the duty from $4.40 to $9 the question would never have come up, except in regard to patent medicines, which it was claimed did not show a profit in the year's business, and the prices of which had to be largely increased. We have the right of making regulations which will enable the law to be properly carried out, and if there is any possible way in which this matter can be satisfactorily adjusted, I shall be happy to consider it. At the moment, I confess that I cannot see that there is anything better than the present proposal.

Mr. FONTAINE: (Translation.) I think that the suggestion made by the hon. member for Queen's and Shelburne would be the best. The rate of $9 per gallon which it is proposed to ask of the druggist is out of all proportion to the rate of $2.40 per gallon which is asked from the manufacturer. It seems to me that there should be an intermediate rate and that the duty of $4.40 which prevailed in the past should be considered as quite sufficient. I realize that the manufacturer has to go to some expense for the putting up of a warehouse and to pay the cost of a government inspector, but even taking such expenditure into account, I think, that there is too great a margin between what he has to pay and the amount of $9 which is required for a druggist. We should adopt a middle term and leave the tax as it is. A druggist is a graduate, an honoured and conscientious man, as well as a physician. We should rely on his good-will and moral sense. Because the manufacturer uses a great deal more of alcohol than the druggist, it is not a reason why the latter should be called upon to pay a heavier tax.

It is not for me to devise the best form of taxation, but the Minister of Finance, who is thoroughly posted on that subject, should be able to settle that difficulty in such a way as to do justice to all parties. This change of rate is certainly a great injustice done to the retailer and as I said a moment ago, it is not the retailer who will pay the tax, but the consumer; it is the public who will be called upon to pay. We pay enough taxes without enacting any for the benefit of a special class. Before this resolution is adopted, I would ask the hon. Minister of Finance to devise some means of doing both parties justice.

Mr. DENIS: I notice that in the case of spirits manufactured in Canada a duty of $9 is imposed on every gallon of the strength of proof by Sykes' hydrometer, and that on spirits imported there is a duty of $10 a gallon according to the strength of proof. Is the gauge used to measure the alcohol which is manufactured in Canada different from that which is used to gauge the imported alcohol?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No the method is the same.

Mr. DENIS: I wish to place myself on record as being opposed, generally speaking, to the increase of duties on alcohol. Formerly the duty on alcohol was $2.40 a gallon. Last year it was raised to $4.40, and this year it has again been raised to $9 in the case of alcohol manufactured in Canada and $10 when it is imported. I have particular reference to the alcohol manufactured in Canada, and it seems to me that the imposition of such a heavy duty is based upon a wrong principle. It means that the people of this country will be penalized by being called upon to pay a stiff duty on using that commodity, if alcohol can be called a commodity. The true economic principle is to apply taxation as fairly as possible to everybody. In this case the Government chooses for taxation a particular class of people who are making use of alcohol, and penalizes them by the imposition of an extraordinary tax which nobody would have ever thought of a year or two ago. I am not speaking in defence of alcohol. I am not saying that it should be consumed, but my point is this: If the use of alcohol is to be allowed in this country then people should not be penalized to such an extent because they use it. On the other hand if alcohol is to be prohibited a different measure should be adopted other than the imposition of an exorbitant duty. We must bear in mind the fact that the use of alcohol is either good or bad. It is not very long ago I read an article in a scientific newspaper under the caption of "Is Alcohol food?" the article was being devoted to a discussion of a question of whether or not alcohol is a food. Some people are very strongly opposed to the use of alcohol but the Government permit its importation and therefore take a neutral stand—if I may so express it—on the question; they leave the matter entirely in the hands of the Provincial Governments. The Federal Government, not being opposed to the use of alcohol, should not impose on it such enormous duties; it is an absolutely false principle in economics. We all know that great quantities of alcohol have been imported within the past few weeks and distributed throughout Canada, including the province of Ontario. It was only a few days ago I read that 5,000 cases of alcohol were going into the city of Toronto every day. I would not go the length of offending the minister by suggesting that possibly there may have been a "leak", for I do not think the news was known a minute before it was announced in this House. The reason alcohol was imported in such great quantities by people in Ontario was no doubt by reason of the referendum last April, but in the meantime rich people in that province, to say nothing of people in other provinces, have had the opportunity of filling their cellars with cheap alcohol on which they paid a duty of only $5 per gallon. What I have said about the importation of alcohol is only incidental. The principle is wrong in so far as it imposes on a particular commodity or a particular beverage an enormous duty absolutely out of proportion to duties imposed on other beverages and commodities, and thereby strikes a particular class of the community very severely by forcing them to pay more money to the treasury than other classes who do not make use of those beverages or commodities.

Amendment agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Steele): Shall I report the resolution?

Mr. DENIS: Mr. Chairman, before the resolution is reported, I have been looking with a great deal of anxiety to the clock which I am now facing on the Government side, and which is marking at the present time 7.15.

Mr. BUREAU: In the morning.

Mr. DENIS: Perhaps the difference in time may be attributed to the fact that the clock is on the Government side of the House and the Government is behind the times. But I am not forgetting the fact that we left the House at six o'clock this morning, and therefore I respectfully suggest to the minister that after this resolution is passed we should adjourn.

Resolution reported, and concurred in.

Sir Henry Drayton moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 200 to amend the Inland Revenue Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

WAYS AND MEANS—SPECIAL WAR REVENUE ACT

The House again in Committee of Ways and Means—to consider the following proposed resolution.—Sir Henry Drayton.—Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend The Special War Revenue Act, 1915, as amended by Chapter 71 of the Acts of 1920, by striking thereout sections 19BB and 19BBB, the several enumerations of goods respectively, and the several rates of excise taxes specified therein, and to provide that the following sections be substituted therefor:—

19BB. (1) The following excise taxes shall be imposed, levied and collected on the articles hereinafter specified, namely:—

(a) A tax on playing cards for every fifty-four cards or fraction of fifty-four in each package,—when selling at twenty-four dollars or less per gross packages, eight cents per pack; when selling in excess of twenty-four dollars per gross packages, fifteen cents per pack;

(2) The excise taxes as imposed by the preceding subsection one shall be payable at the time of importation or when taken out of warehouse for consumption in addition to the present duties of customs or at the time of sale by the Canadian manufacturer, but shall not apply on playing cards when exported, and shall be accounted for to His Majesty in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed by the Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue.

(3) (a) A tax of thirty cents per gallon on wines of all kinds, except sparkling wines, containing not more than forty per cent of proof spirits;

(b) A tax of three dollars per gallon on champagne and all other sparkling wines.

(4) The excise taxes as imposed by the preceding subsection three shall be payable at the time of sale by the Canadian manufacturer, but shall not apply to such wines when exported, and shall be accounted for to His Majesty in accordance with such regulations as shall be prescribed by the Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue.

(5) Every person selling or dealing in the articles upon which taxes are imposed as prescribed by this section may be required by the Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue to take out an annual license therefor, for which license a fee not exceeding two dollars shall be paid and the penalty for neglect or refusal to obtain a license shall be a sum not exceeding one thousand dollars which shall be recoverable upon summary conviction.

2. Resolved, that any enactment founded on the preceding resolution shall be deemed to have come into force on the tenth day of May, nineteen hundred and twenty-one.

Mr. BUREAU: There should not be a tax of $3 a gallon on sparkling wines. In days of depression we want to use these wines—they give a boost to the whole country.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would rather gather that my hon. friend already has his stock in. After all this is no higher than the rate of last year.

Mr. DENIS: These rates, if I understand correctly, are the same as last year?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I was referring to the point raised by the hon. member for Three Rivers. There has been a reduction in some items, for example, in the excise duty on cards.

Mr. DENIS: What about wines?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Wines stand as they were exactly.

Mr. BUREAU: Sparkling wines?

Mr. NESBITT: They are all imported anyway.

19BBB (1) That in addition to the present duties of customs and excise there shall be imposed, levied and collected an excise tax of one and one-half per cent on sales and deliveries by Canadian manufacturers or producers, and wholesalers or jobbers, and a tax of two and one-half per cent on the duty paid value of the goods imported, but in respect of sales by manufacturers to retailers or consumers the excise tax payable shall be three per cent and on goods imported by retailers or consumers the excise tax payable on the duty paid value shall be four per cent.

Provided that in respect of lumber an excise tax of three per cent shall be imposed, levied and collected on sales and deliveries by the Canadian manufacturer and further excise tax will not be payable on resale.

Provided also that the taxes specified in this section shall not apply to sales or importations of:—

Bread; flour and oatmeal when in packages weighing not less than forty-eight pounds each; animals living; live poultry; meats and poultry, fresh; milk including buttermilk; cream; butter; cheese; oleomargarine, margarine, butterine or other substitutes for butter; lard, lard compound and similar substances, made from animal or vegetable stearine or oils; eggs; vegetables, fruit, grains and seeds in their natural state; hay; straw; hops; nursery stock; chicory, raw or green; bees; honey; sugar; molasses; other farm produce sold by the individual farmer of his own production; ice; fish and products thereof not canned or medicated; ores of metals of all kinds; fuel of all kinds; gold and silver in ingots, blocks, bars, drops, sheets or plates unmanufactured; British and Canadian coin and foreign gold coin; logs and round unmanufactured timber; fence posts, railroad ties, pulpwood, tan bark, and other articles the product of the forest when produced and sold by the individual settler or farmer; newspapers and quarterly, monthly and semi-monthly magazines and weekly literary papers unbound; materials for use only in the construction, equipment and repair of ships; ships licensed to engage in the Canadian coasting trade; calcium carbide; electricity; gas manufactured from coal, calcium carbide; or oil for illuminating or heating purposes; materials for use solely in the manufacture of oleomargarine or any substitute for butter or lard or for the production of cottolene; artificial limbs and parts thereof; artificial eyes; donations of clothing and books for charitable purposes; settlers' effects; War Veterans' badges; memorials or monuments erected in memory of soldiers who fell in the Great War; articles imported for the use of the Governor General; articles imported for the personal or official use of Consuls General who are natives or citizens of the country they represent and who are not engaged in any other business or profession; Bibles, prayer-books, psalms and hymn-books, religious tracts, and Sunday school lesson pictures, and the Governor in Council shall have power to add to the foregoing list of articles exempted from the excise taxes on sales, as he may deem it expedient or necessary to exempt from the said excise taxes;

Provided further that the excise taxes specified in this section shall not be payable on goods exported, or on sales of goods made to the order of each individual customer by a business which sells exclusively by retail, under regulations by the Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue who shall be sole judge as to the classification of a business; and a drawback may be granted of ninety-nine per cent of the said taxes paid on materials used, wrought into or attached to articles exported.

(2) That the Minister may require every manufacturer, producers, wholesaler or jobber to take out an annual license for the purposes aforesaid, and may prescribe a fee therefor, not exceeding two dollars, and the penalty for neglect or refusal shall be a sum of exceeding one thousand dollars.

(3) That any such tax, costs or penalties may, at the option of the Minister, be recovered and imposed in the Exchequer Court of Canada or in any other Court of competent jurisdiction, in the name of His Majesty,

(4) That the provisions of this resolution respecting a tax on sales shall be deemed to have come into force on the tenth day of May, nineteen hundred and twenty-one, and to have applied to all goods imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption on and after that day, and to have also applied to goods previously imported for which no entry for consumption was made before that day.

Mr. NESBITT: There are one or two matters to which I would like to draw attention in connection with this clause. Paragraph 1 provides for a 3 per cent tax on goods manufactured in this country. There is a belief in many quarters—and opposition to the idea—that this tax is to be absorbed in the price of the goods. I do not see in the resolution, however, any provision to that end. I have had several telegrams about the matter, and personally I think it would be a mistake to have the amount of the tax absorbed in the price of the goods. If the amount of the tax is shown on the invoice, one and one-half per cent by the manufacturer and one and one-half per cent by the wholesaler, everyone will know exactly what he is paying, but if the tax is absorbed in the price of the goods, more than the actual tax might be collected. I think, therefore, that the procedure should be as it was last year. Another thing: taking bran as an illustration, if a man in Calgary buys a carload of bran from one of the mills near that city, he pays a 3 per cent tax on a price, which, for the purpose of illustration, we will put at $16 a ton, or 48 cents. But if he buys in Montreal, at Montreal rates of freight the price would be $31.50 and he would pay something over 90 cents on the ton. I think that the price, therefore, should be charged as at the place of debarkation, because I understand it is the custom of many shippers of flour and feeds to prepay the freight and charge it to the customer. If what I suggest is not done, local millers in Ontario will be prejudiced, in my judgment. Then, it is provided that flour and oatmeal when in packages weighing not less than 48 pounds each shall be exempt. That means that flour and oatmeal in packages weighing less than 48 pounds each will have to pay the tax. Now, the great mass of the people buy flour, for instance, in what are called 25 and 50-pound sacks—really 24 and 48-pound sacks, being one-eighth and one-quarter of a barrel respectively. When we tax these smaller packages and exempt the others we are putting the tax on the man who buys in the smaller quantities. Take, for instance, the case of oatmeal in packages. It is true that oatmeal can be bought in bulk at nearly all grocery stores, but packages are supposed to be more cleanly, and in these days when people are so much frightened by germs and so on they prefer to buy their oatmeal in packages. Very often—not always, but very often—you go into a store and find the cat sleeping in the oatmeal barrel, if there is no lid on it. I only give that as a rough illustration to indicate why the people prefer to buy the oatmeal in packages. Nearly everybody uses oatmeal, and I suggest to the minister that these smaller packages containing oatmeal and flour be also exempt from the tax.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Perhaps I had better take the last point first. There are many different ways of trying to approach a very simple problem. For example, take that one problem of trying to make things cheap and trying to get people to buy cheaply. It is ridiculous how easy it is to twist anything which is said in that direction towards making something all the more expensive. Notwithstanding what has been said, the fact is that the exemptions under this sales tax cover all rough essential foods. The fact is that meats, milk, butter, bread are free; the essentials are absolutely looked after. There are some things which are bought, which cannot be eaten and which cost money. Take the question of boxed goods referred to by the hon. member for Peterborough West (Mr. Gordon) in his speech on the Budget. The idea in question with boxed goods was to discourage the purchase of food products in cartons when a very considerable portion of the cost is on account of the carton which cannot be eaten. As a matter of fact, to-day clean oatmeal is selling at 5, 6 and 7 cents a pound. A carton containing 22 ounces of oatmeal sells for 15 cents a carton, resulting in a charge of something like 12 cents a pound as against 5, 6 or 7 cents if the food content is bought without the carton. In larger cartons, the discrepancy is not as great. I think the standard carton, is 56 onces, or practically 3½ pounds, and it sells relatively, of course, at a lesser rate on contents than the smaller carton does. I think the provision as drafted originally was wrong in that it had a restriction of 48 pounds. I think this ought to be low enough to cover the smallest sack or ordinary cheap container which is put up. My idea was to cover the smallest cheap container.

Another thing which has been entirely overlooked is in connection with the quantity of foodstuffs bought. This has been absolutely innocently, but nevertheless entirely misrepresented, because this tax is not a tax on the retailer whatever, and representations to the effect that the man's few pounds that he buys from the retailer are going to be taxed are absolutely beside the mark. He can buy in bulk, just as little as he wants, at any time without any tax at all. After having drawn attention to the fact that if you have things done up in cartons, you must pay for your cartons; that at the present moment standard oatmeal, just as good as that which is put up in cartons, can be bought at prices ranging from 5, 6 and 7 cents a pound, while some of the manufactured products are sold in cartons in this city at as high as 12 cents a pound, and in view of the fact that millers are turning out smaller sacks, I am inclined to think that, perhaps, the best thing to do is to amend entirely this present proposition. The amendment which, I think, would give full justice to the considerations urged by the hon. member for Oxford North (Mr. Nesbitt) would be to strike out the words after the word "oatmeal" on line 9 of page 8, "when in packages weighing not less than 48 pounds each," and to insert the words, "including rolled oats." I find that rolled oats are not covered by the definition of oatmeal, but, as a matter of fact, the food is practically the same; there is merely a difference in a primary process.

Mr. GORDON: Do I understand the minister to say that that covers all package breakfast foods.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No.

Mr. GORDON: Oatmeal and rolled oats?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes. It does not cover anything which is a trade patent formula.

Mr. GORDON: Like puffed rice, puffed wheat.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It covers merely the rough essentials.

Mr. GORDON: The custom throughout the country has been that families reduce their buying of rolled oats and oatmeal in the hot months of summer. For probably six months in the year the sale of rolled oats and oatmeal to the ordinary family is nil and these other foods are used because of the heating qualities of oatmeal and rolled oats. Therefore, there is a tremendous trade in this other class of foods and that is being taxed, although it is just as essential for the people to buy and use that as to buy oatmeal and rolled oats in the winter time. I would urge very strongly that these package foods be included too, because, although they may be patented foods, they constitute one of the most essential elements in the pantry of the family. In addition to that they are used for morning meal, noon meal, food for children, and evening meal. They are foods that are used very largely throughout Ontario and, indeed, throughout the whole of Canada.

11 p.m.

Mr. ROBB: It is getting rather late, and as this resolution is somewhat contentious, perhaps the minister would consent to letting it stand and reporting progress. It involves a very wide measure of taxation upon the food of the people, notwithstanding the statement of the minister that foodstuffs are free. I would like to enlarge somewhat upon that point, and I think I could convince the minister that he is taxing the food of the people, also that he is retarding, if not destroying, construction and development throughout this country.

The minister made the statement a few moments ago that this tax was imposed with a view to discouraging people from buying things which they should not buy

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I have suggested that that should be dropped. Does the hon. gentleman desire to retain it?

Mr. ROBB: Last year the minister took the view that he could curb extravagance in this country by imposing luxury taxes, but he found that those taxes practically destroyed business, and on the eve of the Christmas holidays, in an attempt to restore business, he was compelled to wipe out those taxes. All through this resolution there is a tax on the food of the people, an unfair tax. Take the tax on lumber and on material that goes into the construction of a house or barn. I am told by a responsible contractor that on a $5,000 house, which is not an extravagant average price, the materials going into that house represent $3,500. The minister proposes to put a tax of $105 against that house; there is no question about that. The minister puts a tax of $105 against the building of a house at a time when every one is calling for more houses in this country. The same is true with regard to the building of barns throughout the country. I am told by the same contractor that the average cost of the material going into a modern barn would be 80 per cent of a $2,000 building. The minister proposes to put a tax on that $1,600 worth of materials of $48. He is hampering production to that extent.

Coming to foodstuffs, which the minister claims are free, the minister is providing here that the ingredients required for the manufacture of oleomargarine are exempt from taxation. Having adopted that principle, why should he hamper the agricultural industry of this country by putting a tax on all the materials required for the production of butter, cheese and meats—the food of the people? There is to be a tax on mill stuffs which are required by the farmers for the production of milk and butter. Here, again, the minister is taxing production of the foodstuffs of the people. If our farmers are to compete with the farmers of the United States —hon. gentlemen opposite are very much alarmed occasionally, in Budget debates, over the competition of the United States —they should be put upon an equal basis. There is no tax whatever on any kind of mill feed that the farmer of the United States requires, and to that extent the farmer of the United States will be able to feed his stock more cheaply than the Canadian farmer.

The minister says that flour is free. But he is taxing the container; he is putting a tax on the bags and barrels required by the mills of this country, and to that extent he is discriminating against the Canadian farmer as compared with the farmer of the United States. The minister may say that there is a refund on the export business, but I say that all this puts us on an unfair basis as compared with our neighbours to the south with whom we have such close competition. The minister may also ask: Ho welse are you going to raise the revenue? We upon this side of the House contend that we would start at the other end: We would reduce expenditure. For all the revenue the minister is going to get out of this tax, he may as well wipe it out altogether. That would at least do something to help popularize the Government of which he is an honoured and a very genial supporter.

I shall not detain the committee any longer, but I think the minister might do well to sleep over these suggestions, and come along at the next sitting of the House and make a clean sheet of it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It was the understanding, to which I was going to give the fullest effect, that we should adjourn at 11 o'clock. I am quite willing to move that the committee rise.

Mr. FIELDING: I would first draw my hon. friend's attention to another item which he can take into consideration in the meantime. It is an item over which I have had considerable trouble with the department more than once. The minister is providing exemption for materials for the repair of ships generally and for ships licensed to engage in the Canadian coasting trade. A question has arisen respecting the smaller class of craft, practically fishing boats and boats of that type. There has been some confusion in the various custom offices in the country as to just what was meant. I think it is intended to mean fishing boats and small boats of that character. Moreover, I think that the manufacturer of that class of boats ought not to be compelled to take out a license. That, I believe, is the view of the department, but there has been some confusion, and I would suggest that when the hon. gentleman is framing this clause again he leaves no room for discussion hereafter on this subject.

Mr. PROULX: I see that butter and eggs are exempt from the sales tax, but not milk powder, condensed milk, and ice cream. These latter were exempt last year.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: So were many other things that are now being taxed.

Mr. PROULX: I submit that these are articles of food and should be treated the same as butter and cheese.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I never said that all foods are exempt. They are not.

Progress reported.

On motion of Sir Henry Drayton the House adjourned at 11.20 p.m.

Saturday, May 21, 1921.

The House met at Three o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Prime Minister) moved:

That on and after Monday the 23rd instant, until the end of the present session, the House meet at Two o'clock in the afternoon of each day.

Motion agreed to.

VICTORIA DAY

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Prime Minister) moved:

That when this House adjourns on Monday, the 23rd instant, it do stand adjourned until Wednesday, the 25th instant.

Motion agreed to.

GRAND TRUNK ARBITRATION

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Prime Minister): I beg to lay on the table of the House the subsequent correspondence between the Government and the Grand Trunk Railway Company relating to the arbitration and to the Bill passed by this House to provide for the revival of the arbitration proceedings. The correspondence includes a copy of the agreement as despatched overseas for execution, and as well copies of subsequent cables suggesting amendments to the agreement, and consequently it discloses the agreement as actually signed.

PENITENTIARIES ACT AMENDMENT

Right Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 201, to amend the Penitentiaries Act. He said:

The principal clauses of the Bill and the principal purpose sought to be attained by it are to make provision to enable the carrying on, on a larger scale, of industrial work in penitentiaries. There are other provisions of a less important nature, and I might, perhaps, just mention them before I take up the most important ones. There are quite a number of provisions repealing sections of the existing Act because, in view of legislation in regard to classification under the Civil Service Act, they serve practically no purpose. There is a provision extending the definition of a penitentiary so as to make it include a hospital in which a convict may be detained. There is provision made for enabling the minister to constitute an advisory board composed of officials to advise with him concerning the administration of penitentiaries. There is a provision making more clear the definition of the duties of a warden. There is a provision dealing with fines that may be imposed by the warden, and with his power of suspension. There is a disposition with regard to uniforms to be supplied to officers and purchases which it is permissible fo rthem to make of articles manufactured in the penitentiaries. Then there are other provisions which are dealt with because, as a matter of fact, by the effect of subsequent legislation and the practice of carrying on penitentiaries, they have become practically obsolete. They were provisions which looked to treating each penitentiary as a separate organization by itself under the executive control of the warden, giving him control of purchases and so forth. The effect of subsequent legislation has been that these sections have fallen into disuse, and they are simply repealed.

There is a provision with regard to visitors, making more clear the present provision. I do not think it substantially modifies the present provision. There is a provision to enact that when a man is sentenced to a penitentiary, he shall be sentenced to such penitentiary as the minister shall from time to time designate. Under the present section, the court is required to sentence him to the penitentiary of the province, but there is power in the minister to transfer him to any other penitentiary. As we have recently done away with one of the penitentiaries, a provision assuming that there is a penitentiary in each province becomes inapplicable, and, in fact, it was not strictly applicable even in the past. There is a provision requiring that the judge or judicial officer who pronounces sentence shall prepare a schedule giving information and details elicited from the convict himself as to his past and so forth. This, it is considered, will be useful information to those taking charge of the convict. There is a provision enabling the minister, who now has to sign every order for transfer from one penitentiary to another, to authorize an officer to do that instead. There are provisions, which, I think, may be described as making more clear and more effective the present provisions with regard to the manner of dealing with insane convicts. I do not think there is any substantial modification. Likewise, there is a provision as to dealing with convicts suffering from infectious or contagious diseases, which provision also makes more clear existing legislation. There is a provision dealing with the detention of female convicts, making it possible, which will seem to be very desirable, if it be found practicable, to provide an absolutely separate institution for them. There are provisions making more clear the existing disposition as regards the remission of part time of sentences for good conduct on the part of the convicts. There is also a provision requiring that the convicts shall be furnished with a copy of the regulations so that they may know what laws they are living under.

Then we come to the provisions to which I have referred. In substance, it is enacted that the different departments of Government shall, where that is practically possible, procure from the penitentiaries such things as they require and which can be produced in the penitentiary. There are dispositions following on that, providing for the details as to how the penitentiaries shall be compensated for the goods so furnished. It is not intended that there shall be an actual payment of money from one department to the other, but there are different provisions establishing a method of determining what sum of money as a whole should be allotted to the penitentiaries administration as compensation for the work so done. Then there are provisions for the allotment as between the convicts out of this money of what may be found available in the way of remuneration for their labour, after taking into consideration the cost of maintenance of the penitentiaries, and so forth.

There is a provision making more severe the penalties to which officers are subjected for the offence of trafficking with convicts, and regulating the question of the burden of proof when an officer is charged with being in possession of or dealing with articles with which he is forbidden to deal under the law or the regulations of the penitentiary.

There is a section providing for and adding to what is required presently to be given to a convict upon his discharge from the penitentiary, principally in the way of clothing, and to some extent in the way of an allowance of money. That covers the dispositions of the Bill.

Mr. JACQUES BUREAU (Three Rivers and St. Maurice): With the consent of the House I would like to ask a question, and make a suggestion to the right hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty). The question I desire to ask is whether the Bill now presented to the House is based on the reports made by the Commissioners who were appointed to investigate the penitentiaries. My hon. friend nods assent. I have read over that report, and I notice that it suggests certain amendments which are quite radical changes in the existing law. I would suggest to my right hon. friend the Prime Minister that unless we are going to fix a date in June to discuss this Bill, together with the Bill amending the Criminal Code, we might better discuss it next session. The Bill might be printed, so that hon. members could familiarize themselves with it. It is a long and important Bill, and as we are trying to get away by next Saturday I do not think it is fair that we should be called upon to make a study of this important matter at this time.

Mr. DOHERTY: When the Bill is printed and distributed I think it will be found that it does not involve anything so drastic as the hon. gentleman seems to apprehend.

Mr. BUREAU: I did not say drastic; I said radical. There is quite a difference.

Mr. DOHERTY: I might perhaps point out that the intention is to make it possible to carry out the recommendations that are made, but I do not think that there is anything that makes it imperative that they should be carried out. However, the Bill will be printed, and I shall be glad to confer with the hon. member and other hon. gentlemen. Certainly I do not want to press any legislation through without proper opportunity for its consideration. On the other hand, there are some improvements which are perhaps of a pressing nature, and possibly they might be dealt with.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PRIVILEGE—Mr. TURGEON

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. ONESIPHORE TURGEON (Gloucester): I rise to a question of privilege. In the correspondence that the right hon. the Prime Minister read yesterday from a Conservative friend in St. John with reference to the Hon. Mr. Veniot, Minister of Public Works in the New Brunswick Cabinet, a reference is made to me which I cannot allow to pass unnoticed. In his letter he says:

> Of course Mr. Veniot would have a portfolio in Cabinet. To make an opening for him Mr. Turgeon would have to be provided for and Mr. Veniot for the time being, at least, represent Gloucester.

Let me say that Mr. Turgeon is well provided for by the electors of Gloucester county, and wants nobody else to provide for him. The writer in question, I am sure, was not acquainted with the mentality of the people of Gloucester when he wrote that letter. Possibly he has been better informed since.

GRAND TRUNK SHAREHOLDERS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. JOSEPH ARCHAMBAULT (Chambly and Verchères): I beg to draw the attention of the Prime Minister (Mr. Meighen) to a statement made in the House yesterday in reference to the list of Grand Trunk shareholders. My right hon. friend yesterday stated, as reported at page 3804 of Hansard:

> This list has been required in connection with the Grand Trunk Arbitration proceedings, and had to be sent twice to Montreal. It is in the department at present and is available.

I would ask my right hon. friend at what date this list was received, for what purpose it was required in Montreal in connection with the Grand Trunk Arbitration proceedings, and also what was the undoubtedly enormous cost which the Government had to pay to procure that list.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Prime Minister): What I stated to the House yesterday was based on a memo. supplied me by the Department of Railways and Canals. I find I have not that memo. in my desk at the moment, but I do not think it gave the date of arrival of the packing box containing the names, nor did it say what use was made of the material by the Arbitration Tribunal; it simply said it had been necessary. It did not say, either, what the cost was, but I do not think it is hard to divine that the cost would be very high indeed. Whether paid by the Government or by the Grand Trunk, it will ultimately be paid by the country. I will endeavour to find out what the uses of the list were, when it was received, and, if I can, what the cost was, but I do not know whether that will be in the possession of the department or not.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: I ask the date for the reason that my right hon. friend, when he answered me two days ago, said he was not aware that the list had arrived, and yesterday he informed the House that it had gone to Montreal in connection with the Grand Trunk arbitration proceedings which took place a month ago.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not know it had arrived until I got this memorandum from the Department of Railways and Canals.

SUPPLEMENTARY EXTRADITION CONVENTION ACT

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Shelburne and Queen's): May I call the attention of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty), to Order No. 38 with respect to the Supplementary Extradition Convention Treaty with the United States of America? Is there any correspondence on this subject and will the right hon. minister be good enough to bring it down before the measure is proceeded with?

Right Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice): I believe some correspondence has been exchanged with the persons who are interested in the Treaty, and I shall be glad to bring it down.

Mr. FIELDING: That is, correspondence in connection with any action taken by the Government in reference to the matter.

Mr. DOHERTY: I will look into the matter. Perhaps I might say now that in view of the report of the proceedings of the Senate laid on the table to-day, it will be necessary for us to drop the proposed Bill for the present. It appeared by the report, when we received it, that the message from the Embassy in Washington was erroneous in that it informed us that the Senate had ratified the Treaty, whereas we find, from the documents that have come to hand, that their ratification was subject to an amendment which very substantially modifies the convention. Of course, that amendment would have to be agreed to by the other contracting party before there could be a treaty which would be susceptible of ratification, and I therefore propose, when the Order is called, to ask leave to withdraw the Bill.

Mr. FIELDING: If the Bill is not to be proceeded with, I will not, of course, trouble my right hon. friend for the present to submit any correspondence. The matter will come up at a later stage, and when it does it will be time enough to ask for the correspondence.

GRAND TRUNK DIRECTORS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. FRANK S. CAHILL (Pontiac): I notice in this morning's Journal a report to the effect that Sir Joseph Flavelle, Edward G. Kelley, A. J. Mitchell, E. L. Newcombe and J. N. Dupuis have been appointed by the Government as Grand Trunk directors. If that report is correct, for what period have these directors been appointed?

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Prime Minister): The gentlemen named by my hon. friend—I do not catch all the names, but I think the list is correct—have not been appointed by the Government, because we have not the power of appointment. To make up the required number, they have been nominated by the Government for appointment by the directors themselves upon the resignation of individual directors, which resignations are called for by the Order in Council making the nominations. The Order in Council further provides, in accordance with the Bill and the agreement, that when one retires after the other, until five have retired, and these five nominated by us have been appointed, the remaining directors shall resign. Whether the appointemnts have yet taken place, I am not certain, but the Order was cabled over the day it was passed, and I would presume that if the appointments have not taken place yet. they will very shortly. Under the statute, it was necessary that the directors be nominated by the Government, and these gentlemen are the directors so nominated. They are merely in charge until the calling into effect of the Canadian National Railway Act, upon which it is intended that the Grand Trunk shall be placed under that directorate. That is expected to take place shortly. The new directorate will take charge, and unless there is some reason to the contrary, almost immediately afterwards it is the intention to call the Act into effect.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES TO BE BROUGHT DOWN

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (leader of the Opposition): In view of the fact that one of the ministers has stated that the Government expects an early prorogation, I should be glad to know when we may expect the Supplementary Estimates to be brought down?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON (Minister of Finance): They do not think the House will sit on Tuesday, but I hope to be able to bring them down on Wednesday.

SUPPLEMENTARY EXTRADITION CONVENTION ACT

On the Order for the second reading of Bill No. 158, respecting a Supplementary Extradition Convention with the United States of America.

Right Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice): I beg to move, for the reasons which I have already stated in answer to a question by my hon. friend for Queen's and Sunbury—

Mr. FIELDING: Shelburne and Queen's; the member for Sunbury will be here shortly.

Mr. DOHERTY: Shelburne and Queen's, I should say. For reasons I have already given, I move that the Order be discharged.

Motion agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS

SPECIAL WAR REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT

The House in Committee of Ways and Means, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN: When the committee rose last evening we were considering the last of the resolutions which will be found as an appendix to the Votes and Proceedings of Monday, May 9. The first, second and third of these resolutions. to amend the Special War Revenue Act, had been adopted, and the Committee was considering resolution No. 19 bbb, which had been amended by inserting the words "including rolled oats," in the ninth line on the second page, and striking out the words "when in packages weighing not less than 48 pounds each". Shall this resolution as amended, carry?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I intimated last night that there were some amendments proposed to be made in the resolution and we dealt last night with one of them in connection with oatmeal in packages. The formal resolution which I desire to have adopted on that point is that the words "and oatmeal when in packages weighing not less than forty-eight pounds each" on lines 9 and 10 on page 8 of the resolutions be struck out and the following substituted therefor "oatmeal, rolled oats and cornmeal." Then there is a further change in order to remove a doubt—a doubt which arose in the discussion yesterday—having regard to the duties on spirits, as to whether or not the provinces who bought for the purposes of resale would or would not be liable to taxation. I desire to move a further resolution so as to remove all doubt in that connection. I move that the following words be added on the fifth line of page 8 of the resolution, after the word "consumers":

—including sales to His Majesty, whether in the right of His Majesty's Government of Canada or His Majesty's Government of any province of Canada, for the purposes of resale.

I also move that, in the sixth line of the same page, the following words be added after the word "consumers":

—including importations by His Majesty, whether in the right of His Majesty's Government of Canada or His Majesty's Government of any province, for the purposes of resale.

Mr. FIELDING: Will the minister kindly read the clause in its amended form?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The clause in its amended form will read as follows:

That in addition to the present duties of customs and excise there shall be imposed, levied and collected an excise tax of one and one-half per cent on sales and deliveries by Canadian manufacturers or producers, and wholesalers or jobbers, and a tax of two and one-half per cent on the duty paid value of the goods imported, but in respect of sales by manufacturers to retailers or consumers—

Now the addition comes in there—

—including sales to His Majesty, whether in the right of His Majesty's Government of Canada or His Majesty's Government of any province of Canada, for the purposes of resale, the excise tax payable shall be three per cent and on goods imported by retailers or consumers, including importations by His Majesty whether in the right of His Majesty's Government of Canada or His Majesty's Government of any province of Canada, for the purposes of resale, the excise tax payable on the duty paid value shall be four per cent.

The whole effect is to add to the operations of the Crown the tax which is put upon the general public. It follows the principle established by the Customs Amendment Act of 1917 and the language of that Act.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. ROBB: Before the amendment carries I would like to ask if the minister has any statement to make in regard to what I pointed out to him last night.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If my hon. friend will allow me I will have great pleasure in dealing with that matter when we come to it, I have not overlooked anything.

Mr. FIELDING: The effect of the minister's proposition is to levy a tax upon the purchases of either the Dominion or the provinces. In the case of a tax by the Dominion it is simply a case of the money going from one pocket to the other. In the case of the provinces, however, it is either a tax upon the seller or the buyer. I do not think there has ever been any question—in practice at any rate whether there is in law—of the right of the Dominion Government to impose taxation on articles imported by the provinces. I know of cases that came up in my own province where the province has had to pay the tax. I believe there is some question now as to its legality, but in practice there has never been any hesitation on the part of the Dominion to collect taxes on goods imported by the provinces.

Mr. VIEN: Is there not a case in British Columbia at the present time in which this question is in dispute?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Not that I know of. From what I see in the papers, however, I believe the Attorney General of British Columbia has challenged our right to collect the increased spirit taxes from that province and the Government received a wire from him asking whether it was our intention to collect. We have so advised him.

Amendment agreed to.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON:: If hon. gentlemen will look at the next paragraph, which deals with lumber, they will see that it is only the manufacturers' sale of lumber which carries a tax, and that there is no tax in respect of sale by the wholesaler, An amendment is proposed in that connection to make it perfectly clear that not only shall there be only one tax in the case of domestic lumber, but that there shall also be only one tax in connection with imported lumber, which was my intention. I am therefore making a change in the basic rate. Hon. gentlemen will see that the resolution reads:

Provided that in respect of lumber an excise tax of three per cent shall be imposed, levied—

And so on. The motion is:

That the word "two" be substituted for the word "three" in the first line of the sub-provision.

Mr. FIELDING: Reducing the rate.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Reducing the rate to two per cent. And then the further addition:—

Mr. GAUVREAU: Before the minister proceeds, may I bring to his attention a special case?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think perhaps what I am about to read will meet the hon. gentleman's case. I will be very pleased to discuss it after he has heard this motion. Then I propose this further addition:

That after the word "manufacturer" in the second line of that sub-provision, the following words be added: "and of three per cent on importation."

The sub-provision will then be in this form:

Provided that in respect of lumber an excise tax of two per cent shall be imposed, levied and collected on sales and deliveries by the Canadian manufacturer and of three per cent on importations, and that no further excise tax shall be payable on resale.

Mr. COPP: What change is there from last year?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There were two taxes collected on lumber last year; it is now reduced to one tax.

Mr. GAUVREAU: I should like to bring to the attention of the minister a special case. It is the spirit of the law that the tax applies where a farmer brings his logs to the local saw-mill to be sawn into boards or any other form for his own use? I was told first that the tax could not be applied because there was no manufacture, and I gave that information to the newspapers so that all the farmers in my riding might be advised. Four months later I received a letter that the department had changed their mind, and then I had to advise my constituents that they would have to pay the tax.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The basis is somewhat changed this year. We are taxing entirely on sales. In the case my hon. friend refers to there was no sale, and therefore there would be no tax under the new law.

Mr. GAUVREAU: Do I understand the minister to say that whenever a farmer brings his logs to the mill to be sawn into boards, planks or any other form for his own use there is no tax?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is custom sawing, and there is no sale involved.

Mr. TURGEON: My hon. friend will remember the objection I made to the excise tax on lumber in the course of my speech on the Budget. I presented to the House at the time the difficulty of selling lumber on account of its high price, due in part to the increased freight rates, and that consequently this discouraged building and raised rents in the cities. My opinion has been strengthened by advices I have received from different parts of the country. Therefore I move, Mr. Chairman, that all of this clause referring to the excise duty on lumber be struck out.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This is an exception in favour of lumber, and the effect of my hon. friend's motion would be to raise the tax to three per cent instead of two per cent, which I am sure is not what he desires. We are not increasing the tax in this instance over what it was last year.

Mr. TURGEON: It is increased by one and a-half per cent.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Excuse me, we are cutting it down to two per cent.

Mr. PEDLOW: What are the special reasons for exempting the products of the forest under this clause?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That was done for the same reason that we have made other general exemptions. The primary activities of the farms, the mines, the forests and the fisheries are absolutely exempted.

Mr. PEDLOW: This, then, is for the benefit more particularly of the lumber interests. I was under the impression that they were in a class by themselves and well able to take care of a tax proposition of this kind; I was not aware that they were exactly in the same class as the fishermen, the farmers and the miners. I fail to apprehend why special consideration should be given to lumbermen. They are considered wealthy people and, I should think, well able to bear an imposition of this kind.

Mr. NESBITT: They are not all wealthy by any means.

Mr. SIMPSON: Would not the tax bear pretty heavily on settlers who get out their own pulpwood? That is the only means some of them have of making a livelihood in the winter time, and the tax as suggested by my hon. friend would, I think, bear pretty heavily on them.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: In answer to the hon. gentleman I can very well understand his not having got the whole of this long resolution thoroughly digested. I know I have great difficulty myself in recollecting the whole of it. But I should like to point out to him that this provision only helps the primary activity; it does not help the operations of the large lumber companies, except to the extent that we are not increasing the rate on lumber by not putting the extra one-half per cent on each transaction; to that extent it may be said we are doing something for the lumber companies; but, on the other hand, there is a great deal to be said in connection with the high cost of lumber and its effect upon building operations. What are exempted are the farmers and settlers' activities, the logs they get out, round and unmanufactured timber, fence posts, railway ties, pulpwood, tan bark and other articles—the products of the forests when produced and sold by the individual settler or farmer. What we are doing, is, as I say, making all the activities of the farmer, so far as he is directly concerned, free of tax.

Mr. PEDLOW: Then, Mr. Chairman, no ruling of the department would exempt operations by large lumbermen. That being the case, the point raised by the hon. member (Mr. Simpson) a few minutes ago regarding the taking out of pulpwood by the individual settler would be covered by this sub-provision, but it would not apply to operations by large lumber concerns?

Mr. CALDWELL: Would this include hewn timber got out by the new settler? I have in mind unmanufactured timber—squared timber.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The qualification "unmanufactured" refers to activities of those other than farmers. Any one of the big companies to which the hon. member for Renfrew was referring could get out their logs in the first instance without paying on them; they would pay on their lumber, not on their logs. So far as the farmer is concerned all products of the forests that he produces are free.

Mr. GAUVREAU: Will the minister explain circular No. 75C which was sent to me the other day? I was plainly told that the farmers would have to pay a tax on the amount charged for the sawing of their logs in the mill.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That, of course, is under the old law. This new law will supersede it.

Mr. GAUVREAU: Then circular No. 75C will be got rid of?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: All the old circulars will go.

Mr. ROBB: Will this tax be imposed on the price f.o.b. mill or on the price at the point of delivery?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The tax is on the consideration of the sale, whatever that may be.

Amendment agreed to.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I wish to move a further amendment: that in the proviso which deals with exemptions, in the 8th line after the word "state," there be added the following words:

bran, shorts, oil cake, oil cake meal, grains mixed or crushed for poultry feed.

Mr. ROBB: The minister has not included cattle feed. I would point out that more grain mixed and crushed is sold for cattle feed than is sold for poultry feed. According to the amendment, the exemption would apply only to grains mixed or crushed for poultry feed.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I thought I had made it clear; my intention is to do just what the hon. gentleman has in mind. If there is any doubt about it, the words "cattle or" may be added before the words "poultry feed."

The CHAIRMAN: "Grains mixed or crushed for cattle or poultry feed".

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): If it is the intention to include all feeds that are sold as cattle feed, I would point out that the minister is discriminating against certain kinds of feed that are made in this country—gluten feed, for instance, distillers' grain and brewers' grain. These are all sold quite extensively for cattle feed,

I do not rise to offer any particular objection, but there is an evident discrimination here.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am afraid we cannot go further; we have gone as far as possible to look after the real essentials. We are not thinking of patent feeds or manufacturers' names, or anything of that kind. I will not say for a moment that it is possible to provide for every single contingency that might arise in connection with this taxation—it cannot be done.

It may be that in this discussion something else may be found which properly, economically ought to be exempt, and power is reserved to the Governor in Council to make further and other exemptions should occasion require that.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): I am quite willing that the minister should get after those compounds to which he refers as patent foods; but gluten meal is a by-product of the starch factories; it is in the same class as oil cake or oil cake meal.

Mr. FIELDING: Has the minister been able to give any attention to the point that I raised, whether he should not include in the list of exemptions the manufacture of small boats, coastal or fishing boats.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is a matter that I am entirely in sympathy with, but it is a little difficult to work it out. I gave instructions for a resolution to be drawn. I have not been able to get the proper, definite information which will enable us clearly to carry out what the hon. gentleman desires to have done. It is a matter which will be taken care of at the first possible minute by Order in Council.

Mr. FIELDING: If I have the word of the minister that sales of these boats will be exempt and that the manufacturer of these boats is not to be taxed, or required to take out a license, I am satisfied. I notice that I am reported in Hansard as saying that on that subject I have had trouble with the department. That is hardly correct. I have had no trouble with the department. I have had to trouble the department occasionally with cases of this kind, but in every case I have received every attention and courtesy from the department, and I was not intending to complain of it.

Mr. DUFF: I intended to speak of the point brought up by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) regarding fishing boats, and also the section of the clause which reads:

> Ships licensed to engage in the Canadian coastal trade.

It seems to me that it would be only right and proper that, not only ships engaged in coastal trade, but ships engaged in fishing, should be exempted. The easiest way to get over the difficulty with regard to both fishing vessels and coastal boats would be to make that part of the clause read:

> Ships and boats engaged in the Canadian coastal and fishing trade.

The minister will see in a moment that it is more important to have fishing vessels exempted than even coastal vessels. As regards the previous phrase:

> Materials for use only in the construction, equipment and repair of ships.

I would suggest that in order to include the fishing industry, which is one of the basic industries of the country, that might very well read:

> Materials for use only in the construction, equipment and repair of ships and fishing boats.

In justice to this great industry and to encourage it, fishing boats should be included in the list of exemptions.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We will certainly go very carefully into the matter with a view of defining it.

Mr. FIELDING: A fishing vessel, I imagine, would be held to be a coastal vessel.

Mr. DUFF: No.

Mr. FIELDING: A vessel when she is not catching fish is apt to carry a cargo along the coast. I quite agree, however, with the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Duff) that if there is any doubt about the matter, it is well to have it defined.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): What action has the minister taken regarding this paragraph:

> Materials for use solely in the manufacture of oleomargarine or any substitute for butter or lard or for the production of cottolene.

The minister must be well aware that the price of butter in Canada to-day is down to the pre-war rate and even below it. If you are to allow to enter Canada all kinds of material for the manufacture of these articles, then to allow the manufacturers to take the butter produced by the farmer and mix it with their different materials, and then allow the product to go on sale in opposition to the sale of butter, I cannot help thinking that, to say the least, you are interfering with the dairy market. Has the minister seriously considered the question of placing a duty on materials that are coming into Canada for the manufacture of butter substitutes?

The CHAIRMAN: Had we not better adopt the amendment before we discuss the question of oleomargarine?

Mr. ROBB: Before the amendment is adopted, I would like to point out to the minister that I am ready to support him in this, that I think it is good legislation to exempt the cattle feeds that he has enumerated; but if he exempts cottonseed and oil cake meal, there is no reason why he should not exempt gluten meal, which is also used on the farm.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We have taken power to give further exemptions, and that matter will be carefully looked into.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle): It is difficult to find out just what is intended by amendments which we have never seen and which we merely hear discussed back and forth. I understand the minister is including in exemptions, brans, shorts and certain crushed feed. I caught the expression "mixed grain."

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Crushed grains.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle): Crushed grains of any kind. Grain unmixed with crushed grain would be exempt.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: All grains were exempt. The term "crushed grains" was put in just to make the matter absolutely sure.

Mr. NESBITT: With reference to cottonseed meal and oil cake, I think they come under the same head as gluten meal, but I think they all ought to pay the sales tax and not be exempted. They are after all manufactured goods. Bran and shorts are by-products.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. HAROLD: While we are on the discussion of additions to this list of goods to be exempted from this tax, I should like to bring before the committee, for the consideration of the Minister of Finance, a question that was brought up last year, namely the exemption of fibre for us only in the manufacture of binder twine. We discussed that very fully last year, and it was put on the free list. I think, through a misunderstanding, it was left off this year, and the way in which the matter works out under the regulations as they are now proposed, is that the Canadian manufacturer has to pay a 2½ per cent import duty on his raw materials Then when he ships his goods out to the retailer, he has to pay 3 per cent under the retail tax, or, all told, 5½ per cent; whereas the United States manufacturer shipping his goods in here direct to the retailer has to pay only 4 per cent of an import duty. That leaves the Canadian manufacturer with a handicap of 1½ per cent, as the finished goods come in free. The Canadian manufacturer has fixed his price for the season, and he has based his cost upon the cost of these materials free from this tax. If he is compelled to pay it, it will certainly be a very serious thing for him, and it may result in a loss on his season's operations. The reason I feel that it should come up now and not be left until after this Bill has passed is in order to avoid raising the difficult question with regard to rebate on any material that has been imported. I have a letter from one manufacturer in which he says that he has paid duty already on one shipment amounting to nearly $600. I do not see how anybody can object to this change as it is with respect to an industry that is without a particle of protection. It is in one sense a great handicap from the fact that it has to pay taxes in this country while competing with the output of large concerns on the other side which contribute absolutely nothing to the treasury except this import tax. The matter was gone into very fully last year, and the minister, realizing the situation, made this alteration. So far as the farmers are concerned, this could not help but tend towards being a benefit to them, because if the tax remains on, the Canadian manufacturer would certainly have to add that tax on his raw material to the price of his finished product, if he could get the price. I do not think that any person can reasonably object to this action on the part of the Government.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: I would like to join my voice to that of the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Harold) in his request. We have a large institution manufacturing binder twine in the city of Brantford, employing a large number of hands, and with a good deal of farmers' capital invested in the enterprise. It is working under absolutely free trade conditions, and I cannot imagine that any one in this House would ask that a business that is without any protection whatever should be placed under a handicap as compared with the competition that it has to meet from the south of the line. This industry has had a difficult career, but has managed to weather the storm with absolute free trade in that particular article, through success in its purchasing of raw material and the great deal of foresight that has been exercised by the management for a great many years. I do trust that the Minister of Finance will give the request of the hon. member for Brant his very serious consideration, because I cannot imagine that anybody would wish to place an extra 1½ per cent on an article in such universal use as this, on which the margin of profit is small, and which is an industry that it is very desirable should be maintained in Canada. There are only three factories left in Canada manufacturing binder twine, and I hope the minister will see his way clear to grant this small concession with respect to the raw material entering into the manufacturing of binder twine.

Mr. PEDLOW: I would like to direct the attention of the House to one fact that has been brought out by the hon. member for Brantford, and that is that all that is necessary to make a success of a Canadian factory is good management, plus free trade. I am delighted to know that the hon. member for Brantford is a convert to that idea.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I appreciate the difficulties of the Minister of Finance in securing revenues to meet our obligations. I do think, however, that there are some industries in this country that ought to be encouraged as much as possible, and consequently I quite agree with the exception that has been taken by the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong). In connection with the articles which are being exempted, particularly importations into this country of cream, butter, cheese, oleomargarine, margarine, butterine or other substitutes for butter, eggs, vegetables, fruits, grains and so forth, I think we all realize that there is altogether too much of our money being paid to the United States for products that we could very well raise in this country. That was more noticeable during the last month perhaps than at any other time. As the result of the tremendous importations from the United States, one of these articles—butter—has dropped 25 cents a pound in price in one week. I have here a publication of the Department of Agriculture giving importations for the month of March and I find that there were 753,726 pounds of butter, and 374,672 pounds of oleomargarine imported in that month, and that the total of dairy products imported was 1,607,741 pounds. Our money was paid out to the United States for this stuff at a time when we were looking for markets abroad for our own produce.

While dealing with this matter, I might point out that it has engaged the attention of the House on quite a number of occasions. My hon. friend from East Lambton has mentioned the exemption with respect to materials for use solely in the manufacure of oleomargarine or any substitute for butter, or lard, or for the production of cottolene. It is somewhat interesting to note how many of these different ingredients are used by the manufacturers of oleomargarine, who are carrying on this business of the adulteration of butter. Their business is not the manufacturing of oleomargarine at all, but the adulteration of butter. I would not take any exception to importing margarine into this country and manufacturing it, but what I do object to, and have objected to all along, is permitting these manufacturers to adulterate butter, which is the right that has been given to them under the regulations under which they are carrying on. There are two manufacturers in Canada, both in Ontario, engaged in this business. We are told that there have been circulars issued by them and by other associations to every member of the House pointing out that it was a Canadian product that was being used to adulterate butter, and that consequently the manufacture of oleomargarine was to the advantage of some branch of agriculture in Canada, particularly oleo oil.

What is the real situation? For the eleven months of the past year, the latest returns that I have, oleo oils were imported into this country to the extent of 1,714,562 pounds, for the purpose of adulterating butter. Cotton seed oil was imported to the amount of 889,208 pounds. These importations together with those of salt, stearine, butter oil, peanut oil, corn oil, cocoanut oil, aggregated 3,680,350 pounds. Now there is a desire on the part of the Government and of every one else to encourage Canadian manufacturers and Canadian producers. I want to point out that 99 per cent of the duty paid on these articles in the past year has been rebated to these two manufacturers, or an amount of $138,367.34. I think that instead of exempting the importation of this stuff from any tax, as we are doing in this resolution, we should endeavour to protect and encourage our own industries. There has been dumped on the markets of this country during the past three months immense quantities of dairy products from Denmark, Holland, the Argentine, and the United States, of a very inferior quality. This stuff was churned in the churns of certain manufacturers in the city of Toronto, and placed on the market because it had very little value as it was. This is the sort of thing that has been going on for some time. We speak about the need for protection. If ever there was a time in the history of this country when the dairying industry needed some consideration and encouragement, it is now. I think we should be well advised, not only in putting a tax on the imports, but also in increasing the protective tariff against these inferior articles which have been brought into this country to such a large extent during the last few months. I have repeatedly pointed out the effect of this matter. The great objection is that we are exempting articles that are being brought in and used by the manufacturers to adulterate butter. That is really what the business is; they are not really manufacturing oleomargarine at all. What does adulteration mean? It means the mixing of base materials with something superior, and that is the very thing that the manufacturers of oleomargarine are doing. The manufacturers of butter are prevented from doing anything of that kind because they are surrounded with regulations, municipal, provincial and federal. These regulations are designed to ensure the purity of butter, and we immediately discard all these provisions and permit certain manufacturers to get a license to buy that article by millions of pounds and adulterate it with these inferior commodities. It is the purpose of this schedule to permit that stuff to come in without being taxed, I think we should place a heavy tax on such importations introduced for the purpose of adulterating good food.

Mr. HENDERS: I endorse what has been said by the three last speakers. We are dealing with two specific articles in connection with which some consideration should be given the industries concerned. As regards binder twine, the present arrangement will have two effects. It will place the manufacturer of this article in Canada at a disadvantage, as compared with the American manufacturer, and as a result the cost will be increased to the consumer, and the farmer will be affected. I think, therefore, that some consideration should be given that point. I am in perfect accord with the views expressed by the last speaker (Mr. Sutherland). A year ago, perhaps, I would not have taken this position, when butter was selling at 75 cents, 80 cents, 85 and 90 cents a pound. The poorer people of the country were in such a position that a strong argument could be advanced for giving them a cheaper article to take the place of butter. But with butter at its present price—and the probability is that it will be lower instead of higher—there is a great deal of force in what my hon. friend from South Oxford has said.

Mr. KNOX: I regret to have to ask the committee to revert to a former item, but I want to ask the minister a question with regard to cord wood used for fuel purposes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: All fuel is free.

Mr. KNOX: Then my question is not necessary.

Mr. McGIBBON (Muskoka): I would impress upon the minister the importance of a sane and logical position when we are protecting industries. We are protecting nearly every industry, because we are a protective country, and yet we foolishly allow one of the greatest industries to go unprotected. That is not sound or logical, nor is it in the interests of Canada. As I said the other night, we might very well, at this time, take a lesson from the United States. We know what they are doing to protect the farmers of that country, and we are not so foolish as to believe that their action will not have some effect on this country. I would therefore impress upon the Government the necessity of giving to the farmers of Canada some protection along these lines.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I support the last speaker. In British Columbia, under present conditions, our farmers are very much in need of some protection. The other day I received a letter—I notice some of the Agrarians smiling—from a branch of the United Farmers of British Columbia. I am sorry I have not that letter here; it is in my room, but I will bring it down later. It was accompanied by a copy of a resolution passed at a meeting of the Surrey and Barnston Island branch of the United Farmers of British Columbia, urging very strongly that some extra measure of protection be provided the farmers of that province, and mentioning particularly butter, poultry, eggs, and other farm produce of that kind.

Mr. DENIS: What about tobacco?

Mr. McQUARRIE: It is also stated that the market was being flooded with American goods.

Mr. LALOR: Reciprocity.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Personally, I am quite familiar with the condition which prevails in that province, and I know that our farmers are suffering very severely. I do not think the member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar), will have very much support out in that country for the doctrine he is preaching in the Prairie Provinces. It may be that our conditions are peculiar in some ways, inasmuch as the markets of Westminister and Vancouver are situated so close to the boundary line, and are the best markets for the northern part of the state of Washington. Now, the farmers in Washington are shipping in by truckloads large quantities of all kinds of produce, and as they have the benefit of several weeks in the matter of time, they can send in their goods before the farmers in our part of the country can put their produce on the market, and therefore they have a much more favourable market than our people can find later on. I am very glad the subject has been mentioned, and I hope the minister will give this matter his very serious consideration. I am sure I speak for the great majority of the farmers of British Columbia when I say they want protection, and still more protection.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I have in my hand a table of the importations of butter into Canada. I have been trying to follow weekly, and sometimes daily, these importations. At the present time we want to keep as much money at home for Canada as we can, and I have therefore been interested in this matter. I happened to have this list in my pocket, and it will probably be interesting to say what the imports actually are. Of course, there is practically nothing from the United Kingdom; the imports of butter for the fiscal year amounted to 112 pounds. There was practically nothing from Newfoundland, the imports amounting to 1,049 lbs. New Zealand, on the other hand had a good deal larger export to Canada; she sold us 1,533,280 lbs. Holland sold us only 110 lbs., but our imports from the United States amounted to 2,207,077 lbs. These are the figures for the past fiscal year ending March 31. The figures for the month of April last show an importation from New Zealand of 90,776 lbs., and from the United States, 576,061 lbs. It will be observed that the importations of butter from the United States for the whole of the previous year were 2,200,000 pounds of butter and for last month, 576,061 pounds, showing a large increase in American importations. Now there is a duty of four cents a pound on butter, but I am afraid we cannot very well discuss protection or the tariff on the sales tax, and however one may sympathize, and ought to sympathize, with the dairymen this is not the time for us to consider that matter. There is still on the Order Paper an oleomargarine resolution in connection with which that matter might properly be discussed, but I am afraid we cannot take it up in connection with this sales tax resolution.

Mr. FIELDING: It is pleasing to know that in the calm and agreeable atmosphere of the last day or two some light has been coming to hon. gentlemen opposite, including my hon. friend from Brantford. Hon. gentlemen opposite have within the past twenty-four hours voted that they do not want any tariff revision, and now they are giving us many reasons why the tariff ought to be revised.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The exception I take to the exemption from taxation of butter importations into this country is, I contend, a legitimate matter to discuss in connection with this resolution, which specifically mentions the importations which shall be exempt from the tax we propose to place on other articles. With reference to the importations of butter I am a little surprised that they do not amount to more than the figures given by the minister of 576,061 pounds for the month of April. Could the minister give us the importations for the month of March?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: They would be included in the total of the two millions odd for the year.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I have here a copy of the report which is sent to members from the Markets Division of the Dairy and Cold Storage Branch of the Department of Agriculture and it gives the importations into Canada from the United States of dairy products and oleomargarine. Why they should include oleomargarine with dairy products is beyond my comprehension. In France the retailer is not permitted to sell the two articles, yet you find it included with butter in the market reports of the Dairy and Cold Storage Branch of the Canadian Department of Agriculture. According to the report in question the following importations from the United States were made in the month of March:

	Lbs.
Butter	753,726
Cheese	64,243
Condensed milk	7,200
Evaporated milk	240
Buttermilk	7,660
Oleomargarine	374,672
Total	1,207,741

Now that is quite a large quantity of this stuff to be dumped into this country during one month and the effect of it, as I have already pointed out, is that the market for butter broke to the extent of over twenty-five cents a pound in one week, and I fear that before three months are over the price will be very much lower than it is to-day. Although the people in the constituency which I have the honour to represent are not much interested in the butter making industry, yet I fully appreciate the importance of butter making to this country. I believe it is really the foundation of the live stock industry of Canada. You may manufacture cheese, condense milk, buttermilk, or other things, but in so doing you get away from the real live stock business of the country. You cannot afford to feed whole milk in order to raise young stock because it is altogether too expensive. Therefore butter making, to my mind, is the most important and most essential branch of agriculture we have in the Dominion. If we are going to maintain that industry we must increase the fertility of our soil and pay more attention to the live stock industry. The butter making which is carried on in some other parts of the country, in my opinion is the most important of all. I would strongly recommend that when the proper time comes the present duty should be increased. In the meantime I would impose a tax upon the importation of all the articles mentioned that are coming into this country, and in particular on the ingredients that go into the manufacture of oleomargarine.

[Mr. Sutherland.]

Mr. FIELDING: The hon. member has half a dozen times used the expression that millions of pounds of butter are being "dumped into Canada." Now dumping has a technical meaning, we have a law against dumping, and if my hon. friend is correct that these goods have been "dumped" into Canada he has made a very serious reflection upon the Department of Customs. I do not think he is correct, I am willing to believe that the Department of Customs is enforcing the anti-dumping law. When the hon. gentleman uses the word "dumping" he is doubtless using it in the broad sense that a large quantity of the goods to which he refers has been imported. I take it for granted he is correct in that, but when he says these goods have been "dumped" into Canada I think perhaps, it expresses a meaning beyond what my hon. friend intended.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I have the letter to which I referred a few minutes ago. It is dated "New Westminster, B.C., May 11, 1921, and is addressed to myself, and reads as follows:

Dear Sir,—At the regular quarterly meeting of the District Association of Surrey and Barreston Island, United Farmers of B.C., held in Cloverdale on 10th May, I was instructed to forward you the following resolution and trust you will give it your earnest consideration.

"That at the present time in this constituency poultrymen and egg-producers, dairymen and milk-producers, are being put out of business owing to the influx of American eggs, butter and milk, and other farm produce."

"Therefore be it resolved that this District Association wish you to use your influence as our representative in the Dominion House to save the situation by supporting an increased tariff for foreign produce."

"The Canadian tariff would require to correspond with that imposed by foreign countries."

I am, yours truly,

T. W. CURRIE,
Secretary.

I have another letter here from the "B.C. Poultrymen's Co-operative Exchange" which reads as follows:

This Exchange is a co-operative of poultrymen incorporated under the British Columbia Agricultural Acts and Amending Acts, organized for the purpose of marketing the eggs produced by its members.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors held on February 24, 1921, the following resolution was unanimously adopted, and I was instructed to forward a copy of same to you and to solicit your active co-operation and support in any steps which the Government may take to increase the duty on foreign eggs being imported into Canada: "Resolved that the enormous quantities of Oriental eggs entered at the port of Vancouver during the past three months constitutes a serious menace to the Poultry Industry of Canada that the poultrymen cannot overcome unless a higher duty is placed on foreign eggs. The fact that a large quantity of these eggs go to the United States cuts no figure, as it only releases a larger quantity that has flooded the Canadian market and has lowered the price below the price of production, and if the future of this industry is to be assured and made sound, steps must be taken for its protection."

Under normal conditions, it is impossible for our poultrymen to produce eggs at a profit at less than thirty cents per dozen, while our information is that eggs are sold on the Chinese market at from four to six cents per dozen, and we believe that a duty of not less than twelve cents per dozen on shell eggs and a very heavy ad valorem duty on frozen and dried eggs is the only means of placing this foreign competitor on anything like par with our own producers. We are not seeking in any way to create anything of a monopoly, nor to boost prices beyond what is warranted by general market conditions, but we do want to have matters adjusted so that our men can produce their commodity at a profit, and maintain their standard of living without undue competition from the Oriental. We believe that a specific duty on shell eggs is preferable to an ad valorem duty because it discourages importations when our market prices are low, and permits imports should our prices become relatively high.

The poultry industry in British Columbia is now becoming one of the most important agricultural enterprises, and is, we believe, on the eve of developments during the next year such as we have never experienced before. This Association represents approximately two hundred producers and at the present time is marketing the product of 50,000 hens. Included among our members are some of the largest producers in the province, and industry generally looks to this Association to take the lead in such matters as the foregoing.

I trust, therefore, that you will do all that is in your power to bring about our desires in this matter.

Your very truly,

B.C. Poultrymen's Co-operative Exchange.
GEORGE E. KYLE,
Manager.

Mr. NESBITT: Does my hon. friend want a sales tax put on eggs? Of course, it is the sales tax we are dealing with.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I am speaking on a matter that was brought up by several hon. gentlemen who suggested that some kind of customs duty should be imposed on foreign produce.

Mr. NESBITT: We cannot do that here.

Mr. PEDLOW: Each egg would have to be branded under the law before being imported.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: It is going to be arranged so the hen does that.

Mr. PEDLOW: I would suggest that the Minister of Finance supply the hens interested with a rubber stamp attachment.

Mr. FIELDING: I did not want to raise a point of order against my hon. friend from New Westminster so I allowed him to read his letter. But evidently he has made a mistake. He should have produced this in the Budget debate before he voted that the tariff was right.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle): We have spent two full weeks' discussing free trade and protection, but our high protectionist friends on the other side do not seem to be satisfied yet.

Mr. NESBITT: Do not let us prolong the Budget discussion.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle): As my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's has said, they did not want to revise the tariff, but now apparently they are bent on revising it. They did not vote properly the other day; they made a mistake, as they admit themselves, and should have voted on the other side. There may be some farmers throughout the Dominion who are anxious to raise their prices by protection so that the unemployed workingmen may have to pay more for their food, but our farmers generally want protection only from the protected interests. We have had some remarks made that should receive consideration, and it seems to me that these other things are thrown into distract attention. I should like to know from the minister whether there is anything in the point raised by my hon. friend from Brant. I do not know that I grasped exactly the way in which he suggested that our manufacturers of binder twine would have to pay one and a half cent more than the importer. If there is anything in that I think it should receive attention.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would submit, Mr. Chairman, that we will have to consider any further tariff discussion on this sales tax as out of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I believe there is a great deal in the point raised by the hon. member for Brant, and I agree very largely with what he has said. I shall have the same pleasure in taking it up as I shall have in considering what my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's suggested in connection with fishing boats, with a view to taking action.

Mr. ROBB: The minister has promised to reconsider the tax on the lumber interests. May I suggest in that connection that he take into consideration this feature?

If it is desirable to exempt from the sales tax lumber that goes into the construction of ships, would it not be well to reconsider upon what basis we should tax lumber going into the construction of houses, barns and stables?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There is a further amendment I wish to move before the clause is adopted, Mr. Chairman, and although it is fairly long it is very simple. Before the basis of taxation was arrived at and adopted submissions were received as to the best methods of raising the required revenue from witnesses in every walk of life, from boards of trade and kindred commercial associations and from farmers' institutes who appeared before the Tariff Commission. One of the things which was urged from time to time was the general turnover tax, and in that connection the desire was expressed that book-keeping troubles should be saved and that the tax should not be shown separately upon the invoice. Since the resolution has been brought down on looking further into the matter and having particular regard to the question of checking revenues, we have come to the conclusion that we had better stick to the law as we had it before. Taking that course, I move:

That the following words be added after the word "cent" on third line of page 8 of Resolutions:

"that the purchaser shall be furnished with a written invoice of any sale, which invoice shall state separately the amount of such tax to at least the extent of one and one-half per cent but such tax must not be included in the manufacturer's, producer's or wholesaler's costs on which profit is calculated; and the tax shall be payable by the purchaser to the wholesaler, producer or manufacturer at the time of such sale, and by the wholesaler, producer or manufacturer to His Majesty in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed, and such wholesaler, producer or manufacturer shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five hundred dollars, if such payments are not made, and in addition shall be liable to a penalty equal to double the amount of the excise duties unpaid; that the term "duty paid value" means the value of the article as it would be determined for the purpose of calculating an ad valorem duty upon the importation of same into Canada under the laws relating to the Customs and the Customs Tariff whether such article be in fact subject to ad valorem or other duty or not, and in addition the amount of the Customs duties, if any, payable thereon".

Mr. PEDLOW: I have in my hand a clipping from the Ottawa Journal of May 18, 1921, which reads as follows:

Wholesalers oppose the Sales Tax Change—Want Levy Shown Separately on the Invoices.

Montreal, May 17.—In connection with protests against the proposals of the Minister of Finance, as outlined in the Budget, the branches of the local Board of Trade have been busy passing resolutions of dissatisfaction and forwarding them to Sir Henry Drayton. In addition to the Wholesale Grocers' Guild and the Produce Merchants' Association, the Montreal Wholesale Drygoods Association held a meeting to-day, and adopted a resolution supporting the principle of setting out on the invoice the amount of sales tax, apart from the costs, and directed their secretary to send copies of this resolution to the drygoods sections of the Boards of Trade of Toronto, Winnipeg, Quebec and Halifax for further consideration and action. A meeting of the lumber association to consider similar questions will be held here to-morrow.

It would appear that this change has been made in response to the protests received from the sources indicated in this despatch. Now, I am distinctly opposed to this change. I may be out of harmony with the wishes of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada, just as I was out of harmony a year ago with the resolution presented to the Minister of Finance by that association. If the minister had listened to the suggestions which I made then, he would not only have saved himself a considerable amount of trouble but he would have saved the retail trade of this country an enormous amount of worry, annoyance and dissatisfaction. The statement which I made on that occasion will be found on page 3341 of Hansard, session of 1920, volume 4. On that occasion I said:

The Minister of Finance has decided on a certain method of collecting these taxes. It does not meet with my approval and I would suggest some other method, but he is the man in charge of the ship and he is responsible.

Further on I said:

We have to raise the money, and if the Minister of Finance has decided that this is the best way in which to raise it, we have no alternative but to submit and try it out.

Further on in the discussion I said:

I should like to persuade him to try another method, but I understand that is impossible.

I may add that during that discussion I quoted from a resolution presented to the minister by the Retail Merchants' Association, drygoods section, endorsing the principle of collecting the revenue through the medium of the luxury tax. This resolution had been endorsed by the association and presented to the minister on the occasion of a meeting with him at the Chateau Laurier. Now, the House had scarcely prorogued after the session of 1920 when protests started to come in from all directions, and from that day until the luxury tax was abolished in December the minister must have had an interesting time of it because of the protests which came from all parts of Canada. I believed then that for an emergency the collection of a sales tax would be the best way of raising revenue. My suggestion then, as it is to-day, was the placing of a one per cent sales tax on each turnover. The present proposal is too involved: there is a one and one-half per cent tax on turn-

5 p.m. over from manufacturer and wholesaler to retailer; a two and one-half per cent tax on sales direct from the manufacturer to the retailer or consumer, a three per cent tax along another line, and, in addition, a four per cent tax on goods imported direct by retailer or consumer. Now, this will entail a great deal of checking and an enormous amount of work on the part of the importer as well as on the part of the Inland Revenue Department. If a simple tax of one per cent had been levied by the minister on each turnover he would have received as much money from the consumer, who in the final analysis must pay this tax—in fact he might have received more. I further want to go on record as favouring the principle of collecting this tax from the seller on each turnover. The principle adopted in this resolution means that the purchaser, not the seller, will have to pay the tax in each case. In my judgment the method I propose would simplify the whole system of collection and produce the returns aimed at by the Budget. I notice that in his Budget the minister has made a statement with regard to the retail trade in this country which in my judgment is not a fair statement, although I am sure the minister did not wish to be unfair to any section of the community. Here is what he said, as it appears on page 15 of the copies of the Budget speech which have been printed and distributed:

> In practical administration, though, in view of the fact that after careful survey it has been established that books are not kept in many retail stores—

I have discussed this subject with many of the men who are doing field work for the Income Tax Department, and while they admit that some retail merchants do not keep a set of books by double entry or by some other approved system, still there is hardly one that they meet in their entire travels, that does not keep a record of his sales. I should like the minister to bear that point in mind. Therefore if you establish a sales tax, you have no difficulty about a man keeping a record of his sales, so that the difficulty suggested my this statement is not as great as it would seem if looked at from the viewpoint from which the minister looked at it. If I am correct—and I honestly believe I am—that a very small minority of those carrying on retail businesses of one class or another will be found who do not keep records of their sales, it should be a simple matter to collect a revenue on the basis of a sales or turnover tax. I am informed by very intelligent men in the service of the Income Tax Department that this is the only basis upon which, in many cases, they are able to work out an income tax return. Therefore, if they are able to work out an income tax on the basis of the record of sales of merchants, it should be a very simple matter for the department to collect a sales tax of one per cent on the turnover. A turnover tax of one per cent would be paid, in the first instance, by the importer or manufacturer, then a turnover tax of one per cent by the wholesaler or jobber, and, last, a turnover tax of one per cent by the retailer or distributor. I know a system of that kind is and has been in operation since 1905 in the Philippine Islands, and they collect a turnover tax along the lines that I suggest, but they make it apply rather from a certain amount of sales or turnover upwards. That is to say, a firm doing a certain amount of business during the year is exempted or is not bothered with, because the amount is too small; they do not look to firms of that kind for a sales tax. I feel satisfied, since the minister has committed himself to the proposition, that, as last year, he will go on with it; but I can assure him now, as I assured him a year ago, that he will have no end of difficulty, and that the men in the retail merchants' associations who are at present supporting him will be the first ones to turn round on him before the year has progressed very far.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Steele): Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. ROBB: The minister promised some consideration to the different lumber items.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I said that I would consider the matter just as I am considering what was urged by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) in regard to boats.

Mr. FIELDING: As regards the question of the amendment which my hon. friend has moved, I can understand the argument that the tax, whatever it might be, should be shown on the invoice. Whether that is wise or not, is a matter to be argued. But if a tax is to be shown, the actual tax should be shown. The taxes are 1½, 2½, 3 and 4 per cent, while according to the amendment moved by the minister, no tax except the one of 1½ per cent shall be shown on the invoice. If any reference is to be made to the tax, why should the whole tax not be shown?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This follows the principle of last year. One-half of the tax may be absorbed; the rest of it must be shown.

Mr. FIELDING: The fact that a thing was done last year is not conclusive that it is wise. Why not show the real tax? why are the people to be deceived by the exhibition on the invoice of a tax of 1½ per cent, when the real tax is 4 per cent?

Mr. HAROLD: The real reason for that is that the wholesaler charges the retailer 1½ per cent, and a manufacturer shipping directly to a retailer wants the privilege of being able to charge exactly the same rate as the wholesaler. The invoice bears the same rate; but when it comes to a matter of putting on the sales tax, the jobber has the advantage in so far as he can show on the invoice a tax of only 1½ per cent. That is the reason why this method was adopted, and it has worked out quite satisfactorily. I believe, if the matter is left in the way in which the minister has it, it will continue to work out all right. In my experience, I do not remember seeing an invoice on which the actual amount of the tax was not shown; but there may be instances where a business is figured very closely, and where the manufacturer or the original producer may wish to have that privilege of selling as cheaply as the wholesaler.

Mr. FIELDING: I have difficulty in understanding why the actual tax is not to be shown. If there is any point in showing the tax on the invoice, the whole tax should be shown. The matter may have been discussed last year, and it may have escaped my memory. What the hon. member (Mr. Harold) says is that the manufacturer or dealer may not wish it to be known what the tax really is. I do not think that is a good reason. If there are good reasons why the tax should be shown on the invoice, the statement should be an honest one as regards the tax that is paid.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The whole idea of it is that we are trying to deal fairly with both classes of business activities. There are manufacturers and wholesalers. Some manufacturers sell directly; some use wholesalers. If a manufacturer was obliged to show the whole of the tax on the invoice, he would be showing a tax twice as great as that which the wholesaler has the right to show. The transaction is entirely with people who understand the business; this is not a question of dealing with the public at all as there is no tax upon sales from the retailer. This is merely in the trade, and it enables manufacturers to sell directly if they so desire without selling through middlemen, allowing them to pay, at their own expense, part of the tax which they are not showing.

Mr. ROBB: Certain commodities are exempt from taxation. Let us say that a mill is turning out cement. Cement is exempt, is it not?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No.

Mr. ROBB: Flour is exempt. Supposing a car of 500 bags of flour is going out. The approximate value of that at present would be $2,500; but there is a tax on the container, and the mill, under this proposed amendment, will be compelled to show 1½ per cent on the invoice. That at the value of bags to-day would represent approximately 75 cents. I am satisfied that flour millers will not object to pay the tax; but would it not be more economical if they were to pay it when they buy the bags? Why compel a mill to keep a bookkeeper to look after this, because it will require practically a special man to look after and total this all up, and it will involve additional expense upon the department to look after it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is entirely optional with the miller what he does. He may sell containers or he may not. The usual way of doing business is to make a lump charge for your commodity.

Mr. NESBITT: Including the bags?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes, and in that case there is no tax on it. If the miller is going to make a separate charge for a container, there is a tax.

Mr. ROBB: The minister rules that it is not necessary that the miller should show this tax on his invoice.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Not in the flour business.

Mr. NESBITT: Not unless he charges for the containers. If you invoice me a carload of bran, you invoice me that at a certain price per ton; you do not charge for the bags separately. If you do it in that way there is no percentage charge.

Mr. ROBB: I understood from the minister's statement a moment ago that as regards anything on which there was a tax, the man must show the tax on the invoice.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It depends upon the sale in each case.

Mr. NESBITT: He pays his sales tax when he receives the bags to the fellow who makes them, but he absorbs that tax.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I notice that cream, butter, cheese, milk and so forth are mentioned in the amendment, but not condensed milk, or powdered milk. Might not those be included?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We will consider that.

Mr. DENIS:: I think it is hardly fair for the minister to patch up this resolution in the way he is doing by amendment after amendment of which no notice has been given. I have been trying to get a copy of the last amendment, but have not been able to do so, and even if I should receive a copy, it would be difficult at this moment to discuss it intelligently without having seen it before. I have no doubt the minister is acting in good faith, but I do not think he is doing justice to the committee in bringing forward amendments in this way. Copies of the amendment should have been distributed in advance.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Here is a copy of the amendment for my hon. friend. It will be just the same method as last year.

Mr. DENIS: The amendment is a long one, of twenty-five lines. How can an hon. member express an opinion on such an important amendment that he now sees for the first time? I shall have to discuss the amendment as I understand it at the moment, but I say that it is not fair to the committee. If I understand the amendment rightly, we are reverting to the method of last year in collecting the tax.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It will be the same plan as last year.

Mr. DENIS: In the Budget the minister proposed a different plan from that of last year, but now he is going to revert to the method of last year. What about the public and the trade who are interested in this Bill, and who have been informed by the minister in his Budget speech that the plan of collection is going to be changed, and that the tax would be imposed at the point of production and the point of entry. Now the minister comes along and changes his plan altogether. I must say that I am not favourable to this sales tax, but apart from the principle, I was favourable to the method of collection which was announced by the minister in his Budget this year. Now he says that that method will not be adopted, but that he will revert to the plan of last year. I have nothing more to say at the moment, except that it is not fair to the committee or the trade and the public generally to change the method and pass the resolution without any more notice than has been given this afternoon.

Mr. PEDLOW: I read an extract from the Ottawa Journal a few moments ago, and I intended to make some further comments on that feature of the situation. In my judgment the minister has made this change in order to comply with the requests of the wholesale trade, the manufacturers, and other big interests in Montreal. Just a few days prior to the day on which the item I read appeared, there was another item in the press to the effect that the wholesale trade were at logger-heads regarding the collection of this tax, that some of them were absorbing it, and others were not. They were using the tax as a lever for inducing business. In order to combine upon a plan, all those interested in this matter met together and forwarded resolutions to the Minister of Finance. It would seem to me in view of the decision arrived at now, and in view of this amendment providing that the method of collection shall be the same as last year, that the minister has decided—shall I say?—to pull the chestnuts out of the fire for the wholesalers and manufacturers of the country. That is, in my judgment, the real reason for the decision that has been arrived at.

Mr. ROBB: The first clause says:

> Provided also that the taxes specified in this section shall not apply to sales or importations of,—
> Bread;—flour and oatmeal, when in packages weighing not less than forty-eight pounds each;

My interpretation of that is that all flour put up in packages of forty-eight pounds and over is exempt.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That has all been struck out.

Mr. ROBB: All flour is exempt?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes.

Mr. ROBB: There is another matter. I want a ruling as to where this tax will apply on lumber or any of these other articles. Will it apply at the point of shipment or at the point of delivery? I think it is important that the country should have a ruling on that at once, because it will make a material difference to the general trade of the country.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The same practice will be followed as in fixing valuations of imports. It entirely depends on the invoices.

Mr. HAROLD: Coming back to this matter I spoke of before, I could not hear the minister when he was making his statement regarding the fibre question, but I understand that he is in favour of correcting the injustice that is done under the regulations. There is one point I should like to have made clear, and that is: how will the importers stand with regard to any duties collected?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That will be quite all right.

Mr. CAHILL: Following up what my hon. friend from Brant has said, I notice that he brought up this same question last year. He said (Hansard, June 16, 1920, page 3623):

> Mr. Harold: Is the Minister of Finance going to add to the list of exemptions the materials and supplies that enter into the manufacture of binder twine?
> Sir Henry Drayton: As the fibre which is used in the manufacture of binder twine is the important item, and as we are not adding in any way to the burdens of agriculture, I move to add to the list of exemptions after the words "heating purposes" in the amendment to paragraph (d) of resolution 7, the words "fibre for use only in the manufacture of binder twine."

I would like to ask the minister what is the objection to taking that action now?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There is no objection at all. As I said, I am in sympathy with it, but there are other fibre twine essentials which we have been asked to consider practically on the same grounds, and we wanted to deal with the whole matter at the same time. I cheerfully give again to my hon. friend the undertaking I have already given, that this material the hon. gentleman wants exempted will be exempted by Order in Council, and the exemption made retroactive.

Mr. DECHENE: Sub-section 4 exempts prayer books, hymn books, bibles, gospels, parts of bibles, tracts, etc. Now, Catholics do not use bibles very extensively, but they do use missals and some other books of that kind. I do not see missals mentioned in this list. It may be stated that they are covered in the term "prayer books," but I think the matter should be put beyond any possibility of question.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There can be no room for question on that. Of course they are exempt. However, if my hon. friend desires any greater particularity, I do not object to adding the word "missal".

Mr. DECHENE: I think the word missal ought to be added.

Mr. PEDLOW: I suggest adding, after the word "tracts," the words "and books", —religious tracts and books.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That would be too broad.

Resolution agreed to.

Mr. ROBB: Before the resolution is reported, I understood that the minister had promised the member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), that he would take into consideration certain exemptions in regard to lumber for ships. I also pointed out that inasmuch as he has already made provision for the exemption of lumber going into certain ships, it was an unfair discrimination to tax lumber used in the construction of houses, barns and stables. The minister promised some consideration to that matter.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The matter brought up by the member for Shelburne and Queen's is one which will require some little consideration, in order properly to define what is to be done. I undertook that the matter would be considered by Council at an early date, and I shall be pleased at the same time to consider the question raised by my hon. friend (Mr. Robb).

Mr. DECHENE: Will the minister consider the advisability of including beads and crucifixes in the category of goods used in prayer, and exempting these articles? They are not used for commercial purposes, and I do not see what objection there could be to exempting them.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We will also consider that in Council.

Mr. DENIS: I wish to go on record as being opposed to a tax on lumber. Lumber is a natural product of the land, and this resolution clearly establishes the principle that natural products of the land are to be exempt. The Minister of Finance will, no doubt, say that this is true, and that he is not taxing natural products; and we find that logs and round unmanufactured timber are not to be taxed. But I would point out that lumber, even after it is sawn, is a natural product of the land, and should not be taxed, because 95 per cent of the lumber used must be sawn before anything can be done with it. I see no reason therefore why lumber should be taxed any more than products of the mines or of the sea. We must not lose sight of the fact that in Canada to-day there are half a million people without homes, and the general try at the present time is for houses, and more houses. This Parliament has voted an appropriation and has passed a law in regard to a housing scheme. Every one admits that the housing problem in Canada to-day is a most acute one, and yet we are taxing the very essential that goes to the building of the people's homes. I do not see any distinction in the resolution between the large and small saw-mill, and as between the lumber used by the small settler or farmer, and lumber used in trade and lumber sawn or manufactured for export. There are in this country any number of small mills which saw lumber for the use of the settler and the farmer, and I do not think it is right to put a tax of 3 per cent on the lumber which the farmer takes to these mills to be sawn for domestic purposes. The poorer classes are in such great need of houses to-day that nothing should be done to hamper people in building homes. The new tax should not be imposed on lumber, which is one of the principle articles used in the building of houses. At present the building trade is almost stagnant throughout the country. It was in the same state last year and the year before. What is the reason? We have come to the point where labour has decreased in certain places, and now, I am informed on very good authority, building material has also decreased 20 per cent since last year. When these other materials are being decreased I do not think it is right for the Government to impose a tax that will be burdensome to those engaged in the building trade, especially for the reason that it will tend to still furather restrict the possibility of people of the poorer classes getitng dwellings at anything like a reasonable rate. Furthermore this tax on sawn lumber is really a tax on the export lumber trade, such as is not imposed in the case of any other commodity.

Mr. CALDER: There is no tax on the export of lumber.

Mr. DENIS: I understand that when a log has been sawn the owner of the mill is liable to a tax.

Mr. CALDER: The tax is paid when the lumber is sold for internal consumption not for export.

Mr. DENIS: I am glad to hear that.

Mr. CALDER: At the end of the clause there is a provision that the tax shall not be payable on goods exported.

Mr. DENIS: I have one or two observations to make with regard to the sales tax. Such a tax imposed on the poor as well as on the rich is not just to the former. A sales tax of three or four per cent means practically nothing to a rich man, but such a tax on the commodities used by the poor is a very heavy burden. For that reason I am not in favour of it. I notice that in the United States Senate Senator Smoot has introduced a Bill providing for a sales tax of 1 per cent which has evoked much condemnation. Now, if a sales tax of 1 per cent in the United States is regarded as bearing heavily on the poor, what must be the effect of the imposition of a sales tax of 3 or 4 per cent in this country?

Mr. DECHENE: I notice there is a provision that the excise taxes specified in the section "shall not be payable on goods exported, or on sales of goods made to the order of each individual customer by a business which sells exclusively by retail." How would that operate in a case of this kind? Take a stove manufacturer who sells goods by retail all over the country. A jobber comes to his shop and says "I want 100 stoves from you and I would like my name put on those stoves." Will there be a sales tax in the case of such an order as that?

Mr. CALDER: Such a transaction would be covered by the regulations that will be applied under this section. My hon. friend will notice the wording "by a business which sells exclusively by retail, under regulations by the Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue." Any practice of that kind would be stopped by the regulations because such is not the intention of the law. On the other hand I think the Minister of Finance has already given an illustration applicable to the case of a retail merchant. Where individuals go in and get suits of clothes individually, it is not intended that the tax should apply.

Resolutions reported, read a second time and concurred in.

Sir Henry Drayton moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 204 to amend the Special War Revenue Act, 1915.

Mr. ROBB: Is it made perfectly clear that this resolution has been passed as amended?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Amendments to a resolution are never reported.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

JUVENILE DELINQUENTS' ACT AMENDMENT

On motion of Right Hon. C. J. Doherty (Minister of Justice) Bill No. 157 to amend the Juvenile Delinquents' Act was read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon—Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

On the title:

Mr. McKENZIE: I wish to say to the Minister in connection with this Bill that there is one thing which I take exception to,—that it is to be brought into force by proclamation. This is a very inconvenient procedure and should be discouraged as much as possible. The proclamations appear in the Canada Gazette, which is read by about one-tenth of one per cent of our people, and even members of my own profession very often do not know when they read a statute that is to come into force by proclamation whether it is actually in force or not. I submit that any criminal law should come into force by the statute itself.

Mr. DOHERTY: I agree on general principles with what my hon. friend said, but this is a special provision. It is not the Act itself that is to come in force on proclamation, but only one section, and that section has to do solely with the age at which a person may be treated as a juvenile delinquent. It is not creating any new crime, it is merely providing that a larger class of boys and girls may be treated as juvenile delinquents. The special reason for taking this course is that it has been represented to us that our present reformatories—which are mostly provincial institutions—are not now prepared to take in this additional class as between the ages of 16 and 18, and that until proper arrangements are made it might prove very detrimental to the younger children to be brought in contact with these older and possibly more hardened offenders. We made a similar amendment the other day to the Prisons and Reformatories' Act with the same provision. I quite recognize the force of the hon. gentleman's objection if this were a penal provision, but, as I have said, it applies only to a matter of procedure.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CANADA EVIDENCE ACT AMENDMENT

On motion of Right Hon. C. J. Doherty (Minister of Justice) Bill No. 156 to amend the Canada Evidence Act was read the second time, considered in committee, read the third time and passed.

STATISTICS ACT AMENDMENT

On motion of Right Hon. Arthur Meighen (Prime Minister) Bill No. 141, to amend the Statistics Act, was read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon.—Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

On section 1—schedules that may be sent post free.

Mr. McKENZIE: I have had some complaints from the Health Department of Nova Scotia which I brought to the notice of the Health Department here, and, I think, the Post Office Department also. The reports sent to Ottawa by the Provincial Health Department were formerly sent free of postage, and I understand that under the law of last year that privilege has been done away with. If we provided under this Bill that these reports might be sent free of postage, I think it would meet the public view.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Act of last year was intended to be a relief to the Post Office Department from a great many encumbrances on its revenue. My thought was that it was intended that these health reports should not be exempt from paying postage. The matter affected by this Bill was also last year included in the list of that not exempted, as was, indeed, everything coming from Provincial Governments. A tremendous amount of revenue was lost and all manner of stuff was sent out that was wasted simply because it went free. The whole subject was reviewed, and the matter was put, as we thought, on a business basis. The hon. gentleman may possibly be right as to the health reports, but I fancy that it is a case of services rendered the province by the Federal Government, rather than service rendered by us to the province, and they should hardly object to paying postage on them. But here we have a case where service is rendered by the provinces to us, and I understand that is why the Minister of Trade and Commerce felt he could not continue the rule of having them pay postage. Anyway, if my hon. friend were right the change would have to be made by amendment to the Health Act.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

OTTAWA IMPROVEMENT COMMISSION

On motion of Right Hon. Arthur Meighen (Prime Minister) Bill number 135, to amend the Ottawa Improvement Commission Act, 1919, was read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

INSPECTION AND SALE ACT AMENDMENT

HAY AND STRAW INSPECTION

On motion of Right Hon. Arthur Meighen (Prime Minister) Bill No. 159 to amend the Inspection and Sale Act (Hay and Straw Inspection) was read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time, and passed.

OLEOMARGARINE ACT AMENDMENT

On motion of Right Hon. Arthur Meighen (Prime Minister) the House went into committee to consider the following resolution, Mr. Boivin in the Chair:

Resolved, That it is expedient to repeal section three of the Oleomargarine Act, 1919, chapter 24 of the statutes of 1919 (second session) as amended by section one of chapter 30 of the statutes of 1920, and to provide in lieu thereof that notwithstanding anything contained in the Dairy Industry Act, 1914, chapter seven of the statutes of 1914, or in any other statute or law, the manufacture in and importation of oleomargarine into Canada, and the offering for sale, and the having in possession for sale of oleomargarine, shall be permitted.

Mr. ROBB: As representing an agricultural constituency, and having in mind the great reduction in the price of dairy products—butter and cheese—I can see no longer a necessity for the free admission of oleomargarine into this country. Formerly it was the policy of this country, for the benefit of the dairy industries, to keep out oleomargarine. The producers of dairy foods recognized, during the war, that butter was very high, and serious objection was not raised then to the admission of oleomargarine. But it is well known that oleomargarine, on account of the way in which it is put up and its appearance, is often substituted and sold for butter. For that reason, the dairy interests of this country believe that the time has now arrived when they should oppose the admission of oleomargarine into Canada, and I will advise the Minister of Agriculture that when the Bill comes up for its second reading I will oppose it.

Mr. DENIS: The hon. member for New Westminister (Mr. McQuarrie) was making a speech in favour of the protection of eggs in British Columbia. If he were here he would support me when I say that, when butter has gone down 20 cents a pound within a month or two, it is no time to allow the admission into this country of oleomargarine. For my part I wish to place myself on record as being opposed to the resolution.

Mr. LEGER: In the past, a similar resolution was before the House. I opposed it then, and to-day I am more opposed to this resolution, because the admission of oleomargarine into Canada will be hurtful to the dairy interests of our country. Until lately I did not know anything about oleomargarine, although I had heard a great deal about it. Lately I purchased some and tasted it. There is no flavour to it, and it is not a class of goods that should be used by anyone. On that account, and because of the inferiority of the goods I am opposed to the resolution.

Mr. DECHENE: This afternoon we have had a great deal of discussion in regard to many articles of food and this and that, and now the Government is asking that oleomargarine may be sold in this country. As my hon. friend (Mr. Denis) has said, the price of butter has dropped 20 cents per pound or more within the last month or so, with the prospect of a still further drop in price. When butter is selling at such a low figure, it is not necessary to allow oleomargarine to be sold in this country. That was alright during the war when butter was high and the export of butter was at the highest point. As the matter stands now, we exported very little butter during 1920, and our exports this spring have been pretty low. Our wholesale houses are filled to the roof with butter, and it would be very unwise at this time to allow again the importation and sale of oleomargarine. I wish to place myself on record as being opposed to the resolution.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I suggest that we have an understanding that the passing of this resolution in no way commits the House to passing the Bill. We are simply advancing the matter a stage.

Resolution agreed to, on division, and concurred in.

Mr. MEIGHEN thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 205, to amend the Oleomargarine Act, 1919, founded on the resolution.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

GRADING OF DAIRY PRODUCE

On motion of Right Hon. Arthur Meighen (Prime Minister), the House went into committee to consider the following resolution, Mr. Boivin in the Chair:

Resolved, That it is expedient to bring in a measure to regulate the grading of Dairy Produce, and to provide,—

1. That the Governor in Council may make regulations for the grading of dairy produce, that is to say, butter, cheese and other food products manufactured from milk intended for export; for the establishment or designation of grading stores; for the issuing of grader's certificates; for the special marking by manufacturers of packages of dairy produce intended to be graded; for the establishment of standards, definitions and grades for dairy produce; and, for the imposition of fees for the grading of dairy produce.

2. That the Governor in Council may by regulation prescribe the time when any regulation made under the provisions of the proposed legislation shall come into operation, the particular kind or kinds of dairy produce to which it shall apply, and the part or parts of Canada within which it shall be in force.

3. That there may be appointed such dairy produce graders and other officers as may be deemed necessary for the carrying out of the provisions of the proposed legislation and of the regulations made thereunder.

4. That the Governor in Council may by regulation provide for an appeal to the Dominion Dairy and Cold Storage Commissioner, or his representative, from a decision of a Dairy Produce Grader as to the classification or grading of any particular lot of dairy produce.

5. That penalties may be imposed for the violation of any provision of the proposed legislation or of any regulation made thereunder.

Mr. DENIS: This resolution may be all right; but it is very wide and vague in its terms, and it should not be passed when, according to the rules, the committee is not supposed to sit. The committee is very slim, and there may be members who are not in the chamber at present, who would like to oppose the resolution.

[Mr. Dechene.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: The resolution may be called "carried on division." There is this extra precaution in this case. The resolution has, of course, to be followed by a Bill, the same as the previous resolution; but this Bill would, I presume, have to go before the Committee on Agriculture, and there, as well as in the House, and in committee again, it will be threshed out, so that we are taking no risks.

Mr. ROBB: If as suggested by the Prime Minister, the resolution is passed on division, this time I would be compelled to vote with the Prime Minister. This matter has previously been before the Committee on Agriculture and it has been pretty well threshed out in that committee. While objection was taken to certain features of it, I think the Minister of Agriculture and the Dairy Commissioner satisfied the Committee on Agriculture that nothing would be done that would be of any injury, and that this measure would be of advantage to the dairy industry. As a representative of a dairying constituency, I am not opposed to the introduction of this measure, but I will reserve the right to determine my attitude when I see the Bill.

Mr. McKENZIE: By passing this resolution, we commit ourselves, I suppose, to the principle of it. Is it the intention to make any new appointments or to impose any further burdens upon the country by reason of this legislation?

Mr. MEIGHEN: If any new appointments are necessary, they will be in the nature of assistance to the country instead of burdens, but I must confess that I do not know.

Mr. McKENZIE: That is the trouble of rushing through the business of the department. The minister (Mr. Tolmie) was here a few minutes ago, and he certainly is within call somewhere. He is not here now, although he should be here in order to give explanations.

Resolution agreed to, on division.

Mr. Meighen thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 206, to regulate the grading of dairy produce, founded on the resolution.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

On the motion of Right Hon. Mr. Meighen the House adjourned at 6.18 p.m.

Monday, May 23, 1921.

The House met at Two o'clock.

Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice) presented the report of the Special Committee appointed to consider Bill No. 12, to amend and consolidate the law relating to Copyright.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton) moved:

That owing to the late period of the session all the Bills reported this day by the Select Standing Committees on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines, Banking and Commerce, and Miscellaneous Private Bills, be placed on the Order Paper for consideration in Committee of the Whole this day.

Motion agreed to.

JUDGE SNIDER'S REPORT

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (leader of the Opposition): I would like to draw the attention of the Government to an answer that was made by the right hon. the Prime Minister to a question that I asked on Friday last in regard to Judge Snider's report. The question and answer were as follows:

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King (leader of the Opposition): Is the Prime Minister now in a position to say when Judge Snider's report will be brought down?

Right Hon. Arthur Meighen (Prime Minister): I have heard nothing at all about the report. As far as I know, the report, after the final sitting, is not in. I am informed just now that it is not in.

I do not know whether my right hon. friend is seeking to get under cover through the use of the words "after the final sitting." I believe that Judge Snider made a report some two months ago, which was approved by Order in Council some fifteen days ago. That is the report to which I have reference, and what I should like to know is why that report has not been brought down to the House. If my right hon. friend is talking about some other report, it is not what I have in mind. What I should like to have brought down is the report that was made some two months ago by Judge Snider, and which has been approved by Order in Council.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE FOSTER (Minister of Trade and Commerce): That matter has been in the hands of the Prime Minister, and if he were here, he would be able to give my hon. friend the answer. I will inquire into the matter and let my hon. friend know in the course of the day, if I can get the information.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS

Bill No. 202 (from the Senate), for the relief of Agnes Robertson.—Mr. Fripp.

Bill No. 203 (from the Senate), for the relief of Hilda May Freeman.—Mr. Mowat.

ALPHONSE LeMOYNE deMARTIGNY

The House again in Committee on Bill No. 120 (from the Senate), for the relief of Alphonse LeMoyne de Martigny.—Mr. Ross.—Mr Boivin in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN: When this Bill was last before the committee, clause 1 had been read and was under consideration, when postponement thereof was moved by Mr. Stein.

On section 1—marriage dissolved:

Mr. STEIN: I have a few remarks to offer against the adoption of this Bill by the committee. I am sorry to feel compelled to delay the House, but I think it is my duty to oppose the Bill on grounds that I shall offer presently to the committee.

I have read very carefully the evidence that was submitted to the divorce committee of the Senate on this Bill, and in my humble opinion there is not sufficient ground for granting a divorce. Contrary to my custom, I took the trouble to read the testimony in a few other divorce cases, and I found that in every other case much stronger evidence was adduced than was offered in this particular case. In no other case has a divorce been granted on so little evidence as in the present case. Now, I have no special interest in this matter, but I am informed that this is the first time that a divorce has been granted in the province of Quebec, from which I come, and I believe I speak for my colleagues, who share my views on this question, when I say that we do not want this Bill to pass this committee without our humble protest, whatever the result may be. From a legal standpoint, I do not think there is sufficient evidence to warrant the granting of a divorce. It was shown, in two or three actions that came before the Superior Court of the province of Quebec in the district of Montreal, between the same parties, that the suppliant, even if his allegations were true, was far more guilty than he alleges his wife to be. But his wife, before the Superior Court of Quebec, has formally and absolutely denied the accusations against her. I have here extracts from the deposition of the husband, Alphonse Le-Moyne de Martigny, given before the Superior Court in Montreal on February 22nd, 1919. I shall read from the evidence:

Q. Do you keep house?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Alone?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. There is no woman with you?
A. Yes, to keep my house.
Q. What is her name?
Objected to this proof as illegal.
Q. Do you refuse to answer?
A. Absolutely.
Q. Do you swear that you do not live maritally with this woman?
A. It depends on the interpretation of the word "maritally.'
Q. That you live as man and wife with her?
A. What do you mean by that?
Q. You must know, I am not obliged to explain.
A. If you ask the question, I shall answer.
Q. You cannot answer the question?
A. I do not know your interpretation.
Q. You do not know what it is to live maritally with a woman?
A. Not from the legal point of view.
Q. You have travelled with this woman?
A. Am I obliged to answer? that is what I want to know.
Q. Do you refuse to answer?
A. No, sir.
Q. You have travelled with her?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Where did you go with her?
A. To the United States.
Q. Did you go to Europe?
A. I refuse to answer. I have travelled seven (7) months.
Q. Always with the same woman?
A. No, sir.
Q. You had another?
A. Certainly.
Q. How long have you been with this one, the one that you are living with?
A. I refuse to answer.
Q. How long have you been with the other?
A. Which other?
Q. I do not know. Do you refuse to answer?
A. It is impossible for me to answer that. I do not know which.
Q. You have had many?
A. Naturally.
Q. Many?
A. Many.
Q. Here, at Montreal, have you told us how long you have been with this woman?
A. At Montreal, since 1915.

Here are extracts from the evidence of the wife, taken on the 11th day of March, 1919, at Montreal:

Q. You live with Mr. V. S. Perry?
A. Mr. V. S. Perry boards with me.
Q. Is it not true that you have been living in adultery with him during the last five (5) years?
A. It is false, absolutely false.
Q. Have you ever had carnal relations with Mr. Perry?
A. Never.

[Mr. Stein.]

The evidence goes on to say:

Q. Now, have you ever told your husband that you were living with Mr. Perry?
A. No, never.

The husband, before the Divorce Committee, stated that his wife had admitted to him having committed adultery. Of course, he does not use those words, but he alleges that she has admitted, to him, having lived with the man in question. Before the Divorce Committee two witnesses, a sewing girl and a man of 84, a janitor, appeared on behalf of the suppliant, the husband, but neither of them was able to prove anything definite. They said they had never witnessed anything that would make them believe that Mrs. de Martigny and Mr. Perry were living as man and wife. On April 23, 1919, judgment was rendered by the Superior Court at Montreal, holding that de Martigny had not proven adultery on the part of his wife. In the month of June, 1920, an action was again taken in the Superior Court by the mother of de Martigny to obtain the custody of the minor child, a little girl of eight years. Again the court held that adultery with Perry had not been proven and refused to give the custody of the child to the grandmother. In two instances Mrs. Perry was allowed alimony by the Superior Court—$75 a month in the first instance, which was increased to $125 a month on the second petition.

Mr. MICHAUD: Was it not Mrs. de Martigny who was granted the alimony?

Mr. STEIN: Yes.

Mr. MICHAUD: I think you said Mrs. Perry.

Mr. STEIN: It was a mistake on my part; it was Mrs. de Martigny who obtained the alimony. Now, in the action brought against Mrs. de Martigny by her husband as well as in the attempt of the suppliant's mother to obtain the custody of the child, the Superior Court ruled that no adultery had been proved against Mrs. de Martigny, and I think that if hon. gentlemen will read the evidence that was submitted to the Divorce Committee they will come to the conclusion that this is not a case in which a divorce should be granted.

Mr. PARENT: I do not need to add very much to what has been said by the last speaker. I desire, however, to call the attention of the committee to what took place before the Private Bills Committee in regard to this particular divorce Bill. At the last meeting of the committee when the present Bill was before it a gentleman named Mr. Dussault appeared. He is an attorney of Montreal and the brother-in-law of Mrs. de Martigny. He stated that he was in a position to offer further evidence showing that Mrs. de Martigny had never committed the offence charged against her, but that the man himself had committed adultery. He therefore wished the Private Bills Committee to reopen the case in order to give this evidence so that a stigma might not remain on the statutes of Canada against Mrs. de Martigny. He also stated that there is a child in the case, and that if the accused woman did not see fit or proper to appear before the Senate Committee, he, as the uncle of that child, had the right to come and bring forward evidence showing that the mother of the child is a good and honest woman, and that she is not guilty of adultery although the Senate committee found that she was. For reasons unknown to me the Private Bills Committee refused to reopen the case and hear the further evidence offered. I did my best to induce the committee to take a contrary course, but was unsuccessful. The Private Bills Committee took the ground that if the woman had anything to say in her own defence she should have appeared before the Senate Committee and established her innocence. Even so, in my humble judgment the Private Bills Committee of this House should act, in a sense, as a court of revision and correct any errors made by the Senate Committee if such have been committed. That was the view I took before the Private Bills Committee and that is why I think this committee should be made aware of all the facts in connection with the matter. A recital of all the circumstances in the case will show, if no other result is achieved, that this woman has not been guilty of what has been alleged against her. Hon. gentlemen may not be aware of a certain procedure which is generally followed in our courts of justice in the province of Quebec. We have there what is known as an action for separation as to bed and board. In the present case Mrs. de Martigny sued her husband for alimony. Such actions for separation as to bed and board are generally granted when it has been established that adultery has been committed by the husband. As a result of those proceedings the action taken by Mrs. de Martigny before the courts of Montreal was sustained and in 1912 the husband was obliged to pay her alimony to the amount of $100 per month.

Mr. MICHAUD: If the woman had been guilty of the offence charged against her she would not, as I understand, have been entitled to alimony according to the laws of the province of Quebec?

Mr. JACOBS: No, that is not right. She is entitled to it whether she is guilty or not.

Mr. PARENT: In the case referred to evidence was given which proved beyond a doubt that de Martigny was guilty of adultery, and that while he was defending the proceedings brought by his wife he had openly been keeping a mistress in Montreal for four years. This evidence is very clear and distinct, and every fact in that regard which I am now making is fully established by the stenographer's transcript of the evidence taken before Mr. Justice Duclos in the Superior Court of Montreal.

Mr. CURRIE: On what date?

Mr. PARENT: On February 22, 1912. I will quote, from page 13 of the evidence referred to, the following:

Q. Where do you live?
A. No. 40 McGill College avenue.
Q. Do you keep house?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Alone?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. There is no woman with you?
A. Yes, to keep my house.
Q. What is her name?
Objected to this proof as illegal:
Q. Do you refuse to answer?
A. Absolutely.
Q. Do you swear that you do not live maritally with this woman?
A. It depends on the interpretation of the word "maritally."
Q. That you live as man and wife with her?
A. What do you mean by that?
Q. You must know. I am not obliged to explain.
A. If you ask a question, I shall answer.
Q. You cannot answer the question?
A. I do not know your interpretation.
Q. You do not know what it is to live maritally with a woman?
A. Not from the legal point of view.
Q. You have travelled with this woman?
A. Am I obliged to answer? That is what I want to know.
Q. You refuse to answer?
A. No, sir.
Q. You have travelled with her?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Where did you go with her?
A. To the United States.

Then at page 15:

Q. Did you go to Europe?
A. I refuse to answer. I have travelled seven (7) months.
Q. Always with the same woman?
A. No, sir.
Q. You had another?
A. Certainly.

Q. How long have you been with this one, the one that you are living with?
A. I refuse to answer.
Q. How long have you been with the other?
A. Which other?
Q. I do not know. Do you refuse to answer?
A. It is impossible for me to answer that. I do not know which.
Q. You have had many?
A. Naturally.
Q. Many?
A. Many.

Now at page 18:

Q. Here, at Montreal, have you told us how long you have been with this woman?
A. At Montreal, since 1915.

No clearer evidence could be given that this man was living openly with a woman as his mistress, and consequently committed adultery. It has been the practice of the Senate Divorce Committee, I understand, to hold that whenever a man has been guilty of this offence himself he cannot come and ask for a divorce. This is the kind of evidence that Mr. Dussault wanted to lay before the Private Bills Committee. He was denied that right with the result that the Bill in question is now before you. Now let me cite the facts with regard to Mr. Perry. The statement of Mr. De Martigny before the Senate Divorce Committee was to the effect that his wife had admitted to him that she had been living with this man Perry. The same allegation was made before the Superior Court of Montreal. But Mrs. de Martigny appeared before the Superior Court, and here is what she said on that occasion when questioned in that regard—it is a denial of every word uttered by de Martigny before the Senate Committee.

Q. You live with Mr. V. S. Perry?
A. Mr. V. S. Perry boards with me.
Q. Is it not true that you have been living in adultery with him during the last five years?
A. It is false, absolutely false.
Q. Have you ever had carnal relations with Mr. Perry?
A. Never.

And at page 4:

Q. Since how long is Mr. Perry your boarder?
A. Since five years.
Q. Where did you live when he first went with you?
A. On Esplanade avenue.
Q. How long was he there with you?
A. He was there all the time with Mr. Lockward.

Consequently there were two men and the child in the same house with that woman, and her contention is that these two men were boarding there.

Q. How long?
A. When Mr. Lockward got married, Mr. Perry left; he was gone three weeks and as I could not meet my finances, I asked Mr. Perry to come back.
Q. Now, have you ever told your husband that you were living with Mr. Perry?
A. No, never.

I may be mistaken, Mr. Chairman, but it seems to me that if such evidence had been put before the Divorce Committee they would not have rendered the judgment they did render. When we became aware of these facts we thought that if the Private Bills Committee had a chance to hear this further evidence the wife would not be put on the statute book as a woman who had committed adultery.

Mr. ELKIN: May I ask the hon. member a question? If the wife had this evidence in her possession, as she must have had during the trial, why did she not bring it before the Senate Committee?

Mr. PARENT: I do not know what kind of feeling the hon. gentleman has but probably if he were a woman himself and had been dragged through the courts for years, as this woman has been, he would come to the conclusion that she had had enough, and that after the Superior Court of Montreal had declared her innocent there was no necessity for her to go further.

Mr. CURRIE: The hon. gentleman has read evidence given in 1912, but the evidence of the woman's guilt was adduced before the Senate Committee in 1914, two years later. While the evidence given in 1912 may be quite true, the evidence since then is that she had been living with another man virtually as his wife, and she did not appear before the Senate committee to refute that charge which was proved by several witnesses. This committee, Mr. Chairman, can only act on the evidence given before the Senate Divorce Committee.

Mr. PARENT: Does the hon. gentleman wish to put a question to me?

Mr. CURRIE: Has he read the evidence before the Senate committee?

Mr. PARENT: The hon. gentleman has referred to evidence given in 1914. Let me say that in 1919 Mrs. de Martigny came back again before the Superior Court of Montreal for an increase of alimony, which was granted her by the court.

Mr. CURRIE: Did she appear before the Senate committee?

Mr. PARENT: No.

Mr. CURRIE: Then what is all this trouble about? The case was proved before the Senate committee by three or four witnesses, and I do not see why the House of Commons should now intervene to listen to a lot of outside evidence about her getting alimony. She seemed to be pretty well satisfied to get a divorce.

Mr. PARENT: If the hon. gentleman comes to the conclusion that persons representing a child have no interest in a case of divorce, I do not share his opinion. I believe the child's honour is at stake, and that the mother should not go on record as an adulterous woman, when there is ground to believe that she is not, and I think it is proper for any one to interfere to clear her reputation. That very same case was inscribed in review in 1919, and the mother of Mr. de Martigny,—

Mr. TWEEDIE: Mr. Chairman, I object to this. I do not think we have any jurisdiction to make statements supplementing the evidence given before the Divorce Committee. All we can do is to consider whether on the evidence the Bill should be accepted or thrown out.

Mr. CURRIE: Surely the Quebec courts will protect the child and see that the father maintains it. I do not think the father ever denied that the child was his. He gave this woman alimony right up to date of something like $100 a month.

Mr. PARENT: Do I understand there is a point of order raised, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. CURRIE: Yes. You cannot read other evidence here.

Mr. TWEEDIE: Apparently what the honorable member is introducing for the consideration of this committee is evidence relating to acts of adultery on the part of the petitioner. There is no application for divorce as against the petitioner. We are considering the grounds upon which the respondent, if she had applied, might have herself procured a divorce, or the ground upon which the husband's petition for divorce might have been thrown out. We have only a right to consider the evidence which was taken before the Divorce committee of the Senate, and all we have to do is to determine whether or not in our opinion that evidence is a sufficient ground for a divorce.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Steele): Does the hon. member raise that point of order?

Mr. TWEEDIE: Yes, that is my objection.

Mr. STEWART (Lanark): As I understand the procedure of the committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, of which I am a member, it is not as has been stated by the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Tweedie), but the committee has the right to hear any new evidence that it thinks pertinent to the issue, and that is the question which was before that committee when the Bill was under consideration.

Mr. CURRIE: Did you hear evidence?

Mr. STEWART (Lanark): No; but the point is we had the right to hear it. As I understand, the question now is whether this Bill should be sent back to the committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills for that purpose. My opinion is that not only has the House the right to send the Bill back, but that the committee has the right to hear any further evidence affecting the issue if the Bill is sent back to them.

Mr. PROULX: Being a member of the Private Bills committee, I have recollection of a few cases years ago where we heard further evidence. So it is not only the right but the custom, and I endorse what my hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Stewart) has said.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: As I understand, evidence taken before the Senate committee is translated to the House of Commons for use by the committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, but there is nothing in the rules of the practice which would prevent the committee hearing evidence to any extent it might desire. Therefore I think it is perfectly competent for this House to send the Bill back in order that further evidence may be heard by the committee.

Mr. MURPHY: I was just about to point out to the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Tweedie), in support of the position taken by the hon. member for Lanark, that Sir Allen Aylesworth, when Minister of Justice, took the position which has just been taken by the hight hon. member for King's (Sir Robert Borden), and in fact submitted evidence to the House that had not been before the Senate committee or before the Private Bills committee, and the House concurred in the view then presented by Sir Allen Aylesworth.

Mr. CURRIE: There is no question at all about the right of the House to hear evidence before its Private Bills Committee, but since Confederation it has been the unwritten law that we leave this matter to be dealt with entirely by the Senate. It is true that several years ago one or two cases were brought before the Private Bills Committee and some evidence heard. But we have been in the habit of leaving this matter entirely to the Senate in order to reduce the expense in connection with the granting of divorces. The Senate has a committee which hears the case, tries it and decides it and I think it is inadvisable for this House, whether or not it has the right to do so, to go beyond what has been the custom in this regard. It we do, it will make it necessary for people who are asking for divorces to keep their lawyers sitting around Ottawa for weeks and months. They would go first before the Senate Divorce Committee, where their case is heard; then they would have to wait several weeks until the case came before a committee of this House, where they would have to appear—in the meantime counsel fees and other expenses are piling up in such a way as to make the whole thing ridiculous. To my mind the House should revert to the old practice and let the Senate settle these things. I do not think, therefore, that we should refer the Bill back, and I hope the House will not refer back any more Bills of this kind. If we are going to have three or four trials, we shall simply be piling up expenses for those who petition Parliament for divorces. It is true that we have an absolute right to hear the case, to form a committee to hear new evidence and all that sort of thing, but it is a question of expediency, and to my mind the old method of carrying on is far more satisfactory. I do not think it is fair for us to try this case in the House. The hon. gentleman refers to the 1912 case. He will notice that the evidence in the Senate points out that from 1912 until 1919 this woman had been living with another man.

Mr. ETHIER: I understand, Mr. Chairman, that the discussion is on a point of order. My hon. friend is discussing the merits of the case.

The CHAIRMAN: Does any hon. member desire to speak to the point of order?

Mr. ETHIER: I do not concur in the remarks of my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Currie): I rather agree with those of the ex-Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden). It is true, as the member for Calgary (Mr. Tweedie) has said, that the Senate has jurisdiction in matters of divorce. But what is the use of the Private Bills Committee of this House, then, so far as divorce Bills are concerned? The Private Bills Committee of this House sits, in a matter of this kind, like a court of review. There is nothing in the rules or practice of the House to prevent the Private Bills Committee of the House from making a further enquête if the facts proved before the Senate Committee do not seem satisfactory. That is why we are now asking that this Bill be referred back to the Private Bills Committee—in order that the enquête may be reopeden, the decision of the Senate Committee appearing to be inconsistent with the facts. The Senate has not an exclusive jurisdiction; if such were the case, there would be no use in having a Private Bills Committee of the House to deal with these matters. If the reports and recommendations of the Senate Divorce Committee were submitted direct to the House, it would be a different matter. But the Private Bills Committee has refused to reopen the enquête and to take communication of new facts which might have been proved but were not proved before the court. One of my hon. friends put a question to the member for Charlevoix-Montmorency a few minutes ago, asking why the woman did not appear before the Senate Committee. The hon. member gave the answer, but I may supplement it. As a matter of fact, this woman was aware—and this was brought out before the Private Bills Committee here, if I am not mistaken—of the Bill going through the Senate, after its third reading. When she heard it was coming before the House she asked through her lawyer that the enquête be reopened in order that she might be allowed to bring before the committee the evidence which she intended to submit.

The CHAIRMAN: I must point out that my hon. friend is not now discussing the point of order.

Mr. ETHIER: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman; I fell into the same error as that of my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. Currie). But I repeat that this House has jurisdiction to refer the Bill back to the Private Bills Committee with instructions to reopen the enquête. I say also that the Private Bills Committee of the House has full jurisdiction to reopen the enquête, to ignore the finding made by the Senate Committee, and, if necessary, to return the Bill to the Senate.

Mr. McKENZIE: As I understand the point of order, it is whether or not evidence taken in another cause, before a court in Montreal, can be read as evidence before this committee.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I think the point of order was whether or not a committee of this House to which the Bill was referred can itself take evidence, in addition to the Senate evidence.

Mr. McKENZIE: That is not the way I understand it. Perhaps the hon. member for Calgary will put his point clearly.

Mr. TWEEDIE: The hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria (Mr. McKenzie) is correct. My point is that we have no right whatever to consider the evidence which it is now proposed to submit to the Committee of the Whole House. We might refer any Bill back to the Private Bills Committee. I will go further and say this : we are probably bound by the custom which has prevailed in the House in this regard. But the Divorce Committee is a committee specially appointed by the Senate to hear the evidence of witnesses under oath, and before that committee the petitioner and the respondent may be represented by counsel. Now we have no divorce committee in the House of Commons, and these Bills coming from the Senate are referred to the Private Bills Committee. I submit that the jurisdiction of the House of Commons should be limited practically to a consideration of the evidence taken under oath before the Divorce Committee of the Senate and a determination of the form of the Bill. We have no right to reopen the case and hear additional evidence and then, on the ground of that additional evidence heard by the Private Bills Committee of the House, say that we will not grant the divorce. There should be one final determining body on the evidence itself. Then the Private Bills Committee should have the same right as the Divorce Committee of the Senate to weigh the evidence, and the House of Commons should also have that right. But I do not think that either the House of Commons or its Private Bills Committee should have the right, as a matter of justice, to hear further evidence and keep the thing in the air.

Mr. McKENZIE: As I understand the point of order, it is that evidence taken before the court in Montreal is not evidence before this committee; that is, that we cannot in this committee deliberate upon what is absolutely hearsay evidence so far as we are concerned. It was evidence in another court; it was heard and deliberated upon by the judge, but it is not evidence for us. Whether this committee decides to send the Bill back to the Private Bills Committee is not, I understand, the point of order; that wil have to be dealt with as a substantive question by itself. The point of order is whether or not we can hear as evidence before this committee testimony which was taken before the Court in Montreal. If that be the point of order, I suppose it would be well taken.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Every one understands perfectly well that evidence taken before a court of justice in Quebec or any other province is not evidence before a committee of this House. The question what is evidence before a committee of this House is, in the first place, a question for the committee itself and not for this committee. That committee must decide what is evidence, and if they go wrong, an appeal can be taken to this House. The point of order, as I understand it, in the first instance was this. Some hon. gentlemen on the other side desired to have this Bill referred back in order that evidence might be given for the purpose of disproving the conclusion at which the committee of the Senate had arrived. I did not understand them to suggest that evidence taken before a court in Montreal would be evidence before this committee. They were giving the fact that evidence of that character had been given in the Superior Court of Montreal as evidence to show that evidence of the same character should be given before a committee of this House. Then the question was raised whether or not it would be competent for that committee to hear such evidence if it should be given in a proper way. My intervention was merely to say that I thought it was perfectly competent for that committee to hear that evidence if it were tendered in a proper way.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I am glad to hear the right hon. gentleman on this point. I share absolutely his views on the matter. I have read the evidence in the present case; I have not only suspicion but practically moral certainty that there has been collusion between the parties, and it would be very interesting to have the case opened up again in order to make the facts clear one way or the other. As the case stands at present, I am morally certain that there has been collusion. I wish I could be at liberty to divulge to the House what the father of the party, whom I would call the defendant in this case, told me on Saturday. I need not say that both parties belong to most respectable families in the province of Quebec. I am informed that there is collusion in this case, and it would serve the ends of justice if the case were referred back to the committee so that evidence may be heard on that point.

Mr. STEELE: I do not wish to speak on the point of order, but I wish to make a statement on behalf of the Private Bills Committee.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. Has any hon. gentleman anything else to say on the point of order?

Mr. ETHIER: I have something to say on the point of order. As regards the reference to the Private Bills Committee, I agree with the former Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden). I understand that he is following now the same policy that he followed in 1909. At that time I was Chairman of the Private Bills Committee, and on that occasion a similar Bill appeared before the committee. The principle which we are invoking at present is the same as that which was invoked then in the remarks of the former Prime Minister; it applies to the present case, and to the application made by my hon. friend. This is what was said by the former Prime Minister as reported in Hansard of May 10, 1909, at page 6070:

> Mr. R. L. BORDEN: The Chairman of the Committee on Private Bills, I believe, called attention in connection with one of these Bills, to a tendency towards acting on evidence of a more or less loose character in considering these Bills for Divorce.

In that year there were only twenty-one Divorce Bills before the House. This year there are over a hundred.

> I have already taken occasion to inform him privately that I entirely concur with the view he expressed. I think it is of the utmost possible importance that the evidence upon these proceedings in the Senate should be given and acted upon only in the way in which such evidence would be given and acted upon in a court, and I would most earnestly deprecate any tendency in the Senate or in our own committee when examining the evidence towards a view which would bring a looser condition of affairs than has prevailed in the past. I think these proceedings should be conducted exactly as legal proceedings are conducted in a court, and only such evidence should be received as is strictly legal evidence. Unless there is the clearest possible evidence, and unless that evidence is of a legal character, the Bill ought not to pass the committee and Parliament ought not to concur in dissolving the marriage. Every one who is familiar with the proceedings in courts with regard to such matters, is aware that there are some precautions observed in court which do not seem to have received very much attention in the proceedings of the Senate.

That is the case in this particular instance.

> For example, in Great Britain, and in all the provinces of Canada where any such courts were constituted before confederation and therefore remain up to the present, there is the King's Proctor who attends in court, who cross-examines the witnesses, who is paid by a fee taxed in the costs of the case, and whose especial duty it is to see that the evidence is sufficient and that there is no collusion between the parties.

In this case it is not proven that there is no collusion.

> I do not know to what extent any safeguard of that character has been adopted in the Senate Committee, but I see no reason why every such safeguard should not receive careful attention and consideration in the Senate, and if it be correct, as the Chairman of the Committee on Private Bills has already publicly declared, that there is a tendency towards the granting of divorce upon evidence of a looser and less-satisfying character than that which has been required in the past, I, for one, desire to raise my protest.

Following that principle which the right hon. gentleman has set forth, I do not see why this committee should not accept the suggestion made that this Bill should be referred back to the Private Bills Committee, should we have jurisdiction to reopen the matter.

Mr. CURRIE: That is not the point of order.

Mr. ETHIER: I concur in the contention that we have no right to receive as evidence before this Committee of the Whole the evidence given before the Court in Montreal. I understand that my hon. friend stated as his point of order that we had the right, but that it was not customary for this committee to refer the matter to the Private Bills Committee. We have the right and jurisdiction, and I say on this ground the point of order should be dismissed.

The CHAIRMAN: There are evidently two points of order now before the Chairman awaiting a ruling. First is it competent for this committee to refer back to the Private Bills Committee for further consideration and for the hearing of further evidence, a Bill reported to this House by that committee? A difference must be made between the powers of this committee and the powers of the House of Commons. This committee has no right to refer a Bill back to any Select Standing Committee. But the House of Commons has the absolute right to refer a Bill back to any Standing Committee of the House, with whatever instructions the House may deem fit to give to the said committee.

3 p.m. While it is not customary for the Private Bills Committee of the House of Commons to hear evidence in divorce cases, there is no doubt whatever that it has the right to do so. The second point is: Have hon. members the right to read in Committee of the Whole, evidence that was submitted in a Court of Justice in the city of Montreal? I have no hesitation in deciding that question in the negative. Hon. members have no right to submit as evidence to the Committee of the Whole House evidence which was not taken before a committee of the House or Senate and which was not accepted as evidence by the Committee on Private Bills of either House.

Hon. members have the right to refer to this evidence to the extent required to explain why it may be their intention at a later stage to move that the Bill be referred back to the Select Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills if it is reported by the committee, but I think that the reading of a portion of such evidence for this purpose, would be much more in order upon the motion to refer the Bill to the committee for further consideration.

Mr. STEELE: As chairman of the Private Bills Committee I would like to make a statement to the committee regarding this Bill. I may say that for some years past, the Private Bills Committee has each session appointed a sub-committee to attend the sessions of the Divorce Committees of the Senate to hear the evidence submitted there, so that they may be in a better position, perhaps, than the other members of the committee to decide whether or not the Divorce Bills that come before the Private Bills Committee should be passed. That was done this session. Some members of the Private Bills Committee attended the sessions of the Senate Divorce Committee and heard the evidence in this case. When the Private Bills Committee met on Friday, when this case was called for consideration, Mr. Dussault, of Montreal, appeared before the committee, and the committee at his request very courteously gave him an opportunity to state his case. Mr. Dussault stated that he did not appear for the respondent; he appeared, if for any person, for the child. The committee heard his statement for a time, heard him state reasons why the Bill should not pass until he at length desired to lay before the committee evidence taken before the courts in Quebec province. At that stage the committee decided that they could not receive such evidence, and in view of the fact that Mr. Dussault did not represent the respondent, nor of course the petitioner, who were the only parties who could properly be represented before the Private Bills Committee in this case, the committee decided that it was not necessary to hear him further. The committee took the ground further that the evidence as received before the Senate Committee was sufficient to warrant the passing of the Bill. It was pointed out to the committee that, if they chose, further witnesses could be called and further evidence heard, but the majority of the committee—there was no formal vote taken—evidently were satisfied with the evidence that had been taken before the Senate Committee, and for that reason they passed the Bill as we have it to-day. Whether or not they were warranted in doing so is probably a matter of opinion, but it is the fact that the committee did pass this Bill, as they have passed many Divorce Bills, believing that the evidence before the committee was sufficient. I think the committee acted quite properly in refusing to accept the evidence given before the Quebec courts, and I am very glad, Mr. Chairman, that the action of the committee in that regard has been supported by your ruling. The committee, I think, extended every courtesy to Mr. Dussault, and while I may have my own personal opinion as to the advisability of granting divorces in many of these cases, I feel that in this particular case I could not go contrary to the decision of the committee.

Mr. PARENT: I do not know what is going to happen to this Bill, but before it goes any further I want to put on record further evidence, being copies of judgments, in French, rendered in the courts of Montreal.

Mr. CURRIE: I think the Chairman has ruled that out of order.

The CHAIRMAN: I must ask the hon. member before he reads this evidence given before a court in Montreal what he intends to prove by the reading of such evidence, and what his object is in placing that evidence before this committee.

Mr. PARENT: I am producing these copies of judgments rendered in the Montreal court to sustain the view I have already expressed that the woman in question has not been fairly treated by the Private Bills Committee.

The CHAIRMAN: The ruling of the Chairman is always subject to reversal by the House, but I would be disposed to rule that while this evidence and the judgments which the hon. member is now about to submit would be quite in order to support a motion that the Bill be referred back to the Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills for reconsideration it cannot be used in committee as an argument against the adoption of clause 1 of the Bill.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I am quite certain that no member of this House would like in such a grave matter as this to rush the Bill through without being fully confident that what we are doing at the present moment is the right thing. If it were an indifferent matter I would say at once to my hon. friend the Chairman of the Private Bills Committee (Mr. Steele), that I bow to the decision of that committee and accept their judgment unreservedly. But this is a case, as was stated by my hon. friend, that affects the future of the innocent child. I say further that, according to the information which I have and which has been divulged in part when the question came before the Senate Committee, there is ground for more than suspicion that there has been collusion in this case. Why should we be so intent upon rushing this Bill through now when in a day or so the Private Bills Committee will be satisfied whether or not there is sufficient evidence to warrant the passsing of the Bill? I therefore implore my friends on both sides of the House who do not share my views on the question of divorce to wait patiently until everything has been done to clear the matter up. When that has been done, when it has been proven beyond a doubt whether or not there is a case, the committee will be in position to pass upon the Bill. I appeal to my hon. friends on both sides of the House to follow the lead that has been given us in this matter by the right hon. the member for King's (Sir Robert Borden). The committee will lose nothing by waiting for a day or so until evidence has been submitted to the Private Bills Committee. I had evidence submitted to me on Saturday—I do not refer to the evidence before the courts in Montreal, but I saw in Montreal a party closely connected with the wife—and I am informed that there is collusion in this case. Why should we put upon the statute book an Act of Parliament which will forever dissolve the matrimonial tie which binds these two people. When, perhaps two days from now, the committee will be satisfied whether or not there are grounds for granting a divorce? At all events, if the evidence is not strong enough, the Committee of the House will be at liberty to do as it pleases.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. STEVENS: There is no motion before the committee to refer the Bill back.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Well, I beg to move, seconded by my good friend, the right hon. member for King's (Sir Robert Borden), that the Bill be now referred back to the committee.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: My hon. friend does not remember the ruling given by the Chairman a little while ago. If it is desired to refer the Bill back to the Private Bills Committee, we shall have to proceed in another way. We must have the Bill reported, and before it is read the third time, some hon. member can move that the order for third reading be discharged and that the Bill be referred back to the Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills for the purpose of taking further evidence; or some hon. member can move that the Committee of the Whole rise and report progress, and when progress is reported a motion can be made that the order for reference to the Committee of the Whole be discharged and that the Bill be referred back to the Private Bills Committee. The same result would be attained in either case, but you cannot refer the Bill back to the committee at this stage. I am perfectly satisfied, since reading the evidence, that there is ample proof that the woman has been guilty of adultery. It is quite possible that the husband also has been guilty of adultery, and it is equally possible that there may have been collusion. The difficulty about dealing with these questions, in the way they are dealt with in this Parliament, is that the ordinary precautions taken in a court to guard against collusion, are not taken here; and I must confess that sometimes I am a little surprised at the attitude of some of my hon. friends on the other side of the House. If they want to restrict divorce and put proper safeguards around it, then all these questions ought to be referred to the courts, where the necessary precautions can be observed. You cannot very well have these safeguards so long as the present procedure is continued. You have a sub-committee of the Committee on Miscellaneous Bills going over to the Senate and watching the evidence, and, after all, that is little better than a makeshift. There are circumstances in this case that seem to point to the possibility of collusion. What would take place if these matters were relegated to the Court?

The King's Proctor would be there, and would institute an immediate inquiry as to whether or not there was collusion. You would have a subpœna issued by the Court, bringing the woman before the Court, and she would be examined thoroughly and exhaustively in respect of every circumtance that might point to collusion or otherwise. You cannot very well carry out any such procedure as that in the Senate or in a Committee of the House of Commons, but you could take every necessary precaution and exercise every safeguard if these questions of divorce were dealt with in the proper way. I hope the committee will pardon me for this suggestion, which has often occurred to me. Let me repeat again: if it is desired to refer this Bill back, some procedure other than that which my hon. friend from Maisonneuve (Mr. Lemieux), has just suggested, must be adopted.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I move, then, seconded by my good friend from King's, that the committee rise and report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Mr. Chairman, that will not put us any further ahead than we are now.

The CHAIRMAN: The motion is not debatable.

Motion agreed to on division: Yeas, 49; nays, 42.

Progress reported.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—OFFICIALS

Mr. DELISLE:

1. Is the Government pensioning and retiring officials who are sixty-five years of age and over?
2. How many officials are there in the Post-Office Department, Ottawa, who are sixty-five years of age or over?
3. Who are the four new officials appointed in the Post Office Department, according to the recommendation made by Griffenhagen and Company?
4. Is Mr. George Ross appointed General Superintendent? If so, how old is he, and what will be his salary as General Superintendent?
5. How old is Mr. W. J. Johnstone, Financial Superintendent of the Post Office Department?

Right Hon. Mr. DOHERTY:

1. Yes, except in cases where the official is still capable of performing satisfactory service, and where such service is still required.

2. 38.

3. No new appointments have been made. The following promotions have, however, been approved by the Civil Service Commission:

George Ross from position of Chief Post Office Superintendent to General Superintendent of Postal Service.

L. J. Gaboury from position of Chief Post Office Superintendent to Division Superintendent of Postal Service.

P. T. Coolican from position of Post Office Inspector to Division Superintendent of Postal Service.

4. Mr. George Ross was promoted by Civil Service Commission to position of General Superintendent. Age 68. Salary $5,400 as General Superintendent. On account of his wide postal experience, the services of Mr. Ross are, in the opinion of the department, practically indispensable.

5. 66.

TORONTO CUSTOMS BUILDING

Mr. SINCLAIR (Antigonish and Guysborough):

[Mr. Douglas.]

1. Was the Toronto Customs building torn down some time ago?
2. If so, why was this done?
3. Who recommended this step to be taken?
4. Was it rebuilt?
5. How much has been paid in rentals in connection with space required for customs in Toronto since the said Customs building was demolished?

Hon. Mr. McCURDY:

1. Yes.

2 and 3. Owing to the necessity for additional space to house the public services including Customs and Inland Revenue in the city of Toronto, it has for years been urgently necessary to provide additional office room. This condition still exists. Further, according to an agreement with the railway companies, the examining warehouse will have to be demolished when the Toronto viaduct, in connection with the New Union Station is proceeded with. In April, 1919, a decision was taken to begin the provision of additional accommodation and demolition of old buildings on the proposed site, corner of Bay and Front streets, was begun, and a contract was made with the P. Lyall and Sons Construction Company for the excavation for the new building, pending the completion and calling for tenders for the superstructure. So soon as construction and financial conditions permit it is planned to proceed with the erection of the superstructure.

4. No.

5. Rentals paid to May 1, 1921, $53,492.13.

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. ROSS for Mr. ARCHAMBAULT:

For a copy of all letters, correspondence and other documents exchanged between the Health Department and J. A. Foisy, proprietor of the Dominion Drug and North Eastern Drug, Limited, and Pharmacie Fédérale, and all correspondence and letters regarding the said Foisy, specially letters from Z. Cardinal and report from Federal Police McMillan.

Mr. ROSS for Mr. CHISHOLM:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, correspondence and other documents referring to the change of the mail route from the railway to Marble Mountain, Inverness county.

BANKRUPTCY ACT

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Acting Solicitor General) moved that the amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 118 to amend the Bankruptcy Act, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

ARMISTICE DAY

On motion of Hon. Hugh Guthrie (Solicitor General) Bill No. 119 respecting Armistice Day, was read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

On section 2—Armistice Day a holiday:

Mr. BUREAU: Mr. Chairman, I thought this Bill was originally introduced by the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Pedlow). I should like to know if there is any particular reason why it should be taken over by the Government as a Government measure?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think last session a Bill having a similar object was brought forward by the hon. member for South Renfrew, but was not passed. This session a similar Bill was introduced by my hon. friend from Parkdale (Mr. Mowat). In regard to section 2, I would suggest—

Mr. BUREAU: That does not answer my question. What is the reason for the the Government taking this Bill over?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The session was so far advanced before the Bill reached its second reading that in the ordinary course it could not be passed unless the Government took it over. The Government approved of the principle of the Bill, and it is hoped that the committee will approve it.

Mr. JACOBS: The Government is simply robbing the hon. member for South Renfrew of his own little ewe lamb.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No. I am sure we will be glad to accord the hon. member for South Renfrew any honour to which he may be entitled for having been the first to make the suggestion last session.

Mr. JACOBS: It indicates that the Government is two years behind those on this side of the House in adopting good legislation.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Coming to section 2, I submit to the committee that the language might well be amended by striking out the words in the eighth line "by which Canada was delivered from her enemies." If words to that effect are to be inserted, I would rather substitute "by which Canada triumphed over her enemies." But I think it would be better if we eliminated the words altogether.

Mr. JACOBS: How would the section read then?

Mr. GUTHRIE:

Throughout Canada in each and every year the Monday in the week in which is the eleventh day of November, being the day in 1918 in which the Great War was triumphantly concluded by an armistice, shall be a legal holiday and shall be kept and observed as such under the name of Armistice Day.

That is the way it will read if the amendment carries.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I should think that instead of the word "is" in the sixth line the words "shall occur" should be substituted; it is the future tense.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think that would be better. That may be incorporated in the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Steele): Mr. Guthrie moves that clause 2 of Bill 119 be amended by striking out the word "is" in the sixth line and adding the words "shall occur" after the word "November" in line 7, and by striking out the words "by which Canada was delivered from her enemies" in lines 8 and 9.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. PEDLOW: Mr. Chairman, the Solicitor General is not quite correct in stating that this measure was introduced by me last year. In the first session of 1919, that which immediately followed the cessation of hostilities, I proposed the following resolution, which appears as No. 37 on page 25 of the Order Paper of Monday, April 7:

That, in the opinion of this House, November 11 of each year should be set aside as a day of national thanksgiving, to be a perpetual memorial to the signing of the armistice, ending the great world war.

Almost immediately after that resolution appeared on the Order Paper the press of Canada from one end of the country to the other commented favourably on the proposal. But for some years prior to that time, at the request of the Commercial Travellers' Association of Canada, Thanksgiving Day had been observed on the Monday of the week in which that holiday ordinarily occurred. A delegation of commercial travellers came from Toronto to Ottawa, bringing with them the secretary of their association, and interviewed me with a view towards seeing whether I would not adopt as the holiday the day on which the armistice was signed, which was the second Monday in November, instead of adopting the date, November 11. In my judgment it mattered very little whether the exact date or the exact day was named; either would serve the idea I had in mind, and the naming of the day instead of the date would, at the same time, meet the wishes of this large and influential body of citizens. In view, therefore, of the representations then made I had no hesitation in adopting the suggestion, and instead of proceeding with my resolution as it appeared on the Order Paper I introduced, on April 9, 1919, Bill No. 66, "An Act respecting Thanksgiving Day." This Bill was prepared by the parliamentary counsel, so I presume it was in proper form. The Bill was as follows:

1. The annual thanksgiving day, heretofore held on a day fixed by proclamation of the Governor in Council, shall hereafter be held on the second Monday of November in each year, as a perpetual memorial of the victorious conclusion of the recent war, in addition to such other reasons as may be prescribed by proclamation of the Governor in Council for that purpose published; and paragraph (11) of section thirty-four of the Interpretation Act, and paragraph (a) of section forty-three of the Bills of Exchange Act, chapters one, and one hundred and nineteen, of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, are amended by adding "Thanksgiving Day" to the lists of holidays and non-juridical days, mentioned in the said paragraphs.

This Bill received its first reading in the first session of 1919. I endeavoured to have it proceeded with during that session but without success. However, during the second session of 1919, on September 4, I introduced a Bill in exactly the same form, Bill No. 2.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Steele): I would direct the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that clause 2 of the Bill is under consideration. I am afraid he is wandering away from that clause.

Mr. PEDLOW: I am keeping as close as I can to clause 2. I wish to give the reasons for an amendment which I intend to propose, and my remarks are all leading up to that point. Shall I proceed, Mr. Chairman, along that line?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Steele): Perhaps the hon. gentleman would reach the conclusion without laying the foundation.

Mr. PEDLOW: It is necessary that I should proceed in this way, because the Solicitor General, who has charge of this Bill, has stated that it was introduced at the last session, which is not correct, and I want to show the history of the Bill. Now, Bill No. 2 was passed through several stages in the second session of 1919 and was brought down to the third reading.

[Mr. Pedlow.]

On the third reading a difficulty arose through the fact that the Bill had been amended in committee and it was my desire that it should be again referred back for consideration. The member for South Perth (Mr. Steele) on that occasion, moved the six months' hoist, and the motion was carried by the small majority of five. I felt then, as I feel to-day, that the Bill as originally introduced by me had many features of merit and was deserving of better consideration at the hands of the House. I felt, and still feel, that the opposition to the Bill was not in accordance with the best traditions of this House. It seemed to be the determination of hon. gentlemen opposite that because this Bill had been introduced by a member of the Opposition, it should be thrown out. In that connection I should not include all hon. gentlemen opposite, because I noted with pleasure that several leading members and supporters of the Government approved of and voted for the measure as introduced by me at that time. It was a great pleasure to me to have had that support, but on that occasion there was, on the Government side of the House, a certain circle of members who seemed to be seized of the idea that it was an intolerable situation for a member of the Opposition to get away with a proposition of this kind. Consequently, the order went forth that the Bill must be killed in the final stages, so the executioner came along and the hon. member for Perth South was the chief executioner on that occasion.

Mr. McMASTER: To administer poison.

Mr. PEDLOW: It was not a slow poison, I can assure the committee, because it was sudden death on that occasion. From that time to the present, there have been appeals from one end of the country to the other for reconsideration of this matter, and last Armistice Day the appeal was so insistent that it evidently had its effect. I am sorry that Canada was denied by a small majority of her representatives the privilege of observing Armistice Day on the first anniversary of that event and of continuing the observance for all time to come. Armistice Day appealed to me, not for the purpose of observing a great victory over our enemies, but for the purpose of observing a cessation of the hostilities that had raged so long in the great world war. To-day I do not see any reason why the change suggested by the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Mowat) in the first instance this year, and the Solicitor General (Mr. Guthrie), who has taken over the measure on behalf of the Government to see it through on the present occasion should be made. I understand, in a general way, that the change is made out of regard for the feelings of the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt), who was one of the strenuous opponents of my proposition in the first instance. I do not see any reason why the proposition as introduced by me in the first instance should be changed now. The change does not add to clearness in the matter, and, as a matter of fact, it makes the proposition so indefinite and roundabout that one would have to do some figuring before he could reach a definite conclusion which day was intended to be observed. If you, Sir, will follow me in reading the second clause of the Bill, I think you will come to the same conclusion. I think you are clear enough in vision and intelligence to do so. The clause reads:

Throughout Canada in each and every year the Monday in the week in which is the eleventh day of November, being the day in 1918 in which the Great War was triumphantly concluded by an armistice by which Canada was delivered from her enemies, shall be a legal holiday and shall be kept and observed as such under the name of Armistice Day.

That phraseology reminds me of the Irishman's clock, one of those old wag-of-the-wall on which you pull a chain in order to wind it up. Some of the older members of the House may have seen an instrument of that kind. By the way, the clocks around this chamber remind me somewhat of the incident to which I am referring, because no two of them are ever at the same time.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: They are on opposite sides.

Mr. PEDLOW: The priest made one of his usual calls at the house of this countryman of mine, and he looked up at the clock and he said to Pat: "How do you tell the time of day by your clock? It does not seem to be in harmony with the correct time." Pat replied: "Your reverence, that's aisy; when the hands point to a quarter past two, then she strikes nine, then I know it is half past six." That is about the position of affairs in this Bill. When the eleventh day of November appears in the week, then it is quite easy to figure out when Armistice Day will occur, if you know how.

My proposition—to get down to brass tacks—as the hon. member for Peterborough West (Mr. Gordon) suggests, is this. I beg to move that clause 2 be further amended in the following way; that all the words between the word "year" in the fifth line and the word "being" in the seventh line be struck out, and the following be inserted instead: "On the second Monday in November," so that the clause will read:

Throughout Canada in each and every year on the second Monday in November, being the day in 1918 in which the Great War was triumphantly concluded by an armistice by which Canada was delivered from her enemies, shall be a legal holiday and shall be kept and observed as such under the name of Armistice Day.

I sincerely trust the acting Solicitor General and others supporting him on the Government side of the House will see the reasonableness of this proposition. It will make this Bill so much more clear and definite, and it will name the day on which armistice was signed. The Bill as drafted names neither the exact day nor 4 p.m. the exact date. In my judgment, it would be in the interest of the country in general if my proposition was accepted and the Bill as originally drafted and presented to this House in 1919 were accepted by the Government. I do not see that they have anything to lose in accepting my proposition now, and I am sure the country will approve my suggestion because it will make the definite day on which the armistice was signed the day of observance for all time to come. The proposition as embodied in the Bill before the committee does not do so.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Might I suggest that, perhaps, the purpose which my hon. friend has in mind in making a little more clear the particular Monday in November for taking the holiday, would be met if his amendment were accepted by the committee, with the insertion after the words "being the day," of the words "of the week in that month."

The clause would then read:

Throughout Canada in each and every year on the second Monday in November, being the day of the week in that month in 1918, in which the great war was triumphantly concluded by an armistice, shall be a legal holiday.

And so forth. It is just a matter of words, but I think this wording is better.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think the words in the clause are much more clear than the words read by my hon. friend. This year the second Monday falls on the 14th, and that is considered too late in parts of the Dominion of Canada to hold Thanksgiving Day.

Mr. PEDLOW: I would accept the amendment moved by the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), and in answer to the Acting Solictor General, I beg to inform the committee that the difference in time is so trifling that it is not worth arguing over. Uuder the proposition as suggested by the Solicitor General the earliest that the holiday can be is the 6th of the month, and the latest is the 12th. Under the proposition as I have made it—and for the sake of clearness and directness I appeal to hon. members to accept it—the earliest it can occur is the 8th and the latest is the 14th. The main reason for the difference being made is that the Government will not accept the proposition from the Opposition, and I think it is an unworthy one.

Mr. CURRIE: I do not want to prolong the debate, but I would say the earlier the date, the better. Most sportsmen in Ontario are off hunting the first couple of weeks in November, and they want a holiday when the weather is good. Also for a holiday during which there can be any movement of troops, the earlier the date the better; so much so, that for years in view of the fall manœuvres in Ontario, Thanksgiving was shifted on to the middle of October. I think the amendment is shifting the date too far back. I would rather have the Government date than a week later.

Mr. PEDLOW: My hon. friend scarcely understands my point. The difference is only two days at the most. The latest it will be held, under the Bill as introduced, is the 12th of November, and, under the amendment, the 14th; the earliest it will be held, under the Bill, is the 6th, and the earliest, under the amendment, the 8th. There is only a difference of two days in either case.

Amendment negatived.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY

The House again in Committee of Supply, Mr. Steele in the Chair.

The Air Board—salaries, $75,000; contingencies, $25,000; Civil Aviation, $700,000; Canadian Air Force, $825,000.

Mr. McMASTER: Just what is this for?

Mr. GUTHRIE: As the committee is aware, an Air Board was established by legislation in this country in the spring, I think, of 1920. Last year was practically the first year of our operations, and was largely taken up with the work of organization and of getting ready. The amount expended last year was considerably in excess of the amount asked for this year, by something like $375,000. There are two branches of the Air Service, the Civil Aviation Branch, and the Canadian Air Force, which is an adjunct to the military service of Canada. The four items which appear in this Estimate fairly represent the work of the Board and the expenditure of the money. Our salary list amounts to about $75,000, and we have 106 employees.

Mr. EULER: What is meant by "Civil Aviation?"

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is work in connection with civil flying, purely and simply. We are attempting to do, in fact last year we accomplished, considerable work in what might be called research or exploration. The board has established provincial boards throughout the Dominion, the presiding officer of these provincial boards being the Lieutenant Governor of the province. The provincial board meets periodically, discusses the situation in regard to its own province, and makes recommendations to the Government. Several of the provinces have agreed with the Air Board to stand half the expense of all flying operations undertaken within their territory. We have such an agreement with the province of British Columbia, with Alberta, and, I think, although I am not sure,—I could ascertain the fact readily —with the province of Ontario. The Board did a lot of valuable work last year in the province of Quebec. It surveyed all the northern part of Quebec from Lake St. John for a distance of 250 miles north, and I believe that the results obtained in two weeks, flying operations were far better than the work accomplished during five years of progress on the land. Air photographs have been taken of all that territory, showing the location of the lakes, the rivers, and the timber areas, the photographs being distinct enough to show the burnt timber and to distinguish hard wood from soft wood; in most cases also, it shows whether streams are navigable or not. These photographs were regarded as a great achievement by the Air Force, and were welcomed by the province of Quebec. In British Columbia, we do fire ranging, and some exploration work on the coast, and we are also establishing a station there in connection with timber in the railroad belt. As the House is aware, the Dominion of Canada owns a very valuable block of timber in the heart of British Columbia. In Alberta, something is being done in the exploration of the northern territory; the work there has not been as far advanced as it has been in the province of Ontario. It is hoped that during the coming season the Air Service will be of the greatest assistance in connection with the surveys of oil lands, etc. They are making preparations now in that respect, although actual work has not yet been begun. Work is also being carried on in connection with fire ranging in the Rocky mountains. This is all a part of the work of the Civil Aviation Branch. In addition, an air line has been mapped out across the continent, and certain landing stations have been erected. But the policy has not been to establish such stations at the expense of the Dominion; the municipalities desiring landing stations must establish them; the Board locates them and leaves it to the municipalities to decide whether they want landing stations established at these places. As the committee is aware, we received a very large number of aircraft from the British Government at the conclusion of the war. We have not been required to purchase much in the line of aircraft equipment, although year after year our equipment will become more and more obsolete. New inventions are taking place almost monthly, and certainly quarterly. Great improvements were made last year over the year before, and I anticipate that as time goes on there will have to be an appropriation for new aircraft. The figures to-day, however, do not contemplate such an appropriation. We are practically operating now with machines given us.

Mr. EULER: How many airships are in commission in the two services, respectively, and how many men are employed?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not know that I can give the number of machines that we have at present; there are a large number of them not actually in operation, not having yet been fitted up for the purpose. The following machines have been erected and tested: 12 D.H. 9A's.—These are technical terms—12 S.E. 5 A's; 43 Avlo, 135 h.p.; and 6 D.H. 4. We have 105 civil employees, and we have taken over Camp Borden, which is our military air centre, and fitted it up as an aviation station. We have there an air superintendent, a superintendent of engine repair shops—

Mr. CAHILL: What are their salaries?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The following is a list of these employees:

Air Foreman Mechanic	2,040
Superintendent of Engine Repair Shops.	2,940
Air Pilot and Navigator	2,460
Air Foreman Mecanic	2,040
Air Foreman Mechanics (3) each	1,800
Four Air Riggers...at	1,620
Nine Air Riggers...at	1,320
Five Engine Fitters...at	1,620
Ten Air Engine Fitters...at	1,320
One Air Fabric Worker...at	1,080
Two Carpenters...at	1,080
One Motor Transport Driver...at	1,080
One Sign Painter...at	1,080
Two Clerk-Stenographers...at	960

Mr. CAHILL: Is that in the civil force?

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is all in the military force.

Mr. CAHILL: Have you the civil force?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The civil force totals 105. In the operations branch we have 16; in the certificates branch, 6; headquarters, Canadian Air Service, 7; secretary's office, 2; technical branch, 5; equipment branch, 17; medical branch, 2; accounts branch, 27; intelligence branch, 8; records branch, 15.

Mr. CAHILL: What is the reason for the increase of 50 per cent in salaries over last year?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The chief increase is due to increase in staff. These salaries are fixed by the Civil Service Commission, under whom all appointments are made. In connection with the mechanics, it must be remembered that there are at Camp Borden a large number of expert men. In one or two instances we could not get any men in Canada; we had to bring them from Great Britain. These are the highest type of artisans, and as a rule they call for more than the ordinary artisan's salary. They are expert and highly trained men.

Mr. EULER: Is there any system of allocating the civil aviation force to the various provinces?

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is done in accordance with the demands made upon us.

Mr. EULER: By whom?

Mr. GUTHRIE: By the provincial associations, with the concurrence of the Provincial Governments, because, unless the Provincial Government is prepared to stand part of the expense, we do not undertake the work. We have done some work, however, wholly at the expense of the Dominion Government, in Alberta, and, I think, in British Columbia. The provinces send in their recommendations and we allocate the work according as the staff is available, and as we have the money. The demands on us for the coming season are perhaps a little more than as represented in this vote. I have the particulars and the matter may come to the House on another vote; but I cannot speak with certainty in that regard because it is not settled.

Mr. PEDLOW: Do the Provincial Governments contribute anything to the air force?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, for civil aviation in connection with work done for the provinces in the way of exploration, surveys, fire protection, etc. They enter into an agreement on a fifty-fifty basis.

Mr. CAHILL: Is it the intention to continue the civil air force? When did the Government decide to undertake the work of surveying the different provinces? Is not that work that should be done by the provinces themselves, and not by the Dominion?

Mr. GUTHRIE: This work is not being done for the provinces alone. There are territories of our own, belonging to Canada and not to any province, away to the North, and also in the Railway Belt, in which we operate. Work has also been performed in connection with our coast service. I suppose as time goes on the usefulness of the airship will be demonstrated. Only a few days ago we were asked to act for the Government of the Dominion in connection with customs examinations at Victoria and Vancouver, and if the money is voted by Parliament we will certainly do so. It is charged that there has been a good deal of smuggling of drugs, opium and the like, into Vancouver and Victoria, these drugs being dropped from incoming ships into the ocean and picked up by small vessels; and air craft can be very readily and satisfactorily used not only in the detection of such operations but also in their prevention. We have experimented in that direction and, since our airships have taken part in the work of prevention, that class of smuggling has largely ceased. Then there is work, and a great deal of work, asked of us in regard to Dominion lands by the Department of the Interior. As the House is aware these lands are largely vacant lands and in regard to them a very long programme has been prepared—at least it is now in the shape of requisitions which have not yet been finally passed upon.

Mr. LEMIEUX: My hon. friend says the airship will prove its worth in the years to come. I do not know if my hon. friend has reference to a special class of airships but, as a matter of fact, I thought the success of that invention was proven beyond a shadow of doubt. I happened to be in Europe a year or so ago and every evening after seven I would go from my hotel to the Place de l'Opéra in order to get the London Times which came every day by airship and was delivered in Paris in a few hours. During the Versailles conference I saw that Mr. Bonar Law would not travel otherwise than by airship between London and Paris. I suppose that before long the mails will be transported by airship. Has the experiment not been tried in the United States and was it not successful? I thought it was.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is no question as to its being successful as a system of transportation but it is practically prohibitive up to the present time on account of the cost. That is the difficulty in the matter of air craft operating between London and Paris; I made inquiries last October in regard to that service. Not only do they carry newspapers and mails, but banks utilize them for the carriage of their more valuable parcels, considering it a more secure method for transporting valuable parcels containing money, jewellery and the like, than the ordinary mail service. But notwithstanding that, the experience of the service up to the present time is that it has not been made a commercial success. Neither has it been made a commercial success by any line operating in the United States. There is a theory—so far only a theory, I believe—that the airship itself will never be a commercial success.

Mr. LEMIEUX: But the word "never" is not in your dictionary?

Mr. GUTHRIE: It will be a most valuable adjunct in naval and military matters and the like. But when we come down to the question of commercial success we will be thrown back on the lighter-than-air craft, not on the airship. The lighter-than-air craft, of course, carries nothing for its own support, while the airship has not only to do that but carry its gasoline for propulsion which attaches so much weight that it cannot take on very much cargo. It may be in time—that is the possibility anyway—that the lighter-than-air craft, not on the airship. That is the hope, and that is the contention of people who are building such air craft to-day; but I do not think that either kind of craft has yet proved to be commercially successful.

Mr. McMASTER: This resolution is one of the explanations why the national debt of this country has increased one hundred millions during last year. No doubt it is a nice thing to be able to experiment with airships, no doubt they can be put to useful purposes, but it is a question, can we afford it? I say we can't. The minister says that he has got these airships from the Old Country for nothing, but we have all heard of the tale of the young people who were setting up in life and who were ruined by having a fine parlour clock. At first they had to furnish their parlour to go with the clock, and then they had to furnish their dining room to harmonize with the parlour, and so on with the rest of the House. I suppose it is an ungracious thing to look an airship in the wing or a gift ship in the prow, but I wish to protest against this expenditure. I suppose it will be futile, the Government will pass this resolution. But I do protest most energetically on behalf of the tax-laden people —the long-suffering electors of this country—against this waste of money. Perhaps it is not an absolute waste, there will be some good obtained out of it, but we cannot afford it. The country cannot afford this experimenting with civil aviation. I noticed a few days ago, and I think the minister has just referred to it, that they had to stop the operation of a commercial line of airships between London and Paris. Well, if two of the wealthiest nations in the world, only situated a comparatively short distance apart, cannot find enough traffic to make their airships pay then it is an act of madness—and I speak with all respect to those identified with it,—to be going on in this way. We should not spend this amount of money. Of course, as far as the military airships are concerned I would not be opposed to some reasonable expenditure upon them, because if we are to have any military expenditure whatsoever, aviation is one of the branches which has to be maintained; but this civil aviation and this most unsound and unwholesome principle of dividing expenses with the provinces on a fifty-fifty basis, merits criticism. One of the things the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) drank in as a law student was that divided ownerships is a fruitful cause of litigation. Divided control is of the same nature, and we are having far too much of it in this country. We are having too much of this dividing of control with the provinces on this, that and the other thing. The provinces should pay for their own fire protection and we should not contribute to it—we are sufficiently heavily laden and we should simply represent the people of the Dominion as a whole. I do not think there is any use, the House being constituted as it is, in taking up time by insisting upon a division, but I do wish to register emphatic, and I trust well-founded, protest against this vote. It should be cut in half or cut down by two-thirds at least.

Mr. EULER: Can the minister tell us, in connection with the item of $850,000 expended last year, what part was contributed by the provinces?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not know that I could give more than an estimate. I would think between $35,000 and $40,000 for four provinces.

Mr. EULER: It is a very large proportion.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That represents the whole cost. The work undertaken for the provinces is paid on a fifty-fifty basis, but the civil item under discussion represents far more than the work undertaken for the provinces. It represents all the work undertaken for the Dominion of Canada. I have a synopsis of the work performed, and if it is deemed to be of interest I shall give it.

Mr. CAHILL: Let us have the synopsis.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Speaking of the province of Quebec it says:

This operation was undertaken at the request of the province of Quebec.

It was established at Roberval, Quebec.

It was established as an experiment to show the value of air craft in forest patrol and survey and to facilitate the exploration of the forest areas north and west of Lake St. John.

The Forestry officers of the Quebec Government have shown the keenest interest in the experiment, and their co-operation has ensured its success.

The free use of a suitable site on the shores of Lake St. John, at Roberval, was given by the courtesy of Lt.-Col. J. A. Scott, of Quebec. Buildings and a slipway were erected by the provincial Government. Two H.S. 2L. machines were flown from Halifax to the station, arriving on July 19th. Flying continued uninterruptedly until the end of October, when winter put an end to the work of the season. The work was carried out under the direction of the Provincial Department of Lands and Forests. Many reconnaissance trips were made; caches were established to allow of patrols being pushed further afield in future; and photographic surveys were made of the main river-courses in the district.

The provincial authorities have expressed themselves as being fully satisfied with the results of the experiment and have asked for its continuance and extension next season. They are prepared to increase their expenditure on the work considerably, and wish the patrol extended to Lake Mistassini and, if possible, to the shores of James Bay. The total flying time from the station was 73 hours. No accident to personnel or machines occurred.

Operational cost to date, $17,344.34.

That is the Dominion share of the operating cost on that survey. We also have a station at Halifax:

The Naval air stations established during the war at Halifax and North Sydney by the Department of the Naval Service were transferred to the Air Board during 1920 with all aircraft, equipment and material on the stations. As the expense of maintaining two stations on the Atlantic coast was not justified, it was decided that the base at North Sydney should be closed, and that the material there should be transferred to Halifax or other stations, where it was required for immediate use. This work was completed during the summer.

Halifax station has been maintained as an Operations Branch station for the erection and repair of seaplanes. As this station is open all the year round, it provided an ideal location for this purpose. Air-routes suitable for water-type machines lead to all parts of eastern and central Canada. The machines required for operations as far west as Winnipeg can be flown from Halifax in the spring, and back to their base in the fall, for overhaul and repair, before ice forms in these districts. This station also provides a base for combined training with the Naval Service and the local garrison.

Then we have a station at Morley, Alberta:

The main purpose served by this station is the provision of better fire protection in the Dominion Government Forest Reserve on the eastern slopes of the Rocky Mountains, from the International Boundary north to the Yellowhead Pass. The havoc caused by forest fires has been very great, and if better control can be obtained from the air, the expense of the operations will be amply justified. The Forestry Branch of the Department of the Interior are keenly interested in the work and have given the closest co-operation.

An Aerodrome site in the Bow Valley, on the Indian Reserve at Morley was chosen as a base. A Bessoneau hangar was erected in August, and patrols were maintained throughout September and October with excellent results. DH 9A and Avro machines were used. The high speed and reserve power of the former are very valuable in that district, as strong winds are very prevalent and less powerful machines cannot make headway against them. With the co-operation of the Radiotelegraph Branch, Department of the Naval Service, a wireless service between machines on patrol and the base was established. Though the season of greatest fire hazard was over before flying commenced, many fires were reported, and full information as to their exact location, extent and progress was supplied to the Forestry authorities.

The Superintendent of Dominion Parks and the Forestry Officers of the Commission of Conservation, as well as the Chief of the Forestry Branch, have expressed themselves fully satisfied with the results obtained by the introduction of the Air Patrol; they have ask that the services be extended, and that additional patrols be employed this year.

The base of this operation is being changed, this year, to High River, Alta.

I have memoranda on all the stations, but I do not know whether they are of sufficient interest to hon. gentlemen for me to read them.

Mr. MORPHY: What does the minister mean by "control from the air?" Is there any application of fire extinguishing elements in connection with the air service?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No. I know of no control except to discover and locate fires and report them. I suppose the aeroplanes could land if suitable landing places were available, but that is not the object of the survey.

Mr. EULER: I understand that of the amount expended last year only $35,000 was for provincial purposes, and was divided on a fifty-fifty basis. I should like to know what possible reason there is why the provinces should not pay in full the moneys expended for their own particular puprposes. I can understand why there should be co-operation with the provinces so long as we have these aeroplanes, but I do not understand why when we do discharge certain duties for them we are not repaid the whole cost.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I suppose the matter was in an incipient stage when it was taken up last summer and the Air Board wanted to demonstrate what it could do, while the provincial authorities may have been a little sceptical. At any rate we thought we had established a fair bargain as the work done was in the general interest of Canada.

Mr. JACOBS: I understand this is provincial property that we are guarding.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Only part of it—not in the West.

Mr. JACOBS: For instance, the province of Quebec has more money than the Federal Government has or will have for some considerable time to come, due I suppose to the fact that we have had twenty-five years of good Liberal administration there. Why should we go to the assistance of an authority highly solvent while we are on the brink of bankruptcy? It seems to me we are doing something which we have no right to do, and that we ought to protest vigorously against it. The province of Quebec needs assistance from no authority, and probably next year it will have a large surplus which it will be prepared to lend to the Federal Government at a fair rate of interest. I have not heard from the minister any valid reason why we should assist an authority which does not require our assistance. The property which is being preserved in this way belongs peculiarly to the province of Quebe. When the provincial authorities sell these timber limits they do not divide their profits with the Federal auhorities, and why in the name of everything that is sane and sensible we should be called upon to assist the province in any way is something that I cannot understand.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It may be that the matter should be reconsidered to see if we canont charge a higher proportion, if not the whole, of the cost to the provinces who request us to do the work. Quebec has gone into this work, I think, to a greater extent than any of the other provinces. It welcomed the idea, and we have gone ahead and demonstrated what civil aviation can do. As far as I know we have not done any fire ranging, only surveying and reporting on timber, water powers and the like, but the work has been pretty largely for provincial purposes—

Mr. JACOBS: Precisely.

Mr. GUTHRIE:—and it might be well for us to reconsider whether we should continue the work unless the provinces pay the whole cost. However, last year we went into it on a fifty-fifty basis. We have not actually entered into any agreements this year, and that matter might be worth considering. There are provinces where all the natural resources belong to the Dominion; of course that would be a different matter.

Mr. CAHILL: Has the minister given any consideration at all to the question of cutting down this Estimate? It would seem that the heads of the branches in each department come to a decision as to how many men they can employ; they make recommendations accordingly to the minister, and the minister simply adopts them. Perhaps the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster) could tell us how soon we shall be in a position to employ everybody in Canada, taxing ourselves accordingly. It seems to be the object of the Government to get to that position as soon as possible. I am sure that we could save several hundred thousand dollars on this vote without doing any harm to the people; on the contrary, a substantial reduction would result in a great deal of benefit to the people.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think I can honestly say that I did use the pruning knife on this item.

Mr. JACOBS: Use it some more.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The expenditure under this head will have to progress with time; if we are to keep up with all the modern inventions that come out we must prepare for a considerable increase from year to year. We did not increase it this year; as a matter of fact, we cut down the personnel and stopped seventy-five per cent of the proposed operations. The figures ran to about four millions before the pruning knife was applied. At the present figure I think we have cut down pretty nearly to the limit, if we are to go on at all. It may be the view in some quarters that we should not go on at all. I myself think that now that we have started it would be unwise to stop at this time. We can progress for a while, anyway, and see whether some real result is not accomplished. I believe that in civil aviation the results already obtained justify the expenditure. It has been intimated to me that last autumn fires which might have cost us several millions of dollars were located through these civil air operations and promptly extinguished.

Mr. JACOBS: Where?

Mr. GUTHRIE: In the West, at the mountains. It is possible that these fires might have been put out had we not had the civil aviation, but it is also possible that millions of dollars' worth of timber would have been destroyed. So that there is justification for at least part of the expenditure in actual saving to the country.

Mr. PEDLOW: The minister intimates that the civil aviation is to be credited with certain valuable services. Now, what service does the Canadian Air Force render to the country?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Just the same service as our militia render to the country. You cannot maintain an army or anything approaching it, you cannot maintain a military or naval system of any kind, if you have not an air force in connection with it. The late war demonstrated, I think, to the satisfaction of everybody, even to the ordinary lay mind, that it was absolutely impossible to operate troops without an air service. All scouting is done by the air service now. All artillery work is directed by the air service, as well as all movements of troops. If you are going to maintain any form of militia at all, you must have some air service in connection with it; otherwise your army would be very little use in time of trouble.

Mr. EULER: Does the $800,000 for the Canadian Air Force bear the usual proportion to total military expenditure?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No.

Mr. EULER: Is it greater or less?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Ours is much less. Speaking from memory, I think the proportion of air expenditure in the United States is 20 per cent of their total military expenditure, and in England I think the proportion is less than 20 per cent.

Mr. PEDLOW: In this appropriation there is an item of $825,000 for the Canadian Air Force and $700,000 for civil aviation. Is it not possible that either one of these branches might be dispensed with entirely and the training necessary in case of emergency made available through one of these two sources?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not think that would work out satisfactorily. There is one matter I omitted to mention: the Civil Aviation Branch has, of course, charge of the training of all airmen, the granting of certificates, and the prescribing of all flying conditions. That branch is already kept busy with applications of various kinds. Regulations are passed prescribing the law under which all flying is done in Canada. Just at the moment there is an anomaly in the condition between Canada and the United States. Canada, having become a member of the League of Nations, is bound by certain general regulations applicable to all nations which became parties to the covenant. In the meantime we are providing our own regulations and have notified the United States authorities that their machines flying over Canada must comply with our requirements, notwithstanding the fact that the United States has not become a member of the League of Nations.

Mr. PEDLOW: To what extent is Canada bound in this matter by her membership in the League of Nations?

[Mr. Guthrie.]

Mr. GUTHRIE: Canada has given her assent as a signatory to the covenant of the League of Nations to certain general air rules applicable to all members of the league, and not applicable, of course, to the United States, which has not become a member.

Mr. DUFF: The minister has told us that he is maintaining an air station at or near the city of Halifax. So far as I can learn, that station is absolutely useless, either for commercial or for military purposes. There may be four or five aeroplanes or seaplanes situated there, but they are of no use to the people of Canada. I am sure that the people of Nova Scotia have no desire for an air force or for aeroplanes either in Halifax or anywhere else on the coast of that province. I would like to ask the minister how many accidents occurred during the year 1920, fatal or otherwise.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I could not say with any exactitude. I think there were about eight or nine accidents, three of them fatal, if I remember rightly. Later in the evening I can get the exact number for my hon. friend. The secretary of the Air Board is not in the city this afternoon, but he will be here to-night.

Mr. DUFF: It seems to me that this is a pretty high price to pay for an air service in peace time. If we had war, of course it would be necessary to keep our air service and we would expect to have accidents. But it is a crime to render our very best young men, those from 21 to 25 years of age, liable to be killed or dangerously injured, just for the sake of having in Canada a service which is absolutely unnecessary. I protest against it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would direct the attention of the committee to the fact that there is an item in this appropriation for contingencies, $25,000. I would ask the minister what amounts are required for the purposes of contingencies that could not be taken out of the vote for Civil Aviation or for the Canadian Air Force?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The appropriation last year for this was $50,000. The memorandum which I have is this. This larger amount was necessary on account of organization work which was then going on and which will be dispensed with this year. The expense incurred under this vote will not be so great this year as during the organization period, when no stock of printed forms, etc., was available. Last year we had to do all that work. In addition we paid temporary employees, and for the present year it is not expected that there will be so many temporary employees as there were last year as the permanent staff has now been organized.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We have voted for civil aviation $700,000 and for Canadian Air Force $825,000. We are not asking for any details. These amounts cover everything in connection with those forces. Why then should we vote $25,000 for contingencies? The items which my hon. friend has mentioned in regard to last year could have been spent under the general appropriation; I do not think they should be under contingencies, and unless he can show good reasons why they cannot be spent under the general appropriation either for the Canadian Air Force, or for civil aviation, I think the item for contingencies should be struck out.

5 p.m.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I would have to consult with the officers of the board in regard to the matter. I presume this vote is to cover just such matters as I mentioned, printing and stationery, temporary employees, travelling, incidental expenses and the like. I cannot imagine what else the vote is for. If my hon. friend desires further information, I can get it for him.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does the minister think any of the items which he has just mentioned could be met out of the vote for civil aviation or the vote for the Canadian Air Force? If he does, this vote for contingencies should be struck out.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not believe they could, because these appropriations are pared down even to a dollar. These are the details of the $825,000 item:

28-day refresher course for 190 flying officers	$380,000
28-day refresher course for 50 ground officers	22,000
Three months' course for 400 mechanics	240,000
Spares	100,000
Seaplane training	60,000
Provincial executives, C.A.F. Associations	23,000
Total	$825,000

Those are right to a dollar without any room for contingencies. I have not the items for civil aviation, but I know the basis on which the appropriations were made up, and I know there is not a dollar left over unless there was a special item for contingencies, so closely was the expenditure pared down.

Mr. EULER: By whom are the items made up?

Mr. GUTHRIE: By the vice-chairman and the secretary.

Mr. EULER: Who are the members of the Air Board? What salaries are they paid? What are the expenses?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am the chairman of the board. Col. O. M. Biggar, K.C., is vice-chairman.

Mr. McMASTER: What is his salary?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Col. Biggar gets no salary. Sir Willoughby Gwatkin is inspector general of the force. Lt.-Col. Leckie is director of flying operations. Lt.-Col. Scott is controller of civil aviation, Captain Hose is director of the Naval Service. Dr. Deville is surveyor general. Captain Hose and Dr. Deville receive nothing for their services. I think the salaries are $5,000 each for the three other officers whom I named. It may be that General Gwatkin receives more than that. I can verify that in a minute or two.

Mr. JACOBS: How is the distinction made between those who receive a salary and those who receive nothing?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The other members of the board like myself and Col. O. M. Biggar, Capt. Hose and Dr. Deville are in other offices of the Government and receive other compensation.

Mr. CAHILL: Are the members of the board all Canadians?

Mr. GUTHRIE: That depends upon what you call a Canadian. General Gwatkin is an Englishman, long resident in Canada. Captain Hose is an Englishman, resident in Canada. The others are Canadians.

Mr. COPP: My hon. friend said that there was an appropriation of some $23,000 for provincial organizations. How is that distributed? Are there boards in the different provinces?

Mr. GUTHRIE: There are nine provincial boards, one for each province, and there is a certain amount of expense in connection with each board. This appropriation of $23,000 covers the expense of the nine boards.

Mr. COPP: Are there any salaries in connection with these boards?

Mr. GUTHRIE: There are no salaries paid for the boards. They hold periodical meetings, and they have examinations of their men and things of that kind. Our officers attend the meetings from time to time for the purpose of conference and discussion.

Mr. COPP: This would cover travelling expenses and things of that kind?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, this covers everything.

Mr. EULER: Is there any co-operation between the two branches of the service?

Mr. GUTHRIE: They are kept separate, but one board presides over them both. Their duties are, of course, separate. One is purely military and naval.

Mr. EULER Is a man ever transferred from one branch to another?

Mr. GUTHRIE: A man may be transferred, but none of the officers.

Mr. EULER: What about equipment?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Certain equipment is suitable for military and naval purposes and certain is not suitable for that. In matters of repairs, civil aviation machines are repaired by the military repair shops.

Mr. DUFF: Who comprise the Nova Scotia Aviation Board?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not believe I could give the names. The Lieutenant Governor is president of it.

Mr. DUFF: He is a flier all right.

Mr. GUTHRIE: He is chairman of the board, reputable citizens named by the provinces themselves comprise the boards. We have nothing to do with the selection of them.

Mr. DUFF: Are they gentlemen who have any knowledge of aviation, or are they appointed on account of some other qualifications? I am speaking only for my own province, because I have some knowledge of the work that has not been done in regard to aviation in my province. It is not necessary to have this aviation board or any aviation in Nova Scotia. I should like the minister to tell the committee what work was done in Halifax last year before we are asked to pass an appropriation, a portion of which is to be spent in Nova Scotia. As far as my knowledge goes, not one dollar of benefit resulted in 1920 from either a war or a civil standpoint. I doubt if five people in Nova Scotia can say that they ever saw an aeroplane or a hydroplane during 1920, and before we are called upon to vote a large amount of money to maintain a station in Nova Scotia, we should be satisfied that some beneficial result has been obtained. As far as my knowledge goes, it is an absolute waste of money to have this station in Halifax.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The board is for the Maritime Provinces, not for Nova Scotia. These are the members of the board: His Honour the hon. Wm. Pugsley, Lieutenant Governor of New Brunswick; His Honour McCallum Grant, Lieutenant Governor of Nova Scotia; His Honour M. McKinnon, Lieutenant Governor of Prince Edward Island; J. O. Hyndman; W. H. Dennis; Pilot Officer A. E. Stephenson; Flight Lieutenant R. A. Logan, C.A.F.; Flight Lieutenant J. L. M. White, D.F.C.; Flying Officer A. McGregor, D.F.C., C.A.F.; Pilot Officer H. H. Whitlock, C.A.F.; Secretary, Flying Officer H. R. Stewart, 57 Grafton Street, Charlottetown, P.E.I.

The station in Nova Scotia is considered as absolutely essential for the purpose of a seaplane service. The naval service nowadays must have as an adjunct a seaplane service, and the best base for that on the eastern coast was considered to be at Halifax in Nova Scotia, and on the west in British Columbia. These are our two seaplane stations. They are kept up very inexpensively at the present time, and our hope is that they will justify the money we are spending on them.

Mr. DUFF: The minister has given us the names of the members of the Air Board for the Maritime Provinces, and I notice that some very estimable gentlemen are members of that board. The Lieutenant Governors of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island are members of the board, and I think perhaps no gentlemen are held in higher esteem in the Maritime Provinces than the gentlemen who occupy these positions at the present time, but I think everybody will agree with me that these gentlemen know nothing about aviation. They are on the board, I presume, simply on account of their high official position. I presume that the other members of the board are members of the aviation corps. So far the minister has not given us any reason why this station should be continued. It no doubt is quite proper to have such a station in time of war, and, of course, if a station has to be established, Halifax is the logical place on the eastern seaboard, and the station in the West must be in British Columbia, but at the present time I think there is absolutely no necessity to have any air board or any expenditure on either of these stations. I think that no benefit has been derived by the people of Nova Scotia from having this station at Halifax during the past year or since the war. It is quite true that during the war we had seaplanes in the province of Nova Scotia, but they were supplied to us by the American Government and were officered by American officers. They did good work. We had absolutely to depend on American officers to guard the coast of Nova Scotia during the war. I doubt whether you could find five men in Nova Scotia who knew that there was a seaplane in or near the city of Halifax in the last year or so, and I say there is absolutely no necessity for maintaining this station at the present time.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): How many men were trained at Halifax station last year, and to what use is the station being put? I can well understand that Halifax would be an excellent base for such a station, but we would like to know what this station is useful for. Is it training men, or doing something that contributes to the defence of the country?

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is not a training station at the present time. All the work that is done up as far as Lake St. John, and, in fact, further west than that, is done by seaplane. All these seaplanes are assembled at Halifax and distributed from there. For instance, the ones that went to lake St. John came up the St. Lawrence to that place opposite Riviere du Loup. They made a landing there, and from there went on up the river a considerable distance, and then northward They have to depend upon lake and river landings. You cannot make a landing in the rough forest country at all. It is therefore absolutely necessary to utilize seaplanes. They are assembled at Halifax, and go back to Halifax at the end of the year. We have a staff of repair men there, but no training takes place at the station. The training, which is largely military training, takes place at Borden in the province of Ontario.

Mr. EULER: How many bases are there throughout the country, and what is the equipment of each?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not think I can give the exact equipment. We have a seaplane station at Vancouver in British Columbia, one at Morley in Alberta, one at High River, in Alberta, and we are equipping one for both airships and seaplanes near Winnipeg, Lake Winnipeg being the landing stage for the seaplanes. Coming easterly, we have a military base at Camp Borden, and a small establishment in Ottawa at Rockcliffe. We have one in northern Quebec, but from there east we have none until we get to Nova Scotia, where we have a seaplane station.

Mr. EULER: I thought the municipalities had some.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Those are landing stations, not bases. Some municipalites provide landing stations entirely at their own expense.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Are any aircraft used in Eastern Canada in connection with forest fires?

Mr. GUTHRIE: They are used in British Columbia, but I do not know whether they are used for this purpose in Eastern Canada. Airships are used in the Rocky Mountain section and in Northern Alberta, but I do not know whether they are used to put out fires in Northern Quebec. If aircraft are used for this purpose they are seaplanes.

Mr. FORTIER: In what part of Northern Quebec has the air force operated?

Mr. GUTHRIE: From Lake St. John 250 miles north. Work was done there last summer, and this year they propose to operate from another lake, the name of which I cannot remember at the moment. The member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Lemieux), will remember it.

Item agreed to.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I move that the committee rise and report progress, and ask leave to sit again this day.

Motion agreed to: progress reported.

CUSTOMS AND INLAND REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT

On motion of Hon. R. W. Wigmore (Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue), the House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution, Mr. Steele in the Chair:

Resolved, That it is expedient to bring in a measure to constitute the Department of Customs, and Excise, and to amend the Customs Act and Inland Revenue Act, and to provide,—

1. That there shall be a Department of the Government of Canada which shall be called the Department of Customs and Excise, over which the Minister of Customs and Excise shall preside; and the Minister of Customs and Excise shall be substituted for the Minister of Customs and for the Minister of Inland Revenue and for the Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue whenever they or any of them are or is mentioned or referred to in any statute or in any regulation or order made under or in pursuance of any statute; and such other provisions shall be made as are necessary to carry out the proposed change in the constitution of the said Department, and that the Customs and Inland Revenue Act be amended in these respects.

2. That section thirty-one of the Customs Act be amended by adding the provision that an entry shall not be perfect unless in all cases of shipments from any country other than the United Kingdom, British Colonies and British Possessions, where the value for duty of the invoiced goods in terms of the standard dollar of Canada is one hundred dollars or over, such invoice bear thereon a certificate of a Canadian Trade Commissioner, British Consul or other duly accredited officer, in the form or to the effect prescribed in that behalf by the Governor in Council, who may also prescribe the fee to be charged therefor.

3. That section forty of the said Act, relating to the valuation of goods at their fair market value in the principal markets of the country whence exported, be amended by providing that such value in no case is to be lower than the wholesale price thereof at such time and place, and by the added provision that the value for duty of new or unused goods shall in no case be less than the actual cost of production of similar goods at date of shipment direct to Canada, plus a reasonable profit thereon, and the Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue shall be the sole judge of what shall constitute a reasonable profit in the circumstances.

4. That section fifty-nine of the said Act be amended by adding thereto the provision that notwithstanding any of the provisions of the section, in computing the value for duty of the currency of an invoice, no reduction shall be allowed in excess of fifty per cent of the value of the standard or proclaimed currency of the country from whence the goods are invoiced to Canada, irrespective of the rate of exchange existing between such country and Canada on date of the shipment of the goods; and in respect of goods shipped to Canada from a country where the rate of exchange is adverse to Canada, the value for duty of the currency of the invoice shall be computed at the rate of exchange existing between such country and Canada at the date of the shipment of the goods.

5. That section one hundred and four of the said Act be amended to provide that entry of goods outwards by land conveyance shall be made at the Custom-house of the port of exit for Canada.

6. That section one hundred and thirty-two of the Inland Revenue Act, relating to the recovery of penalties, be amended to provide that the jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court be extended to enforce penalties up to two thousand dollars, and that every action, suit or prosecution taken under the provisions of the Act shall be inscribed on a privileged docket or roll, and heard by privilege and preference.

7. That section one hundred and eighty of the said Act be amended to provide that the certificate of a provincial analyst shall be accepted as evidence of the alcoholic content of the beer or wash suitable for the manufacture of spirits.

8. That section one hundred and eighty-one of the said Act be repealed and in lieu thereof it be enacted that every person who has been convicted of an offence against the provisions of section one hundred and eighty, relating to distilling without a license, or has been adjudged liable to the penalty therein provided for, shall in addition to any such penalty, incur a penalty in double the amount of duties which should have been paid.

9. That the said Act be amended by the insertion of the provision that on every cask or barrel used in a brewery or for keeping or delivering out any beer, there shall at all times be legibly cut, branded or painted in oil colours on one head, the name and address of the brewer; and on every bottle containing beer, there shall at all times be securely fixed by the brewer or bottler of the said beer, a label showing in conspicuous type the name and address of the brewer or bottler of the said beer and showing also the percentage of proof spirits contained in the said beer.

10. That section three hundred and fifty-six of the said Act be amended by adding the provision that every person who sells or offers for sale any manufactured tobacco or cigars otherwise than in or from the original package bearing thereon the proper revenue stamps, whether or not the proper duty has been paid on such tobacco or cigars, shall be guilty of an offence and be liable to a penalty of not less than ten dollars and not exceeding fifty dollars and for a second offence to a penalty of fifty dollars.—The Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Explain, please.

Mr. WIGMORE: The Department of Customs and Department of Inland Revenue were combined by Order in Council in 1918, under the name of the Department of Customs and Excise. The Customs Act and the Inland Revenue Act each contained sections constituting the two departments. Briefly, the proposed Act provides a uniform law constituting the combined departments and defining the minister's duties, and at the same time provides for some minor amendments to the Customs Act and the Inland Revenue Act. It is proposed to change the title from "Customs and Inland Revenue" to "Customs and Excise", and to make corresponding changes throughout the two Acts.

The proposed amendments to the Customs Act are: (a) To provide for certificates of Canadian Trade Commissioners or Consular Agents on invoices from foreign countries; (b) To provide for valuation for duty for customs purposes in certain cases; (c) To provide for valuation for customs purposes of foreign currencies in certain cases; (d), To provide for licensing of Customs house Brokers.

The proposed amendments to the Inland Revenue Act are: (a) To provide for increased jurisdiction in proceedings by summary conviction; (b) To facilitate prosecutions under section 180 respecting illicit stills; (c) To provide for marking containers of beer with name of brewer or bottler and description of alcoholic strength of contents; (d) To facilitate prosecutions, under section 356, relating to unlawful sale of tobacco and cigars.

Mr. MORPHY: I would like to submit a word or two with reference to subsection 7 of the resolution which reads as follows:

That section one hundred and eighty of the said Act be amended to provide that the certificate of a provincial analyst shall be accepted as evidence of the alcoholic contents of the beer or wash suitable for the manufacture of spirits.

Now in Western Ontario it is a very common practice amongst the farmers in various districts to use molasses diluted with water in the ordinary everyday feed of their hogs. The production of hogs in western Ontario is a very staple industry with the farmers, and a case that came to my attention last year was in substance as follows: An excise officer from Toronto went up into the county of Huron, the county adjoining that which I have the honour to represent, and in districts of that county it was a very common practice to prepare molasses with water and to sprinkle it upon the hog feed, at a certain time during the fattening period to the great benefit of the animals and the improvement of the quality of the pork. This officer went to a farmer of good reputation, who had nothing against him, and who was following the practice not only of his immediate neighbours but of the farmers generally throughout the county. The officer found ten gallons of molasses and water in the farmer's barn, ripening there for the purpose of being used to feed his hogs. Now, speaking from memory, section 180 of the Act provides that a man having in his possession beer or wash out of which spirits could be made, is, upon being brought before a magistrate, liable to be found guilty from the mere fact of having that liquid in his possession, and the minimum penalty is $200. In the case in question the magistrate intimated that he was convinced it was a hardship but he could not help himself—the Act was so drastic he had to impose a fine. Under a decision of the Supreme Court of Alberta it had been found that there was summary jurisdiction to try a case and impose a fine under section 180; but that court finally reversed its own judgment and said there was no summary jurisdiction vested in a magistrate, and that a farmer, or any one having the wash could be tried by preliminary investigation, followed by an indictment before the court. I believe that is the law.

Now, it seems to me that one of the things this country is suffering from, to a certain degree at least, is the drastic nature of legislation of this kind under which the most innocent man is at the mercy of a zealous Inland Revenue officer who—without any case other than the fact that the man has such things in his possession—will pay a visit and find the mixture of the alcoholic content. Then under this section that is now proposed, all he has to do is to get the certificate of the analyst and the man is fined, or he is indicted and prosecuted, and then subjected to both fine and imprisonment without the option of saying a word. There is no escape except by an appeal, after conviction, to the clemency of the powers that be—to bring forward the case, and probably present the evidence, and ask for a remission of the fine. I contend, Mr. Chairman, that such drastic legislation should not be acted upon without very great care, and there should be some provision in the law which would enable the man, upon trial, to show that the mixture was on his premises innocently. Furthermore, if the jurisdiction is going to be changed, the magistrate in the case should have summary jurisdiction so that he might hold that in such an instance as I have mentioned the liquid was being retained for a proper and useful purpose. Under the circumstances, and entertaining such an opinion, the magistrate would have power to say there is nothing culpable by reason of having the mixture there. This is a very serious matter and in the district in question it has put fear and trembling into the hearts of the men who have followed for a lifetime the practice I have described. The practice is so common that merchants publish advertisements in the papers declaring that the farmers may obtain molasses for the purpose mentioned. It is not a creation of modern conditions; it has been in vogue for many years. Moreover, the miller who sells chopped feeds also advertises where molasses can be found. It seems to me, therefore, that I am right in asking that before this section is passed the minister should take some steps to amend the Act so that in cases such as I have described a man will be enabled to show his innocence and to escape conviction when there is no guilty intent. I bring this matter forward in the hope that the minister will get his departmental officials to consider this suggestion in the interests of the public, who are entitled to be safeguarded against any unwarrantable prosecution.

Going back to subsection 2, I should like the minister to explain how he is going to have, we will say, a trade commissioner to attend to the business of shipments from the United States when there is no such official as a Canadian trade commissioner among those 110,000,000 people. It does say, of course, that the British consul may act. Well he may; but he may be at Washington, and the man who wants to ship goods, say, at Seattle, San Francisco or some other distant port will be greatly inconvenienced. We ought to have trade agents in the United States for the purpose of facilitating trade with Canada; instead of that we have such agents in countries 2,000, 3,000 and 4,000 miles away.

Mr. WIGMORE: As far as that section is concerned, the objection the hon. member raised does not apply at all.

Mr. BUREAU: Section 2?

Mr. WIGMORE: Section 7 of the resolution. This is just for the purpose of defining what is meant by the term "departmental analysis." At the present time if a prosecution takes place the only analysis that the courts accept is from a departmental officer. What we want is that an analysis by a Dominion or provincial analyst or by a man in the Department of Inland Revenue shall be taken by the court as well as the "departmental analysis." I am quite familiar with the case the hon. member refers to. When the inspector visited the premises he found bottles, kegs, in fact everything except the still itself. These violations of the law are taking place throughout the country.

Mr. CAHILL: In Ontario?

Mr. WIGMORE: Yes, in Ontario sometimes. Considerable leniency was shown to that man afterwards. It was assumed that the wash was for his pigs. At the present time our officers are on the lookout for the illicit still, and perhaps in the case in question they were a little more active than they might have been.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): What did the Government do—collect the fine?

Mr. WIGMORE: Yes.

Mr. McGIBBON (Muskoka): Is it or is it not legal for a person under the regulations in Ontario to brew beer of more than two and a half per cent strength for his own use?

Mr. WIGMORE: I do not think the Dominion Government have anything to do with that; it is purely a provincial matter.

Mr. McGIBBON (Muskoka): There is a clause in the minister's regulations covering that, and that is why I have brought it to his attention. The regulations of the department do permit it. But how far does that conflict with the local authorities, and who has the greater jurisdiction?

Mr. BOYS: I should like to get information on a point, although perhaps it has not a direct bearing on what is now before the committee. Referring to subsection (c) of 180 we find the following:

> Every person who without having a license under this Act, then in force,—
> (c) imports, makes, commences to make, sells, offers for sale or delivers any still, worm, rectifying or other apparatus suitable for the manufacture of wash, beer or spirits, or for the rectification of spirits, or any part of such apparatus.

Can the minister tell me whether or not a person manufacturing, innocently, part of a still is liable to prosecution under that section, and whether or not it has been the practice of the department to so read the section, even assuming that there is absolutely no guilty knowledge? The reason I ask this question is because as a matter of fact, such a case came under my own notice. I was defending, and able counsel were brought from Toronto to prosecute, and to my surprise it was argued that even assuming a man was absolutely innocent, nevertheless if he did at the request of some person—evilly disposed, if you like—manufacture merely a part, he would be liable to prosecution under that section. I am glad to say, Mr. Chairman, that I was able to persuade the magistrate that any such interpretation of the section would shock one's idea of common sense, and the prosecution was not successful. But it seems to me an appropriate time to find out whether or not such an interpretation is placed upon that section by the officers of the department, because, if so, I submit that it would be high time to consider an amendment of the section. Surely to goodness, in this country, if we have a law which enables us to get after those who are knowingly guilty, that ought to be enough. To have on our statute books sections which impose penalties on people who are absolutely innocent seems to me going altogether too far. Perhaps the minister can give me an answer.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: You are speaking from the Act?

Mr. BOYS: From the section of the Act which is dealt with by the Bill. With regard to section 7 of the resolution, I take it for granted that the certificate therein referred to is to be received as prima facie and not as conclusive evidence.

Mr. MORPHY: No.

Mr. BOYS: If it is conclusive, it seems to me it is going too far.

Mr. DUFF: What section?

Mr. BOYS: The section referred to in the resolution, section 180 of the Act. That is the section I quoted from first. My last remarks have reference only to section 7 of order 36, which is as follows:

That section 180 of the said Act be amended to provide that the certificate of a provincial analyst shall be accepted as evidence of the alcoholic content of the beer or wash suitable for the manufacture of spirits.

I take it that that is not conclusive, but merely prima facie; in other words, that, instead of bringing the man there to prove what he did and what the result of his operations was, the certificate of such an officer presented in court is receivable in evidence without anything further. If it was to be conclusive evidence, I should think it would be open to doubt, because there might be some question whether the analyst got hold of the right stuff for the purpose of analysis.

Mr. MORPHY: Just a word in connection with that to show the idea in my mind that it must be conclusive. The practice is for the officer to visit the place, take his sample, and destroy the rest of the contents of the barrel, which puts it entirely out of the power of the man charged to save a sample. Therefore the certificate must be conclusive, unless the public have the right to go into the provincial analyst's office and demand an independent analysis. What I complain about in section 180—I have not the Bill before me, I am only speaking from memory—is that the mere fact of having in possession a beer or wash liquid out of which spirits can be made in itself creates an offence, whether or not you are innocent of wrongdoing, and there is no escaping the penalty; there is no fine lower than $200—it runs, I think, up to $2,000. Now, the officer of whom I speak was away out from Toronto, about 150 miles west of that city. To show his avidity in the matter, I may say that as soon as he secured the conviction in this case, probably having in mind my argument that he might go into every cellar in the country and find gem jars that had once contained fruit but in which there would be some of the juice remaining—liquid or wash out of which spirits could be made—this officer about two weeks later actually did go into a cellar in Toronto, found a gem jar with liquid in it, took it before the court and based a case upon it. Mr. Cohen, who sat upon the case, notwithstanding that he had no law to warrant his doing so, said to this officer: "What are you doing here? Get out of this court with a case like that".

Mr. BOYS: I am afraid that I am being sidetracked, quite unintentionally of course. If I could get an answer to my question I would like it very much indeed.

Mr. McKENZIE: Before the minister answers may I ask him to read the section of the Act in question?

Mr. WIGMORE: It is section 180, and reads as follows:

Every person who without having a license under this Act, then in force,—

(a) distils or rectifies any spirits, or makes or ferments any beer;—

Mr. BUREAU: Including spruce beer?

Mr. WIGMORE: "Beer" is defined in another section.

(b) assists in distilling or rectifying any spirits, or in making or fermenting any beer or wash in any unlicensed place; or,

(c) imports, makes, commences to make, sells, offers for sale or delivers any still, worm, rectifying or other apparatus suitable for the manufacture of wash, beer or spirits, or for the rectification of spirits, or any part of such apparatus; or,

(d) Completely or partially sets up or assists in setting up, prepares or partially prepares for working, any such still, worm, rectifying or other apparatus; or,

(e) has in his possession, in any place, any such still, worm, rectifying or other apparatus, or any part of parts thereof, or any beer or wash suitable for the manufacture of spirits, without having given notice thereof as required by this Act, except in cases of duly registered chemical stills of capacity not exceeding three gallons each as hereinbefore provided for, or in whose place or upon whose premises such things are found; or,

(f) conceals or keeps, or allows or suffers to be concealed, or kept, in any place or premises owned or controlled by him, any such still, worm, rectifying or other apparatus or part thereof, or any beer or wash suitable for the manufacture of spirits; or,

(g) conceals by removing, or removes, or assists in concealing by removing or otherwise, any such still, worm, rectifying or other apparatus, or part thereof, or any beer or wash suitable for the manufacture of spirits; is guilty of an indictable offence, and shall, for a first offence, be liable to a penalty not exceeding five hundred dollars, and not less than one hundred dollars—

Mr. MORPHY: It is $200 now.

Mr. WIGMORE: It has been changed to $200.

—and to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a term not exceeding twelve months and not less than one month, and, in default of payment of the penalty, to a further term of imprisonment not exceeding twelve months and not less than six months, and for every subsequent offence, to a penalty of five hundred dollars, and to imprisonment, with hard labour, for a term not exceeding twelve months, and not less than six months, and, in default of payment of the penalty, to a further term of imprisonment equal to that already imposed by the court for such subsequent offence.

Mr. BUREAU: The word "knowingly" does not appear anywhere?

Mr. WIGMORE: No.

Mr. BUREAU: Does the section mean that a man who may have in his possession, not knowing what it is, part of a still or part of a worm, can be fined under that provision?

Mr. WIGMORE: I think it means that exactly.

Mr. BOYS: Then if it means that I want to protest against it most emphatically. That seems to me to be a monstrous attitude to take. In the case that I have referred to, the man who was fined was a tinsmith. He was not asked to make the whole apparatus; if he had been he certainly would have known what he was doing. The guilty party came to him and asked merely for a certain part, a bit of piping, and the tinsmith made it. In my opinion—and I feel certain I am right as to that—he did it innocently, and it is not right that under those circumstances a man should be liable to penalty. If this law has the effect of making such a man liable to penalty even if the magistrate believes he is innocent, then I say it is not right, and I do think the minister should consider the matter. I was just wondering whether the insertion of the word "knowingly"' would be dangerous. I quite appreciate the fact that it might open the door to abuses, but I am not so sure that justice could not be done if that word were used in connection with this provision. A man charged with the offence may deny it, but if the evidence is such as to convince the magistrate that he did it knowingly, he can be fined; if the evidence is not sufficient to show that, surely he should not be fined. I am a little surprised now to hear that the department takes the view that under the set of facts which I have outlined a perfectly innocent man is liable to a very serious penalty. I do not think a law like that should stand, and I hope the minister will change it.

[Mr. Wigmore.]

Mr. McGIBBON (Muskoka): I would like to protest, as I have protested time and again in this House, against this unnecessary restrictive legislation. I have been making this protest for years and I am going to continue to do it. I do not blame the minister; I blame the officials who bring this stuff into Parliament.

Mr. McMASTER: Blame the responsible minister.

Mr. McGIBBON (Muskoka): I say it is time we cut out this kind of legislation which restricts the rights of the people. Speaking in the House a few days ago I pointed out that under these various laws as they now stand a man does not know whether he is a law-abiding citizen or a criminal. We are loading up the statutes with provisions of these kinds, making innocent men guilty and giving them no recourse. I do not really know whether we are losing our moorings, whether we are departing from a condition of sanity or not, or whether we still have any rights left us under the old Magna Charta, the Bill of Rights and other things that our forefathers fought for. Legislation of this kind ought to be removed from the statute book at once.

Mr. WIGMORE: This is not new legislation; it has been on the statute book for years. The only change which is being made is that we are taking the analysis of the provincial men as well as of the federal departmental man. As to the case mentioned by the member for South Simcoe (Mr. Boys), I should think that the magistrate would deal with the merits of the case. I am not a lawyer, but I should think that if it was proved that the tinsmith was absolutely innocent, he would not have been penalized.

Mr. BOYS: What the minister said in answer to my question does not bear out what he says now; if it did I would have no complaint to make. If the attitude of the department is that a man who proves that he did this thing innocently is entitled to acquittal, then I have no objection to offer. My objection was to the interpretation put upon this section by the officer of the department who was in charge of the case, and by a very capable counsel who came from Toronto. They argued that it made no difference how innocent a man was; the mere fact of his making a part of the apparatus was sufficient to warrant conviction. That was why I asked the minister if that was the interpretation of the department, and I understood him to say that it was. If so, I want to protest. I do not know whether at this stage I can move an amendment; I presume I could not as this is a resolution, and I presume the only time when I could move an amendment would be when the Bill is introduced. Perhaps I had better say nothing more now until the Bill is before the House because, while the word "knowingly" would be appropriate to the point that I am making, the matter should be carefully looked into. There are so many other things in the resolution that possibly the word "knowingly" used in a wholesale way would not be proper drafting. In paragraph (f) of section 180, the word "conceal" is used, and if a man conceals a thing, the word "knowingly" would be superfluous. Therefore, I would not wish to move that the word "knowingly" be inserted to apply through all these clauses. Without saying anything further now, I should like to suggest to the minister to consider the point which I have raised, and I will reserve to myself the opportunity of possibly moving an amendment along this line when the Bill itself is introduced.

Mr. MORPHY: Just a word as regards the minimum penalty. While I would not advocate that a man should be fined under any circumstances, when he is innocent of any wrongdoing, that has happened and it will happen while the law is at present framed. The former penalty of $100 has been changed by an amendment to the Act to $200. If the minimum were brought down to say $10, in order to give a magistrate a chance, where he is bound to impose a fine, to realize the difference between innocence and guilt, the penalty would not be so severe. It is a disgrace to a man to be fined for an innocent act, his punishment is greater than the fine; but to many men the loss of this money would be a great hardship. Therefore, I would suggest that the fine be brought down to a moderate one, regard being had to the fact that magistrates are not corrupt; that they are endeavouring to carry out the law. Let them have a little opportunity of exercising their judgment as to the extent of guilt, and let them modify their judgment to the extent of imposing a smaller fine than $200 when they think a man is really innocent. On the whole, I believe the law should be so framed that a man who is undoubtedly innocent should not be at the mercy of any magistrate or court.

At Six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at Eight o'clock.

Mr. DUFF: I should like a little information on clause 2, which provides:

> That section thirty-one of the Customs Act be amended by adding the provision that an entry shall not be perfect unless in all cases of shipments from any country other than the United Kingdom, British Colonies and British possessions, where the value for duty of the invoiced goods in terms of the standard dollar of Canada is one hundred dollars or over, such invoice bear thereon a certificate of a Canadian Trade Commissioner, British Consul or other duly accredited officer.

I think that provision will work a hardship on both importers and exporters. I know some places where it is impossible to get a British consul or a Canadian trade commissioner to perform this service, and even where they are available, I do not see what good it is going to do, though perhaps the minister may have some explanation that will satisfy the committee. Vessels coming from the Mediterranean, for instance, with salt call at an island named Torrevieja and at another named Iviza, at neither of which is there a British consul or Canadian trade commissioner. If a vessel laden with salt goes to these islands and then comes to a Canadian port, I presume that the cargo would not be allowed to be landed here, or that the owner or importer would get into trouble. Even where there is a British consul, he would not know the value of the goods, and his certificate would not mean that the invoice was correct. I cannot see what good it is going to do, and I believe that it will work a hardship on both importers and exporters.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: That is a clause which will not be brought into effect except by proclamation, and the proclamation will not be issued until arrangements have been made to avoid any undue difficulties such as my hon. friend has suggested. I quite agree with the hon. member that if it were immediately brought into effect it would entail hardship, but we are going to avoid that in the way I have just said.

With reference to the person signing the certificate knowing or not knowing the value of the goods, there is no burden placed on the person who signs to find out what the prices of the goods are. All that the person who certifies has to do is to certify that the three copies are exact copies of the original, as to prices, and the quantities and kinds of goods. That system is in operation in the United States and applies to all exports from Canada, with the exception of goods less than $100 in value. The fee that the United States Government charges for this certification is a flat rate of $2.50 for the invoice certificated.

With reference to other countries, all of the South American countries, with the exception of perhaps two, have a system of certification of export invoices, on the same basis, but with varying charges. In some cases a flat charge is made, and in others a percentage charge of the value of the invoice, the minimum charges being in nearly all cases higher than those charged by the United States. Of course, when it is a percentage charge of the value of the invoice, it sometimes amounts to a pretty large figure. A large number of the European countries have a similar system, and they make it obligatory that these certificates shall accompany the invoice, and there is a charge therefor. This provision in our resolution is not to apply to any British country, either to the Old Country, or to any of the overseas dominions, colonies or dependencies. The ultimate object of it is to arrange for a system of trade representation as wide as we can possibly make it. It is not possible to put this into force with reference to the United States until we are in position to put it into force with all other foreign countries; otherwise, we would be discriminating against the United States, and we do not propose to do that. Consequently, at first we shall invoke the good services of the British consular and commercial intelligence officers in all these foreign countries for the purpose of certification, and gradually we shall work up, in the most important points, at least, to the establishment of a system of capable Canadian commissioners, who besides doing mere certification—that is only one part of it—will represent Canadian interests and try to expand Canadian trade. The matter has been engaging the attention of my department for a number of years, but was interrupted by the outbreak of the war, and has not been pursued since. The imposition of the small fee for certification of export invoices affords to the United States in so far as its whole consular service is concerned, an income under present rates which is quite sufficient to carry the whole expense of their consular service, and it is supposed, and I think rightly, that in the course of time it will be possible for Canada through the revenue that it thus obtains to put out well equipped and thoroughly efficient trade brigades, so to speak, in all the principal countries of the world, and to do that without the heavy outlay that we would have to meet if we did not charge a fee.

Some people may say that the fee itself acts as a tax on the consumer. It may be that sometimes it does, and it may be that sometimes it does not; that varies according to circumstances. It is, however, a very small fee, and where the invoices are for a large amount the small sum of $2.50 for certification is a very, very trifling charge upon the value of the goods.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): What immediate good does the minister hope to derive from the imposition of this fee? Is it with the object ultimately of extending Canadian trade, or what is the purpose of it?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I rather have missed what I started out to do, because I was flattering myself that I was explaining the purpose of it. The purpose of it, to take another tack and come up even with my hon. friend, is this: It is to enable Canada to extend into every quarter of the world where it is possible for her to do trade, the distribution of information, through trade agents, trade commissioners, and trade representatives, who will be appointed for the different places, and who will not only distribute information with reference to Canada but,—which is more important,—will gather information as to where, and of what kind, and to what extent there are trade possibilities and trade openings for Canadian products of all kinds, industrial and otherwise.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I suppose my right hon. friend will say that it is for that purpose that the United States exacts a similar fee against Canadian exporters to that country. I do not think that is the purpose at all. I know that in my own province there are a great many American consular agents in different localities, and as a matter of fact, they are not Americans, but Canadian citizens.

Mr. DUFF: They are all Canadian citizens except one.

Mr. MACLEAN: Yes, and they represent the United States, or the American consul at Ottawa or Halifax, or elsewhere, as the case may be, where there is a resident consul. These men represent the consul when any citizen of the United States requires the assistance or protection of the United States Government. These officers are not appointed for the purpose of extending trade. The United States, of course, has a special line of officers known as trade commissioners, scattered throughout the world, but I fail to see how we could hope to extend our trade by having someone whose duty it is to add a certificate to an invoice representing an export of goods. We can never hope, for centuries, to have consular representatives resident at all the ports in the countries to which we export. I do not think my hon. friend has the right idea in mind. The purpose he states is not the purpose of other countries in having a similar arrangement.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I grant that the United States have consuls and consular trade representatives of different kinds. The two things are conjoined. I am quite certain—

Mr. MACLEAN: No.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Yes, they are; they are absolutely conjoined. It is impossible for the United States properly to arrange for the certification of invoices of exports from Canada unless she gives fair facilities to all parts of the country. For instance, it would not be fair for the United States or Canada to introduce and put into active operation a scheme of that kind, involving the payment of fees, unless it made it applicable to the whole country. To do that it employs two agencies; it has its own consuls general and consuls, and it has its own agents and representatives, and it is quite possible that in Canada about 50 per cent of the agents of the United States are such as my hon. friend represents. They are Canadians who live in the localities and they do this work for the United States besides representing it in other ways. But the other half of the agents of the United States are absolutely trade officers. Their function is not only to put their names to certificates in connection with invoices, but they are supposed to be on the lookout from day to day to find out what are the currents, the possibilities, and the openings of trade. It must be remembered that in every case the certificated invoice finds it way to headquarters at Washington, the information is gathered of the sources, the trend, and the quality of trade, being supplied to the commercial headquarters in the United States from every quarter of Canada. My hon. friend can see in a moment that that is very important information to have hold of. It is the kind of information which the United States gets from both classes of its representatives, and the efficacy and possible result make that very eligible information and much to be desired.

Mr. MACLEAN: Does the minister not think that after all these benefits are very much exaggerated?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Well, that is the opinion of my hon. friend—

Mr. MACLEAN: I was merely asking you.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER:— and if it pleases him it does not displease me. Now there is a very considerable burden in bearing the expenses of trade commissioners in every part of the world in which we consider it well to have our trade represented, and the small fee that will be charged makes it possible to gather a fund which will allow Canada to increase her trade representation very, very largely and without a burden upon the finances of the country. In these days, when representation abroad is growing all the time more expensive, to pay a trade commissioner, with his staff and his necessary help, in a city in a foreign country takes a very tidy sum of money. It is possible for Canada, by this arrangement, to obtain from the revenue from certifications a sufficient sum of money to enable her to go far beyond her present representation in trade in foreign countries, and to do that without burdening her own exchequer. That, therefore, is a point to be taken into consideration.

Mr. MACLEAN: I will not provoke further discussion from my right hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster), because I am of the opinion that he will never put this clause into force for many years to come, and I am willing to let it go.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: We will try it out. I am going to live long enough to put it into force, and I invite my hon. friend to live as long to see its operation.

Mr. DUFF: Let us hope that it will be a long time before it goes into effect.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I hope my hon. friend will be here at the time.

Mr. DUFF: I cannot see how the minister can expect, from the fees he may collect, through consular agents, from exporters of goods, to pay the cost of trade commissioners in different parts of the world. The United States has, in this country, and elsewhere, what are known as consuls and consular agents. The member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean), has pointed out that the consular agents are usually Canadian citizens, just as, abroad, they are citizens of the countries in which the United States is represented. For instance, while in Ontario the consul general is an American citizen, practically every consular agent in every town in Ontario or Nova Scotia, or in any other province, is a Canadian citizen. These men are paid half the fees they collect. The minister said that the fee was $2.50. He will not mind my correcting him. It used to be $2.50, but now, owing to the high cost of living, and the American exchange against Canada, it is $2.85. The charge for certification is $2.75, and there is 10 cents added for exchange. Of that $2.85 the local agent gets one-half, and the other half he remits to the agent in the centre of the province who, in turn, remits it to Ottawa. Now in my opinion it is impossible for Canada to appoint agents in all parts of the world. That will cost this country a great deal of money. I cannot see why it is necessary to enact this legislation at the present time unless it is going into force immediately. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has just announced that he would not put it into force immediately; consequently, I cannot see the advisability of passing this clause in the resolution. As I said a few moments ago, there are certain places where there are no British consuls, or consular agents, or Canadian agents—in fact I am afraid that even the present trade commissioners which Canada maintains in certain parts of the world, or in certain foreign countries, are not doing very much good. Only a few days ago I was talking to the captain of one of the steamers in the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, and I asked him where he had made his last trip. He said he had been down to Buenos Aires and I then inquired if he had met the Canadian Trade Commissioner there. He replied that he had not, and that he did not know there was such a person. I tried to find out from him if there was a Canadian agent at Buenos Aires, and he said he had been there three weeks and had never seen or heard of him. If that is the kind of trade agents the Government has appointed the quicker it recalls them the better. What I started out to say was that I do not think this is wise legislation to go into effect because it is going to be a great interference not noly with the businessmen of this country but with those in countries from which we import goods. At the present time, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce knows, the exporter from a foreign country sends to the importer three copies of an invoice which is certified to. Those three copies have to go to the customs officer as soon as the goods arrive at the seaport or the place at which the vessel or train arrives. That should be all the information which the customs authorities or the Government should require. It is quite true, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce says, that of the American consular invoices which the Canadian citizen has to get before he can export goods one copy goes to Washington, another to the person to whom the goods are sold, and the third copy remains in the hands of the American consul or consular agent. It seems to me that if three copies of the invoice come to Canada and are deposited with the customs officer in the port where the goods are entered, that information should be sufficient so far as the Canadian Government is concerned. I would strongly impress upon the Minister of Trade and Commerce that there is no necessity for the clause in question at the present time, in view of the great inconvenience that is going to result from it to both exporters from foreign countries and to Canadian importers.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I want to impress upon my hon. friend who has just taken his seat that I do not think it is a wise thing for him to stand up in Parliament—I am not lecturing him at all, I am just stating how it strikes me—and throw cold water upon any trade commissioner, or the whole system of trade commissioners, because a friend of his tells him that he actually spent three weeks in Buenos Aires and never met a trade commissioner belonging to Canada. From that statement my hon. friend draws this conclusion: If that is the kind of trade commissioner you have abroad, you had better not send any abroad. That is not a fair position for my hon. friend to take. What was the matter with that man who spent three weeks in the little country of Buenos Aires?

Mr. DUFF: It is a big country.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Where did he spend that time? One trade commissioner cannot go all over Buenos Aires in three weeks. My hon. friend states that his friend did not see a Canadian trade commissioner after being three weeks in the great country of the Argentina, but I am not going to take that as a condemnation of my trade commissioner, particularly as we have in Buenos Aires as live a trade commissioner as we have in the whole outfit—a good man, an excellent man, one who understands the work and was there for a long while under Mr. Pousette years and years ago. We have kept that officer there, he is now our trade commissioner, and he is a good man. I am bound to stick up for my trade commissioners against such evidence as my hon. friend has given me. Then again my hon. friend says: "You are not going to put this system into force right away. What is the use of it unless you do put it in force right away?" Well, we have to provide for putting a thing into force before it becomes effective. My hon. friend, I believe, is somewhat of a fisherman. I imagine he does not wait until his vessel is ready to go out at the proper season before he gets his twine, and his lines, and his proper apparatus together. He makes his preparations, and we have to make our preparations. It is no slight thing to make proper preparation to put a system like this into force throughout the world. It is possible we will have it in operation inside of six months, and that is what I think I can say to this committee will be done. It takes a little time to do, but I am quite sure it will be done.

I have already communicated with the British authorities, and the Secretary of State for the Colonies has intimated his complete willingness to put me in touch with all the British consuls, consular officers, and intelligence officers throughout the world, and have them co-operate with me in this. That gives you an opportunity, without having to place Canadian commissioners in every part of the world before you can bring the system into operation; it gives you a modus operandi to facilitate your operations.

Now my hon. friend says we will not get much revenue from it. Suppose we test it by the facts? The United States last year got $496,184 in fees on the exports that were sent from Canada into the United States. Well, it is possible, I think, to make a rough calculation on that, and to come to the conclusion, without refining it very much, that we can get a good, tidy fee from this source. I am free to confess that when I first commenced looking into this question I was not very much in favour of the proposition. But the more I look into the matter, and the more the keenness of competition all over the world becomes apparent, the more I feel that we must put forth more effort in order to help our Canadian producers, industrial and otherwise, to find markets outside for the surplus they produce. I have come to the conclusion that not only will it result in a great gain in commercial information, but it will also help us to represent Canada in a way we could not otherwise do, and to pay for it by this system of a small fee for the certification of invoices. My hon. friend took exception to the amount I stated as the fee in the United States. The fee is $2.50 in the United States. My hon. friend shakes his head and says "no," but that is exactly what it is—no more and no less. The man who pays that fee down there pays $2.50 in American money. If there is an exchange against Canada that exchange is applicable not merely to that fee but to all our trade.

Mr. MORPHY: I want to congratulate the minister upon what I conceive to be a forward step along the lines of increasing Canadian trade in foreign markets. It may be interesting to the House to know that while at present we have no trade agency in the United States, Great Britain maintains a complete corps there. At Washington there is the Commercial Counsellor to the Embassy. In addition there are consuls-general located at Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, New Orleans and San Francisco. There are also consuls and vice-consuls in those cities and at other points throughout the country. The total number of British representatives in the United States at present is 115—none from Canada. They are there largely to promote British trade. There are 49 foreign consuls in the city of New York alone, including representatives of the smaller South American republics. Argentina has a consul-general at New York and another at San Francisco; in addition she has a consul at New York and another at Norfolk, Virginia, and twenty vice-consuls at various points. Belgium has sixty consuls and commercial agents in the United States, Bolivia has thirteen, Brazil has forty, Chile has one consul-general in New York and fourteen consular officers; France with less trade than Canada, has consuls-general at San Francisco, New Orleans and New York, and also a full complement of consular officers; Norway has an excellent consular organization in the United States with a personnel of over fifty, including one consul-general at New York. Practically all these trade representatives collect fees in the United States for viséing invoices or export manifests to their respective countries. The fees vary: Mexico and Ecuador charge 3 per cent on the invoice value; Peru, Bolivia and Guatemala, 2 per cent; France, $2.40; Japan, $4.00; Italy, $3.89; Spain, $12; Norway, $2.70.

The United States has a consular service throughout the world, including Canada, and all her consuls-general and consuls are paid by salary and are divided into classes. The only class referred to by hon. gentlemen opposite who get their remuneration from fees, to the extent of one-half the fees they collect, are those of the minor branch of the service in Canada. Those of the major branch get salaries ranging from $12,000 a year down to $5,500—not very large salaries for the class of work they do. Their vice-consuls are divided into three classes, with remuneration ranging from $3,000 to $2,500. None of these officers are entitled to retain the fees which they collect; they are paid a straight salary. The total number of United States consular agents in Canada is 92. They are not here for nothing; they are here for the benefit of the United States upon a trade basis, and that fact alone ought to be illuminating to us in Canada, when we consider that with a population of eight or nine million here the United States thinks enough of this small market—small to-day, but which will ultimately be great—to keep here 92 consuls, vice-consuls and trade agents. It does seem very difficult to explain to the business man that that being so, we have not one agent to look after our export trade in that market of 110,000,000 people.

Mr. DUFF: Are those 92 American citizens, or are they partly Canadian?

Mr. MORPHY: The majority are American.

Mr. DUFF: How many are American and how many are Canadian?

Mr. MORPHY: All I can say in answer to the hon. gentleman, because the nationality is not given in the repository where I got my information, is that I was told by the American consul-general here that they sometimes appointed Canadian citizens in small places aside from the larger avenues of trade.

Mr. DUFF: Is it not a fact that in most of the outports the United States representatives are all Canadian citizens, those of American nationality being confined to the capitals of our provinces and other large centres?

Mr. MORPHY: I put on record in this regard recently a statement that the full list of American consuls and agents in Canada can be found in the report of the Secretary of State for External Affairs for 1920 in appendices A and B. It will be found that the United States has trade representatives from Halifax to Vancouver, mainly, of course, at points of importance. For instance, they have three or four in Montreal, in Toronto, and in Vancouver, and two or three in Halifax. What are they there for, is the point. Are they there to benefit Canada or to benefit the United States? Why, absolutely for the purpose of stimulating United States trade in Canada, to advise their home government regarding trade opportunities here, and through them their home industries.

An hon. MEMBER: And we are paying.

Mr. MORPHY: Exactly, we are paying for that service here to the extent of our manufacturers and producers paying the fees on all the invoices coming before the American consuls to be vised. It seems to me that if they can make a profit in eight years of more than $869,000 over and above all their overhead expenses in a market of eight or nine million people, surely Canadian agents over there with the larger market of over 100,000,000 people would correspondingly make their offices pay, in fact make them self-supporting out of the fees paid by the American importers, to say nothing of the advantage accruing from the information they would send our manufacturers and producers of American needs for goods made in Canadian factories by Canadian workmen. Surely that would be a step in the right direction, and the minister is to be congratulated on what he has done. At a time when it is going to be harder to sell goods, the more information we can get of what the American people require the more will Canadian trade expand, and I am surprised at hon. gentlemen opposite questioning for a moment the advisibility of such a progressive step.

I appreciate that at the inception it might not be wise, as the minister has said, to put the service upon a complete basis, but it could be tried out. Points could be selected, having regard to the productions of Canada and the requirements for those productions in the markets of the United States, at which trade agents could be appointed. Starting first with some bright up-to-date commercial travellers, young vigorous men understanding trade conditions, a limited service of these live wires might be tried out in the United States to give us the best information available as to the requirements of that market of 110,000,000 people. The tariff is going up, and, as the minister has said, we have got to be more active if we are to secure our share of the American trade; and undoubtedly we have great industrial establishments that need such export trade. To my mind this is one of the brightest features we have had for a long time, and I commend the minister very strongly for the progressive step he has taken, indicating as it does, the intention of the Government to do everything possible to stimulate and develop the sale abroad of our surplus products. Already we sell to the United States $522,000,000 worth of goods, some wholly manufactured, some partly manufactured and the balance raw material, and they send us over a billion dollars worth of goods in return. Surely with the extent of the market over there in our favour, we can greatly extend our trade if this policy is carried out when we are already doing such a considerable volume of business without having any trade representatives in the United States.

Mr. DUFF: I am sure we are all of one mind in regard to the expansion of Canadian trade, but when the hon. member for North Perth tries to argue that the fact of there being a number of American consular agents in Canada, most of whom are Canadians, has any effect on Canadian trade, I am afraid I cannot agree with him. I venture to say that the American consular agents in this country do not increase trade from Canada to the United States $50,000 in one year. That is not there purpose at all—to try to sell Canadian goods to American customers.

Mr. MORPHY: It is not their purpose, but the information goes there and it is taken advantage of.

Mr. DUFF: The whole argument of the hon. member for North Perth was that we should agree to this particular clause in the resolution in order that we might encourage Canadian trade. Now, I say that having these agents in the United States just as the Americans have them in Canada does not in any way encourage the sale of goods by Canada to the United States. I am heartily in accord with the idea of having Canadian trade commissioners in every foreign country, but the matter of having trade commissioners to facilitate the selling of goods is quite different from that of having agents to affix their certificate to goods coming from a foreign country. This resolution has nothing to do with the appointment of trade commissioners for the purpose of increasing trade. To my mind, its specific purpose is to inflict on exporters in foreign countries and importers in Canada something which is not at all in the interest of trade—in fact, entirely in restraint of trade. I know enough about the exporting of goods to the United States to enable me to say that the only purpose it will serve will be, as the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce says, to keep Washington in touch with the goods which are exported from the United States to Canada. I repeat that if this provision involved the appointment of trade commissioners I would be willing to argue strongly in its favour, because if this country is to go ahead and if we are to pay off our war debt we must have live representatives in foreign countries. But I am sorry to say that at present we have not got them, and while the gentleman who is in Buenos Aires may in the minister's opinion be—

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: My hon. friend is now making another statement; he is expressing his sorrow—deep sorrow, I am sure—that we have not live trade commissioners outside Canada. Now, will my hon. friend prove the things that he states and give the instances where we have inefficient trade commissioners? I am ready to give the evidence of ten or twelve years' experience with the actual work of these commissioners, while my hon. friend has scarcely spoken, I suppose, to a dozen of them and understands nothing at all of what they are doing every day of the year. Do not let us have these general assertions. I do not say that a statement of that kind on the part of my hon. friend is going to knock the trade of commissionership system into a cocked hat, but it is not right for a member of Parliament to make that statement—because we are all equally interested in having trade representation at its best—unless he puts up the proof.

Mr. DUFF: There is no necessity for the minister to get so worked up over this matter. I am just as much interested as he is in the foreign trade of this country; perhaps I am more interested in it than he is.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Then you must not be so thoughtless.

Mr. DUFF: It is not a matter of being thoughtless; it is a matter of knowing what I am talking about, and I am afraid the Minister of Trade and Commerce does not know what he is talking about.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Give us what you know—come along.

Mr. DUFF: My experience and the experience of business men in Nova Scotia is that there are trade commissioners in foreign countries who do not do any thing to improve trade between Canada and foreign countries, and when the minister says they do he does not know what he is talking about. If these men in South America and the West Indies were competent they would keep in close touch with the business men of this country. We had a member of Parliament get up in this House a fortnight ago and tell us of a business man, representing the Ford Motor Company of Windsor, who had travelled all over Europe for sixteen months, and who in all that time did not come in touch with one commercial traveller or one trade commissioner representing Canada.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: What does that prove?

Mr. DUFF: If the minister's trade commissioners are such good men, certainly this man, who represents a very large firm doing a large business, would have come across some of them in France or in other European countries. Now, the minister twitted me a few moments ago with the remark that one of my friends had referred slightingly to his agent at Buenos Aires. The minister did not even know that Buenos Aires was not a country. Buenos Aires is not a country, I want to tell the minister; it is a city, and the largest in South America. And I want to tell the minister that it was not a friend of mine who told me this, it was one of the minister's own friends, the captain of one of the minister's own steamers, part of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine for which the minister and his friends voted $70,000,000, and in connection with the operation of which a false statement was given us either by the company at Toronto or somebody else. The man who gave me this information said that he was in Buenos Aires for three weeks and that he did not see the Canadian trade commissioner and never heard tell of him. So that the minister need not try to put off on me any of the sins of his own officials, or his own captains.

[Sir George Foster.]

Mr. BUREAU: The Minister of Trade and Commerce said just now that the provisions embodied in this resolution would come into force only by proclamation. There is nothing in the resolution providing for that

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The Bill will provide for that.

Mr. BUREAU: I imagine that some of us will not be here at the time when all these agents will have been appointed in all countries of the world to furnish these certificates for the purpose of expanding the trade of Canada. My hon. friend argues that the object of having a trade commissioner affix his signature to a certificate on every invoice is to furnish information. Well, the invoice has to go through the customs in any case and that information could be obtained through the Customs Department. I do not see, therefore, the need for this provision. But the point I want to make is this: ever since this Government has been in power I have protested against the vesting of all kinds of power in the Governor in Council. This resolution provides that an entry shall not be perfect until the invoice bears a certificate "in the form or to the effect prescribed in that behalf by the Governor in Council." Well, we know what the "Governor in Council" means; it means the Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue. As to the Governor in Council prescribing the form, I have no objection. I want the minister to give me a detailed explanation as to what he is going to determine shall be the effect of this signature on the invoice by the representative of Canada. The Minister of Trade and Commerce told us that the fee charged in the United States for this service was $2.50. Well, we do not know what the Order in Council will provide as to the fee we will pay. The Minister of Customs says that in the United States last year a revenue of half a million was derived from this source. I say that half a million is paid by the consumer. If this certificate would add anything to the validity or the genuineness of the invoice, well and good, but, as has been pointed out by the member for Lunenburg, how is the representative of Canada to know that the prices on the invoices are true and correct? He does not know; he simply puts down his signature and gets a fee of $2.50 to $3, which the consumer has to pay. On a large number of invoices in respect of goods of which the value for duty is over $100, that will amount to something. I do not see the usefulness of a provision of this kind—unless it be that it will give the Minister of Customs or the Minister of Trade and Commerce, whoever will have charge of the matter, the appointing of some men as commercial representatives to sign these invoices. As the member for Lunenburg has said, the member for Perth has shifted his ground. We are not criticising the advisability of having commercial representatives in various countries to show the advantages that may be had in trading with Canada, or the superiority of Canadian products, or what Canada can produce and supply to those countries. But from that to the point of having a man in a foreign country to affix a signature to an invoice which is sent by the man from whom the Canadian importer purchases, there is a long way to travel, and I do not see any necessity for this except, as I have said, to give the Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue, through the Governor in Council, an opportunity to prescribe or determine what the effect of the signature will be. I would ask the minister to explain why the words "or to the effect prescribed" are inserted in clause 2 of the resolution.

Mr. WIGMORE: The form of certificate to be determined by the Governor in Council is the same form exactly as is called for to-day under section 32:

> With the bill of entry of any goods, there shall be produced and delivered to and left with the collector an invoice of the goods, as provided in the last preceding section, attested by the oath of the owner, and if the owner is not the person entering such goods, then verified by the oath of the importer or consignee, or, subject to the provision hereinafter made, some other person who may lawfully make such entry and verify such invoice, in the form or to the effect of the oath or oaths prescribed by the Gorvernor in Council in that behalf.

Mr. DUFF: Why is that not sufficient?

Mr. WIGMORE: Because it is deemed necessary and advisable to carry out the regulations as laid down by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. This is the form that is being carried out by every other country in the world to-day; it is a check on invoices and also a means whereby we can get information as regards imports into or exports from Canada.

Mr. PEDLOW: In what respect is this a better check or a greater safeguard than the system which prevails at present?

Mr. BUREAU: The reading of that section does not answer my question. I want to know the form. The minister may provide any form he desires so long as the language is not extravagant, and I suppose it would be criticised if it were. What do the words "or to the effect prescribed" mean?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Does my hon. friend understand exactly what is meant to be done? The form of the invoice which is to be certificated is an exact replica of the invoice such as is rendered now and has been rendered for all these years. It is not another paper that is made up and signed by the person who certifies it. It is a copy or three copies of the invoice itself. It is not a new creation; it bears simply the sign manual of the officer that this is an exact duplicate of the commercial invoice which is sent with the goods, just as is done now and has been done for all these years past. It does not add any force to the invoice at all because it does not change it in any way. But there is this in connection with it, that you get three copies of those forms sent in the different ways that they are sent to the different destinations, and you collect the fee for the work. That gives you the revenue necessary for extending our trade commissioners.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Would the Canadian importer not pay that fee?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The United States at the present time have that system at work in Canada, and the argument is made that if the United States charge a fee of $2.50 in Canada on each export invoice, the Canadian pays the fee. Now the argument is taken that if you reverse that and we put into operation on that side the same system as the United States carry out in Canada, it is still the Canadian consumer who pays the fee. There must be something wrong in that kind of reasoning.

Mr. MACLEAN: I would say that the cosumer pays in all cases.

Mr. BUREAU: The minister has not answered my question. I never doubted that there were to be triplicate invoices or said that the signature would add to or take away anything. My objection is to the words "or to the effect prescribed" in clause 2, which reads:

> A certificate of a Canadian trade commissioner, British Consul or other duly accredited officer, in the form or to the effect prescribed.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: That means simply this, that the accredited officer, whoever he may be, certificates the invoice in the form or to the effect prescribed by the Governor-in-Council.

Mr. BUREAU: If the effect is prescribed by law, that makes it perfect.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The officer cannot go beyond the original invoice. He certificates that that is a true copy of the invoice. That is all that the wording means.

Mr. BUREAU: Why should the Governor-in-Council reserve to himself the right to determine or prescribe what effect this shall have? Let the law say what the certificate is to be. Drop the words "or to the effect prescribed."

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: You must use such a form as will certify to you that this certificate is an affirmation of the original invoice. The wording may be redundant. That is the way in which it is drawn up by the law officer.

Mr. BUREAU: I want to know why it is drawn up in that way.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I will give my hon. friend the information when we come to the Bill. Another argument used here is that because the United States employ in this country probably about one-half of their agents who are Canadians and not United States' people, therefore, these Canadians, acting for the United States, do not give any trade information of any value to the United States, and, consequently, they are not useful in the matter of trade. That is the United States method of action. They 9 p.m. can have all their consular agents United States citizens if they so choose. They employ as many of them as they choose to employ, and then, for purposes of their convenience, they appoint Canadian residents at different ports. They do that so as to facilitate the certification, because it is the law in the United States that these invoices must be certificated. That is the method followed by the United States; but along with that method they have at least in Canada 50 per cent of their own active trade consuls, consuls general, consuls and consular agents, and those are active gatherers and distributors of information which goes to the fountain head at Washington. They might make three classes; they make it a sufficient number to carry out their purpose. That is their plan of working. It may happen that with Canada's plan we shall have fewer trade commissioners at the beginning than we will have when the system has developed; it takes time to work up. The object in this is to place in all the principal centres of the world a Canadian trade commissioner, not simply to certify invoices, though he will do that while carrying out his fundamental duty of distributing information with reference to Canada and gathering trade information from the districts that he represents; that is, the trade commissioner pure and simple, which my hon. friends are all in favour of. From both sides of the House there come, and have come for many sessions, stronger now than formerly, representations that we must do something more to extend our distribution and gathering of trade information abroad, so as to facilitate the expansion of our foreign trade. Now, that costs money. If I were to come down to the House and ask for a half million dollars for trade commissionerships, I would find it very difficult to get that appropriation from the House, but here I am coming down with a scheme by which we can gather a revenue in the way I have stated so that we can have these trade commissioners without an undue burden, perhaps without any burden at all on the treasury. This will give Canada an opportunity of extending her trade relations very, very largely. Do not let us forget that this is a plan to extend our trade commissionerships, and in that object both sides of the House are quite in harmony.

Mr. FIELDING: I had the misfortune not to hear the first portion of the discussion, and it is quite possible that the point to which I am about to draw attention has already been covered; if so, my hon. friend will have to bear with me.

When I heard the speech of my hon. friend from North Perth (Mr. Morphy) I was under the impression that we were dealing with a resolution to provide for trade commissioners all over America, but I find that there is nothing of that sort in the resolution. The resolution does seem to imply that there are to be additional trade commissioners, because it refers to the necessity of having these certificates given by the trade commissioner or the British consul. Has the point been considered how many of these new trade commissioners will be appointed for this purpose? Has my hon. friend come to any conclusion on that point?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: What I face is a condition of things which opens up for the future through gradual expansion, an opportunity for a very wide extension of our trade commissionerships. Now the United States has in this country some 75 or 80 of these different agents, consuls, consuls-general, and otherwise, who cover the whole of Canada, the area of which is equal to that of the United States. Going on the assumption that for us to carry out this scheme thoroughly in the United States would require about an equal number, that would mean that Canada must have in the United States, sooner or later, 60 or 70 or 80 full trade commissioners, or agents who do part of the work of the trade commissioner, but not the whole work, and who receive a part of the fees, as my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Duff) has stated. It is impossible for us to engage such a large force at once, so we propose to utilize in the United States, taking that country, for example, the British consular service and the commercial intelligence service, and probably some agents as well, for the purpose of certification mainly, and not only as gatherers or distributors of Canadian trade information. In the gradual working out of the scheme we will come to the point ultimately where we will have Canadian trade commissioners, pure and simple, in the most important points in the United States, and we will work out with lesser officials, at less expense, the machinery necessary for this certification, which is to be general. So I cannot say how many we will have at first. It will require a good deal of care in selecting those who are to go, and it will take time to get properly qualified persons.

Mr. FIELDING: My hon. friend knows that once it is well understood that he is going to appoint a lot of trade commissioners in the United States, he will have no lack of applications.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The applications are easy.

Mr. FIELDING: He will in all probability find that it is not so easy to resist the pressure as he imagines to-day. There is one important point in this matter which my hon. friend has not stated squarely and emphatically. This is a proposal to impose an additional duty on goods coming into this country from the United States; that is what it is. It proposes that a parcel of goods to the amount of $100 shall be taxed for a certificate. The amount of the tax is not stated; it is to be fixed by the Governor in Council; but my hon. friend, by way of illustration, has stated that in the United States the tax is $2.50 for the certificate. Assuming that he follows the practice there—and how many times these hon. gentlemen are pleading the example of the United States; it is amazing how much they are learning from the United States now, and how little they were prepared to learn a while ago—he will add $2.50 to a bill of $100. There is no question who pays all these taxes. Two-and-a-half per cent may not amount to anything, I may be told. Why, Sir, in the memory of my hon. friend, and some of those who are even younger, a great change in the politics of this country took place on a question of two-and-a-half per cent. In 1878 the Mackenzie Government were asked to add two and a half per cent to the duties, and they refused to do it, and went out of office on a question of two-and-a-half per cent. My hon. friend without the slightest hesitation is going to add $2.50 to the duty on every $100 worth of goods coming in here from the United States. That is a direct tax on the importer.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I do not think my hon. friend would make a statement that does not square with the facts. The way he stated it would give a wrong impression to the country. He says that this charge will amount to two-and-a-half- per cent upon every $100 worth of goods.

Mr. FIELDING: Upon one hundred dollars worth of goods.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: That is correct. Let me say this: If a person sends in a present of jewellery, that is not a commercial transaction. But some of these invoices will amount to $20,000, $50,000, and $100,000. Now $2.50 on an invoice of $20,000 is only one-eightieth of 1 per cent.

Mr. FIELDING: The amount would be small on a large invoice, I admit. If anything I said conveyed the impression that this was a tax of 2½ per cent on every $100 worth of goods, that was not my intention, and it is not in accordance with the facts, but be the amount large or small, this is an additional tax on goods coming in from the United States. Can it be that there is some concealed desire to add a little more protection to the manufacturer in this way? It is quite possible, it seems to me. That is the effect of it, at all events. What is the cause of it? We have been doing without this thing for ages, and how have the public been affected? Has the business of the country suffered? Has the revenue been defrauded? I cannot see what need there is for this. My hon. friend has given no reason but the one, that they have it in the United States. Once more the plea is that we must follow the American example. That is not an argument. There may be reasons which might make it defensible from the American standpoint, but that is by no means a sufficient argument as to why we should have it here. I have not heard any other argument put forward than that this arrangement exists in the United States; therefore, it should exist in Canada. If we have been getting along without this tax for all this time without any evil having been created, and if the revenue has not been defrauded in any way, and no public interests have suffered, why on earth do you put on this tax? It is for one of two things: either it is intended as additional protection to the home manufacturer, or it is designed to create a large army of officials. Whether or not my hon. friend starts out with that intention, he will find ultimately that he will be under pressure to appoint a large army of officials in the United States to carry on this work. No man in this House is more anxious than I am to cultivate trade with the United States wherever it can be shown that benefit is derivable, and whenever my hon. friend can submit any scheme whereby we may develop business with our neighbours to the south of us, I will commend him for sending agents there, although, as I stated on a former occasion, when my hon. friend agreed with me, the proximity of Canada to the United States is a reason why we should not have any considerable number of agents across the line. My hon. friend agreed with that view, as I expressed it only a couple of weeks ago, but once he opens the door to the employment of agents he will find that pressure will be brought to bear upon him to send over a large army of such officials. I have seen no evidence to convince me that this is needed for the trade of the country, and I do not think that we should enter upon a policy which will have for its object the providing of places for a large number of officials in the United States.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: I might say a word or two in reply to my hon. friend. The proposition of the minister has been supported by business men, not manufacturers, because there are very few manufactured goods going to the United States from Canada, if any. From business men generally there has been a call for a considerable time, to my certain knowledge, for this to be done. I do not see how my hon. friend can argue that this proposal means an additional duty or tax, as he calls it. This tax has been imposed by the United States on shippers from Canada for many years past, and I myself have been under the necessity of paying it scores of times. It is paid out of the business of the man who does the shipping, and is not collected from the United States consumer. It has to be paid on this side of the line before the goods can cross into the United States. On invoices of goods up to $100 in value, no fee is charged, but over $100—it matters not whether it be $1,000 or $20,000—the charge is only $2.50 per invoice, and that is paid by the shipper before his goods can leave Canada for the United States. I understand that there are close upon 100 of these American agents in Canada who collect nearly $1,000,000 per annum, and as the total expense which the American Government is under in order to sustain them is about half that amount, the American Government gets practically $500,000 of revenue from shipments from Canada to the United States. Now, take it the other way. We buy from the United States about double what they buy from us, and it is reasonable to suppose, therefore, that there would be about double the number of invoices from the United States to Canada than from Canada to the United States. On each of these invoices, I understand, $2.50 will be paid by the American exporter before his goods can start for Canada, and that amount will not be incorporated in the bill, because the price is named regardless of this fee, before the bargain is made. This proposal is made simply for the purpose of verifying the invoice, and I believe that the proposition is an excellent one from a business standpoint. The minister proposes to place trade agents in the United States with the object of getting orders and business. It is a good proposal not only as regards the United States, but as regards any other country in the world, and instead of having to draw on the treasury for the payment of these agents, it is proposed to make the shippers on the other side of the line, or over the water, or wherever it may be, pay the tax that will support these agents, and perhaps give us a balance. I believe that the proposal is endorsed by business men generally. In my judgment it cannot be argued that it in any way increases the duty or that it will be paid by the consumer. It will be paid purely and simply by the shipper, and the proposition is one that should commend itself to all business men in the House.

Mr. FIELDING: When a man ships goods to the United States, he takes into account, in fixing the price, all the elements that go to make up the cost to him. When making up the bill of costs, he knows that he has to pay this $2.50, and he therefore charges it. Whether he puts it in one form or another, is immaterial. My hon. friend must not deceive himself; these things are paid by the consumer in the end. If anyone goes to New York and buys goods, the bill is made up with full regard to all the expenses which the merchant or manufacturer has to incur in any shape of form. He makes up his bill and includes the $2.50, and the consumer will have to foot that $2.50 in addition to the first cost of the goods. My hon. friend has given no reason for this proposal. What harm has come of the present arrangement? Has the revenue been defrauded? I have asked that question before, but my hon. friend does not answer it. I repeat: what is the need? My hon. friend says that the charge will not be heavy, and that the exporter will pay. Well, that is a disputable point, and I have shown that it is the consumer who pays. But waiving that for the moment, I submit that that is not sufficient reason. How is the trade going to be benefited? My hon. friend admits that no new invoice will be taken to the agent to be certificated. He will get the same invoice as the original, and he will simply put a stamp on it and charge $2.50. Well, what additional information will you get from that that will be of benefit to trade? There will be absolutely no additional information from that process, and I do not see any earthly reason for this proposal except that you will make jobs for chaps in the United States. I say once more that I do not object to sending men there when there is business to be done, but I do submit that no case has been made out in the present instance.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: My hon. friend, I am sure, does not wish to mislead anyone, but I certainly think that his remarks will have that effect. If his contention is correct, that the consumer in Canada will pay this particular duty, does not the consumer in the United States also pay the duty—my hon. friend calls it a duty or a tax—which is charged on invoices of goods shipped from Canada to the United States? Surely my hon. friend will not argue that, if the consumer in the United States does not pay the tax that is charged on invoices of goods shipped from Canada across the line, the consumer in Canada will pay the $2.50 levied from the American exporter before he sends his goods over here.

Mr. FIELDING: I have no hesitation in saying that the American consumer in the one case, and the Canadian consumer in the other, pay the duty, as they always will have to do. You may put it on one side of the account or the other, but in matters of this kind the consumer will ultimately pay charges of this kind. In this case, I have no doubt whatever that the charge will ultimately come home to the consumer.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: Will it be the American or the Canadian consumer?

Mr. FIELDING: The consumer will pay in either case.

Mr. PEDLOW: About an hour ago, I ventured to break into the discussion to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question. I want to know in what respect the present system has failed to satisfy the requirements of the Customs Department, and in what regard the proposition put forward in this resolution will be an improvement on the system now in operation.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: This is not designed at all in the interests of the Customs Department. The Customs Department has had for years its system of invoicing, of inspection, and of examination, and it remains exactly the same. It is not aided in that respect by this system when it goes into effect. This method simply says to the agent on the other side, whoever he may be, that he has to certify that the invoice presented to him is such and such, and then he has to dispose of the three copies of the invoice that he certificates in the way which is stated by the law. The purpose of this is simply to have a convenient arrangement so that you can have agencies fairly reasonably well distributed, without being a burden upon the treasury of the country, where the certificates can be got and attached to the invoices and sent on to their destination. The purpose in all this is to extend the trade commissionership work in outside countries and to raise, by the simple method of the fee per invoice, the necessary funds to do it. That is what this is for and nothing else. There are incidental advantages that will ensue. In the first place, there will come with each of these certificated invoices its duplicate and it will be in the hands of the Trade and Commerce Department here showing the origin of the goods and the peculiar train, trend and current of these different transactions. In that way valuable information will be available to the department which it may use; but the main thing is to build upon this a body of trade commissioners in these foreign countries who will do the work that trade commissioners are doing now, only do it in a much more extended and in a much more widely distributed way.

Now, as to the tax that is proposed. You have, for instance, different kinds of transactions. Here is somebody in the United States who wants to send a present up to some friend in Canada. If the value does not go beyond $100 then there is no payment at all. If it goes beyond $100, payment has to be made for the certification of the invoice. That is not a tax on trade—that is simply what a man pays for sending something that he wants to be sent to a friend. That is one form of transaction. I think we can put that to one side. The number of transactions which are in the neighbourhood of $100, or such small amounts for which invoices are to be made out and sent into Canada, is comparatively small. The invoices are for larger amounts, sometimes very large amounts. On a $20,000 invoice the fee is only one-eightieth of one per cent, and I can hardly look upon that as a tax which is burdensome upon either consumer or shipper, whoever may have to pay it, and it is so small that it certainly could not make an item in the value of the goods which are sent. So that for a trifling burden, if it be a burden at all, we get the funds necessary for widely extending our Canadian trade commissionership system which is asked for on both sides of the House, which is asked for by the business community as well, and which, from every side within the last four or five years, I have been persuaded and counselled to put into operation. We are asked for more men to distribute information with reference to Canada, and for more men outside who will gather information with reference to trade possibilities.

Now, my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) says that only two reasons have been given for adopting this policy, and one is that the United States does it. I have not in any degree based my argument upon that. I am not doing this simply because the United States does it. I have cited the fact that most of the countries in the world do it, that it is a system that is generally in vogue, and therefore we are not inaugurating a system that is not already in existence. Nor have I had the least idea of inaugurating a system of this kind, in order to make offices and places. You cannot have trade commissioners outside of Canada unless you appoint them, whether it is by this system or any other system. If you want more trade commissioners you have to appoint them, and the law as it exists to-day is that they are appointed through the Civil Service Commission. They will be appointed in just the same way as they have been—as prescribed by the laws which are in force for the time being.

Mr. FIELDING: Would they be technical officers under the new Bill?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: We have not received the new Bill yet.

Mr. PEDLOW: I have listened with very great interest to the lengthy explanation given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in answer to my inquiry, but I still fail to see the special reasons for the enactment of this new provision. If it is the intention of the Department of Trade and Commerce to extend this service, why not extend it along the lines that have already been inaugurated—that is appointing agents here and there throughout the world and paying them salaries from the public revenue? I quite agree with the claim made by the member for Shelburne and Queen's that in the last analysis the consumer will pay this charge, the member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) to the contrary notwithstanding. In the case of goods purchased in Canada, exported to the United States, the commission or fee charged is paid by the purchaser on the other side. On the other hand in the case of purchases of merchandise in the United States made by a Canadian importer he would be compelled under this resolution to pay a fee of $2.50 for a certified invoice. Undoubtedly that charge will be included by the manufacturer in the cost of manufacturing his goods. Therefore the consumer in either case will have to pay that additional charge, the exchange upon it, and the duty as well. On Saturday afternoon we were discussing another item where an additional charge was made. This only goes to show that Government is continually adding to the cost of commodities. On Saturday the Minister of Finance caused a resolution to be passed under which each item of merchandise coming into this country will have to be branded. Now that is going to be an expensive operation, and I repeat that in the last analysis the consumer will have to pay the cost. I defy successful contradiction of that statement. The Minister of Trade and Commerce and the member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt), challenged a statement made by the member for Shelburne and Queen's as to the added cost on $100 worth of merchandise. I think the position taken by them was correct to a certain extent; but the minister has claimed that by the operation of this resolution he will realize a revenue of at least $500,000. If that statement is correct there is no question in my mind but that the consumers in Canada will have to provide that money. Not only that, but in addition they will have to pay the customs duty on that $500,000 and the profits two or three times over on this amount. I claim that the system already in force whereby an importer of over a certain amount of goods must produce an invoice certified by the exporter, or by some one acting under power of attorney from him, gives to the Government of this country all the protection they require; in fact, it gives them all the protection they will have under this system, because there is no question in my mind that the trade agent it is contemplated to appoint will be nothing more or less than a rubber stamp. The exporter will pay him $2.50, and the trade agent will stamp the invoice—which is merely the excuse for collecting the fee. If the Government continues from day to day as they are doing now, the consumer will certainly realize before long why commodities are costing so much more in Canada than in other countries. If this policy proceeds very much longer, I would not be at all surprised if the people began to clamour for another committee to investigate the high cost of living, and after the responsibility is saddled unfairly on the retailers—as was done two years ago—we will no doubt have another Board of Commerce, and on its dying by the process of elimination and otherwise we will have perhaps some other combination to regulate trade. But more effective than any of these committees or boards would be some scheme whereby this Government could be induced to go to the country for a new mandate, for I am confident that the people would then put an end to all this nonsense.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): Mr. Chairman, I must say that I have failed to notice that my right hon. friend the minister has met the arguments of my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's. I would be very willing indeed to support my right hon. friend if I were sure that his proposal made for promotion of trade. My right hon. friend will readily believe that about me. For a number of years in this House I have not been troubling governments so much to promote trade as to persuade them not to prevent trade. That is my trouble with the governments of this country. Though my right hon. friend has persuaded himself that what he is doing is in favour of the promotion of trade, I am not at all sure but that his action will have a diametrically opposite effect. The Government does not need to promote trade. If governments would let peoples alone they would do all the trading that is necessary. It is as natural to a man to trade in a civilized country as it is for him to breathe; and we never think of helping him to breathe by putting him in tight corsets; but we do think of helping him to trade by putting obstacles in the way.

Here we have two countries with 3,000 miles of border line of an imaginary nature, and the peoples on the two sides of that line would trade freely with one another if they were left alone. They cannot be kept from doing it, because we all know, whether in the States or in Canada, people who live near the border line are all free traders by night when they can evade the tariff. We have this border line with the two peoples wishful to trade without any promotion from the Government. But the Government on one side of the line, misunderstanding the true nature of trade, said, "Now, this is an unnatural desire if it goes too far, so we will put up a barrier against those other fellows and prevent them sending stuff into our country." And the Government on the other side of the line says, "Well, we will put up a barrier on our side." So here we have the living waters of human production, which would supply the elements of trade in rich abundance on both sides of the line just as it suited the private requirements of the two peoples, and those waters ready to flow, but we have a double barrier by the efforts of the two Governments. Although each Government has a department of Trade and Commerce, presumably for the promotion of that which the whole policy of the two nations is calculated to prevent.

Then my right hon. friend comes along with an imitative instinct, which I am glad my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's condemns—my right hon. friend does not admit that he is imitating the States, and I accept his disavowal; but the speech of my hon. friend from North Perth (Mr. Morphy) was based almost entirely on the States example—my right hon. friend comes along and he says, "We want some men on the other side of this wall,"—fishermen so to speak—"who will cast their lines over this double wall and endeavour to scoop a little water over it." That is the proposal reduced to the bald economics of my right hon. friend. Of course, the States have their men here who are trying to scoop over some of this water also because each Government believes it is quite right for trade to go all one way. But if they would let that trade alone it would flow each way freely.

I have been struggling with the psychology of this matter until my brain is absolutely bewildered. I cannot understand, if the desire be to promote the flow of this water each way, why we put up a dam to prevent its natural flow. Just think of the absurdity of it. We are proposing to have men in the States to scoop this water into Canada and at the same time my right hon. friend has a colleague who is actually persuading the people on this side—or trying to persuade them, but utterly failing—not to bring in water from the other side. Well, I leave these absurdities for the silent and peaceful rumination of my right hon. friend. He is a great thinker, and I wish he would think out an explanation of the psychology of protectionists and give it to me. He hopes to be here for some years yet, and we fondly hope he may prove to be correct—as to how far his interest may be in this chamber for very long is a more doubtful matter—but I do wish before we part that my right hon. friend would settle this point of the psychology of protectionists and explain it to me, because I confess I am bewildered about it.

As to these fees, I am thoroughly in agreement with my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's. This is represented as something that does not cost the Government anything. Well, nothing costs the Government anything. The Government is the mere agent for spending the money of the people of the country, and the point is, that while it is trying to delude itself by thinking it is getting some agents to work for it and is not paying for it, nevertheless it is a delusion. The work will be paid for, and paid for exactly as I think has been correctly expounded by my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's. I am surprised at the minister, when we have been working hard here for a good many months, some of us sticking at it day after day, bringing in this worthless proposition at this period of the session. I do not think my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's has been met for one moment in any contentions he made. This will lead to a demand for positions; it is an extension of the Civil Service which all who are studying it contend is too big already. And the most serious thing about it is not only that it costs money to the consumers on both sides of this imaginary line, but that in the end arrangements of this irritating nature only add further to the obstacles to trade that already exist, as my hon. friend from Renfrew has pointed out, in too great numbers. I cannot see what force there is in the proposal. I certainly would not do this because the people in the States were doing it. Nations are always doing things which with progress and enlightenment they come to desert, and if we would only learn from the experience of our fellows and desert them a little sooner, we should profit by doing so. If the desire be to bring about trade with the United States, to promote our sales to the United States, there is only one way to do it, and that is not by putting fresh obstacles in the way of trade, but by taking down some of the obstacles that already exist. I may be mistaken, but I honestly believe that my right hon. friend's proposal is not worth the paper it is printed on. It is true that my native land has consular agents for trade, but there is some sense in their having them —they deal with all the world, in spite of assertions to the contrary, and if the people of England had the chance of summarily dealing with their present Government they would not condone any of the departures from the traditional fiscal policy of the country. Given a country which puts no artificial obstacles in the way of trade, then anything in the shape of agents to help along trade is logical, easily understood, and does not need to go far to get support. But with our present fiscal policy as it is, this proposal of my right hon. friend does not commend itself to my intelligence, and I am surprised at the time that is being wasted over it at this stage of the session.

Mr. McKENZIE: I suggest to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that as we have jettisoned a good many things—not because there is any particular storm prevailing, but because we want to lighten the ship so as to make better time—one of the things that could very well be thrown over is this proposed legislation. I venture to say that none of the supporters of the Government came to my right hon. friend and said to him: Now, we are getting close to the end of the session, Sir George; do not forget that resolution and that Bill about those agents in the United States. I venture to think that my right hon. friend was not troubled very much in that way, and that in this matter he is acting upon his own initiative. The hon. member for Brantford replied to my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's by saying that if the consumer pays everything the consumer in the United States who takes goods from Canada pays for the $2.50 on that invoice. Well, is that an answer? Is that any reason why we should have our people pay $2.50 that they need not pay? We are not looking after the consumer in the United States; we are entrusted with the duty of looking after the consumer in Canada. If the people of the United States are anxious to have the detailed statistics that a system of this kind will provide and are willing to pay for it, that is no concern of ours. It is a mistake to increase by any amount, large or small, the burden at present borne by the Canadian consumer. It is all very fine to talk about $2.50 being nothing at all. I have heard hon. members from Ontario say that the price of butter has gone down to 25 cents a pound. Well, $2.50 represents ten pounds of butter at that price, and to the ordinary man ten pounds of butter is more, perhaps, than a week's supply for his family. If sugar has gone down to ten cents a pound, that represents 25 pounds of sugar. When we put these apparently small amounts into sugar, beef, flour and so on, they are not so insignificant. When my right hon. friend comes to be supporting a family of nine or ten he will find that $2.50 means something. The memories of hon. gentlemen on this side are not as bad as the right hon. gentleman may think. He says to us tonight: Do not be alarmed about this army of officers who are to be appointed in the United States; the appointments will all be made by the Civil Service Commission. Well, ever since the Civil Service Commission was appointed we have been hearing that from the right hon. gentleman, but a few weeks ago he had to tell us that he had appointed over the heads of the Civil Service Commission 24,000 men in connection with the taking of the census. He has been cutting it down; he now says it is not that many, but those are the figures that he gave us in the first instance.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Let me tell my hon. friend, so that his argument may at least have one premise that is correct, that we are not employing that many men; we are employing about 12,000.

Mr. McKENZIE: Well, the principle is the same. It is bad enough when cut in two.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: It is only half as bad.

Mr. FIELDING: Did not my right hon. friend himself say it was 24,000?

Mr. McKENZIE: Yes; I am taking the exact figures as first announced by my right hon. friend. Now he says it is 12,000; we will stay by that figure. But that means that 12,000 officials are appointed as a matter of patronage by the department of my right hon. friend over the heads of the Civil Service Commission. So that when the right hon. gentleman tells us that we have some protection in that Civil Service Commission we have to believe that it is more fanciful than real. If it takes 12,000 men to look after the census for 9,000,000 people, it will require ten times 12,000 to attend to the trade of 110,000,000. If there is to be any kind of service at all and the necessities of this law are to be met, there will have to be someone in every town, village and hamlet in the country where business is done. Then, all these officials will have to be paid, and the money must come from somewhere. They will be Canadian officials, and they must be paid directly or indirectly by the Canadian people. I, therefore, point out to my right hon. friend that it would be well not to suppose that we on this side are so very simple as to take any comfort in his suggestion that he is not going to make those appointments because the Civil Service Commission may do that.

Just one word more. The Civil Service Act was, perhaps, loose enough before, and there were too many loopholes through which too many ministers could break whenever it suited their purpose to do so. But now that we have in process of making the "Spinney" Bill so-called, it makes this ten thousand times worse than it was before, and the "Spinney" Bill so-called is ready for the purpose of putting through anything and everything that must needs be put through the mill to suit the purposes of the Government and to meet the demands of patronage. There was in this House at one time an hon. member who had much pleasure in using the word "synchronize" and, perhaps, this resolution synchronizes with the "Spinney" Bill so that when the one goes through the other will be ready to facilitate the appointment of this army of officials.

Mr. MORPHY: May I just, for the benefit of the committee take up the subject from the point of view of the other nations of the world as applied to their operations in Canada?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Steele): I am afraid that that can scarcely be discussed on this resolution.

Mr. MORPHY: With all due deference and respect to the Chair, I promise to keep within the lines of the item before the committee. Until I make a breach in those lines, I hope the Chairman will not check me. In Appendix B to report of the Secretary of State for External Affairs for the year ended March 31, 1920, published by this Government, there is given "an alphabetical list of foreign countries represented in Canada by consuls, vice-consuls, consular agents, and trade agents, according to the latest information supplied to the Department of External Affairs." it proves, I think, the point that, whatever the people of Canada may think about this service, the people of other civilized countries of the world, who are presumed to know something about trade, many of those countries having vastly larger trade than Canada, have found it beneficial to have consular agents in other countries. This information shows that the following countries have consular agents in Canada: Argentine Republic, Belgium, Brazil, Chile, China, Colombia, Cuba, Denmark, Ecuador, France, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Italy, Japan, Liberia, Mexico, Montenegro, Netherlands, Norway, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Portugal, Russia, Czecho-Slovakia, Switzerland, United States. These foreign nations have at least 275 consuls or consular or trade agents in Canada. If these countries have in Canada such an extended service under the caption of trade officials of various kinds and consular agents for trade and other purposes, surely their experience should be a guide to the Canadian Parliament in the adoption of such a progressive policy as the minister contemplates in the resolution before the committee. I might point out that of these 275 trade agents of foreign countries in Canada, 92 are from the United States. What are they in Canada for except to benefit in some way the people of the United States? I point out to the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) that Great Britain alone has in the United States 115 consular or trade agents; the United States have 1,002 agents in the various countries of the world, and with the experience of these older countries before us, surely the argument is overwhelmingly one way. These countries, with a larger experience than ours have seen the benefit of having trade representatives in the various countries of the civilized world, and unless someone can show that Canada can stand to lose by adopting a similar progressive trade policy at a time when our debt is $2,- 10 p.m. 000,000,000 over the ordinary debt and the only way of stabilising our exchange is by exportation, on the hon. member's own theory, of goods manufactured in this country to other countries of the world, this is an opportunity to press forward progressively and to expand our trade through the very medium which the minister has brought forward to-night.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle): In what manner does Great Britain pay her trade agents? In the same manner as the United States or as recommended in this resolution?

Mr. MORPHY: Great Britain, being so anxious for trade and realizing that she gets trade through the medium of those agents, sends them out and pays them herself. She sees such advantages through these agents that she says: "Great Britain can afford to do that for the sake of trade." She is equipped for trade in a manner that Canada is not; she has been a trader from time immemorial; she knows the advantages; she puts 115 agents of that kind into the United States, and yet hon. gentlemen opposite say that we should not have one.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle): I admit that I am one of those who asked that these trade agents be appointed. I must say, however, that at the time that I was trying to convince my right hon. friend, I did not think I was succeeding, and I do not think yet that I succeeded. I do not think that the arguments which I and others put forward in favour of trade agents affected him at all. The arguments that our hon. friends opposite put forward by way of protection did influence him. Apparently, the suggestion now is: Have trade agents and put on a little more protection under cover, as we got a good deal of it on the Budget debate under cover.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: My hon. friend's diagnosis is wrong.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle): I do not think for a moment that we succeeded in having any effect on the minister; but apparently the arguments of the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Morphy) and others had an effect, because it gave him an opportunity of slipping in a little extra protection under cover. I still believe that we should have trade agents. I quite agree with my hon. friend on that, but I think we are safer in following the example of Great Britain and the United States in this matter. It is quite true that there is something a little bit unreasonable about appointing trade agents to increase our trade when we are putting up barriers to prevent trade. We must, however, remember that those barriers have been put up. I should like to speak in answer to the argument of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark). These barriers are up and we have to deal with existing conditions. The existing conditions are that governments on both sides have put up barriers, but the people still want to trade. It is quite proper that we should adopt some means to overcome those barriers to the greatest possible extent. Therefore, I am in favour of trade agents to overcome to a certain extent the barriers that are placed on the border by the Government on both sides. I believe those agents would not be so much needed if we had free trade. There again I disagree with my hon. friend from Red Deer with whom I do not often disagree in trade matters. I think that the proper and sensible way is to do away with the trade barriers, but as we cannot have that, I believe that this is the next most sensible way. While it is quite true that the increase in protection does not amount to anything like 2½ per cent on the average it will amount to that in some particular cases. I do not know what the average trade invoice amounts to, but assuming it to be $500 this tax will amount to half of 1 per cent, which my hon. friend is adding to the customs tariff. While I approve of the idea of having trade commissioners appointed, I cannot approve of this mode of paying them. I am therefore disposed to vote against the proposal. I believe that this scheme has been adopted for the purpose of increasing our customs tariff and for no other purpose.

Mr. PEDLOW: I would like to call the attention of hon. members to clause 4 of the resolution, which reads as follows:

> That section fifty-nine of the said Act be amended by adding thereto the provision that notwithstanding any of the provisions of the section, in computing the value for duty of the currency of an invoice, no reduction shall be allowed in excess of fifty per cent of the value of the standard or proclaimed currency of the country from whence the goods are invoiced to Canada, irrespective of the rate of exchange existing between such country and Canada on date of the shipment of the goods; and in respect of goods shipped to Canada from a country where the rate of exchange is adverse to Canada, the value for duty of the currency of the invoice shall be computed at the rate of exchange existing between such country and Canada at the date of the shipment of the goods.

With the latter part of this clause I have no fault to find but I do take decided issue with that part of the clause ending with the word "goods" in line seven. I notice by the press reports in the last day or so that a similar provision was incorporated in a similar resolution introduced into the United States Congress, but in their resolution the United States Government made provision for a reduction not to be in excess of 66⅔ per cent. They were therefore prepared to allow a greater reduction than is proposed in the resolution now before the House. After Congress had considered the proposition from all angles they decided to eliminate that provision altogether from the Bill. I should like to quote from the Toronto Globe of May 21 a despatch dated Washington, May 20, and reading in part as follows:

> The Emergency Tariff Bill is reported by the Conference Committee without the sixty-six and two-thirds per cent depreciation proviso. Foreign currencies will be converted into United States money at the rate prevailing at noon on the date of exportation, as promulgated by the Federal Reserve Bank at New York.
> The original amendment in this connection read:
>
> "That in the estimation and liquidation of duties upon any imported merchandise, the Collector of Customs or person acting as such shall not in any case estimate the depreciation in currency at more than sixty-six and two-thirds per cent."
> It was argued, apparently with effect, that this amendment went far beyond the purpose indicated in its name "'Exchange Equalization Measure," because it was based on a false assumption. The proposed measure assumed that the home market values in foreign countries had remained the same, having been little or not at all affected by the war and by the depreciation in the exchange rates.

The provision in the resolution before us is evidently based upon an entirely wrong assumption. It seems to have been assumed that the home market values in foreign countries had remained the same and had not been affected by the war and by depreciation in exchange rates, and that the Government should get the same amount of duty that it would have received had exchange remained normal the world over.

I also wish to quote from an editorial in to-day's Toronto Globe, covering the same point. It is so pertinent to the proposition under consideration, that I think I cannot do better than read it. The editorial is headed "Imports and Exchange" and reads in part as follows:

> The National Council of Importers at once produced evidence proving conclusively that the prices of goods affected by the proposed imitation of the depreciation allowance had advanced enormously, as stated in the currency of the countries of origin, and that "the greater the depreciation in currency the greater have been the advances in price." Tables were compiled and presented to the Senate Finance Committee showing that if even the proposed full allowance of 66 2-3 per cent for depreciation were allowed goods from Poland would pay 61 times the amount of duty now paid on the prevailing rate of exchange; from Austria, 21 times; Hungary, 17 1-3 Jugo-Slavia, 9½; Germany, 4.88; Czecho-Slovakia, 4.75; Rumania, 4; Serbia, 2¾; and Italy, 1 4-10 times the present rates of duty.
> In the case of Czecho-Slovakia, which constituted the most highly industrialized portion of the former Austrian Empire, an increase of almost five fold in the duties would have completely barred out the products of the Bohemian industries, that are slowly struggling to their feet. The Czecho-Slovaks are not "enemies" of the United States or Canada, and never were. They fought in the Austrian armies under compulsion, and whenever opportunity served they revolted and went over to the Allies, sometimes by battalions. When the Senate of the United States learned that the proposal to limit the allowance for currency depreciation would hit the friendly people of Bohemia just about as hard a blow as the unfriendly Germans, the proposed amendment was at once dropped and the system of computing duties at the current rate of exchange on the day of exportation will be continued, not only under the Emergency Tariff, but under the permanent measure now being drafted.

The editorial continues:

> The tariff jugglers who framed the Currency Depreciation clause of the Budget may have had their eyes on only two or three lines of goods in which Central Europe competes with existing Canadian industries. To prevent importation of these limited ranges of products they have framed a clause that would bar out every article of commerce from Poland, Austria, Bohemia and Rumania, as well as from Germany. That is a case of protection gone mad. When he sees how his proposal works out Sir Henry Drayton is not likely to press it. His advisers have led him into an untenable position.

[Mr. Pedlow.]

This is a clear-cut article, one that completely covers the position which I maintain, and I should like to hear a full explanation as to why this resolution is put forward to-night, and whether it is the intention of the Minister of Finance to press it to a conclusion. If enacted, it will cut out completely all merchandise coming from European countries. The citizens of this country buy many lines of goods from those countries which they cannot get at home, and I cannot see what good purpose will be served by a measure of this kind. It will have such far-reaching consequences that I am sure it cannot have been given mature consideration. It could not have been considered from all its angles or it would not have been proposed. It is quite evident that our sister country to the south of us perceived this mistake and corrected it before it was too late. I trust the Minister of Finance will reconsider his decision in the matter and eliminate this provision from the Bill.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. PEDLOW: No, it is not carried.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I entirely agree with the hon. member that the question is a serious one. It is not only serious for the German, but it is also quite serious for the Canadian. I think, however, my hon. friend will agree that it is hardly wise to discuss this matter in detail on the resolution. I venture to suggest that it can be more properly discussed in detail when the Bill is in committee, and that discussion may be, and ought to be, had without the slightest prejudice to any hon. gentleman because of the fact that the resolution is allowed to pass without detailed discussion. But there are two sides to the story; there are two sets of witnesses. We, of course, have very many of our own, and we can get exactly the same evidence which the hon. gentleman is referring to from the German importer. We do get certain evidence from independent sources. For example—and I want my hon. friend to note this, because we want to do the right thing—the mark, worth nominally 23.8 cents, has fallen to as low as 1.6, or perhaps 1.8 cents, which, I think, was the quotation to-day. The mark is still used as the national currency of Germany, and the German workmen are paid in the mark. The average rate of pay in territories not occupied by the Allies—I should hardly say the average rate, because the figure I am about to give is higher than the average—is now 200 marks a week. We will say that a full generous rate is 200 marks a week, and that gives a return to the German labourer of $7.20. Of course, the effect of selling German products in the Canadian market is to turn them into cents, and instead of bringing the German labourer here in person in competition with the Canadian worker, the sale of his products here indirectly does exactly the same thing. The result is that you have in Canada a situation exactly similar to that which you would have if you had a certain portion of industrial employees working at the rate of $7.20 a week, while many of our own men are paid perhaps as much as that a day. I am not arguing for high wages; I merely state what I think is approximately the case, and I submit it for the consideration of my hon. friend. Then there is another thing which has been established pretty well by independent evidence, and that is that there are two prices. The German Government to-day is following the principles of the German Government in the past, and perhaps is going a little further, in connection with assisting exports, so that there is a lower price for exports than the prices that prevail in the home market. Now it is quite true that costs in Germany have gone up, and it is equally true that costs have also gone up in Canada, and gone up pretty considerably. I will try to get an article, if I can, for my hon. friend's information, in which a calculation was made in regard to the Sheffield trades in connection with this very matter of the depreciation of German currency, and the extra costs in Germany as compared with the extra costs in England, pointing out how very far short of the amount of depreciation was the inverse increase in costs. How is it working out here, and what is the reason for it? There is unfortunately a large amount of unemployment at present with us. I have in mind at the moment a factory which last year employed 225 persons, I do not know whether men or women. That factory is now employing only 15, and there is a reason for that: they can get no orders. Their ordinary customers have been circularized that if they are wise they will not buy, and the reason for that advice lies entirely with the question of German importations at the present time. There are two things in regard to which I am quite sure my hon. friend is just as anxious as I am. He is anxious to see that the Canadian workman gets a square deal and that the factories are not closed; and, on the other hand, he is anxious to see that there should not be such a barrier as would work too severely against the German prices. But I would like to tell my hon. friend in connection with German prices quoted in this country that according to the information furnished me those prices have not the slightest relation to German costs. I am told that the selling prices of the German goods are fixed without regard to German cost, but that they have regard to the cost of Canadian production, and then the German manufacturers make such a cut beneath that cost of production as will prevent the Canadian producer from successfully competing. I admit it is a serious question and one which ought to be very carefully considered. My suggestion is—having given my hon. friend what he asked for, the underlying reasons for this—that, without the slightest prejudice to him or any other hon. gentleman, further discussion should be postponed until the Bill is considered.

Mr. CAHILL: How does the minister expect Roumania to repay the advances made to it when the currency of that country would only be worth about 4 per cent in Canada to-day, and the tax in this case would probably equal 200 per cent on Roumanian goods coming into Canada? This country has loaned money to Roumania and it is now proposed to tax that country beyond any possibility of its paying in goods for the advances. The Minister of Finance knows as well as any person that we are only likely to get payment in goods from Roumania or any other country in like position—that it is a matter of the exchange of goods and not of gold these days. Yet my hon. friend insists on increasing the duty on goods from Roumania, and other countries similarly situated, to the extent of 100 or 200 per cent. When he does that there is very little chance of his getting even the interest from Roumania and other countries on the loans that have been made by Canada to them.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think the hon. gentleman forgets that Roumania is an agricultural country, and that we have somewhat of a surplus of agricultural products in this country at present. In Canada we have not a market for agricultural products. I quite admit it is a matter that must be thought over and worked out carefully.

Mr. CAHILL: What about Italy? The exchange is very much against Italy at the present time and it is not so much of an agricultural country. How about Greece, and the other countries that the exchange operates against in Canada at present? We are simply imposing an export tax in the case of countries which we hope to do business with that will prevent goods coming in from them; and it is not good business for Canada, or any other country, to put on a tax that will be absolutely prohibitive. It may harmonize with my hon. friend's idea of protection, but it is a case of protecting the smaller class too much and not sufficiently protecting the consumers of this country. The people who are paying the taxes and have furnished the money to enable these loans to be made want to get that money back, and the only way they can get it back is by importing goods from the debtor countries.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Will the minister tell us how he arrived at the 50 per cent fixed in the resolution? Was it by an arbitrary method, or did he select that figure because of representations made by commercial bodies?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am afraid that would occupy some time and I do not think we should go into details at this stage. We can do that when we are considering the Bill; otherwise we shall have two very long discussions when one ought to be sufficient.

Mr. PEDLOW: The Finance Minister may be right in his view, but there are one or two matters I would like to bring to his notice so that they will be before him when he is bringing in his Bill. He stated that the average wage of a German workman was $7.20 per week. That compared with the wage paid in this country would seem alarming, but I submit that $7.20 in Canadian money would purchase a much greater amount of commodities in Germany than it would in this country. I am told that in Poland, which adjoins Germany, the Canadian dollar is worth seven hundred marks, or in other words, that seven marks are only equivalent to one Canadian cent. A somewhat similar condition prevails in Germany. Now this provision is apparently aimed at Germany, but why penalize all Central Europe on Germany's account? There are many countries in Central Europe that were friendly to the Allies during the war, and which are therefore entitled to special consideration at our hands. For that reason the United States Government, after considering this very same problem, decided to refrain from enacting a law of this kind. It is true, as the minister has stated, that goods are very often sold more cheaply in foreign countries than they are in the country of manufacture, but Canadian manufacturers are not immune from that same fault. Not long ago I heard a lecture by an eminent traveller in a committee room in this building. The member for Regina (Mr. Cowan) presided over that lecture and the member for Centre Vancouver (Mr. Stevens) was also present. The lecturer stated that in the interest of his concern he had travelled all round the globe and I think he said the journey occupied a period of two years. He travelled in the interest of the Canada Cycle and Motor Company, and he claimed that during the entire journey he had only met one live Canadian trade agent. I mention that in passing for the benefit of the Minister of Trade and Commerce who can make inquiry from my hon. friend the chairman on the occasion in question if he has any doubt on the point. The gentleman referred to also volunteered the information, in response to a direct question, that his concern sold its products cheaper in other countries than it did in Canada, so that Canadian manufacturers are evidently in the same boat as their competitors in other countries. The chief reason for pursuing this policy, I presume, is to get foreign trade. The minister has advanced the argument that this resolution is designed to help the unemployed in Canada. Well, in my opinion, if we adopt too many schemes of this kind to help the unemployed we will create a class of artisans and workmen in Canada that will be inclined to lie down on their job instead of getting up and going to it like men and competing with the world as they have done in some cases. They have done it in the manufacture of cream separators in Canada, and they have done it in the manufacture of binder twine. The member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) is aware of that fact as he has one of those industries in his own city, and his claim is that that institution is a success because it is under capable management and that all it needs for complete success is to obtain the free importation of the raw material which it uses. That is proof of what I say, from the high priest of protection, the hon. member for Brantford. Now the Canadian workman must not be encouraged to lie down on his job. I am afraid that all these schemes for protecting the Canadian workmen and trying to stop unemployment will fail absolutely to produce the result the minister has in mind. He says that German costs are framed with regard to Canadian costs. That is the system followed in manufacturing in all countries—the manufacturers frame their costs with the idea of competition. If it were not for competition it would be impossible to live in any country. Nevertheless if you frame the tariff along the lines suggested in this resolution you will absolutely shut out competition from Central Europe. That would be a mistake even in lines of merchandise that compete with the manufactured products in Canada. But it covers the whole gamut of manufactures, many lines that are not made in this country that Canadians must have, and if you shut them out by a tariff of this kind I am afraid that the minister will fall short of the object he has in view. He has my cordial support, and I can assure him that my action tonight is not with the idea of obstructing this measure or creating trouble for him, but rather to help him and the country generally in regard to the legislation which is passed in this House.

Mr. FIELDING: One thing is quite apparent, that the Government not only have abandoned the promise to revise the tariff, but are seeking ways and means whereby they can increase the tariff without frankly telling the people so. These resolutions afford evidence of it. It is quite clear that the pupose of this resolution is to increase the tariff. If my hon. friend wanted to accomplish that purpose, why did he not do it in a straight and clear way? Not many days ago in discussing our trade relations with the United States my right hon. friend said—and I thought there was a good deal of force in his argument—that by reason of the easy access between Canada and the United States and the large volume of intercommunication there was no need of trade agents being sent over there. That was the general trend of his argument, while of course he very fairly said he would give consideration to what was said on the other side. Now he comes in with a resolution to increase the difficulty of trading with the United States. It may be but small, but it is an increase in the tariff, and I am afraid we will have to reach the conclusion that that was the real aim of the resolution. I have no desire to encourage German business, and I would think that no matter how low the price the people of Canada do not want to buy German goods. I should think that any German trader seeking to sell his goods in this country to-day, no matter what price he wanted, would have difficulty in finding a market. But there are principles involved in this. My right hon. friend has given us quotations to show that the German mark is worth less than one-tenth of its former value, but by this resolution you are going to declare it is worth one-half its former value. Therefore you are giving a fictitious value to the goods and charging a duty on what they are not worth. Even though the German mark is worth really only about two cents, where formerly it was worth 24 cents, nearly all things are adjusted accordingly. The financial world has given its judgment of what is the real value of the German mark, and if the Government undertake to collect duty on the real value as established by the proper financial authorities no one could find any fault. Even that will make the duty very heavy. But as the hon. gentleman has said the German mark is worth really only about two cents, and he is going to value it for customs at twelve cents, his is simply adopting a roundabout way, by creating a fictitious value, of largely increasing the taxation which the people of this country are called upon to bear. I do not think it is sound policy, neither do I think it can be defended.

Will my hon. friend allow me to turn to section 3? There is a sentence there which strikes me as curious. It reads:

and by the added provision that the value for duty of new or unused goods shall in no case be less than the actual cost of production—

And so on. I do not quite understand what he means by "new or unused goods." Perhaps my hon. friend will tell me.

Mr. WIGMORE: Shop worn goods. For instance, goods that have remained on the shelves for some time.

Mr. FIELDING: They would not be new.

Mr. WIGMORE: New or unused goods.

Mr. FIELDING: Goods are always new until they are used.

Mr. WIGMORE: It often occurs that manufacturers or wholesalers have on hand goods shop worn or out of style, and they seek an opportunity to ship them into Canada and sell them at a reduced rate.

Mr. FIELDING: By the laws of Canada they ought to be sold at their fair market value. But in this section it is provided:

that the value for duty of new or unused goods shall in no case be less than the actual cost of production of similar goods at date of shipment direct to Canada, plus a reasonable profit thereon.

We have never had any such standard for customs purposes. What have we to do with the cost of production? We impose a duty on the fair market value of the article. If goods are old and shop worn, they have less value, and naturally the price depreciates. This is entirely a new idea. My hon. friend has no machinery whereby he can ascertain the cost of production. It is another attempt to boost the tariff without letting the people of Canada know what you are doing.

Mr. WIGMORE: As we all know, there is a surplus amount of goods in the United States, and manufacturers and wholesalers there are very anxious to dispose of them. They establish in the port of export a value by making a few sales here and there in order, as they suppose, to keep within the dumping law. There are scores of manufacturers and wholesale firms that have on their shelves goods that are shop worn and out of style, and they ship them in here at very much reduced rates, which is not fair to the Canadian producer and wholesaler. The idea is to establish what we consider a fair price for the cost of manufacture of these goods at the time of shipment into Canada, and thus prevent dumping. It is possible for us to establish that cost. This department has its own officers and can establish the cost of manufacture by sending them to various points in the United States to investigate and report.

Mr. FIELDING: I do not think my hon. friend now has or ever was intended to have any machinery to inquire into the cost of production. He has machinery to ascertain the fair market value. When my hon. friend says that American manufacturers or wholesalers have sought to establish a market value by an occasional sale here and there, his officials will tell him that that is a distinct evasion of the law, and unless the sales are bona fide and the real market value is established the dumping law will come into operation. There is abundant machinery to-day to give reasonable protection—if you call it protection—to ascertain the market value. If goods are old and shop worn they are not worth the cost of production, for they have suffered deterioration from various causes. But although goods are old and shop worn, and therefore of inferior value, and consequently would have to be sold anywhere at a very low price, the hon. minister is going to have an inquiry as to the cost of production—goods perhaps made in war time—and is going to insist upon that false value and make the Canadian consumer pay duty thereon.

Mr. WIGMORE: The hon. member for Queen's and Sunbury—

Mr. FIELDING: Sunbury is coming soon.

Mr. WIGMORE: I know a favourable report will come from Sunbury.

Mr. FIELDING: Perhaps so.

Mr. WIGMORE: These shop worn goods should not come in in competition with our own Canadian goods. As a matter of fact, we have the machinery there, it has been working in the past, and we have received information from our officers in the United States in reference to the cost of manufacture. We take what the cost of manufacture would be at the time of export from the United States.

Mr. COPP: How are you going to find it out?

Mr. WIGMORE: We have our officers there.

Mr. FIELDING: The hon. gentleman says these goods should not come in. Why? Because they are cheap. That is the whole story. The goods might be sold to the unhappy Canadian consumer at a lower price.

Mr. WIGMORE: It is just the same with German goods.

Mr. FIELDING: That is another question. The minister says he is going to impose a still greater duty. I have already discussed that question and do not want to go over it again. But here we have shop worn goods, which whether sold at home or abroad have to be sold at a reduced price. They have not the value they formerly had, but the minister is going to create a false value and make the Canadian consumer pay on it.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): In order to arrive at some opinion as to how this clause is going to work out, will the minister take one or two articles with which we are all familiar and tell us how he is going to arrive at the actual cost of production? There is a duty on butter coming into this country of about four cents a pound; the same applies to cheese and other articles. How is the minister going to arrive at the actual cost of production of goods of that nature?

Mr. WIGMORE: I was not talking about products of the field; I was referring simply to manufactured articles.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): Does this clause not apply to all dutiable articles? Besides, is not butter a manufactured article?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Certainly butter is a manufactured article, and of course it would apply to butter. I am willing to confess that this discussion has one item of novelty to me, and that is the use of the word "shop-worn." I have no doubt it has something to do with the technical working out of the Customs Act. I could not very well discuss that aspect of the issue. But let us see, now: was it intended that the principle of the dumping clauses should function?

Mr. FIELDING: Yes, certainly.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The dumping clauses were put in to serve a useful purpose—to prevent a sudden change in selling price to the wholesaler or to the manufacturer here of protected goods brought in at a lower rate than they could be fairly sold for in the foreign market—that, is than they could ordinarily be produced for, plus something on top of the ordinary.

Mr. FIELDING: Not necessarily.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Well I do not think my hon. friend will argue that you can for very long continue to sell goods at less than the cost of production. The goods will not continue to be produced very long if there is not a little something over that cost in the shape of profit.

Mr. DAVIS: Is that the minister's contention with regard to German goods?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Well, I do not quite catch that point; I think it is rather an inverse question that the hon. gentleman is asking. I am discussing for the moment the improper invasion of the Canadian market and the protection to that market which the dumping clause introduced by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's was intended to afford. In normal times that dumping provision served its purpose and served it well. But trade in the United States to-day is no more normal than trade is in Canada. In some parts of that country it is even more abnormal than it is in Canada, and the result is that from time to time certain stocks are liquidated, and liquidated to some extent in the local market. Three, four, five or six local sales are made, sometimes, as we believe, for the purpose of establishing a local market value which really does not exist. So that in that way the dumping clause of my hon. friend can be evaded. I wonder if it is not a good thing that it should continue to be enforced. I just want to give my hon. friend an illustration. Three samples of goods were produced before me not long ago in connection with the question of the use of Canadian or English material on the one hand and American material on the other. The goods were ladies' dress wear, and I do not think any hon. gentleman could distinguish a difference between them. The price of one sample was $2.65; the price of another, $2.50 and the price of the third, $1.50—and the third sample was American. A quantity of that material was brought into this country. The manufacturer, of course, wanted to get a repeat order shortly afterwards but he could not buy a yard of it; that $1.50 was well below the American cost of production. It was a clean-out sale, and what good did it do here? There was not a cent taken off the ordinary price of the clothing when it was sold to the public, and you could hardly expect that there would be, because the sale of the material was an adventitious sale; it did not represent real value and could only be supported by one or two, perhaps three or four, temporary sales made in a limited area and for a specific purpose. The sending over here from the American market of a large amount of that material was no benefit to the Canadian public; on the other hand, Canadian factories and Canadian workingmen lost work. That is the sort of thing that the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's wanted to stop, and he did stop it. But as I have said, these are not normal times, and the purpose of the resolution, as I understand it, is to provide that the value for duty purposes of such new or unused goods, goods which are not second-hand, shall be thus tested.

Mr. DAVIS: I think that the Chairman will be amused when I point out to him the fact that he has been the chairman of a committee on the fuel question which has been endeavouring to ascertain the cost of the production of coal and other fuels in Canada. The committee has been thus engaged for some weeks, and we are quietly told by the minister now that he has the machinery by which he can determine, in relation to goods which are in a more advanced state of manufacture than coal, the cost of production in the United States.

Mr. DENIS: And in foreign countries.

Mr. DAVIS: And tell that in foreign countries. We wanted to get the cost in the United States of this coal that we have been inquiring about, and it is certainly very negligent on the part of that committee that it did not call those officials of the Customs Department to give it that information. That is a simple matter compared with what you are attempting at this time. The other day I stepped into one of the largest stores in Ottawa, and I happened to run across an old acquaintance who is now in charge of purchasing in that store. He showed me piece of goods after piece of goods which were selling a short time ago at from $7 to $11 a yard. They are selling the same goods to-day for $3, $3.50 and $4 a yard, and he told me that they were making more money on them now than they did when they were selling them at from $7 to $11 per yard. That just illustrates the condition of trade with which you are endeavouring to deal at the present time. Values are going down, are changing, because of the change in the cost of raw materials, and I think, Mr. Minister of Customs, you will have to have a very much more extensive staff than you have yet persuaded this side of the House, at least, that you have the command of, to keep in touch with that and not to work unjustly to the genuine importer of such goods.

While I am on my feet, I want also to comment on the next clause which has to do with this 50 per cent on exchange. I have just secured the latest quotations with regard to Italian exchange. At par it should be 19.3 cents for the lira. It is now 6.24 cents. Therefore, you would put a value of 9.6 or 9.7 cents on goods that have cost 6.24 cents; you will rate your customs upon the higher value, and the consequence is that, with a 20 per cent customs tariff, you have a 75 to 80 per cent duty. In the present state of trade, when there is a possibility that we shall not be able to sell to the United States in the measure that we have sold to that country in the past, due to their unfriendly, if I may so call it, customs, we want to find other markets, and if we find markets to sell in, we have to take goods back. One of those prospective markets is Italy. Our trade in the past with that country may not have been very great, but this measure is distinctly designed to kill that trade. We cannot take goods from them; they cannot afford to sell us goods on which we have to pay a duty of 75 or 80 per cent, and that is what this means. When I spoke on this question the other day, I was somewhat concerned as regards France and Belgium whom I felt we should not turn our sword against at this time. With the German indemnity, their exchange is up around 9.77 cents, which is just over the half way mark, so that they will probably not be touched, because I think, with the continuance of the payment of that indemnity, their condition will be improved, and they will be out of reach of this most unfriendly measure. But with regard to Italy and other European countries, to which, it will be understood, we must look for increasing markets for our produce, you are going to make it impossible for them to exchange goods with us.

Mr. FIELDING: I regret the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) has formed quite a misconception as to the purpose of the dumping duty. He is labouring under the delusion that the dumping duty was designed to prevent the people of Canada from getting cheap goods. It was not designed to do anything of the sort. Those who brought about the dumping duty were perfectly willing that the people of Canada should get cheap goods, provided that that cheapness was the cheapness of the market generally. What was the condition that the dumping duty was intended to meet? There are notable cases which arise in my mind now where an American manufacturer, having a large quantity of goods which he desired to sell, was prepared to sell in Canada at a lower price than he sold at home. Our complaint was not that he sold the goods cheaply. As long as he charged the Canadian buyer the same price as he charged his home buyer, there was no dumping. But when he created a fictitious price, where he charged one dollar in the United States and offered to sell the same goods for 75 or 80 cents in Canada, we felt that that was not a legitimate transaction, and it was to meet that sort of thing that the dumping clause was designed. As long as there is created for the Canadian market a price which is not the real price at home, the dumping clause comes in.

It provides an ample duty; the machinery is in the hands of the Minister of Customs, and there is no need of anything more. When my hon. friend repeated the argument that special sales are made to establish a price, I say, without a moment's hesitation, that the Customs Department is not bound to accept and it will not accept those sales. In the earlier days of the dumping duty, there were some difficulties. It was described by an eminent English statesman as a piece of freak legislation. As time went on and the efficient officials of the department got a good grasp of the question, the thing worked out quite well. The only thing to be determined is: Is this a fair price as quoted in the home market? The design was not to prevent the people of Canada from getting cheap goods. If an article is made cheap on account of a surplus in the market, or by changing conditions, or if raw material is cheaper, or if one of the hundred and one things that enter into the cost of production is cheapened and the article is thus made cheaper, and it is as cheap in Canada as in the United States, there is no reason in the world why we should impose any barriers to keep it out. The real purpose of this proposed legislation is to create a fictitious price in order that you may increase the duty, which many people think is high enough already, but which, in some instances, would be made double what it would otherwise be.

Mr. LALOR: I think the impression that we had in Canada of the dumping clause was that it was to prevent Americans from shipping goods in here under the price at which those goods were sold in the United States. When the dumping clause was in force under the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), I know from experience in general as regards machinery, canning machinery, for instance, which is expensive and which we use a great quantity of, the price, when the machinery came to the border, has been raised under our Canadian dumping clause from $600 to $1,000, and we have had to pay duty on that for any number of machines running into quite a large amount of money. That was what the dumping clause did for us. I think we all agree as regards the purpose of it, and I do not see much difference between that and the present legislation. We must not forget what the Americans did as regards us. I have had experience in regard to shipping goods into the United States, and they have all this machinery for which the minister is now trying to provide. It is said by speakers on the other side that it is impossible to carry out this legislation, to get at the values and to assess the duty. The people of the United States are doing it; they have no difficulty at all in doing it; they assess the value, and they hold up the goods until they get the value.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Does the hon. member mean "value" or "cost of production"?

Mr. LALOR: I mean value.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): That is different.

Mr. LALOR: They get at the value and the cost of production. I have in my possession a letter from a firm in Canada which has 50 cases of a certain line of goods lying at Black Rock. They are trying to get them into New York, having sold them there. These goods have been held at that point for nearly three months. The United States authorities have given no reason at all why they should not go through. The goods are properly valued, but they raise every objection and every obstacle they possibly can. Let me give an instance. A year or perhaps two years ago a branch factory that we have in the United States wanted to get something that we had in Canada, which we had imported from England and which they could not get at that time in the United States. They asked us to send over a certain quantity and we sent a thousand pounds of these goods to our own factory in Buffalo. The United States sent an appraiser from Washington to examine our books and go over our invoices in our home town at Dunnville. The officers reported that everything was fair and square, and they did not see why there should be any difficulty at all, but in the face of that report those goods were held in Buffalo, and we were fined $1,200 for undervaluation. There was no undervaluation at all. We had bought the goods in England, and we added to them the freight and took advantage of the exchange for profit. I even referred the matter to Ottawa to see if they could not investigate this awful imposition of a fine of $1,200, but they reported that it was according to the American law and that there was no use talking about it. You have to show a profit of 10 per cent on your goods or you cannot pass them. That is the way they treat us. Surely we are not going to treat them as generously as some hon. gentlemen would have us do. The values are raised and everything is done to prevent you shipping to the United States.

Mr. FIELDING: It is not a question of how we should treat the American shipper but of how we should treat the Canadian consumer. We are not concerned if the American Government acts foolishly. It is not for us to follow their example. Their method may be good or it may be bad, but if that is the result of the determination of the American people to do business in this way the scheme we have been discussing on this resolution of sending over there a lot of trade agents to sell our goods would be a waste of money. But we are not concerned about the American people. We are concerned about the people of Canada who are going to pay this tax and who are going to be made to pay an extortionate duty which is not boldly mentioned in the tariff but is brought about in this round about way.

Mr. WIGMORE: In reply to my hon. friend from Glengarry and Stormont (Mr. Kennedy) there is no question of valuing the cost of production of butter or cheese; it is so much per pound, not on the cost of production at all.

Mr. DENIS: I propose to demonstrate that this clause by which no reduction shall be allowed in excess of 50 per cent of the value of the standard or proclaimed currency of the country from whence the goods are invoiced to Canada will have the effect in some cases of raising the duty 500 per cent.

I take the Weekly Bulletin of April 25, 1921, published by the Department of Trade and Commerce, and I find that on April 20 —this is not quite up to date, but there is no difference between the quotation of that day and the quotation of to-day—the German mark, which has a parity value of 19.8 cents had a value of 1.72 cents; that the Italian lira which has a parity value of 19.3 cents, had on that date a value of 5.45 cents, and that the Roumanian lei, which has a parity value of 19.3 cents, the same as the franc and the lira, had on that day the value of 1.81 cents.

Now, to prove my assertion, I will take the actual value of the German mark and the actual value of the Roumanian lei, which are about the same. Suppose that certain goods were bought in Roumania and sent to Canada, and that they had a valuation of 100 lei in Roumanian money. In Canadian money these goods would have a value of $1.81. If the duty on these goods was 25 per cent, it would amount to 45 cents. Now, if we take into consideration the fact that in order to give currency one-half its nominal value we have to multiply it by five, it means that we have to take five lei at the present time to be equal to a lei in ordinary times. Therefore, if I multiply this duty of 45 cents on 100 lei of merchandise by five, the duty that will be paid on these goods will be $2.25, or five times more than the duty that would be charged if the actual cost of these goods was taken into account; in other words, a duty of 500 per cent more than the ordinary duty. The effect of this provision will be to close entirely this market to Germany, to Roumania, and to Italy, unless double the duty is paid on Italian goods. As was stated quite correctly a few moments ago by an hon. gentleman on this side of the House, France will not be barred from this market, because the French franc is about half its parity value now. But the other countries which I have just mentioned, which are in a position to sell goods cheaply to the Canadian consumer, will be debarred from doing so by the duty which is absolutely prohibitive.

I find in this scheme an indirect, or perhaps a direct, way of raising the duties on goods. When the tariff duties were discussed and drafted, we took into account the fact that the goods were to be valued, not according to the standard of Canadian money, but according to the price at the place where they were bought. By this stratagem in the resolution before us we are simply raising the customs duties all the way from 100 to 500 per cent. Therefore, the consumer will have to pay as high as 500 per cent more duty on goods coming from the countries I have just mentioned than he would have to pay if this proposal was not accepted.

I think I have said enough to demonstrate that this is simply a method of raising the duty on goods coming from certain countries, the duties on these goods, of course, having to be paid by the Canadian consumer. We are altogether losing sight of the fact that the poor people of this country are still laburing under the burden of the high cost of living. The only way at present of reducing the cost of living is to admit such goods as I have mentioned, but by raising the customs duties some 500 per cent, by the method that has been explained, these goods will certainly be kept out of Canada, and the Canadian consumer will not be able to obtain his requirements at reasonable price?

Mr. CAHILL: The member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair), asked a question to which I also should like to have an answer, and that is as to how the Government arrived at 50 per cent as a fair basis to start on. I am entirely opposed to the principle of this section, and I want some explanation as to how this 50 per cent has been arrived at.

Mr. WIGMORE: This is a matter of exchange which the Minister of Finance can better deal with.

Mr. CAHILL: Where is the Minister of Finance?

Mr. WIGMORE: He is on the other side at present.

Mr. PEDLOW: Perhaps the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster), will oblige us with an explanation.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Let something stand for discussion when the Bill is under consideration.

Mr. CAHILL: I am opposed to the principle of the resolution, and if we allow the resolution to pass, we adopt the principle.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: In arriving at these figures one can only approximate. There are many different statements as to how costs have gone up in Germany. It is stated that owing to the low standard of living of the German worker to-day, the cost of production has not very materially increased there. The hon. member is conversant with the details of the steel business. German pig iron can be produced and put on the export market at 500 marks a ton, and that shows a very slight increase in the actual cost of manufacturing. The hon. member will also realize that the relation between increased cost on the one hand and depreciation of currency on the other is a material question, and we should also bear in mind what has happened to our own currency. The arguments which hon. gentlemen opposite have made in connection with the loss of buying power of the Canadian dollar have also to be considered. If those arguments are at all right, it is hardly fair that the German mark should be taken at the lowest possible standard and the Canadian dollar held up to practically its pre-war basis. It is therefore difficult to arrive at anything like a scientific basis, and I think we should probably discuss the question to better advantage when we are in committee on the Bill, when we should be able to see what modifications or extensions ought to be made. It may be that something should be done in connection with other considerations not yet fully covered, as for instance, the question in regard to Czecho-Slovakia already mentioned.

Mr. CAHILL: Is it not the intention of the Government practically to prohibit importations from certain countries? That is undoubtedly what the minister has in mind. Well, why penalize other countries? Personally I would not penalize Germany any more than Greece, Roumania, Belgium, France or England. We went through the process of adopting and signing the treaty, and were told that we were at peace with the Central Powers, and if it is the intention now to penalize them to the extent of prohibiting their goods, we had better declare that we are still at war. If this does not mean that we intend to penalize these people, then it must be our intention to penalize the Canadian people. If the Canadian cannot buy his goods where he wants to and pay the duty on them, you are merely adding to the cost which the consumer has to pay; or you are attempting to prohibit importations entirely. Let us understand just what is the intention.

Mr. PEDLOW: A matter of importance is the relative position of the Minister of Finance and the Secretary of the Treasury in the United States. Whereas the Secretary of the Treasury was prepared to concede a reduction of 66⅔ per cent, our Minister of Finance gives a reduction of only 50 per cent. In addition to that there is also the further prohibition of the exchange rate. In connection with goods purchased from Central Europe, some 10 or 15 per cent must be added to the cost on account of exchange. If the Minister of Finance insists on a prohibition of this kind, the exchange rate should be taken into consideration.

Mr. COPP: I understood from the Minister of Customs (Mr. Wigmore), when he introduced the resolution, that it had virtually been in effect since 1918 through Order in Council.

Mr. WIGMORE: What I said had no reference to this resolution; I referred to the amalgamation of the two departments.

Mr. COPP: It seems to me that my hon. friend would have made much more rapid progress with his resolution if he had given to the committee the information that was given by hon. gentlemen on the other side. I was very much impressed with the arguments made by my hon. friend from North Perth (Mr. Morphy), my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Boys), and my hon. friend from Muskoka (Mr. McGibbon), in regard to certain matters on this resolution. What I contend is that the Minister of Customs and Excise has not given a sufficient and proper answer to the arguments adduced by hon. gentlemen opposite who took up time this afternoon, as they had a perfect right to do, in bringing these matters to his attention. For example, in answer to the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Morphy), who is not now in his seat, as to what occurred by reason of the operation of the present law and the necessity for its amendment so as to provide relief in cases of hardship—a matter which arose in connection with section 7—the minister replied that his officers had been over-efficient.

Mr. BOYS: He said over-officious, not over-efficient.

Mr. COPP: I accept the correction. But if the minister said his officials were over-officious I would take that to be a criticism of them. On account of that over-officiousness the minister said the department had shown leniency in regard to the special case brought to his attention. One would naturally suppose from that statement that the fine imposed had been remitted by the department, but when the question was put to him by my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) as to whether the fine had been collected he said it had been. Now if such defects as these are shown in the operation of the law, now is the time to correct them and not wait until we have approved of the principle of the resolution. If we do make the amendments now, we will be told when the Bill founded upon the resolution is introduced "Oh this is only carrying out the resolution as it passed the committee." Then my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Boys) raised the question as to what this resolution really means. Now it seems to me that the minister seeing that he has his officials around him, and had time, during the recess from six to eight o'clock, to confer with them, ought to be able to tell the committee what the resolution really does mean and what its affect will be in the carrying on of business throughout the country. No person wants to interfere in any way with the passage of this resolution, or of the Bill to be founded upon it, if the legislation proposed is really in the interests of the country. But he is very reticent in the explanations he has been giving not only to hon. gentlemen on this side but to hon. members around him as well—in fact most of the criticisms of the department, and of the resolution my hon. friend is moving, came from hon. gentlemen opposite in the early part of the discussion this afternoon. It ought to be easily possible to give full information touching the first clause of the resolution which has been in operation I understand for upwards of two years. Besides suggesting to my hon. friend that he should make some general statement in regard to the meaning and affect of the other clauses of the resolution, I would ask him to explain how the changes made by Order in Council in 1918 have worked out. Has there been a saving to the country by the amalgamation of the Department of Customs and Inland Revenue which are henceforth to be known as the Department of Customs and Excise? I would like him to explain how the amalgamation has worked out in particular localities, whether it has been found to be an advantage or a disadvantage. For example in the city of St. John has the amalgamation of the two departments resulted in a saving or has it involved additional expenditure? Then I would like to know what the affect has been in other parts of the province of New Brunswick, how it has operated throughout the country generally? It seems to me the committee would like to have a frank and open statement from the minister in regard to all these matters. It he had done that earlier in the discussion we might have got along very much more rapidly than we have been doing but we have been obliged to draw out explanations in regard to every little item in every clause—practically as regards every sentence almost in each clause.

Mr. WIGMORE: I thought I had already given considerable information to the committee. Clause 7 of the resolution provides:

> That section one hundred and eighty of the said Act be amended to provide that the certificate of a provincial analyst shall be accepted as evidence of the alcoholic content of the beer or wash suitable for the manufacture of spirits.

Out of that arose the discussion of section 180 of the Act dealing with stills, and so forth, which I read to the committee this afternoon. What is now proposed does not change the section in question. It merely contemplates the appointment of an analyst. Formerly an analysis could only be made by the officers of our department. What we now want to do is to have that analysis made by a provincial officer or an officer of the Health Department. This section has been on the Statute Book for thirty-five years and that is the only change that is now proposed to be made with respect to it.

As far as the amalgamation of the two departments is concerned it has been operating satisfactorily for the last year, the Civil Service Commission, under the guidance of the Re-organization Committee suggesting certain changes in each department in Ottawa and in the Outside Service as well. Certain recommendations have been made by this committee on re-organization and to some extent those recommendations have been carried out. My hon. friend from Westmoreland has spoken of the affect of the amalgamation in the city of St. John. Well, certain reductions in the staff have been made there, and greater reductions will be made in the future, but the work is being performed under the reduced staff resulting from amalgamation as efficiently as it was carried on by the former larger staff. Now as to other cities. In Montreal the Customs Department was established in a building in one section of the city, and the Inland Revenue Department in another building in another section of the city. The two departments have been brought together in the one building, and certain reductions of the staff have taken place there. The same applies to Toronto. From reports that we have received not only from our officers but from outside, it is apparent that the work is being carried on to the greater satisfaction of the public generally. We will effect quite a saving by the amalgamation. It is a pleasure for me to accommodate hon. gentlemen, and if I can furnish any further information I shall be happy to do so.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: What is the policy of the Government when the two departments are amalgamated? Does the Civil Service Commission make the change? A case was brought to my attention at St. Hyacinthe, where Dr. A. P. Cartier had been the collector of inland revenue for seven years, and M. Handihan, collector of customs. Dr. Cartier was the younger man, had always given good service, and was perfectly fitted for the position, but now by this change he loses his position. What is the policy of the Government regarding these matters?

Mr. WIGMORE: All these changes are made on the recommendation of the re-organization committee to a sub-committee of council. In that particular case the collector of customs was also made collector of inland revenue, and it was therefore necessary to dispense with the services of the other man.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Who are the parties forming the reorganization committee?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Steele): This discussion might be proper when the Estimates of Civil Government in connection with the Department of Customs and Inland Revenue are before the committee, but on this resolution it is quite out of order.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: I would like to bow to your ruling, Mr. Chairman, but the minister has just given the policy of the Government regarding the amalgamation of the two departments, and he invited members to put questions. I am sorry to understand that the chairman of the committee and the minister differ.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Steele): Order. The Chairman has given his ruling, which is not debatable. Apart from that, the fact that the minister invited questions, does not make the discussion in order.

Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Will the minister tell us the personnel of the reorganization committee that he has spoken of?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Steele): I hope it is not necessary for me to repeat my ruling.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: I respect your ruling, Mr. Chairman, but the minister has just spoken about the reorganization committee. I submit that it is perfectly in order to ask him who are the parties forming that reorganization committee. It is a very simple question that it might be in the interests of the people to answer.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Mr. Chairman, we shall have items before the committee on which that question will come up and be thoroughly discussed. Would it not be well for my hon. friend to leave this extraneous matter until then?

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Two words will satisfy me.

Mr. CASGRAIN: He might be away when the question comes up.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Oh, no, he is going to stay here.

Section agreed to.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Hon. R. W. WIGMORE (Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 211 respecting the Department of Customs and Excise.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the first time.

IMMIGRATION ACT AMENDMENT

On motion of Hon. J. A. Calder (Minister of Immigration and Colonization) Bill No. 139 to amend the Immigration Act was read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Steele in the Chair.

On section 1—non-immigrant classes:

Mr. CALDER: I would suggest that we consider this section clause by clause. I know some members—not present to-night—are interested in certain clauses of this Bill and wish to make representations in regard to them, and I think, even if the clauses are passed, it might be on the understanding that any hon. gentlemen who desire to raise any question in regard to them shall have the privilege of doing so later. With regard to the first proposed amendment, I may say that under the law two classes of persons are defined, immigrants and non-immigrants. Immigrants must go through a certain procedure which is not required of non-immigrants. Among the non-immigrant classes there are included the following: members of dramatic, artistic, athletic or spectacular organizations entering Canada temporarily for the purpose of giving public performances or exhibitions of an entertaining or instructive nature, and actors, artists, lecturers, priests and ministers of religion, authors, lawyers, physicians, professors of colleges and commercial travellers entering Canada for the temporary exercise of their respective callings. During the last two or three years the international trade unions have made representations that their accredited representatives who are required to come to Canada from time to time should be included in the description of non-immigrant classes, and there is no reason why they should not be so enumerated in this section. As to the second proposed amendment, under the law as it now stands there must be an officer at a place before it can be designated as a port of entry. It is proposed that a port of entry shall be any place so designated by the minister. The change is a very simple one, purely for administrative purposes.

Mr. LEMIEUX: How many ports of entry are there now?

Mr. CALDER: I should say seventy, probably eighty.

Mr. PARENT: Is it the intention to add to this number?

Mr. CALDER: No. It may be found necessary to designate a place temporarily as a port of entry. It is not for the purpose of increasing the number of the ports of entry.

Mr. PARENT: Has the Government any control over a person who enters this country from Europe and shortly after reaching Canada goes to the United States?

Mr. CALDER: No, we cannot prevent that. The third amendment is to paragraph (q) of section 2. The term "enter Canada" is applied throughout the law to non-immigrants and "land in Canada" to immigrants. A number of amendments are included in the Bill, some for the purpose of including the terms "enter" and "or land in," which happened to have been left out when the consolidation took place some two years ago. Here it is proposed to insert in paragraph (q) the words "or land in" in order to cover the two classes. The fourth amendment merely inserts the words "passengers or other persons" in the definition of "immigrant station." The law as it stands refers only to immigrants.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Might I suggest to my hon. friend that he give instructions to certain immigration officials who are a little too fussy? We had a very striking example the other day when a distinguished visitor to Canada and his wife were subjected to very severe treatment on the part of the immigration officers.

Mr. CALDER: I am having some difficulty along that line more or less all the time. I am sure the hon. gentleman can understand that these officers are very anxious to carry out the law. Sometimes, though, they may use bad judgment and, in the exercise of their discretion, not do just the right thing. Whenever any matter of that kind comes to my attention I always communicate with them with the object of having the law sanely and reasonably administered, as it should be.

Mr. LEMIEUX: My hon. friend knows to what I refer?

Mr. CALDER: Yes.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Board of Inquiry:

Mr. PARENT: What are the powers of the board of inquiry contemplated in this section?

Mr. CALDER: They have power to prevent the entry or landing of either an immigrant or a non-immigrant.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Subject to appeal?

Mr. CALDER: Yes.

Section agreed to.

On section 4—hearing of cases:

Mr. CALDER: Previously this referred to "such" board. Now, you may have two or three boards at any one port. Therefore, we are inserting the word "a" in place of the word "such", so as to cover all boards that may be carried.

Section agreed to.

Section 5 agreed to.

On section 6—costs of appeal to be paid by unsuccessful appellant.

Mr. CALDER: Under the law as it now stands, if a person is rejected by a board of inquiry, that person is required to make a deposit of $20 for himself, and if he has any dependants with him, $10 for each dependant, in order to pay for the cost of his maintenance during such time as the appeal is pending. We propose that, in addition to his paying for the cost of his maintenance, we should include the costs or expenses of the appeal. Supposing a person comes from some European country; he lands at Quebec; our officers there decide that he should be rejected because he does not comply with the law. Immediately he and his friends get busy and they want action taken very quickly. This means a great deal of telegraphing and telephoning, and the aggregate cost of this to the department amounts to a very large sum. It is desirable on the other hand that there should be quick action from the standpoint both of the department and of the party concerned. Our officers think it is only fair in those cases where it has been decided to hold up an intending immigrant, that the immigrant himself, if he has been rejected by a board of inquiry, should pay the cost of telegraphic and telephonic communication. To the individual the cost may not mean very much, but during the year the cost to the country runs into thousands of dollars. The purpose of this amendment is simply to require that an immigrant who has been rejected and who appeals should pay the cost of those communications.

Mr. WHITE: What happens if the man is of very limited means and is not able to pay?

Mr. CALDER: If he has not the money, I presume we would have to pay for this.

Mr. LEMIEUX: My hon. friend speaks of large costs. I cannot see how the cost should be so very large. Of course, during the time which elapse between the appeal and the decision of the department, the man has to pay for his maintenance. Let us say that in immigrant lands at Quebec to-day; he is rejected, and he has to remain, say eight days in Quebec before taking the boat or having a decision on the appeal lodged with the department. What is the average cost for maintenance?

Mr. CALDER: The cost of his actual maintenance would be comparatively small. In the contract which we have just let at Quebec for catering, the successful caterer has agreed to give three meals for 75 cents.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Are there costs for the forms to be filled in?

Mr. CALDER: No.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Only the long distance telephoning and telegraphing.

Mr. CALDER: That is all. Supposing a man comes from Great Britain and some questions are raised as to his right of entry into Canada. Very frequently we have to cable two or three times before we get the required information. Sometimes, half a dozen communications will be sent out to some place in British Columbia in order to get quickly exact information as to a man's right to be in Canada. The cost of all this to the individual may be comparatively small, but I can assure the committee that it runs into many thousands of dollars for the department.

Mr. PARENT: Supposing the immigrant does not speak either English or French. Will he have to pay the cost of an interpreter?

Mr. CALDER: No.

Section agreed to.

On section 7—powers of board exercised by officer in charge:

Mr. CALDER: The law, as it now stands reads that where there is no board of inquiry at a port of entry or at a neighbouring port to which a person detained under this Act could conveniently be conveyed or to which a case for decision could be conveniently referred, then the officer in charge shall exercise the power. We are cutting out that portion of the clause that relates to a board of inquiry at some other place nearby. It has landed the department in all sorts of trouble, and under that clause as it stood, we have lost one or two cases under habeas corpus proceedings.

Section agreed to.

On section 8—bill of health.

Mr. CALDER: Clause 8 provides that the form of the bill of health shall be approved by the minister. The present law does not state how that form of the bill of health is arranged for.

Section agreed to.

On section 9—medical examination:

Mr. CALDER: Under the law as it stands, this clause reads: "medical officers appointed under this Act." They are not appointed under this Act now; they are appointed under the Department of Health Act, and, therefore, the words "appointed under this Act" are struck out.

Section agreed to.

On section 10—landing of passengers:

Mr. CALDER: There are no radical changes. The first amendment is that section 33, subsection 1, is struck out and a new clause substituted. The only change in that is as follows: The law as it stood stated that:

Every passenger or other person seeking to enter or land in Canada shall first appear before an immigration officer—

That is changed to read:

—shall first appear and make application to an immigration officer at a port of entry—

The words "at a port of entry" are inserted. He shall make application at a port of entry. That is the spirit of the whole law:

—for permission to enter or land in Canada—

We put in both expression again.

—and shall be detained for examination—

As the section reads now:

He shall be forthwith examined as required under this Act.

Then the clause goes on:

—which shall be conducted forthwith on shipboard or on train, or at some other place designated for that purpose.

[Mr. Calder.]

This is simply to make the present law a little clearer.

The second amendment is an addition to subsection 2, and it is a rather important one. It provides a penalty for answering questions falsely. We have officers, say at Niagara or Windsor or Quebec or Halifax, and these immigrants are coming in and they are required to answer questions. They are coming in from the United States on the train in the second or third class car, and our officer goes through and asks certain questions. Their answers are taken down. Of course, the officers have not time to take an affidavit from every man or anything of that sort. Now the proposal is that if these questions are not answered truthfully a penalty follows.

Mr. PARENT: On that very point, I have had occasion before to call the attention of the minister to a situation that has existed to my own knowledge where officers have been putting questions in English to persons speaking only the French language and coming to a country where both languages are official. With the law as it is now drafted, I presume the same situation will continue to exist, and that immigrants from Belgium and France will be submitted to the same trouble that immigrants from those countries have had in the past, of having no one on the boats or on the trains to put the questions in French. That is the situation now, it was the situation a year ago, and in the years before that. The hon. minister promised a year ago that he would remedy this situation, but he has not done so. He comes here now with a new Bill, leaving the situation just as it was before. I would like him to give a little attention to this very important matter. Desirable immigrants from France and Belgium are put to all kinds of trouble due to the immigrant officers not being able to put their questions in the French language.

Mr. CALDER: We will have to get the matter straightened out.

Mr. PARENT: How will it be done?

Mr. PARENT: Where in this Bill will you put the few words that are necessary to make it law?

Mr. CALDER: It is not necessary to have it in the law.

Mr. CASGRAIN: It is better to have it in the law. Ministers may change.

Mr. CALDER: The third amendment inserts only the words "enter or" in one part. There is also a contradiction between subsections six and seven of the present law. Subsection six provides:

> Every person who enters Canada except at a port of entry shall forthwith report such entry to the nearest immigration officer, and so on, while the very next subsection provides:

> Any person who enters Canada except at a port of entry. . . . shall be guilty of an offence.

The two subsections are contradictory. It is proposed to change subsection six to read:

> It shall be a violation of this Act for any person to enter Canada except at a port of entry.

The section will then be in conformity with all the other sections of the law.

Mr. PARENT: Suppose the person is an actor or an athlete who does not come through a port of entry, but may be travelling on the high road. Would this apply to him?

Mr. CALDER: The law reads that it shall be a violation "for any person to enter Canada except at a port of entry". It would not make any difference whether he was an actor or an athlete. If he does not come in through a port of entry, he is violating the law as it now stands. That is the provision that runs all through the Act.

Then subsection 9 is changed slightly. This clause provides a penalty for transportation companies or persons interfering with the immigration officers in the discharge of their duties. The law now reads: "Any transportation company or person interfering with or resisting." We are inserting after "company" the words "director, official or employee thereof, or any person interfering with," and so on. Then further down in the subsection it says: "assisting in the escape of any person detained." We are putting in after "detained" the words "in the custody of an officer." The only real difference between the law as it stands and this amendment is that we are including the officers of transportation companies or any other person that interferes with an immigration officer in the discharge of his duties. Then the words "entry or" are inserted before "landing".

Section agreed to.

On section 11—immigrants may be required to possess prescribed amount of money:

Mr. DENIS: I understood that each male immigrant was required to have $250. This section provides that the amount may vary "according to the nationality, race, occupation, or destination of such persons."

Mr. CALDER: We are making only a very slight change in the existing law. Under the existing law we may make regulations fixing whatever amount may be deemed advisable. For the present that amount is fixed at $250 except in the case of farmers, farm labourers, domestics and so on.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Is that the maximum or the minimum?

Mr. CALDER: That is a fixed amount; there is no variation at present under the regulation. Now, the changes in the existing law are these: We propose to apply the principle of a money qualification, not only to immigrants but to non-immigrants as well, that is, to tourists, travellers, artists, etc., because we found case after case, within the course of the last year, where people of these classes had got into Canada and become a public charge. We are simply taking power, if advisable, to fix a money qualification for such people. I do not know that the power will have to be used to any extent, but it might be advisable to apply that regulation to certain of these non-immigrant classes. There is one other change in the section. The law now provides that the amount may vary according to race, occupation, or destination. We propose to add the word "nationality."

Mr. PARENT: Is there any question of religion?

Mr. CALDER: No. These are the only two changes in the first part of the law. In the last part, provision is added to the effect that passports shall not be recognized unless issued within a time limited by the regulations, or unless viséd in the manner required.

Mr. WHITE: The minister gave me information in regard to farm labourers from the British Isles, who he said were not required to meet the money qualification. Does that statement apply to farm labourers from other countries, say, for example, Austria?

Mr. CALDER: Yes, unless they come within the prohibited classes.

Mr. WHITE: That is to say, alien enemies, like Germans?

Mr. CALDER: Yes.

Mr. WHITE: I ask the question because I have had some inquiries on the subject.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Apart from former enemy immigrants, is there any policy of discrimination in the department against certain countries, such as Spain, for instance, or southern Italy? Is there a bar to immigrants coming from those countries? I understand that the department does not encourage immigration from the southern portions of Europe, but I suppose it is within its discretion, whenever a proper immigrant comes from those countries, to admit him?

Mr. CALDER: That is right; there is no bar. We may not encourage immigration from those parts, but if an immigrant is mentally and physically desirable, and has the necessary money prescribed he is not rejected.

Mr. CAHILL: Does the minister think he will have to enforce the clause with regard to the money qualification so far as tourists are concerned?

Mr. CALDER: I doubt it, as regards tourists. The non-immigrant class is very wide, and includes a very large number of people. I am advised by the officials of our department that we have had a number of cases where people have come in under that guise and have become public charges on the community, and it may be advisable as regards some of them to require the money qualification.

Mr. CAHILL: Were these people generally Americans, or were they from overseas?

Mr. CALDER: I do not know.

Mr. CAHILL: Because, if the minister starts to require the money qualification from American tourists, he will discourage a great many Americans from coming here.

Mr. CALDER: We will not do that.

Mr. PARDEE: The matter is left wholly in the discretion of the immigration officers at the different ports.

Mr. CALDER: No.

Mr. PARDEE: Suppose a tourist wanted to enter Canada, would he have to satisfy the local immigration officer as to his fitness, and so forth, if he comes within that class? Any such wide power given an officer of the department seems to me to be dangerous.

[Mr. Calder.]

Mr. CALDER: I entirely agree with that, and I have very much doubt as to whether this provision would apply very largely to tourists. As I pointed out, these classes of people are non-immigrants, such as members of dramatic, artistic, athletic, or spectacular organizations entering Canada temporarily for the purpose of giving performances or exhibitions, and actors, lecturers, priests, and ministers of religion, authors, lawyers, professors of colleges, and commercial travellers. These are all non-immigrants. I dare say what the department is aiming at is the control of the strolling circuses and bands of that kind coming for the purpose of giving exhibitions. Many of them become public charges in Canada.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Travelling in Europe a year ago I found that the authorities there were just as drastic in their restrictions as we are in Canada. For instance, passing from Dover to Boulogne or Calais, or from the Italian boundary to French territory, you have to sign many official documents, and sometimes show your purse to prove that you have the necessary amount exacted by the authorities.

Mr. CALDER: We do not yet know what inconvenience means in this country.

Section agreed to.

On section 13—investigation of complaints—deportation—cost of deportation.

Mr. CALDER: This is the section that was included in the Bill last year introduced, although not passed, in the Senate, and reintroduced in this House by the member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe). Two years ago, a clause was inserted in the Immigration law dealing with persons guilty of sedition, and provision was made for their deportation. It is proposed to repeal a portion of the section in the law as it now stands. The section at present provides that it shall not apply to any person who is a British subject either by reason of birth in Canada or naturalization in Canada. It is proposed to amend it so as to read that the section shall not apply to any Canadian citizen. There is a wide difference between the two. "Any Canadian citizen" would include a person who came to Canada from the British Isles, was here for a short time, and acquired domicile in Canada. The old law did not provide for that. If a person came from the British Isles and acquired domicile here, say four or five months, he would be subject to deportation under the old law. He is not, under this amendment.

Mr. LEMIEUX: That is, the amendment moved by the member for Quebec East.

Mr. CALDER: Yes. Then it is proposed that subsection 2 of said section should be repealed as it is retroactive in its character.

Section agreed to.

On section 15—cost of deportation after five years.

Mr. CALDER: This is simply using the words "any person" instead of the word "immigrant." That is it includes non-immigrants as well as immigrants.

Section agreed to.

On section 16—form e amended.

Mr. CALDER: That is merely to carry out a provision that was not corrected two years ago when the law was amended. It is in one of the forms.

Section agreed to.

On section 17—form ee amended.

Mr. CALDER: That is for the same purpose; it is merely amending a form that was not amended a few years ago. I propose to leave the Bill in committee because some hon. members who are not here to-night are interested in it. I would therefore move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION

On the motion of Hon. Mr. Calder Bill No. 146 to Amend the Chinese Immigration Act was read a second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Steele in the Chair.

On section 1--all immigrants must establish identity to satisfaction of controller subject to approval of minister.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Please explain this.

Mr. CALDER: The reading of the section will explain nothing at all unless the members of the committee have the Statute before them. Under section 7 of the law as it stands, persons of Chinese origin entering Canada are required to pay a head tax of $500 unless they belong to what is called "the exempt classes." Paragraphs a, b and c, of this section set out the exempt classes:—members of the diplomatic corps and other proper representatives, children born in Canada of parents of Chinese origin who leave this country for educational purposes, and so on. Then paragraph c includes merchants, their wives and minor children; clergymen, tourists, men of science, teachers, clergymen and students. Now in so far as these exempt classes are concerned they become exempt if they substantiate their status to the Controller of Chinese Immigration, or if they produce certificates of identity issued by the proper officers of the Chinese Government. These certificates of identity must also be countersigned by British consular officers or other representatives of His Majesty's Government in China. To be quite frank, during the course of the last two years, particularly this last year—very largely on account of conditions existing in China, because they have not stable Government in the whole of China—the administration of the law has fallen down very badly in connection with these certificates of identity.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Canton.

Mr. CALDER: Yes. We had a good deal of trouble during last year, and a very large number of these people got into Canada under these certificates who should never have entered the country. After going into the matter very fully, we have come to the conclusion that, for the time being at any rate, the only thing to do is to repeal that clause and simply provide that when these people come forward seeking to enter Canada they must substantiate their status as men of science, or as teachers, or as students, or as merchants, to our Controller of Chinese Immigration.

Mr. LEMIEUX: By what means?

Mr. CALDER: By any means they choose. Let them bring forward any evidence they can to substantiate their status, but we cannot continue to depend on these certificates of identity that were previously used. I had to send an officer all the way to China to take the matter up with the Chinese Government and the British authorities there, which has cost us a great deal of money and the conclusion we have come to, after going into the whole matter very fully, is, as I say, for the time being to abolish these certificates of identity. It is the only safe course to pursue.

Mr. LEMIEUX: At the same time I am sure my hon. friend would not stretch this regulation to such an extent as to bar those who, under the law or under the comity of nations, are admissable now. I know that we must not encourage fake immigrants to come from that country to Canada, but if the matter is left entirely to the discretion of departmental officers I am afraid it might work injustice in some cases. I do not say it would, but it might. Is the matter left entirely to the discretion of the officers of the department?

Mr. CALDER: No, not entirely as the section reads "who shall substantiate their status to the satisfaction of the controller subject to the approval of the minister." I doubt if there would be the slightest trouble with members of the diplomatic corps.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I know, as a matter of fact, that during the past two years, as my hon. friend says, in view of the laxity of Government control in Canton, passports and papers were signed by the hundreds and thousands not only for Canada but for the United States. Under those conditions I quite understand that the department is not willing to accept as bona fide documents such papers as have been presented within the period mentioned. On the other hand there are certain Chinese immigrants who, under the comity of nations, are entitled to be admitted into any country, such as merchants, clergymen and students. There are many Chinese students in the universities, and it should be easy for our officers to detect who is who.

Mr. CALDER: That is just where the trouble lies. For instance, in the first five months of last year from January to June we admitted forty-five merchants, but during the year we admitted no less than 1,309, who came with certificates of identity.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What about students?

Mr. CALDER: We applied the student law a year ago. We got in about 2,000 in one year.

Mr. DENIS: They were all students.

Mr. CALDER: Yes, and they came with certificates of identy.

Mr. PARENT: There is always something to learn.

Mr. CALDER: There will be no difficulty in regard to members of the diplomatic corps, Chinese clergymen, and similar men, but as regards the other class, until such time as there is stable government in China we feel that this is the only safe course to pursue to protect ourselves.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I am in sympathy with the object of the law, but I differ with my hon. friend as regards the indiscriminate stoppage of the student class. I believe in the Chinese student.

Mr. CALDER: So do I, but we found most of them in the laundries.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I believe in the Chinese student because he will take back to his country some of the ideals of Canada and of the United States, which I think will work for the reformation of China. Does my hon. friend believe that so many students go into the laundry business or something of that kind. I am surprised that they should come for other purposes than entering our universities.

Mr. CALDER: We have no trouble with the student class now.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The minister says he sent an officer to China. Have the members of the Chinese government approved of his method of proceeding?

Mr. CALDER: I would doubt that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The United States have had a good deal of trouble in dealing with immigration from China. Are the powers the minister is seeking under this legislation similar to the powers they have in the United States?

Mr. CALDER: I cannot say, I have not examined the American law.

Mr. CURRIE: We are not legislating for the United States, but for Canada.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I hear the hon. member saying that we are not following the legislation of the United States.

Mr. CURRIE: I say we are not legislating for the United States but for Canada.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Certainly, but we want to benefit by the experience of the United States. I should think one of the first steps the Government would take before drafting a Bill of this character would be to benefit by the experience of other countries. For that reason I ask the minister whether he has taken the trouble to find what methods the American Government are employing.

Mr. STEVENS: They are following the action of the minister in preventing an influx of students.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My impression was that this Bill based on the methods the United States had adopted.

Mr. CALDER: I have not looked into the matter at all, but I shall be very much interested to know the course they are following. My own impression is that outside of persons belonging to the diplomatic corps and other similar classes, the question whether Chinese immigrants shall enter the United States is determined by their officers, which is the way we are proposing here. Our difficulty at present is that the Justice Department has advised us that as our law entitles these people to enter Canada when they produce these certificates, we could not keep them out, no matter if we were certain they were misrepresenting their status. If the law were operationg properly, I should very much like to see the provision stand as in the, but we have had so much difficulty in the last two years that it seems the only course open to us is to change the law.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think it is desirable—

Mr. CURRIE: Carried.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If my hon. friend wishes the Bill to be carried he will have to behave a little better than he is behaving at the moment. I think it is desirable in every way that Chinese immigration should be restricted, and that fraud should be prevented as far as possible, but any one who knows the Chinese will realize that they are very sensitive and very quick to appreciate courtesy. The American Government have been at great pains to avoid offending China in any way, and I think we should be equally careful. While I am most anxious that proper restrictions should be imposed, I should be sorry to see our Government placed in a position where any of these oriental people may feel that we are acting towards them more arbitrarily than our neighbours to the south. If the minister can give us an assurance that his action is not liable to be misconstrued, I think his measure is a perfectly safe and sound one.

Mr. CALDER: I will not take the Bill out of committee. I shall inquire how the American law is so we may know exactly what others are doing in this regard.

Section agreed to.

On section 3—definition of prohibited persons in Immigration Act made applicable to Chinese:

Mr. CALDER: There is a difference in the two sections. We are simply making them the same.

Section agreed to.

On section 4—refund of tax on return within two years:

Mr. CALDER: I should like to have the views of members, especially of those from British Columbia, in reference to this section. Under the present law if a Chinaman goes back to China, and wishes to return to this country, he must obtain a certificate before leaving and if he returns within one year that certificate gives him the right to re-enter without again paying the head tax. It is proposed to extend that term to two years.

Mr. PARENT: Does the minister mean that if a Chinamen goes back home he will get a refund of the head tax of $500?

Mr. CALDER: No. Under the law as it stands when he leaves Canada he gets a certificate from our department, which entitles him at any time within one year to return to Canada without again paying the head tax. Now it is proposed to extend that time from one year to two years.

Mr. LEMIEUX: A large number of Chinese persons who come to Canada return to China for the accomplishment of certain rites in their native country. China is passing through a revolutionary period and that condition may continue for some years. As the Chinese who return to their own country may be detained on this account, or for family or other reasons, it seems to me that this extension of time is Christian in its character and I stand by it.

Section agreed to.

On section 5—power to arrest prohibited persons:

Mr. DENIS: What change is made by this clause?

Mr. CALDER: The first change is to make this law conform with the general Immigration Act in respect to the definition of prohibited persons. Under the law as it stands, if a person belongs to a prohibited class he may be either imprisoned or deported. We have cut out the imprisonment and made the person liable only to deportation. Then there is a provision that the question whether a person is liable to deportation shall be determined by the controller.

Section agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Steele): Shall I report the Bill?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If the minister will give any required information on the third reading, I have no desire to keep the Bill in committee. It can be re-committed if anything important comes up.

Bill reported.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

On motion of Hon. C. J. Doherty (Minister of Justice) Bill No. 138, to amend the Criminal Code, was read the second time.

On motion of Mr. Doherty that the House go into committee on the Bill:

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This is a very long Bill, and I do not think that the minister ought to attempt to go further with it in committee.

Mr. DOHERTY: I would not suggest that we take up anything about which there should be the slightest difference of opinion. There are a large number of clauses; I think quite a number would give rise to no discussion at all, and these we might deal with. It is not impossible that any that develop any very serious objection might be dropped altogether.

Mr. DENIS: The question whether or not a clause is continuous is a matter of opinion. The few members who are here might not think them contentious, but others who are not here might take a different view.

Mr. DOHERTY: I will take the other man's opinion on that point, not my own.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think the minister will make as much progress with his Bill if he does not attempt to go on with it at this hour.

Mr. DOHERTY: Very well.

Motion agreed to, and the House went into committee on the Bill, Mr. Steele in the Chair.

Progress reported.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR GENERAL

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT OF ADDRESS.

Mr. SPEAKER announced that he had received a message from His Excellency the Governor General. The message was read to the House as follows:

Devonshire.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I have received with great pleasure the Address that you have voted in reply to my Speech at the opening of Parliament and thank you for it sincerely.

On motion of Right Hon. Mr. Doherty the House adjourned at 12.53 a.m. Tuesday.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Wednesday, May 25, 1921

The House met at Two o'clock.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

SALES TAX—1921

Mr. REID (Mackenzie):

What was the amount of the Sales Tax collections for April, 1921?

Hon. Mr. WIGMORE:

Domestic, $2,186,649.80; importations, $686,569.34; total, $2,873,219.14.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

CHINESE IMMIGRATION ACT, AMENDMENT

An motion of Hon. J. A. Calder (Minister of Immigration and Colonization), Bill No. 146, to amend the Chinese Immigration Act, was read the third time and passed.

COPYRIGHT ACT AMENDMENT

House again in committee on Bill No. 12, to amend and consolidate the Law relating to Copyright (as amended)—Right Hon Mr. Doherty,—Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

Mr. FIELDING: Will the minister please give a general explanation of the matter in controversy between the several parties interested in this measure?

Mr. DOHERTY: As the committee is aware, this Bill, after second reading, was sent to a special committee, whose report returns the Bill with a certain number of amendments. Copies of the Bill, printed as amended, are on the table of the House at the disposal of hon. members.

The CHAIRMAN: It would be more regular if the Chairman were allowed to call at least one clause. At present there is nothing before the committee.

On Section 1.—Short Title.

Mr. BUREAU: Are the amendments which have been made indicated by brackets in the Bill as now printed?

Mr. DOHERTY: I am afraid they have not been. However, when we come to them, it will, I think, be easy to indicate them; they are not exceedingly numerous. The member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) suggest that I should make a general statement with regard to the matters which have been in controversy in connection with this Bill and which are embodied in those amendments that may be considered important. The matter that has been controversial in connection with this Bill results principally from the contention, from what may be called the authors' side, for an absolute right of control of the reproducing of copies of their works, and the claim advanced from the other side, on behalf of publishers and printers in this country, for an assurance to them of an opportunity to participate in the production of what may be called the material part of the work; and the principal work of the committee was to endeavour; if not absolutely to conciliate those opposing claims, at least to arrive at an enactment of provisions which would respect, in some measure, both contentions. So far as the authors are concerned, the Bill, as originally drawn fully recognized in principle their right to copyright. It did contain, as originally drawn, certain clauses providing for the issuing of a license with regard to each work to a publisher in Canada, where the author of the work did not print, or provide for the printing of, his work in Canada. These clauses went exceedingly far. The Bill, as it now is before the committee, modifies very considerably the provisions of the Bill as introduced, and the modifications are all in the direction of giving a wider protection to the author, and limiting in consequence the rights conferred upon the publishers or printers. Just to take one instance of the kind of thing in which the Bill as amended differs from the Bill as introduced, I may say that in the Bill as introduced it was provided that when an author did not print in this country, it was open to a publisher, upon making application, to obtain a license which, under the provisions of the original Bill, continued in effect during the whole term of the copyright; and as that term is fixed at the lifetime of the author and a period of fifty years afterwards, the author found his work—because he was not prepared to print it in Canada—for that entire period subject to the control, so far as Canada was concerned, of the fortunate licensee.

Mr. FIELDING: Without compensation?

Mr. DOHERTY: Oh no, there was provision for compensation. That also is modified. Now we have modified the Bill so that the license shall be either for a fixed period of time, which the Bill provides shall not exceed five years, or for an edition or a number of editions of the work.

Mr. BUREAU: Is that under section 14 of the Bill?

Mr. DOHERTY: It has become section 13 in the amended Bill because section 13 of the original Bill was struck out. Now, in addition to this limitation as to the time of the duration of the license, or its restriction to a specified number of editions, the Bill has been modified as regards the rate of compensation. The Bill as introduced provided a fixed rate or royalty of 10 per cent on the sales price of the book. It was pointed out that that did not operate to do justice—that there are some works upon which perhaps 10 per cent might be a high royalty and that, on the other hand, there are other works on which, their intrinsic merit or perhaps those qualities which make them count among "best sellers," might justify the author in claiming a larger royalty. In particular it was brought to the attention of the committee that there are not a few authors who, in other countries, command a royalty of 20 or 25 per cent, and it was pointed out that in their cases it would be obviously not just to enable a Canadian publisher to give forth an edition of their books at a lower royalty in competition with the publishers of other countries who may be at liberty to export their books here, and who are paying the author a larger royalty. The method adopted to meet that situation is to provide that in each case the parties respectively—the publisher applying for a license and the author—shall be heard by the minister and have opportunity to place before him the different circumstances bearing upon the question of what would be a just royalty; and the minister is empowered—after so hearing the parties or after notice to the author—to determine the royalty that ought to be paid. He is also empowered to determine the number of editions that are to be published and the term of years they are to run, and any terms or conditions which the circumstances of the case may demonstrate to be necessary to be inserted in the license and to which the licensee shall be subject. Now on those two matters, those are the substantial changes that have been made. The committee trust that the changes will commend themselves to the judgment of the Committee of the Whole and of the House.

The other matter, which gave rise to a good deal of discussion and difference of opinion, has to do with the question of copyright in connection with phonographic discs and the rights of the author. It applies mostly to musical publications, and to the right of the author when copies of his work are made by means of the production of discs to be used in phonographs and other mechanical contrivances whereby songs are reproduced. In that connection it is to be pointed out, that the maker of the discs gets a copyright himself in the disc that he has made. Nobody is entitled to make copies. If I have made a disc from an original plate, nobody has a right to reproduce copies from that disc, so that the manufacturer of the disc gets a substantial advantage in that regard. The discussion, however, did not turn on that. The discussion turned upon the adjustment of the rights respectively of the author of the work reproduced in this way and those of the person reproducing. The clauses in that regard have not been substantially or materially changed by the committee. As regards the question of remuneration the provision of the Bill as originally introduced was that the author of a piece which was so reproduced—

The CHAIRMAN: I must ask hon. gentlemen to refrain from conversing in the chamber. A moment ago, two hon. members who are trying to follow the explanations given by the minister called my attention to the fact that it is absolutely impossible to hear what the minister is saying, and looking around the chamber I saw only eighteen gentlemen speaking to others.

Mr. DOHERTY: I am glad to realize that this time inability to hear what I am saying is not attributable to the weakness of my voice, because I have been striving to make myself heard. As I was saying the Bill as originally introduced provided, as a remuneration to the author whose work was used for the purposes of reproduction upon these discs, a royalty of two cents per disc. In Great Britain the remuneration consists of a percentage on the selling price of the disc. In the United States it consists of a fixed rate which rate is the same amount that this Bill proposes, namely two cents. I do not recall that we have had any remonstrance on the part of the authors as regards the amount. The manufacturer however, has claimed very strenously that this two cents a copy is too high. On the other hand it is to be pointed out that when the Bill was originally drafted the draftsman proceeded by adopting the English system of a commission upon the selling price. The manufactureres themselves urged a fixed rate rather than a percentage rate, and the Bill as originally drawn accepted their contention in that regard. It would seem to one that perhaps it would be a more reasonable system to proceed by a percentage rate. However, it is to be realized that perhaps it is difficult, with regard to reproductions of the kind in question, to arrive at a very satisfactory conclusion as to what the percentage rate ought to be; and indeed it is difficult even in the case of a fixed amount to give any very definite and logical reason why you select a particular amount rather than another. It must be borne in mind when it is a question of reproduction of copies by means of these mechanical contrivances that you reproduce also the work of somebody else than the author. For instance, suppose it is a song, before the disc can be made the song has to be sung by somebody, and in a large number of cases, if not indeed in the majority of cases, it is pointed out, as I think must be readily conceded, that the great value of the disc consists not so much in the fact that it reproduces the particular song as that it reproduces the execution of that song by a particular artist. A song sung by other good singers and reproduced upon a disc will never command the sale that the same song sung, for example, by John McCormack or some other great operatic singer would command. So it is difficult to find any logical basis for the determination of the particular amount that ought to be paid. Having met the view of the manufacturers as to the manner in which this should be imposed, and having in mind the fact that in the United States this rate of two cents has been fixed and, so far as we could ascertain, has given rise to no serious complaint, the committee, after very fully hearing argument in support of the contention of the manufacturers that it should be reduced, thought that the course of wisdom was to adhere to the two-cent rate. There is an additional reason for our adopting that course in the fact that we have always to keep before our minds the necessity of not so legislating as to deprive our authors of the advantage of copyright in the other countries concerned, and more especially in the United States. Under the United States system, in order that the copyright of authors of other countries should be recognized within that country—which recognition is effected by means of a proclamation of the President—it is essential that the officers there should be in a position to certify that an American author has under the law of the other country as large a protection as the law of the United States extends in like cases. It will be necessary to come to some arrangement with the United States, and I will have a word to say about that when we deal with the final clause of the Bill which provides that it comes into force only upon proclamation. Naturally we can foresee that if we give a less degree of protection as regards reproduction of copies by these mechanical contrivances, applications by our authors for copyright in the United States might be open to objection there.

I think I have covered what were really matters of contention before the committee and with regard to which the substantial amendments made by the committee have a bearing.

I should like to impress upon the committee the importance of our adopting a copyright act, even if it should not appear to us that this attempt has resulted in perfect success. It will be much more easy to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion concerning most of the matters upon which there is a difference of opinion when some system has been tried and we have experience of how it works. The argument before us in regard to these matters turns upon what was apprehended would be the consequences of one disposition or another. From that point of view I think it important that we should make a start.

I should like also to call attention to the very unsatisfactory condition in which our legislation upon this subject stands at the present time. Copyright in this country is now governed partly by Imperial Acts of 1842 and 1886 and by a Canadian Act of 1889. As I understand it, any one who obtains copyright under the Imperial legislation holds it without regard to the provisions of our law, and it certainly is not desirable that our legislation should be in that condition, for it gives rise to confusion. In 1911 Great Britain passed a Copyright Act—and I may say in parenthesis that a large part of the present Bill is a reproduction of that Act—and in the other Dominions legislation has been enacted following the example of Great Britain. In that Act of 1911 it was especially provided that it should extend only to the self-governing Dominions whose Parliaments declared it to be in force, and power was expressly given to repeal the British legislation to which I have referred so far as it was in operation in any Dominion.

Mr. BUREAU: That legislation only had effect because we in Parliament so legislated.

Mr. DOHERTY: No. The contention was that the copyright Acts of 1842 and 1886 had effect in Canada without regard to any legislation of ours. I do not recall the year, but Sir John Thompson had a very protracted discussion with the Home authorities on that point in connection with the copyright measure that he desired to introduce. I do not know whether that discussion was ever published, but it certainly is very interesting. No conclusion seems to have been reached at that time, but in 1910 or 1911 the late Hon. Mr. Fisher went to England in connection with the copyright legislation which was then contemplated by the Imperial Government, and as the result, as I understand it, of his insistence along the line of argument which Sir John Thompson had developed, the Imperial Parliament passed this special enactment recognizing our authority to repeal that legislation.

Now, if I have not made it absolutely clear to the committee, I hope I have at all events conveyed some idea of what seems to me the very unsatisfactory condiiton in which we stand with regard to copyright legislation. Then, although this is a minor consideration, it has its importance. In the present condition of our legislation we stand as a sort of outsider in the general community of nations which have interested themselves in the subject of copyright. We are not in a position to give our final adherence to the amended Convention at Berne, and I may say that we have had at various times representations from the Powers that are parties to that Convention pressing upon us that we ought to come into the general community. In France and in England a great deal of interest is taken in this subject. I may say that the authors of France in particular find it difficult to understand why we are not willing to co-operate in the general movement for the protection of the rights of authors. In that country a very special importance seems to be attached to that right. I hope, therefore, that it will be possible for us to enact this legislation. Of course, I do not ask or expect that hon. members who may find that there are grave defects should not seek amendment. I would ask, though, that as far as possible the importance of our getting a law passed which may form the basis of future improvement should be borne in mind. Since 1911 this matter has hung in suspense. In that year the late Hon. Mr. Fisher introduced into this House a Bill following very closely the British legislation and, consequently, in very large measure similar to this one. Since that time, if I am not mistaken, there have been at least two attempts at improvement. A Bill was passed through the Senate, I think, two years ago, it did not succeeed in passing this House. Last year we had a Bill before this House, but it seemed so difficult to get at any conclusion which could be reasonably expected to conciliate the contending interests that the matter had to be dropped. This session, I may say on behalf of the committee and on behalf of the special officer charged with this subject of copyright, very assiduous efforts have been made to bring about a measure which, if not absolutely meeting the view of all interested, may at least prove acceptable; and I myself have endeavoured to give what little aid I could in that regard. I therefore commend the measure to the considerate consideration of the committee.

Mr. FIELDING: I desire to thank the right hon. gentleman for the explanation he has given; I am sure it will prove to be very helpful. May I ask now, referring to the first part of his remarks, whether the conclusions that the committee have reached are very satisfactory, or is there still conflict between the author and the publisher? Are these interests fairly satisfactory, or is there still conflict between the author and the publisher? Are these interests fairly satisfied with the compromise which has been reached?

Mr. DOHERTY: With regard to the author, I may say that his contention was that there should be no licensing system; that he should be, as matter of right, the sole person controlling the reproduction of his work. We have not been able to meet that requirement, but we did receive a memorial from the Authors' Association, in which, after putting forward that contention, they went on to indicate in detail what were the particular things in the Bill as introduced which in their view failed to do them justice. I think I may safely say that each one of these particular objections has been fairly met. Perhaps on the part of the Canadian authors the strongest ground of objection was that by this legislation we exposed them to losing their copyright in the United States, because we were making legislation which, as they considered—and I think it probable—would not be looked upon as acceptable by the United States. This legislation recognizes, as to all of the Copyright Union countries and as to all their authors, copyright in this country. It is not possible to treat in the same way authors of the United States, because that country does not form part of the Copyright Union. There are, however, provisions in the Bill enabling the Governor in Council, whenever it is possible to certify that the law of any country not in the union gives as efficient protection to our authors as our law does to theirs, by proclamation to extend the advantages of this Act to the country in question. Furthermore, once we have a definite law not necessarily an immutable law, but still a definite law—which we can submit to the American authors—for their consideration, there is every reason to expect that we shall be able to obtain from them a recognition of the sufficiency of our law similar to that which they have already granted to the law of Great Britain. That done, all the danger which the Canadian authors apprehend would disappear. I think I may say that their representatives felt quite reassured, when we pointed out that it was intended not to bring the Act into force save by proclamation, and that the purpose of making that provision was to enable us to be quite sure that we had a law that would operate to obtain for them protection in the United States and that, being satisfactory to Great Britain, would assure to them protection there. The representatives of the authors who came before us were satisfied upon that point, and that seemed to be the thing to which they attached the greatest importance.

Mr. MOWAT: The committee, I may say, fully considered the representations of the different interests—the Canadian Authors' Association and the English Authors' Association, called the Incorporated Society of Authors, Playrights, Composers, and others. I think I can say that the committee gave every possible consideration to what was advanced by the contending parties, and that it regards the Bill as now reprinted as the safe course between the two, if any great difference does exist, which I very much doubt. The trouble in Canada has been that under the present Copyright Act one of the conditions for the obtaining of copyrights is that the work in question shall be printed in Canada. Section 6 of the present law, Revised Statutes, chapter 62, section 5, says:

> The condition for obtaining such copyright shall be that the said literary, scientific or artistic works shall be printed and published or reprinted and republished in Canada.

This was felt by the authors to be a hardship, and it may be that with a continuance of the clause requiring printing in Canada in that definite way, we would not be able to take advantage of our participation in the Berne Convention, which was arrived at on the part of the principal civilized countries of the world in 1886 and again, in what is known as the Revised Berne Convention, in 1908. We now have a Bill which protects each interest as far as possible. Instead of providing that the works shall be published in Canada—a provision which the printer, publisher and book-binder wants, and which he has hitherto in draft Bills succeeded in getting—we have substituted a license provision, requiring, not that the author shall state his intention of not printing in Canada as in the original draft of the Bill, but that if he does not so print then a license can be granted to any applicant upon giving sufficient royalty to the author. The author, therefore, is protected.

Then this Bill contains a provision which has hitherto been absent from our law, namely, that the Canadian author of a song or a piece of music, who has not had copyright in Canada and who has, therefore, had a legitimate grievance against his country, is now protected to the extent of 2 cents for each record, or 4 cents, if the record is printed on both sides. We have done away with the objection which manufacturers of records or discs had, that they might have to pay in another country if discs were exported. We have drawn the Bill so that only the 2 cents is to be collected as a condition of manufacturing.

Mr. CURRIE: Is that 2 cents royalty?

Mr. MOWAT: Yes, 2 cents on each disc. The particular manufacturer in Canada has not to pay more than 2 cents. If the disc goes first to another country and it is shown that 2 cents, or whatever sum it is, has been paid, then there will be nothing further to pay. The author is compensated by the two cents paid in any country; that is supposed to be sufficient for him, and I think that sum, which is found agreeable in the United States, will be found suitable and agreeable in Canada for authors for their songs.

The impulse for this legislation seems to have come first from those people who were not protected before. We have a very anomalous state of affairs in Canada as regards the copyright law, and it is this. While we were authorized as a Dominion to deal with "Copyright" matters, and while we did so in 1875, the Act of that year containing this printing clause. In a case of Smiles, the author against Belford in 1874 or 1875, as reported first in the Ontario Court of Appeal, it was held by the Privy Council that we could not prevent a British author from ignoring that provision. Therefore, until now we have had in Canada two laws, one the English law of 1842 which is declared to be in force as regards British authors, and our own Act, and there is a conflict owing to the decisions of the courts which has made the law uncertain. It is only as cases arise that the law can be made clear. This shows the importance of getting this legislation as soon as possible on the statute book. The situation is very much as described by the Royal Commission on Copyright in 1878, which describes the law in Britain as follows:

> The law at present is already destitute of any sort of arrangement incomplete, often obscure and, even when it is intelligible upon long study, it is in many parts so ill-expressed that no one, who does not give much study to it, can expect to understand it. Obscurity of style, however, is only one of the defects. Their arrangement is often worse than their style. Of this the Copyright Act of 1842 is a conspicuous instance.

The same remarks would apply, it seems to me, to the copyright law of Canada which has been the despair of judges and lawyers for many years. If we can pass this legislation, we will largely do away with those difficulties. I agree with the remarks made by the right hon. gentleman who is in charge of the Bill, that this is a sincere effort to bring the two parties together. I think that has been done and that this legislation may be favourably received by the committee.

Mr. RINFRET: As a member of the committee, I would also like to make a few remarks to explain the particular situation in which we were placed when we were confronted with this Copyright Bill. As the minister explained, there were many conflicting interests, and it was very hard, in some cases, to have them agree on any particular provision. I think, however, we all agree on this point that we have on the statute book a very antiquated copyright measure, and that it should be replaced by a new one at the earliest possible moment. In fact, it was urged upon us that it would be better to pass a copyright measure which might not be perfectly satisfactory, than not to pass a Copyright Bill at all. I do not know whether we should entertain that idea.

There is one point on which I first wish to insist, and it is the case of the composer whose songs or musical productions are reproduced by phonograph, gramophone, by means of discs or other contrivances. At present there is no right at all which can be exacted from the manufacturer, and therefore, the composer was placed in the situation that his production could be used by the manufacturer without any return to the composer. As regards that particular case, the demand of the composer is fairly met by clause 18 which, while it does not allow a very large return to the composer, is, at least, an improvement on the statute which now exists, because formerly no provision for any return was made. We can all agree on that clause, and all that relates to that particular feature of the Bill.

The conflict is more on clauses 13, 14 and 15 which deal with relations between printers and writers. The writers claim that they have a full right to their production; that it does not matter if they have obtained copyright, they are the sole judges whether their works can be reproduced or not. It has been said that the Bill gives them protection in this sense, that it will afford them, in any case, a fair return for their work; but it takes away from them protection in this sense, that they no longer remain the sole judges whether their books shall be printed or not in Canada. At present when a writer prints and obtains another copyright in another country and at the same time in Canada, he is the only judge whether he will have the book printed in Canada or not. By this Bill a license may be granted to any printer or publisher, who applies for it, and he may print a book on which copyright exists whether the author deems that advisable or not. I think that is the main point in the discussion in connection with this Bill. We can all agree to every provision of this Bill except the three clauses dealing with the license. I may say that I have kept in touch with the writers; I am a representative of them in a way, being a member of their association, and they object to their works being dealt with in this manner. They claim that they have an absolute right to their works; that they should be the only judges whether their work shall be published or not. While they wish to be protected as regards the royalty to be paid for their works, they are more anxious to be protected as regards the printing. That is their case. Of course, there is the case of the printer who says that his interests are prejudiced when a work is published in a United States magazine which is circulated in Canada, because that affords the American magazine the advantage of a large circulation in Canada where a Canadian magazine cannot compete. It was urged upon us that we should allow the Bill to pass in any event, because this Bill will be put into force only through proclamation, and it will be possible in the meantime to improve it.

I do not wish to impose my views on the committee, but I think we should endeavour to pass this Bill in as good a shape as we can possibly make it. As far as I am concerned, I feel like approving of the Bill altogether, but I would urge upon the minister to drop clauses 13, 14 and 15. The Bill will not come into force except by proclamation, and I think it would be more proper to pass the Bill without these clauses when we feel that we are not on safe ground. Then, if it is found necessary, we could add them later. I think the contention that these three clauses, which by the way are not to be found either in the British Copyright Act or in the copyright act of any other country, are in direct contravention of the Berne Agreement, is a sound one. The Berne Agreement says in respect to rights granted to members of the union in other countries, that the enjoyment and exercise of those rights shall not be subject to the performance of any formality, and to meet this provision we have provided that instead of the author who will not print his book being compelled to make a declaration to that effect, a stranger may apply for the right of printing the book, and it was claimed that as long as the author had not to perform the formality this would not be tampered with.

I want to pay this tribute to the minister and the committee. The work of the committee has been done in a most agreeable and noncontentious way, with a view to framing an acceptable Bill. But it does seem to me that even if the author is not forced to declare that he will not print, yet the right of protection to his work is taken away from him, if a stranger can obtain a license. I do not know if the committee will see it as I do, but I think that the spirit of the Berne Convention is very strictly that nothing should be done in any of the countries which are members of the union that would come in conflict with this section, not only in wording but in spirit, and I think that to allow a stranger, a publisher or printer perhaps, to apply for a license is a formality by which the author is going to suffer if he feels that his work should not be published. It is not simply a question of dues; it is a question of the very ownership of the work by the author. I do not wish to press my point further at this stage, as we shall deal with the Bill clause by clause. I share the view of the minister that we should pass the Bill, because if we do not do so now, we shall have to go over all this work again next year or later. I do think, however, that it would be very much wiser to pass the Bill without these three clauses, because I think there is not the slightest doubt that they are in contravention of the Berne Agreement. If we find it advisable to introduce them later, that can be done.

Mr. BUREAU: If we leave out these three clauses how will it leave the Bill as regards the publisher?

Mr. RINFRET: The author in Canada would be the sole owner of his rights. A publisher could apply for the right to publish, but he would have to apply to the author instead of to the department.

Mr. DOHERTY: When we come to the clauses in question, I shall have something to say in answer to the hon. member. I think, however, he might ask himself, when he suggests that the Bill should pass without these three clauses, whether we can pass the Bill without them, because there are people who take the other view. In the committee we heard both sides, and it is to be conceded that this is a compromise provision that does not recognize the extreme right of the author. On the other hand, it limits him to this extent only, that if he does not think proper to print in Canada somebody in Canada may be authorized to do so on terms absolutely fair to the author, in the way of remuneration and in every other respect. It is true that it has the effect of saying that to this extent his property may be made use of by another person, but after all, we hold all our property subject to restrictions in the public interest. Here this Parliament, and the people of Canada, through this Parliament, are extending protection to the right of the author.

Mr. BUREAU: Does the minister compare the right of the author to the right of eminent domain?

Mr. DOHERTY: That property ought to be subjected to the consequences of the principle that all other property is. I am not suggesting that the case is absolutely analogous, but when we are extending this protection, is it an unfair thing to say to the author: Now that we are extending to you this special protection, we think that we ought at the same time to have present to our minds the interests of the Canadian people in connection with that publication. In the work there is the author's intellectual effort; there is also the printer's and publisher's material work. Now what we think we have achieved is to have done something to enable a Canadian to take part in that material work, at the same time giving full compensation to the author for the use of the intellectual work.

I have in mind also when we come to the clauses, by reason of representations that have been made to me since the committee met, to ask that there be a provision that where the author has printed an edition in Canada and published it, and has made up his mind that he does not wish to issue any further editions, there shall be no license issued to publish a further edition. But we will take that up when we come to the clause. I would ask that this present clause, which is the British clause, be adopted as amended.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 13—application for license to print book in Canada by others than owner:

Mr. BUREAU: I understand that this is a kind of compromise between extreme views of the authors and publishers, and that if these clauses were omitted, as has been suggested by the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret), the Bill would be more or less valueless. I think they have to subsist to give the Bill some value.

Mr. DOHERTY: I would not feel that we could expect to pass a Bill on the absolute line one way or the other. I am not without sympathy for the views of the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret), but I am quite confident that to do what he suggests would defeat the possibility of our passing the Bill. I would suggest that we have gone as far as we could possibly go, with one exception, in respect of which I propose to move an amendment. This amendment will recognize this further right of the author who has printed and published an edition, that he shall not be subject to have a second edition published and printed by a licensee if he has made up his mind that he does not want to publish any further editions. It has been pointed out to me that an author who has issued an edition, published either by himself or by someone else, may on reflection feel that his work ought to be revised. He may not any longer entertain all the opinions he expressed in that work, and this is particularly true in regard to scientific works. The progress of science is very rapid, and a man who may have written a work ten years ago, in which he committed himself to certain views on scientific problems, might find, through the process of time, that his views were no longer tenable. Under this and analogous circumstances, therefore, it does not seem right that the author should have a second edition of his work published against his judgment.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Before the minister offers the amendment which he proposes, he might explain what is the delay contemplated to be fixed by regulations in subsection 5 of section 13.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: It would vary in different instances.

Mr. DOHERTY: The original Act provided a fixed delay, but when we came to look into the matter, we could not but realize that for an author resident in Ottawa, it would hardly be reasonable to fix the same delay as in the case of an author resident in Paris or Rome. A delay that would be adequate for the remotely situated author, would be a waste of time as regards the man close at hand, and it was thought that it would be better to determine the delay according to the circumstances of each case.

Mr. LEMIEUX: There is something else on which I should like to be enlightened. Suppose an author publishes a book in which he expresses certain opinions, religious, political, or otherwise, and later regrets having given publicity to those opinions. Would it be right that this author—perhaps he may have published something bordering on immorality—should see his work republished, notwithstanding his own sincere regret for having given expression to such views and opinions? I have in mind a book which created quite a sensation in the Old Country not very long ago, and possibly the author, when sober reflection had dawned upon him or her, might be very much opposed to a republication of it. Could any enterprising editor come to the minister, under this section, and obtain a license to publish that work in spite of the author, who is entirely opposed to the further propagation of the views and sentiments he has expressed?

Mr. DOHERTY: Under subsection 12 of section 13, there is recognized the right of the author to suppress his work, and it is provided, even where a license has been granted, that if the author decides to suppress the work, the licensee shall print no additional copies.

Mr. LEMIEUX: It is hard to suppress a book which has already been in circulation; its circulation is all the greater because the book serves as an appetizer to some people.

Mr. DOHERTY: I understand the difficulty of authors absolutely suppressing all copies; but if an author determines that he does not wish his views to be given further publicity, under subsection 12 he is entitled to stop the licensee from printing any further copies. The clause does allow the licensee the right to sell such copies as he has already printed and published, subject, however, to the author's right to buy from him all those copies, paying for them simply the cost of printing. We have, therefore, gone pretty far in protecting the author who desires to suppress his work. I quite appreciate, in fact I share in, the view of the hon. member, that the author ought to have the right, if he has revised his opinions for any reason, and does not want to continue being responsible for the dissemination of those opinions or doctrines, to suppress further publication of them.

Mr. LEMIEUX: They may be immoral views.

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes, and there is the case I mentioned a moment ago of scientific works.

Mr. LEMIEUX: The author may have changed his views.

Mr. DOHERTY: Exactly. He may find himself to-day with a book written ten or fifteen years ago, and if that work were to continue in circulation, he might find that apparently he was teaching doctrines which the whole scientific world had discovered to be erroneous, and which, under the circumstances, he certainly would not endorse. I propose to strengthen the position of the author by adding a clause which might be added to subsection 12, providing that nothing in the section shall authorize the granting, without the consent of the author, of a license to publish any succeeding edition of a work whereof such author has published one or more editions in Canada.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Does section 13 impose upon the minister a duty in respect of which he has no discretion; such language is usually construed as imperative. It is a general rule of law that, where an authority is conferred upon a public officer the statute conferring it is construed as making it imperative that he should exercise that duty. Some of the expressions in this section may not be quite clear. Another question I should like to ask is this: Subsection 12 provides that no more copies shall be printed of a book which the author suppresses. Suppose an author has suppressed a book before any application is made for a license, what is to happen then? This is a case which does not seem to be provided for.

Mr. FIELDING: May I, in connection with the same section, be permitted to ask whether the expression "suppressed by the owner of the copyright" has a clear and well-defined meaning? What constitutes "suppression?" Is there some provision elsewhere which determines that?

Mr. DOHERTY: As to the right that authors have had in the past to endeavour to stop the reproduction of their works I am not in a position to give a definition of just precisely how it is to be done, nor do I think it belongs to us now to suggest, in connection with a Copyright Act, the creation of a right which I understand is a recognized right. What we were seeking to do was to leave that right, whatever its extent may be under common law or under the law as it now stands, unaffected by the fact, or affected as little as possible by the fact, that a license has been issued for the publication of that work. I have not gone into the question sufficiently to be able to give a very satisfactory answer as to what is the nature and extent of the right recognized by the law in an author, irrespective of copyright questions, to suppress his work. What we were seeking to do was to leave that right, so far as possible, unaffected by the fact that a license has been issued.

Mr. FIELDING: Is the term already used in the statute.

Mr. DOHERTY: I do not know of any legislation of our own in which it has been used.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I do not think the word has any technical meaning.

Mr. DOHERTY: I might say that this clause was taken from a draft of a Bill made some years ago by the present Deputy Minister of Justice, and that is what called my attention to it in the first place. On discussing the matter with him he left me under the impression—and I can secure the different instances which he gave—that authors had exercised the right. Of course what they can do to suppress a book is a question which depends on many practical considerations. I do not think there is any right recognized in the author,—after he has let the book be published and I have bought it—to come to me and say "You must turn your copy over to me." If no license were granted of course it would be in his hands to stop all further publications. By reason of the license being grantd, however, the publication has passed into the hands of somebody else, and the purpose of this clause is to prevent the fact of the license being issued leaving the author powerless to stop the future circulation of his work. Now, in this clause, what was in mind was that when the circumstances indicated exist, it should be the duty of the minister to grant the license, but with regard to the terms and conditions upon which it should be issued, that it would be in the exercise of his discretion—it would rest with him to determine what are the fair terms and conditions as to the royalty, duration of the license, and so forth. I do not know which particular clauses might perhaps require modification to make that clear.

Mr. CURRIE: Might I suggest to the minister that in sub-clause 5 of section 13, line 34, after the word "minister," a few words should be inserted to the affect that "the minister, if by him deemed advisable, may grant." That will give the power to suppress on behalf of the author and cover all the objections raised. As it stands now the minister must grant the application. If there was an objection and it was desired to suppress the book I do not see how the minister could act, unless some discretion is given to him in this clause as suggested by the right hon. member for King's (Sir Robert Borden).

The CHAIRMAN: What about the amendment already before the committee?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Is there an amendment?

Mr. DOHERTY: I did intimate my intention of moving an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. Doherty moves to amend section 13 by adding at the end of subsection 12 thereof the following words:

Provided that nothing in this section shall authorize the granting, without the consent of the author, of a license to publish a second or succeeding edition of any work whereof such author has published one or more editions in Canada.

Mr. FIELDING: Would it not be necessary to define the meaning of "edition"? How many constitute an "edition"?

Mr. LEMIEUX: The author himself is the judge of the number.

Mr. DOHERTY: We fix the number as being an edition.

Mr. FIELDING: Oh, no.

Mr. CURRIE: I think that comes under sub-clause 12.

Mr. DOHERTY: I did not grasp the suggestion. Is it that we should define how many copies should be looked upon as an edition?

Mr. FIELDING: It seems to me the remainder of your clause is dependent upon that. You say if he has published an edition already he shall have the right to protect himself. The question immediately arises how many copies constitute an "edition." I do not want to be too critical in the matter but I think it would be necessary to define the term. A man may publish a dozen copies and he may call that an edition. There should be some definition of what constitutes an edition.

Mr. CURRIE: The word "edition" is very often confounded with the word "reprint." An edition is technically where an author revises his book and issues a second edition, but very often some of these books have ten, twenty or thirty reprints. The first edition may consist of one thousand or three thousand copies. Then there would be in a month or so another reprint of five thousand copies and it goes on like that. There is no definition to distinguish clearly between what is called a reprint, and an edition where the author makes a revision and perhaps adds some new matter.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Subclause 7 of Section 13 gives to the publisher the right to publish not only an edition but as many editions as he may wish to publish for five years. For example it reads:

Such license when issued shall entitle the licensee to the sole right to print and publish such book in Canada during such term, not exceeding five years or for such edition or editions as may be fixed by the license.

The license, of course, will deal with the question as to how many editions he has published. I wish to draw to the attention of the minister that he has not dealt with the main objection made on behalf of the authors. I expected to hear him say something on the principle of withdrawing from the writer the sole and complete control of the book or serial produced by himself, and I think we ought to have some information from the minister on that point. Neither the publisher nor any one else assists the writer, the book is the product of his own brain, and he has the same right as the maker of any article has always had to sell it to whom he pleases; in other words, he has the right to control what belongs to him and to no one else; but we are removing from the author this control. I have before me a petition which was addressed by Thomas Carlyle to the British House of Commons in 1839 on the Copyright Bill then under consideration, and I think it would not be out of place for me to read it, because it expresses I believe, the view of Canadian authors on this matter. This is the petition:

Petition on the Copyright Bill (1839)

To the Honourable the Commons of England in Parliament assembled, the Petition of Thomas Carlyle, a Writer of Books, Humbly showeth,

That your petitioner has written certain books, being incited thereto by various innocent or laudable considerations, chiefly by the thought that said books might in the end be found to be worth something.

That your petitioner had not the happiness to receive from Mr. Thomas Tegg, or any Publisher, Republisher, Printer, Bookseller, Bookbuyer, or other the like man or body of men, any encouragement or countenance in writing of said books, or to discern any chance of receiving such; but wrote them by effort of his own and the favour of Heaven.

That all useful labour is worthy of recompense; that all honest labour is worthy of the chance of recompense; that the giving and assuring to each man what recompense his labour has actually merited, may be said to be the business of all Legislation, Polity, Government, and Social Arrangement whatsoever among men;—a business indispensable to attempt, impossible to accomplish accurately, difficult to accomplish without inaccuracies that become enormous, insupportable, and the parent of Social Confusions which never altogether end.

That your petitioner does not undertake to say what recompense in money this labour of his may deserve; whether it deserves any recompense in money, or whether money in any quantity could hire him to do the like.

That this his labour has found hitherto, in money or money's worth, small recompense or none; that he is by no means sure of its ever finding recompense, but thinks that, if so, it will be at a distant time, when he, the labourer, will probably no longer be in need of money, and those dear to him will still be in need of it.

That the law does at least protect all persons in selling the production of their labour at what they can get for it, in all market-places, to all lengths of time. Much more than this the law does to many, but so much it does to all, and less than this to none.

That your petitioner cannot discover himself to have done unlawfully in this his said labour of writing books, or to have become criminal, or have forfeited the law's protection thereby. Contrariwise your petitioner believes firmly that he is innocent in said labour; that if he be found in the long run to have written a genuine enduring book, his merit therein, and desert towards England and English and other men, will be considerable, not easily estimable in money; that on the other hand, if his book proves false and ephemeral, he and it will be abolished and forgotten, and no harm done.

That, in this manner, your petitioner plays no unfair game against the world; his stake being life itself, so to speak (for the penalty is death by starvation), and the world's stake nothing till once it sees the dice thrown; so that in any case the world cannot lose.

That in the happy and long-doubtful event of the game's going in his favour, your petitioner submits that the small winnings thereof do belong to him or his, and that no other mortal has justly either part or lot in them at all, now, hence forth or forever.

May it therefore please your Honourable House to protect him in said happy and long-doubtful event; and (by passing your Copyright Bill) forbid all Thomas Teggs and other extraneous persons, entirely unconcerned in this adventure of his, to steal from him his small winnings, for a space of sixty years at shortest. After sixty years, unless your Honourable House provide otherwise, they may begin to steal.

And your petitioner will ever pray.

THOMAS CARLISLE.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to have some reason from the minister to show that it is the right of the House of Commons to interfere with the author's absolute control of his own works. This Bill professes to give a license to some person to publish the work of the author, whether the author is willing or not. It strikes me that any person wishing to publish a book should come to the author for leave to do so, and that the author ought to have complete control over the product of his own labour.

Mr. MORPHY: Referring to the suggestion of the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's as to defining the number of books that would constitute an edition, I see a great deal of difficulty. Sub-section (c) of the interpretation clause reads:

"book" shall include every volume, part or division of a volume, pamphlet, sheet of letter-press, sheet of music, map, chart, or plan separately published.

Now the word "book" is used in subsection 12 of section 13, but it means all these things, and although it might be found that an edition of 500 copies would be all right for a book, it might be all wrong for a map, chart or plan or other particular work that would not be readily sold. So to my mind it is very difficult to set down any specific number that must of necessity constitute an edition.

Mr. FIELDING: I notice that subsection 3 of section 13 refers, for different purposes, to an edition of not less than 1,000 copies. I do not press the point, but it seems to me that if the word "edition" is not defined somewhere the law may be easily evaded. However, I am content to call the minister's attention to it.

Mr. CURRIE: I think there are a great many places where some changes might very well be made, but until this legislation has been in operation for a year or two I do not think it would be possible to come to a final decision on many of these controversial points. There is no doubt we need some such law. The United States by their legislation have attracted a great deal of the world's book printing, and we must do something to keep the printing of the works of our own authors in Canada. That is what we are legislating for.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. RINFRET: To dispel the impression that this clause is the result of a compromise between the authors and the publishers, I would point out that it cannot be, for the simple reason that the authors object to the system, as they did in the days of Carlyle, which my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) has pointed out. I do not want to press the point unduly because we are very anxious to have the Bill passed, and, besides, we have the promise that it will not be put in force except by proclamation. But I still think it wrong to pass the Bill with the clauses to which we object, and I feel confident that the minister will find out that they are in contravention of the Berne Convention, and that he will have to do away with them if we wish to adhere to that convention.

Mr. DOHERTY: If I find I have to do that, I will. In saying it was a compromise, I did not mean to suggest that it was a compromise reached by the authors and publishers after a conference. It was a compromise effected by the committee between the respective contentions; I did not mean to say more than that. I have great respect for Carlyle, and I have the most profound sympathy for the widest interpretation of the author's right. But I may, perhaps, take the opportunity of pointing this out to the authors, that at common law they had no copyright at all —at least that was, I think, the predominant opinion. I had occasion to go into this question very carefully some years ago in a case where the point directly arose, and I felt compelled to decide that outside of statutes there was no copyright. Mind you, we are dealing not with the ownership of the manuscript, not of the ownership of the work itself, but with the question of what happens after a man has given, by way of publishing it, his work to the public. It is not so absolutely obvious that after a man has written a work and distributed it to the public he has a right to the produce of all the copies. So far as his work is a money producer and gives him an income, the community contributes to it. His work, as he wrote it, does not put money into his pocket unless the community purchases it, and he cannot get it to the community and get money for it unless somebody prints and publishes it. Now, I would suggest to the authors that if they want to preserve the sympathy which I am sure all right-minded people have with their demand that their rights be given the widest possible interpretation consistent with the public interest, they do not take too uncompromising an attitude and say to this Parliament, for instance, or to any other legislative body: You must think of nobody else but me in regard to that work and to all the copies of it, although other people contribute to produce the copies; nobody is to have any consideration from Parliament except me, the author. Now, that is not an attitude that is going to preserve sympathy or gain it for the authors. I approach this legislation with every imaginable sympathy for the author, but I am free to say that I think the author who takes exception to these licensing clauses, with all the safeguards that are put around them to see that he suffers no injury, is not in any more reasonable position than would be the proprietor of some other kind of property who would rise in revolt because his property was expropriated for the public interest and the public benefit, he getting ample compensation. We all submit to that, though our right to property in other things is just as absolute as the author's right can be in the work that he produces. I suggest that it is not wise or in his interests that the author should take this extreme position; it is of a nature to bring about opposition on the part of people who certainly have interests which conflict with the recognition of that principle. But apart from that, this Bill improves very materially the position of the author. Let us get for the author this substantial step in advance. Perhaps we may be able to go further as time goes on, but let us get now what can be got.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: In addition to what the minister has said, the situation might perhaps be described as follows: if an author has written a book, has put it away, and locked it up in his desk, there is no question involved of the right of eminent domain; it remains and will remain his personal property and he may do what he likes with it. But if he sees fit to copyright it in some other country and in Canada as well, and if he publishes it in some other country but not in Canada, then the minister will have to ask himself whether there is any good reason why that book, having been published in other countries, should not also be printed and published in Canada. I cannot see that a provision of this kind can be construed as unfair or unreasonable so far as the rights of the author are concerned. I would, however, make this suggestion to the minister: there is language here which unaccompanied by the context would indicate that an imperative duty is cast upon the minister; there is other language which indicates that that imperative duty is to be discharged by him subject to such terms and conditions as may seem to him fair and reasonable. Above all things, it seems to me desirable that we should make the section plain. I think it would be made perfectly plain if the minister would consent to add in the thirty-fourth line, clause 13, page 8, the words: "in his discretion," so that the section will then read:

The minister in his discretion may grant to the applicant a license to print and publish such book upon terms to be determined by the Minister after hearing the parties or affording them such opportunity to be heard as may be fixed by the regulations.

The addition of these words would, I think meet the position so far as the author is concerned and is thoroughly consistent with what follows. Without their addition, I am really not quite clear as to what the section would mean.

Mr. DOHERTY: I shall be glad to accept the suggestion of the right hon. member. I move to amend subsection 5 of section 13 by adding after the word "minister" in line thirty-four, the words "in his discretion."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What about the other amendment?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The other amendment was carried. The addition of these words will preclude the necessity of another amendment which I had intended to move, namely, that where a book has already been suppressed the minister should not grant any license. In view of the amendment which has just been assented to, the minister is perfectly at liberty to say that no license should be granted in such a case.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask the minister whether the committee has considered the possible effect of this enactment upon the amount which a publishing house, say in the United States, would allow an author for the publication of his work? An American publisher will take work from a Canadian author because he is sure of having the market of the United States and the market of other countries as well. If this Bill goes into force, it limits to a certain extent the possible market that a publishing house may have, and, consequently, the amount which may be made on a contract.

Mr. DOHERTY The existence of this provision of law, which modifies the author's own right to the extent of subjecting it to the possibility of a license, may, of course, affect the value of that right when he goes to sell it. It is a right affected by the existence of that law. It was, however, urged—and it seems to us that it has considerable force—that, while it may be perfectly true to-day, with no impediment in the way, the American publisher expects to get and insists on getting the rights in Canada of the book which he buys from the author, if you had a situation such as this law creates where the publisher will know that he will be liable to come into competition with the holder of the license, but where he knows that the author cannot alter that situation, it is impossible that the publisher is going to say: "Then I will not buy the book." Surely, the American publisher who buys a work has principally in mind his immense market of 110,000,000 people, and it would seem to me a very exceptional case where the right to publish in Canada absolutely without restriction would loom so large in the transaction that the transaction would fall through. As to what the author might be paid, let me point out that if what he gets from the American publisher is reduced by the American publisher not getting the Canadian right, if this license is carried through, the author will get his compensation in Canada for the circulation in Canada; he will not be deprived of that right without ample compensation. I am not suggesting that the author is left just as well off as if this clause did not exist. I have conceded that this is putting a limitation on the interests of the author. Might we not appeal to the author, the Canadian author in particular, not to be absolutely selfish, but to have some thought for the Canadian printer or publisher who has contributed his part to this book? Might not the author have some consideration for the publisher's interest, and even if this reduces, in some degree, the price that the author gets from the American publisher, is it an unfair thing, when we are taking all the pains that we are taking to protect the author's rights and to surround them with guarantees, to ask him to be willing to accept, without too great criticism, this provision? I may point this out also, that as the law now stands, notwithstanding the issue of this license, works may be imported from countries that are in the Copyright Union, and if we come to a satisfactory understanding with the United States, as we have every reason to expect, no doubt we shall be in a position to extend the privilege to the United States. In that case the American publisher will be able to sell those books in Canada. All that he will be called upon to submit to is competition with a Canadian publisher.
